VOL. CIV.

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY-SIXTH DAY OF JANUARY TO THE TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY OF FEBRUARY, INCLUSIVE.

OTTAWA
PRINTED BY C. H. PARMELEE, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY 1911-12

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 26, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

APPOINTMENT OF TRANSLATOR.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That the recommendation of the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons for the appointment of Mr. Charles E. Duckett to the position of translator on the permanent translation staff of the House of Commons, laid on the table of the House with other papers on the subject on the 23rd of January, 1912, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

THE WEDNESDAY SITTINGS.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Wednesday the 31st of January, and all subsequent Wednesdays to the end of the session, the House will meet at three o'clock p.m., and that the sitting on such days shall in every respect be under the same rules provided for other days, and that on said Wednesdays government orders will have precedence immediately after notices of motions for production of papers.

He said: The usual practice has been to give Government Orders precedence immediately after Questions. Last year I suggested to my right hon. friend that it might be better to permit Notices of Motion for the Production of Papers to have precedence, and I thought it well to follow the same practice this year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not disposed to object to this motion, but it has been represented to me that private members should be given another opportunity to be heard on the motions coming under Public Bills and Orders. Therefore I would suggest to my right hon. friend that the motion be made to take effect, not next Wednesday, but the Wednesday following, that is, the 7th of February.

Mr. BORDEN. If my hon. friend is urgent, I would be glad to accept his suggestion; but at the same time he knows as well as I do that there is not a motion on the order paper that has not been called already six or eight times. Under the circumstances, unless my right hon. friend is urgent, I would prefer to hasten our work as much as possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree with my right hon. friend that every opportunity has been given to every member to be heard; but for some reason or other, they have not been heard, and therefore I would ask him to have the motion take effect on the 7th of February. May I ask my right hon. friend if he is prepared to say to-day what new legislation we may expect during this session, or have we about all the programme of the government, with the exception of the supplementary estimates and the measure regarding the extension of the Manitoba boundaries?

Mr. BORDEN. I am not prepared to-day to give my right hon. friend the information in that regard, but I think it probable that before the completion of next week I shall be in a position to do so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. May I ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if he will take up the Grain Bill on Tuesday?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Motion, amended by striking out 'the 31st day of January' and inserting in lieu thereof 'the 7th day of February,' agreed to.

THE GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

Mr. DEVLIN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to call the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister and the Postmaster General to a report which appears in the Ottawa 'Citizen' purporting to contain statements made by the hon. the Postmaster General at a public meeting in Eganville in South Renfrew on the 25th instant, in which report the Postmaster General, referring to the new transportation policy of the government, is represented as indicating that the Georgian Bay canal will be built, that it was a part of the new government's programme. I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if he can give any information to the House as to when that article of the government's programme will be brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. BORDEN. I have already informed the right hon. leader of the opposition that within a week from to-day we will give full information of the government's programme.

Mr. DEVLIN. May I ask the Prime Minister if the government have agreed on a policy in regard to the building of the Georgian Bay canal?

Mr. PELLETIER. I may inform my hon. friend that I did not open my mouth last night on the Georgian Bay canal.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a very sad commentary on the ministerial press.

Mr. PELLETIER. They have been badly educated by the Grit press.

THE WRIT FOR SOUTH RENFREW.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I see that the Postmaster General and the Minister of Agriculture have been enlightening the electors of South Renfrew; so I assume that the writ for South Renfrew has been issued.

Mr. BORDEN. My right hon. friend must not assume too much. As a matter of fact, I expect to take up that matter to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then I will renew my question on Monday.

SUPPLY—INTERCOLONIAL TRADE.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EMMERSON. As I notice that the Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat, I would like to call the attention of my right hon. friend the leader of the government to the matter of the payment of the balances due the census enumerators. I have a letter received to-day stating that the enumerators in the county of Westmorland have not yet received the balance due them.

Mr. BORDEN I am very glad that my hon. friend has brought the matter to my attention. It is apparently a departmental matter and consequently it is impossible for me to give any opinion, but I will take the earliest opportunity to bring it to the attention of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture and I am sure he will attend to it at once. I agree in what my hon. friend has said about the desirability of having payments made at the earliest possible moment.

TRADE BETWEEN CANADA AND THE WEST INDIAN ISLANDS AND AUSTRALIA.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (St. John City). I desire to draw attention to some matters connected with the negotiations for the improvements of trade relations between Canada and the West Indian Islands and Australia. I do not propose to take up much time for the reason that so far as this side of the House is concerned, our belief in the desirability of improved trade relations between Canada and the British West Indies, as well as between Canada and Australia, is proved by documents which have been laid on the table and by the fact, which no doubt every hon. member knows, that in every reasonable way Canada has given encouragement for trade between herself and those countries. I would like, before proceeding with my remarks, to ask my hon, friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) if the steamship service between Canada and the West Indies remains in the same condition as that in which it was when the present government came into office? Shortly after the opening of the session I called the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that Messrs. Pickford & Black, the contractors for the West Indian service, had declined, during last year and while the late government was in office, to continue the service any longer under the then existing arrangement, and a temporary arrangement was made by the late Minister of Trade and Commerce which was exceedingly unsatisfactory to the business men of St. John who were doing business with the British West Indies. As the result of that temporary arrangement, the service to Halifax was to be one in every eleven days and to St. John one only in twenty-two days. The people of St. John have been for a number of years striving very earnestly to develop trade with the British West Indies, and have been fairly successful. It came to them, therefore, as a great disappointment when this reduction was announced so far as St. John was concerned. Representatives of the Board of Trade brought the matter to my notice and I took it up with the late Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), and he informed me he would take energetic measures to have the service improved and give satisfaction to the business men of St. John. But the calamity happened to the country on the 21st of September of the defeat of the late government, and the late Minister of Trade and Commerce was not able to pursue the matter any further. I would like to ask the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) if anything has been done?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). The matter remains exactly where it was left by the old minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is unfortunate that the whole of this winter shall be allowed to pass away without anything being done towards improving the service. I regret that I cannot find in the estimates for the coming year any increase in the steamship subsidy to the West Indies, and I, therefore, suppose—and it will be with great reluctance—that we may take it for granted that there will be no improvement in the coming year.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). I do not think my hon. friend should take too much for granted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman hold out to me the hope that in the supplementary estimates, which I presume will appear a little later, there may be a vote for improvement in the service?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). To a man so optimistic as my hon. friend it should be scarcely necessary to hold out any hope.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was optimistic when I had good ground for being so. If I had been Minister of Trade and Commerce during the past three months, I think I would have had an amount in the main estimates for the improvement of the service to the West Indies, and I think that before this, that service would have been improved. There are two ways of improving the trade conditions between Canada and other countries. There are two barriers to trade. One is the tariff. The other is no communication at all or inadequate or expensive communication; and the trade between Canada and the West Indies may be hampered by the nonimprovement of the service as well as by the tariff remaining as it is, and trade relations can be improved by giving a better steamship service as well as by a reduction of the tariff between the two countries. And I do think that my hon. friend, instead of giving attention simply to the one question of getting improved trade relations so far as the tariff between Canada and the West Indies is concerned, should have devoted his attention earnestly to the improvement of the steamship communication and if possible the reducing of the rates of freight. The commissioners appointed by the Canadian and British and by some of the West Indian governments as well to consider the question of improved trade relations and better steam communication made a very strong recommendation in favour of an improved steamship service. They recommended that there should be two services between Canada and the Windward Islands —one being a direct service from Halifax all the year round, and the other a service between Montreal and the West Indies but calling at St. John during the summer months, and a direct and exclusive service between St. John and the West Indies during the winter months. I had the opportunity of conferring with the representatives of the Board of Trade of St. John to whom was entrusted the matter of considering the West Indies service, and I had reason to believe that the people of St. John would be entirely satisfied with that. I believe also it will be satisfactory to the people of the province of Quebec, Ontario and the western provinces, because in summer we would have a steamship service starting at Montreal and calling at St. John and in the winter an exclusive and direct service to the port of St. John.

With the very excellent railway accommodation we have now between St. John and the west, it was felt that that service would be very satisfactory to the people of the upper provinces and of western Canada in both summer and winter. Of course, it will cost Canada something more than it is now paying in order to secure this important service. I understand the British government has not expressed its willingness to give the aid that was recommended by the Royal Commission; but it does seem to me that if the government is—as I am glad to believe it to be—desirous of improving the trade relations between Canada and the British West Indies and of enlarging the trade between the two countries, it should not allow $50,000 or even $100,000 to stand in the way of securing frequent, rapid and satisfactory steamship service. Therefore, I hope that when my hon. friend comes to consider what aid he will ask his colleague the Minister of Finance to provide in the supplementary estimates for steamship services, he will not forget to put in an additional amount in order to secure, at as early a day as possible, better communication between Canada and the West Indies. The country will, I am sure, approve of the expenditure, and I have no doubt that the results will justify such action on the part of the government.

I observe that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has laid on the table a report relating to this subject of trade between Canada and the West Indies. That report recites the appointment of the Royal Commission, reports the action which was taken by representatives of the late Canadian government, as well as representatives of the British government and the representatives of the several West Indian islands. In concluding the committee state the willingness of this government to meet the representatives of the several West Indian colonies, at the earliest convenient opportunity, if possible, during the month of March, 1912. That, I presume, will be for the purpose of endeavouring, if possible, to carry into effect the recommendation of the Royal Commissioners. I hope that the result will be, if not a reduction in tariff between the two countries, at all events, an improvement of the means of communication; for, as I have said, improved communication will probably go as far in improving the trade between the two countries as a reduction in the tariff.

Now, I have observed, from the returns laid upon the table, that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) is following along the lines laid down by his predecessor in endeavouring to improve the trade relations between Canada and Australia. The returns show that ever since 1900, at all events, the late government has been continually urging, so far as properly could be urged, upon the consideration of the Australian government the desirability of making some preferential trade arrangement between the two countries. So far, their efforts have not been successful. I shall not take up the time of the House by reading the returns, but will very briefly state the nature of the last communication on this subject by the late government and will also read the latest communication from the present government. Mr. Ross represents the Canadian government in Australia. I find that on November 7, 1910—just ten years after the late government entered upon negotiations—the Department of Trade and Commerce communicated with Mr. Ross as follows:

> Instructed by Minister of Trade and Commerce direct you should inquire Australian government will they make any concession to the Canadian government if the duty is abolished on Australian mutton. Will they make any concession if duty is reduced 1½ cents? Instruction to observe that in either case such action would be opposed here.

And on February 9, 1910, Mr. Ross cabled:

> In reply to your telegram of the 7th, have had an interview with Minister of Customs. In their opinion, think it a better course to pursue to exchange present preferential tariff early next session parliament in June without reference to mutton. Better postpone more extended preferential arrangement owing to the political situation. Our private opinion Australian government will not commit themselves definitely on account of the elections in April.

On the 6th August, 1910, the leader of the opposition, then the leader of the government, cabled Premier Fisher at Melbourne:

> It has long been the wish of the Canadian government to have better trade relations with Australia. Ross, our agent, is authorized to negotiate, and I express hope that results satisfactory to both parties may be reached.

On the 8th August, 1910, Premier Fisher cabled the right hon. gentleman, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as follows:

> In reply to your cable of the 7th, every effort will be made to facilitate the discussion of this matter with Ross, as I heartily reciprocate your wish that results satisfactory to our respective governments may be reached.

Nothing more was done during that year. We find that on the 16th December, 1910, Mr. Ross advised the department that there had been no further developments in reference to reciprocal trade between Canada and Australia, but stated that he understood it was the intention of the Prime Minister of Australia to discuss the matter with the Prime Minister of Canada when they met at the Colonial Conference in London in the May following. I am not aware whether there was any discussion at the Colonial Conference or not; but we know that no results were attained, for the return which brings the facts down to the 15th of the present month makes reference to the negotiations, but does not state that anything was accomplished. Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) takes the matter up, and on the 28th of December last writes the following letter to the Hon Mr. Tudor, Minister of Trade and Commerce for Australia. I think it would be well that the letter of my hon. friend should be placed on 'Hansard' as showing the action taken:

> Since 1898 our two countries have been endeavouring from to time to time to arrive at an agreement for better mutual trade relations but so far without success.
> In the meantime, Canada has admitted the British Colonies, including the West Indies as also the Dominions of South Africa and New Zealand, to the advantages of her British preferential reduction over non-preferred countries, and which amounts to about 30 per cent. of the duty. A return has been accorded by South Africa and New Zealand, and negotiations are now going on for preferential return from the West Indies, and with fair prospects of success.
> It seems to me too bad that with our great sister Dominion in the Pacific we have not been long since able to arrange our trade on a preferential basis, and I can assure you that Canada is very desirous both on sentimental grounds and for reasons of mutual advantage, that this anomaly shall be removed as speedily as possible.
> We give you already a considerable free list for some of your staple products, although we got no very great return from you in that respect for any of our great staples. We stand ready to give you a substantial preference upon all articles of export in return for a substantial preference to our exports to your country and a free entrance for some of our natural products.
> Proposals have been made to exchange your limited preference for a limited preference of entry into our country, but it scarcely seems adequate that we should proceed on so restricted a basis.

Can we not at least approach the matter with a sincere desire and a determination to come to some fair agreement, and thus bind our two countries closer together on the lines of commercial intercourse and exchange? If your government will make a proposition, I shall be very much pleased to take it up with my colleagues, and to pursue the negotiations with you to a finish, and I do not see why we should not come to conclusions which would be mutually advantageous. Once preferential inducements are added, our steamship communications can be bettered, and by this means our two kindred peoples will become more intimately acquainted with and interested in each other.

If, on the other hand, you wish Canada to make a proposition to you with the assurance that you desire to follow it to a completion, I shall be glad to place a proposal before you for consideration.

May I hope to hear from you in good time? Our Mr. Ross will give you any desired information as to our products, our exports and imports.

I desire to say that in my opinion the action of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in sending this communication to the Australian government is worthy of all commendation; but may I point out what I think is one objection, from the Canadian standpoint, to my hon. friend's letters? My hon. friend rather puts it that the improvement of the tariff relations is to precede the establishment of better steamship communication between the two countries. He suggests that if we can get a preferential tariff satisfactory to Canada then the steamship communication might be improved. In my judgment this country should move ahead irrespective of any improvement in tariff relations between Canada and other countries, and wherever there is an opportunity to develop trade, Canada should encourage the establishment of proper steamship communication in order to give facilities for trade. As I said before, high freight rates and inadequate steamship accommodation are just as much a barrier to improved trade between any two countries as the raising or maintaining of a tariff wall. The late government has shown an example which my hon. friend might well imitate. I find that for the encouragement of foreign trade between Canada and other countries, including Great Britain and the Dominions beyond the seas, Canada gave, last year, the very large sum of $1,440,000. It seems to me that everyone must recognize that the improved steamship accommodation which has been secured by means of these very handsome subsidies has been a very great factor in developing the foreign trade of Canada to the enormous proportions which it has now attained, and of which every Canadian is so proud.

But, Sir, in considering whether or not my hon. friend has good ground for hoping that he will be able to accomplish anything by his negotiations as Minister of Trade and Commerce, I am constrained to say that the past record of the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden), not only in his actions, but in his speeches, does not give very strong ground for the hope that my hon. friend will receive encouragement in the work which he has undertaken of endeavouring to improve the trade relations between Canada and these respective countries by diplomatic action. My hon. friend, I know, is at times enthusiastic in favour of enlarging the foreign trade of Canada. We know that as long ago as 1891, my hon. friend, in a most admirable speech which he made in this House, declared that he and the government of which he was a member were in favour of widening the bounds of commerce on every side and then, as if some one were asking the question, he said: "With the United States? Yes," but we find, Mr. Speaker, that when the opportunity came for my hon. friend to lend the force of his great power, and his surpassing eloquence towards widening the bounds of commerce with the great republic to the south, after some consideration, when about to plunge into the late political campaign, my hon. friend was one of the very strongest in denouncing the proposal which had been made by the late government to widen the bounds of commerce with the United States. Then I find that no longer ago than the 8th day of December last, my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Mr. Borden), who, when he speaks, must be taken as speaking for the party which he leads, was the guest of the Canadian Society of New York, and made a speech upon that occasion. He, I suppose, felt called upon to give to the people he was addressing some explanation of the action of the party of which he is the leader in turning down or seeking to have turned down the best—I say it advisedly—the best trade arrangement which was ever offered to the people of Canada. He felt called upon to explain the extraordinary course which the Conservative party had pursued with reference to that question. He was addressing a number of intelligent gentlemen who were familiar with the history of the negotiations which had taken place between Canada and the United States for many years past. He was addressing gentlemen who knew that all parties in Canada had been for years endeavouring to obtain better trade relations between these two great countries, and who would naturally be surprised at the action of the Conservative party, and would expect to hear some reason for the extraordinary position which the Conservative party, under the leadership of my right hon. friend, had taken. What was the language of my right hon. friend on that occasion? And remember,

Mr. Speaker, that what I propose to read is not apparently a mere newspaper report made upon the spot; the whole report of the speech bears evidence that my right hon. friend had, in accordance with the practice of many eminent statesmen, both in the mother country and in America, furnished typewritten copies of his speech in advance to the newspapers, with the understanding that it was to be printed when it had actually been delivered. I shall quote from the report as published in the St. John 'Standard,' the leading Conservative paper in the province of New Brunswick, although I saw the same report, word for word, in the other Conservative papers in Canada.

The right hon. gentleman said that:

> For thirty years and more we have followed certain national ideas and policies which we firmly intend to pursue and continue in the future. We reached the conclusion that the recent proposals were inconsistent with those ideals and policies.

Now, I come to the language to which I invite the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The right hon. gentleman proceeded:

> Moreover, we entirely disbelieve in the framing of tariffs by diplomatic methods. That system has been tested between different states under the British flag, notably in South Africa, and the results have been far from satisfactory.

Is my hon. friend aware that the right hon. leader of the government has made that declaration as to what would be the policy of the Conservative party in the future, and as to the principles for which they stand in so far as trade between Canada and other countries is concerned? Remember, the right hon. gentleman was not stating what was and what would be the policy of the Conservative party simply as between Canada and foreign countries, but he was laying down the general principle that, so far as relations between Canada and foreign countries were concerned and so far as relations between Canada and sister colonies of the empire were concerned, he and his party entirely disproved of any attempt to make tariffs as the result of diplomatic action. Yet, my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is, apparently with a light heart and hopeful spirit, moving ahead just as if his leader had not made that declaration. Would it be unfair for the governments of the British West Indies and the government of Australia, when they read this declaration of the right hon. leader of the government, to have a slight suspicion that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not sincere in these negotiations but was simply playing with the governments of these important British possessions?

It may be that my right hon. friend has been misreported. I will say to you, Mr. Speaker, that when I saw this statement I was surprised at it, but it was explaining the course of the Conservative party in reference to the arrangement with the United States.

The language of my right hon. friend the leader of the government is in harmony with statements which have been made by members of the Conservative party in this House and throughout the country and, giving to the language of my right hon. friend the meaning which must necessarily be given to the words which he uttered, he appears to have deliberately made the declaration that in so far as Canada is concerned she is going to act independently in her tariff legislation, she is not going to have any negotiations in relation to tariff matters either with foreign countries or British possessions, she is going to act independently in the framing of her own tariff, to enter into no negotiation in future and to leave other countries, foreign as well as British, to do as they please in so far as their tariffs are concerned.

I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the House. I thought it well to call attention to this statement of my right hon. friend, not, as I have said, a casual statement, but a statement made as embodying the well settled views and policy of the Conservative party in so far as the arrangement of tariffs is concerned. It seems to me that the course of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is entirely out of harmony with the statement of his leader. So far as we on this side of the House are concerned, and I am sure in so far as the Liberal party throughout the country is concerned, we believe in doing everything possible to enlarge the bounds of Canadian trade. We believe in giving to our people facilities and encouragement for the exportation of their produce and manufactures to all the countries of the world, whether it is to the United States, whether it is to British possessions, whether it is to France, or to any other country of the world, and we believe there is no more effective way of doing this than in connection with the improvement of transportation, negotiating with the governments of those countries with the view of having improved trade relations with them. That has been the policy of the Liberal party in the past; that will be its policy in the future. It will be satisfactory to me, and, I am sure, it will be satisfactory to the members of this House to learn that the right hon. leader of the government has been misreported by the newspapers of his party, but, as the same verbatim report appeared in different newspapers, I assume that the hon. gentleman was correctly reported and that in that speech he laid down the policy of the Conservative party, and gave a clear declaration as to what would be its course in the future in so far as tariff relations between Canada and other countries are concerned.

Mr. H. B. AMES (Montreal St. Antoine). Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention at the last session of parliament to bring this matter of Australian-Canadian reciprocal trade relations to the attention of the House because it seemed to me that it was a matter of very considerable importance. But, the Reciprocity Bill which was brought down by the former government so altered our entire situation that I felt it inopportune to go on with the discussion. I, however, am very glad, at this time when the matter has been raised by the hon. member for St. John, (Mr. Pugsley) to take occasion to make a few observations to the House in connection with Canadian-Australian trade. When that Reciprocity Bill was brought in last session, as I said a moment ago, our status in so far as our power of negotiation was concerned was completely altered from what it hitherto had been. We were practically inviting all the other sister dominions throughout the British Empire to come in as an incident of the bargain that we were making with a foreign nation, sending them, so to speak, around to the back door and letting them in with a stranger's ticket when we should take them in at the front door and deal with them as sisters in the same great nation. Now that the reciprocity question is settled, and let us believe it is settled for many years to come, and we are back where we were before, prepared to negotiate with other parts of the empire, I think we can well spend an afternoon in discussing wherein our trade relationships can be improved. I believe that the present government, even in the short time it has been in office, has given ample proof that it is extremely anxious to enlarge our trade relationships. Because we did not accept the late government's proposition as regards reciprocity with the United States, we have been accused of unwillingness to enlarge the opportunities of Canadian trade with other parts of the empire. That accusation, I believe, Mr. Chairman, is entirely unjust. The reason the reciprocity arrangement was opposed by members on this side of the House and was rejected by the country, in my opinion, was that it involved an entangling alliance in the matter of tariffs and made it possible, or even probable, that we should lose our liberty of independent action.

Now, the very condition of affairs which throws on this side of the House the responsibility on account of the rejection of reciprocity with the United States is a condition of affairs which we would welcome if it related to an arrangement which we might make with other parts of the British Empire. The more we can get entangled and bound together with the other parts of the empire, the better it will be for us all. We were the first self governing Dominion to adopt the principle of preferential trade. It is now 13 years ago since we made our famous offer to Great Britain and since that time we have kept that offer in force although our friends in the motherland have not reciprocated. It appears to me that we have gone as far as we can in that direction; the next step is that when the motherland is prepared to place her children upon a better basis than strangers in her market we shall be prepared to make still further concessions than those we have already made. But for the time being while Great Britain is unable to give any advantages to us it seems to me that we cannot be called upon to make any larger opportunity for her. But with the other members of the empire that have a fiscal policy similar to that under which we live, which have tariffs that can be reduced towards favoured nations, with them we can make preferential treaties and along that line of least resistance it seems to me it would be wise for us to go. Both Canada and Australia have already adopted the principle of reciprocal arrangements with other parts of the empire. Canada has made an arrangement of that kind with New Zealand and with South Africa. She has offered concessions to the West Indies which they have not yet reciprocated and she has also offered concessions to many other parts of the empire. Australia on her part has reciprocal trade arrangements with South Africa, and with New Zealand, and she grants a preference on British goods going in to that country, so that both Canada and Australia have established the precedent that they are prepared to make arrangements of this kind. But, although these two countries are the two leading British possessions they have as yet no mutual arrangement the one with the other, and each towards the other is a stranger in the matter of tariffs. Canada and Australia, although they are both countries carrying on large commercial operations throughout the world have comparatively small dealings the one with the other. We find that Australia imports annually goods to the amount of about $300,000,000 and yet all that we Canadians send her is about one and one-third per cent of that. We find that Australian exports annually goods valued at $360,000,000 and yet of these exports we take but one nineteenth part. So that the trade as it at pressent exists between Canada and Australia is very much less than we in both countries would wish it to be. That may be partially due to defective steamship service, as the hon. gentleman from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has alleged, but yet we must not forget that we have two steamship lines heavily subsidized from Canada, one from the Atlantic ports and one from the Pacific ports, and that we are annually contributing about $300,000 towards the expense of these two services. It is quite probable that a third service is desirable and necessary directly between Vancouver via Hawaii, and the ports of Australia, and I would even be prepared to urge upon the government that if Australia shows herself willing to contribute liberally towards such a third service that service might be created inasmuch as I think there would be traffic enough for these three services between the two countries.

But, for the present, the matter I want to specially discuss is the question of tariff concessions on the part of the two countries with a view of increasing their mutual trade. There are many strong reasons it seems to me that should appeal to this House and to the thinking people of this country why such an arrangement should be consummated. These reasons are both sentimental and economic and as such we know they have force with British peoples. In the first place Australians and Canadians are people of kindred races. There is a common language, there is a common historic back-ground, there is a common method of doing business and it should not be at all difficult for these two countries to deal with one another. The difficulties which exist in the way of our dealing with the Latin people of South America for example, do not exist between Canada and Australia. In the second place be it remembered that both these countries face on the Pacific ocean and that there is a smooth and tranquil highway of trade which can be traversed every succeeding year in a lesser period than before by reason of faster vessels, and which really brings the two countries in point of expense of transportation very close the one to the other. Then it is to be borne in mind that Canada lies in the northern hemisphere whereas Australia lies in the southern hemisphere and that there is an alternation of seasons—when it is winter here it is summer with them, when our agricultural products are in such abundance that we are glad to export them theirs are most scarce, and vice versa; and that it would be quite possible to imagine a condition under which we could profitably in certain seasons of the year each send to the other what the other lacked. Let me point out also that to a very considerable extent Canada and Australia produce complementary products. We have no sub-tropical sections of Canada but a very considerable portion of Australia, almost all of Queensland, is sub-tropical and the relationship between Canada and Queensland is practically the same in so far as products are concerned as exists between Canada and the West Indies. In the exchange of the products of the northern zone for the products of the sub-tropical zone there ought certainly to be ample opportunity for trade. Further let me point out that there are no complications by way of outside trade arrangements that should hinder each of these two countries from dealing just as they saw fit with each other. That was the most embarrassing feature of the America-Canadian reciprocity proposal; that if we were to give the United States certain advantages in our market we would necessarily have to give these same advantages to 12 other foreign nations who had no claim upon us and who would give us absolutely nothing in return. But in this case we can make just such arrangements as we wish with the other parts of the British Empire and not feel that we have to concede one single item to any outsider, it being purely a domestic and family affair. I do not need to point out to the House that if our trade relations with Australia and other parts of the empire can be increased and enlarged it will mean the strengthening of the empire, it will mean the keeping of our money and resources within the empire in mutual building up each with the other one common consolidated whole. Notwithstanding the reasons that exist for greater trade between Canada and Australia, I have pointed out how small our mutual trade is: The United States are sending to Australia eight times as much as we are, Germany is sending five times as much, Belgium and Switzerland, little countries in Europe, are sending to Australia more than Canada does. I think that is due to the fact largely that we have not as yet been able to mutually give to this question that consideration which it naturally deserves.

There are precedents that can be cited, why a preferential treaty should be made. Take for example some of the preferential treaties we are now working under with other parts of the empire. We have a treaty with New Zealand. In 1903, New Zealand granted Canada a preference in return for that which Canada granted her. That preferential Act, which imposed extra duties on goods from foreign countries, was extended in 1907. Under it, the general tariff on dutiable goods from foreign countries is 30·55 per cent, but goods entering New Zealand from the United Kingdom or British possessions come in on an average tariff of twenty and three-fourths per cent, so that you will see that fully one-third of the duty to strangers is rebated towards members of the same imperial household. Now, that has had a very marked effect upon our trade with New Zealand. In 1902—the year before New Zealand granted us a preference—the total trade between Canada and New Zealand was $357,873; in 1906 it was $1,036,129; and in 1911 it was $1,917,978, showing that within ten years it has increased between five and six times the amount formerly exchanged between the two countries, and one of the best features of that exchange is that the imports and exports bear an almost equal relation to each other. For example we send to New Zealand goods to the extent of $1,004,370, and we take goods from New Zealand to the extent of $913,608, the balance of trade being almost equal, which is an evidence that the most healthy kind of interchange exists between these two parts of the empire.

We have also an arrangement with South Africa, an arrangement that has proved profitable and that we are glad to continue. Foreign goods entering South Africa are taxed on an average of 17.38 per cent, but goods that come into South Africa from the United Kingdom or British possessions, like Canada, are taxed at the rate of 14:38 per cent. You will notice that the tariff of South Africa is comparatively low. We get a three per cent advantage, not very much, but it certainly has been enough to stimulate the trade in Canadian flour and some other articles with that country.

I do not wish to allege that the government, which passed out of power so recently, has in any way been neglectful or derelict in its duty in dealing with this Australian-Canadian preferential question. One has only to look through the files of the correspondence brought down to see that for the last 11 years that question has been constantly a subject of negotiation between the two countries, and that on more than one occasion it seemed as though a mutually satisfactory arrangement had been arrived at. But, political conditions in Australia have been, since the establishment of the commonwealth there, uncertain until up to a comparatively recent date. There have been in Australia three political parties, namely, the free traders, the protectionists, and the labour party. None of these was able to control a majority in the legislature, and consequently it was only by a series of combinations that any party could rule. These combinations were made and broken with great frequency, with the result that during ten years unstable conditions were the rule in Australia. When I was in Australia two years ago I had the opportunity of discussing this matter with some of their leading statesmen, among others the Prime Minister of to-day. I found they were unwilling indeed to deal with anything that affected the tariff, because the government of Mr. Deakin was a fusionist government, and his ministry contained free traders and protectionists in nearly equal number and consequently did not wish to raise any question that would involve a discussion of the tariff. They feared that if they did so the Cabinet might fall to pieces. They were kept in power merely by common dread of the outside enemy, namely, the Labour party, and that was practically the only cement that then held the government together.

Since I was in Australia the government existing then has passed from power and a Labour government—frankly labour—has come in and now controls both Houses. And it would seem as though the time had arrived when we Canadians might deal with a stable government. I may add here that the Labour government of Australia is avowedly protectionist—protectionist from a somewhat different point of view from that on which the question is usually discussed in this country, but nevertheless they are protectionist. They are protectionist from the point of view of the workingman himself. Consequently it seems that we will have protection as a settled policy in Australia, and with a settled government in that country there should be no difficulty in our making some progress.

I may further say that I believe that our case has been repeatedly placed before the successive governments that have come one after another in Australia, with a good deal of ability and a good deal of discretion, by our Canadian representative, Mr. D. H. Ross. Mr. Ross is persona grata with both sides of the Australian House; he seems to have friends quite as many in one party as in the other, and he is particularly au fait with the matter and has frequently presented memorials to the government which have been seriously considered by them. I do not think there is much difficulty in respect of information, for I believe that the Australian government have had from Mr. Ross all that they could desire. It seems to me that now an opportune time has come for us—when there is a settled government in Australia, a government which is frankly protectionist—to open up and carry on negotiations with good hopes of getting them carried through.

You will notice by the returns brought down this year that the latest proposition is that we should give our minimum tariff for their minimum tariff. I sincerely hope that our government will not adopt that rough-and-ready method of arriving at an agreement with Australia. The question involved is one that requires more delicate handling than that. It is a question that should take into consideration the conditions as they exist in both countries and the mutual relationship that obtains between the two. Let me point out, in the first place, that both Canada and Australia, in providing a maximum and a minimum tariff that should extend the maximum to the stranger and the minimum to the other members of the great British family, always had their eyes upon Great Britain. The ex-Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will admit that that is what was mainly in his mind when his preferential tariff was submitted to this House. If you examine the Australian returns, you will find that one-half the imports come from Great Britain and that of that one-half, 64 per cent are on the preferential list. But, if you examine the list of the goods that Australia imports from other parts of the empire exclusive of Great Britain, you will find that 95 per cent of them are affected in no way by Australia's preferential trade tariff. Further than that, if you examine the Australian tariff you will find that while it contains 711 items, 294 of them carry preferential reductions and the remainder are exactly the same in the maximum as in the minimum. It would seem to me therefore that for us to offer them our minimum tariff or for them to offer us their minimum tariff, would simply mean giving a very slight reduction upon a large number of items, the great majority of which could under no circumstances be exported from one country to the other. It would seem to me, that a far better method of arriving at a really valuable increase of trade would be a list-for-list arrangement, in which we would endeavour to make such concessions as we might on the surplus products which Australia exports, and they in their turn, would endeavour to let into Australia on favoured treatment these things which we are already sending them or which are being sent to them by competitors similarly situated to ourselves. We send about $4,000,000 worth of goods annually to Australia and of that $4,000,000 worth, 80 per cent are covered by five items of the tariff. There you will see that the range of articles is comparatively small, and that it would be far more beneficial to our mutual trade if important reductions could be made on a few items rather than very slight reductions on a large number.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What are the five items.

Mr. AMES. Fish, lumber, agricultural implements, motor vehicles and paper. It is possible perhaps by correspondence to say, we will give you our minimum tariff if you give us yours; but when it comes to making a list-for-list arrangement, that cannot be done by two countries six thousand miles apart, either by mail or by cable. The parties must get together, and I believe the time has now arrived when this matter is of sufficient importance to make it obligatory upon a member of the Australian government and a member of the Canadian government to meet at some common point and take it up in conference, with a view to arriving at a mutually satisfactory arrangement. If it were possible for our Minister of Trade and Commerce to visit Australia, I think I can assure him, from what I know of the men whose names figure in this correspondence, not only that he would have a hearty welcome, but that they would meet him as far as possible in arranging a mutually beneficial basis of trade; or if the Australian Minister of Finance came to Canada, I am sure that we would find him to be a man with whom we could discuss this matter to our mutual satisfaction. Even if the ministers could not come together a competent commission might meet; for I am satisfied that a satisfactory arrangement cannot be made unless the parties sit down together with the determination to stay until something is really accomplished. In an arrangement of that kind I think we Canadians can afford to be pretty generous, because at the present time the balance of trade is largely in our favour. We to-day send to Australia eight times as much as Australia sends to us. Last year we sent to them $3,900,000 worth of goods, while they sent to us in return only $480,000 worth. It is obvious that it is not profitable to have trade going all one way. Freight rates, if nothing else, could be very much improved if the quantity of freight coming back were equivalent to the quantity going out. We see what has happened in New Zealand where a really equitable arrangement has been made: the imports and exports are nearly equal; and a similar arrangement made between Australia and Canada might make the balance of trade pretty nearly equal between the two countries. Our trade with Australia has grown 75 per cent in the last four years, and yet Australia sent us last year less than in 1907. So that it appears to me that we could afford to be generous in our dealings with Australia, inasmuch as at the present time the benefit seems to be on our side.

Mr. GUTHRIE. What are the chief imports into Canada from Australia now?

Mr. AMES. I will give them in a moment. If you make a comparative examination of the Australian and Canadian tariffs, you will find that on goods sent from Australia to Canada, taking dutiable goods only, our tariff wall amounts to 31·29 per cent. I have not the figures at my disposal to show what was paid in the same year on Canadian goods going from Australia, but as we pay the maximum rate, I was able to get the figures of the total foreign imports going into Australia, and find that the average rate on them is 24·06 per cent. So that our rate against them is 7·23 per cent. higher than their rate against us. However, our importations from Australia are in large measure admitted free; so that if we take the figures of the total trade from Australia to Canada, we find that the average rate of duty upon it is 16·9 per cent., while the average rate of duty on the total foreign trade to Australia is 21·5 per cent. Therefore on dutiable goods alone we have a higher wall against them than they have against us; but if all classes of goods are taken into account, they have a higher wall against us than we have against them. This is due to the fact that fully half of the four or five classes of goods that we take from them are on the free list. Now, as I have pointed out, we grant a wider margin of preference. For example, if the initial Australian duty were 24 per cent., the preferential rebate of ¼ would bring it down to 18 per cent. If the Canadian initial duty were 31 per cent., ⅓ off that would bring it down to about 21 per cent. We give a greater preferential reduction than they do, but we start with a higher tariff wall against them than they have against us, and in the end, if minimum were given for minimum, ours would still be higher against them than theirs against us.

When we come to the question of a list-for-list arrangement, we shall have to consider what we can send them and what they can send us. Perhaps the best way to find out what we can send them is to see what the United States are sending, because the United States are sending them from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 a year, while we are sending them only one-sixth to one-eighth as much; and yet the great bulk of the goods which the United States are sending to Australia, on exactly the same terms as we are sending, are goods which we can produce and on which we could compete with the United States in the Australian market. My contention is that if we are able to secure in the Australian market a slight advantage over our American competitor, we shall be able to divert a considerable portion of that trade from the United States to Canada, which I think is a very justifiable object. Looking, then, over the list of goods shipped by the United States to Australia, we find the principal ones to be: boots and shoes, of which in 1909 they sent $263,000 worth; ammunition and explosives, of which they sent $279,000 worth. I may say that on boots and shoes, the duty against both the United States and ourselves is 35 per cent; the preferential rate is 30 per cent, on ammunition the duty is 5s. 6d. maximum, and 5s. minimum. On explosives the duty is 20 per cent. maximum, 15 per cent. minimum. Had we the 5 per cent. advantage on explosives I think we could do a considerable business in that line. Some of the other goods are fish, furniture, india-rubber, manufactures, metal manufactures, paper, timber, wood manufactures, vehicles, bicycles and motors. Of furniture the United States sends them $222,000 worth a year. On that the duty is 35 per cent. maximum, 30 per cent. minimum. A 5 per cent. advantage would, I think, help us to do a considerable business in that line. Of india-rubber manufactures the United States sends them $135,856 worth a year; the duty is 25 per cent. maximum, 20 per cent. minimum. Of metal manufactures, the amount sent by the United States is very large—over $1,000,000 worth of wire, over $3,000,000 worth of machinery, over $1,000,000 worth of other metal manufactures, $6,810,000 worth of railway iron, over $400,000 worth of plates and sheets. On these goods there is a varying tariff, but in most cases the difference between the maximum and the minimum is about 5 per cent. on the cost of the articles, and if we had that advantage, I am quite certain we could do a large trade with Australia in metal manufactures. With regard to paper, ordinary news print paper is free. The United States sent $799,000 worth in 1909. Of timber the United States sent $2,887,000 worth. Of wood manufactures they sent $389,000 worth. Of vehicles, bicycles, motors and parts they sent $487,000 worth.

Mr EMMERSON. What is the nature of the timber shipped from the United States? Is it mainly southern pine?

Mr. AMES. No, the timber shipped from the United States is almost all Douglas fir and Oregon pine from the American Pacific coast—Oregon and Washington. We claimed there that our Canadian product is better than the American, and we urged that if we were able to secure a slight advantage we could supply their wants very largely from our British Columbia forests. Now, taking these articles a little more in detail, let me show some of the main items of our present exports:

Exports of some Canadian Products to Australia for the year ending March 31, 1910.

Class of goods—	Amount.
Tinned fish..	$ 475,000
Agricultural implements and machinery..	1,260,000
Printing paper (mostly news print..	800,000
Undressed lumber..	340,000
Bicycles, motor cars, &c	300,000

Our total exports to Australia are $3,900,000. So it will be seen that these five items make up fully 80 per cent of all we send to Australia. In 1909, we shipped $650,000 worth of rails and fish-plates. They were trying them out on the Victorian railway when I was there, and I understood from Sir Thomas Tait that they were satisfactory. It is easy to see what an advantage a slight reduction on these six items would be to Canada. Take, for instance, fish in tins. These imports into Australia consist almost wholly of salmon, the total imports of fish in tins being about $2,285,000 annually. As I have shown, we send about $471,000 worth. That is, we supply about 21 per cent, or one-fifth of what Australia imports, the other four-fifths coming from the United States. The duty on tinned salmon going into Australia, wherever it may come from, is 1d. per pound. But if we could get a slight reduction, we could certainly largely increase our exportation at the expense of the Americans. Australia already gives South Africa a rebate of ½d. per pound on fish from that country. Thus the precedent has been established, and there is no reason why Australia should not give to Canada a rebate on the duty on fish. Take the case of timber: Australia in 1910 imported $10,278,900 worth of timber, of which $4,500,000 worth was from the United States, $2,600,000 from Norway and Sweden, and $375,000 worth from Canada. It will be seen that the United States sends to Australia twelve times as much timber as we do—practically the same kinds of timber and if anything not quite so good. The tariff upon that timber is 2s. 6d. per 100 superficial feet. We feel that if Australia would make a slight reduction, we could get a much larger quantity of British Columbia timber into Australia than we do. They allow white pine from New Zealand to come in at only 6d. per 100 feet. If they would give us anything like the same rate, we should be in a very much better position than we are. Another product of which we could send very considerable quantities at certain times of the year is apples. I had the opportunity of going through some of the most magnificent apple orchards in Tasmania, where apple culture is brought, perhaps, to the highest stage known in the civilized world. But as everybody knows, Canada and Australia have alternating seasons. I was in Tasmania in November, and the apple trees were in full bloom—it was the beginning of spring. The apple crop would be harvested in February and March. But they have practically no apples of their own in October and November and December, the very months when our apples are at their best. New Zealand has gone so far as to recognize this by reducing her tariff from 1d. per pound to ½d. per pound during November and December, thus permitting apples from the north to come in, though she is a large exporting country in the right time of the year. It does not seem to me altogether an unreasonable proposition that we should admit Tasmanian apples into Canada at a time when our apples are practically exhausted and that they should allow our apples in when their native supplies are low. There are quite a number of other fruits that could be exchanged on the same basis.

The same is true of eggs—these could be admitted on favourable terms at the time when the importing country has least and the exporting country has most. Another item in which our export to Australia is large, is newsprint paper. It is admitted free into Australia no matter where it comes from. If the Australians could be persuaded to put a slight duty against newsprint from foreign countries, and allow ours to go in free, it would give us a tremendous advantage; and I do not think it would raise the price of paper to them, because we can offer far more for export than they can consume. And if they would reduce slightly their duty on wrapping paper made by the Kraft process—the general tariff is 5s. and the United Kingdom tariff 4s. 6d.—if they could give us this slight advantage we could compete with Sweden and Norway on a basis that would largely help some of our mills in the province of Quebec. New Zealand gives an advantage of $12.21 per ton on Canadian wrapping paper over that produced in Norway and Sweden, and the result is that our Canadian mills are sending quantities of wrapping paper to New Zealand. Were we permitted some slight preference in the Australian market, it would be a great advantage to the mills in Quebec that use the Kraft process in the manufacture of paper. There is quite a range of articles which I have referred to, on which the Australians have a double tariff, with a slight difference between them. If we could gain the advantage of the minimum tariff we could replace to a large extent the goods manufactured by the United States. Among them are agricultural machinery, rubber goods, boots and shoes, metal manufactureries, textiles, vehicles, bicycles and motors. If an arrangement could be made by which we could get our lumber, our fish, our fruit (at certain times of the year), and our paper free into their markets; and if they will be prepared to put on a slight tax on the paper produced elsewhere, and give us their preferential rates on a number of manufactured articles, I think we should be content, and we should have the means of considerably increasing our trade.

But, of course, if we ask these boons, we must be very generous in dealing with Australia. We can hardly expect her to give us further advantages, particularly as trade stands eight to one in our favour, unless we are prepared to make concessions to them. Now, what commodities does Australia produce? Australia does not produce as large a variety of exportable goods as Canada. We get the best indication of her surplus by looking over her list of exports to Great Britain, for nearly everything that Australia produces in greater quantity than she requires for home consumption she sends to the English market. The British consumption of Australian goods amounts to $150,000,000 a year. Certain articles which Australia sends to Great Britain come into direct competition with our exports. We could hardly expect to send wheat or flour to Australia, nor could we send cattle, for our cattle meet their chilled beef in the British market. They compete also in sending large quantities of minerals—gold, silver, copper and lead.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What is Australia's export of wheat?

Mr. AMES. About $25,000,000 a year. There are a number of articles that we already admit free from Australia—we could hardly do better than that.

We allow all skins, hides, rabbit skins, sheep skins and other skins to come in free. We allow wool in free, we allow tin in free and we allow their unmanufactured timber, many beautiful hardwoods that can be used in the manufacture of furniture, and special timber that will resist the torredo, and can be used in wharf construction, and also paving block timber. All of that timber is of most excellent quality and it is all admitted free. But, on the other hand, there are certain lines which Australia would be extremely glad to put on the Canadian market more extensively, lines on which we have a distinct maximum, intermediate and minimum tariff. Some of these articles are:

Article.	Maximum.	Minimum.
Butter	4c	3c.
Apples	40c. bbl.	25c. bbl.
Leather	15%	12½%
Chilled mutton	3c.	2c.
Meat in tins	27½%	17½%
Tallow	20%	15%

If we should give to Australia our minimum tariff on these items we would undoubtedly considerably increase our importations of them from that country. We might even do better than our minimum tariff, inasmuch as the number of articles Australia can send us is so limited compared with the very large variety we can send them. Then, as I said, a list-for-list arrangement can only be dealt with when commissioners sit beside each other and concession is given for concession. The New Zealand principle that the computed loss of revenue on each article should be balanced might be applied and in that way the concessions made to measure up by some rule mutually agreed upon.

Australia produces a great deal of very excellent light wine. I can speak from knowledge for I have been there, I have seen the actual making of the wine, and have tasted it as well, Hocks and Chablis and wines of that character. The Australians would be very glad if they could get from us the same preferential treatment as we give to France on light wines and I think our Pacific coast people would find that the Australian wine would supplant the Californian if such an arrangement was made. There are other items which we include under the French treaty such as lime-juice, prunes, raisins, currants, &c. If we could give to Australia the preference we give under the French treaty it would help them very much in these lines.

Mr. DEVLIN. Apart from natural products, are there any manufactured goods in which we might give them a preference?

Mr. AMES. I have pointed out that there are a number of manufactured goods we can send to Australia, but that there are very few manufactured goods that Australia could send to us.

Mr. DEVLIN. And in these manufactured goods that we might send them according to the list enumerated by the hon. member could we compete with the Americans in Australia?

Mr. AMES. My contention is that at present the Americans get the advantage of Canada because we are both treated as strangers, but if we were given a slight preference in Australia of even 5 per cent or 10 per cent on the selling price over the American manufacturer we could, in many items displace the American manufacturer. In fact the point I mainly have in mind and am endeavouring to persuade the House to consider, is that it is of primal importance that these two great parts of the British Empire should be linked together as closely as can be and there are a great many advantages that would accrue if we had a mutually satisfactory preferential trade arrangement.

I believe that the trade now carried on between the two countries is a mere bagatelle compared with what might be effected if there were proper facilities for transportation and mutual concessions made under the tariffs of the two countries. That would be of great advantage. It would help us to build up our shipping on the Pacific and to build up the empire generally, it would strengthen us in dealing with the great problem that we must some day face, the defence of British interests on the Pacific ocean. But, I feel that the proposal of minimum for minimum, a rough-and-ready system of giving 400 items that neither country could possibly send and omitting to give substantial reductions on the few items on which they might trade, would never enable us to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. My contention is that it would be advisable if the government should consider this matter of sufficient importance to request the Minister of Trade and Commerce or some other party deputed by the government to meet the Australian government representatives, to sit down with them to consider an arrangement, concession for concession, and to endeavour, in that way, to arrive at some mutual sacrifices by which the volume of our trade would be increased.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. member said that, under certain circumstances, our manufacturers could compete in the Australian market with American manufacturers. If we could do that in Australia why is it that we could not do it in our own market? My hon. friend said that, with a very slight reduction, I think he even specified 5 per cent on boots and shoes and several other articles, we could compete against the United States in the Australian market, and yet the contention of my hon. friend, as I understand, would be that we cannot in our own market compete against the manufacturers of the United States with respect to these particular articles. Then my hon. friend argues that we should have participated in such a policy because it would tend to build up our shipping trade on the Pacific. I presume the same argument would apply with respect to enlarging our trade with the United States, that it would have the effect of building up our shipping and coasting trade on the Atlantic seacoast.

Mr. AMES. The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) will admit that the first requisite, if a country is to export manufactured articles, is that it should be able to retain its home market. Unless we can be sure of our home market it is not probable that we will have very much to export. I am a strong advocate of retaining our home market and if, after our home market is supplied, we can get, in other portions of the globe, preferential terms, we shall probably be able to cheapen the very articles here as well, through the fact that a larger quantity of articles permits a less cost of production.

Mr. EMMERSON. What about the shipping?

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce). We have had a very nice, sociable discussion, undertaken and carried out in good spirit, and I believe that the speeches which have been made, particularly the one just made by my hon. friend (Mr. Ames), will be of very great value not only to members of this House, but also generally as exposing, in a very frank, plain and comprehensive way, the groundwork for possible trade between ourselves and the Commonwealth of Australia. Looked at in one way there is a sameness of production between Canada and Australia which does not augur very well for a mutual interchange on a preferential or reciprocity basis. Looked at in another way, taking into account the two considerations of which we sometimes lose sight, that in the first place there is a reciprocity of seasons between Canada and Australia and in the second place a reciprocity of certain productions along quite an extended plane, we see that, outside of the great bulk which is common to both countries, there is a very wide margin for successful and remunerative exchanges between Canada and Australia.

If we add to that certain preferences which might be given by each and which will enable each in the markets of the other to meet competition from outside countries that have not that preference, I do not think we are entering upon a hopeless quest when we endeavour to carry out from this time forward what my hon. friends formerly in their government attempted to carry out in their time with the purpose of bettering the trade relations between the two governments. Frankly speaking, I have no fault to find in this respect with the administration of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think the ten years which have passed and which have now been succeeded by another régime, were particularly unfavourable to the consummation of a trade arrangement between Canada and Australia mainly from the fact, which has been alluded to by my hon. friend, that matters political were always strenuous in Australia, and there was no very decided certainty of the tenure of office of any government which happened to be in power. Looking over and studying carefully all the negotiations which have taken place during the last ten years, we see that they have proceeded upon the plane of endeavouring to get some arrangement and to link that arrangement up on as wide a basis as possible, but at the same time willing to take the initial step upon a distinctly narrower basis in the hope that there would be an eventual widening of it. There is a point for difference of opinion as to whether it was wise to make a proposal looking to preference for preference under the conditions which exist rather than to take a little longer time and try and secure a trade arrangement upon a more mutually profitable and commercially extended basis. Taking the 294 items upon which they give the British trade preference; it looks large when it is put down in columns on paper, it would seem as though Canada would actually get a preference on each of the 294 items in the list and that the arrangement would work out very advantageously. But upon scanning the list you find that there is an almost infinitessimal number from which Canada could reap any benefit at all. So that, I think the argument of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat is a very good argument, that it would be better to sit down together and frame a list of really serviceable exchanges between the two countries leaving in what would be mutually advantageous and leaving out what would be barren and unfruitful. It seemed a few weeks ago to Mr. Ross, our agent in Australia, that it might be possible for the Australian government to put upon its statute-book, at the session just past, a British preference in favour of Canada, and the question was asked as to whether this government would advise that an effort be made to bring that about. Looking at the matter as carefully as I could, I came to the conclusion not to make that effort and it was for the reason that I thought it would be better, instead of tieing ourselves up to an exchange of preference for preference, to try and come to an arrangement which would be less expansive in the matter of items but more fruitful in the matter of actual results. The proposition that I have made in writing to the Minister of Trade and Commerce of Australia is one which I hope will result in a conference, if possible, between members of the governments and if it is not possible between members of the governments, at least between special commissioners who shall be empowered to act by the two governments in that line. To my mind it is far better that members of the government shall be brought together where they can exchange views, can authoritatively dispose of item after item under discussion and can give and take in the way of coming to a favourable conclusion. I hope that idea may be carried out and I hope it may be carried out just as soon as posible.

My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) thought that we were rather putting the cart before the horse when we favoured preferential trade arrangements as a precursor to improved steamship arrangements. Well, that is a matter of opinion. My hon. friend is of the opinion that the improvement in trade communications should precede the other, at least that it should not be retarded in the least because the other does not exist and that it serves as an incentive to preferential rates. My own opinion is, and I hold it pretty strongly, that it is a great assistance to the betterment of steamship communications to have the inducement of favourable tariff rates between two countries. That holds as well with reference to our trade relations with the West Indies as it does with Australia, in fact, I think a little more so; I have made these few remarks with reference to our relations with Australia. It is not my part to indicate what I think will be the course of negotiations. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat has given us his views very extensively and very pertinently, but if it so happens that I am to be one of the negotiators, it would probably be better that I should not have gone too largely into the matter prior to my meeting our friends from the other side.

With regard to our relations with the West Indies, I laid on the table of the House the return to which my hon. friend has alluded. The matters in hand at the present time sprang out of and are based upon preceding negotiations and examinations the most important and comprehensive of which was that which was gone into by the British West Indian commission of which two Canadian Ministers were members. The three things which are under consideration now between ourselves and the West Indies are improved telegraphic or cable communications, improved steamship communication and improved trade relations. For a number of years Canada has given to the West Indian Islands a large and generous preference which has met with generous appreciation by the West Indian Islands and which, they acknowledge, has been a help to the West Indies in various ways and particularly in reference to the encouragement of their sugar industries. I am not going to take up the time of the House to dilate upon the conditions which seem to me to favour a reciprocal arrangement between ourselves and countries situated as the West Indies are. Suffice it to say at the present time that all of these three points that I have mentioned are very important. Improved cable and telegraphic communications contribute to quickness in the transaction of business and the increase of trade. The same is true, but in a still larger sense, of improved steamship communications.

I am not very enthusiastic and I have not been for a number of years over the steamship communications which have been existing between ourselves and the West Indies. I do not think they have been up-to-date, as modern and as enterprising as they should have been and as I think it is necessary for them to be in order that they shall adequately promote trade and commerce. We have not had as quick, as rapid, or as punctual communication as it is possible to have consistent with the conditions there and which it is necessary to have in order to promote trade to its greatest extent. I would not consider it a matter for very much doubt or hesitation if it comes to be a question between a larger amount of good as compared with a smaller amount of money if the first will bring you an adequate service and the second will only keep you halting along with an inadequate service. I think that hon. members on both sides of the House would favour an idea like that. It is better economy to spend well and get good returns than to spend poorly and to get equally poor or worse returns. What measure of help we may get from the West Indian Islands we do not yet know.

However, the proposition that was made by this government on my report to the Colonial Secretary was this: That the Canadian government was ready at any time to meet the representatives of the West Indies so that we might go into the matter face to face with each other in order to carry out what seems to be pretty well in train for being accomplished. Already nine legislatures in the West Indies, including British Guiana, have passed resolutions in favour of carrying out the conclusions of the West Indian commission. I may say that since that return was prepared, I notified the Colonial Secretary to intimate to the West Indian Islands that if they would send their representatives to Ottawa for a conference, we would be very happy to welcome them here, but that if they would rather that the conference should be held in the West Indian Islands we would send our representatives there. Since that I may say that I have received by cable a communication, informing the government —and I am sure all members on both sides of this House will receive the announcement with pleasure—that it has been decided that the West Indian commissioners appointed by the different legislatures shall come to Ottawa, and I expect at present they will be here about 27th of March. The date was fixed late in March originally in order that if we had to go to the West Indies we would not be there in the very hottest season, but happily the West Indian commissioners are coming here, and they will include representatives from most of the islands of the West Indies and from British Guiana. I am sure these gentlemen will receive from the members of the opposition and from the government a right hearty welcome.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I hope that we may be able to have results, as a return for the long and somewhat patient negotiations which have been going on now for a series of years.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), that we have had a very important discussion on this matter, and I was glad to notice that the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley), on our trade relations with the West Indies were so well received by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster). I do not know what trade is to be developed with the West Indies, but be it much or be it little we are all anxious to get it even if we have to pay pretty liberally for the privilege. I regret that our efforts to stimulate trade with Australia, efforts that have been constant for the last ten years, have been fruitless. I may say to my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), that the exposé he has made to-day of the possibilities of trade with Australia is, in my judgment, the clearest we have ever had in this House. He has told us the way in which that trade can be developed if any trade can be developed with Australia. Of course, it is quite true that the uncertainty of government in Australia has been one reason for the ill success of our negotiations in the past, and I fear there is no certainty that the government now in power will remain long in office, but if a fusionist government under Mr. Deakin is returned I know that he will be most anxious to have with us favoured trade relations. But, the difficulties in the way are not only political. Australia has only two large staples of export, wool and meat. We buy Australian wool to-day, but we buy it largely through Great Britain, and perhaps if we had direct communication from Australia we might get that product direct to Canada. But, I should judge that there is no market at all in Canada for Australian meat and I do not know that the tariff views of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) would favour a very large importation of meat from Australia to Canada. At all events there are some sections of our country where such a proposition would not be favourably received. For my part I think it would be well to make some sacrifice to develop a trade with Australia. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), that there is a wide field in Australia for Canadian manufactured goods, and if it is possible to induce the Australian government to give us a slight preference over the Americans the benefits to us would be immense. I think it possible that in a very few years we could increase our export trade to Australia which is now only $1,000,000 annually, to perhaps $12,000,000. I agree with the suggestion that we should send commissioners to Australia. We have at present in Australia a very able Canadian agent in Mr. Ross, who is well versed in business, who is conciliatory and diplomatic. He has the ear of all parties in Australia and no better man could be found to negotiate, but Mr. Ross could not move a step forward in these negotiations without being in constant communication with the government here, and the better way is for us to send a commissioner to Washington.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I said Washington, and I am sorry I made the slip. We did send a commissioner to Washington and we failed.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). It lies heavy on your heart.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not sorry we did so, but I am sorry that the people of Canada did not view our efforts in what we consider the proper light. If we are to send a commissioner to Australia I do not know any better man than the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is qualified by his position as head of the department and still better qualified by his enthusiasm in the work and the information he has with regard to it. I would even trust him with the light wines of Australia, and I therefore think that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) were to go to Australia and associate Mr. Ross with him there might be a possibility of bringing back a trade treaty with our fellow-subjects. But the great difficulty about that arrangement is that both parties to the negotiation would be protectionists, and it is very difficult for a protectionist in one country to convince his fellow-protectionist of another country to make way for him by lowering the tariff.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). How was it at the Washington Conference?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There, we exchanged natural products for natural products. One of the difficulties in that case, and it will be a difficulty in the present case also, is, that there would have to be secret negotiations. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has suggested that they should sit around the table and consult with each other, and that is an excellent way of doing business and the only proper way to do such business, but last year that procedure was characterized as secret negotiations and as dangerous negotiations. The Minister of Trade and Commerce put that objection most eloquently last year, but let him not be afraid of his own arguments then, let him have secret negotiations with the Australian government if he will, and if he can bring us back a good trade treaty we will approve of it. The Labour party in Australia is composed of protectionists to a large extent, the Fusionist party was composed one-half of protectionists, and it would be difficult for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to persuade the protectionists of Australia to give Canadian manufacturers a preference in their market. They would be something like the protectionists in this country who are ready to give Great Britain a preference on manufactured goods provided the British manufacturer does not compete with the Canadian manufacturer. My hon. friend will find the Australians most patriotic, but I fear he will find them ready to trade with Canada on such conditions as will not let the Canadian manufacturer compete with the Australian manufacturer in the Australian market. However, let him try his hand at the job, and if he succeeds in bringing us back a good arrangement we will be most anxious to approve of it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax). I desire to express my feelings of satisfaction at the remarks made by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Ames), which were exceedingly interesting and which lucidly put before the House the possibilities of Canadian trade with Australia. I rise to suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that at the conference which is to take place in Ottawa in March next with the representatives of the West Indian Islands, the Canadian government should invite to be present those who are interested in the steamship business between St. John, N. B., Halifax, N. S., and the West Indian islands.

The question of trade between Canada and the West Indian islands is largely one of steamboat transportation, and it is a very difficult question. In some of the recommendations made by the West Indian Commission respecting the steamship service between Canada and the West Indies they are obviously in error. Some of those recommendations are impossible to carry out. I wish to suggest to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that a steamship service between Canada and the West Indies which departs from Halifax is very much hampered by reason of the fact that the steamers are obliged to call at the port of St. John, at which port they secure very little traffic, which traffic the steamboat company could carry as readily by absorbing the increased railway rates between St. John and Halifax, which they are willing to do, thus making Halifax a port of departure throughout the whole year. It might, however, be possible to secure for the port of St. John another steamboat service which would be as much to its advantage as the present one. I rose merely for the purpose of making the suggestion that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce avail himself of any information he may secure from persons in St. John and Halifax who have been for many years interested in our trade with the West Indian Islands.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey). Mr. Speaker, I would not have taken part in this debate but that I happen to have received a letter from one of my constituents which illustrates the desirability of larger trade between Canada and the Australian colonies. In the town of Owen Sound we have a company, the North American Bent Chair Company, Limited, which manufactures nothing but chairs. My information is that last year that company shipped to Australia and New Zealand $171,000 worth of chairs, and they tell me that if we could obtain a preference in the Australian markets and an increase of the preference that obtains in New Zealand, they could double that exportation, bringing it close to $400,000 a year. This is one illustration of what Canada might accomplish if we had a preference in the Australian markets.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Can the hon. gentleman tell me through what ports their shipments to Australia are chiefly made?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I cannot say, but I think it is likely through Atlantic ports.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Through Canadian ports or through New York?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Most likely through Canadian ports. I am glad to know that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has already taken steps to have a conference on the subject. I agree very largely with the remarks of the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works, with the exception of his attempt to show that the action taken by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce with a view to obtaining a preference for Canada in the Australian market is at variance with his opposition to the late government's reciprocity measure. I think I can show that it was strictly in accordance with his previous attitude in that regard, because had we adopted the reciprocity pact, we would not to-day be discussing the possibility of better trade relations with Australia; we would have been deprived of the only weapon we have for obtaining preferential trade with Australia, namely, the ability to give them something in return for what they may give us. If that reciprocity arrangement had passed, Australia would have been able to send to this country free of duty every article which, under that arrangement, the United States could have sent in free. I say that the present policy of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is strictly in line with the position he took on the reciprocity measure. That policy has in view reciprocity within the empire, which is a very different thing from reciprocity with a foreign nation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I was quoting from was a declaration of the Prime Minister made at a banquet in New York to the effect that the Conservative party are unalterably opposed to the framing of tariffs by diplomatic action, and he gave as a reason for that conclusion the dissatisfaction which had occurred among the British possessions in South Africa; and what I said was that I was not able to reconcile the present demand of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce for reciprocal tariffs between Canada and Australia and between Canada and the West Indies, framed by diplomatic action, with the declared policy of the Conservative party as thus stated by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. It may be that the Prime Minister is not correctly quoted, but even if he is, my hon. friend will not deny that in the course of his speech he said that he was surprised that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should now be attempting to extend the trade relations of this country when he rejected the opportunity of having reciprocity with the United States, and he maintained that his present action was inconsistent with the position he took with reference to the reciprocity pact. I say that it is entirely consistent, because now he is able to negotiate a trade arrangement with Australia which he would not have been able to do had the reciprocity pact passed.

Mr. F. B. McCURDY. (Shelburne-Queens). Mr. Speaker, I regret to observe a disposition on the part of some members of this House to belittle the possibilities of trade between Canada and the West Indian Islands. It is common knowledge that for many years a large and profitable trade has been done by Halifax merchants with those islands—that the foundations of many substantial Halifax fortunes were made in that trade. That was particularly in the days of wooden ships. Although under modern conditions the steamship service is not, in my opinion, adequate, yet it is a fact that a business of considerable and increasing magnitude and financially satisfactory, exists to-day at Halifax, and it can be largely extended. The West India steamship service is a more difficult one than some of us are aware, because it is not a question of ocean-going boats running from a port in Canada to a port in the West Indies, but it necessarily includes a sort of coasting service. A boat suitable for carrying mails from Halifax to Kingston, Jamaica, for instance, is not qualified to call at the small ports of the Windward Islands. There must be either a central depot in the West Indies to which large ships would go, with coasting vessels of lighter draught to go from there to the smaller ports, or else vessels of lighter draught to do the combined services, which would mean a slow service for mails and unsatisfactory accommodation for passengers. Export trade with the West Indian Islands, consisting of flour, fish and general produce, has been largely controlled in the past by New York and West Indian houses with large financial resources.

Controlled, as it has been, by old-established New York houses with large financial resources, it can only be diverted with difficulty. But, even with the inadequate transportation system we have had, that trade is being diverted and it is a matter of interest to know that large New York houses have found it necessary in order to retain their trade, to establish branch houses in Halifax or St. John, and ship Canadian exports of flour to the West Indies via Halifax, using the steamship service that is subsidized by this government. When the matter of steamship subsidies was before the House recently, I took occasion to suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce the possibility and advisability of the Canadian government railway system taking up this portion of the steamship service, and either acquiring existing lines or putting on a new service. I have been glad to note here to-day, that the hon. minister was prepared to go to the extent of recommending a larger subsidy if necessary, in order to provide an adequate service. The Intercolonial railway carries a large part of the produce destined for the West Indies via Halifax and then hands it over to the steamship company. It might be possible; it should be possible;—it would under business control, though the government operations of this kind may be carried on at some disadvantage compared with private business—to have the railway see that freight through to its destination. I am convinced that if the Intercolonial railway does not take up that service, some other railway will, and will take it up because of a prospective profit. If the Intercolonial railway is to continue in business and is to continue to accomplish the purposes for which it should exist, it should avail itself of every opportunity for profitable expansion of its business. The West India steamship service, in my opinion, is such an opportunity. But if this is not possible, then such a subsidy should be available as will provide a service to place our exporters in a position to compete without a handicap with foreign firms. The present steamship service, we know, is not satisfactory. The present operators of the steamship line have built up a large business and, considering the subsidy, has given perhaps as good a service as could be expected. But the trade can be facilitated and much enlarged, and I am satisfied that if better steamship service is provided—preferably as I have stated by an Intercolonial railway-steamship service—the results will be totally satisfactory, both to the railway, the export merchants, and consequently to the producer and manufacturer in Canada.

Conditions, I take it, have been imposed upon the steamship company which have been objectionable. Calls were required at ports where insufficient cargo was available to make these calls profitable. So, as the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) pointed out, it would pay the steamship company better to absorb the railway rate on outgoing shipments than to make calls where small quantities of freight only were to be had.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend must be misinformed as to St. John. They had a trade going from St. John to support one line of steamers.

Mr. McCURDY. The subsidy is conditional upon a call at St. John once in every twenty-two days, but I am informed that the total amount of freight collected for each trip in St. John does not average much more than $1,000. And any person with experience in shipping can figure out for himself whether or not a quantity of goods that pays $1,000 of freight would justify the service.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But while a call is made once in twenty-two days in St. John, a call is made once in eleven days at Halifax. Is it not true that large quantities of freight are sent from St. John by rail to Halifax for shipment, because the goods cannot be kept waiting? Such goods went through St. John when we had the same service as Halifax has now.

Mr. McCURDY. How long is it since the change was made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About eight months. At the termination of the contract, Messrs. Pickford & Black insisted upon giving a reduced service stating that they would not continue to give the same service for the subsidy they were receiving. A temporary arrangement was made which still exists, under which they give a service every eleven days at Halifax, and every twenty-two days at St. John. I am informed that it is by reason of this inferior service that goods are sent forward by rail to Halifax rather than await the call of the steamer at St. John. The arrangement is unfair to the port of St. John.

Mr. McCURDY. The point I wish to make is with regard to facilities and extending the trade generally between Canada and the West Indies. I do not wish to set the advantage or disadvantage of any one port up as against the other. Let the generally enlarged trade find its natural port. It is a matter of common knowledge that before the days of steamship subsidies, the West Indian trade centred in certain localities for perfectly natural reasons. That is the answer I would give to the hon. member for St.

John. But I do not wish to speak of one port as against another; our purpose here is to seek to extend and increase the West Indian trade.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I regret that the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) is not in his place. But I suppose the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), who is leading the House will be able to give me the information I desire. I see it stated in the 'Evening Journal' that the Postmaster General made an announcement yesterday on the nationalization of the telegraph and telephone lines by the Dominion. It is a rather startling announcement, and I desire to ask if the government has considered this matter of nationalizing telephones and telegraphs. Also I see it announced that the Postmaster General said that free rural mail delivery will be given. I am sincere in asking for information on these points. Does this represent the personal view of the Postmaster General, or did he speak for the government?

Mr. FOSTER. (Toronto). I think it would be more satisfactory if the hon. gentleman would put the question to the Postmaster General himself. We have had an illustration already to-day of the inadvisability of tieing ourselves up completely to items in newspapers. While trying to be as correct as possible, they are tinged with human frailty, I fear.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe the item 'Wingham—Public Building—Tower Clock, $2,000,' was allowed to stand. I was speaking when the House adjourned on Wednesday last at six o'clock. I have only a little more to say. I noticed in some of the papers the statement that my hon. friend, the former Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy) announced that the government had decided to abandon the land on Sussex street, as the site for a new departmental building. I observe also that in one of the newspapers the language of the former Secretary of State was quoted for the purposes of showing that I evidently was unaware of the statements which that hon. gentleman had made.

I have, however, looked at 'Hansard' report of his statement and what he said, as I interpret it, is not that the government had decided that the Sussex street site was not suitable for a departmental building to be erected now, or looking to future needs. I take it that what the hon. member for Russell meant was that that land would not be sufficient for all the accommodation that would be required now or in the future and therefore a sub-committee of council had been appointed with a view to looking over other available sites in order to purchase the land in advance of the actual requirements. It is true we had differences of opinion as to the extent to which we should use the land on Sussex street.

When I became Minister of Public Works, plans had been prepared under direction of my predecessor for two departmental blocks and also a Palace of Justice which were intended to cover all of the land purchased from Sussex street up to Mackenzie avenue and also to cover Mackenzie avenue. Subsequently when by an arrangement between the government and the City of Ottawa and the Ottawa Improvement Commission the City of Ottawa proposed to buy certain lands along Sussex street and facing the river in order to improve the driveway, the Ottawa Improvement Commission made a very strong protest to me and other members of the government, including the then Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), against the closing of Mackenzie avenue, saying that it would be desirable to keep that avenue open as a public driveway particularly because a portion of Major's Hill park had been taken for the Chateau Laurier. I yielded to the view of the Ottawa Improvement Commission as urged upon me. I directed the Chief Architect to prepare new plans for a building which would come only to the edge of Mackenzie avenue. Owing to the change, we had to take one story off the building in order to give proper light in the wells and we had to narrow the building by some 40 feet, the width of Mackenzie avenue. It took some time to prepare those new plans and while they were under consideration quite a feeling was expressed by prominent citizens of Ottawa, which, I may say, was shared in by the late Governor General, who is a warm friend of Ottawa as well as of Canada, and who takes a very enthusiastic view of the future of Canada and of Ottawa and who urged very strongly that it would be a mistake to erect a building upon any part of the land acquired, that it should all be left open as a public park and that the building should be put either on the other side of Sussex street or in some other locality. I felt bound to give weight to these representations which were made to me and which I knew were shared in by at least one gentleman who is now very prominent in the Conservative party. I deferred coming to a final decision as to the construction of the building until the return of the late Prime Minister from England. After his return, as my hon, friends know, the House was dissolved, the general elections came on and therefore there was no time to deal with the matter. But it is in no sense true that we had decided, as a government, to abandon the land on Sussex street. On the contrary, I would have expected that a part of it at any rate, would have been utilized for some departmental buildings, while, of course, it would be the part of wisdom to acquire land in some other locality to provide for the very pressing needs of the public service.

One statement with regard to the Langevin Block in answer to the Postmaster General who, I think, tried to unduly press the charge that the late government had been neglectful of the interests of the employees of the Post Office Department. If there is any fault anywhere, it is on the part of those who built the Langevin Block in the first instance. It was constructed by the Conservative government a good many years ago, not by the Liberal government and, instead of acquiring land right through to Sparks street and erecting a building which would have plenty of light and ventilation, for the different public offices, the building was erected on only half the block so that the rear offices are not lighted at all and it is exceedingly difficult to get proper ventilation.

With regard to the congestion, as I said the other day we recognized that trouble and sought to remedy it. Since I have been minister, we have rented a large number of buildings in Ottawa. We have rented commodicus premises in the Grand Trunk building for our Railway Commission,, splendid accommodation at large expense. We rented the old Y. M. C. A., the Rosenthal building, the Brennan building, the Imperial Realty building and some others, endeavouring, as fast as we could reasonably do so, to give accommodation; but the new buildings had to be erected before we could get the accommodation. I entered into negotiations for the Blackburn building some time ago, and the new Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) is only carrying out to completion the negotiations we entered upon.

I do not like to charge my hon. friend with exaggeration, but I think he is exaggerating when he speaks of the rats being so destructive. I think if that is so, it is the fault of the caretaker. If a building is neglected, rats will accumulate. The Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) says rats were so wary because they were born and brought up while the Liberal government was in power. I would rather think that the fact that it was only after the new government came in that they became so vicious and started in to devour the postal notes, shows that they have seen the procession moving towards the public crib and would like to be in with the crowd, and the only thing they could find was these postal notes and money orders.

Mr. MONK. I merely wish to correct the impression, if it exists, that anything has been absolutely decided as yet about the sites. What I told the committee and what is the fact is that the government has not yet had time or opportunity to fully study this important question. A committee of the Privy Council has been appointed, we are very anxious to get to work and to take up the matter as soon as possible because our accommodation is entirely insufficient and inadequate and every day demonstrates more conclusively that we have no rooms, that the departments are very ill provided with absolutely essential accommodation. We have to continue leasing buildings as has been done in the past and we are extremely anxious, if possible, to put an end to that by commencing the construction of our own departmental building as soon as possible.

Personally I would be very sorry to see the Sussex-street site abandoned. I have only had time to cast my eyes upon the plans of a justice building to include the Justice Department, the Supreme Court, the Exchequer Court and the Railway Commissioners, in fact everything pertaining to justice. That plan has been prepared by one of the most skilful architects. It seems to me it would be possible at any rate to install that part of our departments on the Sussex-street property leaving sufficient space around to give the necessary relief to such a very handsome building. I can assure the committee that as soon as the House has adjourned we will take up the question and try to bring it to a solution as soon as possible.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As some newspapers have sneered at me about the 'ratty' condition of the Langevin Block, and have held me responsible for the congestion there, I wish to vindicate myself once more, and to say that when I took office in the Post Office Department five years ago I found that there were certainly too many people congregated together within those walls. But the Post Office Department occupy only one floor and the cellar for the parcels the Archives and the old files. I immediately called upon the Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. King.

I was then Postmaster General and Minister of Labour. I urged upon Mr. King to fully consider the question, to study the building from the labour point of view and to prepare a report. I may say that the city of Ottawa had laid a complaint to the Department of Labour. Mr. King prepared a lengthy report at my request which I laid before my colleagues in council. In that report it was stated that there was too much congestion and that the employees required more space. Council immediately decided that a new departmental building should be erected. Then my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) started the expropriation proceedings on Sussex street. We know that it takes months and even years to get reasonable valuations of properties such as those on Sussex street, and, especially when such properties are to be purchased by the government, you must go quietly to work and get as good a bargain as possible. That took two or three years, but meanwhile we began to look around to find in the city of Ottawa some available space to accommodate the employees of the Post Office Department. It was reported to me that the only possible thing for the department would be to get hold of the upper floors of the building occupied by the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture. Unfortunately, I could not convince Mr. Fisher or my hon. friend the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) to vacate the premises, and we had to look elsewhere. There was only the Blackburn building available. It was started two years ago, and it is not yet completed. But, to put the facts right before the public, let me say that what is now being carried out by the Minister of Public Works is nothing else than what was decided upon by his predecessor. It was decided to take flats in the Blackburn building. That building is not yet completed and none of the employees of the Post Office Department have been transferred since the 21st September to any outside building. Not until the Blackburn building is completed will they be transferred from the Post Office Department. It was only just that I should rise and state what the facts of the case are

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 22) respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.—Mr. Jameson.

On section 2.

Mr. BEST. Is not this railway already constructed?

Mr. JAMESON. It is with the exception of a branch line of about fifteen miles known as the North Mountain railway, which I am given to understand will be built very shortly.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. BEST. Why is the guarantee increased from $25,000 to $30,000 per mile?

Mr. JAMESON. The Dominion Atlantic railway consists of the amalgamation of several short railways running from Yarmouth to Windsor, with one branch from Truro to Windsor. In 1908 they were empowered to build this North Mountain railway and the security authorized was limited to $25,000 per mile. The object of increasing the guarantee to $30,000 per mile is to enable them to improve the railway by laying heavier rails and putting steel bridges in the place of the original wooden bridges. The company has not, perhaps, made as much progress in the past as some other companies, but I believe it is the intention of those now in control of the road to put it in condition so as to improve transportation in that part of Nova Scotia, which no doubt, my hon. friend (Mr. Best) will deem a very desirable thing.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

CAP DE LA MADELEINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 43)—Mr. Paquet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to know from the Chairman of the committee on what ground this railway is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. LENNOX. The ground, I do not think, is a very satisfactory one, but it is a time honoured one, if that be any justification. There was not a word that I remember raised in the committee against declaring this railway a work for the general advantage of Canada. On many occasions, when I was in opposition, I fought vigorously for the principle that there ought to be some evidence that a work really is for the general advantage of Canada before we embody that declaration in any Bill. But we have been in the habit on all occasions of practically taking that for granted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where does the road begin and where does it end?

Mr. LENNOX. That I leave to be explained by the gentleman who is promoting the Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that of late years, at all events, after a good deal of criticism, it came to be clearly understood that the committee would not allow such a clause to be inserted without some evidence to show that it was based on fact. We know that the provincial legislatures have been constantly asserting provincial rights and declaring that this parliament ought not to declare roads of a purely local character to be for the general advantage of Canada. This road is wholly within one province. It does not connect one province with another, and it is, therefore, a provincial work under the terms of the British North America Act. What right have we to falsify the record by declaring that a purely local work is for the general advantage of Canada when we have not a particle of evidence to warrant our making that declaration?

Mr. HENDERSON. My recollection is that this road was described in the committee as a short line of about six miles long to connect the water-front with the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway for certain purposes. The fact that it connects with the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway, which is a work for the general advantage of Canada, was accepted as sufficient to warrant this parliament in making that declaration. That question was not discussed in the committee, but I presume that is the reason why this clause was accepted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the case of some railways which, though wholly within a province, were connecting links in an interprovincial system, it was held that they might be considered as being for the general advantage of Canada. But this is a short branch line only six miles long, not constructed by the Canadian Pacific railway, but to be constructed by a separate company and is purely of a local character.

Mr. LENNOX. It is already constructed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then this takes it out of provincial jurisdiction. It was constructed under a provincial charter, as a purely provincial road, and we are now declaring that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada. The British North America Act is very explicit on this point. It provides that the incorporation of companies for provincial objects shall rest exclusively with the provincial legislatures.

The British North America Act gives this parliament power in exceptional cases to declare a work to be for the general advantage of Canada. Surely we ought not to act in a capricious manner, and assume a jurisdiction that we would not otherwise have by inserting those words. I understood that, in view of the protests which the provinces had been making in recent years, we had come to the conclusion that we would not make that declaration except in cases where it was perfectly clear that it was justified; otherwise we could assume jurisdiction over all provincial works simply by making that declaration.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot understand why a small line of railway such as this, to be operated by the Canadian Pacific railway, should be refused Dominion jurisdiction when the main line is under that jurisdiction.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is there any evidence that this line is to be operated by the Canadian Pacific railway?

Mr. LENNOX. It is so stated in the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am inclined to think that if the hon. gentleman will refer to the Railway Act he will find that where one line of railway crosses or connects with another line, if the latter has been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, the other one would as a matter of fact, come under the same jurisdiction.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Only in respect to the crossing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Act was changed to limit it to the point of crossing.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It was certainly stated by the promoter of this Bill that the charter of this small branch line was now under the control of the Canadian Pacific railway, and that it would be operated by the Canadian Pacific railway, and would become a part of its general system. Under these circumstances my opinion is that it should be declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. You cannot operate two lines under two jurisdictions, one provincial and the other Dominion, when they are really parts of one system.

Mr. MONK. From my knowledge of the local conditions, I may say that there are immense industries being established at Cap de la Madeleine, near Three Rivers, and it is impossible for the local railways to serve these industries. Hence an amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific railway was obtained, and this necessitated giving to this railway a federal charter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could understand that if there were any evidence before the committee that the Canadian Pacific railway had leased this road, but there is no allegation to that effect.

Mr. MONK. That is the object of the Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is my hon. friend able to say that the arrangements for that purpose have been completed?

Mr. MONK. I am not able to say that, but I know that that is the object the promoters have in view.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no statement here that the amalgamation has taken place.

Mr. COCHRANE. They could not enter into a contract until this Bill passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why not? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company can lease

a road incorporated by a provincial legislature. The Quebec legislature could give this company power to lease its road to the Canadian Pacific railway and after that was done it might very properly be brought under the Dominion jurisdiction.

Mr. MONK. I am informed that the arrangements are practically completed, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would not complete them until this empowering clause was passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we declare this small road, without any amalgamation, to be for the general advantage of Canada, how can we refuse in the future to make a similar declaration with regard to any branch line that connects with the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Canadian Northern?

Mr. MONK. I think that each case should be appreciated on its merits, and where the promoters of a Bill and those who know the local conditions state what the object of the legislation is and the circumstances which render that legislation necessary, that is to my mind sufficient evidence for the House that it is a project for the general advantage of Canada. During the years that I have been in parliament such a statement has been regarded as sufficient.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am informed that before 6 o'clock my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), made some further statements about my department. I was not in the House and of course his remarks were not answered because they were made in my absence.

Mr. CHISHOLM. (Inverness). The minister intimated the other evening that he would give me some information with reference to a public building at Port Hawkesbury in the county of Inverness. Is it the intention of the government to buy a site for a public building there?

Mr. MONK. There were negotiations for the purchase of a site but the item has been left out of the main estimates and I think those negotiations will have to be suspended under these circumstances.

Mr. CHISHOLM. (Inverness). Would it not be possible for the minister to purchase a site before the 31st March? The grant will not expire before then.

Mr. MONK. It might be done.

Mr. CHISHOLM. (Inverness). An engineer of the department was there last year, he looked over several sites and got prices and, I understand, reported in favour of purchasing a site owned by Mr. Bain. This engineer was not influenced by myself or any one else in making that selection. The selection was acceptable to the community and the price reasonable, the lowest price at which you could buy property of the importance of this property. It is the best site for this purpose in the town. Port Hawkesbury is a thriving town with a fine fishing industry with a most promising future in store for it. It now has a prosperous population of 2,000 and prospects of a large increase in the near future. I trust, therefore, that the minister will see that this site is purchased, if the Bain site is not eligible for any reason, better known to the minister, let him select another site, and let the property be bought. Since the appropriation is there, provided by the late government, it is too bad not to go on and buy a site and erect that public building with as little delay as possible. I ask the minister to take it into consideration and, if possible, purchase a site before March 31, and have included in the supplementary estimates an item sufficient to erect a respectable building.

Mr. MONK. I would be glad to take the matter up at any time with my hon. friend. I cannot give him an absolute promise—that the site will be purchased. I understand there is no absolute agreement as to the site, but I am not very sure about that. As soon as these estimates are disposed of I will be glad to take the matter up with the hon. gentleman, but I cannot give an absolute promise because, of course, I alone cannot conclude a transaction. I shall give every consideration to what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. CHISHOLM. (Inverness). I asked the minister the other day for some information with regard to the dismissal of the caretaker at the Inverness public building. The minister was good enough to promise he would bring down the necessary information before the discussion of the Nova Scotia items.

Mr. MONK. I noted what my hon. friend had asked me in regard to Mr. McLennan. There was a complaint against Mr. McLennan of interference in politics and he was dismissed on that account.

Mr. CHISHOLM. (Inverness). Who made this complaint?

Mr. MONK. The recommendation for the dismissal was made by the defeated candidate, Mr. Gallant, because of his interference in politics. Now that there are investigators named, if my hon. friend wishes for an investigation he can have it.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I would be glad if the minister would be kind enough to give this man a chance to show his innocence because I am convinced he is innocent, and that he did no more than exercise the right of every citizen. He voted as he saw fit. I am very glad that the minister has agreed to have his case investigated. While I am at this I might refer to another case, that of the general repairer of telegraph lines in Inverness county. He was notified some time ago that he would be dismissed. The minister was kind enough to give him the privilege of having his case investigated. I would suggest that pending this investigation Mr. Kennedy be allowed to remain in his office. If he is innocent I assume that the minister will see that he is continued in his position and if he is guilty it will be time enough for him to be dismissed when his guilt is actually proven. If the minister will be kind enough to allow this man to remain in office until such time as the government's agent will investigate the case I will be very glad.

Mr. MONK. I will consider my hon. friend's request and I think it should be considered. I would like to have some further reason urged for an investigation in the first case to which he has referred. We are trying to make these investigations at as little cost as possible but still there are several of them and they involve considerable expense. Therefore, if my hon. friend will confer with me and show some probable cause for investigation I will be very glad to grant one. As to the second case, I will give my hon. friend's request my best consideration. I do not know the details but I will find them out to-morrow morning.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I will be very glad to confer with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to understand the plan of the minister not only in regard to this case but in regard to a large number of cases throughout Nova Scotia and the country generally. His plan appears to be to dismiss the official first and investigate afterwards. I would like to know what the result of these investigations will be. Will he restore the official to his former position if it turns out that he is innocent and that the charge laid against him by the defeated candidate is shown to be incorrect? There is not much use in our asking for these investigations if they do not bring about some result, and if the minister will say that it will be his policy to restore a party to his former position if it turns out that there is no ground for the charge, there would then be some purpose in carrying on these investigations. The expense would be incurred for no purpose whatever unless that was done.

Mr. MONK. In case it were established by an investigation that the department had made a mistake I consider that it would be the duty of the government to provide some indemnity in the shape of occupation, at any rate, for the party who had been treated unjustly. That would appear to me to be the fair and just course. Last night I think I established that in 1896 the proceedings were of a far more summary nature and I quoted a number of cases in which the dismissal took place without any denunciation whatever and without any investigation. We have progressed since that time and we have no dismissal, without a denunciation, which the minister has to appreciate, and, if an investigation is found to be, prima facie, just, it is granted. We are, therefore, advancing towards a higher civilization. But, if upon investigation, it is established that there has been a failure of justice, I think the duty of the department should be to do its best to make amends to the party who had been dismissed. There is a case to which my hon. friend referred the other night and in connection with which he stated that he had written and had received no answer. I expressed the opinion that I must have mislaid or not received the letter of my hon. friend, but I find that I received it and immediately referred it for information in the department. My organization was not very good at that time, it is not very good yet, but on receipt of the letter I referred it at once to the officers of the department for information. The information was not sent to my hon. friend but I have it at his disposal.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Does the minister purpose to grant an investigation into the case of Mr. Sutherland of Canso, that I wrote him about?

Mr. MONK. In the case of Canso, if the hon. gentleman has a fair ground for investigation, it will certainly be granted. There is an investigator named for the purpose, and if there is any kind of allegation that the person named has not had justice rendered, an investigation will take place.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I cannot understand how a ground can be established by a defendant who does not know what the charge against him is. In so far as Sutherland is concerned I am not able to find out if any charge was made against him. How is Sutherland to show that he has the right to a trial unless there is something specific? The minister has adopted a very curious method and it does not strike me that it is in accordance with the usual principles of British justice that the defendant should be told to show ground why he ought to have a trial. The principle that I have been accustomed to is that the defendant is innocent until some one lays a charge against him and tnen, if he knows what the charge is, justice requires that he shall have an opportunity of answering it. That does not seem to be the method of my hon. friend at all. Some secret charge is laid against the official by somebody and on that secret charge my hon. friend dismisses the official. Then he comes to us and says that if this man can show fair ground for a trial he will give him a trial and if it turns out that he has not done anything wrong he will compensate him. That is an extraordinary method. I do not think we have made much progress during the last few years if that is the best we can do. I should think the minister should commence at the other end, he should first notify the man that a charge has been made against him of some kind and ask him to appear and stand his trial and if nothing is proven he should allow him to remain in his place. This is a practical case and I want to know how I am to deal with it. What am I to do as representing Mr. Sutherland? How am I to convince the minister that Mr. Sutherland has the right to a trial? He does not seem to be willing to give it to him unless I show him that he has a right to it. Every man has a right to a trial who is accused of anything. The minister ought to be frank enough to say he will give him a trial and that if he is found innocent he will put him back in the position of which he was unjustly deprived.

Mr. MONK. The procedure indicated by my hon. friend is the procedure which we conceive as a general rule to be the proper one. I do not know if my hon. friend was here last night when we were discussing this question. I gave a number of instances of cases that occurred in 1896, when the method of dismissal was that one with this addition that there was no charge at all. Information as to the party who recommended the discharge was generally refused.

I gave instances last night of several discharges in my own constituency in 1896, and the then minister told me that the dismissals had been made on representations of members from the city of Montreal. There was no charge and no investigation. I have some cases in which Mr. Blair told me that he did not think it his duty to give the information as to who had made the complaint or as to who had recommended the man who took the place of the man discharged. An advance has been made, for if there is a denial of the offence an investigation is granted.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Has the minister the Sutherland papers on his desk?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Would he be kind enough to show me the papers?

Mr. MONK. I will send them over to my hon. friend.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). The minister has been good enough to promise that an investigation will be held into the case of Mr. Kennedy. Now, Mr. Kennedy is no doubt at home attending to his business and some fine morning the investigator will turn up and Mr. Kennedy will not have an opportunity of knowing what the charges are.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Kennedy will be given the charges against him whenever he asks for them, and I suppose when the investigator holds his investigation Mr. Kennedy will have these charges before him.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I understand that this man will give Mr. Kennedy due notice that he will investigate certain specific charges.

Mr. MONK. Certainly.

Mr. MACDONALD. There is a matter of some importance to my constituency and to the whole province of Nova Scotia, to which I would direct the attention of the minister. I speak of the proposition for the deepening of the East river in Pictou county to the town of New Glasgow. Some years ago a very important deputation representing the business interests of that community, which is one of the most advanced industrial centres in the maritime provinces, came to the then Minister of Public Works and sought the aid of the government to deepen this river with a view of enabling New Glasgow to have water connection for larger steamers which would bring natural products in and manufactured products out. As the result of the representations made by that delegation, the then minister had the suction dredge 'Northumberland' built and it has been working there ever since and has done splendid work. One of the difficulties experienced in government dredging in the maritime provinces is the expense of carrying away the dredged material to deep water, but the construction of the 'Northumberland' obviated this expense, and she is probably the best investment in dredges that the government has ever made. A large amount of dredging has been done by the 'Northumberland' during the last three years and the late minister had in contemplation the continuance of the operations by the removal of rock in a narrow part of the river. The late minister placed in the estimates last year a preliminary vote of $25,000 to let a contract for the removal of the rock which cannot be removed by the dredge. That vote, unfortunately, has not been repeated in the main estimates. I would say to the minister that of all the expenditures which are being made in the maritime provinces none will open up greater commercial possibilities than the completion of this work. I know that the attention of the minister has been already called to the matter, and with the same emphasis that I pressed the matter on the attention of the late government I press it on his attention now. The completion of this work will be of immense advantage to the industrial community there and incidentally to the whole country. Before the supplementary estimates are brought down I hope the minister will familiarize himself with the details and if he does I have no doubt he will place a vote in the estimates for the prosecution of this work to completion.

Mr. MONK. I have given some consideration to the completion of this work on the East river and it commends itself favourably to me. The channel needs deepening and straightening for seven miles, four miles of which has been already done and in the expectation of its completion large industries have been erected at Trenton about a mile and a-half from where the present work ends. I think the whole work when fully completed will cost considerably over $300,000. I have a great desire to continue the work this year, at any rate as far as Trenton. The dredge has been constructed specially for that purpose, but she cannot of course do the rock-work, and that will entail an expenditure of $25,000 or more. The work is a necessary one. I will endeavour to have it continued this year if possible, at any rate for that mile and a half which would enable vessels to go to Trenton. I will do my best in that regard.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). There is an important matter to which I wish to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk). I refer to the dredging of Antigonish harbour. Instructions were given a year ago or more to have a survey made of that harbour. I am not sure whether the local engineer's report has been received by the department. It had not, a very short time ago. I may say, however, that I received a report from the Department of Mines a few days ago, and read therein a very interesting statement from Mr. Jameson, an engineer of Nova Scotia, concerning the immense deposits of gypsum at the mouth of the Lower South river and along the north side of Antigonish harbour. For this gypsum there is a ready market in the United States and in Canada. And all that is necessary to ensure the development of these deposits is to have the harbour dredged. The development of this industry is prevented because the railway freight rates are too high if the gypsum has to be shipped from Antigonish or South River to Mulgrave by the I.C.R. and then by steamer from the Straits of Canso. Mr. Jameson pointed out that if Antigonish harbour were dredged, this property, which is very valuable and for which there are good prospects of development if facilities were given for shipping, would mean the establishment of an industry of great benefit to that locality. I call attention to this so that the minister may, when the report comes in from his engineer, make some provision for the dredging. No doubt he will be making up his dredging estimates in a short time, and I would draw his attention to this work in particular. I desire to also ask the hon. minister if he has brought down the papers in connection with the dismissal of Captain Decoste, which were ordered by this House a fortnight ago?

Mr. MONK. I brought those papers down to-day. As regards the harbour at Antigonish, I shall give my hon. friend's observations every possible consideration. The demands for public works are of course very great, and it is difficult to satisfy them all, however reasonable they be. The estimates for dredging are very considerable, and the government would not be justified in granting all the demands until we have occasion to go into the organization of our dredging and see what improvements can be made, but I shall give careful consideration to my hon. friend's request.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am very much obliged to the hon. minister for the information I have received from the return he has handed me. No doubt he intended that I should make use of the documents, as they are public property. I find that the charge against this man is as follows:

Canso, Nov. 6, 1911.

To the Hon. L. P. Pelletier, M.P.,
Postmaster General.

I hereby make application for the position of janitor of the post office at Canso, N.S., now held by Roderick Sutherland. Mr. Sutherland has been an active Liberal partisan, and was a worker for the Liberal candidate at the recent as well as previous elections. I beg respectfully to ask for his dismissal.

Yours truly,
GEORGE A. PYCHE.

Charles Lohnes, President, Liberal-Conservative Association.
J. J. McKENZIE, Secy.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier, M.P.,
Postmaster General, Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to recommend the above name, George A. Pyche, as a fit and capable man for the position of janitor of post office at Canso, N.S.

G. A. R. ROWLINGS,
Liberal-Conservative Candidate for Guysborough county.

I wish also to read a letter dated Nov.8, 1911, from Sydney, N. S., written by Mr. Rowlings:

To the Hon. L. P. Pelletier, M.P.,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—The inclosed statement of Mr. Pyche as to Mr. Roderick Sutherland, who holds the position of janitor in the post office at Canso, N.S. You will note that this statement is supported by the officers of the Conservative Association at Canso. I beg to say that Mr. Pyche is a reliable person and that his statement as to Sutherland may be relied upon in the premises.

Yours very truly,
G. A. R. ROWLINGS,
Liberal-Conservative candidate,
Guysborough Co.,
September, 1911, election.

I wish to point out to the hon minister, in the first place, that the man who made the complaint against Mr. Sutherland is the one who is applying for his job. Mr. Lohnes does not make any complaint, or Mr. Rowlings, although they penned their names to the complaint made by Mr. Pyche. The very first thing which Mr. Pyche writes is that he is applying to be appointed to the position of janitor at the post office in Canso. He does this before he says anything about Sutherland's conduct. Evidently he found it necessary in some ways to get rid of Sutherland before he got in himself, and so he accuses him of being a political partisan. I submit that this is a very weak case. I understood the hon. minister to say that he required a certificate of some kind, either from the defeated or the elected candidate, but in this case we have not any such evidence. We have not even got Mr. Rowlings' certificate, who was the defeated candidate. He speaks of Pyche as a reliable man, but does not venture to say that Sutherland was guilty of anything at all himself. I submit that that is altogether too weak a case for a minister to act on without investigation. On a statement given by the applicant for the place, he gave this caretaker and his family five days to get out from their residence in the post office, at the beginning of winter. He turned this man and his family out on the street without even asking for any evidence from Mr. Pyche as to what he was guilty of. Mr. Sutherland was given no investigation at all. He should have been told at least what he was charged with. It is very easy to make a general statement that this man was an active partisan, but surely the minister ought to insist on having something more. I question whether Pyche or any one else could point to any offence which Sutherland has committed. I know Mr. Sutherland very well. I know that he is an inoffensive, quiet man. I have no doubt that he voted for me, but I would be surprised if Pyche or any one else could prove an offence against him of any kind. The minister said that we have made some progress since 1896. I do not think we have. The best argument my hon. friend has is this: You were rotten in 1896 and we are going to be rotten now. That is the only argument he has given us ever since we started to discuss this question. I drew the attention of my hon. friend before to the fact that we expected something better after 14 years of promises by my right hon. friend the leader of the government. The very first appearance of the right hon. gentleman in public life in this country, his first speech in this House, had to do with this question of Civil Service reform, and he made a very broad and generous speech. No doubt the attitude of the First Minister at that date has had a good deal to do with the fact that officials thought they were at liberty to be a little freer than they were before, because the right hon. gentleman said on that occasion —I have already quoted his deliverance in this House—that he would not only permit an officer of the government to vote against the government that employed him, but would permit him to speak on the platform at public meetings, provided he did so in a gentlemanly way and was not offensive.

I have no doubt that many men serving the government throughout the country, knowing that that was the attitude taken by the right hon. leader of the government, felt that they were at liberty not only to vote but to do more. It strikes me that he has misled a good many men by taking that attitude. Not only on that occasion, but in the numerous manifestos which he has issued in the various elections that have taken place since 1896, he has pledged himself to Civil Service reform—that he would appoint officers not for partisan considerations, but on merit, that politics was to have nothing to do with it. These were the principles on which he received the votes of the people; and after 14 years of his preaching that kind of doctrine throughout Canada, we are now to be told that we are to be guided by the old principles that we acted on 14 or 15 years ago. It seems to me that we ought to have made some progress since that time, but I do not think we have made any. I submit that under the circumstances, Mr. Sutherland is entitled to an investigation. There is no evidence in that letter on which any man in a British country ought to be convicted, and the minister, if he wants to do what is fair and right, will give this man an investigation, and if there is no proof of any active partisanship on his part, he will put him back in the place from which he was dismissed.

Mr. MONK. I stated that I thought there had been some progress, and I believe there has been. In 1896, men were dismissed without any complaint, almost without the intervention of the minister. There are cases recorded in 'Hansard' in which Mr. Blair will be found to have stated that dismissals had taken place before the matters had come to his knowledge. There was also in 1896 a refusal to grant any investigation. I mentioned at that time a few cases that were familiar to me. I will just refer to two as examples. Here is a question which I put, which will be found on page 2410 of 'Hansard' of 1897:

1. How long has Joseph Sauvé, lately bridgemaster No. 5 bridge, Côte St. Paul, Lacnine canal, been in the employ of the government?
2. Why was he dismissed on the 30th April last?
3. Was there any complaint against him, and by whom?
4. Who was named bridgemaster in his place, and by whom was the new nominee recommended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Joseph Sauvé, lately bridgemaster, bridge No. 5, Côte St. Paul, Lachine canal, has been employed during the season of navigation since the 1st of May, 1878. His services were dispensed with at the request and on the representations of the members of parliament for Montreal district; the department did not receive any written complaint against Sauvé. Joseph Archbierre was appointed bridgemaster in place of Joseph Sauvé.

Here is another one:

1. How long has Joseph Deschamps, lately lockmaster, No. 4 lock, Côte St. Paul, Lachine canal, been in the employ of the government?
2. Why was he dismissed on the 30th of April last?
3. Was there any complaint against him, and by whom?
4. Has he been replaced by one Adolphe Fichaud, of St. Henri, brother-in-law of the member for Hochelaga?
5. Who recommended the new lockmaster for nomination?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Joseph Deschamps, lately lockmaster at lock 4, Côte St. Paul, Lachine canal, has been employed during the season of navigation since the 1st June, 1873. His services were dispensed with at the request and on the representation of the members of parliament for Montreal district, no written complaint was lodged in the department. Adolphe Fichaud was appointed lockmaster in his place.

The book is full of such declarations. I could give my hon. friend one statement of Mr. Blair in which he took the ground that the government considered that public employees occupied their positions during pleasure, and that the government was not obliged to communicate to parliament confidential representations made to it in regard to those employees. Although this case is not as strong a one as I have seen, there is a direct, open, public denunciation by a man known in the place, and I am informed, although I do not know him, that he is not such a peaceable man as my hon. friend says, but a very strong partisan, and that would be established by an investigation. If my hon. friend wishes for an investigation, it will take place.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I wish the minister to note that the dismissal he has cited was at the instance of the members of parliament from the Montreal district. I would say that was a very strong case. If any official is so offensive that he is indicted by a number of members of parliament, he should surely be turned out of office. I would not complain if a member of parliament stated on his honour that Mr. Sutherland had been guilty of anything.

Mr. MONK. Would my hon. friend have found it a very good answer if I had said that this man had been dismissed on the request of the members of parliament from Nova Scotia?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes, if the members from Nova Scotia, or any one of them, will father this thing and accept the responsibility for it and say they are prepared to defend it on the floor of parliament, that is all I would ask. But that is not what we have got. We have an office-seeker, a man who is looking for the job, simply making the statement that this man was an active Liberal.

Mr. BRADBURY. I am a little surprised at the attitude of the hon. gentlemen opposite regarding dismissals, in view of their record since 1896. Why, Sir, at one time 200 men were dismissed in the province of Manitoba in one day. There was no investigation. When the man came back and asked why they were dismissed, they were told they were not wanted; that is all the satisfaction they got. The man who represented Selkirk at that time, Mr. Macdonell, after having been a party to some outrageous dismissals, stated on the floor of the House that he believed that the policy of the government was a good policy—to the victors belong the spoils.

That is the language he used in this House, and that it was cheered by hon. members opposite. I do not take that position; the party in power has not taken that position. But when officials become active partisans during the campaign, hon. gentlemen opposite ought not to complain if this government dismisses them.

Mr. CARROLL. What has been the wail of the hon. gentlemans' precious leader for the past fifteen years in regard to this matter?

Mr. BRADBURY. It is well enough for hon. gentlemen opposite to try to hide behind what has been said on this side, but they must be prepared to take the medicine they have given their opponents for fifteen years. The hon. member for Guysboro (Mr. Sinclair) in reading these letters said that nobody had asked for this man's dismissal except the man who wanted the position. And he read the letter from the defeated candidate. I think that letter is a complete indorsation of the charge made by Mr. Pyche.

Here is the letter, it speaks for itself, and shows that the hon. member for Guysborough has not treated the House fairly:

To the Hon. L. P. Pelletier, M.P.,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—The inclosed statement of Mr. Pyche as to Mr. Roderick Sutherland, who holds the position of janitor in the post office at Canso, N.S. You will note that this statement is supported by the officers of the Conservative Association at Canso. I beg to say that Mr. Pyche is a reliable person and that his statement as to Sutherland may be relied upon in the premises.

Yours very truly,
G. A. R. ROWLINGS,
Liberal-Conservative candidate,
Guysborough Co.,
September, 1911, election.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The defeated candidate makes no statement of his own; he simply says that the other man's statement may be relied upon.

Mr. BRADBURY. That is only splitting hairs; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) knows that it is quibbling. The charge is made by one man, and the defeated candidate endorses that charge by telling the minister that the man who makes it can be relied upon in the statement he makes regarding Sutherland. So, I submit this official has been dismissed on the recommendation of the defeated candidate who had the evidence. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) himself was willing that an official should be dismissed on the word of a member of this House, because the member took the responsibility. But if a candidate has been defeated through the work of partisan officials and writes a letter taking the full responsibility of asking for their dismissal, I hold that the hon. minister is justified in making that dismissal. The member for Guysborough dares not disagree with this. I am not in sympathy with some of the investigations the government are giving. They are showing too much consideration for hon. gentlemen opposite. For fifteen years there was a complete weeding out of Conservatives occupying positions in the public service from the Atlantic to the Pacific their places being filled with Liberals. And now, because these men are being removed for partisanship, hon. gentlemen opposite raise a howl to save them. For my part, I hope the government will have courage enough and will be fair enough to their friends to punish every official who has been guilty of partisanship.

Mr. SINCLAIR. In what I said I raised two points in regard to this case. The first was that there was no evidence against Mr. Sutherland, except the evidence of an interested witness which would not be taken in any court of justice in any British or other civilized country. The sole evidence is that of a witness who is interested so much that if he does not succeed in this application he will be out of a job. The defeated candidate, and these other gentlemen who have put their names down, do not venture to say that they know anything about the case. The other point I raised was with regard to the attitude of the leader of the hon. gentlemen opposite for fourteen years on this matter, and the results of it all to-day. And I submit that neither of these points has been answered.

Mr. PELLETIER. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) consider it sufficient ground for the dismissal of an officer that a member of the House had written saying that he had been credibly informed that the official was an offensive partisan?

Mr. SINCLAIR. No.

Mr. PELLETIER. I will produce the record of a case in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair), did that himself.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not think the hon. minister can do it.

Mr. PELLETIER. I will do it as soon as you like.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Do it now.

Mr. PELLETIER. The case is that of the postmaster at East Roman Valley.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Do it now.

Mr. PELLETIER. Do these hon. gentlemen wish me to go to the department now and get the files? I do not know how it is in Red Deer, but in Ottawa the department is closed at five o'clock. But I have given the name of the post office—that of East Roman Valley.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is the only official with whose dismissal I had anything to do during the eight years I have been in this House. If the Postmaster General will bring down all the papers, he will find that there was proof of the statements made. I hope he will be fair enough to bring the whole record, including the declarations and affidavits. He will find that the action was taken, not on what I said, but on the proof that was given.

Mr. PELLETIER. The hon. gentleman asked for the dismissal of the postmaster, and a petition was filed, and was referred to him, and the hon. gentleman wrote that he had been informed that the official had done this or that, and on his letter the man's head was cut off.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have not hitherto taken part in this debate on dismissals, but I have been compelled to listen to what seems to me an idle, and useless discussion intended to be in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite. I might, if I chose, give cases of dismissal by the late government in the riding of West Kent, which I had, at one time, the honour of representing in this House. Dismissals were made in that riding, not by the dozen but forty or fifty of them. I have in mind, particularly, one case, Mr. Dunn, the janitor of a post office. Concerning this gentleman I can give my word of honour that he had not the faintest idea of entering into politics for either side. He had a crippled son depending on him for support. Yet he was dismissed practically at a day's notice. This dismissal was made at the instance of Mr. Campbell, who formerly represented Kent. I could take up the time of the House for the next two hours in giving facts about other dismissals by hon. gentlemen opposite after their accession to power in 1896.

As representing Comox-Atlin, the first Conservative who has ever represented that constituency, I would say that the officials throughout the length and breadth of that great constituency are and were controlled by a Liberal machine. They acted as returning officers, stumped the country and used every means possible to defeat me in that riding. Yet I have shown sympathy for these officials for I know that the late government held the club over them in many cases and compelled them to act in this way, and that they would not have acted in this way if the club had not been held over them. I have listened with disgust to our friends opposite. If they have any regard for the remaining officials throughout the different constituencies, they will discontinue this discussion. If not, I shall make many recommendations for dismissals of Liberal appointees in the great constituency of Comox-Atlin.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What is the minister's decision; will he give an investigation in the case of Mr. Sutherland?

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend will give some good grounds for holding an investigation it will be granted.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What grounds?

Mr. MONK. I would like him to give an allegation that he has not meddled in politics and is not guilty of these offences.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Do I understand that the minister requires a letter signed by Mr. Sutherland that he has not meddled in politics or is not guilty of being an active partisan ? I cannot undertake to sign a letter about him, I have not got much knowledge.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend told me there was absolutely no ground for his dismissal. If my hon. friend has no objection to putting that on record in the department it will receive consideration.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am informed there is no reason for his dismissal.

Mr. CHISHOLM. (Antigonish). It seems to me that the attack on the government is more severe from that side than from this. The hon. members opposite recognize that the government are weak-kneed and vacillating and have not risen to the high ideals they expressed while in opposition. What we complain of is that we cannot get anything definite from the minister or from his government. If he is going to act on the principle that to the victors belong the spoils, as hon. gentlemen opposite advocate, we would like to know that. If hon. gentlemen would say:- We are going to make places for our friends wherever we can find places, and will decapitate every Liberal if we can find any excuse whatever for doing so, we are not going to be concerned about nice distinctions but we are going to take the animal by the horns and turn out a Liberal wherever there is a chance to do so and put in a Conservative. If they would say that we would know where we are at. What we object to is the professions of honesty and sympathy and fair play which hon. gentlemen opposite and the ministers make—professions which conduct does not justify. What does it all mean? Suppose the Liberals were wrong in 1896 and were guilty of injustice, is that a reason why the Conservative party of to day should continue in that wrongful course? If so, let them say so. They have put themselves on record as being opposed to wholesale dismissals. They have professed higher ideals than that. Why do they now say, we will first dismiss the man if anybody makes what appears to be a charge against him and then will try him and if an injustice has been done, we will reinstate him. Let me say, very few of those who have been dismissed will be reinstated, investigation or no investigation. I happened to get the papers in connection with Captain Peter Decoste. I do not find that the defeated candidate made any charge against him of offensive partisanship. I do not find that any representation came from the county to which Decoste belongs. I do find letters from T. Gallant, and others asking that Decoste be dismissed and Captain Daniel Gillies of Port Hawkesbury be appointed. There is a sort of stereotyped letter signed by different parties asking for this change. These men were frankly acting on the principle laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite. They were manly about it, they said we want Decoste fired to make a place for Gillies a good Conservative, dismissed in 1896. There is not a hint or insinuation of any kind against Decoste. It is not alleged that he was an offensive partisan and it is not stated whether he is a Liberal or a Conservative, but all through the letters runs the word: 'We want Captain Decoste out of the way in order to make a place for Gillies'. What about Gillies? They, the minister's advisers in this matter say that he was dismissed in 1896 for absolutely no reason except that he favoured the Conservative party. In other words, they say he was a Conservative partisan in 1896 and yet they are going to replace this partisan. I do not see the difference whether a partisan is a Liberal or a Conservative if partisanship is to be a ground for dismissal. They asked that Gillies take the place of Decoste against whom no charge is made, for no other reason than because Gillies was a Conservative partisan. It is stated in one letter that he was dismissed because he was a Conservative and for no other reason. That is the letter of William Macdonald, President of the Pictou Conservative Club. There is also a letter from the Conservative Club of Inverness. They allege that Gillies was dismissed because of partisanship. As a matter of fact, he was continued in the service after 1896. He was mate on one of the dredges, I think the 'George Mackenzie', and was continued right up to the time of the last elections and afterwards. As a matter of fact, Captain Gillies was working on the government dredge 'George Mackenzie' the greater portion of the time the late liberal government was in power and on the eve of the elections. I have nothing against him. So far as I know he is a competent man and a good seaman, but he was rather unfortunate in his experience as a Captain. As I pointed out the other evening, he lost one of the dredges with its equipment and under his control there was a great deal of damage by an accident in another case, $9,000 to $12,000, and since his appointment on October 24, he ran the dredge 'Cape Breton' ashore. Or some accident occurred to the dredge under his charge at a serious loss to the country. It may be that this was simply his misfortune. One man who writes to the minister as shown by the correspondence brought down on this subject says that Captain Decoste has had no experience. That man did not know what he was talking about. Captain Decoste is a navigator of 25 years experience, holding the most complimentary certificates. He has had experience in the command of dredges and tug boats and is absolutely competent in every respect. No one who knows the facts or values the truth, will insinuate that he has not had experience and is not a competent and capable official. Why does not the minister come down clearly and explicitly and say: I dismissed Decoste because I wanted a place for Gillies who is no better than Decoste as far as the records show as an official but who is a good tory as it is represented to me and deserves well of our party.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). Will the hon. member read the letter purporting to be from the Conservative Association of Inverness?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Yes. It would seem that there was concerted action and they did not lose very much time. We have letters dated October 12, October 16 and October 24. The president of the Conservative Association writes as follows:

Inverness, C.B., Oct. 12, 1911.

Hon. F. D. Monk,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa P.O.

Dear Sir,—The Liberal-Conservative Association of the county of Inverness, C.B., strongly recommend the dismissal of Capt. Decoste, of the dredge 'Cape Breton,' now in Cape Breton waters, and the appointment in his stead of Capt. Daniel Gillies, of Port Hawkesbury, C.B. Immediately after the coming into power of the Liberal government in 1896, Capt. Gillies, a man of many years experience, was summarily dismissed without any alleged cause ——

That is not true as I am informed.

—and Capt. Decoste, a man of no experience whatever——

That is absolutely false—— —appointed in his stead. We feel that justice requires the immediate appointment of Capt. Gillies to this command.

Very respectfully yours,
The Inverness, C.B., Liberal-Conservative Association.
(Sgd.) D. M. CHISHOLM, President.
(Sgd.) ANGUS R. McDOUGALL, Secretary.

Mr. BOYCE. I have not heretofore said anything in this House in regard to the question of dismissals. We have listened to a great many complaints from hon. gentlemen opposite, and I must confess that their cant and hypocrisy are absolutely beyond belief. Having been a member of this House for the short period of only eight years, I glance at the benches opposite and I see, from my hon. friend the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lemieux) down, the faces of hon. gentlemen who, when they occupied seats on this side of the House, stood up and, time after time, voted to retain in their offices men who were guilty of the most flagrant partisan acts and worse. I speak about the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Only for a month.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes, only for one month and some people think that a month too long.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is longer than being made Solicitor General in the press.

Mr. BOYCE. That is perfectly true and while my hon. friend occupied the office of Solicitor General I do not know that he was regarded as a shining light.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was there anyway.

Mr. BOYCE. What I was going to refer to was the manner in which the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries hurled his invectives at my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) last night in regard to what he termed the heartless dismissal of the postmaster at Sudbury.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman has not read 'Hansard,' or if he has read 'Hansard,' he does not understand French. There was no question of the dismissal of a postmaster at Sudbury.

Mr. BOYCE. I understood my hon. friend's statement. My hon. friend referred to the fact that there had been great numbers of the French Canadian race at Sudbury who had been deprived of their offices.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, my hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. PELLETIER. It can be explained. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) did not refer particularly to Sudbury, but he spoke about French Canadians being dismissed everywhere.

Mr. BOYCE. I had Sudbury in my mind and I will give my hon. friend, who is so solicitous for the French Canadian race when his party is in opposition, the facts as regards Sudbury. There was a postmaster dismissed at Sudbury, that gentleman was of the French Canadian race and he was dismissed from his office just as soon as hon. gentlemen opposite came to occupy the government benches after the election of 1896. Why was he dismissed? He was put out into the cold world, as my hon. friend said last night, with a family of eight children, a newly made widower without the present means of support, without investigation and for a practically unknown cause. When my hon. friend refers to the heartlessness of treating the French Canadian race in that way and to giving the succession of office to that race let me remind him that Mr. Fournier, who was dismissed at Sudbury, was succeeded by a gentleman of the name of Kelly, who, I do not think, belonged to the French Canadian race.

Mr. PROULX. Was he dismissed for partisanship?

Mr. BOYCE. There was no cause alleged.

Mr. PROULX. I understand that he was dismissed for some other reason.

Mr. BOYCE. If you will wait a moment you will hear of something more that will interest you and something in connection with your own vote. Let me further remind the hon. gentleman, the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, of something in regard to the postmaster at Copper Cliff which was brought to the hon. gentleman's attention after he became Postmaster General. I see he recollects it right well. There was a petition signed by about 500 people of the town of Copper Cliff complaining of the wretched condition and mismanagement of the Copper Cliff post office.

Mr LEMIEUX. Was it a political offence?

Mr. BOYCE. They informed the Postmaster General that this postmaster had been away from his office for two years. Did the hon. gentleman take any action? He promised consideration and——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was it Kelly?

Mr. BOYCE. No, his name was not Kelly. I will tell the hon. gentleman his name because the name is written upon the records of the court. I pointed out upon the floor of this House to my hon. friend, who then occupied the position of Postmaster General—and I had the record then in my hand—that W. C. Kilpatrick, the postmaster at Copper Cliff, had been found guilty and reported for corrupt practices in the election court in the famous 'Minnie M.' case at the Soo. I invited my hon. friend the Postmaster General, to look into this matter and to divest himself of the valued services of this gentleman. Did he do so? A year went by and I drew it to my hon. friend's attention again and he simply said that he would give it further consideration. Until the time that the hon. gentleman's party went out of power Mr. W. C. Kilpatrick was postmaster at Copper Cliff.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was there any deficiency in the office? Was the office well administered?

Mr. BOYCE. He was away for two years.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He had a deputy.

Mr. BOYCE. I have told my hon. friend —it is on record in the Post Office Department to-day and it is written on the pages of 'Hansard'—that he received a petition signed by about 500 residents complaining of the shameful and disgraceful service of the office and of the absence of the postmaster for two years, and drawing the fact to his attention that this man had been reported by the judges of the court of law for corrupt practices in an election. Yet, notwithstanding all this, he did nothing.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There was never any charge of mal-administration.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, not against Mr. Kilpatrick. I remember the case perfectly well. I never made a dismissal while I was Postmaster General—never one dismissal.

Mr. PELLETIER. What?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) knows very well a friend of his, a man occupying a very high position in Quebec who had been for months and even years without going to his office. I was asked to dismiss him. The office was well managed.

Mr. PELLETIER. Who was that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Paquet, of Quebec. I never dismissed him.

Mr. PELLETIER. Does the hon. member say that he has not dismissed postmasters?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I dismissed one on the recommendation of Mr. Sifton on the principle of accepting a member's word. Mr. Sifton promised to defend my action if it were questioned in the House, and when Mr. Lake brought the matter up in the House, I looked in vain for Mr. Sifton, and I saw him in number 16. I reminded him that he had given his word of honour that he would defend the case, and Mr. Sifton refused to come into the House.

Mr. CROTHERS. Did you reinstate him?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. CROTHERS. Why not?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Because Mr. Sifton maintained what he had written in his letter, that the man was guilty of partisanship. Other than that I never dismissed a postmaster for political partisanship.

Mr. MONK. Sir William Mulock had put them all out before you got there.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Minister of Public Works comes with his classical three cases in the county of Jacques Cartier in 1896. He stated time and again that we had dismissed the employees by hundreds in that county in 1896. Well, he has dismissed hundred of poor labourers in his department since the 21st September. In fact he has become quite bloodthirsty in his methods. Like Marat, who during the terror in France ruled Paris for a few months, he wants thousands of heads to purify the country. The Minister of Public Works has dismissed day labourers by the hundred.

Mr. MONK. The hon. member knows that is not the case.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He has dismissed hundreds of day labourers since the 21st of September, and finally when he saw that public opinion and the English press of Canada, the Toronto 'Telegram,' the Toronto 'Star,' the Montreal 'Gazette,' put him to shame, he has instituted a legal investigation and he has appointed a relative of his, Mr. Chauvin, to preside over the investigation.

Mr. MONK. The hon. member is absolutely mistaken. There are no dismissals in my department. I have appointed no relative of mine to the position of investigator, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is not Mr. Chauvin your relative?

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does the minister say that Mr. Chauvin is not his relative?

Mr. MONK. Certainly he is not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, the minister deserves to be one of the famous French terrrorists, he can deny anything, even his own blood.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. CROTHERS. I submit that is not a parliamentary expression and that the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux) should retract.

Mr. MONK. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Crothers), but I can assure him I can take charge of that myself.

Mr. BOYCE. Here we have the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), admitting that he took the word of Mr. Sifton, then a member of the Liberal party with him, to dismiss a postmaster on the ground of political partisanship, but when I, a member of the opposition on my responsibility as a member, told him that the postmaster at Copper Cliff who was a Liberal had been found guilty of political partisanship by the highest court, he sat there and refused to take action. The hon. member (Mr. Lemieux), is guilty of cant and hypocrisy of the worst description when on the mere statement of a member of his own party he dismissed a Tory postmaster, and at the same time refused to dismiss a Liberal postmaster in the face of a petition signed by 500 residents of the community, complaining of the miserable incompetency of the postmaster, of his absence for two years, and of the shameful condition in which that office was run. I told him that the highest election court in Ontario had found that postmaster guilty of corrupt practices, and the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux), would not take that as sufficient evidence of political partisanship. Does the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux), remember the case of Richard Wagner who was found guilty by the court of theft from poor immigrants coming to this country, whom he was appointed by the government to care for, and who having served his term in jail, was promoted to a high place by the Liberal government; does the hon. member recollect that he sat in this House and supported the promotion of this man in the service. All these things are written in the pages of 'Hansard,' and it is idle for the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux), to indulge in pyrotechnic displays and pretend at righteous indignation when the records are so black against him. Does he recollect the case of the postmaster at Thessalon, and does he remember that he declined to take action in that case?

Mr. LEMIEUX. What was that case?

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. member has a poor memory for that case, but he can remember the poor Tory postmaster whom he dismissed on the recommendation of Mr. Sifton. I will tell him what the Thessalon case is. On the report of the post office inspector, the postmaster at Thessalon was found guilty of embezzlement, and the Postmaster General ordered his dismissal, but the postmaster at Thessalon was not dismissed. Let him look at the file in that case.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I want the file.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. member can have the file, and he can see all the facts about the case in the pages of 'Hansard' for 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1908.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What are the facts?

Mr. BOYCE. I have only got to the fact that the man had been found guilty of embezzlement and an order was given for his dismissal, and he was not dismissed and is there now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He was dismissed and his daughter was appointed.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman is wrong. I accepted his correction a few moments ago and he must accept mine now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am aware of the facts.

Mr. BOYCE. His daughter was not appointed but he was reappointed. His dismissal was not effected and he is there now, as postmaster of Thessalon, and I asked my hon. friend to take the matter up and he did not.

Mr. PELLETIER. Better write to me about it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Look at the file.

Mr. BOYCE. You can see the file and you can see the whole thing at a glance, and the House can judge what a miserable and pitiable position was taken by the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) in his attempt to defend that man. My hon. friend had the matter brought to his attention when he was Postmaster General but he did nothing. Why? Because the postmaster was shown to have been, at the time the fiat was issued to dismiss him, politically active in a partisan manner, very active in the provincial and Dominion elections, and therefore was kept in his place in spite of his embezzlement and misconduct, and in spite of the report of the inspector and the fiat of the Postmaster General.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would ask my hon. friend to put the case in the hands of the present Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier). Let him take the file, and I will accept his verdict. My hon. friend knows that I would never have kept a thief as an officer in the postal service.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may remind hon. members that this debate is completely out of order.

Mr. BOYCE. By whom was it started. I am merely answering my hon. friend. In this connection, I want to tell him that he does not have to accept the verdict of the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) but by the rules of this House he should accept my statement.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would accept the decision of the Postmaster General on the case.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule requires that remarks in committee must be strictly revelant to the item under consideration. The item is Anderson Cove, breakwater extension.

Mr. BOYCE. With all due respect to your ruling, Sir, I think it might have been made a little earlier, because my hon. friends from Guysborough and Antigonish and Rouville have all been speaking about dismissals and the hon. member for Rouville waxed specially eloquent.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I wish to understand your ruling, Mr. Chairman. Is it irregular on the estimates to discuss at all the question of dismissal?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Not at all but we cannot discuss matters connected with the Post Office Department on an item for a breakwater.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Is it out of order on breakwaters to discuss any dismissals except those connected with the breakwater?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is the rule.

Arichat—retaining wall to protect government property, $600.

Mr. KYTE. Before that is carried I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works if he has any report with reference to the proposed construction of a breakwater at Charles Forest's cove in the county of Richmond, Nova Scotia. A sum was provided for the construction of that work in the estimates a year ago and tenders were called for, but I understand the contract was not awarded. A few days ago I put the following question to the hon. minister:

1. Has the contract for the construction of the breakwater at Charles Forest's Cove, Richmond county, N.S., been awarded?
2. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the work during the present year?
3. Have the deposit cheques of the unsuccessful tenderers been returned?

To which the minister replied:

1. No.
2. No; no amount has been provided therefor in next year's estimates.
3. All security cheques have been returned.

And I asked further whether the contract for the construction of the breakwater at Port Richmond had been awarded and whether it was the intention of the government to proceed with the work during the present year to which the minister replied:—

No; no amount has been provided therefor in this year's estimates.

Mr. BOYCE.

Before the item was put in last year's estimates, there was a report from the engineer of the department of Public Works, which no doubt justified the then minister in providing for the construction of this work. What additional information has the hon. minister had to justify him in dropping that item this year?

Mr. MONK. We very often have reports from our district engineers that certain works are useful, but we do not always find it possible to carry them out. In this instance we had a second report from the engineer of the district to the effect that the work was not of an urgent nature. As it is not urgent, I cannot give any promise that it will be carried out next year.

Mr. KYTE. How is it that the hon. gentleman selected this particular work to be the subject of a supplementary report from the government engineer?

Mr. MONK. I do not think that report came at my request or in my time. I did not ask for it.

Mr. KYTE. Has the hon. minister made reference to a report of last year previous to the item being placed in the estimates?

Mr. MONK. I think it was a report of last year. I can show it to my hon. friend if he wants to see it.

Mr. KYTE. Will my hon. friend be good enough to have that report when the estimates are next under consideration, and any correspondence he may have had with any parties with reference to that work?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend had better move for a return because I cannot bring all the reports down here.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to draw the hon. minister's attention to an announcement in the morning edition of the Moosejaw 'News' a Conservative paper. I wish to ask him if the announcement is correct. It has to do with the erection of an armoury in that city.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman's question is not relevant to the matter under discussion.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend will send me the paper, I will give him the information.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would like to have it in 'Hansard.' The hon. minister might make a note of the question, and give the information on another occasion.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the necessity of extending the breakwater at Charlos Cove in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. That work was commenced some years ago, and is not yet completed. It is intended to afford protection for fishing boats, and is very much required. As it stands to-day, it is not of very much use, because it is not carried far enough into the harbour to afford proper protection. I mention it in the hope that the minister can see his way, if not this year, then next year, to make the necessary provision for extending that breakwater, so that the money that has already been spent upon it will not be unremunerative.

Mr. MONK. I will make a note of my hon. friend's request.

Blue Rocks Island, breakwater, $500.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I observe in the estimates for last year an item for Bayfield breakwater, $15,000. Of this $6,250 was voted before the dissolution of the last parliament, and the other $8,750 was voted since the present government came into power. I wish to ask the minister why this item has been dropped in the estimates of this year. This is a very urgent work. It was begun many years ago, and considerable money has been expended to make that a safe harbour. The longer the work is delayed the more inconvenience the people will suffer and the greater will be the liability of the harbour to fill with sand, necessitating more dredging.

Mr. MONK. The government did not see its way clear, in view of all the expenditures which it has to make to continue the work referred to by my hon. friend. But I will make a note of it.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). On whose recommendation was the work discontinued? Did the engineer report that it was not urgent?

Mr. MONK. No, I do not think so.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Did the minister take the advice of anybody in respect of the work? What information did he get to justify him in dropping this item? To my mind it is very important that this work should go on, otherwise the money expended on it already is liable to be wasted.

Mr. MONK. We have to provide for important works this year in our large national ports in order properly to equip them for the trade and to keep the trade in Canada, and we found that we could not continue at this juncture the work which my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What special works are there at the national ports this year?

Mr. MONK. We have considerable works at all our ocean ports in conformity with the report of the Transportation Commission. We are undertaking considerable works at St. John, some at Halifax, and we hope to undertake some at Quebec. We have had urgent demands from the ports on the Pacific, and it is absolutely necessary for us to do some work there.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I do not minimize the importance of the ports to which the hon. minister has referred. But these small ports, insignificant as they may appear to him, are of great importance to the people who live in proximity to them. The exports at Bayfield for 1910, consisting of cattle, sheep, horses and agricultural products, amounted to $25,950, and the imports amounted to a considerable sum also. This information I take from a copy of a report made by the resident engineer of the Public Works Department at Antigonish a couple of years ago. It is from this port that the farmers of Antigonish county, and some from Guysborough county, ship their cattle and agricultural products to Newfoundland, and unless it is made available, they will have to ship by rail to Mulgrave, a distance of forty or fifty miles from Antigonish, and load their cattle on vessels there. Bayfield should not have been dropped out of sight without some reason. The minister should have consulted his engineer as to whether this was a port which he could neglect for a year or two without anybody suffering. I find that practically every item which was in the estimates of last year for the county of Antigonish, and provided for by the late government, has been dropped this year. The minister's own engineers reported that these works were necessary and proper. It happened that during the election campaign last fall, when a part of this money was available, it was not expended. In the first place an election was on, which might be considered good reason why public expenditures should not be made, it was not deemed advisable to go on with the work unless the whole of the money required for it was available. I say it is not fair to the county of Antigonish to be penalized because of the money that was voted, five-twelfths of the total amount was not used. I urge on the minister to remember this port of Bayfield when the supplementary estimates are being prepared, and to see that the extension of the breakwater goes on. I may tell him frankly that, as far as political reasons go, it would suit me if the work did not go on at all; but I look to the larger interests of the community, and in this matter politics should not count at all. It is my duty as the representative of the county to call attention to this important work and to urge the minister to provide for it in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MONK. I will give my hon. friend's observations every consideration. He must not imagine that political considerations move us in these matters. My own county has had none of the public works that I have asked for.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What about the wharf at Point Claire?

Mr. MONK. I owe that to a different man from what you are.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I rise to a point of order. This is not the language for this House.

Mr. MONK. It is the language that suits you.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am asking the hon. gentleman a courteous question. And I wish him to apologize now.

Mr. MONK. Oh, indeed?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. And I will ask the chairman's decision.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The language, as I understand it, is not in accordance with the rules, and I hope the hon. minister will explain or apologize. At the same time, I will make the remark that the debate has been conducted from the beginning with too much of such language from one side as well as from the other.

Mr. MONK. I accept your ruling, Mr. Chairman, absolutely. Let me say to my hon. friend (Mr. Chisholm, Antigonish), that I will give the matter consideration. The work has been begun. I was stating a moment ago that I had been asked for post offices and other works in my own constituency under circumstances which seem to give justification for the demand. But the government have not been able to meet all demands. I will read in 'Hansard' what my hon. friend has said and will ask a report from the engineers.

Mr. CHISHOLM. (Antigonish). I have no doubt that when the report is made the hon. minister will see that the work is necessary.

Mr. KYTE. I would like to ask as to the work to be carried on at Little Anse. The contract was awarded last September, but I do not see an item in the estimates now before us. I presume that in cases in which a contract has been given the money will be provided for in the supplementary estimates. I should be glad if the minister could tell me that my understanding of the matter is correct.

Mr. MONK. I cannot say from memory whether the contract was awarded or not. But where a contract has been awarded and the work begun, the money will have to be provided whatever may be the opinion of the government.

Mr. KYTE. The work was not actually commenced, but I am given to understand that the contract is in existence.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the policy of the minister in regard to advertising for tenders in connection with these works?

Mr. MONK. Where the work is to cost over $5,000, tenders are usually called for. But where the district engineer reports that the work can be done better by day work, that plan is followed. In the case of breakwaters even it is sometimes found better to deliver the material during the autumn and winter and to complete the work in the spring.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work is sometimes more economically carried on in that way.

Mr. KYTE. I have a question to ask also with regard to an item in last year's estimates for a breakwater at Port Richmond. I asked the minister a question with regard to this a few days ago. I was told that the contract was not awarded, and in answer to the question: Is it the intention of the government to proceed this year? I received the answer: No; no amount is provided in next year's supplementary estimates. I would like to know if any report has been received by the department within the last few months having reference to the importance or otherwise of this undertaking?

Mr. MONK. I understand that we had a report, but I do not now believe that there was any allegation of urgency. If my hon. friend wishes to see the report, we will get it for him. The hon. gentleman must remember that I am not the supreme arbiter in these works. The officers make suggestions, and I bring my estimates to the government. But it is the government that finally decides on the estimates.

Mr. SINCLAIR. There is a similar case in Guysborough county, at New Harbour. The sum of $10,000 was provided in the estimates passed before the holidays for the extension of the breakwater there. And if I recollect rightly, tenders were advertised for, though I am not certain of that. It is a very important work. Prior to the erection of the present breakwater it was difficult to carry on fishing at all on that stormy part of the coast. But after the breakwater was built, a number of fishermen collected and built houses, and a thriving fishing village has grown up along that breakwater. The number of fishermen increased so rapidly that the breakwater was soon too small to shelter all their boats in a storm. I visited the place last year. There were about thirty boats there, only about half of which could get in behind the breakwater whilst the rest had to seek shelter elsewhere. I think the minister will find that the engineers were favourable to the extension, and that $10,000 was placed in the estimates for that purpose. But I noticed it was not in the present estimates and I trust it will not be forgotten. If the amount is not re-voted in the supplementary estimates the work cannot be gone on with this year.

Mr. MONK. I will give this matter full consideration. A number of large items for Nova Scotia as well as for other provinces, and in many constituencies irrespective of politics were cut out. The Minister of Public Works must bring his report to council where the whole thing is considered by his colleagues. As I have said, a number of reductions were made in the estimates I brought down—very properly, no doubt. We had estimates for dredging that we had to reduce by half. Those whose demands are not satisfied must not lay the blame wholly on the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand that. But this is the most important expenditure on that coast for a hundred miles. While other works might be dropped without great injury, this certainly should not be dropped.

Mr. MONK. I will consider it. But I notice a tendency on the part of members of the House to regard as the most important in the Dominion, the work that has been left out. It does not matter who the member is, that is what they tell us. It shows a praiseworthy zeal.

Mr. CARROLL. What is this extra amount at Burke's Head, northern Cape Breton, required for?

Mr. MONK. That is to complete a contract, to continue the breakwater now under contract at Burke's Head, as petitioned for by the residents.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There would seem to be a printing or clerical error here as the amount of the revote is stated to be larger than the vote now taken.

Mr. MONK. That must be an error made in the Finance Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume the experience of the minister has been not unlike that of previous ministers that it is easier to get through council items which pertain to counties where my hon. friend has supporters than where he has opponents.

Mr. MONK. Sometimes it is. But I must say to my hon. friend with absolute sincerity that there are cases where counties are represented by our own friends where it is very difficult to get what is thought sufficient.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Still my hon. friend used to condemn that very strongly. He used the words 'that there should be no question of party favour so far as public works are concerned.'

Mr. MONK. I think there ought not to be.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is an excellent fighter and I suppose would present that very strongly to his colleagues and have that principle applied absolutely in reference to these estimates.

Mr. MONK I would like to.

Mr. STANFIELD. Look at the difference between Pictou and Yarmouth.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). It is pleasant to hear the minister admit that politicians may have had some influence on the government in the allotment of these works, but we are glad to hear of his desire not to have politics enter into such matters because we all know that he is eminently fair and magnanimous. However evil associations have undoubtedly influenced him. When I look at the long list of items dropped in the county of Antigonish then I must conclude that the minister felt that other counties had a stronger claim upon him and upon the consideration of the government and therefore those good Conservative friends in these various districts who have been expecting these works begun by the late administration to go on will have to take the stone instead of the bread and will have to be content with nothing this session. I admit that in new work the minister may have good reasons for delaying undertakings until some more opportune time when the 'hungry horde' is first satisfied, but when you have works already begun and practically completed, it would surely be a wise policy to spend the small amount of money required to complete them. The amounts for these little places in Nova Scotia amount in the aggregate to trifling sums in comparison with the large expenditures on other matters. The minister should be a little more generous in preparing his estimates in reference to these small matters. In the estimate for last year we found a number of works that were not new but works on which a small amount had been expended from year to year to maintain them and improve and make them more useful and these have been dropped. I shall read some of them. I have mentioned Bayfield where $15,000 was voted last year, none of which was utilized because as I said before, only five twelfths of the appropriation was available. At Breen's Pond some work was done but it is not of much practical use without a slight extension. I have no doubt there is a report from the engineer that a slight extension would be required to give the fishermen enough water. It would not cost much to continue this work and thus afford a very much needed accommodation. At Cribbin's Point a small amount, $1,000, required to complete repairs to the wharf has been dropped. At Delorey's Beach a small amount was voted to carry on a contract for the erection of a breakwater to cost $14,000. The necessity of the work was clearly pointed out in the report of the engineer. But this is left where the present government found it. At Livingstone's Cove there is a provision of $2,000, the second item in Antigonish county that has not been dropped. At McNair's Cove for the extension and repairs to the breakwater wharf there was a vote of $5,400 but that has been dropped. This is an important port at which the subsidized steamer between Pictou, Antigonish and Inverness calls, and there is quite a good deal of fishing and trading done there, and the extension is a real necessity. Not even the appropriation made by the late government is however now available for improvments there. At Malignant Cove $1,341 was to be expended to complete the extension of the channel piers, but that has been dropped. The piers that are there will simply be wiped out before the fall storms are over. At McAra's Brook $991 was to be expended but this has been dropped. At Southlake, $4,000 was to be spent. Some money has been spent there since the change of government, some stones and material provided.

What are they going to do with all the stone which the faithful have hauled there since September 21? This really is an important work and I cannot understand how this item was dropped from the estimates by the minister. It would only have cost $2,000 or $3,000, I would have supposed, to have extended the piers so as to give plenty of water for the fishing boats and for the steamer that calls there at times, and also to save the opening or channel in the beach from filling in. As far as the South Lake work is concerned, I cannot understand why the minister has dropped it out of the estimates. I would ask him to state whether he proposes to have an item in the Supplementary Estimates for it. It is rather significant that in the whole county there are only two items. The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) referred to Yarmouth and Digby, and I would ask the minister to institute a comparison and to observe the contrast. I looked over some of the counties represented by Conservatives, and I found that they are fairly well treated. I am not at all insinuating that they are treated too generously or that they are getting appropriations and advantages that they ought not to get, but I cannot understand the minister, finding these items in the old estimates and having no report from the engineer which would justify him in dropping them, no evidence to show that the work is not as necessary or urgent to-day as two years ago, dropping these votes without consulting somebody. If he does not choose to consult the representative of the county, he could consult those who give him advice in some other matters, for instance those who give him advice in the matter of dismissals. I would urge with respect to the items that I have referred to, that he make provision for them in the Supplmentary Estimates. All I ask is that he shall procure a report from the engineer and I am quite satisfied that the engineer will tell him that these works are just as urgent as they were a year or two ago and that they should be completed at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend must not imagine that a minister must have the authority of the district engineer to enable him to go on with the work. The minister decides that himself from what he knows the government will authorize him to spend in a locality. The minister has a certain sum which he knows he can spend and he is obliged to divide it as equitably as possible. I did not follow all that my hon. friend has said, but he spoke about McAra's Brook—

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). McNair's Cove.

Mr. MONK. Not McAra's Brook?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). No. I referred to McAra's Brook as one of the items that had been dropped.

Mr. MONK. Was that an urgent work?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I would not say that it was a particularly urgent work, but it is as urgent as it was a year ago. It would be a great convenience to the fishermen and the amount is very small.

Mr. MONK. The district engineer says in his report:

> Application was made to Mr. Chisholm, M.P., for the name of a foreman to expend the amount voted, but as no name was given the work was not undertaken.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). If a request of that kind was made on the eve of the election certainly I did not name any foreman because there was only five-twelfths of the grant available and the engineer was not desirous of going ahead with the work unless the whole sum was available. It would be a very unfortunate thing if, after an expenditure of five-twelfths had been incurred, no more work could be done for want of further funds because the work which had been begun would be carried out to sea. I have no doubt that I did not make any recommendation on the eve of the election. I know that after the election the work was going on and and I was not asked to name a foreman. I know nothing at all as to who the foreman is, but I know money was expended then. The place was of sufficient importance after the 21st of September to justify the expenditure of what money was available.

Mr. MONK. It is impossible to suppose that a government coming into power would absolutely take all the estimates or all the works of improvement of the preceding government. There must be differences of opinion and these differences come out in the estimates.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). The minister refers to McAra's Brook. I do recall that there was a request made for a foreman down there but it happened that there was no road, no means for the public to get from the main road down to this wharf, although the wharf had been begun under the late Conservative administration. I refused to recommend a foreman until such time as the road was obtained.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to ask the minister if he takes the advice of the defeated candidate on his own side with regard to the requirements of constituencies as to wharves, breakwaters, and improvements of that kind.

Mr. MONK. We are glad to get advice but we are guided largely by the district engineer. We receive representations from all who make them.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). At an earlier date in the session I made inquiry of the Minister of Public Works regarding an expenditure of public money at Chester in the county of Lunenburg, and this is an instance in which the minister has allowed himself to be moved by improper influences. This is a public work, what is known as Chester canal and it is a cutting between the front and back of the harbour forming a small boat channel. The canal was supposed to facilitate the passage of boats from one harbour to another a distance of only a few feet. The expenditure of this money was commenced in the month of September, after the Dominion election. The provincial by-elections took place in Lunenburg and polling day was the 15th November. Two or three days, or possibly a week before polling day, on instructions from the department, work ceased and I have not the slightest doubt in the world that this was done upon representations of influential supporters of the Conservative party in Lunenburg that the continuance of this work during this particular period would operate against the Conservative candidate in the election. The work was stopped notwithstanding the fact that only $200 or $300 remained to be expended. That, in the first place, was small politics. Since then nothing has been done. At that time some money was due the men who were working on the canal for wages and up to this day they have not received all their claims. I do not propose to waste very much time over this, but I would like the minister to take it up. It is a case he cannot defend as the administration of his department. There was absolutely no excuse for the cessation of the work and there should not be any delay in the completion of it and the payment of such sums of money as are due the men for wages.

Mr. MONK. When I came to office I found a great many useless works being carried on and a very large number of men employed for whose services there was no necessity. When I saw the condition of things I gave a general order to stop, and it may be that in some cases the order operated unjustly. I will have much pleasure in looking into the work to which my hon. friend has referred. There is no doubt room for improvement in the harbour of Chester Cove, but I think the opinion of the sitting member is that the dredging as projected is not sufficiently deep. I will have a special report made by the District Engineer to see if anything can be done.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Some reason had to be given for stopping the work, I suppose, but in my opinion the work as contemplated is sufficient for the place. I trust the minister will at once take steps to pay these men for the work they performed last November?

Mr. KYTE. There were three items in the former estimates and omitted from these estimates which were for works of quite an important character, and I trust the minister will restore these votes in the supplementary estimates. I refer to the breakwater at Petit de Grat, the repairs to Poulamond wharf, and the improvement at Little harbour. The breakwater at Petit de Grat is in great disrepair and to preserve it money should be expended upon it at once. The Poulamond wharf is absolutely unsafe for handling freight, and vehicles cannot trust themselves upon the rotten covering. These are important works in the locality and a little money expended now would put them in repair. With respect to the Little harbour improvements a foreman was appointed last year and the lumber was purchased and conveyed to the site of the work. If the work is not proceeded with this year that timber will be useless and considerable loss will be entailed on the department. I trust the minister will provide for these works in his supplementary estimates.

Mr. MONK. I will give the request of the hon. member consideration. I am told that the lumber can be stored and used in the work later. There appear to be very few constituencies in which I have given full satisfaction as regards expenditure. We can only do the best we can.

Mr. KYTE I am not criticising the action of the minister; I am simply calling his attention to these important works the repairing of which will not be costly. I may tell the minister that there are no facilities there for storing the timber and there is a chance of it being lost during storms, it is difficult to secure it in its present position.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister told us he found a great many useless works going on when he entered the department.

Mr. MONK. I found a great number of works going on under conditions of extravagant expenditure. I did not say useless works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I was going to ask him if he could assure the committee that the works in Nova Scotia, for which he is now asking us to vote money are of a useful character, and if not, which of them can be dispensed with.

Mr. MONK. I do not know that any of these works can be called useless works, but there are some more urgent than others. There are port improvements that are far more urgent than some of these small works, but that does not mean that the smaller works are useless. We are threatened at the present time with the loss of very valuable trade because our principal ports are not properly equipped, and I believe we could more or less delay some of the smaller works, unless they are absolutely urgent, so as to equip our great ports to enable us to keep trade in Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman makes careful inquiry he will find there is a great deal of merit in everyone of these public works which were provided for in the estimates last year.

Mr. MONK. There were some useful works on which a great many men were employed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And in many cases it is better to employ a considerable number of men so as to hurry the work along. I have no doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will follow my good example, and will find that at proper times he can employ a considerable number of men to hurry along a public work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If there is any extravagant expenditure connected with any of these public works the minister has the power to stop it, and he should do so. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), has on many occasions in the past delivered speeches urging that the recommendations of the transportation commission should be carried out by the government. Does he intend to pursue that policy now that he is in office? If I remember well, the commissioners reported in favour of the nationalization of certain of our ports. Is my hon. friend going to select the national ports, and to declare his policy on the subject.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will pardon me, but I must again remind him of the rule restricting debate to the item under consideration.

Mr. CARROLL. There were a good many items last year for public works in South Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. There were a number of little breakwaters for which appropriations were made and for which we had voted five-twelfths of the estimates before the holidays. None of these are of great national importance, but each one is very materially important to the particular locality interested. For example, there was an appropriation of $1,000 for a wharf at Albert Bridge. Albert Bridge is on the Mira river, about 30 miles from a railway station and the river is the only means, outside of trucking 25 miles to the railway station, by which the inhabitants can send out their products to the Louisburg and Sydney Railway. This is only a small country place, and it is almost impossible for the people there to get their products out or bring merchandise in unless they have a wharf. Last year this riding was represented by a Conservative—a good man and a friend of my own— and he says he impressed on the government of that day the necessity of voting some money to build a wharf at that bridge. The House voted that amount but now I find the item dropped. I have the same thing to say concerning Gabarous Harbour. There was an estimate of $5,000 altogether for some extensions or protection work at that harbur. There was also an item for a wharf at Marion Bridge on the Mira river which is further up the river by about ten miles than the wharf at Albert Bridge. That also has been dropped. That is a large country district, and at present the people there have to wade into the water to meet a little steamer before they can put anything on board it. That is a great hardship, and I do not think the district engineer could have reported against either of those two works at Marion Bridge or Albert Bridge. There was also an appropriation of $17,000 voted for a wharf at Mainadieu. In fact every item voted for that constituency has been dropped except a paltry $3,000 for completing construction work at Cow Bay and $5,000 for buying a sand bar at Sydney Harbour. The first vote that came down for Sydney Harbour was $25,000 but now that vote is reduced to $5,000. These are only small works and it was partially through the efforts of the former representative of that county that these items were put in the estimates and a part of them voted. It was really a hardship on these people that all these moneys should not be spent. Why they should have been dropped is something I cannot understand, and I am drawing to the attention of the hon. minister the necessity of going on with these works, and I trust that he will take the matter up. If these works could be attended at once especially those two little works on the Mira river, the hon. minister would be confering a great benefit on that locality.

Mr. MONK. I shall certainly give my hon. friend's remarks every consideration. In the case of Main-a-dieu, I brought an estimate down but the government did not accept it, as it threw out many estimates I endeavoured to have accepted. With regard to Gabarous harbour, I find a note in the report to the effect that on August the 7th instructions were given to proceed with the expenditure of the amount authorized, and to consult Dr. Arthur Kendall about the appointment of a foreman. Dr. Kendall was written to on August 8, but he did not reply, and consequently no further action was taken. I shall, however, make a note of my hon. friend's request.

Mr. CARROLL. With reference to Gabarous harbour my answer is exactly what was given by my hon. friend from Antigonish. Dr. Kendall did consult me at the time, but only a part of the amount appropriated had been voted, and as there was an election on, we did not think it a proper time to go on with the expenditure on public works, because that would look like vote catching. Dr. Arthur Kendall is not responsible for the foreman not having been appointed, but myself. We were both consulted, but we thought there was no use appointing a foreman then as the House would meet in a few months, and we thought it was of no avail to appoint a foreman at that time in order to expend five-twelfths of the estimate when the estimate itself was so small.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). A condition of affairs prevails, to some slight extent at least, in Nova Scotia, and possibly in other provinces, by reason of the fact that a few years ago or more, votes were passed by parliament and tenders asked for, and in some cases the lowest tender accepted, and the works have not been gone on with or the deposits refunded. The result is that in many cases the department now holds the moneys deposited by successful tenderers, and probably will hold them for a year or more, or possibly may not proceed with the work. I would like to suggest that in such cases the deposits of the lowest tenderers, which are still with the department, should be returned to the successful tenderer upon the understanding that should the department later on decide to proceed with the works, these tenderers would be asked to refund their deposits. That would be only fair, or else the department should allow interest on these deposits.

Mr. MONK. That would be fair enough, but we might decide to call for new tenders and not have accepted the first tender.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I am referring to cases where the lowest tender was accepted. I know of three cases in Nova Scotia in which, before the present government came into power contracts were awarded in each case to the lowest tenderer, but the moneys for these works were not voted until 1912-13; and prominent friends of the government have approached the successful tenderers offering them a sum of money to assign to them their contracts. This is a very objectionable practice and places these persons in a very uncomfortable position. It makes them feel that influences are at work which will actually prevent them making contracts with the government; and if they had an understanding with such persons in the meantime, it would be an obstacle.

Mr. MONK. I would be obliged to my hon. friend if he would give me the facts of these cases. I know nothing of them.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I think the constituency which I have the honour to represent occupies a unique position in this regard, that whereas in the supplementary estimates brought down last year there were 14 or 15 works in that county provided for, in the present estimates there is just one item for a work in Inverness county. Will the minister be good enough to tell me what is being done in regard to that very important work, the Port Hood breakwater and harbour extension?

Mr. MONK. That is a work that has been going on for some time. It is under consideration. It is an important work, and we will endeavour to follow it up. But my hon. friend must not be too disappointed if a great many of these estimates have been struck out by the government. In the province of Ontario, notably on the Great Lakes, the estimates of the previous government have been cut in two.

I have been the object of very much reproach as to that. The present government has had to make large expenditures which I suppose were not foreseen by the previous government, and we have been cutting down expenses everywhere. We have cut off almost a million for dredging in the eastern provinces. In many Conservative constituencies the estimates of the previous government have been cut down. My hon. friend must not think that he is specially unfortunate.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I may point out to the minister that $115,000 has been spent on this work. The object is of course to close the northern entrance to the harbour by an erection of a breakwater. If this work is delayed, the harbour, which before the work was commenced was in fairly good condition, will be absolutely spoiled, for the reason that as the approaches from either sides are being built the entrance is narrowed and the consequence is to increase the force of the current resulting in the formation of sand hills, in the harbour. If the minister has a report from his engineer as to the actual condition of that harbour at present he will find that it is of the greatest importance that the work should be continued with as much expedition as possible. If it is left for a couple of years without the northern entrance being closed, it will become so filled with sand as to be of no use at all. This is the point to which I do not think the minister's attention has been called?

Mr. MONK. I will get a special report upon it.

Cole harbour—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Does the minister intend to go on with that work this year?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

Cow Bay (Port Morien)—completing protection works and general repairs, $3,000.

Mr. CARROLL. Is it the intention of the minister to do this by contract or by day work?

Mr. MONK. I have not decided that point.

Mr. CARROLL. In years gone by it was done by day work. I would recommend the minister, if it is to be done in that way, to be careful as to who superintends the work. If he will get a report from the engineer, he will find that that is very important and requires some technical skill.

Devil's island—extension of breakwater, $25,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Has the contract been awarded?

Mr. MONK. It is before the government at this moment.

Gillis Point (East)—construction of wharf, $1,200.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). Where is that?

Mr. MONK. It is a small settlement on the shore of the Little Bras d'Or lake.

Inverness—harbour improvements, $5,300.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). What is the intention of the minister with regard to this important work? Is it the intention to have an additional vote in the supplementaries?

Mr. MONK. Yes, we intend to ask an additional vote.

Melford—construction of wharf, $5,700.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What is being done with regard to this? My recollection was that the contract was awarded last autumn but that afterwards the contractor was told not to proceed with the work. Does the minister intend to go on with the work? And what is the present state of progress with regard to it?

Mr. MONK. There is some dispute as to the site. Tenders have been received in answer to public advertisement. This wharf will be convenient both for Melford and for the country north and south.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). Where is the wharf to be built?

Mr. MONK. I understand the site is still under consideration and has not been absolutely decided.

Yarmouth harbour—improvements, $100,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like to have this vote and the general vote for harbours and rivers stand, and I should be glad if the Minister of Public Works would not take them up until the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) and the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Law) are in the House.

Mr. MONK. I would not like to keep the Yarmouth vote back. Is not my hon. friend in favour of that improvement?

Mr MACLEAN (Halifax). There will be no delay.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS, &c.

Mr. MONK moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MACLEAN. (Halifax). I would remind the Minister of Customs that I asked for two returns some days ago which have not yet been brought down. One has reference to the dismissal of Eugene Baldwin, Customs officer at Coaticooke, and another to the change in the regulations concerning the duty on lobster twine.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think I laid that return about the lobster twine on the table. The other return has been delayed pending the receipt of another copy of the newspaper.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I have a dozen, I shall dispense with that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then I shall bring down the return on Monday.

Mr. STANFIELD. I moved for a return from the Railway Department two years ago and only one half of it has been brought down. I have mentioned the matter several times and I would like to have it completed.

Mr. LEMIEUX.. Has any decision been arrived at by the Department of Marine and Fisheries as regards the retention of the Harbour Commissioners in Montreal?

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman is out of order because there is a question dealing with that matter on the order paper to be answered in due course.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am desired by the member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) to call the attention of the government to the fact that Mr. W. H. Downey, the deputy returning officer for the constituency of Kings-Albert I presume, because the letter is from Harvey Bank in Albert county, has not yet received the election expenses which are due him by the government. He says he filled in the blank form as required to be signed but when the remittance was made the returning officer said that a part of the amount was with held without information. The amount, although small, is of importance to him, and I wish the Secretary of State would look into the matter for my hon. friend.

Mr. ROCHE. Those accounts are looked after by the Auditor General.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Would the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) inform the House when the writ for South Renfrew will issue?

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, January 29, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

LORD'S DAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. VERVILLE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 85) to amend the Lord's Day Act. He said: The amendment is with respect to musicians who have been more than once prosecuted for having played on Sunday at funerals and public parades and so forth. They would like this disability to be removed. This Bill also provides to give a day's holiday to waiters and waitresses working in restaurants and hotels.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MACDONELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 86) to amend the Railway Act. He said: This Bill simply provides to add to the powers of the Railway Commission by giving it jurisdiction over the length of sections and number of men required to do work on a section. The Railway Commission supposed it had such power and had dealt with matters of that kind, but, on appeal it was found that the Act does not give it such jurisdiction.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT.

Mr. MACDONELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 87) to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act of 1907. He said: This Act at presents prohibits a strike or lockout pending negotiations where there is a labour dispute. There is an additional subsection preventing any one from aiding or assisting an employer or employee during that period. The courts have construed that section to prohibit any aid or assistance being given to the men by any labour union during that time. They have held that where the strike condition exists, but the strike has not been declared and the conciliation board has not reported, it is unlawful for anybody to give assistance to the striker or a man prepared to strike. That would prevent the ordinary benefits payable by labour unions from being distributed to the men during that time. I do not believe that the Act was ever intended to bear that meaning. Such an interpretation would prevent any one from giving charity to a striking employee. The amendment makes it permissible for the funds of a benefit society or a trade union to be paid to its members during that period without incurring liability and laying itself open to the penalities of a criminal offence.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE WRIT FOR SOUTH RENFREW.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would ask my right hon. friend who leads the government, if the writ for South Renfrew has been issued.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). No, it has not. There is some difficulty with regard to the lists. Some of the lists of 1911 may be used under the law, but others cannot, at present. I cannot give the exact date but a little delay is necessary in order that all of the lists may be used.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The vacancy in South Renfrew occurred on the 7th of December and the elections in Ontario took place on the 11th of December or four days later. There can be no reason why the lists which were good enough for the Ontario election, should not be good enough now.

Mr. BORDEN. I am not prepared to admit that. I do not know that the new lists were ready at the time the Ontario elections were held.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The right hon. gentleman may presume that.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not presume anything, but look to the facts. My hon. colleague, the Secretary of State, (Mr. Roche), to whom I applied for information, informed me that a portion of the lists are ready and can be used, but that another portion could not be used under the law which requires that they shall be prepared or returned to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery at least sixty days before nomination day. That is the difficulty at present.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. According to the law, when an election takes place the list in force on nomination day shall be in force sixty days after.

Mr. BORDEN. The result would be that the election would be held, in some parts of the county on the lists of 1910 and in others on the lists of 1911, so that in some districts a number of men entitled to vote would not be able to do so because the old lists were used.

Mr. HENDERSON. I might observe to the right hon. the leader of the opposition that there has been no election in South Renfrew for the Ontario House lately. Consequently no lists were used.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not say they were, but that they would have been used had there been an election.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). The objection raised is a very reasonable one. There is no general election——

Mr. SPEAKER. I must call the hon. gentleman to order. This matter cannot be discussed at this stage.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

THE ONTARIO AND MINNESOTA PULP AND PAPER COMPANY.

Mr. TURRIFF. I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works regarding the Ontario and Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company. I understand that last year the then Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) issued an order to prevent this company from establishing grinding machines on the Canadian side, by which the Canadian pulp wood would be ground up and shot into a sluiceway and run across to the American side, there to be manufactured into pulp and then into paper. My information is that within the last couple of months, this company has applied to the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) for permission to put their grinders in and take the ground wood across to the American side. Is it correct that my hon. friend has waived the rule made last year?

Mr. MONK. That report is not correct. There has been an application recently for the ratification of the order to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, but I have not yet been able to look into the matter. No decision has been arrived at..

Mr. TURRIFF. I would ask my hon. friend not to take action in the matter without first giving the town of Fort Francis an opportunity to be heard.

ANNEXATION OF UNGAVA.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I see a despatch in the Montreal 'Star' of Saturday headed 'Annexation of Ungava Again up for Settlement', which states that correspondence has been exchanged between the Prime Minister of Quebec and the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada. Would the right hon. gentleman inform the House whether it is true or not?

Mr. BORDEN. Correspondence was exchanged, I believe, before the present government came into power.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not since?

Mr. BORDEN. Yes, we have been reminded of that correspondence and asked to give it consideration.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—PROPOSED COMMISSION.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). I see it stated in the press that a commission has been appointed to deal with matters relating to the construction of the National Transcontinental railway. I desire to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister whether the statement in the press as to the appointment of these commissioners is correct?

Mr. BORDEN. I have not seen the statement and so cannot answer the question. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) is unfortunately absent to-day; but he will be in his place to-morrow and will be able to give information to my hon. friend with regard to the matter to which he refers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Would the Prime Minister please call the attention of his colleague to the fact that I have asked the question, and, if the statement to which I have referred is correct, ask him to bring down whatever papers there may be in connection with the matter?

Mr. BORDEN. I will direct his attention to it.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I desire to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) whether an announcement is to be made at an early day as to the extension of the rural mail delivery. I understand that there is some question of extending it so that all the roads in a settled municipality may have it. I would ask the Postmaster General if that is likely to be announced, and if so when?

Mr. PELLETIER. It is not so much a question of extension, but of the making of a well-arranged plan by mapping out each county and not working at random as at present. The question is under consideration.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Will it be announced?

Mr. PELLETIER. Yes, in due course.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will it be free rural mail delivery?

Mr. PELLETIER. We will speak about that later.

SOUTH AFRICAN VETERANS' BOUNTY.

Mr. KNOWLES. I desire to renew my question to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) whether he can accord us any information as to when we shall likely be made aware of what will be in his Bill in regard to South African volunteers' bounty extension?

Mr. ROGERS. I will have the Bill prepared in a very few days.

Mr. WHITE (Alberta):

1. Is the government aware that sites have been purchased and paid for by the Department of Public Works at Vegreville, Alberta, and Lloydminister, Saskatchewan, for the erection of public buildings in those places?

2. Is the government aware that provision was made in the original estimates for 1911 and 1912 for the erection of such buildings, and that five-twelfths of the amount was voted by the last parliament at its last session?

3. Is the government aware that the estimates for 1912 and 1913, submitted to this parliament, did not contain any provision for the erection of public buildings at these points?

4. What are the intentions of the government with regard to public buildings at Vegreville and Lloydminister?

5 If it is not the intention of the government to proceed with the buildings, what are the government's intentions regarding the sites?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Yes.
4. The Government will proceed with these works as soon as circumstances permit.
5. To hold the sites for public purposes.

LA BANQUE DE ST. HYACINTHE.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

Is it the intention of the government to investigate the circumstances of the liquidation of La Banque de St. Hyacinthe?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).—No.

MR. TANCREDE MARCIL.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has Tancrède Marcil, of Montreal, applied for a position in any of the departments? If so, to which department?

2. What is his position and his salary?

Mr. BORDEN. I cannot answer if Mr. Marcil has applied for a position in any department. If any particular department can be named further inquiry will be made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will allow it to stand until the hon. member is here?

Mr. BORDEN. It is no use allowing it to stand, as that is the only answer that can be given at the present time. I have made inquiries and I cannot find that Mr. Marcil has made application in any department. If any particular department is named more definite information can be obtained.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) can put another question.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries received the following resolution passed unanimously by the Montreal Corn Exchange on Tuesday, January 23, 1911:

66½

Resolved, that, understanding that there is a movement on foot to induce the government to replace the present members of the Montreal Harbour Commission, the Montreal Corn Exchange Association hereby protests in the strongest possible manner against such action and records its high appreciation of the work of the three gentlemen who have done so much for the port since their appointment as commissioners on January 1, 1907.

That, in the opinion of the association, the removal of the present most capable commissioners under the present circumstances, while the work of modernizing the harbour is only partially completed, would be resented by the community of this city and of Canada generally.

2. What action does the honourable minister intend to take in this matter?

Mr. HAZEN. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not received such a resolution, but he was present when it was presented to the Prime Minister. In view of the answer I have given to question No. 2 on the order paper to-day it seems unnecessary to answer the second question of my hon. friend.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Is it true that a delegation composed of Messrs. Andrew Allan and R. W. Reford, of the Shipping Federation, Huntly Drummond, Vice-President of the Board of Trade, A. H. Harris, representing the Canadian Pacific Railway, William Wainright, Vice-President of the Grand Trunk, J. E. MacFarlane, of the Corn Exchange, and J. H. Sherrard, President of the Montreal Branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, met the Right Honourable Mr. Borden, Prime Minister, on Wednesday, January 24, 1912?

2. Did that delegation represent to the Prime Minister that the Montreal Harbour Commission is composed of high-class and competent men, whose work has been highly satisfactory, and that it would be a grievous error to make any change when the scheme for the national port is being so satisfactorily carried out?

3. Was any members of the House of Commons present at that interview?

4. If so, what is the name and constituency of said member or members?

5. Did said member or members ask for the dismissal of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners? If so, upon what grounds?

Mr. BORDEN. A delegation composed of the gentlemen mentioned, and, I think, of some other gentlemen, did meet the Prime Minister on Wednesday the 24th of January, 1912, and on that occasion gave to the Prime Minister strong commendation of the work which has been carried on by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the attention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries been called to the following article published in the Montreal 'Star,' Wednesday, January 24, 1912:

THE MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION.

The commercial deputation which approaches the government to-day in support of our excellent and popular Harbour Commission, will speak for the intelligence, the enterprise and the future of Montreal. We have never before had so good a Harbour Commission. It is not partisan in any sense of the term. That is, indeed precisely the reason why certain elements of the community are demanding its decapitation. They insist that it shall be partisan, run in the interests of the party and not in the interests of the habour. It is not the trade of Montreal of which they are thinking but the sordid traffic in posts for persistent partisans.

The benefits which these three Harbour Commissioners have conferred on this city, and on the country as a whole, will not be properly appreciated until they are seen in the long perspective of the future. Still, they look very big even to-day in comparison with the puny efforts of the debating societies and the cumbersome organizations which had previously fiddled with this huge national problem. To sacrifice these successful commissioners to the fury of a victorious political horde, thinking only of the spoil and not at all of the prosperity of the city, would be an act of folly which we cannot believe the ministers are in any danger of committing.

Still, it is just as well that commercial and industrial Montreal, regardless of the party affiliation, should make its opinion known; and that the government should be put in possession of the stoutest defence against any 'camp-followers' who continue to cry 'blood' and 'boodle.'

2. Is it the intention of the government to accept the friendly advice of the Montreal 'Star'?

Mr. BORDEN. The attention of the Prime Minister has not been called to the article which is set forth.

Mr. HAZEN. May I be permitted to say the same thing so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The right hon. gentleman has not answered the entire question.

Mr. BORDEN. I think the answer to the question, as a whole, is a very fair one.

DISMISSAL OF EDWARD POULIN.

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Has Edward Poulin, an employee in the Customs Department at Quebec, been dismissed?
2. If so, for what reason and at whose request?
3. Has an inquiry been held in the matter?

Mr. REID (Grenville).

The services of Edward Poulin, Acting Preventive Officer of Customs at Quebec, have been dispensed with, as they were not required during the winter season.

This action was taken by the Department of Customs after inquiry into the matter by a Customs Inspector.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

IN RE SMUGGLING.

*Mr. BAKER:

1. Has the Minister of Customs taken cognizance of an article which appeared in the Montreal 'Star' of January 12, under the caption 'M.P's name is mentioned in a smuggling case?'
2. Are the statements as communicated to the Department of Customs substantially as alleged in the said newspaper article?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.

POSTMISTRESS AT ANSE A VALEAU.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has any charge been made against Madame Proulx, postmistress at Anse à Valeau, county of Gaspé?
2. If so, has any investigation been ordered?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.

MOTION AGREED WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all correspondence, representations, estimates, letters, telegrams and other documents received by the Right hon. Prime Minister, or by any member of the government, in any way relating to the subject of a car-ferry service between the province of Prince Edward Island and the mainland across the Straits of Northumberland, and the widening of the gauge of the Prince Edward Island Railway; and also as to the estimated cost of all such work.—Mr. Emmerson.

MARITIME PROVINCES IMMIGRATION.

Mr. E. N. RHODES (Cumberland) moved:

That, inasmuch as the immigration policy of the government and the several railway companies has for many years been almost entirely confined to the development of western Canada, and largely in consequence of this policy the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have not grown in equal degree with the rest of the Dominion, in the opinion of this House, in order to promote uniform progress and prosperity throughout Canada, the government should speedily inaugurate and carry out a policy of publicity and immigration designed to promote the more rapid development of the said provinces.

He said: Mr. Speaker, It is possible that hon. gentlemen representing constituencies in other provinces of the Dominion outside the maritime provinces will at first view regard this proposed resolution as provincial; as one asking special and undue treatment for a particular portion of Canada, at the expense of the remainder.

Upon investigation, however, it will, I believe, be found that the reverse is the case and should this resolution carry and be acted upon by this government, the result would be but a measure of justice—long delayed—meted out to a section of the Dominion, which has made greater sacrifice in proportion to its wealth and members—to create and develop the Dominion of Canada—than will be found to be the case in any other portion of this broad Dominion.

And further, to my mind, one great cause of the tardy development of these provinces is that their people have been so unselfish so unprovincial and so patriotic; that, forgetting self, they have given unsparingly of their best to the development of this Dominion, whose very creation could not have come about, but for the courage and foresight displayed by their leading statesmen, who, in looking to the larger field, largely neglected the one at hand.

At the outset I wish to make it clear to the House that this resolution is not brought forward in any party spirit. Whether the policy of immigration approved by the government which went out of power on the 21st September was good or bad, or whether the policy of immigration pursued by previous governments was good or bad, that policy has been concurred in by hon. gentlemen representing constituencies in the maritime provinces—by their silence at least—and for that reason it is not for us to make any party capital out of the question at all. It is possible, of course, that the special attention which the west has received in recent years is due to the fact that it is only in recent years the west has commenced to develop very rapidly. In the first place I will examine briefly the conditions of population in the maritime provinces, and I will take in this respect the figures of the census of 1901 because the detailed information contained in the census of 1911 is not yet available. As given in the census of 1901 the population was as follows:

Nova Scotia..	459,574
New Brunswick	331,120
Prince Edward Island..	103,259

An analytical examination of the census of 1910, gives us the following result as to the race descent of the inhabitants of the maritime provinces in that year:

	Nova Scotia.	New Brunswick.	P.E. Island.
English..	159,735	104,682	24,043
Irish..	54,710	83,384	21,992
Scotch..	143,382	48,310	41,753
Others..	1,219	1,147	95
French..	45,161	79,979	13,866
German....	41,020	3,816	709
Dutch..	2,941	3,663	242
Scandinavian..	696	1,292	14
Russian	74	68	5
Austro-Hungarian	99	27	0
Italian..	285	60	12
Jewish..	449	395	17
Swiss..	1,004	37	0
Belgian..	62	26	5
Half-Breeds..	87	156	4
Indians	1,542	1,309	254
Chinese..	107	59	4
Negro	5,984	1,368	141
Various origins	492	355	47
Unspecified..	507	986	56
Totals	459,574	331,120	103,259

From this table it will be seen that a very large proportion of the population are of British descent. Still more suggestive perhaps are the figures showing their places of birth. For example of the 459,574 population of Nova Scotia, 452,786 were born on British territory. In New Brunswick out of a total population of 331,120, 324,084 were born on British territory. And in the province of Prince Edward Island, out of a total population of 103,259, 102,351 were born on British territory.

Perhaps even more striking are the figures showing the percentage of population of these provinces born in Canada. For instance in Nova Scotia, out of the total 459,574, 435,172 were born on Canadian soil. In other words all but 6,786 were born on British territory and all but 24,407 were born on Canadian territory. In New Brunswick out of a total population of 331,120, all but 7,036 are of British birth and all but 12,942 are of Canadian birth.

The same proportion is carried out, perhaps in a greater degree, in Prince Edward Island. Out of a total population in that province of 103,259, all but 908 are British born and all but 4,253 of Canadian birth.

Then, taking the total population of the maritime provinces, out of 893,953, all but 14,732 are of British birth and all but 46,597 were born in Canada.

These figures, when reduced to percentages, become still more startling. Of the total population of the maritime provinces born in British territory, 94·8 per cent were born in Canada, and 98·4 per cent. are of British birth.

Taking the figures showing the percentage of population born in each province, I find the following:—

Nova Scotia..	94·7	born in province.
New Brunswick	70·	" "
P. E. Island	93·5	" "
Mar. Provinces..	93·1	" "

My object in giving these figures in detail is twofold. In the first place, I wish to show how homogeneous is our population and in the second place to show to what a trifling degree that population has been affected by immigration. While these figures are taken from the census of 1901, I have no doubt that the percentage will be found approximately the same in the census of 1911 as soon as the complete figures of that census are available. There has never at any time been any considerable inflow of foreign settlers. Those designated as of French origin are the descendants of those who were left behind after the expulsion of the Acadians in 1755, or of those of them who afterwards returned to the provinces. The Germans and Dutch are in the main the descendants of those who arrived as far back as 1750. The same may be said of the Swiss. The negroes are mainly the descendants of slave forefathers imported by early settlers. And the other nationalities, represented by a handful of each, are descendants of those who have drifted across the Atlantic one by one into a maritime ship-owning country.

In comparing the area of the maritime provinces with that of Great Britain, I do so in the first place for the purpose of drawing a comparison between the sparse population of the maritime provinces and the dense population of Great Britain, and in the second place because I believe the maritime provinces are perhaps the best situated portion of the Dominion for a certain class of immigrants from the British Isles. The area of these provinces is almost the same as that of England. England has an area of 50,903 square miles and the maritime provinces are 51,163 miles in extent. Compare then the dense population of England with the sparse population of these provinces. In England which is identical in size with these provinces, we find a population of 605 persons to the square mile, whereas in the maritime provinces there are only 17 to the square mile. Here are the figures in tabulated form:—

——	Area in Acres.	Area in Sq. Miles.	Population per square Mile.
England	32,578,178	50,903	605
Scotland	19,070,081	29,797	150
Ireland	20,327,947	31,762	140
Wales	4,749,301	7,421	213
Nova Scotia	13,483,671	21,068	22
New Brunswick	17,863,266	27,911	12
Prince Edward Island	1,397,991	2,184	47
The Maritime Provinces	.....	51,163	17

These figures show the great possibilities of these provinces. England with practically equal area has a population 16 to 17 times greater. Scotland, slightly larger than New Brunswick, has a population 12½ times larger. Yet in all respects the maritime provinces compare favourably with the United Kingdom.

Take for instance the question of climate. The south of England lies 6 degrees north of the south of Nova Scotia and 3 degrees north of the extreme north of New Brunswick, the most northerly of the maritime provinces. This makes a great difference in the distribution of light in the favour of the maritime provinces. And, but for the effect of ocean currents, would make a considerable difference in climate. The climate of England is undoubtedly more equable than that of any of the maritime provinces, but I submit we are ahead of Great Britain as regards moisture and the annual amount of sunshine. While the climate of Scotland does not compare favourably in any respect with that of the maritime provinces.

In natural wealth the maritime provinces are the equal in all respects of the divisions of the United Kingdom and the superior in many. Their soil in many parts is of unsurpassed fertility. Under a similar system of agriculture it would yield as largely as the richest fields even of England. This has been actually demonstrated in many localities. The average hay crop, even with indifferent cultivation, is as large as that of the United Kingdom. Wheat when adequately cultivated has been known to return 40 to 50 bushels to the acre in Nova Scotia. In some sections of that province—in early times—grain crops were grown on the same land, without the use of fertilizer of any kind, for over 30 years consecutively.

The fruit-growing capacity of many parts of the maritime provinces has been demonstrated conclusively by practical experiment. The apples of Nova Scotia have long been an important and increasing factor in the English market, and a large percentage of the total shipment from Canada to Great Britain comes from that province. To the growing of small fruits the maritime provinces are equally well adapted. For the production of root crops they are unsurpassed. Their resources in timber are well known, the total quantity exported from the province of Nova Scotia alone in the year 1910 being 214,368,493 feet. Notwithstanding the large cuts and great destruction by fire, these resources are still enormous, particularly in the province of New Brunswick.

The mineral wealth of the maritime provinces from present development, can safely be said to be very great. The coal deposits of Nova Scotia in particular are practically inexhaustible, and new areas are being discovered every year. To show the advance that province has made in the development of these deposits I will give the figures of the total annual coal product of the province of Nova Scotia for three consecutive decades:

1890.. .. .. 1,984,000 tons.
1910 (in round numbers) 5,000,000 "

And during the coming year it is expected that one company alone in the province of Nova Scotia, will produce, according to their own estimate, from 4,500,000 to 5,000,000 tons. Iron is only less abundant than coal, and limestone lies everywhere in close proximity to both. The tremendous growth in the steel industry is but an earnest of the future. Gypsum is found in lavish abundance. Gold mining has been a staple industry for half a century. Silver, copper, lead, manganese and tungsten have also been found. And in all probability it is but a matter of time when most, if not all these minerals will be found in economic quantities. Petroleum of excellent quality and undoubted quantity has recently been produced in the fields of Albert, New Brunswick, and natural gas in abundance is at present being produced there, some of the largest producing wells in the world having been tapped and their further production will follow with expanding markets. In this connection I wish to give credit to Mr. W. E. McLellan, of Halifax, to whose excellent article on the effect of immigration in the maritime provinces I have had recourse for some of the data and percentages that I have given. Another industry capable of great expansion in the province is that of the fisheries. It is a great source of industry and wealth to us at the present time, but the opportunities in this industry alone are practically illimitable. To show something of the capabilities of the province I have here a table showing the value of commodities of various kinds produced in the province of Nova Scotia in the year 1911, taken from the edition of January 1, of the Halifax 'Chronicle':

The Products of Nova Scotia in 1911 Yielded More than One Hundred and Twenty-two Million Dollars.

Coal..	$17,600,000
Coke..	$ 2,200,000
Gold, iron and other minerals	350,000
Gypsum, limestone, &c..	880,000
Building materials..	315,000
Pig iron..	1,500,000
Steel, steel rails, rods, &c..	14,500,000
Fisheries..	8,100,000
Manufactures, ships and freights...	45,500,000
Products of the farm..	25,926,076
Products of the forest..	5,000,000
Game..	200,000
Total..	$122,071,076

I regret that I have not the figures of the wealth produced in the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in the same year, but I have no doubt that they would show the same strikingly large proportion in comparison to population.

I have spoken very briefly of the manifold resources of the province of Nova Scotia, and it would seem to me that the extent and quality of these natural resources, coupled with the sparsity of population, would prove sufficiently attractive to the immigrant. But there is a third advantage possessed by these provinces which we must not lose sight of. They occupy a strategic prosition geographically. Nova Scotia has been called the wharf of the Dominion, jutting out as it does into the Atlantic ocean, with each of its eighteen counties bordering on the sea. The same advantage is enjoyed by Prince Edward Island and in a very great degree by the province of New Brunswick. Then we have the great natural harbours of Halifax and St. John, among the best in the whole world, each as free from ice as the great harbour of New York, and a full day's sail nearer Europe than any other port on the continent. They are the oldest settled portions of the Dominion, and their social and economic conditions closely resemble those of the old world. Furthermore, for a portion of the year, there is a large flow of immigration through the ports of Halifax and St. John. In spite of all these admitted advantages, during the past decade we have not held even the natural increase in population.

I find that the population returns of the Dominion, as disclosed by the last census, reveal the following figures:

POPULATION OF CANADA BY PROVINCES.

—	1901.	1911.	Increase.	Decrease.
Alberta	73,022	375,434	302,412
British Columbia	178,657	390,229	211,572
Manitoba	255,211	455,869	200,658
New Brunswick	331,120	351,8·9	20,769
Nova Scotia	459,574	492,338	32,764
Ontario	2.182,947	2,523,297	340,350
Prince Edward Island	103,259	93,722		9,537
Quebec	1,648,898	2,002,726	353,828
Saskatchewan	91,279	492,344	401,068
Yukon	27,219	8,512		18,707
Northwest Territories	20,129	15,762		4,367
CANADA	5,371,315	7,202,122	1,830,807
Maritime Provinces	893,953	937,949	43,996

Thus we find that while the population of Manitoba has increased almost 100 per cent, and that of the other prairie provinces over 500 per cent, the population of the maritime provinces has increased slightly under 5 per cent. The question naturally arises, if we have all these magnificent natural resources, and a homogeneous population chiefly of British origin, an intelligent people and a good geographical position, why is it that the population of the maritime provinces has remained stationary? I have the idea that one reason is that these provinces are too richly endowed, that this very fact is one reason for their lack of progress. If you look about you will find that the leading men in any walk of life, political, commercial, or literary, are largely recruited from the farms—that the successful men of this country have become successful because they had to scratch for a living in their earlier years.

Take the same condition as applied to countries. That small country Holland, whose very soil had to be wrested from the sea, and whose people have to contend with nature to maintain their country, is perhaps the most wealthy country on earth in accumulated capital. Contrast conditions there with those in some of the West Indian Islands where nature has been lavish in its gifts. I might carry this illustration still further. The cities in any country that grow the most, are those, in the main, that have the least natural advantage. They tell me, for instance, that the port of Bristol is the finest in the British islands. Yet the shipping that goes in and out of that port is not a tithe of that which seeks the port of Manchester which, but for the energy of its citizens, would to-day be an inland city. So, it would appear that individuals, communities and nations prosper in adverse proportion to their natural advantages. And it may be for that reason that the maritime provinces have not grown as rapidly as they should. But, while this condition prevails with our present population in the maritime provinces, most of whom were born there, the same conditions, perhaps, would not exist if we had a large flow of new blood into that country. Perhaps it is fair to inquire why we have not had a larger immigration into the maritime provinces. I think that in this connection I cannot do better than quote from a paragraph from a very excellent book entitled 'Nova Scotia' written by a celebrated English journalist, Mr. Beckles Wilson:

Of the eight Canadian provinces stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard, the one of which Englishmen might be expected from its origin, its proximity, its history, and its resources, to know most about they know least. This is a puzzle I have often had to explain. Go down into Kent or into Wiltshire, and you will find villagers talking glibly of Saskatchewan and of Alberta. The ale-house wiseacre can give you off-hand all the salient peculiarities of the Far West. I have heard a farm labourer near Westerham, expatiating upon the grazing lands of the Bow river, and the duties of the Mounted Police, five thousand miles away, never forgetting to refer to the Canadian Pacific railway—tout court—as the C. P. R.. To hear him one would suppose he had already made his venture into those far occidental regions of the empire, but it was only in prospect 'when he had saved up a bit more.'

'Why in the name of common sense do you go so far?' I asked. 'What's the matter with Nova Scotia?'

The worthy fellow stared and scratched his chin. 'Nova Scotia,' he replied, not without difficulty, 'where is that?'

Here his intelligent little niece, a half-baked product of the Board School, came to the rescue. 'Dont you see, uncle Bob, the gentleman's only having a little joke with you? Nova Scotia is an uninhabited island in the Atlantic ocean. Now, Saskatchewan is between 4,000 and 5,000 miles from England, Nova Scotia is less than half the distance, long-peopled, storied, picturesque to the eye. Both are Canada—both are crying out for immigrants. Yet the one stands almost solely for Canada in the mind of the prospective emigrant, and the other he confuses with Nova Zembia. Could you demand a more striking tribute to the powers of advertisement? For alone of the Canadian provinces, those on the Atlantic seaboard had not shared in the astounding uplift, 'the spectacular development' which has characterized the Dominion since 1896. Hundreds of thousands of immigrants poured into the country past the forests, orchards and valleys of what has been aptly called : Canada's front door.' It was decreed that they should be carried on to where there were lands to sell and wheat to be freighted; and so they travelled westward—'gone farther and fared worse' in many cases, although serving an undeniably good end in buttressing and giving body to the lately invertebrate trunk of the Dominion, of which Nova Scotia is undeniably the 'head.'

I do not quote that paragraph for the purpose of claiming for the province from which I have the honour to come that it is the 'head' of the Dominion, nor do I ask any other hon. gentleman to subscribe to that characterization. I quote it to show that the merits of Nova Scotia are not known to the people of the mother country. And what I say with respect to Nova Scotia is, no doubt, equally true with regard to Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. One has only to peruse the reports of the Department of the Interior issued by this government to find out one reason why there has been no immigration into the maritime provinces. Take, for example, a statement showing the literature printed by the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior, as disclosed in the annual report of that department for the year ending March 31, 1911. In this report, Sessional Paper No. 25, at page 65, we find the title 'List of Publications.' And this is the way that list begins:

	Copies.
'Last Best West,' English..	571,675
" " French..	30,000
" " Danish..	10,000
" " Norwegian..	25,000
" " Swedish..	25,000
" " German..	25,000

Now, take the newspapers, for example:

Alberta 'Herald,' German	26,000
Alberta 'Herald,' German, special crop edition..	10,000
Bassan 'News'..	4,000
'British News' of Canada..	52,000
'Canada Posten,' Swedish..	26,000
'Canada Posten,' Swedish, special.. ..	5,000

And so I might go through the list showing the character of publications and showing that they deal, if not solely, almost solely, with the western portion of Canada. There were printed publications of various kinds for distribution in the Department of the Interior last year to the number of 2,428,760 copies, and of these the publications dealing with the maritime provinces showed a total of only 150,000 copies. And as to these publications I shall say a word or two later. The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) moved the other day for a return, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It relates to the expenditures upon immigration by the Dominion government. I find that in the last ten years there has been expended for literature for free distribution $914,705.40, of which only $13,760.05 went for literature descriptive of the maritime provinces. Upon examination it will be disclosed that the expenditures for the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island began only some three years ago. And I found upon inquiry that that expenditure did not come about as the freewill offering of the Department of the Interior. There was established about that time a Department of Industries and Immigration in the province of Nova Scotia, and desiring some Dominion government literature for the purpose of advertising the province, they wrote to the Department of the Interior asking for some such literature or asking that it be prepared. And the reply came back that the department could not print special literature with regard to the various provinces. I will quote one paragraph of the letter of the secretary of the Department of Industries and Immigration of Nova Scotia, showing how it came about that these publications were printed by this government.

He says:

When it was proposed that the Dominion government should issue these pamphlets, I was met with the objection that they had previously not issued anything in relation to the provinces, and therefore could not attempt it in regard to us here. I was fortunately able to show, however, that though the statement was made by the officials, pamphlets had been issued previously describing the resources of the eastern townships, Quebec, of sections of British Columbia and New Ontario.

Now, I find in the report last year of Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner of Canada, a list of some 38 successful farmer delegates who were sent by the Dominion of Canada to go to the British Isles lecturing with a view to bringing prospective immigrants back to this country. Out of these 38, descriptions of all but three of them are given, and they come from the following places: Saskatchewan, 12; Manitoba, 9; Alberta, 5; Ontario, 6; Quebec, 2; New Brunswick, 1; Nova Scotia, none; Prince Edward Island, none. So out of the 38 successful farmer delegates sent last year to the British Isles, only one went from the maritime provinces, notwithstanding the fact that the maritime provinces represent slightly more than one-eighth of the total population of the whole Dominion. Now, I find in the annual statement of W. J. White, Inspector of United States agencies, a few lines which I wish to quote, indicating the nature of the work being performed by the agents of the Interior Department in the United States. This is one paragraph:

The settler of to-day is not the pioneer that his farmer neighbour was, but he may possibly take with him more capital; in fact this is necessary if he wishes to keep himself abreast of the advancement of the man who went to any of the provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta—A few years ago.

He defines the word 'provinces' to be Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. In another place he says:

The farmer with means, the man who is able to dispose of his farm in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Missouri, or any of the western states is satisfied that western Canada has passed the experimental stage in the mater of agricultural existence.

Take the concluding paragraph of this report:

We have continued advertising in the same manner as before, which consists in the securing of space in the advertising columns of the farm and country weeklies and also placing notices from time to time. The work of the agents throughout the territory has been satisfactory in every way. Our literature deals with western Canada as a whole, including British Columbia. It is carefully revised every few months, and no old literature is allowed to be placed in the hands of the public.

That statement speaks more eloquently than any words of mine could do as to the nature of the propaganda which at present is being carried on in the United States. I find in the same report, for example, the annual statement of the Canadian immigration agent in Belgium:

I have this year added 376 schools to the number already large (3,900) in which the atlas of Canada is used in geography lessons. I take a special interest in keeping the winter night schools for adults well supplied with every kind of our literature, and the monthly edition of west Canada is regularly furnished to every teacher who applies for it, either in French or Flemish language.

The special literature which he refers to there is a magazine dealing entirely with western Canada. It points out more eloquently than I could the character of the advertising work of this government in its various publications. I have here a few leaves torn from several well known publications. The first is a leaf from the 'Canada Gazette,' of London, England, published on December 14, 1911. It is a whole page, headed 'Canada.' The picture shown is a very large barrel headed 'The flour barrel of the world.' The background is a field of wheat, and on the hoops of this barrel appear the words, 'Two hundred million acres of wheat land free for settlement.' It is hardly necessary for me to add that this advertisement is one dealing with the prairie provinces of Canada. Here is another page taken from the magazine 'Canada,' published in Great Britain, issued December 9, 1911. This shows a large field of wheat in a prairie country, with a three horse reaper and binder, and a prosperous looking Canadian wearing a Stetson hat, pointing out to a prospective English settler the merits of this beautiful farm. The scene is one which is typically western. Take another page from the magazine 'Canada,' of February 20, 1909, 'Free land for all in Canada. 160 acres of government land free for farming,' and so on, dealing entirely with western land. I have also a page taken from the 'Standard of Empire,' of Friday, December 1, 1911. It says, 'The British farmer sees a good thing in Canada. For full information, free maps, and pamphlets, apply to J. Obed Smith, Assistant Superintendent of Immigration, 11-12 Charing Cross, London.' What is the picture? A western prairie scene with elevators in the distance, wheat growing in the foreground, three or four reapers and binders gathering the harvest, a typical western scene. Take another page from the magazine 'Canada,' of January 29, 1910. It is headed 'Free land for all.' The advertising scheme is a barrel of flour, at one end of which appears the words 'Manitoba No. 1 Hard XXXX flour.' On the side of the barrel is a picture and map, showing the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, bounded on the east by Winnipeg, on the north by Prince Albert and Edmonton, on the west by Calgary, and on the south by Arcola. Below appear the words: 'The flour barrel of the world, Canada.' A man knowing very little about the geography of this country would suppose, from this government publication, that Canada was composed of the three provinces, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I hear some of our western friends saying, Hear, hear, to that statement. Here is one more page taken from the magazine 'Canada,' of December 5, 1908: 'Free land for all in Canada. Free farms in the golden west.' It goes on in a similar tenor.

Now, coming down to the question of expenditure for immigration, I find, upon examining the Auditor General's Report, for the year ending March 31, 1911, at page J—2, these figures:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Expenditures, Year Ending March 31, 1911, Auditor General Report, J—2.

Immigration salaries	319,298 86
Contingencies..	755,271 49
Winnipeg and St. Boniface Hospitals..	4,559 50
Total..	$1,079,129 85
Civil Government salaries.. ..	833,373 42
Contingencies..	56,732 66
Total..	$ 890,106 08

A very large portion of the cost of the Interior Department is chargeable properly to the immigration branch, and I contend that it deals almost solely with the three provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is impossible for me to define just exactly the proportion, but I find, by way of illustration, as disclosed at page J-13 of the Auditor General's Report, that for the salaries of officers and clerks of the immigration branch, 80 in number, the expenditure was $94,310.61. Deducting abatements in the department, the total was, in round numbers, $90,000. Take salaries, for example at Ottawa, a large proportion of which must properly be charged to the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior under the following heads: minister, deputy minister, assistant deputy minister, staff in the deputy minister's office, and minister's office, accountant's branch, and secretary's branch; they cost last year, in round numbers, $100,000. I find also, under the head of 'Canadian National Parks,' all located in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, that $146,671.60 was expended. It is true that these are national parks, and as such they are for the whole of Canada. We find no fault whatever with that expenditure, but as a matter of fact the whole of that sum happens to be expended in these provinces and no portion of it reaches the maritime provinces. I find, under the heading of 'Miscellaneous costs litigation,' an expenditure of $7,520.99, and I venture to express the belief that no portion of that money found its way to the maritime provinces. The total expenditure last year in the Department of the Interior amounted to $4,829,520.69, and I believe I am within the estimate when I state that at the very least $2,000,000 of that expenditure is confined almost entirely, if not entirely, to the western provinces and that no portion of it reaches the maritime provinces. I could give illustrations of a like nature showing the policy which has been pursued by various governments in this country, but I believe I have given sufficient to show the direction which it has taken and that I could gain nothing by multiplying evidence of a similar kind.

We would have sufficient to complain of in the maritime provinces if this expenditure had prevented us from receiving a fair share of the immigration to this country, but it has another objectionable feature and one which bears very hardly upon the people of the maritime provinces, that is that it not only takes away from us a portion of the immigration which is properly ours, but it attracts to the western provinces a great many of our sons and daughters too, who can be ill-spared from the maritime provinces. There is the additional fact which, I sometimes believe, people resident in the west are inclined to overlook, and it is that the great railway corporations of this country, the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific are carrying on a propaganda of advertising at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars with the view of attracting population to the prairie provinces. Why? Because they have land to sell and they have some 2,000 miles of railway over which to haul people, and out of which they can make a profit, from the seaports to the interior. I contend that if not one cent of money were expended from this day forward on the part of the Dominion government by way of immigration advertising, the money to be expended by these various railway corporations in their own interest would be more than sufficient, with the impetus which immigration has already in the west, to carry the development of the western country along very rapidly.

I am only going to give one illustration to this House of the nature of the advertising which is carried on by the great railways. I have here a pamphlet circulated by the Harrison Agency of Philadelphia, an agency that is only enabled to exist by reason of the fact that it is subsidized by the Canadian Pacific railway and by certain towns in the west. This agency has issued a pamphlet for circulation in the United States and accompanying this pamphlet is a map of North America. It gives the provinces beginning with those in the west, first British Columbia, next Alberta, then Saskatchewan, then Manitoba, next Ontario, and, on the extreme east, Quebec. The maritime provinces do not appear on this map at all. One of the sad features in connection with this advertisement, to those who come from the maritime provinces, at all events, is that the live, bright, up-to-date man who is in charge of this immigration bureau is one of our sons from the maritime provinces.

I have very briefly, Sir, shown in the first place the nature of our population and I have recited some of the conditions of the maritime provinces, sufficient to show that there is a state of things there which requires to be remedied, and it seems to me that the remedy lies in a propaganda of advertising. I believe that that propaganda will have to be assisted very materially, in justice to the maritime provinces, by this government. The criticism has sometimes been launched that the people of the maritime provinces were too much inclined to look to the government. One former Nova Scotian said to me on his return from the west: The people of the maritime provinces are too much inclined to look to the Lord and the government for prosperity. Whether there is any truth in that criticism or not, at all events for the past two or three years the maritime provinces have endeavoured to take themselves ont of the rut. In St. John, New Brunswick, there was established by the local government, in 1909, an immigration bureau. But, I find that the sum at the disposal of the government of the province is very limited. In the fiscal year 1909 the total sum expended at the St. John office was $2,231.14, and at their London, Eng., office, $2,784.55, making a total for the province upon immigration work of $5,015.69. The returns for the fiscal year 1910-11 were not obtainable by me in the library, but I have no doubt that they would show a comparatively small increase over the figures I have named.

The reason why more money is not expended by the maritime provinces is because their revenues are so very small that more cannot be allotted for this purpose, but there is a strong disposition on the part of the maritime provinces to carry on a propaganda which will bring increased population to them. Premier Fleming of New Brunswick has recently made a suggestion to form a reunion association along lines similar to that which has I believe worked so successfully in the city of Winnipeg. A number of philanthropists there have each guaranteed a certain amount, and a portion of the capital sum is advanced to worthy immigrants for the purpose of bringing out their wives and families from the mother country. In the province of Nova Scotia some immigration work has been accomplished and with regard to the expenditure of Nova Scotia on immigration the secretary of industries in that province writes me:

> Since the inauguration of the department, the expenditures on immigration work both here and in Cape Breton by the provincial government, including the salaries and expenses of the officers of the agent general, which approximate yearly between seven and eight thousand dollars, were in 1908 twelve thousand dollars; 1909, seventeen thousand dollars; 1910, twenty-three thousand five hundred dollars; and 1911, twenty-three thousand dollars, which sum includes all expenses for advertising.

The work in that province has been going on for some two or three years, but with that limited amount of money it must be patent to every hon. gentleman that very little can be accomplished. I believe that the facts as given this afternoon are sufficient to indicate that the maritime provinces have never received anything like a fair proportion of the money which has been expended on immigration in this country. It may be difficult to find out just how much should be allotted to the maritime provinces, but I throw this out by way of suggestion: the population of the maritime provinces as disclosed by the census of 1911, is 937,949; the total population of Canada is 7,202,122. That means that in the maritime provinces we have a little more than one-eighth of the total population of the Dominion of Canada, and that being the case it would appear to be just that one-eighth of the total amount of money expended for immigration in Canada should be expended to bring immigrants into the maritime provinces, and one-eighth of two million dollars, which I think is a low estimate of the immigration expenditure, would amount to the sum of $250,000 per year. I am not so much concerned as to how this money should be applied; that is a question of important detail which can be dealt with better by those who are more familiar with it, and perhaps it may be that the only true method of finding out how it should be employed would be to have an investigation into the whole matter. In view of the fact that we have immigration machinery in two of these provinces at least, it would seem to me that the case could be met by this government appointing one immigration commissioner for each of the three provinces with an office in London, England; that these agents should be supplied with assistants all of whom should be men familiar with the needs of these various provinces, and that possibly the machinery existing in the provinces could, with some slight improvement, be sufficient to take care of that end of the immigration question.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman made a statement with respect to the expenditure by the Immigration Department in connection with the literature, and I understood him to say that within a certain period upwards of $900,000 had been expended, and that of that sum the proportion relating to the maritime provinces was $300,000.

Mr. RHODES. I said $13,000, was the total sum expended on the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Now, Sir, the character of immigration advertising which has been sent out by this government is almost entirely concerned with the free farms in the west. It is true that in various publications issued by the Dominion government a description appears of all of the provinces of this Dominion, including Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, giving the nature of the products, the population, the climate, and so on, but there is always the inducement held out to the immigrant that if he comes to this country he gets one hundred and sixty acres of land free and in order to avail himself of that opportunity, he must go to the west. The character of the publicity which should be given to the maritime provinces is entirely different. We have no free lands to give away in the maritime provinces; there is very very little Crown land, and for the purpose of settlement that is practically a negligible quantity. Any publicity with respect to these provinces must deal with our resources and be directed largely to the purpose of bringing in capital to develop our resources, to enlarge industries which already exist, to create new industries, possibly to take over our vacant farms or to help in the purchase of farms from farmers in the maritime provinces who are perhaps not farming on the very best lines.

I have no doubt that representatives of Ontario and Quebec will wonder why it is that when I proposed this resolution, I did not mention these provinces. I may say that in the first place, looking at the census returns, and seeing the magnificent growth of the population in these two provinces, that was evidence they were not being neglected. But, Sir, there is another reason: the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario are wealthy. We find that the revenues of the province of Ontario are sufficient to enable that province to open a magnificent immigration office in London which is described in 'Canada' for January 13, 1912, and I will read one paragraph from that article:—

With the New Year the Ontario government entered into full possession of its reconstructed headquarters in the United Kingdom, which occupy a commanding position at 163 Strand, near Somerset House, and of which the government now own the site until 1950. The building has been entirely reconstructed. Not only does it present an attractive exterior to the passer-by, but the interior space on its five floors has been so economically used that the building can welcome its oversea visitors in a well-appointed reading room, and can show the prospective British emigrant or investor fine samples of Ontario's production in agriculture, fruit growing, lumbering, mining, &c., and the attractions it offers to the sportsman and the tourist.

The article goes on to describe the great length and splendid equipment of this building. But I shall not weary the House with details. Let me mention, however, that in the year 1911 over 1,000,000 pamphlets, handbooks, &c., were sent away by mail and parcel post, describing the advantages of the province of Ontario. I am inclined to believe that the Ontario government in postage alone, for the distribution of that literature, has expended more than the largest amount spent by the province of New Brunswick in any one year and, perhaps, nearly as large as that expended by the province of Nova Scotia in any year out of its sparse revenue. The province of Ontario has also opened an office in Belfast, Ireland, and has a representative there, besides special immigration agents whose duty it is to travel all through the British Isles describing the advantages and attractions of their province to prospective settlers.

I find that the wealthy province of Quebec has opened a splendid office in London. I find, also, from the last annual financial statement of that province, that it announces a surplus of something over $900,000, and that, deducting extraordinary expenditure which was taken from the revenue of the whole year, there is an actual net surplus in cash of over $600,000 in that province in one year alone. Contrast that with the condition of the maritime provinces where every one of the three local governments is struggling practically with a deficit every year.

As I stated at the opening of my remarks, I am not bringing forward this resolution in any factional spirit. I do not—and in this I believe I express the sentiment of the people of all the maritime provinces—object to any expenditure in any other province in this Dominion. We rejoice in the success of the other provinces and in the efforts made to increase their prosperity, and we do not ask that the expenditures in any one of them should be curtailed in any material degree. All we ask is that a fair proportion of the money expended by this Dominion to encourage immigration shall be expended in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. We do not ask this as a matter of favour but as a matter of justice. In this connection I would draw attention to an article which appeared in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of October 30. last. In that article the writer says:

It will be quite in order for the Dominion government to study the situation of the maritime provinces and to devise, if possible, a more aggressive policy of immigration for the benefit of those highly favoured sections. Canada wants the maritime provinces to share in the general progress which is marking its history. There is no reason under the sun why they should not attract and hold their share of the stream of immigrants coming yearly to our shores.

The difficulty I have experienced, Mr. Speaker, is not in lack of material, but on the contrary in selecting out of the abundance of material at hand sufficient to convince the House without trespassing too long on its time and attention. I trust, however, I have made out a case which will commend itself to this House and the government. If some such treatment as I have suggested is meted out to the maritime provinces, the added stimulus which will be given to the feeling of hopefulness and sturdy optimism, which are already making their presence felt there, will make for such development as will place these provinces on equal footing with the most prosperous of any in Canada. Not only will the benefit inure to the maritime provinces, but we can then accomplish our full share in making for that growth and development which will—I believe—before the middle of this century make Canada the wonder and admiration of the world.

Mr. R. BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence). I do not rise to criticise in any way the very eloquent speech made by the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House (Mr. Rhodes) in urging on this government the claims of the maritime provinces and particularly of his own province of Nova Scotia. But a similar argument would apply to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. I think that all our eastern provinces have been neglected to a certain extent by the rush to the great west; but why I rose particularly is to point out again to the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) some defects in our present Immigration Act. Clause 28 of that Act provides that immigrants coming to Canada shall be inspected and examined on landing in this country. But the ground I take is that they should be inspected and examined before being allowed to sail from the other side. If that were done, a great many cases of hardship and a number of serious divisions of families would be avoided. There is one case to which I would draw attention. A father and mother and five children were about to land in this country when it was discovered that the youngest child, some four years old was afflicted with Trachoma. The father remained in this country but the child had to be sent back and naturally the mother had to go back with it. Now, if that family had been inspected on the other side before getting on board the immigrant ship, that separation would have been avoided. I shall not detain the House but simply wish to point out two or three sections of our Immigration Act which ought to be amended. In fact I think the whole Act might well be burned and a new one drafted. Take for instance the provision regarding the amount of money which an immigrant must have before being allowed to land. Every immigrant desiring to enter Canada must have in his possession $50 during certain months instead of $25. But why should a good man, a desirable immigrant, be obliged to have $50 in his pocket at any time. Had such a provision been in force years ago, when I was a boy, there are many in this House who would not be now in this country.

If a good man came with only $10, I would let him in, and if a bad man came with $5,000, I would keep him out. I think there ought to be some way of getting over that requirement. There are some people who are exempt from it—farm labourers and domestic servants; but if a man is an engineer, or a blacksmith, or a carpenter, he cannot come in except under that regulation. Another regulation is that no immigrant of Asiatic origin shall be allowed to enter Canada unless in possession of $200. According to that, if a man is born in India or any other part of Asia, and wants to come to Canada to spend the balance of his life here, he cannot come into this country unless he has $200. If he is not a desirable citizen, the possession of $200 will not constitute him one. I wish to draw the minister's attention to these points, and I hope he will give them his consideration.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (South Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has been introduced by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) is one of great importance to every maritime province man, and for that reason I desire to make a few observations upon it. I congratulate my hon. friend from Cumberland on his very able presentation of the case, to which he must have given a vast amount of study. I have very much pleasure in supporting the resolution. My hon. friend has spoken of the immigration policy of the late government, and of other governments with respect to western Canada. Personally I do not think there has been too much money spent in promoting immigration to the west, but there has not been enough money spent in bringing the maritime provinces to the attention of European countries. Not only have we had very little immigration into these provinces, but we have not been successful in holding our own people. It is of vastly more importance to the maritime provinces that we should retain our native-born population than that we should bring in numbers of undesirable immigrants from Europe. We in the eastern section of Nova Scotia, in the industrial portion of the island of Cape Breton, have not very much to complain of. The population in the constituency which I have the honour to represent has almost doubled in the last ten years. What surprises me is that my hon. friend from Cumberland, with all the attention he has given to this subject, has suggested no cure for the loss of population we have had in Nova Scotia for the last ten or twelve years. What is the use of this government or any other bringing population into the prairie provinces of the west if their products are allowed to rot in the fields? There is one cure as far as the maritime provinces are concerned, that is, getting better and larger markets than we have at the present time. It will benefit the maritime provinces little to bring in a thousand or two thousand or ten thousand fishermen from Norway or Denmark and place them on our shores if the fish they catch are allowed to rot on the coast because they can get no market for them. Mr. Edward Blake once said that the great needs of Canada were men, money and markets. Last year the Liberal government at Ottawa endeavoured to get larger markets for us; but what was the attitude of the political friends of the hon. member for Cumberland? What was their attitude when the Liberal government of Nova Scotia sought to introduce capital into that province, and to amalgamate all the coal mining companies which we had previous to 1894? The coal trade was dead; there was nothing doing. The coal fields were there, but there was very little capital to operate them, and our available market was very small. The late Finance Minister, Mr. Fielding, then Premier of Nova Scotia, conceived a plan whereby American capital would be introduced into the province for the purpose of developing our coal mines, and what was the policy of the political friends of the hon. member for Cumberland on that occasion? Why, Sir, they went up and down the country decrying this attempt of the Liberal government of Nova Scotia to introduce capital to develop our mines.

And why did they decry it? Because, forsooth, some of that capital was coming from the United States. As a boy in those days I can well remember the great oratorical efforts made on behalf of the Conservative party to impress upon the people of that province how awful a thing it was to introduce American capital to operate our coal mines. They told us the Americans would come in and would close down our mines; they told us it was a disloyal thing to introduce this capital; in fact, attending a Conservative meeting, you could almost hear the bullets of American rifles whizzing by your ears. Notwithstanding their opposition, that measure was carried in the Nova Scotia legislature. But the friends of of the hon. member for Cumberland were not satisfied. They sent a delegation to Ottawa to try to induce the Conservative government that then controlled Dominion affairs to veto that legislation. But, notwithstanding, the legislation remained; the government here at Ottawa allowed it to stand. And, as a result of the legislation and of the 'Yankee dollars' introduced into the province, we saw the greatest industrial progress in that province that has ever been witnessed in any part of Canada. This took place in the island of Cape Breton. As a result of that movement the markets of Montreal were captured for the Canadian coal trade; and to-day, it is not a question of selling our coal in the Montreal market but a question of getting the coal there.

Now, last February something was attempted to be done which, to my mind, would have helped out the province of Nova Scotia very materially. As I have shown, we were opposed by the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite when we tried to bring in American capital, and we were told that our action was disloyal. Last year, we attempted to secure the American market. And the very same argument was raised against us by the political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. We were told in Nova Scotia—as, I presume, the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) told his constituents—that, while it was all right to get a free market in the United States for our lobsters, it was a disloyal thing, a trampling of the Canadian flag under foot, to attempt to get our codfish and mackerel into the American market free of duty,—a truly marvellous situation. Now, the only part of our Nova Scotian fishing industry that is upon a footing such as every Nova Scotian would desire is the lobster fishery. And I do not think it takes a very profound mind to understand the reason why. The reason is simply that we have free access to the American market for lobsters. I just pointed out that the industrial centres of Cape Breton had a great deal of prosperity in the last eight or ten years. It was not in the mining centres that we lost population. Where then was that loss? In the last redistribution of seats in Nova Scotia where did we lose? It was found that the counties of Queens and Shelbourne had to be joined together and given one representative because their population was not sufficient to entitle them to two representatives. And these are both fishing counties. And the same is true of the county of Victoria, an almost entirely seabound county, which was attached for purposes of representation to a part of the then existing county of Cape Breton.

Mr. RHODES. With the hon. gentleman's permission I would like to ask him a question as I was unfortunately unable to be present at his opening remarks. Do I understand that he objects to the terms of this resolution?

Mr. CARROLL. I do not.

Mr. RHODES. The hon. gentleman is in favour of it?

Mr. CARROLL. Very much so.

Mr. RHODES. Glad to hear it.

Mr. CARROLL. And as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rhodes) will see in 'Hansard', I congratulated him very highly on his very excellent efforts. I was speaking of the fishing counties. I think it is a very pertinent fact that Queens, Shelbourne and Victoria whose principal industry of fishing were the counties in which we lost population. And why? I take it to result from the fact that our fishermen could not find sufficient markets for their fish. We have a fair market. We sell some fish in Ontario and some in Quebec, but very little. I think it was Joseph Howe who said that if you threw a grindstone into the Bay of Fundy it would naturally drift into the New England States. Mr. Speaker, that is our natural market for our natural products, it is our natural market for the fish taken along our coast. It is for that reason, in my estimation, and I believe in the estimation of every man who has given this subject consideration, that the fishing counties in Nova Scotia have lost population. Last year something was going to happen which did not happen—unfortunately, as I believe, for the province of Nova Scotia. Years ago we secured capital for mining development though we were opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. We attempted to get the markets, and we were opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. And in my opinion, without that money and without those markets it is absurd to try to get more population into the province of Nova Scotia. But we were told that this effort to secure reciprocity for the benefit of the fishermen was a disloyal thing, an awful thing. Why, in the riding of South Cape Breton which I have the honour to represent. I heard the gentleman who opposed me, speaking at a large meeting in the town of Glace Bay, attended by perhaps nine or ten thousand people, tell these people that the savage customs which existed in the United States of hanging and burning negroes would follow in the wake of reciprocity should reciprocity be approved by the Canadian people. Such were the arguments put up against reciprocity, and such were the reasons, I believe, which induced the people of this country, including a large proportion of the people of Nova Scotia, to vote against reciprocity.

Now, I agree with the hon. member for Cumberland when he tells us that we have a great country in the maritime provinces. I agree that there is no better country in the whole of Canada than the little province of Nova Scotia. But I do not agree with their policy. Or rather, I am in favour of the policy that these hon. gentlemen have been trying to block for the last sixteen years. Now, what is the use—I put it in all fairness to my hon. friend from Cumberland—what is the use of trying to induce more people to come to Nova Scotia under existing conditions? We have not the men we formerly had employed in our fishing industries, because we have not the markets.

We have our coal mines, and we have a great many men employed in them, because we have a market for our coal. It is true that in some parts of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island there are sections of country becoming depopulated; but we are not actually losing the people, because they are going to the industrial centres. What is the use, therefore, of bringing in any more men? At what employment are we going to put them? Are they going to engage in profitable farming? I am sorry the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), while dealing with this question, did not tell us that the Liberal government of Nova Scotia has done something to induce immigrants to come to our shores. It is true they have not done much, the reason being the small revenue which the government of Nova Scotia has at its disposition, and which prevents them from doing as much as they would like for the development of the province. But again I ask, where are we going to place those men? Are we going to put them in the lumber camps? Why, Mr. Speaker, we have not now sufficient market for our lumber, and we cannot get freely into the United States market. Last year, I believe, the maritime provinces sent about $2,000,000 worth of lumber into the United States, notwithstanding the fact that they had to pay a high tariff on that lumber.

Mr. RHODES. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. CARROLL. For my information, or for the information of the House?

Mr. RHODES. For the information of the House, although the hon. gentleman may need it also. If he is in favour of my resolution, why is he speaking against it?

Mr. CARROLL. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman was not in the House when I began my remarks, because I said that I thoroughly agreed with his resolution. Then I started to point out what had been done by his political friends for the past twenty years.

Mr. RHODES. What has that got to do with this resolution?

Mr. CARROLL. It has everything to do with it. I would like to see the population of Nova Scotia increase four-fold what it is now, but I must say again that we must have something for that population to do when it comes to our shores. I am pointing out that while the resolution of my hon. friend is a good one, and worthy of all consideration, there is something else that must precede this resolution, something that this government must do, before we can get anything for this extra population to do. I want to say in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that I have it on reliable authority that seven out of every ten fishermen in the port of Gloucester are Nova Scotians. Now, if the reciprocity agreement had been sanctioned we would have got that population back again, and that is what I am complaining about. I have nothing to say against a single word that fell from the hon. member for Cumberland; but I repeat that before we bring in any more population we must provide larger markets for the population we have already. We have not even a sufficient market for the industries that are being developed at the present time. We have not sufficient market for our fish, hence the fisheries are not as flourishing as they ought to be. Now when I was interrupted by the hon. gentleman, I was going on to discuss the causes for the loss of population in the province of Nova Scotia. It is well known that the farming centres have lost population, and while the late government had proposed a remedy, the present government so far has shown very little indication of a desire to afford a remedy for our loss of population. I make the statement on good authority, that the late government were preparing to relieve the farming centres of the province of Nova Scotia of some of the hardships under which they are labouring in getting their products to our markets. We have pretty good markets there. In the estimates last year the late government had put many thousands of dollars to help build a railway as a feeder for the Intercolonial railway down to the little town of Baddeck, which is the shire town of the county of Victoria, but which unfortunately is fast losing its population. We have no means there, especially in the winter months, of getting our farm products to market. A considerable amount of money was placed in the estimates last year for the purpose of providing a railway by which those people could get their products to market, and have a needed communication with the rest of the province. But what has happened? The present government has blotted those estimates off the book, and notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) has asked many questions from the Minister of Railways on this subject, he has received no satisfactory explanation of what the government intend to do with that road, and what they intend to do with the sum of money which was voted by this House for the purpose of building branch lines in many other counties of Nova Scotia; for example, the acquisition of the St. Peter's road. The money was not voted for it, but I think I may safely say that it was the intention of the late government to take over that road, and extend it into the town of Louisburg, to build a road also into the county of Guysborough, which is becoming depopulated owing to the fact that the fishermen have no markets for their fish, and also owing to the fact that the farmers are unable to get their products to market. What has happened with that road? Is the hon. member for Cumberland doing his duty in trying to impress upon the government the desirability of going ahead with that very important branch of the Intercolonial railway, so important to the people of the eastern part of the province, to Halifax, to the county of Pictou and to the county of Guysborough? These are some of the things that would help us to keep our population. We want better markets, better facilities for getting our farm products to market than are possessed by the people of Nova Scotia at the present time. Let me say again that I agree with the proposition that the maritime provinces have not been given enough attention in the matter of immigration. I do not say that too much is being expended for the west; but what I do say is that in Nova Scotia we want not only more population but better markets for the population we have. I have much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in supporting the resolution of the hon. member for Cumberland.

Mr. A. DeWITT FOSTER (Kings, N.S.). I desire to say only a few words in support of the resolution which has been so ably moved by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), and which has also received the support of the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll). Let me say, however, that the speech of the hon. member for South Cape Breton struck me as being characteristic of those made by hon. gentlemen of the opposition. He says that he is in favour of this resolution, that is he is in favour of more attention being paid to the maritime provinces in the matter of immigration, and in developing the resources of that part of the Dominion; yet he evidently still feels so sore at the result of the elections on the 21st of September last, that he cannot get away from the old song of new markets, a proposition on which the people of Canada pronounced so decisively last September. He has placed his views upon 'Hansard,' and I hope that his speech will be circulated largely in the maritime provinces. I hope that the miners employed by the Dominion Coal Company, and by various other companies will have a chance of reading his speech, and the farmers also, in fact all who were responsible for his election. I hope that it will be perused by other miners in that section of the country, whom we are credibly informed were locked up in the mines on a certain occasion. The very fact that that was so—as I am informed—

Mr. CARROLL. On whose authority do you get that?

Mr. FOSTER (Kings). I will give my authority at the proper time to the hon. member for South Cape Breton, but, as a matter of fact there evidently must be some truth in it, because my hon. friend comes to his feet very quickly, showing that he feels that there is something behind the prod after all. It is a well known fact that a certain section of the people of that constituency, who are responsible for his being in this House at this time were prepared to accept the proposition to lower the duty upon coal. I would like to ask my hon. friend if he is in favour of protecting the industry of the people who elected him in Cape Breton county, or if he is in favour of doing away with the protection which has been accorded, and will be accorded to that company? He was so anxious to rise in his seat and ask upon what authority I founded my previous statement that perhaps he will be so kind as to tell this House whether he is in favour of the protection of that industry or whether he still believes that there should be a lowering of the duty to the extent of 8 cents a ton on coal. I will sit down and give my hon. friend a chance to declare himself.

Since he does not declare himself on that question I shall proceed. We were told by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat that the Conservative friends of the hon. member for Cumberland, Nova Scotia, opposed any attempt made by the government of that province to bring capital into that country, to establish industries, and generally to build up the country. Such a statement seems to me to be tantamount to saying that the Conservative party and Conservatives generally in the province of Nova Scotia were a class of people who were not progressive, and did not want their province to be progressive. Well, I noticed that it was left to the hon. member for Cumberland, himself a Conservative, to bring the case of the maritime provinces for the first time to the attention of the Dominion parliament along these lines. It seems to me that the hon. member for South Cape Breton might have impressed it upon his friends who were here to take up the case of the maritime provinces and impressed it upon the late government who were spending a great deal of money on immigration into Canada. I am not here to find any fault with the amount that was expended so long as that amount was honestly expended, and so long as the people of Canada got a dollar's worth of value for every dollar expended. I believe that the people of the maritime provinces will agree with the hon. member for Cumberland, and with every hon. gentleman in this House, that with any expenditure that this country makes for the development of the Canadian Northwest, for the development of Ontario, or Quebec, find absolutely no fault so long as it is honestly expended according to the best policy, and the best advice of the men who are in power. We in the maritime provinces are Canadians, we do not limit ourselves to one particular province, and say that we must have this to the exclusion of the other people or the other parts of this Dominion. We had an illustration of that spirit from the opposition benches the other night when an hon. gentleman, speaking in this House, stated that he did not care anything about protection in so far as the west was concerned, that what they wanted was free trade. Well, I submit, Sir, that in the humble judgment of the most humble representative of the people, who believes in the principle of protection, he will not get free trade for the west at this particular time in the history of Canadian development at least. Whether or not subsequent years will prove that this is the best policy for this Dominion is entirely another thing, but I think that the majority of the people who are in line with the progress of affairs and conversant with public sentiment, would say that it was time to cease harping back to some narrow, little policy that appertains to a particular portion of the country, and to adopt and stand by a policy which will give the greatest good to the greatest number.

I want to say a word or two more before I pass on to another line, to my hon. friend from South Cape Breton. He said that the Conservative party down there were opposed to this policy of bringing capital into the maritime provinces as in the coal industry. My recollection of the coal industry is something like this—I stand to be corrected if I am wrong—that there were certain Conservative members in the local legislature who opposed the particular kind of contract that the government was entering into at that time because under that contract the people of Nova Scotia would be compelled to pay a very much larger price per ton for their coal than they ought to pay by virtue of the fact that they were situated near the mines. It was pointed out at that time that they would pay six and seven dollars per ton for their coal. Conservative members in the House and others in the country pointed out that the adoption of the proposed contract between the government and the syndicate which was then being formed, would enable the syndicate to charge practically any price that they wanted to for their coal. The supporters of the government said that such was not the case. The events of history have proved exactly the claim made by the Conservative members of the House and by large sections of the people in general. What do we find upon investigation in Nova Scotia? We find that where it costs a little over $2.10, not exceeding $3, to produce the coal, those only a short distance from the mines have to pay $6.25, $6.75 and $7 for their coal while the same article is being delivered to larger firms such as the great railways, and even in the city of Montreal, at $3 or $4 per ton. It was found that coal was being delivered to the Intercolonial Railway, the government road, at a siding at Sydney or at Pictou for $3.10 per ton. Well, it seems to me, that the results have demonstrated that the men who were opposing certain sections of that contract took a wise course and clearly foresaw the events which have actually happened. I repudiate the charge that the Conservative party in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island or any province of this Dominion are or were against the bringing in of capital, the establishing of industries and the building up of this country. What the Conservative party have always stood for throughout their history is the building up, within this Canada of ours, of a great nation. That is what we stood for previous to the 21st September and that is what the Conservative party, if it is true to its own ideals, will always stand for in the history of this Dominion. We were told that down in Nova Scotia we had Conservatives going on the platform and saying that it would be disloyal to trade with the United States. I venture to say that there is not a Conservative candidate in Nova Scotia who ever made such a foolish statement as to say it was disloyal to trade with the United States. That statement was made on the stump in Nova Scotia and throughout the Dominion by the very men who make it to-day in this House and it was made in a sarcastic way for the purpose of getting around the argument that confronted them. In my own constituency I was asked by a very estimable lawyer and a member of the local legislature if the fact that we got a dozen eggs from the United States, or we got two cents more for our eggs in the United States, would jar my loyalty any? I submit that a child would know better than that. When hon. gentlemen opposite say that Conservative members have said in Nova Scotia that it was disloyal to trade with the United States, I say they are but stating that which they themselves stated, to my own knowledge, upon the hustings in the province of Nova Scotia.

I was very glad to hear the hon. gentleman admit that the government of Nova Scotia has done very little for immigration. Practically all they have ever done, is to come out at the first of the year and state that Nova Scotia is in the greatest state of prosperity that could be imagined. The newspaper supporting that administration displays in large headlines the announcement that Nova Scotia is most prosperous and that immigration is flowing in every year at the rate of one thousand a month or some such exaggerated figure. And, when the proper time comes around, these self same gentlemen declare that Nova Scotia is going backward, and that reciprocity with the United States is the panacea. The hon. gentleman told us that we had no market in which to sell our potatoes, but I can tell him that in the county of Kings, which I have the honour to represent, we grew 250,000 bushels of potatoes last year and we had a market for all of them. Let me tell him, further, that a few days previous to the 21st of September, when the Liberals were telling the people that what we wanted was the market of the United States for our potatoes, a carload of American potatoes came right into my own constituency and were retailed to the people of the town at a lower price than our own farmers were getting for their potatoes in the home market. That was a fine illustration of the absurdity of the argument put up by hon. gentlemen on the other side. I am very glad that carload of potatoes came because had I not such a concrete evidence as that of the absurdity of the contention set up by the Liberals, I might not have the honour and pleasure of sitting in this House to-day. The hon. gentleman told us that we had no market for our lumber, but I would point out to him that in Nova Scotia we are disposing of our lumber at the rate of four hundred million feet a year, which is one hundred million feet faster than it is growing. Will the hon. gentleman tell me that that is not taking away from the forest fast enough? In the face of all this evidence these gentlemen opposite have the effrontery to tell us that we have no market. The hon. gentleman told us that we had no market for our fish, which seems to me to be a peculiar statement. Does the hon. gentleman forget that we took over $7,000,000 worth of fish from the waters of Nova Scotia alone last year and would he pretend that we are not selling this fish and that the men who cure it and distribute it are not making a profit and the fishermen a living?

Will the hon. gentleman state in this House now that there is no market for the products of the canning establishments in Nova Scotia? Why, if he looked at the returns published by the provincial government he will find that there are firms in the town of Digby who are finding a market for their fish in the Canadian Northwest. The hon. gentleman also told us that there was no market for our apples but the fact is that last year we sold our apples in the Canadian Northwest, in Germany, in England, in Scotland and in Ireland, and some of our fruit even went to the West Indies, and so soon as our communication with the West Indian Islands is improved, I have not the slightest doubt that more of our apples and our potatoes will go there. The maritime provinces had eight million bushels of potatoes last year and I believe that in 5 or 6 years hence they will be raising five million bushels of potatoes and selling them too. I wish to say that I am heartily in accord with the resolution of my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) as I am heartily in accord with every project that will bring immigration to the maritime provinces. And Sir, whether a measure with that object in view comes from a Liberal or from a Conservative government, I am free to say that I believe the people will heartily endorse it. I believe, Sir, that all the brains and all the administrative ability to be found in this Dominion or in any new country, is not to be found in one political party and it seems to me that my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) instead of speaking for five minutes in favour of this resolution and for fifteen minutes to throw cold water on it, might have forgotten, in his zeal for the welfare of the maritime provinces, that the resolution was introduced by a Conservative.

And, Sir, as to immigration, we are not only bringing back our sons and daughters who left Nova Scotia to go to the United States, but we have been sending out people from the maritime provinces and from Ontario and Quebec as well to the Canadian Northwest. We are proud of our people who have settled in the west, and who have done a great deal to advance the prosperity of their adopted province; I venture to say that no people who leave one part of this Dominion and go to another, bring more credit upon their native place than do the men of the maritime provinces. In this very Chamber we have men representing western constituencies who originally left the maritime provinces to settle out there, and that in itself is a tribute to the success which they have met with, and to the manner in which they have been able to establish themselves in the confidence of the people. Such men are sure to be foremost in the advocacy of a united east and west, and the binding together of all the provinces of the Dominion in one great country. I do not think that I can add anything to the eloquent words of my hon. friend (Mr. Rhodes) in supporting this resolution. Let me point out, however, that in the last eleven fiscal years, from July 1900 to March 31st, 1911, out of a total immigration of 1,764,475 only 73,502, or a trifle over four per cent. went to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER (Kings, N.S.). Mr. Speaker, when the House rose I was pointing out that the maritime provinces had been practically entirely neglected by the late administration. In support of that statement I need only point out that for the last eleven fiscal years, from July 1, 1900, to March 31, 1911, out of a total immigration of 1,764,475 only 73,502, or a trifle over four per cent went to the three provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. If even this small percentage had gone to the three provinces mentioned with the intention of taking up their homes there, while still a very unfair division, we of the maritime provinces might not complain, but it is well known in the British Isles the advice given by immigration agents was: 'Spend six months or a year in the east, get used to the ways of the country, and then go west where the free homesteads are available.' That this advice was largely followed is well known; so while the perusal of statistics might lead one to believe that the maritime provinces secured four per cent of Canada's immigration, the real percentage was much lower. Now, we do not object to people going to the Canadian Northwest. If there were more farmers in Manitoba, there would be larger markets for the manufactured goods of the east; if the number of grain-growers increased in Alberta, there would be more purchasers for the agricultural implements of which our manufacturing friends are so justly proud; and if a larger area is placed under cultivation in Saskatchewan, it will mean more persons requiring the cotton and woollen goods, the boots and shoes and other products of those flourishing industries whose manufactures is as yet largely confined to the older parts of the Dominion. We do not object to promoting immigration to the west. Our whole argument has reference to the distribution of the immigration. While we are willing that the west should have its fair share of the immigration, we think more attention should be paid to the eastern provinces. In support of that position, let me read from a speech delivered in this House by the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier), on May 10, 1909, in which he said:

From the year 1900 to 1907 the Minister of Interior subsidized the following societies which are especially charged with the work of repatriation and immigration from the United States: The Quebec and Lake St. John railway was subsidized during these years to the amount of $25,300; the Repatriation Society of Montreal was subsidized for $25,300; the Repatriation Society of Quebec was subsidized to the amount of $22,000, and, by the last report, that of 1908, I see that the Department of the Interior, in order to encourage these societies has voted $8,000 to the Quebec and Lake St. John railway, $4,000 to the Repatriation Society of Quebec, $15,000 to the Ottawa Valley Aid Immigration Society, and $1,000 to the Union National Francaise.

I do not think the friends of the maritime provinces will take very much exception to the subsidizing of these societies. As has been pointed out, there are upwards of 50,000 French Canadians on the other side of the line, who would in all probability like to come back to Canada, and we take no exception to any effort to bring them back; but where can you find an instance of a subsidy being granted to any society or company or railway in the maritime provinces for a similar object? Surely this shows lack of attention to the east.

Before passing to the advantages which Nova Scotia has to offer to the immigrating population of the British Isles or of Germany or of the northern part of Europe, I wish to state that my remarks as to the policy of the late government are not in any manner whatsoever intended to reflect upon the officials of the department. The officers of the Immigration Department, whom I have met in Ottawa, I have always found to be courteous, obliging, and well versed in their work, and I have much pleasure in stating that they apparently are thoroughly conversant with the requirements of the province from which I come. But administration and policy are two different things. The officers attend to the administration and with the administration I find no fault; but the policy is in the hands of the government, and, while I would hardly go to the extent of saying that Nova Scotia has been discriminated against, I will say that it has not received the attention at the hands of the late government which its importance and needs demand.

Coming now to the opportunities which Nova Scotia offers to the resident of the motherland, they may be divided briefly into five classes: mining, fishing, manufacturing, dairying and fruit-growing. I understood that it was not the policy of the late administration to do much for the first three of these industries, and perhaps a good deal might be advanced in support of that claim; but at the same time I do not see that there could be any great objection to inserting in our advertising literature for distribution throughout the world, the immense and far-reaching advantages that might be found in the maritime provinces for the establishment of industries along these lines. In the maritime provinces we have the resources along with ample water power and electrical power for the establishment of industries, and the government might very well put in their advertising literature something that might catch the eye of the immigrant intending to come to this country that would induce him to settle in the maritime provinces. It might perhaps be said that the manufacturing and mining interests are sufficiently well organized to take care of themselves. But with the dairying and fruit growing or the agricultural industry it is different. In neither of these quarters is the province developed to anything like the extent possible; nor is it reasonable to suppose that those now engaged in that work should of their own volition attempt to extend the production of the province by inducing others to enter the same occupation. They have neither the time nor the organization necessary, but they fully realize that an increase in their numbers would be a gain not a loss, to those already so engaged. If the apple production of Nova Scotia were trebled, the fruit would be that much better known in the western, German, and London markets and the Nova Scotia farmer would be correspondingly benefited. Here then is an opportunity to use a portion of the immigration appropriation for the benefit of the maritime provinces.

Let us look for a moment at what the people of the maritime provinces are doing in the potato industry alone. In 1901 there were 36,290 acres in the province of Nova Scotia alone under cultivation, and they produced 4,269,610 bushels. In 1907 there were 43,836 acres under cultivation, producing 8,294,097 bushels, an increase of acreage of 7,546 acres and an increase of production of 4,024,487 bushels. When we remember that it was practically the same population that were producing nearly twice as much, we are led to wonder what would be the possibilities of that province if our population were increasing so that instead of having 450,000 we had a million people there.

For we know that, as the late Dr. Johnson pointed out in a very able public address, that there are some millions of acres in the maritime provinces capable of producing farm crops not yet reduced to cultivation. It seems to me, as Dr. Robertson pointed out the other day, that with advanced methods of agriculture, such as are in use in some parts of Ontario, our present maritime provinces could increase their production by from seventy-five to one hundred per cent, even if they used only the land now in cultivation. In the year 1910, the total value of field crops for Nova Scotia was $21,203,000; for New Brunswick, $18,959,000, and for Prince Edward Island, $9,998,100. It seems to me that, with the improved methods to which I have referred, production could be doubled even by the present population. Add to that the annual influx into the maritime provinces of 1,000 people a month from Denmark, Holland, Norway, Germany and the British Isles, and the prospect is just by that much the brighter. And when I speak of immigrants from the British Isles, some in the maritime provinces may say that our friends from the old country are not as excellent farmers as those who have been trained among ourselves. But these people from the British Isles are in this country only a short time when they become proficient, and as soon as they become proficient they settle down as farmers amongst us. In my own constituency some of the most progressive and up-to-date farmers were formerly residents of the British Isles.

Now, with regard to the fruit industry, only a few years ago in the province of Nova Scotia—in fact only last year—we were growing a little over 400,000 barrels of apples. This season we grew 1,500,000 barrels. And no one, even the most optimistic, pretends to set a limit to fruit growing in the maritime provinces. And from parts of Nova Scotia not now devoted to fruit growing, as well as from many parts of New Brunswick, come reports which show that the land suitable for the raising of fruit in the maritime provinces is unlimited. Well, why should not this information be given in the press reports and in the documents distributed all over the world in order that attention may be directed to the maritime provinces as well as to the golden west of which we are all so proud.

Turning now to the dairying industry, we find again an excellent opportunity for advancement, and a field which offers great inducements to the proper class of immigrants to be found in many English counties. The Dominion Dairy Commissioner, Mr. J. A. Ruddick, in the course of a public address, made this statement:

> There is no reason why Nova Scotia should not produce at least $25,000,000 worth (instead of $5,000,000 worth) of dairy produce a year. The export of butter from the little country of Denmark amounts to nearly $50,000,000 a year, and Denmark is only two-thirds the size of Nova Scotia. It is true that there is very little waste land in Denmark, but the total area available for dairying cannot be any larger than in Nova Scotia, and there are large sections of this province that are infinitely more productive than any land to be found in Denmark. I believe that the season in Nova Scotia is quite as favorable as it is in the European country. Cattle do not suffer in Nova Scotia to the extent that they do in Ontario and Quebec from the heat and flies in the summer months.

The members of the Scottish Agricultural Commission who visited Canada in 1906, gained an impression of the advantages offered by Nova Scotia for the development of the dairying and beef raising industry. In that section of their report that deals with the live stock industry they say of animal husbandry in my province:

> In Nova Scotia, as in the greater part of eastern Canada, conditions are especially suitable for dairy cattle. With a suitable climate and a rain fall of over thirty-five inches spread well over the spring and summer, Nova Scotia in many parts seemed especially adapted for rearing and feeding cattle. Roots of all kinds seem to grow well, and hay of good quality is abundant which means that the provision of winter keep for stock is not a matter presenting much difficulty.

It is a well known fact that in Nova Scotia great attention has recently been given to fruit growing. People have gone into fruit growing as a specialty and have neglected the raising of beef, with the result that we have had to depend very largely upon the provinces of Quebec and Ontario for our supplies in that line. I believe, and Dr. Robertson expresses the same idea in the address he delivered—that directly the people of these provinces realized that they have facilities for raising and placing upon the market their own beef, directly they realized that this is a profitable industry, especially coupled with sheep raising, as soon as they become fully possessed of the notion that we have in the province of Nova Scotia this opportunity, just so soon we shall have these things developed in our province. Then, as I have already asked, is there any reason why we should not have such information as this distributed amongst the people whom we desire as colonists? It seems to me there is none. Opinions such as those I have just quoted, leave no doubt that there exists an excellent opening for new settlers, and I trust the government will give early attention to seeing to it that the advantages of Nova Scotia are properly placed before the emigration portion of the population of the motherland. With the improvement of the cold storage service to which this government is pledged, an immense impetus and additional advantage will be given to both dairying and fruit growing, and for that reason the present time is especially opportune for making an effort to direct a reasonable portion of the immigration towards the maritime province. As to the best course to pursue to bring about the desired results, the government will, I am sure, give the matter its best consideration; and, with thousands of acres of the finest land in the Dominion lying fallow or only partially cultivated, with our population at a standstill and with our representation decreasing in this House, the subject is one, I contend, which should be dealt with energetically at the very earliest opportunity.

I make my statement with regard to what I believe to be the right of the maritime provinces, without any desire to have recourse to partisanship. But the House has seen that no sooner was the reason laid before the House than partisanship was dragged into the discussion. I believe it was my duty to appeal to the facts in refutation of what was said and which did not pertain to the resolution. In conclusion, I am in hearty accord with any movement that will tend to the upbuilding of the maritime provinces and of the Dominion of Canada; for I think I can truly say that in the maritime provinces we are all of us Canadians first, maritime province people second, and party men last.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.). I desire to endorse the resolution moved and so ably supported by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes). There is undoubtedly a general feeling throughout the maritime provinces that those provinces have been ignored in the advertising propaganda which has been carried on by the Immigration Department of the Federal government within the last ten or twelve years, and that the efforts of the department have been too exclusively devoted to the booming of the west.

There is no objection in the east to the freest and most generous advertising of the resources of the prairie provinces, or to the employment of all legitimate means to attract desirable settlers to that section of the country. But we feel in the east that the efforts and the energies of the Immigration Department should not be wholly devoted to that purpose, as they have been in the past, and that the maritime provinces, which are seeking more population and which have equally attractive and more varied opportunities to offer for settlement, should now be given equal attention. At the present time, I may say that there is in the province of New Brunswick a feeling of optimism and hopefulness with respect to our future development that has not, I think, been equalled in any previous period of our history. For a long time that progress was not made which we would like to have seen, in agriculture particularly, in consequence largely of the fact that the valley of the St. John river, which traverses 7 of the 15 counties of the province from the Quebec boundary in the north to the Bay of Fundy in the south, and which contains the most fertile and productive lands within the province, has been deprived of very necessary transportation facilities. Now, however, that the construction of that great public work has been assured by the joint action of the provincial government of New Brunswick and the present Federal administration, a fresh impetus has been given to the whole of that section of our province, agriculturally , commercially and industrially. To-day the attention of the whole population has been fixed as it never has been before upon the extent and variety of our natural resources, and the unexcelled opportunities and advantages which New Brunswick offers for expansion and development. Only recently I had the pleasure of listening to an address delivered before the Fredricton Board of Trade by Mr. Palmer, of the 'Financial News,' of London, Eng., a very illuminating and encouraging address with respect to the resources of the province of New Brunswick. He stated that he was more impressed with the possibilities and resources of that province than with those of any country he had ever visited, and he had travelled over the whole of Canada three or four times. Therefore I say that in the province of New Brunswick at the present time the people are particularly hopeful and optimistic with regard to our future development. We have in that province valuable fisheries, we have iron deposits, we have coal fields, we have oil wells and waterpowers, and a wealth of timber resources which is equalled by few of the provinces of this confederation, and a soil adapted for fruit growing and profitable mixed farming. In addition to all these things, we have the principal ocean port of the Dominion of Canada. All that we need at the present time is more population, and in order to get that we only need to make better known the resources of that province to the intending emigrant in the old world and in other countries. I am sure that this government will do its utmost in that respect. What we desire in New Brunswick is that the Immigration Department of this government will cooperate to this end with the provincial authorities to a greater extent than it has done in the past. I am already assured that the government will do so, and that the result will be that within the next ten years we will have the greatest development in New Brunswick that has ever been known in the history of that province.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmorland). I think this House will be ready to congratulate my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) on the admirable way he presented his case in moving the resolution now under consideration. Indeed I think that the thanks of the hon. members representing maritime constituencies generally are due to my hon.

friend for what I may call the admirable compendium of facts which he has presented to this House. It is in a sense a handbook relating to the maritime provinces. Admittedly the resolution is one of importance to the people of eastern Canada, not alone to the maritime provences; it is a resolution in which the people of eastern Canada will take a keen interest. It is, therefore, essential that we should discuss this matter dispassionately, without any partisan bias whatever, solely from the standpoint of the interest of our common country. Mr. Speaker, I quite concur in the objects of the resolution, in its spirit; but if in some respects I do not agree with my hon. friend in his diagnosis of the case, I am sure he will not attribute to me any desire to import into this discussion any partisan considerations. I may have to deal with what I conceive to be an economic truth, but I will do so in no partisan spirit.

My hon. friend says that the maritime provinces have been taunted in the past with relying almost solely upon the Lord and upon governments. It is a taunt which has been frequently heard, not only in this House, but outside, and in the press of the country. I am sure my hon. friend did not wish to endorse a taunt of that kind. I think we must all acknowledge that Providence has done much for the maritime provinces and no one can make any complaint on that score. If any proofs were necessary to show how rich and profuse the gifts of Providence have been to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, we need only to refer to the speech of the hon. member for Cumberland. He has pointed out concisely the rich resources of that section of Canada, and it is upon those resources that he has based his resolution, a resolution that I will for a moment try to analyse.

He says:

That, inasmuch as the immigration policy of the government and the several railway companies has for many years been almost entirely confined to the development of western Canada, and largely in consequence of this policy the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have not grown in equal degree with the rest of the Dominion, in the opinion of this House, in order to promote uniform progress and prosperity throughout Canada, the government should speedily inaugurate and carry out a policy of publicity and immigration designed to promote the more rapid development of the said provinces.

If my hon. friend had charged the want of prosperity or population to other causes than the exclusive one which is mentioned, I would certainly be in harmony with his resolution in every respect. I do not take exception to it even as it is, but I think it would be my duty to point out to my hon. friend wherein the policy of the Immigration Department has not been the only clog to the wheel of progress in respect to population in the maritime provinces. My hon. friend said, and I think with considerable truth, that the attention of the Immigration Department in the past has not been given, as it should have been, to the matter of promoting immigration to the maritime provinces. I hold that this is true in respect to all Immigration Departments from 1867 down to the present moment, and I am not going to withhold my words of censure and criticism upon Dominion governments in the past in respect to their shortcomings in this regard. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, until the advent of the Hon. Clifford Sifton into the Department of the Interior there was very little attention given to immigration to any part of this Dominion. If that attention was given, as it should have been, certainly it was a signal failure, because, until the régime of that hon. gentleman there was no progress made commensurate with the resources of Canada or commensurate with the bright prospects that we have in that land known as our western heritage. Up to that moment there had not been given the attention to this matter which should have been given to it and from 1896, or shortly afterwards, down to the present, there has been nothing but a steady, spectacular progress with regard to the settlement and development of our western country. But, during that time there has not been any attempt made to direct the attention of the people of other lands to eastern Canada, that attention which I claim the resources, prospects, and wealth of these eastern provinces would justify. If immigration has been steadily going into the west and if it has not gone to the east, I am not one who would charge the department with the sole responsibility. I hold that the people of eastern Canada are themselves to blame. I hold that the press of the country and the public of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and the maritime provinces generally should share in the responsibility. So that, during all these years, our attention has been devoted to the west. My hon. friend has said that the railway corporations have done very much. They have done a great deal to withdraw the attention of the people of other lands from eastern Canada and our own people of eastern Canada have done very much more, perhaps unwittingly, in that direction. We have all been glorifying our western heritage, we have talked of the illimitable prairie, we have spoken from our public platforms, and our press has teemed with articles laudatory of our western country, and its rich resources. Too little attention has been paid to the conditions which have prevailed in the maritime provinces. My hon. friend says that he is going to remedy them by a campaign of publicity on the part of the Department of the Interior. While that might do much to remedy it, while it might be of considerable assistance, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think it is the sole remedy that should be applied. It would almost seem, from the words of my hon. friend, and of some other hon. gentlemen from eastern Canada, that this is the first time that any attention has been given whatever to the promotion of immigration to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Why, Sir, it was for many years in New Brunswick a very burning question. In 1849, the government of New Brunswick, with the view of peopling the waste lands of that province, with the view of inviting settlement, in the rich valleys of the St. John, the Miramichi, and other fruitful sections of the province, brought over from Great Britain a gentleman of very great eminence, Mr. Johnson, to make an examination, survey and detailed report of its possibilities and resources in order that, he might return to Great Britain and bring to the attention of the people of that land that particular province as a possibility for intending settlers. I have in my hand a report on 'The Agricultural Possibilities of the province of New Brunswick, by J. F. W. Johnson, F.R.S., S. L. and E.' This report was published, many thousands and tens of thousands copies were circulated broadcast throughout the British Isles, and it was advertised to the fullest extent possible. It is an exhaustive, able and thorough report and well repays the attention that any one would give to it having a desire to make a research as to its contents. That was in 1849-50. In 1854 the government of the province of New Brunswick took further action.

Mechanics' Institutes and other societies throughout the province carried on a propaganda to make the rich resources of New Brunswick known in the motherland. The Mechanics' Institute of St. John was in existence long prior to 1850 and had its headquarters in the building known to this day as the Mechanics' Institute. In 1851 a pamphlet was issued by the government of New Brunswick giving full and detailed information as to the conditions existing in the province and that was sent broadcast throughout Great Britain. In 1854 Mr. M. H. Perley, at the instance of the New Brunswick government, published a handbook of information for immigrants thousands of copies of which were circulated. In 1860 the government of New Brunswick sent the Hon. James Brown to Great Britain and Ireland to promote immigration. I should have mentioned that in 1849 the Mechanics' Institute offered substantial prizes on the subject of New Brunswick as a home for immigrants and the best means of promoting immigration and developing the resources of the province. One of these essays was written by William Till, jr., editor of the 'New Brunswicker,' one of the first papers published in that province. In 1874 Mr. Thomas Potts was appointed by the Mackenzie government to represent the Dominion Immigration Department particularly in the interests of Canada and he issued a pamphlet. Mr. Samuel Watts of Woodstock also issued a book entitled 'Facts and Information for intending immigrants to New Brunswick.' In 1866 Mr. R. M. Burtis, at the expense of the Mechanics' Institute, distributed in Great Britain his pamphlet on the subject, which was one of considerable value. Then, there was the report of Professor Johnston published by the government in 1849, and the pamphlet of James Edgar issued in 1860. In 1879, when the Hon. Michael Adams was Surveyor General of New Brunswick, the government issued a comprehensive pamphlet as to the opportunities afforded to immigrants in that province. All along, down to 1867, the government of New Brunswick by constant effort endeavoured to bring to the knowledge of the people of Great Britain facts relating to that province. But notwithstanding these efforts there still exists that sparsity of population which is a drawback to the progress of New Brunswick. Prior to confederation, we had, as we have now, such products as fish, coal, grindstone, building stone, gypsum, lime, oil, oil shales, lumber, agricultural products. I believe that the conditions which existed prior to confederation in my province were very different from the conditions which have existed since.

The Department of the Interior has been charged with being responsible for the want of increase in the population, but that charge cannot be well founded because from 1851 down to 1861 the maritime provinces increased in population to a marvellous extent. That was previous to confederation. During the first period of the decade, between 1851 and 1861 there was a material increase in the population. From 1881 to 1891 we had our first decrease in the population of New Brunswick, and I think I am correct in saying that the same statement would apply to Nova Scotia. From 1871 to 1881 the decrease was not so marked. But since 1881 and down to 1911 the population of eastern Canada—certainly the rural population—has been practically stationary. That condition has been due to this fact that there has not been a proper development of our natural resources. It is due to the fact that our stone quarries, gypsum and lime quarries, the small lumbering operations have been miserably stagnant, the stone quarries are silent. We hear a great deal about our home market. Why, in 1867 down to the period when the United States entered upon an era of high tariffs and enacted prohibitory tariffs, we had a home market certainly in the maritime provinces beyond anything we have had ever since. In the counties of Westmorland and Albert alone in New Brunswick, there was a home market furnished by the stone quarries alone where we had 1,000 people engaged, not to mention the other industries connected with these quarries which also gave employment to a large number. There were the coasting vessels employed in freighting that stone, there were the shipyards alive with industrious hands engaged in the construction of these coasting vessels. All these afforded to the agriculturists of that section of eastern Canada a home market certainly far better than the market now afforded them by the works of the Intercolonial railway in the city of Moncton. There are not more than 1,000 men employed in the workshops at Moncton. In 1867 and during that period between 1856 and 1866, there were quarries in operation which gave employment to thousands of men who are not there to-day because these quarries have been shut down owing to the closing of their natural market the American market, and no substitute having been obtained. If the people of eastern Canada are ever to develop their stone and gypsum and lime quarries and coal mines, they must find a market for these productions. But some one will say have they not a home market in western Canada? Well, the conditions of transportation and the conditions in western and other portions of Canada preclude the possibility of our finding there an adequate market for these products of the maritime provinces, and naturally the closing of the American market, the consequent silencing of our quarries, the sweeping away from the seas of our coasting vessels, the shutting down of our shipyards, brought about a great change in the conditions in eastern Canada. Where to-day are the men who worked in these quarries and their descendants? You may look for them beyond western Canada and in the State of Ohio. Where are the ship carpenters who worked in our ship-yards, and their descendants? They are to be found on the Kenebeck and along the coast of the New England States employed in constructing vessels that sail, not under the Union Jack, but under the Stars and Stripes.

I am not going to hold any government responsible. I am not making charges against the last or any preceding government, but I am inviting attention to conditions which prevailed forty years ago in Eastern Canada as compared with those which prevail to-day. The people of the United States, in their frenzy for a protective tariff, closed to us their market, and we have had no substitute for that market down to the present. We had an opportunity,—and I do not refer to it in order to excite any discussion with respect to freer trade relations with the United States or improved reciprocal trade relations,—but I will say this, that if there were these open markets between Canada and the United States, if there were this interchange of commodities as the result of an arrangement between the two countries, the people of eastern Canada would have an opportunity of developing their resources, which they are now lacking, and there would be work for our labouring population. There would be thousands employed in the stone quarries, in the ship yards, in the construction of coasting vessels, in the gypsum and lime quarries not to mention coal and small lumbering. If this opportunity were furnished the people of eastern Canada you would not hear any complaint about the population of the eastern provinces. The subject is a gloomy one, the matter is one to be deplored, and the question to be solved is how can we best remedy present conditions. If there has been a decrease in our population from 1881 down to the present or if our population has been practically stagnant as regards its increase, and if preceding that period there had been an increase in the population of eastern Canada, then where are we to put the responsibility? That decrease or stagnation has not been due to lack of publicity, because in the period when our efforts for publicity were feeble on the part of our local government and naturally circumscribed, we had a population increasing every year and there came to our ports, people from the old land particularly, by the hundreds and thousands.

New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island may well congratulate themselves upon the character of their population. My hon. friend has spoken of the rich resources of the maritime provinces, but he has not dwelt on the character of the men who went in and did the pioneer work there, hewing out homes for themselves and their families. I do not wish to be charged with making a partisan speech; I am not. I am giving utterance to the faith that is in me with respect to a certain economic policy. I hold that after all protection is a reciprocity, but it is a reciprocity of monopoly, while free trade is a reciprocity of freedom and of commodities. My hon. friend says that our natural resources have been awaiting expanding markets. Why is it that we have not sought those expanding markets and that those natural resources have to grow gray in their waiting? When the opportunity was afforded us to develop those resources and to obtain those expanding markets, we did not seize upon it, and we are slow to-day to do so. Therefore I make this assertion, that the fact that we have not a larger population to-day than we practically had 20 or 30 years ago is due to the want of development of our natural resources. My hon. friend let fall a remark which certainly was full of meaning: he spoke of the vacant farms in the maritime provinces. Mr Speaker, there must be a cause for vacant farms, and if the Immigration Department had gathered together a list of those vacant farms in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and had it circulated in Great Britain, what a splendid invitation it would have been to intending immigrants; what an incentive to them to take up their lot in a country which had been settled for a hundred years and which had reached that stage of agricultural development or stagnation that it had an innumerable list of vacant farms. Vacant farms are not a recommendation to any country from an agricultural standpoint. My hon. friend wanted the Immigration Department to take hold of that question. Why, the Government of New Brunswick, in 1897-98, when I had the honour of being connected with it, had pamphlets printed for circulation in Denmark, Scandinavia and Great Britain with a view to inviting immigration, and we were urged to have inserted in those pamphlets advertisements of farms for sale; but I am bound to say that I had not the hardihood to admit the advertisements stating that there were so many vacant farms, because I did not think they would recommend the country to those who wanted to come to the new world to take up farms. Now, these vacant farms are in existence; why? I hold that it is because there has not been an incentive to the agricultural interests. I hold that the policy which has been pursued from 1878 down to the present even, has not been of such a character as would tend to the development of those agricultural interests in eastern Canada; and if there were an earnest and honest desire to develop our natural resources, if a proposition were placed before this House having for its aim and object the development of the marine interests, the fishing interests, the stone interests and the coal interests of eastern Canada, it might be that we would be met with the cry that to develop your natural resources you exhaust them, and if you sell those resources, though you develop them, and find a market to the south, you sap your national independence and disintegrate your empire. That has been and is the cry, and it seems to me that when we seek to place upon the shoulders of the Department of the Interior the responsibility for existing conditions in the maritime provinces in the matter of population, we are forgetting entirely the cause which brought about those conditions. How can you invite to your land for settlement the people of other lands when they are restricted as to their home market, and every one must admit that in a limited home market you have a most uncertain and variable market. There is no incentive to production and therefore no great call for labour, and with no great call for labour there cannot be any great increase of population. We are in the position in Canada to-day of having compelled those engaged in the development of our natural resources to buy in the dearest market. That is admittedly the very object of our fiscal policy in the past and certainly of all protective policies. But, worse than that, we have denied to the agriculturists of Canada and to all others developing our natural interests, the privilege of selling in the best market or in wider markets. Is not that the story in a nutshell? Under these circumstances does it not seem reasonable that there should not be that increase in population that God and nature intended that there should be in that section of the Dominion? We have had in the province of New Brunswick in the last decade a slight increase, I think about 20,000 souls. In the previous decade ther was no increase; our population remained stationary. But in former years, when the development of our natural resources was going on, our population increased, our agricultural lands were settled, our lumbering operations went forward.

My hon. friend has spoken of the resources of the county of Albert, its immense oil deposits, its gas fields, its mountains of oil shales. It is true that the attention of the public in the United States and this country has been directed to these rich resources again within the last ten years. But the oil shales were the basis of an industry in the fifties. Men were converting the oil on these shales into illuminating oil, which was sold in the markets of Boston at $1 a gallon. But when the oil wells in Pennsylvania were developed and oil was procured at a much cheaper rate, it naturally commanded the market and the business of production from the oil shales of Albert died out. But, all these years, that resource has existed and it has been known. But the conditions which have existed—conditions which we had an opportunity to set aside—have prevented the development of this industry. I have called attention to the pamphlet issued by the province of New Brunswick and written by William Till, jr., who was the editor of a newspaper. In speaking of the development of the resources of New Brunswick, he said:

It, therefore, follows that not only individual efforts but some legislation should be directed towards giving an impetus to those branches of business which promise the best and safest returns.

Then he calls attention to some of the opportunities afforded by these resources:

As the agricultural resources of the province are universally acknowledged to be good—its forests limited only by its boundaries, affording the basis of an extensive trade in shipbuilding and lumbering—its harbours numerous and safe, and its water courses abundant, furnishing ample facilities for manufacturing establishments, while its mineral resources (which are as yet imperfectly known) cannot be justly estimated; but as far as they have been developed, the projectors have in general met with rich reward for their industry and enterprise. Limestone, coal, copper, iron, gypsum and other valuable deposits are known to exist in various sections, and in two of the eastern counties (Albert and Westmorland) mines of extraordinary richness are being worked. Building stone is also to be found in abundance, and some of our finest public and private edifices have been constructed of the various descriptions quarried in the province.

I have also referred to Mr. W. R. H. Burtis, who published a work on New Brunswick as a home for immigrants under the authority of the government for the province. He said:

We come now to the third branch of our subject—'The best means of developing the resources of the country.' And first—it may be asked—what does the word 'resources' mean? In a limited sense, it may be taken to signify the material products of a country—whether animal, mineral or vegetable—either in a raw state, or enhanced in value by the labour of its people. In a more extended sense, it may include with these, local advantages, with facilities for amplification by artificial means, such as canals, railways, and the like. Viewing it in this broader import, the range of vision extends over a wider field, and gives scope for indulgence in brighter visions of both the early and the later future of this fine province. Next comes the question—what is meant by the phrase 'developing the resources'? To my mind, the developing the resources of a country is not a single fact or attainment, but a successive and never-ending series of facts or achievements reaching far into futurity—a constantly gathering and accumulating capacity, strengthening as it goes, in an increased ratio to its progress.

Further, he says:

Lying contiguous to Canada, and having water communication with that great and growing province, we might hope, in time, to drive an extensive trade with our sister colony. But our prospects in that direction are being blighted by the enterprise of our American neighbours, who are cutting off our trade, not only with Canada, but with the people of our own interior.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. EMMERSON. Naturally, my hon. friend says 'hear, hear.' But there are the geographical conditions and transportation conditions to be met, and our market for many of the products of our resources was necessarily limited, and could not expand under conditions then existing. Speaking of the conditions that then prevailed, Mr. Perley says:

All that is wanting is an extensive market. Hence arises the important question—whether anything, and what may be done to improve our condition in this respect? As there is but little prospect of a radical change in the commercial policy of the United States——

At that time the policy of the United States was towards exclusion, and there was exclusion to such an extent that even prominent men in these British colonies favoured even annexation to the United States as a means of securing a market and improving the economic conditions among our people. To such a height had this feeling risen that annexation manifestos were prepared and signed even by men eminent in the councils of the country, one of whom afterwards became Prime Minister of Canada. What they wanted in 1850 was an extensive market. And unhappily the conditions that existed then to too great an extent exist to-day. We lack a certain and extended market. We find ourselves without scope for our energies, ambitions and aspirations. Mr. Perley says further:

We have all the requisites but one, perhaps the only one, that to which I have elsewhere alluded, the want of a more extensive market.

Here you have the people and the resources, but you have not the market. That was in 1850. In 1854 that was given to them, and they prospered, and their population increased. It was taken away from them, and since then they have ceased to prosper and increase in population. But they might have done so if we had availed ourselves of the recent offer of the United States in the matter of reciprocal trade, and which would have afforded to our agriculturists, to our fishermen, to our lumbermen, to our gypsum quarry men, a market which they need, and which, if given them, would greatly stimulate our trade and increase our population. Now I cannot close without inviting your attention to the remarks of a Mr. Burtis, speaking on the resources of New Brunswick:

What an inviting field for immigration! To the stranger of every rank and degree, the road to wealth and distinction is as free as to the native of the soil. There are no favoured classes—no exclusive privileges—no absurd and depressing monopolies—no checks or hindrances to laudable ambition—no station unattainable by patient industry and honest work. With nothing to cramp his energies or chide his hopes and aspirations, the intelligent European who seeks this country for a home may reasonably look forward to comfort, if not wealth and position, as the result of a few years of well directed labour.

Those, indeed, were halcyon days for the people of eastern Canada, days which have been succeeded by lack of prosperity, by lack of contentment. In 1874, during the regime of Alexander Mackenzie, his government sent to the old land representatives with a view to inviting people to make their home in this new land. One of the gentlemen thus sent, Mr. Thomas Potts, of St. John, a gentleman who was well and favourably known throughout eastern Canada, but who has long since gone to his rest, delivered a speech in the city of Liverpool, which was published by the Liverpool 'Daily Post' and widely circulated throughout Great Britain. After speaking of the resources of Canada generally, he came down to the province of New Brunswick specially, and I desire to make a short quotation from his remarks:

Let me tell you further that Canada is one of the best governed and one of the least taxed countries in the world. The taxes imposed by the general government are scarcely one-fifth of what they are in the United States. (Cheers). In this connection, permit me to remark that I have found on the minds of many gentlemen I have met a very wrong impression. In conversation some time ago with the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Manchester he said: 'Why do you in Canada put high tariffs upon our goods to protect your own manufactures?' I respectfully said to him, what I now repeat, that we do nothing of the kind. Upon some articles the duty is moderately high, upon others there is no duty. There are upwards of eighty articles upon the Canadian catalogue that come in free, the greater part of which are imported from England. For example, everything that enters into the construction of a ship, the whole of which is imported from England, except the wood and the labour, comes in free. The average Canadian tariff for 1871 was only 12½ per cent, while that of the United States was 45 per cent. Canada puts on no tariffs for protective purposes. She puts duties on the articles that can best bear them, but for nothing more than to pay her liabilities and keep her credit unimpeachable. And we want British capitalists to understand that she is determined to keep herself in that position.

Subsequent events show how wrong he was in his prophetic vision.

A gentleman largely interested in manufactures in Rockdale said to me one day: Why don't you take the duties off our goods and tax the people direct for the support of the government?' I replied: 'Why don't you in England follow that plan?' I admit it would be the cheapest way a country could be governed; and after all your experience, you find there is something you are compelled to put in the bill where they can't see it.

Perhaps that is not a correct conclusion as to the conditions which then existed in Great Britain, but beyond question it is true with respect to the conditions which prevailed in Canada during that period. Now, Sir, I have referred to these matters with a view of diagnosing the conditions and to applying a remedy. I am in hearty accord with the policy of publicity, I am in hearty accord with the desire evinced in the resolution, and which is so important to eastern Canada. But that remedy will not alone be sufficient to meet the requirements. What we want is to make Canada a cheap country to live in, and to that end we must create trade, we must create a home market. I am heart and soul with the policy of creating home markets, and I think the best way to create home markets is to stimulate production, and by stimulating production we will inevitably increase population. There can be no question as to the effect which would follow upon Canada by increasing our home markets. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior would not then have to carry on his shoulders the sin of blocking the way of progress in the matter of population in eastern Canada.

I do not think it is fair to throw the responsibility upon Providence, or the departments for this matter of population. I have felt called upon to analyse the resolution, and to point out to my hon. friend wherein he has failed in applying the whole remedy. I think that western Canada has been wisely advertised. I am not blaming this, or the preceding government, or the government preceding that. The conditions which have prevailed have been inevitable. The Minister of the Interior in all governments is likely to continue to be a gentleman who represents western Canada, not that he would not represent eastern Canada as well, but his attention would be largely confined to, and his interest largely directed towards our western country. It is natural, it is human. There have been efforts made with respect to urging upon previous governments the desirability of paying particular attention to eastern Canada. I am told that if you go into the Canadian government office in London you will not find a man who knows anything about Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island, and they know very little about Quebec or Ontario. They know the west, they are schooled in it. That has been unfortunate and in so far as governments are responsible for it I charge it upon the preceding government as I charge it upon the government that preceded that one. But, this is not a matter of inquiring into the conditions that were. The object of this resolution is to direct our eyes towards the future, to have action taken at the present time, and in the future that will remedy these existing facts. I know that this resolution will be viewed favourably by every one in my constituency, and by the people throughout Canada. I know that there are those who will favour it, and yet who will say that it does not contain all. The hon. member for Kings, N.S., (Mr. Foster) in his remarks endeavoured to refute some statements that were made by the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll). I do not think he was successful in that. He talked about some of our natural resources, our apple barrels, our fish, and our apples. When he mentions fish he knows that the vessels that sail out from Nova Scotia upon the fishing banks work side by side with the American vessels, and that when they get their catch the American vessel can sail into the open market of the city of Boston with its cargo and sell the fish at a price which, in the case of mackerel and cod, is nearly double the price that the Canadian fisherman receives at either Canso or Halifax. The Canadian fisherman is obliged to go to the market in Halifax, he is there met with monopolistic prices, and he is compelled to sell. The American goes into the market of the United States, and he enjoys advantages twice as great as those enjoyed by his Canadian brother fisherman. They both endured the same hardships, they underwent the same peril, but their rewards are entirely different. My hon. friend spoke of apple barrels and he thought that we should not seek a market for shingles, laths and small lumber that are so largely produced in eastern Canada, but that we should conserve this lumber for the manufacturer of apple barrels. The people of Nova Scotia, I believe, make barrels out of spruce and soft lumber. I do not know that that has been the practice in other parts of the Dominion, and I do not know that it has been a great advantage to the people of Nova Scotia. But if it had been so that is no reason why the lumberman should not have the advantage of the expansion of these resources simply because in the dim and distant future the apple growth of Nova Scotia may so increase that all this lumber would be exhausted in the manufacture of apple barrels. But these are only incidents, and they do not in any way touch the vital, the sore spot that is involved in the subject of this resolution, a sore spot that has certainly existed, and does exist to-day in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island. It is something intolerable to think that Prince Edward Island, with 103,000 population in 1901 is nearly 10,000 short in that number of souls, at this census. It is something awful, it is lamentable, that a peohardy, energetic and intelligent should not be able to live under the conditions which to-day surround them, amidst the most fruitful valleys, and rugged hills, and with the rich resources that nature has provided for them. It is lamentable, I say, that they should not be able to hold their own, to grow and expand, and to gather around them, if not their own people, at least those from abroad. The states of the union are filled with deported Nova Scotians. Western Canada can rejoice that she is receiving from the maritime provinces such a splendid representation. The western provinces are to be congratulated, but Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island are to be condoled with. It is our loss. It is all very well to talk about the growth of this magnificent Dominion. It is to express a beautiful sentiment, and also an undoubted fact, to say that we have a magnificent heritage, that we are helping to build up western Canada, and that we should all be proud of our country. That is all very nice, but when you come down to the cold, hard facts of dilapidated country districts, dwindling towns and villages, and a decreasing population in almost every rural constituency, and when you contemplate these things all this beautiful word picturing that you have with regard to the west is no compensation to us.

It is a sad commentary on the conditions there to realize that the hopes of the pioneers in these provinces have been blasted and that their descendants have been unable to realize their aspirations.

Mr. J. A. M. AIKINS (Brandon). Mr. Speaker, there is a suggestion in the resolution before the House that preferential treatment has been accorded to western Canada to the disadvantage of the east, and for such a suggestion there is no foundation in fact. The people of western Canada do not desire to have any undue favours or any preferential treatment from Canada. They desire and will expect to be treated on a fair and just and equitable basis with every other portion of our country. The people of the west wish to extend to the people of the east the same generous consideration which they are confident the people of the east are ready to extend to them. We realize that if one province is neglected the whole nation suffers, and if, under the past immigration policy of the Dominion government Nova Scotia has been placed at a disadvantage, then that policy so far as it detrimentally affects Nova Scotia should be changed. I have no objection at all to the resolution except in so far it suggests that the west has been benefited to the disadvantage of the east. In order that both east and west may prosper, they must have confidence in and good will to each other which mutual trust is necessary if our entire country is to attain her high destiny. We are proud of the people of Nova Scotia than whom there are none better in Canada. Their brilliant history and traditions and ideals are part of our heritage. The great Canadians who came from the lower provinces; Howe, Tupper, Tilley, J C. Pope, all fathers of Confederation, and in a later day Sir John Thompson and the present respected Prime Minister of Canada belong not to the east, but to the west also. The desire of the Fathers of Confederation was that the west should be developed and the Canadian Pacific railway was projected with that object in view. It must not be forgotten that it is the Dominion government that retained the lands in the three prairie provinces and that it is the natural duty of the owner of these lands to see that they are peopled with industrious and thrifty settlers who will properly develop those resources and thus add to the country's wealth. Thev send their products east and in their turn buy of the commodities of the east, and stimulate by their trade the large centres of industry. There has been a suggestion made that the Dominion government purchased the western lands for one million five hundred thousand dollars from the Hudson's Bay Company, and thereby the east had benefited the west, but they are held and administered for the whole of Canada, so long as the Dominion holds those lands, so long will the Dominion be responsible for their proper administration, and their proper settlement. The west would be glad to repurchase them for the price paid and take charge of the settlement of them if that were possible.

In advertising western lands the Dominion is simply desiring to have them properly disposed of and settled. The Dominion has no public lands in Nova Scotia for settlement. The west desires the very best class of settlers that can be found. We have been told that seventy per cent of the immigrants coming from continental Europe are from northern Europe, we would like all the settlers from there to be from the north. It is not the area of a country, not the large numbers of its population, so much as the character of that population that makes a nation prosperous. We should not be in such a hurry to settle our country as to go into the highways and the hedges to compel settlers, whatever be their character, to come in. It is the duty of the government to bring to this nation people who will obey our laws, respect our institutions, and live thrifty and virtuous lives. Those who make complaint that the west has been unduly considered in the immigration policy we contend for should not forget the millions which have been expended in building wharfs and improving harbours in the maritime provinces, of which only the west gets indirect benefit, and we hope that there will be without delay made in the estimates provision for the construction of ports on the Hudson bay, and thus give similar treatment to the west as to the east. I trust, Sir, that successful efforts will be made to bring to the maritime and other provinces the good settlers they desire. But let us not forget that the policy of the government has been to settle in the west the lands which belong to the whole of Canada, and not to the western provinces.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (Oxford S.). Mr. Speaker, the two great provinces of Ontario and Quebec are not included within the scope of this resolution, and we have been told that on account of their health and prosperity it was not necessary to mention them. The resolution, speaking of the immigration policy of the government, says:

> Largely in consequence of this policy the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have not grown in equal degree with the rest of the Dominion.

I believe, Sir, that in discussing a question of this kind, every province of the Dominion should be considered. As an Ontario man I wish to say a few words as to the policy of the late government with respect to immigration into that province. I was somewhat amused at the statements made by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) and speakers on the other side of the House.

They did not confine their remarks to the subject in hand, but endeavoured to find some solution for the difficulty that would not reflect on the late government. In starting out the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), said he was not going to discuss the question in a party spirit, but he nevertheless went on to find fault with previous Conservative governments for what he described as their lack of attention to this subject, and to say that until the Hon. Clifford Sifton came on the scene no progress had been made in immigration to this country. Since that time, however, he declared that the movement of immigration to Canada had been of a spectacular nature. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that if immigration to this country was not as great as we would like in years gone by, there were conditions prevailing at that time which afforded some excuse for this condition of affairs. One of these was that until the building of the Canadian Pacific railway you could not expect that western country to fill up very rapidly. Not only that, but after the Canadian Pacific railway was built, we found hon. gentlemen opposite, extremely energetic in denouncing the policy of the government of that day. They could not find language strong enough to condemn the protective policy then in force; and it was not until after they themselves took office, it was not until after the late government came in power in 1896, that the minds of the Canadian people became disabused on that point, and they realized that the policy of both political parties was purely protective. The late government, despite their previous denunciations, continued the old policy which they found in force when they took office. Capitalists consequently obtained confidence, investors became impressed with the stability of our tariff to an extent that never existed before, and that confidence remained unshaken until in the early part of last year, when these hon. gentlemen opposite began an agitation to undermine that policy which had been productive of so much progress. No wonder, therefore, hon. gentlemen opposite can not discuss any questions in this House for any length of time, no matter how brief, without drifting back to reciprocity. One can well excuse them for their evident feeling on this matter, but in deference to the verdict of the people I should think that they ought to cry a halt. Surely we have heard enough on this question, and they ought to realize that under the circumstances they would be doing far better if they would allow the business of the country to proceed, and not be continually harking back to that policy which the Canadian people so vigorously condemned for all time to come on the 21st of September last.

I would like to point out that everything in the province of Ontario is not so satisfactory as my hon. friend who moved the resolution (Mr. Rhodes) would have us believe. The census returns, of which we have a portion completed, do not show that the province of Ontario has made the wonderful progress we would desire.

I was also somewhat interested in the statement made by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), on the necesssity of our making every effort to have our vacant lands in the Northwest settled. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we have in the province of Ontario vast tracts of suitable land for settlement which have been absolutely neglected by the late government. Let me tell you that we have nearly twenty million acres of virgin soil which are awaiting people to come in and cultivate it.

And to show that the government of the province of Ontario is keenly alive to the interests of that province, let me point out that they have built a railway line into that district without the aid of the customary bonus from the Dominion government which has been given without exception to every other railway in the Dominion. But the province of Ontario built that road itself and is paying for it out of the provincial treasury. And although Ontario is paying its proportion of the cost of the railways in other provinces, not one of these other provinces has contributed a dollar to the building of the railway in question. In that respect the Ontario government has done a great deal to induce people to settle in northern Ontario. Very little was done by the late government towards advertising the resources of the province of Ontario in the old country. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Cumberland, the Dominion government spends about two million dollars a year in connection with immigration, and he urged that the maritime provinces, according to their population, should be entitled to about one-eighth of that expenditure. Let me point out that the province of Ontario has entered into an aggressive campaign for the purpose, not merely of bringing people out to settle on its vacant lands, but to bring out agricultural labourers to work on the farms already under cultivation. What is needed most is not so much people to develop those vacant lands as to cultivate the lands already under cultivation, a large acreage of which has to remain untilled for lack of farm help and a still more considerable portion is improperly tilled for the same reason. I maintain that it is the duty of this government to pay more attention to these matters.

A few years ago the government of Ontario established a labour bureau in that province, the object of which was to bring out farm labourers to supply the demands of the farmers of that province. Up to 1905 that was the policy in force, but about that time there was a change of government in Ontario, and from 1905 to 1907 we found the late government of Canada had agents walking the streets of Toronto inducing those who had come out to the Ontario Bureau not to carry out their agreements, but to go to the local distributing agents. As a result of their action in this respect, and their claim that their employment agents could meet all the requirements and supply the Ontario demand, the government of Ontario turned over to the Dominion government the labour bureau in that province and the Dominion government carried it on. This went on for a couple of years until the provincial government, finding the requirements of its province neglected, again took up the placing of farm labourers and entered on an active campaign in the old country to meet the requirements of the farmers, but from that time down to the present they had been handicapped in every possible way in their efforts in Great Britain and here. The regulations made by the late government affecting Ontario reflected but little credit on them. I may tell hon. gentlemen opposite that there were other questions besides reciprocity before the people of Ontario during the recent election, and it was not prejudice or passion that influenced them, but resentment of the indifference of the government to their most pressing need when the people rose in their might to condemn the government which had been so narrow in their views with regard to a policy that should have done much to develop the whole country.

What we do object to in Ontario is being handicapped by any government in our legitimate efforts to secure for that province the people it requires, and I may tell the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) that in a sense, I am sorry to say, the inflow of people into our Northwest is spectacular. I believe there is a danger confronting our people and the sooner we realize it the better. I believe that a great deal of the attraction is of a speculative nature.

With the rapid increases in the value of lands and the desire to mine the fertility of the soil without regard for the future, when the effect of the present policy will become evident, you must realize the vast difference between the science of agriculture and wheat mining, you may mine the wealth that has been the accumulation of centuries, but there is a limit to it; the day will come and has already come in many sections of the west where the folly of this course can be seen. There is also another effect which is becoming serious, particularly in the towns and cities with so many of the people engaged in industrial pursuits and grain growing. The cost of local products has increased very rapidly during the past few years until to-day, notwithstanding our immense agricultural areas, some difficulty is being found in supplying its home market. The remedy proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite was to take off the tariff and place this market at the disposal of the United States and other countries. Reciprocity was the remedy not for the benefit of the farmers, but to place them in competition with the cheap labour of foreign countries.

Let me mention some of the imports into Canada from the United States for six months of the present year, and it is somewhat significant that we are importing from the republic to the south large quantities of products similar to those raised in the province of Nova Scotia from which the mover of this resolution and most of the speakers upon it have come. In those six months we imported from the United States 493,379 pounds of mutton, from Australia 1,217,224 pounds and from other countries 2,000 pounds. Of butter we imported from the United States 509,778 pounds, from Australia 101,080 pounds. Of horses we imported from the United States 9,299, although we were told what a great market we were going to have for our horses in Buffalo, New York, and other American cities. During the same time 62,579 American sheep were brought in and sold in this country. During the six months we imported from the United States 52,547 barrels of apples, and during the previous twelve months 150,961 barrels. Of eggs we imported from the United States during those six months 1,564,039 dozen; and so on down the list. So that it will be seen that reciprocity was not going to solve the problem. We have in Canada opportunities that are not to be found in any other country. We ought to have the greatest confidence in our country, and the people of Canada have that even if hon. gentlemen opposite have not, for which reason they are sitting on the opposition benches to-day. I have pointed out that the late Dominion government hampered the province of Ontario in supplying the demand for farm labour in that province. The increase of population in the province of Ontario has been about half a million during the last ten years. In seven cities of the province the increase has been over 300,000; and taking into account the increases in all the cities, you can more than account for the total increase in the whole province. In the last twenty years, in the oldest and richest districts of Ontario, the finest counties in the Dominion, the rural population has fallen off by upwards of 112,000, the lack of men to till the soil has resulted in the spread of noxious weeds to an alarming extent and is spreading all over the province weeds that are a menace to the province. It is absolutely necessary, if we are going to hold our own and increase the output of the farms of Ontario that the demand for labour shall be supplied. The literature that was referred to by the mover of this resolution was supplied by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, and was distributed by the agents who had been appointed by the provincial government. I may say that during the past year the Ontario Department of Agriculture loaned to farm labourers and domestic servants in the old country upwards of $25,000 to assist them to come out here to relieve the scarcity in the province for those classes of labour. Some time before that, in 1910, the Ontario Minister of Agriculture wrote to the Minister of the Interior asking that a representative of the department might be allowed access to the immigration buildings at Quebec and St. John, with a view to direct the farm labourers who had received loans through the provincial government agents in the old country to stations in eastern Ontario. Early in the present year I made a similar request of the Superintendent of Immigration, and it was refused. In 1910 the Minister of Agriculture received the consent of the Minister of the Interior. At this time I had charge of the Colonization Department for the government of Ontario, I wrote as follows to the Superintendent of Immigration:

Toronto, Ontario, April 21, 1911.

Dear Sir:—

We find that many immigrants booked to Toronto and other points in western Ontario do not reach their destination. This often happens where men have received loans to assist them to come to Ontario. We also have a great number of applications for men from eastern Ontario. In order to, if possible, get in touch with the former and supply the latter, without having the immigrant come to Toronto, we would like to have an officer connected with this branch stationed at the port of landing, particularly Quebec. We would esteem it a favour if such officer would be allowed office room in the Immigration Office at the port of landing and also be allowed the privilege of interviewing parties for this province and having them booked direct to applicants.

An early reply will be much appreciated.

Yours truly,

DONALD SUTHERLAND,
Director of Colonization.

W. D. Scott, Esq.,
Superintendent of Immigration,
Ottawa, Ont.

I received the following reply from the superintendent of immigration:

Ottawa, April 26, 1911.

Sir:—

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant in regard to distribution of farm help. Your experience is much the same as our own and is probably due to the fact that the demand for general labourers and skilled workers is unusually great at this season of the year, thus offering tempting openings to immigrants who might otherwise have taken farm work. We have, as you are aware, quite a number of employment agents in eastern Ontario, none of whom are able to secure a sufficient supply of help; in fact I do not know that they are any worse off than those west of Toronto.

I regret being unable to comply with your request in the matter of stationing one of your officers at the port of Quebec. We have been obliged to refuse this privilege on a good many different occasions, and I am afraid to open the door now would only result in confusion.

Your obedient servant,

W. D. SCOTT,
Superintendent of Immigration.

On the strength of the letter that had been recived from the Minister of the Interior by the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario, and owing to the fact that we had a large number of men coming out to whom we had advanced loans, I sent an agent from the department to Quebec to meet that party and had made arrangements with the Canadian Northern railway people to have access to their office at the immigration building there in order to meet them. A short time afterwards, I received a letter from the party sent down stating that he had been refused access to the building and had been notified that he would not be permitted to interview these people on their arrival. A little later I received a letter from the superintendent of immigration notifying us that they were going to enforce regulations that would provide that for those being sent to the Ontario Government Labour Bureau at Toronto the booking agent would not receive the customary $5 bonus. After having received that, I had occasion to write again and I sent the following letter:

Toronto, Ont., June 10, 1911.

Dear Sir:—

I am in receipt of your letter of the 1st instant in reply to mine of the 25th ult., with reference to a number of immigrants who recently arrived here and who gained admission to Canada through false pretences.

My object in calling your attention to the matter was owing to a clause in the Immigration Act which makes this sufficient cause for deportation. I note that you do not consider this sufficient cause to have them deported. I can give their names and full particulars, if necessary, but in view of your refusal to make an example of others in similar circumstances I have not done so.

I do also note the intention of your department to discontinue paying bonus to farm labourers, booked to Toronto, after the 1st of October next and your statement regarding the cause of your having adopted the present mode of distributing immigrants through your local agents throughout Ontario. In view of the serious consequences likely to result to this province from withdrawing the bonus on immigrants placed by this office, I desire to call your attention to several features connected with securing farm help for Ontario.

It was as a result of your department having appointed local employment agents at various points in the province that the distributing from Toronto by this department was given up in 1907 and the office here has since that time remained in charge of pour department, but the problem of securing farm help becomes more acute than ever. So much so that it was found necessary, in order to meet the demands of the province for the Ontario Department of Agriculture to again resume the distribution of immigrants from here. Very little attention had been paid to the requirements of this province either in the literature circulated by the department or by the agents connected therewith employed in Great Britain. Booking agents have repeatedly complained about the unsatisfactory method of sending men to fill applications received by the local agents, of which they have been advised, as they have frequently found that the places were filled when the immigrant arrived here, owing to the length of time that must necessarily elapse between the time the application is made and the time it can be filled. Our attention had been called to many instances of this kind by parties who were disappointed in this way and for whom we had secured situations. This has also something to do with the unsatisfactory reports sent home by immigrants which have appeared from time to time in the British press. There has been a severe drain made by the west on the supply of farm labourers in this province. The Ontario government is spending large sums to promote immigration to Ontario and is in a position to look after farm labourers on their arrival here. With our system we reduce to a minimum the danger of sending any one out to places already filled.

The withdrawal of the bonus on farm labourers induced to come to Ontario by our agents and to whom we guarantee employment will be a serious handicap to this province securing a fair share of the immigration to Canada. The demand of the industrial centres will have to be supplied one way or another. They are continually drawing from the men sent to farm work. You will find that many men who have been sent to your local agents have been induced to accept employment in towns and cities after a short stay on the farm. I hope that you will reconsider your decision to withhold the bonus on parties being sent to us, as after all the percentage who do not go out immediately on arrival here is very small and with a little firmness in dealing with them, I think that nearly all difficulty on that score would be removed.

Yours truly,
D. SUTHERLAND,
Director of Colonization.

We find that on the 5th of July, notwithstanding the protest made against the proposed policy of that government, a circular was sent to the British booking agents notifying them what the consequences would be if they continued sending men, as they had been sending them, to the Ontario government. I will read that circular:

Ottawa, July 5.

Canadian government employment agents were appointed in Ontario and Quebec so that persons desirous of securing work on farms might proceed to the point at which these agents are located and without charge, be placed in suitable positions. The department regrets that some of the British booking agents have neglected to direct persons booked by them to these employment agents, but have booked them to large cities where no employment agent is located, with the result that the immigrant has engaged in industrial pursuits, and so been lost to the agricultural communities.

With the object of remedying this condition, it has been decided that no bonus will be paid upon immigrants arriving on or after October 1, 1911——

Fortunately they did not have much to do with matters after that date.

——who are booked to cities in Ontario and Quebec where no Canadian government employment agent is located. Booking agents have been supplied with a list of Canadian government employment agents corrected to March 1, 1911, and if further copies are needed they may be secured from Mr. J. Obed Smith, assistant superintendent of emigration, 11-12 Charing Cross, London, S.W.

Booking agents will be good enough to understand that it is the intention of the department to enforce this rule strictly and in the event of any claims being disallowed on those grounds, nothing will induce the department to alter its original decision, unless the agent interested can supply this department with the name and address of the farmer with whom the immigrant, upon whom the 'bonus has been refused,' is working.

Bonus will be paid as heretofore upon domestic servants whether going to country districts, to towns or cities.

Your obedient servant,
W. D. SCOTT,
Superintendent of Immigration.

The list sent out to the British booking agents would show that there were no agents in the city of Toronto itself. As a result of these circulars there are but very few immigrants now coming to Ontario. With about several hundred applications on file the Ontario Government Bureau at Toronto and the farmers of Ontario are asking for men, but are not being supplied even at this time of the year. I received a notice from the superintendent of immigration dated 15th January, 1912, notifying me that two of these local distributing agents in the riding I represent, appointed by the late government, had sent in their resignation. I wrote back asking him to give me the date of the resignation and how many men they had placed in the last two years. I received the following reply:

In reply to your favour of the 18th instant, I beg to state that Charles H. Denton, of Tillsonburg, resigned on January 4, 1912. In 1910 he placed 9 farm labourers, and in 1911, 3 farm labourers, 2 domestics and 4 children. H. Van Valkenburg, of Norwich, resigned on January 8, 1912, having placed no immigrants from the date of his appointment.

Now these are the kind of agents the late government appointed in the various constituencies, and a great many of them are placing just about as many immigrants as those two of whose resignations I have been notified. I know that to-day the people realize that it is absolutely useless to apply to the Department of the Interior for farm labourers on account of the process that their application must go through. Possibly half a dozen booking agents in the old country may be notified or they may not be notified, to send on the men. The notice has to go to the Superintendent of Immigration, thence to the assistant superintendent, thence to the booking agent, and sometimes two or three months may elapse before the farmer can be supplied, and he has to engage some one else. You see, Mr. Speaker, how ridiculous such a policy is. I believe it was conceived with the idea of obstructing the policy of the Ontario government in regard to supplying farm labourers in that province. I have asked for the returns—which have not yet been brought down—as to the amount that has been earned by the different employment agents in the various provinces. I find that there have been 82 appointed in the province of Ontario, and 16 in the province of Quebec; I believe those were the only provinces in which they adopted this method. I want to point out that most of the large bonus earners are located in the city of Montreal. I believe one of them is an agent of the province of Quebec, and the other is engaged in bringing out domestic servants, not only to Ontario, but to Quebec as well. Outside of these, the number that has been placed has been very small indeed, and altogether inadequate to the demand. Therefore, I contend that the resolution now before the House does not go far enough, but that it should include the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. For the reason I have pointed out, unless the demand is supplied the result to the province of Ontario is going to be disastrous. I may also say that the railways are largely responsible for the difficulty in the province of Ontario. We have dealt generously with the railways of this country, and we find that every fall, at the very time of the year when the farmer requires help more than at any other season, the railways offer low rates to take farm labourers out to supply the demand of the wheat miners of the west; they offer rates that are not fair to the farmers of Ontario. Many of them have engaged men by the year, and these men when they hear of these low rates become restless and dissatisfied, and want to go west, and the farmer has to let them go, as becoming dissatisfied they would be little use to him, although he has employed them by the year. I may say that not only the railways, but the press of this country also is largely responsible for the way in which Ontario is annually denuded of farm labourers. In view of the training that farm labourers receive in the old country, they have to get acquainted with the methods of agriculture in this country before they can become thoroughly efficient; therefore, I think that the department should see to it that the province of Ontario is supplied with labour fitted to her requirements. I hope that the present government will take hold of this matter vigorously, without discriminating against any province in Canada, and will do their whole duty to every province. I hope they will establish a labour bureau in every province of this Dominion, and see that each province is treated fairly. I may also point out that although we have built a railway into northern Ontario the late government has done nothing towards advertising that district. The time has come when it is necessary to do something in that respect. The late government did issue a small pamphlet dealing with the Rainy River and Thunder Bay district, and another one last year dealing with the Niagara peninsula. It is said that the appropriations made to Ontario have been small indeed. Let me say in conclusion that during the past year the Ontario government had 7 agents in the old land. The people of Ontario require especially more labourers and domestic servants. I contend that the regulation that was passed by the late government on July 5, was one that the people of Ontario resented. It ill becomes any government to resort to tactics such as those resorted to by the late government. I am glad to know that they did not have an opportunity to put their policy into effect for any great length of time, and I hope the present government will be more generous. I understand they have cancelled the restrictions referred to.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). There is no doubt that the policy of the government for some years past has been directed more especially toward getting people to go into western Canada rather than eastern Canada; perhaps it was because the government thought that eastern Canada was fairly well populated already, and that the east could look after itself. As a matter of fact, the results show that the east, in this respect at all events, could not look after itself without assistance from the federal government, because the bulk of the immigrants, practically all the immigrants that came to this country, went into the west. I think, now that the tide of immigration has set so strongly towards the west, that the government could afford for a few years to neglect that part of the country and turn its attention toward the east. If they did that for a few years, no doubt a sufficient number of people would still go into the west to meet the requirements of that part of the country, as many would go as could be perhaps assimilated. Now, it is generally supposed that eastern Canada has a soil as fertile as that of the west. In my remarks I will confine myself to Prince Edward Island chiefly, as that is where I live. I cultivated a farm myself some years ago, about the ordinary size in Prince Edward Island, and I will tell you what it produced. I do this chiefly for the benefit of the Minister of the Interior, who has most to do with the policy of immigration. I found I could produce from an acre of land about 300 bushels of merchantable potatoes, 800 bushels of other vegetables, such as turnips and mangles. I could produce from 30 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre, about 50 bushels of oats, about 40 bushels of barley, from 3 to 4 tons of hay. I do not think the west could do much better than that. Of course, there is this great difference; in the east we have to apply manure to the soil in order to get these results, but I am informed they have not got to do that in the west at the present time. The time will come probably when they will be obliged to do that.

It is under ordinary conditions that we get these results. I am told that under better conditions much better results would be obtained. Dr. McPhail of McGill University who is now growing potatoes largely in Prince Edward Island has told me that he can get 500 bushels of merchantable potatoes from an acre of land and that he can produce that result by applying some $12 worth of commercial fertilizers and seeding down to clover every three years. Results like that, providing we had a market for the produce, must be profitable. We have about a million acres of land on Prince Edward Island, practically all cultivable, and providing one fifth of that was devoted to the growing of potatoes under Dr. McPhail's plan, there would be nothing like a market in Canada and we would have to look for a market abroad. There is no doubt that if we had access to the New England states for that article, at all events, it would be a very great advantage to us. It may be asked: Why are we losing our population in the eastern provinces, particularly in Prince Edward Island where the soil is so fertile, when we can produce such abundant crops. There is no doubt that we are losing population and it appears to me that our young people will leave us anyhow. Some years ago it was considered that perhaps farm work was more laborious, that it was more —shall I call it, degraded?—and that an equal degree of credit could not be obtained from work of that kind as that which could be obtained by work in a profession or some other occupation of life. The young people therefore were lured to the states. Since the west has been opened up the lure of the west has drawn our young people away. They are going away and, in my judgment, they will continue to go. Many of our young people have gone to the United States and as a rule they have done well and the reports that come back induce others to go. They have gone to the cities of Canada and to the west and they have done well. Farm help has become so scarce that it is very difficult to operate a farm in Prince Edward Island. When the young people go away and the older people find they cannot get farm help they simply have to sell the farms or leave them and for these reasons there are a number of vacant farms in Prince Edward Island that may be purchased cheaply. I think that perhaps similar conditions prevail in other provinces. If the Minister of the Interior could obtain farmers in the British Isles or in northern Europe with a small amount of capital, with even $2,000, accustomed to farming, such people might settle in Prince Edward Island with a considerable degree of safety. If they had $3,000 or $4,000 so much the better. You can purchase cultivated farms with buildings in a fair state of repair for from $15 to $50 per acre. I sold a farm I had with good outbuildings at $30 an acre largely because it was almost impossible to get farm help. There is a good field for young men and women who would be disposed to go upon the farms as farm help. There is a good field for a reasonable number of men from the old country who had a small amount of capital and would like to settle in a country such as the eastern provinces rather than go to the west. I do not think efforts have been made in the past to get that class of people to come to Canada. The men who have been brought to the west have gone out there to farm upon a large scale, but the small farmer, the man who is accustomed to a mixed farming and who perhaps would wish such under established conditions, would be an acquisition and if this class is obtainable every effort should be made to get it. I believe our young people will leave us anyhow, and the only way to get the farms occupied is by getting men from the British Isles and Northern Europe. If that could be done it would be a great advantage. There is no doubt that Prince Edward Island would support a population three times as large as that which we have now. We have now something over 90,000. Some few years ago we had over 100,000. Losing our population like that is a most deplorable thing, but if we could get people to take the places of those who are leaving it would be an important thing for us and anything the government can do along that line would be of advantage to the eastern provinces and to the whole of Canada. The railways do something, perhaps, to take the young people from Prince Edward Island and the eastern provinces, and I think that their policy in this regard is scarcely fair to the eastern part of the country. They give very cheap rates for these harvest excursions and a great many young people, desiring to see the west and to see something away from their homes, take advantage of these cheap excursions and go into the west, perhaps with the intention of coming back, but inasmuch as the railways charge a very high rate for bringing them back, many of them do not come. I think that is unfair. If something could be done to compel the railways to bring back the young men and women who wanted to come back at the same rate as they took them out west it would be only just and fair. A number of our people leave us on these cheap harvest excursions and do not return. They are induced by the railways to do that, and chiefly by the Canadian Pacific railway. I wish to make these few remarks for the benefit of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) or for those who will have this matter under consideration. There is plenty of room for the right kind of immigrant in eastern Canada, and particularly for farmers with small capital and farm labourers. We are very much in need of that class of people. Whatever the Minister of the Interior or the government can do towards that end will be greatly appreciated in the east and will help to build up the whole of Canada.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of hon. gentlemen but for a few moments upon this resolution now before the House. I regret that I was not able to be present this afternoon and hear the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) make his observations upon the resolution which has been upon the order paper for some time. I was rather anxious to know if he properly surveyed the conditions which he seeks to remedy in the maritime provinces, if he properly diagnosed the cause of these conditions and if he suggested a remedy. As far as his resolution is concerned itself, I would be inclined to give it my approval, but in a qualified manner. I do not like the suggestion contained in the resolution that the condition obtaining now in the maritime provinces is largely due to the consequences of the immigration policy of the governments in the past respecting the Canadian Northwest.

I am sure that no person belonging to the eastern provinces would criticise in any manner whatever the efforts of the government to bring in settlers to the three prairie provinces. Regrettable as are the conditions in the maritime provinces today, they would be worse were it not that the west is what it is. The latter part of the resolution says:

> In order to promote uniform progress and prosperity throughout Canada the government should speedily inaugurate and carry out a policy of publicity and immigration designed to promote the more rapid development of the said provinces.

To that I would give a qualified assent, I think that no government should inaugurate and carry on an immigration policy for the maritime provinces similar to that carried on for the prairie provinces. No greater disaster could fall upon the maritime provinces than such a thing, and I trust the Minister of the Interior will not consider a proposition of that kind. I think I can lay it down as a sound proposition that for the provinces it would be unsound to have an immigration policy unless it is restricted and selected. The member for Kings (Mr. Foster) suggested that in the province of Nova Scotia we could readily absorb an immigration of one thousand a month or twelve thousand a year. This is absurd. No greater menace to the province of Nova Scotia could be suggested. There would not be sufficient labour found for such a large number of immigrants, and the position I take with reference to immigration into the province of Nova Scotia is this: that we only need in that province one class of immigrants or settlers, and that is the class suggested by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island. Of course it is to be regretted that from the maritime provinces there has been a very considerable emigration, in all the years from confederation down, but it would take a long time to discuss the various causes for it. Confederation itself was responsible in some degree. We have not had in the maritime provinces any great industrial development, which would aid in the retention of our population. Again the maritime provinces like all other countries of the world have suffered by the tendency of rural population to drift towards cities. That, of course, is regrettable, but it is more of a sociological than an economic problem and it cannot be settled by an immigration policy no matter what that policy may be. We find the same conditions obtaining in England, and within a few miles of the city of London some few years ago you could find vacant farms. In the older American states the same conditions prevail, and between 1880 and 1900 fourteen thousand farms were abandoned in the state of New York and four hundred thousand people left the farms and went to the cities. It is not in the interest of the nation or of the race that this should occur, but it does. These problems are not as easily settled as the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) would think. The hon. member (Mr. Sutherland) seemed anxious to blame the late government for not assisting the farmers of the province of Ontario in securing farm labour, but I would suggest that any government should be very careful indeed in soliciting farm labourers to come to Canada unless positions have beeen obtained for them before they arrive here. The difficulty about farm labour in the province of Ontario as in the maritime provinces is that a great number of our agriculturists are not as good business men as they might be, and they think it is all right to secure the services of a farm labourer during the busy season and then let him go. It would not be a very difficult thing for farmers in this country to secure farm labourers if the labourers could be sure that they would have work for twelve months in the year. It is not fair for any government or any department of government to encourage the immigration of farm labourers unless it is assured that the farmers of the country will give these labourers constant employment. Speaking for Nova Scotia, I maintain that some immigration work can well be done there, but practically speaking the only class of immigrant I should like to see come to that province would be the farmer of experience, the man who possesses some scientific knowledge of the industry. Unless we can get that class of man to our province I think it would be unwise to encourage immigration of any other sort. There are no free lands to give to the intending settler in the maritime provinces, and the situation there is altogether different from the situation in the west. One of the difficulties which any government in encouraging immigration of the farming class will meet with, is that many who would desire to come to Canada are without capital, and the problem is how should they be assisted in raising capital to buy vacant farm land in the province of Nova Scotia. This matter has been dealt with, with what success I do not know, in some other portions of the British Empire. For instance, in the Australian states they have been endeavouring to meet the situation by providing a system of land banks and loans for settlers as well as advancing a portion of their passage money to the Commonwealth. A few years ago an agricultural bank was incorporated by one of the states and loans in amounts from $125 to $2,500 are advanced for clearing farms, fencing, water supplies, drainage and the erection of farm buildings. During the first five years interest at the rate of five per cent per annum is charged; the principal being payable in twenty-five years, by half yearly instalments. In New Zealand, as well as in several places in the Commonwealth, schemes of that kind are being worked out, and something along that line, if possible, is what would suit intending immigrants to Nova Scotia. The unrestricted, indiscriminate solicitation of immigration to the maritime provinces is in my judgment absolutely absurd and should not be encouraged. On the contrary, any immigration should be carefully selected and carefully placed. I do trust that the Minister of the Interior, when formulating his immigration policy for the eastern provinces will not deceive himself by thinking he has a very easy task before him. His experience in the west will be no help to him in that respect. I am glad to say that the maritime provinces are improving. There is an industrial development going on there; our connections with the growing west are becoming closer day by day, and I think there will be a gradual amelioration of the conditions which prevail to-day. Only recently I was instructed to interview the Minister of the Interior on behalf of a number of gentlemen in Nova Scotia who have the idea of purchasing a large number of vacant farms in that province with the idea of getting from the British Isles or Northern Europe farmers to settle thereon.

Their suggestion was that the government of Nova Scotia and the Dominion government should assist the project. I have not given it very full consideration, but I would suggest to the hon. the Minister of the Interior that he should give it his favourable consideration when it comes before him. I do not say that it is a perfect scheme but still I do think it contains some elements which are worthy of consideration and possibly of commendation.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, Prince Edward Island). The question under discussion is one which in common with the other representatives from the maritime provinces, I would urge the government to deal with in the most prompt and practical manner. In the maritime provinces our farmers are not able to carry on the farming operations as they should be carried on for want of help. Our young men and women are leaving the farms, and the result is that the older men have to work very hard and are almost discouraged. It is not true as has been said by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson), that there is no incentive to engage in the farming industry in the maritime provinces. On the contrary, there is every incentive. We have the best home market in the world. We get the best prices for our products that can be obtained anywhere. We have good soil, especially in the province of Prince Edward Island, in which all the land fit for agriculture is under cultivation. In order to show the hon. member for Westmorland that he is wrong. I would point out that in 1901 the total products of the farm and live stocks in Prince Edward Island was only $7,415,999, whereas in 1910 that had increased to $11,753,000, or an increase of $4,338,000 in nine years. I think, therefore, there is every incentive in the maritime provinces to engage in agriculture. We are rapidly progressing, we are going ahead by leaps and bounds, all we want to-day and all we ask the government for, is a supply of farm labourers of both sexes. But we only require hundreds, not thousands. It is not true that there are many farms in the maritime provinces for sale. The old farmers have large tracts which they are holding for their sons, and those sons who have gone to the west, are coming back to settle again on their old homesteads. In fact the lure of the west will soon be a thing of the past, and our young men in the future will probably stay at home, where they can prosper as well as anywhere else. We have great hopes in the east if the government will give us a share of the money we should have to obtain the necessary help for our farmers.

Another thing which the farmers of the maritime provinces require is transportation. In the west transportation has been rapidly pushed forward and is still being pushed rapidly on to-day, but we in the east, now that we have a progressive government in office, look forward to a new era in which every attention will be given to the development of transportation facilities in eastern Canada and not devote them entirely to the west. Let us only have proper transportation facilities, and we shall have no lack of immigrants. We require men from Denmark to teach us something about butter making and hog raising. We raise a great number of hogs in the maritime provinces, but we would benefit by the labour of men from these older countries, who have made this business a great success. We want fishermen from Scotland and men from England who understand farming.

We have had some immigration agents in the old country. The late government gave us two, I think. One of these agents was there between 1907 and 1909. He was sent there as an immigration agent for the province of Prince Edward Island, and there is to his credit the total number of one immigrant to that province during the three years he occupied that position and drew his salary. Another agent, the Rev. Mr. Winfield, was sent a few years ago, and he made a greater success. He sent out something like 80 first-class immigrants. He was there a little less than two years. The class he brought out were men of good character, men with money, some farm labourers and some domestics. These are the people we want in Prince Edward Island, and I have no doubt these are what are required in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. No doubt this House will agree that the time has come when the maritime provinces should receive their share of the public money spent on immigration. I trust, therefore, that the hon. the Minister of the Interior will give this question, which has been so ably and exhaustively presented to this House by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), his most favourable consideration.

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS (Minister of the Interior). Before making any reference to the subject matter of the resolution introduced by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), I would like to say a word or two with reference to the remarks which have fallen from some hon. gentlemen who spoke after him. In the first place, let me say to my hon. friend the member for Westmorland that I heard with some surprise his statement to the effect that in the immigration office in the city of London, England, we have no representative who knows anything at all about Nova Scotia or the maritime provinces. Let me say to him that if, when I make inquiry, I find that he is correct in his statement, I shall take the earliest possible opportunity of seeing that we have in that important office men who have thorough knowledge and are able to speak intelligently regarding the possibilities and resources of every province in our Dominion.

I am not going to attempt at this late hour to follow the hon. gentleman in his discussion of that old question of reciprocity, which, so far as the people of Canada are concerned, is dead and buried for all time to come. I cannot agree with the proposition of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) that in view of the present conditions it would not be wise to invite immigrants to the maritime provinces. As the minister presiding over the Department of the Interior, I propose to invite immigration to the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in the same form and manner and with the same hope of results that I do to the other provinces of this Dominion, believing as I do with an intense conviction that we have in the maritime provinces, in common with the other provinces of Canada, great possibilities which should attract immigrants who want to better their condition. As a result of that great National Policy which was laid down many years ago, and which has been adopted and followed by both parties in this Dominion from that day to this, we are in the proud position in Canada of being able to point to the fact that we have more desirable conditions for intending immigrants than those which can be found in any other country in the world. Therefore, it becomes my duty as the minister of that department to lend every energy I possess to the work of carrying out a policy such as I believe will be best calculated to increase our population to the advantage of those who come as well as for the upbuilding of the country. Now, I have taken careful note of the remarks of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean), and I shall be glad to receive the representations which he proposes to make, and I can assure him that they will receive full, clear and faithful consideration at the hands of the department. I have also taken very careful note of the suggestions which my hon. friend from the St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike) has made for certain amendments in the regulations. I am not clear at the moment whether the changes which he recommends would be advisable and desirable at the present time, but I shall be glad to give them the consideration which they require. In respect to the resolution itself, I entirely agree with the statements which have been so clearly placed before this House by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes). When I took charge of the Department of Immigration I at once saw, from an examination of the records, that in my judgment some improvement could be made in that department, and I found that that improvement could be best made by a policy of co-operation with the different provinces. To that end an officer was engaged, whose duty it was to visit the different provinces, and I am glad to say that that work is meeting with good results. I have had as a result of that course a visit from the Premier of British Columbia and one or two of his colleagues, and they are in a most hearty manner co-operating with us with respect to immigration to that province. I have also had a visit from a representative of the government of Ontario in the person of Mr. Duff, the Minister of Agriculture, and I am glad to be able to inform this House that I have been able to arrange a policy of co-operation with the great province of Ontario under which we are not going to duplicate our work, as we have done in the past, but are going to work together in harmony, and by this means are going to accomplish greater results for immigration in that province in the future than has ever been done in the past. I also had the pleasure of meeting the Premier of the province of New Brunswick and his Attorney General, and discussed with them the policy that they propose to inaugurate, better calculated to bring immigration to that province. I am very much encouraged by the aggressive policy which Mr. Fleming and his colleagues propose to adopt in connection with the work in New Brunswick. I have made an arrangement with them by which we propose to assist them largely in their aggressive policy, and I am satisfied that as time goes on very fruitful and very desirable results will be found to come from the arrangements which we have made in this connection, and which I believe will be announced by the Premier of New Brunswick in the very near future. We have invited every province of the Dominion to co-operate with us, and every province will receive fair and generous treatment at the hands of this government.

Adopting, as we have, a policy which we believe to be that calculated to advance the best interests of our common country, a policy that will be common to all the provinces of Canada, I do not desire in speaking of our immigration, to know either eastern Canada or western Canada. Let me say to those who have spoken this afternoon that we are going to inaugurate a policy by which we shall give publicity to every province in Canada. The gentlemen from the maritime provinces have pointed out in very able addresses the great possibilities which those provinces possess, possibilities which in themselves are inviting to intending immigrants in many respects; and it becomes our duty, as the central government, to advertise these advantages to the people of the world, in order that the maritime provinces in common with the others, may secure all advantages, and in order that the attractions which they possess may be presented to the intending immigrants from all parts of Europe, the United States, and elsewhere, who desire to become citizens of our Dominion.

Now, we have only to look at the returns of immigration in Canada during the last year, to find that the immigration to the three maritime provinces was less, I believe, than one third of the immigration secured by any other province in this Dominion. In view of this condition, I say, I am not surprised that we should have the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes), and other hon. members in this House from the maritime provinces, bringing to the attention of this parliament and of the people of the country, the advantages they possess in those provinces. In view of the fact, they claim that the maritime provinces have not been getting their share of immigration. And the evidence of the correctness of their statement is to be found in the figures to which I have just referred. I am not here to say, nor am I in a position to say, what the reasons are that they have not secured a greater increase than that which I have named. But I am here to say, as representing the Department of Immigration, and voicing the policy of the government of the day, that we propose a policy of co-operation with all the provinces, to lend every assistance in our power, to give to the maritime provinces, and the other provinces all the support and all the assistance which a very healthy treasury is able to give, in order to bring immigration to Canada, with a view to having here a happy and contented people in greater, and much greater, numbers than we have at this time.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton). Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to criticise the resolution or to find fault with the policy of the Department of Immigration as laid down by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers). But inasmuch as a large part of the remarks offered to the House this afternoon and evening have practically been in criticism of the previous administration of the department, it would hardly be in place for me to let the occasion pass without having something to say in regard to that administration and policy. The hon. members who have preceded me said frequently that they wanted a Canadian policy, a policy that would build up Canada. Well, I take it that Canada has been built up with a fair degree of rapidity during the past few years under the immigration policy that has been followed. When we consider the increase in the population of Canada during the past few years—increasing, remember, from year to year until the year which has just closed has shown the largest immigration that ever took place in the history of this country—and in view of probably a larger percentage of increased population than has ever occurred in the history of any other country in the world, it might be thought that a policy having such success might have received commendation rather than adverse criticism. The policy which achieved such results was not by any means a haphazard policy. And let me suggest further that a policy on the lines which have been suggested by the larger number of our friends who have spoken here tonight, could not by any possibility have achieved such success for this Dominion of Canada. Some of our friends who have spoken seem to think that immigration is a matter of finding the people in one place, picking them up and removing them to some other place. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) is under any such impression. But I can assure the House that if he is, or if his colleagues are under that impression, they will find they are greatly mistaken. The first requisite of successful immigration effort is opportunity for the immigrants. I will admit that advertising is valuable; and the evidence given here today proves that the advertising efforts under the late adminstration were reasonably successful, and, I presume correspondingly satisfactory. But advertising alone will not make successful immigration effort. It assists. But the original foundation of success is opportunity for the immigrant. Unless you have the opportunity, you cannot get the immigration by all the advertising expenditure you see fit to make. It was because of the opportunities in western Canada that the immigration to western Canada has been so much larger in proportion than that to other portions of Canada, and not because of the advertising. So far as the advertising is concerned, I will just say for the information of the House, that the most important piece of immigration literature gotten out by the Interior Department during my administration was an atlas of Canada which gave every province in Canada equal treatment both in maps and in descriptive matter. This atlas is used in schools not only in many parts of Canada, but in foreign countries as well, notably in Belgium. It is also used in schools largely in England. And in that atlas the maritime provinces had practically the same consideration in proportion to area and population as the western provinces had. Again, a very large sum of money was spent in maps—'school maps' as they were called—which gave, of course, a complete view of the whole Dominion without partiality to one section or another.

Also when delegations have come out from the old country at the instance of the Interior Department to look over Canada to see what opportunities there were, they toured the maritime provinces just as well as the prairie provinces, and reported upon the opportunities they found there. Besides that, special pamphlets have been got out to describe particularly the advantages of the maritime provinces. I do not question for a moment the possibility of larger efforts being made in the future than have been made in the past. I do not find any fault with such efforts, I wish them all success, and believe they will achieve some success. But I say that if the department, in the past ten years, had directed its main efforts and its main expenditures to securing settlers for the eastern provinces, the results to Canada would not have been in any measure such as they have been under the policy that has been pursued. It is not in the nature of the case possible, and it will not be possible in the future, should it ever be attempted; and I give the Minister of the Interior credit for too much common sense ever to attempt such a policy. The result of the policy that has been pursued in securing the occupation and development of western Canada has been essentially and truly a Canadian policy, because it has been upon the successful development of western Canada, so far as that development has yet gone, that the prosperity and progress of this whole Dominion has been built. Its increase in cultivated land and in the number of farms occupied, in the products of the soil of those western provinces, has stimulated manufacturing enterprises in all parts of eastern Canada, and in no part more than in the very town of the hon. member for Cumberland, the town of Amherst where he resides. The town of Amherst depends very largely for its progress and prosperity on the settlement and development of western Canada. Of course, I give every credit to the enterprising men of Amherst who have established manufacturing enterprises in that city. But all the enterprises that could have been centred in Amherst, with all the ability of her business men, could not have succeeded were it not for the development of the great Northwest, and the cultivation of the wheat fields of that country.

Now a lament has been made of the loss of population in the maritime provinces. From one point of view I must say that I have no sympathy with it. If the maritime provinces have not increased in population as fast as other parts of the Dominion there is a reason for it, a reason not to the discredit of its people, but rather to their credit. They are an active and energetic people, who look for opportunities wherever they may be found, and they seize the best that can be found, whether they be far or near. It is just because they have looked for wider and better opportunities than existed at home that the population of the maritime provinces has not increased, because the people have gone elsewhere where they could do better. It is immeasurably to the benefit of Canada as a whole that the population of the maritime provinces, instead of congesting there during the past five, ten or twenty years, has been spread far and wide over the whole Dominion. If the lack of increase of population was due entirely to the movement of the people of those provinces to western Canada, I say again that the maritime provinces are to be congratulated instead of being condoled with.

Unfortunately the natural increase of population in the maritime provinces, which I am given to understand is more than ordinarily rapid, has not been retained in those provinces. This is a fact to be deplored. I believe that a very large proportion, very much more than fifty per cent, has gone to the United States. This has been greatly to the advantage of the United States, and correspondingly to the disadvantage of Canada. If previous governments had established active agencies in the maritime provinces to secure a movement of people for the prairie west of Canada, fifteen or twenty years ago, would not Canada have been better off to-day, and would not the maritime provinces themselves be just as well, or better off? I say it is little less than a crime to have allowed so many young men of those provinces to go every year to the United States, while not a finger was raised to prevent that exodus. It would have been ten times better for the government of Canada to have entered upon an active immigration campaign in those provinces in order to create a movement of their people to the prairies of the west instead of to the United States. Canada would have been far, far ahead, not only in money, but in men, in prestige, and in national spirit as well. I had the pleasure of attending a dinner in Boston on the 24th of May last, a dinner given by the Intercolonial Club, and I was appalled, Mr. Speaker, at the figures that were given me of the number of people of lower province birth who were resident in the city of Boston, in the state of Massachusetts, and in the other New England states. If I remember right, I was told that there were not less than 30,000 people of maritime province birth permanently resident in the city of Boston, and over 100,000 in the state of Massachussetts. There is no doubt that they form a very important element of the population of the city of Boston, and of the state of Massachussetts. I say it is most unfortunate that this should be the case. The late government was so impressed with that condition of affairs that we established an immigration agency in the city of Boston for the express purpose of getting back some of the maritime province people, and directing them to our prairie west. We achieved some success, and I am sorry to read in the newspapers that the present administration has seen fit to close the office. I think it was doing valuable work, and more valuable work could have beeen done. I believe that a very considerable movement could have been secured of those people toward our northwest. A moderate movement had already been started, and I believe it would have increased with time. Now let me put this thought before our friends.

It is not to the interest of Canada that a man who has good abilities shall be kept in an environment where he cannot use those abilities to his own advantage or to the advantage of the country. With respect to the man who is born, we will say, in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick in that condition of life that does not give him a farm to cultivate or a business to conduct, and who must spend his time in those provinces an employee of some other person, surely it is to the interest of Canada that that man, by removing to our Canadian west, becomes a proprietor and a producer on a large scale and adds enormously to the productive wealth of the country year by year. Is it not to the benefit of the country as well as to the individual himself, that instead of only securing a livelihood in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick, by taking advantage of the opportunities which exist on the prairies, he is able to become a producer on a large scale, and become, we will say, a man of wealth and substance? Surely it is to the good of Canada that this change should be made as well as to the good of the man himself. I do not sympathize with the view that would restrict the people of the maritime provinces, Quebec or Ontario, to the limited opportunities of those provinces when the greater opportunities of the western provinces are available to them. I want it to be distinctly understood that I have no word of discredit for the maritime provinces, or for Ontario and Quebec, or the opportunities that exist there. Probably there are no more beautiful countries in the world. Probably there is no country where the advantages are greater, but if the initial advantages of this country have been occupied, if they have been absorbed by the population which has been resident there for a series of generations, it is reason and common sense that the same opportunity does not exist there for the recent generation that does exist in a country that still lies vacant and is open to the first man who takes advantage of it. That is the situation and that is why the population in the west has increased and why the population in the maritime provinces and Ontario and Quebec has not increased. It is for the good of the country that the opportunities of the western provinces are taken advantage of by Canadians as much as possible. It would have been a misfortune for Canada if these opportunities had not been taken advantage of by Canadians and Canadians could not stay at home in the eastern provinces and still take advantage of them. There is nothing to regret because they have availed themselves of them. The only regret is that the people of eastern Canada, in so many thousands, have gone to the United States, have added their population and their wealth and their energy to that country and that these have been lost to Canada. Over a million of our people, born in Canada, are to-day in the United States instead of in our own northwest building up our own country.

I do not wish to introduce any controversial matter, but I think the references of the hon. Minister of the Interior as to the results of what he was pleased to call the National Policy were scarcely unfortunate under these conditions when we consider that under the rule of that policy, when it was in its fullest blast, was the time when we lost most of our people, when they transferred themselves from this country to that. We lost them and our rivals gained them. The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) went into a good deal of detail as to the administration of immigration matters in the province of Ontario and he found some fault with the attitude of the Dominion Department of Immigration. I do not know how his discourse struck other members of the House but when my hon. friend stated that he himself was an officer of the Ontario government administering matters, it struck me that from the amount of complaint that he was able to make and the readiness with which he found matter to complain of there would naturally be some difficulty for another government to give any administration within the sphere of his influence that would be satisfactory to him. May I just suggest here that this is one of the difficulties that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior will have to deal with if he desires to co-operate with the provincial governments in regard to immigration effort. I wish him all success, but I must say that any efforts of ours to co-operate with the provincial government of Ontario were not met with any spirit that tended to success and co-operation as the House might very well judge by the remarks of the hon. member for South Oxford. I do not wish to trouble the House with the details of the matter, but when we did the best we could to secure immigration of a desirable character to Ontario, we did not find the administration of the government of Ontario at all sympathetic or showing any apparent desire to co-operate with us in the effort. I hope the present minister will have more success in this line than I had. But, I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that in his mention of the interviews that he had with the different premiers of the different provinces his interviews so far were restricted to the premiers who were of the same political persuasion as himself, and did not happen to include the public representatives of the different provinces of a different political persuasion. There might be some difficulty in working out the problem on that line.

Mr. PELLETIER. They are all coming around now.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I suppose that is the object. Until they do come around I think possibly there might be some little difficulty such as we had the misfortune to find in Ontario. I will not trouble the House with the details of our little difficulties in Ontario. We did the best we could and we believe that the immigration effort that we put forth in Ontario did have a good effect. But, we were quite aware of the limitation of our work and we would be very glad to see that work carried on with better results than we were able to achieve. Possibly with cordial co-operation between the Dominion and provincial governments better results can be achieved.

I want to say one word now in regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) in which he objects strongly to the financial restriction which is placed upon immigration. That financial restriction was not placed until there appeared to be the very greatest urgency and necessity for it. The financial restriction was placed upon immigration, and I do not think there is any doubt or that there can be any question that the improvement which we have secured in the standing and character of the immigrants who have come during the past few years, notwithstanding the tremendous increase in their numbers, is very largely due to the financial requirement as well as other methods of selection and restriction.

I do not think it is possible in this day and generation to have a successful immigration policy satisfactory to the people of this country unless it is selective and restrictive. It is true cases of hardship arise and it is true that in the past many have landed here who did not have twenty-five or fifty dollars, but the times have changed and I say it here now, and I say it strongly, that in my judgment a restrictive and selective immigration policy is an absolute necessity in this Dominion, and a financial requirement from the immigrant is one important feature of such a policy. I have no objection whatever to the resolution, but I must warn its mover (Mr. Rhodes), that he is too sanguine if he expects that any amount of government effort or government expenditure will achieve the same success in the maritime provinces as has been achieved in regard to the prairie provinces where the opportunities are greater.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver), think that the immigrants should be examined at the port of embarkation.

Mr. OLIVER. The people have been kind enough to relieve me of the responsibility of administering the Immigration Department, and I do not think it important that I should give my opinion on that matter. However, I may frankly state that my view is that parliament having laid down the rule that immigrants shall not be admitted to Canada unless they meet certain physical and financial requirements, it is the duty of the government to carry out that law. It is a responsibility on the steamship companies that they shall not bring to our shores passengers who are not able to meet the requirements we have laid down, and if we took on ourselves the responsibility of holding an examination on the other side of the water, we would be taking on our shoulders a responsibility that the circumstances did not call for, and we would not be any further ahead in protecting the immigrants. We have not jurisdiction outside of our shores, but the steamships have jurisdiction in the ports whence they sail. They have a nominal medical examination at these ports, and if they make that nominal medical examination practical there will be no trouble about it. I do not think it is a sound policy for Canada to undertake a medical examination on the other side of the Atlantic. In my judgment our immigration policy is best carried out by the methods pursued up to the present time.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver), did not touch the real question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Bickerdike), has already spoken.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I just wish to point out that there is no doubt we could get a law passed allowing examination before embarkation and although there might be extra expense it would be worth money. If my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) realized the great hardship experienced by these families which are broken up, he would recommend the new Minister of the Interior to change the existing law.

Mr. OLIVER. The steamship offices have their own medical officers and make an examination in the country from which the vessel sails, and if that examination is effective, it is all that is required, and if it is not effective, the steamship companies suffer the loss of taking the immigrants back again. I do not think the responsibility of this country goes any further than that. While I would not find any fault with the present Minister of Interior if he should order an examination on the other side, we will be borrowing trouble without achieving any good results.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HAZEN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. OLIVER. What business to-morrow.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Bills and estimates.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the Grain Bill be taken?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand it will.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at twelve o'clock midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, January 30, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

On the orders of the day being called:

DEATH OF THE DUKE OF FIFE.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I desire to make allusion to the very sad tidings which came last evening of the death of His Grace the Duke of Fife. He was a man of distinguished ability, and one whose whole career has been characterized by earnest effort and purpose in all that concerned the United Kingdom and the empire. The exposure which he suffered in connection with the unfortunate shipwreck which occurred on his recent voyage to Egypt undoubtedly gave rise to the illness to which he succumbed yesterday. He was very closely connected by marriage with His Majesty the King, and with His Royal Highness the Governor General. His widow is the Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to express the profound and sincere sympathy of the members of this House in the bereavement which has occurred. And I am sure my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), will join me in expressing, on behalf of all the members of this House, their very deep sympathy in this bereavement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those who sit on this side of the House, I very sincerely associate myself with my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) in expressing the sentiments which to-day, I am sure, permeate the souls of all British subjects, not only in Canada, but in all parts of the world. His Grace the Duke of Fife, entering the Royal family, took on the spirit of that family, and that spirit is, as every British subject knows, that of absolute devotion to duty. They have made it their business as it is their privilege, in every branch of affairs, to interest themselves in all that concerns the life, not only of the British nation, but of the British Empire. For this they have earned the gratitude and sympathy of all British subjects, and everything of good or bad that affects them cannot but be shared by their subjects. On this occasion the mourning of the Royal Family will be the mourning of the whole empire.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. BEST: MR. MORPHY.

Mr. J. A. BEST (Dufferin). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to a paragraph that appeared in the 'Toronto Globe' yesterday, a part of which reads as follows:

> For instance, in the Agricultural Committee on Wednesday last Mr. Sexsmith, the chairman, was formally told by Mr. John A. Best, of Dufferin, and Mr. H. B. Morphy, of North Perth, both of them stalwart Conservatives, that he must warn the Premier to 'keep that man Hughes in check' or there would be trouble.

I wish to say here that I never mentioned Colonel Hughes' name, nor did I mention that of the right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Borden). But I believe that the statement I have just read is on a par with many others that appear in the same paper. There is not a word of truth in it. I never criticised the Minister of Militia's (Mr. Hughes) estimates, nor the estimates of any other department, nor did I hear any other member of that committee criticise those estimates. I think it most unfair that such statements should be made concerning the meetings of the committee. A stop should be put to it. I wish to say to the Minister of Militia and the other ministers, that no fault was found in the committee with the estimates so far as I know. The paragraph I have quoted is quite untrue.

Mr. PROULX. Did the hon. gentleman, (Mr. Best), say that too much money was being spent on the militia?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MORPHY (North Perth). I also desire to say a word in regard to the same matter. The paragraph quoted by my hon. friend from Dufferin, so far as the mention of my name is concerned, is absolutely unwarranted. I did not, either directly or indirectly, refer to the estimates of the Militia Department, nor did I refer to the minister (Mr. Hughes) by name. Nor did I refer, either directly or indirectly, or use words which could have any reference to the estimates of the Militia Department. I do not feel much concerned myself about a report of that kind, but I think that in fairness to the minister (Mr. Hughes), I should make an absolute and unqualified denial of this statement made in the 'Globe.'

PAYMENT OF CENSUS AND ELECTION OFFICIALS.

Mr. NEELY. I desire to call the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr Borden), in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell), to the fact that I am almost daily receiving communications from census enumerators engaged in the census work of last summer, as well as from deputy returning officers engaged in the last election, complaining that they have not been paid. I do not know the reason for the delay; but, on behalf of the men who are sending these communications, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the situation.

Mr. BORDEN. I shall bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture at once. I do not know the cause of the delay, as it is a purely departmental matter.

Mr. EMMERSON. I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State (Mr. Roche) to an inquiry made on Friday evening with respect to the non-payment of the election expenses in the county of Albert for the last election.

Mr. ROCHE. I have brought this to the attention of the Attorney General, in whose department it is; and as yet he has not furnished me with a reply.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

Mr. MACDONALD. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), in the absence of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane), for a statement as to the newspaper report of the appointment of certain commissioners to investigate matters in connection with the Transcontinental railway. The Minister of Railways is in his place, and perhaps he would be good enough to let us know what foundation there is for this report.

Mr. COCHRANE. A commission has been appointed by order in council to investigate the affairs of the Transcontinental railway.

Mr. MACDONALD. Who are the commissioners?

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Lynch-Staunton and Mr. Gutelius, of the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the minister lay on the table the order in council and other papers in connection with the appointment?

Mr. COCHRANE. I will be very glad to do so.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the appointment of a Tariff Commission. (See 'Hansard,' January 24). He said: These resolutions relate to the creation of a tariff commission. It will suffice at this stage to say that the commission is to consist of three members to be appointed by the Governor in Council, for a period of five years. The salary of the chairman is to be $7,500, and the salary of each of the other members to be $7,000. Each commissioner gives his entire time to the work of the commission. The duties of the commission are set forth in the resolutions. Authority is given to the commission to engage such expert and other assistance as may be necessary for carrying on their work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What classes of the community are to be represented?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The question of the personnel of the commission has not yet been decided. I have no hesitation, however, in saying that I think it would be a mistake, either to exclude or appoint any member of the commission on account of his calling. My present idea is that the commission should consist of able, earnest and high-minded men, commanding the confidence of the entire community, men who are broad enough to be in sympathy with all the classes and interests of the community. I would not exclude any man by reason of his being a farmer, or an artisan, or a manufacturer; and I would not appoint any man for the same reason. I am not able to give a more definite answer at the present time, except to say that my idea is that this commission should be composed of men capable of representing not only the farming community but all other interests in Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The resolution which we now have under consideration creates a new departure in our national legislation. Everything depends upon the character of the commission. It would, not, therefore, be advisable, to offer any criticism, either of approval or condemnation, at present, but to reserve for a future time suggestions on this matter.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Does the hon. the Finance Minister propose to fix a day for moving the second reading?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The second reading will come in due course. So far as I am concerned, I would be quite willing to fix a day that might suit the convenience of hon. members. But I expect it will come on in a week.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on the resolution.

On section 4,

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Has the commission any initiation of its own in any matter?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The commission is empowered to act under direction of the Finance Minister.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). In everything?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). In everything. It will only have independent initiation in the manner of carrying on an inquiry into any matter on which it may be requested to obtain information.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Then it will differ from the Railway Commission, which has powers of initiation of its own, and has a wide jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of this commission is limited absolutely to questions referred to it by the minister.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Yes. It is part of the machinery of government, for the purpose of obtaining information upon which the government may act.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have there been any representations made to the government asking for this commission, either from the farmers, or from the manufacturers, or from other people?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am not aware of any representations having been made such as the hon. gentleman refers to, none, so far as I know, since our taking office. But the matter of a tariff commission, as my friend knows, has been a subject of discussion for a considerable time in this country.

The creation of a tariff commission was a prominent plank in the platform of the right hon. leader of the government during the last election, and I believe that as long ago as 1908 the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) expressed himself, in general terms at least, as favourable to the creation of a tariff commission. Apart from that I know of no direct representation that has been made, but from the comments of the press since the matter has been announced, I have reason to believe that the proposal to appoint a tariff commission has been well received by the people generally throughout the country.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Is it intended to create a body with any power to negotiate with other countries in regard to questions of tariff arrangements?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My conception of the commission is not that it would have any function that belongs to the government of fixing tariff rates, or negotiating; its purpose is to furnish information to the government on which the government may act in framing its tariff law or in negotiating. There is one clause in the resolution that they may:

> Inquire into any other matter or thing in relation to the trade or commerce of Canada which the Governor in Council sees fit to refer to the commission for inquiry and report.

Of course that is very wide in its terms. It is not in my mind that the commission is intended to negotiate, it is to obtain information on which the government may negotiate or frame its tariff law. I look on the commission as a part of the machinery of government for the purpose of obtaining accurate information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is of record that the Manufacturers' Association has again and again asked for a tariff commission but, as I understand, what was in their minds was a tariff commission with much larger powers than those contained in these resolutions, and which, for my part, I never thought could be granted. As I understand, the government could not see its way to give the wide powers to the commission which were asked for by the Manufacturers' Association, I always was of opinion that we might have a board to collect information. I do not know that this commission entirely corresponds with what I have had in my own mind but, as I said, this is not the time to discuss this matter, this is the occasion to elicit information upon what is proposed by my hon. friend.

Mr. CASH. Will the report of this commission be made public, or is it to be a report to the government alone?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). There is a provision in the Bill which I propose to introduce to this effect:

> Should evidence or information in its nature confidential, relating to the business or affairs of any person, firm or corporation be given or elicited in the course of any inquiry, the evidence or information shall not be made public by the commission in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation, respectively, but this subsection shall not apply to any inquiry under sub-section 3 of section 4 of this Act.

This particular subsection relates to an inquiry as to whether there is a combination to unduly enchance prices. Subject to what I have read, the report will be made through the Minister of Finance, and would be available to the government in framing its tariff law and, I should imagine, would be available for the information of the House, subject to the right of the government to withhold any information in the public interest. My idea would be that these reports would be made to the minister, and to the government. The information would be obtained by the commission, and would be of use for the purpose I have indicated. I should imagine the information would be available to the public, subject to these clauses.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend does not seem to have made up his mind as to the publicity that will be given to the information gathered by the commission. I would respectfully suggest that when the Bill is brought down it should make specific provision for opportunity to be given to the public, who are interested, to have the benefit of that information. If the country is paying for its collection the country is entitled to the advantage of it in making up its mind as to whether the recommendations of the government should be followed or not, that is, the country is paying for the information and the country should have the benefit of that information except in such cases as my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. BORDEN. The qualification to which the minister has alluded is one that has been the practice of all governments in connection with the customs and other departments of the government. There has been no departure from the ordinary practice.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the Minister of Customs be, ipso facto, a member of the board?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No, he is not to be a member of the board. The board is to consist of three members from outside of the department. It is a commission for the purpose of obtaining information for the use of the minister and of the government.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). As to the negotiation of treaties, we ought to have before us, when we discuss the Bill in the House, the Bill creating the Tariff Commission in the United States. That is an important body although it has very small powers as defined in the Act.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). There is no Tariff Commission in the United States.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). No, but there is a board of experts at the disposal of the government and their reports and investigations, especially in connection with the recent negotiations with Canada, were immediately placed at the disposal of the House and printed as documents and it would be very essential that all the information collected by them of a public character should be at the immediate disposal of this House and of the country.

Motion agreed to, resolution read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 88) to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.

The motion was agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE GRAIN ACT.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 32) respecting Grain. He said: I am not going to impose on the House an explanation of all the different sections of this very voluminous Bill, but I am going to say a few words by way of introduction, more with the idea of giving to the House, if indeed it is at all necessary, a connected idea of the operations of the grain trade, and consequently of the Bill which I am introducing. It derives its great importance, of course, from the immensity and from the wideness of the particular product with which it deals, and if important at any one particular time its importance is increasing as the years go by inasmuch as the commodity with which it deals is constantly growing in volume. Not to go back very far in the history of legislation on this subject I may say that the substance of the recent enactments, and of this Bill, are based largely upon investigations which commenced in the year 1906. In that year a commission was appointed consisting of three gentlemen, Messrs. Miller, McNair, and Goldie. That commission looked into all matters in connection with the grain trade of Canada and with reference to all the legislation which was at that time upon the statute-books, namely, the Inspection and Sales Act and the Manitoba Grain Act. These gentlemen took up the matter of investigation in July, 1906, and pursued it to a finish and reported on October 11, 1907. They went to the source of production of the grain in the west, and traced the operation from the farmer throughout the different stages of storage and carriage and inspection and marketing, going as far as Victoria and Vancouver on the western coast and as far as the Atlantic ports and Europe in the east, and they made, as I consider, a very thorough investigation, and produced a report of forty pages which for compactness and directness of recommedation has not, I think, been often surpassed by the report of any commission.

The conclusions they came to were: that the grade system was the most suitable system upon which to base the grain trade of Canada. They reported against the sample market as being expensive and cumbrous, and not in excellence to be compared with the grade system. They reported in favour of a better system of supervision for terminal elevators under present ownership. They reported against government ownership and against prohibiting private interests in the terminals and also for supervision and control over eastern elevators with the object—

Mr. OLIVER. What is that last remark of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They reported in favour of a system of more strict supervision of the terminal elevators under private or corporate ownership, and were rather against prohibiting private interests from participating in their operation, and therefore they were against government ownership of the terminals. They also reported for a strict supervision and control over the eastern elevators so as to keep—which was the object all the way through—the identity of the grade which had been established as the standard of sale. In the end, they reported a series of amendments to the Act then in force. What took place directly after that was a study I suppose by the government of the substance of this commission's report and after that there was a conference in 1908 where the grain growers and farmers' associations of the western provinces and the representatives of the carrying interests, the bankers, the grain and produce exchanges, the people who owned private and corporate elevators all met together, and before the minister in conference threshed out all these questions taking up particularly all the amendments which had been recommended by the commission of 1906. The result of this was a volume of one hundred and sixty pages of evidence and of argument which was brought out in that conference and upon which the Grain Act and the Inspection and Sales Act were remodelled and strengthened. But, so far as I can judge, these acts very largely embodied the principle which had been laid down by the commission of 1906. Last year there supervened that immense deputation from the west which besieged the then Prime Minister and the members of both Houses and presented their views in extenso. Then after that came the formation of the Act which was introduced into the Senate and was accompanied by a select committee's investigation and report. All these different interests again met and canvassed all the questions of interest, gave their views very fully and very extensively, and after all this had been done the Bill was passed through the Senate. With some exceptions, but not many in number, it may be said that all parties agreed pretty well upon the substance of the Act. There are two or three points which are still in sharp controversy and which it will be for this House to take into consideration and ultimately to pass upon. Bill (No. 32) is a replica to a large extent of the Bill which was passed by the Senate in 1911, with a number of amendments and betterments which have been introduced and which are now comprised in the Bill which I place before the House. So much with reference to the course of conference and examination and legislation after examination, with regard to this matter within the last five or six years.

As one looks over that and examines the Bill before the House, he will be struck with several things. In the first place he will be struck with the idea, which I believe is entirely correct, that probably no country in the world possesses a system for the inspection, grading and sale of grain that at all compares in complexity and in thoroughness with that embodied in the Acts at present on our statute-books and in the provisions in the Bill before the House. Indeed no other business in Canada is wrapped around with so many restrictions and safeguards as that dealt with in this measure. Whether all these restrictions are conducive in the end to the best is a matter on which there may be difference of opinion; but, at present, at least, there is a large body of opinion which wants a little more law. Seemingly, every possible safeguard and facility that could be thrown around the producer and the primary seller of the grain has been sought to be embodied in the legislation which is either now on the statute-book or is contained in this Bill. Your farmer in the far west for instance has numerous avenues open to him, in most cases hedged around by every precaution which the law can use to make it easy for him to sell his grain and to give him security for the price agreed upon. He can have his own method of disposing of his grain unrestricted by anything; he sells it to anybody he likes at whatever price he likes and pockets his pay without any interference from the law or the government. If he is not satisfied to sell in that way, he can command his own car, by an arrangement made legal, by application in turn, and the railway company has to furnish him with a car at the siding or loading platform at his own station into which he can load his grain either from the platform or from the siding. He can have that car consigned to any elevator or consignee he wishes, and is protected by law as regards the grade upon which he shall be paid and also as regards the security and the like which attaches from that time until he has made final disposition of his grain. He can sell that car to the track buyer if he pleases, but the track buyer is hedged around by license and by legal provisions to the end that he cannot defraud the seller on the price he has agreed to pay. He has an elevator to which he can sell at the price agreed upon between himself and the elevator man, and if he and the elevator man cannot agree upon the price, the grade, the dockage, he can yet make a sale to the elevator man and the grain, its identity being preserved by means of sample, is to be inspected in Winnipeg, and the grade fixed by government inspection, entailing upon the elevator man the necessity of settling with his customer according to the inspection, the grade and the dockage which is given by the inspector at Winnipeg. If he does not wish to sell his grain at once, he has the privilege of storing it at the flat warehouse, or, under certain conditions, he can store it in the elevator and wait for a better market if he chooses to tempt the future. One of the primary objects of the legislation seems to have been to give as many facilities as possible for the easy sale of the farmers grain and to hedge around that grain with all possible security which shall ensure to the farmer the whole price of the sale he has made. So much with reference to that.

The system of grading as everybody in the House knows is simply an attempt by law to fix certain standards and make them uniform and permanent by which the seller sells his grain and by which the purchaser buys it from the time it leaves the wagon of the farmer, until it finally reaches its destination. These grades being fixed, the farmer at his station sells out his wheat according to grade and gets the price according to that grade, and the ultimate buyer and every buyer between has to pay according to that grade. One of the primal objects of the legislation is to preserve, not the identity of the grain, but the identity of the grade from the starting point to the finish. Indeed there is provision in the Act which makes it possible if a man wishes to preserve the absolute identity of his grain from the starting point until it arrives in Europe, for him to do so. Although some of the members of this House who know these things may think that I am taking time without much warrant in making these standards, yet probably a good many members of the House and the public do not know the system. We carry this on a step further. All this grain carried from the west, when it comes within the purview of the city of Winnipeg, is there met by the samplers and inspectors who do the work of sampling and inspection and thereby fix the grades.

Next all this grain passes through Winnipeg until it is met with that sampling and grading, that fixing of the standard, by the employees of the government provided for that purpose. After it has been sampled and graded it is sent on to the terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William. There again government officials open the door of the car, supervise the unloading of the grain from the car into the elevator, supervise the weighing of the grain, and supervise the placing of the grain in its own proper bin, so that again the identity of the grade by government supervision and control is maintained within the elevator. Receipts are given at one end of the elevator, and receipts are surrendered at the other end when the grain comes out for shipment. There again the government official supervises the whole process of shipment out so as to preserve the identity of the grade, inspects it as it passes on its way to the car or the vessel, to see that the grade of grain which has been entered at the other side of the elevator comes out at the shipping side, and that there is no deterioration between the two processes. After that the grain takes its flight by car or vessel and wends its way towards the market, in Ontario or in Europe. If it is for the latter, it is under supervision more or less constant and thorough until it reaches the Atlantic seaboard. This is the system which under past and present legislation has been provided, a system which in its theory is, I think, a very excellent one, which may have weaknesses, as every system will have, but these weaknesses, so far as it can be done, we aim to remove by the present legislation so as to make the whole system as strong and as thorough as it can possibly be made. I have stated that if we look over every other grain-growing country in the world we shall find no other system to compare at all with this. Conditions and circumstances differ in different countries, and that may explain in part the difference of systems. There are, however, many countries in the world which to-day are studying the Canadian system, and which are gravitating towards some features of the Canadian system and are designing to place them in their own legislation. Now, one would think that with all this there should be no dissatisfaction in the west, no troubles to be met, no grievances to remedy. But the experience of western men and of some eastern men will show that all is not calmness and peace in the far western region or the near western region, and that there are yet voices raised here and there, not a few, which demand something more and are giving voice to the troubles with which they are plagued and of which they wish to be rid.

Now, while I venture an opinion with a great deal of modesty, never having been a grain raiser, a grain shipper or an elevator owner, I think that some of these troubles are well voiced and some of them are due to circumstances which as reasonable men, we are all bound to take into consideration, and which it requires time and patience and co-operation to overcome. One of the main troubles in the west to-day is the problem of transportation. There is more grain there to-day than can be got out of the country. From the base of the Rockies down to Fort William grain is lying in the fields, in the elevators, in the cars and on the tracks. It is not moving fast enough, any of it that is moving, and a great deal of it is not moving at all, but the people who own it are very anxious that it should be moving. The problem, as I have stated, is one largely of circumstances. The grain-producing area has extended rapidly, the carrying facilities have also been extended rapidly, but production has not only overtaken but has far outstripped the capacity for transport, and that is one of the reasons which is causing the difficulty to-day. The three great railway systems in the west spread out to a width of 600 or 800 miles just this side of the Rockies, gathering in from every section of the country, then narrow down to a very narrow strip south of Lake Winnipeg, and after they reach Port Arthur and Fort William have no Canadian means of rail exit at this time, except the one single track of the Canadian Pacific. Up to the end of navigation, about the middle of December, the lake marine furnishes an easy and capacious method of taking away the grain that comes to the elevators at those terminal points; but when frost closes that means of exit, then for from three to five months no grain can go out by a Canadian route with the exception of that which is carried on the single rail of the Canadian Pacific railway. Now, how can we remedy that state of things? I have gone into this matter pretty thoroughly. The Railway Commission has gone into it much more thoroughly than I have; they have the means of doing it. My opinion, which I believe is coincided in fully by the Railway Commission, is that the three railways have done all this year that they could do to facilitate the movement of grain in the northwest. But it is absolutely impossible for it all to be moved under the circumstances as they exist to-day. Now, how are we going to remedy that state of things? Presently it cannot be remedied. No man can in five minutes, five weeks or five months' time devise any method which will remedy that condition of things. It has to be remedied by time, patience and co-operation of effort. But remedies are opening up. In another year—and it is too bad that we have to wait for another year—or two at the farthest, there will be another line of railway which will give an exit from the west through Cochrane and the railway systems of eastern Ontario and eastern Canada. That will double the facilities. At some time or other, I do not know when, the Canadian Northern may have its independent line of communication from the west to the east, and that will give still another each.

In the course of time these railways may double their tracks, and that will more than double their capacity. But that will take time. The Hudson Bay railway, which has been getting along in an easy and listless way for the last ten years, is now in a position where it gives promise of speedy opening of another route. It will take time also to bring this about. But in the course of two or three years that route ought to be available as well. Then, I think, one of the greatest factors to relieve the situation in the future will be the opening up of a drainage of wheat from as far east as Moosejaw by western channels with a view to being carried by way of the Pacific ocean. I have no doubt that when the Panama canal is opened, the Canadian Pacific railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Canadian Northern railway will be favoured lines for the exit of the wheat by way of the Pacific. This will furnish transportation for a share of the increased product and will to that extent prevent congestion. So the farmers who are working in the west and others equally interested—though they may not be working at farming in the east—for this is a common interest—may look forward with confidence to the future and to an adequate transport for the mighty productions of the northwest. The subject is a most interesting one, and I would advise every member of the House to get his studying cap on and consider carefully the situation. It will be very interesting to note just what changes are to be made, even affecting the middle of the prairie regions of the northwest, and all other parts of Canada, by the stupendous undertaking now being carried on across Panama which may be expected to see its completion in a year and a half or two years from this time. It will have an immense effect on transportation and on the distribution of materials in Canada in future years.

Mr. DEVLIN. But what about the Georgian Bay canal?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend (Mr. Devlin), coming from greater things to smaller things—but not infinitesimal—is again anxious about the Georgian Bay canal. Let us stick to our muttons, and deal with this Bill. The Georgian Bay canal will come up in due time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But what has this Bill to do with all these questions of transportation?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will see in a moment. I have been speaking of the difficulties met in the northwest, and named transportation as one of them. I think I have given a plain statement of the situation——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And very interesting.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto)—and I thought it was not at all out of place to lighten up that question with the hope for the future.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is only by hope in the future that we better our present.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And that is why my hon. friend (Mr. Devlin) is anxious about the Georgian Bay canal. That is one of the hopes of the future.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Quite so. But, unfortunately, the Georgian Bay canal will not be a very capacious winter method of taking out the grain, and that is the subject to which I have been specially calling attention. But we never know what the possibilities are, and it may be that the Georgian Bay canal will even be used as a winter route some day.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I desire to ask the minister (Mr. Foster), if the hope of transportation for the future is the best solution he has to offer for the western grain blockade of to-day?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If the hon. member (Mr. Martin, Regina) will possess his soul in patience, he will hear what I have to offer. There is another thing intimately connected with transportation, and that is the question of storage. I think that the difficulty in the northwest, now and in the future, is to be met in part by increase of storage facilities as well as increase of transportation facilities—the two, indeed, go together. One of the factors of the situation in the northwest is that the farmers there, as a rule, do not think that it is a part of their work to furnish what the farmer of eastern and middle Canada furnishes—store houses, granaries, barns, in which to place the crops he raises in order to keep them until it pleases him to sell them. Whether it arises from inability or from whatever cause, the fact is that not more than one in a hundred of the farmers or grain growers of the northwest ever attempts individually to meet the problem of storage. It is much easier for him to put his grain on his wagon and take it to the elevator than to first put it in a granary and then re-handle it to take it to the elevator or station.

There are difficulties in the way of erecting granaries. Few farmers are able to erect granaries in the early times of their farming operations. Lumber is scarce; it costs money; and money is by no means a superfluity with the man who takes up a homestead and goes to work with only his hands and his hopes for the development of his farm and the making of a livelihood from it. However, the difficulty arises, it is the fact that storage is not provided by the farmers individually of the northwest as a rule. But that there is large storage capacity in the west we all know. There are farmers' elevators at various points on the several railways as well as the great terminal elevators. I have a statement showing the storage capacity as follows:

	Bushels.
Country elevators..	57,500,000
Ontario terminals..	25,700,000
Ontario milling terminals..	1,700,000
Eastern transfers..	20,500,000
Total..	105,400,000

Yet we have the fact that these storage facilities are inadequate to take all the grain that offers, so that there are millions of bushels of grain to-day, threshed or unthreshed, in the fields not stored in any way. The storage capacity is increased by the capacity of the vessels wintering at the terminals, which is about 5,000,000 bushels to 7,000,000 bushels.

The total storage capacity at that terminal point during the winter season, therefore, comes closely to 30,000,000 or 32,000,000 bushels. It is also to be remembered that when you talk of capacity you are not altogether close up to the actual storage they can make; owing to difference of grades some space is left vacant. Then there is a trouble in the west which intensifies this condition, namely, that the whole transfer of grain, so far as the west is concerned, compresses itself within a period of three months at most, and a period of probably nearer two months on the occasion of a season such as we have just had. So that the immense reapings from the farms of the west are garnered and ready for market in the brief period of two or two and-a-half months. That complicates the situation. It seems to be economically impossible for railway transport systems to have sufficient transporting cars to fill that great demand in two or three months, and at all proceed upon business or economical principles. A storage system must in some way or other come in to assist the present transport facilities, and the problem in the west will be solved by the increase of storage, and the increase, as soon as it can possibly be done, of transport facilities out from the west.

Mr. CURRIE. Has the hon. gentleman any figures to show the storage capacity of the granaries of the farmers in the west as compared with the granary system in eastern Canada?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think I read the figures of the company elevators.

Mr. CURRIE. I mean the farms themselves. In Ontario the farmer stores his own grain.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think, in comparison with the other figures, it is almost a negligible quantity.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That may be true as regards Saskatchewan, of which I cannot speak, but it is not true so far as Manitoba is concerned.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Manitoba being an older province, is coming more and more towards the point of preparing and arranging for its own storage, and in that respect Manitoba occupies a less troublesome position than either Saskatchewan or Alberta, which have not made the same progress in preparing storage facilities.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I think in Saskatchewan itself there are more storage facilities on the farms than there are in Manitoba. I know I am safe in saying that in the older districts of Saskatchewan the great majority of the farmers have storage facilities up to date, not only in the shape of lumber granaries, but in the shape of granaries made out of some kind of galvanized material.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Is this kind of granary increasing?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Yes, as the country develops.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not object to these questions or interruptions at all. These gentlemen, who live in the west, have a more intimate acquaintance with the whole situation than I can have. Still, I think all will agree that my general reasoning is correct, and that the farmers in the west have not been preparing and furnishing themselves with storage facilities to the same extent as farmers in the east. The storage of farms, taking the newer and older sections altogether, is a quantity which is infinitely less than the line elevators and the company elevators, and other storage facilities. It is also true that the newer portions of the country, as the country opens up, have a minimum of storage facilities; the older parts of the country as they grow begin to furnish themselves, and have larger storage facilities.

Then there is the trouble in the west with reference to prices. The farmer feels that he does not get the amount which he is entitled to from his grain as the producer and the primary owner. No doubt that is a well-founded feeling and it arises from the very causes I have mentioned, namely, that the transport facilities are inadequate, and consequently either no transport can be got, or delayed transport only can be got, and this diminishes the price which the farmer has a right to expect. But these difficulties are gradually disappearing as transport facilities are made better, and that is something which requires time, co-operation and patience. The price is also affected by the rates of freight, and the complaint from the farmers is found very general that they are being charged too much on their grain. That is a matter which is in the hands of the Railway Commission. The Railway Commission has already done something in that line, and will do more, as it is about to undertake now in the month of February an exhaustive examination of freight rates in the west. I suppose that is one of the grievances for which the management and work of the Railway Commission will find some if not altogether a total, alleviation.

Then there are the manipulators or middlemen in the storage. It is complained in reference to some of the terminal storage elevators, so far as I can understand, that the grain of the farmer starting with certain qualities in each grade may be mixed by the elevator man or owner, or proprietor, so that the farmer gets no benefit from it, and that the elevator man, or owner himself, makes a profit by the mixing of the grades, strengthening a lower grade by an overplus of an upper grade, and bringing the two up to a higher grade for which he gets a higher price. That is a grievance of the western farmer, which brings to the front the question of terminal elevators, and it is that question which, in this Bill we undertake to solve, and it will require the best efforts of all of us on both sides of the House to solve it in a manner satisfactory to all, and at the same time in an effective manner.

I do not know whether I should offer another suggestion to men who are practical farmers, but I will venture on that dangerous ground, and say that in my view another alleviation for the future is possible, and I think is very probable, namely, if the farmers of the west will turn their attention more and more to mixed farming. In that way they will diminish, to a certain extent, the over-production of grain, and at the same time fortify their own positions in the maintenance of the fertility of the soil, which is after all, the most valuable possession they have. It seems to me a striking thing that out in the west where the land is in superabundance, the west must yet go to every other country under the sun, and to every other part of Canada, in order to find its own bacon, its own meats, its own vegetables, its own eggs, its own poultry, and that kind of supply, and pay freight and charges to bring them in from the distant places.

I am sure that at some time that condition will be remedied, and that the people of the west, besides raising grain, will also raise these articles in abundance for their own consumption, and I should hope in the not very distant future in sufficient quantity to export them to other parts of the country with a consequently increased revenue to themselves. I am not an adviser to advise the west, that is just the statement of an onlooker, and I think it is sympathized with by people who live in the west and by those who do not live there.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Have the farmers of the west now a grievance in connection with obtaining advances against grain on their places? Can a farmer get an advance on the grain in his granary or is there trouble in that respect?

Mr. TURRIFF. He could not get it.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not know whether that is a grievance which is put forward or not. It would be a difficult matter of finance for a man to get an advance upon the grain as it stands in the field. He can get an advance on it when he gets it on a railway track, into a car or into an elevator, he then has something which he can deliver and which the man who makes the advance is assured will be security for his loan; but if the grain is on his field, or is threshed but still on his place, it would seem to me he would not have much chance of getting an advance especially under the present condition of things when there is no certainty as to when he will get it out. That makes it all the more difficult.

Coming down to the present Act, I have only a few words to say as I think it would be better for us to take this matter up in committee. The object of the present Act is to remedy these grievances and to alleviate these troubles in as far as an enactment of parliament can alleviate and help. The whole Act, which is a long one, is not new; it is a consolidation of the Inspection and Sales Act and the Manitoba Grain Act with some amendments and additions. The object is to perfect the governmental system of supervision and of control so as to meet some of the difficulties which have arisen and do away with some of the grievances which have been stated. A commission is to be formed which, in the first place, will have control of what has so far been controlled not by a commission but by officers appointed by the government. This commission will consist of three members. It will be the aim of the government to get three men who are in the first place honest, in the second place capable and efficient and in the third place, men with executive and organizing ability which, I think, is not the least qualification necessary for the work. In the hands of that commission, made as independent as a commission can be made, will be placed the whole control, supervision and work which is now entrusted to the different officers of the government.

The government also takes power in this Act to expropriate, to construct and to lease terminal elevators to the end that the selfish interest which it has heretofore been declared has worked against the interests of the farmer shall be eliminated as far as possible and such terminal elevators when constructed or built or leased will be managed by the commission, it will be their business to operate these elevators in addition to discharging the duties which are now placed upon the officers who are carrying out the Act as it has been on the statute-book.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Would you take away the existing rights of railways to maintain their own elevators?

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto). One of the most vexed and important questions that we will have to deal with in this House is what shall be done to eliminate the evil which is acknowledged to exist, the selfish interest. I am not prepared, at this moment, to say how far the government propose to go, that is a matter upon which I hope we shall be able to enlighten the House before this Bill is through; what we are getting by this Bill is the power to act and to operate through a commission.

This is not my Bill particularly, nor the Bill of any party; it is, as nearly as possible, a non-partisan Bill. I am its foster-father, at the present moment, but the child is much the same as when it came from its original parents; a little better dressed up it may be but still it is intrinsically the same child, and I take it that the parent of that child was not a Liberal government or a Liberal Conservative government, but it was the product of the conferences of all the interests in the matter after successive years of examination and discussion. This result was placed in concrete shape in the Bill which came down from the Senate. I do not know of any Bill that has come before parliament of recent years which comes upon a basis which more commends it to a careful, earnest, honest application of the best efforts of all of us on both sides of the House, to produce a piece of legislation which shall be acceptable to all concerned and which shall be beneficial to the country. The government are bound, by the introduction of the Bill, to steer it through the House but the government are not bigoted in this matter and for my own part I welcome the co-operation and the knowledge which so many members in this House have of this matter, I welcome and invite it in order that we may perfect the measure and make it, as I said, as good a measure as we can possibly have.

I do not think it necessary to keep you longer, I ought to apologize for having kept you so long. When I began to study this matter I found that I knew very little about it and that is what has prompted me to make a rather more extended exposition of the subject than I otherwise would have done for the benefit of members who had not paid attention to it so as to make us all more capable for the subsequent work of legislating in this matter.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the minister saying that he desires the co-operation of the House at large in perfecting this Bill. We private members on this side of the House are quite prepared to take full responsibility for any suggestions that we have to make in regard to its improvement, and I hope that any such suggestions will be accepted in a fair spirit by the government so that they may be properly discussed. At the same time, I hope that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) does not wish it to be understood in any way that the government as a government and himself as minister are not absolutely behind this Bill and responsible for it to the House and to the country.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I stated that.

Mr. OLIVER. I repeat that so that there shall be no mistake about that part of it. When my hon. friend introduced the Bill he mentioned something about possible amendments which would be introduced in committee. If there are such amendments and they are of importance the House should have due notice of them.

I do not think any apology is due to the House from the minister for taking up considerable time in placing before the House and the country the conditions surrounding this piece of, what I might call, special legislation. I think perhaps he phrased the case a little too strongly, when he said there was no such legislation anywhere else, because there is somewhat parallel legislation on the other side of the line where the conditions are almost identical with the conditions here. There is, however, a very great difference between the conditions surrounding the grain trade in the Canadian west and the adjoining portions of the United States, from the conditions which obtain in the greater part of the wheat producing areas of the world, and it is out of that difference in conditions that this legislation becomes necessary. If the grain were placed in sacks and transported in these sacks from the place of production to the place of consumption there would not be any need for this Bill. But, as I understand it, the grain from India, the grain from the Pacific coast of North America, and the grain from Australia is carried in sacks, and,therefore, such legislation as this is not necessary.

Mr. CURRIE. Does the United States federal government exact a standard of grain similar to that exacted in this legislation?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it does, but the state of Minnesota which produces similar grain to ours, under similar conditions provides a standard.

Mr. CURRIE. What percentage of the wheat of the United States is grown in Minnesota?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot tell, but I do know that a very large percentage of the wheat that stands on the same level as ours as to quality is grown in Minnesota. Such special legislation as this is in order that the grain may be carried from the point of production to the point of consumption without being put up in separate packages, and still preserve its identity as to quality. It is out of that situation that the whole of this legislation arises. The man who buys the grain from the farmer buys it on sample and the miller in Great Britain buys it also on sample, but in the carrying from the farmer in Canada to the miller in England it must be either carried in sacks or carried in bulk, and it being carried in bulk a great deal of this legislation becomes necessary in order that the rights, not particularly of the farmer, but of all the parties concerned in the transaction shall be preserved.

Mr. CURRIE. May I ask a question?

Mr. OLIVER. I shall be glad to answer my hon. friend (Mr. Currie), when I have finished, but I am now trying to present a somewhat intricate position to the House, and I would prefer to continue my remarks. It may be said: Why is not the grain transported in sacks and what difference would it make in the cost? Well, there would not only be the difference in the cost of the sacks, but there would be the difference in the cost of handling at each transfer en route. It is a fact that the grain can be handled from the railway car to the vessel and again from the vessel to the railway car more cheaply in bulk than if it were in separate parcels. As wheat is the great necessity of life, it is in the interests of producer and consumer that every item of cost that stands between the producer and the consumer shall be cut out, and that when conditions permit, the grain shall be carried in bulk. Then, legislation such as this is absolutely necessary if justice is to be done all the parties to the transfer.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). You mean every item of unnecessary cost?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, of course. I lay some stress upon this point because I think the minister seemed to lay the burden of the whole of this legislation upon the necessities of the farmer. The farmer is, of course, a very much interested party in the legislation, but he is not by any means the only party interested. The other parties who are concerned in the transportation and financing of this grain are proportionately as deeply interested in the provisions of the Grain Act, as the farmer is. It is legislation which is rendered necessary in the interests of the business of the country; the farmer, the merchant, the dealer, and the consumer. Then my hon. friend speaks of the difficulties that arise as soon as winter sets in, in connection with the transportation of grain to the ultimate market, and of the congestion that naturally results because of the freezing of the winter route. We have at present through Canada only one line of railway connecting the wheat fields with the eastern seaboard. There are under construction two other lines of railway, and, therefore, within a few years there will be three railways between the wheat fields and the eastern seaboard. I will take the liberty of recalling to the attention of the House—although perhaps I should not do so—that when the proposition for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, especially its eastern division, was placed before the country it received a great deal of opposition as not being of urgent necessity. I do not wish to refer now to the arguments used at that time, but I want to emphasize the point that the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the construction of the Canadian Northern now in progress, connecting the wheat fields and the seaboard, are of the utmost necessity and urgency for the welfare of Canada in every line that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has laid so clearly before the House to-day.

Let me go further, and I speak of it, not because my hon. friend mentioned it but because two of my hon. friends from the west on the other side have on one or two occasions drawn attention to this condition, that the cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific, in its eastern section to Moncton, has been abnormal, and they seemed to argue that that was an injury and an offence to the west. They seemed to consider that it was an injury to the west that this enormous expenditure was being incurred on that section of the Transcontinental. But if that expenditure be enormous, it is due to the fact that the road is being so constructed as to carry the grain of the western prairies to the seaboard at absolutely the lowest rate which the most competent engineering ability can bring it down to. That being the case, the very vastness of the expenditure upon that section is most directly and unquestionably in the interest of the west on the very line of the argument which my hon. friend submitted to the House to-day.

As regards the advice given to the farmers of the prairie west to provide granaries and go into mixed farming, I do not know that any one, who has ever spoken about the west, has not tendered that advice. That advice I admit, is good, but there is a great deal of advice that is very good in itself, but which it is not always practicable to put into effect. I was struck particularly by the suggestion that because the farmer of eastern Canada provides storage for his grain crop, therefore the farmer of western Canada ought to do likewise. But there is some difference between a grain crop produced on a field of 20, 30 or 40 acres, and one produced on a field of 160 to 640 acres. Those who speak so freely of the shortcomings of the western farmer in not providing proper housing for his grain would perhaps do well to remember that the rapidity of the progress of the west is due to the fact that it has been possible, with a minimum of capital and a maximum of energy to bring under cultivation and into production the maximum area of productive soil. If it had been necessary for the man who went into the western prairie to provide eastern barns before starting to farm, instead of the wheat production of the prairie being 175,000,000 bushels this year, it probably would not be 50,000,000 or even 25,000,000. Conditions in the west are favourable to the production and the handling of grain with the minimum of expenditure, and it is because of that fact many thousands of the people there to-day cannot possibly put up barns, if barns be necessary until they have arrived at a condition which is yet in the far future. A great proportion of the settlers in that country have only come in within the last few years and are not yet in such a position as would enable them to put up these buildings; and besides, owing to the climatic conditions the housing of the grain on a large scale is not necessary. It is therefore very doubtful if it would be sound business policy for them to spend their money in the housing of the grain on the same scale as that is done in the eastern provinces. The natural conditions in the west being different, we cannot reasonably expect that the people there should act as though the conditions there were the same as in the east, in order to relieve a situation which has occurred this year and which may not occur again for many years to come. In the eastern country we have a wet fall and in the western country a dry fall. Consequently settlers in the west can farm successfully on an expenditure much less than the farmers are obliged to incur in the eastern country.

As to the mixed farming question, if the people who went into these prairies had gone there with the intention of going into mixed farming, they would have required much more capital to start with than they did bring in, the results which have been achieved would not have been accomplished in anything like the same time, and the country would have been standing still these last few years instead of going ahead as rapidly as it has been.

When hon. gentlemen criticise the farmers of the west for their shortcomings, I would point out to them that according to Sir Byron Walker, the head of the Bank of Commerce, Mr. Flavelle, the head of the National Trust Company, and every head of every great financial institution in eastern Canada, the prosperity and progress of Canada depend upon what the western farmer has done and is doing and in particular on what he is going to do. It is always possible to criticise. There are individuals who even find fault with the plan of creation, but I think that the record of what has been achieved in our western country, in the way of development and progress, in the way of laying the foundation of a great Canada, should make the western farmer as little subject to criticism as any man in the Dominion. And further, whatever may be necessary to improve the conditions in that country by means of legislation, should in all fairness be given heartily and thoroughly.

Mr. KNOWLES. Can the minister state briefly what the main amendments will be, or will he give full notice of them?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The amendments which are to be introduced into the different clauses as we proceed are not of such importance as I think to need any extended notice. Of any important amendments, and there may be two or three, I will see that the House gets abundant notice before being called on to discuss them.

Mr. ROBB. Has the minister given any consideration to the question of providing terminal elevators at Lake Superior Junction? Unless this is done the Grand Trunk Pacific, as a road for carrying grain east in the winter time, would be considerably handicapped over the roads going by Fort William.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The clauses which bear on terminal elevators come in considerably later in the Bill. When we reach them I shall be able to give my hon. friend the information he asks for.

Mr. McCRANEY. Will the minister lay on the table such forms as are at present in use under the Act?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will make a note of that.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Has the winter navigation of Lake Superior been considered as affording a possible relief to the transportation situation? There are big new ports now being built on the Georgian bay.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that this is the second reading of the Bill, on which it is hardly permissible to widen the discussion.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

On section 2—Interpretation,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I wish to add the following paragraph to the Interpretation clause:

Mill elevator includes every elevator or warehouse used or operated as part of any plant engaged in the milling of grain products in the western inspection division.

The necessity of this is for plainness. We are already licensing that kind of elevator, and there is a clause later in the Bill that has something to do with mill elevators and that renders this definition necessary.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not imagine that there is any objection to this amendment; but I would suggest that as the Bill progresses and he sees fit to hand in amendments, it would be fair and right that at the request of those of us who wish to consider them further, they should be held for further consideration.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Any that are wanted to stand we will allow to stand over.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 2, subsection 2,

2. The remainder of this Act is divided into three parts, as follows:—

Part I comprising sections 3 to 17 inclusive;

Part II comprising sections 18 to 117 inclusive;

Part III comprising sections 118 to 246 inclusive and the schedule of forms therein mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I wish to make some amendments to that. The last sections of the Bill as printed are sections which have nothing to do with the main body of the Bill in either of the parts, but both of them are general. One of them, No. 246, provides for expenses of administration, and the other, No. 247, for the repeal of old Acts which it is necessary to repeal. I wish to change the subsection now under consideration so as to provide that part III shall comprise sections 118 to 245 inclusive, together with the schedules, and part IV shall comprise sections 246 and 247. I imagine there will be no objection to that; it is simply mechanical.

Mr. KNOWLES. Then, will the schedules remain in part III, to be followed by part IV?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. The schedules are the last part of the Act and have to do with all the parts. They are no more associated with part III than with any other part.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, but they are not at all associated with part IV.

Mr. KNOWLES. Of course, the division of the Act is largely mathematical. It is to contain four parts. The schedules naturally come in at the end, as they relate to all the parts.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It might make it more symmetrical if you transposed the two. But I do not see how that could be done either. However, the meaning is clear.

Mr. OLIVER. It will make a most peculiar looking Bill. But, of course, it is my hon. friend's (Mr. Foster) Bill, and if he likes the looks——

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If the looks are too peculiar, we will fix it up.

On section III, subsection VI. Salaries of commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The salaries are in blank. We will let the blanks in the subsection remain for the present time.

On section 8, appointments and salaries under the board.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I want to amend that by adding after the word 'minister,' 'on the recommendation of the board.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. I think this section would bear careful consideration:

Provided that the Governor in Council may authorize the board to make appointments of a temporary character, and to fix the remuneration to be paid to temporary officers and employees.

That is to say, that in the first part of the section the authority is entirely with the minister, but in the latter part it is delegated to the board. I think there would be difficulty in drawing a distinction in administration.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That only takes in temporary men, where you want to employ a man for a day or two. It would be unworkable to get a recommendation from the Governor in Council.

Mr. OLIVER. I would suggest that the remuneration for these temporary employees should be according to a scale laid down by the Governor in Council. As I read it here, the board might employ a man for a few days and pay him any price they liked. It is not difficult to lay down a scale of payment so that when the board employ a man he should be paid according to that scale.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Would it not be difficult to draw up a scale that would cover so many different employments?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think if they wanted to employ a carter for any purpose, or a man with a spade, it would be impracticable to fix a scale for that kind of employment. In the first place, we suppose that the commissioners, if they are able to carry on a large business that is vital to themselves, will be quite able to fix a reasonable remuneration for a spade man or a carter.

Mr. CURRIE. I suggest 'provided the minister may authorize the board to make appointments of a temporary character.'

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) I don't think you can make it any better for practical working, presuming the commissioners will be three men of common sense.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In the latter part of the clause I understand that the commissioners may desire to employ a temporary man at once.

Mr. OLIVER. I know what the minister desires to convey, but it strikes me there is a difficulty in drawing a distinction between the provisions of the first part of the section and the second. There is liable to be friction.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If there is friction we can fix it afterwards.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does the minister propose to make any amendments in section 18?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No.

Mr. KNOWLES. Then I will call his attention at this stage to the fact that section 8 gives to the minister power to appoint all officers on the recommendation of the board. In clause (f) of the interpretation clause, an officer is defined as including chief inspector, inspector and deputy inspector, etc. In section 18 the board is given power to appoint inspectors. There appears to me to be a contradiction. We say in section 8 that every officer and employee attached to or under the authority of the board should be appointed by the minister; and in section 18 it says that the board, with the approval of the Govenor in Council, may appoint inspectors.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will make a note of that.

On subsection 3 of section 8. Salaries, &c., to be paid monthly.

Mr. ROBB. This clause may hamper the commission. During the busy season they will have their men working alongside people who are paid weekly. The minister might consider the payment of employees who are taken on from day to day, weekly.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I shall make a note of that.

On section 9, subsection 1. Office accommodation to be provided.

Mr. CARRICK. If it is the intention to have the offices of the commission established at the head of the lakes I would like to see it incorporated in the Act.

Mr. CURRIE. Section 5 provides for the residence of the commissioners, and section 9 should repeat that the offices are to be there.

Mr. KNOWLES. It may be necessary for the board to have offices in Winnipeg or other places.

Mr. GERMAN. When it says that the commissioners shall reside either in Fort William or Port Arthur, I presume it is the intention that the head office shall be at either of these places. It seems rather a hardship to compel them to live absolutely in one of these towns.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). In section 5, provision is made that the commissioners and secretary shall reside in Fort William or Port Arthur. Then it follows, practically as a matter of course, that their offices will be in Fort William or Port Arthur. I do not at present know any reason why they should not be there. I do not see why it is necessary to have a compulsory clause in reference to the head office.

Mr. ROBB. The minister indicated that we might possibly be doing business via Vancouver, and for that business an office at Fort William would not be convenient.

Mr. CURRIE. A clause has been passed providing that the headquarters of the commissioners shall be at Fort William. Would it not make it a little clearer to include that in section 9?

On section 12. Warehouse receipts.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I move that section 12 be amended by striking out all the words after the word 'receipts' in the third line.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I do not think that any fees should be charged as a rule. Section 246 deals with the same matter, but this section is a departure from the present system. I do not think there will be any hardship by leaving this as it is in the present Act. I think it better, in the interest of all parties, that fees should not be charged. Trifling fees may be charged in certain cases, that would be rather a hindrance than anything else. The Act would be more workable and satisfactory without this change.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Does the hon. member speak of the fees in this particular case, and for this particular purpose, or of fees generally?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Possibly I should not have spoken of fees generally in this case, but I make the suggestion that the same thing should be adopted throughout.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am afraid that my hon. friend and myself will have to consider ourselves at the parting of the ways because the fundamental basis of that whole arrangement is that the grain business shall pay the expense of the deputy minister. That has been understood between the western men and the government for some time.

Mr. OLIVER. That is one thing, but the question of how the trade shall carry it is another thing. It would strike me that such a charge as this is vexatious rather than remunerative.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It has not been found vexatious in the past.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think there was any such provision in the former law, but whether or not it is a pity to charge a fee like this which really amounts to very little, especially in view of the accepted principle nowadays that we should cut out these fees that are vexatious without being revenue producers.

Mr. CURRIE. I doubt very much if the federal authority has power to interfere with these civil contracts or to collect fees. The warehouse receipt is a civil contract within the provincial law and I do not think we should interfere.

Mr. OLIVER. This is not a fee for the issuing of a warehouse receipt. It is a fee for the registration of a warehouse receipt, which is required not in the interest of the buyer or seller but in order to properly administer the Act.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). This is a new provision.

Mr. OLIVER. It is inserted under misapprehension of the purport of the section.

Mr. NESBITT. If it is necessary to register these receipts who is to pay the cost?

Mr. OLIVER. It is so trivial as not to warrant the imposition of a fee which must be only nominal. If after the Act has gone in force the board on their experience would recommend that a fee should be charged in this case I would be quite willing, but at this stage it is safer not to impose a fee.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). As this is left within the discretion of the board it would not seem there would be much objection to it.

Mr. OLIVER. It would be wiser to leave the law as it was, pending a recommendation of the board after they have had experience. Anyway, I do not like the idea of any such body having authority to levy fees on the public.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They could not do that without an order in council.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, well, that would be all right.

Mr. CURRIE. This provision entails a much wider order than the House realizes. For many years the elevators and the steamship companies have been at war at the head of the lakes over this question of warehouse receipts. For instance, a man is shipping 10,000 bushels of wheat to Montreal, the steamer will be sent to an elevator for say 9,000 bushels, and then for the other 1,000 bushels it has to travel some four or five miles to another elevator, at great pecuniary loss. But if we had a compulsory clearing house, the steamer could get all that grain from the one elevator. This section provides that the board may make regulations for and acquire the registration of terminal warehouse receipts. But that registration involves a very large order. It is a matter which has been under discussion between the elevator companies and the steamboat owners and shippers time and again. If a clearing house is to be provided—

Mr. ROBB. Does the hon. gentleman not know that there is a clearing house in existence where receipts are exchanged?

Mr. CURRIE. Where?

Mr. ROBB. At Fort William.

Mr. CURRIE. If there is a public clearing house at Fort William, it is only within the last three or four weeks.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. No.

Mr. CURRIE. I am personally interested and ought to know.

Mr. ROBB. The Act was amended in 1910 and provision was made for a clearing house, and a clearing house exists now and there are officers operating it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Mr. Fred Young is the manager.

Mr. CURRIE. But that is purely voluntary and private, and this provision is to make it compulsory to register warehouse receipts. You have to go to different elevators now just the same as before.

Mr. OLIVER. It has been said that as this section reads, the fees are subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. I do not read it that way. I read it to mean that the board may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, make regulations for and require the registration of permanent warehouse receipts, and the board may fix the fees. If the Governor in Council takes the responsibility of imposing fees, I suppose I have nothing to say.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is a question of interpretation, but it seems to me pretty clear. The board may—may what? May make regulations for and require the registration of permanent warehouse receipts, and fix the fees therefor, and determine by whom they shall be payable. Of its own motion? No, with the approval of the Governor in Council. It seems to me that the whole is qualified by these words 'with the approval of the Governor in Council.' That, at any rate, is the intention.

Mr. AIKINS. Any doubt can be easily removed by adding the word 'fixing' and inserting the word 'for,' which will make it read 'for fixing the fees therefor and for determining' by whom they shall be paid.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have no objection.

Amendment negatived.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 79,) respecting the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company.—Mr. Buchanan.

Bill (No. 81,) to incorporate the High River, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Martin (Regina)).

Bill (No. 83,) respecting the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Mr. McKay.

Bill (No. 84,) respecting certain Patents of Thomas D. Rambaut.—Mr. Ames.

THE GRAIN ACT.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 32,) respecting Grain.—Mr. Foster (North Toronto).

On section 12—warehouse receipts.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We had some discussion on the wording of this section before the House rose, and I have since been looking at it. I cannot see any reason why this section should not stand exactly as it is. I think the idea of the section is expressed as clearly and definitely as it can be expressed.

Mr. OLIVER. The minister is of course responsible for the wording of the Bill, and if he is satisfied that this wording expresses the ideas he desires to express, we do not wish to delay the Bill by discussing that part of it. I would, however, give notice to my hon. friend that on this question of fees we would reserve the right to move against the principle on the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Quite so.

On section 15—free transportation of board and staff.

Mr. NEELY. The corresponding clause in the Bill introduced last year includes with the transportation of the members of the Board and the secretary, their baggage and equipment. I think it would be well to include these in this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I thought about that, but it seemed to me that no railway or steamboat company would cavil at their taking their baggage with them. It seemed too trivial a provision to put into a Bill.

Mr. NEELY. The statute providing transportation for the members of the House of Commons and the Senate, mentions baggage specifically.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Well, their baggage is very considerable.

On section 16—administration of oath.

Mr. AIKINS. I notice that in the interpretation clause there is no interpretation of the word 'commissioner.' A commissioner for taking affidavits is usually appointed by one of the courts. There may be a little ambiguity here, and I would suggest that the word be defined in the Interpretation clause.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I would call the Minister's attention to the fact that this section conflicts with sections 29 and 41. This section allows the oath to be administered by a commissioner or by the secretary, while sections 29 and 41 make it obligatory that the oath shall be taken before a commissioner or notary public. I also noted the point raised by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins). There may possibly be some confusion as to what commissioner means.

Mr. AIKINS. I would suggest that the words 'appointed hereunder' be inserted after the word 'commissioner.'

Section, amended as suggested, agreed to.

On section 20, regulations.

Mr. NEELY. Here the committee will notice that the board's powers are restricted by the clause 'with the consent of the Governor in Council.' Now that clause had already appeared in sections 12 and 13, and here it appears for the third time. This section does not even permit the latitude of the corresponding section in the Bill that was introduced last year, for it commenced 'The board may make rules and regulations, either with or without the approval of the Governor in Council, as hereinafter provided.' I think the minister must be aware of the fact that the men who are most interested in the passing of this Bill are exceedingly anxious about the constitution and the powers to be given to this board of commissioners. Hon. gentlemen who were here in the last parliament will remember that we had not an opportunity to discuss in committee the different clauses of the Bill that was then introduced. This is the first opportunity we have had for discussing the principle of this Bill, or the one that preceded it last year. It may have come to the notice of the minister and of other members of the committee that the Manitoba Grain Growers, in session, some time last week, passed a very strong resolution regarding the control, not only of the interior elevators but also of the terminals. They passed a resolution first of all condemning the commission system in Manitoba, and calling upon the government of Manitoba to place that commission on an absolutely independent, non-partisan basis. They also passed a resolution asking that when the board of commissioners which was to control the situation of the terminals was constituted by Act of this parliament, the same constitution and the same powers should be given to that board as they asked for the board in the province of Manitoba. Now it appears to me, from the frequency with which these words occur in these various sections, that we are restricting the powers of this board unnecessarily, and we are not meeting the demands of the farmers who asked for a commission that shall have the same control over the terminal situation and the grain situation generally as, for instance, the Board of Railway Commissioners have in dealing with questions of transportation. I do not see why the Governor in Council should interest themselves in the matter of the rules and regulations that shall be laid down by the board of commissioners for the operation of the terminal elevators. This board we trust and expect will be selected from men who have an intimate knowledge of the grain situation; and it appears to me that if the board is to be of any value, it should, by intimate knowledge of the situation, be better fitted to make proper and necessary rules and regulations than the Governor in Council I am strongly of the opinion that by the repetition of this clause, by its repeated insertion, by the restriction we are thus placing on the board of commissioners, we are not meeting the desires and wishes of the men at whose demands the Bill is introduced, and whom we trust it will satisfy.

For there is no doubt, I am sure, in the mind of any one, that this Bill is being introduced at the urgent request of the grain growers of the west. They are the men who have been complaining about the conditions at the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, and they are the ones at whose instigation this movement for better legislation has been brought about. And it appears to me that in the construction of this commission there should be no question of interference in the matter of their administration of the situation at the terminals. I think that is one of the most vital and important points of this measure. If we have a board of commissioners who have to write a letter to Ottawa every time they wish to change a rule, if they have to communicate with the minister, who, in turn, will communicate with his colleagues and discuss the matter in council, it appears to me we are going to have a situation much worse than the present situation. If you are going to tie the hands of the board, if you are going to deny them liberty and compel them to refer everything to the Governor in Council, then I say we are better without this Bill and without the appointment of the board. For, as a result of this repeated necessary reference to the Governor in Council the board will be seriously hampered in their work and the situation at the terminals in any time of stress will be such as will not commend itself to the men for whom this Bill is being passed.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) say that the Grain Growers' Association have objected to this feature of the Bill?

Mr. NEELY. The members of the Grain Growers' Association, in convention in Manitoba last Thursday—I think it was Thursday—laid down the principle that the board of commissioners to be constituted under the Bill ought to be an absolutely independent body.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It is somewhat difficult to understand what my hon. friend means by 'an absolutely independent body.' If the terms——

Mr. NEELY. I will explain that, if my hon. friend will allow me. I mean independent of direction or influence from the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. gentleman mean independent of the people?

Mr. NEELY. They would always be responsible, I should judge, to this parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand, then, the hon. gentleman means that the board of commissioners, while they should not be responsible to the government, should be responsible to this parliament?

Mr. NEELY That is a fair meaning.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I think the hon. gentleman is about as indefinite in his idea of how the responsibility should be fixed as the association to which he refers. He complains at this stage of section 20 of the present Bill, in that it provides that the rules and regulations made by the board shall be with the consent of the Governor in Council—that is, with the consent of this government. Now, it is only elementary to say that, unless the rules and regulations have the approval of the Governor in Council, the Governor in Council can in no sense be responsible for these rules nor for the administration of the Act under these rules. So, if we make the approval of the Governor in Council unnecessary, we remove the board from responsibility to the Governor in Council. If the hon. gentleman wishes to take that position, well and good; we know where he is. But on the 19th of May, 1911, we had Bill (Q) of the Senate referred to this House, which Bill contained clause 20, which was exactly the same in this regard as clause 20 of the present Bill. This is not a detail, it is a concrete principle, and we are either going to approve or disapprove of that principle. The hon. gentleman says that unless we take his view of the principle, to pass the Bill would land us in a worse position than before. But when this same principle was introduced by the government that he supported on the 19th of May last, he approved the Bill and the principle and urged parliament not to delay a minute not even to consider it further but to swallow, the Bill and the principle. But now that he finds it in legislation that we have time to consider, he tells us it would be better to refuse the Bill altogether because it will put the western farmer in a worse position than he was in before. I say frankly I would not approve of anything that would place the commission in a position where they would be independent of the government. Nor would I approve of such a thing in provincial legislation; the principle is too sacred and too vital. The commission must be responsible to the government and the government must be responsible for this work of administration. The hon. gentleman has said that, while this is the second time this Bill has been before us, we never had time before to consider it in detail. But, though we had no time to consider it, the hon. gentleman was one of the foremost of those who asked that we pass it without any consideration. He said that while, perhaps, there were some details of the Bill that he could not agree with, in principle it was right. Now, this is an essential feature and principle of the Bill. So, I fear the hon. gentleman's opinion is on a par with that of many of those he quoted to-night as his authority, and their principal desire is to embarrass the government that is now endeavouring to effect reform.

Mr. NEELY. I think my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) is casting a very serious reflection upon many of the men who, probably in their lack of knowledge, voted to send him here. He undertakes to question the knowledge of the man in the west, who, for years has given consideration to this question. Probably my hon. friend has in his own constituency many men, tillers of the soil, who know a great deal more about the grain situation than he does. He tells us that this commission must be responsible to the government. Undoubtedly so. We all quite understand that feature of the case. The board of commissioners must act within the law; the statute that we pass is the thing that shall govern them. But my hon. friend has not answered my argument on the question of the rules and regulations of the board requiring the consent of the Governor in Council. The hon. gentleman did not look into the case as well as he might have done when he rose to correct me. He says that the clause in Bill (Q) is identical with the clause in the present Bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I said it was the same in this respect.

Mr. NEELY. Section 21 of Bill 'Q' reads:

> The board may make rules and regulations, either with or without the approval of the Governor in Council, as hereinafter provided.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. NEELY. That is enough. If there is any ambiguity in the whole section I still maintain the position that last year this Bill was held up before a Committee of the Senate for many months; it was not brought down to this House until the dying days of the session. Hon. gentlemen opposite who were then sitting on this side of the House are very well aware of the fact that owing to the many other subjects which they introduced in this House for discussion, we found ourselves, in the dying days of the session, without having reached this very important measure and for that reason, because we had not the opportunity to discuss it in detail, there were numbers of us who were anxious to see the Bill passed even with some defects, because it went some distance at least towards satisfying the demands of those at whose instigation the Bill was introduced. I say that, whatever may have been the meaning of section 20 of Bill 'Q,' at least the first sentence would indicate that the board were to be given considerable latitude in making rules and regulations under Bill 'Q.' But under the present Bill they have no discretion; they must simply refer every rule and regulation for the government of the situation at the terminals and elsewhere to the Governor in Council. That is an intolerable situation which will not be any remedy of the present conditions, but will rather place us in the position where we will have a board of commissioners who have no authority to make any simple rule or regulation without referring to the Governor in Council, and who, because of that stumbling block in the way, may, in many cases, be seriously embarrassed in a rush season in carrying out their undertakings simply because they have to refer everything to the government at Ottawa.

Mr. OLIVER. In the discussion of this Bill we must keep before us the important question of the measure of independence of the board from the government. There is no doubt that the people who are looking for the passage of this legislation have in their minds an ideal condition whereby a board absolutely independent of political influence shall have full authority to deal with the grain question. I shall not say that that ideal can be carried out in the provisions of the Bill and have the Bill work satisfactorily, but it is an ideal which is held very strongly. Therefore, it is desirable in discussing the provisions of this Bill in detail that we should conform to that ideal so far as practicable while preserving the efficiency of the Bill. So, while I agree to this section passing, it would again be with the same reservation as I made in reference to a previous section that we would retain the right of consideration of this principle in the Bill with a view to securing as close conformity to the ideal held by the farmers of an absolutely independent board as possible, and failing in the other means, of course we might have an opportunity of expressing our views on the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend approaches the subject a little differently from the previous speaker, likely from the standpoint of a little more experience in the matter of governmental work. My hon. friend who spoke first simply catches at that ideal which has just been alluded to and presses it to a conclusion which, to my mind, might end in anarchy. It is possible to give too much power and make a commission too independent. After all there must be somebody whom you can bring to account and the body or the entity to be brought to account in the end is the government.

The only control that a parliament has over this matter is in the control they have over the government.

It is the intention of this Bill and of the government to give that commission even a greater degree of independence and freedom than was proposed by Bill 'Q'. Several things have taken place to-day which show the intention of the present government in this respect. Bill 'Q.' left all appointments to the minister absolutely without recommendation or other restriction. As amended by myself, the ultimate appointing power is placed in the hands of the minister or the Governor in Council but that was hedged and restricted by the fact that the recommendation would come from the board itself. That to my mind is about as far as you can go and keep the proper governmental control and at the same time keep the proper position between the public outside and the entity to be called in question if things do not go right. The government appoints the board in the first place and are responsible for the quality of the board. If the board turn out to be an all-wise board, without any imperfections or any weaknesses, the best thing to do would be to allow them to go ahead and be absolutely independent. But three men on a board are just as apt to develop weaknesses as 15 men at a Council Board or 224 men who review the Acts of the men at the Council Board. It seems to me that the only proper thing to do, whilst giving every range of independence that is possible to that commission, and making them wholly responsible for their work, is to keep the connection between that board and the government, and it is with that in view that this legislation has been undertaken and that I have endeavoured to direct it so far in its passage through the House.

Mr. KNOWLES. I agree with the principle advocated by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely). I did not detect in his remarks anything of that partisan spirit which the hon. member for Portage la Prairie saw. I do not understand where that was visible. It is true that the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), in fact all of us who were supporters of the then government, were ready to support Bill 'Q' as it was brought from the Senate. We believed that Bill 'Q.' would be better than the then existing circumstances, although not ideal. The time was limited, it was desirable to have it enacted into law in order that it might be before the people and might bring such benefit or profit as it could for the harvest and market season of 1911, and as the then Minister of the Interior said on May 19, when he introduced the measure, he did not regard it as perfect but he desired the opportunity of testing it during the season just passed to see in what respects it could be improved upon.

My hon. friend (Mr. Neely) is right in the principle he advocates. We have two great interests and there has been the bitterest feeling between them. There has been the greatest suspicion on the part of the grain growers—perhaps not always well founded—and this Bill is for the purpose of removing that as far as it is possible to do so. I submit to the minister that he will succeed in re-establishing confidence in the mind of the grain growers if he makes his board as independent of the government, and as free in its action as it is possible to make it. In the working out of clause 20, if the board has to communicate with the minister, and the minister in turn has to bring the matter before council and have an order in council passed there will be a most vexatious delay before the most trivial matter can be amended. Orders in council take time; it is not possible to get even a minister's approval of a suggested regulation right off the bat. There is a strong analogy between the Grain Board and the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. The Railway Board stands between the customers of the railways on the one hand and these great corporations on the other, their duty being to protect each against the other. I turn to the Railway Act and I find the Railway Board has power to make regulations without any reference to the Governor in Council whatever, and if the Railway Board which is only a block away from the Minister's ear do not have to get their orders approved, what justification is there for asking that a board sitting in Fort William or Port Arthur, must, perhaps in the rush season, send down to Ottawa to have their regulations endorsed by the Governor in Council. Can we not by analogy between the Grain Board and the Railway Board leave the Grain Commissioners to use their discretion and good judgment, as we leave the Railway Commissioners to do so. If you wish to guard yourself by providing an appeal to the Governor in Council as is done under the Railway Act, very well, but at all events do not impede business by making it a hard and fast provision of the law that every little regulation will have to be approved by the cumbersome system of an order in council passed in Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It does not work out quite as my hon. friend (Mr. Knowles) pictures it: that there is a rush hour and a rush day, and that some regulation has to be put in effect, and delay is caused by an appeal to the minister, and delay in obtaining an order in council. The Grain Board will draw up what rules and regulations it, in its judgment, deems best, and in every case, or almost every case these regulations presented by three capable men would be passed by the Governor in Council. But you must always consider the possibility of something creeping in which, in the judgment of the government, and of the country may be, would not be in the public interest. This provision will cause the board to feel that their rules and regulations will have to be carefully considered, because they are to be reviewed, and in the second place, if a vicious rule should creep in through inadvertence or otherwise, it is possible to have that reviewed by the government and for the aggrieved parties to have their recourse. I would not like to place the Grain Board on exactly the same plane as the Board of Railway Commissioners, because, for power and scope of jurisdiction, the latter board does not find its equal in the world.

Mr. OLIVER. When my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), is making that comparison I would remind him that the Act says this board is to 'control' the grain trade of Canada, and on the authority of Sir Byron Walker, the grain trade of Canada amounts to two hundred millions this year, which is a financial responsibility far exceeding that which rests upon the Railway Commissioners. Then, the judgments of the Railway Commission affect a corporation, and one or more individuals doing business over certain lines of railway, but the Grain Board has to do with a commodity that makes the business of Canada in a larger degree than any other one thing.

The commission that is charged with the responsibility of controlling that trade has a responsibility which, I think, is not equalled by any authority within the limits of the Dominion short of the government itself.

I would like to say a word with regard to Bill (Q) which has been alluded to as imperfect and not tending towards the independence of the board to a greater degree than the present Bill. But in this particular section there are words which are contrary to that idea and exactly in line with the stand taken by my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) and my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) as to the necessity of the present regulations or as to the necessity of providing regulations for the very excellent kind of control by the board without reference to the Governor in Council. If my hon. friend will refer to section 30 of the Bill (Q) he will see that while the wording is I admit not ideal, the intention was—and may I be permitted to speak on that point—to exactly meet a condition which has been suggested by my hon. friend, namely, that while the regulations of the board should generally speaking be approved by the Governor in Council, the board still should have the power upon their own initiative, in order to meet a pressing case, to pass valid regulations without that reference. The clause probably was not perfectly drafted but it was intended to meet such a condition and to that extent it differs materially from a section of the present Bill. Furthermore it carries out the idea of an independent board to a greater degree than does section 20 and goes further towards meeting the actual conditions which must necessarily from time to time arise in the grain trade when quick action by the board is necessary in order to meet such conditions and save thousands of dollars to the people interested. But aside from the Bill altogether I would respectfully suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he should consider the desirability of empowering the board, as it was intended to empower it in section 20 of Bill (Q) so that it would have authority to take action in conditions of stress without reference to Ottawa.

Mr. AIKINS. My hon. friend from Moosejaw has cited as a parallel case the Board of Railway Commissioners, who may make rules and regulations. But those rules and regulations are subject to revision by the Governor in Council. The difference between the two is that before the rules and regulations can come into force in the one case they must be approved by the Governor in Council whereas in the other case they are subject to supervision and review by that body.

Mr. KNOWLES. No difference.

Mr. AIKINS. Not in some respects because both are subject to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council takes the responsibility for the action of the Railway Commission to that extent. But there is another point to be borne in mind. The Board of Railway Commissioners is largely a judicial body; and if the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) will consider that point, he will find that in all the legislation dealing with judicial bodies they are empowered to make rules and regulations, so far as they are not judicial which they are not always, but sometimes are subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The great principle which underlies democratic legislation is that the executive, as well as the legislative bodies are subject to the will of the people. Therefore, I submit that in the administration of the Grain Act, which is so intimately related to the business of a large section of the community, the people should have some control over the board through the Governor in Council, and the board should not be free to do what it likes between sessions of parliament. It was suggested that the board should be independent of the Governor in Council. That suggestion is hardly feasible in practical politics. When the government of the day appoints commissioners, in some way perhaps occult—we may not exactly know how—the government of the day has control over the appointees, and it is far better that the government should be held responsible for all the actions of these appointees to the people by providing that their control must meet with the approval of the Governor in Council. Were these commissioners to be appointed from the party in opposition we might have an independent board to some extent; but until we shall have arrived at the millennium when those whom we appoint to office shall act without any consideration to the influences that may be exercised on them, we ought to follow the principle established by Democratic government and provide that these bodies which administer such important affairs must be held responsible to the government which has to account to the people.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think that the remarks of my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) only emphasize the point I have made. The hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce says that in the clause as it now stands, the Board of Commissioners will act very carefully because they know that everything they propose has to pass in review before the Governor in Council. But that same caution would be imposed, if we had a clause such as is found in the Railway Act, by which the regulations the Railway Commissioners may impose are subject to be disapproved by the Governor in Council. If this Act incorporated a similar provision, there would still be the fear on the part of these commissioners of their being checked by the Governor in Council, but they would be in a better position to deal more rapidly with urgent circumstances that might arise. If the hon. minister would draft his clause so as to keep that power of revision in the hands of the Governor in Council, he would still keep before the commissioners the fear of being overruled and in that way there would be a safeguard. My hon. friend from Brandon said that this board is altogether different from that of the Railway Commissioners. I think not. I trust that you will find just as careful a selection of the men on this new board by the new government as was made by the old government in the case of the railway commissioners. I can see no reason why the business entrusted to these grain commissioners should not be as carefully and efficiently administered as is the transportation business which is handled by the Railway Commission.

The Board of Railway Commissioners is not a judicial body in any large sense. As far as I remember only two of its members are legal men, one an ex-judge and the other a barrister. In the large majority of the cases their duties are not judicial, but executive. This will be a judicial body just as much as the Railway Commission is, with respect to their using their best judgment in the interests of the public; and if they be men carefully selected, able, impartial and above suspicion, which I do not question, I can see no reason why the interests intrusted to them under this Act may not be left to them, with just as large a discretion and as free a hand as the Board of Railway Commissioners have.

Mr. MEIGHEN. There is a distinct line of cleaveage between responsibility and irresponsibility, and the method of responsibility will be fixed as fully by the method outlined by the hon. member for Moosejaw as by that proposed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I challenge the hon. member for Edmonton or any other of the hon. gentlemen opposite to suggest a regulation that could possibly be made without the approval of the Governor in Council under Bill Q, which was introduced by the hon. member for Edmonton last year, that cannot be made under this Bill. The Board under clause 101 of Bill Q could make certain regulations for its own procedure, but under clause 102 of this Bill it can make the same regulations. There is no difference of principle between them, and I protest against any attempt on the part of the hon. member for Humboldt to suggest that he or his party stands in the matter of responsibility for anything different from what is embodied in this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I take it that a great deal is to be learned by the study of Bill Q, as it came to us last year. There was a lot of trouble taken in the consideration of that Bill, and the different interests seem to have been shaken together over and over again, and while everything was fresh in their minds the Bill came out. Those who framed this Bill thought it was proper and right to follow the lines of section 156 of that Bill with regard to regulations. I do not want to impart any party considerations to this Bill at all, but I do think it is fair to learn from the reasoned effort that was put into the consideration of Bill Q, and therefore to take those provisions that were embodied in it as the result of the examination then made.

Mr. OLIVER. Section 156 applies only to the administration of country elevators.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is a most important part.

Mr. OLIVER. It certainly is a most important part of the Bill, and there is no part of that section which permits the action of the Board outside of the control of the Governor in Council. But as to section 20, the hon. member for Portage la Prairie declares that there is no provision in that section in Bill Q which in any way relieves the Board from the necessity of approval by the Governor in Council. I am going to accept his statement, but I will ask him to accept mine, that it was the belief of the late government that there were such words contained in that section, and it was the intent of the late government that those words should have an effect to the extent that I have stated, that is to say, that under circumstances of stress and urgency the Board should have authority to act without reference to the Governor in Council.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). So it is under this Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not read section 20 in that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I quite accept the statement of the hon. member for Edmonton as to what was or what is his own belief. I would not like to be understood as accepting it as to what was the belief of the late government, much less what was the intent of the late government.

Mr. OLIVER. I must thank my hon. friend for his courtesy, I am sure.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I do not propose to go into the discussion as between the two Bills, but I have some interest in the progress of the idea of government by commission. Both in the United States and here the object ought to be to give the fullest power to the commission while keeping some string on it. If we gave the commission power to deal with this matter and had a clause to the effect that some acts of theirs should be subject to review, I believe the commission would be stronger and better. As we are going into government by commission, and as ministers complain of the extent of detail in their departments, we ought to put upon the commissioners we create and upon the officials as much responsibility as possible, subject to review of some kind. In the United States the power is often conferred altogether upon the president of the United States to name the commission, and while the commission makes all the regulations the President can bring them under review.

If there was a clause in this Bill providing that at any time the minister of the government could review and recall any act of the commission, I think it would relieve the department of a great deal of unnecessary trouble, and would give the commissioners greater confidence in themselves, and, while putting the responsibility on them would still hold them responsible to the government for everything they did. If the Act could be made more efficient in that way, I would suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that he have it drafted on these lines. Why should the Governor in Council be half the time occupied in putting a rubber stamp on the acts of a commission appointed to do something? Far better, far quicker administration would be got, and twice as much satisfaction would be given by taking the line suggested. I would not like to see a great commission of this kind checked, and all they did or proposed to do, sent to Ottawa for approval. Put the responsibility on these men. If they do not do their work satisfactorily, recall their decrees, and, if necessary, appoint better men. In this way we should be doing much as we have done in the case of the railway commission. We have increased the responsibilities of the railway commission from year to year, and have never had reason to regret it. The tendency is to increase their powers, while holding them to responsibility for the exercise of those powers.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the minister (Mr. Foster) take into consideration the redrafting of that section to cover the point of the possibility of action by the board independent of the Governor in Council in case of urgency?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I should be glad to take into account whatever work of the commission is necessary in that part of their duties arising from day to day, and which is, to a certain extent, the accident of the occasion. They must have latitude in that respect, and in that respect, I do not wish to hamper them. But in making the rules and regulations for the bonding, the licensing and the control of terminal and other elevators, they are dealing with something which is not the accident of the occasion, but is the very plan and system for the governance of these elevators. While one can ingeniously conjure up something that might occur requiring action which would not be allowable under these regulations, I do not think that that difficulty would arise in practice. We are conjuring up difficulties that do not exist, it seems to me.

Mr. OLIVER. The difficulties do exist and are liable to exist, and will require action. In dealing with the question generally, it has been found necessary, as will be seen in different places in the Bill, to allow for extraordinary acts of administration by the Warehouse Commission. And the same principle applies to this. I would like to see that provision placed right in the Act, so that the board would be able to take urgent action on urgent occasions.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I should be very glad to consider that—

Mr. OLIVER. That is, to hold the section for consideration with that in view?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We could pass the section and I would keep the matter under consideration; and hon. gentlemen will have plenty of chance to—

Mr. OLIVER. And the Minister wishes the section to pass as it is?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, I would like to have the section passed.

Section agreed to.

On section 28,—present officers.

Mr. THOMSON. (Qu'Appelle). Does not the minister think these words: 'Wheat and other' are redundant? Grain includes wheat. It would include flax, and flax is usually treated in the Customs Act as a seed.

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto). The Interpretation Act seems to cover the whole thing. Drop out 'wheat and other'.

On section 29, —oath of Inspector.

Mr. THOMSON. (Qu'Appelle). An officer is defined by the Act to mean and include inspector. If the Bill is left in that way, in one place it says that the officer may take oath before a certain person; in another place it says he should take oath before certain other officers, one section contradicts the other section.

Mr. AIKINS. Section 29 makes it obligatory that the inspector should take an oath; the other is simply an enabling clause.

Mr. THOMSON. (Qu'Appelle). If the minister wishes to have a notary public and a commissioner to be allowed to take oaths, and also to allow the secretary and the commissioner under Act to take oaths, why not use the term 'may' in each case? It leaves a question as to what is meant by commissioner.

Mr. CURRIE. In the province of Ontario we have commissioners for taking affidavits and we have notaries public, justices of the peace and commissioners for that purpose.

Mr. AIKINS. I would suggest that we refer back to section 16, and that there should be added 'where not authorized to be taken by another person', and adding after the word 'commissioner' in section 29, 'for taking affidavits in the provincial courts'.

Mr. KNOWLES. A man will have to go to Fort William and interview there a member of the board or a secretary to take his oath. Why not permit any oath required to be taken before any commissioner for the administering of oaths?

Mr. CURRIE. Might I suggest that section 16 be amended to read:

> Any oath the taking of which is hereinafter authorized or prescribed by this Act, may be administered by one of the commissioners, by the secretary of the commission, by a notary public, a justice of the peace or any officer authorized by statute to administer oaths.

Then you do away with the greater part of section 29, which would read:

> Every chief inspector or deputy inspector shall, before acting as such, take and subscribe to an oath of office in the form or to the effect following.

And leave out all reference to the commissioners because you have already provided that.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think that would be all right if it meets with the approval of the minister.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The oath is the thing that counts. We might allow that section to stand.

Section 29 allowed to stand.

On section 30—inspectors to give security.

Mr. McCRANEY. Does this mean that a bond must be given by some security company?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That would seem to be it.

Mr. McCRANEY. Who would bear the expense of that bond?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not know. I suppose it would come under the working of the whole Act.

Mr. KNOWLES. If the law calls for the giving of a bond, the man would have to pay it.

Mr. McCRANEY. Unless there is some reference to the matter, the man would probably have to pay for his own bond.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Unless it is arranged.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I certainly think he would have to pay for the bond under the ordinary reading of the Act. I am not sure but what he ought to pay for it.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Anyway this requires that he shall give the security.

Mr. KNOWLES. No doubt the government will get such competent men that the bond will not amount to very much.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Very probably.

On section 33—establishment of standards.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I would move to amend this section by striking out the words 'establish standards for' in the third line and substituting 'select samples of.' The Act provides for the establishing of standards in sections 105 and 107 and section 48 provides that the Grain Standards Board shall establish standards for the commercial grades. Subsection 2 of section 48 uses the express terms 'establish standards.' These sections are contradictory, and my amendment would cover what I think is the intention.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that there is any doubt that this section was intended to provide for the samples that will conform to the standards. Apparently the wording in Bill 'Q' was not clear, and it has been transferred into the present Bill in a form even less clear.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does it not mean that they shall meet to establish certain standards for the different grades?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). That is provided for by sections 105 and 107, for the ordinary grades and in section 48 we make provision for the establishment of commercial grades by the Grain Standards Board.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will let that stand.

Mr. NEELY. I would point out an apparent contradiction between this section and section 89. This section provides that the inspectors for the division shall establish standards not later than the 7th day of October. Why should there be any difference in the date? Our grain does not mature any faster in the west than it does in the east, and why should the sample of standard be selected a week earlier in the west?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I suppose there must be some good reason given for it.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). It must be a mistake.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). With the consent of the committee we will now adjourn consideration of the Bill, as some deputations have seen me to-day, and are to see me again in respect to it. I would like to make this intimation for the consideration of the House. At present in the west there are more or less large quantities of grain which, because of late threshing, or because it is not threshed yet, is damp and mixed with snow and ice, and that sort of grain is estimated at some millions of bushels. I am informed it must be removed to where it can be treated before the warm weather. Under the present law there is an elaborate and rigid system of furnishing the cars on the order principle, but there is no provision for doing the same in this case as is allowed in the case of grain which becomes heated in the elevator where relief can be given at once as the warehouse commissioner has authority to use his discretion to send cars sufficient to relieve the difficulty. I have strong representations asking that the same discretion be given to the warehouse commissioner under the existing special circumstances with regard to the grain I have mentioned. The representatives of the Grain Growers Association, who are here, were unanimously of the opinion that such discretionary power should be given as soon as possible, and if, on consideration, it seems to be the best thing to do, I shall ask the House to amend the Act so as to give that discretion at once to the warehouse commissioner. It seems to be a humanitarian way of dealing with the situation, and I don't see there can be any objection to it.

Mr. OLIVER. When will the amendment be brought down?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will consider the matter, and if I find it necessary I shall probably submit it next Thursday.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House in committee of supply.

Battleford public building, $10,000.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. minister give us information as to the progress of that building?

Mr. MONK. This is to cover the heating apparatus. The building is completed.

Battleford North public building, $10,000.

Mr. MONK. This is a revote to make provisions for the purchase of a site for a public building for post office and customs purposes. We intend going on with this building without delay as there is a very active demand for it.

Calgary—customs examining warehouse, $200,000.

Mr. MONK. This is a very large item but the values of property have gone up very fast in the west. There seems to be great demand for increased accommodation for these offices, and sites are very expensive in Calgary and all the western cities. This vote of $200,000 is towards the purchase of a site and the erection of a customs examining warehouse.

Mr. OLIVER. The present building in Calgary is occupied partly by the post office and partly for customs purposes. Is it the intention to use that building for customs purposes entirely and to erect a post office building somewhere else?

Mr. MONK. That is the intention.

Mr. OLIVER. Is there anything definite as to the location of the new post office?

Mr. MONK. No, nothing definite.

Mr. OLIVER. The item as it stands in the estimates is rather misleading if the information given to me is correct. If a new site is to be bought for the post office and a new building erected, it will surely cost a good deal more than $75,000, while if the old building is to be changed into a customs building, $200,000 will not be required for that. It looks to me as if the amounts have become displaced.

Mr. MONK. I do not think so. It is intended to purchase a site for the examining warehouse.

Mr. OLIVER. As far as I can judge, it will cost $100,000 to get the site for a post office. If the vote of $75,000 is intended to meet the requirements of the post office, it will be absolutely inadequate.

Mr. MONK. There is nothing decided yet as regards the site.

Mr. OLIVER. As far as I can judge, it would cost $100,000 to get the site, and you would be left with an inadequate sum for the erection of the post office.

Mr. MONK. This, I think, merely provides for the purchase of the site of the examining warehouse and to start the building.

Mr. OLIVER. In the former estimates there was an item for the erection of an immigration building in Calgary which is apparently left out of these estimates. The immigration building at present used in Calgary is entirely inadequate and is not creditable to the Dominion government. There is a very urgent need for a new building, and I would strongly urge the minister to make even a larger appropriation than was in the former estimates for that purpose.

Mr. MONK. I will make a note of my hon. friend's statement.

Calgary—new post office, $75,000.

Mr. MONK. This is a revote, nothing having been spent of the vote of last year.

Mr. KNOWLES. If $200,000 is required to purchase a site for an examining warehouse and to start the building, certainly more than $75,000 is required for a post office site, which must necessarily be in a more central position. It seems to me the respective amounts are out of proportion.

Mr. MONK. It may be there is some mistake; if so, we will try to correct it. I fancy that the reason is that the old site of the post office may be used for the erection of a new one.

Mr. KNOWLES. There is a building on the site now—a four story building, I think; certainly not less than three stories.

Mr. MONK. It is absolutely inadequate for the service.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is it intended to tear it down and use the site again?

Mr. MONK. Either tear it down or remodel it completely.

Mr. OLIVER. The only thing I desire is that the minister deal with the matter promptly and liberally because the necessities of the case are very urgent.

Edmonton—new drill hall, $50,000.

Mr. OLIVER. In what position does this matter stand? I understand the city has made the offer of a site, and I am rather anxious to know that this money, voted and re-voted, is to be expended.

Mr. MONK. It is intended to expend this sum without delay. The city of Edmonton as my hon. friend knows, purchased the site on the Hudson's Bay Company's reserve. We have a considerable number of regiments in Edmonton. I can only say that it is intended to use this money. The city having purchased the site, it would be, no doubt, a part of our contract to proceed with the erection of the building without delay.

Mr. KNOWLES. I desire to bring before the minister the question of the Moosejaw armoury and drill hall. For three or four years past an item has been in the estimates for the commencement of an armoury in that city. The reason that the work was not proceeded with is that the city was to donate the site and there were conveyancing difficulties in the way of securing the place. Last year, the site was secured and the way was opened for the work of construction. Much to my surprise, in these estimates, the first since it was possible to make the vote efficacious, I find that the item is dropped. As I have said, it appeared for three or four years, beginning at $15,000 and going up to $30,000 as the needs of the city grew greater. I have here the Moosejaw 'Morning News' of January 23, 1912. This is a paper which supports the present government. A deputation was sent from the Board of Trade of Moosejaw to interview the government. I do not know that they interviewed the Minister of Public Works, but they certainly saw the Minister of Militia (Mr. Hughes). The following is from the account of the interview with the chief spokesman of the delegation of four who came to Ottawa:—

Mr. W. B. Willoughby, who went to Ottawa as a member of the Board of Trade deputation, returned to the city yesterday afternoon. Interviewed by the 'News,' he declined to make a general statement of the result of his visit, as it is his intention to report to the Board of Trade.

He intimated, however, that as a result of the deputation's interview with the Minister of Militia, Moosejaw was promised a $75,000 armoury and drill shed.

Is it the intention, therefore, to provide in the supplementary estimates for such an armoury and drill shed as is alleged in this paper to have been promised?

Mr. MONK. I did not have the advantage of meeting that deputation. Of course, if the site has been furnished to us after negotiation by the civic authorities, I should imagine the government's duty would be to erect the armoury as soon as possible. There will be supplementary estimates; and I am anxious to satisfy, as far as possible, the claims of the country. But I am not the sole arbiter of either the main or the supplementary estimates. I tell the hon. gentleman only what he, no doubt, already knows when I say that there are very great demands this year for the equipment of harbours and other matters in connection with transportation; and although it is necessary to put our militia on a proper footing and provide armouries as far as possible, it might be argued that the necessities to which I have referred are more pressing. I will make a note of what the hon. gentleman says. I am not in a position to say what the supplementary estimates will contain.

Mr. KNOWLES. Could not the minister give some reason why the item is dropped after having been recognized by the government and the House for so many years?

Mr. MONK. It is done under the pressure of the urgent needs of which I have spoken. The opening of the Panama canal, it is supposed, will create a demand for much additional shipping on the Pacific, and we have been urged very strongly to improve our western ports which are now inadequate. On the great lakes the demand is the same, and so it is for the ports on the Atlantic. That is the only reason I can think of.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will the hon. minister consult with the Minister of Militia and Defence with regard to this alleged promise, and inform me, on some later occasion, whether such a promise was made, and if it will be duly implemented?

Mr. KNOWLES.

Mr. PARDEE. In the estimates for 1911-12, there was an item of $17,500 for the Sarnia armoury. That is omitted from the estimates before the House. The minister (Mr. Monk) says that a good many of these items for armouries have been left out because of the needs for expenditures on the aids to navigation. I may point out that the appropriation for Sarnia harbour has also been cut out of these estimates. I should be glad, at the proper time, to hear an explanation of this.

Mr. MONK. As to the armoury and the harbour improvement, that is under consideration, and I hope provision will be made in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. McCRANEY. In connection with the armoury at Moosejaw, I would ask the government what its policy is with reference to acquiring free sites for armoury and drill hall purposes.

I understand from the discussion that has taken place that the city of Moosejaw is making a free grant to the government for such a purpose. I would like to know whether it is the policy of the government to erect drill halls in all places which give free grants to the government, and if that is the policy, is it also the policy of the government to decline to erect drill halls in other places until free grants are made to the government?

Mr. MONK. The policy of the government on that point has not come up for consideration or discussion; the government has not yet had occasion to go fully into the matter and adopt a policy upon that point. But I may inform my hon. friend that my own opinion, so far as I have been able to form an opinion upon the subject, is that we should be prepared to supply armouries where the city goes to the trouble and expense of providing the grant of a site. I would even go further, and say that where public buildings are wanted, and the city is in a position to offer us the grant of a site, we should be prepared to respond by providing the building, where conditions suitable for the erection of such a building exist. We are continually having a great deal of difficulty in those matters, very often prices are put up for the site. I favour the idea that where the municipality offers a site for a public building or an armoury, we ought to be prepared to meet the city authorities half way.

Mr. McCRANEY. I agree with my hon. friend that it is desirable if cities or towns can make free grants of sites that those grants should be accepted by the government, and that the government should do what it can towards the erection of drill halls or armouries. There are some cities which are better circumstanced than others in possessing lands which can be used as sites for armouries and drill halls; and the case of the city of Moosejaw is one in point. Last session I asked a question in the House, at page 3,281 of 'Hansard,' whether any free grant had been made by the Dominion government to the city of Moosejaw; and the answer which I received from the then Minister of the Interior was that 2,152 lots had peen patented to the city of Moosejaw as a free grant by the Dominion government, under an order in council dated 6th April, 1903. What I want to point out is that such a city as Moosejaw, which received a grant from the Dominion government of 2,152 town lots, is in a position to make a free grant for such a purpose, and may well be expected to do so. I might also mention the city of Regina, although it is not before us in this item. I understand that Regina has also made a free grant to the Dominion government for such a purpose. In the same question which I asked last session, I got an answer from the Minister of the Interior that the Dominion government had patented to the city of Regina 4,863 town lots; and in addition to these lots, 285.55 acres of the unsubdivided portion of the townsite of Regina were revested in the Crown and subsequently patented to the city of Regina. I want to point out to the minister that if the city of Moosejaw and the city of Regina are in a position to make free grants to the government, and may be properly expected to do so, there are other cities in the Northwest which have not received grants from this government, and which cannot be expected to make free grants for such purposes. I appreciate what the minister has said that there is danger of the government being held up. But I am sure that the municipal authorities in each case may be relied upon to assist the government in the purchase of sites. In my own city of Saskatoon a site was purchased, composing about an acre of land, and having on it one of the best houses in the city, which could be used for temporary purposes. The price paid by this government was $47,500, a large sum. I have no doubt that if the government wished to part with that property to-day, they could sell it for a sum in excess of that amount. But I would much prefer, instead of this being sold, that an additional quantity of land adjoining the present site be purchased, and I did recommend to the late Minister of Public Works that an additional property, which I think is available there, be purchased. I must say that in my own experience with the ex-Minister of Public Works, no request was made to the city of Saskatoon for a grant of land for drill hall purposes; and I assume that he had in mind the fact that the case of Saskatoon was different from that of Moosejaw and Regina in the respects I have mentioned.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to point out that the city of Lethbridge donated some lots to the government for the purpose of erecting an armoury, and there has been a vote for the last couple of years for that purpose, but it has been dropped this year. Now Lethbridge is anxious to have an armoury, its city council appropriated certain lots for that purpose, and there is a good deal of disappointment on account of the vote not being in the estimates this year. I may say in connection with the recent militia conference held here, that the view was expressed that the only way in which we can stimulate interest in the volunteer militia in western Canada is to provide these buildings, so as to bring about social surroundings for the men who go into volunteer service in the different battalions of the militia. In the city of Lethbridge they have established a battery of field artillery, but they are practically without a place for their drill and for their equipment, and have been expecting from the government an armoury by reason of the special vote recently passed. I would urge the Minister of Public Works to consider the matter of drill halls in western Canada from this standpoint, as I think it will stimulate interest in the militia, and encourage the officers who are taking part in the work of the field battery and infantry corps, in their efforts to build up a good strong force there. My city is in very much the same position as pointed out by the hon. member for Moosejaw, only we have gone so far as to make a grant of land to the Dominion government, and are waiting for an armoury to be constructed. It is a very valuable property that has been granted to the government for this purpose, and I hope the Minister of Public Works will consider this matter when the supplementary estimates are being prepared.

Mr. MONK. I listened with attention to what has been said by the two last speakers and certainly will give heed to their observations. We intend to satisfy the population of the northwest as soon as possible. with regard to armouries. There is no doubt that we want our militia properly organized and that we must proceed in the way indicated. But my hon. friends must remember that a great many are called and few chosen in the matter of estimates. We try to provide in every part of the country as far as the present resources of the Dominion admit. I must say that the demands for improvements in connection with transportation are the main cause that this year many of these items are left out.

Humboldt public building, $25,000.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would ask the minister's attention to the matter of a small public building provided for in the estimates of the late government and renewed in his own estimates for this year but not included in these estimates. This is for the construction of a telegraph office, post-office and North-west Mounted Police station at a place called Gravel, 75 miles south of Moosejaw. The money was voted, the late government committed themselves to this work and the new government did so by renewing the estimates for the present year, but there is no provision for the coming year. As a matter of fact the contract has been let and signed and up to a few weeks ago there was no thought of recalling that contract. That contract will, of course, hold good in law. The vote will lapse in the spring and there is no provision for going on with the work.

Mr. MONK. If the contract is let, the government is committed and will have to provide in some way for the payment of the contractor.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will the minister give me the information in regard to this particular vote in the near future?

Mr. MONK. I will.

Mr. NEELY. The vote for this public building at Humboldt was in the estimates last year. During the summer the lands agent at Humboldt pointed out to me that proper provision was not made in the plans prepared by the Public Works Department for the Dominion Lands service in that new public building. Three services were to be housed by this building, the post-office, the Dominion Lands office and the port of entry. The agent at Humboldt who, although he is a good Tory, was appointed by the late Minister of the Interior and who is a good servant as well, called my attention to this omission. I asked the Interior Department to take the matter up with the Public Works Department and have the defect in the plans remedied, but I have had no information as to whether or not such a change has been made. Would the minister ascertain whether the necessary representations have been made to his department?

Mr. MONK. I shall do so. This building is being erected not only for the post-office and customs, but for a public lands office, and I think therefore provision must have been made as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. MONK.

Lethbridge public building, new, $100,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection to offer to this public building but I would impress on the minister that we have been looking for this post office for some time, and are in absolute need of it. The floor space in the post office in the city of Lethbridge, with a population of 10,000, is about half the size of Room 16.

Lethbridge is a growing city, and the post office accommodation there is at the present time a disgrace to the country. A site has already been purchased and I would ask the minister if he will proceed with the erection of the new post office at once.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Buchanan) is very fortunate in what has been provided for his constituency, there are others not so well served.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is the total estimated cost of the Lethbridge post office?

Mr. MONK. About $200,000.

Mr. WARNOCK. Does the government intend to erect a new post office at Macleod this year? The post office accommodation in that growing city which is becoming quite a large railway centre is utterly inadequate. The late government purchased a site and I would ask what the present government intends to do?

Mr. MONK. As soon as our resources will admit of it we will provide for the want mentioned by the hon. member.

Regina—armoury and drill hall, $50,000.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Have the plans been prepared for this building?

Mr. MONK. I think so, but I cannot say positively now.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). What is the total estimated cost of this armoury?

Mr. MONK. I cannot say at the present moment, but these armouries generally cost between $50,000 and $100,000.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I know the late government had plans prepared in the department for an armoury estimated to cost $130,000, and the other day the Minister of Militia told me in the House that it was not the intention of the present government to carry out these specifications because such a building would not be sufficient to meet the needs of an important city like Regina.

Mr. MONK. That must have encouraged my hon. friend.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). It did, and I am anxious now to know how much more than $130,000 is to be spent by the present government on that armoury and drill hall. I hope the minister will get me that information soon.

Mr. MONK. I shall endeavour to.

Strathcona public building, $30,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. This building is now almost completed and it was the intention of the late government to put a clock in the tower. Will the present Minister of Public Works carry out that intention?

Mr. MONK. I cannot say positively that we will put a clock in the tower, but we will endeavour to do so. We are getting prices from England for town clocks, and if we conclude arrangements we will endeavour to secure a sufficient number to meet all the exigencies of members in respect to public buildings throughout the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Are these clocks not manufactured in Canada?

Mr. MONK. They are not. They are made only in England and in the United States, and I think the cheapest can be got in England.

Weyburn public building, $15,000.

Mr. KNOWLES. The contractor for this building was at one time ordered to stop work, and I would ask the minister if he has since given the contractor instructions to proceed.

Mr. MONK. I am under the impression that the work on that building is at present proceeding.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will the minister ascertain and make sure of that?

Mr. MONK. I shall.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The late government purchased a site for a building in the town of Camrose and an appropriation appeared in the former estimates to erect a building there, but that vote has been withdrawn from these estimates. What is the intention of the government with respect to the Camrose public building?

Mr. MONK. If the site has been purchased we will keep it and endeavour to utilize it.

Mr. OLIVER. The late government provided $25,000 in the estimates for an immigration building at Calgary, which showed that it was impressed with the necessity of a substantial building for that purpose in Calgary. I urge upon the Minister of Public Works the desirability of providing for the erection of that building in the supplementary estimates. I also wish to know if it is his intention to proceed with the public building at Athabasca.

Mr. MONK. I shall make a note and give my hon. friend the information later.

Mr. WHITE (Alberta). I would ask the hon. minister to give me some further information regarding the votes for public buildings in Vegreville and Lloydminister. Last year there were sums voted for public buildings at these points, but these items have been dropped from the estimates of this year. I put a question on the order paper asking what were the intentions of the government regarding these buildings and why they did not appear in the estimates for 1912-13. The answer given to me was that the government would proceed with them as soon as circumstances would permit. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to explain what he meant? Vegreville is a central distributing point for the mails for miles on either side. It was expected last year that this building would be erected. A site was purchased and the late Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) promised that the work would begin last year. I was, therefore, much surprised to find no provision for it in the estimates.

Mr. MONK. All I can say is that we have a great many places which require public buildings, and it is impossible to supply them all. We are only to-day beginning to provide for public buildings in some of the older provinces where there has been necessity for them since the last 25 years. In my own constituency, a public building there has not yet been finished, and I am asking for a vote to finish it. It was unfinished in 1896 inside and outside. It has not yet been furnished with a clock, although there is a place specially prepared for one. As soon as possible I will provide for the two places mentioned. But I can only provide for a certain amount of works.

Mr. WHITE (Alberta). Might we hope that the minister will place an item in the supplementary estimates of this year to go on with this work?

Mr. MONK. Hope springs eternal in the human breast.

Mr. WHITE (Alberta). Of course the town of Vegreville has only a population of about 1,000, but a great deal of valuable mail matter passes through the post office there. That post office is now in the centre of a frame building, and the people and the postmaster are very much afraid lest great damage might be caused to a large amount of postal matter there through fire or other cause.

Mr. MONK. I shall make a note of my hon friend's suggestions.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to emphasize what my hon. friend has said. He has hardly enlarged sufficiently on the importance of this particular point. It is a railway junction. A branch of the Canadian Northern leads to Calgary from the main line, and it is a distributing point for the mail to a large territory to the north extending not less than a hundred miles through a settled country. Its importance therefore, as a mail distributing centre, is altogether out of proportion to its population.

Public buildings, British Columbia, $724,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I notice that British Columbia is the only province in which in 1912-13 there is a vote in excess of 1911-12. Is this a tribute to the victory of the hon. minister's friends there in September last, or is there any real necessity for these buildings?

Mr. MONK. I am surprised that my hon. friend should ask such a question. The prospective opening of the Panama canal, it is expected, will increase business immensely in Victoria and Vancouver.

Mr. OLIVER. If the increase of vote goes by the increase of population, my hon. friend has not looked over the records carefully, because I find that whereas the increase in population in Alberta has been a larger percentage than anywhere else in the Dominion, the appropriation for public buildings has gone down considerably, while that of British Columbia has gone up. I think we might have another explanation from my hon. friend.

Mr. MONK. The only other explanation is the law of compensation. My hon. friend knows that British Columbia has not been very generously dealt with in the past few years. This is a government of retribution and of justice.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend would amend that statement by striking out the word 'justice,' he would be more accurate.

Mr. NEELY. I would like to emphasize the statement expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton with regard to the treatment of the prairie provinces in these estimates. In the estimates for 1912-13 the total for public buildings for the two provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, which are represented in this House by 17 members, is $746,000, while the amount for British Columbia alone is $724,000, almost an equal amount to that for these two provinces. I do not think there is anything in the argument that the province of British Columbia has not been justly dealt with hitherto, because I find that in the estimates for 1911-12 the amount for British Columbia was $538,000, while the amount for Saskatchewan and Alberta together was $813,000. In other words, British Columbia was given a great deal more than half of the total for Saskatchewan and Alberta. I would not like to attribute the large vote this year for British Columbia to the fact that it is represented in this House by a solid phalanx of Tories, but I think the public generally in our prairie provinces may come to the conclusion that they are being penalized because they sent so few supporters of the present government to this House.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend's statement were carried over the past four or five years, I think he would find that things are pretty fairly equalized.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BORDEN. moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a personal explanation on a question privilege re the case of smuggling referred to in the 'Montreal Star' of the 12th and 19th instant. In its issue of the 29th instant appears the following:

> Ottawa, January 29.—In the House this afternoon, the Hon. J. D. Reid, Minister of Customs, will give an affirmative answer to the following question put by Mr. G. H. Baker, of Brome
> (1) Has the Minister of Customs taken cognizance of an article which appeared in the Montreal 'Star' of January 12, under the caption 'M.P.'s name is mentioned in a smuggling case'?
> (2) Are the statements, as communicated to the Department of Customs, substantially as alleged in the said newspaper article?
> To both queries the answer will be 'Yes.'

Mr. Speaker, I would say that I know nothing about the purchasing of those goods, nor the sending for them until the day following the seizure; and I am in no way responsible for this transaction. I was not aware of the bringing of those goods into Canada, and had no connection with the transaction directly or indirectly.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That the special committee to inquire into an old age pension system for Canada, as set forth in the resolution of this House passed on the 24th day of January instant, do consist of Messrs. Motion agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That it be resolved, that a message be sent to the Senate to inform their honours that this House will unite with them in the formation of a Joint Committee of both Houses on the subject of more equally dividing between the two Houses of Parliament the initiation of private and public legislation, with a view to curtailing the length of the sessions; and more particularly to prevent in future the custom known in parliamentary parlance as the 'railroading' of important measures at the end of the session, and to devise means by which such a result could be obtained; and that Messrs Aikins, Barnard, Bennett (Simcoe), Clark (Bruce), Clarke (Essex), Emmerson, Kyte, Sevigny, and Wilson (Laval), will act as members on the part of this House on the said Joint Committee.

He said: The resolution which was sent to this House by the Senate is to be found in the Votes and Proceedings of the 26th instant. No doubt it has already come to the attention of my right hon. friend.

Motion agreed to.

THE WRIT FOR SOUTH RENFREW.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I ask leave of the House to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the vacancy in the electoral district of South Renfrew, and to submit this proposition:

Pursuant to Rule 39 Mr. Clarke (Essex) proposes upon a motion to adjourn the House, and with its leave, to discuss a distinct matter of urgent public importance, namely: The question of the vacancy in the representation in this House of the electoral district of South Renfrew and of the delay in the issue of a writ for an election to fill the vacancy.

Leave granted.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of discussing this matter I move that this House do now adjourn. The matter to be discussed is one, I submit, of urgent importance to the interests of this country, namely, the vacancy which has existed in the representation in this House for the electoral district of South Renfrew for nearly two months, and the delay, for which some person must be responsible, in the issuing of the writ in order that the electors of the riding may have their undoubted right to a representative in parliament. It seems to me that the long delay of this matter is a direct violation of the spirit, and I am inclined to think, of the letter of the law in this respect. When we refer to the House of Commons Act, section 5, the procedure is very plain, so plain, one would think, that the writ would issue in a case of this sort almost automatically. That section provides that:

In case of a resignation the Speaker shall forthwith——

I emphasize the word 'forthwith.'

—address his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a writ for the election of a new member, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall issue the writ accordingly.

With commendable promptitude, upon receiving the resignation, you, Mr. Speaker, did issue your warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 7th December last, and so notified the House that you had issued your warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a writ. I am sure that if the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery had been supplied with the information required from another source he also would have been commended for his promptness in this respect, but instead of that we have gone nearly two months and the writ has not yet been issued. The reason is one arising in consequence of the Act which provides the duty to be done by the government before the writ can be issued and that duty is to fix the nomination day and name the returning officer in order that the writ may be issued. That has not been done.

Hon. gentlemen opposite realized that for a breach of the law it would be necessary to give some reason. Two reasons, if they may be called reasons, have been given for this great delay. The first reason was given by the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid). He went up into the riding of South Renfrew. He could not very well afford to say: We are doing this for the purpose of keeping this riding open; he found and realized the necessity under the law of giving some reason why the electors had been deprived of their rights and why the government had not done their duty in enabling them to send a representative to this House. I only need to refer to the reason, or the pretext, which he gave and I will take it from the organ of the hon. member himself, the Renfrew 'Journal.' This is the reason which that paper reports him as giving:

Dr. Reid said the Liberals had been unfair and ungenerous in regard to the acclamation of Mr. Borden in Carleton county some years ago. They had held back the issuing of the writ until after the House met so as to keep the Conservative leader out as long as possible.

A statement more conspicuous for its reckless disregard of truth, I think, it would be difficult to find. But, as I said before, the hon. gentleman realized that he must give some reason and he had to resort to this which he calls a reason for the extraordinary delay. What are the facts in regard to that? He cites as a precedent the matter of Carleton in the year 1905. In that case Mr. Kidd, who had represented that riding since the general election, tendered his resignation in this House and it was accepted on the 20th day of January, 1905. The by-election was held on the 4th February following, and the hon. member (Mr. Borden) was introduced into the House on the 7th day of February. So that, within eighteen days of the time the resignation was placed in the hands of the Speaker the hon. gentleman took his seat in this House. If that precedent had been followed in this case, after this House had resumed at the close of the Christmas vacation, south Renfrew would have had its representative sitting here in parliament. I have always thought that when a new government was elected it would be an improvement upon its predecessor, that instead of copying the vices and errors of its predecessor it would avoid those and imitate its virtues. That has not been the case with the present government. We have had it in other instances, in the matter of patronage and in the matter of advertising for tenders. When they are pressed for reasons they give as their precedent what they call the vices of the former government instead of what they call its virtues. It seems to me to be a true saying that the evil which men do lives after them, and that the good is often interred with their bones; so that it would appear that if there were any evils connected with the former government those evils are living after them and are being imitated by their successors. It is all the worse in this particular case because, on account of the fewness of the vices of the former government, the hon. Minister of Customs has had to resort to fiction in order to procure some vices. Not only does he base it upon facts but he invents a condition of affairs and then follows that invention which is not founded upon the facts when he says that he is imitating a state of facts that never did exist. I have been wondering who the prototypes of the members of the present government were. Most statesmen have some prototype, some great exemplar, that they are proud to follow. I know that my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has chosen the late Mr. Gladstone. He has often referred to him. I have searched through the history of many statesmen and there is only one that I have discovered that I think I might call the prototype of the present government. He was a Secretary of State many years ago. His name is Nicholas Machiavel. He had doctrines. I cannot say that I have found many men who have adopted the doctrines of that Secretary of State. But it is quite evident we have some followers of that gentleman in the present government. What were some of these doctrines which are being followed? One was that when a new prince was created he should immediately, by fair means or foul, put out of existence any person who might stand in his way. That is being followed. A man who ought to be in this House, a man of experience in this House, but who might be in the way of some hon. gentlemen is proposed by a majority of the people of that constituency but hon. gentlemen opposite immediately adopt the doctrine of Machiavel and try to put him out of the way.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). He is not in yet.

Mr. CLARKE (South Essex). And my hon. friends seems to relish the fact that he is not in.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). Oh, no.

Mr. CLARKE (South Essex). His prototype had some other characteristics. One was that a prince or a ruler should not be altogether good—some parts good, but, if necessary to save his life, then he should have some parts bad. I find in the composition of this Cabinet there are some parts that are bad and they find it is necessary to hold their names and their positions in order to do some things that are decidedly wicked, as instanced in their conduct in this very matter.

Another characteristic was that they must appear to be good, the hon. Minister of Customs goes up to Renfrew, but he does not give them the wickedness that is in his heart and say: we are going to try and kill Graham, but he says: there is a reason, they did not treat the present leader of the government correctly in a former instance and that is a good plausible reason, I will conceal the wickedness in my heart and say we mean to be just as good as they were.

Then there is another reason, perhaps the most far-reaching of all, that a prince, in order to rule well, ought to go to a preceptor who is part man and part beast. I do not know but what we have an illustration of that here, because when the hon. member went to Renfrew he spoke with the tongue of a man, but when, in this House, he is confronted by what he said there and the falsity of the statement, he takes the part of the beast and sits dumb in his seat.

The only fault I find with the hon. leader of the government (Mr. Borden) is that he should have allotted this wing of the government to the province of Ontario. I think the premier province of this Dominion deserved better at the hands of the Prime Minister than for him to have chosen the followers of this eminent statesman from that province. I do not think they represent the ideals of that province, and I think that an apology is owing by the Prime Minister in that respect. Who are the men who are the disciples of Machiavel? You can scarcely think that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), is responsible for this state of things. He has been a gymnast in his day, but I have heard him here as the apostle of the strictest virtues when he sat on this side of the House and, with the mellowing influences of age, I cannot think that he would be responsible for the subverting of the law for the sake of depriving a constituency of its right.

One cannot think that the Minister of Militia (Mr. Hughes) who comes from that province would be guilty, because who is there more valiant in fighting for fair-play and justice than he is? If he is true to himself he will call out the militia, and see that right is done and that the muzzle is taken off the people of South Renfrew.

I know that my hon. friend from western Ontario, the Minister of Labour, (Mr. Crothers), cannot be guilty. These are not the ideals or the principles of western Ontario. He would not be a true representative of that district if he did not disavow the attempt that has been made here to gag the electors of a prominent constituency in this province. Then the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. White)—much is expected of him. He represents the people who stand for the rights of all parties, for justice and right in this country. He comes from a party in which he was trained up in those principles and I think that the hon. member has it in his heart and if he is allowed will say that those schemes shall not prevail in the province of Ontario, and that common decency and right will be observed.

Then if these are not the disciples where are they? There are only two left from the province of Ontario, one is the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid), and he appears perhaps to be the leader in this respect. Then we have left only the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane). The Minister of Railways and Canals so far has exhibited more of the dumb portion of the ruler, because he does not say much in this House, but, none the less, he is credited with representing a very strong element of action. The lion is a very strong animal although he does not speak. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals came down here with a very strong reputation given to him by his former leader, Sir James Whitney, in the province of Ontario, and from my personal acquaintance with him I did not expect that he would be a disciple of this great statesman of whom I have spoken. But circumstances are suspicious. These are the two, I am afraid, who are to be credited with being the authors of this mischief which has been perpetrated. The Minister of Railways and Canals has, within the past week, appointed a commission to investigate the deportment of the Liberal candidate in South Renfrew, Hon. George Graham, a man who ought to be on the floor of this House when his administration is being discussed, and a man than whom no one is better fitted to watch in this House the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), in his dealings. If the hon. the Minister of Railways was as courageous a man as he is reputed by his former leader to be, he would say: Give me the very strongest critic you have, give me the man who knows most about my department, let him come in here, and let him watch my every movement. But that is not the case here; instead of inviting criticism from the man most able to critise instead of assisting, or at any rate giving fair-play so that that man may come into this House, we find this effort to prevent him gaining a seat in order that the House may not have the advantage of his assistance and experience.

Another thing points to the Minister of Railways in connection with the Minister of Customs, and it is not at all satisfactory. I again refer to the hon. member's organ, the Renfrew 'Journal.' That paper says:

A Low appeal from a Cabinet Minister.

Dr. Reid then turned his attention to the good roads movement advocated by the Conservative government at Ottawa, and the bald way that he handled this topic disgusted all decent men—who look for something higher than this kind of talk from a cabinet minister. The burden of this part of Dr. Reid's speech was to the effect that South Renfrew should vote for Dr. Maloney and the Borden government would then spend money in this district for good roads.

It is a little significant that when the Minister of Railways announced the Roads Bill in this House he stated that it was the intention to turn the money over to the provinces, but after this election contest became warm, we find he adds a little clause to the Bill providing that in addition to turning the money over to the provinces the government may spend it themselves. That is the provision of the Bill. Then we find his associate going into the riding of South Renfrew and saying: Vote right and then we will spend this money right in order to help those who vote for us. That is practically the result.

Then leaving that reason, if it may be called a reason, I have another, given by the hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden), only two days ago, and I think that a great deal of the virtue which might have existed if this reason had been given six weeks ago, is lost when we remember that although day after day the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), has inquired why the writ was not issued in South Renfrew, no suggestion of any obstacle was ever given until two days ago when the leader of the government said there was some trouble about voters' lists. There is no trouble about voters' lists in the organized districts of the province of Ontario, there is always an official list. Section 6 of the Dominion Elections Act provides:

For the purposes of any Dominion election held within the limits of a province, the voters' lists shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be those prepared for the several polling divisions established, and which, on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election, were in force, or were last in force, under the laws of that province, for the purposes of provincial elections.

Does the hon. member not know that lists are made up every year in Ontario, except in the cities where registration takes place? Previous to an election there is always a list that can be appealed to. The law is so framed that whenever there is an election there is a list that can be used. If a list has been revised within 60 days then the list to be used is that of the last year, the list last revised, so that although there may be a few straggling municipalities in South Renfrew where the lists were late in being revised that is not a sufficient reason to deprive that riding of its representation, because the list which is in force represents substantially the electors of the district.

We cannot at any particular time get out a list that will represent every person. All the men who are on the voters' list do not vote. If you look at the last returns for South Renfrew, you will find that only 70 per cent of those on the list voted. If the writ had been issued on the 7th of December, when the Speaker issued his warrant, all the municipalities containing the larger part of the vote had their lists for last year revised. The shifting vote is generally in the towns. In that district there are two towns—Arnprior and Renfrew. The lists for 1911 had been revised in those two towns. They had also been revised in the township of McNab, the next most populous district in the riding, and they have been revised in many other districts. So that the election could have been gone on with. Where the lists had been revised in time, they would have been used, and where they were not revised 60 days before the nomination, the previous lists would have been used, which is the case in every election. Take the last three Dominion elections. In 1904 the lists for that year could not be used except in one or two instances. The same was the case in 1908. It was the same in 1911, when, in my constituency at any rate, not one list of that year was used, but the list which had been revised in the previous year. Why was not this objection raised when the Cabinet Ministers, upon taking office after the last general election, went back for re-election. They took office in October. The lists in October were exactly in the same position as the lists in South Renfrew, outside of North Toronto, where the lists were revised before the election, it being a city. Take the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. White); if that rule had been applied, he would not be in the House yet. The same is true of the hon. members for Victoria and Haliburton, West Elgin, and Nipissing. Was there any suggestion in those cases that a writ could not be issued because the lists for this year were not ready? If the lists for this year were not ready, the elections would have been held under the lists of the preceding year. Why is there this discrimination? Why, in order to expedite the entry of these gentlemen into the House, did you use the lists of 1910, when you refuse to a member of the opposition the same right, even though almost all the lists in the riding have been revised for 1911. But even if you waited for the lists for 1911, the writ would have been issued by this time. I believe the list for the most outlying district was revised on the 12th of January; 60 days would bring the date of the nomination to the 12th of March; so that there is no reason why the government should not issue the writ for that date if they think that a sufficient reason for withholding the representation in this House. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a good reason. If that reason is applied, you might say, if we waited until midsummer, that there were still some people who ought to have a right to vote—some young men coming of age—and therefore you should wait for the next list so they could get on, and after that, wait again for someone else to get on the list; so that it would go on ad infinitum. I think the lists that are at present available do represent the riding. I suppose the changes that would be made would not be more than 20 in a riding of 7,000 electors. The reason advanced is one that has not been followed in other cases, and to which little weight should be attached. The result is that this riding is disfranchised. The candidates are in the field and the electors are ready, but they are gagged; they have not the right of free men. The time is slipping away, no doubt with the purpose that no member shall be sent to represent that riding. I believe that in all fairness the Prime Minister should issue the writ, as he is in honour bound to do, in order that that riding may have its representative in parliament.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, we have listened to a most notable example of what the girl in the play called 'excellent fooling,' because the hon. gentleman who is inspired by these virtuous and worthy sentiments is one who sat in this House day after day, week after week, and month after month, when periods exceeding by four times the one in this case had elapsed, and he was as dumb as the animal to which he has just referred. I am bound to say, with regard to his somewhat confused statement about men and animals, that a certain dumb animal, which spoke on one notable occasion when it stood still in the road, uttered words much more to the point than those which my hon. friend has uttered this afternoon. He seems to be under a misapprehension as to how long the county has been unrepresented. For what length of time does my hon. friend compute the period?

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). From December 7.

Mr. BORDEN. I want to tell him that the representative of the riding of South Renfrew drew his sessional indemnity up to the 31st day of December, and I presume that during that period the county may have been fairly regarded as being represented.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Does the hon. gentleman deny that the Speaker issued his warrant on the 7th of December?

Mr. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman deny that the member for South Renfrew drew his sessional indemnity up to the 31st day of December? Now, my hon. friend has used some strong expressions in the course of his remarks. He has told us that the riding of South Renfrew has been gagged, and he has posed as the champion of common decency and right. Does he know that his own leader sat for a whole session in parliament, when the government he supported denied this city the right to be represented here? Does he know that he sat in parliament during all that time and never lifted up his voice against what he now describes as an outrage? My hon. friend will perhaps remember that. He has expressed the aspiration that this government shall be an improvement upon its predecessor. I am sure that we would deserve to be turned out of office instantly if we do not come up to that standard; and I venture to think we will improve on it to such an extent that the people of this country will realize the distinction without any mental effort whatever.

It will be interesting, as my hon. friend has provoked this discussion, to go into the record of the late government with regard to this matter. It would take up too much time to go into all the instances in which the time during which constituencies were not represented in this House was greater than it is at present, but I may give a few of the constituencies in which the time that elapsed between the issue of the Speaker's warrant and the election was twice as long as in this case. I will begin with just a few illustrations and ask my hon. friend, as I go on, what he thinks of the efforts at gagging allowed by his leader to take place on those occasions. My hon. friend has spoken of my hon. colleague the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) sitting dumb in his seat. May I ask my hon. friend a very pertinent question? Why did he sit dumb in his seat when those outrages, to which I am going to allude, occurred?

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I do not know what the cases are.

Mr. BORDEN. Let me tell my hon. friend. There was the case of Beauce in which the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 30th of August, 1911, and the writ on the 10th December, 1911, leaving the representation vacant during a period of 111 days. Then there was St. James division, Montreal, where the warrant was issued on the 30th August, 1901, and the writ on the 19th December, 1901, leaving the representation of that constituency vacant during 111 days. There was also the riding of Addington, for which the warrant issued the 30th August and the writ on the 19th December, 1901—a period of 111 days. In the constituency of L'Islet the warrant was issued on the 30th August, 1901, and the writ on the 19th December, 1901—a period of 111 days. For the election in the county of Montmagny the warrant was issued on the 27th May, 1908, and no writ was issued before dissolution. Take the case of Saskatchewan, where Mr. Lamont resigned on the 5th September, 1905, the warrant was issued the 20th December, 1905, and the writ on the 16th January, 1905—a period of 118 days. Then there was the constituency of Assiniboia West. Mr. Scott resigned on the 29th August, 1905, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 7th September, 1905, and the writ on the 16th January, 1906, a period of 119 days. I did not hear the eloquent voice of my hon. friend raised in any of these cases to denounce the government for the outrage of delaying the issue of the writs such a protracted period.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). In most of the cases with which my hon. friend has just dealt, I was not a member of this House, and consequently could not have spoken, and in the others I understand the House was not in session.

Mr. BORDEN. Perhaps then my hon. friend will tell us now what he thinks of these delays. I would like to state here that from the 7th of December last until the 10th of January this House was not in session as the session was adjourned during that interval. That is a point my hon. friend seems unfortunately to have overlooked. Therefore, if his logic is to be accepted, there has only been a vacancy since the 10th of January last. I do not know whether I make the point clear to my hon. friend. Take another case, that of Vancouver, in which Mr. McInnes resigned on the 12th of May, 1900. The Speaker's warrant was issued on the 21st of May, 1900, and no writ was issued before dissolution. Thus in this case a period of 141 days elapsed during which that constituency was not represented. In the case of North Grey, Mr. Horsey, its former representative died in July, 1902, the Speaker's warrant was issued the 6th September, 1902, and the writ on the 31st January, 1902—a period of 147 days. There is further the case of the city of London. Mr. Hyman, its former representative, resigned on the 11th of April, 1907, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 20th of April, 1907, and the writ on the 29th of October, 1907—a period of 157 days. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke, Essex) was in the House on that occasion and the House was in session. Perhaps he will be kind enough to tell us what he thinks of that long delay. In York, New Brunswick, the election was voided on the 11th of June, 1901, the warrant was issued on the 21st of June, 1901, and the writ on the 5th of December, 1901—a period of 167 days. In North Simcoe, its former representative (Mr. McCarthy) died on the 11th of May, 1898, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 4th of June, 1898, and the writ on the 19th of November, 1898, a period of 168 days. In the case of Lisgar, in which the election of Mr. Richardson was declared void, the writ was issued on the 20th of July, 1901, the Speaker's warrant on the 7th of August, 1901, and the writ on the 27th of January, 1902, a period of 173 days. In Durham West, in which the election of Mr. Thornton was annulled, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 21st of June, 1901, and the writ on the 19th of December, 1901, a period of 181 days. Take the case of Bagot county, its former representative, Mr. Dupont, died the 12th of March, 1898, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 20th of April, 1898, and his writ on the 22nd of November 1898, a period of 216 days. In West Huron, its representative, Mr. Cameron, was appointed Lieutenant Governor on the 30th of May, 1898, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 4th of June, 1898, and his writ on the 31st of January, 1899, a period of 241 days. In West Hastings, Mr. Corby resigned the 1st of April, 1901, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 3rd of April, 1901, and the writ on the 19th of December, 1901, a period of 260 days. In the case of Winnipeg, Mr. Jamieson died the 21st of February, 1899, the Speaker's warrant was issued on the 29th of March, 1899, and his writ on the 2nd of January, 1900, a period of 279 days. In the case of St. James Division of Montreal, the election of Mr. Brunet was annulled on the 11th of March, 1903, the Speaker's warrant was issued the 3rd of April, 1903, and his writ the 27th of January, 1904, a period of 299 days.

I think there is only one conclusion at which this House can arrive and that is that my hon. friend must have sat in this House during the period in which these delays in the representation of these constituencies took place without knowing anything about them, because otherwise his voice would have been raised, as the champion of decency and right to prevent these constituencies being gagged as he now declares they were.

Let us take one other little illustration for the benefit of my hon. friend. He might be good enough perhaps to convey it to the gentleman who is the Liberal candidate in South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) because that gentleman was responsible for the very delay to which I am going to refer as he was a member of the Ontario government at that very time. I will give him some dates, if his nervous system will stand it, although, I am sure, it will produce a most profound shock.

The Ontario general election took place on the 29th May, 1902. Mr. Thomas W. Munroe was elected for North Renfrew—the adjoining riding to the one under discussion—by a majority of 459. He died two days afterwards, on the 31st of May, 1902. The Speaker informed the legislature on the 23rd of March, 1903, that a warrant for the writ had issued. But the Prime Minister of the government of Ontario—Mr. Graham being a member of that government—would not permit the writ to issue, and rejected Mr. Matheson's motion for a writ on the 31st March, 1903. There was a letter from Mr.—now Sir James—Whitney, to the Premier on the 6th November, 1903, and the election took place on the 26th December, 1903, exactly 18 months and 26 days after the vacancy occurred.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). If the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) will allow me, I think he is mistaken in saying that hon. Mr. Graham was a member of the Ontario government at that time. I think the right hon. gentleman ought to point out, too, that all this occurred during the moribund days of a thirty-year old government, and also that the electors severely censured them.

Mr. BORDEN. Some of these instances to which I am referring occurred when the late Dominion administration was moribund;—I am bound to admit that they have that excuse, whatever it may be worth. I was under the impression that Mr. Graham was a member of the government; but I withdraw that. But, I take it, he was a member of the House, and of course his voice was heard in indignant protest at the delay caused by the government. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke, Essex) can give me that assurance. Cannot he? (after a pause) I am awaiting assurance from my hon. friend that Mr. Graham's voice was heard in indignant protest against this.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I did not understand that the hon. gentleman was waiting. He gives me credit for omnipotence and omniscience.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not give the hon. gentleman credit for either omnipotence or omniscience—certainly not for omniscience in view of some of the statements he has made this afternoon. Let us look for a moment at the actual facts of the case. My hon. friend seems inclined to challenge the statements I made with regard to the matter. I will give him the information that has been furnished me from official sources. The following is a statement showing when the lists for the several townships, etc., came into force:—

Brougham township	Sept. 30, 1911.
McNab township	Sept. 30, 1911.
Bagot and Blythfield township	Oct. 31, 1911.
Adamston township	Nov. 7, 1911.
Griffith and Matawatchan townships	Nov. 10, 1911.
Horton township	Nov. 10, 1911.
Radcliffe township	Nov. 30, 1911.
Raglan township	Nov. 29, 1911.
Brudenell & Lyndock townships.	Dec. 14, 1911.
Sebastopol township	Dec. 14, 1911.
Grattan township	Dec. 21, 1911.
Haggarty & Richards townships.	Dec. 28, 1911.
Sherwood township	Jan. 15, 1912.
Renfrew town	Sept. 22, 1911.
Arnprior town	Oct. 16, 1911.
Killaloe station, village	Oct. 11, 1911.
Eganville town	Nov. 22, 1911.

The lists for Sherwood township were irregular, and, if I understand it, will have to be sent back to the judge; and it is a little difficult at present to say at what date they can be regarded as being in force. From the list I have given the hon. gentleman the House will see that, with the exception of two or three of the townships of South Renfrew, new lists were ready to be used if a little delay could be had. It was expected that all the lists could be used but, on account of the unfortunate error made in one township to which I have alluded, it may not be possible to carry out that purpose in its entirety. A further consideration is that many of the men in the riding are absent and are working in parts of the country that are very inaccessible at the present time; and it might be more desirable and convenient, so far as they are concerned, that the election should take place a little later in the winter. However that may be, I hope we shall be able, during the present week, to give consideration to the date at which this election should be held. I had not all the information on the former occasion of the discussion of this matter, but I think that I have all the information now except in regard to the one township indicated. If it had been possible to hold a meeting of the council to-day, there might have been an opportunity to consider the matter then. I hope it may be considered before the end of the present week.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Quebec East). Mr. Speaker, it is recognized as an indication of a poor defence in any case when resort has to be had to abuse of the plaintiff's attorney. That is exactly what my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has been doing. Nor is it any better to appeal to the tu quoque argument, but that is the only defence that he has been able to bring forward on the present occasion except in one thing to which I will refer in a moment. He has stated that the late government were very much to blame in not holding the election as soon as the warrant of the Speaker was issued. But in any of the cases which he has mentioned, with the exception of perhaps one or two, I do not remember that any complaint was made by any member of the then opposition that the writ was not issued. My hon. friend knows sometimes vacancies have taken place at times when neither one side nor the other is anxious to have an election. He has cited the case of the vacancy that took place last session. The election did not take place; and for good reasons. The hon. gentleman did not complain at that time, because we were all under the impression that there would be a general election, and so a by-election was unnecessary. He referred to my own case. I sat here for one whole session as the representative of two constituencies. That is quite true. In 1908 I was elected both for Quebec East and for the city of Ottawa. I sat during the session after the election without making my election of one constituency to represent. But I am not aware that my action was challenged by my friends or by anybody else.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was challenged the following session. And immediately that was done, I made my choice of one constituency and an election was held in the other. More than that, we were under the impression that the rules of the House of Commons required a member in such circumstances to make his election. But the Speaker ruled that no such rule was in force. And when we undertook to revise the rules of the House, I being then Prime Minister and Chairman of the Committee on Rules, we put in a rule whereby a member elected for two constituencies should be bound to select one of them within a given time after the election. That is the situation so far as my personal record goes. But what is the record of my hon. friend who now occupies the position that I occupied as Prime Minister in carrying out reforms which he advocated when sitting on this side of the House? He introduced a Bill while he was leader of the opposition to provide that there should be an automatic issue of the writ the moment the warrant of the Speaker had been issued. He has the opportunity now to bring into effect what he preached in opposition. The lists have been amended. The issue of the writ is not automatic, but it was up to the right hon. gentleman on the 8th of December to issue the writ in order to carry out the rule he preached when on this side. Seven weeks have elapsed and not a thing has been done nor has the writ been issued.

So the tu quoque argument can be turned against my hon. friend.

Mr. BORDEN. Would my hon. friend support such a Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I say that if I did wrong, I have been castigated for it. But my hon. friend said a moment ago that he would not deserve to be here if he did not do better than we did. Not only has he not done better than we did, but he is doing far worse. I will say, however, to his credit, I say frankly to my hon. friend, I believe that if he were to follow his own inclinations, his own better judgment, the writ for South Renfrew would have been issued long ago. I believe that he has received his inspiration from behind, that inspiration he has followed, and followed it not at all to his credit. I believe, nay I know, that if he were to follow the advice, the wish and the pressure of his friends in the riding of South Renfrew, the writ would have been issued before to-day. But there is some sinister influence at work upon my hon. friend, and up to this day he has not had the courage to resist that evil influence. He has listened to the voice of the serpent, he has not listened to the voice of the true men of South Renfrew. This is not the first time that such an occurrence as we have to-day has taken place. My hon. friend has referred to vacancies which have taken place, in regard to which the government have been dilatory in issuing writs for an election. But there is all the difference in the world between the causes which have been cited by my hon. friend, and the case in hand. The case in hand is quite different. Mr. Low was elected on the 21st of September to be the member for South Renfrew. Mr. Graham, a member of the old government, was defeated. Mr. Low resigned for the well known and avowed object of giving a chance to Mr. Graham to be elected, under those circumstances. This has happened before. Important members of the cabinet have been defeated, members that belonged to a government have lost their seats. But it never happened until this day that, under similar circumstances, the government of the day refused to pave the way for an opponent to come into the House. It has been stated in the press which supports the right hon. gentleman that the government owes us no favour. We ask for no favour in this matter. If the government want to oppose the election of Mr. Graham, they can do so. All we ask is fair play, play the game fair. Let us give a chance to the electors of South Renfrew to elect a representative. If it be the will of the government to oppose Mr.

Graham, they can do so. Now I submit to my hon. friend, is that fair? Is it right? Is it playing the game to refuse to issue a writ to fill a vacancy there, in order to prevent Mr. Graham from becoming a member of this House?

I have been in this House a longer time than my right hon. friend, I have sat opposite to Sir John A. Macdonald, and I say to my right hon. friend that when he acts in this way he does not follow the example that was set by Sir John A. Macdonald. In the election of 1882 Sir Richard Cartwright was defeated. Mr. John McMillan was elected for the riding of South Huron. In the month of November, 1883, Mr. John McMillan resigned his seat for the purpose of giving Sir Richard Cartwright an opportunity of entering this House. He resigned on the 23rd of November. On the 30th of November, the House not being in session, the Speaker issued his warrant. The government of that day, presided over by Sir John A. Macdonald, issued a warrant for an election in South Huron, so as to give Sir Richard Cartwright an opportunity to become a member of this House. The writ was issued on the 10th of December, ten days after Mr. Speaker had issued his warrant. The election took place on the 27th of December, and Sir Richard Cartwright was elected by acclamation. There was no opposition offered to him by the government of Sir John A. Macdonald. Sir, times have changed. Sir John A. Macdonald is no longer at the head of the Liberal-Conservative party. I am afraid that his traditions are gone also. If the traditions of fair play which actuated Sir John A Macdonald were still in the minds and hearts of the men who guide his party, this delay would not have taken place, there would have been an election, and Mr. Graham would now be in this House.

Mr. BORDEN. What about Mr. Foster in 1903?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware of that.

Mr. BORDEN. I am; because I went into the riding and campaigned for him when he ran in North Ontario, and when the whole force of the Liberal party was sent in there against him. And he was not elected.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware that anybody resigned his seat in his favour. There was a vacancy, and, therefore, it was an open fight. We are here to fight one another. Let me say again to my hon. friend that he may oppose the election of Mr. Graham if he wants to do so; but what I complain of is that he will not allow us to have an election. He can fight Mr. Graham if he chooses; that is his own business, I have nothing to say as to that. It might be more graceful to allow him to be elected by acclamation; but we do not ask for any courtesy or any favour. We simply ask the government to play the game fair, and that is what we are entitled to. But my hon. friend says there are some old lists which were not in force. It has been shown by my hon. friend from Essex that in the province of Ontario there are lists available all the time.

Mr. BORDEN. Then why did the right hon. gentleman desire to introduce legislation in 1908 to make new lists, because there were others not more than a year old prepared for the province of Ontario?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That was not for the old province of Ontario, it was for the unorganized districts. There are no lists in the unorganized districts, but in the organized districts there are lists all the time available. If they are more than sixty days old they are not in force.

Mr. BORDEN. But there were lists in the unorganized districts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. BORDEN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, there were lists, they were about a year old, but my right hon. friend thought they would not do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the very ground which is taken by the hon. gentleman to-day, that the lists are old. All the lists at present available in the riding of South Renfrew were revised in the month of October, and the month of September. On the 4th of December, when the local elections took place, the only new lists were those revised in September in the townships of Brougham, McNab and in Renfrew. These were in force, all the others were not in force, and the election took place, therefore, upon the old lists. If the arguments of my hon. friend were to be taken seriously, there would be no election at all in the province of Ontario, because at the present time the lists are all old, and there are no new lists for this year. I am sorry to see that my hon. friend has taken that position. But if he will play the game fair, he will give us an opportunity of meeting him in South Renfrew. Once more I repeat that if the government followed the advice of their own friends there would be no opposition to Mr. Graham's election in South Renfrew. But if there is an election, and it is for the government to say whether there shall be one or not, we are ready for it. It is the duty of the government to issue the writ immediately. When I called the attention of my right hon. friend the other day to this matter he said it was under deliberation. What have they to deliberate upon? It is a simple ministerial duty to issue the writ, and if my right hon. friend had been true to himself he would have issued the writ long ere this.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Customs). I wish to say a few words on this matter, since my name has been mentioned by the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion (Mr. Clarke, Essex). I see that the right hon. leader of the opposition is very wrathy over this matter. I can understand that he should be wrathy; in fact, he has not got over the result of September 21. On that day, many members of his government went down to defeat, Mr. Graham was one of them, he was rejected by the electors of Brockville.

Now, the right hon. leader of the opposition appeals for fair-play in this case. We want fair-play too, and the electors of South Renfrew want fair-play. I would like to know if the electors of South Renfrew shall have a right to say who shall represent that constituency or not. In this case the right hon. gentleman, through Mr. Low, decides that Mr. Graham shall represent that constituency without giving them an opportunity of saying whether he shall or not. A deal was made through Mr. Low. I suppose that the right hon. gentleman said to Mr. Low: You resign and Mr. Graham must represent that constituency whether the electors want him or not. There was no convention called in order to give them the right to say whether he should be the choice of the Liberal party. Then, in addition to that, Mr. Low was elected on September 21, to represent South Renfrew. We did not ask him to resign; he might have continued representing the constituency. The people supposed that he was qualified to represent the constituency, and, therefore, why did he resign? He was told before he resigned that he should not have resigned at that time. It was pointed out to him that there were hundreds of men up in the woods, who were present at the election of September 21, and who would be put to the expense of coming back home to poll their votes if he resigned at that particular time. Surely these people should be taken into consideration by the leader of the opposition, and those behind him who seem bound to take advantage of the absence of these people, and try and force an election on, and perhaps elect Mr. Graham. I feel that the people of South Renfrew should have an opportunity of saying whether Mr. Graham or any other person should represent the constituency, but at the same time I believe that the game should be fairly played, and that the election should take place on the latest list. By waiting a short time we can get this list. The leader of the opposition is bound to try and force this election on the list of 1910 when he knows that hundreds of men are out of the constituency and cannot cast their votes if it is held under that list. He also knows that there are hundreds of men not on the list of 1910, but who have been residing in the constituency during the past two years, who will not have a vote if the election is held as the right hon. gentleman desires it to be. These people's names will appear on the very latest list, and in addition, the men who are away will be back by the 1st of March, and have an opportunity of polling their votes. The right hon. gentleman had it in his power to keep Mr. Low here or to open the constituency. I do not want South Renfrew to be unrepresented any longer than is absolutely necessary, but I want to see that the people of that constituency who are absent shall have the right to vote, and not be disfranchised. The right hon. leader of the opposition quotes Sir John A. Macdonald's action as a precedent. He is very late in following in the footsteps of Sir John A. Macdonald. During the whole time that he was leader of the government he never followed that great leader —not in any one case. He cannot give one instance where he followed the example of Sir John A. Macdonald. The government have no desire to oppose the election in South Renfrew any longer than is necessary in order to get a vote on the latest list. We do not fear the result. Mr. Graham will likely be allowed to go back to Brockville again the same as he did after the election of September 21. The leader of the opposition wants to rush this matter through in the hope that a vote will be taken in such a way as to secure Mr. Graham's election. I do not think he expects him to be elected. The hon. ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lemieux) went up to Eganville and threw up his hands because he said: If you do not take him here we are going to take him down in Quebec and give him a seat. The ex-minister is quoted in a newspaper, and the other day he quoted an item in a newspaper with regard to myself and tried to make out that it was true. I came to the conclusion that the leader of the opposition was holding Quebec east and sitting for two seats in this House in order to give Mr. Graham a seat in Quebec east. That must have been the reason because, otherwise, the hon. ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lemieux) would not have made that statement. The leader of the opposition is trying to insinuate that we are withholding the election for some reason. I have felt that we should not go into the election just at this moment, or until we could get the list in proper shape, or the latest list. I would like to see it held on the latest list if possible. I would like to see these men given an opportunity of coming down from the woods and also that those on the latest list should be able to vote at this election if an election is to be held. The candidates are out now and there is no doubt of an election being held. It is not a very long time and I do not think it is unreasonable that a sufficient delay for this purpose should take place. Therefore, I do not think that the government are entitled to censure in any way for the very few days that have elapsed since the seat became vacant.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N. B.). Mr. Speaker, I only want to refer to one statement made by the right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Borden) and that is the statement made to the effect that Mr. Low had drawn his indemnity to the end of December. It must have been made for one of two reasons, either to try to make the people of the country believe that Mr. Low did not resign on the 7th of December, or for the purpose of the statement being used in the coming by-election to the prejudice of Mr. Graham because he is being supported by Mr. Low. I want to point out that I fear the right hon. gentleman has not taken the trouble to look up the law upon the subject. Mr. Low did exactly what probably 90 per cent of the members of this House do. He received a cheque on the 7th or 8th of December for his indemnity for the month of December. I do not know by what authority these cheques are issued because by section 34 of chapter 10 of the Senate and House of Commons Act it is provided that

> The said allowance may be paid on the last day of each month, to the extent of $10 for each day's attendance, but the remainder shall be retained by the clerk or accountant of the proper House, until the close of the session, when the final payment shall be made.

By the courtesy of the officials in some way, I presume, these cheques were issued on the 7th or 8th day of December. We all know that before a member can receive his indemnity he makes a declaration that, 'I have been in my place in the House for the time during which the House has been in session with the exception of so many days a certain number of days when I was ill within ten miles of the city of Ottawa.' Mr. Low would make the same declaration which every other member of this House made and section 35, subsection 2 provides what are the days of attendance in arriving at the computation.

> Each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day, or on which the member is in the place where the session is held but is by reason of his illness unable to attend any such sitting as aforesaid, shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session, for the purposes of the indemnity.

Therefore, when Mr. Low made the declaration on the 8th of December that the law required him to make, the accountant of the House issued his cheque automatically and Mr. Low was absolutely entitled to it. I think that the right hon. leader of this House is getting down pretty small when he makes a statement of that kind for the purpose of making campaign material in the coming by-election.

Mr. BORDEN. The statement I made was absolutely accurate. I had it verified and I do not know what my hon. friend makes out of it. Does he say that the county was not represented during that period?

Mr. CARVELL. No, I say it is pretty small politics for the Prime Minister of Canada to play.

Mr. BORDEN. I can only say that I regard a remark of that kind, coming as it does from my hon. friend, as the highest compliment I could get.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Russell). Before this motion is put, I also desire to draw attention to the continued practice of the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) in defending the course which the government has taken in this case by resorting to the tu quoque argument. In order that this government may do something original, may get some small measure of policy of its own before the country, I would suggest that the time of the House might be saved if a certain space of time were allotted on some set day in which all these tu quoques could be set forth and then from that time forward we could hear something original from the government, something that they have done themselves.

The argument advanced by the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) as to Mr. Low having drawn his sessional indemnity on the 7th of December as an argument for the writ not being issued, is, I submit, completely negatived by the fact that you, Sir, issued your warrant on the 7th of December, declaring that there was a vacancy and addressing it to the proper officer who, in turn, would have issued another process were it not that he was restrained from doing so by not receiving the proper instructions from the government.

The leader of the government (Mr. Borden) sought to draw a parallel between my hon. friend, the member for Essex (Mr. Clarke) sitting dumb in this House when delays in other cases took place and his Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) sitting dumb when his conduct in regard to this election was brought to the attention of the House by the right hon. the leader of the opposition, (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a few days ago. Let me point out to the hon. leader of the government that there is a vast difference between the two cases of sitting dumb. In the case of the hon. member for Essex, the most that could be said against him was that if he did sit dumb when these delays occurred, he was merely open to reproof as one of a hundred odd members supporting the then government. But it is vastly different in the case of the Minister of Customs. His veracity was directly challenged, he not only sat dumb when the proofs in refutation of his statement were adduced, but to-day he rose in his place and did not seek to refute the facts advanced by the leader of the oppostion (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in refutation of his statements in South Renfrew. Out of that comparison the member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) comes with flying colours indeed. But the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid) to-day stated that his only reason for desiring a delay in this case was the state of the voters' lists, that there were a great many men up in the woods. Is it not rather singular then, when the hon. the Minister of Customs was airing his eloquence in South Renfrew, that reason never occurred to him? Is it not strange that the first time we hear that from the Minister of Customs is after he has been in South Renfrew, after he has urged as a reason for the support of his candidate the expenditure of road money and other matters calculated to interest the electorate at the time of a by-election? Is it not strange that for the first time we hear this afternoon from the Minister of Customs that his real reason for the delay in this case is the state of the voters' lists, and the fact that there are hundreds of men in the woods, about whom he is so solicitous that he desires to prolong the delay in order to give them an opportunity to vote. The instances of delay cited by the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) may or may not be pertinent to this case. One could only be sure of that if he investigated each case and ascertained whether or not parliament was in session at the time. If parliament was not in session then the cases would not be pertinent

However that may be, in the last analysis it resolves itself into another of these tu quoque arguments which does little credit to a leader of a government having such a powerful majority as the right hon. gentleman.

After all, the point raised by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) remains untouched and unanswered. The hon. member for South Essex pointed out that under the law there is always a voters' list available for an election in the older parts of Ontario. If the new list is 60 days old, that is the list and it is used. If it is not 60 days old, then, according to section 6 of the Act, the list last in force is used. As the right hon. the leader of the opposition pointed out, it is open to the government to use the lists used in the provincial election in December last. But they choose not to do so and want to create the impression that by reason of the present state of the lists, which are not complete in that county, the election cannot be brought on. If that argument were to be admitted then all elections in Canada, both general and by-elections, would be made dependent on the state of the voters' lists, and not upon the action of the government of the day. In other words, an election could be put off indefinitely owing to the delay, neglect or incompetence of municipal clerks in Ontario in not sending in lists in due time. The falsity of that argument is apparent when it is stated. The law is specific, there is a list available and I submit that from what I have heard as to the reasons in this case, it never entered the minds of the government until two days ago to charge as a reason for delay in going on with this election that the lists were not ready. Having regard to the large number of electors on the list in South Renfrew and to the fact that the list for only one township is still in doubt, I say that my hon. friends are deprived of the very reason they advanced for not proceeding with this election. As a matter of fact, the list which was sent back for revision was sent back because of a mere typographical error, one that is obvious on its face. I am advised that the court was held yesterday or to-day for the revision of that list and it will be back in the hands of the clerk of the Crown in Chancery either to-day or to-morrow. It bears date of January 15, and will be in force from that day, so that to-day, if the right hon. the leader of the government were so willed, he could issue the writ for this election. In view of what has been said and of the obvious duty of the government, I venture to express the hope that the writ will issue without any further delay.

TELEPHONES IN RURAL POST OFFICES.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). moved:—

That, in the opinion of this House, wherever a telephone system exists, or is hereafter established, in any rural section of Canada, a telephone should be placed in each post office in such sections by the Post Office Department.

He said: Before this motion is dealt with I would like to make a few remarks. It has always been the pride of Canada that we should have a first class postal service in every part of the country. I think the efforts of every government since confederation have been directed towards this end, and the resolution I am moving this afternoon has for its object the giving of better mail accommodation to the farmers in the rural districts of our country.

For many years we had but one telephone system in Canada, the Bell. It was found that telephones became a necessity as years went on, and to-day they are a paramount necessity in every part of the country. In many parts of Canada other telephone systems have been established in competition with the Bell system and assist in giving a better telephone communication to the farmers in different sections of the country.

In Peel county one township council has issued bonds and constructed its own telephone system, and is reaching almost every house in the township. This applies also to many other counties in Canada. The result is that the farmers have the advantage of a telephone in their homes. My resolution provides that whenever such a system is operated either by the Bell Telephone Company or by any other company, the Post Office Department shall connect the post office in that section, at the expense of the government.

Mr. COCHRANE.

The salary paid to the country postmaster to-day is so small that in some cases postmasters are unwilling or unable to put a telephone in their houses for the accommodation of the farmers.

As this House is well aware, the question of a better salary for country postmasters has been the subject of discussion for many years; complimentary to the late government, I may say that they increased the salary of the rural postmasters, and, to that extent, received the approval of the people of this country. I think it should be the aim of the government now in power to further increase the salaries of the postmasters in rural districts.

Some hon. members. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. That is one of the objects of this resolution. It is not my idea that the government should put in a telephone system where one does not now exist. I simply propose that the government should go over the field and where telephone systems are in operation have the rural post offices connected up at the expense of the government. I think it would be in the interest of the people of this country if that were done.

Mr. NESBITT. Would the hon. gentleman allow me a question? Would you propose to increase the salary of the postmaster or postmistress where telephones are put in? Of course, the telephone would mean extra work.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a fair question, and one which should receive consideration.

As I said a moment ago my aim is to assist the government, if they require assistance in this way, or rather to impress the government with the fact that under this resolution they would have an opportunity of increasing the very small salaries which are now paid to the rural postmasters throughout the country.

My hon. friend's question, if I understand it correctly, assumes that if such a policy were adopted by the government, and telephones were installed in the different post offices, it would increase the labour of the postmasters in these post offices. That is very likely true, although personally I do not think it would be very much more labour for the postmaster, if, for example, a farmer living within a mile or so of the post office should call up on the telephone and ask if there was any mail in the office for him. I do not think it would take much more of the postmaster's time to answer the telephone than it would to entertain the farmer for half an hour if he came down to find out whether there was anything in the post office for him.

Mr. NESBITT. They do both.

Mr. BLAIN. My point, Mr. Speaker, is that the farmers do not complain a great deal about going to the post office when they receive mail, but they do complain of the number of times they travel themselves, or send somebody, and come home without anything. That is exactly what I wish to avoid.

I think it is only fair that when the enterprise of the people in a rural section of this country has reached the point where they will invest their own money to have a telephone system, that the government should join them and see that the postal system of the country is connected up with the telephone system. I think that is a reasonable request, and one which should appeal to the judgment of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House.

In the large centres of population they have a daily delivery. In smaller centres they are close to the post office, and somebody is passing it almost every day, therefore, the task of going for the mail is not a very serious one, and is not at all comparable with what they have to meet in the rural districts.

I am not asking in this resolution that the government expend its money in the construction of telephone systems. That has already been taken up in some places by private enterprise. In some of the provinces it has been dealt with by the provincial governments. I do not ask that this government should appropriate a large amount of money for this purpose, but I do ask that we simply follow the people—not lead the people in this instance—and where they have telephonic communication, the government should join with them and see that the post offices are connected with the telephone system, so that there may be a good and efficient service.

At the present time most of the farmers in these rural sections can call up their storekeepers, or their neighbours. If that be true, I say it is in the interest of the farmer, and calculated to make the home life on the farm more acceptable, that the government should see to it that the post offices in these sections are connected, so that the entire system would be perfect and up to date.

I do not think that the resolution is one which requires any extended remarks from me. This is a matter which has had consideration in this House in former years. At the last session I had the honour of directing the attention of the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to the matter, and he was good enough to say he thought it was worthy of very serious consideration. Now, I am quite sure he is still of that opinion.

I am not going to press the question on the government. I realize it has been in office but a short time, and has had many things to face and deal with. I am not going to be over anxious, but in these days of people demanding a better postal service, I think the time is opportune to take up this subject.

There are a good many sections of the country to which this resolution would not apply, but, in other sections, even in the province of Ontario, there are still many places where they only have a mail three times a week, and in some cases only twice a week. In fact, in some places not at all, as my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) says.

I have many facts and figures which I could cite, but I do not think I should take up the time of the House with them. However, if my hon. friends on both sides of this House will support this resolution, simple as it is, I think they will receive the approval of the rural districts of our country.

In conclusion, I simply wish to move the adoption of the resolution, and direct the attention of the goverment, and more particularly of my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) to an earnest and thoughtful consideration of the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. My attention has been drawn to this resolution, and after looking up the authorities I must say my verdict is that the resolution is out of order inasmuch as it implies the purchase and putting in of telephones, which must be paid for out of the revenues of the country.

Mr. PELLETIER. If the House is willing, we might allow the discussion to go on by consent. This is a matter of public interest and one of considerable importance. At all events, the debate on it will probably be adjourned.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I would be bound to rule on it, for two or three reasons. In the first place all proposals to this House calling for the expenditure of public money must come from a minister of the Crown and not from a private member. Also, the consent of the government must be given to the consideration of such proposals. The second reason is that all resolutions which involve a charge on the public revenue must be considered in Committee of the Whole House, not by motion, as it is proposed to do in this case. 'Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure,' page 567, third edition, says:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution address or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or Bill is proposed.

The constitutional provision which regulates the procedure of the Canadian House of Commons in this respect applies not only to motions directly proposing a grant of public money but also to those which involve such a grant.

It is clear to me that if this motion carried it would involve such a grant.

A member who has not received the permission of the Crown has not been allowed to move the House into committee on a resolution providing for the purchase and exportation by the government of certain depreciated silver coinage.

Then with regard to the other question, I find this in 'May's Parliamentary Practice,' speaking of the authority of the Crown:

By a standing order, 20th March, 1866, 'This House will receive no petition for any sum relating to public service, or proceed upon any motion for a grant or charge upon the public revenues, whether payable out of the consolidated fund, or out of monies to be provided by parliament, but what is recommended from the Crown.' And this rule is extended, by the uniform practice of the House, to any motion which, though not directly proposing a grant or charge upon the public revenue, involves the expenditure of public money.

The purchase of these telephones would clearly involve an expenditure of public money. For these reasons I should be obliged to rule that the motion is out of order.

Mr. PELLETIER. The only thing I want to make clear is that I did not raise any objection.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose there will be no objection in allowing the discussion to go on. I did not propose to press the resolution, it was my intention to withdraw it. I appreciate what the Speaker has said, and I do not wish to violate the rules. If necessary, I would ask that the resolution be allowed to stand, until such time as I could move an adjournment in committee, so as to bring it within the rules of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the motion has now been ruled out of order, there is nothing before the House.

NATIONAL MEANS OF COMMUNICATION.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, a commission should be appointed to investigate the systems of national telegraphs and telephones, wireless telegraphs and cables, also postal conditions, laws and regulations, parcel post, means of collecting and distributing mails, with a view to submitting such data and information to the Post Office Department as would help to improve existing conditions in all the above, and to further inquire into postal facilities in rural districts in other countries in order that a better system of rural free mail delivery may be inaugurated.

He said: My object in asking for the appointment of this commission is to obtain definite data and statistics with reference to these great public utilities. In the Halifax platform, which was issued in August, 1907, the present Prime Minister of Canada used the following words:

It has been demonstrated in Great Britain that telegraphs and telephones can be successfully operated in connection with the Post Office Department. I see no reason why a similar system should not be inaugurated and carried out successfully in Canada. Few people realize that at the present time Canada owns and operates 6,586 miles of state telegraph lines. These lines have not been remunerative for the reason that they have been established in thinly settled portions of the country where private enterprise could find no adequate return. If we are prepared to invest national capital in thinly peopled and unremunerative localities, why should we hesitate in those portions of the country where operations can be carried on at a profit? I do not forget the necessity that our great railways must be equipped with telegraph and telephone lines, nor do I forget the principle of justice to invested capital which I have already invoked. Having regard to these considerations our policy should include the establishment, after due investigation, of a system of national telegraphs and telephones under conditions which shall be just to capital already invested.

I feel satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that out of the Halifax platform have already come many great reforms in the Dominion of Canada, but none greater than the proposed legislation. I think we should go about acquiring these great public utilities under the common-sense business methods, and there is no question in my mind that if they were nationalized they would become a source, not only of revenue, but of great advantage to the people of Canada. There are five great means of transmitting intelligence in this country: The telegraph, the telephone, wireless telegraphy, cables, and the post office. All these means of transmitting intelligence are of vital importance to every man, woman and child in the country. It is, therefore, our duty to investigate and gather statistics with regard to these important facilities, with a view to nationalize them, and make them part of the Post Office Department of Canada. I propose to give some reasons for asking for this legislation. For the past five years I have given considerable time and attention to gathering statistics with regard to these great national undertakings. Knowing as I do the success that has attended the nationalization of these utilities in foreign lands, I feel confident that the time is not far distant when the people of Canada will demand, at least, that an investigation be made with a view to placing these utilities under the Dominion government. In the platform of the right hon. the Prime Minister, which I have quoted, he refers to these utilities. He calls attention to the fact that we had in Canada at that time over 6,000 miles of telegraph lines that were not remunerative. To-day we have 8,000 miles of telegraph lines, owned, controlled, and operated by the Dominion government; and these telegraph lines, instead of being a source of revenue to the government, cost this country last year the sum of $270,000. We have over 600 offices for the management of these telegraphic enterprises. The largest telegraph company we have in the Dominion of Canada, namely, the Canadian Pacific railway, control, own and operate over 12,000 miles of pole lines, and over 76,000 miles of wire; and their income, after paying all expenses, amounted last year to the handsome sum of $1,270,000.

That amount, according to the books which the Canadian Pacific Railway placed at the disposal of the railway commission within the last few weeks, shows that they only invested in that enterprise, $6,600,000. You can readily see that within six years, by that method of calculation, the amount of capital invested would be returned to them in dividends. You will find that the Canadian Pacific Railway have been able to reaudit the statement of the audit office as placed before the railway commission. They have tried to show that there are certain charges which should have been included in the statement of the investment which came from their own audit office, but after investigating that you cannot come to any other conclusion than I have that, in so far as these statements are concerned, they are not worthy of consideration and that the actual income from the investment of $6,600,000 amounted last year to $1,270,000.

Let us take the next greatest telegraph company we have in the Dominion of Canada, the Great Northwestern, with its 17,000 miles of pole lines and its 50,000 miles of wire. They have been able to cover up their earnings to a very great extent because a large portion of their stock is held in the United States and the enterprise is controlled and operated from that point. If you take into consideration all the other telegraph lines in the Dominion of Canada—and when I say that, I am speaking in reference to the telegraph lines of the railways—you will come to the conclusion that the Canadian Pacific Railway own, operate and control nearly half the miles of pole line and more than half the miles of wire in Canada and if that company are able to place before the Railway Commission figures which go to show that they have only invested $6,600,000 in the enterprise, it is not too much to expect that if we were to attempt to purchase all the telegraph lines and wires in Canada the cost should not exceed $13,000,000 or $14,000,000. But then, you would have control of the telegraph wires that operate our railways; so that you have to take from that the wires necessary to operate the railway systems. When you came to figure it up you would find that you could not possibly invest more than, say $10,000,000, in order to enable you to own and operate the commercial telegraph lines. Ten million dollars is not such an enormous amount when you take into consideration the rates which have been charged against people in the east and in the west and at the same time the manner in which this public utility has been conducted. In addition to that the Canadian Pacific railway are paid through our Own Cable board $65,000 per annum in connection with the cable service, which would help to pay the interest on our own capital.

Now, I desire to refer to the telephone companies and to call your attention to the fact that we have 460 independent telephone companies in Ontario while, in the Dominion, it is estimated that we have in the neighbourhood of a thousand telephone companies. In the United States they have 15,000 independent telephone companies operating over 4,000,000 phones and costing, as they claim, over $400,000,000. The independent telephone companies in our country are practically on their knees to the great Bell Telephone Company, especially in the eastern provinces and the proposal that I have to make to parliament is that we should own the trunk lines of telephone, that these trunk lines should go to the independent companies and let the municipalities or the independent companies own, control and operate these lines and make them local concerns. After investigating to some extent the operation of telephone lines in different foreign countries I find that the most feasible plan, as far as Canada is concerned, is that we should at once either take over the trunk lines and operate them or else build trunk lines in Canada in connection with the telegraph lines because we must recognize that the telegraph and telephone should go hand-in-hand. Wires that are used for one service can readily be used for the other. The provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta own and operate their own telephone systems. We should, at the earliest possible date connect up the eastern trunk lines with that great northwestern country and with these great western provinces so that we will be able to assist in such a way as would be possible, did we own, as we should, the telegraph and telephone lines running through that western country.

Mr. McCRANEY. Does the hon. gentleman propose that this parliament should take over the lines which are now under the control of these three western provinces?

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). I have no such proposition in my mind. I do not think it would be advisable for this government to go into the different municipalities in Canada and attempt to own, control and operate these lines. In many foreign countries they have systems whereby they do control, own and operate all the telephone and telegraph lines in those countries, such as Germany, but in other places, where they own and operate trunk lines and where they have connected them up with the municipalities they find that it is an altogether better system and that the conditions which arise in the different municipalities are such that they have an altogether better service.

We have in Canada some twenty-five wireless telegraph stations. Some years ago the late government entered into a contract with the Marconi Company for the construction by that company of a number of wireless stations in Canada. The Marconi Company agreed to build these wireless stations for $5,000 each and to include in each station comfortable homes for the operators in charge. From a return which I asked last year we find that these stations have cost Canada from $10,000 to $20,000 each and that in addition to this we are paying tens of thousands of dollars to the Marconi Company to operate a large proportion of those wireless telegraph stations. But we are in this position with regard to these great utilities. As far as the telegraph system is concerned we own and control the lean end of it, the productive end is turned over to the great monopolies. It is the same with the telephone system. You find rural districts doing their utmost to gather together a sufficient number of people to organize independent companies in rural districts in order that they may have some of the comforts which accrue from a telephone system. But the productive end of the telephone system is owned, operated and controlled by the Bell Telephone Company in Ontario and Quebec and in some of the eastern provinces by other telephone companies.

The wireless telegraph stations are in much the same position. I want the House to recognize that we have some twenty-five wireless telegraph stations in Canada costing from $10,000 to $20,000 each. Fifteen of these stations are controlled by the Marconi Telegraph people. They are the profitable end of the wireless telegraph stations. The unprofitable end of that whole system is operated by this government at a very great loss. I am a firm believer in wireless telegraphy being taken over as a public utility and placed under the control and operation of this government in order that not only our shores may receive the splendid advantages that accrue from having these stations established there but that, in the not far distant future, we may have stations throughout the Dominion of Canada and that the long distances that separate our east from our great west may be overcome by a system of wireless telegraphy.

I shall also endeavour to place before the House a number of statistics with reference to parcel post systems in European countries. The position of the parcel post system is similar to that of the other utilities to which I have referred. Our Post Office Department does the unprofitable end of the carrying of parcels in this country, the profitable end is done by the express companies, and they are able to pay dividends of 100 per cent and 200 per cent on their capital. The unprofitable end is done by the Post Office Department, but as soon as it gets up to a few ounces in weight the postal rate begins to be prohibitive and the express companies step in and take the remunerative end of the parcel post. I have no desire to urge upon the House the need of establishing a parcel post for Canada; I shall only urge the need of establishing a parcel post system in the rural districts, what you might term a rural parcel post. This parcel post system will be confined to rural mail or stage routes and only there so that the great departmental houses will not have the advantages that many of the people of our country are inclined to think they might have if we had a general parcel post system for the Dominion.

I trust that my good friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) will not think I am encroaching on his duties as Postmaster General, in placing this resolution before the House. I hope that this commission, if it is appointed, will have the privilege of gathering in other lands material that will be of untold benefit to the Post Office Department of Canada, and that they will report to the Postmaster General on the important matters of rural free mail delivery and parcel post in other countries. Our present system of rural free mail delivery is not only extravagant, but it is breeding contention and strife in the different districts in which it is in operation, and I would throw out as a suggestion to the Postmaster General that the time has come when the Post Office Department will have to make a separate branch for this service and place over it a man who is not only competent, but is willing and ready to further the interests of rural free mail delivery in Canada. I believe that many of the inspectors in the department to-day are not anxious to further the interests of rural mail delivery, they do not like to assume the added responsibilities that it entails. I sincerely hope the day is not far distant when the Postmaster General will undertake these reforms, and that he will see that these inspectors will do their duty in this regard and will carry out the wishes of the people in reference to this great national undertaking.

I would like to place before the House some figures with regard to the telegraph systems of Canada.

Canada owns in government-owned telegraphs and cables, 8,406 miles, of which 8,150 miles are telegraph lines, or land lines. She has 603 offices, and the number of messages sent in 1910-11 amounted to 249,915. The expenditure in 1910-11 amounted to $432,970.04, while the revenue amounted to only $169,585.15, leaving a deficit of $263,384.89.

The Canadian government get the lean end of the telegraph business. In the same way they get the lean end of the cable, telephone and postal business, while the monopolies have control of the profitable end of these systems.

Note the fact that the Dominion has 603 offices with only 8,000 miles of line, while the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company, the only one that competes with the Canadian Pacific railway in extent of mileage, own, as they did in 1910-11, 11,234 miles of pole lines, and 50,092 miles of wire line, and sent 2,907,495 messages, having only 1,183 offices, or less than double the number of offices run by the Canadian government, and send three times as many messages.

The Canadian Pacific railway in that year operated 12,257 miles of pole lines, with 76,175 miles of wire, sending messages to the extent of 3,431,493, and the total number of their offices is 1,372, or a little over double the offices now operated by the government.

The Western Union, the third largest of the chartered companies, in 1910 had 2,639 miles of telegraph pole lines, with 11,024 miles of wire, sending 551,764 messages, with 217 offices.

The North American Telegraph Company, Limited, in 1910 operated 605 miles of line and 783 miles of wire, and sent 38,015 messages with 83 offices.

The Grand Trunk Pacific railway in 1910 operated 1,699 miles of pole lines, 5,081 miles of wire, and 71,154 messages, with 73 offices.

The Algoma Central railway in 1910 had 130 miles of line, 174 miles of line wire, sent 3,639 messages, and had only four offices.

The Temiscamingue and Northern Ontario railway in 1910 had 265 miles of pole line and 1,865 miles of wire, and sent 131,106 messages with twenty-two offices.

The total number of miles of pole line owned by all the companies in Canada is 28,729.

The total number of miles of line and wire operated by telegraph, telephone and cable companies in 1910 was 145,997.

The total number of messages taken and delivered over all these lines, not including press messages, was 7,134,665.

The total number of offices was 2,934.

You will readily see that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company own and operate nearly half the total number of miles of pole line in the Dominion, and over half the miles of wire, and send nearly half the messages; so that with an estimate placed before you by that company of less than seven million of dollars as the value of their pole lines, lines of wire, etc., the estimate I have made of $15,000,000 would be more than sufficient to purchase all the telegraph lines in existence in Canada to-day. The annual charge for this amount of money at three per cent would be $400,000. In order to make the proposition pay interest at three per cent on $15,000,000 you would need a surplus of $400,000 per annum. The surplus of the Canadian Pacific Railway telegraphs operating half the proposed mileage has been over one million per year on the average for the past six years. If, on the other hand, we were to buy the Canadian Pacific Railway system and charged them so much for operating their trains over that system, the government getting the rest, there would be a still greater revenue. At the present rates of messages the government could count on a profit of one million dollars per year. So on an investment of $7,000,000 the government could count on having their money returned in at least six years, or the earnings could be applied to a reduction of rates.

I have some figures which have been placed before the Railway Commission within the last few weeks by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I will ask the House to be allowed to place them on 'Hansard.'

Mr. PELLETIER. I do not think the House would object to my hon. friend placing these figures on 'Hansard,' as they are most interesting.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I appreciate what the Postmaster General has said. These are copies of statements taken from the audit books of the Canadian Pacific Railway telegraph line, showing the commercial end of their business.

They want to re-audit the Audit Office figures.

NOTE.—The above statement of 'expenses' does not include the following:—

(a) Expenses for salaries and material carried in accounts of Railway Departments.

Should not in any event.

(b) Expenses for salaries and material carried in Railway Maintenance Appropriation Accounts.

No reason to do so.

(c) Rental of offices occupied by Telegraph Department at Vancouver, Lethbridge, Calgary, Revelstoke, Moosejaw, and Fort William, no charge being carried on the books of the railway company against the Telegraph Department.

Help each other anyway.

(d) Rental of right of way on railway company's property.

Railway company has to have the telegraph system.

(e) Interest on capital invested. Have to invest capital to run railway.

(f) Proportion of expenses of general management, auditing, purchasing, engineering and law departments, which are borne by the railway company, and no proportion of which can be actually allocated to telegraph department.

Works both ways. Only a portion of latter should be charged.

Now, let me take up a little of your time in calling your attention to the discrimination in rates on the part of this great company; and I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not wish to antagonize that company in any particular. I give this statement merely to demonstrate to the House the advisability at least of investigating this whole question. I am satisfied that if that is done, we will come to the conclusion that these rates are exorbitant and unfair, especially to the people of the western provinces. I hope the day is not far distant when our telegraph rates to the western provinces will be one-half what they are to-day or even a great deal less, and I believe we could have them so if we had national-owned telegraphs. Let me call your attention to the following rates:

From Montreal to Toronto, 333 miles, 25c.

Brandon to Moosejaw, approximately 265 miles, 40c.

Moosejaw to Swift Current, 175 miles, 40c.
Regina to Saskatoon, 160 miles, 40c.
Ottawa to Windsor, 482 miles, 25c.
Regina to Calgary, 480 miles, 60c.
Quebec to Toronto, 513 miles, 25c.
Brandon to Swift Current, 375 miles, 60c.
Quebec to Windsor, 720 miles, 25c.
Brandon to Calgary, 705 miles, 60c.
Rimouski to Windsor, 900 miles, 25c.
Winnipeg to Edmonton, 800 miles, 75c.
Halifax to Schreiber, miles, 60c., with a relay at Sudbury and Montreal.
Halifax to Thessalon, 75c.

The last two are practically over the same wire. These figures go to show that discriminations are not in northwestern Canada alone.

Mr. CARVELL. Are the rates the hon. gentleman has quoted all over the same lines or do they cover other lines?

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). They are the Canadian Pacific railway lines and the Great North Western.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Can the hon. gentleman give us a comparison between the Canadian Pacific railway and the Great Northwestern on one side and the government telegraph lines on the other?

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). The government telegraphs are all in outlying sections—on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in the Yukon and elsewhere. The government operates the unprofitable sections so far as telegraph messages are concerned; the profitable end of the business is operated by the companies. The telegraph companies carry a message from Quebec to Buffalo, about six hundred miles, for 35 cents, for which the Canadian Pacific Railway or Great Northwestern get only 17½ cents. Take a message from New York to Chicago by Canadian Pacific Railway. They send it to Montreal, and relay it there. That is, the Canadian Pacific Railway carries the message 2,000 miles with a relay and gets 37½ cents. But if that message is to be delivered in Montreal, saving the relay and 550 miles to Chicago, the Canadian rate will be 75 cents. I feel confident, from the examination I have made with reference to the cost of telegraph lines, not only in the Dominion of Canada, but in other parts of the world, that a good round return could be made on rates such as 25 cents from Halifax to Winnipeg, and 50 cents from Halifax to Vancouver. Some western rates are the following:

Windsor to Sydney Cape Breton approximately 1,400 miles, 30c.
Regina to Sudbury, 1,150 miles, $1.00.
Moosejaw to Ottawa, 1,700 miles, $1.00.
Ottawa to Moose Man, 1,550 miles, $1.00
North Bay to Moose Man, 1,275 miles, $1.00.

Messages for similar distances in eastern Canada cost 30 cents.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (E. Lambton).

Now, I think it worth while to call to the attention of the House to the position taken by the Postmaster General of the United States within the last few days. The Postmaster General has announced, so far as he is personally concerned, a policy of taking over the telegraph lines in the United States, stating at the same time that these lines would cost $250,000,000. Assuming that practically all the telegraph lines in Canada could be taken over at the price I named some time ago, this means that the Postmaster General of the United States is prepared to pay $12 per head more to acquire the lines in the United States than would be necessary for us to pay to acquire the lines in Canada. The Postmaster General of the United States distinctly states that he will be able to cut one-third off the rates in that country, even though paying so large a sum for the lines. If he can do that with the tremendous amount of water in the investment how much better off we shall be in comparison. The United States rates are practically the same as those in Canada, the rates in their west and in our west being particularly much alike. The rate of 25 cents from Windsor to Quebec was established some years ago by statute. In the United States they have a law under which government messages are sent at 1 cent a word up to 1,000 miles with a minimum of 20 words. Canada has not any government rate arrangement with the large companies. At the rate I have just quoted, the government of the United States would be able to send a message from New York to California for 40 cents for 20 words, and from Washington to Florida at 40 cents for 20 words.

We are too apt to think that the companies interested in our telephones are Canadian companies. But you will find that the bulk of the stock of each of the principal companies is held in the United States and that the companies are operated from New York. There is not a British owned cable between the motherland and Canada, every one of the cables being owned and operated by men in New York. The Mackay company is not an operating company; it is only a holding company for the postal Telegraph and Commercial Cable and many others. In 1907, they had a controlling interest in the Bell Telephone Company of the United States, and over 38 per cent of the stock of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is owned by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company of the United States. Heretofore, on complaint of a particular body, these monopolies, such as the telegraph, telephone and express companies, would sometimes make reductions gratuitously; but now that they are compelled to go before the commission, no reductions are made in their rates without the public appearing before the Railway Commission and fighting for their rights to the bitter end. When the people of Canada appointed the Railway Commission, they did a just and wise thing. But we must remember that from the time of its establishment, any individual or body wishing to have rates lowered on telegraphs, telephones or railways has had to go before the commission and claim this redress. Not one of these public utilities will grant concessions to the public gratuitously.

The purely domestic business of the Canadian Pacific Railway telegraphs increased to from about $575,000 in 1906, to over $1,200,000 in 1910, or 110 per cent in four years. The estimates of last year's business is over $1,400,000, being an increase in five years of over 143 per cent on domestic business alone.

Mr. PELLETIER. Is that net or gross?

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). Net. Surely the figures I have given are an argument in favour of government ownership. Now, it has been found by experience, particularly in large businesses, that the lowering of rates does not necessarily mean a loss of revenue. The Dominion postal rates were lowered in 1896 from 3 cents to 2 cents, and the increased volume of business resulting was sufficient to make up for the sacrifice on the sale of individual stamps. If the tolls of the telegraph companies were arbitrarily cut down by one third, it is safe to assume that the increased volume of business would more than compensate for the anticipated loss. There is no more wear and tear on the wire to send a message 10,000 miles than there is to send it 500 miles. Mr. Kent, the electrical expert of the Canadian Pacific Railway telegraphs, stated last week that a copper wire was practically indestructible and that an iron wire would last for 30 years. Two messages are generally sent over one wire and sometimes as many as four. They can send a telephone and a telegraph message over the same wire at the same time, and I understand that two telephone messages can be sent over the same wire at the same time. The telegraph, telephone and cable can use the same wire if necessary. The Canadian Pacific Railway has ten copper wires between Sudbury and North Bay and six copper wires between Fort William and Winnipeg. Running into Winnipeg from the west they have eleven copper wires and eighteen iron wires, and from the east and south, seven copper wires and eight iron wires. This gives some idea of the extent of the business in and out of the city of Winnipeg.

The western provinces depend largely upon their telegraph messages; for all are aware the telephones are owned and operated by the several provinces, and they are unable to further the messages east as we should like to have them furthered. In Manitoba they have been compelled to build a copper wire for their provincial line to connect with Minneapolis and Chicago. From a national standpoint it is our duty to see to it that messages are sent to our provinces at the lowest possible cost, and in that way bind together the provinces of the Dominion.

The Canadian Pacific railway leases a through line from Montreal to Vancouver to the British Cable Company Board for $65,000, a portion of which is paid by the Canadian government. The cost of copper wire of 210 lbs. to the mile, including labour of stringing and placing the wire in position is $44.25. The cable wire across the continent, 2,906 miles at $44.25 a mile would mean $128,590 for one line of wire. The Canadian Pacific Railway's submarine cables with three conductors cost nearly $2,000 per mile. This is the value placer on it by the Canadian Pacific railway. This, apparently, is the cable line between Vancouver island and the mainland, 67.58 miles, valued at $129,000. The property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company called the commercial end of their business, does not cost them very much to own and operate in addition to what they would be compelled to pay to keep up the telegraph lines in order to run their railway. Hon. members will have observed advertisements in various magazines calling attention to the night letters which the telegraph companies offer to send at half price; I have in mind particularly an advertisement in the Saturday 'Evening Post' of March 17, 1911, which cost the telegraph company over $700. They would not be likely to place that advertisement unless they expected a return from it. It all goes to show that these companies handle the business at a great reduction on their present rates. The Postal Telegraph Cable Company in the United States is the land side of the Commercial Cable Company. Both are included in what is known as the Mackays. The Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company operates the Canadian end of the Mackay Company's telegraph and telephone lines. A telegraph pole can carry 48 wires easily. The average over all the Canadian Pacific Railway lines is only about six wires to a pole. The Canadian Pacific Railway telegraph lines make an average of 100 per cent on outlay each year; in other words, their operating expenses were less than 50 per cent of their income.

Now, I have no doubt that those who oppose the resolution will cite the condition of affairs in the old land. But when we consider the enormous amount of water in the purchase of the telegraph and telephone lines there, we can hardly wonder that the system has not been placed on a paying basis as yet. But if you consider the splendid service they are giving there, and improving year after year, you can hardly but see that in a few years a satisfactory state of affairs financially will be shown. They have developed an excellent system and a uniform rate of 1 cent a word with a minimum of 12 cents. The government of Great Britain was obliged to pay £10,000,000 for the privately owned lines, though they were notoriously not worth more than one-quarter of that sum.

Now, a question may arise as to the right of way of the telegraph lines in our country. Surely after the great investment we have made in our Grand Trunk Pacific and its right of way from ocean to ocean, it cannot be disputed that we have some rights, at least to having a right of way, in the northland. In the province of Ontario we have the provincially owned railway, and in the eastern provinces we have the Intercolonial railway. And I am satisfied that the different municipalities through which these poles would be likely to run would be only too glad to have the Dominion of Canada take over, own, and operate the trunk lines of telegraphs and telephones in our country.

Now, let me call attention specially to telephone matters. I am sorry to say that in gathering information on this subject I have been unable to get sympathy or support from the census and statistics branch. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will shake up some of the dry bones in that department and see if it is not possible to get information with regard to telephones. I asked the census and statistics branch to furnish me with information on this subject and received this reply, dated January 25:

> In replying to your request over the phone, I am sorry to say that no statistics of any kind with respect to telephone lines in Canada are collected by the federal government.

There is no doubt in my mind that Sir William Mulock, when Postmaster General, seriously contemplated taking over the telephone lines. Had the government done so they would have saved to the people millions of dollars that have been paid to monopolies, and by extending those lines into rural districts, the people would have derived an immense advantage therefrom. The two volumes which are at our disposal in the library are full of material dealing with the independent telegraph lines. The constant plea of these independent telephone companies is that the government should do its utmost to connect them with the trunk lines owned and controlled by the government. In the province of Ontario we have 460 independent telephone companies, every one of them practically on their knees to the Bell Telephone Company. The Bell Telephone Company, instead of going into the rural districts and going up and down the side roads and concessions, are doing nothing but holding down their monopoly. The outcome is that the people who are living in the rural districts and who are most in need of telephone communication are compelled to put their hands in their pockets and build their own lines. Therefore, I feel I am justified in urging this government to investigate this great national utility, with the view ultimately of owning and operating trunk lines, and connecting them with those independent companies, giving the people a service that will make them happier and more contented. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that in the rural districts of the eastern provinces there are fewer people than when confederation was organized? Do you realize that in the province of Ontario within the last ten years the population has decreased over 100,000 in the rural districts? In my own county there are 5,000 less people than there were ten years ago. Notwithstanding all the advantages which they now enjoy, the lure of the cities and the towns has taken these people away from their farms. I am confident that for every dollar that is spent in assisting the people in the rural districts to become more happy and contented, the government will derive an income of $5 at least.

Now let us look further into this telephone business. There are 15,000 independent telephone companies in the United States operating 4,000,000 telephones, with a capital of $4,000,000. Public opinion will endorse any measure taken by this government to remedy the existing grievances. So far the rural telephone systems have been doing the pioneer work in building telephones in rural districts. In Germany the telephone system is in the hands of the imperial government and the whole of it, with the exception of Bavaria, Wurtemburg and Baden is managed from Berlin. The same rates and the same regulations apply to all places of all sizes with respect to their location. This policy might not be wise to establish in Canada as it would retard development in parts where it is greatly needed. In Denmark every village has its telephone exchange. These are connected by trunk wires. With the others the rates are very much lower than in Germany. The systems in the Danish towns and villages are managed locally either by their town council or by companies. In Great Britain, Glasgow, Hull, Portsmouth, Brighton, Swansea and the State of Guernsey, they have been working under license from the Postmaster General, but are now taken over. These telephone exchanges have shown great activity and are in a most flourishing condition. In France, Austria, Belgium, Spain and Portsmouth the system and management is centralized, and the results are not as good as when a system such as I am proposing is placed into effect.

Of course in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan the local governments would have control as they have to-day over municipal telephones but we could and would connect them at once with the east. Our people should have a voice in the rules and regulations under which telephones and telegraphs are administered in their respective districts. The conditions which prevail in Quebec might not agree with those in other provinces in Canada. The citizens of Port Arthur and Fort William are served in this way by a system which, I understand, is only half the cost of the Bell system.

To-day Canada is practically in the hands of private monopolies so far as telephones and telegraphs are concerned. These monopolies are giving an indifferent service in many instances in order that they may pay interest on the capital. The utility of the telephone is impaired because it cannot be used in combination with the telegraph and with the service. There is no question in my mind that this government are justified in combining these services. The telephone system is an essential feature in business and professional circles, also in rural districts it is a very great blessing, and is bound to continue extending in fields of operation and usefulness.

Surely if Conservative England, with her large cities and extensive business can make a success of government owned telegraphs and telephones, how much more may we expect the people who universally favour their extensive use. The price in England was determined by arbitration in case the government and company differ. In 1892 the British Isles entered into an agreement to build trunk lines in order to assist their people in the management of an independent company. In 1906 the larger companies were glad to submit to arbitration at a reasonable price at which these facilities could be purchased.

If the Bell Telephone Company's plant cannot be purchased at a fair market price aggressive competition will soon make them willing to entertain the proposals. Telephone wires and instruments are worth nothing more than junk prices if not in use. The Bell Telephone Company is all powerful to-day and can charge any rate it pleases for long distance messages and when established in cities and towns soon creates a complete monopoly.

Let me remind you hon. gentlemen of the fact that a great many foreign countries are equally interested in telephone systems and have nationalized them and made a great success of it. Surely we Canadians do not wish to appear before the world as weaklings in regard to this matter and say that we are unable to cope with such a question. Among these countries I might mention Great Britain, Denmark and Belgium. Great Britain operates her whole system of telephones and telegraphs since the first of the present year. Denmark operates the long distance lines.

Belgium the entire system. Germany the entire system. Austria the entire system. Bavaria the entire system. Australia the entire system. State of Victoria the entire system. State of Tasmania the entire system. New Zealand owns the long distance system. Cape Colony the long distance and local exchange. Norway the greater number of the trunk lines. Holland the interlocal lines. Switzerland and Russia nearly all the trunk lines. Sweden the trunk lines. Straits Settlement and Natal the interlocal lines.

Practically every one of these lines have been able to show a substantial surplus. The charges made for a three minute conversation over sixty miles in different countries is as follows:—Canada, 35cts.; Great Britain, 18cts.; New Zealand, 12½cts.; Norway, 9½cts.; Denmark, 9½cts.; Switzerland, 10cts.; Bavaria, 12cts.; Belgium, 19½cts.; Russia, 26cts.; Australia, 24½cas.; United States practically the same as Canada.

There is no place in the world where telephones are so cheap and so numerous as in Stockholm, the capital of Sweden. There are more telephones in Stockholm than in Berlin or London, and it is said more than in Paris. The total number of instruments in use is nearly fifty thouand to a population of three hundred thousand people. You can find a telephone in every shop, and in almost every house in the city. Also in the parks and on the street corners. On lamp posts are little booths similiar to those used for police boxes in our cities. They work automatically. You drop a coin worth three cents in the slot and then you ring a bell for connecting. The long distance phones and all the lines outside of two or three of the principal cities belong to the government and are operated by the post-office department. The telegraph system is also owned by the government which charges a uniform rate of fifteen cents per ten words to any part of the country. The postal telegraph and telephone systems of Norway are all under government control, and both are much cheaper and more efficient than the systems in Canada. With the exception of Switzerland, Norway is more abundantly supplied with good offices than any other country in the International Postal Union. The rural telephone is one of the modern blessings winning its way among the farmers, and once established, will stay. In many parts of our country to-day each concession has its line and is proving itself under services one of the economical developments of modern times.

The conditions of affairs in Canada are such as could demand our immediate attention. When you find the province of Manitoba compelled to build a copper wire line from Winnipeg to the boundary line connecting there with the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Company, and forming a direct line through service from Minneapolis to Chicago in order to reach our eastern provinces surely it is time for us at least to investigate. In addition to this there are few farmers phones in the province of Manitoba that cannot be connected with Winnipeg.

In 1910 no less than 1,481 miles of long distance telephones were added to the system. The number of subscribers in that year increased by 8,336, nearly half of which increase was in the rural districts among the farmers. Hon. gentlemen opposite may complain possibly of the position taken by the Manitoba government in order that they may compel those who are living in the cities and towns to pay a reasonable portion of the running expenses of the system, but it would be well for them possibly to look into the system that has recently been inaugurated. Why should the large industrial centres, such as Winnipeg, with their offices and stores that require a very greatly extended and expensive service for their accommodation, be given the same rates as those which are given to people living in the rural districts? I should say in justice to the provincial government of Manitoba that they are to be complimented on the manner in which they have extended the lines into the rural districts, because there is nothing which will help to enlighten and educate the people of the province more quickly than will the telephone line being extended as it is being extended in Manitoba. As the Manitoba government have already stated, within five years time practically every man living in the rural part of the province will be given telephonic connection with the city of Winnipeg. I am sure it will be a great satisfaction when that is done. In Portugal telephones are being taken over and worked by the government. There is a report which has recently come from Lyons, France, where exchangeless telephones have been given a trial. They have been able to show a remarkable increase in the number of messages that can be delivered within a given time, and a great saving in the number of persons employed in the various offices of the country as a result of the introduction of this system. The reduction in the number of officials in the offices has been so great that there has been very strong objection to the adoption of the system throughout France on that account. But, that is the only objection to it. There are 2,380,000 telephones in Europe including the figures for Russia in Asia, and about 6,870,000 in the United States alone, without including Canada, and the whole of South America. 'The National Telephone Journal,' of London, England, has recently published some interesting statistics regarding telephone development in Europe, from which the following summary is taken:

The Bell Telephone Company of Canada, operating in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, in a report issued within the last few months, state that they have in their own service a telephone per 27 of the population, or with their connecting companies, a telephone per 25 of the population. The Bell Telephone Company of Canada on the 24th February, 1910, presented their annual report in which it is stated that the number of instruments now earning rental was 114,000 and miles of wire 48,000. If their lines are only connected up with the 320 independent companies yet unconnected in the province of Ontario, where we have 460 independent companies altogether, and with the 500 companies in the other provinces you can readily understand the position that these independent companies will be placed in. It has only been recently that the Bell Company would even connect up with the local companies in the municipalities. I need scarcely call the attention of the House to the struggles that have been made in many of the cities and towns in Ontario in order to obtain a reasonable amount of justice from the Bell Telephone Company in the matter of connections. Not only that, but I can show you where the Bell Telephone Company make excessive charges against independent companies when they do connect with them. There is no doubt in my mind that every one of these independent companies will be willing to be placed in connection with the trunk lines of telephone in order that they may extend their service.

You can send a telegram of ten words anywhere in Holland for 10 cents and for each additional word six-tenths of a cent. A five-word despatch to Great Britain costs only 25 cents and one to the United States 40 cents and upwards per word. The telephone rates are equally low. Every city has a good service with the wires on street towers 100 feet high, so that they rise far above the houses.

Telephone connection between New York and Denver, a distance of 2,011 miles, without recourse to relay stations, was opened for commercial purposes on May 9, 1911. On this line three persons can talk to Chicago, and a fourth to Denver over two sets of wires and simultaneously eight separate telegraphic messages can be sent over the same wires to Chicago and two others to Denver and all without any reference, through what is called 'The Loaded Phantom Circuit.' While Mayor Robert W. Sphere, of Denver, Mayor Carter Harrison, of Chicago, and Mayor James C. Dahlman, of Omaha, Nebraska, were having a three-cornered conversation ten telegraphic messages were passing over the same wires. In order to obtain this the Telephone company had men climb every one of the 87,000 telephone poles between New York and Denver and change the 285,000 insulators from glass to porcelain.

I merely wish to call your attention to this fact to show the advance that has been made along the lines of improvement, in telephone matters within the last few years. It emphasizes the advisability of the appointment of a commission to go to foreign lands, investigate these different public utilities, and bring home information with regard to the latest and most improved systems in order that we may be in a position to establish the best possible telephone and telegraph system in our country. I called attention a few moments ago to the fact that wireless telegraphy in our country was a necessity and that it should be government owned, controlled and operated.

The more I have investigated the matter the more convinced I have become that the government of Canada should at once take over these wireless telegraph stations, and own, control and operate them. The agreement between the Marconi Company and the Dominion is as follows:

The company are permitted to construct stations and to install therein their systems of wireless telegraphy, and to build houses, furnish them for operators suitably for the requirements of the station, for the sum of $5,000 for each station.

As I have said they have spent from $10,000 to $20,000 on each station. The governments of Australia and New Zealand have decided to establish a system of wireless telegraphy which will be under their control and which will embrace the various routes to the British islands.

I feel that the time has come when Canada can no longer afford not to be the owner of a cable line or two cable lines between our shores and the motherland. As I have said, all the cables between the mother country and Canada to-day are owned, controlled and operated from New York. The cost of a cable to England would not exceed $5,000,000 and it will be seen that it would be an advantage to us as a nation to own and operate a cable ourselves and not be urging and begging and pleading with Great Britain to give a portion of the $5,000,000 towards the building of a cable. There is no question in my mind that it would be a profitable investment from the start, and that we could give a rate of one half the present cable rates. Such a cable would greatly strengthen the bonds between Canada and the motherland. If the thousands of British immigrants who are going into our northwestern provinces, could be placed in cable communication with their friends at home, at a very cheap rate, it would tend to greatly cement the friendship between the people of our country and those at home. The advantage of direct and cheap cable communication between the grain merchants of Winnipeg and Liverpool are obvious. Such a cable would tend to bind together the provinces of Canada and the empire as a whole.

To show the probable effect of such a cable system I wish to place before the House the history of postal rates between Canada and Great Britain. When the Canadian government took over the post office in 1851 the charge on letters passing between Canada and Great Britain was one shilling per half ounce. In 1868 a reduction of 50 per cent was made and the rate became sixpence per half ounce. Two years later a further cut of 50 per cent was made and the rate became threepence or six cents per half ounce. In 1875 there was a slight reduction from 6 to 5 cents per half ounce. That rate remained in force until 1898 when the Canadian government obtained the inter-Imperial Postage Commission and on Christmas day of that year the imperial postal rates came into operation. In 1907 the rate was still further reduced to two cents instead of three cents a half ounce.

The reduction of cable rates has not kept pace with the requirements of Canadian life. Cables are used to-day only for the transaction of business, and then only when the urgency of the case compels the senders to ignore the cost of cables. The Commercial Cable Company in New York said that not more than one per cent of the people of that country use the cable. Surely this is an argument in favour of this country taking over the cable system if after 50 years of cables owned by these great companies only one per cent of the population of our country, or even of the United States, are able to make use of these cables to any extent. Governments, great merchants and great news agencies can look after themselves, but for every reason, social, commercial and political, the cable should be made available to a greater proportion than one per cent of our people. Owing to competition between different companies in 1885 and 1886 the present rate on cables was cut in two, to 12 cents a word. Charles Bryce, the author of a standard work on submarine telegraphs, informed a departmental committee in London in 1902, that the business doubled in that period. Mr. Bryce, owing to his connection with the cable companies, has had exceptional opportunities to gather information, and I am prepared to accept his conclusions. Thus if, in the years 1885, 1886 and part of 1887, the cable companies having their wires between Canada and the mother country, were able to cut the rates in two and to double the amount of business they did in those years, the project of a state-owned cable with reduced rates is worthy of consideration.

People will refer to the Pacific cable as an instance of a government carrying on a service at rates less than are necessary to meet the expenses. We cannot take that view of the Pacific cable. It has had to make its way in the face of strong opposition, but it has advanced from year to year. In 1908 the Pacific Cable Board paid all expenses of management and of maintenance, and had £15,000 remaining over, which they applied to interest and sinking fund account. In the case of the Pacific cable it is the same old story of the Dominion government owning and operating to a certain extent the lean end of the cable business, while the profitable end of the business, between Canada and the motherland, is owned, controlled and operated by the monopolies. So we should take this into consideration when we have the matter under advisement.

The American and the British governments will not allow foreign governments to land cables on their shores. This is because a government may control and regulate a private corporation but not a foreign government, and the consequent difference of opinion may mean war. The scheme of having the Canadian government lay an Atlantic cable to England is not open to this objection; the very opposite is the case. It would strengthen the bond between the different parts of the empire. Personally I am opposed to a state-owned cable to the motherland being under the control of any government but the Canadian government.

We can command such a tremendous amount of business at once. There would be no speculative uncertainty as to whether it would pay to reduce the rates by one-half at once.

I believe that Canada should have a free hand in the management of this important public utility. It would be both in her own interest and in the interest of the empire. Canada is almost the only country that has no business entanglements with the cable companies. Great Britain is almost bound hand and foot with these companies, and Australia has intimate relations with the Eastern companies. With Canada's known desire to have the rates as low as good business would permit she could be depended on to keep lowering the rates just as the increase of the office warranted it. Standing on Cape Bonifacio, Newfoundland, a part of the British Empire which has not seen its way clear to become part of Canada, as yet, the Atlantic is of less width there than at any other parallel from the British Isles. The breadth of the ocean increases rapidly until by the time it reaches New York and Philadelphia it is double the width in the parallel lines that it is to the north. The passenger boats or ferry boats ply from shore to shore with just such regularity as if it were only a navigable river. The path of the steamers is known as the King's Highway. In no part of the world are there so many submarine cables. We have almost instantaneous communication from continent to continent. Year by year the facilities of intercourse, both by steamship and by telegraph, are increasing, and all this should tend to bind closer than ever the members of our British possessions. The provinces of Canada are bound together by one trade, one tariff and one common nationality. May we not look forward to the day when the islands beyond the seas, both on our east and west coast, which belong to Great Britain, will become a great Imperial Union, and thus cement the bond of Imperial Unity.

It does not require any argument to prove that the railway and electric telegraph, and wireless telegraph and cables are the most perfect means of communication in military manœuvres and inter-imperial protection. These are the best means of distributing information, and a British system would make the colossal systems of Great Britain independent of the lines passing through foreign countries. The Pacific cable has proved to be a bond of imperial unity. I believe the day is not far distant when every British citizen will be within reach of what might be called the Empire Cable. Every person in the motherland, in Canada, in the East and West Indies, in South Africa, in Australia and New Zealand, would be free to exchange thoughts one with the other as readily and almost as cheaply as we do by telegraph at present with friends in the neighbouring cities.

The day when British-owned cables shall encircle the globe is not far distant. The bond of empire may be described as consisting of four divisions:

(1) From the United Kingdom to the Pacific, embracing a cable across the Atlantic and land lines through Canada.

(2) A cable across the Pacific from Canada to New Zealand and Australia, with land lines through Australia to the Indian ocean.

(3) A cable across the Indian ocean from Australia to South Africa, with a branch from Coco's Island to India.

(4) A cable from Cape Town to the United Kingdom via Ascension, the West Indies and Bermuda, with a branch to Canada.

The proposal to establish the first of these four divisions has for some time been before the Canadian people, and I feel warranted in saying that it is regarded with much favour, and I feel confident that if the Canadian government should proceed at once to nationalize the telegraph service between London and Vancouver it would be accepted with general satisfaction throughout the Dominion. This would go far towards establishing a system of Empire-girdling, state-owned cables and telegraphs in an unbroken chain around the world. It would lower the charges to a minimum to all over-sea messages. It would provide a double means of communication at low uniform rates between the mother country and any one British colony. It would be of the highest importance to the commercial and social life of the British people around the world. It would at once promote the consolidation of the empire and prove an indispensable factor in imperial unity.

Should we not welcome such an outcome? Could anything but good follow such a condition in the empire and all parts of it? The establishment of the Pacific cable, the most important of the sections in the world by six governments co-operating as a union, was a great step forward, and its value to the empire can scarcely be overestimated. If Canada owned its land lines and the Atlantic cables, it would complete the Imperial system between England and Australia.

The six countries, with the cost of cabling from Vancouver to Australia to New Zealand, are as follows:—New Zealand, New South Wales, Victoria and Queensland, each one-ninth. Canada and the motherland, each one-half the remaining five-ninths. The whole capital amounted to £2,000,000 or $10,000,000, which was found by the Imperial Treasurer, and the six co-operating governments arranged to make good each their share by terminable annuities which included sinking fund and interest, and amounted to £77,545 per annum for Canada. It was shown by the Auditor General of Canada that the Pacific cable is not only self-sustaining, but that its earnings are employed in part to pay off the original capital expenditure.

If the returns be examined, it will be found that there has never been any loss in working the cables. The working expenses include all salaries, and all outlays in London, and at the several cable stations between London and Australia, also a cable ship and a provident fund for the benefit of employees.

Two routes have been proposed, one from Ireland to Newfoundland, the other via a northern route via the Faroes Island and Greenland to Labrador. It is considered by some prominent experts that it would be necessary to lay down two cables, assuming that both go from Ireland to Newfoundland. The capital cost of the two cables is estimated at £1,000,000 or $5,000,000. The following tables give the estimated cost of two such cables, including provincial collecting and transmitting offices, the service to be capable of handling one-sixth of the total existing Atlantic traffic:—

Working expenses at cable stations and offices	£40,678
Contingencies, canvassing, advertising, travelling expenses and rent for offices	9,000
Provident fund	1,065
Repairs	7,000
Renewal fund	15,000
Use of patents, repair and renewal of instruments, &c.	2,000
Total	£74,743

Here is an estimate of the earnings:—

Present Atlantic traffic, 3,500,000 messages. A 50 per cent reduction of charges should produce 25 per cent. increase of traffic, which would make 4,375,000 messages. The average length of messages at ordinary rates may be taken at ten words; cable tolls at 4½d. This would equal £820,312.

If state cables secured one-seventh of the total traffic, the earnings would be £117,186 plus £26,000. Australian traffic equals £143,186.

Assuming the earnings to be £143,186, and the working expenses, including renewal funds, £74,743, the excess of earnings over expenses would be £68,443.

A sinking fund for repayment in fifty years of £1,000,000 capital and interest at three per cent. would be £38,500, thus leaving a good balance.

The expert who prepared these figures believes that the present rate of 5d. per word now exacted by the Atlantic companies for paper messages might be reduced to 3d. or even 2½d. per word. The capacity of the two cables in plain words would be 14,550,000 words per annum. The estimates above of revenue are only based of 6,250,000 words.

Cheap cable communication is one of the pressing needs of the Imperial system, and we have waited long enough for a reform which is undoubtedly practicable.

Within the last few months meetings of the stockholders of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company and the District United States Cable Company, the only two British companies, have been held, and the agreements whereby they lease their trans-Atlantic Cables for ninety-nine years to the Eastern Union Company, an American concern, have been ratified. Thus passes out of the hands of Great Britain, control of any of the Atlantic cables. In future the two rival United States organizations, The Commercial Cable Company, (the Mackay concern) and the Eastern Union will conduct cable communications between Great Britain and America. The Anglo-American Company was the pioneer in laying submarine cables in America. Is this likely to inure to the benefit of the Canadian people? According to recent reports, the Western Union, in buying out the Anglo-American, agreed to pay the latter 3½ per cent. on a capital of $35,000,000. The Anglo-American had only four working lines, the value of which could not exceed $8,000,000. We will help to pay for the water. You can easily see that with the Western Union Company purchasing these two cable companies, practically $35,000,000 for a system that did not cost over $8,000,000, it will be compelled to pay for years to come interest on that watered stock, so that instead of expecting any reduction in cable rates from these companies we may depend upon it that they will maintain their rates, and unless we as a nation, build a Canadian cable to the old land, we cannot expect to receive the advantages of a cheap cable service.

We were told a few years ago that rural free mail delivery could not be made a paying investment in the Dominion of Canada, or that it would be a very great tax on the resources of the Dominion. I have here a statement in connection with the rural mail delivery routes in the Dominion of Canada for the period ending December 31, 1911, from which it will appear that in the last four years the total increase in the cost of mail service, including the cost of service of rural delivery boxes, amounted to $335,089.20. That is only a little over $80,000 per annum, and, serving as it does, approximately 100,000 people we cannot help but feel that the rural free mail delivery is a distinct advantage to the people of the Dominion. The statement I refer to is as follows:

I wish to take up a little time of the House with reference to parcel post because I think the easy exchange of commodities and merchandise between the producer and consumer is far from being perfect in Canada. Comparing our progress in this regard by that made by such countries as England, France, Germany, and other lands makes us appear away behind the times as compared with them. The Canadian in Europe can send home to any part in Canada a parcel weighing two and a half times more than the Canadian limit, and for about one-third less in cost than the home rates. In other words, the world's parcel union package unit is eleven pounds to the parcel, carried at the rate of twelve cents per pound, whereas the Canadian unit is five pounds to the package and carried at a cost of sixteen cents per pound. The citizens of Canada are entitled to utilize the advantages of their post-office system, the same as the men engaged in other lines of business. The question is frequently asked: What is parcel post? It is merely the extending of the weight of the package now carried in Canada to a considerable extent in order to meet with the public demands. In Germany many farmers deliver special products by post, such as chicken, butter, eggs and like products. Germany makes money out of parcel post. Canada does the unprofitable end of the parcel carrying business, and watches the express companies do the profitable end. Last year over 225,000,000 parcels were carried by the post office department in Germany of an average weight of eight pounds. If we had to build our post offices out of the revenue of the Post Office Department as they do in England, and many other countries, we would devise some way to do at least part of the express business of the country.

The proposition I have to offer would only advise what might be called The Limited Parcels Post, confined exclusively to rural districts and delivered on rural mail routes only. Such parcels must have their origin on or at the start of a rural mail route. Why should express companies be given a monopoly on the profitable parcel carrying trade while the postal department contents itself with the least profitable? Why should the government give foreign four-pound parcels a rate of 60 cents, while we must pay 80 cents regardless of distance? Why is a package carried at any rate up to eleven pounds in our mails, if mailed in a foreign country, when we can but mail five pounds and even then pay 33⅓ per cent more? The express companies pay one and two hundred per cent profit, while we are doing the unprofitable end. It is claimed that the great mail order or catalogue houses are behind the parcel post in order that they may flood the country with their goods to the injury of the small retailers.

The parcels post system in England has not tended to create catalogue houses, nor has it in Germany or other countries tended to prosper great departmental stores. It has done three things and done them effectively. It has eliminated costly and extravagant express monopoly, and has greatly accommodated the general public consumer, retailer and wholesaler. Absence of a parcel post enables the railway companies through companies called express companies, to eliminate and prevent all regulation in one branch of our transportation, and in the meantime the government has not extended to us the low rates, and the liberal conditions of such a service between our own towns and amongst themselves. It turns over to foreign countries the facilities of our expensive postal department and furnishes the service to foreign citizens at the low rates which are denied us. Great Britain has a most serviceable parcels post. Also Australia and New Zealand have had for years a thoroughly modern colonial, intercolonial and foreign parcels post, these advantages have been enjoyed by the people of the colony even to the most remote districts through which the mail service penetrates. In all of the many publications from Australia and New Zealand, or by the officials of these colonies I have not been able to find a sentence to the effect that the local merchants of these colonies have been in the least injured by their business by catalogue houses. In fact as the catalogue houses are unknown in those countries, they have a modern parcels post, it would appear that instead of the modern parcels favouring catalogue houses the very opposite is the case. American dealers have found that they can ship light weight packages of shoes to Mexico much cheaper by parcels post than by freight. For an ordinary package weighing fifteen pounds in Germany the charge for sixty-two miles is sixteen and two-thirds cents. Germany has been handling parcels post for many years. In France they have a splendid system of parcels post; plants and shrubs, live creatures, boxes of cigars, oysters, cotton, oil paper, and an endless number of things are carried. Great Britain gives the railways fifty-five per cent of the gross receipts from such parcels as are railway borne. This of course excluding the great number received and delivered in the same city. The railways are paid over five million dollars per annum from this source. The balance goes to the Post Office Department.

Great Britain and Ireland handled last year 113,230,000 parcels. This being double the number of fifteen years ago and about two and one-half for each of the total population. The average postage was a trifle under ten cents. Parcel rates within the United Kingdom are three-tenths or six cents for not over one pound. Eight cents for not over two pounds. Ten cents for not over 3 pounds and so on up to 21 cents for eleven pounds. The regulations in Canada as to parcels are apparently designed to prevent their carriage by post. Here parcels cost 11 cents per pound and the limit of weight is five pounds, although absurdly enough to contrast between some two dozen countries and our own. The rate is only twelve cents per pound and the limit is eleven pounds. The five pound package in Canada at the high charge of sixteen cents per pound makes a charge of eighty cents for a package that would be carried in England for twelve cents, and our own package would go to England for 60 cents. Further the many limitations as to the kind of things accepted makes it no wonder that the average weight of packages here is only one-third of a pound.

That a rural parcel post would be of material advantage to the retail merchant in competition with mail order houses is seen at once when it is pointed out that the latter, at the proposed general parcel post rate of 12 cents a pound would be obliged to pay $1.32 for sending an 11 pound package to a rural route patron, a difference in favour of the local storekeeper of about 10 cents a pound, or $1.07 on an 11 pound package.

The parcel post rates in England are as follows:

1 lb.	3d.
2 "	4d.
3 "	5d.
5 "	6d.
7 "	7d.
8 "	8d.
9 "	9d.
10 "	10d.
11 "	11d.

Those who claim that an increase in the weight limit would work an injury to country merchants appear to have the impression that mail order business houses now deliver their goods extensively through the postal service, and that this practice would largely increase if the recommendations which have been made become law. Upon a moment's reflection it would be perceived that the present rate of 16 cents a pound ($16 per hundredweight) as well as the proposed rate of 12 cents a pound ($12 per hundredweight), are alike prohibitive on practically all lines of merchandise. Mail order houses make their shipments usually by freight or express and would continue to do so.

With the adoption of new conveniences of life by urban residents and the ever-increasing attractions of the city, especially potent in their influence upon the younger generation, the importance of affording farmers and ruralities generally every legitimate advantage becomes more and more apparent. The free rural delivery has improved materially and intellectually the life of great numbers of people. Is it too much to ask that the department shall make a further use of this important system, a use which, while adding appreciably to the postal revenue, will directly and vitally benefit every man, woman and child within reach of a rural route. The country man would have the necessities of life delivered at his gate at an average of 2 cents a pound, thereby facilitating and increasing consumption. Rural patrons will telephone to town for half the things they want—for hardware, groceries, and dry goods—and in turn will send to town butter, eggs, cheese and vegetables. A great saving of time to many branches of industry will be possible under the general extension. I approach the matter purely as a parcels post extension that should give postal patrons a quicker and cheaper service. In England the produce of agriculturists goes forward to London and other big English cities in tremendous volume. Fresh fish despatched from seaport towns to the large hotels, are delivered with celerity; meats, cheese, fruits, vegetables and freshly laid eggs in mail packages under the 11-pound limit form a very considerable factor in the commerce of the Kingdom. In Germany, where the rates are even cheaper, lads away from school send their soiled linen home by mail to be washed, and it is returned to them in the same conveyance. The Swiss service is cited much as one of the most efficient and satisfactory in Europe. The mountain villages and resorts of that industrious little country receive a large portion of their supplies by post, as a maximum weight of 110 pounds is carried within a radius of 62 miles. Belgium's parcel post has even a higher weight limit than Switzerland, for it accepts articles of 62 kilograms, or about 132 pounds, in one package, and puts no limit upon the size, except that unwieldly packages are subject to an extra charge of 50 per cent. Germany and Austria maintain the 50-kilogram limit. The first named country enforces the 50 per cent extra charge for unwieldly articles. It also has what is called the 'zone system' The French parcels post law requires presentation at the railway station. Some other European countries, like Great Britain, require it to be delivered at the post office. A table of the parcels post charges of several countries follows. It shows the maximun weight carried. The minimum charge collected, and also the charge for an 11-pound package, the limit of many of the parcels post countries.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand many members of the House would like to speak on this question and, as I am afraid if the hon. gentleman speaks until six o'clock, the question will be automatically out of the order paper. Therefore I would ask the hon. member to move the adjournment

Mr. BORDEN. If the adjournment is not moved it occupies a higher place than if the adjournment is moved. If the adjournment is not moved it goes at the head of Private Bills and Orders, whereas if the adjournment is moved it goes to the foot. therefore I think it would be better not to move the adjournment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). I am sorry to have been compelled to take up so much time. I have given a great deal of time and pains to the gathering of this material, and hope it will be of some benefit to the people of Canada. The rates of parcel post in a number of European and other countries are as follows:

—	Maximum Weight of Parcels.	Minimum Charge for a Parcel.	Charge for 11 Pounds.
Australia	11	·12	·72
Austria	110	·06	·12
Belgium	132	·10	·16
Chili	11	·10	·17
Cuba	11	·10	·46
France	22	·12	·16
Germany	110	·06	·13
Great Britain	11	·06	·22
Italy	11	·03	·20
Switzerland	110	·06	·08
The Netherlands	11	·06	·10
United States	4	·01	1·32
Canada	.....	.....	.....

The international business has grown to enormous proportions. The figures collected at Berne for 1904, in connection with the postal union, show that the parcels mailed across the frontiers of 36 nations and colonies that year numbered something like 38,000,000. The parcels received by post by the United States during the fiscal year of 1906 from abroad were recorded as 131,064, of an average weight of 2·73 pounds. Sufficient figures have been given to indicate what a great factor parcels post has become in the trade of the world. The value of the merchandise thus transported can only be roughly estimated but it will probably exceed $500,000,000 annually. This business is transacted across frontiers, causing little or no friction with customs officers. Boxes with declared values are subject to legislation of the country of origin or destination, as regards payment of stamp duties on articles exported, and as regards the control of stamp and customs duties on articles imported. The stamp duties and charges for examination by customs officers involved in the importation are collected from the addresses when the articles are delivered.

To illustrate the inconsistency in connection with our present parcels post system, an individual entering any post-office in our country with two parcels weighing five pounds each will be obliged to pay 80 cents, on the one to Montreal, for example, but for the one destined for a foreign country although it usually passes through Montreal, the charge is 60 cents. Should the weight be five pounds six ounces a package addressed to the resident in Montreal will be denied admission to the mails by the postmaster, while the package intended for a resident in a foreign land will be accepted and forwarded, probably via Montreal, at the rate of 12 cents per pound. Parcels for foreign countries will be received in most instances up to eleven pounds.

A rural parcels post would do more to overcome our present way of centralizing our population than any other one thing. It would serve to stimulate trade between the farmer and the country merchant and be a blessing to the consumer. The legislation I would propose for rural parcels post may be summarized as follows:—

The Postmaster General, under such regulations as he may prescribe, may authorize postmasters and carriers on such rural lines as he shall select to accept for delivery by carrier on the route, or on any other route starting at the post office, branch post office or station, which is the distributing point for that route, or for delivery through any post office branch, branch post office or station on any of the said routes, at such rates of book rate as he shall determine, packages not exceeding eleven pounds in weight, containing no mail matter of the first class, and no matter that is declared by law.

There is much misconception on the subject of parcels post. In China a parcels post system is carried on with all the European countries. Postal rates on parcels post sent from the United Kingdom to Germany are considerably higher than rates for parcels sent from Germany to the United Kingdom. The Russian Consul in the tenth consular district of Warsaw, reports that British manufacturers are handicapped owing to the difference in parcels post rates between the United Kingdom and Russia and Germany and Russia. Those rates are as follows:

From United Kingdom to Poland		5.0
3 lb. parcel		2.0
7 "		2.6
11 "		3.0
From Germany to Poland		3.D.
3 lb. parcel		1.5
7 "		1.5
11 "		1.5

Germany is able to increase her trade.

The Swiss government now owns the majority of the railway mileage of the country, regulates and controls the traffic rates on all the railways, manufactures all equipment except rails, for all the railways, and owns and operates the telegraph and telephone systems, for which it manufactures all the equipment thereby securing a uniformity of instruments and apparatus. There is a free delivery mail, including rural districts, a parcel post by which anything from a spool of thread to a locomotive may be forwarded; and a post office banking system designated as post check.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BORDEN. I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce will go on with the Grain Bill. If he does not, I presume we shall go on with the Tariff Commission Bill, if it is ready.

At six o'clock, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Railway Statistics of Canada for 1911.—Mr. Cochrane.

TELEPHONES IN RURAL POST OFFICES.

Mr. SPEAKER. Having been called upon yesterday suddenly to consider a motion upon the order paper re telephones in rural post offices, I gave a ruling that, upon more careful and mature consideration, I am quite sure, would not be held to be well founded. I based my ruling of yesterday upon a motion of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) regarding the placing of telephones in rural post offices mainly on the general principle that this resolution appeared to involve a charge upon the revenue and must be considered in Committee of the Whole. A careful examination of cases, both in England and in this House, shows that where the expenditure of public money is not directly involved, and the resolution merely expresses an abstract opinion on a matter which may necessitate a future grant, it may be introduced directly by a private member.

In looking at the authorities I find, in Canadian Commons Journals, 1892, page 133, on a motion moved by Mr. Denison relating to the deepening of canals, which was of a very similar character and was afterwards withdrawn, no ruling was given. In Canadian Commons Journals, 1897, page 59, a motion is presented advocating a bonus on creameries. In that case it was a somewhat similar motion, but would tend more strongly towards a violation of the rule, as it proposed that a cent a pound at least should be given upon all butter manufactured in creameries. After that motion had been considered the debate was adjourned and no objection was taken to it. In Canadian Commons Journals, 1899, page 85, we have a motion with reference to indebtedness for seed grain. Mr. Davin, I believe, proposed the motion which, after being debated, was withdrawn and no point of order was raised. These, with a number of other precedents that I have looked up, justify me in saying that my ruling of yesterday was not exactly sound, but while saying that I would like to quote Bourinot's remarks on the point, because it is a matter that I think the House should take cognizance of in the future. He says:

> A practice has grown up in the House allowing the introduction of resolutions by private members, when they do not directly involve the expenditure of public money, but simply express an abstract opinion on a matter which may necessitate a future grant.

Then he gives the cases I have quoted here and proceeds:

> As this is a question not always understood it may be explained that such resolutions, being framed in general terms, do not bind the House to future legislation on the subject, and are merely intended to point out to the government the importance and necessity of such expenditure.
> Referring to this right of members to move such abstract resolutions, all authorities agree that it is one 'which the House exercises, and should always exercise, with very great reserve, and only under peculiar and exceptional circumstances.' Such resolutions are considered virtually 'an evasion of the rules of the House, and are on that account objectionable, and should be discouraged as much as possible.' Nevertheless neither the English nor Canadian House of Commons has ever agreed to the adoption of a rule to fetter their discretion in regard to the entertaining of such propositions.

Therefore, I presume the custom has grown up in that way. It would be in order for the hon. member who had that motion in charge to move to have it reinstated on the order paper, as otherwise it would be dropped.

Mr. BLAIN. I would move that the resolution be restored to the order paper.

Motion agreed to.

FISH REDUCTION WORKS, ARICHAT.

* Mr. KYTE:

1. Did the right hon. R. L. Borden, during the late federal election send a telegram to J. A. Gillis, Conservative candidate in the electoral district of Richmond county, N.S., to the effect that if the Conservative party should be returned to power fish reduction works would be established at Arichat?
2. Is it the intention of the government to establish such works?

7. Was the successful tenderer instructed not to proceed with the work of construction? If so, why?
8. Did the government purchase a branch railway known as the Sunnybrae branch from the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company? If so, what price was paid for said branch railway?
9. With reference to the following language used by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in his speech in the House on January 18, 1912, in reference to the construction of this branch railway, namely:—'I believe that before committing the country to any expenditure, we should be able to give the people a just reason for our action, and we should see that the taxpayers of Canada get a fair return for the money expended, or at least sufficient to pay the interest on the capital,' does the minister apply the same condition to the expenditure involved in the purposed line between Dartmouth and Deans Settlement in the same province?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. $1,000,000.
2. Yes; by newspaper advertisement.
3. Nova Scotia Construction Company, Limited, Sydney, Nova Scotia; M. J. O'Brien, Renfrew, Ontario; James H. Corbett, Moncton, New Brunswick; Kennedy & MacDonald, Antigonish, Nova Scotia; S. Pearson & Son, Incorporated, New York, New York; M. P. & J. T. Davis, Ottawa; MacArthur Brothers, Company, Halifax, Nova Scotia; John W. McManus, Company, Limited, Memramcook, New Brunswick.
4. Nova Scotia Construction Company, $1,057,122.19, cash deposit $100,000; M. J. O'Brien, $1,165,189.17, cash deposit $100,000; James H. 5. Yes; the tender of the Nova Scotia Construction Company.
6. Yes.
7. Yes. Surveys of the whole of the railway had not been completed before tenders were called. The first location of the line was from Sunnybrae easterly along the east branch of the St. Mary's river through the county of Pictou, thence southeasterly to Melrose in Guysborough county.

Another location which was urged was one from Sunnybrae southerly following Barren Brook to the west branch of St. Mary's river, thence easterly through Guysborough county to Melrose, a common point to both locations. The last mentioned location was examined only in a preliminary way. The question as to which of these routes should be adopted had not been settled. No reliable estimate of the cost of the work had been made. There not being at hand sufficient information to show that there was justification for the building of the line, and the incurring of the outlay, it was thought well to cancel the contract and abandon the proceedings until complete and reliable data and information could be obtained, and the minister satisfied that, before committing the country to the expenditure, the same is justified.

8. Yes. $100,000.

9. Yes. Practically.

2. Did the then Postmaster General reply in the following words:—'Clause 60 shall be enforced. 6. If so, is it true that as a result of this special mailing privilege certain newspapers were enabled to circulate thousands of copies daily at the ordinary postal rate, and without paying the excess postage rate, while other newspapers were compelled from time to time during the election campaign to meet the department's bills for excess postage?

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. HAZEN moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, advance and pay to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, hereinafter called the corporation, in addition to the moneys, if any, heretofore authorized to be advanced to the corporation by the Governor in Council by any Act, and which have not at the date of the passing of any Act founded upon these resolutions been so advanced, such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of six million dollars, as are required:—

(a) to pay off and retire debentures of the corporation of the par value of six hundred thousand dollars, maturing at the rate of two hundred dollars per annum in each of the years 1913, 1914 and 1915, and,

(b) to enable the corporation to complete the construction of the terminal facilities of the port of Montreal, for which the plans, specifications and estimates have been approved by the Governor in Council, and to construct such additional terminal facilities as are necessary to properly equip the said port, and in respect of which plans, specifications and estimates have, previous to advances being made, been approved by the Governor in Council;

Motion agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of such sums as may be sufficient to discharge the obligations of His Majesty the King, acting in respect of the Dominion of Canada, under the provisions of paragraph 5 of the schedule to chapter 24 of the statutes of 1904, in accordance with the interpretation of these provisions by the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on the appeal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company vs. The King, from the Supreme Court of Canada, delivered November second, 1911.

He said: His Royal Highness the Governor General having been made aware of the subject matter of this resolution has assented to it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Finance has very properly placed on the table the decision of the Privy Council in this case, and I would ask him to also place before the House, the claim of the Grand Trunk, the correspondence, and the arguments of counsel.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If I can obtain that record I shall be glad to do so. But the matter is very urgent and it is not desirable there should be any delay in submitting it to the House. I have already furnished to hon. members the judgment of the Privy Council and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada and I shall furnish figures showing the liability of the government to the Grand Trunk Pacific

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The argument of counsel before the Privy Council may not be immediately available and I would forego that, but the minister has in his department all the correspondence from the original claim of the Grand Trunk to the present day.

Mr. BORDEN. It may be possible to procure what is known as 'the case' in the Privy Council, which gives a statement of the contention of each party, and that can be brought down. If the stenographic notes of the argument before the Privy Council have not been extended it will entail some delay to get them, but if they have been extended and are available we will of course submit them to the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will not insist upon the stenographic report of the argument if it is not immediately available, but we should have the claim filed by the Grand Trunk, the answer and the reference to the court.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Very well.

Motion agreed to.

B. C. LUMBER COMBINE.

Mr. KNOWLES (Moosejaw). I rise to a question of privilege Mr. Speaker. I wish to call your attention and the attention of the House to a dodger which was put in every member's post-office box yesterday under somewhat strange circumstances. It is headed: The Canadian government the tool of combines; $20,000 challenge; By A. E. Watts, of Wattsburgh, B.C. I do not wish to encourage this dodger to the extent of reading any part of it, further than to say that so far as it is possible and as effectually as it is possible, to call a member of this House, a liar without using that term, he does so. The writer of this is known to me and to several members of this House. He is known to the British Columbia members; he is known to the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) amongst whose constituents he is to be found and I think the hon. member (Mr. Goodeve) will agree with me, that the writer of this dodger is known as what is generally called half-witted. I say this, not for the purpose of speaking lightly of Mr. A. E. Watts, of Wattsburg, British Columbia, but because it has come to our knowledge officially that during the sittings of the committee, which made an investigation in connection with the lumber combine, the then chairman of that committee, the late Hon. Thos. Greenway had on different occasions to suppress this same Mr. Watts, and on some occasions to do so on my own suggestion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Would the hon. member state his question of privilege and then confine himself as closely as possible to it?

Mr. KNOWLES. I am getting there, Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege is this: This paper which has been put in every member's box, the postoffice of the House of Commons has been prostituted in that way, states that I was guilty of a falsehood when I said that the lumber manufacturers of British Columbia had been guilty of a combine. It also says that I stated what I knew to be an untruth when I said that such a combine, in my belief, existed yet. This has been put in cold print and I therefore am going to do what I am loath to do, pay enough attention to it to prove that my statements were correct in each instance and it will take only a moment to do so. When I spoke on this subject the other day, I read from the official records of the House of Commons Appendix to the Journals, Vol. 42, 1906-07, the report of the committee on this subject, of which I was a member. I shall repeat what I then read:

> The British Columbia Lumber and Shingle Manufacturers' Association, and the Mountain Lumber Manufacturers' Association, which, in the opinion of the committee, amount to a combination——

They were found, in the opinion of the committee which was made the opinion of the House, to be a combine, which justifies the statement I made that a combine had been proved.

With regard to the other statement, that such a combine existed, I went no further than to say that the reports in the public press made statements and representations that such a combine existed as late as October 9 last, and I read from the 'Winnipeg Telegram' a despatch of October 10 last, saying that if that report was correct such a combine did exist. I mention these things to put myself right with regard to the dodger which has been anonymously distributed to the members of the House, and I protest, as emphatically as I am able, against our post office being used for such a purpose. In this instance it does not hurt my feelings to be called what is there written about me, but if it is known as a principle that any member of this House who is enough of a cad to send anonymous communications to every other member with regard to a certain member can do so with impunity, no member will be safe from being embarrassed and harassed by such actions. One can readily understand that if such things are allowed to pass without protest the day will come when a member may say that he has the right to distribute any scurrilous misrepresentation referring to any man's morals or his family relations and I protest against the post office being so used. This letter was not addressed, it was distributed and no such use of our post office should be permitted without the articles being addressed to the members. I have inquired into the source from which this dodger comes, and I hope the hon. member whom I am about to name will correct me if I am misinformed, I am informed although I could scarcely credit it, that this sheet of misrepresentations this false dodger, this scandalous article was handed in by the secretary of my hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) with instructions to place one of these slanderous and malicious articles in the box of every other of the 220 members of this House.

Mr. A. S. GOODEVE (Kootenay). As the hon. member has referred to me, I would ask the privilege of answering some remarks he has made. With regard to the author of this circular. I need only say he is one of the very prominent lumbermen in British Columbia, a man who has made a very great success of his business and who has large vested interests there.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is he not generally recognized as half crazy at least?

Mr. GOODEVE. Not at all.

Mr. NESBITT. I rise to a point of order. I believe that on a question of privilege no discussion is allowed.

Mr. GOODEVE. I was directly appealed to by the hon. member who has arisen to the question of privilege, who certainly was out of order in referring to a past debate and reading extracts already answered, so I am privileged to reply to a question directly asked.

Mr. KNOWLES. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOODEVE. I have already stated that the article is not anonymous, it is openly signed by the author who issued a certain specific challenge, and he forwarded this to me as the member representing that district, as he had a perfect right to do, and asked that copies be placed in the hands of each member of the House. Under the postal Act that is perfectly legal and legitimate. Any member can receive communications from any outsider without payment of postage under the Act, so that complaint also falls to the ground.

In regard to the names the hon. gentleman has undertaken to call myself I have nothing to say, because from the source from which they come they will have no effect on me. I only make my statement with reference to the gentleman who is one of my constituents and who has openly signed the article which he has written in what he considers to be a fair defence of an unfair attack made on the lumbering interests of the province of British Columbia.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have only to add regarding this publication to which my attention was called, that I made inquiry as to the custom in regard to the use of the post office in such a case. I was informed that such distribution as occurred in this instance is a common practice, that sometimes newspapers or perhaps letters regarding Bills that are coming before the House, or papers of various kinds that are signed, not anonymous, are handed to the postmaster with the request that he place one in each member's box as he would be obliged to do if the communications were addressed to each member, so that the communications may reach the members sooner than they otherwise would. Communications with reference to Bills coming up in committees in a short time are usually distributed in that way and for that purpose. This was done exactly on the same principle and without any knowledge on the part of the postmaster as to the contents of the communication.

I may say as an old member of the House that I know from personal experience that this has been the usual custom and therefore I feel that the postmaster was not blameable in any way for permitting the distribution of this document.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina). I desire to call the attention of the government to the apparent necessity which exists in some parts of Saskatchewan at least for the supply of seed grain during the present winter for the crop to be sown next spring. I regret that I am not in a position to give any definite information as to how widespread the necessity may be, but from some parts of my district, I have had representations that it may be necessary to distribute seed grain to some men residing on homesteads or unpatented lands. I have a communication which I received this morning which surprised me, that even on the Soo line, that prosperous country south and east of Moosejaw, which we think is one of the wealthiest parts of Saskatchewan, there is special need for this seed grain. With the permission of the House, I will read a short resolution of the Board of Trade of the town of Wilcox, 40 miles south east of Moosejaw.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is for the purpose of asking a question of the government the hon. member would have the right to read the letter, but if there might be a debate on it, it would be out of order.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I wished to read it as it will place before the government better than I can do the necessity of the case. With the permission of the House I shall read it.

Mr. BORDEN. There is no objection.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Reading:—

We the members of The Wilcox Board of Trade, taking into consideration the wide spread hardship occasioned by the failure of the crop, crave that assistance be given by th government to those deserving parties who are without seed for the season 1912; under the usual grain Act. This Board of Trade will be pleased to forward to the government a list of such deserving parties in the Wilcox district.

A speedy consideration of the matter is urgently requested.

I have no doubt that similar communications have been brought to the attention of the government but I respectfully submit that the distribution of seed grain is a matter that should receive the immediate attention of the present government.

Mr. BORDEN. I may say, in the absence of the Minister of the Interior, that I know this matter has already been brought to his attention, and that he is giving his earnest consideration to it. I think some resolutions passed elsewhere have already been brought to the attention of the government, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the conditions to which he alludes are such as to demand not only careful, but immediate attention.

Mr. TURRIFF. In this connection I would like to say one word, that is that the government should take steps to make it thoroughly known that wheat which has been standing out in the stack, or in the stook all winter, and which may have become damp through the inclemency of the weather, and then frozen, will not germinate; although a large proportion of it may look perfectly good.

When I first went to the western country, I put in my first crop in the spring of 1879. Unfortunately I was not able to get a threshing machine, so my stacks stayed out until the April following. My wheat was as fine looking as you could see. I sold most of it for seed, and sowed some of it myself, but unfortunately not over one-third of it germinated. The same thing will take place in many instances this year; a good many of the farmers having no idea that the weather may kill the germinating power of the wheat.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). How did you get on with the farmers when they found it would not germinate?

Mr. TURRIFF. They knew that I was perfectly innocent in the matter, and we suffered together.

I would like to obviate, as far as possible, anything of that kind occurring this spring, and, therefore, I believe it would be advisable for the Minister of Agriculture to take whatever steps he may see fit to spread the information.

Mr. BURRELL. I think we are out of order in entering upon this question now, but I would simply say that the Seed Branch of the Department of Agriculture has been, and is at the present time looking into these matters.

THE GRAIN ACT.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 32) respecting grain.

On section 16,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The committee will remember that when we had this Bill up before we passed section 16, and, then coming to section 29 we found an inconsistency, which might lead to confusion, so section 29 was allowed to stand. I have since looked the matter up, and I think it can best be cured by amending section 16, which now reads: 'Any oath, the taking of which is hereinafter authorized or prescribed by this Act, may be administered by a commissioner, or by the secretary'. According to section 29 an oath may be taken before a commissioner or notary public. I propose to change section 16 to read:

Any oath the taking of which is hereinafter authorized or prescribed by this Act may be administered by one of the commissioners appointed hereunder, by the secretary of the commission, by a notary public, a justice of the peace or any public officer authorized by law to administer oaths.

That will make a general provision, and it may be left out of section 29, because 16, covers the officers who have authority.

Amendment as moved, carried.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved that section 29 be amended as follows:

Every chief inspector, inspector or deputy inspector shall, before acting as such, take and subscribe to an oath of office in the form or to the effect following: 'I, A. B. do solemnly swear that I will faithfully, truly and impartially, to the best of my judgment, skill and understanding, execute and perform the office of chief inspector of grain (or inspector or deputy inspector of grain) and that while I continue to be such chief inspector (or inspector, or deputy inspector) I will not directly of or indirectly by myself or by any other person or persons, deal or trade in any grain on my account, or upon the account of any other persons or persons. So help me God.'

Amendment as moved, carried.

On section 33,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved that section 33 be amended to read as follows:

The chief inspector and the inspectors for the division shall, not later than the seventh day of October in each year select samples of the different grades of grain, which shall be known as official standards.

2. Any such inspector shall upon request therefor, furnish a sample of any such made of grain, accompanied by a specific statement that it is the official standard for that grade.

3. For all samples so furnished the inspector shall make such charge as is approved by the board.

Section as amended, agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to put this last subsection in the same list as the one we dealt with in regard to fees. It seems to me that the collection of fees, at this stage in the amendment that would be proper is merely vexatious and will not give sufficient revenue to warrant the vexatiousness of the proceeding.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will take these all up together. And this section will pass

Reconsideration of section 35,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). This section provides:

That no inspecting officer shall inspect grain being laden or about to be laden on vessels or cars after dark or in wet weather, except on receipt personally, or through the office of the chief inspector, of an application from the owner or possessor of the grain or his authorized agent, written upon one of the printed forms furnished by the board and signed by such owner or his authorized agent, relieving him, the inspecting officer, from responsibility for damage which may be caused by such wet weather.

The word 'or' should be inserted there, and then it goes on:

——darkness or for loss arising from errors liable to occur in an inspection under such circumstances.

2. In every case of such inspection the inspecting officer shall be personally present when the grain is actually delivered on board.

Inspections to be proper must be made in proper light—I understand that to be necessary. This provides that inspections may be made under, so to speak, improper conditions, at the convenience and at the risk of the owner. But the grade is yet to be established, and the grade should be established under proper conditions. So, I propose to add the following subsection:

3. In such case, no certificate shall be issued until the inspector's sample of such lot is examined under proper conditions.

The inspector watches that grain as it goes out under conditions which are not suitable to proper grading. He takes his samples all along and has his whole sample. And he waits until daylight before he issues his certificate.

Amendments agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 41—oath of office,

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto).

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I move that that section be amended by omitting the words 'before a commissioner or notary public,' the point being already provided for.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 46—fees for examination,

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think it would be more satisfactory to have the amount of fees, within the limits prescribed by the Act, fixed by the board of commissioners, instead of leaving it to the board of examiners in every particular case. There would probably be a good deal of variation. The board would lay down a certain plan. There might possibly be some difference in the fees under different circumstances which might arise, but the board would decide how these fees should be divided.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not think the matter is important. I made inquiry as to the custom that had hitherto been followed under the law, also whether any dissatisfaction had arisen, or any volcanic action had taken place, and I found that up to the present time there has been perfect harmony and no ill effects have been observed. I think in this matter we might give full liberty to the board to do as they please. They might take it into their heads, under certain circumstances, not to charge any fee at all. As we limit the charge in the maximum, probably no great harm would be done if we allowed the board of examiners full liberty to arrange this.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Have these examinations been going on?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did they ever charge less than $20?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I could not say.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it is a good principle to leave to the men who are to get the benefit of the fee, the privilege of saying what the fee shall be. If the maximum is fixed at $20, you can depend upon it that the examiners will put the fee at $20, when the matter is left to them, and they have the money to divide amongst themselves. There are many cases where a fee of $20 is not extreme, but there may be cases where it would be regarded as unnecessary.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Could the hon. gentleman suggest a case where $20 would not be exorbitant?

Mr. OLIVER. I would not care to go into that detail. It may be that there are many cases where $20 would not be too much. I think the principle is wrong, and it might be well to amend the section. I would ask the minister to let the clause stand.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It must be remembered that these examiners get no other remuneration, they are not under salary. However, we will let that stand. It is not regulated according to fixed principle, no doubt. I took it because it has been the custom, and sometimes that makes the best law.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It would not appear to me to be too high a fee if every man, or every applicant who was examined, received a position. But no doubt many men will be examined who will not receive the position, and I believe $20 is excessive.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I do not think a fee of $20 would be excessive in certain cases where only one man came up to be examined. But in cases where there were half a dozen to be examined, that fee would be excessive.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will let that stand.

On Section 48—standards established by Grain Standards Board.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It has been suggested that there ought to be added these words as another sub-clause:

All standards shall be subject to the approval of the board.

The board, under this, appoints gentlemen fit and skilled for the purpose of establishing grades and choosing samples. Then the board knows no more about it, and the idea which has been suggested is that such standard samples, when chosen, should be subject to the approval of the board. I do not really know whether that is necessary or not. If it establishes an additional security without subjecting the thing to any delay that would be injurious it would seem that every safeguard you can throw about a thing of that kind should be thrown about it. The commissioners might not be experienced samplers, but they would always have at hand the chief inspector or some other person who would be thoroughly capable of advising them. I have no objection to that going in if it meets with the approval of the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. It strikes me that perhaps there would be an advantage in it. I would be quite willing to agree to insert it and pass the clause with it in. In case future consideration might lead to its being viewed in another light, I suppose there would be no serious objection to reconsidering the clause?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If we find we have made a mistake we ought to rectify it.

Mr. OLIVER. Has it any reference to sample standards or standard samples?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Would it not be better to use the word 'samples'?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We might make it:

All standard samples shall be subject to the approval of the board.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Would there be any question about this referring to the standards arranged for under section 105?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No, that is entirely confined to commercial grades.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). But you are not putting the usual qualifications into that third clause—standards fixed under this section.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Is that necessary?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). It is usually done in such cases.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Well, the words cost us nothing:

All standard samples established under this section shall be subject to the approval of the board.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. There would be no question about it then.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 56,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Under this section the chief inspector may be a member of any Board of Grain Examiners and a member of the Grain Standards Board as well, and it is also provided that he may be a member of the Grain Survey Board within his division; thus, in the latter case he is made a member of a board which adjudicates on his own decisions, and objection has been taken to that. I think the clause should be amended in that respect.

Mr. OLIVER. That is right.

Section amended accordingly.

On section 57,

Mr. NEELY. While a clause similar to this has existed in previous legislation of this parliament, that clause has always been inoperative, and under present conditions will probably remain so. There is no doubt that one of the great sources of loss to the grain grower of the west is the fact that he has no sample market. As a result of not having such a sample market in the city of Winnipeg, the grain growers of the west probably lose millions of dollars per annum.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is for the lack of a sample market?

Mr. NEELY. Yes. The spreading of price between the grades of wheat, especially the lower grades, amounts to five or six cents per bushel, and often more. The farmer who grows grain that is not quite good enough to grade as No. 1 but is very high class No. 2, is compelled under the present system to accept the same price as the farmer whose wheat is barely able to come into No. 2, and so on down the line with the other grades. Another source of loss from not having a sample market at Winnipeg comes from the fact that according to the rigid requirements of our legislation to bring grain into certain high standards (so far as the colour and appearance and condition of the shell of the grain is concerned) wheat which judged by its intrinsic milling value would be high class is often put into a lower class.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Are the leaders of the grain growers in the west in favour of a sample market? I ask that for information.

Mr. NEELY. My hon. friend ought to be quite as well versed on the views of the grain growers as I am.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I did think so at one time, and I thought they were all in favour of a sample market, but I was surprised to hear within the last few days that the representatives of the grain growers at present in Ottawa are opposed to a sample market.

Mr. NEELY. I will deal with that point in a minute. The lack of a sample market also prevents us employing those chemical tests which are used in the State of Minnesota, and by which grain that from its appearance would under our system be graded low, might justly be placed in a much higher grade over there. Under present conditions we are not likely to have a sample market established in Winnipeg because our buyers are in eastern Canada and in Great Britain, and they quite probably get better value by buying on grade than on sample. Where a sample market is established in order that it be of any value it would be necessary to permit the man who bought the grain on sample to deal as he saw fit with that grain which he purchased.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is to mix it.

Mr. NEELY. Exactly. I have discussed this matter with grain growers but not with representatives of the Grain Growers' Association or any one who could speak authoritatively on the matter, but I know there has been a great deal of discussion among the grain growers on this question of a sample market.

I think the grain growers generally realize the futility of a sample market under present conditions. They would be afraid to have any legislation passed that would permit of mixing at the terminal elevators under present conditions of private ownership and operation; but if those terminals were operated by the government, who would have no object in manipulating the grain to the advantage of anybody, and who would be expected to handle the grain in a proper manner in those terminals, I imagine that the very first thing the grain growers would establish or assist in establishing, would be a sample market in the city of Winnipeg. I would like to know if these conditions which the grain growers desire in connection with the terminals are likely to be brought about by the government in the near future, so that this disadvantage of not having a sample market because of present conditions at the terminals, may be removed.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The section with which we are dealing is section 57, which says:

> Nothing in this Act shall prevent any person from selling or buying grain by sample regardless of its grades.

Does my hon. friend wish to delete this or to put in its place a section which shall forbid any one buying or selling by sample? That is the question which is before us now. My hon. friend said that this clause had been, and was now, inoperative. My information, and I have some good sources of information, is that millions of bushels of grain are sold every year by sample without reference to grade certificates. The farmer comes into the station with his load of grain, and the buyer, and he agree upon the value of the grain as shown by the sample, and there is no question of grading, and no disability, he has a perfect right to sell the grain on sample, and does sell on sample. After the grain has gone through all the processes into the terminal warehouse, the person who owns the grain when he takes that grain out, may tear up his certificate of grade if he pleases, and sell his grain utterly regardless of its grade, and by sample alone. I am told that this is a common practice, and that millions of bushels of grain are sold in that way. I do not suppose my hon. friend would wish to prohibit such a right of sale which every man now enjoys.

My hon. friend wants more information, he wishes to know what the government are going to do about the terminal elevators. Section 13, was allowed to stand, and I informed the committee that before the Bill was through the government would be prepared to state what they propose to do as to taking over, leasing or otherwise dealing with the terminal elevators.

With reference to the sample market, my information is that at present the representatives of the grain growers who are here are not in favour of a sample market. They think that the time may come when a sample market should be established, but they want certain things changed before that is done.

Mr. NEELY. Will the minister tell us what they are?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Quite frankly, they want the terminal elevators owned and operated by the government, they want that first. They are in conscience, and in principle totally opposed to mixing grains, but they know, of course, that a sample market is of no use to anybody unless there is power to mix, and it is on the mixing part of it that they are not yet quite converted.

There is a good deal in what my hon. friend says with reference to the advantages of a sample market; I do not need much argument to convince me of the feasibility, and also of the desirability of a sample market. It may be that it would be well to keep, with the sample market, the grade market as well, and have a choice of the conveniences that come from both. I want, in the first place, to find out what the desires of the farming community are in this respect.

I find the millers sitting down alongside of the representatives of the grain growers on that matter of a sample market. I do not think they are in favour of a sample market. They have their reasons therefor, and are able to give them. Thus, at present, as far as representations are made to me, neither from the farmers nor from the millers is there a very great pressure for a sample market. On both sides there is pressure for the terminal elevators.

Mr. STAPLES. The question of a sample market has been before this House many times, and while the minister has just stated that the representatives of the farmers who are here at the present time, are not in favour of a sample market under existing conditions, they by no means represent the opinions of all the farmers of the west. They have an organization, the Grain Growers' Association, which has been doing some good work in collecting the opinions of some of the farmers of the west, but by no means all of them. I am here particularly to speak of the opinions of my farmers in the constituency I represent.

I know that one of the representatives here to-day is a constituent of mine, and I give him credit for all the information he has been able to collect, but at the same time I venture to say that if you will take the expression of the farmers of Macdonald you will find they are anxious to have a sample market. How that sample market can best be worked out is, of course, another question. It is set out very clearly and very fully in an article which I read not long ago in the 'Grain Grower's Guide.' If it is possible to adopt a sample market and work it on the same principle and with the same machinery as the sample market of Minneapolis there is no doubt to my mind but that it would mean dollars and cents to the farmers of the west. Of course, I believe in preserving the identity of our wheat, so far as possible, so long as it does not mean a financial loss to the producer. If we can preserve the identity of our wheat until it reaches the British market, unquestionably it would be a great thing for us, but, apparently we have not been able to preserve it, owing to the manipulators. If we cannot overcome the manipulators, and if they are to make the profit, I think we had better start a little earlier in the game, and do the manipulation where the farmers will get the benefit of it. I think that can be done by establishing a sample market. To go into the details of a sample market would be a somewhat lengthy process, but, at the same time I do not think it is impracticable or impossible, even at the present time. When the question was before the House some time ago the serious objection was the lack of railway facilities. We have railway facilities at the present time, and, it will not be long until we have greater railway facilities and greater accommodation as regards rolling stock. It is my opinion that the railway companies of this country ought to be obliged to furnish all the rolling stock necessary to handle the grain, and not cause a congestion, even if you do establish a sample market. The sample market begins from the time the farmer goes to the elevator in his town. He drives up with his load, and, as the minister has told you, his grain is bought on sample; or, at least, on the judgment of the buyer, who takes the grain in his hands, looks it over and says: 'In my opinion that is No. 1 Northern, or No. 2 Northern.'

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Does he say that that is not a sample market?

Mr. STAPLES. I say grain is bought and sold on sample, and I say the sample begins right there.

After the grain is loaded into the car the sample can be extracted and forwarded to the terminals. The article that I read showed very clearly that all cars were sampled at the divisional points. The government samplers went in, took a sample and forwarded it to the board, and the board then put their graders to work to grade the grain. After this it was put in a pan and laid before the buyers in the Grain Exchange, or at the terminals, or wherever the buyers are, and they bought that grain on sample.

Notwithstanding the fact that the representatives who are here to-day say that the farmers of the west do not desire to have a sample market, I want to say that in my opinion (and I have given the matter some thought, and taken some precaution to get an expression of opinion from the farmers whom I represent) they are anxious to have a sample market, and I believe that a sample market will mean a great deal to the producer. For these reasons I look to the government to work out a sample market and put it in operation.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If that is a sample market, then I have been under a wrong impression, and I think I have been under the same impression as the hon. minister when he said that a million bushels of grain were sold. I do not believe that is what the hon. member from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) had in mind when he spoke of a sample market. My contention is that there is very little wheat sold in the west on a sample market.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I said grain was sold on a sample market.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Sold on sample. I say there is very little wheat sold in the west on sample, and I think I can prove what I say. I bring my wheat to the elevator at Boissevain, and the grain buyer comes along and takes a sample, as you say. What is the result? He has to grade it. He has to take a sample which, when it comes to Winnipeg, will stand the test of a certain grade. Is not that correct? Most decidedly it is. But, that is not selling on a sample at all. It is quite true that when the grain gets to Winnipeg a sample may be taken, but what I understand by a sample market is that when I bring in wheat that will hardly go No. 1 northern, but is a splendid No. 2, that wheat will get just what it is worth as No. 2, and does not have to go to Winnipeg and be graded as No. 3. If I am wrong in my understanding, I wish to be corrected. I do not desire to detain the House on this question, but I claim there is a misapprehension, and I think the remarks of the hon. member from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) might perhaps leave a misunderstanding in the minds of the people when he says that we are now selling wheat by sample, as I understand a sample market.

Mr. STAPLES. It is just a matter as to whether the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) has presented his views more clearly than I have presented mine. I say that a man who sells his wheat to a street buyer, if the street buyer does not get his sample graded at all, to that extent the farmer sells on sample.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. But, it must come to grade.

Mr. STAPLES. Not necessarily, if a ticket is issued what does the farmer care about the grain?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. He buys it on grade.

Mr. STAPLES. No, he does not. He buys it on sample. He does not get it graded till it reaches Winnipeg, therefore he buys on sample. As the minister has told you, when the grain is shipped out of the spout into the boat it is sold on sample, and there are millions of bushels sold on sample.

Mr. NEELY. I think the hon. minister understood me perfectly when I spoke on the question of a sample market. I was referring to a sample market in the city of Winnipeg, something which we have not at the present time. There is not a question that this clause has reference to the purchase on sample without inspection. If this clause is to become operative it involves the creation of a sample market at the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). The grain buyer receives his standard samples from Winnipeg. The farmer comes with his grain and the grain buyer buys that grain after comparing it with the sample he has received from Winnipeg. That is how the grade is struck; and that is how the grain buyer reaches his conclusion as to what the grain is worth and how it will grade.

Mr. NEELY. I do not think that has any reference to this clause at all. As a matter of fact, the farmer who brings his load of wheat to the country elevator, though you may say he sells on sample, he does not do anything of the kind.

An hon. MEMBER. On grade.

Mr. NEELY. On grade; on judgment; on an unofficial inspection. On the farmers' ticket is named the grade which that grain reaches in the opinion of the buyer at the country elevator. But I was going to say that I was not in the House when the first few clauses of the Bill were taken up. Referring especially to clause 13, which deals with warehouse receipts, I did not know that the minister had made some disclosures of the government's intentions before the Bill should be brought to a conclusion. I am quite content to await the minister's pleasure, so long as we are to have the information as to whether or not the government are going to take the steps to make this operative as far as the constitution of the sample market is concerned.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to delay progress, but it may not be out of place on this section to say a word in continuation of what has been said on buying by grade and by sample and on the mixing of grain, as the matter arranges itself in my mind. When I spoke on the second reading of the Bill, I said that the great reason for the complicated provisions of this Bill in regard to grade was in the changes in carriage that the grain had to pass through in going from the producer to the consumer. The farmer sells his grain on the merits of the actual grain itself, or, as you may say, by sample; and the miller in England buys by sample. That is, the farmer gets what the actual grain, there bodily present, is worth, and the miller at the other end of the chain, pays on the basis of what the actual grain is expected actually to produce. The provision that is made for preserving the identity of the grade—as distinct from the preservation of the identity of grain—is for the convenience of trade, in the long chain of exchanges between producer and consumer. Where the sample market is effective as it is in Minneapolis, the grain comes in in a car, is bought on sample and is forwarded to the point of consumption without change; so that the actual, identical grain that the farmer has loaded into the car and that the buyer in Minneapolis has bought by sample is delivered at the point of consumption in the same package so to call it, as that in which it was made up at the station nearest the farm. In that case there is no necessity for the complicated provision of grading; for the seller sells on quality and the consumer buys on quality, the grain being wholly unchanged.

Now, as to mixing: First we have the practical impossibility of preserving the identity of the grain in the many changes of methods of transportation between the wheat fields and the mill beyond Liverpool, which makes it also difficult to preserve even the identity of grade. And it is on this difficulty of preserving the identity of grade that the enterprising and ingenious mixer sees his opportunity. In regard to the mixing of grain, my view is that the man who buys a dozen different kinds of grain has a perfect right to mix that grain, and nobody has any right to find fault with him for doing it——

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If it is his own grain?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, providing the mixing is done before the grain has passed the inspection of the government officer and been given a name and a grade by that officer.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Let me understand. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) says that he has no objection to mixing provided the mixing is done before the grade certificate is given.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly, that is what I am trying to say. In the first place, there is no possibility of preventing, and in the next place, there is no reason why it should be prevented, so far as I am aware. But the great profit of the mixer is in the fact that after the grain has been certified as being of a certain standard he degrades the standard by mixing, while getting the benefit of the standard in the transactions through the line of communication.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is practically a fraud.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, actually a fraud as I understand it. There would be no advantage—to use a slang phrase there would be nothing to it—there would be neither a profit nor a loss, in mixing if it were not for the government certificate. It is the government certificate that fixes the commercial value of that grain. If it is number 1, it is worth so much, and if number 2, it is worth so much less. If I buy grain on a certificate showing that that grain is number 2, and then, by a process of manipulation secure a certificate that that grain is number 1, I am absolutely committing a fraud, in my judgment.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). You being the owner of the grain?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. I am improperly trading on the certificate that gives that grain its value as a matter of trade along the line of communication.

Now, in the process whereby grain that is covered by the certificate given by the government is degraded, either by being improperly raised or lowered—and it can be done either way—any means whereby that is done is practically a fraud upon the good faith of the people of Canada who are responsible for that inspection. That is something that every government should try to prevent. But it has nothing whatever to do with the right of the individual owner of a dozen different kinds to mix that grain on his own responsibility, for his own use, or for sale to anybody else. But the wrong comes in when he uses the certificate that has been granted for a certain quality of grain, and changes the quality after the issue of the certificate. That is the whole story.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would ask a further question. Supposing he has an elevator, and he buys grain of different grades 1, 2 and 3, pays for it, it is his own grain, he puts it into his own elevator and mixes it as he pleases. He has not committed any wrong.

Mr. OLIVER. If he has done it before inspection, he has committed no wrong.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Take the other case. Suppose he has bought, after inspection, grain of 1, 2 or 3 quality, paid for it, taken it into his own elevator, it is his own grain. Then he mixes No. 1 and 2, or 2 and 3, as he pleases, and puts it to his own use.

Mr. OLIVER. If he is the ultimate consumer, he has a perfect right to mix it, undoubtedly.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Then thus far we can agree. Then for instance, he owns a mill alongside, and puts it into the mill; or suppose another case exactly similar to that, and instead of putting it into his own mill, he has mixed the grades, and a friend of his comes along and says, let me see what your grain is like. He looks at it and says, I will give you so much a bushel for that grain, and you sell it to him. Has he done any wrong?

Mr. OLIVER. Not if he is not selling it on the certificate; but if he is selling it on the certificate, he is doing wrong.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). But he is not selling it on the certificate, because the buyer knows that it has been mixed. Now go a step further. Suppose after you have done that mixing you call in the inspector and the inspector grades that grain, we will say, as No. 2. Are you rignt or wrong in selling that grain as certificated No. 2?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is suggesting an entirely suppositious case, and a case that can not possibly occur.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I want to carry it one step further. Supposing that after the grain has been bought, we will take two grades, Nos. 1 and 2, a flush article of No. 1, and a nearly No. 1 in No. 2, just those two grades. You put them into your own elevator, and you mix the two, and you get a mixed grade which, when it is inspected, will grade as No. 1, not a fat No. 1, but a lean No. 1. Are you doing your duty to your country in sending that grain to the foreign market as a certificated grain?

Mr. OLIVER. As the law has always been, and I hope always will be, my hon. friend would not get an inspection for that mixed grain. One certificate is all that is given, and is all that ought to be given. I think the hon. gentleman is mixing up the moral wrong in the individual, and the wrong against the country and grain production generally. I have no hesitation in saying that if what he suggests is permitted to be done, it is a most decided wrong against the grain production of the country.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). In what does that wrong consist? What is the essence of it?

Mr. OLIVER. It is a matter that has been threshed out so often, and is so very technical, that perhaps I am not well fitted to give an explanation. When the grain is bought through the channels or course of trade, it is bought on its reputation. That is, in the course of trade, it is bought on its reputation, but by the ultimate consumer it must be bought on its actual condition. It is the price that is paid by the ultimate consumer that fixes the price in a measure, that is the main factor in fixing the price, that the initial producer receives. Now the whole tendency of good farming is to improve the quality of the product in the interest of the farming industry. It is in the interest of the whole country that every farmer should produce the highest quality of grain that can be produced. That will be admitted. Then if he is going to produce that grain of the highest quality, it is presumed that he will exercise forethought and industry, and go to expense, and it is in the nature of things that he must get a higher price for that higher quality of grain, or he loses rather than gains by the process. When the grain that is of high quality and that has cost the producer more than the grain of a lower quality reaches the ultimate market by the process of mixing it has been degraded, it is naturally worth a lower price than it otherwise would be. The farmer at the producing end of the arrangement does not get the fair value of his better grain. As a matter of fact he suffers a depreciation in the price, and the whole country suffers accordingly, while the man who mixed the grain has certainly made a profit. My position is that the interest of the country at large must be protected against the act of the man who is for the moment handling the grain, and who sees perhaps, no moral wrong in it; and there may be no moral wrong, in degrading the grain that has come into his hands.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Although this is a technical question, it is very interesting, and I want to get from my hon. friend one more idea. Suppose that man buys his grain, not by grade, puts it into his private elevator and mixes it as he pleases, but after that is not given any certificate. Has the country been damaged?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the country has been damaged to some extent, but I do not think that it is a case that can be followed up. I do not think that legislation can be framed to cover such a case, to prevent it and still to keep within the bounds of the rights of property. I think we cannot prevent it although it is a pity that it occurs.

Mr. TURRIFF. There is one phase of wrong-doing in connection with the selling of wheat that came under my observation last November. I found, when I was in the city of Winnipeg, that a practice had grown up about on the following lines: We will say that a large commission house was getting in a hundred carloads of wheat a day, shipped by individual farmers, to be sold on their account. This commission house keeps an inspector of its own who goes around with the government inspector and takes a sample from each of these hundred cars. I found that two or three of the large milling concerns keep an inspector at Winnipeg who also goes around with the government inspector and the inspector of the commission house and also takes samples. They would find in the hundred cars a number of cars that graded, say, only number 3 Northern, but as everybody knows a certain number of those number 3 Northern cars would average up well to No. 2 Northern and there would be a difference of two or three cents a bushel between their value and that of the ordinary No. 3 Northern. Here is where the wrong-doing came in. I find that although this commission house sent these cars of No. 3 Northern to their order at Fort William or Port Arthur for storage puposes, the large milling concerns, without the knowledge of the farmers who grew the grain, or the knowledge of the commission house that shipped the grain, and with the connivance and by the authority of the railways diverted the wheat that was shipped to Fort William or Port Arthur to their private mills and there unloaded it. They said: We will deliver an equal number of bushels at the same grade. The result was that they would buy an equal number of carloads of the same grade, but a lean No. 3 Northern, a sample that barely squeezed through as No. 3, and they would ship that down to Fort William, without any reference to the farmer who sold the grain or to the commission house which handled it for him. This enabled the milling company to secure a car of grain that was worth from two to five cents a bushel more than the car that was shipped down for storage at Fort William.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). That is grand larceny.

Mr. TURRIFF. That is done in hundreds and hundreds of cases and it is going on to-day. I am just mentioning it to the minister in order that his department may take cognizance of the fact and see about some way of putting a stop to a practice that looks to me, as my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) says, like grand larceny. These are the facts; at all events they were given to me by the commission house that shipped the grain absolutely as I have explained them. I hope that the department will take some means—I do not know how it can be done—of putting a stop to that practice.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Will the hon. gentleman explain in what way the railway aided that?

Mr. TURRIFF. It could not be done without the help of the railway.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Just explain it.

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not know; I was just told that it is done, but I do not know how.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). It is a breach of faith on the railway's part against the man who owned the grain.

Mr. TURRIFF. The commission house said: It really does not affect us at all, nor does it affect the farmer who shipped the wheat to us as we got the price for him at which that grade of wheat was selling on the market. But, the man who loses in the end is the farmer, because that wheat is sent, say, to Fort William or Port Arthur, and the Ontario miller, or the exporter to the old country, buys No. 3 Northern but gets a leaner No. 3 Northern than he would have got if all the wheat that was graded No. 3 Northern had been shipped direct to Fort William and had gone into storage.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). And the country's reputation at large suffers.

Mr. TURRIFF. There would be a higher average grade which would enable the farmer in the end to get more for his wheat.

Mr. AIKINS. Would the substituted wheat be shipped out in the same car?

Mr. TURRIFF. No.

Mr. AIKINS. Then that would be easily detected because the shipping bill would show the number of the car in which the grain had been originally shipped?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes.

Mr. AIKINS. The shipper and the transferee, from the shipping bill, would know that it was not the same car.

Mr. TURRIFF. It is done on the same principle as that which has taken place time and again at Fort William and Port Arthur. Supposing they had received in the elevators 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 bushels of wheat to be held in storage for farmers waiting for a rise in price; cases have come to our knowledge in which the big elevator men have sold every bushel of such wheat and it has been shipped to the old country while the farmers were still paying storage on it. I only draw this to the attention of the minister in order that he may make some inquiry and ascertain to what extent it is being done. There should be no difficulty in putting an absolute stop to it. When a commission house ships a carload of wheat to Fort William to go into storage that car should go to Fort William and go into storage and no milling company or anybody else should be allowed to divert that wheat to the use of any other persons without the knowledge of the farmer or the commission house and substitute therefor a car of inferior wheat.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Would the public ownership of elevators affect that situation at all?

Mr. TURRIFF. Not that I can see. I think this is one of the easiest matters to remedy now that the attention of the department has been called to it. It was not generally known; at least, I had never heard of such a thing being done. I do not think that the ownership of the elevators at Fort William or Port Arthur would affect that particular phase of the evil.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would like my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff) to make his case a little more definite. It is like hunting for a needle in a hay stack with the information he has given to me. A commission house did a certain thing and gave certain information. What is the commission house and what is the information? If my hon. friend will put me into communication with the commission house and let me know the exact transaction I will carry it a little farther.

Mr. TURRIFF. I will give my hon. friend the names of the commission house and milling company that were mentioned to me.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would be very glad to have them. Under the best laws you can have, frauds may be committed, but I do not know whether it is I who should look after such a fraud or the courts of law.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). It is a fraud on the part of the railway company; that is quite clear. The railway company has undertaken to deliver certain, identical goods at a certain place and if the railways have this to their discredit also that they cannot be trusted to deliver goods given to them then it is time we knew it and took steps to put an end to that practice.

Mr. COCHRANE. The commission man is at fault there.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). No, they are both at fault. A railway that allows a thing like that is not to be trusted in any case.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That might be done either by neglect or by malpractice on the part of an under official of the railway.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). But they are responsible.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). And the railway management might not know anything about it at all. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) in the conduct of his own business cannot have his eye on every transaction and some of his officials may slip a cog and he is responsible, but he might be in blissful ignorance of it until it was brought to his attention. I remember seeing in the correspondence that a car was sent to a wrong destination presumably for the benefit of the milling company, and on being traced it was found to be due to the neglect or worse of an under official, but the railway company righted the matter the moment it knew of it. I do not think a railway company could exist long if it were guilty of practices of that kind.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). If it does exist it should be stopped at once.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Certainly.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Nothing will tend so much to lower the reputation of Canadian wheat as practices of this kind. There has been too much interlocking of directors between the milling companies and the elevator companies and the railway companies, and that generally results to the detriment of somebody. The railways will have to be put on their honour to stop this practice or else told that they will be up against the law.

Mr. AIKINS. The law on the matter is perfectly clear. When the railway company receives grain for carriage and issues the bill of lading it is responsible for the identical goods until these goods are delivered to the consignee or the consignee's assignee at destination. If, in the interim, any person takes away from the company grain which belongs to the owner of the bill of lading he is liable under the Criminal Code for taking that which does not belong to him. The law is perfectly clear.

It only requires, as I should judge, to be applied to the particular case mentioned by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. OLIVER. Assuming that everything was as has been stated the commission house lost nothing, the farmer lost nothing, the railway company lost nothing, so that they were not interested in enforcing the law, and the milling company gained and the credit of the country's wheat lost and ultimately the farmers' price would be depressed.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). And wrong-doing was encouraged.

Mr. OLIVER. It is because of the conditions that surround the carriage of grain in bulk, which conditions lend themselves to things of that kind, that this complicated machinery becomes necessary, and that we establish a Board of Commissioners. It is unquestionably probably the most important part of the administration of the Grain Act to see that the credit of the country's wheat is not degraded. The country's interest in the preservation of the standard of the country's wheat is far more important than the question of the private rights of the different parties.

Mr. MEIGHEN. We have indeed spent a most profitable hour in discussing this question of mixing. I had a fair idea of the question before, but after the discussion it is much clearer to me and I compliment the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) for the plain way he has stated the case. I understand his argument to be that the identity of the grain is a public asset, and if the purchaser mixes before the inspection certificate was given and has it sent over without any inspection, he is reaping an advantage at the expense of the country by appropriating to himself profit at the expense of the identity of that wheat. The law puts in a concrete form that public asset and demands that it should have an inspection certificate. Under that inspection certificate the producer of the grain may own the grain absolutely, but he does not own the asset known as the inspection certificate, it being an asset in which all are interested, and particularly the producer. If a fraud is perpetrated upon that, he who perpetrates the fraud is guilty of appropriating to himself what does not belong to him in any sense and he gains an advantage at the country's expense.

Mr. OLIVER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is the kernel of the whole cause of mixing, and if we grasp it we will be able to cure the evil much more quickly.

Mr. AIKINS. After a certificate is issued giving the grade of the grain, how will the mixing thereafter be prevented?

Mr. OLIVER. The whole machinery of this legislation is for the purpose of preventing such mixing.

Mr. AIKINS. But mixing has occurred.

Mr. OLIVER. It is said to have occurred contrary to law, and it is with a view still further to prevent its occurring that we are trying to improve the law.

Mr. AIKINS. Would government ownership of the elevators prevent that practice to any greater extent than if the elevators were owned by a elevator company or the carrying the company?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not so sure on that point. So long as the carrying company keeps its hands off the grain trade it seems to me that would fulfil all requirements.

Mr. TURRIFF. So long as the Canadian Pacific railway owned and operated their terminal elevators at Fort William I never heard of any complaint about mixing in the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators. Their only interest was in carrying the wheat, storing it, and sending it forward. But during the last few years, the difficulty has cropped up in the case of the American grain companies who have leased from the Canadian Northern and others some of these terminal elevators, and also control by subsidiary companies a line of elevators in the interior out on the prairie. That is a very different thing from the elevators being owned and operated by the railway companies, simply as a convenience for the handling of grain and also to make, perhaps, a small profit, but there was no object in the railway companies degrading a grade or trying to turn out No. 2 Northern, where they took in No. 3. It is the ownership of the terminal elevators by the same interests that own and control the interior elevators that has largely brought about the whole trouble that the farmers have had to complain of during the last few years.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. There is more than that.

Mr. TURRIFF. There may be more than that.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have always held that the only way we can remedy that is by the government operation of terminal elevators. I understand that most of the mixing has been done at the terminal elevators. We have had instances. The same thing occurred at Duluth. One hundred thousand bushels of No. 1 Northern, 100,000 bushels of No. 2, and 100,000 bushels of No. 3 went into the elevator at the terminal. But what did they send out? They sent out about 150,000 bushels of No. 1 Northern. They got that by mixing in these terminal elevators and raising a No. 2 Northern to a No. 1. I stated last year and I repeat that we want the men who operate these terminal elevators to absolutely have no commercial interest in the grain. If I talked an hour I could not make that any plainer.

Mr. TURRIFF. That covers the whole thing.

On section 58, weight of bushel.

Mr. TURRIFF. I am not making this as a suggestion, but might there not be an advantage if the weight of our bushel of oats was made the same as the American? At present the American standard bushel is 32 pounds, while ours is 34 pounds.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What does my hon. friend think about it?

Mr. TURRIFF. I think it would be, but I have not given the question enough consideration to express an opinion that would be worth very much.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am something like my hon. friend in that, and so I took the weights as they were generally agreed upon.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). The present weight is really below the average.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is a good thing, to keep the quality well up.

On section 59, fees.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to enter the same objection to this section as to two others that we have discussed. In my judgment these fees are vexatious without being remunerative and should not be imposed. I would again reserve the right of discussing this on the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have some very interesting figures on fees, but I shall withhold them until the occasion to which my hon. friend refers when we might have the whole matter up at once.

On section 62, appointment of weighmasters.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I wish to amend this section by adding after the word 'minister' and before the words 'may appoint,' the words 'on the recommendation of the board.' The amendment explains itself.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto). After the word 'cargo' I propose to add 'but no certificate shall be issued if scales appear to be defective.' As the clause actually reads it would almost mean that every weighmaster, or assistant was in fact bound to give a certificate. I think it is a fair safeguard to put at the end of the clause that no certificate shall be issued if the scales appear to be defective.

Mr. CURRIE. What is the necessity of the words 'upon demand'?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It means that every weighmaster or assistant shall give a certificate when asked to do so.

Mr. CURRIE. I want to point out to the minister that under the law some of the weighmasters appointed at the terminal elevators throughout the country now, do weigh the grain, but, if the owner does not demand a certificate he is not obliged to pay any fees. The present clause states that the weighmaster shall give a certificate upon demand. I think if the weighmasters have complete control, and have to give certificates they ought to be obliged to give certificates whether the owner demands them or not. I also think the fees should be paid whether a certificate is demanded or not.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The fees are always paid, or, if they are not, the weighmaster is not getting his dues.

Mr. CURRIE. The weighmaster attends to the weighing, but when it comes to collect the fees the owner of the grain simply says he did not demand a certificate, and in that way gets out of paying the fees. That is an abuse which is actually existing at some of the terminal elevators.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There have been cases of that kind, I am informed; but they have been followed up and the weighmasters eventually collected the fees.

Mr. CURRIE. I think the idea of this Act is to provide the fees necessary for the carrying out of it. Now, a shipper from the west sends his grain down through these elevators. It comes through the terminal elevator at Port Arthur and is weighed there, but the shipper does not demand any certificate, consequently the weighmaster does not collect any fees. That is something which is actually going on, and, to avoid it in future I think the words 'upon demand' should be cut out altogether, making the clause read:

> Every such weighmaster or assistant shall give to any person having weighing done by him a certificate under his hand showing the amount of each weighing, the amount No. of each car or cargo weighed, the initial of the car, the place where weighed, the date of weighing and the contents of the car or cargo.

Then, the weighmaster could collect his fees.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Subsection 2 of section 62 provides that the weigh-masters and assistants shall receive such compensation, by fees or otherwise, as is determined by the Governor in Council, upon recommendation of the board. That fixes the principle that they shall be paid. Once the principle has been established that there are to be weighmasters, and that there are to be fees for the weighing, as I understand it, the object of section 66 is to make it impossible for a weighmaster or assistant to refuse a certificate.

Mr. CURRIE. Under the old Act the shippers evaded paying the fees altogether by simply not demanding a certificate.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not see that there would be anything wrong in having it read in this way:

Every such weighmaster or assistant shall give to any person having weighing done by him a certificate, etc.

Mr. AIKINS. Assuming the principle is thus made obligatory do not the words now proposed to be added take away from the obligation, because the weighmaster may say 'these scales appear to be out of order, therefore I will not give you a certificate'.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). These words are simply for the protection of the man buying or selling.

Mr. AIKINS. Instead of giving any one an opportunity for not issuing their certificate, would it not be better to have a certificate obligatory, and, if the scales appear to be out of order have that fact stated on the face of the certificate.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The idea is to get perfect and correct weighing.

Mr. CURRIE. I think the Weights and Measures Act provides that all scales must be tested at certain intervals, and if anyone uses a defective scale he is liable to a heavy fine. That comes under the Inland Revenue Department, which assumes responsibility for the correctness of the scale.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think it might be as well to let the section stand altered as suggested, and I will make a note of it. We can deal with it later on.

Section allowed to stand as amended.

On section 67—record of weight,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved the adoption of section 67, as follows:

All weighmasters and their assistants shall make true weights, and keep a correct record of all weighing done by them at the places for which they are appointed, in which record shall be entered an accurate account of all grain weighed, or the weighing of which was supervised by them or their assistants, giving the amount of each weight, the number of each car weighed, the initial letter of each car or the name of each vessel, the place where weighed, the date of weighing, and the contents of the car or cargo; if the car is leaking or in bad order the record shall state the fact.

2. An extract from the record kept by any weighmaster or assistant in pursuance of this section, certified by the chief inspector or the chief weighmaster of the division, or by any officer in the office of either of them, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts set forth in such extract.

Section 67 carried without discussion.

On section 68—fees,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved the adoption of section 68 as follows:

The fees for the weighing of grain shall be such as are determined by the board which, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may increase or reduce them.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not take the same objection to this section as I have taken to previous sections relating to fees, but I would direct the attention of the hon. minister to subsection 2 of section 62, which provides for the payment of weighmasters in such a way as is determined by the Governor in Council, suggesting the idea that they may be paid by fees.

I would like to say I think it is objectionable that permanent officials holding such responsible positions as those of weighmasters should have to depend upon fees for their remuneration. I do not think they are paid by fees at the present time. I believe they are paid a salary. I think it is not desirable to have a suggestion in the Act that they should be paid otherwise than by fees. If the hon. minister agrees with me, I would like to be strong on that point.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I find that at the present time, so far as the Georgian Bay ports are concerned, they are all paid by fees. Peterborough is paid by salary. I note the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), and I will look into the matter. As a rule payment by fee is not the best way. I wish to make a little change in this section No. 68. I propose to take out 'which,' making it read 'determined by the board, with the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. OLIVER. Is that necessary? Drop out 'which' and let the sentence end at 'council.'

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, that would cover it.

Mr. CURRIE. Before we leave section 67, I hope the minister will take a little suggestion from me. There is always a difference between the amount of grain weighed into the vessel at the terminals at Port Arthur and Fort William, and the amount taken out at the foot of the lakes. A year ago these differences made a total of 180,000 bushels. Some vessels are a thousand or fifteen hundred or even two thousand bushels short. Now, the vessel men say that that grain cannot take wings as it comes from the lakes, and they account for the difference in this way: The grain is weighed by the government weighmaster as it goes into the shipping bin, in which bin there is a spout going into the vessel. They say that the company that owns the elevator shuts off the spout before all the grain is out of the bin, and they come out at the end of the season ten or twenty thousand bushels ahead of the game.

Mr. OLIVER. Impossible!

Mr. CURRIE. Well, as I have said, the vessels coming down the lake had an aggregate shortage of 180,000 bushels. I would like to see a subsection added to section 67 to the effect that in weighing grain into the vessel, the weighmaster shall be responsible for seeing to it that the shipping bin is empty before it is closed off. The minister could have a subsection drafted to meet this very troublesome situation which now gives rise to differences and lawsuits among shippers, ship owners and the elevator men. The minister will remember that there was a great scandal about it a year or more ago. It was said that the elevators were full of grain that nobody owned.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). These difficulties have occurred and do occur. But could not the question be disposed of under section 69 which provides that the board may make rules and regulations for the weighing of grain.

Mr. CURRIE. And the minister will see to it that the board does that?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will see to that.

Mr. CURRIE. All right.

Mr. OLIVER. I think this all bears out my suggestion that the weighmasters, above all others connected with the service should be paid a salary and should have no interest whatever in a fee. They should be men of the highest and of most assured reliability; and in order to secure that class of men permanent salaries must be provided.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I suppose that the present system has arisen out of the variations in the work the weighmasters have to do; some weighmasters have a great deal to do, and in such cases a salary could be paid, but others have very little to do, and it would be difficult to represent by a salary their real earnings.

Mr. CURRIE. The records of the elevators year by year would show what passes through the elevator, and would to a certain extent, be a guide as to what each officer should be paid. I quite agree that these officers should be independent. And I really think the minister ought to provide a corps of Northwest Mounted Police to see that these things are carried out. If that were done, I do not think we should have all these grain growers coming down here asking the government to take over the terminal elevators.

Mr. OLIVER. The shippers want that as well as the grain growers.

Mr. CURRIE. Everybody in the business gets robbed.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Chairman, we have made very good progress. I am sorry that I cannot go on with this Bill to-night, but I hope to take it up to-morrow.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.—PASSES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. MONK moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sorry the Minister of Railways is not in his seat, as I wished to invite his attention to a matter of considerable importance to eastern Canada. I presume that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will bring the matter to the attention of his colleague, the Minister of Railways. Recently, instructions were sent from the Railway Department at Ottawa to Moncton to the effect that no family passes or trip passes for employees were hereafter to be issued without referring the matter to Ottawa. This was at variance with the long established custom that has obtained on the railway. There were certain rules defined by the department whereby the employees could get, for certain members of their families, at stated intervals, trip passes. A protest was sent to the minister, with the result that the instructions were recalled, and it is now left to the departmental officials at Moncton and along the line to issue these trip passes. Accompanying the instructions relating to passes to employees and their families was an order to the effect that no passes could be issued to newspaper editors or reporters along the line, as had been the custom in the past, without first referring the matter to the minister at Ottawa. The newspaper men naturally complain, and say that this is practically withdrawing from them the transportation privileges which have been hitherto accorded to them without exception, for many years, all along the line of the Intercolonial. These trip passes are given to reporters at times, on application of the editorial management, to attend gatherings, inquests, and all occasions when newspaper men are expected to be in attendance. They also say that under the new order the occasion when transportation is required has in some instances long passed before they can get any word back from Ottawa. I think their complaint is well-founded. The government railways should be operated on the same principle as a corporation railway, subject to certain well-defined rules, giving the general manager and the officials of his office discretion to administer the rules which have been made by the department at Ottawa. I wished to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to this matter on behalf of the newspapers of the maritime provinces.

Mr. MONK. I regret that the Minister of Railways is absent at this moment. I suppose my hon. friend had not notified him that he would bring this matter up, otherwise I am sure he would have been here. I understand my hon. friend's complaint to be that, under the old usage, the families of employees were entitled to free transportation without interference from the head of the department, and that now the rule is that to secure such transportation there must be a reference to the head of the department.

Mr. EMMERSON. That has been recalled by the minister within the last few days.

Mr. MONK. With some modification, I understand. With regard to newspaper representatives, transportation could be obtained without reference to the head of the department. I understand my hon. friend to say that that rule has been changed, and he would like to see it restored, so that representatives of newspapers may obtain free transportation.

Mr. EMMERSON. In accordance with the general rules which have been clearly defined.

Mr. MONK. I will see that the remarks of the hon. gentleman are communicated to the Minister of Railways.

EXTENSION OF THE PARCEL POST SYSTEM.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I desire to direct the attention of the House to the need of improving the parcel post system we now have in this country. This question has been up a great many times in the House, and I believe the late government had a policy for the expansion of our parcel post system in order to give the people a much better system, and what would be practically an improvement of the express system. We have accepted the principle of parcel post service in Canada already. We have had for years a parcel post which gives fairly good service. The trouble with it has been that it was limited in the weight of the parcels carried, and perhaps the tolls charged were not as moderate as they should be. But for years and years now we have had a parcel post system, and session after session there has been an attempt made in the House to extend that system; it has been discussed also in connection with the excessive rates now charged by the express companies on parcels. My idea in substance is this, that if we expanded our parcel post system at the persent time, the effect would be that the express rates would be cut in two to-morrow, and the public of Canada would have relief to that extent. The people of the Canadian west, who to-day have enormous railway grievances of one kind and another, at a time when they feel the condition of affairs to be onerous, would have a reduced express service. That service would be cut in two, practically, to-morrow, if we expanded our parcel post system on the very lines that I believe had been arranged by the late government, reference to which was made the other night, and reference to which I intend to make later on.

Now, if any one has any doubt of the efficacy of the parcel post to-day, I would like to hear the argument presented. I think the parcel post has been absolutely successful wherever it has been tried. Every nation that has adopted it, with the exception of Canada, has expanded it and extended it by increasing the weight of the parcels to be carried, and they have done it with great and lasting service to the public. Great Britain has been one of the most successful countries in administrating a parcel post system, she has led the world in the matter of postal progress. At one time, I believe, a letter cost a shilling in Great Britain, but now, owing to her almost free postal system, the price of letter postage was reduced from time to time, until it has attained its present very low figure. We have had the same experience, so has the United States, namely, that in proportion as you improve the postal system, and as you reduce the cost of postage you increase the service rendered to the public, and in that way, you help along the progress of the country. Now, I wish to find out either from the present Postmaster General or the late Postmaster General what was the proposal that was before the late government for two or three years, and which, according to a statement made here the other night, was blocked in the last session, and could not therefore be put into effect. As I understand the matter, it requires no further legislation to extend the parcel post system, all it requires is an order in council. There is a provision in the law now to do so, it is all a matter of policy, and to my mind it is largely a matter of the opinion of this House whether we shall have a parcel post system to-morrow, greatly extended, or not. Seven or eight years ago I brought into this House a motion to regulate the charges of express companies in connection with the Railway Act. Session after sesion I brought motions forward in that direction. But after several defeats, and after a good deal of hard fighting, those of us who favoured the proposal at last induced the government to put the express companies under the regulations of the Railway Act; so that we have already made some progress. But they are not very extensive. The fruit growers have complained time after time about the exorbitant express rates, and, do what we like and argue what we like, there is very little hope of relief from the express companies or the railway corporations until this country goes into active competition with the express companies through the medium of the parcel post. Public competition is the one thing which will bring the express companies to a sense of their duty to the people and compel them to reduce their charges.

I want to refer for a moment to this principle of public competition. I spoke of it in the House the other day and I return to it to-night. It is the only available weapon in the hands of parliament, the legislatures and the municipalities, to bring private corporations exercising public franchises to a sense of their duty and to a realization of the service which they ought to give and especially the rates which they ought to charge. We have in the province of Ontario embarked in what are called municipal enterprises and we have begun in many of our towns and cities to run our own street railway systems and to generate and distribute our own electric power. We have gone a step further and now we have formed a great combination of municipalities to buy electric power at Niagara Falls and distribute it throughout the province of Ontario. The greatest and the most successful experiment in regard to public ownership, the public control and distribution of a great utility, is in the province of Ontario in connection with the Hydro-Electric Commission, the men who administer it and the associated municipalities. The result of public competition in Ontario in connection with electrical energy has been that prices have been cut in two and further reductions are promised. If there is one thing that the people of Ontario believe in—and the people of Ontario are as progressive as those of any other section of the country—it is in the efficiency of public competition in connection with a public service, to improve the service and to cut the rates in two, or even to reduce them more than half. Every municipality in Ontario that has tried public competition in this respect, either in connection with the Hydro-Electric Commission or of its own motion, has succeeded not only in cheapening the price but in doubling and trebling the use of the utility by the people. When you reduce the cost you increase the use of the utility in a greater proportion. So, the people of Ontario know the efficacy of public competition. They know what public competition can do to increase a service and to reduce its cost.

My argument here to-night is that if we were to put our parcel post system in operation on an extended scale, if we were to increase the weight of parcels and improve the service, and if we made the delivery of parcels a part of the service, it would have the effect of improving the service and reducing the rates of the parcel post, and not only reducing the rates of the parcel post, but compelling express companies to follow in the same way, that is improve their service and reduce their rates. It does not require any more legislation. The legislation is on the statute-book. All it requires is an order in council. If we establish this principle in connection with parcel post, and if we compel the railway companies to reduce their express charges it follows, as night follows day or day follows night, that all we have to do is to intimate to the telegraph companies that unless they cut their rates in two or reduce them greatly the government will be compelled to go into the telegraph business. We have legislation now on the statute-books which will allow us to go into the telegraph business. If we once make the railway companies understand that government competition will come against them if they do not treat the public fairly, reduce their rates and give a better service, they will be very quick to give a better service and to cut their rates. If we wish to help the people of the northwest with regard to the conditions which prevail there, and railway grievances form the great bulk of their troubles, the time is now and the method to adopt at the outset is an extension of the parcel post system.

The people of the United States are to-day agitated over a parcel post system. They have never had it. As I have said in this House time after time, the reason they have not had a parcel post system in the United States up to date is that the railway lobby has been so strong that they have been enabled to defeat every proposal for a parcel post system that came up in Congress. But the day of the supremacy of the railways is at an end. A committee in the recent session collected a great deal of information on the matter, a Bill has been introduced, or is now about to be introduced into Congress, and both parties are committed to put it through. In a very few days you will see the Americans with a first-class parcel system. They see now what can be done in this connection. Only a year ago or less they introduced for the first time, the postal savings bank system against the opposition of the National banks, and all the other banking institutions of the United States. But the savings bank in connection with the post office now has got more business than it can do, and yet the proposition was at the outset that the Postmaster General should try only a limited number of offices. But, day by day, he has extended that system of post office savings banks, and to-day one of the things that the American people are most interested in in the way of recent legislation is the measure which inaugurated the post office savings bank, and the result is that they are determined to have a parcel post system. The American post office to-day is carrying parcels for the British parcel post, and delivering them through the United States. It has to do it because of the International Postal Treaty. It is carrying those parcels for people in Great Britain who wish to send them to the United States, and it is delivering them all through the United States for one-quarter what the express companies charge. The people are finding out that they could send a parcel to England, mail it there and have it delivered, but for the duty, at a cheaper rate than the express companies would charge at any point in the United States.

There is a great argument against the expansion of the parcel post system in this country. I have tried to find out what it was, and I have heard it stated in this House at times. When I came to follow it up, the argument, outside of that of the railway companies who wish to maintain the monopoly that they at present have, is that it would be hard on the country storekeepers. I have heard men say in this House, it has been written in the press, and I have heard on the platform, that if the parcel post system were extended it would hurt the country storekeeper, and would be for the advantage of the large departmental stores in the cities, and those stores which carry on what is known as a mail order business. That may be, but there never was an improvement introduced that did not hurt somebody. The steam railways put the stage coaches, horses, country inns and blacksmiths along the roads, out of business, and in that way there was a grievance against the railways. But look at the advantage which came to the general public from the improvement in the speed and comfort of travel.

The world will progress and the old order must give place to the new, and even if it be a disadvantage to the country storekeeper, it is the good which it will do to the general community that must prevail. Think of what an immense advantage it would be to the settler away out on the prairie to be in touch not only with the country store, but also with the base of supplies. I know any number of instances where when a part of an agricultural implement was needed in a hurry and it had to be sent by express, the express charge was greater than the original cost of the article. That should not be. We have one railway in Ontario under public ownership, but I am sorry to say that the express charges on that railway are about as high as they are on the corporation roads. It is not right that the settler in that portion of Ontario should be handicapped by these unnecessarily high rates on the government road. If the people in other countries have the advantage of this enlarged parcel post system why cannot the people of Canada have it? So far as I can find out the block has been caused by the express companies who use the country storekeeper as a buffer between them and an extended parcel post; the voice may be the voice of Jacob, but the hand is the hand of Esau. When John Wanamaker was Postmaster General of the United States he announced in public that he would like to give the people the advantage of an enlarged parcel post, but there were four great reasons blocking the way and these were the four express companies which were allied with the railway interests. And these reasons exist in Canada to-day, and they will block the proposal as long as the people allow them to do so. We have fourteen thousand postmasters in Canada every one of whom could become a parcel post agent with a trifling addition to his salary, while to-day the railway and express companies have only their agents at the different railway stations. See what an advantage it would be if every postmaster could handle parcels. And then, consider what a centre of life it would be if we had in every village a post office where parcels could be handled, a telephone office and perhaps telegraph office which with the growing business could give the community a day and night service throughout the year. That is the present position in many European countries and it has proved to be a great blessing to the people who live at a distance from the centres of population. The Winnipeg 'Free Press' is making a strong campaign now to improve railway conditions particularly in the west, and it has been able to prove that the people of the west are paying more in freight charges than are the people of the United States, and far more than the people of eastern Canada. The 'Free Press' shows that if we had an improved parcel post system we would immediately get reduced freight charges all over the Northwest. I give the Winnipeg 'Free Press' credit for its campaign in that direction. It has made out a case against the railways and express companies and a good way to bring those corporations to time is to extend the parcel post system in this country. The Postmaster General and the ex-Postmaster General are here to-night and I hope they will give us some information on the subject, and I hope that the result of this debate will be that the government will accept the principle I advocated and declare themselves in favour of an extended parcel post. To show what the feeling of the west is I read the following from a speech made in this House by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) a few days ago:

> Some time ago the hon, member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), then Postmaster General, proposed that the parcel post system should be greatly extended. At that time I felt that it was going to be of more use to the departmental stores in our country than to the public in general and I was one of those who told him I would not support that proposition. I must say that I have changed my mind. I think I made a mistake, and those of us, and there were enough of us to stop his good efforts, who voted in that way, did in my opinion make a mistake. I hope the Postmaster General will, unless we get better treatment from the express companies, extend the parcel post system. If the Postmaster General introduces an extended parcel post system I will support him now because we have not had fair treatment from the express companies, and if the express companies want to head off an extended parcel post they will substantially and quickly reduce their rates.

There is no use waiting, or threatening an investigation before the Railway Commission, let us declare for an extended parcel post system now, and relief will come at once.

As I have said, I wish to see adopted in this country that new and great principle in connection with private owned public franchises, public competition wherever it can be put in force. Of course I would prefer to see a public monopoly in this matter and not the competition that I propose in this case. But perhaps we are not ready to come to that. I am ready for public ownership of all these monopolies now and completely. I would put the express companies completely out of business, I would take over the whole monopoly. I would put the telegraph companies out of business and make that a government monopoly. But if we cannot have that let us have public competition so as bring down the rates and improve the service.

What is the essential advantage of public ownership over private ownership in the matter of great public utilities? It is this: Public ownership seeks to improve the service and cheapen the price, while private ownership tries to reduce the service and increase the profits of the owners. The difference is as wide as that between daylight and dark, the difference between a corporation, an organization of men trying to improve and widen the service and cheapen the cost, and an organization of men trying to make the most money possible out of it. Wherever there has been public ownership of these great utilities the result has been to extend the service to a great many people. There is always a line in public ownership where the service does not pay, but year after year such a service is extended to the smaller and outlying communities, thereby increasing its usefulness. But the first thing a private company controlling a public monopoly says is: Is there a big profit in it for us, if not we shall not extend it until you can show us that there is money in it. The whole tendency of the world to-day is to extend the parcel post system. They are coming to it in the United States, they have every faith in it in Great Britain and Europe; they have worked it out in Australia and New Zealand until it is a great success and why should Canada further delay? Why should somebody be able to come into this House, the railway and express companies, I imagine, and under the guise of protecting the country storekeepers, prevent the people of this country having so useful and necessary a thing as cheap parcel post? The railways should not have that influence and I hope they will not have it any longer. I hope that the members here to-night, irrespective of party, will declare in favour of the extension of a parcel post system and let the word go to the people of the Canadian west to-morrow, in their trials and difficulties and the trouble that has come to them by reason of the late crops, the bad weather and the inability of the railways to give them care, and of the elevators to store their grain.

Mr. TURRIFF. And the lack of markets.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). And the lack of markets, if the hon. gentleman wishes to say so, and bring the political idea into it. If we can do something for them, let us do it now, let us do something for the people of the west to-day. We are giving them a Grain Act, an important advantage, let us give them something else, let us give them a cheaper parcel post and cheaper express to-morrow. If we give them cheaper express by parcels post to-morrow, then next week they will have cheaper telegraphs, the railways will see that if they do not reduce their telegraph rates there will be public competition there as well. If we could give them reduced passenger rates, that would be a great relief to them. Our railways are earning enormous profits, and the people in the west should have a cheaper passenger rate. I tried the other night to get an equalization of freight charges in this country. That is something to which they are entitled.

I hope the House will unite in support of this motion, and that we will be able to give to the people of the Canadian west an immediate relief in the way of express charges not only in their country, but throughout the whole of Canada.

I therefore beg to move, seconded by Mr. McCraney:

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

This House is of the opinion that the expansion and extension of the parcels post system would be in the public interest.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville). Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of the principle of this motion, and after having heard the last remarks of the hon. member for South York, I am even more strongly in favour of it because the hon. gentleman by his remarks has gone a little further than the words of his motion. He is not only in favour of an extension of the parcel post system, but also in favor of larger markets for the Canadian farmer.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And when I hear such a doughty supporter of protection as he was during the last general election advocating larger markets for the Canadian farmer, surely I cannot be false to the motion which he has so ably presented to the House.

My hon. friend has appealed to me as a former Postmaster General, and has been kind enough to quote some remarks which I made last year on the subject when I had the honour of being Postmaster General. It is true that last year, speaking on this very question, I expressed the opinion very frankly and speaking for myself alone, that the day was not far distant when the Post Office Department of Canada should take upon itself the duty of establishing a parcel post system. At the present the parcel post service is chiefly carried on by the railway companies, or by the express companies, the Canadian Express Company, and the Dominion Express Company, which are part and parcel of the two great railway systems, the Canadian Pacific railway, and the Grand Trunk railway. In every European country the express business is carried on by the Post Office Department.

Allow me to express here the opinion which I expressed the other day before the Canadian Club of Montreal, and which was re-echoed by the press, that the day has practically come in Canada when the Postmaster General should be not only the letter carrier of His Majesty the King, but should also be (as he is in foreign countries) the minister of communication. In England, in France, in Germany, in Japan, and very soon to be in the United States the Postmaster General is the superintendent not only of the post office, but also of the telegraph and telephone rates and parcel post system.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we have in our post office regulations a parcel post system in the embryonic stage. It is hidden in the Canadian Official Postal Guide. My hon. friend the Postmaster General, in whose ability and alertness and business-like methods I have the utmost confidence, will see himself that we are only at the embryonic stage—that for many reasons, which he knows as well as I do, the express companies were allowed to hold in their hands the parcel post system of this country. However, notwithstanding the regulations of his department, the time has come when a bold policy should be adopted and when the Post Office Department should establish a popular and cheap parcel post such as they have in other countries of the old world, even in Japan.

I might remind my hon. friend that some years ago when I took office there was a movement on foot, especially in the province of Ontario, and in some of the provinces of the west, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, strongly in favour of the establishment of a cheap parcel post system in Canada. I received many petitions praying for the establishment of such a system, but, concurrently or concomitantly I was deluged with petitions signed by farmers who were deluded into signing them by the railway companies. It was easy to see that these petitions were engineered by the railway companies, or rather by the express companies. My hon. friend the Postmaster General may see these petitions in the Post Office Department. They are in the archives of the department, if they have not been eaten by the rats. He will see that whether these petitions were signed in the province of Ontario or in the constituencies of the west they were all worded in about the same language. The fear expressed in these petitions was that if the Post Office Department of Canada were to establish a cheap parcel post system the effect would be that the departmental stores of Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, Winnipeg and the other large cities would take all the benefit of the system, and the result would be the destruction of the utility of the country stores. I think the case was well put before the House yesterday by my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) who said that there is a possibility of a limited parcel post system which cannot injure the country merchant or the country store.

My hon. friend has referred to the telegraph and telephone rates. I am not prepared this evening to express an opinion on that very important subject. For the present I am free to say that in my judgment we have given enough powers to the Railway Commission to deal with this question for the time being. Mind you, I am not saying that we cannot go one step further. I am somewhat of a radical, like my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean), and, perhaps by going a little more deeply into the matter I might adopt some of his views. However, I am not discussing that subject this evening, and I do not say I share altogether the views expressed by the hon. member for South York.

We have our Railway Commission presided over by a man of whom this country must be proud, because he has rendered the country most valuable service since he has presided over the board. Some years ago we gave that commission wide powers. It has the right to look after the rates charged by the telegraph and telephone companies. I introduced legislation some years ago to give that commission additional powers as regards the cable rates, and, in my judgment the rates which were announced the other day by the home government, whilst very gratifying after the agitation which has taken place during the last few years, are only the first instalment of what should come for Canada.

I believe in a state-owned cable between Canada and the mother country, thus linking the premier colony of the empire with the nerve centre of the empire in London. We have already the Pacific cable which is doing a great deal towards making better relations between Australia, New Zealand and Canada. Still, there remains the last link to be established, and that link is between Canada and the mother country. I think I shall be in a position, at another sitting of the House, to show my hon. friend the Postmaster General that if he wishes to make a name for himself, he should favour a state-owned cable between Canada and the mother country, thus encircling the globe with cheap telegraphic communication between the various British colonies.

The question this evening is that of cheap parcel post and I was referring a moment ago to the hidden clauses which are contained in this 'Postal Guide.' My hon. friend will see on page 20, section 100, and following, under the heading of 'fourth class matter,' that he has the power to establish a parcel post system. As a matter of fact, it is already established, but it goes under another name. Section 100 of the 'Postal Guide,' reads as follows:

This class includes merchandise of all descriptions such as confectionery, drygoods, groceries, hardware, stationery (including blankbooks, &c.) not included in the first, second and third classes, and not excluded from the mails by the general prohibitory regulations with respect to objectionable matter. The rate of postage for articles in this class is one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Section 101 reads:

The postage on fourth class matter must be prepaid by postage stamps, and no packet will be forwarded that is not prepaid at least one cent.

Section 102 states:

An insufficiently prepaid article of fourth class matter may be forwarded by post subject to payment of double the deficiency on delivery, provided at least one cent is prepaid. After the additional postage required on any short-paid packet of fourth class matter has been collected from the address 'postage due', stamps for the amount are to be affixed to the article, and cancelled by the postmaster.

Section 103 states:

The limit of weight for a package of fourth class matter is five pounds, and the limit of size is thirty inches in length by one foot in width or depth, but the combined length and girth of any packet must in no case exceed six feet.

A little further on in the same volume my hon. friend will find a series of parcel post conventions between Canada and nearly all the countries within the postal union, together with the rates agreed upon. I will not worry or weary the House with these rates and figures; but they show, for instance, that a parcel larger than is provided for under our domestic rates may be sent from Ottawa to Great Britain at a lower rate practically than that at which our smaller parcels can be sent from Ottawa to Halifax. I understand that when Canada was sparsely settled, when the revenue of the post office department was low, and when we had to exhaust all our resources to meet the demands for public works, it was not easy to give this country the benefit of a cheap parcel post such as they have it in other lands. But with the settlement of the country, with Canada's prodigious development during the last fifteen or twenty years, there is no reason why we should not adopt a bold policy in this connection. Let me remind my hon. friend—and I am sure he will not object to my going into history; he is new in the service and I am sure he means well—that when Rowland Hill, in Great Britain, advocated penny postage within the United Kingdom, he was laughed out of court. For years he was a voice crying in the wilderness of public inattention. In those days when one went to post a letter, three questions were asked: What is the weight of the letter? For what distance is it to be carried? What are the enclosures? And even in so progressive a country as the Great Britain of fifty or sixty years ago, in every post office was a strong candle light, before which the letter was held—there were no envelopes in those days—in order to see what enclosures it contained. If the letter exceeded half an ounce, it paid double rates; if it had to be carried more than sixty or seventy miles, it paid double rates; if there was more than one enclosure it paid three or four rates. It was to replace such a system that Rowland Hill advocated penny postage for all letters less than an ounce in weight over all parts of the United Kingdom. As I said, he was laughed at. Even so distinguished a statesman as Palmerston would not even listen to Rowland Hill when he propounded his system before a committee of the House of Commons. Rowland Hill had published a book in support of his idea, as believers in one idea are so apt to do. And one member of the House, having read the book, said: 'I have tried to find a hitch in the logic of this system and '—your pardon, Mr. Speaker—'I'll be damned if there is a hitch in it at all.' And, as we all know, the system, being adopted, proved a great success, not only in Great Britain but in every country of the civilized world. Cheap rates for letter carriage, cheap rates on railways, cheap rates for telephones, cheap rates for cables, and cheap rates above all in the parcel post, means increased revenue in every case. My hon. friend knows very well that some years ago it cost 16 cents to send a letter from Ottawa to Aylmer; from Ottawa to Brockville, 27 cents; from Ottawa to Montreal, 30 cents; from Ottawa to Quebec, nearly $1. That is within the recollection of some of the older members of this House.

Mr. PELLETIER. Not ours.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, but my hon. friend remembers when we had to pay 3 cents on a letter.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Five cents.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Until 1898 our cheapest rate was 3 cents. The penny system was then adopted as between Canada and the rest of the empire. There were people who predicted a huge deficit in the Post Office Department. On the contrary, I make bold to say, the surplus of the post office is due directly to the reduction of the postal rates. Some years ago, I myself as Postmaster General, introduced a reduction in the rates on what are called 'drop letters,' letters to addresses in the city within which they are posted. This was a reduction from two cents to one cent on a letter and applied to all the large cities of the country. I was told by the officers of the department that we might perhaps suffer a check for some years in the revenue of the department. On the contrary, within a few months after the rate of 1 cent for drop letters had been adopted, we had a surplus, a surplus which must be attributed to the fact that we reduced the rates. And the same result will follow if my hon. friend will adopt cheap parcel post for this country. In postal matters the United States has been a follower of Canada, having followed us in the adoption of many improvements which we ourselves had borrowed from Great Britain. For instance, there was the postal savings bank system, which, copied from Canada by the United States, has been a great success. But as regards the parcel post, the United States has stolen a march on Canada. I have here a report, the latest issue that they have in the library. That report shows that Postmaster General Hitchcock has proposed to establish a cheap parcel post, using in that connection, the agency of the rural mail system.

I read from page 10 of the Post Office Department Annual Reports of the United States:

> The recommendation made in the last annual report of the department for the introduction of a limited parcel post service on rural routes is earnestly renewed. It is believed that as soon as the postal savings system is thoroughly organized the Post Office Department should be prepared to establish throughout the country a general parcel post. As the preliminary step in the development of such a service it is hoped that Congress will authorize the delivery on rural routes of parcels weighing as much as 11 pounds——

Our limit is 5 pounds.

> —which is the weight limit for the international parcel post. This form of service can be conducted with little, if any, additional expense to the government. It will not require the appointment of more carriers, for those already employed have the necessary equipment in the way of horses and wagons to distribute the parcels as well as the ordinary mail, which is rarely of sufficient volume to take up more than a small portion of the mail space in the carrier's wagon. A rural parcel post of the kind proposed, if successfully conducted, would probably lead to a more general system. Before the parcel service is extended to the whole country, however, definite information should be obtained as to the nature and volume of the business to be handled. It is accordingly urged that in conjunction with the experiment on rural routes a further inquiry be authorized by Congress in order that the department may be in a better position to develop the system on conservative lines and that a special appropriation for the inquiry be promptly granted.

This was in 1910, and since then the United States Post Office Department have put in force a limited parcel post system in connection with the rural mail system. Now I would not be so radical as to say that throughout the whole length and breadth of Canada there should be a general parcel post system, at very low rates. The machinery for such a system would be very costly to begin with, and I do not know whether it would work very well. You can require the rural mail carrier to carry a parcel, because he has the machinery for it; but the ordinary mail carrier, where there is no rural mail delivery, is not in the same position. Of course, the hon. gentleman would have to invite new tenders, and to revise many of his contracts. I am aware that he is revising some of them without establishing a parcel post. However, that is only en passant. The hon. gentleman will see at once that by extending his rural mail system, although limited in its extent, which he has at present, he can start in with a cheap parcel post. I know that my hon. friend will be opposed at the start, but opposed by whom? Not by the people of this country, not by the honest merchants, but he will be opposed by the express companies. But the express companies have taken out of our hands the business which we ought to carry ourselves. The parcel post is one of the public utilities which by its nature pertain to the Postmaster General.

Mr. LALOR. Did the hon. gentleman find any opposition to the parcel post system by the country merchants?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I explained a moment ago that when I took office there was for a time a strong agitation in the press of the country generally in favour of a cheap parcel post. When petitions began to pour in to the department, I was surprised to find that all those petitions were worded in the same way, the same reasons were invoked against the system, in fact the same printed forms were used all over Canada. From what I gathered from the officers in the department, I concluded in my own mind that the agitation originated from the express companies; in fact I have no doubt of it whatever. That is easy to understand. The moment the Postmaster General of Canada starts a cheap parcel post system, having already under his hand a complete machinery to carry it out, it is easy to understand that his rivals will be the express companies. But I say again, the express companies ought not to be allowed to take away from the Postmaster General a business which by its nature pertains to his department. At all events, the establishment of a cheap parcel post system would bring the express companies to reason and to terms. Let me read from a pamphlet published by Mr. Kindel, 'Relation of a Parcel Post to Businessmen and Farmers'; this was read before the Trans-Mississippi Congress in November, 1911. Here is a paragraph which applies exactly to our own conditions in Canada; in fact, you might change the names of the cities of New York and Boston to Montreal and Toronto, and you will find that it exactly describes our conditions:

How the United States government discriminates against its own citizens in favour of those of foreign countries.

Well, my hon. friend and myself, unwillingly, when I was in office, did discriminate against our own citizens in favour of those of foreign countries.

To illustrate the inconsistency in connection with the parcel post service attention is drawn to the following conditions: An individual entering any post office in the United States with two parcels weighing four pounds each will be obliged to pay 64 cents on the one to New York, for example, while for the one destined to a foreign country, although it usually passes through New York city, the charge is 48 cents. Should the weight be 4 pounds 6 ounces, a package addressed to the resident of New York will be denied admission to the mail by the postmaster, while the package intended for a resident of a foreign land will be accepted and forwarded, probably via New York, at the rate of 12 cents per pound. The parcels for the foreign country will be received in most instances up to 11 pounds. In other words, our own people must pay 4 cents per pound more for the privilege of dispatching packages to each other than when destined to residents of foreign countries.

I have already said that when I was Postmaster General—I make no bones about it, my hon. friend and myself are equally guilty in that respect—we have been too kind to the express companies, and we have not been bold enough in regard to a parcel post in former years. We should have been as bold in this direction as we have been in the reduction of postal rates on letters and drop letters. Let me read to the House a paragraph from 'La Follette's Weekly':

At present, the transportation of parcels, except for very small ones, is in the grip of the express monopoly. Every person who sends a Christmas package must pay tribute to the few individuals who control the express business—must help to create those enormous 24 million dollar 'lemons.' Service that is rightly part of the people's Post Office Department is now performed not as a public function but as a means of building up collossal private fortunes.

If the Christmas package were our only small parcels transportation problem, it would not be serious. But, as a nation, the shipment of parcels enters in an important degree into the economy of our daily life. Now to send small shipments quickly, cheaply, and securely is a thing which America has apparently been unable to learn from the enlightened countries of Europe, Australia, Asia, Africa and South America. It is not that the people of the country do not understand the condition, nor that they do not understand the remedy. It is only that congress is deaf to the public demands for a national parcels post.

Here is a good occasion for my hon. friend to make a name for himself. I will give him all the credit he will deserve if he starts, in the not too far distant future, a cheap parcel post system.

Representative agencies of public thought, neswspapers and public speakers have for years voiced this demand. Labour organizations in their national conventions and through their accredited representatives, have emphasised it. The farmers of the country plead for it.

But for some mysterious reason the demand, not only of the farmers but of labouring men and public spirited citizens generally, when they have touched the subject of parcels post have been persistently ignored by congress.

A parcel post is no mysterious thing. It means simply that congress shall authorize and that the Post Office Department shall put into operation rules and machinery for the transportation of packages in the domestic mails of the United States reasonable rates, subject only to reasonable, not arbitrary limitation as to size and weight.

As I stated a moment ago, you can substitute the words 'parliament of Canada,' for 'Congress,' and the name 'Ottawa' for 'New York,' and you have exactly a picture of our parcel post system as it at present exists in Canada. If my hon.friend wishes seriously and conscientiously to deal with this subject, I warn him at once that he will meet with some obstacles in his path. I mentioned a moment ago the express companies. He may also meet with some red tape in the department. I do not wish to blame the officials of the department, but I only wish to say that after a system has been in existence for years and after certain rates have been established, strange to say, when a demand is made for a reduction or a change immediately objections are made, not by the public, not by legislators, but by the officials of the department. In the Post Office Department I can say that my hon. friend has most intelligent officers who are quite in accord with the public on his question. I would remind him of one thing. If it is not shelved, he will find a report in the department on this very question prepared by my good friend, Mr. Geo. Ross, of Toronto, chief Postoffice Superintendent of Canada, one of the ablest men in the world as regards postal matters generally. I would not be afraid to put Mr. Geo. Ross of Toronto on a par with the postoffice officials of any country in the world. He has been trained in the postoffice system for forty years. He is a very able man, full of ideas and always ready to accept a reform when a reform suggests itself to the public. My hon. friend will find in the department a very lengthy report prepared by Mr. Ross about three months ago. I was under the charm of that report when I left office, unfortunately. That report simply confirms what my hon. friend has stated this evening and very largely what the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) stated yesterday. If my hon. friend will read the remarks made by my hon. friend for East Lambton yesterday—I am sorry I cannot refer to a past debate—he will find concrete facts which are corroborated by Mr. Ross in his lengthy and able report which conclusively proves the necessity of starting afresh on this question of the parcel post in Canada. Now, I have said all I have to say on this question.

Mr. PELLETIER. I desire to profit by the experience which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux), has had while occupying the high position of Postmaster General for several years, and perhaps he will be prepared to give some suggestions as to how this parcels post system might be put into effect as far as rates and weights are concerned.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend will find all that in Mr. Ross' report.

Mr. PELLETIER. I want to know if my hon. friend agrees with those figures, because I have seen the report.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend has seen the report I am very glad because he is more conversant with the subject than I thought he was. I agree completely with Mr. Ross' conclusions, and I say that the hon. member for East Lambton yesterday propounded a scheme which could be arranged. By your leave, Mr. Speaker, I might be allowed to quote a few of the remarks of the hon. member for East Lambton.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is part of the subject introduced by the hon. member for East Lambton, and discussed yesterday. While great latitude is allowed in moving an amendment to go into Committee of Supply, there is a limitation to it which I think it is well to keep in mind.

Mr. PELLETIER. There is no objection whatever on this side of the House to the hon. gentleman going into this subject fully. It is a matter of very great public interest.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) illustrated yesterday the way in which the system, as propounded by Mr. Ross, could be worked out in Canada, and how it would be possible to do away with the objection raised with respect to departmental stores. It is a scheme which would establish the parcels post system within the limits of rural mail routes, and would not deprive the country merchants of their clientèle. My hon. friend will, I am sure, read over the report of Mr. Ross. I fully agree with that report. I have nothing more to add on this subject. I am in accord with the motion made by the hon. member for South York. In this matter, as in all matters, it requires a little boldness and some courage. We have been experimenting in the Post Office Department for the last ten or fifteen years with this result, as the logical conclusion of these experiments, that whenever we have established cheap rates we have had larger revenues. The same thing is true with respect to cables. Some years ago when there was but one cable between America and Europe the rate for one word was £1, and the cable service was, therefore, inaccessible to the people.

The moment a second company was started there was a reduction in the rates, in 1887 and 1888 the cable rates, because of competition went down so low as twelve cents a word. So long as the express companies are not interfered with there will be a monopoly and high express rates, but if the Postmaster General follows the suggestions made by Mr. Ross in his very able report, he will render a great service not only to the residents of the cities, but to the farmers of the country as well. In Germany and France the farmers make tremendous use of the parcel post system by sending their staples such as eggs, butter and cheese to the market, and the parcel post is one of the paying agencies of the postal service in European countries. Great Britain is in the van of progress amongst all civilized nations in her postal service. From Great Britain we got the penny post, and let us copy her in the parcel post system. Later on we can have a cheap telegraphic communication by establishing a state-owned cable between Canada and the mother country. If the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) does all that he will make a great name for himself.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.) I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) will be able to show us, as he has said, that the introduction of this parcel post system will not unduly advantage the departmental stores of the cities, and unduly disadvantage the country merchants.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I trust the Postmaster General will place before the House the report of Mr. Ross which shows that a local parcel post system such as they have in the United States can be established without injuring the country merchant, but rather that it will be an advantage to him. I know that a great objection comes from the country merchant, but the country merchant is stirred up insidiously by the express companies, and the objection is in reality only fictitious. We all know the methods of the monopolies for years and years in this country. On this important question which is now so widely discussed, my hon. friend will find that the report of Mr. Ross demonstrates that a local parcel post system will work to the advantage of the country merchant.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). I rise to a point of order. I have a motion on the order paper in connection with this very question which we were discussing last night at six o'clock when the House adjourned, and which will come up on Monday next when I shall be glad to have the support of the hon. gentlemen for it; but I wish to know if it is in order in this way to anticipate a motion which is already on the order paper.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). This is a new proposal which has been presented. There is a great grievance in Canada in connection with the parcel post system and express charges, and the constitutional rule is to move for the redress of grievances before going into Supply. I have said that the parcel post system is one way of getting at the express companies——

Mr. SPEAKER. In speaking to a point of order it is not permissible to wander off into a general debate.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I respect your ruling, Sir, but I wish to point out that if by putting a notice on the order paper you could block an amendment to Supply on the subject dealt with in that motion then there would be no possibility of bringing up grievances in this manner.

Mr. PELLETIER. I cannot be here next Monday, and this debate has gone on for a long time, and if it should be stopped now I do not want the people of the country to think that I have any objection to its proceeding. I would rather have the question ventilated and the debate continued if it be within the rules of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is great latitude given on the discussion of amendments to the motion that Mr. Speaker do leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply. Bourinot says:

The ancient constitutional doctrine that the redress of grievances is to be considered before the granting of supplies, is now represented by the practice of permitting every description of amendment to be moved on the question for the Speaker leaving the chair before going into the Committee of Supply or Ways and Means.

Bourinot continues to point out certain limitations to this rule one of which is that you cannot discuss a matter which is already dealt with in a notice on the order paper, but the notice of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) asks for a committee to gather information with respect to the nationalization of telegraphs and telephones, and the extension of parcel post, &c., while the amendment of the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) is simply that the parcel post system be extended. In my judgment the amendment does not deal exactly with the same matter as the notice on the order paper, and it is therefore quite in order.

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon). I wish to second the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) and to give a few reasons why I wish to see the extension of the parcel post service. Those who have followed the discussion in the public press know that there is discrimination against the west in the matter of express rates. A rate which in the eastern provinces would be say $1, would be about $1.66 in the west. An extension of the parcel post system which would to a great extent do the business of the express companies would do away with that discrimination against the west.

Another grievance which our people in the west have is the paying of double express rates. The recipient of a parcel by express from Ontario who resides on the line of the Canadian Northern railway must pay an express rate to each of the two companies—The Dominion Express Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Express Company—during the winter season. There is no more reason for charging two express rates on an express parcel than for charging double postage on a letter going into any part of the west. An extension of the parcel post system would remove that double charge. Another reason for supporting this motion is that the express rates are too high and that the business if taken over by the government could be administered more economically than it is by the express companies and the exorbitant charges would be wiped out.

I was pleased to hear the remarks of my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) with regard to the country storekeeper. I have not yet got away from the idea that the country storekeeper is the mainstay of the settler. In the west many of our people who are poor, have no money and have no means of getting out their wheat and so must get credit. They do not get credit from T. Eaton & Company or from Robert Simpson & Company. It is the country storekeeper who must keep these people alive until they are able to get cash. If some arrangement can be worked out which will produce a system of parcel post which will not be to the disadvantage of the country storekeeper, then we will have a very perfect system indeed and when my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) with all his experience, assures us that that can be done, I am very glad indeed to support the proposal which is before the House.

Mr. TURRIFF. I am heartily in favour of the motion before the House. My principal reason is that the express companies are so exorbitant in their charges on goods going to the west. For instance I have in my office a bill for a four pound box of candy that was sent from Ottawa to Edmonton a year ago last Christmas. The box cost $2.40, and the Canadian Pacific railway express company charged $2.50 to take it from here to Edmonton. That has been the whole trouble, and I do not know of any better way to bring the express companies to time than to extend the parcel post. I would not like to interfere with the country merchants but I believe, as the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), has said that a system can be devised that will be fair to the country merchants and to the settlers as well. We must always bear in mind that for one country merchant there are 50 farmers or more, so that their interests, I think, have to be kept well to the fore. The express charges are simply ruinous and this is the best way to deal with them.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the charge to which my hon. friend refers the regular, ordinary charge?

Mr. TURRIFF. It was the regular charge and the party who sent the four pound box objected strongly and held off paying for a week or so but they insisted that that was the ordinary charge and compelled him to pay the $2.50 from here to Edmonton.

Mr. BLAIN. Was it carried by one express company or two?

Mr. TURRIFF. By one express company only, because the Canadian Pacific railway have a continuous line between here and Edmonton.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was very much interested in the speech of the ex-Postmaster General, more especially with reference to the effect produced by the reduction of rates of postage, particularly on drop letters. It may be in the recollection of the ex-Postmaster General that on several occasions in past years I drew his attention to the fact that whilst he had reduced the rate of postage on drop letters in the cities, he had not given to the people in the country any corresponding reduction.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am for that now.

Mr. HENDERSON. His argument then was that he could not make up his mind to give the people in the small towns and villages and in the townships a reduction to one-half cent on drop letters in rural districts until he had discovered what would be the result of the drop from two cents to one cent in the cities. My argument was that if that was good in one instance it ought to be good in the other and the ex-Postmaster General put me off from time to time until he should discover what the result would be in the cities.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear, the time has come now.

Mr. HENDERSON. The time has come and the ex-minister has become a convert to my contention.

Mr. LEMIEUX. You are justified.

Mr. HENDERSON. I purpose to-night making use of the arguments of the ex-Postmaster General to impress on the present Postmaster General that in consideration of the cities having received a reduced rate of postage from two cents to one cent on drop letters, the present Postmaster General should now render to the people in the rural districts which I represent more particularly that justice which my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) could not see his way clear to granting in the past. I trust the Postmaster General will find in what I have said and in what has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) justification for making the reduction which I then asked and which I am very glad to ask for now.

To this extent, at least, I am in sympathy with the motion of the hon. member for South York. I think that whatever extension is made to the postal system should be to the material benefit of the country merchant, who has occasion to use the post office a great deal for the purpose of advertising his wares. Whether the object of the hon. gentleman from South York (Mr. Maclean), is carried out or not, I am sure my hon. friend the Postmaster General, particularly having heard the admission of his predecessor in office, will make an amendment to the postal law that will give the effect to the proposition for which I contended on several occasions.

Mr. EMMERSON. If the proposed motion resulted in the lessening of the express rates I think it would be a very desirable course to take. We often hear complaints about the east and the west, but there are never any murmurings as regards the east. Nevertheless, the express rates in eastern Canada are abnormally high, and unconscionably excessive. A charge, for instance, from New Brunswick to the city of Ottawa of $1.80 per hundred pounds for articles like vegetables, which cost less than $1 per hundred pounds, would seem to be by comparison outrageously excessive. Yet, particularly during the present season, these commodities can only be brought to Ottawa by express. You cannot trust to way freights, so the express companies are used. That is only one illustration. Many others could be cited to indicate that there is something wrong with the express charges in eastern Canada as well as in the west. I have not looked into the subject of parcel post, and how far it would discriminate against the retail merchants throughout the country, but I rather suspect that those who have been complaining in this regard have not been the retail merchants, but the transportation companies who are interested. I can say this however, that of all the revenue of the Intercolonial railway the largest precentage, without a corresponding expense charge is that derived from the Canadian Express Company and the Dominion Express Company. That business is done on a percentage basis, and if you will turn to the records of the Intercolonial railway you will see the very large sum which goes into the treasury of the railway as its proportion of the express charges. You would be amazed at it when you realize that special trains are not run, and that there are not even express cars on every train. Now, that amount is only a small proportion of the total express charge. The balance goes to the express companies. If you consult these figures you can form some idea of the burden which is placed on those who have to pay these charges. I speak of this because I think it is a matter with which the Railway Commission should deal at once, and if the action suggested by my hon. friend the Postmaster General would result in an awakening of the consciences of the express companies (if they can be said to have such a thing) it would be doing a very great service to the people of Canada.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). Without entering into any discussion I merely wish to place the two resolutions on 'Hansard.'

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it is permissible to discuss a ruling of the Chair. It may be appealed against to the House, but that is the only way it can be touched.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). I do not intend to discuss the ruling of the Chair,

Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to place the two resolutions on 'Hansard.'

Mr. SPEAKER. I take it that is the purpose of bringing up the two resolutions again.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). There seems to be a general opinion expressed on both sides of the House that the express rates in this country are excessive. This is a question which has been before the House a good many times. We have discussed it session after session, and we believed a few sessions ago that when we left the regulation of the express rates to the Railway Commission the people of the country would have some remedy, and that their grievances would receive redress. I think this question was brought up again at the last session of the House, and apparently the Railway Commission moved in the matter, making some slight reduction in the express rates.

We hear the Railway Commission praised; and I think they deserve great credit for what they have done in connection with railway traffic and arrangements. But I believe that in express rates, they have not done their duty. The reductions they have made were so small as to amount to little or nothing. I believe they should be urged to move in this matter of express rates and bring to an end such exorbitant charges as were referred to by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). There is no reason why we should not have lower rates, especially when we consider the capitalization of the express companies and the great profits they are making. While I am not opposed, and I am not going to express opposition, to the proposed extension of the parcel post system, at the same time I would remind the Postmaster General that 90 per cent—I think I am safe in saying 90 per cent—of the merchants throughout the Dominion are opposed to this change. Large stores in the principal centres, such concerns as the T. Eaton company and the Simpson company of Toronto, are supplying people all over this country with merchandise which should be bought from their local country merchants, and the proposed reduction of the parcel post rates will increase to an enormous extent this form of business. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has told us that a system could be worked out which would give us an extension of parcel post service, yet not hurt the country merchant. The explanation did not satisfy me. I do not see how it could be done. Surely, if the rates are lowered the country merchant must be hurt. Some hon. members on the other side spoke as if they would oppose the extension of the system, if it were likely to hurt the country merchant. Though they hope under the advice of the hon. member for Rouville, that a system can be worked out that will allow an extension of the system without causing injury to the country dealers. As to the petitions that were sent in, the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux) has suggested that they were initiated by the express companies. Unless the hon. member can give us some authority for that statement, I can only say that I think he is mistaken. I believe the petitions were initiated by the Retail Merchants Association. They were certainly circulated by country merchants, and many of those petitions, including some that I received from my constituency, were signed by farmers who were opposed to the big departmental stores supplying the farmers to the injury of the trade of the country merchant. While, as I have said, I am not expressing opposition to the extension of this service, I hope the Postmaster General will consider it from all points of view before he decides. For I believe it is going to be a great injury to the country merchants. As has been said here to-night, the farmers depend pretty largely upon the country merchants, and I think we should keep that fact in view.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. Without expressing an opinion now upon any of the explanations which have been made, let me say at the outset that, with the general way in which the motion has been drafted, there is no objection to accepting it as it stands. I think the House will be very much indebted to hon. members who have studied this question and have given us the benefit of their suggestions and advice. Without referring—as I am not allowed to refer under the rules—to the debate of yesterday, I may be permitted to say that we had from the hon. member from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) not only an elaborate, but a statesmanlike presentation of this and the other questions with which he dealt. He has evidently looked into these questions very carefully, and I not only thank him on my own behalf, but I am sure that I express the sentiment of all the members of this House on both sides when I say that we are indebted to the hon. member for having put on 'Hansard' the result of what must have been a pretty long study of the subject. I was sorry that, because of the House adjourning at six o'clock, my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) had not an opportunity to say everything he wished to say. I hope I may be here when the debate is resumed. If it is gone on with on Monday, I regret to say, I cannot be present; but I hope to be able to arrange with my hon. friend to fix some other day when I can be here. For, having heard what was so ably said yesterday, I must say he has given me such a mass of information on subjects within my department that he has done for me a good deal of work which I should have otherwise have had to do for myself. For that, I tender him my sincere thanks.

I now come to this question of parcel post which was included in a certain way in the motion of my hon. friend from East Lambton, and which has been dealt with to-night on the motion of my hon. friend from South York (Mr. MacLean). I have listened very attentively to the remarks of all the gentlemen who have spoken, and I was struck with several of the addresses, and amongst others, that of my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), who, in the course of his very able speech has had the candour to tell this House—for it practicalsy amounts to that—that his government might have done a great thing but failed to do it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We were just on the verge of doing it.

Mr. PELLETIER. It took them fifteen years to get to the verge. There were many things, apparently, that they were on the verge of doing, but the many bad things that they did must have kept them so busy they had not time to do the good things. The time had indeed come for a change of government, if these gentlemen, being imbued with such great and patriotic ideas, were not able to put them into effect. But now that they are in opposition, they say to us: You are in power; do these things now; we thought of it for fifteen years, yet we, this great government—they do not say 'great,' but everything points to that—did nothing; but you are in power; now do these things that we failed to do.

However, Mr. Speaker, I must say that in the position I occupy at present, I have something else to do than to present only one side of this question. Whilst I am in accord with the principle of the resolution before the House, I am bound to say that there are serious objections to putting it into effect, at least to any great extent. As we know, there are two sides to every question, and so there are to this one. There are objections and the objections exist not only from the point of view of the express companies. If this government, if the Post Office Department, comes to the conclusion that it is in the interest of the people at large to adopt a parcel post system, no express companies will prevent us from doing it. The question has many bearings, it is one of great importance. In view of the position taken in the past by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) and the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), I have taken some pains to study this matter. I am bound to say that although the expansion of the parcel post system would undoubtedly be a great boon to the public, there are obstacles in the way, obstacles which my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has brushed aside with a wave of the hand, but which exist nevertheless. I think it necessary to lay before the House both aspects of this question. We are told that the mother country, England, is the pioneer in that direction. So she is, Mr. Speaker, as she has been the pioneer in many other respects. In regard to postal organization, I entirely agree with the hon. member for Rouville that we have to go to England to learn. Let me call the atttention of the House to a very important fact, that while we find in England a highly developed parcel post system, in another country to the south of us, the United States, the parcel post system is practically ignored. What is the reason for the difference between these two countries in that respect? In the British Isles they have a territory of 121,000 square miles, with a population of 45,000,000. Ontario alone has an area twice that of the British Isles; and if we take the Dominion at large, instead of an area of 120,000 square miles, which is that of the British Isles, we have an area of 1,832,854 square miles. What does that mean in relation to the parcel post system? It means that we have a very large area to supply, and a very sparse population to support the system. Hon. gentlemen will easily understand how these facts affect the question. A large population in a small territory will go very far to make a parcel post system successful; whereas if you have to cover an area of a million square miles with a small population to support the system, you will very likely make it a failure. The House will easily understand the bearings of these facts. Now, why have the United States not gone further in the development of a parcel post system? For the very reason I have pointed out, namely, that while the area of the United States is about the same as ours, they have a population of 90,000,000 people. The United States even has not proceeded as far as the hon. member for Rouville would wish us to proceed. My hon. friend has read from a report of the Postmaster General of the United States, and I was already acquainted with some of his remarks. But it is only during the session of Congress of this year that the Postmaster General of the United States has drawn attention to this question in a pointed way. Any one who reads the New York papers will see that one of the reasons for the United States being slow in this matter is the fact of the immense area of its territory. You must have a dense population in order to make the system a success. We must look these difficulties in the face. It is not sufficient to say to the people: You must have this, and you must have that. We must treat the people frankly, and put all the facts before them, before promising to inaugurate this or that system. I think our parcel post system can be expanded, that it can be made much better than it is to-day. But I would not like the people to expect that with our seven or eight million inhabitants we are going to inaugurate a parcel post system such as they have in the British Isles with their forty-five millions. I admit there is room for amelioration, there is no doubt about that. Look at the position we occupy to-day—and I do not say this in order to criticise our hon. friends opposite. Under the operation of the parcel post system which we have now in force we actually play into the hands of the express companies; we give them all the profitable business, and we keep for ourselves the unprofitable business. That statement is as true as any statement that can be made in this House. The express companies take all the business on the short hauls because it pays them, and they leave us all the business on the long hauls. They do not undertake that, because it doesn't pay them. It is the Post Office Department that provides for the long hauls. Now we take a parcel from Vancouver and carry it to Halifax for a cent an ounce.

It is the same principle as that which we should apply to ordinary mail matter. If we do not say that in a certain province, or in a certain zone, there shall be a certain rate according to the distance between these zones, we shall certainly put ourselves in the position that we will carry all over this continent what the express companies carry now and, if the cheap rates which are suggested and asked for to-night are adopted, we will put the Post Office Department out of commission. In England, where they do these things so well, they have a minimum rate. They will take a parcel and carry it for threepence per pound. But, if it weighs one pound one ounce it will cost sixpence instead of three. We charge one cent per ounce and we go up a cent for every ounce until we have reached the sixteen ounces in a pound and when we charge 16 cents. From there up to 25 cents it goes by ounces. The minimum rate of the express companies is 25 cents. They are very careful to leave all those little things which are so tiny and small that they might be lost to us. At the rate which exists now one of those little parcels, weighing two or three ounces, may be sent by the mail and it will only cost two or three cents. The express companies leave all that business to us. I do not think that is a state of things which should continue or which should be encouraged. I think that we should go into the question fully and try to find a remedy for the existing state of things. There are various aspects of this question and I am only going over them in a very general way because I think the time has not come to go very fully into them. The public demands on the Post Office Department are immense. We are asked from all sides to extend and expand our system of rural mail delivery. I am not prepared to say, because comparisons are always odious, which is the better, speaking for the government, because the government has not yet considered this question, but in so far as I am concerned I am inclined to believe that if we are to go into any very extensive new policy in the Post Office Department, my preference for the moment would be in favour of the rural mail delivery first. If we intend, as was suggested a moment ago, to come to the help of the farmers, I think they would prefer rural mail delivery to the fact that they might receive from the big shops like Eaton's in Toronto a parcel once a year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no doubt that the extension of rural mail delivery will help in getting cheap parcel post.

Mr. PELLETIER. I think that is true to a certain extent, but that point is not as clear as some people would think. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) submitted a plan yesterday in which I think there is a great deal.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The plan of Mr. Ross.

Mr. PELLETIER. Yes I was going to say that. It is what is called the limited parcel post plan, and it is the plan which Mr. Ross, who knows a great deal about this matter, has brought before the department. I do not want to criticise men who know more about this matter than I do.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is a technical question.

Mr. PELLETIER. It is more than a technical question. We are told by Mr. Ross and by the hon. member for East Lambton that we should limit the parcel post delivery to the point where the rural mail delivery man begins his work. How would we carry mail from the distributing point to this local point? We must provide for the distribution from, say, Toronto to Niagara, Brantford and those other places. We must provide for transportation to the point where the rural delivery man will take the mail. I do not see that any provision has been made for that and it must be looked into because it is a serious question. We are told that the United States have done something. Whereas, we have a five-pound limit for our parcel post, the United States have only a four-pound limit. In that great country, knowing as much as they do, they have not yet gone beyond the four-pound limit. In England they have reached the eleven-pound limit, and I do not suppose that anybody will ever think of going beyond that for the parcel post delivery. I am sure that the hon. member for Rouville will side with me when I say that if you are going into this trade, because it is now a trade carried on by the express companies, you must provide for more than my hon. friend thinks. The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has said something with regard to a point of very great importance and one to which it is necessary to give mature consideration. We have in this country the mail car. We also have the express car. I have seen it stated in books and articles that there was not much in the objection which has been urged in this regard because it was said the mail and express cars were half empty. As a matter of fact the cars are crowded now as much as they can be and to-day it has become a great problem with the railway companies on account of the very heavy increase in the quantity of newspapers which are carried all over because the people read more than they used to——

Mr. LEMIEUX. And at a cheaper rate than in any other country.

Mr. PELLETIER. Yes, my hon. friend is right. We have to face this question. As my hon. friend knows, the railway companies have been hammering at him

Mr. LEMIEUX. And at my predecessors.

Mr. PELLETIER. And at his predecessors because they think they are not getting enough for the transportation of mails. It got to such an acute point that my hon. friend, not knowing how to deal with this question and being obliged to refuse these railway companies, thought of referring the whole question for decision to the Railway Board.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I thought it was the proper plan.

Mr. PELLETIER. It was at all events a very good plan of taking it out of the way for the time being.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They were satisfied. What has my hon. friend done?

Mr. PELLETIER. Well, I am sorry to say that I have had to differ on this question from my hon. friend as I have had to on some other points, though we are personally good friends. We have had an order in council passed taking away from the Railway Board the decision of this question. I am not going to tell you anything to-night that might induce the railway companies to ask for too much money, but the railway companies, I must admit, have a case. They carry much more than they used to.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I agree with my hon. friend in that.

Mr. PELLETIER. We have in our hands a strong card; we have the law in our favour, and the law says at what rates the mails shall be carried by the railway companies. Having that power in our own hands, why should we give it away to the Railway Board. If there is justice in the contention of the railway companies, let us render justice to them after we have ourselves considered the matter, and let us say to the railway companies: you will get what you are entitled to and no more. That is why I have taken this question from the Railway Board. The submission to the Railway Board would tie the hands of the government because I presume no government would dare to refuse to accept the suggestion of that board. And, that decision of the board might not only wipe out our post-office surplus of $1,250,000, but leave us a deficit instead. I was new in the department, but I went very carefully into the matter and when I saw that we might possibly be condemned to pay such a big amount in a lump sum, I thought I would recommend to my colleagues that since the law gave us the power to decide the question we should decide it for ourselves. We will then be sure that we will not pay more than we should.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Postmaster General agrees with me that the railways have made a prima facie case, and if he now proposes lower rates and larger weights for the parcel post, he will be in a better position to make arrangements with the railway companies for the future.

Mr. PELLETIER. When we are making a deal with the railway companies for the carriage of the mails it will be a good business transaction in the interests of the people of Canada for us to try and get a reduction and a considerable one at that—in the express rates. It will be a matter of give and take. To deny that the railway companies have made out a prima facie case would be to deny a clearly evident fact.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The railway companies it is agreed, have a prima facie case against the department, and the question had been hanging in the department for the last fifteen or twenty years as to what should be done in view of the heavy increase in the mail service. The companies were pressing me very hard and I thought the best way was to refer the whole question to the Railway Commission which had been asked to decide cognate questions. I do not say I would have been bound by the decision of the Railway Commissioners, and I always had a view that we might consider the question in our negotiations with the railway companies towards the end of extending the parcel post system at lower rates.

Mr. PELLETIER. If the railway companies had a decision of the Railway Board in their favour they would have a big stick in their hands over the government, but having the law in my favour I will keep that big stick in my own hands. I do not mean that I shall dictate anything unjust to the railway companies, but the railway companies will not dictate to me. If they had a judgment of the Railway Board which would amount to an award by arbitrators, they would have the better end of it, but I shall always try to keep the better end for the public so long as I am at the head of the department. Coming back to the parcel post question, I say there are other things to be taken into account. The whole system at present for handling the mails, the size of the bags, among other things, would not be sufficient for the larger parcels, rural delivery boxes would be too small and I believe we have already one hundred thousand. Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has admitted that we will practically have to change all the mail carrying contracts if the new system is adopted. A minister in charge of a department has to consider all these things before he announces to the people that this reform will be inaugurated and put into effect by a wave of the hand. If under this new system we are to become common carriers of the parcels of this country, we shall probably have to have another mail car on the trains, and generous as the railway companies may be, it is not to be assumed that they will give two cars for the price of one. I believe that the business is done to-day on a profitable basis for the railway companies and the express companies. We all know that the express companies are subsidiary companies of the railway companies and that the directors go from one room to another, and the resolutions they carry in one room they can have adopted in the other because they are nearly always the same men.

With all that the express company is making a very good profit. Although I must confess they are not giving out the secrets of their business to everybody I understand that they now have an arrangement in virtue of which the railway companies carry the parcels the express company receiving 45 per cent of the revenue and the railway companies retaining 55 per cent. It is no wonder the express companies are making a great deal of money and are able to pay large dividends.

If the government should enter this field and should charge the same rates as are now charged by these express companies, it would be no advantage to the people of Canada. So it results necessarily that we must think and work out another system altogether from the present one. I do not want the country merchant to think that we are going to do anything that will be harmful to him. The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) has said to-night that in the different parishes, townships and hamlets of this country the country merchant is badly needed and this government should take care that this man is not injured in his business. Big firms like Eaton's in Toronto will never be stopped from sending their goods throughout the country and to a certain extent injuring the country merchants. They are sending their goods at the existing rates and they are even sending special trains with goods in certain parts of this country. They are paying for these trains which shows what splendid organizations and what immense outputs these big firms must have. But where they do not run special trains, they will send goods anyway. There is not a country place in Canada, however small, where Eaton's are not sending goods. You cannot expect to stop them, and the country merchant knows that this has to be done. Great care will have to be taken, however, not to injure the business of the country merchants. They are worthy people, they earn their living and the living of their families in this way and their rights should be respected. Probably some of my friends will say that whilst I am accepting this motion I have said everything that may be said against it. I do not want my friends to so interpret my remarks. The advantages of the system have been so well put before the House by the gentlemen who have spoken before me that I felt I did not need to repeat them. I had some pencil notes from which I intended to speak, but no one hopes to speak as eloquently as the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has spoken in favour of this system. So it is perhaps better to allow him to set forth the advantages of the system and I have been obliged to take the other side in order that the case may be fully presented. I at once agree that something must be done. My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) is in a position to assure the people that this parcel post system will be a good thing, but with the responsibilities of office I have to look on the other side of the question.

On the other question which has been incidentally discussed, the state-owned cable, I shall say one word. I entirely agree with the opinion that the reduction we have obtained in the rates for the transmission of news from the mother country to Canada, and vice versa, are absolutely inadequate, and that we should not be content with them and sit quiet and wait.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. PELLETIER. The cable companies must understand and I have weighed my words—that this country intends trading with the mother country. Canada has said so, in a solemn manner, lately. One means of facilitating trade between the two countries is to have an inexpensive means of transmitting not only postal matter, but cable matter, and this is most important to the business man of this country. We are a self-governing colony, but we are part and parcel of the British Empire, and it is essential that this premier colony, Canada, should have cheap means of cable communication. The cable companies are a monopoly——

Mr. LEMIEUX. And American companies.

Mr. PELLETIER—and American companies. I think it is the bounden duty of this government to do something in this respect. I have been asked, as the head of the Post Office Department, to give my views on this matter to a certain number of important newspapers in London, England. I have put it over my signature that we are not satisfied with the present system, and rates although they have been reduced to a great extent, and that we expect better for this country in future, and that we must and are bound to get a cheaper means of cable communication. My words may appear strong, but they are not any stronger than I think they ought to be.

On all these important questions I am happy to see that both sides of the House agree in believing that the government will endeavour to, and will succeed in doing its full duty.

Amendment, Mr. Maclean (South York), agreed to.

Mr. MONK moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Harbours and rivers New Brunswick, $286,925.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that an item which was in the main estimates of the past year for Bathurst harbour improvements has been omitted. I would say to the hon. gentleman that Bathurst harbour is one of very great importance, and I would like to ask whether it has been struck out advisedly.

Mr. MONK. It was not taken out with the idea of discontinuing the work, but there were a great many demands for improvements, and I believe I suggested its taking out myself. It may be taken into consideration for the supplementary estimates. There is no idea of abandoning it completely.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Bathurst harbour is the centre of a very large lumber manufacturing district. I think there are five rivers emptying into it, and each one of these rivers is a source of lumber supply, there being large forest areas on each of them. There are quite a number of mills at Bathurst, in fact, I believe one of the most modern mills in the eastern provinces, if not in the whole of Canada, has been built there recently. At the present time there is very great expense attendant upon the shipment of lumber. The sawn lumber has to be lightered out of the harbour to some distance outside on the roadstead. I believe the cost is something like 75 cents per thousand, which could be saved if the harbour were dredged out so that vessels could come in close to the mills and the lumber be conveniently placed on board.

There is also another very important consideration and that is that within about 18 miles of Bathurst there is a very valuable iron deposit which is being operated by a company formed by the Drummonds. They are shipping their ore at the present time from Newcastle, some 40 or 50 miles away. It has been represented by the company that if Bathurst harour were improved a very considerable portion of the ore would be shipped from there, as it could be done with considerable less expense. I do not think the idea is to abandon the shipments from Newcastle altogether, but rather to ship ore from both places. For two years we have been doing dredging in Bathurst. During the past season a government dredge was continuously employed, a special vote being put in for Bathurst harbour. I am glad to hear my hon. friend state that it is not the intention to discontinue the work, but that it will be considered with the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MONK. It is not intended to abandon the work, because the harbour is an important one, but we have large demands for harbour improvements in New Brunswick, particularly at St. John, consequently we have been obliged to cut off some of them for the present.

Mr. TURGEON. Might I ask the liberty of adding a few words to what the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has said in regard to Bathurst? If the hon. Minister of Public Works will allow me I would make a most urgent request upon him to continue the dredging works which have been commenced. No doubt other places are also pressing their claims, but I wish to call the especial attention of the hon. minster to the fact that dredging was commenced in Bathurst harbour two years ago and was continued last season. Under the circumstances it would certainly not be a businesslike policy to discontinue the work now, more particularly when we know that the business of Bathurst is suffering pending the completion of the work. The hon. member for the city of St. John has mentioned the large lumber interests centred around Bathurst. As a matter of fact two of the largest and most modern mills in the province have been recently erected there, one on each side of the harbour. The hon. Minister of Public Works was through Bathurst on one or two occasions, and saw some of the mills there, but since his visit these two mills have been erected with all modern improvements and of immense capacity, and have added a great deal to the importance of the harbour.

The interests of the iron mine referred to by the hon. member for St. John are also urging upon the hon. minister the necessity of continuing the work. Large shipments will be made, and the people greatly benefited. The people of the municipality have taxed themselves to assist the company to build as fast as possible. They have exempted the company from taxation for a number of years, and have taxed themselves to the extent of $25,000 in the shape of a bonus in order to induce these capitalists to come and develop that immense iron ore deposit—the largest on this hemisphere—which will be able to supply iron ore for centuries to come. Now, these industries are considerably handicapped until the harbour works are completed.

It means a loss to all these lumbermen, and their loss will affect business generally in that section. I hope that the minister will be able to guarantee me to-night that he will have a vote in the supplementary estimates so that that work may not be stopped. A special dredge has been purchased by the department which is now undergoing repairs to continue the work, so it will not require a very large additional amount. I trust the minister will consider this matter very seriously.

Mr. EMMERSON. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) to an item in the estimates of last year for a new wharf at Beaumont. I do not know whether tenders for this work have been called for or not. I had some assurance from the department that, as soon as the plans could be completed they proposed to ask for tenders. Beaumont is in Westmorland county, and the proposed wharf is to be constructed on a site on the Peticodiac river near a very important building-stone industry, that was in operation at one time, but is not in operation now. In addition to the desirability of having a wharf there for that industry when it should be revived, there are many other reasons why the people of that locality feel the need of a wharf. The money was voted last year, and I do not recall that it is dropped out of the estimates now before us. The hon. minister knows that timber can be provided for construction more economically in winter than in summer, and therefore it is desirable that tenders should be called for soon.

Mr. MONK. I can only repeat the fact that an item that appeared in the estimates last year is not in the estimates this year, does not necessarily mean that the government has abandoned the work. We hope, in most cases, even if we do not provide for these works in the supplementary estimates, to take them up as soon as possible. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) knows that it is impossible for successive governments to coincide exactly with regard to the urgency of a given list of works. In the case of New Brunswick especially, we have had very large demands, and we are obliged to make considerable provision for the main port, that of St. John. The remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) will not be forgotten, and the work will be taken up as soon as possible.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The practice has been in the past to put in the main estimates items for all works provided for previously and not yet proceeded with, and in the supplementary estimates, items for new works. In the estimates now before us there is not a single new item for New Brunswick in the harbours and rivers vote chargeable to consolidated revenue. On the contrary, whereas during the current year the total vote was $868,390, the total vote for harbours and rivers for New Brunswick chargeable to consolidated revenue for the coming year is $286,925. So, my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), by diligent and, perhaps I could say ingenious, use of the pen, has reduced the vote for New Brunswick in respect to this vote by nearly three-quarters. It is regrettable that these items should be omitted because they had already been provided for, and it would have been so easy for my hon. friend to have proceeded with these works. For instance, there was a vote for a breakwater at Castalia. This is a very important place in Charlotte county, a thickly settled section which carries on a large fishing business. A breakwater is needed there for the protection of the fishermen, and I am surprised my hon. friend should have struck out this item. It must have been done without his having his attention called to it; for, if he had considered the matter, he would have concluded that among the smaller works of the province, none is more important than a breakwater at this place. Then $100,000 had been voted for a wharf at Chatham. This is a very important work. Of course, my hon. friend may intend to have that work done by the Department of Railways and Canals, as the work is in connection with the extension of the Intercolonial railway to the waterfront. But the amount was provided for in the estimates of the Public Works Department. Whichever department builds the wharf, the work is absolutely essential in order to reap the full benefits from the contemplated extension of the railway. The Miramichi river is a splendid river and a very large business in done in Chatham, which business no doubt, with proper accommodation, will greatly increase. Another important work is Gooseberry Cove breakwater. The amount for the dredging of the St. Croix river is struck out. That dredging is very important. It was intended to dredge from the Calais side of the river in the state of Maine across to St. Stephen, New Brunswick, to provide a channel for the steamers that frequent that river, and then to make the channel down the river, affording the necessary depth of water. The matter was taken up between the Department of Public Works and the representatives of the government of the United States.

As the larger vessels, and I think the larger portion of the tonnage, belongs to the Americans, we came to an agreement under which they would contribute a much larger sum towards the dredging than this government. We put a small amount, I think $7,500, in the estimates last year, which my hon. friend has re-voted in the present year, but is omitted from the present estimates for next year. That work surely is not to be dropped. A binding agreement has been come to between the two governments, under which the United States is prepared to go ahead with the work, and we have agreed to contribute our share. I would ask why the amount has been dropped in the estimates. Then there was an amount of $50,000 for the purchase and improvement of a property at St. John for buoys and for the accommodation of government vessels. That has also been dropped. That accommodation is very much required, both by the Marine Department and by the Public Works department. There is no suitable wharf accommodation there belonging to the government where the buoys of the Marine department may be repaired, where government vessels may lie and be repaired, and where dredges and scows belonging to the Public Works department may be repaired. St. John is wholly unequipped in that particular, and that is why I had an amount placed in the estimates. On the whole, my hon. friend will see that he has reduced considerably the amounts for New Brnswick. There is another item of some importance which has been omitted. For a number of years past there has been an arrangement between the two governments under which certain wharfs were constructed by the provincial government, and this government has been paying half the cost of construction. There has been some criticism of that arrangement. I would like to know if my hon. friend has decided to put an end to it, and to make no further payments to the provincial government of New Brunswick with respect to the wharfs that are being constructed upon the tidal waters of the St. John river, and other rivers.

Mr. MONK. There has been no breaking away from the arrangement made between the local government and our own as to the wharfs just alluded to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why has the item been dropped?

Mr. MONK. I do not think we were tied down as to the manner in which we would make that contribution. If the obligation has to be satisfied during the year, there will be provision made in the supplementary estimates. But I do not think there is anything of a rigid character in that arrangement which would oblige us to put a vote in the main estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Under the ruling of the Auditor General there will have to be a special vote for that purpose. The works are constructed by the provincial government, and some two years ago he refused to allow payment to the provincial government under an item for improvements, holding that there must be a special vote.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend naturally goes back to works which he, in his wisdom, thought at that time, to be urgent. I am better prepared to defend the works for which I ask estimates myself. But he is mistaken when he says that we have not generously provided for public works in that province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say that, I said he had dropped important works that were provided for.

Mr. MONK. That has been done so often during the last 15 years that I have sat in this House, that there should be no surprise if it is done now. I have seen items appear in the estimates four or five years in succession, and then dropped altogether; I have seen items changed year after year under different ministers. It is not surprising, under these circumstances, that in the estimates of which we have only taken a part this session, these items should not appear. When this government is called upon to bring down its own estimates and to initiate all these works, it is not surprising that we should fail to see eye to eye with the preceding government. That happens whenever there is a change of government. The committee will note the large contribution we have had to make this year for St. John; we have provided a sum for St. John far greater than was ever provided before, and that has been due to the urgent necessities which have arisen at that port. I do not think it is fair, because an item has been left out of this year's estimates, to conclude that the work is dropped or that it will not be resumed, or that at another time the government will not make provision for carrying on that work. I may say that in no case where the work was under contract, and where an interruption would have been absolutely prejudicial, has that interruption taken place. We have taken the estimates under review in all the provinces, according to our best judgment, and have done the best we could for urgent works with the means at our disposal.

Mr. HAZEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) has referred to the fact that $50,000 in the estimates last year for the purpose of building a wharf for government steamers at St. John is not in the estimates this year. I would point out that there is no necessity for that vote being in the estimates this year. That wharf is no doubt required for the Marine and Fisheries Department, upon which the buoys and material belonging to the government might be stored, and at which vessels might lay up from time to time, vessels that are under the control of the Marine and Fisheries Department to supply lighthouses and to look after the buoys. Incidentally also it might serve as a wharf to which steamers under the control of the Public Works Department might resort. I may say to my hon. friend that it is not at haphazard that this vote is left out of the estimates. I am advised by the officials of my department that at any time we wish to acquire property in St. John for that purpose, we have the funds to do so; and I may say that negotiations are going on now, and I have instructed the engineer of my department to consider different places that have been suggested as available. If the minister should decide to buy a property of that sort we have ample funds at our disposal with which to do it, and which we are authorized by law to expend for that purpose. Under the vote that was made last session, a vote for general purposes in connection with the Marine and Fisheries Department, I am advised by my deputy minister, and also by the engineer of the department, that we can use the money for this purpose. So that if we determine to buy that property, there are plenty of funds at our disposal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am surprised to hear that statement, that under a general vote for fisheries, property could be bought for the purpose of constructing a wharf upon which to store buoys, and at which vessels might lie. I think that is a new departure. I think this parliament ought to have placed before it the estimates to purchase a property of that character, and also a special amount for improvements. I know that was the view taken both by the Marine and Fisheries Department, and by the Public Works Department when this matter first came up. There was a vote placed in the estimates by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, then, as it was thought that the property could be utilized by both departments, the vote was transferred to the Department of Public Works. Now my hon. friend says that without asking parliament for the money the department can acquire the property, which will cost a good deal of money, and build thereon a wharf for the purpose of repairing buoys, and at which vessels may lie. I doubt very much if the Auditor General, in the discharge of his duty, would pass an expenditure of that kind under a general vote.

Mr. HAZEN. From inquiry I have made I am afraid that $50,000 would not go very far in acquiring such a property as is needed for this purpose. It would take a much larger sum.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would think, from information that I have, that $50,000 would be sufficient. Of course, it would depend on where the property was obtained. If some of the rumours I have heard are correct, that parties are getting options on properties which they thought might be suitable, it might be that the minister would have to pay more than it might otherwise cost. But, I have in my mind a property in St. John which, I think, could be obtained for about $50,000.

Mr. HAZEN. I hope the hon. gentleman will let me know where they are.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon friend will find in the Public Works Department a report from the Superintendent of Dredging Captain Howden and Mr Scommell, the engineer of the department, on a property which is admirably suited for the purpose, comprising 45 or 50 acres.

Mr. MONK. Does not my hon. friend think that with the works we have provided for this year we will have ample room for any vessel of the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend says that these estimates contain more liberal appropriations for St. John harbour than we made. He is not correct in that. The amount for St. John harbour in the estimates this year is identical with the estimates last year. A million dollars is the amount I put in the estimates last year for the improvement of St. John harbour and my hon. friend has very handsomely come down with a million dollars for the coming year.

Mr. HAZEN. How much was spent last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I kept $500,000 intact for improvements at Courtenay Bay.

Mr. MONK. I think the votes last year amounted to $950,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, that is pretty close. I will give my hon. friend the benefit of the extra $50,000, but I am bound to say that if my hon. friend goes on with improvements at Courtenay bay it may be desirable to have a further sum in the Supplementary estimates. I do not complain at all of my hon. friend's action in regard to St. John. I do not say that he is not treating us well. He is proposing to do a work which is of great national importance, but, at the same time, it is not new because parliament had appropriated last year an amount equal to the sum which my hon. friend is proposing to place in the estimates for this year. But, I do think it is a pity that these very important works should be neglected. These works at Castalia, Chatham, and other places are, as I have said, of very great importance. I must congratulate my hon. friend upon this, however, that notwithstanding all the attention he has been giving to public works in New Brunswick, he has not found it necessary to put in a single new item. I find that all the items which he is asking parliament to vote are just those which we had in the estimates last year.

Mr. HAZEN. You should have proceeded with the works last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well we were proceeding as rapidly as we could.

Mr. MONK. As we are doing now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were all important and the minister has shown his wisdom in providing for them. But, it is unfortunate that he has left out a few works which, I think, are just as necessary as those which he is providing for.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sorry that in the process of elimination my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has found it necessary to eliminate the wharf at Beaumont. Members representing constituencies outside of St. John have always experienced difficulty in convincing St. John particularly that it was not the whole province. Apparently my hon. friend from St. John city (Mr. Pugsley), and my hon. friend from St. John city and county (Mr. Hazen) have imbued the Minister of Public Works with the idea that St. John was the only place in New Brunswick that required particular attention, and that if there was any elimination to be entered upon the other constituencies would have to suffer. I do not wish my hon friend to be too much impressed with the importance of having St. John alone looked after. I do not wish that Westmorland should be overlooked even though the minister may be impressed with the importance of St. John. The wharf at Beaumont is only a small matter after all, but it affects a very large number of people. It is not a political wharf in any sense. The government will find that its friends are quite as much interested in this wharf as those who supported the former government. This wharf was brought to the notice of the department by myself because of a united people presenting strong and indisputable reasons why there should be a wharf at this point. I simply ask my hon. friend to look into it, and if he does he will see that there are special reasons why these people should be considered. In so far as the political standpoint is concerned I make no plea at all, because that is not of serious import, but it is a matter in the interests of the people who have suffered for many years for want of this convenience. They had a wharf in former years. That wharf was continued down to within a very recent period, but change and decay went on and in the course of time it became impossible for business purposes, and now it is required in the interest of the business of that section of the country.

Mr. MONK. We will consider it, Mr. Chairman. Of course, it is a pity that when there was a possibility during the whole year of beginning a work of this kind it was not begun.

Mr. EMMERSON. That shows that it had nothing to do with the elections.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will realize that these things cannot all be done at once. Engineers have to prepare plans and specifications.

Goose Creek harbour—breakwater, $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What about Gooseberry cove breakwater? That has been left out. Is it finished?

Mr. MONK. I have no information about Gooseberry cove.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend said that it was being done by day work.

Mr. MONK. Probably it has been finished.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the late estimate there was a vote for $3,000 for a wharf at Shediac Island, and that vote is not repeated in the present estimates. The people living on that island are thrifty French Acadians, engaged in fishing and agriculture, and while in the winter they can cross on the ice, in the summer their supplies have all to be obtained from the mainland and there is neither wharf nor landing place, which, of course, imposes great inconvenience on the inhabitants.

Mr. MONK. Why was not the wharf built last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because the vote was not obtained in time. The work could not be commenced without the money having been voted.

Mr. EMMERSON. If the late government were selfish in the matter, from a political standpoint, it would be desirable to do the work and the fact that the work was not undertaken proves that it was not a political venture at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was no such thing under the late government.

Mr. EMMERSON. If there is any lingering doubt in the mind of the present Minister of Public Works on this point I wanted to remove it. The inhabitants of Shediac Island are sorely in need of this wharf.

Mr. MONK. I will take the matter into consideration. I may remind my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) that I lived on an island myself for many years, and I tried to get the late government to build a wharf but I met with failure.

Mr. EMMERSON. I hope this government is not so hardhearted.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—NAPIERVILLE POST OFFICE SITE.

Mr. MONK moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. LANCTOT (Lapraire-Napierville). (Translation):

Mr. CHAIRMAN, before the adjournment I beg leave to put a question to the hon. Minister of Public Works, concerning the Napierville post office site.

DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Mr. Blondin). I will remind the hon. member that he is not allowed to enter into a discussion of anything else than the item now under discussion.

Mr. LANCTOT. It is only a question that I want to ask the hon. member. On the 16th January last, on the item for a public building at Napier, I asked the hon. member if it was the intention of his department to erect the building on the site purchased by the late government. His answer was that effectually there was a vote of $15,000 for a public building in the city of Napier, on St. Luke street, that $1,000 had been paid for the site and that the work was to be proceeded with without delay.

That was on the 16th of January last. On the 22nd January I received a letter from Mr. Pierre Bourgeois in which letter I am asked to interest myself in this question and see that he is paid by the Department of Public Works. Therefore he had not been paid on the 22nd, in spite of what was said by the minister on the 16th. I wrote immediately to Mr. Bourgeois informing him that he must have received a cheque in settlement of his claim, since the minister had declared on the 16th that he had paid for the site in question. On the 28th January I received another letter from Mr. Bourgeois stating that he had not yet been paid.

I would like to know from the minister, how is it that the cheque has been sent to Napier more than three months ago and that Mr. Bourgeois has not yet been paid.

I do not know if my information is correct, but I am told that the Department of Public Works has written to the Department of Justice advising them to do nothing until further advice. The Department of Justice, in turn, has written to Mr. Barrette, notary, not to make the payment until he receives further instructions.

Mr. MONK. The information I gave to my hon. friend was furnished to me by the officials of my department. I think the matter was brought to the Interior Department. I will inquire about it and then give the information asked for by the hon. member.

Mr. LANCTOT. The hon. minister must certainly know that a parcel of land has been bought last summer in order to satisfy his own department. Mr. Bourgeois was obliged to pay two hundred dollars for that piece of land. That occurred six months ago, it is only fair to refund that amount to that gentleman.

Mr. MONK. Those delays occur in the Interior Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MONK. Some of the government bills on the order paper, and then Supply.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to give notice that on a convenient occasion, on going into Supply, I propose to move a resolution in regard to the grain blockade in the west.

Mr. MONK. I suppose my hon. friend will let us see the wording of that resolution?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 2, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. SEXSMITH moved:

That the first report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. As this report involves an expenditure of money, it seems to me very doubtful whether it is regular. The report is:

Your committee recommend that one hundred and fifty thousand (150,000) copies of the evidence of Dr. James W. Robertson, Chairman, Committee on Lands, Commission of Conservation, given before the committee on Thursday, January 25, 1912, be printed forthwith in pamphlet form, in the usual numerical proportions of English and French, as advance sheets of the committee's final report, for distribution as follows:—140,000 copies to members of parliament, 6,000 copies to Department of Agriculture, 2,500 copies to witness, 1,500 copies for use of committee.

I am not aware that there is any authority for incurring the expenditure necessary for this purpose, and I draw the attention of the House to the matter, so that it may be looked into Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). My attention was not directed to the character of the report, but I am under the impression that similar reports have been received in the past. I would suggest that the matter stand for a day until your honour has an opportunity of looking into it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I know that this has been done in the past, but I have always believed that it was wrong. We have a rule that provides that all proposals for printing should go before the Printing Committee. In this case the proposal would not go before the Printing Committee at all.

Mr. STEVENS. This very point was before the Printing Committee this morning, and a resolution was incorporated in the report of that committee asking that all proposals for printing be passed through that committee. It was pointed out that frequently a great deal of matter that is printed is left about the building, and the committee wished to have some oversight of the printing in order to see that everything printed was utilized and nothing wasted.

Mr. SEXSMITH. The object of this report of the Committee on Agriculture is to prevent what the hon. member has just referred to. If this matter has to go before the Committee on Printing, the evidence will not be printed in time to go into the hands of the members this session. Then the great bulk of it will be sent to their homes, and will not reach the people for whom it is intended.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the matter is allowed to stand, it can be brought up again in regular form.

Motion allowed to stand.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That on and after Monday next, the 5th of February, to the close of the session, government Orders will have precedence on Monday immediately after notices of motions for the production of papers.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Postmaster General is anxious to be present when the debate with reference to the resolution I have on the order paper is continued. I understand that the Postmaster General will be unable to be here next Monday and he gave me to understand last night that he would arrange with the Prime Minister with reference to that debate.

Mr. BORDEN. The Postmaster General has not spoken to me on the subject; I presume the matter has escaped his attention. What was the exact nature of the arrangement?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Last evening the Postmaster General told the House that he was compelled to be away on Monday next. I interviewed him and he told me that he was anxious to have as extended a debate as possible on my resolution and that he would arrange with me for some other day when it could be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. LENNOX. The Postmaster General expressed a very strong desire to be present when the debate was resumed, and said that he would like to have it not on Monday next but at some other time.

Mr. BORDEN. That would not really affect this motion because this is designed to take Monday next as a government day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection to the motion being adopted, but I would point out that if the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) is not taken up next Monday it cannot be taken up this session, unless by a special leave of the government.

Mr. BORDEN. That is quite correct.

Mr. MACDONALD. There are quite a number of motions not yet disposed of, some of which would not involve much discussion. On Wednesday, the last day available, hon members were not aware that Monday would be taken by the government so soon. I think the usual course of giving one day before these motions are cut off altogether would be the fair thing.

Mr. BORDEN. I have no desire to deny a reasonable opportunity of disposing of these motions and so I would move to amend my motion with the permission of the House to read as follows:

That on and after Monday the 12th of February, to the close of the session, government orders will have precedence on Mondays immediately after notices of motion for the production of papers.

Motion agreed to.

THE WRIT FOR SOUTH RENFREW.

On the orders of the day being called.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Has the writ yet been issued for South Renfrew?

Mr. BORDEN. It was issued yesterday. The nomination day is the 15th of February and the polling day therefore will be the 22nd of February.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) kindly see that returns which I moved for a considerable time ago, and to which I have referred once or twice already are brought down? One relates to the Harvey and Salisbury railway, which should take very little time to prepare and the other relates to the appointment of commissioners under the Boundary Waters treaty.

Mr. BORDEN. I was under the impression that the last mentioned return had been brought down. It may be that it is in my office and that through my own inadvertence it has not been presented to the House.

The other relates to the Department of Railways and Canals, and I shall bring it to the attention of the minister of that department.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. WHITE moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the payment out of the consolidated Revenue Fund of such sums as may be sufficient to discharge the obligations of His Majesty the King, acting in respect of the Dominion of Canada, under the provisions of paragraph 5 of the schedule to chapter 24 of the statutes of 1904, in accordance with the interpretation of these provisions by the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on the appeal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company v. The King, from the Supreme Court of Canada, delivered November 2nd 1911.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in connection with this resolution I have furnished to each member of the House a copy of the judgment of the Supreme Court and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. I have also furnished to the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the papers for which he asked yesterday. In view of this it is probable that the House is acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, but, on account of the very large sum involved by way of obligation under the judgment, a brief explanation may not be out of order.

Under a contract dated the 29th day of July, 1903, between the government of Canada and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, provision was made for the construction of the National Transcontinental line of railway from Moncton to the Pacific ocean. That railway was to consist of two divisions, the eastern division and the western division. The eastern division was to extend from Moncton to the city of Winnipeg, and the western division from the city of Winnipeg to the Pacific coast. The government of Canada was to construct the eastern division and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company was to construct the western division. The eastern division was to be owned by the government and to be leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company under the terms and provisions of the agreement. The western division was to be owned by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and the entire line was to be maintained, equipped and operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. The 28th and 30th paragraphs of the contract of July 29, 1903, to which I have referred, were as follows:

28. For the purpose of aiding the company in the construction of the western division, the government shall guarantee payment of the principal and interest of an issue of bonds to be made by the company for a principal amount equal to seventy-five per centum of the cost of construction of the said division, as defined and ascertained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph eighteen hereof, but such principal amount shall not in any case exceed thirteen thousand dollars per mile of the mileage of the prairie section, nor thirty thousand dollars per mile of the mileage of the mountain section, although seventy-five per centum of such construction may have exceeded the said respective sums per mile.

30. The said bonds shall bear interest at the rate of three per centum per annum, payable half yearly, and shall have attached thereto coupons representing the instalments of interest thereon, and shall be in such form as the government shall determine.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada were to guarantee the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for an amount sufficient to raise the balance of the money required for the construction of the line.

At the time this agreement was entered into, the 3 per cent stock of the Dominion of Canada stood at about par. Shortly afterwards there was a fall in that stock in common with other high class low interest-bearing securities, and as a result it was seen that the 3 per cent Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company's bonds guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada would not nearly realize par. In order to meet that situation a supplementary agreement was entered into in the following year. Among other things it removed the limit as to the $30,000 a mile upon the mountain section, but allowed the $13,000 per mile as a maximum of bonds to be issued by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company on the prairie section to stand. And then comes the important section to which I direct your attention upon which litigation subsequently arose and these judgments were rendered.

5. Nothwithstanding anything the said contract contained the government may and shall, preserving always the proportions in the said contract provided as between the 'Prairie' and 'Mountain' sections of the western division implement for the purposes and subject otherwise to the provisions of the said contract its guarantee of the bonds of the said company to be issued for the cost of construction of the said western division in such manner as may be agreed upon so as to make the proceeds of the said bonds so to be guaranteed a sum equal to seventy-five per centum of the cost of construction of the western division ascertained as provided in the said contract, but not exceeding in respect of the Prairie section thirteen thousand dollars per mile.

In 1905 a trust mortgage was executed over the entire western division, securing the bond issue of £14,000,000 to be guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada. Differences of opinion arose between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company as to the construction of the clause I have just read. On the part of the government it was contended that implementing the guarantee meant that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company should issue its bonds guaranteed by the government to an amount which would realize by sale a total amount equal to $13,000 per mile on the prairie section and par for the amount of bonds required on the mountain section.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company, on the other hand, contended that the true meaning of implementing the guarantee was that the government of Canada should pay the difference between the net selling price of the three per cent bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, issued from time to time, and par; in other words that the government should be directly liable to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, for an amount sufficient to implement or make up the difference between the net selling price and par, and that there was no obligation on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to issue its bonds further than to the amount of $13,000 a mile, no matter what they realized. The government, as I have said, contended that their liability on this was secondary or as guarantor.

So there was a clear issue between the government, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, the difference being that the government contended that it would have merely to guarantee bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company sufficient to make up the difference between the net selling price of the bonds and par, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company on the other hand contended, that the government must be directly liable and responsible to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for an amount sufficient to make up the difference in cash.

A case was submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada, and that Court held in favour of the contention of the government, namely that its liability was to guarantee bonds issued by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to an amount sufficient for the purpose of implementing. An appeal was taken to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the Judicial Committee reversed the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada so that in the result the contention of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company prevailed, and the Dominion of Canada, under the terms of that judgment, have become responsible to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for a very large sum. I shall read the last portion of the head note of the judgment of the Privy Council.

Held, that the liability of the government under this agreement was not a secondary liability as guarantors only, the primary liability falling on the company, but that the government were liable to make the bonds of the first issue up to their nominal value without recourse over against the company.

That is substantially the history of the transaction, and the effect of the judgment. As to the amount involved, which, as I have said, is very large, I have had a memorandum prepared, showing the position to date, and the estimated total liability under the terms of this judgment. The memorandum is as follows:

Memorandum respecting Privy Council decision, Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company v. The King.

Sales of Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company's three per cents guaranteed by the government which have already taken place—

In 1905 £3,200,000 were sold at 92½ and produced.. .. ..$14,559,674 08

In 1909 £2,000,000 were sold at 80 and produced.. .. .. 7,773,495 15

In 1910 £2,000,000 were sold at about £80 13s. 9d., and produced. 7 856,119 67

The amounts here stated as being produced from the respective sales include interim interest accretions in London before the transfer of the funds to this country, and to that extent the net proceeds as above stated are too great.

The sum to be paid the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company by the government under the Privy Council judgment, in respect of these sales, will therefore be approximately $4,900,000.

On the basis of the estimated cost of construction of the mountain section made by the government chief engineer, there will yet have to be sold of these three per cent bonds approximately £5,515,220.

Assuming that when a sale of these bonds has to be made they bring the same price as the last lot sold, viz.: £80 13s. 9d. for each hundred pounds, there will be required to be paid in cash by the government in respect of such sale, to make the proceeds of the sale equal to par, the sum of $5,183,617.40.

On these estimates this will make a total cash contribution by the government of approximately $10,080,000, in order to make the proceeds of the government guaranteed bonds equal to par.

That is substantially the position as I understand it, and I, therefore, beg to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the resolution standing in my name.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 95) respecting the National Transcontinental railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE GRAIN ACT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) respecting grain—Mr. Foster (North Toronto).

On section 80—re-inspection,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Representations have been made for an amendment to subsection 2. It reads now:

Should any person interested in such grain have reason to believe that it has gone out of condition, or has deteriorated in quality since it was originally inspected, any inspector may, at his request, re-inspect such grain.

The representation is made that it sometime occurs that the grain is manifestly not of the grade which the certificate carries, and that there ought to be provision for review in a case of that kind, just as strong a reason in a case of that kind as there would be in its going out of condition, or in its being deteriorated in quality. It is proposed to insert after 'originally inspected,' the words:

Or is manifestly not of the grade called for by the certificate.

Then it would read:

Has gone out of condition, or has become deteriorated in quality, or is manifestly not of the grade called for by the certificate, he shall endorse across the face of the original certificate a statement of the facts, with the date and place where the re-inspection was made and shall attach his signature thereto; but under no circumstances shall such grain be mixed or re-graded.

Instances have been adduced where the grade of the grain, as it would be carried by the certificate, was found to be manifestly and afterwards proved to be altogether a different grade; and the contention is, and I think it is a fair one, that there ought to be a chance for re-inspection, and a statement of the facts; but no regrading.

Mr. OLIVER. What would be the consequences to the owner in such a case?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Just the same as in either of the other two cases. Then I suppose the inspector would inspect it and write across the certificate the condition as he found it. What he would write in a case of that kind would be that this was not up to the grade carried in the certificate, that fact would be written across it Then I suppose that what would take place would probably be an appeal to the Grain Survey Board. Any way, there would be a chance of presenting the facts, and of subsequent restitution or re-arrangement, just the same as in the other two cases.

Mr. OLIVER. This is a very important amendment, perhaps more important than it seems on the face of it, because it rather opens the door to the re-inspection of grain, and therefore a recognition of grain which has been mixed. I am willing to concede that when there has been an actual exchange of grade there should be a notice of that fact, but it will be necessary to word very carefully a provision intended to meet that case. First of all, I would like to have it distinctly stated upon whose say-so the grain was manifestly of a different grade; somebody would have to take that definite responsibility.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). In the first place, it would follow exactly the conditions of the section as it now stands in which two cases are made exceptions. Should any person interested in such grain, we will suppose it is the person to whom the grain has been consigned, or the person who owns, or thinks he owns it, if he finds that it is out of condition he has a recourse under these circumstances, if he finds it has deteriorated in quality since the original inspection, he has a recourse. Now if, in these cases, it was found to be of another grade than that represented in the certificate, there ought to be some space left in some way for a presentation of the facts in the case. If my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) would like to keep this over, we will let it stand for the time being.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to see the wording of the amendment, because it is of the greatest importance that the provision should not go further than is necessary to meet the special case that is mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend will find the wording of the amendment in 'Hansard' to-morrow.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Would it not be somewhat of a check against mixing?

Mr. OLIVER. It depends a good deal on how it is worded.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It would be a check on any under grading or wrong grading.

On section 82: grain of same grade to be kept together; certificate for mixed cargo.

Mr. CARRICK. As a representative of the district in which the terminal elevators are situated, I would like to say a few words in connection with clause 82. The question of mixing grades has been a live issue both in the United States and Canada for the past twenty years. The United States have solved this question by allowing mixing in the terminal elevators. In Canada there seems to be an opinion that mixing is a crime. It is a misdemeanour, and a civil offence according to our law, but I want you to look at this, Mr. Chairman, as a simple business proposition, and it is from that standpoint that I purpose saying a few words with regard to it. The process of mixing, as I understand it, is simply raising up to a certain grade a class of wheat which, through climatic conditions, has suffered deterioration, by mixing with it another grade of wheat which has a superabundance over and above what the law requires of those qualities in which the first sample is deficient. I will give an illustration. We will take a car of wheat which is No. 1 Northern in every way, except with respect to Red Fife wheat. The law requires that there shall be sixty per cent of Red Fife wheat. If that car had only 55 per cent of red fife wheat it is graded as No. 2. We will take another car which has all the qualifications of No. 2 Northern, but has only forty per cent instead of forty-five per cent of Red Fife wheat, which, therefore, is graded No. 3. I will take these two cars and mix them. I fulfil the requirements of No. 2 grade; that is I raise up a No. 3 car to No. 2. The average spread in the price between the two grades is 5 cents per bushel. On 1,000 bushels I would make $50. At the present time there is a difference of about 7 cents between No. 2 and No. 3 Northern, so that in that case I would make a little more. But, take another instance. Take a car that is all Red Fife wheat, but has been frosted. It will not be graded as No. 1, but as No. 2. Then I can take seven other cars that are No. 2 in every respect, but have only got 40 per cent of Red Fife instead of 45. I will take these eight cars, mix them, and I will have what will pass inspection as No. 2 grade. Thus, by using one car I can raise the whole seven cars to No. 2 grade. Otherwise, the whole seven cars would, under our law, be graded as No. 3. There is a profit of 5 cents a bushel on 7,000 bushels, or $350.

We had an instance at Port Arthur the other day where a car of flax was shipped to Mr. Irwin of the Consolidated Elevator. That flax was one pound short in weight per bushel. It was shipped as No. 1. The owner thought that he would get No. 1 grade, but when it was inspected it was graded as rejected. There is a difference of 25 cents a bushel between No. 1 and rejected and he applied to the survey board in Winnipeg, but they maintained the inspection. He wired down to Mr. Irwin at the Consolidated Elevator to ship the flax to Duluth, because he could get practically the full difference in price between the two grades there or about 25 cents a bushel more, for the car. But the car had been unloaded. I maintain that there is a great economic loss to the farmers of Canada, because mixing is not allowed. I believe that there is between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 a year lost to the farmers of this country under the system which has hitherto prevailed, and will be lost under the proposal contained in the present Bill.

Mr. NEELY. Would my hon. friend not rather say that this is lost to the dealers and not to the farmers?

Mr. CARRICK. No, the farmer is the man who will get it. I am glad that question was asked, because it brings up another point in connection with mixing which I shall take up in a moment. Now, I would like to ask why was mixing prohibited? You will remember that under the old system the elevator man bought on his own account, and also stored the grain for the public. He took the fat grades of the public, mixed them with his own wheat and made for himself this extra profit. The farmers objected to it, and legislation was brought in, first, to prohibit the terminal elevator man from dealing in grain and, second, to prevent mixing. I wish to ask this question: Has this law been enforced or can it be enforced? I say that the law has not been enforced, and that it cannot be enforced. As the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), said yesterday in the House, under the system of interlocking directorates, the terminal elevator owners at the present time are directors of country elevators, and they are buying grain. I will just quote from page 18 of the report of the Select Committee on Bill Q before the Senate, Mr. Searle's testimony. With regard to the elevator at Port Arthur the question was asked:

How many Canadian companies do the Peavey people control?—A. Do you mean line railways?

Q. Yes.—A. They control the Port Arthur Elevator Company, the British American Elevator Company, the National Elevator Company.

According to a statement with regard to licensed elevators and warehouses, as made out by this government, the British American Elevator Company control 93 elevators —Manitoba 17; Saskatchewan 69; and Alberta 7. These same directors can, and do, buy grain at the present time. Therefore, I maintain that the law has not been enforced. Then the examination proceeds with regard to mixing. We have proof that mixing is going on and I will again read to the committee from page 126 of the Select Committee report on Bill Q. This is evidence in connection with a couple of cases that came up in Port Arthur and Fort William last year in regard to mixing. I shall quote from the testimony of Mr. C. B. Watts, secretary of the Dominion Millers' Association:

At the close of navigation in 1910 we find that Inspector Gibbs at Port Arthur reports to the warehouseman that he finds certain elevators there have shipped out large quantities of No. 1 Northern, and they are short quantities of No. 2 Northern. Now, I do not want to take up the time of the committee, but I must refer you to a short extract from Mr. Castle's report of this trial, which these gentlemen say was only a mistake, and it was immaterial, on the enormous quantity of grain handled. The fines imposed by the magistrates show it was not very trivial, as they were $2,500 in one case, and $3,000 in another. Mr. Castle, in his report, says: 'In the Port Arthur elevator the shipments exceeded the receipts of No. 2 Northern by 169,066 bushels. Of the Empire elevator he says the shipments of No. 1 Northern exceeded the receipts by 437,884 bushels.

It may be said that this is an isolated case in connection with mixing, but I would point out that the government inspectors were on the spot and that they gave an inspection certificate when the grain went in and when it came out. These cases we know of, but I am quite sure there were a great many more where mixing was done and where fines were not imposed. What is the use of putting a law on the statue-books if we cannot enforce it. The purport of this Bill should be to remove the incentive for wrongdoing and then the wrong will not be done. Under the present law the government allows mixing by compelling the elevator man to mix the fat and the lean shipments of any one grade. For instance, in No. 1 Northern you can mix anything that has got sixty per cent Red Fife wheat and up to seventy-five per cent Rred Fife and in No. 2 you can mix the different lean and fat grades of from forty-five to sixty per cent Red Fife. We therefore, allow mixing to-day with certain restrictions and I maintain it would be much better for the country if these restrictions were taken off. I do not wish to see the integrity of our grain destroyed. I do not wish to see our grades lowered and I do not believe they will be lowered by mixing because any shipment of grain that goes out will have to stand the government inspection. The men who get the benefit of the grades to-day are the millers and the European buyers. The miller does not want a sample market. He wants to buy on grades because he is getting a litlle more than he pays for and it is the same with the European buyer. Our samples of grades are sent over to the old country and the European buyer buys just on that sample, hoping no doubt that he is going to get a little more than he pays for. The purchaser in the European market buys on the minimum grade and on that point I cite the evidence given by Mr. E. R. Wyland, a large exporter, and which appears on page 160 of the report of the select committee:

The old country man does not buy your wheat on a 64 or 63 pounds to the bushel. He buys it as 60 pounds to the bushel. That is No. 1 Northern. He buys it on the standard that Mr. Horn and Mr. Gibbs send to the old country market to represent No. 1 Northern. If they get wheat higher than that standard, we get no benefit from that. That is an absolute fact, and any gentleman who has been in the export business knows that the old country buyer will not pay any more for No 1 Northern wheat.

At page 168 of the same report we find this:

By hon. Mr. Lougheed:
Q. You have stated that the Liverpool price of wheat, or the Liverpool quotation is based on the minimum grade?—A. Yes.
Q. Not on the maximum?—A. Not on the maximum grade.

Let me ask why should the question of sentiment enter into the price. I do not know of any other business that is conducted on an economic basis where it is thought that sentiment must be taken into consideration in fixing the price of an article. The European buyer buys on the minimum of the grade and why should our farmers sell on the maximum of that grade? I believe in maintaining the integrity of the high stadards of our grain, but I find in the 'Weekly Report' issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce for January 29 last year, that the shipment of Canadian wheat alone through United States channels amounted to 33,806,535 bushels last year. That wheat goes through with our government certificate, but when it goes into the American elevator we lose absolute control of it. A few weeks ago a shipment of No. 2 Northern was rejected in the old country because there was a great deal of corn mixed with it, and everyone knows we do not grow any corn in Manitoba. We have no control over that grain when it goes through the United States elevators and yet a most important thing for the farmer of the west is to maintain the identity and integrity of Canadian grain. I want to see that our grain shall always maintain its present high standing, but we certainly cannot keep control of it when it passes through United States channels. I think I have shown that the terminal elevator interests are violating the law and do buy grain.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does the certificate have any existence when the wheat goes into a foreign country?

Mr. CARRICK. If it is shipped through in bond the Canadian certificate will remain with that wheat and it is sold in the old country on that certificate.

Mr. KNOWLES. No.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The hon. member (Mr. Carrick) is right.

Mr. CARRICK.

Mr. CARRICK. The minister says my statement is right in that regard. I think I have shown that mixing prevails to a greater or less extent and that mixing is allowed under the law in the different grades. Let me point out the farmer's attitude in regard to mixing. They had a convention at Brandon last week and the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of January 27 states that the following resolution was passed at that convention:

That this convention considers a sample market absolutely necessary to obtain for us the true value of the grain and that our executive be instructed to take the necessary steps to obtain such a market.

Mr. Kennedy, the vice-president of the Grain Growers' Association, said:

A sample market is a necessity and it is the only way we are going to get the real value of our grain. The grading system does not give the value of the grain at all. If the sample market is a success and works out the same that it has in Minneapolis we will get more for the grain. If you can get a better price for our products what further answer do you require?

This goes to show that the farmer is not entirely satisfied with the present situation. The farmers ask for a sample market, but I think I will be able to show that a sample market is useless unless we can have mixing. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said yesterday, if I understood him correctly, that the farmer now has a sample market.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto): I did not say that. We were talking of selling on a sample and selling on a sample market. What I said was that millions of bushels were sold on sample and not on certificate; that when certificates were granted they could be thrown away and the farmer could sell on the sample. But we have no sample market, of course.

Mr. CARRICK. I stand corrected, but I understood the attitude of some hon. gentlemen opposite to be that the farmer sold his grain on sample and not on grade I believe the farmer does not sell anything on sample. The track buyer, who is an expert, has his samples of all grades before him when he buys. A car of grain may be No. 1 in everything except perhaps colour, hardness, size or Red Fife, and may fall down a little in one of these qualifications. It is graded No. 2 by the buyer and the farmer is paid only for No. 2. He does not get any benefit whatever from the spreads, and we all know that there is a great difference in the value of the different grades. I have here a few quotations from the 'Grain Growers' Guide' of November 8, 1911, which show that No. 1 Northern wheat on a sample market sold on one day as low as $1.02 and as high as $1.06⅝, other cars selling at $1.04, $1.05½ and $1.05¾. On the same day No. 2 sold at as low as 99 cents and as high as $1.04. I have also the quotations of the Minneapolis sample market of November 4, as printed in the 'Grain Growers' Guide' of November 8 showing that barley No. 4, sold as follows; one car, at $1.03, three at $1.13, one at $1.11 and one at $1.14. There was a difference of 11 cents for the same grade on the same day. I maintain that the only man who loses the value of these spreads is the farmer. Now who gets the benefit of the spreads? The millers and the European buyers. We allow the millers to blend wheat; why do we not allow the farmers and the elevator men to mix it? The miller can blend the different grades and sell the different brands of flour in the open market; but there is a restriction placed upon all other owners in regard to the mixing of grain I contnd to the detriment of the farmer. Now, the farmers have asked for a sample market, but a sample market is not workable unless mixing prevails. On this point I would like to quote from the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' of January 3, page 16. I understand that this is the great farmers' paper in the western country. This is an article by F. W. Eva, who is the chief grain inspector for the state of Minnesota, in which he says:

Should the Winnipeg market decide to make a sample market they certainly will have to permit the mixing of grain in elevators; the two go together. The intermingling or mixing of grain of different grades, resulting in improving of low grades to a higher grade, is considered by all grain men and handlers as legitimate a business as the improving or mixing of any article in any other line of business. The mixing of wheat does not injure the producer, but as a matter of fact, is a benefit, as is well known by all conversant with the grain business. It increases the number of buyers, creates competition and results in a premium above the price of the regular grade for the choice lots of cars in each grade. No prominent market in the United States is without these facilities.

If a sample market is to be established, there is only one place for it, that is, at the head of Canadian navigation. The modus operandi of the sample market at Minneapolis is this: About one hundred miles from that city samples are taken from the car and are sent by express to Minneapolis, and by the time the car arrives the grain is sold on these samples. We can do the same thing in the handling of our western grain. We can establish a sample market either at Port Arthur or Fort William.

Mr. NEELY. Which would the hon. member prefer?

Mr. CARRICK. I would rather not answer that question, as I represent both cities. Samples could be forwarded to the sample market by express, and the grain would arrive three or four days later. There would thus be an opportunity of disposing of the grain before its arrival, so that there would be no delay in its transportation. The solution I offer, then, for the situation is: first, that we should have a sample market at the head of navigation; second, that mixing be allowed; third, that we should have two systems of terminal elevators—public elevators operated by railways, with mixing prohibited, and private elevators to handle only their own grain, but to be allowed to mix. If the farmer wants to send his grain to the old country, he can store it in the public elevator, where there is no mixing, so that the grain keeps its integrity; while if he believes he will get a little more for it if it is mixed, he can send it or sell it to the private elevator.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Would you allow the grain which goes to the mixing elevator to be inspected and graded out?

Mr. CARRICK. Yes, that is my whole argument. The government have their inspectors there, and after the grain is mixed it must come up to the high standard demanded by this government. It is claimed now that the Manitoba grain brings more money than the American, and why should it not? What qualifications are required on the other side for No. 1 Northern? Take the requirements for the American No. 1 Northern. That grade requires only 50 per cent of hard wheat and a weight of 57 pounds to the bushel. What is our No. 1 Northern? Sixty per cent of Red Fife White and that it shall weigh 60 pounds to the bushel. We are entitled to receive a greater price because we have a higher grade of wheat.

Mr. KNOWLES. How about the grain we wish to send west via Vancouver and the Panama canal to Europe or via Vancouver to the Orient? Where will it be inspected?

Mr. CARRICK. I presume that by the time our grain is shipped west there will be a system of large elevators at the coast and I would advocate the same system at the coast as at Fort William and Port Arthur.

In regard to storage facilities, we all know that the elevator capacity of the Dominion of Canada to-day is inadequate, that we have congestion in all that western country. I have just received a letter from home stating that all of our Port Arthur elevators are filled, that the boats in the harbours are all filled except the 'Plummer' and the 'Pellatt,' and these hold about 50,000 each. My informant also advises me that 3,500 cars are already shipped and billed to Port Arthur for the elevators there. Fort William is in practically the same condition. I maintain that if we have a sample market and you allow mixing, this great difficulty will be obviated and that in the course of the next year or two $10,000,000 will be invested in Port Arthur and Fort William in elevator capacity and storage. During the last year I have been in negotiation with some elevator men to have them increase their capacity at the head of the lake but they have been nervous in connection with the regulations and laws that were before the government. Now we require that storage. I maintain that the farmer is going to get the benefit in the advance in price because the question of competition enters into the calculation. While the farmer will get the greater part of the advantage to be derived from the sample market and mixing the elevator man also gets a part of it. A man must get a return on his money in order to make an investment. The great question before the House and before the country to-day is to relieve and alleviate the present situation in the west and I believe that if such a provision is inserted in this Bill it will do more to alleviate the present congested situation than anything else we can do. If I understand the question properly, and I have lived at Port Arthur for a number of years and have been around the elevators a great deal, I do not believe there is any grain shipping port in the world at all to be compared with Port Arthur and Fort William where there is not a sample market and where mixing is not allowed. The Americans have adopted legislation giving a sample market and allowing mixing.

I predict that it will be only a few years until this question is solved along the lines I have suggested. There is no other solution. It is a vital question to all western Canada, and the farmer is just awakening to the realization of it now. A short time ago they were strongly opposed to mixing and Mr. Kennedy, the vice president of the Grain Growers' Association in the 'Grain Growers' Guide' of December 27, says:

> If we ever get a sample market, it will only come through accommodation given to purchasers of grain on a sample market. That will induce men to come to our sample market where all get a square deal and special privilege to none. In order to make a sample market a success, the purchasers must have special binning privileges, and mixing privileges under proper supervision. Without such, a sample market is practically impossible.

This question has been given some consideration at the head of Canadian navigation, where the people are largely interested in the grain trade. I have no brief for any of our people up there, the only question in which I am interested is to keep the transportation of our grain in Canadian channels. Our people have not now the storage for grain they require, and there was a movement on foot before I left home, whereby they expect that five or ten million bushels of our grain might be shipped to Duluth. The great interest I have in this Bill is to keep the shipments of our grain in Canada, and I am sorry to say that the figures brought down by the Trade and Commerce department show that this year 33,000,000 bushels of Canadian grain went to the old country through American channels.

Mr. NEELY. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Carrick), says he is not endeavouring to present a brief but he is undoubtedly presenting a brief that appears to be not so much in the interest of those whom he quoted so frequently, the farmers of the west, as of the dealer in grain, who operates elevators throughout the different parts of the west and at the head of the lakes, at Fort William and Port Arthur. I think my hon. friend's arguments were rather contradictory if they are analysed closely. I recognize that mixing would have to be permitted if a sample market were to be successfully established, but under present conditions I do not see where the farmers would get any benefit from the establishment of a sample market, if the mixing is to be done in elevators that are owned and operated by men who control the interior elevator systems throughout the west.

Mr hon. friend quoted from the report of the Select Committee of the Senate on Bill Q from the evidence of Mr. Whalen, a member of the Fort William Board of Trade and a grain exporter, that so far as the present conditions in the European markets are concerned the producer of grain in the west, no matter what the quality of his grain may be, is paid only according to the minimum of the grade. My hon. friend himself gave the reason for this. He told us that the practice of mixing has been carried on notwithstanding the law that exists on our statute books against it. Consequently the European buyer, because of what has been done at Fort William and Port Arthur, finds it necessary to pay a price which does not depend on the quality of the samples that our inspector sends yearly to the European market, but on the quality of grain which the European buyer has been in the habit of getting from the elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William.

So, if they do not pay anything above what the minimum of the grade calls for, it must be because of the practices which my hon. friend says have been going on all these years at the terminals. The buyer cannot depend on getting the same quality of grain as the inspector sends him from year to year, and consequently, he has to pay the price of the minimum of the grade. That being so, I do not see where the farmer comes in. I do not see what would be the benefit under present conditions, of permitting wholesale mixing to gentlemen in the terminal. My hon. friend said that the farmer would get the benefit. I do not think he would. To-day the farmer in selling his grain, sells it to the Canadian dealer on the minimum of the grade. If he sold on a sample market under present conditions, with the monopoly which exists in the grain trade by the combine amongst the dealers, he would still sell his grain as it would be judged by his standard in case it were inspected. The dealer would benefit, and does benefit, by this mixing operation. If we had an ideal condition, if we had a sample market and mixing were done under proper supervision, and grain so mixed had to be sold, not under inspection, but on sample, I could conceive where the farmer would get some benefit. But my hon. friend contends that, after these gentlemen have been permitted the privilege of mixing in their mixing elevators at the terminals, then they should have the privilege of having that outgoing grain inspected by a government officer, and that low grade grain—'lean' grade, as my hon. friend called it—would be sold in the old country. Such a practice would still prevent the farmer from getting in the European market anything but the price paid for the minimum of the grade. But, if the sample market is established and mixing is permitted, my view is that that grain so mixed should not be inspected; it should be sold on the European market purely on sample, as it was bought. My hon. friend undertook to show that some of the farmers of the west, leaders of the grain growers, are in favour of a sample market. I touched upon that point yesterday in the discussion on another section. I have no doubt, many of our farmers are in favour of it. But, as to the gentleman my hon. friend named, and who has been quoted two or three times, Mr. Kennedy, if my information is correct, he is not vice-president of the Grain Growers' Association, of Manitoba, which is purely a farmers' organization, but holds the same office in the Grain Growers' company which is altogether a different proposition.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Do they not grow grain?

Mr. NEELY. They are very largely interested in the buying and selling of grain and are dealers the same as any other dealers. Their views on this question, I think, would hardly carry very much weight with the great body of the men who simply grow the grain and sell it at home.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do you mean to say that they resort to the same devices as other dealers?

Mr. NEELY. I am afraid business,—well——

Mr. OLIVER. Is business.

Mr. NEELY. Yes, I'm afraid that business is business with the Grain Growers' Grain Company as well as with any other business concern. My hon. friend (Mr. Carrick) tells us that the one reason he is anxious to have this privilege permitted of mixing under present conditions is to prevent our grain from going by any other than the Canadian route. Well, if we are going to allow this damage to be done to the standard of our grain, as is done at Fort William and Port Arthur, I do not think it would make very much difference to the farmer whether it goes by the American or the Canadian route. I do not take back a word of what I said yesterday of the necessity and the advisability of a sample market and mixing under proper conditions; but my hon. friend must understand what these conditions are. If evil practices have been carried on in years gone by at the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, the hon. gentleman ought to know—as, apparently, he reads the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' so carefully and assiduously—that the farmers have suggested a condition of things, which, if brought about, would make the sample market and the mixing of grain a possibility. That is if the mixing were done under government supervision in elevators operated by officials of the government, then the farmers feel that that would be a safeguard for them——

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mixed and afterwards graded?

Mr. NEELY. No, the grain passes inspection at the initial point of inspection. If it is mixed in the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, it has no right to inspection after that.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am not quite clear why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) wants the mixing done under government supervision if it is not to be graded afterwards.

Mr. NEELY. My hon. friend (Mr. Carrick) has pointed out that we can still have the same system of inspection even supposing mixing is allowed in certain elevators at the terminals, and that the grain so inspected would be kept by itself, shipped as a separate entity and would go with our grade certificate to the markets of the world.

Mr. CARRICK. What certificate?

Mr. NEELY. The certificate furnished by the government's inspector. Now, if you have a sample market and if you permit mixing to be done at Fort William and Port Arthur, and then grade the grain out of the terminals, you are still going to have a vast amount of our grain going to the eastern and European markets at a low grade. The condition which my hon. friend says exists on the European markets to-day would continue to exist, notwithstanding that many of our farmers might still adhere to the old system and send to these markets a class of grain much higher than would come out of these mixing elevators. The grain that would come out of the mixing elevators, being sold on inspection certificate in the European markets, would degrade the reputation of every bushel of grain coming out of the railroad elevators to which my hon. friend refers, when that was sold on inspection certificate.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The question I asked was this: There is your mixing elevator alongside the government elevator, or the terminal which is under government supervision. If you are going to let them mix, and take the results of it without giving any grading, why do you need government supervision over them while they are mixing?

Mr. NEELY. As far as that is concerned, if the mixing were permitted by that method as long as the grain was not inspected out, I do not see that there would be any necessity for government supervision of those elevators. Now the hon. gentleman who preceded me has quoted the interest of the farmers. If he takes the position that the farmers of the west take, as to the method of proof, I can see no objection to his argument. But I say that under present conditions it is not the farmer who would get any benefit from throwing open the door to the mixer, it is purely and solely the man who deals in grain.

Mr. CARRICK. My hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely), seems to think that if there is mixing we are going to deteriorate the standard of our grain. I understand that the grade is set by our government inspectors, and they mix up to that grade, or else the grade does not grade in that class. The standard is established by our government inspector and they mix up to that standard. Our standard now is much higher than it is on the American side. The hon. gentleman says he does not see how the farmer is going to get any benefit from the sample market. Why, the whole advantage in this matter, as in any other business, is competition.

Mr. NEELY. Does my hon. friend mean to say that if no mixing had been carried on in the past, or were permitted, and if our grain going to the European market had always been above the minimum, that we would not get a premium on that grain?

Mr. CARRICK. I have answered the hon. gentleman by the evidence taken before the Select Committee by a man who has made a life study of the situation, and he claims that the grain bought on the European market is all bought on the minimum grade. Yet my hon. friend claims there has been some mixing in the Port Arthur elevators.

Mr. NEELY. I take the hon. gentleman's authority.

Mr. CARRICK. The authority I took was Mr. E. R. Weyland, the exporter, and I gave previously the page of the Select Committe's report. I maintain that if there is mixing the farmer gets the benefit of the competitive price. Look at the different prices in the same grade on the Minneapolis market, and on the same day, where there is a difference of 4 or 5 cents, and as high as 11 cents a bushel. We would have the same competition on our own side of the line. Then referring to the damage which it is claimed has been caused to wheat shipped to the old country, I have said that there were about 437,000 bushels of one grade that was raised, and about 200,000 bushels of another grade. Now, last year we shipped out of Port Arthur and out of Fort William 100,000,000 bushels of grain altogether; and even if those few hundred thousand bushels were mixed, it would not affect the price in the European market to more than an infinitessimal degree. I repeat that the great solution of this question will be the sample market, and inspection afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am glad to hear the lucid remarks of my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Carrick), I have not the least doubt that the question of a sample market will again come up in the course of the discussion over this Bill. Meanwhile, would it not be well to get on with the Bill?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am a little mixed on this question myself. I do not quite understand this selling wheat by a sample market that was not afterwards graded. It is one thing to sell wheat by grade, and another thing to sell it on the sample market. I understand that what the farmers want is a sample market in Winnipeg or elsewhere, so that they can get out of their wheat all there is in it for milling purposes, and not take the minimum grade; that is, if it is a poor Northern, to get a No. 3. I want to repeat what I said yesterday; on that point the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I do not agree. I claim that there is very little wheat sold from the west by sample, and I challenge anybody to deny it. 95 per cent, of it is sold by grade, at least. The only way they sell grain by sample, is when the miller comes up there and buys the grade of wheat by sample, and that wheat goes through to his mill. That is the only wheat sold in the northwest on the sample market.

On section 89: inspectors to establish standards not later than first day of October in each year,

Mr. NEELY. Has the minister taken note of the objection I raised to section 33 with regard to the dates?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, in clause 33 it reads the 7th of October and in this clause it reads the 1st of October. This is for the western inspection division and the other is not. I do not think it makes a pin's difference whether it is the first or the seventh, but it might be just as well to make this the same as the other —the 7th of October—so that there would be no apparent inconsistency.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think it should be the first in every case.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is not later than the 7th of October, so that it could not be done after that in any year.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Section 33 does not apply to any special district.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Section 33 is a general section, it will cover everything provided for by section 89 and this is only a duplicate. I fail to see that subsection 3 means anything, because if they are bound to provide samples they will provide samples of cargoes as well as anything else. It looks to me as if it were a duplication by some error. Otherwise it is something that has crept in and has no right to be there at all, because section 33 is certainly general enough to cover everything.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I propose to strike out the words in section 89 'establish standards for' and substitute the words 'select samples of.' As to the first day of October, I do not know that it makes any particular difference whether it is the 1st or the 7th.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) raises the question as to the necessity for this section at all.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There are some parts which are necessary and it will not do any harm.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Would it not be exactly the same as the other, and if so, why have the two?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). You will find certain things in the western division the same as in the eastern.

Mr. OLIVER. I would suggest that the time be made October 1 in section 33.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Very well, I move the reconsideration of section 33.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I move that the word 'seven' be deleted and the word 'first' be put in its place.

Section 33 as amended, agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. With regard to subsection 3 of section 89, I would ask the minister if he sees any particular purpose in it?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not see any purpose in it or otherwise. It is exactly the same as the old Act:

Inspectors shall also supply cargo samples when required.

There must have been some reason why it was put there. I would not like to strike it out unless I knew. It will not hurt anything, but I will make a note of it, and if afterwards we want to make an Act which is clear of all surplusage and it is not necessary, we will strike it out.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Subsection 4 of section 89 reads:

For all samples so furnished the inspector shall make such charge as is approved by the board.

What does that mean?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They will have to pay for their samples.

Mr. OLIVER. I will take the opportunity of making the same objection to this subsection as to some of the others, that the fees are insignificant and burdensome without being valuable.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will take it as a general notice that my hon. friend objects to all those with fees in?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I make an exception in the case of weighing fees; but fees that are collected simply for the issue of a certificate or some other clerical transaction, are vexatious without being valuable.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is a fair objection.

Section 89 as amended, agreed to.

On sections 90 and 91,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There have been some far reaching amendments suggested to sections 90 and 91 about which I wish to consult my officers before making up my mind. I would ask that the sections stand.

On section 96,

Mr. NEELY. What action is the board to take when at these annual weighouts it is found there is an overage or a shortage. The practice is, that the inspecting officer gives direction that the grain shall be cleaned, say three per cent for dirt, but if the cleaners take out two and a half per cent then at the annual weighout there will be an overage. Under present conditions, the elevator man might sell the fifty or sixty thousand bushels that are over. There is no provision for that, but we will assume it is possible to do it. There is a provision in the Bill which gives the Governor in Council, when the necessary money has been voted by parliament, power to take over these elevators and operate them, and there being clauses in the Act which prevent the board, from buying or selling or handling grain, how in such a case would the overage be disposed of?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Provision is made that the stock shall be taken in August each year. Heretofore I suppose the benefit of the overage has gone to the elevators. The stock taking provision makes it possible for the government to know what grain is over and it therefore lays the foundation for whatever action may be taken. What action will be taken requires more consideration than we have been able to give it so far. If the government owns all the terminal elevators and operates them, if there are overages the government would be that much in.

Mr. NEELY. Then you would have to change the terms of the Bill because there is no provision in it by which the government or the board could buy or sell grain.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Before we get through this Bill finally I expect to find that the government is going to operate these terminal elevators. If they are not I would like to know what penalty there is attached to clause 3 which says that no grain shall be transferred from one bin to another in a terminal elevator without the supervision of the inspecting officer, and we know that that practice has been going on. The only thing that will prevent that and make that clause operative will be for the government to operate these terminal elevators. A man interested in the grain should have no advantage in changing it from one bin to another.

Mr. CASH. Is it a fact that in stock-taking the grain is not weighed, but is merely estimated?

Mr. FOSTER (N. Toronto).

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No, it is not a matter of estimating. The grain is weighed.

Mr. OLIVER. The matter of overages is one that calls for some solution. The fact that there are large overages has been demonstrated, and a Bill will be very lame in an important principle if it fails to deal with that question.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The Bill, I suppose, is strong enough in two ways—definiteness of the clauses which forbid certain things being done or order certain things to be done; also possibly in the penalties. But there is broad ground and long ground between the Act and the penalty where evidence is necessary to prove a case before action can be taken. Some people say that the Angel Gabriel himself would not be able to detect mixing in an elevator. I do not know how true that is, but the department has found difficulty in proving the actual commission of these offences. But some solution must be found for that, and before the Bill is put into the shape of an Act we shall have some solution to offer.

Mr. OLIVER. What the hon. member for Humboldt referred to was not overages in grades but actual overages in quantities, which is a simpler matter.

On section 97—certificate to accompany grain,

Mr. NEELY. This clause, I think, should be given some consideration. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Carrick) to-day gave us some statistics of the quantities of our western grain carried via American routes, and I think he is correct in saying that once that grain crosses the American border we have absolutely no supervision over it and no means for maintaining the identity of the grain. Evidence was given before the Select Committee of the Senate on Bill (Q) by a gentleman connected with one of the leading elevator interests operating the terminals at Fort William, to the effect that all that the American government do is to bond the wheat by quantity and not by grade. They give no guarantee to preserve the indentity of the grain. I would like to know what remedy the minister proposes in this Bill for that. I do not think there is any doubt that the reputation of our grain standards has been lowered very greatly in days gone by in the European markets owing to the grain that has reached those markets by the American routes. Samples of our grain have been on exhibition in the Liverpool markets containing corn and other things that we do not grow. There is absolutely no method under present conditions by which we can prevent this. I understand that the practice has been to sell this wheat on the Canadian certificate, and it has no doubt tended to damage the reputation of our western wheat in the European markets.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Under the old Act a certificate is to accompany the grain to its destination; but when the grain gets outside of Canada, there may be an arrangement by which the certificate follows the grain or goes to the ultimate buyer, possibly in the old country. But we have no power over the handling of the grain, except by mere courtesy, from the time it leaves our country and while it passes through a foreign country on its way to the ultimate port of shipment. The suggestion has been made that the Canadian certificate should be confined to Canadian jurisdiction, and not carry any force outside of that so that the shipper of Canadian grain through foreign territory would get no benefit from the certificate, because it would be void when it left our territory so far as carrying the guarantee of the Canadian government control and supervision was concerned. The foreign buyer would then know that if his grain came with government inspection through Canadian channels he would be getting the actual grain of the grade shown by the certificate, and he would also know that if the grain went through a foreign country, he would have to take the risk himself from the time it left Canadian territory, and the Canadian certificate would suffer no damage.

Mr. CASH. This is a serious question, and one that we should decide now. I applied to the office of the minister in regard to this very matter and received a reply that we have no jurisdiction. The letter says in part:

> As soon as the grain reaches Buffalo, or any other port in the United States, we have no supervision over it whatever. The customs simply require that the shipper export the same number of bushels that he put in.
> The customs are expected to keep it under seal while passing through the elevators and through the cars in New York, and again there until it reaches the vessel.
> However, you now have some idea of what elevator men can do, and if they are working in conjunction with a crooked shipper, there is no doubt mixing could be done either at Buffalo or New York.

I wrote to the Collector of Customs at Duluth and received this reply:

> In answer to your letter of the 27th instant relative to the handling of Canadian grain in bond for exportation to Great Britain, you are informed that the grain arrives at this port under Canadian and United States customs seals. The grain is transferred under the supervision of Canadian and United States officers to bonded bins, which are sealed by the Canadian and United States officers, and by these transferred to vessels or cars for export.
> In other words, the identical grain received is exported as Canadian grain.
> There is no Canadian grain ground into flour at this port.
> Respectfully,
>
> N. A. LINDENBERG,
> Special deputy collector.

This is a very serious matter. The minister and his officers tell me that we have no jurisdiction over the matter, this official at Duluth tells me that these bins are taken care of by both American and Canadian officials. I understand that a great deal of wheat bonded in the United States is milled in Minneapolis and passed through to England as Canadian flour ground in the United States. I think it is necessary that Canadians should be informed as to whether our grain is exported, made into flour, and so exported in bond. If we cannot have an officer to look after the grain passing from this country through the United States in bond we are doing a very wrong thing to allow it to go in bond at all. If we are going to sell wheat to the United States let us sell it, but if it is not taken care of in passing through that country in bond let us not ship in bond.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I suppose the shipping matter is entirely in the hands of the shipper. If he wants to ship in bond you cannot prevent him.

Mr. CASH. It should not go through as Canadian grain; if our grain is to be mixed there in bond or mixed in milling it should not have a Canadian certificate with it. On the question of the certificate, when the Canadian government places its seal on any thing, its fiat, whether on a piece of paper or of gold and says this is so and so, it is very jealous that that certificate should be preserved in its entirety, and in its integrity. When it puts its seal on a bushel of wheat and says this is No. 1, it should be just as careful about that seal. The government's word is behind it and the government should protect it whether it goes through the United States or anywhere else. If you are going to send it through the United States, then take up your certificate. If it can be handled at certain ports, where we have Canadian officers to assist the American officers, that is very different.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We have an officer at Duluth and I imagine that under the arrangement of the Customs the identical wheat which goes out of Fort William or the Canadian west to Duluth, is shipped out from Duluth, but after it leaves Duluth, it may go to Portland, Boston or New York and we do not follow it there. It may be possible to make an arrangement with the United States Customs officials by which our officers at the different transfer ports, should, in connection with the Customs officers of the United States at these same ports, effect the carriage of the identical lot as far as the place of shipment on the Atlantic vessel. If we can do that at Duluth, it might be carried out still farther.

Mr. NEELY. It would appear to be very difficult to do anything with respect to the grain that goes by the American route, except to cancel the certificate when the grain crosses the border. This clause applies to grain going by any route. Canadian as well as American. Would the minister tell us what method and what supervision is employed to enforce this provision with respect to grain going by the Canadian route? As an illustration: Supposing a shipper is sending out from Fort William we will say 10,000 bushels or ten cars of No. 1 and 10 cars of No. 2. He gets his certificate for 10,000 bushels of No. 1, and 10,000 bushels of No. 2. The certificate may be for 1,000 bushels each. What is to prevent that shipper from shipping we will say 8,000 bushels of his No. 1 down to Quebec or west St. John, or any Canadian port, and a couple of thousand bushels of No. 2, so that the wheat, if mixed, will still grade up to No. 1, putting that into the hold of a vessel, mixing it at west St. John, or wherever he loads it and sending along his 10,000 bushels No. 1 certificates? Then he can take the balance of his No. 2, the 8,000 bushels, send it along as No. 2, and the remaining 2,000 bushels of No. 1 he can sell on a sample market. This is an important point. It appears to me, that while there may be something in the statements that in the past mixing has been done to some extent in the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, ever since I have given any consideration to this question I have been of the opinion that a great deal of the mixing has been done after the grain has left the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur. I would take a case in point, and this is a condition of affairs that our law ought to provide for under the system of inspection and supervision. I met on the train a wholesale baker who buys flour in large quantities and who does business in Ontario as well as in Winnipeg. He told me that a certain miller in this province, under contract to supply him with so many thousand pounds of flour to be made from No. 2 Northern wheat, supplied a flour away below what flour from a No. 2 wheat should be. So he undertook to make an investigation. He went to the miller who was still working on his order, and when he looked at the sample of wheat being used to fill his order, he said it was not better than a No. 4. He said: What do you mean by grinding that wheat to fill my order?

Mr. FOSTER (N. Toronto).

The miller went to a drawer and produced a No. 2 certificate saying: There is the certificate for that wheat and this is the wheat I got out of terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, as a No. 2 wheat. Those terminals were blamed for that situation. I am satisfied that the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur were not to blame in that instance or in many others. That miller had probably some time previously had a shipment of No. 2 Northern, he had retained the certificate and he simply used that certificate to mislead this purchaser of his flour.

What is there in this legislation to meet a situation of that kind? I do not see that we have any protection. If we have any protection, I would like to know what it is, because I think that in many cases it is not applied.

Mr. CARRICK. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) is not familiar with the working of the elevators at the head of the lakes, or he would not have spoken of small shipments of eight or ten thousand bushels going out.

Mr. NEELY. I was using that for illustration.

Mr. CARRICK. The grain when it comes into the elevator is put into large tanks, each grade by itself. It is sent out in large shipments. And this Bill specifically provides that if there is a cargo shipped out containing different grades, that fact shall be specified in that cargo.

Mr. NEELY. But you ship a lot by rail, in car lots, and that is what I am speaking about.

Mr. CARRICK. The government inspector is there, and he gives a certificate, not only when it comes in but when it goes out, so that there can be no chance of doing what the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. NEELY. The hon. gentleman confirms what I say—that the grain is inspected out and the shipper is given a certificate——

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The hon. gentleman is speaking of car shipments.

Mr. NEELY. Yes. It is shipped by rail to St. John or any other Atlantic port. And I do not know of anything in our present legislation or in the proposed Bill to prevent these certificates being used for an illegitimate purpose in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). What time elapses between the date of the sale of the grain and the date of the issue of the certificate? One could not use a certificate two years old.

Mr. NEELY. No, but he could use one a couple of months old, and, in the case of a shipment to the European market, the shipment would be of recent date. If the shipper were shipping so much No. 1 and so much No. 2, the date of the certificate would not have any effect upon the case; all would be of recent date. So far as I know we have not been following our Canadian shipments and we have not seen to it hitherto that the certificate and the wheat that go together to the old country market belong to each other.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I should like to continue the discussion, but I am going to ask the committee to let it go over to another day. I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Neely) will find his fears are a little ahead of the facts of the case, and that there is much more efficient supervision and check than he has led us to suppose. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again for the purpose of introducing an amendment to the present Grain Act of which I have already spoken, with the hope that the House will allow me without objection to put the amendment through without delay.

Progress reported.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I mentioned the other day the case to which I wish to refer, and ask members on both sides to keep it in mind. The present Grain Act, section 99b. says:

> The commissioner shall have power in his discretion to order cars to be supplied, contrary to the provisions of the Act, to elevators that are in danger of collapse, or in cases where the operator of any country elevator reports in writing under oath that some portion of the grain in his elevator or warehouse is heated, and that in order to preserve the same it is necessary to ship such heated grain to the terminal elevator for treatment: provided, however, that no relief shall be granted in such last mentioned cases as long as the warehouseman has plenty of room in his building for the rehandling of such grain.

The condition of things at the present time, as I stated is very onerous and may be productive of great loss unless the conditions be met as rapidly and effectively as possible. I am going to ask the House, if no one objects, to allow me to introduce an amendment to that section of the Act and to put it through its different stages, to this effect: That after the word 'collapse' in the third line, there be inserted 'all places where grain is damp and liable to become damp, or for the purpose of distributing seed grain to any point in the western division.' In these cases the warehouseman shall have the same option and discretion as is given him in the other two cases. All the representatives of the different interests, including the railways, are favourable to this being done. And I might say that the Board of Railway Commissioners have also recommended it. I move that the rules relating to this matter be suspended and that leave be given to introduce this Bill.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 96) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second times, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. OLIVER. As I heard the provision read, it seems to be quite satisfactory. But it is a very important deviation from the main principle of the Bill, and unless there is special urgency for seeing it through today, I would ask the minister to give us until Monday to consider it.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Monday is private members day. But we might report the Bill, it will be printed, and hon. gentlemen will have an opportunity to discuss it at a later stage.

Bill reported.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. HAZEN moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

> 1. Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, advance and pay to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, hereinafter called the corporation, in addition to the moneys, if any, heretofore authorized to be advanced to the corporation by the Governor in Council by any Act, and which have not at the date of the passing of any Act founded upon these resolutions been so advanced, such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of six million dollars, as are required:—
> (a) to pay off and retire debentures of the corporation of the par value of six hundred thousand dollars, maturing at the rate of two hundred dollars per annum in each of the years, 1913, 1914 and 1915, and,
> (b) to enable the corporation to complete the construction of the terminal facilities of the port of Montreal, for which the plans, specifications and estimates have been approved by the Governor in Council, and to construct such additional terminal facilities as are necessary to properly equip the said port, and in respect of which plans, specifications and estimates have, previous to advances being made, been approved by the Governor in Council;
> 2. That during the period of construction of the terminal facilities mentioned in these resolutions, the interest payable on the debentures receivable by the Minister of Finance in exchange for such advances, shall be deemed to be money required to complete and to be part of the cost of construction thereof, and such interest may be paid out of the said sum of six million dollars.

3. That the corporation shall upon any advances being made deposit with the Minister of Finance debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made, repayable within twenty-five years from the date of issue, and bearing interest payable half yearly, at the rate of three and one half per centum per annum.

4. That the principal and interest of any sums advanced under any Act founded on these resolutions shall be payable, subject to the second of these resolutions, out of the revenue of the corporation mentioned in section 8 of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1896, (first session), and shall be a charge thereon as if the sums so advanced had been borrowed by the corporation under said chapter 10.

He said: I may inform the House that this resolution has been submitted to His Royal Highness the Governor General and he has been pleased to give his assent. In the copy of the resolution that appears on the orders of the day it is clear that there is an omission in clause (a). The resolution will be found, however, on page 317 of the Votes and Proceedings. But even there I find there is one word omitted. In subsection (a) the word 'thousand' is omitted, because it reads: 'at the rate of two hundred dollars per annum', where it should read: 'at the rate of two hundred thousand dollars per annum'. The object of the Bill to be founded on this resolution is to enable the government to advance a further sum of $6,000,000 to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners for the purpose of developing that port. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that in 1910 plans were prepared by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal or under their direction, after they had consulted with harbour experts, not only in Canada, but in other parts of the world, and the plans prepared were approved by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for work on that harbour which contemplated a total expenditure of $18,000,000. That work was to be performed in 12 years and provided for:

1. New high level quays, (having an aggregate frontage of 16,800,000 feet) so arranged as to give 24 new ocean berths for vessels of from 600 to 800 feet.

2. The creation of a new level quay for the accommodation of the rapidly growing river business, 5,800 feet.

3. Will afford a combined area of new high and low level wharf space and extension equal to 74 acres.

4. Will provide new permanent shed accommodation with a floor area of 1,386,000 square feet.

5. Will create new grain storage capacity of 4,000,000 bushels and increase grain handling capacity of the port five-fold.

6. Will add additional railway accommodation on the quays equal to 22 miles of track.

By Act of Parliament 9-10 Edward VII, chapter 40, the first section of $6,000,000 was voted, and has been employed in the development scheme, so as to make the harbour fit for the great work which it has to do in connection with the export and import business of Canada. It will be necessary, if that work is to be continued according to the original scheme, for this parliament to vote a further sum of money to be used by the commissioners, under exactly the same terms as the money that is voted under the old Act, and subject, as provided by the old Act, to orders in council being passed from time to time placing the funds at the disposal of the Harbour Commissioners, and approving the plans which the Harbour Commissioners have for the development of the port. The first $6,000,000 has been very largely expended. As a matter of fact, the whole of it, with the exception I think of about $286,000, has been authorized to be spent by order in council. A portion of it has not yet been expended, but before the season terminates the whole amount will have been, and unless a further sum is placed at the disposal of the government to enable it to advance from time to time to the Harbour Commissioners further moneys, the work cannot proceed as it was intended by the original scheme that it should proceed until the work of development according to the original plan is completed. No doubt by the time that plan is completed, if the country continues to develop and trade continues to grow as it is doing now, a further expenditure will have to be made in order to keep the port of Montreal up to the requirements of the trade of the country. I may say for the information of the House that these sums that are advanced from time to time to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners are not by way of subsidy, not by way of gift, but by way of loan, and the Harbour Commissioners will pay from time to time, as they have done in the past, interest on the sums that have been so advanced, so that there is no loss to the country whatever; the country has been and will be paid back by the Harbour Commissioners the amount of interest which Canada has to pay on the sums which are so advanced. The Harbour Commissioners firmly believe that with the increased growth and development of business which is likely to take place, they will be able to continue to pay back to the government, as they have done in the past, the interest on the larger sums that will be advanced under this Bill, and under the provisions of future Bills which may have to be brought before the House in years to come. Now with the $6,000,000 that it is proposed to authorize the government to advance by this Bill it is contemplated to make the following expenditures:

1. During the next three years they intend to pay off $600,000 of debentures, that is to say $200,000 this year, $200,000 in 1913 and $200,000 in 1914.

2. They propose a further extension of elevator No. 2, adding 1,500,000 bushels capacity, at a cost of $550,000.

3. Rebuilding Victoria pier and Market basin, for river business, $640,000.

4. Sheds and equipment Victoria pier, $1,000,000.

5. Construction of high level wharfs, eastward of Market basin to section 30, $350,000.

6. The diversion and alteration of the lower end of the Mackay pier and works required to lessen the St. Mary's current, $400,000.

7. The lengthening of the present pier, $500,000.

8. Provision for the permanent paving of the wharfs and railway extension, $500,000.

9. General improvement and plant, $500,000.

10. Tarte pier, permanent sheds, $250,000.

11. New wharfs, $300,000.

12. Commencement of construction of new pier No. 1, up above Alexandra pier, extension of Bickerdike pier, with lift bridge connections, $710,000.

These moneys are to be advanced from time to time by the government to the commissioners. The commissioners, from time to time, may request the government for an advance, their plans and specifications will be carefully examined by the engineers of the department, and after an order in council is passed approving of the plans and work the commission may be doing, and of their proposed expenditure, the moneys will be advanced for the purpose of carrying on this work. The development of the port of Montreal has gone on very rapidly indeed, during the last few years, as is shown by the income and expenditure in that time, and it may not, perhaps, in this connection, be altogether a waste of time if I should give some of the figures regarding that to the House. I may say in the first place that the port of Montreal to-day has debentures outstanding, but held by the government, to the amount of $14,060,000. As the government from time to time make advances to the Harbour Commissioners they give to the government a debenture for the amount so advanced payable with interest, and these debentures held by the government to-day amount to $14,060,000. In addition to that there are harbour debentures held by other parties amounting to $1,872,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What is the rate of interest to be paid on the new debentures that are now proposed to be issued? I think the rate of interest paid on the $9,000,000 of the present loan is 3 per cent. The average rate of interest that the government is paying for money is 3½ per cent; so that we are contributing something to the harbour of Montreal in the way of interest. My question is: What rate of interest is now proposed to be charged by the government for the loan that is being made?

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

BARCELONA TRAMWAY LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 36), respecting Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'Barcelona Tramway, Light and Power Company, Limited.—Mr. Macdonell.

On section 1,

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Why is this clause stricken out?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand that simply affects the change in the name and that should be done on motion after the third reading .

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not think this parliament should, without very good cause, amend or extend the powers of a company which secures its charter under the Companies Act, or from a provincial legislature. I know such legislation as this has been granted in the past, but there seems to be very little good reason for it. Such powers as these may be given by means of amending the Companies Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand the company is incorporated under the Dominion Companies Act, and as they want to build railways, they cannot get that power under the Companies Act, and so they come for this legislation. In the country where they intend to operate they are hampered in their efforts to get a charter by reason of what is called a cloud on the title of the original charter.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). They should come to parliament and get a new charter including in it the power to build railways in other countries. It is a very awkward thing to have the powers of a company separated. One naturally would look to find their powers under the Companies Act, and would never think of looking in the Statutes of Canada to find an extension of their powers there and a change of name.

Mr. MACDONALD. The object here is to change the name of the company by special legislation and therefore it should be incorporated in the Bill. If the motion were to change the name of the Bill that would come up by motion after the third reading.

Mr. CURRIE. The Railway Committee discussed this Bill for over two hours and I did not see either of these gentlemen present.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I should have said that the company did set out to change its title, but the Railway Committee has not agreed, and that is why the first clause was struck out, so that my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) is right in saying that the motion would be to change the title of the Bill.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is another thing.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) if there is anything in the Bill that says members of the Railway Committee must attend the meetings of that committee.

Mr. CURRIE. No, but it is rather a hardship after a Bill has been discussed in the Railway Committee to waste time discussing it here.

Mr. MACDONALD. We will reserve our right to anything we want here.

On section 8,

Mr. NESBITT. I took exception to this clause in the Railway Committee. The directors and not the company are allowed to vary the conditions of the share warrant and I wanted to have that authority in the company. I submit my objection now so that the company may deal with it as they see fit.

Mr. CURRIE. I understood they were to change that in the committee.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think that is a matter more for the directors than for the shareholders, because the only purpose in giving the company power to issue warrants is to make it easy to circulate and dispose of the securities of the company in foreign markets, and I think it would be very awkard for the company if that were left to the shareholders.

Mr. NESBITT. While the directors might vary the warrants in accordance with the interests of the shareholders, they might vary them in accordance with their own interests. That was the exception taken in the Railway Committee.

Mr. CURRIE. I think the promoters of the Bill agreed to accept an amendment providing that the company could, by by-law, vary the warrants. A holder of a share warrant is a stockholder but not a voter, and a contingency might arise in connection with the business of the company requiring some important matter to be put through at a special meeting at which it would be necessary for him to be present and vote. If his share warrant could be transferred into stock, he could be present and vote at that meeting. If you give the directors power to make regulations as to how that transfer shall be made, they might make a regulation whereby nobody could have his share warrant transferred till five or six months after the meeting took place, like closing the books of the company and preventing the stock being transferred. For that reason when a person buys the stock he should know what the provisions of the by-laws are in regard to these share warrants. Therefore, I supported the amendment of the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), providing that that matter should be under the control of the shareholders.

Mr. NESBITT. As the promoter of the Bill is not here, I would not care to move the amendment in the absence of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Under rule 112 an important amendment cannot be moved unless one day's notice of the same has been given.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not feel like consenting to the Bill standing unless the hon. gentlemen feel that this is a matter of serious importance.

Mr. CURRIE. As this company is applying for a renewal of its charter, the fees for the Bill are based on the amount of its capital stock, and I would like to ask, if the amount of the capital stock is not shown on the face of the Bill, can the company get off with paying the ordinary fees. Might it not be necessary to mention the total capital stock of the company in the Bill in order that it should be liable for the proper fee ?

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to see the Bill stand. It is rather unsatisfactory as it is.

Mr. CURRIE. I understand this company is chartered for $40,000,000.

Mr. MACDONALD. I think the Minister of Railways should be there to give his opinion on these matters, and the Bill should remain in committee until he is here.

Mr. CURRIE. I would suggest that we let the Bill pass the committee with the understanding that the statement shall be made on the third reading that the fees are paid on the total capital stock.

Bill reported.

Mr. MEIGHEN moved the Third Reading of the Bill.

Mr. NESBITT. Is not this the Bill that was not to be read the third time?

Mr. SPEAKER. When shall the Bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Mr. MEIGHEN. So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why this Bill should be treated differently from the others. The title is supposed to be changed on the third reading. And, as I understand, the statement is to be made when the Bill is read the third time, that the fees are to be paid on the total capital stock of the company.

Mr. SPEAKER. In my judgment, that could not be done here. The Clerk of the Committee sees to the fees before it goes to the Committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understood that the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) simply wished to have it stated, so that it should be before the clerk. I do not know that it has any effect.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

Mr. MEIGHEN moved that the Bill do now pass and that the title be changed to: 'An Act respecting the Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.'

Motion agreed to and Bill passed.

ONTARIO AND OTTAWA RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 50) respecting the Ontario and Ottawa Railway Company—Mr. Currie.

On the preamble,

Mr. CURRIE. Notice was given in the Railway Committee of an amendment to this Bill. It seems that the Canadian Northern Railway Company are desirous of purchasing the Brockville, Westport and Northwestern Railway Company. Both railway companies had power to sell or amalgamate one with the other. They proceeded with the purchase, but after proceeding a certain length they found that eight bonds for small amounts could not be located, and so the Brockville and Westport had to be placed in the hands of a receiver and a judicial sale made so as to make a perfect sale. They therefore ask to have the following clause added to this Bill as they have not sufficient time to go on with a new Bill. It is urgent that the railway should be taken over by the Canadian Northern at once, in order to make improvements to the road this summer. The amendment of which notice has been given is as follows:

Subject to the provisions of sections 361, 362 and 363 of the Railway Act the company, and the purchaser under judicial sale of the Brockville, Westport and Northwestern railway, may respectively enter into an agreement with each other for the selling to and the purchase by the company of the whole of the railway and undertaking of the Brockville, Westport and Northwestern Railway Company as included in such judicial sale.

Notice of that amendment has been given and I would ask the committee to be kind enough to insert it in the Bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am instructed that the requisite notice has not been given, that is to say it came this morning, and I would suggest to the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie), that the Bill, at this stage, be allowed to stand, and the notice stand to come up at the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman means that the ordinary notice did not arrive by mail this morning?

Mr. MEIGHEN. It did arrive this morning; but a day's notice is necessary.

Mr. CURRIE. The notice was given in the Railway Committee and the amendment was read there. I understand that, under the rule, that is a sufficient notice.

Mr. NESBITT. Notice has to be given here so that it may appear on the order paper in the usual way.

Mr. CURRIE. I may be absent when the Bill comes up on Monday. I do not know that the committee can bind its members, but if any objection is to be taken, I should like to have personal notice of it so that I may be here.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Notice should be handed to the clerk.

Mr. CURRIE. The notice came to my house. I have been ill and could not attend to the matter.

Mr. NESBITT. As I understand the amendment, it provides that the railway company and the purchaser may enter into an agreement for purchase and sale. But what right have we to say that the purchaser may enter into this bargain. We have the right to say that the company which is under our jurisdiction may buy, but, as I understand it, we have not right to say that the other party shall sell.

On the Order for the third reading:—

Mr. MEIGHEN. There is one amendment in this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. It was reported without any amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It was read in the committee with the amendment. The words 'authorized by' in the third line of section 2, are changed to 'mentioned in'. That was read by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House. I heard him.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was that amended in the Railway Committee?

Mr. MEIGHEN. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then it was not amended here?

Order allowed to stand.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMMISSIONERS.

House resumed consideration of proposed resolution for a loan to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. HAZEN. When you were about to leave the Chair at six o'clock the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) asked what rate of interest would be paid on advances to the Harbour Commissioners. I would call attention to section 6 of the printed Bill, which provides that:

> The corporation shall, upon any advances being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made, which debentures the corporation is hereby authorized to issue; and such debentures so issued shall be of such amounts as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General may determine, and shall bear date from the day when such advance is made, and shall be repayable in 25 years from the date of their issue, and in the meantime shall bear interest at the rate of three and a half per cent per annum, such interest to be payable half yearly on the 1st day of July and on the 1st day of January each year.

I might further say to my hon. friend that there was a similar provision in the Act that was passed a few years ago under which, during these few years, the Harbour Commission of Montreal have been carrying on the work of development.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the minister inform the House as to how much interest is overdue by the Harbour Commission?

Mr. HAZEN. My information is that there is no interest overdue, that the interest of the debentures of the Montreal harbour are promptly paid.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The reason I asked the question was that a few days ago the following question was placed on the order paper and put to the government:

> Is there any accrued interest overdue? If so, how much?

The answer was:

> Interest due the Dominion on the 1st January, 1912, not yet paid, $218,430 99. The cammission stated that all interest due the public up to the 5th January instant has been paid.

That is the reason I asked this question, because it appeared that there was over $200,000 overdue and unpaid.

Mr. HAZEN. I think that says accrued and not paid, and of course there might be interest accrued and yet not be overdue. If I understand the matter, the interest is paid; there was practically a settlement of accounts as between the government and the harbour commissioners and there is no interest due.

Mr. SINCLAIR. But the question was:

> How much interest is accrued and overdue?

While the answer gave this amount it did not specify that it was accrued at all. There seems to have been an error in the answer and I would be glad to have it put right.

Mr. HAZEN. I will take much pleasure in looking into the matter and getting any further information I can, but I am advised that there is no interest due at the present time and that the statement may be due to the fact that there is to be an adjustment of accounts which will probably wipe out any balance of interest apparently due.

I have a statement here showing the receipts and disbursements on revenue account for the last twenty years in connection with the harbour of Montreal. It is as follows:

Statement of Receipts and Disbursements on Revenue Account.

Year.	Receipts.	Disbursements.
1891..	$263,965 95	$202,737 35
1892..	291,430 24	231,925 74

	$7,492,818 78	$7,298,862 95

It will be seen that in 1910 the receipts of the harbour were nearly four times as much as they were twenty years ago, and that there has been a very substantial increase during the last four or five years, the increase from 1909 to 1910 being nearly $150,000. The disbursements, of course, on revenue account have increased in almost equal degree. In respect to this large increase in the disbursements the commissioners have been able to go on carrying out the work that has been entrusted to them for the development of the port, to pay the interest to the country on the sums of money that have been advanced not only during the past few years, but in previous years, amounting to nearly $15,000,000, and in addition to that to pay the interest on over a million dollars of debentures which are held by the public outside of and apart from the debentures which are held to-day in the treasury of the Dominion.

The interest charges, of course, have largely increased as the work has been proceeded with. I have here the following statement:—

1900, interest paid..	$164,134 18
1901 "	176,030 53
1902 "	191,116 39
1903 "	221,950 71

1906 "	283,721 14
1907 "	336,277 86
1908 "	386,131 16
1909 "	411,538 78
1910 "	445,813 63
1911, estimated..	505,000 00
	$3,671,491 08

It is the belief of the commissioners, a belief in which the government shares, that as the port is developed and with the tremendous increase in the business that is going on, the revenues of the harbour will be sufficient in the future, as they have been in the past, to pay the interest on these sums of money that the country is advancing for the development of this great national port. The policy of the commissioners and the policy of the government is that the dues of the port shall be as light as possible and what the commissioners are striving at, and aiming to do is to collect only enough money in the port for the purpose of paying the cost of its maintenance and interest on the sums of money that are being advanced from time to time.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Is there a sinking fund?

Mr. HAZEN. I do not think there is a sinking fund. It is claimed by the commissioners that the charges upon shipping at the port of Montreal are light in comparison with what they are at many other ports. No tonnage dues are exacted from the steamers that come to that port. Practically the only dues which the steamers pay are the sick mariners and pilotage dues such as would be paid by steamers at any other ports. There is no tonnage tax for the use of the port or the wharfs further than the revenues from the rental of sheds or the wharfage on goods that pass over the wharfs or through the sheds or the revenues from the grain elevators and the railway alongside of the dock. It is claimed by the commissioners that in the course of time the facilities provided at the port of Montreal will be equal to the facilities that are provided at any shipping port in the world and that they are now far in advance of what they were a few years ago, while at the same time the dues are being so arranged as not to be an undue exaction upon the shipping of the port or upon the trade of the country that is done through that port. As far as I can gather from conversations with people from Montreal with whom I come in contact, from the reports which are submitted to the department over which I preside and from other sources of information, I believe that the work is proceeding along lines which are approved of by the people of Montreal and would be approved of, were they generally known, by the general business community of this country, who are just as much interested as the people of Montreal in the development of a great national harbour there. I do not think for a moment that the money which is being spent on the harbour of Montreal can fairly be regarded as a local expenditure. It is true it is of very great advantage to the harbour and it is naturally of great advantage to the community, but at the same time it is of still greater or, at all events, just as much advantage, to the country which lies behind and of which the port of Montreal is the great entrepot in the summer season. This work, I think will have to continue possibly for many years to come. it certainly will have to go on, and the port will have to continue to be developed if the business of the country increases as it has done in the past and when the $18,000,000 have been expended according to the original plan worked out by the Harbour Commissioners, I believe that whoever are charged with the administration of the government at that time will find that even with that expenditure they have scarcely been able to keep pace with the great growth and development of the country and further sums will have to be spent in order that that growth and development may be assisted through having a throughly equipped and up to date port in the summer season through which commerce can pass in and out of the country. It might not perhaps be uninteresting to the House if I read a few extracts from the report which the Harbour Commissioners submitted to me on the 27th of November last.

Montreal, November 27, 1911.

Hon. J. D. Hazen, K.C., M.P., Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—In submitting for your consideration the financial requirements for the coming few years, the commissioners take the liberty of placing before you a concise statement explanatory of the improvement scheme for the development of the port of Montreal, of which the proposed expenditures form a part.

The commissioners assumed their responsibilities on the 2nd January, 1907, and almost the whole of that year was devoted to a careful investigation into the needs of a national port with special reference to the development of the port of Montreal. During the summer of 1907, one of the best known English dock engineers was invited to study the particular conditions prevailing in the port of Montreal and spent several months in watching actual conditions during the busy part of the navigation season. The information thus collected was later embodied in a report in which a complete development scheme was laid down.

In January, 1908, the commissioners decided to send their president and chief engineer to Europe to study the most modern port development in Great Britain and the continent. Four months were devoted to this work, and a report and recommendation were made to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the 1st of May, 1908.

The chief engineer of the commission was instructed to draw up a development scheme to be submitted to the commissioners and the whole of 1908 was occupied in working out the broad lines for the port's development.

The commissioners at the end of 1908 had before them two complete suggested schemes of port development, the one drawn up by the English expert; the other designed by Mr. F. W. Cowie, the commissioners' chief engineer. These two were carefully studied and it was determined to submit both these schemes to a board of Canadian engineers. This was done in April, 1909, and in October of the same year a complete and unanious port development scheme was recommended to the commissioners by this board of Canadian engineers, and the opening of 1910 saw its approval and adoption by the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the work was immediately put in hand.

The entire scheme contemplates the expenditure of $18,000,000 in 12 years.

This afternoon I explained to the House what it was intended to provide with the expenditure of $18,000,000, what had been provided with the expenditure of $6,000,000, which has not all been expended yet, but the authority for the expenditure of which is given by the different orders in council, and, what it is proposed to do in the second stage with the expenditure of this six million dollars which the House is now being asked to authorize. It is to be hoped that that expenditure will go on in the future as satisfactorily as it has gone on in the past. I believe the people of Canada view the expenditure on the harbour of Montreal from the broad national standpoint, as I believe they will view expenditure upon other ports in this country which are necessary, both in the summer and winter season, for the development of the trade of Canada, and for the purpose of enabling the vast and ever increasing products of the west to be carried to the markets of the world. I know that the people of Canada will deal with these other ports, when their representatives in parliament are asked to do so, as generously as they have dealt with the port of Montreal. I beg to move the resolution, Sir, which stands in my name.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on the resolution.

Mr. HAZEN. I beg to move to add the word 'thousand' after the word 'hundred' in the second line, so as to correct a clerical error. It reads now 'two hundred dollars a year and it should read 'two hundred thousand dollars.'

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. HAZEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 97) to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—IMPERIAL NATURALIZATION.

Mr. MONK moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, on this motion I desire to direct the attention of the government, and of the House generally to a matter which I think is of the very greatest importance, and to which I had occasion to refer at an earlier period in the session, when I had the honour of moving for all the papers in regard to imperial naturalization, and the communications that passed between the home government and this government with reference to the passing of a measure which would enable persons who are naturalized in Canada to become in truth and verity citizens of the British Empire, as under the existing laws they are not. As a result of the motion I then made, a return has been brought down, which I have before me, and which shows that following upon the proceedings of the Imperial Conference, which were discussed on the occasion of that motion, the imperial authorities prepared, to be sent to each of the self-governing colonies, a draft Bill dealing with this question; and they desire to receive from each of these colonies its approval of the measure in order that it may be passed by the imperial parliament, and that legislation of a subsidiary character may also be passed in the various colonies in order to remove the difficulty. That Bill was sent to this government during the past summer. The home government apparently acted very promptly after the action of the Imperial Conference in proceeding with the draft measure. In brief, that measure provides for a complete change in the naturalization laws of the empire. It purports in its first clause to define natural-born British subjects. The language used in the beginning of that section is as follows:

The following persons shall be deemed to be naturalized British subjects.

It then goes on to define those born within His Majesty's allegiance, and certain other classes of persons who are said to be naturalized British subjects. I think this must be a mistake in the Bill for natural-born British subjects. The second section provides for the Secretary of State granting a certificate of naturalization to an alien who makes an application for the purpose, and satisfies the Secretary of State that he has resided for a period of five years in His Majesty's dominions, or has been in the service of the Crown for not less than five years within the last eight years before the application. The use of the phrase 'His Majesty's dominions' makes this a wider provision than that of the present law, which requires that residence must have been within the United Kingdom. The second requirement is that the applicant is of good character and has adequate knowledge of the English language. There are certain other provisions in that section which are not particularly apropos to this discussion. Then, the certificate of naturalization is not to take effect until the applicant has taken the oath of allegiance. This is an outline of the principles on which it is proposed that the naturalization may be granted—five years residence in any of His Majesty's dominions or five years in the service of the Crown, not necessarily within those dominions; that the applicant should be of good character and have an adequate knowledge of the English language, and that the oath of allegiance should be taken. If that section were passed by the imperial parliament—though it seems to me there might be some improvement in the drafting—it would be open to any person who had resided in Canada for that period to make application to the British Secretary of State for imperial naturalization. There is a provision later on which enables each one of the colonial governments to grant a certificate. But before coming to that I would take the sections in their order. A most material one, which applies to the certificate granted by any of the governments, is worthy of consideration. It provides:

A person to whom a certificate of naturalization is granted by a Secretary of State, shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be entitled to all political and other rights, powers and privileges, and be subject to all obligations, duties and liabilities to which a natural-born British subject is entitled and, as from the date of his naturalization, have to all intents and purposes the status of a natural-born British subject.

That section is a new one and is very wide in its effect. It practically creates the Imperial naturalization of aliens. There are other provisions with reference to peculiar cases, such as the Secretary of State granting a certificate in the case of doubt as to naturalization, or where a person has previously obtained a certificate of naturalization, power is given to the Secretary of State to grant a new one having a wider effect. Then, section 7 gives power to the Colonies as follows:

The government of any British possession shall have the same power to grant a certificate of naturalization as the Secretary of State has under this Act, and the provisions of this Act as to the grant and revocation of such a certificate shall apply accordingly, with the substitution of the government of the possession for the Secretary of State, and the possession for the United Kingdom, and also, in a possession where any language is recognized as on an equality with the English language, with the substitution of that language for the English language.

I hope that the government, in looking into this Act, will give special attention to this clause, which is a vital one so far as this colony is concerned, and there ought to be no doubt about the colony's right which is intended to be created. The right which is supposed to be conferred upon each one of the colonial governments is one which cannot be exercised until certain things are done:

This section shall not take effect in any of the dominions specified in the first schedule to this Act unless the legislature of that dominion adopt the section.

Then there is this general clause which also makes wide and clear the power of the colonial governments:

Any certificate of naturalization granted under this section shall have the same effect as a certificate of naturalization granted by the Secretary of State under this Act in all parts of His Majesty's dominions other than a dominion as defined by this Act, the legislature of which has not adopted this section.

The right of the colonial legislatures or parliaments to deal with the question of the exclusion of aliens or British subjects is preserved under this proposed Act in the following clause:

Nothing in this Act shall take away or abridge any power vested in or exerciseable by the legislature or government of any British possession or prevent any such legislature or government from treating differently different classes of British subjects.

That would, of course, reserve the right to Canada to discriminate against Hindus or any other class of British subjects if this colonial parliament desire to do so. Then there is the validity of statutes that may be passed by the parliaments—I notice the word 'legislature' is used by the drafter at home which is not the apt word either here or in Australia, although I suppose the word may be used in some other colonies. This section says:

All laws, statutes and ordinances made by the legislature of a British possession for imparting to any person any of the privileges of naturalization to be enjoyed by him within the limits of that possession shall within those limits have the authority of law, but subject to be confirmed or disallowed by His Majesty.

That preserves to the parliament of Canada, of which we are speaking more particularly now, the right to continue the naturalization of aliens by the granting of a limited certificate which would not be of as full effect as those which were granted under the Imperial laws. We grant certificates of naturalization in Canada on three years residence; the right to continue to do that would be preserved by this Act, but two years more of residence would be necessary as supplementary in order to entitle them to the wider certificate.

This Act, which was drafted by home authorities, was the product of the proceedings of the Imperial Conference and the understanding arrived at in a general way by representatives of the self-governing dominions there with the Colonial Secretary who made an attempt to prepare a Bill that would be satisfactory to all the self-governing colonies as well as to the home authorities. This Bill has been submitted to all the colonies and has been approved of by the government of South Africa, as appears by letter of Mr. Harcourt, dated November 18, 1911, in which he communicates to the Governor General the fact that he had received a telegram from the Governor General of the Union of South Africa, on the subject of the Draft Imperial British Nationality and Status of Aliens Bill, and asking that the Canadian ministers should forward their views on the Draft Bill at an early date. The telegram from South Africa is as follows:

November 2, 1911.

Your despatch 14th July, naturalization Bill, ministers state that objections raised by government of union South Africa in this matter are fairly met by the new draft and they have no alterations to propose.—Gladstone.

The result is that the matter is now before the government for consideration here and it is desirable that at as early a date as possible the government should take steps to deal with the question and be prepared to advise the home authorities as to whether the provisions of this Bill are satisfactory or not or what alterations or amendments they would suggest.

Time, I think, is an object in regard to this matter. The discussion upon this question has gone on in an academic way for something like the last ten years. I do not pretend to say that there is a very strong public opinion upon the question in Canada for the reason that I do not believe that very many people in Canada appreciate just the status which is occupied by a naturalized alien in this country. The tremendous immigration of the last 16 years, the influx of Americans to the west and the number of men who have come from all parts of the globe has been so great that here and there you see that the attention of people who think about these matters has been directed to the situation and the demand for a remedy. I have noticed, as many other members have, the communication which has been placed upon our desks, entitled: 'The Man Without a Country,' in which a magazine article written by Mr. Roden Kingsmill in the 'Busy Man's Magazine' portrays the ridiculous position in which the naturalized Canadian citizen stands to-day. For instance, the Berlin 'News-Record', quoting from Mr. Kingsmill, tells us the difference between the passports that are given to naturalized aliens in Canada who go abroad and to those who are British subjects by birth. I do not know whether the passport is in the language stated by this newspaper, but I have no reason to doubt its accuracy. The statement is that:

> When a naturalized citizen applies for a passport his papers read as follows:—
> This certificate is granted with the qualification that the said John Smith is only entitled, beyond the limits of the Dominion of Canada, as a matter of courtesy, to the general good offices and assistance of His Majesty's representatives abroad.

This, of course, is no protection at all, and does not enable any one who has come under the advantages of citizenship in this country if he gets in difficulties in travelling anywhere to obtain relief from the representatives of the empire in the slightest degree. I may say that this article in the 'Busy Man's Magazine,' on which this newspaper review is based, tells of a case in which application was made for some relief in Paris, and where the greatest difficulty was experienced in obtaining recognition on account of the fact that the person applying was only a naturalized British citizen under our Canadian laws. On the other hand the passport issued to a native-born citizen is as follows:

> It is requested in the name of His Britannic Majesty, of all those whom it may concern to allow John Smith, a British subject travelling in foreign parts, to pass freely, and to afford every assistance and protection of which he may stand in need.

The situation that exists in this matter is one that demands a remedy. I am sure that if all the hon. gentlemen in the House fully realized the anomalous position of our law in regard to this matter they would be anxious that the most prompt action should be taken in regard to it and that the anomaly should be removed. I would commend to hon. gentlemen who have not read this little statement entitled, 'The Man without a country,' the facts that are contained in it because in a very illuminative way the situation that exists in regard to citizens coming into this country and obtaining the benefit of naturalization under our laws, is set forth.

To-day the man who comes to Canada and resides for three years goes before a justice of the peace, makes an affidavit to this effect and takes the oath of allegiance. He gets a certificate ultimately from a judge of a court that he has become a British citizen. No doubt hundreds of men who do become naturalized think they become British citizens, I have seen lots of them who thought so. All that we do as the result of that naturalization is to give these men the right to vote and to a certain extent they are citizens of Canada. The statement is made that there are in this parliament hon. gentlemen who are not British subjects in the imperial sense by reason of the fact that they have only become naturalized in the limited Canadian way. Certainly in the western legislatures there are numbers of men who are in that position. It may be that it is only a difference in name, but I apprehend that this is not the important consideration. We talk a great deal in this country, and very rightly too it seems to me, about the desirability of drawing closer the ties that bind the empire together, and it is a case which demands and receives the sympathy and support of every lover of Canada and of the empire. But, if in this the greatest Dominion of all, with people who come from other lands occupying all the positions that are open to them here, we continue a situation under which such men, after a residence here of five or six or even ten years cannot call themselves British subjects, and are not entitled to the protection of the flag or of the empire abroad, we will have a very great departure from that true and proper imperialism which ought to be the very basis of the tie which would bind the whole empire together. I need not elaborate on that.

Mr. BRODER. Would the hon. member allow them to get all these rights on residence of three years in Canada?

Mr. MACDONALD. The proposal is not to give them these rights on account of three years', but five years' residence in Canada, and after taking the oath of allegiance. That has been the difficulty in the past—that men could go to England, and, after five years' residence, could be naturalized and become citizens of the empire, but if they came to Canada, no matter how long they might live here, could never become citizens of the empire. It is to remove that anomaly that this legislation is proposed. My idea was to impress upon the government the importance and necessity of dealing with the question at an early date to submit to the home authorities as speedily as possible their views with regard to the Bill, so, that if possible we might have legislation from the Imperial parliament before its session is brought to a close. I have no doubt that every other self-governing colony is moving in the matter, and the communications will be made to the home authorities. I trust the government will deal with it early, so that there may be no delay in the settlement of what seems to me a very important question.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The question is a very important question as my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) has stated. It has been agitated now for about twelve years and has not yet been brought to a conclusion satisfactory to us or to any part of the empire. All the time the discussion has been going on, there has been a very strong desire, not only in Great Britain but in the dominions across the seas, for the advantages of imperial citizenship. The very fact that, under these circumstances the matter has been so long under discussion, without a satisfactory conclusion being reached, indicates the existence of important difficulties in the matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) says there are important difficulties.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). They are pretty well cleared now.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We are very diverse not only in our geographical distribution but in the conditions which underlie nationalities in different parts of the world belonging to the British Empire. But the matter is in a more forward position than it has ever been before. There is a deeper sense of the necessity for some arrangement being come to that shall be adequate to the status of the empire as it at present exists and to the great component parts of the empire outside of the home country. The despatches from which my hon friend has quoted are before the government, and I may tell my hon. friend that a Committee of the Privy Council is now studying the question with a view to sending an answer to the home authorities at the very earliest possible moment.

Mr. MONK. I should like to say, in reference to the pronouncement by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald)—which I had not expected this evening—that according to my recollection of the discussion that took place in the conference of 1910, the contention of the colonies was in favour a very short time pending the naturalization which would give the party the benefits of the measure now submitted to us by the British government. I think the contention of the dependencies that it was absolutely necessary to make the time short, based upon the fact that persons came to settle definitely in the colonies was well founded. I think that what we have now before us is an evidence of the desire of the British government to meet the great want that has been discussed during all these years, the necessity for a naturalization which should be recognized throughout the whole British Empire. But it requires to be carefully examined; for I am afraid that people who have been naturalized under the colonial laws will not readily take the additional proceedings which, I understand from my hon. friend's explanation, would be necessary to give the larger rights of citizenship of the empire. A man who has settled in Canada is eager to see the three years expire that he may get his certificate. But once he gets it, it would be very difficult to move him to take the other proceedings necessary to the wider citizenship. He will not do it unless obliged to. That is why, at the conference of 1910, it was so strongly contended that we should all agree upon a fixed time for adoption everywhere, so that one proceeding only should be necessary. Take the case of Canadians who go to the United States and take out papers there. They very often come back to Canada; and, though there are proceedings by which they may resume the quality of British subjects, unless absolutely obliged, they neglect to do so. So, in this new proposal, I think you will find that not readily will the man who has become naturalized take the necessary proceedings to obtain British citizenship throughout the empire. I think that is worth considering, and also to consider whether, in view of the discussion at that conference, it would not be possible to further urge the British government to recognize a shorter term than five years. In the meantime, we can certainly avail ourselves of this step in the right direction.

Mr. MACDONALD. With the permission of the House, I will say a word with regard to the points raised by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk). The time stipulated by the colonies varied from nothing at all in New Zealand, up to five years in the mother country. And the New Zealand people were very strong in their desire to obtain that right to give a status as a citizen of the empire to the person coming into their colony, though they required no term of residence, but only some certificate as to character. While there is some force in what the minister (Mr. Monk) says about people taking new proceedings for a second certificate, that does not affect the proposal made here, that you create the machinery under which those who desire to get the rights may obtain them. No machinery exists to-day; and unless you have the machinery provided in some such way as is set forth in this Bill, there is no way by which a newcomer to a colony can acquire status as a citizen of the British Empire.

Mr. OLIVER. While it is very desirable from our point of view that we should have, under all circumstances, the full privileges of British citizenship, there is a difficulty in putting into a form of words that which will give a right to every person to secure the same privileges, and at the same time preserve to us within the Dominion of Canada the right to control of our own citizenship within our own borders. In this draft Bill section 8 makes provision, first, that every legislature or government shall have the right to treat different classes of British subjects differently, and that all statutes and ordinances passed by the legislature in regard to citizenship shall have effect of law unless disallowed by His Majesty. These two provisions cover the point that I have in my mind. But I would suggest to the government, in considering this matter, that the points involved in the two parts of that section should be kept very clearly in mind, and considered to be quite as essential as the securing of the full privileges of British citizenship to people who have become naturalized Canadians.

Mr. CARVELL. I fully realize the objection pointed out by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk). Perhaps he has forgotten the fact that the naturalization which we are granting at the present time satisfies all the necessities of perhaps ninety-five per cent of the people who come to this country, and become naturalized. It is only in rare instances that a foreigner coming to this country and getting naturalized wishes to leave Canada, and it seems to me that if the provisions found in this draft Bill were carried out we would have machinery by which the one man who wishes to travel abroad can do so under the full rights of a British subject. I had an illustration within the last three months where a gentleman came to me who originally belonged to Armenia. He wanted to get home and he wanted a certificate of some kind, he called it a passport, and I had to advise him that his naturalization in Canada was of no value whatever excepting as a matter of courtesy. There is a case where, if the law as proposed in the draft Bill were the law of Canada as well as of the empire, that man could have taken advantage of the machinery, and could have qualified himself to receive a certificate. In Canada we have many hundreds of thousands of foreigners coming in and they want to get naturalized as soon as they can under the law and obtain the right of citizenship. Therefore. it seems to me rather a hardship to these people, as well as a disadvantage to the country, if the time is extended to five years instead of three as at present. But if this law were passed they could become citizens of Canada within three years, and if it became necessary, or to their advantage later on, to take advantage of the rest of the machinery, they could do so and thus become citizens of the empire, which really is the object of this legislation. I think if the Minister of Public Work will consider that phase of it he will see that there is not as much difficulty in working it out as he thought at the beginning.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am pleased indeed that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has brought up this question. I have taken considerable interest in it for a number of years. As far back as 1900 when representing the Toronto Board of Trade before the Chambers of Commerce of the empire, I presented a resolution asking for the unification of the naturalization laws of the empire. That resolution was endorsed by all the representatives assembled. There is no doubt that a great anomaly exists in Canada at the present time with regard to the naturalization of aliens. We are taking away to-day a complete citizenship from all those who come to our country, and we are handing out to them an incomplete citizenship. They lose their naturalization, at least the advantage of their naturalization, the moment they are three miles off our coast, and their naturalization is of no avail in any foreign country except by courtesy of the mother country. What is wanted, in my judgment, is a common system of naturalization for the whole empire, and whether those conditions exist in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa or Great Britain, they ought to have the same effect throughout the British Empire. For instance, a German may come to Canada and be naturalized under our laws, and live here 15 or 20 years, become a member of this House and have all the rights of citizenship in the empire; but when he goes to Great Britain, to Australia or New Zealand, he is a German, or a Frenchman, or whatever he was when he first came here; he does not belong to the British Empire under the present arrangement. That is a serious anomaly, and it is a great reflection I think upon the empire that this has not been put right long years ago. The hon. member for Pictou I think has shown us the necessity of it, and I believe that if this draft Act that he has submitted is adopted throughout the empire, it will be a great advantage to many of our citizens. I quite disagree with the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) when he says that this only affects probably one per cent of our population; I think it will affect at least ten per cent. Many American citizens know that we are taking away from them at the present time complete citizenship in the United States, and are handing them a citizenship that is no good beyond our own Dominion. Only recently I saw a gentleman from Toronto who pointed this out to me. He said he had been in Russia, and he found his passport was little or no good; and he said, to use his own words: This is an outrage upon aliens who are coming to our country. They believe they are really naturalized citizens, and when they go abroad they find that they have no status at all as citizens of the empire. A naturalization law, whatever it may be, should be uniform throughout the empire, and whether the term is three or five years, once those terms are complied with in any part of the empire, the citizenship that he receives should be just as good in one part of the empire as another. That can only be accomplished by adopting some uniform naturalization law that is good throughout the empire. I think there will be some trouble in some of the words that the member for Pictou drew our attention to, that is, 'an adequate knowledge of English'. Now we know that 'adequate' is used quite frequently, and an adequate knowledge of English might mean in the minds of some a very different thing from what it means in the minds of others. There might be difficulty there, but that is a matter of little moment as compared with the difference between a good and real citizenship and a sham citizenship, as we are at present handing out. In the city from which I come we have about 2,000 of a population to whom this is an important and necessary requisite. Many of them are Armenians; we have about 12 or 15 nationalities in the city of Brantford, many of whom want to visit their homeland from time to time. Only recently I had two or three cases before me in which I had a great deal of difficulty to get them the necessary passports to travel with safety to their own native shores.

It is well known that some countries of Europe to-day do not acknowledge this passport that we give them and the protection that is afforded to those citizens, and which they believe to be something valid, is of no use when they get there. They are liable to be held by those countries and their wives have been known to have been held there for years after their husbands have become citizens of Canada. They cannot get their families together until they can go over to Europe and prove to the satisfaction of the country in which their families are residing that they are now British subjects and entitled to the full rights of British citizenship. I trust that this matter will be pushed, and pushed rapidly, because I beleive it is one that is becoming an important factor in Canadian national life and it is one of serious consideration for the whole British Empire. Although we boast of the great privilege it is to be a citizen of the British Empire, really all those who are coming to our shores and who have fulfilled the conditions in Canada, find, when they go abroad, on the high seas, or visit any country in Europe, or the United States, or wherever it may be, that their British citizenship is of no avail. I trust that the draft Bill which is presented will be looked into and, if necessary, amended in such a way that the trouble which I have mentioned, will disappear and that a person who becomes a naturalized citizen of Canada will be able to make the proud boast that he is a citizen of the British Empire, and that he will be able to say that wherever the British flag flies he has a perfect right to citizenship.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to trespass upon the time of the House to any considerable extent, but merely to make a few observations in respect to this matter. I remember that when Mr. Geoffrey Drage and Sir Frederick Pollock visited western Canada some few years ago to interest public opinion on this subject, their efforts were crowned with very considerable success. It seems to me that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), as well as the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, (Mr. Cockshutt), have indicated exactly the difficulties that have been experienced in connection with this matter. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) also dealt with exactly the same sort of difficulty that had to be considered by the Imperial authorities. I think we all agree that it is essential that the autonomous rights of the dependencies of the Empire should be preserved. That is of the utmost importance. Every one of the King's dominions claims the right to pass a statute providing for the naturalization of aliens on such terms as to the legislature of each dependency seems best. That is a sine qua non. They insist upon that right. As the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has just said, the Dominion of New Zealand claims the right to confer citizenship upon a person the next day after he lands and takes the oath of allegiance. Some of the old provinces in Australia exacted five years' residence while we exact only three years, residence. It is therefore perfectly clear that if there are to be different terms of residence exacted before the domestic tribunals confer rights of citizenship that citizenship should be limited in its application to the boundaries of the country that grants it. Then comes a further question and the difficulty which was experienced is the very difficulty that the hon. member for Edmonton has just referred to, namely, whether or not there might be a uniform arrangement throughout the British Empire as to the terms of citizenship, whether or not a man should have to reside in New Zealand, Australia, Canada or any other British colony or dependency a given number of years absolutely regardless of other considerations and then have conferred upon him, by some domestic tribunal, a citizenship that would be accepted in every portion of the Empire, or whether we should attempt to deal with it in the way that the draft Bill does, namely, by preserving the right of each colony and of each Dominion to legislate as they please in regard to the requirements which may be exacted from those who came within her boundaries and who seek the rights of citizenship, and then to adopt one general provision, that in addition to the residence or other qualifications necessary to attain the status of a citizen within the boundaries of the country that conferred the citizenship, the individual should have to live a longer period still in that Dominion before he could obtain Empire citizenship. The Minister of Public Works has pointed out that in the Imperial Conference of 1911 the matter was discussed at length and two schools of thought there found expression. On the one hand it was strongly urged that there should be a uniform term of residence in the empire and that then the domestic tribunal might confer empire citizenship. On the other hand there was a suggestion made which is now given force and effect in the draft Bill before us. It is proposed that while preserving the right that every self-governing colony or dependency may have to make such laws and regulations as to it seems best for granting citizenship to those who come within its boundaries, nevertheless, a residence of five years within that colony or dependency by any person shall entitle him to apply for a certificate of naturalization that will give him empire citizenship. That is the purpose of this draft Bill, and I may point out to the hon. member for Edmonton that it preserves to us all our autonomous rights, all our rights to make such rules and regulations as we may desire in so far as regards the domestic citizenship, while the larger or empire citizenship is to be conferred only when there has been a residence for five years, when the oath of allegiance has been taken to the sovereign and when there has been a certificate given as to the good character of the person in question. With regard to the pamphlet that was referred to by the hon. member for Pictou, I happen to know of a case that came under my own observation in which a passport had been issued that did not make the reservation or provision that is now inserted in a passport issued to naturalized citizens, and it was found in Russia that the person to whom the passport had been issued was wanted for a criminal offence under the laws of that country. He produced his passport, and the passport having been issued upon a form that it should not have been issued upon, international complications arose by reason of it and it gave a great deal of trouble. They came to the conclusion that a man has no right to have a full passport based only on domestic citizenship and that if he desires to have a passport which will give him the protection of his Britannic Majesty throughout the empire he must have empire citizenship. I entirely approve of this Bill and I trust that the government, in the words of the despatch to Earl Grey, will give it its earliest possible attention.

With regard to early action being taken, South Africa has acted and I am informed that Australia has also acted. Am I correct in that?

Mr. MACDONALD. There is no advice since November.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary). I am informed that Australia has acted, or, if it has not acted, has come to a conclusion with regard to it. I trust that Canada will also take immediate action because this is one of the first steps towards a practical realization of the desire that most of us have for some consolidation of imperial interests, for the unity of the empire and the finding of our proper position in it, so that we may, as the hon. gentleman has just said, be citizens in fact of the Britsh Empire and not of any particular section of it. I welcome legislation along that line and if it will bring about that much desired purpose I trust that the government will early arrive at a conclusion and that they may be able to accept this measure because we realize how difficult it would be to induce New Zealand to change its present domestic law of one day of residence for the man who takes the oath of allegiance, how difficult it might be to induce the people of Canada to change the standard from three years, and I think we should be content to accept this secondary test that has been imposed, namely, residence for five years within the King's dominions and the obtaining of a certificate which gives a man that quality of citizenship that will ensure to him in future empire citizenship. That is a practical kind of imperialism. There are other questions of the same character that might be dealt with in this way in reference to copyrights, patents and the whole series of questions which have been agitating the public mind for some time. I trust that the government may be able to arrive at an early decision and that they may take advantage of this Bill because it is a Bill that does not work any great hardships and it will provide a remedy for the difficulties that have arisen and will enable persons coming into this country and who have attained to citizenship to be able to say, with a little expense and trouble, that they have secured a citizenship that is the highest and best that can be conferred upon any people under any flag under the sun.

But there is a difficulty in connection with the treaty matter. A German does not lose his citizenship because he becomes naturalized in Canada; a Japanese never loses his citizenship. A Japanese may take the oath of allegiance to our sovereign and become naturalized, but the moment he gets back to Japan he is the same Japanese, so far as nationality is concerned, as he was when he left Japan. One hon. gentleman who spoke was in error in saying that in England the citizenship was better than here. The Naturalization Act that confers rights on aliens in England is in the same terms as the Act here, our Act being changed only to meet the conditions of our being a Colonial parliament and the other being the Imperial parliament. The Japanese or German who becomes a British subject in England gets no higher right beyond the three mile limit around the British isles than does the man who gets his citizenship here beyond the three mile limit of the Dominion. In both instances what they obtain is subject to treaty rights that exist between the two countries if there be a treaty, and the position he occupies is regulated by the treaty between the land from whence he came and the land to which he comes. On a casual reading of the Bill, I assume that treaty rights are preserved by the saving section which my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) has referred to. I think the House is indebted to the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) for bringing this matter to our attention, and I trust the government will take speedy action because I observe from the depatches that the imperial parliament may deal with the question at its coming session, and then legislation will be necessary on the part of the great self-governing colonies to manifest their approval of the action taken by the imperial parliament.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understand that the naturalization of an alien naturalized in Great Britain after having spent five years there, is recognized when he comes to Canada, but the naturalization of an alien naturalized in Canada, does not hold good in Great Britain, where he has to live five years again; the three years he has lived in Canada count for nothing.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary). My present appreciation of the fact is that we do give effect in Canada to the naturalization certificate that comes from any part of the King's dominions. Whether we do that lawfully or not is another matter but I believe that is the practice. I think we will even respect a New Zealand certificate although probably we should not because there a man can take the oath of allegiance and become a citizen the next morning.

Mr. MONK. A certificate issued in England is recognized throughout the empire, but I do not think we recognize a certificate issued in any of the dependencies, for the same reason that the law has not force and effect beyond the confines of these dependencies themselves.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary).

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to correct a mistake I made last evening in respect to the amount of the appropriation for New Brunswick. I stated that for the current year the total amount of the appropriation which was submitted to parliament by the late government, and which was voted, amounted to $506,860.71, but that was only seven-twelfths of the vote, and I should have stated that the total amount for the current year, chargeable to consolidated revenue, is $868,390, whereas the estimate for the coming year chargeable to consolidated revenue for harbours and rivers in the province of New Brunswick, amounts to only $286,925, or less than one-third of what was provided for in the current year in the estimates submitted by the late government. Then, if you take the total appropriation for New Brunswick in the present estimates, adding the amount charged to capital, including the harbour of St. John, $1,286,925 for the coming year, as against $1,818,390, which the late government submitted for the current year and which was actually voted by parliament. In other words, there is pretty nearly $600,000 less for the harbours and rivers in the province of New Brunswick, so far as these estimates are concerned, than was provided by the late government for the current year. I trust my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will consider that when he comes to make up his supplementary estimates, and that he will open his heart to the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. MONK. I fear I cannot claim all the credit my hon. friend atributes to me. The $868,000 was comprised in the main and supplementary estimates combined, and as you have not our supplementary estimates yet you cannot establish a comparison.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am looking forward with hope.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps when he sees the the supplementaries the hon. gentleman will be inclined to modify his opinion.

Mr. SINCLAIR. A good deal of discussion has been caused over the fact that a good many items which were voted in the last estimates have been stricken from the estimates now before the House. If the hon. gentleman intends to replace them in the supplementary estimates, then the procedure is hardly businesslike. I drew attention to New Harbour in my own constituency, for which $10,000 was voted in the estimates of the late government and where the work is absolutely necessary, but that vote is not included in the estimates now before the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) hinted that I might find it in the supplementary estimates; but why it is left out of the present estimates puzzles me. I might draw attention to the fact that Nova Scotia has been treated even worse than New Brunswick, if we are to draw a conclusion from the present estimates. In the former estimates Nova Scotia had for harbours and rivers $1,309,166, and in the present estimates only $445,075 is provided. Therefore, the large sum of $824,066 has disappeared from the estimates of the province of Nova Scotia. I understand from my hon. friend that a large amount of that money is to be replaced in the supplementary estimates; but why he should go through the form of striking them out of the estimates and putting them back a few weeks later has puzzled me in all this discussion.

Mr. MONK. It is evident that I have not been able to make my argument clear to my hon. friend. What I stated was that we could not make a comparison between the general appropriation of last year and the appropriation contained in the main estimates for this year, because in the figures which my hon. friend has given for the last year he has included both the main estimates and the supplementaries. The main estimates of last year were about $17,000,000, but the supplementaries brought that figure up to $25,000,000. Therefore, I stated that to establish a true comparison, my hon. friends would have to wait until they had the whole appropriation of the year; but I did not say that it was intended to restore in the supplementary estimates certain items that were omitted from the main estimates. What I tried to explain was that the government had made its own estimates this year irrespective of what may have appeared in last year's estimates, and if certain items were left out of last year's estimates, that was due to the change of government and the appreciation of what expenditures could be made throughout the country. The same thing was done when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. You would find items in the estimates of one year which disappeared in the following year and after a certain period were restored.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand the minister to say that unexpended items voted in last year's estimates and not appearing in these estimates he intends to drop, and not put them in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MONK. Some may appear and some may not.

Mr. KNOWLES. If a contract has been entered into between the government and a contractor for a public work, are we to understand that the work will be gone on with even if the item is dropped in the new estimates? On Tuesday last I called the minister's attention to the fact that a contract has been let for a small building, to cost $4,200, at a place called Gravel, although it had appeared in the previous estimates. I want to ask if that work is to be gone on with?

Mr. MONK. It is my intention to restore that small item, because the work is under contract.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). In the estimates for 1912, there were appropriations for various works in the county which I have the honour to represent, amounting to $32,400. In the estimates for 1913, I find that this government is generous to the extent of only $500 for the whole county of Antigonish, which has a sea-coast of nearly 100 miles. In these estimates there are two items—one Arisaig, $1,500 and Livingston's Cove, $2,000, a total of $3,500, of which $3,000 is a revote. In the estimates for 1912, there were the following items: Arisaig, $1,500; Bayfield, $15,000; Cribbin's Point, $1,000; Livingston's Cove, $1,500; McNair's Cove, $5,400; Malignant Cove, $2,300; McAra's Brook, $1,700; and South Lake, $4,000; a total of $32,400. All these have been dropped except the two I have mentioned, which appears to be an injustice to the county of Antigonish. The hon. Minister of Public Works assured us a few evenings ago that he was not actuated at all by political considerations in dropping these items. We have to take his assurance, but I cannot understand why these items are not in the estimates for 1913. They are very important to the people of these districts, and were recognized by the minister's own engineers as proper to be in the estimates. They were not for works undertaken for election purposes, because nobody expected that there would be an election when there was one. The works must have been regarded by the engineers as necessary. I would ask the minister if it is his intention to make provision for these items in the supplementary estimates, and, if not, on what ground, and on whose recommendation have they been dropped?

Mr. MONK. I think there must be certain latitude granted hon. members who find themselves in the position of my hon. friend; but when the House gets into committee at this hour, I think the discussion ought to be limited largely to the item before the committee.

I can only repeat to my hon. friend that the government have not prosecuted those works because they have judged fit to make expenditures elsewhere, which in their opinion are more necessary and more urgent. I cannot explain why works provided for and not begun have not been persisted in by this government. I am here to justify the different items which the government lays before the House, and it must occur to my hon. friend that a long discussion as to the reasons why the government has not brought down other items on other works is not pertinent.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). These are not new items, they are only repairs to works already in existence. The minister's argument would be readily understood if it were a case of new works such as the establishment of a new wharf or breakwater or a new harbour.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I beg to remind the hon. member that subsection 5 of Rule 13 says that speeches must be strictly relevant to the time or clause under consideration.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am not prepared to accept any such interpretation as you, Sir, put on that rule. It would be grossly unfair. No such rule has ever been recognized in this House as that the discussion should be confined to a particular breakwater.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that this is a new rule which has not been strictly followed.

Mr. MACDONALD. When was it made?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think last year.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.) I have to catch a train in a few moments, and as I wish to obtain information with reference to several Prince Edward Island items, I would ask to have one item stand in order that I may ask these questions on another occasion.

Mr. MONK. We can keep the general item for 'Harbours and Rivers, Prince Edward Island'.

Mr. KNOWLES. As the minister will remember, on Tuesday last we got into Supply unexpectedly, and passed some items from Saskatchewan and Alberta about which the minister was not then able to give full information as his deputy was not here. A delegation representing the Board of Trade of Moosejaw recently visited Ottawa, the most notable members being Mr. Willoughby and Dr. Wheeler. They interviewed a number of ministers, and I accompanied them on some of these visits, but I was not able to see the Minister of Public Works with them as I had a previous appointment. Those delegates could properly represent to him the views which they conveyed from Moosejaw with regard to the new building under contract in that city and I understand they made representations to him on a point on which they quite honestly thought they represented the views of that city. I would ask the minister if he would advise me as to their representation as to the change of site for that public building, as to what site they wished to have the new public building in Moosejaw moved to. If the minister cannot give the information now I would ask him to obtain it.

Mr. MONK. I am very sorry, indeed, but my hon. friend must accept my confession that I have not the slightest recollection of what these gentlemen represented. I have been receiving ten or twelve delegations each day for a month past.

Mr. KNOWLES. The tail end of my remarks constituted a request that the minister would ascertain and advise me.

Mr. MONK. I did not take anything in writing, I do not remember what they told me at all.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will the minister ascertain if there is anything official?

Maritime provinces generally—to purchase creosoted timber for works in the maritime provinces generally, $20,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Is that to be purchased by tender?

Mr. MONK. Yes, except where only small quantities are required. Anything of over $5,000 will be bought by tender.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). There is a good deal of creosoted timber in the harbour at Inverness. What is the intention of the government in regard to it?

Mr. MONK. It will be used in repairing the works that we have in that vicinity.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I do not think it can be much used in repairing; the only work there is what was done last year, all the old works having been carried away. There was a vote of over $5,000 for works at Inverness, and I would like to know if the government intends to use this timber for construction by day work or to call for tenders?

Mr. MONK. There is an item of $5,300 for harbour improvements at Inverness, and if the timber is there it will be used for the purpose of those repairs.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). In purchasing this timber, are tenders called for? If so, to whom is the call for tenders addressed?

Mr. MONK. I do not think we have purchased much creosoted timber; when a sufficiently large quantity is purchased it is done by tender and contract.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). How many companies in Canada are in the creosoted timber business?

Mr. MONK. Not many, but we ask for tenders from those whose names we learn. At one time, this timber was bought from one man only, but there are several now.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Will a copy of the specifications be sent to the representatives of all these concerns?

Mr. MONK. Any representative who applies for permission to tender, is certainly asked to tender.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Are tenders actually called for through the public press?

Mr. MONK. Not through the press.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Or do you send out to agents who are in the business of selling creosoted timber?

Mr. MONK. That is the way it has been done in the past. If this can be improved, I will try to improve it.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Then am I right in assuming that tenders will be invited from all who are in the business?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask whether there has been $30,000 already expended, and is this an additional item, or is it a revote?

Mr. MONK. It is intended to expend $30,000. The total cost will be about $60,000.

Rivières des Prairies—Improvements of navigation, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is that to carry out the work which was inaugurated on the recommendation of my hon. friend the member for Laval (Mr. Wilson)?

Mr. MONK. I had already asked that these works be carried out. The hon. member for Laval came in, and in a short time he seemed to be more potent in the House than I was.

Three Rivers harbour—Completion of deep water wharf at west end of harbour, $118,000.

Mr. MONK. I move to add the words 'and for other improvements'.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for Three Rivers is not here. I wished to ask him if it was intended to carry on these works according to the plan which was prepared when I was minister.

Mr. MONK. Yes. Most of these works are begun, there will be no change.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm). (Translation.) Before these items for the province of Quebec are all passed, I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works the reason why we do not find in the estimates the amount of $15,000 already voted for the construction of a post office in St. Jacques de l'Achigan, in the county of Montcalm. I have asked for this vote after the property had been purchased, when Mr. Justice Dugas was the member for Montcalm. The site having been purchased, I got this vote for the construction of a post office. When I came in this House in 1909, that amount was put in the estimates, but was not expended because it was too late to begin the works, and as the Department of Public Works did not wish to have the works performed during the winter, I was given the assurance that they would be started in the spring. At the next session I asked once more for that vote of $15,000, which was again granted.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Translation.) As the item under consideration has no relation whatever to this question, I would ask the hon. member to comply with the rule I have mentioned a few minutes ago.

Mr. LAFORTUNTE. (Translation.) I am simply asking the hon. minister what has become of this vote of $15,000. It has been answered to a question asked by myself that the plans had been submitted for examination, and that there had been delays due to some complications in connection with the limits of the property. I would like to know from the minister if it is his intention to have that post office erected this year?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I may answer the hon. member that it is not the intention of the department to erect that building this year; otherwise we would have asked a vote for that purpose. I do not know whether there was such an item in last year's estimates or not; if there was, the hon. member should have availed himself of it.

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation.) I can tell the hon. minister the reason why the item was of no avail after being voted; it is because the estimates were blocked through obstructive discussions by the then members of the opposition.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Why did not you make use of it?

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation.) Am I to understand that this item of $15,000 for that construction will be put in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) For the present we are not asking the committee to vote that item. As regards the supplementary estimates, they are being prepared and I cannot now say anything about them.

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation.) I can assure the hon. minister that this post office is absolutely needed.

Mr. E. FORTIER (Lotbinière). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. minister how it happens that we do not find this year in the estimates several items concerning my own riding that were in last year's estimates?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Translation.) I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, but I must urge that he should confine himself to the item under consideration. It is a new rule that is rather frequently violated, but I must tell the hon. member that I am compelled to have it observed.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What is the point of order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order, as it has been stated before, is that speeches should be strictly relevant to the item under consideration.

Mr. FORTIER. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I simply want to ask the minister some information relating to the item under consideration. My intention is not to raise any discussion, but I wish to remind him that there were in the estimates for 1912 certain items for works in my county that are omitted this year. I would like to know why they have been omitted and if there will be provision made for those works in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Translation.) The item under consideration relates to Three Rivers.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I may tell the hon. member (Mr. Fortier) that our finances did not allow us to put that item in the estimates for next year. We have considered it more prudent and necessary to have some other works performed. As to whether such items will be put in the supplementary estimates, I cannot say this evening as these estimates are still under consideration.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think we ought not to be too closely bound by your ruling, Mr. Chairman, because it would hamper discussion if we were to adhere to the view which you have presented. I take it that discussion is absolutely relevant to any item in these estimates when a member seeks to compare the utility of a work that is provided for by an item in the estimates with other works of equal, or greater importance, which have been omitted. That is what my hon. friend from Antigonish (Mr. Chisholm), was proposing to do, and what my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Lafortune), was proposing to do. We have the right to say that this committee ought not to be asked to vote an item of $40,000, say, for a work, because, in the same county or province, there are works which are more urgently needed than the item that is asked, and to urge upon the minister that he ought to drop the item that is in the estimates provided he cannot take care of both works and make provision for the other work. Does not my hon. friend remember how, in previous years, he condemned me for putting in items similar to this for wharfs and the improvement of harbours throughout the country? Does not my hon. friend remember the eloquent speeches he made in Committee of Supply urging that the government ought to make provision for starting such works as the Georgian Bay canal, pay more attention to the harbour of Montreal, spend money in nationalizing the harbours, and that it ought not, to use his language, to waste money in the construction of these useless, small wharfs and other works throughout the country? This is the same thing. My hon. friend from Antigonish was seeking to impress upon the committee that works of a more urgent character than those for which he had asked a vote of money had been omitted. It seems to me that this is entirely relevant to the item under discussion. I do not think it should be carried too far or the argument extended too widely, but, it seems to me that it is entirely relevant, and that a member is not discharging his duty unless he calls attention to an injustice to the portion of the province from which he comes.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend, I am sure, will appreciate the desire of the Chairman, by his ruling, to keep the discussion down to the item under consideration. I perfectly understand that an hon. member might argue against the adoption of an item, and contend that other works are more urgent and necessary, but my hon. friend, I think, will do me the justice to admit that we have expended several hours on this point as to why the government had omitted from these estimates this year, items which had appeared in last year's estimates for works that were not begun or under contract. That was explained several times, and I think we cannot enter into a full discussion of that point without going beyond the limits which ordinarily should apply under the circumstances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have got along very rapidly. We have passed $600,000 in half an hour.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I was going to suggest to the Minister of Public Works that this rule should be leniently enforced even if the Chairman puts the correct interpretation upon it. Of course, the ruling could be avoided by moving an amendment to the motion in each case covering each item. I would like to suggest to the minister that we have allowed him to get along pretty rapidly with his estimates during the session. All the items for harbours and rivers in Quebec have gone through and nearly $1,000,000 have been voted in less than ten minutes. He should allow members from the province of Quebec to discuss any one item in a general way.

Mr. MONK. Oh, yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I take it that when we agree to pass all the items for Quebec it is understood that if any member from Quebec wishes to speak on any item at some other time he will be allowed to do so?

Mr. MONK. Certainly. Now, we will take up harbours and rivers in Ontario.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Some of the Ontario members who desired to discuss these items are not here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Suppose my hon. friend goes on with Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia?

Mr. MONK. We have not the information for those provinces, but we have it for Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We might take Ontario and leave a general item.

Mr. MONK. Yes.

Harbours, rivers and bridges—general repairs and improvements, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The general item will stand.

Mr. MONK. Yes, stands.

Toronto harbour improvements, $195,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand the minister has recently had an opportunity of inspecting the work at the western channel of Toronto harbour, which is about completed. Will he state in what condition he found the work?

Mr. MONK. I visited the work and I found it in excellent condition. There is a very fine breakwater there and the improvements generally seem of the very best quality. There is still very considerable to be done. If we continue that breakwater and the other improvements as they have been going on so far we will be satisfied.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The late government made provision for improvements at Sarnia and entered into an agreement with the Grand Trunk railway with respect to some necessary property there and it was contemplated to afford facilities urgently required for shipping at that place. The item has been dropped from these estimates and my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) who represents the constituency, feels very strongly about that, and as to the necessity for this work going on. I would like the minister to bring down the papers before these items are concluded, and to be prepared to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) why the item has been dropped, and as to what may be hoped in the near future, as to the prosecution of that work.

Mr. MONK. I will get the information. I believe there was a tender for that work but it was altogether too high.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Monk, House adjourned at 11.17 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 5, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE DUTY ON LUMBER.

Mr. TURRIFF. Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether it is true, as reported in the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' that in a shipment of 20 cars of lumber that came in lately, the appraisers, under instructions, went through the cars and examined the lumber piece by piece, and found in one car nine pieces that showed marks of the planer on the edge, and in another car only four pieces that showed marks of the planer. What I want to ask is whether, if that was the case, the consignee was obliged to pay 25 per cent duty on all of the lumber, or was the portion that did not show marks of the planer allowed to come in free?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is scarcely the kind of a question that can be put, with the expectation that the answer can be given by the minister on the spur of the moment. It would require information being obtained from another source.

Mr. TURRIFF. I will give notice, then, that on the first convenient occasion I will bring the matter up.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would ask permission to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to a report in the newspapers of the United States regarding the fixing of tolls on the Panama canal. Though it would seem a little early to deal with this question, it is being discussed at Washington at the present time. As Canadian shipowners are largely interested in the question, I would call attention to it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is scarcely in order in discussing that question at this stage.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I regard it as a question of special importance, Mr. Speaker, so much so that I hope I shall be permitted at the present time to ask the Prime Minister a question in regard to it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the hon. gentleman should not introduce anything of a controversial nature——

Mr. SINCLAIR. This is not controversial.

Mr. SPEAKER. Except it be to ask a question, an hon. member desires to bring up something of a special and urgent nature, he might do so by getting the permission to move the adjournment of the House.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). The hon. gentleman might be permitted to read the despatch for the purpose of asking a question, though I am afraid I cannot give him any answer in regard to it to-day. But I would like to know what it is, if the House has no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The despatch which I find in the American papers is as follows:

Washington, D.C., Feb. 3, 1912.—Senators who discussed the symposium giving the views of shipping men and exporters on canal tolls, said the question of tolls should be soon settled.

Senator Brandeger, chairman of the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals, said that he was emphatically in favour of rebating the tolls paid by American ships. 'American shipping interests,' he said, 'should be encouraged to use the canal to develop our foreign trade.'

Senator Penrose said: 'The canal is not alone a war measure, but is an industrial project which is expected to advance the commercial interests of the United States. As liberal concessions as are possible under the treaty should be made to our own ships, and wide discretion should be left with the President in fixing the tonnage rates.

The proposal is made in some of the papers of the United States that the ships of that country be admitted at a less rate than the ships of other nations. It has been proposed that $1 a ton should be charged to ships belonging to foreign countries, and 50 cents a ton to ships belonging to the United States. I would regard that as a violation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, which I think will be found to provide that no discrimination should be given to vessels of the United States passing through the canal. The proposal in the despatch which I have read is to give a rebate to American ships in order to encourage American commerce. I submit that that is also a violation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. The attention of the United States authorities might be drawn to the manner in which Canada has treated the United States in regard to the St. Lawrence route, on which we have spent something like $100,000,000 to provide a channel for ships from the ocean to the Great Lakes, through which we allow the ships of the United States to pass free.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is certainly going beyond the point of asking a question.

Mr. SINCLAIR. My suggestion to the Prime Minister is that he look into the matter, and endeavour to get for Canadian vessels passing through the Panama canal as good terms as possible.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman was good enough to give me an intimation that he proposed to ask me that question; but I only received it on entering the House to-day, when the despatch to which he alludes had not been brought to my attention. As far as I understand it, the despatch is based on nothing more than newspaper discussion on some proposal which has been made in Congress. There has been no definite action taken by the government of the United States up to the present time. However, I shall be glad to look at the despatch, and later perhaps it may be convenient to allude to the subject again. The government will give it consideration at the earliest possible moment.

PRIVATE BILLS.

STERLING LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 72) to incorporate the Sterling Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Blain.

Mr. BLAIN. I have a little amendment to propose to this clause. I move that the name of William F. Clews be added to the directorate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As this is an important amendment, the clause will have to stand.

Mr. BLAIN. In that case I would give notice also of some other trifling amendments. I propose in clause five to substitute $100,000 for $75,000. In clause seven I intend to move that the words 'may take' be struck out and the words 'may make' substituted. As the Bill has to stand until to-morrow, I would ask you,

Mr. Chairman, to make a note of these proposed amendments.

Progress reported.

THE HARBOUR OF HAMILTON.

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) respecting the Harbour of Hamilton.—Mr. Stewart.

On section 14,

Mr. CROCKET. This section gives power to expropriate, and the Select Standing Committee reports that such power is not covered by the notice. The same objection applies to clause 18.

Section 14 allowed to stand.

Section 18 allowed to stand.

Progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. I might draw attention to the fact that the Private Bills Committee in reporting this Bill to the House drew attention to it in the following words:

In regard to the last mentioned Bill, your committee desire to draw the attention of the House, pursuant to rule 106, to the powers of expropriation granted under sections 14 and 18 of the Bill which do not appear to have been contemplated in the notice or petition for the same as reported upon by the examiner of petitions for private Bills on 1st December last.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 53) respecting patents of Edmund F. Piper.—Mr. Fripp.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CONTRACTS FOR GOVERNMENT ADVERTISEMENTS.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Who solicited the various contracts for government advertisements published in 'Le Devoir,' 'L'Evénement,' 'La Patrie' and the Quebec 'Chronicle'?

2. Were any tenders called for such advertisements?

3. Is it the intention of the government to call for tenders in the future when such advertisements are required?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. There was no solicitation.

2. No.

3. It has never been the practice of the government to ask for tenders for advertising. Accounts for advertising are audited by the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. It is the intention of the government to continue the practice which obtained in the past.

VICKERS-MAXIM COMPANY.

Mr. SEVIGNY:

1. Is the Vickers-Maxim Company, which contracted for the construction of a dry-dock at Montreal, incorporated under the Companies Act?

2. If so, what are the names of the shareholders of the said company?

3. How much has been paid by each of the shareholders on his shares?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. Vickers Sons & Maxim Limited, the company which made application to the Department of Public Works for approval of plans and specifications of a dry-dock to be constructed at Montreal is not a Canadian company. The agreement with said department with concurrence of Vickers Sons & Maxim Limited, was entered into by Canadian Vickers Limited, a company incorporated under the Companies Act of Canada.

2. The names of the applicants for incorporation of Canadian Vickers, Limited, are as follows: Albert Vickers, chairman of Vickers, Limited; Sir Vincent Henry Penlaver Caillard, Knight Bachelor, both of London, England; Frederick Orr Lewis, and James Graham Lewis, Merchants; Sir Hugh Montague Allan, Knight Bachelor, and Preble MacIntosh, all of Montreal. There is no further information respecting the shareholders of the company.

3. The government has no information on this question.

I.C.R.—EMPLOYERS' RETIREMENT FUND.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska):

Does the government intend to give back to the employees of the Intercolonial railway who were dismissed for political reasons, the sums paid by them into the retirement fund for the employees of that railway, as provided for in the Statute 6-7 Edward VII., chapter 22?

Mr. COCHRANE:

This will be dealt with according to the statutes governing this matter.

IMMIGRATION OFFICE IN LONDON, ONTARIO.

Mr. ELSON:

Is it the intention of the government to open an immigration and distribution office in the city of London, Ontario, together with a suitable building in which farm labourers and others can be cared for during the time they are waiting for employment?

Mr. ROGERS. The matter is under consideration.

WHARF AT L'ASSOMPTION.

Mr. SEGUIN:

Would the hon. Minister of Public Works inform the House if the different amounts voted in the estimates for 1911-12 by the present parliament, but omitted in the estimates for 1912-13, for the construction of a wharf at L'Assomption, an ice-breaker at St. Gérard de Magella, an ice-breaker on the river L'Achigan and a public building in the town of Laurentides, will be placed in the supplementary estimates of this session, in order that these various works which are of great importance to the different localities concerned may be done during the present fiscal year?

Mr. MONK. These works are all under careful consideration, but it will be impossible to state, at this date, what items will be placed in the supplementary estimates, which will be laid before parliament this session.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LAURENTIDES.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Has the Public Works Department acquired a property in the town of Laurentides for the purpose of constructing a public building thereon?

2. If not, does the department purpose in the near future making such a purchase in having such building erected, for which a sum was placed in the estimates of 1911-12?

3. If the department has given up the idea of constructing such public building in the town of Laurentides, what are the reasons and at whose request?

Mr. MONK:

1. No.

2 and 3. The matter is now receiving consideration.

ICE-BREAKER AT ST. GERARD.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Did the department of Public Works during the year 1911 ask for tenders for the construction of an ice-breaker at St. Gérard in the County of L'Assomption?

2. If so, who tendered and what are the amounts?

3. Was the contract for such ice-breaker assigned? If so, to whom and for what amount?

4. If the contract has not been given, does the department intend to soon proceed with that work and utilize for that purpose the amount voted in the estimates of 1911-12?

Mr. COCHRANE.

5. If the department does not intend to use the money appropriated for such ice-breaker and to have it constructed, what reasons are given for the abandonment of the work and at whose request was it abandoned?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.

2. Eugène Patenaude, $3,457; Joseph Renaud, $4,090.

3. No.

4. No, the work is not considered necessary in the public interest.

5. Inquiry was made by the department, concerning this work, and from information secured, it was deemed to be unnecessary.

HON. MR. LEMIEUX AND DISMISSALS.

Mr. BELLEMARE:

1. Is the government aware that in the newspaper 'Le Devoir' on the 30th January last an article appeared the statements contained in which article are an alleged flagrant contradiction of declarations previously by an honourable member of this House, the ex-Postmaster General, and which article reeads as follows:—

Mr. Lemieux and the Dismissals.

Editor of 'Le Devoir,'

Dear sir,—In reply to the defiance of hon. Mr. Lemieux to produce the names of ten employees that were dismissed in 1896, you will find enclosed a list of the names of those who were dismissed on the 30th December, 1896, by the Laurier government, of which hon. Mr. Lemieux was then one of the most zealous friends, although simple member for Gaspé

On the 30th December, 1896, these brave fathers of families were, on the eve of New Year's Day, cast out on the street, as the hon. plenipotentiary to Japan would express it, and one of the number was my poor father. Hence it is that I speak whereof I know. They were sent off without any reason whatsoever, unless it be that they were Blues, and that the Rouges governed.

Now, Mr. Editor, Mr. Lemieux rages against Mr. Monk, asserting that he has dismissed hundreds of brave fathers of families. How comes it that, even as I write, in the county that the Hon. Minister of Public Works represents, at Lachine, no dismissals have yet been made? The Liberals of Lachine who may be dismissed have only to thank hon. Mr. Lemieux, for, despite that we kept them in their positions, that gentleman insults a man who is by far his superior. Learn, Mr. ex-minister, that in vain you shout, rage, fume it will have no effect. We know the love for the French Canadians that Mr. Monk has, and your hysterical cries will never make us forget the one who has ever been devoted to us.

You have asked for ten names; read now the following list and remember as you count them that these dismissals were only on the Lachine canal, at the Lachine locks. On the 30th December, 1896, were dismissed: Adolphe Leblanc, lockman, Lachine; Alex. Carigan, lockman, Lachine; Ephron Picard, boom guardian, Lachine; J. B. St. Aubin, lockman, Lachine; Alex. Clément, lockman, Lachine, Camile Cousineau, bridge keeper, Lachine; Damase Chartrand, bridge keeper, Lachine; Oscar Bélanger, lockman, Lachine; James Teirney, lockman, Lachine; Edouard Lauzon, lockman. Lachine; Urgel Viau, lockman, Lachine; Theo. Davis, lockman, Lachine; Roderick Hogan, lockman, Lachine; Alexander Snider, lockman, Lachine.

And I will add that two years later they found a way to superannuate Messrs. J. B. Deschamps, canal collector, and Louis Paré, each with a small pension not sufficient for livlihood, happily they had some savings.

Amongst the dismissed was Mr. Damase Chartrand, who had the misfortune of losing a leg through an accident at the locks during the summer of 1896. The Conservative government had made him a bridge keeper, in order to let him have easy work. With the others, on the 31st December, he received, mercilessly, his dismissal. Is this enough, Mr. ex-Minister? You asked for ten names; count them well and let us see if the public will not take you for a joker? Get the facts before fuming against the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your kindness, I remain, &c.,

RAOUL CARIGAN,
Lachine, son of one of the dismissed.

2. If so, does the government intend to take steps to find out the truth concerning these statements?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I rise to a question of privilege, before an answer is given to this question. I would point out that there is in this correspondence an alleged question of fact, to which I object. It is stated in the last paragraph:

The Liberals of Lachine who may be dismissed, have only to thank Hon. Mr. Lemieux for despite that we have kept them in their positions, that gentleman insults a man who is by far his superior.

I object to the expression that I insulted the Hon. the Minister of Public Works, (Mr. Monk), and I ask that the words be expunged from the order paper.

Mr. BORDEN. Stand.

UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CO.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York):

1. Have any proceedings been commenced under the Anti-Combines Act of 1910, except those in the matter of the United Shoe Machinery Company?
2. When was the complaint filed in the Shoe Machinery case?
3. When did the taking of testimony before the board of investigation begin and is testimony still being taken?
4. When will the taking of testimony be concluded, and will such testimony be reduced to writing and laid before the House?
5. What direction over the proceeding by the board is exercised by either the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Justice?
6. Did the Minister of Labour have a conference at the city of Ottawa in the fall of 1911 with the president, attorney or other representative of the United Shoe Machinery Company?
7. Was application made to the Minister at that interview to suspend or stop any further hearing before the board of investigation, upon the grounds that a satisfactory arrangement had been come to between the complainants and the company?
8. In an investigation under the Anti-Combines Act, is any one employed by the government to represent the public interests, or have the complainants the power to discontinue the investigation at any time?
9. What money has been expended and what liabilities have been incurred by the government of Canada to date under the Anti-Combine Act?

Mr. CROTHERS:

1. The department has no knowledge of proceedings other than those in the matter of the United Shoe Machinery Company.

8. Section 30 of the Combines Investigation Act provides as follows: 'Whenever in the opinion of the minister the public interest so requires, the minister may apply to the Minister of Justice to instruct counsel to conduct the investigation before a board, and upon such application the Minister of Justice may instruct counsel accordingly. The fees and expenses allowed to such counsel by the Minister of Justice shall be paid out of such appropriations as are made by parliament to provide for the cost of administering this Act.' (2) The point raised appears to be dealt with in section 18, subsection 2 of the Combines Investigation Act, which provides as follows: 'In deciding any question that may affect the scope or extent of the investigation, the board shall consider what is required to make the investigation as thorough and complete as the public interest demands.'
9. (1) For the fiscal year 1910-11, $196.46; for the fiscal year 1911-12, to January 31, $1,701. Total $1,897.46.

(2) There is no knowledge of liabilities other than for expenditures arising out of proceedings before the board established in the case of the United Shoe Machinery Company, the complete accounts in this case have not been yet received.

RESOLUTION OF BOARD OF TRADE OF MONTREAL.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1 Has the government received the following resolution unanimously adopted by the Board of Trade of Montreal at its annual meeting held on Wednesday the 31st January ultimo:

'That this board views with alarm the exploiting by corporation or individuals of the waters of the St. Lawrence for power purposes, and that in view of the fact that the city of Montreal is the centre of a district which is capable of more water-power development than most other cities in the world, it should have the advantage thereof in the shape of low electric power rates, which are so essential to the growth of a city and to have full development of its manufacturing industries;

'This board is of the opinion that before the Dominion Government sanctions the various schemes now being put forward for the development of hydro-electric power on both the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers, it is essential in the interest of the country generally that the conservation commission should be requested to draw up a comprehensive scheme for the preservation of these rivers as great national waterways of the Dominion, and that such commission should take immediate action so as to prevent the natural resources of the public domain from passing into the hands of private parties;

'That the Dominion Government is hereby prayed to instruct the Conservation Commission to consider what means it is advisable to adopt, first in regard to the licensing of hydro-electric companies; second what check it is desirable to put on the increases in the capital of the various companies in order that some means may be evolved for giving the public electric power at a minimum rate, yet at the same time allowing the various electrical companies to make a reasonable return for their shareholders on the paid-up capital; third, to prevent, if possible, such companies making unwarranted increases in their capital stock on the basis of earnings; and fourth, to consider whether a Hydro-Electric Commission should be established by the Dominion Government to govern rates of power companies on a similar basis to the Board of Railway Commissioners, or whether it would serve the public interest better for the government to itself develop hydro-electric power and distribute the same on lines similar to those of the Hydro-Electric Commission in Ontario;

'That the board is further of the opinion that all power developed in Canadian waters will be required for Canadian use, and that no power should be allowed to be diverted from this country;

'That this board respectfully reiterates its request that in the development of water-powers on the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers navigation interests should be considered paramount, and that no works shall be permitted in these national waterways that would interfere with the development on a larger scale of their navigation facilities if the same should be found advisable.'

Mr. BORDEN. The resolution has been forwarded to a member of the government.

3. How many tenders were received, and who were the tenderers?
4. For what quantities did each company or person tender?

STEAM TRAWLING.

Mr. SINCLAIR moved:

For a copy of all letters, memorials or other documents in the hands or under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries or any department of the government, relating to any action taken on a resolution of the House passed the 6th day of February, 1911, relating to the prohibition of steam trawling on the coast of Canada outside of Canadian waters; also a copy of all departmental instructions, memoranda and reports relating thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or in his absence, that of the Prime Minister, to the importance of dealing with this question. On the 6th of February of last year I had the honour to move in this House a resolution in regard to this matter, as follows:

That in the opinion of this House, as the mode of fishing known as steam trawling, prosecuted by ships of different nationalities on the coast of Canada outside Canadian waters, is destructive to fish life, it is expedient, in order to conserve the deep sea fisheries, that negotiations be opened with the view of securing an international agreement prohibiting steam trawling on such fishing grounds for deep sea fish, as the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the banks of the North Atlantic adjacent to the coasts of Canada and Newfoundland.

That resolution was passed by the House, last session and I understand that negotiations were opened by the late government with certain foreign powers and with the British government, looking towards some action which would carry out the views expressed in that resolution. The late government did considerable in the way of discouraging this mode of fishing on the Canadian coasts. Very shortly after the first trawlers appeared on the coasts of Canada, an order in council was passed prohibiting steam trawlers from fishing in Canadian waters, which of course include all the bays, harbours and coast lines of Canada on both the Atlantic and the Pacific. It is contended by the fishermen that this mode of fishing is very disastrous to their interests and very destructive of fish life. The facts in relation to the question were laid pretty fully before the House in the discussion which took place last year, so that I do not intend to repeat them. However, the step to which I have alluded was taken by the late government to prohibit that mode of fishing in Canadian waters.

Mr. BORDEN. On what date was that done?

Mr. SINCLAIR. In the summer of 1908; I have not the exact date. Another step was taken a little later. It was discovered that under the old regulations steam trawlers were entitled to share in the fishing bounty given to Canadian fishermen, and an amendment was passed prohibiting this. My principal object in drawing attention to the matter to-day is to press on the present administration the great importance of it, and to express the hope that they may carry on the negotiations which were commenced by the late government, and may arrive at some means of restricting or if possible prohibiting this mode of fishing in Canadian waters.

Mr. BORDEN. The subject to which the hon. gentleman has alluded engaged the attention of the House on more than one occasion. I did not quite gather from him what negotiations have been in progress with respect to the prohibition of such methods of fishing outside of Canadian waters. With whom were the negotiations, and what negotiations were in progress?

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is what I am trying to find out. Of course I do not know because the documents are in the possession of the government.

Mr. BORDEN. I thought my hon. friend spoke of certain negotiations, and would like to know what negotiations he had in mind. Does the difficulty complained of arise altogether with the fishermen of the United States or with those of other countries as well?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I read a statement made by the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), to the effect that the matter had been taken up with the United States and France. I think that statement was made at the Imperial Conference. I am not sure that we have any right to the production of the papers. In fact I have been told by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen), that it would be irregular to produce them, and my only object at present is to draw attention to the matter.

Mr. HAZEN. In consequence of the motion of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), I had a little statement prepared which, perhaps, may be of some benefit, with regard to the effects of steam trawling in different parts of the world. The correspondence in the hands of the government is of a confidential character, and consequently it would be impossible to lay it before the House without the consent of the British government. If there be any correspondence which is not of that character, I should have no objection to bringing it down, but I am informed by my department that there is none. This question as to the effect of steam trawling on the fisheries is a debatable one. As hon. members are aware, regulations have been passed under which steam trawling is prohibited within the three mile limit. Outside that limit, the matter is one for international consideration. The statement is as follows:

Whether or not steam trawling is an unduly destructive method of fishing is a question on which there always has been a strong division of opinion on the European side of the ocean. As it is revolutionary in its character, this was to be expected; but notwithstanding the very strong opposition that has been exerted against it, steam trawling has been continually developing and is rapidly replacing other modes of catching demersal fishes.

The arguments used against steam trawling are mainly:

(a) The destruction of set lines or hand trawls, by being carried away by the net or hauling ropes attached to it, from the steamer;

(b) The ruin of the spawning grounds;

(c) The capture of great quantities of immature fish, which being useless for market, are thrown away.

So far as (a) is concerned, there is no question but that the fishermen have much to fear if their gear is set in the track of steam trawlers, and it was to afford them all possible protection that steam trawling has been prohibited within the three mile limit all round our coasts. On many parts of the coast the inshore fishermen go out even ten or twelve miles from land, and there the trawlers are free to act; but while the fishermen are apprehensive, information of the carrying away of their gear by the trawlers that have been operating from Canada, has never reached the department. It of course may be that they will not take the risk of setting their hand trawls when they know that steam trawlers are operating in the locality.

With reference to (b) there is much misapprehension, as none of the fish caught by trawlers spawn at the bottom of the ocean. The eggs of these fishes are lighter than the water and float on or near the surface, so that steam trawling really does not injure the spawning areas.

With regard to (c) it does not pay to catch unmarketable fish. There are here and there around the coast, areas which might be called 'nurseries' to which young fish resort in large numbers, and steam trawling at such places would doubtless result in the capture of great quantities of immature fish; but as it is marketable fish that are being sought, these areas would be avoided by the trawling skippers when once located.

While it is a fact that owing to the innovation of steam trawling, whole fishing villages have been wiped out along the Scottish shores, this does not indicate that fewer people are now engaged in connection with the fisheries than formerly. What has happened is that owing to the much larger and quicker landings of fish, it has been found more paying to handle them from convenient centres. Hence many of these villagers have moved to the large ports from which the trawlers operate, and though perhaps not engaged in fishing from there, are employed in handling the fish in preparing them for and sending them off to market.

While steam trawling tends to revolutionize fishing, and to replace existing methods, an unbiased examination of its results does not seem to leave room for much fear that it will result in depletion of the fisheries. In the North Sea, for instance, over 2,000 such vessels operate from Great Britain's ports alone, and not for seven or eight months in the year, but for the whole twelve. This has been going on for years; but there is no evidence of depletion of the yield. On the contrary, an ever increasing quantity is being taken. It is a fact that in some years, for causes which are generally conceded to be natural, but which are not so far explainable, there is a decrease; but possibly in the very next, the yield is bigger than ever. It will be urged that in order to keep up the supply, the trawlers are continually extending the scope of their operations. With the increasing size of steam trawlers, the perfecting of their gear, and large use of ice, it has become possible for them to go much farther from port than formerly, and for a number of years past, these vessels have been operating as far south as the coast of Morocco, as far north as the White Sea, and as far west as Iceland; but ever since 1905, at the request of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, the statistics have been collected to show the water areas from which the fish are taken, and the statement as to the yield in the North Sea is made in the light of these statistics. This sea continues to supply about 60 per cent of the total quantity of fish taken by the European trawlers.

It is somewhat remarkable how history repeats itself. In the fifties hand trawling began to be introduced. Before that time, the fish were caught with hand lines, or long lines as they are sometimes called. The line fishermen protested against hand trawling so strongly that in 1862 the Fisheries Committee of the then colonial government, expressed regret that remonstrances, through Great Britain, to the French government, against hand trawling, were unavailing, 'and recommended that representations be made to the United States, as soon as peace was restored to the nation, that this mode of fishing demanded their co-operation to abolish it.'

A report submitted to the Newfoundland House in 1862 attributed the falling off in the Newfoundland fisheries 'during three or four years past, to the system adopted by the French fishermen of using "bultows" (hand trawls) on the banks.' It was considered by these trawls the large spawn fish would be taken, thus preventing propagation. Indeed, so strong was the feeling on some parts of the coast of Canada, that such method of fishing was prohibited in territorial waters for many years; but now this method of fishing has become general on this side of the Atlantic, and from the fishermen using it, come the objections to steam trawling.

Apart from the catching power of steam trawlers, they can be operated in practically all weathers, and thus assure a steady supply. In the past the trouble has been all along the Atlantic seaboard that in times of good weather, there was plenty of fish but in rough weather the demand could not be filled, and if a big trade in fresh fish, which is by far the most remunerative one, is to be built up a steady supply of fish must be available.

It is not a fact that the use of the steam trawlers—2 in number—that have been operating in Canada for the past few years, has lowered the price of fish to the fishermen, or has in any way interfered with their markets. Indeed, the opposite is the case. Prices have been better, and the work of the trawlers has enabled the supplying of the markets, when the inshore boats could not get out.

It is realized, however, that if many steam trawlers are shortly placed in commission on the Canadian coasts, the hand trawl and long line fishermen will find it hard to compete, and anything that the government can do to protect them, it is anxious to do. It must not be forgotten, however, that there are great obstacles in the way of an international agreement for the abolition of trawling, or even preventing their use in extensive areas. Steam trawling has already been firmly established in the United States. Six such vessels are now operating continuously from Boston, and some four or six more are being built for work from that port. Every year varying numbers of steam trawlers come over from France—last year nine—and operate from St. Pierre as a base. Since the abolition of the treaty rights of France on the coast of Newfoundland, French vessels have no reliable source of bait, and if trawling were given up, that country would largely have to go out of fishing on this side of the Atlantic.

Again, it cannot be said with assurance that trawling is unduly destructive. Ever since 1904, the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, which is made up of some of the best scientific authorities of Great Britain, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Russia, Norway and Sweden, has been investigating the matter; but has been unable to agree to advise against such method of fishing. It will, therefore, be seen that it is impossible to turn to any government which has taken action to prevent such trawling except in limited inshore areas, and Canada has gone farther than any other, by prohibiting trawling in all its territorial waters.

The House will see the very great difficulties in the way of this country getting any agreement entered into with other countries for the prevention of steam trawling in the international waters. It is a firmly established institution in Great Britain, in the United States, and in other countries and under these circumstances it will be very difficult for Canada, standing practically alone in regard to the matter, to secure an international arrangement under which trawling would be prevented in international waters outside the three-mile limit. It is being prevented within the three-mile limit which is the most we can do of ourselves. Negotiations have been entered into with a view of bringing about some international arrangements, but so far those negotiations have not been successful. If possible a conference will certainly be brought about, but I do not speak with any very great hope of this.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). What does the minister say about passing a regulation prohibiting the landing of fish caught by steam trawlers in the harbours of Canada? Would that not go a long way towards stopping this method of fishing?

Mr. HAZEN. Most of the steam trawlers at present operating, land their fish in the United States for United States markets.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Two were operating on the coast of Nova Scotia last year and landing fish at Canso.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Operating off Antigonish county.

Mr. HAZEN. While the subject is practically a new one to me, it is well worthy of consideration, and I shall consult with the officials especially charged with the duty of protecting the fisheries with a view to protecting the interests of our fishermen.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am afraid the minister has not realized the great importance of this question to the fishermen. Holding the views that he does in regard to it I would be afraid he would not take any very extreme or active steps in order to prohibit this mode of fishing in Canadian waters. I would refer the minister to a discussion which took place last year when proofs were adduced that this mode of fishing is really destructive to fish life, and that it is impossible for the line and net fishermen to carry on business in the same waters with a steam trawler. I would not like to accept the theory that steam trawling has not injured the fishing in the North Sea. My view is that it has. Investigations have been held in Great Britain and there is a great deal of literature on the question. The British government have gone so far as to employ trawlers of their own to operate in the North Sea and have tabulated the results, showing the large quantities of small and immature fish caught by the trawlers that had to be thrown overboard because they were too small to be placed on the market. Evidence of that kind was placed on 'Hansard' last session.

This mode of fishing has only commenced in the United States. The theory prevailed for many years that the bottom of the sea on the coasts of the United States and Canada were too rough to enable trawlers to operate in our waters. Only a few days ago I received a copy of a resolution moved by Mr. Gardner, of Massachusetts, in the Congress at Washington in regard to this matter. The resolution reads:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

1. That the Commissioner of Fisheries be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation into the method of fishing known as beam trawling and to report to Congress whether or not this method of fishing is destructive to the fish species or is otherwise harmful or undesirable.

Sec. 2. That in the event that the Commissioner of Fisheries finds this method of fishing to be destructive, harmful, or undesirable he shall recommend to Congress such legislation as he may deem necessary.

Sec. 3. That an appropriation is hereby authorized for carrying into effect the provisions of this resolution.

Thus it will be seen that this is a live question in the United States, and in Washington last year I found a great deal of interest taken in it by members of Congress representing districts along the coast. As far as I could judge the sympathy was altogether in favour of standing by the shore fishermen and prohibiting trawling altogether on the coast of the United States. If my hon. friend (Mr. Hazen) will continue the correspondence that has been opened with Washington, he will find a good deal of sympathy there in regard to the abolition of this mode of fishing on the coast. It is only now when it is commencing that it can be stopped. If it is true that it has been destructive in the North sea, it should certainly be stopped here before it becomes established, and before large amounts of capital are invested in it.

I do not wish to make this a controversial question, although certain members of the opposition last year—now on the Speaker's right did endeavour to raise trouble about it in that way; but I will say to my hon. friend that if he can devise any means of dealing with this question, I feel that I can say for my colleagues on this side of the House that he will have their cordial support.

FISHERY PROTECTION SERVICE ON PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (Comox-Atlin) moved:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence and reports between Capt. Newcombe and the Marine and Fishery Department, relating to the patrol and protection service for fisheries on the Pacific coast?

He said: This is not the first time that this subject has been before the House. In 1906 when I had the honour of being a member of this House, the question of the protection of the fisheries of the Dominion, and especially of the Pacific coast, was under discussion. To my mind, this is a very important question, and worthy of the most careful consideration of the House. The fisheries of this Dominion, and especially of the Pacific coast, are of exceeding value. I find that last year the fisheries of the whole Dominion were valued at $29,629,169. Of that sum the fisheries of the Pacific coast contributed $10,314,755, considerably over one-third of the total value of all the fisheries of the Dominion. What I want especially to draw attention to is the inadequate patrol service that is given on the Pacific coast, especially in British Columbia. I understand that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is fully alive to this question, and I sincerely trust that he will see that a proper protection service is placed upon that coast, sufficient to protect adequately this great national asset. I think that every hon. member of this House who is aware of the conditions will admit that there is, and has been for a number of years past, a very inadequate service provided on that coast. It was in 1904, I think, that the first urgent demand was made for a protective service. In 1906 it appears that there were 52 foreign vessels poaching in waters that rightly belong to this Dominion, and it is estimated that they made an illegal catch of 41,664,329 lbs. of fish, which is valued at 5 cents a lb. I want the House to understand that I am now especially referring to halibut fishing on that coast. The value of fish caught that I have already mentioned, is estimated at $2,083,216. In 1906 we find that over 200 foreign vessels, that is, other than British or Canadian bottoms, were poaching in those waters, and it is estimated that the average catch since then has been 65,000,000 lbs. to say nothing about the possible 20,000,000, or 25,000,000 lbs. of edible fish which are thrown away and do not reach the markets. I think these figures will convince the House of the great importance of this question, and I trust they will interest every hon. member, whether he represents a fishing district or not. It is, I say, a national asset of very great importance, which the government ought to use every endeavour adequately to protect.

Now the boats which are chartered for this fishery protective service are absolutely inadequate for the purpose. They are boats which do not make more than eight or ten knots an hour, and they are not properly equipped to cope with the up-to-date boats that are employed in the poaching business. These latter boats are well equipped with wireless, whereby they may keep in touch with each other, and are able to evade the protective service that has been paid for by this government during the last two or three years. I sincerely hope that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see to it that we have at least three thoroughly up-to-date steamers employed on that service, steamers which are able to make at least 15 to 18 knots an hour, thoroughly equipped with wireless, and able to cope successfully with the illegal fishing. Now I do not propose to go back and discuss the different treaties governing this fishing. I understand that the treaty of 1818 which gives us our proper rights and that it was only in 1909 that it was put into force, I think the treaty of 1818 ought to be henceforth rigorously carried out, but to my mind the service that has been employed on that coast for the last two or three years has not mended matters a particle.

Prior to that treaty being enforced our own Canadian fishermen were allowed to catch and sell bait to the foreign fishermen who were then coming into our waters. As it is now, without any protection on the coast of British Columbia, these poachers come in and immediately set about preparing their nets and other equipment to catch their own bait in our bays and inlets and with that bait they catch fish in our waters. My own personal opinion is that, with boats properly equipped, the fishery protection service should not be under the control of the navy. It should be a separate service and the officers in charge of the vessels should be guided by their own judgment and not be hampered by a command to be at a certain point at a certain time. With a proper service these foreign boats that are now poaching would be absolutely driven from our Canadian waters and put out of business. I sincerely trust that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that a vote is placed in the estimates for a service to assist in protecting British subjects in the enjoyment of the fisheries of our own waters. If these poachers are not allowed to fish illegally within the three mile limit, if they are driven from our bays so that they cannot clean, dress and pack their fish, they will be absolutely put out of business. It will take a good deal of money to equip a fleet of steamers for this protective service, but when you consider the importance of this great asset and the fact that British Columbia is contributing more than a third of the total product of the fisheries of this Dominion, I think you will admit that it is a service that ought to be equipped at the earliest possible moment. I have much pleasure in stating to the House that I understand the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is thoroughly alive to the importance of this question. There is one other matter in connection with that service which I think is very important, and that has reference to the establishment and operation of wireless telegraph stations along the coast. I understand that at the present time wireless stations are under the control of the naval service. I think it would be much better if that policy were changed and if proper wireless stations were equipped along the coast, not altogether as an aid to the fishery protection service, but from the public standpoint as well as from the protective standpoint. I do not wish to detain the House because I know that my associates from British Columba are far more conversant with this vast subject than I am. I am only speaking from the knowledge which I have gained from having resided in British Columbia, and from what I have learned as to the extent and importance of the fisheries there, and I can only repeat that I sincerely trust that this House, and especially the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, will give this very important question careful consideration. If time would permit I would take up the consideration of the salmon, herring, and other fisheries of that province, but I do not propose to discuss them at the present moment. I think that many suggestions could be offered to the minister with respect to the fisheries other than the halibut fishery to which I have especially referred in my remarks.

There are many things that could be done in the interests of our own actual fishermen. The legislation which has been enforced during the last few years has operated greatly to the detriment of white, Canadian fishermen in that province and some very drastic change must be made if we want to ensure to the actual, white fisherman, the rights to which he is entitled and which he does not enjoy at the present time. It is not in the interest of this Dominion, or of the province, that Japs should engage in the fisheries in the manner in which they are now permitted to do. I could give you many reasons for that opinion, but the question is such a broad one that it would take many hours to discuss it. But, they are depriving the actual white fisherman in that province of his rights.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of a regulation prohibiting Oriental fishermen from fishing in the waters of the Pacific coast?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think I can give the hon. gentleman the information that that question will be dealt with at an early date and in a proper manner. Our actual fishermen are deprived of the rights which belong to them. I could go on and discuss many subjects outside of the Asiatic question with reference to the rights of our own white fishermen. I beleive that the large streams of the province of British Columbia should be thrown open to the actual white fisherman whereby he may save those rights which belong to him and which he does not enjoy at the present time. Licenses are to-day granted to actual white fishermen, but, they do not control those licenses. They are controlled by corporations, but, while I believe that vested interests should be protected, I also believe that the white fisherman, the fisherman who pulls an oar, should have the right to catch and sell fish to the canners or in the market which will give him the best value for it. He does not have that right to-day, especially in the waters of the Pacific coast. I should like to go on and discuss many other items in connection with this question, but I know that my associates who have lived in the province for many years and who are more familiar with it than I am, will have something to say with regard to it and therefore I do not propose to say very much more on the subject. I only trust that the minister will give every consideration to the remarks which I have addressed to the House this afternoon on this very important question.

Mr. GEORGE H. BARNARD (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, as this is a question in which I have taken an active interest, I would not like to have a vote taken upon the resolution without saying a word or two in corroboration of what has been stated by my hon. friend from Comox-Atlin (Mr. Clements).

He has covered all the ground so far as the question of poaching is concerned so fully that there is very little that I can add. That poaching exists and has existed for a number of years, and that it has existed unchecked can hardly be denied. It has become so open, that it is a common thing to take up a daily newspaper, published in the city of Seattle in the state of Washington, and to find there items reporting the catches taken by American vessels along the coast of British Columbia, and in particular on the coast of Vancouver island. It is also an ordinary thing to read in the American newspapers that certain vessels are being constructed for the express purpose of going into this business. It has become also common to read the reports of the officials of the Marine and Fisheries Department saying that they are unquestionably unable, with the means at their command, to cope with this abuse. It is common to find the passenger steamers engaged in the coasting trade along the shores of British Columbia coming into port and reporting that they had seen here and there in the different ports along the coast numbers of American vessels using Canadian harbours. It was stated on one occasion, I remember, by the captain of one of these coasting vessels, that the lights of the American fishing schooners in one of the ports of Vancouver island seemed like the lights in the streets of a city. In addition to this, the poachers have become so bold that last year they actually at the point of the rifle drove the men off the Canadian salmon traps and stole the fish. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not a nice sort of thing for Canadians to contemplate. Of course, altogether apart from the wasteful methods of these poachers, it puts the people of the province of British Columbia and the people of the whole Dominion in a humiliating position to think that they have a valuable asset in the fisheries of that coast which they are unable to protect. I may say, apropos of the wasteful methods of these poachers that it is a fact that in numbers of cases the halibut beds are being rapidly depleted and that the average size of the fish has dropped from about one hundred pounds to twenty pounds. Now so far as I can ascertain there have been no efforts on the part of the government of Canada to protect the Pacific coast fisheries. The steamer 'Kestrel' which has now been scrapped was until last summer the vessel upon which the department directly relied for the prevention of this poaching. Well, Mr. Speaker, you might as well try to catch a canary bird by putting salt on its tail as to try to catch one of these gasoline poachers with the 'Kestrel.' During the past six or seven years there have been I think, only three or four of these vessels caught, notwithstanding the fact that poaching has become a regular line of trade, in the neighbourhood of the city of Seattle, and the ports of Puget Sound, in British Columbia waters. About two years ago a vessel called the 'Levi Woodbury,' was seized and condemned, and I am advised on pretty good authority that she was afterwards released by the late government on payment of a fine of $50, because the vessel was reported to be owned by a friend of the then administration. In addition to the 'Kestrel' there are one or two small boats engaged for the ostensible purpose of preventing poaching, and there have been from time to time a couple of whaling boats chartered in addition to a boat called the 'William Joliffe,' but all of these are absolutely unfit for the purpose they are intended for. Since 1907, the year it may be remembered before the general election, there has been an appropriation annually in the estimates for the building of a fishery protection cruiser, but no fishery protection cruiser has ever materialized. The late administration seemed to be somewhat of the opinion that that item in the estimates was going to prevent our American friends from taking the fish, but curiously enough it has not had that effect. Now, Mr, Speaker, I want to say to this House that these fisheries are worth protecting. Professor Prince has made a report on the Pacific coast fisheries, in which he says they are probably the finest fisheries belonging to any one country anywhere in the world. He also says that they are unique in regard to the fact that they are wholly within protected waters, and that they can be operated with more safety and less loss of life than is experienced in connection with the fisheries on the Atlantic coast. That shows, Sir, that these fisheries are an asset which it is well worth our while protecting. I venture to say that the cost of properly protecting these fisheries will be more than amply repaid by the saving to the country in the fish which would otherwise be poached. I am glad to see that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has provided in the estimates for this year for the building of two or more cruisers. I would like to impress on him the absolute necessity there is for getting these cruisers into commission as soon as possible. I would also suggest to him that these cruisers be built in the province of British Columbia, if that can be done. I do not see any reason why they should not be built in that province. We find that the Canadian Pacific railway, and other large concerns are building vessels in British Columbia, and there can be no reason why the Dominion government should not also do so. It may be said that it would cost a little more to build a vessel on the Pacific coast than in this part of Canada. I would point out that the late administration did not find that an objection, for they were committed to the principle of encouraging shipbuilding in Canada even though they had to pay more than if the ships were built in the old country. In connection with their naval policy, when they called for tenders for the ships it was provided that they should be built in Canada, although they would probably cost thirty per cent more than if built in England. If it is a good thing for Canada that we should pay this increased cost for the benefit of having ships built on the Atlantic coast, it would be equally good for the country to have these ships built on the Pacific coast, so as to establish the industry there, even though they should cost fifty per cent more. I trust the minister will at a very early date give out the contracts for these fishery protection cruisers, and that when he does so he will endeavour to have them built in British Columbia.

Mr. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver). Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Comox-Atlin (Mr. Clements), for bringing this question before the House. It is a very important and burning question on the Pacific coast. We have felt very keenly the inattention and negligence of the former administration in regard to our deep-sea fisheries, and wish to take advantage of this opportunity to place ourselves on record, as supporters of the government, in favour of adequate protection for those fisheries. The natural physical features of the Pacific coast lend themselves to the abuse of this great industry, particularly to poaching. At the present time poaching is carried on to such an extent that we might almost as well have our fisheries under the control of our American friends in Puget Sound. Between two and three hundred American boats leave Puget Sound constantly to fish in our waters, whereas our own fishermen have only six or seven. This could not be, but for the fact that, by our policy, we permit American fishermen to receive shelter, to purchase bait, to clean their fish, and to do other things necessary to the life of the industry. Were we to enforce the law as it should be enforced, very few of these boats could fish in our waters, because they would be too far from their ports to carry on the business successfully. As you know, it is necessary for the fishing boats, especially those engaged in the halibut industry, to go into harbour to put their fish in shape, owing to the stormy nature of the sea. This great fishing industry of the Pacific coast belongs peculiarly to the Canadian people, and I believe our laws should be enforced in such a way as to protect the interests of our own people in that industry. Reference has already been made to the kind of protection we have at present. We have two old boats, the 'Quadra' and the 'Kestrel,' which are the laughing stock of the fishing people of the Pacific coast. They never were adequate, they never had any speed, they have never been able to catch up to the average fishing boat on the coast. Consequently, as years went by, the American fishermen came to ignore entirely the presence of these fishery cruisers, or protectors, as they are falsely called. What we require on the Pacific coast is at least three fairly large fishery cruisers of a type similar to that of the American fishing boats, of 100 tons burden, and of a speed of at least 15 knots an hour. If we had boats of that type it would not be long before the poachers would find their business to be so unprofitable that they would leave our fisheries alone. We should also have stationed at all the harbours along the coast, where these American boats are wont to come, a number of officials who could advise the cruisers what boats had been illegally in any of these harbours. It would cost very little to have these officials, and I recommend it to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There are men living at these harbours who have other means of support, and who would be willing, for $12 or $15 a month, to watch these American poachers, and give information concerning them. This fishery protection service should be placed under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the fishery superintendent. I understand that at the present time it is under the Canadian Naval Department. Without any desire to reflect too severely on the hon. gentlemen opposite who inaugurated the Canadian navy, I think I speak the sentiments of the people of the Pacific coast when I say, that the Canadian navy is regarded there as a joke, and I do not think that department should administer the fishery protection service. I think it would be far better administered directly under the Minister of Marine and Fisheries through his superintendents, who understand the requirements of the business. I would like to impress on the House the importance of this question. We are in the habit, in the eastern part of Canada, of regarding the resources of our country, which lie at considerable distances from the centres of population and activity as so remote as to be worthy of very little attention. I wish to tell this House that the fishery industry on the Pacific coast is of vital importance to the whole Dominion of Canada, and not simply as a source of revenue to the country. As we have pointed out, our fisheries in British Columbia produced last year over $10,000,000. To give some idea of the growth of the industry, I will give some figures of the product of the fisheries of Canada and British Columbia, respectively, at different periods:

	Canada.	British Columbia.
1876	$11,000,000	$105,000
1889	21,000,000	5,300,000
1906	29,000,000	10,000,000

Had our policy been such as to conserve the fisheries of the Pacific coast, I believe that their product would have reached the value to-day of $20,000,000. There is no question in my mind that, within the next five years, the value of this product will easily double, especially in view of the fact that, as I understand, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is inclined seriously to take this question up and deal with it on its merits.

I wish to draw attention briefly to a most remarkable change which has come over the personnel of the fishermen of the Pacific coast. Ten or twelve years ago that business was carried on almost exclusively by white men and a few Indians. In 1889 there were between 9,000 and 10,000 white men and Indians, mostly white men, engaged in the business. At the present time it is a rare thing to see a white man working at it.

On the contrary, we have upwards of 10,000 Japanese engaged in this business. I submit, Sir, that it is an outrage to the people of Canada that such a condition should have been allowed to develop under our very eyes. Yet it is the direct result of the immigration policy we have had under the late administration during the recent years. Possibly people in the east may think that this is an insignificant matter but I would point out to them the fact that this industry, one of the most prosperous in the Dominion, has practically passed entirely into the hands of aliens, and these aliens belong to a race which is making great progress in their home land, and is developing one of the most progressive foreign policies of any nation in the world. All you have to do is to take a map, and examine the centres of activity of the Japanese, and you will find that their activities extend from Japan, around the north by the Aleutian islands, down the Pacific coast of British Columbia, Oregon and California, thence through Mexico to the South American continent. Wherever any commercial advancement is to be gained, you will find the Japanese. I have no quarrel with them for extending their business activities, but the people of British Columbia have been protesting during many years, and are protesting even more seriously to-day, against our government allowing these people to invade our shores and take control of one of the most profitable industries we have at present. Just see the effect of this influx on the life of British Columbia. If we have not sufficient white labour to take hold of this fishing industry, and other lines of business, it is because the class of people from whom we should draw that labour has been kept out of our country by the immigration laws we have had in force the last fifteen years which permit the immigration of Orientals. Take the fish-curing industry, under proper conditions that ought to be carried on by the boys and young men growing up in the families of white fishermen, but as that supply is to-day lacking, we are obliged to call in the assistance of Japanese and other Orientals. The same thing applies to other lines. Take the domestic help problem, you have all no doubt heard of the scarcity of domestic help on the Pacific coast. What is the reason? It is because the class of people from whom we otherwise would draw our domestic help has been kept out of the country and we have become entirely dependent on these Orientals. And what is to become of our merchant marine, if we allow this condition to continue? Hitherto we have drawn the masters of our vessels sailing into the port of Vancouver largely from the families of fishermen in the maritime provinces. It is from that source that we have obtained the captains, mates and sailors of vessels in our merchant marine. But, under our immigration policy, instead of our encouraging the building up of a class of people from whom we could draw our seamen for our commercial marine, we are encouraging an alien race, from which we can never expect to get the class of men best fitted to command and man our vessels, and we shall be dependent on a class on whom we can never rely, and who cannot fail to be a detriment to our Canadian interests in time of need. Hon. gentlemen opposite have advanced a policy of building up in Canada the nucleus of a Canadian navy? We have heard hon. members from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick tell us that the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast was in a most deplorable condition. That on the Pacific coast is in a still worse condition, and it is being monopolized by aliens. Consequently we have no white men brought up on the sea and competent to man our vessels, and have to depend on boys taken from the interior who never saw the sea. And, of course, you cannot expect 'land-lubbers' to make good seamen. Recently the 'Rainbow' cast anchor in the harbour of Comox and had not sufficient men to lift it again; most of them having deserted. You cannot expect boys, who have never seen the sea, to take willingly to it. As far as a Canadian navy is concerned, I am opposed to the policy of the late administration, but I would ask hon. members opposite where they expected to get men to man their navy, unless they were going to depend on Admiral Togo to run their navy department and have their cruisers manned by Japanese. That would be the only solution, under the policy of the late administration.

Not only has the immigration policy which we have followed with regard to Asiatics been most injurious to our country, but we have had, under the late administration, any amount of political jugglery in the handling of licenses. It is notorious that licenses were granted on the Pacific coast for $50 each to individuals who had no claim to them except on the ground that they were political friends of the party in power. And these favoured individuals resold those licenses at $1,500 to Japanese, or they would go into partnership with Japanese fishermen and share in the profits. It was high time indeed that such political jugglery was stopped.

Another point to which I wish to draw attention is this. In order to give the Japanese the right to obtain fishing and other licenses, a system of naturalization was inaugurated on the Pacific coast. Under which any lawyer could go into court with a list of Japanese names, and take out naturalization papers by the wholesale. Yet, at that very time, these aliens still retained their allegiance to the Mikado of Japan. If we are serious in granting these naturalization papers, we must also grant the right to vote; but I would not like to stand up at any meeting in British Columbia and advocate giving the franchise to the Japanese or any other Orientals. Every hon. member will agree with me that it would be most inadvisable to give these Orientals, who are alien to us in every respect, any voice in our politics. You give them the naturalization papers, you would not dare to give them the vote, you simply give them the naturalization papers to enable them to get control of our natural resources which belong to our own citizens. The whole thing is a contradiction and the method and the policy of the late government has been condemned by their own procedure.

In 1889 the canners paid for fish on the Fraser river, 25 cents a fish, and canned salmon sold for 3 tins for a quarter, or at least 2 for a quarter. In 1909, 10 years later, the fishermen were paid 10 and 12 cents per fish and canned salmon sold at 20 cents a tin. Some people will argue that the canner on the Pacific coast cannot afford to pay the fishermen a price which will induce white men to fish. I say that is absolutely false and these figures I have quoted prove it. To say that the canners cannot afford to pay white fishermen is absolute twaddle of the most ridiculous kind.

We should have, as far as possible, free trade in fishing licenses on the Pacific coast. I do not think we should create a monopoly of the fishing business. Take, for instance, the herring fishery. Only a certain number of licenses are issued at $50 a license, with the result that these licenses are farmed out and sold for from $1,000 to $1,500. In other words, you create a monopoly of exceedingly great value. I believe the Minister of Marine should control the issuing of these licenses in such a way that the government would get the unearned increment if there is any; there should be a royalty on the licenses which would bring the government a handsome revenue. If that license is worth $1,500 to a man on the Pacific coast it is worth $1,500 to the Dominion government. Any benefit of this kind should accrue to the state and not to some political heeler.

Let us take the halibut fishery. I intimated that halibut was one of the most profitable classes of fishing we had, and yet it is one from which our fishermen on the Pacific coast derive the least advantage. I read from the Year Book of the British Columbia government which, I think, is accurate on these matters. It says:

> The halibut industry on the Pacific coast had its inception about 20 years ago, and for many years it languished, as there was but a limited local demand and the existing means of transport did not permit shipment to the eastern markets which, moreover, were then well supplied from the Atlantic fisheries. But conditions changed, the centres of population moved westward, the Atlantic catch declined, the cold storage system and fast freight service came into use, and Pacific halibut became a leading feature in the fresh fish markets of the east. On the Pacific coast, the history of the industry is reversed, for the production rose from 6,877,640 pounds in 1899, to 21,706,000 pounds in 1909, over twelve times the total Atlantic catch. The bulk of the halibut fishing is done by vessels outfitted at Seattle and Tacoma, in the State of Washington, but a great deal of their fishing is done in Canadian water, notably in Hecate strait.

It is a disputed point between the Canadian and American authorities whether Hecate strait is neutral or Canadian water. We claim it is Canadian water. But the Dominion government some years ago granted a privilege to the New England Fish Company, an American corporation, which practically admits that Hecate strait is neutral or open water. They granted to this company the privilege of shipping its fish through Canadian ports in bond to the eastern markets. The reason the New England Fish Company wanted that privilege was, that if they could run into Vancouver they were fifteen hours nearer the American market than at Seattle. This is a great advantage. It will be realized at once that in the transportation of fresh fish this is an advantage that should be reserved to the Canadian people to whom it by right belongs. It has been claimed by supporters of the late government that this concession was distinctly an advantage to Vancouver. I contend it is not because this fishing company have been able to control the market to such an extent that the Canadian fishermen have not been able to go into the fishing business in Vancouver. I will explain how this is brought about. When the New England Fish Company bring fish into Vancouver the choice fish is shipped to the American markets, but in fishing for heavy fish, like halibut, there is always some soft or bruised fish which it is impossible to ship to the eastern market, these fish are dumped on the local market. Hon. members will say that, according to the regulations, they are not permitted to sell in Vancouver or on the local market. To overcome that they place these inferior fish in cars, and bill them out to Bellingham. But in many cases the cars would not leave Vancouver. The freight and duty would be paid and then they would be sold in the market at Vancouver as A-1 fish. In some cases, these fish are actually sent out of the country, but they are shipped back in the same cars. This practice has gone on for many years. If this privilege had not been granted to the New England Fish Company, Canadian companies would have sprung up who could have shipped fish through as the New England Fish Company does to the markets on the Atlantic coast. It is true they would have had to pay a duty of a cent a pound on going into the American markets, but my contention is that the natural advantage we enjoy on the Pacific coast, if the laws were enforced, would more than offset the one cent a pound duty. We have a great natural advantage in having our harbours 15 hours nearer the market, and this more than offsets the handicap of a one-cent per pound duty. So I say that the regulation or privilege that was extended to the New England Fish Company is inimical to the best interests of the Canadian fishermen on the Pacific coasts, and I trust that the Minister of Marine and the present government will see their way clear to cancel that permit and to secure a more thorough enforcement of the laws on the Pacific coast.

I wish to say a few words on the whaling industry of the Pacific coast. This is also a most profitable industry. I am quite aware that whaling must be carried on on the high seas, but if whales can be caught contiguous to a whaling station, it stands to reason, they can be handled more profitably than if they had to be carried several hundreds or thousands of miles. On the Pacific coast we have had considerable returns from the whaling in-industry. I have here in this report of the British Columbia government, a recommendation to which I would call the attention of the Dominion government.

Whalers, operating in the sea of Japan and Behring sea, do a considerable trade in whale meat, which is extensively used for food in Japan. Instead of converting the 'beef' into fertilizer it is salted and in this form commands a better price. The importation of whale meat into Japan amounts to over two million pounds annually, representing a value of over $50,000. Pickled whales' tails are estimated a delicacy in Japan, and large quantities are shipped from this coast.

About two-thirds of the whales captured are cow-whales, either with suckling calves, or with young unborn, the females being broader across the body and slower in movement, as well as yielding more oil, are more easily captured than the males.

This and the fact that whales are hunted at all seasons, should induce the authorities to adopt reasonable restrictive measures for the preservation of these valuable creatures. The indiscriminate slaughter of whales in the North sea, the Atlantic, and Gulf of St. Lawrence, has practically destroyed the industry in those waters, and without protection the same thing is likely to occur on this coast.

I am informed by men who live on the coast that the practice prevails of capturing the young calf whale, harpooning and anchoring it at the shore, and waiting till the mother whale comes up, seeking its release, when both are slaughtered together. I say that is a practice absolutely inhuman and should not be tolerated in a civilized country. If this whaling industry is going to last for any time it must be conserved. I am told that the profits from whaling amounts to from twenty to forty per cent. Now it can easily be seen that in consequence of such methods the whaling industry in a few years will be totally extinct. I trust the present government will take these things into consideration, and if it be necessary to do so, take the question up with other nations who are interested, and see that the whaling industry on the Northern Pacific coast is adequately protected, and that such inhuman and unreasonable methods of fishing, as I have described, should be put a stop to. From every standpoint the fishing industry is one that the government should endeavour to conserve, both from the standpoint of revenue, and the standpoint of building up a population on the Pacific coast which will constitute a bulwark for the Dominion of Canada. For the prairie provinces it is essential that they should have a port on the Pacific coast, if their development is going to be what they hope it will be. If the Pacific coast is going to be of any use to Canada then it must be under the direct control and dominance of our own countrymen, people of our own race and sentiment, of our own religion, morals and national ideas. I do not think that we should any longer permit the present condition to obtain, and continue to issue licenses to Japanese and Chinese, thereby fostering a policy which has already proved most suicidal to the fisheries. It is necessary for our future welfare that we build up on the Pacific coast a population which will be a credit to Canada, and a bulwark to this Dominion; and permit me to say in conclusion, that I think the time is not far distant when the Dominion and the empire will need a bulwark on the Pacific coast.

Mr. F. H. SHEPHERD (Nanaimo). I have no hesitation in endorsing every word that has been uttered by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barnard). They laid great stress upon the fact of the inadequate patrol of the fisheries on the Pacific coast. I am credibly informed that when the present patrol is out of sight, on the south and west coasts of Vancouver island, which is partly in my constituency, no less than from 200 to 300 vessels of various descriptions are waiting to enter the protected zone and to poach in our Canadian fisheries. I am pleased to hear that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has consented to a very substantial appropriation for the establishment of an efficient patrol service for the protection of our fisheries. I might also add that it would serve a very good purpose on the west coast of Vancouver Island, which is known probably as the most disastrous locality to the mercantile marine on the Pacific coast, and which has become known as the graveyard of the mercantile business—I say that an efficient patrol service might well be used as an aid to the present life-saving service. My friends and colleagues from British Columbia have pretty well covered the ground, but there is one thing I would like to draw attention of hon. members to. It is not the salmon fisheries or the larger fisheries in which I am particularly interested, but it is the herring fishery. The town of Nanaimo my home town is the home of the herring industry, and I regret to say that this industry is entirely in the hands of Japanese fishermen. I want also, to criticise the method of issuing licenses which has been heretofore in vogue for herring fisheries, and which has been much abused. I am credibly informed, although this is a hard matter to prove, that licenses given to white people have been farmed out to Japanese fishermen for a consideration, ranging all the way from $750 to $1,500. As I say, this is difficult to prove, but it is generally believed to be a fact. It is an easy matter for the white man who has got a license to establish, at least ostensibly a half interest or otherwise with Japanese fishermen. After the 21st of September last when I was elected to represent the constituency of Nanaimo, I was requested to thoroughly investigate the question of issuing licenses for the herring fisheries. I did so in conjunction with the local inspector, and we made a thorough investigation into the method of issuing licenses. The result of that investigation was to convince me that the process at present in vogue has resulted in a great number of these licenses being transferred from white men to Japanese in an illicit manner, and consequently I recommended that these licenses should be refused to other than bona fide operators which has accordingly been done. I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has this matter in hand will carefully look into the matter and see that this scandal with regard to the issuing of fishery licenses is removed. I am of the opinion which has been expressed by the hon. member for Comox-Atlin (Mr. Clements), that these fishery licenses should be given to the actual fishermen themselves and only to them. Fish is the people's food and should be as free as the air. At present the licenses fall into the hands of corporations and combinations of capitalists, so that the poor fishermen stand but a slim chance of gaining a livelihood out of the fishing industry. I believe it is contrary to the British fishery law to refuse a license to any applicant offering to pay the fee. I will quote a few words from the British Fishery Act of 1865, which I do not think has been since amended in any way so as to alter the principle laid down.

All persons demanding to purchase licenses, and tendering to any person appointed by the board to distribute the same the amount of license duty to be paid under the provisions of this Act, shall be entitled to receive the same without any question or objection whatsoever.

Now, is there any reason why such a permit or license should be withheld from our fishermen on the Pacific coast, or anywhere else? Reverting to the question of the patrol, some of my colleagues from British Columbia have dwelt more particularly upon the need of better prevention against poaching in our waters. But we have another patrol, which is the inside patrol, whose duty it is to deal with the offenders against the stipulations of the Fishery Act. In my town of Nanaimo there is stationed the patrol 'Alcedo,' which has a speed of about 8 knots an hour, while every Japanese fishing launch in that harbour has a greater speed, and every one of those launches is fitted up with powerful searchlights. One of these launches always remains constantly in sight of the 'Alcedo,' and when the 'Alcedo' gets up steam for the purpose of going out to patrol the fisheries, by a system of telegraphy and signals the news is flashed to every other launch in the vicinity. It follows, consequently, that as the government patrol is a slow boat, comparatively, she is unable to overtake the illicit poaching vessels. I believe that the government patrol vessels should be obliged to carry a searchlight, but in point of fact she has none; and when we referred the matter to the proper authorities we were simply told that a searchlight was not necessary. I think that not only is a searchlight necessary, but that the patrol, both inside and outside, should be of such speed that no other fishing vessel should be allowed to get away, and evade the law in this manner. With regard to persons to whom the licenses should issue, I am of opinion that every man who pulls an oar should be granted a license, and should have an opportunity of disposing of his fish in the best market and at the best obtainable price. Now the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) put a question to the hon. member from Comox-Atlin, and while I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, if it is permissible for one member to answer a question put to another member, I would assure the hon. member from Guysborough that as far as I am concerned I would have no hesitation whatever in stating that I certainly would eliminate the Orientals from the fishing industry. Now the question of naturalizing the Japanese into British subjects and giving them the rights of citizenship will doubtless present some difficulties, if we are going to eliminate them from the fishing industry. However, I go so far as to say that not only in the fishing industry, but in every other industry of British Columbia where the Japanese or other Orientals enter into competition with our own workers, and notwithstanding anything in international law or international agreement, it is manifestly unfair to allow these Orientals to enter into competition with our white men.

Now, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say a word or two with regard to the Oriental question.

There is no quid pro quo. Our own people cannot engage in the fisheries or enter into any other industry in Japan or India. Therefore, the advantage is clearly on the side of the Asiatic and the present system is manifestly unfair to our own workers. I sincerely trust that the members of this House, will, without regard to party politics, endeavour to frame laws for this country such as will eventually tend to a white Canada. I do not know that I have anything further to say. The Oriental question will probably come up before this House at an early date and I shall then have more to say on the subject, but in the meantime I am thoroughly in accord with the sentiments which have been expressed here this afternoon. I trust that hon. members on both sides of this House will give us their support in our endeavour to eliminate some of the disadvantages under which our people are labouring on the Pacific coast.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon). Mr. Speaker, this is a question in which I am very much interested. I represent a territory adjoining the riding which is represented by my hon. friend from Comox-Atlin (Mr. Clements), and we derive our fish from the waters that lave the shores of northern British Columbia. I am informed by men who are competent to give an opinion that there are to-day in Hecate straits the most valuable halibut fisheries not only in Canada, but in the world, and if that is so—and I believe it is so—we have there a perennial asset which, it strikes me, it would be well for us as Canadians to conserve. The evidence which has been presented here this afternoon by gentlemen who represent constituencies in British Columbia is to the effect that American fishermen are invading our northern waters and taking the fish which are rightfully ours. Up to the present time we have not protected the fisheries in British Columbia. The fisheries of our country form an asset which, I think, has never been properly valued and the fisheries of the Pacific coast have not been properly investigated or protected. That is shown by the fact that the size of the halibut has been reduced from 100 pounds to 20 pounds as was mentioned by one hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon. That is a striking fact. If, in the few years which have elapsed since the fisheries in British Columbia began to be exploited, the size of the halibut has decreased from 100 pounds, it is a striking illustration of how these fisheries are being depleted. We are building the Transcontinental railway which has its Pacific terminals at Prince Rupert and nearly opposite are the valuable fishing grounds of Hecate straits. There are to-day fish companies who are putting in large investments of capital to care for the fish which shall eventually be taken in Hecate straits and transported to western Canada. We have west of here the prairie provinces which are being populated at a very rapid rate. Those provinces have practically no fisheries of their own except those of their lakes and rivers. The result is that in a very few years we are going to have a vast fish market in Canada, and in those prairie provinces particularly, and we have beyond the range of mountains on the Pacific coast the greatest halibut fisheries to be found anywhere. It is a matter that calls for the consideration of this parliament and the consideration of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) in order to see that these valuable fisheries are conserved. What about the fisheries that surround the coasts of the British Isles? These fisheries have existed since the time the Romans invaded Britain and they are still one of the greatest assets of the British Isles because there they pay particular attention to the conservation of that great national asset. Some one mentioned here this afternoon the value of training on our maritime province coasts men who can man a merchant marine. There is no doubt in my mind that the time is not far distant when we shall have again a great merchant marine not only in the maritime provinces, as we had in years gone by, but also on the Pacific coast as well. It is an important factor in the development of the country, particularly a country like ours which has a line of seacoast on the Atlantic as well as the Pacific, that we should have men who are capable of manning such a merchant marine as I think we may reasonably hope to have in a few years. The merchant marine upon the Pacific coast has not, up to the present time, been as important a factor as we would like to have had it, but time will change that. I am glad to know that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has placed a sum in the estimates sufficient to cover the purchase of boats to protect the great fisheries like those of Hecate straits and other parts of the British Columbia coast and which represent such a great national asset.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HAZEN. The House must have listened with pleasure and profit to the discussion we have had in regard to fishery matters in the province of British Columbia, and I believe the hon. member for Comox-Atlin (Mr. Clements) and the other gentlemen from British Columbia who have spoken in reference to this question, are entitled to the thanks of the House for the very great amount of information they have given us concerning these British Columbia fisheries. I would point out to my hon. friend from Comox-Atlin (Mr. Clements), that the motion as made would call for all letters written by Captain Newcombe upon the subject of the movements of the ship, and crew, and for all formal letters, and such a motion would cover a vast amount of correspondence. I presume that my hon. friend does not want all the papers that would be included in the scope of such a motion, and I would suggest that he let me know just what the papers are that he desires to have brought before the House, in order that there may be a time limit fixed, and then there would be no difficulty whatever in giving to my hon. friend at an early date the information he desires. I may say that the information the department has in its possession with regard to the fishery protection service in British Columbia waters is entirely in agreement with the views expressed by the hon. member for Comox-Atlin (Mr. Clements) and other hon. gentlemen from British Columbia. There is no doubt at all that the fisheries of British Columbia are a very great national asset. The fishing industry is a growing industry on the Pacific coast, and the fisheries of that province are increasing not only along the shores of the mainland and the adjoining islands, but also on both shores of the Queen Charlotte Islands, and on the west coast of the Island of Vancouver. There is no doubt whatever but that if these fisheries are carefully preserved and wise laws enacted to that end, and these laws fairly enforced, that the fisheries of British Columbia will be an increasing source of wealth to the country for very many years to come. From biblical times down to the present, fish has largely been the food of the people whose purses are not so large or so long as those of the wealthy classes. I think the universal opinion of this House would be that moneys expended for the purpose of protecting fisheries, and increasing them as a national asset by stocking with fish streams, and lakes and rivers that have been depleted, by unwise conduct in the past, would be well spent in the interests of the country. I am sure this House would not begrudge making appropriations of a generous character for that work. There is no doubt whatever that the money so expended, if wisely spent, will be returned to the people of Canada many times over in the increased wealth of their fisheries. I have said that the information which the department has at its disposal with regard to the protection of the fisheries in British Columbia agrees very largely indeed with the views which hon. gentlemen have expressed in this House this afternoon. The belief of the department is that the protection afforded to our fisheries, by the fishery protection service, within the three mile limit has been inadequate and inefficient. I may say in this connection that I do not think that the statement made to-day by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Shepherd) as to the tremendous amount of poaching that goes on within the three mile limit in the waters contiguous to British Columbia, is at all exaggerated or overdrawn. It might seem at first thought, that the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Shepherd), that sometimes several hundred vessels come within the three mile limit for the purpose of poaching on the wealth that belongs to the Dominion of Canada, was to some extent overdrawn. But the information received from official reports, and from the officers of the department, as well as from the members who represent British Columbia constituencies, and others who are interested in the fisheries there, would lead me to the conclusion that these statements have not been exaggerated in the least. It is my belief that up to the present time there has not been adequate protection to preserve these fisheries from the encroachments of those who have no right to fish in our waters within the three mile limit. It is my belief, also, that there has not been a sufficient patrol to enforce our laws within that three mile limit. Bearing that in mind, I would ask my hon. friends to look at the estimates submitted to the House for the present year and there they will see that provision is made for the better protection of the British Columbia fisheries. There is a vote taken in these estimates for two more vessels to be added to the protection fleet and also provision is being made for another vessel for the purpose of patrolling the waters. Criticism has been made to-day by one hon. gentleman on the fact that the Fishery Protection Service is at present under the control of the Naval Service Department, and it was said that it would be more effective if it were placed under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I have noticed a similar contention set up in a resolution which has been sent to me from a meeting of the Fishermens' Association of the county of Charlotte, New Brunswick, a county which has most extensive fisheries, in which are situated the islands of Grand Manan, Campobello, Deer Island and others, the population of which chiefly derive their living from the seas, Well, I am not very much impressed with the force of that argument. It must be remembered that the Naval Service Department is as much under the control of the Minister of the Marine and Fisheries Deparment as is the Marine and Fisheries branch itself, and I do not see how the service would be any better enforced under the one branch than under the other.

Every day the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is in consultation with the Deputy Head of the Naval Service, and there is no reason in the world why the fishery protection service should not be just as well administered where it now is, as if it were transferred to the Marine and Fisheries branch. Probably, one reason which caused the late government to place the fishery protection under the Department of Naval Affairs, is, that in a certain sense the fishery protection fleet is a militant fleet. It exists for the purpose of keeping poachers, chiefly our American friends, from coming into the waters of Canada, and therefore it would seem fitting that it should be under the naval service department. I may say that the Deputy Minister of the Naval Service is a gentleman who was previously deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and consequently he is thoroughly conversant with all matters affecting fishery protection, and I believe he is rendering excellent service in administering the affairs of the department subject to the control of the minister who is responsible to this House. In the estimates of this year there is an appropriation of $275,000 for additional vessels for the fishery protection fleet of British Columbia. It is hoped that with this money we will be able to purchase a vessel that will be able to go into commission at a very early date so as to be effective this year. Heretofore the protection cruisers employed in the waters of British Columbia have not been suited for the purpose. They were too slow, they were not able to move about quickly from one place to another in order to drive off the American poachers who, tempted by the wealth of our fisheries, paid no regard to our laws. It is to be hoped that with this vote we will be able to get two effective vessels to protect our fisheries and to drive off those who come within our waters to poach on the heritage of Canadians in those fisheries.

The service in the past has been performed by the Canadian government steamer the 'Kestrel', with the assistance of some smaller vessels. The steamer 'Kestrel" never will be fitted for the service, has been dismantled, and will shortly be sold. Negotiations are now proceeding for the purchase of a suitable vessel, and in addition it is proposed to ask for tenders at a very early date, as soon as the necessary funds are placed at our disposal by parliament, for the construction of a vessel which in point of size, speed equipment and everything else, will be well suited for the protection of our fisheries on the Pacific coast. One of the hon. gentlemen who addressed the House this afternoon expressed the hope that that vessel would be built in British Columbia. I sincerely hope that will be the case. It will largely depend on the tenders we receive from British Columbia. The tenders are open to all; but I agree with my hon. friend that it is well for us to have work of this kind performed by Canadian mechanics, so that the money will be spent among our people, provided the percentage of cost above the cost on the other side of the Atlantic is not too great to justify us in taking that course. That will have to be determined when the tenders are received. I hope that the result of those tenders will be that we can fairly and properly, having regard to the interests of Canada, have the vessel built in British Columbia, where its work will be, and where I believe people should be able to construct vessels on as favourable terms and conditions as in any other part of Canada. In the meantime, before that other vessel is constructed, something will have to be done for the protection of the fisheries, and an item of $50,000 will be found in the estimates submitted to the House by the Naval Department this year, for vessels to patrol the Pacific coast. It is intended to charter two whaling steamers to do the patrol work on the Pacific coast. These vessels it is calculated can be got at $100 a day, pending the construction of new vessels for the service. I trust that when these vessels are obtained and in commission, there will be very much less complaint about vessels from the United States and other countries coming and poaching in our waters and taking the fish which belong to the Canadian people. In addition to that, there is in the estimates of the Fisheries Department this year an item of $75,000 for the purpose of providing the cost of building a fisheries patrol steamer for British Columbia. The difference between the fisheries protection vessels which are under the control of the Naval Department and the fisheries patrol vessels is probably well known to hon. members. The primary object and purpose of the fisheries protection steamers is to protect our waters against smugglers. The object of the fisheries patrol steamers is to enforce the laws and regulations of the department with regard to our fisheries in those waters. In addition to the patrol work, it is absolutely necessary that the inspectors should have a boat which can go along the coast at a fair rate of speed and practically in all weathers, as there are no railways along the shore and no means of communication except what is afforded by vessels of this sort. The fisheries of the province are rapidly extending, not only along the main shore and the islands contiguous thereto, but as I said before both sides of the Queen Charlotte Islands and on the west coast of Vancouver Island. It is necessary to protect this great wealth, which will be much greater in the future, and therefore these vessels should be provided. When these plans are carried out, I think we shall have an effective protective service, and if it is not perfectly effective, I shall not hesitate to ask parliament for further provision to enable us adequately to protect the fisheries in the province of British Columbia.

My hon. friends from British Columbia this afternoon dealt with some other matters outside of the four corners of the resolution submitted to the House by my hon. friend from Comox-Atlin. There was a very general interesting discussion with regard to the fishery conditions that exist in British Columbia. While I do not want to draw general conclusions from insufficient data, and while my knowledge and experience of the department are as yet of such a character that I cannot speak with the authority that I would like, I believe there is reason for the very strong criticism indulged in by my hon. friends from British Columbia with regard to the fishery laws and regulations generally in that province. There was some discussion with regard to the issue of licenses. These licenses are issued by the department, and at $25 each. The British Columbian government exacts a license fee of a similar amount; and, according to the records of the department and the information I have obtained from the officials, it has been the habit in the past to grant these licenses to many people who are not fishermen and who are not connected with the fisheries on the Pacific coast. In some cases they have been granted to men engaged in mercantile life, sometimes to clerks in mercantile establishments. These men have obtained the licenses, not with the intention of embarking in fishing enterprises themselves, but for the purpose of selling them to those who did. In some cases licenses obtained from the government in this way for $25 have been sold for as high as $1,500. This year up to the present time no licenses have been issued. This is a matter which is engaging the attention of the department. The fishery officers of the department in British Columbia have been instructed not to issue licenses to the persons who obtains them last year, and who did not bona fide engage in the fishing industry. The whole question of these licenses is under consideration. I have had audiences on the subject with gentlemen from British Columbia, I have consulted the British Columbia government, and I have summoned here the inspector of British Columbia, so that there will be a full discussion of the whole matter with the view, if possible, of remedying the conditions which have been the subject of so much complaint for years. It seems to me indefensible that persons should be able to obtain a license for $25, and sell it again for a large sum of money without rendering any service therefor. If these licenses are worth these large sums of money, it is fair to consider whether we should not so arrange the issue of them that these large sums should come into the coffers of the Dominion, and not go into the pockets of private individuals who have rendered no value for them.

In New Brunswick, where we have valuable inland fisheries—salmon and trout fisheries suitable for angling—the practice is to lease them for periods of ten years, the lease being put up to auction, and granted to the highest bidders. Whether that be practicable in connection with the British Columbia fisheries, I am not prepared to say; but it is worth considering whether the country could not derive greater benefit from those extensive salmon, herring and other fisheries than by granting licenses at nominal prices to persons who simply get those licenses for the purpose of selling them out to others. There is one condition in connection with those British Columbia fisheries, which caused me a great deal of surprise and made me doubt whether hon. gentlemen opposite could have been aware of its existence. From the little study I have been able to give the subject, it seems to me that the fisheries of British Columbia have been administered in the interest of the canners and their establishments rather than that of the fishermen. While the canners have been protected by regulations in every possible way, the fishermen have been left to their own resources. In fact they have been absolutely hampered in their business. Every cannery has a certain number of licenses issued in connection with it. There is what is called a boat rating for every cannery. One cannery, for instance, is allowed 200 fishing boats, another 100, and so on, according to the size of the establishment, and outside of those licenses the fishermen are not allowed to pursue their calling. The canneries form practically a close corporation, and the regulations have been framed in the past for the protection of the canners and not at all in the interests of the fishermen. The other day there was brought to my attention a most extraordinary regulation. Under it the fishermen were absolutely prohibited from sending their fresh fish out of the country. They had to have their fish canned or smoked or they could not sell them outside the province. The effect of that regulation was this. A boat might catch 300 or 400 salmon, and on bringing its catch to the cannery would find a notice posted up to the effect that on that day the cannery would not take more than 100. One would think that the fisherman then could take his fish either to the American or some other market. No, under the regulation he was absolutely prohibited from doing so, so that he had to dump his extra supply—in some cases 200 or 300 salmon—back into the sea. Thus the catch was entirely lost to him, and no one else got any advantage from it. Under the law he had no right to throw his dead salmon back into the sea, but that was the easiest way of getting rid of them. Nor was he allowed to use them on land for the purpose of fertilizing. Were the law strictly enforced, all he could do would be to dig a hole in the ground and there bury his fish. Acting on the representations of representatives from British Columbia, endorsed by the officials of my department, on Saturday last I had that regulation repealed so that now the fishermen can send their fresh fish to other markets than to the canneries. The regulation we have repealed was probably passed years ago, before the fisheries were properly understood and when probably some wealthy men had sufficient influence to have this regulation made in their own interest. It was then continued in force from year to year until it became a serious scandal, and a great subject of grievance to the fishermen.

It is very desirable that the question of our fisheries should be fully discussed in this House. It is very desirable from the standpoint of the general public and also from that of the minister who is the responsible head of the department concerned, and also because such discussion cannot fail to attract attention to the fisheries of British Columbia and other parts of our country.

With reference to the whale fisheries, to which one hon. member from British Columbia has referred, that is a question which can only be dealt with by international arrangement. Whales are caught outside of the three mile limit—outside of waters which are within the territorial jurisdiction of Canada—and, therefore, any regulation for the preservation of those fisheries will have to be a matter of arrangement between the United States and Canada. In a report submitted a short time ago by Captain Bernier of the 'Arctic', he drew attention to the fact that these fish in the northern waters were becoming exterminated and would soon become a thing of the past if regulations were not made to prohibit the fishing and the selling of them for a number of years. I talked the matter over with the officials of my department and instructed them to take proper steps for the purpose of endeavouring to have an international arrangement come to with the United States and thus prevent valuable fisheries from becoming entirely destroyed.

I assure the House that the desire of the Marine and Fisheries Department is to afford as adequate protection as possible to the very valuable fisheries we possess in British Columbia, so that that great source of supply may not only be continued for years to come, but that the catch may be increased under such wise regulations as may commend themselves to our approval. The papers called for will be laid on the table, and I shall be happy at any time to discuss this interesting question with any of the representatives from British Columbia.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have listened this afternoon with great interest to the discussion regarding the fisheries on our Pacific coast. But two questions were raised by hon. members from British Columbia without drawing any comment from the hon. minister. Yet these questions have been discussed in that province for a number of years, and I understood were issues there in the recent election. The first one is the abolition of Oriental labour in connection with the prosecution of fisheries on the Pacific coast. That question was raised by a number of hon. gentlemen this afternoon, and the minister will remember that the prohibition of Oriental labour was advocated by them very strongly. The second question is the abolition of the bonding privilege which enables American fishing vessels to catch fish on the Pacific coast and enables the Canadian Pacific railway to carry that catch free of duty to the Boston market. The abolition of that bonding privilege also was advocated by supporters of this government during the recent election in the Pacific province and was strongly urged this afternoon. But I have not heard the hon. minister say what the policy of the government is on these two important questions.

Mr. HAZEN. I did not refer to what was said regarding the fishing by Japanese in the waters of British Columbia as I did not wish to do so until I had studied the question further, and felt I could speak on it with more authority than at present. The question is in a large measure an entirely new one to me. It is very important and far reaching, involving not only domestic and local conritions, but to some extent our international relations as well, and until I have had more time to study it, I would not feel warranted in giving expression to any decided opinion.

With reference to the bonding privilege, that is worthy of most careful consideration. It is a question that will be considered by the government in the very near future.

Everything relating to that very important asset, our fisheries on the Pacific coast, will have the most careful study at the hands of the government. The matter is one outside of party politics altogether, but none the less of great importance to the province of British Columbia and the other provinces as well, and I can assure the House that it will have at my hands the most serious consideration.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY BRANCH LINES ESTMERE TO BADDECK.

Mr. McKENZIE moved:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence and orders in council, relating to or in any way connected with the surveying and calling for tenders for the construction of the line of railway from Estmere to Baddeck, in the county of Victoria.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the question of the extension of branch lines of the Intercolonial Railway in Nova Scotia, has been brought before this House from time to time during the last 30 years. The result of the agitation carried on by members on both sides of politics has been an extension of only 90 miles of railway in Cape Breton. I need not point out that it is impossible to serve that country which is 125 or 150 miles long by from 80 to 90 miles wide with a straight single line of railway. It may be that the Minister of Railways and other members of the government do not understand that the Island of Cape Breton is practically two islands. It is cut in two by that magnificent body of salt water the Bras D'Or lakes, from the mouth of the Big Bras D'or to the St. Peter canal, at which point the two sections of the island are connected by a narrow isthmus of half a mile which is cut through by the St. Peter's canal. You have two large areas of land, one to the north and one to the south of the canal and a large salt water lake, in some places 25 miles wide, dividing them. The immense task has been attempted of serving these two bodies of land by one railway. The best possible course was adopted when that line of railway was run down through the centre crossing at the Grand Narrows, which is approached by a very substantial steel bridge, thus avoiding a ferry at that point. But we can never have a satisfactory or suitable service until there is a railway running through the northern island, and also through the southern end. We are glad to know that a desirable route on the southern side of St. Peter's has been surveyed, and if the road is extended as we hope it will be extended, down through Loch Lomond by Mira Valley and through to Lewisburg, that magnificent section of country will be served. Until that is done, that section will not get a proper service. We hear a great deal from hon. gentlemen from British Columbia, who put before this House the necessity and the great demand of their great province.

When I witness the zeal and determination with which those gentlemen present to this House the interests of their great province, I feel that we from the eastern part of Canada are far too timid, far too easily put off, and that we do not put the interest of the people of that part of the country before the House with that force of determination which are characteristic of our friends from the west, and from the province of British Columbia. We are proud to hear of the wealth of the fisheries in British Columbia. I come from the province of Nova Scotia, where we have a wealth of fisheries just as great, perhaps not as great in salmon, but a greater variety and better quality than they have even in British Columbia; and if it is necessary that they should have proper facilities to develop their fisheries, it is equally necessary that we should have them in the province of Nova Scotia. I was glad to hear the Prime Minister say a few days ago that his government intended giving facilities to the fisheries of Nova Scotia such as they never had before. Let me tell the Prime Minister that it is impossible for him to give us the proper means to develop the fisheries in Nova Scotia until he puts the great fishing points in touch with railway communication. It is unnecessary for me to tell the Prime Minister and the government that every year and every day the fresh fish of the Dominion are becoming more important, and any part of Canada that cannot compete in that great industry with regard to fresh fish is not in the race. It is the opinion of the best men in Nova Scotia engaged in the fishery that we cannot compete in the market until we are, from Yarmouth to Scattaree, put in touch with railway lines, and until the Department of Railways puts upon the Intercolonial and its branches refrigerator cars capable of catering to this trade. While we are dependent for the carrying of our fresh fish on freight trains and insufficiently equipped freight cars we are not in the race with other parts of the country and other parts of the continent who are looking after this trade. Now it is impossible for the government to develop this fish business until we have facilities with which to develop it. We have all along the coast of Nova Scotia, from Yarmouth to Scattaree, and from Scattaree to Cape North, and all around the gulf shore back to Cumberland again, the finest fisheries in the world. Let the Prime Minister and the government consider that all the railway facilities we have east of Truro is the Intercolonial, a straight line running straight through the country, and not touching the seacoast at any point except at the Strait of Canso; and it was shown the other day that at the Strait of Canso great advantage has been taken of the railway, that the fishing business has been profitable to the Intercolonial as well as to the people engaged in that great industry. I must point out to the government that at the Strait of Canso, where this traffic in fish has been carried on, the facilities which I have pointed out have not been given, that we require better equipped cars and express trains.

But coming down more particularly to the county of Victoria, I have already pointed out to this House that there are no finer fishing grounds in any other port of Canada than along the eastern and northern part of the island of Cape Breton. But at this time of the year when the ice comes in, and they cannot send their fish away by water they are completely shut out from the world. They are shut out from the opportunity of getting their fish out at the best season of the market, or when the market is at its best. They are unable to obtain from the outside world the necessities of life at a time when they could buy at the best advantage. The only thing that will relieve the situation is the extension of this line of railway that I am now advocating to Baddeck, and then the opportunity will present itself to extend it north along the harbours of St. Ann, Ingonish, and Neil's Harbour, clean to the Bay of St. Lawrence to Meat Cove, skirting along the most magnificent fishing grounds in Canada, and giving the people of this country an opportunity of competing in the markets of the world with their codfish, their salmon, their haddock, their herring, and a hundred and one kinds of magnificent edible fish caught in these waters. That has been the situation for the last 150 years. And when, from time to time, ever since there was a parliament in Canada, the members from that part of the country coming here have always been advocating the expenditure of this pittance of money necessary for extending the railway, is it surprising that we should persist from time to time in keeping at it until the government will see to it that the interests of the people are met as they should be? I am not talking railways, because I am in opposition. I was talking railways when I was not in opposition. I am making the same speeches, putting forward the same arguments now that I was putting forward in the local House when I was there ten years ago. This is my third parliament here, and I have been every session talking the same things before this House. So it cannot be said that I am talking in opposition in a way that I would not be talking if I were a supporter of the government. Last year I was told that at last we had reached the point where the good people of the county of Victoria, and of the island of Cape Breton generally were to receive that which was their due; a sum of $200,000, which would be a fair amount to start with, was put in the estimates. Of that sum five-twelfths were passed before prorogation, and since we came back here the other seven-twelfths have been passed by this government, adopting apparently the policy of the outgoing government. There was no criticism from either side that the amount was more than necessary to make a fair start on this railway. Everything was honourable, everything was fair and just, and tenders were called for, and I had every reason to believe that the work was going on. There was plenty of money then in the treasury to build this road, that money is in the treasury to-day; it cannot be said that the country is any worse off to-day than it was last year, and there is no reason to expect that the people of that country will be given shabby treatment after struggling so long as they have to get this money, or that the government is going to strike the cup from their mouth just as they are about to quaff it.

Mr. BORDEN. How long is that line?

Mr. McKENZIE. Only 22 or 23 miles, a very easy route. The hon. gentleman will find the report in the Department of Railways, and there cannot be any great difficulty in the way. I think it will be found to be as level a piece of country as there is anywhere on the island of Cape Breton, no large cuts at all. It is true the government will have to cross a very narrow arm at a place called the Little Narrows, and put a bridge there. But that is practically the only obstruction worth talking about on this whole line.

I have here resolutions, which I am not going to trouble the House with reading, passed by the county council of Victoria county and the board of trade of the town of Baddeck, and letters and petitions from end to end of the county, praying and begging that this work be pressed forward. I bring it up now, Mr. Speaker, as I hope that there may be supplementary estimates brought down and there is yet an opportunity for the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Railways and Canals to reconsider it and restore the vote to the estimates. Should they do this it will give the good people of the county of Victoria this boon for which they have sought so long. In the summer time we could have by this branch direct or easy connection between the Bras d'Or lake and the Intercolonial railway. The nearest point, the ton of Baddeck, is ten or twelve miles away and the distance is traversed by boats. That is all very well in summer, but at this time of the year we have no way of getting there at all except by crossing over the ice, and it is in that manner that we are obliged to get the mails in the meantime. In spring it is impossible to cross the ice and we are shut out entirely. We were hoping that if this line were built these difficulties would be overcome, or at least, that we would have continuous connection between the town of Baddeck and the Intercolonial railway, and we also hope that the government will find it desirable and proper to extend the road north to those great fishing ports to which I have referred. I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the House but I feel that it is my duty to the people I represent here to keep at this thing until something is done. There is something in the records of this House about the Widow Murphy's cow that gave a great deal of trouble to a former government, and this is going to be a Widow Murphy's cow until something is done to carry out the wishes of the people in that section of the country in regard to this project.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, there is no objection at all to the papers being brought down. Tenders were asked for this railway by newspaper advertisement on the 9th of September and they were to be in on the 12th October. Two tenders were submitted and they averaged $69,000 per mile. I could not see my way clear, when only $200,000 had been voted, to allow this work to go on. I did not think, notwithstanding the natural resources that are to be developed, that we were justified in building a road at that expense. But, when we get to look into the matter and see if a cheaper road which will answer the purpose——

Mr. McKENZIE. How did these tenders compare with the estimate of the engineer?

Mr. COCHRANE. That is quite a proper question. I think that the 22 miles for which tenders were asked were estimated by the engineers to cost $1,485,000. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McKenzie) has told the House that it was a level country, easy to build a railway through, and yet we have two tenders under which the cost will average $69,000 a mile. I did not feel that we were justified in going on, but I have no hesitation in saying that it is the intention of the government to investigate this matter and see if a cheaper route cannot be got. I do not think the engineers had sufficient time to work out this route. We will have no hesitation in bringing down the papers.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Turriff for the second reading of Bill (No. 6) an Act to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. TURRIFF. I am ready to go on.

Mr. BORDEN. For the reasons already explained to my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff) I do not think we can go on with this Bill. It is of course, his privilege if he so desires to have a vote taken on it. On a previous occasion I mentioned to him that it was the intention of the government to have the Railway Act revised and a consolidation made of the very numerous amendments which have been made to it. Up to the present time we have not had an opportunity of giving this subject sufficient consideration; in fact, we have given it very little consideration beyond this that we have arrived at the conclusion that the course to which I have alluded is necessary. The Department of Railways and Canals and the chairman of the Railway Commission are of the opinion that it ought to be done. Therefore, it seems undesirable to attempt to carry out the proposals embodied in the various Bills now upon the order paper, and it is for that reason that I have asked my hon. friend and other gentlemen who have proposed amendments, to allow them to stand until we can do that effectively.

I am anxious of course that any discussion that would be helpful in connection with this Bill should take place, in order that we may have suggestions from hon. members. I do not wish to limit discussion in any way, but I do desire that these various Bills should stand over until we have had an opportunity of considering them all. That, of course, will be followed by the bringing down of a Bill next session which will give the most ample opportunity to hon. gentlemen to put forward any of the proposals contained in these various Bills.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Next session only.

Mr. BORDEN. Next session, yes.

Mr. TURRIFF. My only object was to put these special tariffs under the control of the Railway Commission, just as the regular tariffs now are. There is a good deal of force in what the Prime Minister says, and I am quite willing to let the Bill stand.

Mr. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman desires to offer any additional reasons in support of this Bill or in connection with any other point relating to the Railway Act, I should be very glad to hear them.

Bill allowed to stand.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie) moved second reading of Bill (No. 7), to amend the Railway Act. He said: I presume that the remarks of the right hon. gentleman in reference to the Bill of my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff), will have application to the Bill which I now move the second reading of. I appreciate the position taken by the right hon. gentleman, that in view of the purpose to immediately consolidate the Railway Act it would be well not to pass, at present, any legislation of this character. There is, however, a situation obtaining in the country to-day with regard to one feature of our railway legislation, to which the attention of parliament ought to be emphatically drawn, and I trust that when the government comes to consolidate the Railway Act it will introduce into it provisions along the lines laid down in this Bill. It will be observed at once that this legislation touches ground that has been fought over time and again in parliament, and that, I may say, has been battled upon for fifty years in the courts of Canada. It touches the question of the liability of railway companies for the loss caused by the killing or injuring of animals by their trains or engines. Legislation with respect to this matter was passed in 1903 at the instance of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) and, as I understand it, that hon. gentleman is in great part, if not altogether, responsible for the present wording of sub-section 4 of section 294 of the Railway Act. It is this subsection which in one of its features the Bill purposes to alter in order to meet the conditions which prevail almost wholly I believe in western Canada. This Bill purposes to amend the present state of affairs by a method which has two features. The first is, by endeavouring to fix upon a standard cattle guard which shall be of real use for the purpose for which it is intended. It provides, by amending the subsection I have referred to, in cases where animals are injured on the tracks of a railway company and where the injury is caused by the negligence of the company, that the company shall be made to pay. In introducing this legislation I am not moved by any desire to cater to any unwarranted public feeling against railway corporations. I am one of those who believe that a corporation, however large, is entitled to the full benefit of just laws. But, I believe, that, whether by an error of parliament or not, the Railway Act at present is such that the owners of animals are placed at a serious disadvantage in contending for their rights in the courts, a disadvantage which they would not suffer if even the common law prevailed. It will be necessary for me, in order to make clear the necessity for this amendment, to state what the present law is, and I shall endeavour to do so concisely and with the use of as few technical terms as possible.

Mr. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman now dealing with both his proposed amendments?

Mr. MEIGHEN. To the first amendment I do not attach anything like the importance I do to the second, in clause 2 of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. In order to make it perfectly plain will the hon. gentleman in each case give the existing legislation, if he has it before him, so that it may be on 'Hansard.'

Mr. MEIGHEN. The first clause of the Bill provides that all cattle guards, to be constructed hereafter, indeed all cattle guards to be used hereafter, shall, as to their method of construction, style, and dimensions, be submitted to the Railway Commission and be approved by them. The existing law in this respect is in section 254 which provides that all fences, gates and cattle guards to be erected by railway companies shall be such as are suitable and sufficient to protect cattle or other animals getting upon the railway lands. It is hard to conceive of legislation more strict in terms than that, it puts upon the railway company the burden of having fences, gates and cattle guards suitable and sufficient to prevent animals getting on the tracks, and in that regard it is hard to improve upon the existing law.

The only addition I make to that is this. I have a clause providing that the cattle guards, which of all appliances of the railway company have proved most effective, be submitted to the Railway Commission, and be approved of by them before they shall be considered sufficient. It may be argued that if we do that, and if the Railway Commission approve of a certain form and size of cattle guard, should animals get over it the railway company might be relieved of liability. I am not prepared to say that will or will not happen; but I do think that if a railway company would provide the very best appliance in this regard, as it would be compelled to do if the commission had to approve of it, there would be much less injury and loss suffered than there is at the present time, when the railway company is compelled to provide no special kind of cattle guard, but just such as is sufficient. So that I think that a substantial reform without any serious risk would be effected if we compelled the companies to submit their cattle guards to the Railway Commission for approval. But I attach no such importance to section 1 as I do to section 2 of this Bill, because I believe that section 2 will effect the reform that section 1 is intended to assist in effecting. That is to say, section 2, in conjunction with the present law in this regard, will have the effect of making the companies pay where they ought to pay, and if they do, they will see to it that the cattle guard is suitable and sufficient. So that clause 2 is the vital clause of this Bill, and on it I desire to found the brief argument which I intend to present. Section 2 provides that subsection 4 of section 294 of the present Act shall read in this way:

> When any horses, sheep, swine or other cattle at large, whether upon the highway or not, get upon the property of the company, and by reason thereof damage is caused to or by such animal, the party suffering such damage shall, except in the cases otherwise provided for by the next following section, be entitled to recover the amount of such damage against the company in any action in any court of competent jurisdiction, unless the company establishes that such animal so got upon the property of the company, without the negligence of the company or the omission of any duty binding on the company under this Act.

Subsection 4 of section 294 is the section of the Railway Act which deals with the case of injury to or by animals when they get on a right of way after being at large. It has no reference, whatever, to injuries caused to or by animals at highway crossings, or animals that get upon the right of way from an inclosure where they are not at large. The cases of animals which get on the right of way through being at large constitute the large field of cases in which under the present law the railway company is able to escape. In other cases there is no serious complaint. At present the clause in the Act is the same as clause 2 of this Bill, except that after it states that damage can be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction, it has the following words:

> Unless the company proves that such animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act of the owner or his agent or the custodian of such animal or his agent.

So that under the present law the company shoulders the burden prima facie; that is to say, if an animal, after being at large, is killed or injured on the right of way, the company is prima facie liable, but it escapes the moment it shows that the animal got at large in the first place through the negligence or wilful act of the owner. The purpose of the Bill is to keep the burden on the company, but to alter that burden. Instead of permitting the company to prove that the animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act of the owner, it says to the company: prove that your own skirts are clear; no matter how it got at large, prove that it got on your right of way without any negligence or omission on your part. The present burden which the company has to discharge is so light and so capable of being discharged, that in western Canada the company easily escapes in 90 per cent of all the cases that occur, the great majority of which never go to court at all. Now, in the law at present there is a provison that this does not affect the liability of a man who takes down a railway fence or otherwise interferes with railway property. I have omitted that, but I am quite willing that it should be added to the clause as I propose it. To my mind it will be unnecessary in the law, if amended as I propose, but it appears to some that it is necessary, and I have no objection to adding it.

The question before the House is whether the law amended as I propose, will meet the exigencies of present conditions better than the old law. I submit that it will. I am free to admit that conditions are not the same all over Canada. In eastern Canada, where industrial and farming life have reached a more advanced stage than in western Canada, the conditions are quite different. In eastern Canada animals are not found at large nor is there any necessity why they should be at large to anything like the same extent as in the west. I do not think it was ever the intention of parliament to legislate that it would be unlawful for animals to run at large in this country, but the effect of the present law is to go to that extent, for we might just as well legislate that it is unlawful for an animal to be at large as to legislate that if it should get at large by some omission of the owner and get into the right of way, where there is no fence, the owner has no redress should an accident occur. That was the judgment in the case of Clayton and the Canadian Northern, in which case Chief Justice Howell observed that the effect of the law was to prohibit the running at large of animals anywhere in Canada. Any one who knows anything of the west will understand that such a law would work most serious injury to that part of our country. The conditions there are such that it is essential that animals should be allowed to run at large within certain limits and restrictions. In eastern Canada however, that necessity is not so urgent and in that section the law may have worked fairly well. But in the west, there is a daily slaughter of animals by railway companies running up into thousands and thousands of dollars, and 90 per cent. of these cases are due to the negligence of the railway companies. I doubt if there is an hon. member from that western country who will not say that the slaughter of animals there by the railways, through night and day, is one of the chief causes of hardship and hard times in individual instances and one that most persistently reaches the ears of members of parliament. That is one of the complaints which is most earnestly and insistently urged by farmers and ranchers through their organizations, and relief from which they have been seeking from this parliament for years back. I doubt if there is one hon. member from the west who will not say that, within his own personal knowledge, the railway companies, through their negligence, whether wilful or not, have been the cause of determining the weal or woe of many of our settlers. Many a man struggling to lift his head above water has had it pushed down again by the slaughter of his animals by railway trains.

Why is this the case, and how is it going to be remedied? It is the case because the running at large of animals in that country is a commercial and industrial necessity. Under the present law, animals at large are not permitted to go within half a mile of the railway right of way. If they do and are killed at a crossing, the railway company is not responsible, unless the animal is in charge of some responsible person. The amendment I propose does not affect that law in any degree. The farmer who lets his animal run at large and whose animal is killed at a crossing will have to bear the loss. That is a risk which the farmer takes if he lets his animal at large in proximity to a railway. Whether that law be just or unjust, I am not saying, but it is the law, and this amendment which I propose does not interfere with it. The farmer takes the risk if his animal is killed on the highway crossing, but if it is killed on the railway company's track, the company is responsible. If an animal gets on the right of way, prima facie the railway company is responsible, because if the company had complied with the Act, the animal at large could not have got on its right of way. Therefore should the animal be injured, the burden of proof ought to be on the railway company. 90 per cent. of the animals injured or killed were necessarily turned out at large by the farmers.

What will be the result if the law is amended in this direction? It will mean that if a railway fence is down and an animal gets on the track, if the gate is open, if the cattle guard is defective, or if there is no cattle guard, and as a result an animal is killed, then the railway company will be bound to pay, and I ask who should pay in such a case? What is the common law? What is the law that through a thousand years of British jurisprudence has been established, as what is fair and right between man and man? Where there is negligence and loss results, the party whose negligence is the proximate cause of the loss is made to pay. Is that the case under the present Railway Act? Things are reversed for the benefit of the company. If, through reckless driving of my automobile, I kill a horse on the highway I have to pay for it, and I cannot say that the farmer was negligent by letting his horse on the highway. Although he may have been negligent, his negligence was not the proximate cause of the loss. Why should that be reversed in the case of a railway? That simple common-sense principle is reversed in the case of the Railway Act. The railway company may neglect the simplest precautions in the construction of their road. In the west they seldom have cattle guards, they are not only negligent, but they are wilfully in default, and by reason of that, animals get on the right of way, and are killed. Whose negligence is the proximate cause? Not that of the farmer,who suffers the loss, his is the further cause; the proximate cause is the negligence of the railway company. This question has been argued in courts of law, the case I am presenting has been argued in Carruthers and the Canadian Pacific railway. The Supreme Court of Canada held that by subsection 4 of section 294, that plain condition of the common law was altered, and no matter how negligent the company were, no matter how flagrantly they had violated the provisions of the Railway Act, they utterly escaped liability for the loss caused proximately by that negligence, by simply showing that these animals were at large through the negligent or wilful act of the owner.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I construe the present law, and I have followed my hon. friend's argument with great interest, by the amendment of 1910, whenever an accident takes place the conduct of the company is not at all in issue, it may be negligent or not negligent, the only question is whether or not the plaintiff himself was negligent. If the plaintiff is negligent he cannot recover, but if not, even although the company is not in default and has complied with the law, the plaintiff must recover.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I quite agree with the law as stated by my right hon. friend, but the law as interpreted has the effect of utterly reversing that plain rule of common law. The law as so interpreted holds that the conduct of the railway company is not in question, even if that conduct or misconduct is the proximate cause of the loss. Under the common law, their conduct would be seriously in question and the company would have to pay if it was the proximate cause of the loss. I need not argue whether or not that is the law as interpreted. Members who are familiar with the law will know that not only in Carruthers and the Canadian Pacific railway, but in several cases it has been so interpreted and hon. members will recall that in the case of Clayton and the Canadian Northern railway in 1908, where Chief Justice Howell of the Court of Appeals in Manitoba gave a dissenting judgment, His Lordship argued that all the holdings up to that time in favour of the law as I maintain it should not be, were wrong. but he was overruled by the majority of the court, and in that case as in every other one up to the present it has been held that the railway companies utterly escaped no matter how flagrantly negligent they were or how they violated the provisions of the Act. However, negligent they may be they escape by saying that somebody further back was negligent, and in that way they are enabled by the adjudgment of this parliament to reverse a rule of the common law. I should have said that the Supreme Court held the company liable in Carruthers and the Canadian Pacific railway, but the Supreme Court has held and it has been held in numerous cases that the company escape liability if they can throw on the farmer or owner the burden of having negligently allowed the animal at large.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is that the way you interpret the statute as it now stands?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I would interpret the statute as the courts do. I would not pretend to give an opinion that would be of value to the House, but I cannot see how the courts could otherwise interpret the law.

Mr. BURNHAM. Have the courts laid it down that where an animal is on the property of another, a trespasser, the onus is on the person who owns the property to prove that the animal was not on his property by right but improperly?

Mr. MEIGHEN. Yes, the courts have so interpreted subsection 4. This parliament has proceeded upon the assumption that if an animal is on the right of way of a railway company under our Act, and is injured, prima facie the company is responsible, the idea being that the animal could not be there if the company had complied with the law so that there has never been any question on that point, the burden has been on the company and so they have escaped.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The present statute provides that the company shall be liable unless it can prove that the animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent or custodian. Then, as I understand the statute and construe the law, the only question for the court is not to examine what has been the conduct of the company, but what has been the conduct of the plaintiff. If the claimant shows that he has not been negligent the company is liable. It is not open to the company then to say: We have fulfilled all the conditions placed on us by the law. The law says that the company, whether it has fulfilled the conditions of the law or not, is liable and must be so unless it can show that the plaintiff is at fault.

Mr. MEIGHEN. And the onus is on the company.

Mr. BORDEN. If the onus is on the company the statute seems to make a prima facie case against the company, but it discharges the company, according to the argument of my hon. friend, upon proof of something which is not directly connected with the cause of the accident. It makes the company liable without proof of negligence. it then discharges the company by proof of some remote cause which is not directly connected with the destruction of the animal.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The only question is this—perhaps I am not getting to the point the leader of the opposition has said, the courts have held that the company is prima facie liable, but they escaped by proving something not immediately connected with the loss, just as the leader of the government states. Now the only question is this —I am not sure it pertains directly to the issue—if an animal is wilfully turned out by the farmer and then gets on the right of way without any neglect whatever on the part of the company, is the company responsible? That is to say, suppose the company has lived up to the law in every regard, take for example a case where they do not have a fence, where the Railway Commissioners do not compel them to fence, and an animal breaks out and gets upon the right of way, is the company responsible? I know of no case where the company has been held responsible in those circumstances. There was the case in British Columbia, Siegel vs. the Canadian Pacific railway, where the company was relieved, so that the leader of the opposition would not be correct in saying that the company's conduct is not in question. The company's conduct is not in question if they show that the owner of the animal negligently turned the animal out, in that case the company's conduct is not in question. But if, on the contrary, it is shown that the animal broke away, and without any negligence on the part of the owner, then the company's conduct may be in question under Siegel and the Canadian Pacific railway. I hope that the decision in Siegel and the Canadian Pacific railway is not good, though I do not wish to give an opinion different to that court in British Columbia. But what is laid down as undoubtedly the law in the western province is this, that once the company show the animal got at large by the negligence of the owner, their conduct is no longer in question. Now how should the law be amended? The proposal is to amend it by asking the company to pay the man who turned the animal out. If the animal is turned out negligently and is killed on the highway the farmer loses; but if it gets on the right of way he is prima facie responsible, and if it is killed there then the burden is on him to show that it got there without any negligence on his part, or in violation of the Railway Act. Surely that is simple, and that is what the law ought to be. If an animal is an extraordinary animal, and gets at large, or is turned at large, and the company, has complied with the law, and the animal is killed, the company should not pay. But if the company has not complied with the law, then the company's neglect, the company's defeasance, is the immediate and approximate cause of the loss, and they ought to pay in every case. Now to illustrate by particular cases, I have no doubt that hon. members of this House could give illustrations of the escape of the company where they should have paid, and every hon. member, if he thinks over his own case, will see that the reason the company escaped was just the reason I have given, because, in the first place, the animal was at large through the negligence, or even through the wilful act of the owner. I know, for instance, of one case where a man was leading a horse to water and two others were following. Only one was being led by the halter, and there was no fence between him and the highway. Something frightened the animals and they got away, including the one that was being led. There was no fence on the railway to protect the track, they got upon the railway track, two of them were killed, the one that was being led with the halter, and one of those that were following. Now it will be clear to the House where the owner of those animals will land in a court of law. In respect of the one that was being led, that one did not get at large through the negligence or wilful act of the owner, very likely the company would be made to pay. In the case of the other one that was not being led, although the company's negligence was the cause of its loss, the only cause of its loss, the immediate and proximate cause, the company escapes. Then take the other case. There have been cases of ranchers in the west, farmers in the west, having animals by the score at large because, in the great majority of cases, there is no fencing at all; it would be practically impossible to carry on business in that country to keep them always within an enclosure. Now, if the railway fences are up, and if the cattle guards are there as provided by the Act, if the gates are up and closed as provided by the Act, and things are moderately safe, the animal may be killed at a crossing and the man loses, that is all there is about it. He takes that risk when he turns them out. But if the animal, through the negligence of the company, gets upon the right of way through there being no fence in violation of the law, or no cattle guard in violation of the law, or through there being no gate or a poor gate, or a poorly fastened gate, why should they not pay? The Court of Appeals has held the contrary, and there could be no doubt under their reading of the law. If what my friend behind me says were the law there would be no object in amending it; if it were not held that the company escapes when they prove that the animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act of the owner, there would be no purpose in amending the law. That would be all right. But the unfortunate thing is that that has not been held to be the law, and it appears to me that it is not intended to be the law by subsection 4 as it at present reads.

Now I wish to make reference to the present condition of the obligation of the company in regard to fencing, to gates and to cattle guards, because I wish to show that at the present time and under present conditions, there might possibly be a very few cases where, under the present law the owner might recover and under the law as amended he might not, there might possibly be cases, though extremely rare, if any at all, and in the course of a short time there could be none.

Now, it is well known that, under the authority of the Railway Act, the Board of Railway commissioners have power to compel railway companies to fence their right of way, or, in other words, the company has to fence its right of way and provide gates and cattle guards unless absolved by the Railway Commission. Under the authority of that Act, the Board of Railway commissioners undertook to make an order that, before the expiration of a certain date, all railway companies in this country should have their fences erected and their cattle guards and gates provided. That was a general order applicable to all railways in Canada and of effect throughout the whole country. From that order the railway companies appealed and, as I understand it, the Supreme Court of Canada held that the board had not power to make so general an order that their orders must be definite and confined to specific areas. In accordance with that ruling of the Supreme Court, the railway commissioners, have, since that time, made very sweeping orders, but none so sweeping as to be ruled ultra vires by the Supreme Court. The policy of the board has been to bring about, at the earliest possible date, the time when it shall be compulsory all over this country for fences, gates and cattle guards to be provided and that even though the neighbourhood is not fenced and closed or inhabited the company's right of way must be fenced and gates and cattle guards provided. I am informed, if not by the commission, at all events by a member, that it is expected within a year that all the railways of this country will be, under order from the board of railway commissioners, and that a valid order, compelled to have their fences, gates and cattle guards completed. Before the expiration of that time if a case arose where a railway company were not in default, that is where they did not have to erect a fence or cattle guard, and an animal got on the line by the negligence of the owner and was killed, if under such circumstances it were held by our courts that in the meantime under the present law the company would have to pay, they would not have to pay under this amendment. I do not say it would be so held, but I do say that the number of cases will be practically nil, and that we might just as well consider them a negligible quantity. The great class of cases that comes before the notice of the public, or before the notice of lawyers and the courts, is where the animals are out through the purpose, the designation, the intention of the owner himself and these animals, through the absolute neglect and defiance by the railway company of the law, get upon the right of way and are killed. This represents a great number of cases where injustice is suffered and for which a remedy is urgently needed and demanded. It is that class of cases that this amendment aims at effecting a remedy for and in my humble opinion it certainly effects the remedy. In the course of a year, as asserted by the commission, there should be no case where the railway companies could justly be held liable now and would not be held liable under the amended law. So, it seems to me we can be absolutely fair to the companies, make the law clear to them and clear to any man who runs and reads, by passing this legislation and then there will be no case, or very few if any cases at all, where an injustice can be perpetrated. I do not know whether I have made this clear. I have endeavoured to put the case as clearly as I could. I make no pretence of having a better knowledge of the law in reference to railways than any other hon. member of this House, and I have the utmost deference for the opinion of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) or any other hon. member who has interrupted me, but I have not come to the House without a thorough investigation in this regard and without actual experience in the courts of law where it has been held, held against me and held on appeal, that the law was just as stated by myself at the present time. I know of cases that occur almost every day, of cases that come into small offices in the country, week after week, that never get to the courts at all, simply because it is well known and understood that the company can escape by showing that the animal got on the track through the negligence or wilful act of the owner, no matter what their default may be, and it is well known that the company can show this out of the mouth of the plaintiff himself the moment he goes into the box. This will not only alter the ruling of the courts and make it fairer to the farmer, and no more than fair to the railways, but in such cases as have already come to the court it will make the law so clear and plain and the liability so definite and fixed that there will be less litigation than in the past, or, in the great majority of cases, the railway will at once pay. They do at the present time, when they recognize their liability. It is very rarely, speaking comparatively, that they contest a claim in which they are liable at all; they usually pay or make a settlement of some kind, because, by reason of the decisions of the courts, the law has become fairly well known. If the Act is amended along the lines here urged, I believe that eight times for once they pay now, they will pay without any litigation at all, and that not in any case under this law, will they be compelled, where they have absolute right and justice on their side to pay; that is, wherever they are not responsible, they will not pay. I make no allegation at all that in all respects as affects the railway law in regard to the killing of cattle this goes the whole way in effecting the reform. I say in the case of animals at large which represents the great majority of cases that it goes a long way and effects a great reform.

There will still, perhaps, be a class of cases where loss results and nobody's negligence is the cause, where the railway company is not negligent and therefore not responsible and where the farmer is not negligent and therefore, not responsible. I believe myself that we should move to amend the law in that regard, and, as the Prime Minister stated, the Railway Act is to be amended, I throw out this suggestion, whatever it may be worth, that in that class of cases, where the loss results, and no man's negligence is the cause, namely, the class of cases where the loss results simply from the incidence of the railway companies themselves, that is to say, a loss caused by reason of the operation of a railway, which is a dangerous operation in the country, a loss incident to the running of railway trains, and is founded on the negligence of no person or company at all, I believe that justice would be better met by making the company pay rather than by making the farmer pay. I do not say that to play the role of demagogue in any way, but I say it after some little consideration and for this reason that while the railway company is a private corporation and a corporation entitled, generally speaking, to just as much protection under the law as a private individual, there is this difference that, especially in later times, a railway company partakes of the nature of a semi-public corporation. There is a great, and increasing sense in which the railway is a corporation of a public character in that its assets become more and more, as the years go by, socially created assets. It is serving a great public rather than a private end and by reason of that fact the gains that a railway company make, are, or should be, in part, the gains of the public and the losses that a railway company make are the losses of the public.

The gains a railway company makes are the gains of the public, and the losses of a railway company are the losses of the public, and, in the ultimate, the losses suffered by a corporation of this semi-public character fall back upon the public, and that is where losses of the class I have just last referred to should fall. That is to say: losses that are incidental to the operation of railway trains, and that are caused not by the negligence of any one or of any company. It, therefore, would appear to me, as the better legislation, and as the better purpose to be kept in view, to shoulder that class of legislation on the railway corporation instead of leaving it upon the shoulders of the individual. That again is a class of cases not directly affected by this amendment. The purpose to be affected by the amendment I have outlined at the beginning of my remarks, and I urge it upon the attention of the House with all the earnestness of which I am possessed. I believe it will effect an important reform, and that it will effect that reform without doing violence to the duty we owe to corporations, to individuals, or to anybody.

Mr. KYTE. I would like to know if the remedy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) is seeking for the conditions in the west by this legislation, would apply to the conditions in the province of Nova Scotia. A few years ago in the case of Gordon vs. Dickie, the Supreme Court of Canada held that in Nova Scotia cattle were not permitted to be at large, that the owner was obliged to keep his cattle fenced in, and that if cattle were killed or injured in any way while at large the owner had to bear the loss. The conditions prevailing in the west are similar in some respects to those prevailing in Nova Scotia, where large pastures are held in common, and where the farmers are obliged to allow their cattle to roam at large. As the law at present is, if one of these animals should wander on the right of way, by reason of a defect in the fence, or through a gate being left open negligently by the company and the animal is killed, the owner has no recourse. I am heartily in favour of the principle of this Bill as explained by the hon. gentleman. Two years ago, a valuable horse belonging to a constituent of mine, and which was roaming at large, as is the custom in that part of the country, wandered on the Intercolonial through a defect in the fence which was known to the section foreman for several months, and the animal being killed, application was made to the department for compensation, and the owner was told that, inasmuch as the horse was roaming at large and had not strayed on the right of way from the owner's property, they were not liable for damages. I should be very glad, indeed, if this principle which the hon. gentleman is seeking to have incorporated in the Railway Act would apply to the Intercolonial as well as to every other railway, so that the residents in that part of the country through which the Intercolonial railway runs might get justice in such cases.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Of course, the entire Railway Act applies to the whole of Canada, and the only distinction I drew was that the exigencies of the conditions in western Canada demanded this legislation more than they did elsewhere. The Railway Act is no respecter of provinces, and has the same application to one province as to the other.

Mr. KYTE. The decision in Gordon vs Dickie was that cattle were not permitted to be at large in Nova Scotia, and I understand they are so permitted in the west.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In the west, the province delegates to the municipalities the power to allow the running at large of animals, but of course an animal must be kept on the property of the owner, and if it goes beyond that and it is injured the owner is responsible. But that does not affect this Bill. Even though that may be the law, the liability for the death of the animal if it gets on the right of way is altogether another question. I submit that the fact that an animal was killed on the right of way through the negligence of the company should not be a barrier to recovery, and if this Bill should become law it would not be a barrier in Nova Scotia, any more than in the western provinces. As to its application to the Intercolonial railway I do not feel myself qualified to speak.

Mr. OLIVER. What the hon. member from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) has said as to the importance of this matter might very well give reason for the Prime Minister to change his mind in regard to his decision not to permit any amendments to the Railway Act this session. I can assure the Prime Minister and the government that the condition in the west, because of the legislation as it stands, or, as it is interpreted, is a very great grievance and a very great hardship. It is a condition which has existed for some time, and I can tell the Prime Minister that the people of the west who are suffering under that grievance cannot look with equanimity upon his decision not to legislate this session in the direction proposed by this Bill. In this case, the right hon. gentleman might very well make an exception, and I think the hon. members representing western constituencies will back up what I say in this regard.

With the amendment itself, as stated in its purpose by the hon. member (Mr. Meighen) I am not altogether in agreement. His complaint against the present law is that the company escapes liability unless the owner of the animal can prove lack of negligence on his part. My fault with this proposal is that the company will under that legislation escape liability unless the claimant can prove negligence on the company's part.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The company has to disprove it.

Mr. OLIVER. Theoretically, the company has to disprove it, but in actual practice the claimant would have to prove and the company would thereby escape.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not understand my hon. friend. How could it be in actual practice if it is not the law.

Mr. OLIVER. I will explain. This legislation says that on the company fulfilling certain requirements laid down by the Railway Commission, the company shall not be liable. The Railway Commission cannot lay down a requirement that will be efficient and that the company can fulfil in regard to cattle guards. There is no cattle guard yet invented that will keep cattle off the track. Until such cattle guard is invented it is futile to say that this legislation would protect the owner of the cattle or would lay liability definitely on the railway company beyond the point I have stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is the first section.

Mr. OLIVER. The first section read in connection with the second. The two parts must be read together; the one affects the other; and, in my humble judgment, the provision of the first part read in connection with the provisions of the second part would absolutely relieve the railway company from liability. The matter is too serious to be left as a matter of opinion between my hon. friend and myself. He has stated his reason for bringing in the Bill; I have stated my reasons for disagreeing with the provisions of the Bill as not being effective.

Mr. BORDEN. Has the hon. gentleman any suggestion?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. Before I make a suggestion, however, I wish to say that the law as it stands at present is, I understand, either entirely or measurably satisfactory to the part of the country where in the ordinary course of affairs all stock is kept in inclosures; but just for that very reason it is entirely unsatisfactory to those parts of the country where in the ordinary course of affairs the stock runs at large; and just as soon as the legislation now on the statute-book was passed, at that time and always afterwards those parts of the country where the stock generally speaking runs at large have felt themselves under a very great disadvantage. This legislation became effective in May, 1910, and during the sumer of 1910 and the summer of 1911 complaint was continually made against the consequences of that legislation. I am not sure who was directly and immediately responsible for that legistion, but I am under the impression that my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie had something to do with it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Yes, I introduced the legislation which the government adopted.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt of the intent of the legislation, and no doubt of its efficiency in a very large part of the country; but the very thing that makes it efficient in one part of the country makes it inefficient in another part. I repeat that the condition is so urgent that I think the government would do well to meet the case at this session. As to the suggestion which I have to make, I merely wish to put before the House again the clause of the Bill amending the Railway Act that was introduced at the last session by the late Minister of Railways. That clause was one of a number of clauses amending the Railway Act. It met with such opposition in the House at the time it was brought forward that it was dropped out of the Bill in order that the other provisions might go through. But I think that on mature consideration the House will recognize that that provision would be comprehensive and adequate, and would be absolutely fair as between the railway company and the public, while I admit that it does not give the railway company that percentage of advantage which it seems to have been the principle of all previous legislation to concede. The proposed amendment, which was section 11 of Bill (No. 197) of last session, reads as follows:

Sections 294 and 295 of the principal Act, and sections 8 and 9 of chapter 50 of the statutes of 1910, are repealed, and the following is enacted as section 294 of the principal Act:—

294. The company shall be liable to the owner for the full value of all horses, sheep, swine or other cattle that may be killed or injured upon the company's lands through the operation of the railway, save where such killing or injury is caused by reason of any person—

(a) failing to keep the gates at any farm crossing, at each side of the railway closed, when not in use; or,

(b) leaving open any gate on either side of the railway provided for the use of any farm crossing without some competent person being at or near such gate to prevent animals passing through such gate on to the railway; or,

(c) other than an officer, contractor, or employee of the company, taking down any part of the railway fence; or,

(d) turning any animal upon or within the enclosure of any railway company; or,

(e) except as authorized by said Act, without the consent of the company, riding, leading or driving any animal, or suffering it to enter upon any railway and within the fences and guards thereof; or,

(f) leaving the gates of the company at railway stations open for the convenience of the company.

It will be observed that the principle is laid down in the first section that if the cattle are killed on the track the company is liable. There is no question about the kind of fence or the kind of cattle guard or whether there is a fence or cattle guard at all. It is up to the company to see that its cattle guard or fence is such as to keep the cattle out, and if the cattle are not kept out, that is all that has to be shown. Then there must be exceptions to that, and the list of exceptions which I have read practically follows the provisions that are already in the Act. These exceptions might be amended or might be added to if that were found necessary; but the main principle is the declaration that if the cattle are killed on the track, the company is liable for their full value. That principle I would wish to see embodied in legislation this session, the more so because since May of 1910, as my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie has graphically pointed out, the cattle owners of the western country, and, as my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) has pointed out, the cattle owners in Cape Breton as well, are in practice deprived of the protection of the law as against the railway companies. That is a condition that should not be allowed to remain for a moment longer than is necessary to pass legislation to cure it.

Last session the then Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) was so convinced of the necessity of remedying the situation that he brought in the legislation which I have already placed before the House. For reasons good or bad that legislation was opposed by my hon. friends from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) Souris,

(Mr. Schaffner) Macdonald, (Mr. Staples) Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster). It is for them to say why. In consequence of their opposition that provision had to be dropped out of the Bill in order that the rest of it might pass. Relief was in sight for the people of the west at that time. That opportunity passed by and another has come, and I am satisfied that the people of that country will feel that their interests are not being properly served unless this opportunity be taken advantage of to meet a very special and urgent condition due more particularly to legislation by this parliament which, while curing a certain evil in one part of the country, left the door open wide to evil in another part.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. gentleman not see that the legislation he has just read, takes the burden off the railway companies altogether?

Mr. OLIVER. I see quite the contrary.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does he not remember that when the legislation was before this House the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) moved an amendment making it clear that the burden of proof was on the companies, and the government rejected that amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not recall that incident, and I do not know that it is profitable to discuss matters of detail which occurred so long ago; but the point is that this proposal, purports to offer a remedy to an exceedingly undesirable condition. My hon. friend has placed his views before the House, and no one could place them better, and I have taken the liberty to submit mine. What I am urging is not so much that my views shall be accepted as that the government shall take up the question on its own responsibility and deal with it efficiently so as to bring about a change in the present undesirable conditions. If anyone has something better to offer than this proposal of mine, I shall be very glad to accept it; but the principle laid down in the first part of the section I have read, is one I certainly wish to see adopted and the only one that will be fair to all parties. My hon. friend from Portage La Prairie has stated several times that it was desirable we should deal justly with the railway companies. Well, we are not dealing unjustly with the railway company. We do not wish to deal unfairly or unjustly with them; but if an animal be killed, whoever killed it should pay for it. If a railway company should kill it, that company should pay for it. That is the principle laid down in this section which I should like to see incorporated in our legislation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have listened very attentively to the very able argument of my hon. friend from Portage La Prairie. I sympathize with him very much in the views he has advocated. As I understand he is the author of the law as it stands at present. It was upon his initiative that the statute of 1910 was accepted by the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am not the author of that law at all, nor was it enacted on my initiative. Subsection 4 of section 294 substantially as it is to-day, was enacted at the instance of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) some time before I was in this House. Two years ago I introduced an amendment which did not substantially affect the law. That amendment the government adopted, and it was useful in so far as it went. It went this far. Previously, under certain conditions, the railways were responsible for injuries caused to animals by their trains or engines. The amendment proposed and accepted by the government enlarges the classes of damages but not the conditions under which the company would have to pay. It did not affect the law as it substantially stood, and as, for all purposes, it stands yet.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What I submit is this. If an accident takes place and nobody is at fault—neither the company, nor the owners of the animal—the burden of the loss must fall upon the company. That is, I think, the way my hon. friend put his case. It seems to me that the law at present goes very far towards embodying in the statute that very idea, and I do not think the Bill my hon. friend proposes at all improves it in that respect.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not contend that it does in that respect. I contend that should be the law. It does not affect that class of cases at all, but a much larger class of cases.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At present unless the railway company establishes that the animal killed or injured got at large through the negligence, wilful act or omission of its owner or agent or custodian, the railway company is responsible. If a claim be made by the owner of an animal, what is the defence which the company may make? The company cannot say: I am not at fault, I have complied with all the requirements of the law. The company is liable even if its gates were closed, its fences in order, and its cattle guards in good condition. The only defence it can put up is this: You, the owner, were at fault because your animal was at large, and there was no one to look after it. If the company were to say that its fences were in good order, such a plea would not be entertained by the courts.

You cannot escape the law unless you can show that the man is at fault himself. All the issue under the statute as it exists to-day is not the conduct of the company, but of the claimant. If the statute were as my hon. friend suggests that would be reversed. The thing then in issue would be the conduct of the company, because this is the amendment of my hon. friend. The company will be liable.

Uuless the company establishes that such animal so got upon the property of the company without the negligence of the company or the omission of any duty binding on the company.

I think on the whole that the existing law is preferable to the proposed amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not think my right hon. friend can show a case where a company were made to pay, if they were not in default.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think my hon. friend is wrong in saying that there are no cases like that suggested by the right hon. the leader of the opposition. There is the case of Parks vs. the Canadian Northern railway, where it was decided that the company had no fences, not being bound by law to fence, but they were still held liable on the very principle laid down by the leader of the opposition. It was decided by Chief Justice Mathers, and the decision was maintained on appeal, (18 Western Law Reports, page 118).

Mr. BORDEN. What was decided?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think the question decided was that the company had not fenced, and were not bound by law to fence in that particular locality, but that under section 294 as amended they were liable. That must be the result of the law as it stands.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In practice there are very few cases where the company have not been negligent.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Such cases as I have mentioned may not be common, but they may and do happen. I quite approve of the principle laid down, but I think the hon. member may do well to take notice of the objection raised by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), as well as that since raised. Both of these might be easily overcome. The objection raised by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), is a most serious one, and I think if section 254 is left as it is, it will secure everything sought to be brought about by this amendment. By section 254, subsection 3, it will be seen that the duty is absolutely on the railway company, they must provide fences and guards according to the decisions; sufficient fences means absolutely sufficient fences and guards that the animals cannot get over. My hon. friend would do away with that entirely. The establishment of a standard 'guard' rests with the Railway Commission. The railway companies tell us they cannot invent a cattle guard that will be sufficient, and then, as there must be some decision, the result will be that a standard will be fixed that is not sufficient.

My hon. friend has put in something that he should not have put in. I think he will agree that if he wishes to get on with this amendment the safe way is to drop out that entirely, and leave the section as it was. Then it will be a tolerably effective amendment, as it will provide against the greater part of the evil. I think he would be wise to deal with the other objection too, that is, to leave it in such a way that the company is still liable. It would be a case where, though neither party had been guilty of wrong-doing, still there is a loss; and he says, and rightly says, that the railway company should bear that loss. I am anxious for this Bill to go through. It is important that it should go through at this particular stage, for we have been waiting too long already. The member from Portage la Prairie admits that he did not frame this other clause of the statute of 1910. No doubt he thought himself that those amendments were sufficient at that time. But he will agree with me that he is not infallible, and if he looks at this carefully he will admit that he has made two serious mistakes, but they can be easily rectified. It is largely a question of cattle guards. The railway company states that they cannot invent cattle guards which will keep out stock. I am not prepared to admit that, though I am not an expert on cattle guards. But I notice that when people have to do a certain thing or suffer a loss, they generally do it; and I have no doubt at all of the ability of the railway company to invent a cattle guard that will keep out cattle, but I do not believe they will ever do it until they have to. Necessity is the mother of invention, and they can invent something that will be effective. The law says they must but they don't, and the law protects them in case they don't. No doubt the hon. member for Calgary is well posted in all the arguments that favour railway companies; but the fact is that while the legislature says they must, the legislature provides that they should escape the penalty in case they do not. It provides that the farmer should suffer damage if they fail to carry out the requirements of the law. I think that is unreasonable. If the company openly violates the law, why should some one else have to suffer damage in consequence? The company is openly violating the law. Although they say they cannot carry it out, I doubt the correctness of their statement. They openly violate the law, and the farmer whose cattle are killed suffers the damage. I think the House will agree that is not just. There is possibly a little prejudice against the contention of the farmer, raised, perhaps, by reason of the way this section is worded. It says that if a man is guilty of negligence or wilful omission, he should not have any remedy. But that is not the approximate cause of the damage. The party who is principally liable, should suffer the damage, and that is no doubt the railway company.

My hon. friend from Richmond, N.S., says that in his province it is not reasonable to expect that the farmers will keep their cattle enclosed all the time, it is usual to let them run at large. I know that in many parts of the west in the ranching country, you cannot carry on business in any other way than by letting them run at large. Even in the farming country of Saskatchewan it is not possible for farmers continually to keep their cattle in such a way that they may not occasionally get at large through the negligence or the wilful act or omission of the owner. Take the case of an ordinary farmer in Saskatchewan, where I understand the conditions best. I know a very large portion of the farmers in sections where railways are fenced do not generally enclose their lands. The other day the farmers of the west were given a little lecture by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to the necessity of mixed farming. I do not think a lecture in this House is ever going to make the farmers of the west go into mixed farming. You must give them a reason for becoming mixed farmers, but if you tell them that they must not keep any stock around their place unless they keep their animals enclosed, then you are going to discourage mixed farming in the west. Even in cases where the farmers have their lands enclosed, it is not usual throughout the winter to keep their lands inclosed all the time, or to keep their lands inclosed in such a manner that no animal can escape. On the open prairie the snow drifts badly, and it is practically impossible to keep a gate so clear of drifts that you can open and close it every time you go through. As a matter of course, that gate will be left open some time in the winter, and an animal may get at large. I hope that this House will be satisfied with the arguments that have been given, and acknowledge that it is only fair-play that we are asking. I hope that my hon. friend will consider the suggestions that have been given, and will agree to correct his amendment where it is at fault.

Mr. CARVELL. Possibly there may be a grievance in the west that requires amendment, or requires something in the way of amendment. I am afraid that if this Bill were to pass as it has been drafted, the people in eastern Canada, where the railways are fenced, would be in a worse position than they are at the present time. It seems to me that the law as laid down by the Act of 1910 is almost ideal, so far as ordinary conditions are concerned all over Canada. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the conditions of farming in the west to know whether there are large portions of land that are not fenced, according to section 254 of the Railway Act. But in all eastern Canada I am satisfied that the railways do fence, practically in every case, according to the provisions of the Railway Act. Now the underlying principle of the amendment of 1910 is that the farmer can get paid unless the railway company proves that he is negligent, or guilty of wilful omission in leaving the cattle at large. If we adopt the principle laid down in this Bill we are entirely reversing that, and we are saying that the company is not negligent if it can prove that it has complied with all the requirements of the law. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle so forcibly a railway company might say: We have provided fences four feet six inches high——

Mr. MEIGHEN. Let me draw my hon. friend's attention to this point: The Act as pointed out by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, makes the duty of the company absolute to prevent cattle getting on the track. Their fences must be such, and their cattle guards must be such. If it is the case that they do not prevent them from getting on how can they get on except through the negligence or omission of the company?

Mr. CARVELL. I cannot understand that because they do get on and under the law, I do not care what the company may say, if the animals do get on the company is liable, unless they can prove an act of negligence on the part of the owner.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary). That is prima facie evidence against the company.

Mr. CARVELL. Yes, and in my practice I find that it works admirably. I have not had any difficulty in compelling the company to pay in every case where animals have been killed on the track. I am afraid that if the proposed Bill became law I would not be in the same position. I have no doubt whatever that if the animals got on the track the company would say: Our fences were all right, and our cattle guards are of the most approved pattern, it is not our fault, we have done everything we ought to do, and therefore, you have no right against us. My hon. friend, I presume, has had some experience with railway companies. Railway companies keep their fences and cattle guards in order through the agency of their workmen and officials, and you will never find a section man admitting that his fence or cattle guard is at fault if he can help it. Just as sure as a case goes to court under this Bill, you will find that it will not only be the wish, but almost the life of the section man or official, to say: Our cattle guards and fences are in perfect condition, which raises at once a question of fact and if the judge or jury decides that, as a matter of fact, the cattle guard or fence was in proper condition, the farmer loses. The hon. gentleman desires to provide for a condition of affairs in the west, but, in so far as affairs in the east are concerned, I am satisfied that it would be a misfortune to the farmers if this Bill were made law and I think, that unless I can get some light upon it, I would be almost compelled to vote against the second reading.

Mr. MEIGHEN. My hon. friend says that he has always succeeded in making the company pay. Can he tell the House of a case where the company has been made to pay in which they had not violated this Act, in which they lived up to the provisions of this Act, and if so, would he give us the particulars?

Mr. CARVELL. I may say that I have not been compelled to sue the company since this Act was passed, but I have already collected a number of claims. I have collected half a dozen claims from the Canadian Pacific railway since this Act became law, and all I have been compelled to do, has been to prove that the cattle were on the railway track and were killed.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Then, if you did not have any cases yourself, could you give us the particulars of a case in which cattle were killed where the company lived up to the Act?

Mr. CARVELL. Not long ago I had a case where five sheep got on the railway track. I do not know by what agency, but the fence was torn down and the sheep got on the track. They paid. It may have been some outsider who broke the fence down.

Mr. MEIGHEN. They were in default.

Mr. CARVELL. No.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Yes, they must maintain a fence that will keep out the sheep.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend is begging the question.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is the Act.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend wants to get at the right side of this question let him direct his attention not to section 294 but to section 254. It would appear that there is a great deal of misconception on the part of the legal profession and railway companies as to what is meant by subsection 4 of section 254, with regard to fencing the line. When must the railway company fence? I think that the railway company should be compelled to fence every mile of its road and that it should take the same precaution through wilderness land as through cultivated land. I think that if my hon. friend would direct his attention to this section and make it obligatory upon railway companies to fence their track in every place and under every condition and leave section 294 as it is he would meet the difficulty. He would not be creating a condition of affairs which would be beneficial to the people of the west and against the interest of the people of the east, but he would be creating a condition which would benefit everybody and it would not be sectional legislation. Unless I can get some further light I am afraid I will be compelled to vote against the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. THOMAS MACNUTT (Saltcoats). Mr. Speaker, I cannot pretend to approach this question from the standpoint of the lawyer. I will have to leave that to the many eminent lawyers who are here and who can take care of that end of it, but I may make a few remarks and produce some little evidence in the shape of letters from some settlers that the present system in the west is no protection whatever to the farmer. Under the Saskatchewan law it is not illegal for cattle to be at large. I have never heard that it was; in fact, they are encouraged to be at large. The farmers there have accepted a law called the fence law. They recognize that it is better for their cattle to be out on the vacant land getting the grass, they are willing to protect their crops and to do that they are required under law to erect what is called a legal fence and to maintain gates. They are willing to do that; otherwise they cannot collect for any damage which may be inflicted upon their crops. I think that the railway companies should be obliged to protect their property in the same way not only for the benefit of the farmers but in the interest of the travelling public because many wrecks have been occasioned by animals getting on the track. Under the present law they have to fence their railway, but I think it would be far better if there were no fence at all because the cattle get on the track with the present style of cattle guards. The cattle get over these guards and are entrapped. The fences are very good generally and the cattle guards are very poor. They get in between these fences, a train comes along, the animals are frightened and they run backwards and forwards and cannot get out. If there were no fences at all they would get out on the prairie again. Without better cattle guards it would be better to have no fences. It is claimed that the best kind of cattle guards invented are used in the west, but I have heard to-night that there are cattle guards along the Intercolonial railway that do protect the track and keep stock from getting on it. I know that one railway company in the west just use planks set on edge at an angle and the cattle can run over them. I want to show what some of the settlers say about this question. It is generally understood that under the present law the animals must break through the railway fences and get on the track from the owner's property or there is no recourse for the owner. I have never heard of a case yet in the west where the farmers have got any compensation, unless the guards had been removed. With the permission of the House I will read the following letters showing how cattle do get on the track in that country:

Melville, January 15, 1912.

Thos. MacNutt, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—W. G. Gudnason, of Yarbo, had a 2-year old mare killed about 15 months ago. She got on the right of way at the crossing and had galloped nearly a mile ahead of the train before being killed. He had a claim made through a lawyer but was advised that he had no chance for action. Value $225. I had a colt killed on March 16, 1911. This colt had gone down the track with other horses. In this case the guards had been removed for the winter, and as the trails were heavy any stock running on the prairie would take to the track on account of there being no obstruction whatever. I have not been able to get any settlement so far for this animal. Value $90.

H. Frechette, of Yarbo, had a calf killed in the yard at Yarbo, near the loading platform. Dan. Stack has had several head of young stock killed. Howard Spence, of Zeneta, had at least three cows killed; Sam. Mitchell, of Atwater, had four or five horses and Jack Bradley, of Atwater, had horses killed to the value of about $1,000. None of these claims have been settled, the company taking the stand that they were not legally liable and that their guards were approved by the Railway Commission. In connection with these guards, I wrote to the claims agent and offered to bet him $100 that I would drive a team across these guards at 10 miles an hour and the offer is still open. On Atwater section, from April till November, there was about $1,400 worth of stock killed. I have seen cattle and horses cross these guards without any hesitation, and one occasion after being chased off the right of way ahead of a train they immediately recrossed the guards after the train had passed. To my mind the present guards seem to offer an incentive for stock to go on to the track. I have several times heard railway employees discuss these guards and they are of opinion that they are of no use for the purpose for which they are intended.

With best wishes, I am,
Yours faithfully,
J. J. SULLIVAN.

Yarbo, Sask., Jan. 16, 1912.

Mr. Thomas MacNutt,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—I am one of the many who have had stock killed by the railway company through defective cattle guards. The particulars in my case are as follows:—

I had some of my horses running on vacant Canadian Pacific railway land (we have no herd law here), and one of them (a fine Clyde bred filly, 2 years old, worth then $225, would have been worth easily $300 now), got in on the track over the guards from the public crossing. I traced her tracks from where she was killed back to the guards, a distance of a little over half a mile. This was on the 10th of June, 1910. I put in a claim but got nothing. I inclose the final letter from the railway company. The railway company put up a good fence, but the guards are of no earthly use for the purpose for which they are intended. I have seen cattle walking over the guards and they have no more trouble to walk on them than on a plank floor. I have several times driven other people's cattle out when I have seen them in on the track.

The law is very unjust to the farmer and they lose thousands of dollars every year, all through defective guards. I think the law should be amended so that the railway company would have to pay for all the stock killed, then they might put in a guard which would keep the stock out. Hoping that the Railway Act will be amended.

I am, yours truly,
W. G. GUDNASON.

Winnipeg, March 27, 1911.

W. G. Gudnason, Esq.,
Yarbo, Sask.

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 18th instant to Mr. Chamberlin has been forwarded to me for reply.

I would be glad to meet your wishes in this matter, respecting the settlement of the claim, but inasmuch as there are no legal grounds of liability on the part of this company, I think you should understand that we cannot consistently accede to your wishes. If all claims preferred against a railway company were settled irrespective of legal liability, it would be a serious matter for the shareholders.

After having given repeated consideration to your claim, I must again respectfully beg to decline the same.

Yours truly,
D'ARCY TATE,
Solicitor.

Esterhazy, Sask., 19th Jan., 1912.

Dear Sir,—I may say that I have had two horses (valued at $600) killed on the track of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, about one mile east of Zeneta, and the so-called cattle guards as used by the Grand Trunk Pacific are utterly useless, as both horses and cattle walk over them as if there was no obstruction at all. As no doubt you are aware, several other farmers have had either horses or cattle killed in this district on the track of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the loss to the farmers in the district from Yarbo to Atwater would amount to about $3,000. One mare was killed on October 16, 1911, and two others September 4, 1911.

Yours faithfully,
MISS NARA STACK.
MR. DELL STACK.

Atwater, Jan. 22, 1912.

Mr. MacNutt.

Dear Sir,—I thought I would write you about my horses that were killed on the Grand Trunk railway last fall; one was killed in September and 3 in October, 3 fillies and one gelding, 2 rising 3 years and 2 rising 2 years; the four were valued at seven hundred dollars. I don't think that I could buy 4 colts as good for that money; also they were all killed on the right of way. They went in over the guards. Horses don't mind the guards one bit; the guards is no good. That is the reason that there are so many killed. There has been a lot of horses killed between Atwater and Yarbo. Mr. Mitchell had 2 killed and Mr. Spense at Zeneta had 2 or 3 killed, and Mr. Stack at Yarbo had two killed, and every one of them killed on right of way. They had gone in over the guards; that is proof enough that the guards are no good.

I hope you will be able to do something in the matter.

Yours truly,
J. BRADLEY.

Zeneta, Sask., Jan. 20, 1912.

Dear Sir,—I am writing you about the amount of stock the Grand Trunk Pacific railway has killed for me in about one year, which the appraisers valued at $700. In August, 1910, I had one cow killed. The cattle were walking down the yard and were caught by a freight train just leaving Zeneta and were found just across the public crossing on the company's land.

Now there is one whole section of the company's road that is unprotected by any kind of a guard at Zeneta. The cattle and horses go up and down this track for nearly one mile and a half (1½ miles) just as they please. And then on September 4, 1911, I had two horses killed outright and one had a leg broken, all of them mares, one was with foal. About one mile from Zeneta these horses had walked over the guard that is laid down on the public crossing and were killed about midway between the crossings. It was plain to see where the horses had run in front of the train for some distance before they were killed. The train could have been stopped easily in both cases, but they never stop but jam into any stock that is in front of them. Now about the guards. They are no good to keep horses or cattle from off the track. I have seen them walk over the guards just as though there were a few loose poles in their way. I have written the company about the stock, but as yet have received no satisfaction at all.

Is there no way to make the company pay for the stock where the guards are no good? The road is practically unprotected from stock going on when they please.

Please let me hear from you in regard to this matter.

Yours truly,
H. E. SPENCE,
Zeneta, Sask.

Spy Hill, January 26, 1912.

Dear Sir,—Yours to hand and noted. There has been killed on the Grand Trunk Pacific in the Spy Hill district, 22 head of cattle and, I think, about 6 horses. There are no cattle guards now at any of the crossings as they were taken up in December early; when in they are no use as horses and cattle walk across them as if there were none.

Trusting to hear from you on this matter and also on all matters affecting the farmers and our province.

Yours truly,
JOHN A. BROWN.

Atwater, Jan. 17, 1912.

I beg to inform you that a two-year old mare, being worth at least $175, was killed for me on the railway track of the Grand Trunk railway, on section 5-21-2, west of the first crossing some time in the latter part of August, 1911.

The mare crossed the cattle guards on above mentioned crossing. I did not think it worth while sending in a claim to the railway company as I understand the guards are what the law requires.

I would think the government of Canada ought to have big enough eyes to see that the present cattle guards on the Grand Trunk railway are entirely worthless. That is if they ever seen them, and if they have not, it certainly is time they have a sample sent down to Ottawa, so every member of the parliament that has a horse can put it outside their stable door and give it a trial. As my farm is only a few rods from the track, it is almost impossible to keep the stock off the track.

Hoping you will do all in your power to remedy the present situation with regard to the cattle guards on above mentioned road.

I remain,
Yours very respectfully,
K. GRIMSRUZ.
Atwater, Sask.

I have read these letters from some farmers that I know personally, as evidence that a great many cattle are killed. I think the Bill would be satisfactory except for the rider. I do not wish to say one word reflecting on the Railway Commission, which everybody in the west highly appreciates; but it seems to me that the official who passed the present cattle guards did not act on very good judgment. The Bill reads:

Such fences, gates and cattle guards shall be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway lands.

If it stopped there, it would be all right; but it goes on to say:

And the style, construction, material and dimensions of such cattle guards shall, before the 1st day of April, 1912, be submitted to the board and receive its approval.

There is no reason to expect that the Railway Commission would alter its judgment very much, so that we would be very much as we are at the present time. With that rider in the Bill, I think it is utterly useless, and, therefore, I cannot support it. I think, however, that something should be done in this matter. If the railway companies are not able to protect their tracks properly, I think they should pay for the damage, and there is no doubt they are able to do so. The Intercolonial railway does so, and the railways in the west should do so too. I have known people who could not put in their crops because they lost their horses on the railway tracks. It may be said that they should not let them run at large; but that does not relieve the railway company of responsibility. I have heard of a few cases in which the railway company made some allowance to the settler, but without prejudice. This is a very important matter, but I do not think this Bill would give any relief.

Mr. TURRIFF. I hope that what has been said to-night will convince the right hon. the Prime Minister that some action is necessary this session, and I am sure that other members of the House, like myself, who have Bills before the House to amend the Railway Act, would be very pleased to waive their rights to have those Bills considered until a consolidated Bill is introduced next session, so as to allow the Bill of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) to receive the consideration of the government at this session. We have heard to-night of the tremendous loss of money to settlers in these cases. I know of a case in my own constituency in which four horses which were being watered by the owner at his well ran on the railway track and were all killed, and he has never been able to collect one cent from the railway company. The loss practically put him out of business, the horses could not be replaced for $1,000. I think the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) is trying to get up something that will improve the Act, but after the explanations made by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson), I am sure the House will see that if we leave clause 1 as proposed by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), we shall not accomplish his object. If it is provided that the railway company may get the endorsation or approval of the Railway Commission for its cattle guards, it will still manage to escape all liability. What we want to do now is to make the railway company liable for any animals killed on the tracks. If that is done the railway companies will very soon find means of preventing horses and cattle from getting on their tracks. In looking over subsection 4 of section 294 of the Act, it seems to me that it would be made all right if the following words were omitted from it:

> Unless the company establishes that such animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such animal or his agent.

If these lines were omitted, responsibility would be placed on the railway companies for every animal that is killed, except the ordinary exceptions such as the farmer leaving his gate open purposely, and there would not be one animal killed where there are ten killed to-day. The railway company should pay the loss, simply because in that case it is the general public that would be paying. If you make the railway company responsible, it will take the necessary means to prevent cattle getting on the track, and there would be one killed in the future where ten or twenty have been killed in the past.

I hope that the right hon. the First Minister, will see his way clear to make an exception in the case of the Bill of my hon. friend from Portage La Prairie. I am satisfied that if the hon. members for Portage La Prairie, Calgary, Edmonton and Qu'Appelle, were to get together for an hour, they could bring in a Bill that would be satisfactory to every one, and would go through the House with very little discussion.

Mr. WARNOCK. As I have some practical experience in this matter, I should like to say a few words concerning it. That some amendment should be made to the Railway Act which would give the farmers compensation for horses and cattle killed by railway trains is certainly of great urgency and importance to our western country. 75 per cent of the horses and cattle killed by railways, have been killed after they gained access to the right of way across cattle guards. A number of years ago, when Alberta was much more of a ranching country than it is now, an arrangement was made with the Canadian Pacific railway by which that company agreed to pay for all cattle—they did not include horses—killed or injured by their trains, without any necessity on the part of the owners to take action against the company. But as soon as the Canadian Pacific railway had fenced in its right of way, that arrangement was withdrawn, and more cattle are being killed in southern Alberta by the railway trains to-day than before the right of way was protected When the right of way was open, Alberta was a great ranching country and cattle were free to roam over the prairie, and the accidents were far less in number. But since the putting up of cattle guards, the cattle frequently stray across these guards. Then, especially at night, they are dazed by the glare of the locomotive headlights, and unable to get off the track before they are struck. Whereas before the railway tracks were fenced in, the cattle were in no danger of finding themselves enclosed within the cattle guards, and had a greater stretch of clear space in which to escape. Within the last two years, a farmer in my constituency has lost eight fine horses, killed by the Crowsnest Pass railway, and received no compensation. The Canadian Pacific railway repudiated all liability, and under the law a conviction was almost impossible. There is one thing certain, and that is that the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners of a cattle guard put up by the company will not make it any the more efficient. If the company were compelled to pay the value of all stock killed which had crossed its cattle guards and gained access to the right of way, we should probably find much less loss in that connection than we do at present.

Mr. BORDEN. I have listened with much attention to this debate. An hon. gentleman opposite remarked that I ought to be convinced of the very urgent necessity of an amendment to the Railway Act. While I am inclined to agree with him, I am equally convinced that there is a great divergence of opinion as to how it ought to be amended. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) has submitted his proposal with that cogency and clearness which characterize all his utterances in this House. He points out that while the statute at present imputes negligence to the railway company, it also enables the company to discharge itself by proving one of many possible remote or indirect causes of the accident He proposes to change the law so that the company, in order to escape liability, must prove that it has not been guilty of any negligence or omission. It has been stated that the law as amended in 1910 worked satisfactorily in some parts of the country and unsatisfactorily in others. I do not know what may be the result of the change proposed, nor have I had any opportunity of giving close consideration to the amendment proposed by the late Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) last session. I remember being present when that amendment was debated with very great vehemence, with the result that in the end it was dropped in order that the remaining sections of the Bill might pass. So far as the Bill before the House is concerned, if the hon. gentlemen who have been debating it to-night would only get together and come to a conclusion as to what the amendment should be, I should be glad to consider it. It might be well to permit the Bill to go to a small committee in order that that committee might report to the House, but at the moment it seems to me it would be better that the debate should be adjourned. I am not at all convinced that if we did form a committee, the varying opinions put forward to-night would be reconciled. It is possible that they might be, and in that case it would be practicable to put this Bill on the government orders and endeavour to have some amendment to the Railway Act which could be reasonably satisfactory to all concerned. I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT—PIRACY OF LOGS.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 9) to amend the Criminal Code.—Mr. Stevens.

On section 1,

Mr. STEVENS. There have been some slight amendments in the Bill as at first introduced.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Do I understand that it is intended to drop lines 17 to 19, which describe certain particular kinds of lumber at least in eastern Canada that a man could take without being liable.

Mr. DOHERTY. The effect of the Bill is that shingle bolts are added to the list of the varieties of lumber and the waters of the coast are added to the lakes and rivers now included. The Act applies to the case of timber marked with an owner's mark. The only amendment in that regard is that the mark that constitutes a prima facie case against the person retaining the timber, is a mark under the Canada Timber Act, or a mark under the British Columbia Timber Act.

Mr. STEVENS. The law clerk has asked me to have this formal clause added:

This Act shall come into force sixty days after it has been assented to by the Governor General.

Mr. CARVELL. I have no objection to this Bill in that it does not go far enough. It provides for any log which is marked with a mark duly registered under the provisions of the Timber Marking Act, or of the statutes of the province of British Columbia. Now in New Brunswick, in practically all of our large rivers, we have what are called log driving companies incorporated by the legislature, to whom is entrusted the driving of logs coming down the river, and the different owners of logs register with the driving company the marks which they claim. Now the mark itself does not give them the prima facie title in the property which the Timber Marking Act does; but it is a fact that this law shows that the log is the property of the company, or of the person claiming the mark. It seems to me that this section might be extended to cover any mark which is well known as the property of the owner.

Mr. DOHERTY. The law as it now stands attaches this privilege of constituting prima facie evidence of ownership exclusively to the marks that are registered under the Canada Timber Marking Act.

Mr. CARVELL. Then why add British Columbia?

Mr. DOHERTY. Because there is a law in British Columbia which provides for that registration, and which is more generally used there. Now we are extending it to make it apply to brands registered under the legislation of the province, and if there be similar legislation in another province then it would be an analogous case. I understand the hon. gentleman to suggest that we should extend that to apply to the mark of every private company. I think this is a provision which is relieving an owner who comes to claim his property of the burden of proving that which, in common law, falls upon him, and makes the particular designation mark prima facie evidence of his ownership. He would have to begin by proving registration of that mark, he would have to prove that that mark was his mark, which would be proving ownership. The purpose of the registration as it stood without this amendment was to attach to the registered mark, registered under the Dominion law, the privilege of making prima facie case against the man in possession of the log that he knew that mark, and, therefore, knew that he was getting somebody else's property. I think there may be a similar effect making a prima facie case of knowledge on the part of a man if he is in possession of a log bearing a mark which is registered under a law in force in the province. I think we may fairly expect a man to know the registered marks that are registered under a law of his province. But it might not be equally fair to throw upon everybody the knowledge of what is the mark of a driving company.

Mr. CARVELL. I appreciate the argument of the Minister of Justice. The fault I have to find with the section is that it either goes too far or not far enough. It creates a special law by the legislation of British Columbia, it creates a special right in some way in the legislation of British Columbia which does not apply to the legislation of other provinces.

Mr. DOHERTY. If the hon. gentleman will say that New Brunswick has a timber marking registration Act under which the registration of marks is provided for in a manner to be made public, I would say that we ought to include it. But I do not know of such an Act in New Brunswick, or in any of the other provinces. The hon. member who is promoting this Bill, does know of the existence of such an Act in British Columbia, and the logs there are habitually marked by that mark which is registered and made public under that law.

Mr. CARVELL. There is no law in New Brunswick providing for the registration of timber marks, but there is a law providing that the owners of lumber should register their marks with the driving companies, and then they get certain rights in the property. It amounts to the same thing in the end. It seems to me like sectional legislation, which applies to one province and not to all.

Mr. McCREA. The Minister of Justice has been talking about the law of British Columbia, and the law of New Brunswick. But there is another part of the country, the province of Quebec, where a great quantity of pulpwood is cut and exported, and which is not marked at all. For instance, there is a concern who practically run all their logs on the river, and only a very small percentage are marked with a registered stamp. What will happen to the mill owner if the log is not marked at all ?

Mr. DOHERTY. Merely that these gentlemen will remain under the common law, and they will have to prove that these are their logs. This Bill only goes so far as to say that a registered mark will be prima facie evidence of ownership. It is attaching a privilege to the existence of a registered mark. I think it would be an extreme measure to say that any man who is found in possession of a log should be presumed to know that it belongs to somebody else, and would have to say where he got it. A man placed in that position might have had a log that did not have that mark upon it, and inasmuch as it is an unmarked log it would be just as hard to prove that it was his log, as for the man who claimed it to prove that it was his.

Mr. McCREA. I have had some experience, and I know that there is a general impression amongst the public that if a man finds a log without a mark he has a right to take it.

Mr. DOHERTY. There is nothing in this Act justifying that.

Mr. McCREA. It may probably lead to some trouble in some places.

Mr. DOHERTY. I think my hon. friend would find it very hard if I walked into his establishment, and he happened to have a large quantity of logs on hand, and I said: Those logs are all mine unless you prove that they are yours. My hon. friend suggests that it would be a good law that would entitle me to walk into his place and say: You prove that all those logs are yours or else I will prosecute you for stealing them. I do not think we could go as far as that.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOHERTY moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LEMIEUX. May I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. DOHERTY. First the Grain Bill, then other Bills except Nos. 78, 88, 95 and 97; then Supply, beginning with Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 6, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE GRAIN ACT.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 32) respecting grain.—Mr. Foster (N. Toronto).

On section 101,—disputes as to grading.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is twenty-four hours long enough delay in which to allow an appeal from the grading of the inspector?

Mr. OLIVER. I think so. This grading must always take place at the inspection point, and it is absolutely necessary that there should be no delay there. Every one is supposed to be doing business there on the jump in order that the cars may get forward.

On section 102—grain survey board.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) moved that in subsection 2 the word 'its' be substituted for 'his,' the subsection would then read:

The grain survey board shall be governed in the performance of its duties by such general regulations as are made by the board.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. TURRIFF. I notice that eight of the twelve commissioners on this grain survey board are to be appointed from the province of Manitoba. That was all right at one time when Manitoba was raising practically the great bulk of our wheat, but now the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta are raising a great deal more wheat, and I do not know that this preference given to Manitoba is right. I have not heard of any complaints and am not prepared to say that it is not right.

Mr. DOHERTY.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Where is the inspection made?

Mr. TURRIFF. In Winnipeg.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think that the probable reason for this provision is that it is difficult to get together so many from a distance. The members of the board of trade are in the city of Winnipeg and at the point of inspection.

Mr. BORDEN. Section 102 will stand.

Mr. TURRIFF. After the explanation given by my hon. friend from Souris, (Mr. Schaffner), I am not anxious that the section should stand.

Mr. BORDEN. Carried. It can be returned to afterwards if desired.

Section 104.—offices in Winnipeg.

Mr. OLIVER. While that clause is under consideration, I should like to place on record the suggestion that it will be desirable, if not now, at any rate, in the near future, to provide for a survey board at Calgary to deal with grain going west to the Pacific ports. I do not know that it is absolutely necessary at this time, but I desire to make mention of the possibility.

Mr. BORDEN. I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), desires that it be taken into consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

On section 105—grades of grain.

White clipped oats—The grades Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 white clipped oats shall correspond in all respects with the grades of Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 white oats, except that the former shall weigh not less than 38, 36 and 34 pounds to the bushel respectively.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). There seems to be an error there; four grades of oats are given but only three weights.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is the same way in the old Bill. Yet it may have been an omission.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Let that stand for the present.

Mr. TURRIFF. Reverting to the question of the weight of a bushel of oats, our weight for a standard bushel is 34 pounds, while the American bushel is 32 pounds. There is no argument in the fact that 32 pounds is too light for a measured bushel. Lots of oats in the west will weigh 45 pounds and 46 pounds to the measured bushel, but 34 pounds is what we would give in selling a bushel. As we are now selling a very considerable portion of our oat crop in the United States, it might be an advantage if our standard bushel of oats, like our standard bushel of other grains, was made the same as theirs. I would suggest that a standard bushel of oats be made 32 pounds instead of 34 pounds.

Mr. BLAIN. I would object to making any change in the weight of oats. It is a well understood thing in Ontario as well as in the other provinces, that 34 pounds is a bushel of oats and, therefore, I do not think it would be wise to adopt an American standard in preference to the standard that is so well understood in every part of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The matter of standards of these different grains is entirely technical. The representatives of the farmers, the Grain Growers' Association, of the millers, and others, have all had the Bill and have been interviewed in connection with it, and the conclusion has been not to materially disturb these grades in either weights or definitions. I would not care to assent to such a change without a general consensus of opinion.

On section 105,—grades of grain,—barley.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). There is no standard weight for No. 1 barley, while for all others there is. Then with peas no weight is given. This seems to be copied from the old Act.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There was none in the old Act. It seems that the grade of barley is imponderable; there is no weight in the present Act, there is no weight in Bill 'Q' and there is no weight in this one. I imagine we ought not to be daring enough to put a weight in.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite disagree with the minister; I think we should be daring enough to do what is right.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will let the provision with reference to barley stand.

On section 105—peas,

Mr. OLIVER. Before we pass from this part of the section, section 58 gives the standard weight of the different grains and it sets down peas as 60 lbs. to the bushel.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is provided for there.

Mr. OLIVER. The western producer is not seriously interested in this provision, but the eastern producer is, and as the eastern representatives do not probably have the Bill before them, I take the opportunity of drawing the minister's attention to the fact that under the Act as it stands peas of all grades would have the same weight, and the weight would be 60 lbs. to the bushel. I think also that the weights should be put right into the section defining the grade as in other cases.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The weight of barley is given as 48 lbs. to the bushel.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the standard weight, but I think that in all cases, for the convenience of people who desire to use the Act, and inasmuch as there is a difference between grades, the weight of each grade should be stated in the section which defines the grade.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, that is right.

Mr. OLIVER. I would think that as subsection 1 of the barley division stands, the whole division relating to peas should stand for consideration in the interest of the eastern producer.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The definition of the grading of peas never appears to have had the weight put in at all. The general weight governing that is fixed at 58 lbs.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not an expert in peas, but I would think that No. 3 grade should not properly have the full weight of No. 1 grade. The interests of the trade would require a scaling down of the weight, but, I am not able to speak authoritatively upon it.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will look into it.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the division relating to peas had better stand.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 105 stands.

On section 107—grades in western inspection division,

Mr. OLIVER. The last words of the first paragraph of section 107 refer to 'the last preceding section.' That is section 106, but they should refer to section 105.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Section 105 and section 106.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the first paragraph of section 107 by inserting the word 'two' between the words 'last' and 'preceding,' and substituting the word 'sections' for the word 'section.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). In reference to section 107, there is, as far as I have understood, a pretty unanimous opinion that a change should be made in the denomination of these grades, that instead of having the word 'Manitoba' in the grades, the reading should be changed to 'Canada hard.' 'Manitoba hard wheat' was the denomination, I suppose, which was given when Manitoba was the grain grower of the west, but Manitoba is no longer the only grain grower of the west. Saskatchewan and Alberta, notably the former, are increasing by leaps and bounds in their production of grain. The idea, then, that I wish to present to the House is that the time has come when 'Manitoba' as a denomination for hard wheat should give way to a broader name, and the name that is suggested is the word 'Canada.' There is no reason that I can see on general principles why hard wheat raised anywhere in Canada should not be hard wheat and should not get the grade, or that the name of a section should prevail rather than the name of a whole country. The grade of the wheat essentially will be exactly the same. It will be simply a change of name, and it would seem as though it would give greater prominence to the country, that is to the whole country, Canada, and give greater backing to the grade itself by having the denomination of the whole country than to confine it to a section which is now far outstripped by the adjoining sections and by the whole of Canada in the production of this grade.

The only objection which could be urged against it—and I inquired particularly of dealers and millers—was this: That when you give a distinctive name to a grade it becomes known by that name on the market, and sometimes it is known as a grade even after all the significance in the name itself has passed away. Those interested in the production and milling of grain, who have conferred with me, are of the opinion that that would not militate against the market currency of the wheat in this case. If there was any chance that it would, it could be cured in the first years of its currency by putting in brackets in our certificates after the word 'Canada,' the word 'Manitoba,' to show that 'Canada Hard Wheat' took the place of the former name, and was identical with the Manitoba Hard Wheat, and also by regulating that it should not come into effect until the first of September, 1912. With these safeguards it is generally agreed that no ill consequence would follow, and it is an idea which all seem to catch that it would be a good thing to give the general name of the country to the wheat

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not think it would be right for me to let that word 'Manitoba' be dropped without a kick. Even the kind hearted Minister of Trade and Commerce feels there will be a difficulty in dropping the name, and he is quite willing that the word 'Manitoba' should be placed in brackets. Well, I don't like that either. Manitoba has been the pioneer province in wheat growing in this country, and it is Manitoba that has produced the high grade of wheat which has earned for itself a reputation in all the markets of the world, so that in my opinion the word 'Manitoba' should stand out boldly. I do not think it is fair to drop the word 'Manitoba,' even in view of the softening down proposition with which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has connected his proposal.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a very good kick.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I thought it my duty to make that kick anyway.

Mr. OLIVER. At the same time it is unfair that the province of Manitoba should have the credit of the enormous quantity of hard wheat that is grown in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Aside from that, I think the argument placed before the committee by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is certainly very good. There is, however, a difficulty that properly arises in carrying the theory a step further, as I would like to see it carried if it can be done. I find that there are five definitions given to grain; there is 'Manitoba' for spring wheat, 'Alberta' for fall or winter wheat, 'Canadian Western' for oats, 'Northwestern Manitoba' for flax, and I think there is 'Manitoba' for barley. I would like very much to see some definition adopted that would apply to all of the different classes of grain that are raised in western Canada, and for the same reason, in regard at any rate to oats, and I believe to barley, as in the case of wheat, namely, that the quality raised in the west is superior to that raised in the remainder of the country. I am afraid that the word 'Canada,' if applied to all these other grains, would not be suitable. In the case of wheat the definition is made accurate and satisfactory by using the words 'Canada Hard Wheat', if the definition is restricted to wheat, but if you carry the word 'Canada' into oats and barley it does not apply as well. I would respectfully suggest that if it would be possible to secure a short and satisfactory word that would be distinctive, and that could be applied to all the different classes of grain raised in the prairie west as compared with the grain raised in the rest of the country it would be desirable to make the change. For my own part, I would think that if the word 'Northern' were used to distinguish all the different classes of grain raised in the prairie west it would perhaps be as good a general definition as could be given. Some people are delicate about the use of the word 'Northern' but, as a matter of fact, nine-tenths of our wheat to-day is sold as 'Northern' and the word 'Northern' has a more generally accepted significance in regard to our wheat to-day than has either the word 'Manitoba' or the word 'Hard.' I would suggest, with all deference, merely for the consideration of the committee, that if we use the words 'Northern Hard' to apply to wheat and the word 'Northern' to apply to the barley, oats and flax, grown on the western prairies, they would constitute a satisfactory and sufficient distinguishment from the grain raised in other parts of Canada, and there would be notice to everyone dealing in the grain as to the kind of grain it was, and as to the part of the country it came from.

Mr. STAPLES. Like the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) I am jealous of the word 'Manitoba'. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has claimed for the province of Alberta the credit of growing the best 'Alberta Red Winter Wheat', but I can tell the hon. gentleman that we can produce Red Winter Wheat in the province of Manitoba just as successfully as they do in the province of Alberta.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. STAPLES. Therefore, if you are going to drop the word 'Manitoba' from 'Spring Wheat', I think you will have to drop the name 'Alberta' in order to compensate for the loss we are having in the 'Alberta Fall Wheat'.

Mr. OLIVER. That was my suggestion.

Mr. STAPLES. The name 'Manitoba' has become famous throughout the world, and while I do not like to see it dropped I think perhaps it could be worked out on the lines I have suggested. There is, of course, the danger of there being some commercial loss by dropping the name 'Manitoba', but if there is due notice given in the manner the minister has stated, probably the loss may be minimized. Section 105 of the Act provides for the eastern grades, and section 107 for the western division. Now, if you call the eastern grades 1, 2 and 3 spring wheat there might be some conflict in that. I suppose the term 'Spring' is used instead of the term 'Hard', and there are two divisions to be considered there.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the necessity of giving a distinctive name to the grain raised in the western division if it is to have credit for its special character.

Mr. STAPLES. Why not call it Western No. 1 hard instead of Northern?

Mr. ROBB. As an easterner I am prepared to support the Manitoba members in their defence of the word 'Manitoba.' It seems to me that if we make this change we shall be doing something that will disturb trade conditions in regard to both wheat and flour. We have built up in this country and on the Liverpool market a reputation for Manitoba wheat and Manitoba flour that is worth a great deal to every grower of and every dealer in western wheat. On the Liverpool market Manitoba wheat is generally quoted a little higher, for instance, than Duluth wheat; and in the United States hard wheat belt people do not confine themselves to a general term such as we propose to introduce. For instance, hard wheat is generally spoken of as Duluth wheat, while hard wheat flour is spoken of as Minnesota flour. These are trade marks which they have built up. In the same way we have built up the trade mark of Manitoba flour and Manitoba wheat on the Liverpool market, and I think the minister should hesitate before introducing any legislation that will disturb these conditions.

Sir EDMUND OSLER. In the exportation of flour and wheat the brand or trade mark is often much more valuable in sentiment than it is in reality, and it might be rather risky to make a change.

Mr. TURRIFF. I think the change could be fairly made with the safeguards surrounding it which the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggests. There is no doubt that the name 'Manitoba' having been used for a number of years, some little inconvenience would be caused in changing it. When the name was adopted, the great bulk of western wheat was grown in Manitoba; but at present there is a great deal more wheat grown in Saskatchewan than in Manitoba, and in the future there will be many times more. Take the case of flax. All our flax is sold under the names 'No. 1 Northwestern Manitoba,' and 'No. 1 Manitoba Flaxseed,' although Saskatchewan grows 90 per cent of all the flax grown in the whole Dominion; and naturally the people of Saskatchewan who produce this flax do not want it to be called by the name of another province. The suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton strikes me as a very good one. I think we should cut out the names Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta altogether, and use instead one name that would be fairly distinctive of the whole western country, surrounding the change with the precautions suggested by the minister. If this is done, I do not think any loss will be suffered by the producer, the miller or the exporter.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want to dictate at all, not being an expert. I just gave the House my own views as gathered from consideration of the subject. The Act we have had up to the present time is called the Manitoba Grain Act. We are calling this one the Canada Grain Act, because it embraces all parts of our country. The fact that Manitoba flour and Manitoba No. 1 hard wheat have a precedence in the English market is not because the name is 'Manitoba,' but because of the hardness and the quality of the wheat. If it had happened to be called 'Saskatchewan Hard,' it would have had the same precedence, although it might have aroused some prejudice in the minds of those who had to use the term because of its largeness and the difficulty of spelling it. However, if we restricted all our Canadian wheat to the name Manitoba on the markets of London, Liverpool, Berlin and Hamburg, the idea of Canada's productive power would be restricted, whereas the word 'Canada,' would lend itself to the idea of extension and expansion. The buyer, the newspaper reader, and everybody else would say, why, this is Canadian wheat, so that the quality of the wheat would be immediately transferred to the country itself, which would be a great gain. Now that Manitoba is about to pass from the chrysalis stage of a postage-stamp province to one with large national boundaries, it will be able to appreciate the idea of largeness, and I think it would be a graceful act on the part of my two friends here to kick a little, but not to kick too hard, against the extension of the name. As a representative of the small province of Ontario, which also grows wheat, I have a little bit of an objection to having all the wheat of that province and of Canada generally, described by the name of one section. However, with the two restrictions of having the change coming into force in September, 1912, and indicating by a hyphen what the name was under the old nomenclature, I do not see how there would be any loss; and that is the expression of opinion of the Dominion Millers' Association, which had its committees here, and the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, as well as those who raised the wheat. I would, therefore, move that the word 'Canada' be substituted for the word 'Manitoba,' in the 17th line.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does eastern Canada grow hard wheat?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not know what its possibilities may be when we get up to the Hudson Bay territory.

Mr. STAPLES. As we have been letting other sections of the Bill stand, I do not think it would be any harm to let this section stand, and we may be able to get even a better name than the one the Minister has suggested. When the proposal goes out to the public generally, I think he will find considerable opposition to it, and it is fair that before we enact legislation the public should have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon friend would rather have the section stand for a little more cogitation, I have no objection.

Mr. FOSTER (N. Toronto).

Section allowed to stand.

On section 110,—standard samples United States grain.

Mr. OLIVER. The question of naming the winter wheat might be discussed. If the minister has any suggestions with regard to a title for that class of wheat, which will bring it into some sort of conformity with the proposition regarding spring wheat, it would be satisfactory to the commission to hear his suggestions.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I suggested that these items should stand so that my hon. friends might think them over. I am quite willing to take into consideration the suggestion made a little while ago to see whether any further change in the name could be proposed, which the committee would think advisable.

Mr. STAPLES. I suppose the same suggestion would apply with equal force to Alberta winter wheat as to Manitoba?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Except that there is not so much of it raised.

Mr. STAPLES. How would the word 'prairie' apply instead of 'Canada'.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It has been suggested that we should call it simply 'northern'. That however simply indicates climate and has no suggestion of nationality. You have northern wheat in Dakota and Russia. The same objection applies to the word 'prairie'. There are prairies in different parts of the world, so that the word is not distinctively Canadian. I should like to see a wheat which is really good and which we are sending out to the world's markets tagged with a distinctively Canadian name. To my mind 'Canada' is the most distinctive name we can apply. 'Canadian' is an adjective, and an adjective is not as strong as a substantive.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The question is whether we want to make any distinction between hard wheat grown in the west and hard wheat grown in eastern Canada.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We make that distinction by calling it hard.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You may have hard wheat grown at the North Pole.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Well, I would not like to repress any optimism which might be in the minds of the committee.

Mr. TURRIFF. I see that flax is not included in the eastern schedules at all. I would suggest, while leaving this section stand in the meantime, that instead of No. 1 Northwestern Manitoba flax you make No. 1 Canadian flax—either Canada or western Canada.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think that eastern Canada and western Canada would be good definitions.

Mr. TURRIFF. I would prefer No. 1 Canada.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why prefer that in the case of flax and not in the case of wheat? Flax is also grown in eastern Canada.

Mr. STAPLES. Is there any difference in quality between eastern and western flax?

Mr. TURRIFF. I have no idea whether western flax is any better or as good.

Mr. OLIVER. There has been a suggestion put forward with regard to No. 3 barley, described on page 29, which might be considered now. The definition reads:

No. 3 Manitoba barley shall include shrunken or otherwise slightly damaged barley, weighing not less than 45 pounds to the bushel.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I propose to amend that.

Mr. OLIVER. We might consider the amendment now.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I shall read the amendment, so that it may be under advisement. It is proposed that No. 3 barley shall be reasonably clean, reasonably free from all other grains, shall include weather stained, and slightly shrunken, but sound barley, free from frost and weighing not less than 44 pounds to the bushel.

The intention of having it free from frost is so that it may keep its malting properties perfectly good. A little frosting of the barley, I understand, destroys its malting properties. No. 4 barley should include all damaged barley, weighing less than 44 pounds to the bushel. This will appear in 'Hansard' and can be thought over.

On section 110.—standard samples.

Mr. NEELY. I notice subsection 3 reads:

The board may reject such standard samples if it deems them to have been unfairly or improperly chosen, and in such case it shall forthwith cause others to be chosen in their place by such means as it thinks proper.

I was not here when we discussed the powers of the Grain Survey Board, but if the Board of Grain Commissioners are to have the same authority with regard to the supervision of the selecting of samples or standards by the Survey Board of Canada wheat, I think there is an anomaly we ought to correct. As I understand it, the Board of Grain Commissioners, while supposed to be good business men understanding the conditions of the grain trade, are not necessarily grain experts in the selecting of the samples of grain and the establishing of standards.

The Grain Survey Board, I understand, is composed of men technically expert in collecting samples and establishing standards for commercial grades, and I think that the decision of such a board should not be subject to revision or supervision by the board of commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I understand that the standard samples for the United States product are to be selected here by the Grain Survey Board and the standard samples for our own grain are selected by the board of standards; and my hon. friend (Mr. Neely) asks why this should be under the survey board as being an exception. Is that it?

Mr. NEELY. In this case it is the Grain Survey Board. I quite understand that the standards board collects the samples for Canadian grain and establishes the standards for commercial grades. But where there is a dispute or question of selecting commercial grades, I do not think the board of commissioners ought to have supervision over the judgment of the Grain Survey Board or the Grain Standards Board.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They do that for the standards board. In fact, the standards board is appointed by the board of commissioners.

Mr. NEELY. All right as far as appointments are concerned.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not think there is much in the hon. gentleman's objection. In the first place, we have no right to assume that the commissioners will not be experienced men; they may be as good judges of samples as any one. But, in any case, they have expert advice, they have the chief inspector and other experts, and I suppose they will rely upon that expert advice. The board of any concern is not expected to have expert knowledge of all matters coming under its authority, but they realize that in questions of dispute they must depend upon expert help. The same applies in this case.

Mr. NEELY. Take the case of the establishment of grain standards by the Grain Standards Board. It appears that difficulty might arise from giving the Board of Commissioners revising power, if in any instance they exercised that power. Because, when the commercial grades are established, contracts are entered into on a basis of these grades; and if the board of commissioners are to have the power of revision of these grades, there might be great disturbance with reference to contracts.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). As a matter of fact, I think that hon. gentlemen will find that there will be little interference by the board of commissioners with the work of the experts.

On section 113, grading United States grain—appeals,

Mr. OLIVER. I am not very familiar with the operation of this provision. Perhaps the minister could tell us under what circumstances it becomes desirable or necessary for Canada to make an official inspection of United States grain in transit in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The reason this is necessary is that United States grain—wheat to some extent, but particularly corn—is liable to heat on the way, and deteriorate, so there has been a demand for an inspection at the port of Montreal. It is only in the east, I think, and at the port of Montreal that this inspection takes place.

On section 115, no grade; condemned; rejected; scoured grain,

Mr. OLIVER. It has been brought to my attention that there is a possibility under this clause, and the clause regarding hospital elevators that an abuse might arise unless an amendment is provided. This section, which really applies to grain treated because it has been damaged, provides that the grain so treated shall, under certain circumstances, not grade higher than No. 3, but under other circumstances it shall be given such grade as it may be entitled to after passing through treatment.

There is no prohibition, in the Act, so far as I am aware, of the placing of sound grain in these hospital elevators. If there is no such prohibition, and no prohibition of mixing of that grain with the treated grain, then sound grain could be mixed with treated grain, thus securing for the treated grain a grade to which it would not be properly entitled. A provision of this kind should be inserted in this section or in the section relating to hospital elevators, or in both.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I should think that the provisions against abuses should be made in the section relating to hospital elevators. We are here fixing the grades of grain. Of course, if necessary, we might return to this section.

Section 121—interpretation.

Mr. NEELY. This differs materially from the corresponding clause of Bill 'Q'. Bill 'Q' included in its definition sections 123 and 124, but this Bill does not include those sections. The effect is that the important feature of the Bill covered by section 123 is limited in its application by section 121, to the western inspection division only. In 'Q', the application is made throughout Canada. Why are these restrictions on the buying and selling of grain that are laid down in 123, applied to the western inspection division only, and not to those operating public elevators in the east?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). This includes all that was included in Bill Q, with the single exception of section 123.

Mr. NEELY. And section 124.

Mr. TURRIFF. Perhaps the minister could give us the reasons for leaving out clause 123.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am going to ask the committee to skip 122 and 123 for the present. The committee will see that in passing over for the present 122 and 123 I am leaving out the questions which are moot points. We will come back to them afterwards, when a full explanation will be given.

Mr. NEELY. Would you allow 121 to stand as well?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). 121 will stand if you please.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will the minister give us good notice before he takes up these sections?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think he might have given us notice that he was going to allow section 123 to stand, because I came here at a good deal of personal inconvenience.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am very sorry, but my hon. friend will have the advantage of having two studies of it instead of one, and be all the better prepared.

Sections 121, 122, 123 allowed to stand.

On section 124—Hospital elevators,

Mr. NEELY. Here we have the trouble that was referred to by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver); at least, this is where there should be something adopted to prevent the grading out of grain which has merely passed through these hospital elevators but has not been treated —grain, which as a matter of fact, should not be admitted into these hospital elevators. Under this section there is absolutely nothing to prevent these hospital elevators taking in grain which does not require treatment, and, as my hon. friend from Edmonton has said, mixing it with other grain, thereby raising the grade of the treated grain and leading to more or less fraud when that grain is shipped out again. I would suggest to the minister that after the word 'grain' in the third line of the third subsection, there should be inserted some such words as the following: 'Such as is mentioned in section 115 of this Act.' I think perhaps, that would cover the case.

Mr. OLIVER. That brings back my suggestion that there should be some provision in section 115 which this would refer back to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). As I understand it there is no objection to the first and second subsections.

Mr. NEELY. No.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The first makes provision that there shall be hospital elevators and the second that each shall take out a license and furnish a bond. In the first subsection, in the third line, the word 'point' should be 'points.' In subsection 3 I desire to add, after the words 'section 115' the words 'and section 99'. Section 99 reads:

> When grain shipped from any elevator is being systematically reduced in quantity below the general average quality of the grain of similar grades in the bins of the terminal elevators, the chief inspector shall instruct inspecting officers that no such grain shall be allowed to pass inspection except on a lower grade.
> 2. The inspector shall at all times keep careful watch on grain received into terminal elevators, and, if they find any such grain as aforesaid being received, shall at once notify the chief inspector, who shall make an investigation forthwith and take action accordingly.

If my hon. friend will state his objection, we can discuss the matter.

Mr. OLIVER. My objection is that section 99 provides for the grading out at a lower grade, and that is what we expect will be done and what we don't want to be done. We want the grain which is not treated and which goes into the elevator at a certain grade to come out of the elevator as the same grade. I would respectfully suggest that a provision be made in section 115 to provide that the grain which has been treated shall not be mixed with grain that has not been treated, so as to absolutely prohibit the mixing of good grain with treated grain in these hospital elevators.

Mr. NEELY. The objection to section 124 and to the Bill generally, as applied to hospital elevators is, that there is absolutely no provision made to prevent the hospital elevators taking good grain and mixing it with defective grain, thus lowering the grade of the good grain and increasing the value of the mixed grain. I do not think the hospital elevators should be permitted to take in any grain other than is mentioned in section 116. I do not think the hospital elevators should be allowed to take in good grain at all, because if they have good grain in one end of the elevator and treated grain at the other end of the elevator, it would be pretty hard to prevent them mixing.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The Act provides that these hospital elevators shall be governed by such rules and restrictions as may be imposed by the board. Everything in connection with the operation of an hospital elevator has to be under the supervision of the board, and according to rules and regulations imposed by the board. And surely you will be safeguarded in that way. I do not know how you could in a statute profitably determine everything an hospital elevator should do. If you have a board in which you have faith—and we are going to have faith in this new board—and it makes regulations governing an hospital elevator, one would think that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to urge that the possibilities are so great and so necessary to guard against, that they should be taken notice of in the Act and that it should not be a matter left to the discretion of the board. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Carrick) described graphically the pecuniary advantages resulting from mixing grain, and the pecuniary advantages resulting from the mixing of good grain with scoured grain are so great that I am not so sure but that it would be possible to persuade even a board such as we hope to have appointed to accede to the mixing. There is a great deal to be said on the subject of mixing. The House and the government, as I understand, have their minds made up on this question, and they propose to give effect to their view in legislation. Then it is for them to do so, and not throw the responsibility on the board. I think it is not difficult to make the provision, and I would strongly urge that it should be done in the Act and on the responsibility of the House.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want to be understood as saying that the Act ought to be silent and that everything ought to be left to the discretion of the board. I do not think that for a moment. I think the Act should go as far as an Act can go in expressing the intention of the legislation, and then discretionary power in things unforeseen, and that cannot be included in detail, should be left in the hands of the board. My view is that we should allow them to do their legitimate work and not hamper them in doing it; but on the other hand we should not give them power to degrade the grades, and by their operations to go against what is the evident intention of the Act. If there are any other suggestions to be made on either side of the House, I would like them to be made, and I will take them into consideration.

Mr. ROBB. Will the minister tell the committee what regulations are in force now for checking up the elevators and keeping up the standard grades that go in and come out?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I suppose my hon. friend is as well versed in the operations of the elevators as I am. The modus operandi is in short this. When the inspected and graded grain goes to the elevator, it is under the supervision of officers of the government from the time the door of the car is opened until the grain is elevated and weighed and disposed of in the appropriate bins. It is under the supervision of these same officers whilst it is in the elevator, and it is taken out again under their supervision. In fact, they are on watch and guard from the time the grain is weighed into the elevator until it is weighed out of the elevator into the car or vessel. If their eyes are about them and they are thoroughly honest, they can, I think, see that matters are pretty fairly carried on rightly and honestly. That modus operandi has been absolutely efficient, I think, in preventing many abuses. The fact that it has not issued in a perfect result is the foundation for the demand for elevators at terminals which shall be not only under the supervision of government officers of another entity, but shall be absolutely operated by officers who are not employed by any corporation, and who consequently have no incentive for allowing or committing wrongdoing.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would like to have some information as to what classes of wheat are to be sent to the hospital. The word 'hospital,' indicates that the wheat is sick, to some degree at least. Wheat that is not sick to any great extent, but is mixed with oats, should not go to the hospital. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Robb), who I understand is a miller, whether wheat that is smutty, if put into a hospital to have that detect cured, would be as good for milling purposes after it comes out as wheat that does not contain smut. Does the scouring make it pretty good milling wheat?

Mr. ROBB. That depends on the extent of the injury before it goes in. Scouring will not make it right; but if the hospital were equipped with washing machinery, the wheat could be made pretty good for milling by being washed. I am inclined to side with the view of the minister that some latitude must be allowed to the hospital, because in some years it will have very little to do, while in other years it will be kept busy. It should not be restricted to doing only hospital work.

Mr. TURRIFF. I may point out that some years ago the owners of the hospital elevators were here, extremely anxious that this privilege which we are trying to guard against now should be granted, that is, that damaged wheat, when scoured and cleaned, should be inspected by the grain inspector and certified. That was refused; but under the present Act they are still able to mix scoured wheat with other wheat, and that is the main thing to guard against. It is all right to sell the scoured wheat for everybody then knows what he is buying, but it is not right that a miller should buy wheat, graded No. 2 Northern, which contains a considerable proportion of scoured wheat.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Scoured wheat cannot be graded higher than No. 3.

Mr. TURRIFF. It should not be mixed in at all.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If you look to section 115, you find it deals with those grades of wheat. There are the 'no' grade, the 'condemned' and 'rejected.' The no grade is composed of wheat that is slightly damp; the condemned is in a heated condition; and the rejected wheat takes in any grain that is unsound and unfit to be classed under the ordinary grades.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Having oats in it alone, does not make it sick.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is a very good thing to have machinery for the separation of mixed grains. They have special machinery at Port Arthur and Fort William, where the separation can be done much better than in the wheat elevators. That is the conclusion we all aim at. We want to give the hospital elevators as much liberty as possible to treat sick grain and make it commercially valuable. Outside of that, we do not want to give them any powers which will enable them to degrade the grain.

Mr. OLIVER. Section 123 is very important. If the minister has any amendment to offer to that section, it will be desirable to have it in the hands of members some little time before consideration in committee.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Any amendments will be printed and put on the table of the House.

On section 125—security by licensee,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would like to submit to the judgment of the committee a suggestion which has been made. It has been represented that large quantities of grain passed through these elevators and that the sum of $50,000 is too small in some cases, and that consequently the board ought to have the discretion of fixing a larger penalty. If that view be accepted, we might provide for a penal sum of not less than $10,000, and leave out all that comes after. That would fix the board to a minimum, but allow it to use its discretion in going above that minimum.

Mr. OLIVER. I would hardly think that would be advisable.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Another proposition is this, that the sum should not be less than $10,000, nor more than $50,000.

Mr. OLIVER. When we are taking the responsibility of interfering with private rights, as we are doing by compelling the giving of such a large bond for the transaction of ordinary business, I do not think we should throw more responsibility on the board than is absolutely necessary for administrative purposes. It would be advisable to give in the Act some indication of what parliament thinks would be an adequate bond, if there be any possible way of giving such an indication.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The difficulty is to fix the bond on any basis. I do not see what basis could be taken unless that of the capacity.

Mr. OLIVER. It strikes me that that would probably be a fair basis.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will let the section stand

On section 126 subsection 6—Public Elevators in Eastern Inspection Division, record to be kept.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask for information, and perhaps expose my ignorance in doing so. This subsection provides for weighing and keeping a record of the weight. The word 'overage' is used. Suppose a certain lot of grain is billed at 10,000 bushels, and it is found to weigh 10,100 bushels, does the whole shipment go forward just the same or does only 10,000 bushels go forward?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The warehousemen of the Eastern elevators weigh in grain that comes from, let us say Fort William, and under the section, they must keep an account of the grade, the billed weight and the actual weight as weighed in by them. He compares his weight with that weighed out at Fort William. If it weighs less, the vesselman who carries it is responsible for the shortage, and if it turns out to be more, the vesselman gets the overage.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That does not occur very often.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). A shortage is not infrequent.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Yes, but not an overage.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Does the answer satisfy my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver)?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is exactly what I was asking. It is the actual amount of the grain billed that goes forward.

On section 126, subsection 7—preservation of identity of grain.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That has always been the law has it not? They break the law, but this has always been the law?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, this is the present Grain Act.

On section 126, subsection 10—Allowance for screenings.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I notice that subsection 3 of section 115 provides that:

> Any grain that is unsound, musty, dirty, smutty, sprouty, or from any other cause is unfit to be classed under any of the recognized grades shall be classed as 'rejected.'

In discussing this, I notice that instead of using the word 'dirty' the expression 'mixed grain' has been used by the hon. member of Trade and Commerce. Under subsection ten of section 126 which we are now discussing it is provided that the owner shall be paid or an allowance made to him in screenings. Now, I take it that the screenings of grain treated in an hospital elevator are a very important feature of the treatment. I would like to know if provision is made for looking after these screenings, as certainly they are a most dangerous commodity.

We know that in hospitals care is taken to prevent the spread of diseases. Also in packing houses officers are appointed to detect diseased animals and those condemned are sent to the fertilizer tank. These screenings taken from the grain at the elevators are often shipped out and sold for feed. I would ask the minister if any provision is made to safeguard the public against the danger from weed seeds thus distributed.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, there is the supervision of the government officers in the first place and then there is the provision that a certain charge is made for the screenings, half a cent a bushel and all over 5 per cent of the screenings are returned to the owner. If it is not 5 per cent there is no charge for the cleaning. What is under 5 per cent is kept by the cleaner himself so that the value of the screenings inures to the owner and not to the warehouse man.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the owner is at liberty to dispose of the screenings in any way he sees fit.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) I think so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. During recent years a great quantity of these screenings has been purchased through the feed stores in Ontario and as a consequence weed seeds have been spread to an alarming extent. We have to-day in Ontario noxious weeds that were practically unknown six or seven years ago. Some safeguard should be inserted in this Bill to have the commissioners take charge of this dirty grain so that the weed seeds would be destroyed, perhaps burned, because they are a dangerous menace to the country.

Mr. TURRIFF. It would not be reasonable to destroy all the screenings. For instance in the crop of 1910 there was a great deal of broken and thin, lean wheat. The wheat was very dry that year and was broken in the thresher. I have known as much as 100 or 120 bushels of screenings to be taken from a car and in some cases that was nearly all such wheat as I have described, which was perfectly good for feed and some of it for milling. It was arranged that the inspectors would give a certificate to the owner for the amount of his screenings defining them as No. 1 or No. 2, No. 1 being screenings of over 50 per cent of wheat. It would not be fair to have such screenings destroyed.

Mr. ROBB. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) is right in bringing this to the attention of the minister. Our friend from the west (Mr. Turriff) has pointed out that in the crop of 1910, a fairly good crop, about 2 per cent was seeds. That would be about 2,000,000 bushels. I understand that these seeds are sold to a firm in Fort William at $7.50 a ton, and resold to people who feed sheep, a good many of them going to the United States. Some of them come to eastern Canada, and from leaky cars they are distributed along the railway tracks, they get into streams and in that way the foul seeds are scattered through the country. Some farmers risk feeding them on their farms, but the best farmers have them ground first. Legislation should be introduced to ensure the grinding of these seeds before they are distributed on the eastern farms. I understand in the west they have stringent legislation to compel the grinding of these seeds before they are fed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Even when they are ground some very dangerous seeds are so small that they are not destroyed by the crusher or grinder. If 50 per cent of the screenings are good wheat the other 50 per cent may be composed of the most dangerous and objectionable weed seeds. I would think that the hospital elevator or the elevator where the wheat is cleaned would be the proper place to take charge of these seeds, and I contend that all wheat should be cleaned, that it should not be allowed to come to our Ontario mills uncleaned, for even in that way these weed seeds have been spread to such an alarming extent as to call for some heroic remedy. I believe that millions of dollars are being lost annually in this province through the spread of noxious weeds. We may as well look this matter squarely in the face and provide some remedy. and the proper place to begin is at the elevator.

Mr. TURRIFF. Of course it might be worth considering whether all screenings taken from all the elevators should be sent to the hospital for grinding in order to destroy their germinating power.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They tell me that grinding does not destroy the germ.

Mr. TURRIFF. I know that in many cases putting it through an ordinary grain crusher will not destroy the germinating power of the seeds. In the western provinces the local legislatures have provided that the country elevators shall not sell these screenings or even give them back to the farmer until they have been ground in order to prevent the germinating of the seeds. But, it has been found also that many small seeds will go through the ordinary crusher and will germinate just as if they had not been put through the crusher. As the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), says, the matter is one of very considerable importance.

Mr. NESBITT. I wish to endorse what the hon. member for South Oxford has said about the seeds. I think that elevators, hospitals or otherwise, should destroy foul seeds. As the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) says, there is a good deal of wheat in the screenings. We quite recognize that there is a good deal of wheat and broken wheat is as good feed as anything else. But the foul seed is what my hon. friend from South Oxford has been talking about, and that should be destroyed. I think a Bill was introduced by the Inland Revenue Department last year to regulate the grinding of these seeds. I believe the screenings can be ground fine enough to keep the foul seeds from getting into the land.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. We think our foul seeds come from Ontario.

Mr. NESBITT. As a matter of fact, the foul seeds from the west are very much worse than they are from Ontario. Ontario farms are very much cleaner than the farms in Manitoba, as far as my eyesight goes. I believe that we have got from the west a great many foul seeds in the last few years that we never had before in Ontario, and I quite agree with the hon. member for South Oxford that all foul seeds should be extracted from these screenings at the elevators, and destroyed, and that they should not be allowed to go out broadcast. There are a great many farmers, for instance tenant farmers, who would buy these seeds, and feed them regardless of whether they went on the land or not. They should not be allowed to do that. The farmers of Ontario who are endeavouring to get rid of foul seeds have great difficulty in doing so, and I believe the government should do everything they possibly can, whether through this or some other act, to keep any person from selling foul seeds through the country for feeding or any other purpose. They are not much good for feed. The broken grain is just as good as whole grain for feed.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), about the importance of this question which has been raised, and I very distinctly remember the Bill my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) has just mentioned. I think it went through the House last year or the year before. I believe we called it the Seeds Act.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, the Seeds Act. It was under the Agriculture Department.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Yes. It had reference to screenings coming from the west to the east, or going from the east to the west. There should be some provision made whereby the germinating qualities of these seeds will be entirely destroyed. As an hon. member pointed out a few moments ago, the feeding value of screenings is quite an important matter. I agree with that, and I also agree with the hon. member for South Oxford that the ordinary milling process does not destroy the more dangerous foul seeds. Some of them are so very, very fine that they slip through. I remember well, a few years ago, getting on my farm through feed that had been imported from the west, one of the most dangerous weeds. Of course, it is not merely the importation of feed that is ground in the west that creates the difficulty, but, as the minister then pointed out, many Ontario millers bought these screenings, shipped them through to Ontario, mixed them with other coarse grain, ground them up and sold them to the farmers. I do not know that it would be wise to suggest that a clause should be put in this Act, but I think it would be well if the minister would take it up in connection with the Seeds Act under the Department of Agriculture, and see that the difficulty is overcome, and that the germinating qualities of all foul seeds in all screenings are entirely destroyed before the screenings are allowed on the market.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That comes under the Department of Agriculture, but I will call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) to the discussion that we have had here. I think that the provinces have jurisdiction over the seeds and weeds of that kind in their own territories, and that they have legislation more or less stringent in regard to the matter. There are difficulties about introducing legislation into this Act which will remedy this greivance. In the first place, it is not quite economical to destroy these screenings. I am told that there were about a million bushels of screenings last year from the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and that their value would be about $300,000. Well, that is a good deal of stuff to destroy. A part of these screenings are pure wheat, and in all cases where the wheat is broken it is given back absolutely to the owner.

Mr. NESBITT. There should be no difficulty in separating broken wheat from the foul seeds.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, the broken wheat can be separated.

Mr. TURRIFF. It is very difficult.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). But there is a valuable residue outside of the broken wheat. I am informed that only about two per cent of these comes to Ontario, but two per cent might be very mischievous as it dribbles out, and is a very insidious thing and it is said that grinding does not destroy the germinating power of these seeds. A lot of this stuff is sent to the United States where it is fed to sheep, hogs and cattle, and thereby gets on the farms in the most favourable condition for germination and is widely spread. It is a thing that it is very difficult to follow. Bad seeds, like bad habits, are hard to eradicate, as my right hon. friend knows.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have had some experience of that lately.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that perhaps there is a misunderstanding. Where grain is chopped, or when it goes through what is known as the chopping process, no doubt the small seeds will grow, but I think it is inconceivable that grain which is absolutely ground into flour would have any germinating qualities.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is if it is ground in a mill?

Mr. OLIVER. The difference is between chopping and grinding. Chopping would not destroy very small seeds, but, actual grinding would, beyond any question, destroy the small seeds.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is just that difference between my hon. friend who is a House of Commons expert and a chemical expert. I believe this material has been ground up in the finest way then submitted to an analyst, and it has been found that the germinating powers of the small seeds were really intact. It is a mystery, but all life is a mystery.

On section 126,

Mr. OLIVER. The expression 'domestic grain' occurs in several places in this Act; what is to be understood by 'domestic grain?'

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is better defined by a negative; it means 'not wild.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have seen a good deal of domestic wild oats.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They grow in every garden.

On section 132,

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of the first part of the section is that the warehouseman having certain responsibilities placed upon him cannot by any process relieve himself from this responsibility, and then there is an exception stating that he can do so with the consent of the parties. Under what circumstances would it be reasonable to consider that such an exception should arise?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The inspector tells me that so far as he is concerned, he does not know that any such has arisen and he does not know how any such could arise. We will allow that clause to stand.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 72). to incorporate the Sterling Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr Blain.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 69), to incorporate Queen's Theological College.—Mr. Nickle.

THE GRAIN ACT.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 32), respecting Grain.—Mr. Foster (North Toronto).

On section 133—delivery of grain on return of receipt.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am not going to ask the committee to pass this clause to-night, but I want to say a word or two with reference to it, so that the committee may think the matter over, and I will come back to it again. It involves the payment of storage at the terminal especially during the winter season. It provides that upon the return of the terminal warehouse receipt, by the holder properly endorsed, and the tender of all proper charges upon the grain represented thereby, the grain is to be immediately deliverable to the holder of such receipt, and shall be delivered within twenty-four hours after demand has been made, and cars or vessels therefor have been furnished for that purpose, and shall not be subject to any further storage. The rest of the clause goes on to say that if the cars or vessels are not furnished, a second period of storage shall be entered upon after twenty-four hours, and storage shall continue to be paid even though the cars and the vessels are not ready for carrying out the grain. Now people who have cargoes stored complain that in a case such as the present, where the terminals are full, and where a single track of the Canadian Pacific railway makes it impossible to carry out any very large quantity of grain where more is coming in than goes out, although they want their grain removed and surrender their receipts in order to get delivery into the cars, the cars are not forthcoming and they claim that it is a great hardship to have to pay full storage in the meantime. They say the railways should make their arrangements to carry out this grain when we want it carried out.

If they do not do that, they should not be paid storage. So the battle rages between the two contending factions. I have had a good many representations made to me on both sides of the subject and have not made up my mind as to what changes, if any, will be made to section 123. I would like the committee to think the matter over. In the course of a day or two I shall be prepared to make some amendment or carry the clause as it is.

Mr. OLIVER. On its face the clause appears to apply to all terminal elevators, whereas terminal elevators that are not approached by a railway company cannot be held responsible for non-production of cars.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There are three distinct terminal elevators in connection with the three railways, but only one of these railways has a line going east.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 139.—maximum rates.

Mr. OLIVER. How does that section compare with Bill 'Q'?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is the same in principle. The Governor in Council takes in the old Bill the place of the board in this.

On section 147,

All duly authorized inspectors of grain shall, at all times during ordinary business hours, be at full liberty to examine all grain stored in any terminal elevator.

2. All proper facilities shall be extended to such inspectors by the warehouseman, his agents and servants, for an examination, and all parts of the terminal elevators shall be open to examination and inspection by any authorized inspector of grain.

Mr. OLIVER. Is there such a person as the 'agent' of the warehouseman?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, his agent or servant.

Mr. OLIVER. I take it that the warehouseman is held responsible for the weighing. He may have officials under him, but he cannot have an agent to act in his place.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). By the word 'agent' I suppose, is meant some one doing the work under the warehouseman The wording is the same as in the existing law.

Mr. OLIVER. No doubt; but I want to know if the word is properly used there. If it contemplates an official to act in the place of the warehouseman, I should think that is not the intention.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is not Make it 'employee.'

Amendment agreed to. Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 150,—warehousemen respon sible for neglect.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). An amendment is proposed to this section. I will read it so that it can be printed and notice thus given of it. The purpose is to provide for a license what is called a 'manufacturing license.'

On application by the owner or owners of elevators which are part of plants engaged in the manufacture of grain products in the western division that they do not wish to ngage in the storage business and that the said elevators will only be used for the storage of grain owned by the said applicants and sed in the processes of their manufacture, the board shall have the power to exempt such elevators from that part of the Act which relates to the storage of grain for the public. The license issued shall be a special license for such class of elevators and the bond required, if any shall be at the discretion of the board.

Any owner or owners who violate the conditions under which such license is issued shall be liable to a fine under this Act.

Mr. OLIVER. Referring to section 148 relating to contracts, etc., contrary to the direction of owner, there is a declaration that the operator of a terminal elevator shall not 'switch' grain. What is the penalty in case he does switch grain? And does the penalty under this Act in anyway relieve him from the effect under the criminal law, or is he liable under the criminal law?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I shall make a note of this section opposite section 236 which deals with offences and penalties and when we come to that section we can see if a penalty is provided or required, and we can also look up the criminal law.

On section 153—elevator licenses.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). In clauses (b) and (c) of section 2, the terms 'owning or operating such elevator' and 'owning and operating such elevator' are used. I understand that this is a personal license to the person operating the elevator, but under this it would be necessary to show who are the owners as well as the person operating.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would move to strike out the word 'and' in section (c) which would make it uniform.

Mr. OLIVER. The mischief is in the first line of the second subsection where it speaks of the owner or lessee. The person we desire to deal with is the person operating the elevator.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Suppose a man is hired to operate the elevator, he is only the servant of the owner.

Mr. OLIVER. The owner would be the operator. It is not a question of who owns, but of who is responsible for the operation.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That holds both of them.

On section 156: rules and regulations for control of country elevators and receipt, storage, etc., of grain.

Mr. OLIVER. Does this section apply to elevators owned and operated by the provincial government of Manitoba?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No, I should think not.

Mr. OLIVER. Then there is a system of farmers' elevators in the province of Saskatchewan. Would they come under this control?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I should think not where they are operated by the government.

Mr. OLIVER. They are not operated by the government.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Then they are under a system of co-operation.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They are really farmers' elevators and they get a government bonus or advance?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They would come under this Act.

Mr. McKENZIE. I see that subsection 2 of section 156 gives power to the government to make rules and regulations which have the binding force of law. It is customary in cases of this kind for a provision to be made laying these rules before parliament. Is there any provision that these rules shall be laid before parliament?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is no provision that I see in the section, but there is no reason why they should not be laid before parliament. I do not know that it is necessary to enact it because if they are called for—and they will be called for— they will be laid before the House.

Mr. McKENZIE. In an Act such as this, it is always provided that they shall be laid before parliament within twenty days after the next sitting thereof, or within a certain time after the adoption of the rules because they have the force of law.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have taken a note of that.

On section 157: duties of warehousemen.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). There is a matter to which I wish to call the attention of the committee in connection with section 157. Perhaps the subject to which I refer would refer to all the provisions in respect to country elevators, but I will speak now particularly of clause (b) of section 157, which says that:

> The person operating any such country elevator shall,
> (b) Upon the request of any person delivering grain for storage or shipment, receive such grain without discrimination as to persons, during reasonable and proper business hours.

There is a class of grain business growing up in the west, and which has been growing up during the last two or three years, which did not exist some few years ago, when the Manitoba Grain Act was passed. I refer to the business of supplying pure seed to the farmers of western Canada. There are some elevators owned by persons in Saskatchewan who do nothing but supply pure seed. It is a question in my mind whether such elevators should be brought under the provisions with respect to the ordinary country elevator or not, but it might be worth while for the committee to consider whether or not such elevators, that deal in nothing but pure seed, and are not in the business of receiving grain for storage purposes, should be forced to receive grain for storage purposes from any person who may deliver it at any time. I would like to have the opinion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce with respect to this.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Does the hon. member refer to any particular warehouses or elevators of that kind? If so, to which and are they warehouses or elevators?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). There are two elevators in Saskatchewan, one in Regina, which do nothing but deal in pure seed and supply it to the farmers.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is an elevator at Regina?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). It is an elevator.

Mr FOSTER (North Toronto). What about its capacity?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I do not know, but I should say about 60,000 bushels.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). And there is another in Saskatchewan?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Another at Tessier.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I received telegrams to-day or Saturday from, I imagine, the same people who are running both of these elevators——

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The same people.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They brought the question to me and asked me to look into it. I am now looking into it. I think that every effort to secure and distribute good seed is praiseworthy and, whilst it must be guarded to see that it does not contravene the purposes of the Act, all proper freedom and encouragement should be given to such.

On section 158.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to draw special attention to a somewhat remarkable feature of this section, in subsection 2, which provides that under certain conditions the elevator owner can forward grain to terminals, without an order of the owner of the grain. It is a very remarkable provision. It is no doubt necessary, and in the condition of the country as it was some time ago it did not create any serious grievance, because then all grain practically was going through terminals. But now, there has sprung up throughout the west a considerable amount of local milling demand. The section does not recognize that interior demand to the degree it should be recognized and to the degree that the interests both of the interior millers and the producers require that it should be recognized. In considering this matter, there have been two suggestions made, one that the grain should not be shipped under the conditions provided in subsection 2 unless and until the owner of the grain has been notified of the intention to do it. That would certainly be the most satisfactory manner of dealing with the matter, provided it was always convenient to give the owner of the grain notice and provided the conditions were not such that if it were required that the owner must get notice, the object to be achieved, of allowing the grain to be forwarded quickly would not be lost. The other suggestion is that the elevator operator should not be allowed to forward the farmer's grain without the farmer's order for a certain period after the grain has been placed in the elevator, unless the farmer after placing his grain in the elevator waives that condition.

That would be a workable provision, although not theoretically as satisfactory as the provision for giving notice. The idea is this. The farmer has a carload or two carloads of grain which he puts into the elevator, and he has an opportunity to sell to an interior buyer or mill. In order to sell that particular grain he would have a certain period after the grain was put into the elevator to make his arrangements for its delivery to the interior buyer. If he were not able to make the arrangement within a specified time, his grain would go forward in the same way as anybody else's.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is that not dealt with in clause 164?

Mr. OLIVER. It is, but it seemed to several of the members in going carefully over the Act that it would be well to deal with it first in subsection 4 and afterwards in section 164. It is a very drastic provision as it stands, and while measureably satisfactory and just under former conditions, the conditions have so changed that it is liable to be used as a measure of serious injustice.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). By section 164 I propose that the owner or his local representative shall be given twenty-four hours' notice. The matter is surrounded with a good deal of difficulty. If the farmer lives 10 or 20 or 30 miles out, it does not help him to send him notice by a registered letter. Before the letter reaches him the grain is gone. He may not be in town more than once a week or once in two weeks. Therefore it is proposed that he shall have a representative or agent in a town, to whom the warehouseman or elevator man would give twenty-four hours' notice, and then the agent could communicate with his principal if that were necessary. I would hesitate to make a provision that would prevent the quick relief of the elevator. I would not like to fix a period of any considerable length within which the elevator man would be debarred from clearing his elevator and giving access to persons waiting with grain.

Mr. OLIVER. One suggestion is to provide that the grain should not be forwarded within 48 hours after it is placed in the elevator. That is not an unreasonable delay, and it would give the farmer that much time to decide where and how he would find local sale if he could. That is one suggestion. The other suggestion is in line with what my hon. friend has stated. It is a question which would be more in the interest of the farmers. To a farmer at a distance, the twenty-four hours' notice from the post office is of absolutely no value to him.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Or forty-eight hours.

Mr. OLIVER. That would be a good deal better.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). By mail?

Mr. OLIVER. It would be no use by mail, but if the farmer had some business man in the town who would act for him, forty-eight hours would be of some value. That would be an improvement on the present condition.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am loth to make it a single hour longer than necessary. Another twenty-four hours might mean delay in getting the cars away. Whatever applies to one of these clauses must apply to the others.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). What appears to me as the best way of overcoming the difficulty would be to adopt the following amendment:

That subsection 4 of section 159 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:—Notwithstanding anything in this section, the owner of such grain, upon payment of all lawful charges as set out in subsection 2 hereof, may, at any time within 48 hours after the delivery of such grain at such country elevator or at any time before such grain is shipped to a terminal elevator require it to be shipped to any other terminal than as hereinbefore provided, or to any railway station on the line of railway upon which the receiving country elevator is situated, or any line connecting therewith, unless the owner of such grain waives in writing his rights under this section.

Then I would suggest to amend section 164 by adding after the word 'may' in the first line. The following words:

Subject to the provisions of subsection 4 of section 159 of this Act.

I think that might be a simple way of overcoming the difficulty.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon. friend will hand me his amendment, I shall consider it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Subsection 3 of section 159 deals with the case of a country elevator on the line of railway formerly known as the Northern Pacific and Manitoba railway, or any line of railway operated therewith. I think that should be made to read 'any line of railway' and not 'any of line railway operated therewith,' because there are other railways besides the one mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I shall make a note of it.

Subsections 2 and 4 of section 159 stand.

On section 160—delivery of grain on return of receipt.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would like to see another subclause added which would provide that the railway companies should see that the cars called for were promptly supplied.

Mr. TURRIFF. And promptly taken out when they are loaded.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The first thing is to get them.

Section 169,

Nothing in this part shall be construed as permitting the owner or operator of any country elevator to allot special bins to any buyer beyond the time allowed by the provisions of this part, or for purposes other than as stated in the provisions of this part as to flat warehouses, or shall require the owner of a flat warehouse to insure grain while in his warehouse.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that the words 'country elevator' there should really be 'flat warehouse.' It will be seen that the section reads in contradiction of itself when you use the word 'country elevator.'

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Going back to section 151, it will be seen that all the sections from that on past the one with which we are now dealing are under the heading 'country elevators.' Later on we come to the heading 'flat warehouses.'

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). But under section 184 relating to application for cars, a time limit is fixed in the case of flat warehouses; but I do not see any time limit so far as country elevators are concerned.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is a time limit in the case of special bins: 'shall be shipped within 24 hours after such demand has been made and the cars furnished.'

On section 173,—investigations of complaints.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think that both parties should be notified, that there should be an addition to subsection 3. According to the provisions of that subsection the person complained against must be notified, but there is no provision for notifying the complainant of the date and place of the hearing, so that the hearing might be held without his knowledge. If the words were added 'and shall notify the complainant as to the date and place', I think it would ensure the complainant receiving the necessary notice.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The complainant would generally be on the lookout, would he not?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). He might or he might not.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Suppose we make it read that the board shall notify both parties, and furnish them with a copy of the complaint?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). All right.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I move that the words, 'the owner of the country elevator' be struck out, and the words 'both parties' be substituted in lieu thereof, and that the word 'him' be struck out and the word 'them' be substituted in lieu thereof.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 186,

Mr. OLIVER. This section would seem to defeat to some extent the advantage of flat warehouses. There seems to be no reason why the owner of a flat warehouse should not buy and sell grain when the owner of a country elevator is allowed to do so.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The flat warehouse is a special convenience to the farmer for his own purposes. If you allow the flat warehouseman to buy and store grain then the farmer's privilege is curtailed. I think that section was meant for that purpose and it would be well to leave it there.

Mr. OLIVER. The wording of this section is intended apparently to prevent the provision from being useful.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not see how.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no difference whatever between the principle of a country elevator and of a flat warehouse. The only difference is that the capital invested in the flat warehouse is smaller and it affords a cheaper means of storage than the country elevator, but otherwise they are on all fours, and there is no reason why the restriction made applicable to one should not be made applicable to the other.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That clause was put there for the particular benefit of the farmers.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). The farmer might be unable to ship his own warehouse at all because he would not have a complete car to ship out, and if this restriction were stricken from the Bill he could buy enough wheat to fill that car up.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The farmer is not a buyer of wheat as a rule.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). It is not usual for him to buy, but there are cases in which he might find it advantageous to himself and his neighbours to buy.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Do you not run the risk, if you carry out that suggestion, of turning all the flat warehousemen into speculators in grain? The flat warehouse was meant to give the farmer a cheaper place in which to store his grain than in the elevators, and it gave him the privilege of storing his own grain instead of paying the elevator man for it. It is a place established for that particular purpose. I would not like to run the risk of making every owner of a warehouse a speculator in grain, interested in having as wide a spread as he could and taking advantage of the small farmer, which the other elevator companies are said to do. Let us keep one oasis for the farmer.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not like to keep that kind of oasis; it is a very dry well. What we want to give is as much competition as possible in the buying of grain. A man who has storage can buy grain, while the man who has not storage is at a disadvantage. We want storage, but we want buying as well, and we want competition in buying; and inasmuch as this provision cuts down the competition in buying, we think it is not advisable.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the distinction between elevators and warehouses? I do not think there is much. I agree with the minister that a warehouse is a cheap place for storing grain.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Warehouses are not often built in the locality which I know. They are sometimes, and I think it better that this restriction should be removed.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will consider it; but in the meantime let it pass.

Section agreed to.

On section 189—loading platforms.

Mr. STAPLES. There is no question that loading platforms are great conveniences in the west, though they are not much used in the older parts of Manitoba. The platforms which the railways construct are not such as to afford the facilities which the farmers require. The kind constructed by the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern railway is one from which it is possible to load practically only one car; it is too short and narrow. If the platform were built wide enough to enable the farmer to drive his wagon upon it and back out again after unloading, so that he could load three or four, or even five cars at once, the farmers would use it a great deal more than they do. There is no doubt that the farmer who loads his grain into a car and sees it sold and shipped gets the best satisfaction; and there is much more satisfaction with that method of handling grain than with elevators. If it is possible to compel the railway companies to build the platforms longer and wider, this should be done. The Great Northern railway has a system of platforms constructed of earth, which are much better than the board platforms. In my town a big farmer who came from the United States went so far as to construct an earth platform himself. I ask the minister to take this matter into his serious consideration.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Section 193 gives the board power to order platforms of such dimensions as it sees fit.

Section agreed to.

On section 191—location and dimensions.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. My experience in regard to platforms has been, not that they are too short, but that there should be two or three instead of one.

Mr. STAPLES. The Bill gives the board power to order the railway company to build additional platforms, but I think it should also specify their width. The platform should be sufficiently long and wide to enable the farmer to back his wagon up to the door and make it more convenient for him to load his grain into the car. There is no way by which a farmer can save eighteen dollars better than by utilizing the loading platform. Under the Manitoba legislation, all elevators are compelled to charge one and three-quarter cents per bushel. On 1,500 bushels, that runs into a considerable sum of money. You can load into a car from a platform almost as quickly as into an elevator.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What my hon. friend asks for is really provided here. In section 191, the platform has to be approved by the board and must be at least 18 feet wide, 54 feet long, and of such height as the board decides. Under section 193 the board may at any time, between the 15th of April and the 15th of October in any year, order the company to enlarge any platform at any station or siding. That is what my hon. friend wants. There is another consideration which has to be taken into account, and that is whether loading platforms are the most economical way of handling grain. The older we grow in the west, the more the elevator system will be resorted to and the less the loading platform. I have a report which was made to the Board of Railway Commissioners by one of their officers. He reports that the average time for loading a car from a platform is often more than two days, so that if you had all loading platforms, there would be a pretty slow transportation of grain. In the meantime this gives very broad authority to the board to order loading platforms of the kind most useful to the people at these stations.

Mr. CRUISE. This section gives power to enlarge the platform in length but not in width. It fixes the limit at 18 feet wide.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is the minimum.

Mr. OLIVER. What should be the minimum?

Mr. CRUISE. About 24 feet to give a man a chance to back up his wagon to the car. I cannot understand how a farmer could take two days to unload into the car.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They usually unload in one day.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is a fact that the unloading platform should be 24 feet wide in order to be of full value, would it not be advisable to say so specifically in the Act. We should also provide sufficient length, as suggested by my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples). I have heard some complaints that the platforms in many cases were not big enough.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I shall take a note of that, and we can come back to this section if necessary, but in the meantime we might as well pass it.

Sections 195 and 196 stand.

On section 206:

The board may in its discretion during a car shortage direct the railways to make an equitable distribution of empty grain cars to all stations in proportion to the amount of grain available for shipment from such stations.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think the word 'stations' should be changed. As this section stands, only persons loading at stations have any rights; those who load at a siding are left unprovided for.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I assumed 'station' to be a general term. It is provided that a man can order his car to a siding or loading platform.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). There are sidings at the stations. But, as the minister says, provision is made in the Act for ordering cars to points where there are no stations. Provision is made in the Act, under which, even if the loading platform will not supply the requirements, cars may be placed on a siding to be loaded from the ground. We want the rights of all protected, and not the rights of those only who load at stations.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Make it 'stations or sidings.'

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). That would answer the purpose. Add the words 'or sidings' after the word 'stations' in third line.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 223,—time for loading cars.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think the time from which this 24 hours will be reckoned is hardly right. It is reckoned from the time at which the car is placed at the disposal of the farmer, whereas, the 24 hours should be reckoned from the time notice is given to him, as provided by section 201. Section 201 provides that:

The railway agent shall post up daily in a conspicuous place a written notice signed by him, giving the date of application and name of each applicant to whom he has on that day awarded cars for the loading of grain, and the car numbers so awarded respectively.

The station agent might be very prompt in doing this or he might not. Sometimes he might be delayed quite innocently, and the farmer is obliged under this Act to have his car loaded within 24 hours from the time the car is placed on the siding for him, while the time he has actually, may be very much less. The general practice is for the farmer to make some provision for some one to notify him after the notice is posted up in the station, and that is the first notice he has of the fact that the car is at his disposal. I think the time should not start until after that date, and I would therefore suggest the insertion of the words 'or after the notice provided for in section 201 of this Act has been posted as therein required, wherever is the later.'

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want to waste any time, but I will note my hon. friend's point. I took it at first that 'placed at the shipper's disposal' would be after he was notified of it, but I do not think that is quite a correct reading of the clause. That may pass if you like and we will go back to it if it is necessary to do so.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). It had better stand.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). All right.

Section 223 allowed to stand.

On section 224,—daily statement for nearest station agent.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the purpose of this requirement, and is there any further use made by the government of the information that is given to the station agent?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is for statistical purposes entirely.

Mr. OLIVER. This is a report to the station agent. Does the government get the advantage of that report?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is primarily, I suppose, for the knowledge of the railway company as to the stock in the elevators, but all these reports can be got by the government if they wish them.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not for the immediate information of the government?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The immediate purpose of it is statistical information for the railway companies and for the public. A report of the stocks on hand every night is made next morning on the exchanges.

On section 246,—fees for expenses of administration.

Mr. OLIVER. In my judgment the first part of this section is objectionable in making a declaration that seems to be inappropriate and uncalled for. While we are quite agreed that the grain trade shall carry the burden of its administration, that is one thing; but to declare by legislative enactment that the fees shall be fixed so that the result of those fees shall bear all the burden of the administration is another thing, and I would object very strongly to it. In regard to the second part of the section, giving authority to the board with the approval of the Governor in Council to fix fees, I think the proper legislation would be in each instance to lay down the principle which should govern the board in fixing the fees. I do not think a general authority such as this is good legislation. The fees to be levied under this Act are a tax upon business and upon the people, and it is an elementary principle that taxes should not be levied except on the responsibility of parliament. I think we should not place in the hands of this board of commissioners the right to tax the people except according to well-defined principles and within well-defined limits.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will note the objection of my hon. friend. It is, I think, a good thing to have a full and free understanding of the matter. From the very start the basis of this whole legislation has been understood, and freely and willingly the grain men have agreed to pay all the expenses of the administration of the Act, and I think it is just as well to have that on the face of the legislation itself, so that there will be no difference of opinion afterwards. I do not think this is objected to in any way.

Mr. OLIVER. I am practically giving notice of an amendment which I will move on the third reading. I had considerable discussion during former sessions with the representatives of the grain interests, and my understanding was that their willingness that the grain trade should assume the burden of administration was expressed in connection with the government operation of terminal elevators, and not in regard to the ordinary administration of the Grain Act.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). When they called for this legislation they also expressed their willingness that the trade should do in this case what it had been doing before, that is, bear the expense of ordinary administration by means of fees.

Section agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. May I call the minister's attention to section 48 to which a subsection was added in committee? On further consideration it would appear to me that the addition of that subsection is not in accordance with the best administration, and I would like on some future occasion to have an opportunity of discussing that amendment again.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will go back to it; but will my hon. friend state briefly what he objects to in it?

Mr. OLIVER. The Grain Standards Board is a committee of experts on grain. Every preparation is made for their arriving at a just conclusion in regard to the standards. It is a very elaborate preparation. It takes time and trouble and some expense to gather samples from the different areas where the grain has been damaged. It is proposed by the amendment that their conclusions shall be revised by the board of commissioners, who are not experts, and who have not had the opportunities to arrive at a just conclusion such as the members of the Grain Standards Board have had. I am very willing to place responsibility upon the board of commissioners, but in the case of a decision by experts it seems to me that under these circumstances it should stand without revision.

Progress reported.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 96) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there must be some error in connection with this proposed amendment. When it was moved, I asked for a copy and the hon. minister said I would find it in 'Hansard.' But the amendment, as it appears in 'Hansard,' does not convey the idea which was in our minds at the time. The amendment reads in 'Hansard':

That after the word 'collapse' in the third line, there be inserted all places where grain is damp and liable 'to become damp, or for the purpose of distributing seed grain to any point in the western division.'

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It should read: 'damp and liable to become damaged,' are the words in the Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. The liability to damage would not be a sufficient reason for giving the warehouse commissioner the extraordinary authority proposed. Such authority should not be given, unless the conditions were such as might be expressed in these words:

All places where the grain is damp and is liable to be destroyed by reason of that condition.

There must be the existence of the condition which, under ordinary circumstances, is going to produce destructive results, rather than the double proposition that where the grain is damp or where it is liable to damage.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is not the word 'or,' which is used. If it were I would take the same objection. The word 'and' is used where the grain is damp and liable to become damaged. It is the one condition which threatens destruction.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I withdraw my objection to the Bill, because it is only to go into effect in connection with the existing Act, but I give notice that when he proposes to introduce the like amendment into the Act before us we may give it further consideration.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I am not sure whether I am justified in objecting at this stage, but I understood, when the matter was before the committee before, that ample opportunity would be given to discuss this question. Do I understand it may be discussed on the third reading of the Grain Bill?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If it forms a part of the Grain Act, but this goes into the existing Act and becomes repealed when the Bill we are discussing comes out. My hon. friend would not be allowed, under the rules of the House, at this late hour, to raise any further objection.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. OLIVER. A provision with regard to the distribution of cars was allowed to stand. I take it for granted there will be an amendment to that. Is it understood that any amendment to that section will be laid on the table some time before being submitted for consideration?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That clause was allowed to stand as an indication that it is still being considered. If an amendment be desirable, it will be laid on the table as my hon. friend requests.

Mr. OLIVER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). First questions and then government orders—very likely numbers 14, 17, and perhaps 18, and then Supply. The Supply will be Public Works.

THE CARRIAGE OF GRAIN TO DULUTH AND MINNEAPOLIS.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) to a Washington despatch with reference to the carrying of grain to Duluth and Minneapolis, and would ask him if there has been any change in the situation since the statement my hon. friend made on January 23rd last?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There has been no change except for the better. I am not quite sure from memory just how far my statement went, but the condition at present is that wheat and oats for export are, and have been for some time, carried to Duluth and Minneapolis at the same rates as to Fort William and Port Arthur, that applications were made to place wheat and oats for consumption in the United States on the same tariff rates, that these were not allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States to take place earlier than the thirty days' notice required by that commission. That, however, has now been issued, and speaking generally, wheat and oats for export, and barley, wheat, oats and flax for consumption in the United States are either being carried at present at an equal or slightly higher rate to Duluth and Minneapolis than obtains in Port Arthur and Fort William, but by the latter part of February will be carried at the same rates as to Fort William and Port Arthur. The reason that all kinds of grain and for both purposes, have not been carried sooner is that the commission in the United States objected to doing the latter within the thirty days' notice necessary for the application to be made before the tariff goes into effect. That thirty days' notice is required in order to give full knowledge and advertisement to the interests that may be affected in the country itself.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

PROVINCIAL BOUNDARIES.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina) :

1. Has the attention of the government been directed to the following resolution unanimously passed by the legislature of Saskatchewan on March 16, 1911?

That whereas the government of Canada has under consideration the advisability of extending the boundaries of the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba so as to include the hinterland lying adjacent to the north of these provinces;

And whereas the several areas proposed to be included in the said provinces are at present the property of Canada and any action by the parliament of Canada to transfer the ownership of the property to the provinces referred to will have the effect of altering the terms and conditions upon which such provinces entered confederation;

And whereas the extension of the boundaries of the said provinces northward will bring within their respective borders areas very similar to the territory comprising the northern part of the province of Saskatchewan;

And whereas under the terms of the Saskatchewan Act, the Alberta Act and the Manitoba Act, the compensation payable to the provinces in lieu of lands is based upon the principle that the Federal Government should retain control of the agricultural lands, of western Canada for colonization and immigration purposes;

And whereas the said northern part of the province of Saskatchewan is not required by the government of Canada for the purposes of carrying out its colonization and immigration policy;

And whereas in addition to the agricultural lands there are certain natural resources within Saskatchewan which are purely of local concern and which are not required by the federal authorities for the carrying out of its colonization policy;

Therefore it is resolved that in the opinion of this House the government of Saskatchewan should proceed with negotiations with the federal authorities for the purpose of having transferred to the province all that part of the hinterland of Saskatchewan, together with all natural resources of purely local concern contained within the province, not required for colonization and immigration purposes.

2. Is it not a fact that in the statement of policy of the Dominion Conservative party, promulgated by Mr. Borden in 1907 and known as the Halifax platform, the following appears as paragraph fifteen:

'The restoration of the public lands to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan upon fair terms.'

3. Is it not a fact that during the Dominion election of 1911, the platform of the same party as published in western Canada contained the following paragraph two:

'The granting of their natural resources to the prairie provinces.'

4. Is it the intention of the government to give effect to the policy of the Conservative party as thus declared in their platform?

5. If so, will measures be submitted to parliament for this purpose during the present session?

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) :

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. The government has no definite information on the subject but believes that the fact was as stated.
4. Yes.
5. The terms alluded to in the second question have not yet been settled. Their determination will require negotiation and inquiry which will be undertaken and carried on with such expedition as may be practicable. It will be impossible, however, to undertake or conclude them during the present session.

WHARF AT L'ASSOMPTION, QUEBEC.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Does the Department of Public Works intend to continue the works commenced on the construction of a wharf at L'Assomption and to use the money placed in the estimates of 1911-12 for that purpose?
2. If so, when will the work be continued?
3. If not, for what reasons and at whose request was it stopped?

Mr. MONK:

1, 2 and 3. As work cannot be proceeded with during the winter it is impossible to make any further use of the amount in the current year's estimates. The question of providing an additional amount in next year's estimates will have careful consideration should there be further supplementaries this session.

ST. GABRIEL DE BRANDON—DISMISSAL OF POSTMISTRESS.

Mr. BELAND:

1. Has Mrs. Paul Farly been dismissed as postmistress of St. Gabriel de Brandon, county of Berthier, and at what date?
2. What are the reasons and at whose suggestion?
3. If she is dismissed, who has been appointed to succeed her and at whose request?
4. Was there an inquiry? If so, by whom?
5. Were there complaints against her? If so, by whom made and of what nature?
6. Did the Postmaster General receive any requests or letters asking that a change be made and giving the reasons therefor?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes, on the 22nd December, 1911.
2. Political partisanship. On recommendation of Mr. J. A. Barrette, M.P.
3. Mr. Telesphore Michaud, on recommendation of Mr. J. A. Barrette, M.P.
4. No inquiry was necessary.
5. Answered above.
6. None except what is above mentioned.

MANSEAU—DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTER.

Mr. PACAUD:

1. Has Mr. Kirouac, postmaster at Manseau, in the county of Nicolet, been removed?
2. If so, at whose request and what were the reasons for his removal?
3. Who has been appointed to replace him, and on whose recommendation?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.
2. On recommendation of Mr. P. E. Lamarche, M.P., for political partisanship.
3. Mr. J. A. Neven, on recommendation of Mr. P. E. Lamarche, M.P.

QUESTION RULED OUT.

On question No. 8—Mr. Bellemare.

Mr. SPEAKER. This question, in my judgment, is not in conformity with the rules of the House with regard to questions put by ministers. Such a question should contain no statement of fact beyond what is absolutely necessary to make the question intelligible, and should not contain any reflection upon a member of the House. I think this question contravenes the rules in both these particulars. It will therefore stand for amendment.

PICTOU, N.S., CARRYING MAILS.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Were tenders called for carrying mails from the post office to the railway station at Pictou, N.S., on January 6, 1912?
2. If so, who were the tenderers and what was the amount of each tender?
3. To whom was the contract awarded?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Tenders were received for this service on 5th of January, 1912.
2. Peter F. Foley, 25 cents per trip; D. W. English, 35 cents per trip; Alex. Sarson, 40 cents per trip; John A. Brennan, 60 cents per trip.
3. Peter F. Foley.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY, LATE STRIKE OF TRAINMEN.

*Mr. MACDONELL:

1. What were the conditions under which the late strike of the trainmen of the Grand Trunk Railway was called off?
2. Was the late government in any way connected with the making of those conditions? If so, how and who represented the government?
3. Is the government aware that the Grand Trunk officials have not carried out the agreement made between the trainmen and the late government and the railway company?
4. Is the government aware that His Honour Judge Barron, of Stratford, Ont., was appointed by Chas. M. Hays, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to investigate the individual cases of men who were not reinstated?
5. Was Judge Barron paid by the government for his services, or by the railway company or by Chas. M. Hays, and what remuneration did he receive?
6. Has the government been furnished with a copy of Judge Barron's report? If so, what recommendations concerning the matter did it make, and have those recommendations been carried out? If not, why not?
7. How many men affected by the late strike of the Grand Trunk railway have not been reinstated as per agreement, and what is the number at each point on the system?

Mr. CROTHERS:

1. The terms of the settlement were as follows:

Montreal, July 31, 1910.

Re dispute between Grand Trunk Railway Company and its employees in train and yard service.

By way of settlement of the existing difficulties:—

1. The company will put back as soon as possible the men, other than those who have been or may be found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct, the understanding being that there is to be no coercion or intimidation used towards the new men.

2. The company will put into effect from May 1, 1910, the rates named in schedule of rates dated July 18, 1910, those rates to be embodied in the present schedules now in effect on this line, it being understood that those rates shall in no instance effect a reduction in any existing rate.

3. The company will, on January 1, 1912, make effective in train and yard service on the Grand Trunk Railway the rates of pay and the rules contained in the schedule or agreement on that date in effect on the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway east of Fort William.

The three above propositions shall apply also to the Central Vermont Railway Company, the said railway company to be substituted for the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the Rutland Railway Company to be substituted for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company wherever the same are used or understood in the above. (In the case of the Central Vermont, by the 'schedule of rates dated July 18, 1910' is meant the schedule issued by the management of that company since July 1.)

1. With reference to the meaning to be attached to the words 'as soon as possible', occurring in the above agreement, the former Minister of Labour made the following statement to parliament on March 21, 1911: 'Mr. Wainwright came up to Ottawa on a train about the same time as the one on which I came and as vice-president of the Grand Trunk railway he gave me an assurance in the presence of two of my colleagues here that the president of the Grand Trunk Railway would consent to giving to these three words 'as soon as possible' the definite meaning of three months,' which was the time Sir Frederick Borden and myself said we thought would be sufficient.

2. (a) The former Minister of Labour stated to this House on March 21 last the connection of the government with the making of the terms of the agreement set forth above, namely: 'The agreement was not with the government, but was between the parties to the dispute, the Grand Trunk railway on the one hand and the organization involved in the dispute on the other. They were the parties to the dispute, and they were the parties to the settlement. The government helped to bring about an agreement—brought the parties together and, through its representatives, assisted the parties in trying to reach satisfactory terms. But the agreement was an agreement between the parties to the dispute, and the best evidence of that is that one party is now saying that the other is not carrying out its agreement.'

(b) The former Minister of Labour, on the same occasion, stated to the House that he and the then Minister of Militia and Defence went to Montreal to represent the government as above in the negotiations held between the parties.

3. The government is aware that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has failed to reinstate, as required by the agreement above indicated, a number of former employees concerned in the strike and recommended for reinstatement by Judge Barron.

4. Yes.

5. So far as concerns the original investigation made by Judge Barron, as above indicated, the government made no payment to Judge Barron, and the government is not aware of the conditions as to compensation, whether from the Grand Trunk Railway Company or from Mr. Hays, under which Judge Barron conducted the inquiry. In August, 1911, however, the then Minister of Labour directed Judge Barron to proceed to Montreal to make some further efforts in connection with the reinstatement of certain of the employees, and Judge Barron received from the government as compensation for services then rendered the sum of $125, with $25 allowance for expenses, as per account rendered, the services then rendered being understood to have been of a conciliatory nature.

6. The government has not been furnished with a copy of the report made, as above indicated, for Mr. Hays, and is not aware of its nature. The government has, however, received what purports to be a copy of a statement made by Judge Barron to Mr. Hays, under date of August 18, 1911, and apart from the report proper. The statement thus received contains recommendations for reinstatement which have not been carried out. The government is not able to state why the recommendations have not been carried out.

7. The official representatives of the trade organizations concerned, representing the men concerned, have informed the government in a communication under date of December 6, 1911, that the total number of men not reinstated as per agreement then stood at 77 at various points over the line, as follows, namely: Brockville, 3; Stratford, 7; Palmerston, 7; Hamilton, 6; Montreal, 1; Sarnia, 2; Portland, Me., 1; Island Pond, Vt., 3; Toronto, 10; Allandale, 5; East Toronto, 1; Belleville, 1; Niagara Falls, 7; Bridgeburg, 1; London, Ont., 7; Detroit, Mich., 9; Windsor, 6.

MAIL CARRIER—ST. PAUL L'ERMITE AND DE REPENTIGNY.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. What is the name of the person at present in charge of the carrying of His Majesty's mails between the post office of St. Paul l'Ermite and that of de Repentigny?
2. Has the contract of that person been annulled? If so, at whose request and for what reason?
3. Who has been recommended to take charge of that contract for the future, and what is to be his salary?
4. Who recommended the new contractor?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Joseph Larose.
2. The contract will, in the public interest, terminate on or about the 21st of April next, as provided for by one of its clauses.
3. Albert Juneau, at $102 per annum, the same rate as paid to the other contractor.
4. Mr. Joseph Morin, K.C.

MAIL CARRIER—ST. PAUL L'ERMITE AND CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. What is the name of the person at present in charge of the carrying of His Majesty's mails between the railway station of the Canadian Northern and the post office at St. Paul l'Ermite?
2. Has the contract of that person been annulled? If so, at whose request and for what reasons?
3. Who has been recommended to take charge of that contract for the future, by whom was he recommended, and what is his salary?

Mr. CROTHERS.

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Camille Seguin.
2. The contract will, in the public interest, terminate on or about the 21st of April next, as provided for by one of its clauses.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MARCONI COMPANY.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General been called to the following despatch published in the press of Canada:—

WIRELESS TO ALL DOMINIONS.

Marconi Company makes Arrangements with Government.

New York, February 1.—The London correspondent of the New York 'Times' cables that he has the best authority for announcing that negotiations which have been going on between the British government and the Marconi Company for over a year, rumours of which resulted in wireless shares recently rising from 14s., are now completed.

In fact the arrangements arrived at between representatives of the British post office and the Marconi Company only required certain formal signatures, which in the case of ordinary business would have been forthcoming yesterday, but in the present instance are delayed by the red-tapism of the government departments.

Under the new scheme the Marconi Company will be in a position to make enormous developments. While it is as yet impossible to give details, it can be said that the contract creates a system of wireless communication between all the British dominions throughout the world.

2. Has there been any communication on the above subject between the Postmaster General and the British government?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.

2. No.

5. Has he made a report on the subject? If so, what are the contents of that report?

6. Were those poles put back on the ground of the railway? If so, how many of them were put back?

7. Did the head sectionman on the Ste. Anne section of the Intercolonial railway inform the government or the Railway Department on this subject, and what information did he give?

8. What was decided about the person who took them?

9. Is the government aware if there are any more of such poles on the property of that person?

Motion agreed to.

BOUNTIES ON STEEL AND IRON.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. KYTE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) based upon an item that has been going the rounds of the ministerial press. I quote from the Montreal 'Gazette':

Ottawa, Feb. 2.—The government has decided in favour of granting substantial bonuses for the encouragement of iron making in Canada.

Your correspondent can state this to-night authoritatively. The great smelting industries at Sydney and the Soo were established largely by means of bonus aids. The last of these expired in June. There were the bounties in steel rods. There had previously been bounties on billets and other forms of iron and steel which had expired and which Finance Minister Fielding failed to renew.

The government has decided that the state of the industries and the prosperity of the country warrant a restoration of this bounty aid. Therefore it has been practically decided to give a bounty of a dollar a ton on pig iron produced from foreign ore and a dollar and a half a ton on pig iron produced from domestic ore. These bounties will likely run until the Tariff Commission is appointed and has looked into the question of aid for steel works. It is likely that then the bounties will be dropped and the steel industry aided by means of tariff protection for which they have always expressed a preference

I desire to ask the government if it has been decided to renew the bounties, and if any information to that effect has been given out by the government?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). In answer I may say, what I think my hon. friend must know, that it is not the custom to make any announcement in a matter of that kind except in the budget speech.

Mr. KYTE. Are we to understand that this statement is not authoritative?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BORDEN. My hon. friend will have to use his own judgment.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to refresh the memory of the right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Borden) as to the return regarding the appointment of commissioners under the Boundary Waters Treaty. My right hon. friend thought he had the return and, if so, I would like to know if he is prepared to produce it?

Mr. BORDEN. It cannot be produced until assent is obtained for bringing down certain documents. That has been asked for but has not yet been obtained.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When is it likely to be obtained?

Mr. BORDEN. I could not say—as soon as possible. We are asking for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That means right away?

Mr. BORDEN. I think so—with the least possible delay.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In reference to Bill (No. 95) respecting the National Transcontinental railway, I have understood from my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that he would bring down the factum of each party in the case before the courts.

Mr. BORDEN. It was so intended.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I understood that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had received everything he required. I had instructed my assistant deputy to procure the factum if possible and I will bear that in mind, make further inquiry and bring it down if it is available.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is available.

PEACE MEMORIAL MONUMENT.

Mr. GERMAN. I would like to call the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) to an article which I saw in a newspaper yesterday stating that he had been interviewed by some prominent gentlemen in reference to the building of a peace memorial monument in Queen's Park, Toronto, to commemorate a hundred years of peace between the British and United States governments. The right hon. gentleman is aware that there is considerable earnest feeling—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. German) would be going beyond the rules in entering upon a discussion and not simply asking a question.

Mr. GERMAN. I only intend to mention what will lead up intelligently to the question which I purpose asking. The Prime Minister is aware of the feeling existing in Canada and the United States that there should be some International Peace Memorial Monument erected and I desire to know from the Prime Minister if he has considered the question and if any action will be taken by the government in reference to it in the near future.

Mr. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman inquiring as to a peace memorial or as to the memorial mentioned by the delegation?

Mr. GERMAN. The peace memorial which is being suggested to be erected by the governments of the United States and Canada.

Mr. BORDEN. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. German) that the subject to which he has alluded has been brought to the attention of the government on more than one occasion in an informal way. I understand that an association has been formed in the United States for the purpose of assisting in the celebration of the anniversary of peace between the two countries in a way that would be worthy of the very great event that it would commemorate. I also understand that an association has been formed by some prominent men in the mother country and I think that perhaps more than one association may have been formed in Canada although I am not aware that they have organized in any very effective way up to the present time. As far as the government of the United States are concerned, I am not aware that they have taken any action in the matter, nor have I received any information that the government of the United Kingdom have taken any action up to the present time. The government of this country would be prepared to take any part in the celebration of the peace anniversary that might be decided upon after the necessary conference with the government of the United Kingdom and the government of the United States. We have not received any intimation with regard to the matter from the mother country or the government of the United States. For that reason the matter has not come, except in the informal and unofficial way to which I have alluded, to the attention of the government. I do not think I can give my hon. friend any further information on the subject at the present time.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Part 4 of the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce—Mr. Foster (Toronto).

APPOINTMENT OF A TARIFF COMMISSION.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 88 to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission. He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this Bill to create a Tariff Commission, I am sure I need not say that it is not the intention of the government to delegate or attempt to delegate its powers and functions with regard to the making of tariffs to any outside body. Under our parliamentary system, the duty of originating Bills for the raising of revenue devolves upon the government, and the responsibility for such Bills must remain with the government. Under this proposed Act creating a Tariff Commission, the duty and responsibility with respect to the tariff shall remain precisely as it is at present, precisely as it has been in the past. In this respect there is no departure whatever from the former practice. The wish has often been expressed that the tariff could be taken out of politics and that a commission akin to the Railway Commission might deal with it; a commission having power not only to obtain information but to actually fix tariff rates. The idea underlying this wish is, of course, that the tariff and the fixing of tariff rates might be removed from the sphere of political influence, or the sphere of party favouritism, and that a commission should fix the rates of the tarff upon a basis that would be fair, and just, and equitable to all classes of the community, producers, and consumers alike. Now, apart from the question of governmental responsibility for national expenditure and for the raising of revenues, such a proposal could only be regarded as Utopian, and impractical, because there is probably no question in the whole realm of political science upon which men and parties and economists have more widely or more earnestly differed than as to the principle upon which tariff rates should be based and established. There are those who are free traders, and who believe in a tariff for revenue only, but they differ among themselves as to the particular commodities that should be taxed and as to the proportion of the tax that should be borne by the several classes of the community—I am not speaking particularly with regard to Canada now when I speak of free traders and those who believe in a tariff for revenue only. Then, there are those who are protectionists, and they differ among themselves as to the degree of protection that should be accorded and the extent of time and the period over which protection should extend. I think we may safely say—and I am sure it is not necessary to elaborate the point in a representative assembly of this kind—we may safely say that there is no matter in the realm of political science about which men and parties are more apt to differ than the question of the proper basis for, and the principle of establishing tariff rates. I think, therefore, we may assume in view of this and other considerations, that the tariff cannot be taken out of politics, that it is in reality the most vital and essential feature in politics, that it is, and probably always will be the chief topic of political discussion.

Now, in any modern society, the task of tariff making or of tariff revision, especially upon a comprehensive scale, is one of very great difficulty and complexity, involving, as an indispensable preliminary, a more or less exhaustive investigation into economic conditions. In other words, where the tariff is a tariff for revenue only, or partly for revenue and partly protective, its basis should be the ascertainment, as accurately as possible, of facts. Let me give a practical illustration. From day to day in my office, the tariff being in the Department of Finance, I have applications from business men, from manufacturers, from others throughout the community, with regard to the tariff. These applicants have, or fancy they have, some grievances; they either wish a higher degree of protection, or, some of them may complain, and they may justly complain, that the tariff unduly favours certain industries, that the rate of living has been unduly enhanced by reason thereof, and they ask that the matter be looked into. Now, right at the outset, and before that matter can be properly investigated, there comes up the question: what are the facts. In other words, the question of facts is an absolutely necessary preliminary to proper tariff investigation, and to proper and just tariff action. In Canada, with our vast extent of territory, with our great variety of resources, with our great industrial establishments, the task of tariff making is one of very great difficulty, a fact that has been recognized by previous governments whenever they have undertaken the task of tariff making or tariff revision. They have tried to meet the situation by organizing committees or commissions—I prefer to call them committees, although they have been called by the ministers themselves commissions, they tried by this means to obtain the necessary facts and data upon which a tariff can only be justly and fairly and intelligently constructed. They have gone through the country, they have visited the principal places in Canada, and have there sought information. In 1893 a committee of the ministers of Sir John Thompson's Cabinet visited the principal centres of the Dominion for the purpose of obtaining information with a view to revise the tariff. In 1897, similarly, a committee of Cabinet ministers, three in number, visited the leading centres of the Dominion in quest of information. They gave hearings to parties who were desirous to be heard with regard to the tariff or who might have information useful to them in coming to a conclusion. In 1905 and 1906, similarly a committee of ministers visited various points of the Dominion, preparatory to the tariff legislation of 1907.

Now, Sir, I think that such committees would serve an extremely useful purpose. In the first place they would bring the ministers in touch with public opinion throughout the Dominion, the ministers would hear both sides, so to speak; they would hear the side of those in favour of an increase in the tariff or of maintaining the existing tariff, and they would hear, on the other hand, those who were opposed to such increase or such maintenance.

But I think it must be obvious to all that it would be absolutely impossible for such a committee of ministers visiting various parts of the Dominion to obtain anything like accurate statistical information, which I believe is indispensible to the making of a tariff upon a just and fair basis. It would be absolutely impossible for these ministers to obtain anything like accurate information with regard to the great variety of products and commodities mentioned in the tariff schedules. Our customs revenue for the fiscal year ending the 31st of March, 1911, was over $73,000,000; our tariff Act embraces something like 740 different items; and these items in turn embrace thousands of commodities. One gets a fair idea from these figures of the great amount of information which would be necessary or desirable before anything like a comprehensive revision of the tariff could be attempted. I do not wish to overemphasize or to magnify the difficulty, because it is only fair to say that it is possible to become academic with regard to getting information; but there is no doubt that our tariff will be on a more just and equitable basis in proportion to the amount of accurate information which we have at hand at the time the tariff is created or is revised.

Other countries have been confronted with the same difficulty of obtaining facts as a preliminary to tariff action. Germany engaged some thirty experts for the purpose of obtaining information upon which her tariff might be based. Japan, preliminary to any tariff legislation, appoints a committee consisting of civil officials, members of parliament and leading business men, for the purpose of advising with regard to the items in the tariff schedules. The nearest approach to a permanent tariff commission, although it is not a tariff commission in the sense in which our Bill provides for one, is the Tariff Board of the United States. The Customs Tariff Act of the United States for the year 1909 contained maximum and minimum tariff provisions, and it left the administration of the tariff as to these maximum and minimum provisions in the hands of the President of the United States. The following provision was made in the Act:

> To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section, and officers of the government in the administration of the customs laws, the President is hereby authorized to employ persons as may be required.

Subsequently he appointed three persons, the number being afterwards increased to five, to organize the bureau, and they were known as the Tariff Board. As to the duties of the board there is no definition in any statute, but the president of the board has thus defined them:

> The duties of the board are the ascertainment of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad and the ascertainment of the prices at home and abroad and their relation to local conditions.

The President desired to have the board made permanent, but in the meantime public sentiment had arisen calling for the creation of a Tariff Commission. In the United States there were two distinct notions prevalent as to the scope of this commission. One was that the commission should have the powers which I mentioned at the opening of my speech—that it should be absolutely independent of Congress with the power to fix the tariff rates. The other was that the commission should be auxiliary to the government, for the purpose of obtaining information on which tariff rates might be founded. A Bill was introduced founded on the latter conception, though slightly different in form, and passed both Houses, but failed of final enactment. It is generally acknowledged that the Tariff Board of the United States has performed very important and valuable services. Among the different works which it has undertaken I might mention the reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States, the pulp and news print paper schedule, and the woollen schedule.

It may be assumed that accurate information and data are absolutely essential if we desire to be just and fair and equitable to all classes of the community in the revision of the tariff. We propose, therefore, to create a Tariff Commission with the duty of obtaining and collating information of which the government may avail itself in making its tariff law. As a result of that tariff organization, I would hope that in time—because it cannot be done hurriedly—we would have established a very valuable bureau of information relating to almost every commodity, or at least all the principal commodities, embraced in our tariff schedules. Under present conditions the Minister of Finance and his colleagues obtain that information in the best way they can. In the first place, the Minister of Finance has his own knowledge, such as it may be, and that of his colleagues, with regard to existing business conditions. Then he obtains a great deal of information from discussions in the House, and from members representing the different constituencies throughout the Dominion. He obtains further information from deputations and interviews, which for the most part are of a confidential nature, and in which he is asked to make tariff changes. He receives letters from time to time bearing on the question of the tariff. From all these sources he undoubtedly does receive a considerable amount of information. He has also in his department an accumulation of statistics. But the great lack, as I have indicated, is that we have not tabulated and accurate information on which we can rely, we do not know the facts as we should know them, in regard to the industries, the businesses, the callings and the occupations of the people. We have not the facts with regard to the cost and conditions of production that we should have before we can intelligently approach the question of tariff consideration and tariff modification. Now, I have no doubt that an expert staff could be organized that would materially assist the minister in obtaining that information, but no such staff could possibly act with the authority of an efficient Tariff Commission clothed with the most ample powers of investigation, for the purpose of obtaining the information of which I speak.

I desire to say as strongly as I can that the creation of a Tariff Commission does not in the slightest degree minimize ministerial or government responsibility for the tariff. The minister must still continue to keep in living touch with conditions to the best of his ability, because it is very much better that he should have first hand information—that he should supplement the information obtained from the Tariff Commission by his own knowledge and by such information as he may obtain in the way I have indicated. The government, after all, is responsible and must continue to be responsible for the tariff; but the minister should have, as a result of the work of the Tariff Commission, a constantly increasing body of information which would be of the greatest possible service to him and his colleagues in coming to just conclusions upon tariff matters. That has always been the great need, and it is to gain that knowledge, to obtain the information and data indispensable, that we propose to create this commission. I shall take up briefly some of the principal clauses of the Bill.

In the interpretation clauses, the expression 'goods' means:

> Products, wares and merchandise or movable effects of any kind, including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, horses, cattle and other animals.

That clause is practically taken from the interpretation clauses of the Customs Act.

The commission is to consist of three members appointed by the Governor in Council. They are to give their entire time to the work of the commission and must reside in Ottawa or in its vicinity. The chairman will receive $7,500 per annum, and each of the other two commissioners $7,000 per annum. Each commissioner shall hold office for a period of five years from the date of his appointment, but may be removed by the Governor in Council at any time.

Now I come to the duties of the commission. These are set forth in the fourth section of the Bill. In respect of goods—and the word 'goods' is defined in the interpretation clauses—produced in or imported into Canada, the commission shall, under the direction of the minister, make inquiries as to raw material, production, transportation, labour and so forth. The intention is that the commission shall be directed by the minister to take up and investigate particular matters or schedules, and ascertain the facts connected with the production of any particular industry and deal with these facts separately as mentioned in the paragraphs of section 4. Once the minister has directed the attention of the commission to a particular schedule or article, such as cement or iron or any other commodity, the commissioners will investigate in such a manner as they deem proper. As directed by the minister, they will inquire into:

> The price and cost of raw materials in Canada and elsewhere and the cost of transportation thereof from the place of production to the place of use or consumption.

In other words, it is very desirable that we should know what the cost of raw material is laid down at the places of use or consumption in Canada. It is very desirable that we should know the advantage that Canada enjoys or the disadvantage she suffers with respect to raw materials used in connection with the manufacture of any particular commodity. The cost of transportation will of course include all charges incurred from the place of production to the principle place of use or consumption.

The commission shall also inquire into the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere.

Now the cost of production is not easily ascertained, but that is no reason why there should not be an attempt to ascertain it. The cost may vary according to locality and supply and demand, and it should be the duty of the commission to ascertain the cost of production at various times and points and in various industrial establishments in Canada and elsewhere, and try to reach a conclusion as to the cost of production in this country as compared with other countries. The word 'elsewhere' would seem to give great latitude to the commissior but there are two restraints on that provision being abused. When the matter came up in the United States House, the suggestion was thrown out that such a provision might be taken advantage of by the members of the commission to enable them to take trips abroad. But our tariff commission is not to go outside of Canada except with the consent of the minister, and of course parliament has the most immediate check on the expenditure of the commission in the appropriation parliament makes for the ensuing year.

The commission will also make inquiry, under the direction of the minister into:

The cost of transportation from the place of production to the place of use or consumption, whether in Canada or elsewhere.

The cost of transportation of course has a great deal to do with the cost of production, and when we find great variations in price in the east and the west within Canada, we ought to ascertain how much transportation figures in the difference.

Another subject of inquiry by this commission is:

The cost efficiency and conditions of labour in Canada and elsewhere.

It is very desirable that we should know the differences between the conditions in Canada and elsewhere and what effect those differences have on our competition with other parts of the world. The conditions as to wages, the cost of living, the efficiency of labour and generally all the elements that affect production, should be probed as thoroughly as possible. Another subject which the commission will have to take up is:

The prices received by producers, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, retailers and other distributors in Canada and elsewhere.

A comparison of prices ruling in various centres is very desirable when considering a tariff. Generally speaking, the commission should investigate all the conditions and factors that enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumer in Canada as compared with other countries.

Taking section 4 literally, it is a pretty large order, but if the powers of the commission are exercised with good sense and they pursue their investigations along that line, there will in time be a wealth of valuable information which cannot fail to be of use to the government in coming to a conclusion on tariff matters. What I mean is that the commission is to be directed to make certain inquiries and not that the government should wait until the commission has investigated all the matters mentioned in this fourth section of the Bill. If they did, tariff considerations would be indefinitely postponed. My own opinion is that the tariff, especially in prosperous times, should not be lightly changed, but we must recognize that conditions are changing in the country and a tariff must change with the changing conditions. It will be only changed however, when we have the information upon which changes should properly be made.

Subsection 2 of section 4 provides:

The commission shall make inquiry into any other matter upon which the minister desires information in relation to any goods which, if brought into Canada or produced in Canada, are subject to or exempt from duties of customs and shall report to the minister.

And subsection 3 provides:

The commission may be empowered by the Governor in Council to hold an inquiry, under section 12 of the customs tariff 1907, in the same manner as a judge of the Exchequer Court or any other judge herein referred to may be so empowered, and the said section shall include and apply to the commission as if it were therein expressly named.

In connection with that clause, I may say it was deemed advisable that the commission, which naturally becomes skilled in matters of that kind, should be empowered and authorized to hold investigations under the provisions of the Tariff and Customs Act. For the information of the House I shall read the section in question. Section 12 of the Customs Tariff Act:

Whenever the Governor in Council deems it to be in the public interest to inquire into any conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement alleged to exist among manufacturers or dealers in any article of commerce to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers in such article at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in Council may command or empower any judge of the Supreme Court, or of the Exchequer Court, of Canada, or of any superior court or county court in Canada, to hold inquiry in a summary way and report to the Governor in Council whether such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists. The judge may compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them under oath and require the production of books and papers, and shall have such other necessary powers as are conferred upon him by the Governor in Council for the purpose of such inquiry.

If the judge reports that such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists in respect of such article, the Governor in Council may admit the article free of duty, or so reduce the duty thereon as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in the article, if it appears to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the consumer is facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on a like article.

As I have said, that gives the commission power, at the instance of the Governor in Council, to make investigations where it is thought that there exists any combination for the purpose of unduly enhancing prices.

Subsection 4 provides:—

It shall also be the duty of the commission to inquire into any other matter or thing in relation to the trade or commerce of Canada which the Governor in Council sees fit to refer to the commission for inquiry and report.

That is, of course, a purposely wide clause to meet any condition that may require investigation at the instance of the government, inquiries to be made in a summary manner. As to the powers of the commission, they include the usual powers of a court to summon witnesses and to require them to give evidence on oath or affirmation, and orally or in writing, and to produce documents etc. In order that the commission may cover more ground and work more efficiently it is provided that one commissioner shall have power to hold inquiry under subsection 1 and 2 and two commissioners shall have power to conduct investigations under subsections 3 and 4. It is provided also:

For the purposes of any inquiry under this Act, the commissioners may obtain information, which in their judgment is authentic, otherwise than under the sanction of an oath or affirmation, and use and act upon such information.

In other words, wide latitude is given the commission to obtain information. They will obtain it in many ways—from reports of trade and statistical returns of other countries, from investigations carried on, so to speak, in the field in connection with the industries of the country, and by hearing those who may desire to be heard with regard to the questions, and, if necessary, by summoning witnesses and calling upon them to testify under oath. The sixth subsection of section 5, is an important one:—

Should evidence or information in its nature confidential, relating to the business or affairs of any person, firm or corporation, be given or elicited in the course of any inquiry, the evidence or information shall not be made public by the commission in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation, respectively, but this subsection shall not apply to an inquiry under subsection 3 of section 4 of this Act.

This does not relate to the inquiry into combinations for the purpose of enhancing prices to which I have referred. In that case, nothing confidential is to be obtained, but all is to be public. With regard to this subsection, if the commission carries out its duties as is proposed, there is no doubt that information will be obtained which will be of benefit to the commission, but of a confidential nature the publication of which would be most disadvantageous to, in fact, might greatly impair the credit of the firm that has given it. The experience of the United States Tariff Board is that they derive a great deal of information in that way, and they are decidedly of the opinion that where given confidentially, it should be safeguarded. No doubt, objection may be raised, but I think that if parties reasonably fear that their credit will be injured or that they will be in any way embarrassed or that any rival would obtain advantage from information given to the commission constituted under this Act that information should be held as confidential.

Subsection 7 reads:—

Inquiries under this Act shall, whenever practicable, be conducted at some suitable place in the city of Ottawa, but the commissioners may, in their discretion, conduct such inquiries, either in whole or in part, in any other place in Canada, and, with the consent of the minister, in any place outside of Canada.

I must apologize for taking up so much time in connection with the provisions of the Bill, as I understand that is not customary at this stage.

In bringing down this measure, I do not wish it to be inferred that the government has modified, in any way, its policy as to a reasonable and adequate protection for the industries of this country. Personally, I am not a believer in high protection, but I am a believer, an absolute believer, in reasonable and adequate protection for the development of the resources and the building up of the industries of this country. Next to the power to make laws for the peace and good order of the community, I do not believe there is any power exercised by the government of more importance than the power of fixing tariff rates. Every man, woman and child in Canada, is interested in the tariff; from the miner of Cape Breton to the fruit grower of British Columbia, all are interested. And the problem that confronts us is this: How shall we arrange the tariff so as to provide the necessary revenue for the country, and also provide for the upbuilding of industry and the development of our resources, yet at the same time be just, fair and equitable to all classes of the community? That is the problem; and I say that in order to solve that problem it is necessary that we should obtain all the information possible. We cannot have too much information in order that we may try, at least, to accomplish this result. It is as an aid to the solution of the problem of obtaining that information upon which an equitable tariff can be based, a tariff fair to all while reasonably protecting the industries of the country and the labour dependent upon those industries, that this Bill has been brought down by the government.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington). What ever criticism I might have to offer upon the Bill, the second reading of which has just been moved by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White, Leeds), no one can take exception to the clear explanation which he has given the House, of the proposal and his own intentions in regard to the proposal. As to much of what he has said, I can agree with him, and to many parts of his address I take no exception.

But I must disagree with him on the method he has adopted in seeking to obtain information and facts, which I believe all members of this House will deem to be necessary to enable us to bestow proper consideration upon any of the tariff questions which from time to time arise in this House. I object to the form in which the government has brought down this measure, and as I proceed, I think I can point out to the satisfaction of the House that the form is objectionable, and if persisted in, as brought before us in the shape of the present Bill, its operation and ultimate result will not only be objectionable, but I think I may go so far as to say may be disastrous to the great body of the citizens of this country.

I believe that the Finance Minister recognizes that this Bill is in the nature of a new departure. It is a radical departure from anything which we have hitherto known in our parliamentary or constitutional practice. In order to justify so radical a departure, strong reasons, substantial reasons, I think should have been given to the House. Mere matters of expediency are not sufficient for the purpose. Our constitutional practice, our parliamentary practice in respect to tariffs, and in respect to the great question of national taxation, has not been the growth of a year, or of years, or of generations, but of centuries. It is the outcome of long centuries of ripe experience, and the rights which we in this parliament possess of dealing with matters of revenue and of taxation are rights not lightly to be interfered with, not lightly to be limited, and no government, I submit, is justified in raising any barrier between a government and the people who puts that government in power; and this Bill, in my opinion, raises at the outset such a barrier.

I think, too, that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance might at the outset have given the House some reason for bringing in this measure at the present session. What public demand has there been in Canada for such a measure? Has there been any demand? Has the question ever been discussed in this House or outside this House? Has it ever been discussed as a question of vital importance by the press of the country? I know, as every hon. member knows, that the question of the appointment of a tariff commission was raised by my right hon. friend, the leader of the government, in one or more than one of his many pre-election manifestos. But I know that I am quite within the mark when I say that the matter as a live issue was never discussed, either on the platform or in the press, and up till the present moment, so far as my knowledge goes, it has never been discussed in the parliament of Canada. Now what call or what demand has there been for such a measure? The Minister of Finance gave the House not a single instance of any demand, of any request, which had been made upon the government to formulate such a measure as that proposed in this Bill for the employment of a permanent tariff commission. We know that there is one important body in Canada that has called for it, and called loudly for it. We know that it has been a sort of an ideal of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for a number of years back. We know that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association has year in and year out, in open session and in secret session, and at its banquets, announced its desire that a permanent tariff commission should be established in Canada. But apart from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, has any call come from any other section of the country? I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance: Have any agricultural societies in Canada asked for the establishment of a permanent tariff commission? Have any of the dairymen's associations, any of the live stock associations, swine breeders' or sheep breeders' associations any western association, the Grain Growers' Association, the Dominion Grange—have any of these men asked for it? Have any of the great consuming classes asked for such a measure? Has any request come from Boards of Trade? If so, the Minister of Finance did not give the House any information. Has he received requests from the great industrial classes, the Trade and Labour Congress, the trades unions, any of those representative bodies of the great consuming classes, have they made any request to the government, direct or indirect, that a permanent tariff commission should be established in Canada? I venture to say that, with the single exception of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, there has never been a request or a suggestion from any of the great public bodies in Canada for a Bill such as the one which is now under consideration.

Now, on the face of the Bill, one might suppose on a superficial glance, that it is perhaps innocuous, perhaps to some extent harmless. But I venture the assertion that any one who will carefully read the Bill, any one who will observe what I believe to be its real intent and purpose, will see that it is one of very far reaching scope, and of very serious consequence to the people of his country. It does, Sir, seem to me a strange thing that the first important official act, the first act, at all events, of any consequence or any magnitude, performed by the Minister of Finance in this House since his appointment to that high position a few months ago, should be the introduction of a Bill to establish a permanent tariff commission in Canada, a Bill which, on his own statement, both in form and in substance, I think I am safe in saying, is practically borrowed from the highest protectionist country in the world, from the United States of America. It is a strange comment, a strange sequel, upon events which happened just about a year ago in Massey hall, Toronto, at a tremendous gathering called by so-called Liberals to protest against the proposed reciprocity agreement with the United States. The hon. the Minister of Finance was on the platform at that gathering, and they tell me he made the best speech that was made on that occasion, and I am sure he would. His theme was that the United States systems are bad, their laws are bad, their methods, their manners are such as should not be adopted in Canada; they would lower us, they would not ennoble us. And now, Sir, we see that the first act of consequence or of magnitude, of that same hon. gentleman occupying the high position of Minister of Finance of Canada, is to bring in a Bill, to find a model for which he has gone across to Washington. He has culled the 'Congressional Record' of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and he has brought here in concrete form what the high protectionist party in the United States deem a proper thing to safeguard high protection in that country.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, knows that he has perused that 'Congressional Record,' every page of it, dealing with this subject. I do not object to his doing so, but I say that his remarks are tainted with the arguments which were advanced by the high protectionist party in Congress for the passage of a similar measure. He will remember, as I do, that one member of the House of Representatives said: I support this Bill because it is the best way to sustain the glorious doctrine of protection. That is one of the reasons given in the House of Representatives and I, for one, have not a single doubt in my mind that the real object, purpose and intent of the present measure is to perpetuate and sustain, not the present system of protection, but a higher system of protection in the Dominion of Canada.

This Bill cannot be said to be original in any respect. There are only two or three countries, I believe, in the world—only two or three at all events, of which I know —which have adopted tariff commissions and it is a strange thing that the countries which have adopted this method of procedure, are the highest protected countries in the world. A tariff commission board seems to be a necessary adjunct to the high protective system, and I do not think I am going one jot beyond the truth when I say that this Bill is brought in here—almost the first important Bill of the first session of this parliament—as a quid pro quo for the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to redeem the promises made to them for their generous and lavish support during the election on the 21st day of September last.

Well, how will the Bill operate? Opinion may be divided upon that question and probably will. We have perhaps no plain statement of fact which you can lay before the House as to what will be the exact operation of the Bill and we cannot more than surmise what are the real intentions of the government in bringing it forward. But, straws show which way the wind blows, and we must gather these things from the material at hand. I think I am within the mark in saying that the operation of this Bill will not be such as was pictured in such a masterly way by the Minister of Finance, but that it will go much further. It is a matter which will enter much deeper into our fiscal system than the Minister of Finance would lead us to believe, if we can judge of its provisions and by the remarks which he has made to this House to-day. I believe I am right in saying that the only occasion on which the question was ever mentioned in this House during the past ten or twelve years, was during the last session of the last parliament, about a year ago. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) on that occasion, speaking in the debate on the question of reciprocity with the United States, did make a reference to the question of establishing a permanent tariff commission. It was not a lengthy reference, it was a brief reference and I give it now as being the only reference I can find in this House by the right hon. gentleman or by any one else to the matter. He said in that speech, at page 3311:—

I believe that we in Canada, in the future still more than in the past, should attempt to shape our tariff upon scientific consideration of known facts. I believe it would be well that we should have exact information as to these matters laid before parliament. I believe it would be well if we established a permanent tariff commission in Canada so that our tariff should not be made by rule of thumb.

And further, in column 3312, he says:

My idea of a tariff is one which would give the industries of this country a fair chance, and more than a fair chance perhaps, to stand up against competition of countries where, it may be, the standard of living among the labouring people is lower than in Canada, and lower than it ought to be any where. That I think is a reasonable proposition. A permanent tariff commission if established would be the most fitting authority to decide as to these points.

If that language correctly expresses what was the view and the opinion of my right hon. friend the leader of the government, when he spoke in this House one year ago, the intention of the tariff commission, and of this Bill which has been introduced, go much farther than the Minister of Finance would lead the House to believe. The right hon. leader of the government said last year that in his judgment a tariff commission would be the proper tribunal to decide these weighty matters, and he was then in favour of giving to the industries in Canada not only a fair chance, 'but more than a fair chance perhaps.' Why give to the industries of Canada more than a fair chance, let me ask my right hon. friend? Was that expression purposely used as a bait for the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and did the Canadian Manufacturers Association take the bait? Why give them more than a fair chance? Do they ask for more than a fair chance? I assume they do, but if that language correctly expresses the views of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, speaking in this House one year ago, and if this Bill is to establish a permanent tariff commission, and to give that commission power to decide these questions, as intimated by the right hon. gentleman last year, then the Bill is not so simple, and not so innocuous as the Minister of Finance would lead the House to believe in his statement. But, Sir, I am backed up in that view by a statement which appeared a day or two ago in the columns of the 'Toronto Mail.' This is about the first serious reference I ever saw in the newspapers of Canada to the question of a permanent tariff commission. It is contained in an editorial in the 'Mail and Empire' of February 1. It is only a passing reference, it is true, but, as I said, straws show which way the wind blows and there are one or two sentences here which indicate quite clearly that, notwithstanding the language used in the Bill, and the language used in addressing this House to-day by the Finance Minister, the real object and intent of the Bill go much farther than he would lead us to believe, and it will mean a general raising of the tariff of this country and the erection of a barrier between the people and the ministers who should be responsible to the people but who hereafter will try to shoulder that responsibility upon the board which they propose to create by this Bill. The Toronto 'Mail,' in discussing what the commission has to do, and referring to the material which the commissioners are to collect, says:

This material will not only be collected, but, which is scarcely less important, it will be organized, and something like a starting point for a scientific tariff will thus be fixed.

That so-called scientific tariff is to be organized from that starting point to be established by these permanent tariff commissioners. Further on, in the same article, it says:

The commission's work will establish a new landmark in the history of Canadian tariff legislation.

Is that not plain enough? Do the people not believe that the government's proposal means that the board of tariff commissioners shall, from time to time, make reports upon which this government will act, and that these reports, in the very nature of things, will be in the interest of higher duties or greater protection to the industries of Canada; or, in the words of the Prime Minister, will be designed to give the industries of Canada more than a fair chance? If they give them more than a fair chance somebody is going to suffer. It is at the expense of somebody else.

At whose expense is it to be? Certainly, at the expense of the great consuming masses of this country. I might mention one or two other matters which tend to lead me to the conclusion that we do not see the intention and the purpose of the government on the face of this Bill. It is only a few weeks since there appeared in the newspapers a letter from the right hon. the Prime Minister addressed to Sir Sanford Fleming in regard to the cement merger. In that letter the right hon. gentleman said that the legal aspect of the question should be decided by the courts, and in that, I agree with him. But, he said, the question of the raising of the price by means of the merger is a matter for the Tariff Commission to deal with. It is only during the present session that I asked the Minister of Customs, on behalf of some of my constituents, whether a certain heavy triphammer could be imported from Chicago free of duty, the same not being mentioned in the Canadian Tariff and not being manufactured in Canada. I suppose my request could have been granted by order in council, but my request was refused courteously by the Minister of Customs and in his letter of refusal he said: this is another of these matters for the Tariff Commission to deal with. Now, when facts like that come to one's knowledge and when we know that the people who have established permanent Tariff Commissions throughout the world, are people who believe in the doctrine of protection to the hilt and the highest kind of protection; when we know that the only demand in Canada for a permanent Tariff Commission has been from the high protectionist party, the Canadian Manufacturers Association; when we know there has not been any earnest demand or suggestion for it from any other body of people in the Dominion, then, taking the statement of the Prime Minister, with the statement of the Minister of Customs to which I have referred and with the statement of the 'Toronto Mail and Empire', may we not reasonably conclude that the functions of this board are far greater than would appear on the surface, and that the proposal is in reality a radical departure from British and from Canadian parliamentary practice?

The Bill is largely an American model, nothing more or less than a cheap Yankee device of the Finance Minister, copied from the United States; a device notoriously invented by the high protectionist party in the United States. I challenge the Minister of Finance to contradict that statement. It cannot be contradicted because it is the absolute truth. In form and in substance we have in this Bill, an American article, a cheap Yankee device, which, as one man said in Congress, was intended to sustain the glorious doctrine of protection. Coming to the Bill itself, the third clause deals with the number of commissioners, the appointment of commissioners, etc. and I notice it is not set out in that clause that these commissioners shall be possessed of any special qualifications.

I heard the Minister of Finance state in the House a few days ago, and I think quite correctly, that he would appoint no man on account of his business or calling, and that he would not refuse to appoint any man on account of his business or calling. But as this Bill is to create a special board for a particular purpose, I think the commissioners to be appointed, if we go that length, should be men having some special training or qualifications. However, no qualification at all is mentioned in the Bill, and in that respect the government will have a free hand. Now, there is one qualification that a man must have if he is to sit on that board, and that is: he must not only be a consistent supporter of the Conservative party right up to and including the last election, but he must also be a High Protectionist before he will sit on that board. The members of that board will be appointed from the friends of the government, and possibly some of the members will be recruited from the Canadian Manufacturers Association. I do not know that these people have any special qualifications to perform this class of work, but I mention this particularly because this commission is a permanent body They are not to be such a commission as the Minister of Railways had to deal with the other day when he said they were only appointed during pleasure, and he removed them. This commission once appointed cannot be removed except for cause, which means by impeachment as you would remove a judge. Once appointed they are there and they are permanently there, and the words 'for cause' are put in just to assure them that they are safe even if in two or three years my hon. friend the leader of the opposition should again obtain power, so that he will not be able to dismiss them. The fact, therefore, is that we are going to have three permanent tariff commissioners a board just as permanently appointed as a Bench of Judges is appointed; and that the qualification is that they shall be loyal subjects and followers of the——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Of the King.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Of the right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister of Canada. They are to be Conservatives first, last, and all the time, and if they are, they have also got to be Protectionists and High Protectionists. We may make up our minds to it that we are going to have a board made up of individuals who rightly or wrongly hold opinions in favour of a highly protective system in this Dominion.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) a Protectionist himself?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I believe in a certain amount of protection; a tariff for revenue.

Mr. HENDERSON. Tariff for tariff, the old cry.

Mr. GUTHRIE. A tariff for revenue affords enough protection in my community and in my opinion it is sufficient. Let us reason the thing out a little further. I believe that there are men in Canada, and many of them, as stated by the Minister of Finance, whose opinions are fixed on the question of Protection and High Protection. With them it is not a matter of a mere change of opinion from day to day or from year to year; they have an absolute and honest conviction that high protection—some of them would have it as high as Haman's gallows—is the best system for Canada. I give these men credit for honestly holding these opinions. Then, there are a large number of people in this country, who believe as I believe, that if we adopt a tariff for revenue, we will have sufficient incidental protection—and some protection is necessary—for the industries of Canada. But there are also a large number of people who believe in free trade. Here we have three distinct classes of opinion on the fiscal policy of the country, and there may be more. I give these all credit for honesty of conviction, and I will ask the Prime Minister from which of these classes he proposes to appoint a permanent tariff board? I believe that if he appoints a board of high protectionists they will view the facts and conditions and circumstances which they are called upon to inquire into through one set of spectacles. I could name for him another set of commissioners who are just as clearly convinced that the best fiscal policy for this country is free trade, and who would from the same facts the same conditions, and the same surroundings, form a different conclusion altogether.

I put the matter more pointedly than that; I will put an extreme case. Take a tariff board composed of three men holding opinions such as those of my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor); they would certainly be extreme protectionists. Take another board composed of three men such as my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark), whom I believe to be the ablest exponent of the doctrine of free trade either in this House or in this country. I believe these two boards would view the same facts, inquire into the same conditions, and come to almost opposite conclusions upon them. Where are you going to draw the line? This Bill in my humble judgment goes much too far in the power which it gives to the commissioners. The United States Bill was more fair than this, for that Bill provided that the tariff board should consist of five members three of whom should be Republicans. We do not recognize the party system in our legislation, and I think it is well that we do not; but this Bill gives the government power to appoint three gentlemen of high protectionist views, and we know, without going a step further, just what their view of the situation will be and what their report is likely to be. Now, the personnel and the functions of this commission are the all important things. I do not think the government should ask us to advance the Bill without giving us some information in this regard. I notice, in reading the 'Congressional Record' of the United States, that Senator La Follette said that it was absolutely essential to the consideration of the Bill that the names should be submitted; and I think it will appeal to the hon. members of this House that we ought to know something of the men whom the government intend to appoint in order that we may reach a conclusion as to their qualifications and as to whether they are men likely to perform properly the duties which this Bill proposes to assign to them. Passing on to the functions of the commission, I notice that by section 4 subsection 1 after full inquiry has been made the commissioners are required to report to the Minister of Finance. I believe it would be far more satisfactory if that were changed and the report of the commissioners were to be made directly to parliament. I see no reason whatever for limiting such a report or tying it up in the files of the Finance Department. If the information which this board obtains is of any practical value, then surely it ought to be submitted to this House in order that all hon. members would have an opportunity of perusing it. I take issue with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in regard to the application of subsection 3 of section 4, which provides that these commissioners may inquire into combines. The Bill does not in express terms repeal the provision of the Customs Act which provides that the Governor in Council may institute proceedings before the judges of this country to inquire into combines. That provision would probably continue to be in force; but to my mind it is nothing short of ridiculous to ask a board of hide-bound political commissioners to inquire into the combines and mergers dominated by their own political friends. That would be the position. Why, Sir, with a board of three Conservative commissioners of the high protectionist stripe there is not a merger or combine or trust in Canada, but would laugh in its sleeve when these gentlemen talked about having its affairs investigated. That provision in the Bill might well be removed, so that the power would remain where it now is, in the Customs Act, permitting the Governor in Council to empower the judges to make such an inquiry. I understand that the present Customs Act is not effective in this respect. I believe there is very much to be said in favour of the position taken by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) in regard to federal enforcement of federal laws, and the Prime Minister could adopt a very much better course than that proposed in this clause, were he to propose an amendment to the Customs Tariff Act, giving some official of the government, be he lawyer or otherwise, power to initiate proceedings under that Act for a full inquiry before the judges into the mergers, trusts and combines. Subsection 4 of section 4 to my mind is very objectionable. It is very broad in its language. I believe that if this Bill is passed we should limit the commissioners to report facts and nothing but facts. We do not want their opinions, their conclusions or their results. We cannot have too much information; we all want the facts; but if that is the object of this Bill, this section as drawn goes much too far. Subsection 5 states that:

> Inquiries under this section shall be conducted in a summary manner, and the respective reports to be made pursuant to its provisions, accompanied by a copy of the evidence, if any, taken in connection with the inquiry, shall succinctly state the results thereof.

These are the words to which I take exception. Similar words were debated at great length in the United States Congress. This clause allows the commissioners succinctly to state results and to do so upon an investigation in which they have taken absolutely no evidence. I can imagine a permanent Tariff Commission appointed under this Bill who, from what they saw or heard from others, could form a conclusion and state succinctly a result to the Finance Minister without taking one particle of evidence, and the Bill does not compel them to take any. By subsection 5 of section 5 it is specifically provided:

> For the purposes of any inquiry under this Act the commissioners may obtain information, which in their judgment is authentic, otherwise than under the sanction of an oath or affirmation, and use and act upon such information.

That surely is a very broad power to give to any commission.

Two members of the board may walk down the street, meet one of the parties interested, and have a few words with him, or the board may have a letter from a political friend, stating his views, and the board then may, without taking one word of evidence, reach a conclusion favourable to these parties and lay it before the minister in their report. That proposal seems on its face absurd. I hope the right hon. the first minister will see fit to at least amend that particular clause so as to meet some of the objections to it.

Other provisions are equally objectionable, but what appeals to me as most objectionable is this. The Bill evidently was drafted to enable these commissioners to report opinions, surmises and conclusions of their own without regard to the actual facts. The intention of the government in framing this Bill, evidently was that these commissioners should lay before the minister, not accurate information or facts, but their own opinions and conclusions. If we are to judge by the language of the right hon. the first minister, it is his intention that the commission should have that express power. What then will be the result? The board may make inquiry in any way it sees fit. It may call in a few supporters of the government, it may call in interested protectionists, it may obtain their views in an offhand manner, and on views thus obtained, make its reports. What will the government do with these reports? I presume they will be published, and you may get from them most misleading information. I am not at variance with the right hon. the first minister in his desire for information; but the information which the government say they desire to obtain through the medium of this Bill, they can obtain in another way not objectionable. For some years back, I have been one of those who have found fault with the statistical information gathered by the Canadian government. A much better system might well be evolved and put in practice, instead of the present one which is neither accurate nor convenient. I believe that all the information which the Finance Minister, judging by his remarks, desires, he could obtain by the appointment of experts added to the departments of Trade and Commerce and Customs. There is no necessity for the appointment of a permanent Tariff Commission at all. You could appoint to the Customs and Trade and Commerce departments, expert technical men, who would get for you all the information which these commissioners are supposed to obtain. I believe that this would be a much less expensive way of arriving at more satisfactory results. These experts would be at work under the eyes of the minister and be responsible to him for their work, whereas the commission will be an irresponsible entity. By appointing these extra clerks, experts in tariff and statistical matters, you would secure reliable information—more accurate and reliable than what you would get from a tariff board, I care not by what government that tariff board be appointed. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White), could obtain all the evidence he desires much more accurately in the way I have mentioned than by this Tariff Commission. Let him amend the Customs Act, if necessary, to make this change. I believe that both sides of the House would support an amendment to that effect. We do not begrudge any expense to get necessary information, but we do not want legislation which will be a most radical departure from a cardinal principle of our constitution. In his calmer moments I think the Minister of Finance will admit the force of what I say. Let him amend the Customs Act, as I have suggested, and he can have an inquiry into all the combines, trusts and mergers before a judge, and get all the information he can possibly desire.

Why thrust this measure on parliament and the country? Such a measure can have only one purpose. Is it not a delegation of authority? Is it not a delegation to another body of really the most important duty which we, as members of parliament, have to perform towards our country, and Sovereign? Our first duty is to vote the Supply for carrying on the government—the taxation necessary for the administration of public affairs. The right of the Commons to supremacy in matters of taxation, and the incidents of taxation, is one which was gained in the old country through centuries, not of peaceful argument and debate, but of struggle and turmoil, and up to the present no right has been more firmly settled in Great Britain and this country. But we are asked now to divest ourselves of that right. This proposal will establish a barrier between the Commons and the people. When this commission makes reports it will no doubt make them to suit some purpose of the government. Then when these reports are acted upon, and the people complain, the government will reply that they were obtained from experts. They will urge that the tariff was framed on the report of an independent Tariff Commission, and will disclaim responsibility. That will be the result of the establishment of a permanent tariff board; and that, in my view, is really the strongest objection to this measure. The proposal I make is that this Bill should stand. There is no urgency, no demand for it, save a demand from a number of Canadian manufacturers. Let this measure stand, let the press of this country have time to study and discuss it, let our farmers have time to become acquainted with its provisions. Let our Boards of Trade and municipal bodies, our chambers of commerce and labour unions—let them all have time to be seized with the full import of this new departure, and be in a position to give their views.

No injury is going to accrue to anybody, I presume, whether this measure is passed this session or whether it is passed next session. My hon. friend's own statement was that in times of prosperity changes in the tariff of Canada should not be lightly made; I appeal to him to approve his own doctrine of a year ago and let well enough alone. There is no lack of prosperity in Canada to-day; there is no crying need for such a measure as this. I appeal to any member of the government to say whether the country has had a fair chance to digest this measure? Has any hon. member ever discussed it with his constituents? Have they ever heard a discussion of it? I believe I attended as many meetings as any one in the late campaign, and I did not mention it, nor did I hear it mentioned. I have not seen it discussed in the newspapers. And never, in the twelve years during which I have been a member of this parliament, has the matter ever been broached here, except by one slight reference made in this chamber last year by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. Why, then, not let it stand? Let the people have a chance to consider it. It is a novel proposition, a radical departure in policy. If it only meant what one might gather from a superficial glance, I should not have been insistent on having the matter stand over. But I do appeal to my hon. friend the Finance Minister and the leader of the government, to give the people a chance to look into this Bill with more care than has yet been possible. My own opinion is that, while it may fall somewhat short of the ideal of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, it is a perfect 'lemon' for the farmers and workers of Canada. They will be fooled and hoodwinked by such a measure. They have a right, I believe, to look for better treatment at the hands of the right hon. Prime Minister. The farmers of Ontario stood by him pretty strongly on the 21st of September.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. But it was not on the doctrine of protection, which doctrine always brings such a cheer from hon. members opposite, but on the question of reciprocal trade relations with the United States. The bulk of the farmers of Ontario are not high protectionists. And this matter will vitally affect them when brought to its logical conclusion and put in full operation. Why not let them have a fair chance to digest the Bill, to consider it? Why hurry it through? It is not going to affect the government's determination on the question of the iron and steel bounties. Because I assume that that will be announced in the near future, even before the Tariff Commission is appointed. If the leader of the government would consent to my proposal, I think it would be in the interest of everybody. If he will not consent to it, then there is nothing left for me to do on behalf of this side but to move an amendment, seconded by Mr. Pardee:

That this Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Mr. BORDEN. There is not very much in the somewhat lengthy speech with which my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) has favoured the House which calls for any reply at this time. What we are discussing at this moment is the principle of the Bill and not the various clauses, consideration of which is proper in Committee of the Whole but is not proper at this stage. I should have supposed that an hon. member of the parliamentary experience of my hon. friend would have had that in regard and would have reserved his comments and suggestions with regard to the clauses until we were in committee. The speech of my hon. friend was full of gloom: he was very pessimistic. He made a very fervent appeal to us on behalf of the people of Canada, and at the conclusion of his remarks urged us not to hurry this measure. He is one of those who voted time after time during last session to drive the reciprocity pact through this parliament without any opportunity to send it to the people. That was a measure not simply concerned with the gathering of information for the use of the government and parliament, but calculated to affect not only the destiny of this country, but the destiny of the whole empire. Why did he not have the same tender regard for the people of Canada at that time which he exhibits so strikingly now? And I was shocked and surprised to find my hon. friend, who, in the early part of his speech castigated—or undertook to castigate—the Minister of Finance (Mr. White, Leeds) for endeavouring to get information as to the manner in which this question had been dealt with in the Congress of the United States, and who spoke in the most scornful way of 'Yankee devices', changed his tactics in the latter part of his speech and counselled the whole of us to follow the course of Mr. La-Follette and of the American Congress. Whom are we to believe—my hon. friend in the early part of his speech or my hon. friend in the latter part of his speech? I for one, have said, and am glad to say in this House, that there are many things in the example of the people of the United States and the course they have taken in public affairs from which we may learn something. No one, I hope, is so bigotted,—except my hon. friend, if he chooses to put himself in that category—as to imagine that in every respect we in Canada are the superiors of our neighbours to the south. I believe that in some respects they can learn from us, and I have been always ready to admit that we have been able and should be ready to learn from them.

But, after all, what is the proposition the Minister of Finance has submitted? He has submitted a proposal of the government by which the information, which has been gathered in the past in a desultory, ineffective and unscientific manner, shall, in future, be gathered in a scientific thorough and efficient manner, for the advantage of the government and the people. That is this Bill from beginning to end. But when an hon. member of the experience of the hon. member from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) tells us that there must be something behind the plain words of this Bill and that we are obliged to guide our consideration and our construction of it, by newspaper articles, I think every hon. member will realize that he was put to very great straits indeed to build up any sort of argument in opposition to this measure. Does he not know that, so far as the courts are concerned, it has been decided over and over again that even the language of those engaged in making the laws is not to be taken into consideration by the courts in constructing the statutes?

Surely he would not have us suppose that any comment or suggestion made by newspapers, or by one of us in this House, can have the slightest effect in modifying the clear language of this Bill. The plain and clear language of this Bill is simply this, that effective and systematic means shall be devised by which certain necessary information should be acquired for the government and for parliament by means of this Tariff Commission. My hon. friend has told us there has been nothing said in the country. My hon. friend in this House—I trust he will pardon me for saying so—has not been distinguished for accuracy, and I want to tell him that he is just as inaccurate in respect of this statement as in some others he has made to the House on previous occasions. I do not pretend to have carefully followed the course of discussion with regard to this matter, but I do know that at least three or four years ago a very important speech was made before the Toronto Board of Trade at which the establishment of such a commission was advocated by a very prominent man in Canada, and I know that since then it has been spoken of over and over again. When my hon. friend says that the first occasion on which I uttered anything with regard to it was a year ago in this House, he is again inaccurate, because it was not the first occasion. When he says there has been no discussion in this country with regard to it, I want to tell him that on at least forty or fifty platforms I debated that question, both in eastern and western Canada; and that in every case, when I pointed out to the people that what we proposed to do was to gather absolutely necessary information for the purpose of making a reasonable tariff that would do justice, so far as justice could be done, to all our industries and to all the people, whether in eastern or western Canada, and I found the people, whether in eastern or western Canada, fully prepared to support the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party in that regard.

Now he says this is a radical departure, and that some barrier is to be created, and that this Tariff Commission is to bring in a tariff.

Mr. GUTHRIE. No.

Mr. BORDEN. I took down his words. I withdraw the meaning which I would have otherwise attributed to them, if he tells me that he did not intend to convey that meaning. But he certainly did, in the latter part of his speech, use words which conveyed that impression to my mind, because I took them down. He said:

The result of this would be a tariff brought in by an irresponsible Tariff Commission.

That is what he said, I do not know what he meant. If he did not mean that, I accept at once his disclaimer; it is my duty under the rules of parliament to do so. This Tariff Commission will bring in no tariff; the government of this country will bring in the tariff, in the future as in the past. To contrast the two methods, I myself remember what took place in this House in 1897, and more especially in 1907. When the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce had jonrneyed around this country, had listened to speeches here and there, from this man, and that man, and the other man, in every city and every important town in Canada, they came back to parliament and brought down a tariff, and I ask what information was available to any man in this House from all the peregrinations and pilgrimages of these three gentle men? I asked that the result of their labours should be brought down, and they brought down, in typewritten form, not even printed and indexed, and piled up on the table of this House a mass of papers two or three feet in height, and I do not think any member of this House ever took the time, or pains, or trouble to pay the slightest attention to it, from beginning to end of the debate. My hon. friend may have been an exception, I do not know whether he was or not; I know that he is very industrious in such matters. Now, what we propose is to have a Tariff Commission of men who will be wisely selected for that purpose, and who will collect information in a systematic and effective manner, and put it in such a form that the government can avail themselves of it; information which will be available for the purpose of discussion in this parliament when any tariff changes are proposed. Surely there is no radical departure in all that. My hon. friend repeated over and over again that this is a radical departure, that this would create a barrier. Let us take his own illustration. He says the same result could be arrived at if the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Customs would add certain officers to their staffs and acquire information in that way. May I be permitted to inquire of the thoughtful members of this House who listened to my hon. friend, why the obtaining of information in the one way would create a barrier and would not create a barrier in the other way. Has a single hon. gentleman in this House been able to compass the argument of my hon. friend in that respect? I do not think he has been able to compass it himself; at all events, he will have an opportunity, I hope of telling us on some later occasion, just what he meant by that extraordinary argument and still more extraordinary suggestion. Then he is very much disturbed as to some of the provisions of this Bill, he was very much disturbed as to the provision that evidence not taken under oath may be used. Does he not remember that about ten days ago he and a number of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House were very much disturbed because a commission was to be appointed who would take evidence on oath? At that time the great danger was that commissioners should be appointed to take evidence on oath, and now he is greatly disturbed because commissioners are to be appointed who may take evidence not under oath.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I did not take any exception as to the question of oath, it was the kind of evidence I objected to, it was to be too wide.

Mr. BORDEN. I thought my hon. friend was alluding to that clause in the Bill which says:—

For the purpose of any inquiry under this Act the commissioners may obtain information which in their judgment is authentic, otherwise than under the sanction of an oath or affirmation, and use and act upon such information.

I may have misunderstood my hon. friend, I am sorry if I did so. But I understood that the objection he raised to that section was that evidence not taken under the sanction of an oath, might be used by the commission. Was not that the objection which he raised?

Mr. GUTHRIE. What I meant to say, was that material which was really not evidence at all, might be used if the commissioners saw fit; letters, conversations, or anything of that kind. The objection was not to the lack of an oath.

Mr. BORDEN. Well, then I do not understand my hon. friend's objection at all.

I would not suppose that a commission of this kind would be bound by formal rules of evidence; at all events, I would hope that they would not make any attempt to restrict their inquiry by rules of that kind. Therefore it seems to me my hon. friend's objection falls to the ground.

Now, my hon. friend was very much concerned about the attitude of the government towards the Manufacturers' Association. I want to tell my hon. friend that he ought not to assume too much in these matters without due inquiry. So far as I am concerned, no man connected with the Manufacturers' Association of Canada ever spoke to me on this subject, except one, and he was absolutely opposed to the establishment of a permanent tariff commission. I want to tell my hon. friend, further, that no promise has ever been made by this government to the Manufacturers' Association; and further than that, the Manufacturers' Association have never approached the government for the purpose of obtaining any promise.

My hon. friend must not draw too much upon his own experience or the experience of his party friends in that regard. That is not the way in which the present administration propose to conduct the affairs of this country—by making promises of modifying the tariff in consideration of political support at elections. We have put all that behind us; the country put such methods behind it at the last election. My hon. friend finds fault with us for establishing this Tariff Commission, because he says that a commission of this character is only to be found in countries that have established a highly protective system. Again, I do not know that my hon. friend has been exceedingly accurate. It is perfectly true that a commission, or something of that kind, exists in France, and it may exist in Germany, although I am not sure of that. A Bill has been introduced into the Congress of the United States, but, if I understand the situation correctly, it has not yet been passed. It has not been passed for the reason that very grave objection, I believe, has been raised to it there. So, if my hon. friend regards the United States as a highly protectionist country, let me point out to him the simple fact that this Bill, up to the present time, has failed to pass the Congress of the United States. Further than that, I think that the object of the President of the United States in introducing that Bill, and in defending the establishment of a permanent Tariff Commission in that country was to cut down the system of protection in order that it might be brought within reasonable bounds. Surely my hon. friend is aware that at the last Imperial Conference held within a year his own leader stood up before that conference and moved for an Imperial Trade Commission to investigate conditions of trade in every one of the great Dominions which owe allegiance to His Majesty the King. I suppose the idea in making that proposal was to establish a means by which the necessary information as to trade conditions in every one of these Dominions, both within themselves and in relation to the people of the mother country, could be gathered in an effective way. If the proposal made on that occasion was a good one, why is it after all that my hon. friend finds any fault with the proposal of the present administration to do in an effective, systematic and thorough way that which in the past has been done in a very different manner?

I do not know that there is very much else in what my hon. friend has suggested to which attention need be given at the present time. As far as the provisions of the Customs Act are concerned, to which my hon. friend has alluded, the only thing that this Bill accomplishes, if it should pass into law, is this, that it establishes another tribunal to which may be referred the question as to whether or not a particular combine does or does not exist in this country. It does not take away any existing powers. It simply adds a new tribunal and in that regard surely it is a step in the right direction.

When my hon. friend suggested to us that we should have officers appointed for the purpose of enforcing Dominion legislation, I think he possibly made the most sensible suggestion that I noticed in his speech. But, I am bound to say that, although it has been spoken of in this parliament for the past six or seven years and advocated by my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) and other hon members of the House, I do not think that suggestion, up to the present time, has received any sympathy or support from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat and I am glad to observe the newly awakened interest in the enforcement of Federal laws which has just been developed by my hon. friend. This is a matter to which we intend to give very serious consideration. It is impossible to deal with all these matters at once. As far as my views are concerned, I think there is a great deal in the suggestions which have been made for many years past by my hon. friend from South York and by other hon. members of this House in line with what has been suggested by my hon. friend from South Wellington.

My hon. friend has screwed his courage to the sticking point and has proposed an amendment. He has proposed an amendment that this Bill shall not be read now, but that it shall be read this day six months hence. We are glad to welcome the challenge that my hon. friend has thrown out. He was very insinuating in his suggestion at first that we should have regard to the interests of the people and withdraw this Bill, but, at the end, he made manifest his true intention which was to challenge the policy of the government in this regard and to propose a continuance of the old method pursued in 1897 and in 1907 of conducting by useless and ineffective methods any investigations into the trade conditions of the country, the cost of production and all those matters that are so important to a proper consideration of this question. We believe that this information is necessary, that it ought to be obtained in a systematic and businesslike way and that it cannot be so obtained by the old methods. We propose now a method which takes away from parliament absolutely nothing of that power which is vested in parliament and of which parliament cannot divest itself. We propose to take away nothing of that, but we do propose to appoint a Tariff Commission which will give to the government and to parliament information respecting all matters that have been alluded to which information is vital, essential and necessary in order that a reasonable and just tariff may be made in the interest of the people of this country. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I do trust that the hon. members of this House will not regard with favour the proposal of my hon. friend to defer this legislation to another session. I trust that the amendment made be defeated and that this Bill may be passed. So far as the appointments are concerned, I can only say to my hon. friend from South Wellington that we do not know at the present time whom we shall appoint to that commission, but when we do make the appointments we believe they will be such as will commend themselves not only to the judgment of this House, but to the judgment of the country as well. I therefore, say, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that the government cannot for one moment think of accepting the proposal of my hon. friend from South Wellington and that we desire to have this legislation passed and passed at this session. We do not desire to limit in any way the discussion upon the question but we believe that it is in the interest of parliament and of the people of the country that the Bill should become law at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BORDEN. It was so at the last election.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman the Prime Minister complained that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), did not discuss the principles of the Bill before the House, but the right hon. gentleman himself did not come within many degrees of latitude and longitude of discussing any single principle involved in the Bill, and it would have been more illuminating to the House had he scolded less and argued more. He referred to the attitude of the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) upon the reciprocal trade arrangement with the United States in a scolding fashion, but what that had to do with the Bill we were discussing is more than I can understand. If the right hon. gentleman does himself understand the principles involved in the Bill, then he was most successful in neglecting to disclose his knowledge to the House. The hon. member from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), was distinctly right when he said that this measure was a mere copy of Yankee legislation which has not yet even received the approval of the American Congress. There is no originality in the Bill, and, apparently on the part of the ministers there is no attempt to understand what principle underlies it, if principle there be. The right hon. gentleman complained that the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) objected to the appointment of a Tariff Commission as provided for in this Bill, while, at the same time, he formally admitted the feasibility and propriety of the addition to the Civil Service of a certain staff in order to enable members of the government to prepare a tariff. Well, if the right hon. gentleman failed to understand the distinction between the two, he has failed to understand what the Bill involves. I am opposed to his Bill, because I believe it is a violation of constitutional practice in all British countries, because it directly or indirectly, and perhaps unconsciously, assumes to give to a Tariff Commission powers of legislation——

Some hon. MEMBERS. How?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I will tell you how later. I object to it because it tends to weaken the doctrine of ministerial responsibility as it obtains in all British countries; I object to it because the duties which, under the Bill, are assigned to a commission, refer to matters which in all British countries, are dealt with directly by the responsible advisers of the Crown. I object to the Bill, because the purpose sought to be attained by it can be better attained by less expensive and less objectionable methods; I object to it further, because it seeks in a manner—in a veiled manner, perhaps—to validate by a statute the doctrine of protection in this country. Recently the Minister of Finance stated in the House that this measure was submitted in consequence of the popular demand. I deny that. It is true that the creation of a Tariff Commission has been suggested by the Manufacturers' Association, and by certain other individuals, and it is true that the Prime Minister, during the recent election campaign, did occasionally refer to the appointment of a permanent Tariff Commission, but not in a very serious manner, because I do not remember a single occasion upon which he devoted more than a few minutes to that particular matter. I submit that there is no evidence whatever of any demand by the people of this country for the appointment of such a commission. The establishment of this commission does not meet with the approval of the matured thought of this country, and from personal experience I know that it does not meet with favour from a great many who live within protectionist circles. I think it may be safely said that the government adopted this idea of a Tariff Commission merely as an expedient to escape a frank declaration of their policy upon trade and tariff matters during the past few months. It was, in the first instance, compounded as a sedative for the people of western Canada, who were demanding wider markets and reciprocal trade with the United States. It is an artificial expedient to escape ministerial responsibility, and its effect will be to further becloud an already difficult problem. When we read the declaration of the Prime Minister, in what is known as his Halifax platform, on the fiscal policy of the country, one would imagine that no other human agency than the government itself was necessary to frame a tariff that would suit all sections of the country, and all classes of people. I shall read the tariff plank from the Halifax platform, and it will then be seen that in some respects it might be properly catalogued as humorous, although it was delivered in the most solemn manner. I might also add that in some respects it is like the Divine peace, which 'passeth all understanding.' It reads:

'Fiscal policy which will promote the production within Canada of all useful articles and commodities that can be advantageously produced or manufactured from or by means of our natural resources, having due regard to the interests of the consumer, as well as to the just claims of our wage-earning population.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I am glad to hear hon. gentlemen opposite express approval of the declaration of their leader, but if they had faith in the ability of their leader to carry out their trade policy as thus announced, there would be no necessity for this tariff board. When one thinks of the difficulty in framing a tariff in this country that will suit the producer, the consumer, and the wage-earner and remembers that the Prime Minister stated, in announcing his tariff policy, that he and his party could accomplish this difficult task, it is strange that he and his party, having the open sesame to tariff-making on the universally harmonious plan, should seek the intervention of a Tariff Commission or any other body. In his Halifax platform the right hon. gentleman stated that it was his policy, in framing a tariff, to protect the producer, to protect the consumer and to protect the labourer as well, a task which passes the power of any man on earth. Was this declaration of policy on the part of the Prime Minister a wilful deception, or has the boastfulness which characterized hon. gentlemen opposite in the days when they were in opposition been tempered somewhat by the responsibilities of office? Now, the Bill before the House seeks to establish a Tariff Commission to which are assigned certain duties, which are directly or indirectly related to tariff-making. I do not propose to discuss the various clauses of the Bill, as they have already been fully and fairly dealt with by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). I desire merely to discuss the principle involved in the Bill, namely, the appointment of a commission to assist in the matter of taxation by tariffs and tariffs for protection.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Before recess I was laying down the proposition that there was a principle involved in this Bill. I was submitting that the appointment of this Tariff Commission involved a departure from a well established principle in our constitution and in this respect differs from the appointment of any other commission. The right hon. the First Minister this afternoon argued that as parliament had appointed in the past many other commissions and no objection was raised, there should be no objection to the appointment of a Tariff Commission. If the right hon. gentleman is really of the opinion that this Tariff Commission differs in no essential from others, I can quite understand why he should treat the whole subject so cavalierly. But if there be a distinction between the proposed Tariff Commission and other commissions, I cannot understand the position taken by my right hon. friend. I would ask the government, why in this particular instance, it has departed from the customary practice of administering public affairs through the civil service under responsible ministers. Why in the matter of taxation and revenue, interject between the people and the government, between the legislative and executive powers of this parliament, a new body to be called the Tariff Commission? If the Department of Finance is in need of additional expert aid for the transaction of the business of that department, no hon. member of this House will object to any money vote which will give that department the number of competent men required to carry on its business. That would be a much better method than the one proposed, because it would ensure permanency, for, of course, the appointments to the civil service are much more permanent than the appointments of commissioners. Why single out a number of gentlemen as members of this Tariff Commission and give each a salary almost equal to that of a minister, for the performance of duties which can be performed just as well and possibly better by clerks in the civil service? So far as I am concerned, I would willingly vote for the appointment of such extra officials in the Departments of Finance, Trade and Commerce and Customs as would give the minister in each of these departments an efficient staff upon which he could rely, especially in matters connected with the tariff. That has been my view for years, and while I may not have given public utterance to it, I have expressed it to some members of the late government, political friends of my own. If that were done, we would have a civil service staff working under the direction of the minister of the day, no matter to what political party he might belong. The framing of a tariff for Canada is a matter of policy which, under constitutional and parliamentary practice, rests with the government. No money or taxation measure —and the tariff is eminently such a measure—can originate with parliament or any member of it. The government may accept a suggestion from parliament or from any member of parliament, but in acting on that suggestion it does so solely on its own responsibility, because it is the government of the day which is primarily responsible in matters of taxation. Not even the Senate can interfere in such matters. The isolation of the government in this respect, its undivided responsibility, is well illustrated by the fact that when the Finance Minister brings down a tariff Bill the moment he submits to parliament the first item of that tariff, the whole Bill goes into effect from coast to coast. Therefore, the responsible minister in these matters—the Finance Minister —should not ask for the passage of a statute that will create a body to deal with the tariff and thus divide his responsibility. When he does so, he is violating the constitutional practice of this country. Again a Tariff Commission is entitled to no more consideration than parliament or any one member of parliament, yet should this Bill go into effect and this Tariff Commission be created, the members of that commission will, in the making of tariffs, have more to say than any member of parliament. In case it be argued that the distinction I make between assistance given to the Finance Minister by a Tariff Commission and that given to him by a staff in the civil service, is a very fine distinction, let me point out that to any one who keep in view the constitutional principle, and the constitutional practice of this country, the distinction will be obvious. In this connection it may not perhaps be amiss for me to give the view to be found in Bourinot's 'Parliamentary Procedure' regarding the imposition of taxation. These will be found on page 594:

> It is now a fixed principle of constitutional government that all propositions for the imposition of taxes should emanate from the minister. In the session of 1871 Mr. Speaker Cockburn recommended to the House the adoption of the British practice in this particular, and the Commons have ever since acquiesced in its wisdom. As a consequence no private member is now permitted to propose a Dominion tax upon the people; it must proceed from a minister of the Crown, or be in some other form declared to be necessary for the public service. A motion or a Bill of such a character should properly be introduced by a minister of the Crown.

Now, the Minister of Finance in proposing the appointment of a Tariff Commission, is dividing the responsibility which constitutional parliamentary practice has thrown on him in this respect.

Therefore, I venture to postulate the statement that no member of parliament originates a tariff or taxation Bill. He has the power to recommend changes, but, before it can become effective, it must be recognized by the ministry of the day, and, in the last analysis, by the Minister of Finance. The Tariff Commission to be appointed under this Bill will be given power to investigate facts and report. It is to be appointed, apparently, upon the assumption that taxation by tariffs with the feature of protection, is constitutional in this country. If the Bill means anything, it means that the principle of protection—and I am not arguing against it now—is constitutional in this country, or we seek to make it so by placing that principle in a statute. It is placed in such a position that if any of the members of the commission have views upon the tariff, they can practically compel recognition of them by parliament. And this is only natural because the Bill by which it is proposed to appoint this commission practically places the members of the commission on a parity or at least in partnership with the Minister of Finance. And I say the commission in this respect is given a prominence which the constitution of this country never contemplated, and our parliamentary practice does not warrant. The members of the commission are given a rank above the members of parliament.

It has been urged, and it will be urged again, that because there was created in the United States a so called tariff board, that conditions are analogous in both countries, and hon. gentlemen opposite will urge, as I think the Minister of Finance did, that because the United States appointed a tariff board or commission, therefore, this parliament should appoint one. Let us review what has been done in the United States in this respect, and let us see if the methods of tariff making in Canada and the United States are analogous; let us inquire if, even though there were, in the United States a Tariff Commission or a tariff board, we should be warranted in appointing one in Canada. In the United States there is no such thing as a Tariff Commission, and there may never be —likely there never will be. Strictly speaking, there is no tariff board. In the United States tariff of 1909 there appeared for the first time the principle of a maximum and a minimum tariff, and section 2 of that Tariff Act places upon the President the authority to determine against which countries, if any, the maximum and the minimum tariffs should apply, and when the maximum tariff, if applied, shall be withdrawn. The same Tariff Bill provided by a money vote the means by which the President could secure such information as would be necessary to determine when he should apply the maximum tariff against any country, and when he should withdraw it. Now that is all there is in the nature of tariff board or tariff commission legislation in the United States; and, strictly speaking I say there is not even a tariff board in that country. There is only given the power under the annual Appropriation Act, to the president to employ the services of any persons whom he may select to assist him in determining when and against which countries he shall apply the maximum or the minimum tariff.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If that be so, how is it that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) accused the Minister of Finance of following 'cheap Yankee methods'?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I can see a very clear and obvious distinction. I can also quite understand and justify the statement that the hon. member for South Wellington made. I do not blame the Minister of Finance for denominating the body in the United States as a tariff board. It is so called even in Congress. But what I say is, that, strictly speaking, there is no tariff board constituted by Congress. Let me read a provision of the Tariff Bill of 1909. Section 2 thereof was the section which for the first time enabled the United States government to establish a maximum and a minimum tariff. It provides:

> To enable the president to secure information to assist him in the discharge of the duties imposed on him by section two of the Act and the officers of the government in administering the customs laws, including such investigations of the cost of production of commodities, covering cost of material, fabrication, and every other element of such cost of production, as are authorized by said Act, and including the employment of such persons as may be required for those purposes.

Again, in the Appropriation Acts for the year ending June, 1912, there was a vote of $225,000 to enable the President to secure information to assist him in discharging the duties imposed upon him by section 2 of the Tariff Bill of 1909, which I have just read. So it will be seen that the continuation of the United States Tariff Board so-called is only possible by the continuance of the vote wherewith to pay the same, in the Appropriation Bill. Under the constitution of the United States the President is authorized to recommend changes in the tariff. It is only natural, it seems to me, that he should require expert assistance in first deciding against which countries the maximum tariff might be levied and also in collecting for him such information as will enable him to send to Congress, whenever he sees fit, any recommendation as to the tariff. Now, tariff commission Bills, as I have said, have frequently been introduced in the American Congress, but so far, none have passed. What they have is an advisory body to the President upon tariff matters. Strictly speaking, that is what it is and nothing more.

But, I will proceed now to show that, even if they had a tariff commission in the United States, and I can conceive of there being reasons for the appointment of a Tariff Commission or board in the United States, that it does not follow that we should have one in Canada, because our conditions are absolutely different, and constitutionally, we are upon a different basis. Now, let us see who it is that originates and enacts Tariff Bills and taxation in the United States. Let us see if there is any analogy whatever between the United States and Canada in respect to tariff making and taxation. Under the Constitution of the United States, there is imposed upon Congress the obligation of making the tariff of that country and raising the revenues necessary for the public service. That obligation primarily rests upon the House of Representatives. It is the duty of the president to approve all Tariff Bills and in addition he has the power to recommend tariff changes.

Under the constitution of that country the making of a tariff is placed upon Congress. In the House of Representatives there is a Ways and Means Committee which originates Tariff Bills. In the Senate there is a Finance Committee which passes on Tariff Bills, originating in the House of Representatives through the Ways and Means Committee. If they cannot agree, the same is ultimately referred to a committee of conference. Congress, therefore, is charged with the task of making tariffs, and the President and his executive are absolutely powerless to intervene. The only power of the President is that of approval, and the power of recommending changes.

Now, let us look at conditions in Canada. Here the executive, not parliament or any branch of it, must originate all tariff measures, and while in theory parliament passes the Bill, yet in practice parliament must accept the measure as presented by the government, or in other words, as presented to parliament by the Finance Minister. Thus we have under our system with respect to tariff matters individual ministerial responsibility. As compared with the United States the one is directly contrary to the other. Now, one can see some reasons for the appointment of a Tariff Commission in the United States, but I confess I fail to see any strong logical, cogent reason for the appointment of a similar body in this country. In the United States, as I have said, the Congressional committees make the tariff. They have not the aid of a civil service, there is no responsible minister. There the Senate is not analogous to our Senate; there the party system works out differently. The dominant party in one House of Congress as represented by the President may not be the dominant party in both Houses of Congress, or it may be dominant in one branch and not in the other, as we find it to-day, where the Democratic party is dominant in the House of Representatives, but in a minority, I think, in the Senate. I could conceive the value of a tariff commission, if the Canadian House of Commons and Senate were obliged under our constitution to frame Tariff Bills, which would be analogous to the position of affairs in the United States.

Now, let us proceed further with the practice of tariff making in the United States. The first Tariff Commission ever proposed in the United States was by Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, in the year 1908, when he introduced a Tariff Commission Bill. I think he was the first person to suggest the idea of a Tariff Commission, either in the United States or Canada; and the occasion of the suggestion was during a joint debate on the tariff between Senator Beveridge and Wm. Jennings Bryan, some time previous to 1908. In presenting this measure to the Senate, Senator Beveridge urged many reasons in support of it, to some of which I wish to refer. I wish also to show that the conditions which he urged upon Congress so strongly in support of his measure do not obtain in this country.

In introducing his Bill in the Senate he urged very strongly as a reason, that the Congressional Committees were unable to accomplish the task properly, owing to the length of time required and owing to their many other duties. For instance, he stated that the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives which framed the Dingley Bill were in session nearly four months; the Committee of Finance in the Senate took this Bill into consideration for six weeks. The Committee on Ways and Means that framed the McKinley Bill occupied nearly five months, while the Senate Finance Committee had it under consideration two months. The Wilson Tariff Bill of 1893 was under consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means for over four months, and in turn this Bill was under consideration by the Finance Committee of the Senate for about three months. Senator Beveridge urged as a reason for the constitution of a Tariff Commission the fact that it was unfair to impose such a serious task upon the Congressional Committees, and even went so far as to say that many prominent members of such committees, suffered irreparable injury to their health by reason of their attention to such duties. He also pointed out that many of the members of these two committees were members also of other important committees.

He also showed the divergent views of the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee of the Senate, as to what should be the tariff rate on certain commodities, and he showed they greatly differed, though finally adjusted in conference, which was doubtless by way of compromises. Sometimes the difference in rates upon any given item fixed by the committees of each House amounted to 150 per cent. They frequently differed in classifications, perhaps the most important part of a tariff and which customs officials should be better prepared to deal with than any Tariff Commission. Sometimes the House fixed specific duties, the Senate ad valorem duties. Sometimes the House and the Senate put articles on the free list, and the Conference Committee put heavy duties on these very articles. Sometimes the Conference Committee disregarded the tariff rates of both the Senate and House and fixed different duties, and on a different basis; and sometimes the whole Tariff Bill as prepared by the House and Senate Committees was changed very much by the Conference Committee in a session of even a day or so.

It is clear, therefore, to everybody that the methods of preparing tariffs in the United States and in Canada are absolutely different; and while one might reach the conclusion that a Tariff Commission was essential in the United States, I fail to see how any person can reach that conclusion in Canada, at least arguing by way of analogy.

There is this to be remembered further that in the United States there is no minister responsible for the making of the tariff; it is made really by congressional committees and these congressional committees have not the advantage, or the possibility of the advantage, of the assistance of a trained civil service such as we have in this country, and such as they have in Great Britain. In Canada, it would be a simple matter to enlarge the service in the Customs, Trade and Commerce, and Finance Departments, gradually as time and circumstances demanded, and gather into these departments men just as competent as the men who will be appointed on the Tariff Commission, in the gathering of data of one kind or another, to assist the ministers from time to time in determining whether representations made for an increase of tariffs by producers, or representations for a diminution of tariffs by consumers, should be granted and to what degree. As many hon. gentlemen are aware the chairman of the United States tariff board so called, is Henry C. Emery, and I have in my hand an address which he delivered in December, 1910, before the Association of Commerce, at Chicago, which address, I presume, has been read by a great many members of the House, and which, at all events, is available to any person in the library. He deals with the methods of tariff making in Europe and the United States, and the European methods differ very little if anything in principle, from the methods obtaining in this country. I am going to ask the House to listen to me for a few moments, while I read a few excerpts from this address in which he points out the efforts at tariff making in European countries and which he uses as a justification for the appointment of a Tariff Commission in the United States. He makes the statement that there may be some criticism in the United States to the effect that their Tariff Commission operations are on altogether too elaborate a scale, and he says:

In no country of Europe, for example, has the method of investigation of industrial conditions as affected by the tariff included such extended examination of costs of production by trained experts in the government employ as is contemplated by the Tariff Board. Such special statistical work as has been done abroad in connection with tariff investigations has been rather in the way of an industrial census similar in character to the census of manufactures undertaken by our Census Bureau. Neither the government, nor any special board or commission co-operating with it, has employed a staff of accountants or industrial experts to examine the books of manufacturing concerns and make independent reports. The method has rather been in the nature of frequent and friendly conferences with all the parties interested, while the interests of the consumer have been represented by the government officials themselves. These conferences are on the whole of an informal nature. That is, there is no formal governmental body which holds appointed hearings, and there is no publication of the testimony given. The officials concerned confer informally with the different parties interested, sometimes at their offices and sometimes by means of personal visits at different manufacturing plants.

There are, however, important differences in the two methods. In the first place, the government officials in these two countries are not legislators concerned with many affairs, but are trained experts of permanent tenure, who devote themselves solely to this question and have years of experience behind them. Second, they are free both from the pressure of local business interests and from any political bias. They do not have to consider the effect of their conclusions either upon their own tenure of office or upon the success of any particular party. Third, the hearings are not crowded into the space of a few months, so that an overworked committee is not swamped with material which it can not fully comprehend. The work goes on, day in and day out, over a period of years, and is conducted continuously by the same men who have received and carefully considered every complaint regarding the tariff which has been made from any source during the whole time of its operation.

This is a justification of my argument that any assistance which the responsible minister of the day requires in tariff making should come from the civil service where we can expect permanency in the appointment and from whom we can expect a longer and more varied experience in all matters in connection with the tariff of this country. The following paragraph which I am going to read refers to Germany and I wish to emphasize the fact that there they have not, and have not had, a commission in the sense contemplated by this Bill and that whatever they have had in this direction as an aid to governments in tariff making, corresponds more largely to the practice obtaining in the past in this country when Tariff Commissions composed of ministers of the Crown made an itineracy of the country, and there and there heard representations from any person who wished to be heard. He said:

In some cases the expert government officials in the ministries have been materially assisted by certain official or semi-official bodies, but none of these have performed the services which have been expected of a tariff board or a tariff commission in this country. In Germany, for instance, there is a large committee which, in the preparation of the last tariff was very active at a certain stage of the proceedings, and this is sometimes referred to in this country as the German Tariff Commission. This body, however, which numbered thirty-six, was primarily an advisory body made up of the great leaders in the industrial world. Its members were men of large affairs working simply on a trifling allowance per diem and devoting most of their time to their own personal business. Their assistance to the government was undoubtedly great, but this assistance was due to their long experience as business men and their consequent competence for taking testimony, rather than from any special investigation which they undertook.

I submit to the House that the conditions which Mr. Emery speaks of in Germany can better be obtained by having civil service aids to the responsible minister rather than by the appointment of a tariff commission whose appoinment can only continue as long as the government appointing them lives. He goes on to say:

In the same way, in Australia, the government has received much assistance from a committee of the Associated Chambers of Commerce which has attempted to straighten out beforehand the conflicting demands of the producing interests and present to the government a scheme which was already supported by the business world. This body, however, represents primarily the producing interests, and is in no sense the determining factor in tariff making. In both of these countries the real responsibility for understanding the nature of the tariff and its workings is placed in the hands of the officials of the different ministries, as already described.

And that is the condition which, I say, I would like to see obtain in this country.

Mr. NICKLE. Has the hon. gentleman any objection to reading the next paragraph of Mr. Emery's address?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The next paragraph, requested to be read by the hon. gentleman is this, and I thank my hon. friend for having called my attention to it because I intended to read it.

The situation here, however, is very different from that in countries like Germany and Australia. Such investigations are necessarily a part of the work of a tariff board in this country. The chief reason for this may be roughly expressed in the phrase 'making up for lost time.'

They certainly have lost time in the United States in respect to tariff making, and, where tariffs are made by congressional political committees, unsatisfactory conditions must prevail.

If there were any board or group of government officials in existence who had devoted themselves solely to the question of the industrial effects of the tariff for a period of twenty years, as is the case in Germany and Australia, such investigation would probably not be necessary.

In Canada we have a civil service staff, not large it is true, some of whom have been devoting their attention since their appointment, to tariff matters, and I repeat the suggestion that there is a better alternative to be found in the appointment of sufficient civil service officials, as is the practice in Europe, and which Mr. Emery commends.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Emery does not say that; finish the quotation.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) reading:

Such officials would already be sufficiently familiar in a personal and practical way with the facts regarding costs and competition in the different industries to be able to report or advise.

Why should not the civil service in Canada do that? In the United States there is no such thing as a civil service so far as tariff making is concerned, and even the President of the United States, while having power to recommend changes in the tariff, is absolutely powerless to initiate any such change.

No such body exists in the United States, and the effort promptly to put the question of revision on a sound basis, therefore, involves a much more extensive labour of investigation than would otherwise be necessary.

Now, you have only to look at the tariff of the United States to see its obvious defects as to classification and rates. The Canadian tariff, as far as classification is concerned, is fairly suitable, although open to improvement, and while the protective principle obtains in this country, it can be safely said that neither party has gone protection mad, as in the case of the United States, and, therefore, in tariff revision, and tariff making, we are not in the same position as they are. I suggest to the Finance Minister, as I suggested three years ago to Mr. Fielding, when Minister of Finance, that there should be a branch of the civil service to assist the Minis- of Finance in tariff making. I say that would be better than the appointment of a Tariff Commission. The Departments of Finance, of Trade and Commerce, and of Customs, are closely connected with the matter of tariff making, and I would suggest, as an alternative to this Tariff Commission, the selection of proper officials from these three departments, organizing them if you will, under the name of a tariff bureau, and adding to their duties, if you feel so disposed, the obtaining of trade statistics which is very much needed in this country. The advantage of this would be that the members of this staff or bureau would be members of the civil service; they would be permanently in office, they would be unknown to the public other than civil servants, and according to the true constitutional practice, the minister alone would be responsible to parliament. I suppose it is fair to assume that directly or indirectly protection obtains in the tariffs of this country. It has been said by some, and indeed by no less a person that the Prime Minister himself, that a tariff can be scientifically framed by a Tariff Commission, and that this Tariff Commission would take the tariff out of politics. But, I was pleased to hear the Minister of Finance say to-day that there was no such thing as taking the tariff out of politics, and that it was impossible to give a scientific tariff. It is beyond human ingenuity for a Tariff Commission, or for any other body, to draft a Tariff Bill covering whole ranges of industry, which will be free of all inequalities and anomalies. Such a thing as scientific tariff making, where the protective principle is present, is an absolute absurdity. I am surprised that any hon. member of this House, especially the right hon. the Prime Minister, should believe that such a thing as scientific tariff making is possible.

To determine with scientific accuracy what is raw product, is an impossibility in a tariff in which the protective feature obtains. In Canadian trade the manufactured product of one industry is the raw material of another. The man who weaves the yarn does not spin it; the tailor begins with cloth, but does not make it, the shoemaker begins with manufactured leather, but rarely, if ever, makes it; the foundryman who uses pig-iron does not make pig-iron; the automobile manufacturer uses a great variety of materials, but manufactures practically nothing among all the articles which when assembled constitute an automobile. When hon. gentlemen talk about a scientific tariff, they are attaching to the word 'scientific' an improper meaning, because science loves truth, and the word 'scientific' in this case is not a token of that which is true. In the last analysis protective tariffs are not determined with scientific accuracy; it is impossible that they can be. The question of tariffs, protective tariffs, is largely a case of might. Local considerations, and the weight of influence brought by sections of the country and by various classes of producers are always more apparent in tariff-making than the influence of scientific or economic truths. At the best tariff-making is but rough approximations. From the protective standpoint the test is the force of foreign competition in the domestic market; and when you once ascertain the selling price of a foreign article in the country of production and the price of the same article in the Canadian market, that is, cost, insurance and freight, you have substantially the crux of the whole question. These facts are obtainable without difficulty and without an expensive instrument like a formal commission. They can be obtained as readily by the Minister of Finance with an efficient civil service staff as by any tariff board. Again, everybody knows that there are so many conflicting and fluctuating conditions in trade that it is impossible to draw any conclusion from the facts obtained one year which would be helpful to a minister framing a tariff containing the principle of protection, the following year. In framing a revenue tariff you need no experts and no tariff commission. In one country in certain trades the hours of labour are longer than in others. In our country you will find one manufacturer so efficient that he can get along without a tariff, while perhaps right alongside of him is another producer so inefficient in his methods that no amount of protection could make an intelligent or profitable producer of him. Then you have changing transportation rates, changing transportation routes, wars and rumours of wars, monetary and business crises, changes of foreign tariffs, changes in rates of interest, the effect of climatic changes, all to consider; and all these conditions would in a short time render futile any investigation of facts produced at the cost of a great expenditure of time, of work and of money by any commission. After all, the reports of such a commission cannot be more than rough approximations, which could be obtained just as well by other methods. I have already said that the appointment of a tariff commission by parliament is a statutory and legal recognition of the protective theory, and whether we are free traders, revenue tariff men or protectionists, we should not enact any statute implying that that principle should obtain in our tariff; but that is the effect of the appointment of a tariff commission by statute. During the discussion of the Tariff Board Bill in the United States Congress, one member of the House of Representatives said that he supported the Bill because it contained the principles of the bulwark of protection, and I am sure that a great many of the hon. gentlemen opposite are going to support this Bill because they feel that the Tariff Commission will be the bulwark of protection in this country. Another gentleman in the United States House of Representatives said that if he believed in only a revenue tariff he would not support the Tariff Board Bill. The present Prime Minister, during the last election campaign, strongly declared himself on several occasions in favour of protection, and followed with the statement that the late government had revised the tariff without ascertaining all the conditions surrounding the tariff, and that when his party came into power he would appoint a commission to revise the tariff along business lines. Now, I submit that these several statements of the Prime Minister taken together can only mean that the right hon. gentleman believed that the commission to be created would assist in giving the protective feature to the tariff of this country. They could mean nothing else. I do not imagine that he would complain that the late government had increased the tariff in any respect. I assume that if he was complaining of anything, it was of reductions in the tariff which he said were made without proper ascertainment of the facts. Now, I do not say that I object to a tariff, even a protective tariff. I am not arguing one way or the other; but I do say that if we are going to have a tariff with the protective feature in this country, let parliament say so.

Every member of parliament should at least have as much to say regarding that as the members of a Tariff Commission. The Minister of Finance this afternoon sought to buttress his argument in favour of the commission by saying that we received $74,000,000 of our revenue from customs. No doubt he wanted us to draw the conclusion that a Tariff Commismission was justifiable because so much of our revenue came from the tariff. Much of our customs revenue comes from imported articles, the duties on which are intended to protect, but protected items give the minimum of revenue, otherwise the duties would not be protective. Therefore, the commission will not have much to do with items bearing only revenue rates, and from the standpoint of revenue they will not have much to do with protected items, because these items are not great revenue producers. It is not intended that they should have much to do with the matter of revenue, but that their work would be devoted mainly to the making of tariffs containing the principle of protection. Protection would, therefore, be the main reason for the existence of this commission. I do not see how any other conclusion can be drawn. In all matters respecting tariff taxation, divergent views obtain, and if we are going to apply the protective theory, it ought to be applied solely on the responsibility of the government and the minister in charge of the Finance Department. If protection be then applied, we can take it as the expression of the wishes of the people through their responsible ministers. That tariff may have inaccuracies and inequalities, but these would be the fault of the system, and for them the government would be responsible. That method would be true to constitutional practice.

Again it may be urged that the appointment of a Tariff Commission cannot be distinguished from commissions already appointed. That was argued by the right hon. the First Minister this afternoon. In fact that was the only answer he gave to the speech of my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). In the first place let me say that this parliament has never delegated to any commission the power of directing taxation. I know of no instance in the history of the country when that was done. We have appointed commissions to execute the will of parliament expressed regarding any undertaking, such as the National Transcontinental railway. Before the Transcontinental Commission was appointed, parliament had expressed its policy, and the commission was only appointed to carry out that policy. Reference was made this afternoon to the Railway Commission, but that is not analogous to the Tariff Commission. The Railway Commission is a court, appointed under the Railway Act. Parliament defined the jurisdiction and powers of that commission, and settled its duties and powers before making the appointment. We have appointed commissions in the past and no doubt will appoint others in the future, but it is not the practice in any British country to appoint a commission for the purpose of determining a policy or a principle. In that respect the Tariff Commission differs from any other we have ever had. I would refer hon. gentlemen to Todd, the well known authority on parliamentary procedure. On page 432 of Todds 'Parliamentary Procedure,' I find the following:

> Preliminary inquiries by a royal commission are of inestimable service to the working of parliamentary government. Besides peculiar facilities for ascertaining facts, they frequently bring to light a mass of information upon the subject in hand which could be obtained in no other way, and the report of an able and impartial commission is often of the highest value in the instruction and enlightenment of the public mind. The questions of pauperism and poor law administration, of crime and penal administration, of pestilence and sanitary legislation, and of the evils attendant on excessive manufacturing labour, are conspicuous instances of the effects of commissions of inquiry in reversing every main principle, and almost every assumed chief elementary fact, on which the general public, parliamentary committees, and leading statesmen, were prepared to legislate.

Again on page 434 Todd says:

Since the establishment of ministerial responsibility, commissions have become a recognized part of our governmental machinery, and it is now freely admitted that when confined to matters of legitimate inquiry they serve a most useful and beneficial purpose.

To all of which I agree. Every one will agree with this. It is proven by the fact that in the past parliament has unanimously concurred in the appointment of commissions for several purposes. But there is a qualification. On pages 434, and 435, Todd says:

But it would be unconstitutional to refer to a royal commisson 'subjects which are connected with the elementary duties of the executive government and with its relations to parliament'; or, to investigate a grievance which arises out of a particular decision of parliament, on a given question; or, to appoint a commission with a view to evade the responsibility of ministers in any matter; or, to do the work of existing departments of state, which possess all needful facilities for obtaining information upon questions of detail, and which are directly responsible to parliament.

Then on page 435 I find the following:

A commission of inquiry should be limited in its operations to obtaining information, and suggesting the points to which it might be expedient that legislative or executive action should be directed. No commission should be invited to 'enter upon any question of policy,' lest it should trench upon the proper limits of ministerial responsibility, and upon ground which belongs to parliament.

I say it is a weakness of the Tariff Bill now before the House that it trenches upon the proper limit of ministerial responsibility and upon gounds which belong entirely to parliament.

There are one or two instances in the parliamentary experience of England to which I wish to refer very briefly. In 1865 Mr. Roebuck, a member of the British House of Commons, asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it was the intention of the government to institute an inquiry into the English railway system with a view to future legislation should such legislation appear practicable and advantageous. I cannot give to the House in full the statement made by the Chancellor, but I will endeavour to give a few quotations in order to fortify the position I have taken:

It is not their intention to take any step which could under any circumstances at all compromise or commit either ourselves or parliament with reference to any legislation upon a matter of this vast importance. . . .

Therefore, I beg that it may be understood that it is not the intention of Her Majesty's government to advise the appointment of any commission that shall enter upon any question of policy. We are of opinion that if we were to do so we should be, if not prejudging the opinion of parliament, in some degree by extraneous instruments trespassing upon ground which belongs to parliament. . . We, of course, have taken into our consideration the question whether it would be desirable that this inquiry should be conducted by a Royal Commission or by a committee of this House. If we were going to inquire into any matter of policy it would, undoubtedly, be far more useful to institute that inquiry by means of a committee of this House than by means of a commission.

Again, it was once moved in the English House of Commons that an address be presented to Her Majesty that she would be graciously pleased to issue a Royal Commission directing investigation of the causes which led to the late severe and protracted pressure in the money market. Speaking to that motion Sir Stafford Northcote expressed the principle in opposition to the appointment of a commission which I have urged in connection with the tariff commission. He said in referring to the member who had moved the resolution:

I am bound to ask the hon. member for Stockport what exactly are the functions which he thinks this Royal Commission of inquiry should undertake. Is it to be a commission which is to inquire into facts, or is it to be a commission which is to inquire into principles? I think he will see that there is very great difference between the two. If we are to investigate a number of facts, requiring a great amount of time to ascertain and bring together, undoubtedly a Royal Commission may be, and very often is, a very convenient instrument for the purpose; but if we are to discuss principles, and if we are to investigate the principles upon which our legislation is founded, I do not myself think that a Royal Commission ought to be considered a proper substitute either for the action of the government or for that of parliament. If you were to appoint a Royal Commission in this case, for the purpose of investigating all the principles of legislation which affect our currency and banking, the first question that would arise would be, how is that commission to be constituted? We know perfectly well that different opinions prevail, and are ably maintained by the different schools of opinion, on all the questions that bear upon this subject; and if a Royal Commission were to be appointed it would be necessary to place upon that commission men in whose skill and intelligence, and in whose experience also, the country would have confidence . . . We also know that when it should become our duty to make a selection of the gentlemen—few in number as they necessarily would be—to be placed in that important position, we could not select gentlemen who were merely known to be gentlemen of intelligence and experience, but we should have to select gentlemen whose views upon these questions were perfectly well known and familiar to the world, and probably it would not be very difficult, as soon as they were named, and the object of the commission made public, to foresee what the general verdict of the commission would be upon some of the main principles which would have to be brought before it. If that were the case, at once the authority of a commission, and therefore the use of a commission as far as the investigation of principles is concerned, would be at an end. Those who were satisfied with the opinions of the gentlemen who might be the majority in the commission would, of course, anticipate the proceedings, and foresee that their opinions would be well brought forward, well argued, and very ably, no doubt, elaborated; while on the other hand, the minority, who would not be satisfied would say, 'Because you have constituted the commission on this or the other basis, you have failed to obtain a fair verdict. We dispute, and have always disputed, the doctrines of those gentlemen forming the majority of the commission, and we also dispute the conclusion at which they have arrived.' This being the case we should not be much forwarder when we got the report of the Royal Commission than we are at the present time. . . .

And again:

It is obvious, however, that when you come to investigate causes it is not sufficient merely to collect facts, but to collect them with a view to certain conclusions, and select them upon some kind of principles. When you investigate facts, the question of causes necessarily arises.

Now, I submit that the purpose and object of a Tariff Commission finds no analogy in our political history. We have never, so far as I can ascertain, appointed a commission to determine principles of trade, tariff and taxation, upon which, in all countries of the world and in all ages divergent views do and will obtain. Let us adhere to constitutional practice. It is no answer to say that the commission is granted no legislative power; it will unconsciously and indirectly legislate. I say that in one form or another the commission will legislate or cause parliament to legislate in the direction of the conclusions and upon the facts which they present to the ministers. They are given power to supply facts, to report conclusions upon the propriety and extent of a tariff which contains the protective features. I cannot see how hon. gentlemen opposite can deny that this is the object of the Tariff Commission. If this be not the object, I say the Tariff Commission has no duty to perform. They would not be asked to investigate facts and report upon them if free trade obtained in this country or if our tariff were based upon revenue needs. I say, this is a question of policy, and, therefore, let the people, through a responsible minister make the tariff; do not let a commission appointed by parliament make it. The manufacturers of pig iron, according to the press, are to receive a bounty pending a report from the Tariff Commission. I do not know whether that is true or not, nor am I saying whether I am for or against a bounty on pig iron, but even before the creation of the commission, according to this report we find the government absolving itself of its functions and delegating them to a commission yet to be appointed. That is clear and forcible evidence of the influence which the commission will exercise, and it is that influence to which I object. To-day, we find that the government cannot wait for the Tariff Commission; they are going to forestall the commission.

They are going to give advantage to a certain industry, which may be right or may be wrong, without waiting for this great power which we are seeking to create to-night. I suppose that to-morrow, or in the near future, we will hear the government saying to other interests which will appear before them asking for higher tariffs, that they cannot act until they hear from the Tariff Commission; and soon it will come that you cannot tell who in this country will be making tariffs, the government or the commission, it will be absolutely impossible to tell. They will be on a parity, or they will be in partnership. I am sure that this country would prefer that we remain true to the constitutional practice and parliamentary procedure of the past, and have no special body who will stand between the government and parliament in the making of tariffs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the Bill because the creation of a Tariff Commission with power to investigate and report, must ultimately mean the assumption, partially or wholly, of the power of tariff making by such a commission, or at least we will find a division of responsibility between the commission and the government. I object to this Bill because it is a subversion of the well established principle of ministerial responsibility so long obtaining in this country, particularly in reference to the question of taxation and of revenue. I object to this Bill because it purports to lend and does lend parliamentary sanction to the economic doctrine of protection. I object to it because the proposed commission cannot accomplish what is expected of it in the direction of scientific tariff making. I object to it because the tariff commission cannot take the tariff out of politics, it will put it further into politics. I object to it because any merits which the Tariff Commission Bill possesses, and upon its face it does possess some, are obtainable by the ordinary methods now employed in the administration of the public service by the civil service under ministerial responsibility. We may have protection in the tariff of this country to-day, we may have it in the future. I am not now arguing for or against the protective feature in our tariff; but I do say that if it is to be found in our tariff, it is better that a responsible minister and a responsible ministry place it there, and that subsequently, if the people of this country wish it to become law, it be affirmed by the parliament of this country.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). We have listened, Mr. Speaker, for upwards of two hours to one of the best exemplifications I think I have ever seen since I entered this House, of the good old fable of the wolf and the lamb. After endeavouring to criticise everything that was not in the Bill, the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has finally ended by saying that if all these things that he criticises were not there, he could still read into the Bill sinister intentions, and that these sinister intentions alone were reason enough why the Bill should be rejected. Now, I propose to take half an hour in dealing with what is in the Bill. In the first place, let me say that I think if there is anything that has been demonstrated beyond peradventure in the recent general elections, it is that the majority of the people of Canada to-day are still believers in the National Policy that has been in force for many years. The majority of the people to-day, within reasonable limits, are willing that there should be built up and established throughout Canada diversified industries that will give employment to our people; and they are willing, even at the risk of a slight increase of price to the consumer in some instances, that there should be a moderate protective tariff. Now, the tariff we have to-day is partially- protective and partially non-protective. Hitherto we have made our tariffs in a rough and ready sort of way, by rule of thumb, so to speak, and if one looks down the category of the various items he will see that it is very much like a wavy line. I was pleased to hear the admission from the junior member for Halifax, of the fact that his experience for the last few years has gone to prove that it was 'might' that made the tariff. That that admission should be made by one who was so close to the late government, certainly shows what has been their experience in connection therewith. I think if there is anything that this Bill proposes to do, it is to reduce at least to a minimum, the influence of 'might' in the making of tariffs. Now, if one glances at the tariff of to-day he will find it is like a wavy line swerving first to one side and then to the other. It shows all through the evidence of pressure on the part, let us say, of certain favoured producers, and then it shows the evidence of pressure in another direction on the part of certain clamorous consumers, who have made themselves felt out of proportion to their numbers. So as you look through the tariff you will find that it lacks uniformity, it is full of inconsistencies and excrescences, and what this Bill proposes is to reduce it to scientific basis.

Now, in Canada I think we have outgrown the stage of this rough method of making tariffs. We have to take this legacy that has come down to us, and we will not perhaps treat that legacy with the respect which the junior member for Halifax might wish that we should use. We intend to take that legacy and to apply new methods, new rules, in order to make the tariff apply with equal benefit to all the people of Canada. Now that Canada has reached her present size we must admit that she has outgrown the old rough-and-ready method of making tariffs, and I think we must be prepared to adopt a scientific process with our tariff, we in parliament must be prepared to apply all along the line, consistently and fearlessly, some definite policy that the majority of this House can stand for. What we ask by this commission is that they will collect for us the facts, not opinions, not theories, but facts, and on those facts we, in the exercise of our reason and judgment, will be able to base a tariff measure which we will not be unprepared to submit to the whole people of Canada.

Now I regard this Bill as a long step in advance. I consider that the government have acted fearlessly and courageously, they have shown initiative in bringing down this measure that the House is called upon to deal with. Furthermore, this Bill fulfils a repeated promise on the part of our chief, and a promise that many of us have made on the platforms of the country from one end to the other. I do not wonder that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) was somewhat surprised that this new government, within four or five months of its creation, should actually set to work to implement the promises that were given to the electorate. That is not the experience of the other side, I admit, but that is what this government is intending to do, and here is the first instalment of the fulfilment of those deliberate promises.

Mr. BUREAU. There are a few more to fulfil, however.

Mr. AMES. They will be fulfilled more rapidly than promises have been in the past 15 years. What is proposed by this legislation is primarily to create an impartial non-partisan commission, and that commission should busy itself in a scientific manner in getting at established facts, then those facts will be submitted to parliament, and upon these facts legislation will be based.

To say that this measure violates constitutional practice is to indulge in one of those sophistries in which these hon. gentlemen often indulge when addressing this House. There is not one privilege that this House at the present time enjoys, not one privilege that the opposition has hitherto enjoyed, that would be infringed upon in the slightest degree by this measure. Do you suppose that we are going to ask the Tariff Commission to prepare our next tariff Bill? Not at all. We do not even intend to ask them to make any recommendation. They are to give us the exact facts with regard to existing conditions, and the ministry will take upon themselves the full responsibility, and the members of this House will take upon themselves the full responsibility which they have to take in the application and use that they make of these facts. This is nothing unusual. We have it in everyday life. A judge sits upon the bench, he wants to know about some technical matter, about a building, perhaps, that has collapsed, what does he do? He names some man who is an expert in building, this man examines the building, and in this way he establishes the facts. Does that in any way impinge upon the dignity of the bench or interfere with the status of the court? By no means, but the judge has the facts placed before him, and upon those facts he gives his judgment.

I am of the opinion that when this measure comes to be understood it will receive the well deserved commendation of all classes throughout Canada. It will, I think, receive the commendation of the producer, of the man who will come to this parliament and ask that he be given a certain degree of protection in the shape of a duty upon that which he has to sell. If he can prove that he is entitled to that protection he will receive it, but if he cannot prove that he is entitled to it he will probably find that the protection which he presently enjoys will be diminished. The only way in which that can be accomplished is by having before us the necessary statement of facts. I want to point out that when we speak of the producer in this country we include the farmer just as much as the man who runs the factory. Almost everybody in this country is a producer, and each man who is a producer will naturally enjoy the benefits that must accrue from this Act. Read the definition at the beginning of the Act. Goods are treated of throughout the whole Act, and what do goods include? They include products of the farm, horses, cattle and other animals, and everything that the farmer produces is just as likely to be subjected to the inquiry of this commission in the interest of the farmer as are the goods which the manufacturers themselves produce. Now, take the consumer. I mean the class of consumers who are broad enough and big enough Canadians to live and let live. I do not mean the class of consumer who insists upon having everything he produces protected, and everything he consumes free. I do not mean that class, they are not in the majority in Canada to-day, and I hope they never will be. But I refer to the consumer who is a big enough and broad enough Canadian to say: I am willing that what I consume shall be, to a slight extent, increased in price in order that there may be built up throughout the length and breadth of Canada diversified industry, and in order that the Canadian people may not be reduced to the position of hewers of wood and drawers of water. It is very much to the advantage of the consumer that he should know whether he is being overcharged in the price he has to pay, and I believe that when the consumer realizes that there is an impartial commission created to investigate such matters on his behalf, and ascertain whether he is overcharged for what he purchases he will say: That is what I want.

It seems to me that this Bill commends itself to the industrial worker as well. He is both producer and consumer. He probably pays a little more for what he consumes, but he is protected in what he produces in the industrial establishments of this country, and as he reads this Bill he will see that it provides a means by which an investigation can be made as to whether he is securing a just and fair proportion of the selling price of that product to which his labour has contributed. That is what he wants to know. He wants to know whether he is getting an adequate proportion of the return which comes from the work of his hands, and he will have an opportunity to ascertain the facts when the provisions of this Bill go into operation. Therefore, he will say: I welcome this measure.

The man who wishes to invest his capital in the industries of Canada, will he not find in the impartial report which this commission will present means of ascertaining whether our Canadian industrial enterprises are upon a sound and permanent basis? If, after he examines the reports, he is convinced, as I am sure he will be convinced, that they are worthy of his confidence, he will invest his money and we will, as a result of the publication of such reports, bring into our country the money which we are so anxious to see invested in our industrial enterprises.

So, it seems to me that it is a good thing for the producer, the consumer, the industrial worker and the investor, and, that being the case, I can defend, and will be glad of the opportunity of defending on any platform in this country, the introduction and passage of the Bill that we now have before us. What we members of this House called upon to pass legislation, want, is to know the real facts and the exact conditions as they exist in Canada before undertaking to deal with the tariff.

If I may be permitted to give advice to the government, I would suggest that, although the Bill does not designate what the qualifications of the commissioners are to be, there are some things that might be avoided in making their appointment. I think it would be a mistake to endeavour to outline in the Bill what class of men should be appointed as commissioners. You would probably limit the choice and I can assure you that to secure men of the calibre that are required, you should limit the choice as little as possible. The whole Dominion of Canada is not too big a place in which to search for the very best men. I would not think it would be advisable that these three commissioners should be representatives of particular interests. Some one may say: We should put a manufacturer on; we should put a farmer on; we should put a transportation man on, but these three, each representing a different interest, would fight their fellows for their own particular industry, or, to avoid a disagreement, would make a compromise which would be satisfactory to none. That is not what we want. We do not want the members of the commission to feel that they are there to represent a particular interest; we want them to feel that they are there to represent the people of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Nor, do we want technical experts. Sometimes we are told that this must be a board of technical experts. If you commence to name technical experts, you will soon find that you require a very large number of them. If a man is a technical expert in the matter of iron, for instance, he knows very little about woollen or cotton. He way be perfectly familiar with one article and know very little about other commodities. I do not think we want technical experts, men who have spent their whole lives dealing with a particular classification, because we have a great many different classifications and because, as a rule, men who are familiar with some particular article, are not able to take the broad view that is necessary of other businesses besides their own. If I may be permitted to offer advice to the ministers, I would say that they should not necessarily confine their choice to men who have fought and bled for the Conservative party. I think that if there is any man in Canada who is eminently fitted for this position, he should not be rejected by reason of his previous political record. We want the biggest men we can get, but we want men who are not out of sympathy with the policy that the party on this side of the House avowedly stands for. We want men who are not out of sympathy with the idea that protection, reasonably applied, is what Canada needs for her development. Let us have three big, broad-minded Canadians, every one a man of administrative ability, who can organize and arrange the work and prepare the lines of investigation.

We want men of judicial capacity who can hold at arms-length the evidence that is placed before them and can correlate the various facts and put them in their proper place. We want men who can determine and weigh the value of evidence and who can eventually make reports to this House in which the statements made are properly and proportionately set out. Now, salaries such as are mentioned are not much for men of that size and character. You must admit that the salaries of the Cabinet ministers are too small, but the ministers have other honours that come to them, and I would hate to believe that it is the salaries that keep the ministers in their places. But, even the salaries that are mentioned in this Bill are none too large for men of the kind we want. If the government secures the sort of men we want I venture to say that there will not be one of them who will not be called upon to make a financial sacrifice when he enters the service upon these terms. If broad-minded, fair-viewed men are chosen, and if they are given an opportunity to make of this Tariff Commission what it can be made, I am sure they will win the confidence of the country, they will hold the confidence of the country, and they will be only too gladly continued in office by the present opposition, when, in the far distant future, they have an opportunity of doing so.

This Tariff Commission is put under the direction of the Minister of Finance, and that has been in some quarters criticised as inadvisable. Well, it seems to me the most natural and proper provision that could be made. Who else is there that is competent to generally direct the work that may be done by this commission? It will be impossible for them to take up all the schedules of the tariff at once; some one must tell them what work to begin upon; some one must guide them in the direction they are to follow, and it is natural and right they should be under the direction of that man in the Cabinet who is charged by his fellows to look after the revenues of the country and who will have to introduce and defend any tariff legislation that will be submitted to this House. I sincerely hope that this Tariff Commission may be prompted to take up and continue this work in a systematic and useful manner. I hope the people do not imagine that the moment this board is created they can start an heterogeneous series of representations to the commission. The commission will probably take up the tariff schedule by schedule, and will study them systematically and will send for witnesses when they want them, and when a man is asked to come and give his testimony it will be after the commission have prepared themselves by advance knowledge to receive and properly value what may be told them. And after the tariff has once been carefully gone over and we have a library that will result from it, then that commission will continue to be a permanent commission because rectifications will always be necessary. Conditions are changing in Canada from year to year, and it will be necessary to have a board that will understand the tariff thoroughly and which can receive applications and hear complaints and pass on recommendations if they seem to be desirable.

Coming now to the duties of the commissioners—and I do not propose to take the Bill clause by clause, but simply to make a sort of general sketch of the duties of the commissioners as I see them—it means that the commission is directly charged to make inquiries. To make inquiries into what? to make inquiries as to the facts and conditions as they exist in Canada and elsewhere. Now, from the point of view of the Canadian producer, the Tariff Commission will inquire, first, as to the cost of raw material at the various points where the raw material is turned into manufactured products. The cost of raw material naturally includes the cost of transportation to the place where it is used. Then they will study the cost of creating the raw material into the finished and marketable product. That will naturally include wages, superintendence, overhead charges, the cost of selling, and some times the cost of carrying to the consumer, and it will include a legitimate interest on the money borrowed and a legitimate dividend on the actual money invested. These factors and many others all go into the cost, and it requires a scientific body to ascertain what the costs actually are. Next to that it will be necessary to ascertain what it costs to transport the product from the place where it is manufactured to the place where it is consumed, an expense which usually falls upon the consumer and an expense which it is necessary to know or otherwise we would not be able to ascertain whether the ultimate selling price was just and proper. Finally, as respects the producer, we have the right to know, and we intend to find out, just what the labour conditions are throughout Canada. I think we desire here in Canada to maintain a standard of living for our industrial workers that is in keeping with our Canadian civilization. The nations which compete with us so frequently for our home markets do not have the same standard of living as we do, and we do not wish to see our workingmen reduced to the condition of the workingmen in these countries. We therefore wish to know what it costs the workingman in Canada to live as he ought to live, what wages he is making in Canada and whether he is getting a fair share in the selling price of the manufactured article. Those things we ought to and shall know if this commission fulfils its purpose.

So much then from the point of view of the purchaser. The tariff commissioners will ascertain the cost of the raw material and the assembling thereof; the cost of manufacture; the cost of transportation, and they will study the conditions of the industrial workers who are engaged in these productions. They go further, because in order that we may know how to equalize the cost of production as in foreign lands with our own, it will be necessary for them to prosecute their studies in the countries which compete for our home markets, and there also they will fully ascertain the cost of the raw material, the cost of manufacture, the cost of transportation and the labour conditions as they there exist. Then, when we have these facts for comparative purposes, we shall be able to judge what it will be necessary to put upon these commodities produced in Canada, by way of a customs duty, in order to protect our home market, as against the producer elsewhere.

Now, taking up the Bill from the consumer's standpoint, this Tariff Commission purposes to carry on an investigation which certainly is in his interest and for his benefit. It purposes to ascertain what is the selling price of the manufacturer, of the wholesaler or middleman, of the retail merchant, in order to see whether in these successive stages the commodity is so enhanced in price that it reaches the ultimate consumer at a cost that is higher than is fair to him. Every circumstance and every condition that affects the ultimate selling price will be germane to the inquiry of this commission. If it should be alleged and shown that there be any combine in restraint of trade which unduly enhances the price of the article to the consumer; if it should be shown that there are secret agreements between the various producers which advance the price beyond what was legitimate; if it should be shown that industries were endeavouring, on watered stock which represented no real assets, to pay dividends, and on account of this state of affairs trying to get an enhanced price from the consumer, that would be known. If there were excessive charges beyond such as were reasonable and right, saddled upon the product, and attempted to be taken out of the consumer in the ultimate purchase price that would be germane to this inquiry. If there was discrimination, if there were rebates in railway rates; in fact if there was any circumstance or condition which might unduly or unfairly enhance the price of the article, eventually to the consumer, every one of these circumstances might be legitimately studied and reported upon by this commission.

If the price is found to be artificially enhanced, the claim for protection would to that extent be vitiated, and the facts brought before this House would enable this House to put the penalty where it belonged. If I were a member of the opposition, it seems to me that I would not ask for the creation of any better instrument than this to enable me to get at the actual facts of the case from the consumer's point of view. When you get the reports of these commissioners, as you will from time to time, and have a chance to read them, you can determine the lines of action; and, with everything uncovered, I cannot see where it will be possible for any injustice to remain in our tariff.

This commission has also the right to deal with other matters that may be referred to it from time to time by the government. Any other matter relating to trade or commerce will be proper work for the commission. There is a special clause to enable the board to meet emergencies that may from time to time arise. I suppose it will apply to trade treaties. Last session when we were called on to discuss the all-important question of reciprocity with the United States, the members of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives had in their hands voluminous reports containing a complete study of the conditions prevailing on both sides of the line with the relative cost of production in Canada and the United States. They went into the discussion prepared at every point. But what had we? What did the civil service officials spoken of by the hon. member for Halifax give us? Did they give us any carefully prepared statistics? They gave us absolutely nothing that we could not have picked out of the blue-books for ourselves. We went into that discussion dependent on United States Senate and House of Representatives for information and if we had not been able to see ourselves as others see us, we would never have succeeded in convincing the people of Canada that the bargain was for us an unwise one.

We were discussing the other day trade relations with Australia. When the government may have a measure on that subject ready to submit to this House, what more profitable than that they should ask the Tariff Commission to ascertain what would be the probable effect upon Canada of an arrangement such as proposed. That I take it is the class of special subjects which will be from time to time referred to the Tariff Commission.

Now, some objections have been raised to this measure. I do not attach much importance to the constitutional objection. We have heard a great deal about Royal commissions. This is not a Royal commission in the ordinary sense. A Royal commission is a temporary body appointed to investigate some specific subject, and as soon as it makes its report and findings, it is dismissed, because its work is done. This commission is not of that character. It is a permanent body which we hope will be continued from year to year, and it will not make findings in the way Royal commissions usually do.

It has been objected in some quarters that we propose to endow this commission with inquisitorial power. That in a sense is true. The commissions will have power to summon witnesses, to order them to bring their books and papers, to examine them under oath, even to inquire into a man's private business. It will have power to compel witnesses to attend, though I do not suppose it will ever have to resort to that. It has not been so in the United States. The Tariff Board there has never had any difficulty in getting the producers to come and give it all the information it desired. It is proposed to put the burden of proof on the man who asks for protection. He will have to prove that he is entitled to have his request complied with, otherwise he will not get it. On that point let me quote from the address of Professor H. C. Emery, the Chairman of the Tariff Board of the United States:

> If, however, the principle should be firmly established that a protective tariff, however necessary or desirable, is none the less a favour, and that the burden of proof rests upon the producer to show cause why such protection should be granted, the matter of power (to examine books, &c.) becomes relatively unimportant.

You have only to say to the producer, 'if you are not prepared to give us the evidence to show why we should give you protection, do not wonder if we do not give you what you ask for.' Under these conditions people will be only too glad to give us the fullest possible information. It is possible that the Tariff Commission may from time to time find it necessary to secure confidential information which they may not see fit to put verbatim into the evidence, because it must be remembered that in that way they will have greater freedom and get nearly at the facts-inasmuch as men will speak freely when they feel that they are not going to give their competitors in the same line of business al the inside information in regard to their own particular enterprise. That is only legitimate and right.

The Bill provides that the commissioners shall report through the Finance Minister to the Governor in Council. That again seems to me right and proper. It must be remembered that the government, on the findings of fact from this commission, will be called upon to frame their Tariff Bill. There is absolutely no attempt to evade any ministerial responsibility by this arrangement. I do not anticipate that any Tariff Board will ever prepare a Bill, or recommend that the duty be 25 or 30 or 40 per cent on specific articles. They are required only to inquire into questions of fact as to the real conditions existing here and elsewhere. When their evidence and findings have been placed in the hands of the government, the cabinet, more especially the Finance Minister, will determine what form the Tariff Bill will take; and after it has been submitted by the Finance Minister to his colleagues and been approved by them, the Bill, together with the evidence on which it is based, will be brought by the government to the House and will become the property of the House. Every member of the opposition will then have an opportunity to go over the evidence and judge for himself whether 20 or 25 or 30 per cent is the proper rate of duty based upon the facts disclosed. If I were a member of the opposition I would ask nothing better than that I might have the facts before me, admitted by both sides, and then I could hold the government to follow lines that are reasonable and right.

One more feature strikes one in connection with this commission which is to be commended, that is, the endeavour to make the body as far as possible a permanent one. It is appointed for five years, and the hope is implied if not expressed that the members who are appointed in the first instance will, if they make good, go on for a further term of five years. They are made eligible for re-appointment, which implies that it is hoped that they will accept reappointment. Men should go into this work expecting to make it their life-work, and I hope they will continue in it for many years, even though administrations may come and go.

There are some things which cannot be put into the Bill which it seems to me will fall naturally within the scope of this Tariff Commission. One thing, I think, would be to make a glossary or dictionary of the tariff, so that we would have it in plain language and would know what the items meant, and the customs officials along the border would all interpret a definition in the same way.

Another thing which the commission might do would be to establish a customs museum in which we would have samples of the various articles mentioned in the schedules, so that they could be seen and handled by our customs officials who would thus learn how to distinguish and classify them. It might even be possible for this Tariff Commission to assume eventually more or less civil service qualifications and exercise educational functions. To whom could we better give the duty of determining what candidates were best qualified to enter the customs service, and the best means of preparing and training men to enter the higher grades of that service? In a great man yways this commission could render extremely useful service outside the ordinary lines of this Bill.

The conditions in Canada in 1912 are vastly different from those in 1896. Our revenue has grown until it is three times as great and our customs receipts are four times as large as they were 15 years ago. The unscientific methods which were good enough for Canada in her boyhood and early manhood are not good enough from 1912 onwards. We want something better, and we think we have found the way to get it. The experience of busy ministers in the past has been spoken of to-night. Well, we had Mr. Fielding, Mr. Paterson and Mr. Brodeur, ministers in the late government, making peripatetic voyages throughout Canada, stopping at different places and taking evidence. Every theorist, every crank, every inveterate free trader of the English school, every man who had something to say appeared before them and gave his evidence. There was the most heterogeneous conglomeration of evidence collected that one could possibly imagine. It was all typewritten and filled several Saratoga trunks, and I venture to say that not one of the ministers ever read it through. We have ample evidence of that in the fact that Mr. Fielding, after he brought in his Tariff Bill to the House, made upwards of one hundred changes in it, showing that he had not very thoroughly digested the matter submitted to him. Should we call on our ministers to make such an experiment again? It is evidently impossible for ministers, if they are to properly manage their departments, to have sufficient time at their disposal to travel through the country taking evidence or to sit down and discuss tariff matters with every one who has theories on the subject. We ought not to ask our ministers to do that, and we are seeking to appoint a commission who will collate the facts and submit them to the ministers who in their turn will lay them before the House. What we want is the truth and nothing else. Those who are accused of advocating high protection want nothing but what they are entitled to. The fullest possible light that can be thrown on the business of those who claim protection will be furnished, and if it be found that, under that scrutiny, their pretensions do not hold good, this House will know it, and will withdraw any excessive benefits in the way of protection to which these people are not entitled.

In closing let me emphasize this fact. This commission, which is to be appointed, will be charged to investigate facts and conditions. They will not take on themselves the duties of ministers or of members of parliament. They are not going to prepare any Tariff Act. They will not make any recommendation such as that such an article shall be protected to the extent of 25 or 30 per cent. That will not be their duty. Every prerogative enjoyed by the ministers and members of this House will remain absolutely unimpaired when this Act passes. We shall be called on to exercise our judgment and best faculties in determining what shall be the tariff duty just as before. The only difference will be that we shall no longer be groping our way in the dark.

Mr. G. W. KYTE (Richmond, Nova Scotia). It must be perfectly manifest that we are on the eve of another great struggle between the two classes—the high protectionists and the moderate protectionists. My hon. friend from St. Antoine Mr. Ames), was not speaking ten minutes before he repeated the statement three times that the consumer may suffer an increase in the price of the goods he consumes by reason of the appointment of this commission. He further made the statement that the tariff at present shows the pressure of the clamour of consumers who make much more noise than their numbers justify. I must congratulate the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) on the frankness with which he discussed this question. Knowing, as we do, the interests which he controls in this country, we would be very much surprised if he took a different stand. This government is doing very well in the way of appointing commissions to relieve themselves of responsibility. They are not very long in power, but during the few months they have been in office they have appointed commissions by the dozen. The principle of adequate protection, as it was defined by the right hon. the First Minister (Mr. Borden), seems to have had its reincarnation about the year 1907. I would ask permission to quote from the 'Canadian Manufacturer' of May 17, 1907, an article which is interesting in view of the present conditions:

Mr. R. L. Borden, leader of the Conservative opposition, in the Dominion House of Commons, will, it is stated, in a few days, tour Ontario and other provinces and address public gatherings on the important issues of the day; and it is expected that some of the Conservative members of Ontario will accompany him for speech making purposes.

Whatever the other important political issues may be which Mr. Borden and his friends may discuss before the electorate, it is to be most ardently hoped that the question of tariff protection will not be neglected but kept well to the front, and we also hope that from this time on not only the Conservative speakers, but the Liberal orators also, will not fail to inform the people on that subject.

Mr. Borden entered parliament in 1896, just after the defeat of the late Conservative government, which, because of their having attached greater importance to other issues than tariff protection, forfeited the prestige of their party and went into opposition. Perhaps they thought that other issues were of more importance to their party and to the country than that which had placed them in power. Those issues might have been considered of greater importance, but while attention was given to these, that of protection should not have been neglected as it was, with the result that such protection as we have since had, as exemplified in the tariff, is administered from a hostile standpoint. It may be that Mr. Borden and his friends are staunch protectionists; it is to be hoped that they are, but during the entire session of the Dominion parliament so recently ended, we do not remember any occasion of pronounced and vigorous speeches having been in favour of the policy of tariff protection, either by Mr. Borden or any of his lieutenants. On some occasions something may have been said, but they were of a perfunctory character, in which no particular ardour was shown. Many grand opportunities have occurred during the discussion having reference to the adoption of the proposition of the Finance Minister, but 'Hansard' fails to record any elaborate and telling arguments in favour of protection by Mr. Borden or his friends, such as thrilled the members and the country under the régime of Sir John.

This remarkable lack of sympathy and enthusiasm was a result, without doubt, of the peculiar stand taken by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at their Halifax convention in 1902, and before and since that occasion, when the association and the country were assured that the tariff had been taken out of politics—that if any difference of opinion existed, they were regarding the administration of the tariff, all being agreed that protection in some shape or other had come to stay. Canadian manufacturers and the believers in protection throughout the country, a great and powerful element that had been able to make the National Policy an unbounded success, found themselves, Sampson like, the victims of a deceitful Delilah.

Are Canadian manufacturers—are the people of Canada who are believers in protection, to have this valuable belonging restored to them? Who is to restore it? When is it to be done? How is it to be done? Will the Conservative party under the leadership of Mr. Borden or of any other man undertake the job? Talk is cheap. What is wanted is men of action who will be up and doing. Who are they to be?

From the Bill which has been submitted this afternoon and the stand taken by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), there is no longer any doubt in the public mind as to who the people are, who will give high protection to Canadian manufactures so long as they remain in power. The Prime Minister made the statement that the government had not received any request from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for the adoption of this measure. It is perfectly manifest to the hon. gentleman as it must be to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association was not likely to go to the government to extract any promise as to their policy with respect to protection; they would rather come to them to require the fulfillment of promises made before the elections, made by the party led by the Prime Minister before the government was formed; made, I have no doubt, before the Minister of Finance was so unexpectedly called to the high position in the government that he occupies at the present time. There was no political communion; no sympathic affiliation between the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister except on the question of the interests, and I think I am not doing the Minister of Finance any injustice, when I say that it was well understood throughout Canada that he was to represent the interests in the government of the present day. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association met in Montreal some weeks after the elections, and if I am not mistaken, among the resolutions they passed on that occasion, was one in favour of a Tariff Commission,—presumably for the purpose of 'taking the tariff out of politics.' I was somewhat at a loss to understand how, under our principles of constitutional government, a Tariff Commission could take the tariff out of politics. But the Minister of Finance has dispelled any doubt existing in my mind as to that point, because he has frankly stated that the tariff will not be taken out of politics by this measure. We on this side are thankful for his frank statement. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) pointed out how impossible it is for the government to relieve itself in respect to its responsibility for the Tariff. What is the object and purpose of the Bill? They appoint a Commission to inquire as to conditions in respect to tariff matters for the purpose of reaching a conclusion as to whether or not protection should be increased in this, that, or the other direction. When the government brings down its tariff measure in the future, and they are charged with giving a certain industry too much protection, the answer probably will be: We have done this on the report of the Tariff Commission which was appointed for the purpose of instructing and advising us as to the amount of protection these interests need.

Mr. BURNHAM. If the hon. member (Mr. Kyte) will allow a question, I would like to ask what difference there would be between that and the recommendation of experts?

Mr. KYTE. That was well explained by my hon. friend from Halifax; and I think if the hon. member for Peterboro (Mr. Burnham) will take the time to read the speech of my hon. friend, he will see his question answered. My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) intimated that the Tariff Commission should not be made up of men out of sympathy with the principles for which the government stand. That is another intimation that the tariff commission will be selected from the ranks of the high protectionists. I am sure it is not necessary for us to have that statement from the hon. gentleman in order to reach a conclusion on that point. Up to the present time, the government has been called upon to appoint many persons to office. Some positions have been opened, some have been created; and the government, during the last three months have busied themselves with the work of making appointments. In no case have they gone outside the ranks of their own party to fill a position. Even in the case of a post-office with a salary of $35 a year, they do not go outside of the ranks of their party to fill the place. If they, in the case of a post office with a salary of $35 a year are so mindful of their party interests that they will not allow even a small position to escape them, we can easily understand what will happen in the case of appointing men to positions at $7,000 a year. I am also reminded that, in cases where they are called upon to fill positions, they are not even limited in their choice to the electors of Canada, but go outside these ranks and appoint females to offices, as was done recently in the county of Rimouski.

The Bill provides that the Tariff Commission shall summon before them such people as they desire to give evidence, but it contains no provision under which a person can go before the committee voluntarily to present his views. Taking the authority of the hon. member for St. Antoine, we know that the commission will consist of high protectionists. We know that they are perfectly aware of the sympathies and sentiments of the government that appoints them, and they will naturally go for their advice to those who are in sympathy with those interests and conditions. But should a representative of the consuming classes desire to give evidence, there is no provision by which he can go before the commission voluntarily for that purpose. There are in this country two classes—the consumers and the manufacturers; and this country has been divided for many years between these two classes and will continue to be so divided. I aver that it is absolutely unfair to the consumers to give such large and important powers to one class of the community to the exclusion of the other class. We have in this country the division between capital and labour. When questions arise involving the interests of these parties, boards of conciliation are asked for to adjust these differences. Would it not be preposterous to imagine that in selecting such a board of conciliation, only the representatives of capital should be appointed on the board? If such a thing were attempted by the government, there would be such a cry all over this country against the manifest injustice of it, that the government would not dare to renew the attempt. But we know that differences will arise between the consumers and the manufacturers; and the government, by their Bill, and by the policy which they have announced and defended in the past, will have only representatives of the manufacturers upon this Tariff Board, so that only that side of the question will be enquired into.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kyte) tell me in what section of the Bill he finds that provision?

Mr. KYTE. It is found in the speech of the hon. member for St. Antoine, when he stated that only men in sympathy with the government and what they stand for, will be appointed upon the board. This Bill is an attempt on the part of the government to draw the consumers and artisans of Canada into a game of chance after they have carefully loaded the dice.

That is the result of the operation of this Bill, that is what will inevitably follow should the Bill be adopted as it is now before us.

The farmers of this country, the consumers of this country, of whom the hon. gentlemen opposite speak so lightly, are surely entitled to some consideration, and what is there in this Bill that is going to help them? Down in the maritime provinces the large and important fishing industry is not suffering from the want of more duties, this government cannot improve their condition by increasing the duty ;the only thing they can do for the fishermen is to enlarge their markets. But hon. gentlemen opposite are irrevocably opposed to any such proceeding. Therefore we are driven to the conclusion that the only interest which is being considered by this government is the interest of the manufacturing classes of Canada. Within the last few months we have seen some instances of the attitude of this government towards the manufacturers and wealthy producers. Not long ago we had a discussion upon the new interpretation which the Minister of Customs placed upon the lumber duties, the supporters of the government contended that no new ruling was made; but the fact is that the ruling which they did adopt resulted in enhancing the price of lumber very largely to the consumers of western Canada, and to the advantage of the lumbermen who are members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Another instance the junior member for Halifax brought up in the House some days ago. In the month of November a circular was sent out from the Department of Customs to all customs officers in Canada pointing out that a certain twine used in the manufacture of lobster traps had heretofore been admitted free of duty, but that hereafter a duty would be levied upon that twine. Subsequently it was discovered that a mistake was made, and the circular was recalled. But the fact that it was issued at all indicates how watchful are the members of this government and those associated with them lest one dollar might escape from the coffers of the government that can be properly or improperly levied upon the consumers of Canada. I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to point out one instance where this government has shown any desire to decrease the burdens upon the consumers rather than to increase them. Up to the present time it has been the boast of the government and their supporters that now an era of high protection will again be introduced, and the article I read a few moments ago indicates that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have been able to accomplish what they sought to do in 1907, but which they were somewhat fearful the right hon. the leader of the government might not undertake to do for them. I said a moment ago that the reincarnation of adequate protection might be said to date from 1907 when that article was published. In 1908 there was not the same movement on the part of the capitalists and manufacturers to take control of the Conservative party. Since then, however, they have been moving onward until they have finally got possession of the citadel, and they bid fair to control this government as long as it lasts. My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Ames) referred to the courage of the government in undertaking to pass this Tariff Commission Bill so early. Mr. Speaker, the courage of the government reminds one of the courage of the settler when his hut is attacked by a bear, and he climbs up among the rafters and leaves his wife on the ground to beat back the intruder. The action of the government in bringing down this Bill does not show courage but rather a lack of courage in desiring to divest themselves of the duty of framing a tariff.

The hon. member from Montreal referred to the fact that when the late government was in power and sought to draft a Tariff Bill, they sent three ministers throughout the country for the purpose of hearing evidence, and my hon. friend could not refrain from sneering in that instance also at those people who were in favour of a low tariff. Many cranks and faddists he said came before the commission to give evidence and free traders such as there were in England fifty years ago. Let me remind my hon. friend that there are in Canada to-day many free-traders and there will be in Canada many free-traders in the future who will take their trade policy from the mother country, instead of adopting the high protection policy of the United States. There is reason for believing that the high protection which has existed in the United States for the past forty years is fast coming to an end. Conditions point to a change there. The experience of forty years in the United States, which has given rise to the creation of trusts, to great aggregations of wealth to the detriment of the consuming classes, should rather be a warning to this government against pursuing a similar policy. The United States are about to discard the policy of high protection in order to reduce the price of living to the consuming population of that country. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem somewhat jubilant over the fact that they are in power at the present time. Let me remind them that the great issue before this country in future is to be the issue between high protection and lower tariff. A protective policy for protection's sake is becoming discredited, not only in Canada but everywhere else. A policy of protection for revenue, a moderate protection such as will be necessary to meet the public services of the country, is the policy of the Liberal party in the Dominion of Canada.

A few weeks ago I read in the 'Montreal Star' a list of the millionaires of that city. Well, we are all gratified that the city of Montreal is so prosperous, and that so much wealth is centred there; but in reading that long list of millionaires we cannot avoid the conclusion that they have grown up in the last fifteen or twenty years by virtue of the protective system in Canada. Now Canada has not fared badly during the last fifteen or twenty years. We have had a moderate system of protection, and under that system capital has increased, cities have grown in population, industries have flourished. Therefore I can see no reason why any radical departure should be taken in Canada in respect to the tariff. There is no doubt that the only persons who profit by high protection in this or any other country are the men who have capital invested, and when capital earns remunerative dividends as it does under the present system, millionaires will multiply. I see no reason, therefore, why we should so frame our tariff as to make it still easier for men to accumulate immense wealth to the detriment of the rest of the people.

I am opposed to this Bill because it is a subversion of the principles of responsible government, because it is an attempt on the part of the government to evade responsibility. They may say that all this commission will do is to seek evidence bearing upon the tariff. But the commissioners themselves will understand that the main object of their existence, the purpose for which the Act has been passed, is to afford an excuse to the government for increasing the tariff, and they will naturally go to those sources of information which will enable them to report to the government facts in favour of raising the tariff, and without doubt their report will be tinctured with their own personal conviction that protection is the best thing for Canada.

The right hon. Prime Minister, in the observations he made, in reply to the speech of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), pointed out that at the Imperial Conference a resolution was passed looking to the appointment of a commission to investigate trade matters throughout the different portions of the British Empire and said that the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was present and supported that resolution. He endeavoured to draw a parallel between that commission and the one now under consideration. I can scarcely imagine that the Prime Minister fully appreciated the importance of what he was saying, when he led the House to draw the inference that there was an analogy between the two. I submit that there is no analogy. The commission intended to be appointed by the Imperial Conference was for the purpose of investigating trade conditions and endeavouring to ascertain how it would be possible to secure a greater volume of trade between the mother country and the different portions of the empire. There is before the government at the present time a proposition to extend our trade with Australia and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) I understand, will go to that far off colony in the near future, for the purpose of interviewing the government with a view to increasing our trade with them. The mission of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is analogous to that of the commission that was to be appointed by the Imperial Conference, but it has no analogy whatever with the commission that is now under consideration. The question of tariff and the question of extending trade are entirely different things, so much so, that they are almost contradictory. For instance, when we are seeking to enlarge our trade with another country, we do not start by increasing our tariff against the products of that country. We had an opportunity of extending our trade in the direction of the United States a year ago, when the people of the United States showed a desire to increase their trade with us. What did they do? Did they increase their tariff against our goods? No, they took the duties off our goods, to enable them to get into their market free of duty. Therefore, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this question of a commission for the purpose of enlarging our trade between different parts of the empire is an entirely different proposition from the one before the House at the present time.

I have listened up to the present time with the greatest interest to the hon. gentlemen who have spoken in support of the Bill. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) made a fair and frank statement, one which is perfectly intelligible to any person who desires to get the same grasp of the principles of the Bill which he himself possessed. The right hon. the Prime Minister did not go into the principle of the Bill any further than to make a defence for the government in attempting to delegate the powers that they really should exercise to the commission proposed. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), has gone further and he has stated the case for the protectionists of this country. Up to the present time we have not had any speeches from hon. gentlemen representing the farming communities in the west. I sincerely hope that before this debate is closed we will hear the views of hon. members on the government side representing Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta in respect to this Bill. I may not be correctly informed as to the sentiments of the people in that part of Canada but my judgment is that they are hostile to any proposal on the part of the government looking to a further increase in the tariff duties. I will await with interest the view taken by hon. gentlemen representing these provinces on the government side of the House, but whether or not the gentlemen from these provinces are in favour of or against the Bill, I speak for those consumers in the eastern part of Canada whose interests will be injured and whose prosperity in the future will be greatly hampered if the policy of protection, enunciated by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, is carried into effect. As far as they are concerned, there is no doubt as to where they stand on this important question, and, feeling as I do, I have no hesitation in recording my vote in what I believe to be their interests.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Mr. Speaker, as the hour is somewhat late, as it has been intimated that there are five members on this side of the House as well as five on the other who are yet to speak, and as we were here until after twelve o'clock last night, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). We will continue the debate.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

HON. MR. LEMIEUX AND DISMISSALS.

Mr. BELLEMARE:

1. Is the government aware that in the newspaper 'Le Devoir,' on the 30th January last an article appeared which reads partly as follows:—

'Mr. Lemieux and the Dismissals.

'Editor of 'Le Devoir.'

'Dear Sir,—In reply to the defiance of Hon. Mr. Lemieux to produce the names of ten employees that were dismissed in 1896, you will find inclosed a list of the names of those who were dismissed on the 30th December, 1896, by the Laurier government, of which Hon. Mr. Lemieux was then one of the most zealous friends, although simple member for Gaspé.

'On the 30th December, 1896, these brave fathers of families were, on the eve of New Year's Day, cast out on the street, . . . and one of the number was my poor father. Hence it is that I speak whereof I know. They were sent off without any reason whatsoever, unless it be that they were Blues, and that the Rouges governed.

'Now, Mr. Editor, Mr. Lemieux rages against Mr. Monk, asserting that he has dismissed hundreds of brave fathers of families. How comes it that, even as I write, in the county that the hon. Minister of Public Works represents, at Lachine, no dismissals have yet been made? The Liberals of Lachine who may be dismissed have only to thank Hon. Mr. Lemieux. . . Learn, Mr. ex-minister, that in vain you shout, . . . it will have no effect. We know the love for the French-Canadian that Mr. Monk has, and you. . . will never make us forget the one who has ever been devoted to us.

'You have asked for ten names; read now the following list and remember as you count them that these dismissals were only on the Lachine canal, at the Lachine locks. On the 30th December, 1896, were dismissed: Adolphe Leblanc, lockman, Lachine; Alex. Carignan, lockman, Lachine; Ephron Picard, boom guardian, Lachine; J. B. St. Aubin, lockman, Lachine; Alex. Clément, lockman, Lachine; Camille Cousineau, bridge keeper, Lachine; Damase Chartrand, bridge keeper, Lachine; Oscar Bélanger, lockman, Lachine; James Teirney, lockman, Lachine; Edouard Lauzon, lockman, Lachine; Urgel Viau, lockman, Lachine; Theo. Davis, lockman, Lachine; Roderick Hogan, lockman, Lachine, Alexander Snider, lockman, Lachine.

'And I will add that two years later they found a way to superannuate Messrs. J. B. Deschamps, canal collector, and Louis Paré, each with a small pension not sufficient for livelihood, happily they had some savings.

'Amongst the dismissed was Mr. Damase Chartrand, who had had the misfortune of losing a leg through an accident at the locks during the summer of 1896. The Conservative government had made him a bridge keeper, in order to let him have easy work. With the others, on the 31st December, he received, mercilessly, his dismissal. Is this enough, Mr. ex-minister? You asked for ten names; count them well. . .

'Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your kindness, I remain, &c.,

'RAOUL CARIGNAN,
Lachine, son of one of the dismissed.

2. If so, does the government intend to take steps to find out the truth concerning these statements?

Mr. MONK:

1. The attention of the Minister of Public Works has been called to the article in question.

2. The accuracy of the statement contained in this article can easily be verified on reference to the records of the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. VERVILLE:

Has Mrs. J. N. Cote been dismissed as charwoman? If so, what were the reasons for her dismissal and by whom was said dismissal recommended?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No. Mrs. Cote was employed for temporary work from September 19 to November 1, 1911, when her employment ceased.

2. Since when has he occupied his position?
3. How long is it since his appointment?

3. Did the Quebec government ask the Federal Government for authority to erect this statue on property which does not belong to the province?
4. If so, when was this request made, and if granted, on what conditions?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. The limits of the land belonging to the Federal government situate opposite the legislative buildings at Quebec are as shown coloured red on the attached blue print.
2. The government has no information.
3. No.
4. Answered by No. 3.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Militia Council for the Dominion of Canada, for the year ending March 31, 1911—Mr. Hughes (Victoria).

PAYMENT OF CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). Mr. Speaker, could any member of the government inform me when the cheques for the census enumerators will be issued? I have received many letters about this matter, the services were rendered a long time ago and there seems to be some unnecessary delay.

Mr. ROGERS. Any delay that has occurred is due to the fact that the accounts that have been sent in are not regular. Everything possible is being done by the department to adjust them, and have them paid as rapidly as possible.

APPOINTMENT OF TARIFF COMMISSION.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. White (Leeds) for the second reading of Bill (No. 88), to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission and the proposed amendment of Mr. Guthrie thereto.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey). The objections which have been taken by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to this Bill may be summarized under three heads, first that there is no call whatever for the Bill, and no proper reason given for its introduction; second that it is a subversion of constitutional government or certainly constitutional practice in Canada and, third, that it will tend to more closely ally the question of the tariff with party politics. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), twits the Finance Minister (Mr. White, Leeds), with not having given sufficient reasons for the introduction of this Bill. It is a peculiar thing that upon very many subjects with which, on account of the very short space of time that this government have been in power, we have not yet been able to deal, we are twitted by the opposition from day to day for not introducing such legislation, or at any rate declaring our policy. Upon the debate in reply to the speech from the Throne, this House was divided, because the government had not declared its policy on the naval question. We have been twitted because we have not announced our policy with reference to the construction of the Georgian Bay canal, and we have been twitted that we have not brought down legislation with respect to the granting to the provinces the land within their borders. And yet to-day, when we do bring down legislation implementing one more of the promises made by the present Premier (Mr. Borden), when he was in opposition, we find the opposition objecting, and stating that we were not justified in enunciating our policy to the people of this country. So it seems we would not be able to satisfy the opposition no matter what we did. But the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), answers his own argument in his speech. He says that we have no reason for bringing in this legislation, yet at page 2666 of 'Hansard' he says:

For some years back, I have been one of those who have found fault with the statistical information gathered by the Canadian government. A much better system might well be evolved and put in practice, instead of the present one which is neither accurate nor convenient. I believe that all the information which the Finance Minister, judging hy his remarks, desires, he could obtain by the appointment of experts added to the departments of Trade and Commerce and Customs. There is no necessity for the appointment of a permanent Tariff Commission at all. You could appoint to the Customs and Trade and Commerce departments, expert technical men, who would get for you all the information which these commissioners are supposed to obtain. I believe that this would be a much less expensive way of arriving at more satisfactory results. These experts would be at work under the eyes of the minister and be responsible to him for their work, whereas the commission will be an irresponsible entity.

So that the hon. gentleman himself points out reasons for introducing this measure. The only contention of the hon. member is that the proper method of collecting information had not been adopted. Later on in his speech my hon. friend said:

Let him amend the Customs Act, if necessary, to make this change. I believe that both sides of the House would support an amendment to that effect. We do not begrudge any expense to get necessary information, but we do not want legislation which will be a most radical departure from a cardinal principle of our constitution.

The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said that he had suggested to the late government three years ago that a change should be made in the administration of the Customs Department, he had suggested to the then Minister of Finance, (Mr. Fielding), that there should be established what he called a Tariff Bureau. I would like to know the difference between a Tariff Bureau and a Tariff Commission. It is a matter of name. He is going to establish a tariff tribunal to gather information and it seems to me a rose by any other name would smell just as sweet. Thus I say that these gentlemen have answered themselves when they say there is no reason for the appointment of this Tariff Commission.

The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) said that the Minister of Finance in introducing this Bill had simply copied cheap Yankee legislation. He said:

The bill is largely an American model, nothing more or less than a cheap Yankee device.

The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) says:

In the United States there is no such thing as a Tariff Commission, and there may never be—likely there never will be. Strictly speaking, there is no tariff board.

We have the hon. member for South Wellington saying that this Bill is an exact copy of something which the junior member for Halifax says does not exist. That is a peculiar state of affairs. Upon this point the hon. gentlemen have again answered themselves. The hon. member for South Wellington holds out a challenge to the Minister of Finance to disprove his statement that this proposed Tariff Commission will have the effect of increasing the tariff and that it was introduced for that purpose. If I thought the institution of the present Tariff Commission was being placed before this House and passed by this House for the purpose of increasing the tariff of this country at all times and would not be used also for the purpose of reducing the tariff, I for one would vote against it, and it is not fair to say that because a Tariff Commission was passed in the United States and because a protectionist party happened to be in power, therefore, the commission was created not only to preserve a high tariff in the United States, but to increase that tariff, because we know that in the last few years in the United States public opinion has been in favour of lowering the duties and that commission was appointed concurrently with that feeling in the United States. I shall read the words of President Taft in his message to Congress, upon that particular measure, and see whether he thought that the creation of a Tariff Commission in the United States was intended for the purpose of increasing the tariff:

It is not unlikely that in the light of accurate statistics we may find that certain schedules in our tariff are too high. If we do, I shall at that time not hesitate to immediately recommend their revision. I believe the work of a tariff board should be to secure and present evidence, not to frame a tariff. With this evidence before it Congress will act fairly and wisely and the United States have under this method, a tariff established on a thoroughly scientific basis, as it should have been a quarter of a century ago.

So that the challenge of the hon. member for South Wellington is answered by the President of the United States himself in a message upon the very subject of which my hon. friend was speaking.

Let me point out some other inconsistencies between the statements of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and the statements of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) at page 2662 of 'Hansard' told us:

The fact therefore is that we are going to have three permanent tariff commissioners; a board just as permanently appointed as a bench of judges is appointed.

He entered a strong protest against the Bill because it created such a permanent tariff board. But, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) half an hour afterwards directed all his remarks to the importance of having a permanent tariff authority, and to ensure that permanency he urged that civil servants be selected to form a tariff bureau. What inconsistency there is between these gentlemen on the opposite side of the House! If only a few more of them would speak they would tear to shreds every argument they have used against this Bill. Then, we were told by gentlemen opposite that the appointment of this commission would have the effect of more closely allying the tariff with party government, and as a remedy against that the hon. member suggested that there should be officials taken from certain departments, officials under the control of the government, and to some extent depending for their promotion upon the minister, to form a 'tariff bureau', and he contended this bureau would be freer from party bias than the board proposed under this Bill, which my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) said would be composed of men as independent as are the judges of the land. The fact that hon. gentlemen opposite are driven to such a line of argument shows the weakness of their case. The three gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of the House usually present good strong reasons to support their views, and the fact that their arguments in the present instance are so illogical and so inconsistent simply shows that they have been casting around aimlessly for some contention to buttress their objections to this Bill. Then, the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) referring to the probable appointments to the tariff board stated that there was no doubt but that the appointees would be Conservatives. Well, so long as we have party government in this country, so long will the party in power favour its own friends, other things being equal. We might as well accept that idea as a start. It is a principle of party government that the party in power should appoint officials in whom they have confidence. Suppose, for example, that after we had been returned to power at the last election by an overwhelming majority on the principle of moderate protection, and on the principle of sustaining our tariff substantially as it is, except with such variations as are necessary from time to time, and that then we should turn around and appoint three free traders on this tariff commission, would any one suppose that we would be carrying out the mandate of the people and doing our duty to those who trusted us to administer the affairs of the country? No, we would be guilty of a breach of faith. However, that may be, I want to remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kyte) that it is not true that in all cases this government has followed the practice of appointing only its own friends. Why, the very minister who introduced this Bill comes from the ranks of his own party, and the man whom this government placed at the head of the Transcontinental Railway Commission is a Liberal. It will therefore be seen that although we have the right, if we choose, to appoint party friends, we have so far exercised our best judgment in calling to the various public positions men who we think can best administer public affairs in the true interest of the country. Another reason why we are introducing this Bill is to carry out a promise made by the Conservative party when in opposition, and this government believes in implementing its promises, although, I hope it will not cost us as much to implement our promises as it cost the late government to implement its guarantee to the Grand Trunk Pacific. Let us look at some of the duties which will be cast upon this new tariff board. It will be one of their first duties I presume to consider each item in the tariff. Now, I have given a little attention to this tariff for my own satisfaction, and I am free to say that I know very little about it, although possibly I do know as much about it as most hon. members in this House. Here is the tariff and I find there are three thousand seven hundred different articles dutiable and free in schedule A, and these again are grouped into seven hundred and ten items, so it is pretty safe to say there is not a single member in this House who knows what every item in that tariff is. It is also safe to hazard the assertion that not one half the members of this House know where the products come from, the local conditions of production, the cost of transportation, and what the duty is or what it ought to be. This board will be composed of specialists competent to study the tariff, and, as we know, this is an age of specialists. Every man who comes to the government urging a change in the tariff is a specialist in his own line, and when he appears before the minister to urge his case he necessarily has an advantage over the minister because he has studied his own special line of business and knows what suits his own needs. It is quite apparent that the time has come when we must have some regularly constituted body with proper powers of investigation, in order that we may intelligently legislate with respect to tariff matters. Under present conditions, some one walks into the office of the Minister of Finance or some deputation complains that the tariff is too high on a certain article and another comes in and says the tariff is too low. A deputation waits on the Minister of Finance urging him either to lower or to increase the tariff and that deputation presents arguments from every standpoint in favour of their request, and as to the accuracy of these statements the Minister of Finance of course has no assurance. Is it not well to have such a board as is now proposed to advise the minister; to seek information and to present a well considered and carefully thought out report to him? Let me give you an example of what I mean. Within the past few weeks there came from my own riding two deputations, one of them being on behalf of the Coal Association of the province of Ontario. That deputation pointed out to the Minister of Finance what was news to me, that if a vessel loads with coal at the town of Owen Sound and sails for Port Arthur, touching at an International port en route she does not have to pay duty on that coal; but, if the same vessel loads coal at Owen Sound and does a coasting business, and does not touch at an international port she has to pay a duty of fifty-three cents per ton on that coal. That case is brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance, and of course the Minister of Finance cannot be expected to know all the circumstances and conditions which made that imposition of duty in the one case imperative, and in the other not. Such a case as that would be a matter for the consideration of a Tariff Commission.

This body of experts would be able to take evidence on that. That certainly has the effect of diverting trade through international waters, because in one case there is a duty of 53 cents a ton on coal and in the other case there is no duty.

Then, the cement manufacturers may come down here. In my town there are three cement companies, and I understand the west desires a reduction of the duty on cement, because the people in the west are complaining that the price of and duty on cement are too high. They say that a cement merger has been formed and is paying on watered stock a dividend which is equal to 25 or 30 per cent on its legitimate stock. These cement gentlemen come down here and say, the price of cement is high, not because of the tariff, but because of the high freight rates between the east and the west. This commission has power to investigate both the cost of production and the cost of transportation to the west. In the State of Kansas there is a cluster of mills turning out cement which undersells to a great extent the cement produced in this country, and what is the reason? It is because they employ the cheap labour of the Latin races from Europe to whom they pay a lower rate of wage than our people will accept. In addition, alongside of the cement mills are silk mills in which the women of these Latin races work, so that the combination of the two makes it possible for these people to live on a rate of wages which would be ruinous to the workingmen of this country. These are matters which this commission will take into consideration. They are stated to me as facts, but I do not know whether they are facts or not. Therefore, I want the commission to take evidence and find out.

Then we had the fruit growers coming down here and saying that any lowering of the duties on fruits would be injurious to them, and you heard the answer of the late Prime Minister to the effect that he did not know whether the representations made were true or not, and that as reciprocity was on the tapis he could do nothing. The grain growers of the west also came here with their representations. The farmers of Ontario came saying that they were injured by the introduction of cheap American pork, and asked to have the duty on pork increased. Was any man in this House able to say definitely and accurately whether or not those duties should be increased, without some authoritative statement from a body of experts such as that proposed by this Bill? I could go on and illustrate by references to many other things. Take the Combines

Act. If a deputation comes to this House and says, we believe there is a combine in this country, in a certain article, by reason of which the price of that article has been unduly enhanced, who in this House knows whether that is the case or not? This commission has power to go right into the factories and investigate their books and bring the men before them and do anything else necessary to see whether the price has been unlawfully enhanced or not.

The next argument presented to the House by our hon. friends opposite is that the passage of this Bill would subvert the constitution of this country. I will admit that if there is anything in this Bill which gives legislative or executive action to the Tariff Commission, that argument is perfectly sound. I myself would vote against giving this commission any legislative or executive action with respect to the alteration or revision of the tariff. But the whole argument of hon. gentlemen opposite is based on an assumption which does not exist, and which would lead me to believe that they had prepared their speeches on this Tariff Commission, in the expectation that it would have some legislative or executive action. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) referred to the resolution that was moved by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the last Imperial Conference, which he said bore no analogy to the functions of this commission. If the hon. gentleman had read that resolution, I think he would not have made that statement. What was the resolution that Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved on that occasion. It was one praying that the Imperial Government would appoint a commission composed not only of representatives of Canada, but of representatives of every other portion of the empire, and of Great Britain as well, to do exactly what this Tariff Commission is going to do. I will read that resolution:

> He asked for the appointment of a Royal Commission with a view of investigating and reporting upon the natural resources of each part of the empire represented at this conference, the development attained and attainable, and the facilities for production, manufacture, and distribution; the trade of each part with the others and with the outside world, the food and raw material requirements of each, and the sources thereof available. To that extent, if any, the trade between each of the different parts has been affected by existing legislation in each, either beneficially or otherwise.

That commission was to do nothing but investigate and report, just what is proposed for this commission. Was there any question of the subversion of Canadian autonomy when the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition, and who is supposed to be the omnipresent protector and vigilant mentor of Canadian autonomy, moved this resolution at the last Imperial Conference? Yet the cases are exactly analogous, because that commission was simply asked to go and investigate facts and report, just as the commission now proposed is to do.

I wish also to refer to the Railway Commission, which hon. gentlemen opposite appointed when in power. We have no fault to find with them for that; on the contrary, we have commended their action in that respect time and again, and so have the people of this country—why? Because there was a time not long ago when all the duties performed by the Railway Commission were performed by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council—more or less of a political body. But there came a time in the development of Canada when, by reason of the development of our railways, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council could not attend to the many questions brought before it, and it became necessary, in the interests of this country, that railway rates and everything pertaining to railways should be assigned to a commission; and that commission was given powers greatly in excess of those given to this commission.

This commission will only have power to investigate and report. It would never do to give it the right and the power to do anything which would affect the revenues of the country. We are giving it much less power than we gave the Railway Commission. To the Railway Commission we gave power, not to do anything that would affect the revenues of the country, but to control the railway freight and passenger rates throughout the whole Dominion; and in that respect we gave them executive power and took from ourselves the right to have anything to say in fixing traffic rates on railways. Yet, although when we vested in the Railway Commission this sole executive power to deal with railway rates, hon. gentlemen opposite had nothing to say but on the contrary fathered that proposition; now, when we are about to appoint a commission which will simply have the power to investigate and ascertain the facts, and will not have any executive power at all, we are charged with subverting the constitution. Can hon. gentlemen opposite really realize the meaning of their words when they make such an argument?

The late First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) consented to the appointment of a Waterways Commission. He appointed three commissioners. For what purpose? To ascertain the facts and conditions in connection with the international waters between this country and the United States. But why did he appoint special commissioners for that purpose? Because the right hon. gentleman and the late government came to the conclusion that the subject of the international waters and the various encroachments on the rights of the Dominion in that connection, were so complex and abstruse that the ministers of the late government had not the time to deal with them, and, therefore, they appointed an International Waterways Commission, whose duty it was to investigate into all the circumstances, conditions and facts and report. What were they authorized to do—their duties are defined in their first report in 1905 as follows:

Whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the conditions and uses of the waters adjacent to the boundary lines between the United States and Canada, including all of the waters of the lakes and rivers whose natural outlet is by the River St. Lawrence to the Atlantic ocean; also upon the maintenance and regulation of suitable levels, and also upon the effect upon the shores of these waters and the structures thereon, and upon the interests of navigation by reason of the diversion of these waters from or change in their natural flow; and, further, to report upon the necessary measures to regulate such diversion, and to make such recommendations for improvements and regulations as shall best subserve the interests of navigation in said waters. The said commissioners shall report upon the advisabilty of locating a dam at the outlet of Lake Erie, with a view to determining whether such dam will benefit navigation, and if such structure is deemed necessary shall make recommendations to their respective governments looking to an agreement or treaty which shall provide for the construction of the same, and they shall make an estimate of the probable cost thereof.

Our hon. friends opposite will see that the late government gave that International Waterways Commission more powers than we are proposing to give this Tariff Commission, because they gave the Waterways Commission power to make regulations respecting international waters. This will be seen by reference to page 90 of the International Waterways report and carry them into executive action.

In due course by a report of the Committee of the Privy Council of Canada, approved by the Governor General of Canada, it was resolved: That His Majesty's government accept the invitation to co-operate in the formation of a commission. This report, after further reciting that as the subject to be dealt with pertained to 'the regulations of the waters adjacent to the international boundary,' the matter, in so far as Canada was concerned, should be under the Department of the Interior and the Department of Public Works.

On the following page of that report will be found the following:

After the appointment of the Canadian commissioners, the Postmaster General of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in communicating the matter to the Canadian House of Commons, in January last, dealt with the subject-matter of the commission as covering all waters adjacent to the boundaries of the two countries, and in the course of his speech made the following statements: In sections of the country where the boundary is not water, but land, there are streams and large rivers which have their sources in one country and which flow into another. Complaint has been made by the United States that Canadians have constructed some works upon rivers which have their sources in Canada and which flow into the United States, and that these works affect the flow of the waters in their country. We also have made complaints to the United States that Americans have constructed upon some rivers, the St. John river, for instance, works which affect the flow of the waters in our country. It is, therefore, to the mutual interest and advantage of both countries to have the question properly investigated with a view of having concurrent legislation, if such should be found necessary.

For these reasons we have thought it advisable to respond to the invitation of the United States to have this question investigated. We have agreed to a commission to be composed of six members, three to represent the government of the United States and three to represent the government of Canada.

Did it ever occur to any hon. gentleman opposite to object that by establishing that Waterways Commission and giving it the powers we did, the late government was in any way subverting the constitution or taking from this parliament any of the powers which justly belong to it? Not one of them raised any such objection, but on the contrary, the Bill establishing that commission was supported without dissent, because parliament desired that the government should obtain the best information available before deciding on any definite action. Then there was the International Fisheries Commission. Why did we appoint that? Let me here say that if there is anything in the argument hon. gentlemen opposite put forward against the appointment of a Tariff Commission, that argument would apply with still greater force against the appointment of any international commission. Because in the case of a Tariff Commission, this government has absolute control, whereas in the case of an International Commission, there are two governments concerned, each of which has as much say as the other. The government, in the case of the Tariff Commission, may remove the commissioners from office and abolish the commission, but it cannot in the case of an International Commission, which is the outcome of a treaty, without going to Great Britain and consulting the Imperial authorities.

Why did the late government appoint an International Fisheries Commission? Because of the disputes which arose in connection with our fisheries. Some people wanted nets of a certain size, the people of British Columbia wanted certain things done, and our maritime provinces wanted other things done. The government then did what any other intelligent government would have done. They determined to place these matters in the hands of experts, who would call the parties interested before them, gather the facts, on oath if necessary, and enable the government to devise more executive and intelligent legislation than it otherwise could have done. I can point to commission after commission and ask hon. gentlemen opposite to show one essential difference between the powers given these various commissions I have named, and the one we are appointing today, except that we are not now giving the Tariff Commission such large powers as we have some of the others. Yet we are told that in appointing this Tariff Commission we are subverting our constitution. Why, if that be the case, our constitution must have been completely upset long ago by these hon. gentlemen opposite, and yet we seem to be getting along famously.

A little while ago the question of technical industrial education came up in this House, and my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), himself proposed that this government should do—what? That it should appoint a commission. What for? To visit the industrial centres of Canada, and the United States, gather all the information there obtainable, and then cross the water to the countries of Europe, and after having made all the investigation possible, report to this House. There was then no fear in my hon. friend's mind of our subverting the constitution by the appointment of such a commission. That idea never occurred to hon. gentlemen opposite until the Bill we are now discussing was submitted to the House. They then went into their little chambers and worried about what position they ought to take, and what opposition they could make, and they determined on a line of argument which does not do much credit to their intelligence.

My hon. friend the junior member for Halifax said: I do not care that this commission may not have legislative or executive power. When it brings in a report, that report is bound to be tinctured into the tariff. But does he not know that this commission is appointed simply to ascertain the facts, and you cannot get rid of the facts. You must have the facts in framing your tariff. Let my hon. friend look up the speech made by Mr. Champ Clark on the Bill which was amended by the United States Senate, and he will see that the leader of the Democrats and the advocate of low tariff reform in the United States, while he objected to the establishment of a commission, because it would be composed of Republicans, said that the commission would not have legislative or executive power, but simply power to collate the facts and report; and he went on to say that facts are facts, no matter whence they come, and, therefore, he would not oppose the Bill. My hon. friend said this afternoon that the present government are in favour of higher protection. Nothing of the kind. Suppose the representation is made that the duty on agricultural implements are too high. Well, if they are too high I am in favour of lowering them, but I want some definite scientific information to prove this, and at present there is nobody, and no tribunal from which I can get that information. This Tariff Commission, however, will have the power to enter every factory, every industrial establishment, examine its books find out the cost of production, the amount of capital invested, the dividends paid, and all the conditions governing it, and then report the facts to the government. And on the reports of this commission, the government will come to a conclusion as to what tariff legislation is desirable. To my mind the objection to investigations of that kind should come rather from the manufacturers, and be prompted by a desire to conceal the facts from the country. As President Taft said, when speaking of the tariff board appointed under the Payne-Aldrich law: I do not say that this board should be established, because the tariff is too high or too low, but in order that we may ascertain the facts and revise our tariff if the facts call for a revision.

My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean), said on several occasions that there is not in other countries a Tariff Commission similar to this. Quite true, but they have other institutions for determining what the tariff shall be. What is the object of appointing those men? It is simply in order that we may get at the facts, because our tariff must be based on the facts.

Now, let me give another illustration of our lack of information in this House; and, if I refer to the reciprocity treaty, I do so in no controversial way, but in illustration of the need of actual information which we should have in the country, not only to assist us in revising our own tariff, but in negotiating commercial treaties with other countries. Last year, when the reciprocity matter was before the House, we were very anxious to get information as to the prices of commodities on the American side and on our own. In the debate on the 2nd of March, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), said:

I would like to call the attention of the Finance Minister to the message sent by President Taft in reply to a request from the Senate, in which statistics are given as to the different items affected by the schedule in the agreement now under discussion. These statistics include the prices of various commodities such as beef, pork, butter, &c., in Canada and the United States for a series of years, especially for the last year. In reply to the request the President sent down a list which gave the exact information required by the Senate.

In reply, the Hon. Mr. Fielding, then Minister of Finance, said:

Of course we had to use our own sources of information and hon. gentlemen who criticise the agreement will have to do likewise.

That is the only answer we got. Later on the present Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) drew the matter to the attention of the then Minister of Finance, but the only information he received was that a document had been published by the Minister of Labour giving prices in Canada and labour conditions. But we all know that that document was not compiled with a view to the reciprocity treaty, but merely in connection with the work of the Department of Labour. And the hon. Mr. Fielding added:

There is no other information available.

The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) wrote to the Department of Trade and Commerce asking for information. For we must have information in a case of that kind if we are to give an intelligent decision upon a question whether such a treaty as was proposed should be approved or not. We must know, for instance, whether products affected by the treaty could be raised in a foreign country more cheaply than here and even adding transportation laid down here at a lower figure than they could be produced for in this country. And what reply did the hon. gentleman receive?

I beg to return you herewith your reference No. 172 for statement showing comparative prices of butter and eggs in London, England, and certain points in Canada and the United States. This department has no information upon the subject.

Imagine that! Imagine writing to the Department of Trade and Commerce for information that we ought to have in order to form an intelligent opinion upon a reciprocity pact and then only receive the answer, 'This department has no information!' Think of what this means, especially when on the other side of the line they had a body of trained experts who had been employed for years in collecting facts, so that when the United States government came to deal with this matter they had 'mountains of information'. Hon. Mr. Perley also wrote to the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce on the subject and received this reply:

The compilation of statistics such as that requested in your return has more than once engaged the attention of this department, but we found that it required very considerable work which this department has yet been unable to undertake.

Not only that, but the then Minister of Finance told the people of this country that it was not necessary to have any information in order to negotiate the reciprocity pact. I will read you his speech to that effect. In this very same debate we were twitting hon. members who then sat on this side with having nothing to act upon except the blue-books which had been laid upon the table and which give us no intelligible information as to prices and conditions here as compared with those of the United States. Hon. Mr. Fielding said:

Then, with regard to what took place at Washington, I want to say to my hon. friends that we had abundance of statistics. We had the various documents and public books of the United States and Canada, to which we were able to refer from time to time, and we did not fail to make use of the . . . I wish to add that in my judgment, the information for the purpose of this agreement, was not necessary at all.

Imagine that! And the former Minister of Customs made a similar statement later on, as I will show. These gentlemen went there saying: We do not need information or statistics such as have been compiled by the United States Tariff Commission; we can go down there and, without anything of that kind, negotiate a treaty with the President of the United States. I imagine the two representatives of Canada on one side of the conference table, and on the other side President Taft and some of the brainiest men of the United States, armed with official information as to the prices, as to consumption of products and the extent of production on the American side, and on the Canadian side as well, which they have been collecting for years. I can imagine the smile on the President's face when he found Mr. Fielding did not have, and apparently that he did not want, any information. And when these American representatives asked for concessions and Mr. Fielding gave them, they must have felt that it was like taking candy from children. The Canadian representatives went there without information, without any knowledge to guide them in what they were doing. On the other hand, the American representatives knew the position exactly, their every move on the chessboard of that negotiation was made on definite, accurate, scientific information gathered by men who had been all over the United States and Canada and knew exactly the conditions in both countries. They knew exactly what they were doing, and we were playing the game like a lot of children. And when the United States unwittingly threw out this lifebuoy, document 849, we grasped at it, and it helped to save us from national disaster. This document was one of the most powerful arguments used by the Conservatives in the recent appeal to the people, for they were able to prove from it that, on the showing of the United States themselves, it would be injurious for this country to negotiate a treaty with the United States. I do not wonder that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) does not want a Tariff Commission appointed, for it was the Tariff Commission of the United States which elicited facts which helped to turn the hon. gentleman's party out of power. I venture to say that had my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had a Tariff Commission in operation a year before, he would not have negotiated a treaty, and the chances are he would have been still on this side of the House. That is one of the most cogent arguments I can give for having authentic information on which we could base an intelligent conclusion.

Now, by way of digression, let me show the kind of information that these gentlemen in the United States collected. I refer first to the paper schedules. I find there are fifty schedules with respect to the paper manufacturing industry alone. And, be it noted, there is not a single recommendation in this report. They do not say to the President of the United States: It is better to do so and so. If our commission were to do likewise, I should object to it, because it is not for them to make suggestions for legislative action. Their message should be: Here are the facts; use your own sweet will upon them. So, in this document No. 849, there is neither suggestion nor recommendation as to what should be done in view of the facts collected, simply 127 pages of official facts with respect to reciprocity with Canada. Can any one find fault with that? And as to this department of pulp and news-print paper, as showing the scope of the investigation, they say:

> The data on pulp and paper included in the following tables was secured from 42 ground-wood mills, 17 sulphite mills, and 27 news-print mills, making a total of 86 mills and representing about two-thirds of the ground wood-pulp and news-print paper production of the United States and all of the sulphite pulp used in the production of news-print paper. An investigation of the cost of production in all the other mills is now under way. The data from Canada were taken from a number of mills producing over two-thirds of the total output of news-print paper in the Dominion, including the best equipped mills . . . All these figures, including those from Canada, have been secured directly by our representatives from the books of the different companies. We prepared exact schedules including all essential items of equipment, cost, and wages; and for each of the companies included in the tables, we have the original schedules covering all the items in detail.

An absolutely thorough investigation of the whole industry. Now, take the wool schedule, and let us see what investigation they made of the question of sheep raising, the basic industry for wool:

> Coming to sheep, we approach a phase of agricultural production that has for several months past been a subject of a painstaking inquiry at the hands of the Tariff Board. We refer to that particular branch of live stock husbandry underlying schedule K of the United States tariff, to wit, the growing of sheep in the various countries and the conditions surrounding the marketing of flock products. This inquiry, necessarily world-wide in its bearing, is not completed. We are nevertheless, able to speak at the present time with a reasonably complete knowledge of the facts concerning the sheep growing industry in the United States and Canada, more especially as relates to comparative conditions in Ontario and such typical states as Ohio, Pennsylvania and Michigan. Representatives of the board have visited some 700 typical farms in the leading sheep breeding sections of Ohio, south Virginia, western Pennsyvania, west Virginia, New Hampshire and Vermont, obtaining facts and figures covering costs and prices. These data are now being analysed and worked out with a view toward developing cost of wool production. In connection therewith the cost of maintenance of sheep per head for a year in Ohio and adjacent states has already been developed. The method pursued in obtaining first hand information as to the cost of keeping sheep was through schedules filled out by experts who personally visited the farms studied.
> The accompanying tables show the result of a study of two Ohio counties so investigated, and the data presented may be taken as fairly indicating the cost of maintaining sheep in the localities most largely interested. These figures are tentative, and are subject to revision and possible correction when the entire investigation has been completed.

I quote that to show the thoroughness with which that commission made the investigation. The woollen industry in Ontario to-day is in a decaying condition. Would it not be proper for this commission to examine, after the manner of the United States Tariff Commission, the conditions in Ontario, and in that thorough manner? I think if we can rejuvenate the woollen trade of this country, that is one instance of what this Tariff Commission might do.

Now, Sir, I want to summarize what I think should be the duties of this commission.

(a) Will be a medium of gathering accurate and definite information on production, transportation and prices of goods at home and abroad, without which there can be no intelligent legislation in tariff matters.

(b) This information may be obtained on oath and the production and inspection of the books of any concern to prove or disprove the need of protection or bonuses.

(c) In so far as jurisdiction is conferred on the commission it will tend to remove the tariff from party politics and transfer it to a semi-judicial body but rightly giving it no executive legislative powers to affect our revenues.

(d) It will provide a long felt want, a body of experts on our tariff and on conditions of production at home and abroad.

(e) Will enable the Governor in Council through its medium to decide whether, or not there exists any combine or agreement under section 12 Customs Act, 1907, and to remove or lower the duties on all articles unduly enhanced in price because of such combine.

(f) Will be able to ascertain definitely and report whether or not goods are being dumped into Canada contrary to the dumping clause of our Customs Act and if so to enable the government to have the 15 per cent added.

(g) They can prepare special reports of the cause of the decline in certain industries or in certain branches of agriculture, or trade with other countries, and the changes and effect and operation of the tariff of, or treaties with other nations; on the trade and industries of Canada.

(h) Consolidate the many Tariff Acts, Schedules, orders in council in Canada and our commercial treaties with other nations and compile and publish a glossary on our own tariffs or as President Taft said of their own, to translate it into plain English, and save to a great extent the employment of customs brokers and the worry of importers and others in adjusting duties.

I think these conclusions cover probably what would be the principal duties of this commission. For this and other reasons I have given, I have much pleasure in supporting the Bill.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton). We had supposed that we had constitutional government, but I think we can consider now that we are henceforth to be governed by commission. While we have appointed a good many commissions, we have also dispensed with the services of some. I would like to call the attention of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) to the fact that while the government has seen fit, as a measure of economy, to dispense with the services of three commissioners appointed for the purpose of supervising the construction of the Transcontinental railway, the money that they are going to save in that measure of economy they are going to lose now by the appointment of the proposed Tariff Commission. So if my hon. friend is that friend of economy which he poses as being, he will vote with this side of the House against the second reading of the Bill. It is not economy, I think, either in the matter of the expenditure of money or in the efficiency of the public service, to dispense with three commissioners charged with the responsibility of constructing a work of the most essential advantage to the country, at an expenditure of many millions of dollars, an expenditure that requires the most careful supervision in order to secure satisfactory results. But it is right and proper on grounds of economy and efficiency to dispense with the three Transcontinental Railway Commissioners, then there are no grounds of economy, and I think it has already been shown no grounds of efficiency, for the appointment of the proposed Tariff Commission—three commissioners, at a salary equal to that of the cabinet ministers who appoint them, with a secretary whose salary is equal to that of the Deputy Ministers of the various departments up to a year or two ago.

However, it has been decided by the government to appoint this commission, and we must assume that there is a purpose in the appointment. It cannot be presumed that even a very lavish government would appoint a commission at an initial salary cost of $24,500 a year, and with the almost unlimited expenses that will follow, without a purpose, a purpose I am confident beyond the mere finding of positions at comfortable salaries for their friends.

If I understand the matter, the commission is to be appointed for the purpose of securing information upon which to base changes in the tariff. I heard the Prime Minister discussing that subject, and it seemed to me he wished the House to understand that this commission was appointed merely for the purpose of collecting statistics. But I cannot think, as I have said, that even a lavish government would appoint a $25,000 commission merely for the purpose of collecting statistics. There must be a purpose beyond the mere collection of statistics, and the purpose I think is to be found upon the information collected changes in the tariff. Unless that be the purpose, then there is no purpose that would justify the appointment.

The purpose of the commission, as I understood the Finance Minister in his speech and as I understand those who have spoken on the same side on behalf of the Bill, and as I understand the contents of the Bill itself, is to find reasons —I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker—to find excuses for increases in the tariff, to find out to what extent the tariff can be increased while the people may still be induced to submit to these increased exactions and retain our hon. friends in office.

I quite agree that if there is to be tariff changes it is necessary that there should be information, that there should be inquiry; but in my humble judgment the purpose of the inquiry should be the direct opposite of that which has been indicated from the other side of the House, and by the terms of the Bill. I understand that the revenues of Canada are some twenty or thirty millions of dollars in excess of the needs of expenditure. It would seem to me that there might very well be inquiry as to a readjustment of the tariff whereby the burden of this extra taxation might be removed from the shoulders of the people, and as to such a readjustment of the tariff burden that it would bear more equally upon the wealth and upon the labour of our people. There might be a further inquiry as to how far the present tariff conditions tend to divert the payments made by the consumer into private pockets rather than into the public treasury. If these were the purposes of the appointment of the commission I could understand its propriety.

At the present time the business conditions of this country are exceedingly favourable. The Minister of Finance suggested in his speech that such a time was not the time to make changes in the tariff. I would respectfully submit that if the changes to be made are to be made along the lines that I would wish to see, 'at such a time' is the time to make the changes. The present boom condition in our country is good for the man who has nothing; because he meets opportunity to better his position; and it is good for the man who has much because he meets opportunity to make that much more; but in the interests of the 75 per cent or maybe 80 per cent of the people who have practically fixed incomes, the farmers, the salaried employees or the wage labourers, to whom these opportunities do not come by reason of these good times but upon whom the high cost of living bears exceedingly and to a greater and greater degree from year to year, it seems to me it would be well worthy of consideration if some part of the burden of the $75,000,000 of our revenue that is raised by customs taxation might not, under some readjustment of the tariff, be lessened to reduce the cost of living and so better the circumstances of that 75 per cent of our people.

If the commission to be appointed were to be composed of men holding the well recognized and differing views which are held in regard to customs taxation, and if the members of the commission would loyally represent all the various interests affected, the consumer as well as the producer, and if the evidence as secured were made available to the public and were secured for that purpose, then the proposed commission would be a commission in fact as well as in name. But the men whom it is proposed to appoint will be political and tariff partisans. The commission will act as directed by the minister and will report only to him. It will be a commission in name and in cost but not a commission in fact. As I understand the matter this is a commission to humbug the people into believing that the information being gathered is being gathered in the public interest when really it is being gathered in special interests at the public expense.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that it is not permissible to impute improper motives.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg pardon, Mr. Speaker, I am not imputing motives to any person in the House, it is the legislation to which I am imputing motives as I think I am permitted to do.

To me it seems that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) disputes with the hon. the Postmaster General the position of humourist of the Cabinet. It is surely a joke that $24,500 of the people's money, with unlimited expenses, is to be taken in the people's name for the purpose of securing information which will enable the special interests the better to rob the people by means of tariff changes.

But there is a particularly creamy joke contained in subsection 3 of section 4 of the Bill. This clause provides authority by which the commission may hold inquiries into combines which are alleged to enhance prices. The provision reads:

> 'In the same manner as a judge of the Exchequer Court or any other judge, therein referred to, may be so empowered.'

The men appointed as political partisans to do certain work in justification of party policy, under the direction of, and reporting to the Minister of Finance, are to have the same standing as to inquiries concerning the combines to whom the government owes its existence, as a judge of any court.

I notice that the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) laid some stress upon the necessity of tariff legislation that would protect the labourer. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the labourer, the man whose capital is his labour and who must sell that capital in order to live, is in exactly the same position as the producer who depends upon the export market for the price of his products. The farmer who depends upon the export market must sell in competition with the world; and the labourer, even in the most highly protected country must sell his labour just the same in competition with the world. There is protection for the capital invested in the industries, but there is no protection for the labour that is the industriy.

It is a fact that the labourer is from time to time urged to vote for a high tariff, and it is a fact that up to the present and generally speaking he has done so; but it is not on the promise of higher wages, it is on the threat of the closed factory.

The demand for labour depends, not upon the tariff, but upon the market for the product of the factory, and the higher the tariff the greater the restriction on the demand for the product and therefore the greater the restriction on the demand for labour. At the same time, every increase in the tariff increases the cost of living to the labourer. The promises or the suggestions of benefit to the labouring classes from high tariffs have never been fulfilled and they never will be fulfilled.

The government was elected in opposition to the policy of reduction of taxation and expansion of trade. The defection of the high tariff section of the Liberal party represented in the Cabinet by the Minister of Finance aided most materially in achieving the success of the government. The interests elected the government; they are entitled to their pound of flesh and are demanding it. Admittedly it must be difficult for a government elected on the cry 'let well enough alone,' to accede to the demands of the interests on such short notice, or, in other words, to deliver the goods. But, this Tariff Commission will lay the wires through which the power will be turned on a little later.

In the meantime the interests will be kept quiet and the people will not be alarmed. If the government believes that industry can be built up and resources developed by maintaining or increasing the burden of taxation and by maintaining or increasing the restrictions on trade, they have the mandate of the people to give effect to their views. No doubt they will need a great deal of information, but it is for them to get their information by the ordinary means taken under a responsible system of government. They were elected to increase taxation and restrict trade, let them now do what they asked a mandate to enable them to do, and not seek by subterfuge of miscalled commissions to shirk full responsibility for their policy and its result.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). It is no small compliment to the merits of the legislation now before the House that the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) usually the most belligerent of the opposition, glorying in strife and in his happiest mood when the strife is hottest, should be under the necessity of artificially creating the little enthusiasm he did, and that a man of his capacity and his power of language should be under the necessity of, in attacking this Bill, reading from carefully prepared sophisms, and attacking what his friends call a radical measure by excerpts from the radical press. The hon. member for Edmonton, of all men, is at his best in opposition.

If a flaw can be found in the Bill, he is the one to find it; if there is an evil present or to be anticipated, he is the one to reveal it. But, Sir, he has laboured, as he never laboured in this House before, in his attempt to attack the Bill to create a tariff board. I favour this Bill; the hon. member for Edmonton opposes it. Why does he oppose it? If I can grasp that part of his address which dealt with the Bill, he opposes it first because it is expensive—because he says it will cost something over $24,500 a year. That is the annual expense of a tariff board that is to lay the foundation facts for a fiscal policy which collects annually some $73,000,000 of revenue. The hon. gentleman made no comparative references to other countries. He made no comparative reference to the present cost in our country to show that we are going to incur any more expense than we have done before. Nor did he make any attempt to show that the method now adopted is not as good as and not much better than the one we have had hitherto. So it is impossible to say how his argument ended, if it can be called an argument at all. He then went on to say that now was a golden opportunity to reduce the tariff, because we are in prosperous times. Yet he was a member of a government which entrusted the tariff to a Minister of Finance, who for ten years propounded to the House the very opposite argument—that while times were prosperous, while things were going well, the less we interfered with the tariff the better. But the exigencies of opposition necessarily produce anomalies, and, therefore, we need not be surprised at the hon. gentleman finding himself now compelled to conflict with his own policy as a member of the previous government, and to present an argument that destroys the very theory on which that government acted.

I support this Bill, and for the simplest of all reasons, because in my judgment it goes to improve the public service. I can conceive of no other purpose in the Bill. There is no other purpose evident on its face and I can see no ghost behind it. I believe it will work out to the improvement of the public service. The task of framing a tariff in this country has been committed to this parliament by the voice of the people at every general election since there was a Canada, and never more pronouncedly than in the last general election. In that task I can see no divisions. That duty is one, and indivisible, and that duty belongs to the parliament of Canada. But,

Sir, that duty is great, and in proportion as it is great, for at every step in its performance we affect vitally the well-being of every citizen of this country; and in proportion as the responsibility for its right performance is great, in that degree should we take care that we come to its performance armed at every point and well prepared. This Bill provides the means for that preparation; it does nothing more; and it provides the means that seem to me to be suited to the immensity of the undertaking. It provides a means that can expand with the certain expansion of our industrial life.

I support the Bill because whatever this parliament has to do, if it is worth doing at all, is worth doing well, and I believe the commission to be appointed will assist us in the performance of our duty. But surely the hon. member for Edmonton and every other hon. member who has spoken can distinguish between the responsibility for the performance of duty and the procuring of means by which a duty can be well performed.

Now, this measure is opposed by His Majesty's loyal opposition, and why? There have been up to this time four hon. members on their feet, and I apprehend, from the conclusion of the arguments which they presented, that it was decided in the councils of the opposition, largely now composed of vacant chairs, that of the two evils, acceding to or opposing this Bill, the latter was the better one to choose. There was likely much disputing, and much violent disputing if we may judge from the confused and conflicting arguments presented; but when a party addresses itself to the task of engaging the allegiance of two opposite schools of thought by presenting to each of them principles that mutually destroy each other, and arguments that are mutually destructive, when that is the purpose of a party's being then we must expect anomalies and absurdities in its attitude in parliament. The first ground the opposition took was this, that there was no mandate from the country for this Bill. None of them assumed the position that there was no purpose to be served by it. One and all can see that correct and sufficient data for the framing of a tariff are a necessity, and a great one. No one would assert that we have had those data before. Hon. gentlemen opposite have evidently been taught a lesson by the last election. They have evidently learned, from the quandary in which they found themselves, when confronted with the great mass of data in the United States as against our own, when discussing the reciprocity pact; and therefore not one of them has stood in his place in the House and argued that there was not a necessity in this country for more elaborate, complete and scientific data as a foundation for tariff revision.

But they say there is no mandate for this commission. Why, the right hon. leader of the government on 40 or 50 platforms has advocated it in specific terms, and has specifically promised it if returned to power. The hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) stated that he himself had heard the right hon. leader of the government on more than one occasion advocate this, but briefly. Now, there is no doubt that it was presented as a more or less prominent feature of the programme of the late opposition; it was laid before this country for its acceptance or rejection; the electorate of Canada came to the polls and signed the contract for its acceptance, and now we are asked to violate that contract. If a specific pledge of a united party prior to an election accepted by the people is not a mandate, then I ask my hon. friends how can a mandate be given? But I ask further, if a Tariff Commission had not been specifically advocated in the platform of the leader of the party prior to the election—if indeed nothing had been said of it—the people of this country have certainly entrusted the Conservative party with the task of framing a tariff. The people have certainly entrusted parliament and the government with the task of framing a tariff, and in so committing that task they give an implied mandate to the government to take the best means to carrying out that work. So that I say such an implied mandate would itself be sufficient even if a specific pledge had not been actually proffered and accepted.

What is the next objection to this Tariff Commission? It is that we could get the same information from officials in the department and that if, instead of taking officers immediately under the wing of the minister we choose to appoint a commission, we are thereby raising a barrier between the people and the government. Well, I can see no difference in principle between the gathering of information by a commission specially appointed for that purpose and obtaining it from officers directly under the control of the minister. But I can see a great difference in the practicability and thoroughness of the one method as compared with the other. In the one case we have a body of men specially appointed for the purpose of investigation and specially qualified, and divorced in proper measure from the control of the minister in charge. These men are appointed to do specific work and are responsible for the quality of the work they do. I should think, therefore, that we could obtain much better results from the work of a commission of that kind than from officials in the Customs Department who could neither be specially trained for that purpose nor have the same facilities for doing the work. It, therefore, seems to me that hon. gentlemen opposite are simply beating the air when they quote Bourinot and American constitutional precedents to show that this parliament is divesting itself of responsibility when it authorizes the government to employ a commission of experts in order that it may be put in possession of the facts and the information that is required on which to base tariff legislation. This is all the Bill does.

Then hon. gentlemen opposite proceed to argue that there is an evil spirit behind this measure that the ghost of high protection is behind it, and that it is part of a scheme by which the government hope to evade responsibility for imposing a high tariff on this country. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) said that the battle is now on between the moderate and the high protectionists of Canada. Well, I can assure my hon. friend, if that would give him any encouragement, that if the battle is on between the moderate and the high protectionists, he will find me in the army of the moderates. But where does he see the gauntlet for that battle in the Bill before us. We are told that the ghost of high protection is stalking around this measure because in the United States, which is a country of high protection, there is a Tariff Board. They say there is a Tariff Board in Japan, one in Germany and another in France, and that all these countries are protective. But when the hon. gentleman opposite cites France, Germany, Japan and the United States as countries having Tariff Boards, he should remember that these countries are the advance guard in the industrial progress of the world.

German statesmen at one time belonged to the school now represented in this House by the lonely member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). Prince Bismarck was one who once belonged to the school my hon. friend represents in Canada, but after lookink over the world, after looking especially into the record of the United States, he said that the history of that great republic was a lesson to him in industrial progress, and he thought that Germany ought to benefit by that lesson. He, therefore, in 1878 a year that is also historic in Canadian annals, abandoned free trade in Germany, and gave that country a protective policy. To-day Germany is the leader of the world in industrial growth. It has seen fit to introduce business methods into the conduct of its national affairs. It has delegated to well qualified individuals the task of collecting data on which to base legislation. That is a task we are giving to this Tariff Commission in order that it may collect and collate all the information and data possible and submit the same to the minister responsible so that he may, in his tariff legislation, carry out the will of the people. Other European countries are moving in the same direction. Hon. gentlemen opposite say to us: We do not want you to collect the facts, we do not want you to have data collected by this independent commission which you can submit to the people in order to show that the tariff you put in force is a just one. I do not wonder that hon. gentlemen opposite should take that position. For years back the Liberal party has been an organized anomaly as regards its fiscal policy. There are in that party whole squadrons of men whose opinions are diametrically opposed on fiscal questions. The only cement that keeps them together is their opposition to the government. Now, we must either embody the principle of protection in our tariff or eliminate it. Has any hon. gentleman opposite declared that he would eliminate it? Would the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) eliminate it? Would even he, representing a constituency in the far west eliminate that principle from our tariff? He remains silent. Why, if he did, by whom would he be opposed? He would be opposed at once by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) whose spineless amendment he now supports, and he would be supported by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), possibly by some others who think that a certain local sentiment in their constituencies would back them up

And he would have the support of a section of the electors of this country who still harbour the free trade theory. These two sections are both sitting together in the opposition, both clinging to principles which cannot live together. And, while that conflict of opinion obtains among hon. gentlemen opposite they must necessarily assume absurd positions in this House. I have often felt sympathy for the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who leads the opposition. For between the two factions that he leads, the directly opposite schools, the right hon. gentleman has been pitchforked for twenty years, between free trade doctrines on the one side and the protectionist doctrinaires on the other, until finally he landed without any opinion at all. And the right hon. gentleman, in order to lead a party that endeavours to combine irreconcilables, has been compelled to acknowledge to the people of Canada that, between the free trade theory and the protection theory he inclines neither to the one side nor to the other. On this side, of the House, as I have previously stated, if a war was on—as the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), and the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), both devoutly hope—between the moderate protectionists and the high protectionists, I am on the side of the moderate protectionists. I believe that in this young country, with, for a long time at least, a far greater store of natural resources than we are able to bring to a developed state at home, we must, for some time at least, follow a protectionist policy. I also believe that the best objects of protection are served by a moderate tariff, by a policy that accedes to and recognizes the interests of all classes. I believe also that the interests which each section has in that policy are not in every sense equal or in every sense uniform. I believe that, under these circumstances, the proper policy is a policy of reasonable protection doing justice to the consumer, as well as to all others.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On agricultural implements, for instance.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Yes, as on everything else. And if my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will read the address I had the honour of delivering in this House in January, 1911, he will find that I stood then where I stand now; that I stated then—not in the same words perhaps, but in words with the same meaning—just what I state to-day. And I would remind those who see evil spectres behind this Bill, those who think that clause by clause and sentence by sentence it is quite innocuous but that there is something terrible, but all unseen in this measure presented by the government, let me remind them that the Board of Tariff experts in the United States has presented several specific reports to Congress and the president, and that every recommendation made by the president in pursuance of those reports has been in favour of a revision downwards; that the Tariff Board of the United States, as between the high and the moderate protectionists—if such exists over there—has favoured the moderate protectionists every time. But no report of that body, or of any other such body that pretended to economic intelligence, has ever favoured a policy of free trade there or here. So that, I should think, if hon. gentlemen opposite could see any light at all through the confusion that exists around them, they would favour this Bill especially if they are, as stated by the hon. member for Richmond, moderate protectionists. Because wherever the Tariff Board has operated it has brought about conditions of moderate, rather than high protection.

Now, Sir, I have stated concisely my reasons for supporting this Bill, and have endeavoured to meet what I conceive to be the arguments raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. If there is any that I have missed, I would like to hear it now. If there is not, I would like to know why these hon. gentlemen oppose this Bill. Of course, they are subject to the exigencies of party warfare; they want to look both ways when the general election comes on. Unless they can say rightly or wrongly—that we are Haman's-gallows protectionists, they cannot say anything; and as they want to fight our tariff, be it good or bad, they feel they must oppose our tariff commission as well. That is practically the sole reason that animates the opposition. There can be no other.

Now, if our tariff is going to be made in a back room, if it is going to be made in the ante-room of the Stock Exchange, if it is going to be made in the private closet of a campaign committee, then I am willing to concede that the fewer facts that are presented to the public and to parliament, the better; for a system of that kind loves darkness rather than light. But, if the tariff is to be made to suit the necessities of business and of all classes of business, farming included, if the circumstances that govern it are to be business circumstances and not party political circumstances, then the more facts we have the better, and the more light we have the better. Hon. gentlemen opposite did not frame their tariff upon that principle. And, so far as they altered it and revised it, or left it alone, as time went on and as circumstances and our industrial life developed, they were animated by this principle—if you call it a principle—that their course was dictated on the one hand by political friendship and on the other hand by political antipathy. If that is to be the guiding principle of the party in power we should have no Tariff Commission, and the smaller the body of facts we have the better. But folly is the very essence of such a tariff and disaster its result; and I concede the point that darkness is its best associate and ignorance is its only fortification. I commend the government in proposing this Bill, because it is a specific implementing of a specific promise to the Canadian people. I commend it because it promises to this country that we will endeavour to get method into our business legislation, such as people who succeed introduce into their own business affairs. I think this is only a step. I do not think it will give all the results that some anticipate from it. I know that its difficulties will be much greater than many expect. But I believe that it will give some substantial results. And I believe that the principle embodied here, instead of being combatted should be extended from one department of our legislation to another until we should have more systematic and equitable laws throughout with results more generally suited to the conditions in Canada.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford). Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest and pleasure to my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, in his address in moving the second reading of this Bill. I listened with interest, because I am always anxious to know what an hon. gentleman means by a Bill he has introduced.

I was particularly interested to hear what arguments the Finance Minister could use to justify the Bill. I listened with pleasure to the very clear, simple and excellent speech with which he moved the second reading of this Bill. I am one of those who at all times are willing to hear arguments; I am not anxious to hear arguments surcharegd with hot air from anybody or on any subject. Therefore I would not attach too much importance to the so-called arguments of some hon. gentlemen who have spoken since the Finance Minister on the other side of the House. They have not said much about the Bill, but they have had a lot to say about many other things. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have long been in favour of a statistical department in the Finance Department, well organized, for the purpose of collecting statistics and facts, as hon. gentlemen opposite call them, to afford information to the Finance Minister in compiling a tariff. I think everybody in the House recognizes that the Finance Minister, no matter which party he belongs to, requires all the information he can get when he compiles a tariff. Therefore we are all united on that point. The question is which is the better way to get that information. My own opinion is that the best way to get it is by means of a statistical branch in connection with the Finance Department, or the Customs Department, something like the Insurance branch now belonging to the Finance Department. It has been said by an hon. member opposite, I think the hon. member for St. Antoine Montreal (Mr. Ames), that in 1907 when three ministers of the late government travelled through the country getting information for the purpose of compiling a tariff, their work amounted to a farce, or words to that effect; he said they gathered a lot of material that was absolutely impossible for them to digest. Now one strong argument in favour of a statistical branch in the Finance Department is that it would not take away the purpose the late ministers had in view in travelling through the country to get information. With all due deference to my hon. friends opposite, I think they will find that the people will insist on getting access to the minister himself, that is to say, interested parties will insist on seeing the minister himself. Therefore he will not get rid of the trouble, he will not be able to avoid interviews with various interests, by appointing the proposed Tariff Commission. Nor do I think that he ought to refuse to see directly the various interests particularly interested in the tariff. Now when these three ministers belonging to the late government went through the country they came in personal contact with the people most interested in the tariff; not only that, but they became acquainted with the country through which they travelled, they visited the factories, and they endeavoured to acquire information from the working man and the farmer. Now how many farmers and how many working men will the Finance Minister see if he sits in his office and depends entirely upon the reports of the Tariff Commission? I think, even with the Tariff Commission, it will still be necessary for the Finance Minister to visit various parts of the country and get his information at first hand. But if he had the aid of such a statistical branch in his department as I am advocating, he might be able to get rid of much of this trouble.

The Minister of Finance in introducing his Bill laid stress on the fact that it gave the Tariff Commissioners authority to examine people under oath. That authority could also be given a statistical branch of the Finance Department; to summon witnesses and hear them under oath if they wished, and under section 12 of the Tariff Act, the Governor in Council have that right, now on certain conditions arising. Parliament could easily authorize the Finance Department or any other department to examine witnesses under oath in matters pertaining to the tariff. The hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal, (Mr. Ames), said, and I believe he was correct, that the manufacturers and others who are interested in the tariff would be only too glad to produce their books so as to guide the tariff makers in their work. That argument would apply equally to any proposed statistical branch in the Finance Department. I belive that the officers of such proposed statistical department could travel through the country and get information just as well as the Tariff Commission, and at much less expense. After all, if we come to examine the cost my plan would be far more economical. They might find it advisable to visit the United States. It is a very necessary thing in framing a scientific tariff to ascertain the experience of other countries with which we are competing, both as to labour and material, and as some hon. gentlemen have said, as to transportation also; and all these things could be done by the officers of a statistical branch within the Finance Department.

Now then as to the expense. It is all very fine for hon. gentlemen opposite, with a large surplus at their credit, to say in the words of the girl 'Paw's rich, and Maw don't care.' But there is a vast difference between the proposed Tariff Commission and a statistical branch in the Finance Department or the Customs Department. As to expense it will be a constant source of expense. The expense of the commission itself, that is, the salaries of the three commissioners, would be unimportant in comparison with the vast expense that will be necessarily incurred in the operation of this Tariff Commission. There are secretaries and clerks belonging to the commission, with constant travelling, all of which will amount to a very large expense.

I presume, however, that that matters little to our friends on the other side of the House; we on this side of the House have always endeavoured to be economical.

After all the most important feature of this Bill will be the personnel of the Tariff Commission. My hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) very naturally surmised and suggested that the Tariff Commission was urged upon my hon. friends opposite by the high tariff party. We all know that there is in Canada a class of people who are in favour of a high tariff. Personally I am a moderate tariff man, I am in favour of a moderate tariff. I am in favour of a reasonable protection, but it depends entirely on what you consider a reasonable protection. I can quite imagine that a commission of this kind or a statistical committee attached to the Finance Department, if they properly attended to their duties, could gather a very great deal of information for a minister and for the government. I can quite understand they could do a great deal of good, but I can also understand that they could do a great deal of harm. Hon. gentlemen opposite who are in business know that it would be very easy for any commission to so colour their reports to the Finance Department as to get the Finance Department to increase the tariff on any particular commodity on which they wished it increased. I can see a very grave danger if the surmise of the hon. member for South Wellington is correct that this commission has been dictated by the high tariff class, that the tariff may be raised on a very plausible theory. Every business man knows that it is a simple thing for people compiling statistics to colour the statistics, and if they will only give facts, if the commission is as innocent as it actually looks, then apart from the difference in the expense it could do just as good work as a statistical committee of the Finance Department. It would lack, however, that particular advantage of the other system that the minister himself would have to do a certain amount of travelling throughout the country to gain information. My hon. friends laughed at the old ministers when they compiled the tariff of 1907. Let me remind them for a moment that we sat here last year for three months and heard hon. gentlemen opposite extol to high Heaven that very tariff which my hon. friend who has just sat down said was no good. We heard them extol that tariff and say they did not want any change, that the tariff was absolutely perfect.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Who said that?

Mr. NESBITT. All of you said that without any exception.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. gentleman quote from 'Hansard'?

Mr. NESBITT. I will not bother hunting 'Hansard', my hon. friend knows that all of his friends said that, and said it on the platforms all over the country. First it was: Let well enough alone. Next it was: Where is it leading us, which was the same thing clothed in other words. I wish to say to my hon. friends that the tariff of 1907 compiled by the Hon. Mr. Fielding, was the best tariff ever compiled in Canada and one of the best and sanest tariffs ever compiled in the world.

My hon. friend spoke about the information which the Americans had. That information was not given by the Tariff Commission of the United States, or by the Tariff Board. Both the Tariff Board and the special Tariff Commission of the United States were appointed for the purpose of gleaning information for the Executive of the United States, and it was only last fall that any of that information was given out. It was given to the President first and only very recently, on two schedules, to the Congress of the United States. My hon. friends say they cannot change the tariff until they get the Tariff Commission appointed and get the information. Then will it not be a long time before we have any change? It has taken the Tariff Board of the United States, if I mistake not, two years to make a report on the wool and iron schedules, let alone all the schedules that have to be gone over. My hon. friend who has just sat down told us how Bismarck sat on his throne and looked abroad across the world and saw the United States advancing more rapidly than Germany and so adopted a scientific tariff in Germany. Let me remind my hon. friends that it was only last week or the week before that they had an election in Germany and the socialists gained unprecedentedly and they are in favour of lower tariff. In the United States whichever party wins either the presidential elections or the next congressional elections, will support a lower tariff. Therefore, if there is anything in what my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) says that this Tariff Commision is simply appointed by the high tariff class in this country, there would, in my judgment, be very grave danger. I do not think we should have two classes in this country. I think the government of Canada should be here to serve the interests of the whole people not of any class of the people, and I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, no matter what pressure may be brought to bear upon him, will be above catering to the views of the high tariff party and will make a tariff, whenever it is brought down, that will be just as much in the interests of the farmer and of the working man as in the interests of those who want to make fortunes in a day.

I do not know much about my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White). As I said I was pleased with the way he introduced his Bill. I, of course, know that words sometimes count for very little; some people use words to express their thoughts and others to hide them; I hope my hon. friend is not one of the latter class, and that he will carry out what he told us was the intention of his party. I am strongly in favour of a department within the Finance Department and also of the ministers gathering by themselves for their own use, by contact with the people, all the information that they can gather with reference to the compiling of a tariff.

There are certain errors and anomalies no doubt in the present tariff, but that is a condition which it is impossible to avoid, because changes may take place in a business any day that would make the tariff bear hardly in some direction. But taking it as a whole, I do not think there is any man on either side of this House, who can justly say a word against the present tariff. I am sorry the Minister of Finance was not able to give us some idea of the personnel of this commission, because we could speak very much more intelligently as to the merits of the Bill if we knew from what class of the community these commissioners would be drawn. On a question of this kind you want men of ability, it is true, but you want men of more than ability, you want men of unprejudiced mind, and I need not say that there are few people in this country who have absolutely unprejudiced minds. Even the judges on the bench have to be there sometimes for a number of years before they can look at a question with an unprejudiced mind. Therefore, you want on this commission men of ability and of wideness of business knowledge, and above all, of unprejudiced views, if they are going to serve the purpose which is intended by the Minister of Finance. I would also urge on the minister that when the Bill gets into Committee of the Whole, he will reconsider his intention to appoint a permanent commission. There is no reason in the world why the commissioners should not stay on that board so long as they are giving service, but, on the other hand, if a commissioner be not satisfactory, there should be power in the minister to remove him. Under the wording of the Act as at present, it would require on the part of the Minister of Finance a great deal of force of character to remove any one of these men. We are told that these commissioners are supposed to look into the cost of labour, but, surely, that ought to be the work of the Department of Labour, and if the Department of Labour is doing its duties, and has the statistics it should have, then it ought to be known what is paid for labour in every line of business throughout the country. But, there can be no particular hurry about the passage of this Bill, and I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that now, having introduced it, he should let it stand over until next session so as to allow the different Boards of Trade and other bodies throughout the country to think it over, and to formulate their opinion with regard to the proposal. So far as I am personally concerned, I think it is impossible for the Minister of Finance, or for the government, to have too much information before it in compiling a tariff, if they wish to do justice to the people of the country generally. I repeat that the Minister of Finance would have been more wisely advised had he formed a tariff bureau within his own department, and by means of which I am certain he could compile just as good a tariff as he can by utilizing the services of such a board as this.

Mr. A. S. GOODEVE (Kootenay). The Minister of Finance must be highly gratified at the reception his Bill has received at the hands of the members of the House. From the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) who spoke first for the opposition, to the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) who spoke last, all of them without exception have stated that so far as the Bill itself is concerned, they have little or no fault to find with it. Nearly all the arguments on the opposite side of the House have been based on the supposition of some sinister motive which they fear will be brought into the administration of this law and in regard to the appointment of the commissioners. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) made only two points in connection with the Bill, and in support of one of them he quoted the following from a speech made by the right hon. the Prime Minister:

> My idea of a tariff is one which would give the industries of this country a fair chance and more than a fair chance perhaps, to stand up against competition in countries where it may be the standard of living among the labouring people is lower than in Canada and lower than it ought to be anywhere. That is a reasonable proposition. A permanent tariff commission if established would be the most fitting authority to decide on this point.

Now, if there can be found anywhere a clear cut clean statement of principle in regard to the protection of all the labouring classes of this country, it is to be found in that statement, and yet we find the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) leaving out the true application of these words and endeavouring to make them apply only as between the producers and the consumers of this country. Later on, the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) said:

> If they can have more than a fair chance somebody is going to suffer; it is at the expense of somebody else. At whose expense is it to be? Certainly at the expense of the great consuming masses of this country.

Now, that is a most unfair deduction from the words of the Prime Minister; no greater misstatement could be found anywhere than is to be found in that paragraph, and yet it is upon them that the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) based almost his entire argument.

The right hon. leader of the government clearly and distinctly said that in his opinion the people of Canada, in competition with nations having a lower standard of living and a lower wage scale, should have fair protection and a fair chance to build up their industries; and yet the hon. member deliberately misquoted the application of the principle so clearly laid down. If there is one reason more than another why at this particular time I give this Bill my unqualified support, it is that hon. gentlemen opposite have played with skilled fingers on the instrument to produce discord between the various classes and portions of this Dominion. They have over and over again endeavoured to set the manufacturer against the farmer and one province against another. If there were no other reason, that reason alone would more than justify us in introducing this Bill, because when it comes to be thoroughly understood throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion that there is a commission appointed by the government of Canada, with full authority and power to act independently, to gather statistics of fact, and to collate them, not on behalf of the manufacturer, not on behalf of one class or another, but in all their relationships with each other, it will I believe do more to do away with that feeling of mistrust than any other thing that could possibly be conceived by this government. If there is one thing about which I have had a feeling of disgust since I became a member of this parliament, it has been this, that day after day, as we open our post office boxes, we find there special pleading for certain Bills that are asked for in this House, and that we find our corridors filled with lobbyists making special pleas on behalf of some concessions which they desire to obtain. I venture to say that if we have this independent commission appointed, it will to a very large extent check that practice, because every member of this House will have placed in his hands accurate information on which he may base his judgment. When a member on this side of the House ventured to ask the hon. member for South Wellington whether he was in favour of protection or not, his answer was: 'A tariff for revenue only.' That is not a new term in this House or throughout this country, and for a moment or two I would like to say what I conceive to be the meaning of a tariff for revenue only, and compare it with what we call a protective tariff. The principle of a tariff for revenue only is something like the principle applied at the Donnybrook fair, whereever you see a head hit it—wherever you see a dollar, grab it. If I understand the distinction between the two parties, it is this. While both parties agree that we shall raise the revenues of this country by means of a tariff, those in favour of a tariff for revenue only are men who, disregarding all other interests, disregarding what the effect may be on the industries of the country—on the producer, the consumer, the mechanic, the labourer or the artisan—are prepared to get revenue at any cost and under any conditions, whereas those of us who are protectionists go further and say that it is our duty, in taxing the people, to see that the tariff is laid down equitably as between all classes of the community, and is so applied that every industry in the country is amply protected and nurtured in order that it may increase and grow and prosper.

If I understand it aright, that is the cardinal difference between our friends in opposition and our friends on this side of the House. For that reason we believe that we should give careful consideration to the probable effect of every duty imposed. Knowing the intricacy of making a tariff, probably the most intricate of all the duties of a government, we believe that by gathering all the facts bearing upon the relations between the producer and the consumer, the relations between the trade of this country and the trade of foreign countries, the freight charges between the east and the west, how they apply and modify or increase the amount of protection on any particular article, we should have a thoroughly scientific tariff. The assertion made by hon. members opposite that to say we are in favour of a protective tariff means that we are in favour of an increased duty, can easily be shown to be not in accord with the facts. Over and over again the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) has shown in this House that in the actual amount of taxes taken from the people of Canada there has been less than one per cent of difference between the so-called revenue tariff and the tariff as applied for protective purposes under the Conservative government. So that, taking the facts as they are, we find that we can give a reasonable protection that will build up our industries and develop our home markets without increasing the amount of taxes taken from the people of the Dominion. This is our reason for earnestly desiring that we should have placed in our hands all the facts bearing upon the framing of a tariff. The hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said: You are appointing a commission in order that you may do away with responsible government, and in order that this commission may stand between the Finance Minister or the government and the people. I venture to say that in that, as in his other arguments, the hon. gentleman was far astray. He spent a large portion of his time in reading extracts to show what the duties of a Royal Commission were.

Let me ask the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), what is the attitude of all railway corporations throughout the world to-day? Each of these corporations has a bureau for collecting statistical information. If you were to ask the president of any railway company on what the company is guided in its conduct of the road, he will tell you that it is largely guided by the facts furnished by its statistical bureau. Surely no one in this House will venture to say that the staffs of these bureaus of statistics appointed to collect the facts, are the men who are really managing and regulating the policies of these railway companies.

Another argument advanced is that by the appointment of this commission, we are doing away with constitutional government, and making these Tariff Commissmissioners the real framers of the tariff. Let me give another illustration to show the fallacy of that argument. I had the privilege of listening the other evening to Sir Edmond Byron Walker when he gave a sketch of the operations of the large financial institution of which he is the head. After he had placed before his hearers very clearly some salient facts in connection with the progress of that institution, he said:

> If there is any gentleman present who at any time, when any trade question arises, would like to avail himself of the information possessed by our bureau of statistical information he is welcome to it. By simply sending word we will be pleased to place at his disposal all the facts connected with trade questions.

What was the important point brought out by that statement of Sir Edmond Walker, who is at the head of one of the largest financial institutions in Canada? Sir Edmond realized that no institution could act promptly or formulate any policy with regard to trade unless the facts were in its possession, and he ventured to say that the Bank of Commerce had at its disposition one of the best means of ascertaining all facts in connection with trade and commerce that could be found in the Dominion, but would anybody venture to say that because these banking institutions have each a bureau for gathering statistical facts to enable them to better administer the funds entrusted to their care, the directors were delegating to the men they appointed to collect those statistics the management of these institutions? I do not think any hon. member would have the hardihood to make any assertion of the kind, but hon. gentlemen opposite do not hesitate to take that ground when it enables them to criticise a policy of the government. All that these Tariff Commissioners will be appointed to do is merely to collect and collate all the facts in connection with the various industries of this country. They will then place these facts before the minister, who in turn will submit them to the government and the House. There is a clause providing that, under certain conditions, the members of the commission may withhold secret confidential information obtained by them in the course of their investigation. Every hon. member will realize the necessity of a provision of that kind. Hon. members will see the necessity of reporting the facts to the minister who administers the revenues of this country, and who will use his discretion and judgment in giving these facts to the House. In my opinion this Bill is a step taken in advance legislation, and I am glad that the government have had the courage to implement the promise made in this connection by the right hon. the First Minister. The bringing down by him of this Bill will be a great factor in restoring business confidence throughout all portions of this Dominion.

In the late campaign, I was able, owing to the very unusual and peculiar circumstances to give a unique illustration of how this tariff will work out under certain conditions. It was largely owing to these peculiar conditions that I gained the great majority which I did in the last election. Hon. members who were here last session will remember that in the discussion on reciprocity, the hon. member for Nanaimo and the hon. ex-Minister of Inland Revenue took the position that the proposed reciprocal tariff would be a great advantage to the coal mining industry throughout the Dominion. I took exception to that position, and owing to very unusual and peculiar circumstances which arose in the west, I was able to vindicate the position I took. I would like to cite my experience to the House, in order that hon. members may see the necessity for our having every information possible before making any changes in the tariff. On either flank of the Rocky mountains, according to Prof. Shortt of Nova Scotia, is the largest coal field in the Dominion, if not on the American continent. The largest of these coal areas, 80 per cent, are situated in the riding of Kootenay, which I have the honour to represent. The coal operators took the same view as did the hon. member for Nanaimo and the hon. the ex-Minister of Inland Revenue, namely, that the proposed reciprocal tariff would open to them a large market to the south of the line, and therefore be of great advantage to them. I took the ground, however, judging by past experience, that it was to the interest of Canadian trade as well as the trade of that particular district, that we should manufacture that coal and coke in our own country. During the election, and for several months previously, there had been a strike in that district and the coal mines were not being operated. What was the result? The result was that the Granby smelter, the second largest on the American continent, was shut down; following this, the metalliferous mines closed and 8,000 men were thrown out of employment. I was able to point out to those idle men that the reason these mines were not working was because there was no coal or coke going from east to west. In this great riding of Kootenay we have three railway divisional points, Cranbrook, Nelson and Revelstoke. The railway crews were all idle except a few who were working on a third or half time, because there was no coal or coke going from east to west. Remove the tariff on coke, I pointed out, and allow it to go south instead of east and west, and you will remain permanently idle. That smelter will remain closed, your metalliferous mines will not reopen, and you will have 8,000 or 10,000 men coming in competition with the coal miners, right in the coal district of the Crowsnest Pass.

I will demonstrate that to you. You will remember that Mr. J. J. Hill, the father of this reciprocity movement, bought the control of the Crowsnest Pass Company. He then commenced to ship his coke and coal south. And we found it to be necessary to apply to the provincial government, threatening to put an export duty on coal and coke in order to keep our smelters running. On the face of it, it looked as if the broader market would be a great advantage to our people. But when they realized that the coke going south to the smelters of the United States and the coal to supply the railways of the United States would be hauled, not from the divisional points of Cranbrook, Nelson and elsewhere, but from the divisional points of the American roads, destroying these towns, and closing our mines and smelters, they saw the force of the argument. And the result was, that I received over ninety per cent of the total labouring vote. I give this as an illustration of some of the necessities of looking carefully into the results in all the relations of the tariff.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GOODEVE. When you left the Chair at six o'clock I had just given an illustration of one of the effects of the tariff, and was showing how it was inter-related to so many other industries in the province of British Columbia. I will not attempt to work out in detail the result of the tariff on that particular industry, as my object was simply to make an illustration of the necessity of a commission of this kind in order to ascertain all the facts, and bring them before the House and the people. We have another great industry in our province, namely, zinc and lead. This is probably one of the most technical and complicated of the natural resources we have in the Dominion. They are a class of metals that are difficult to handle, and yet are used in nearly every industry in Canada. We had a clear illustration of that principle a number of years ago, when all the Boards of Trade in the Dominion of Canada met in the provincial House in the city of Toronto, with the president of the Toronto Board of Trade in the chair. At that time we were seeking in British Columbia to obtain a readjustment of the old tariff, and it was pointed out how the whole industry of the manufacture of agricultural implements would be affected by any change in that particular tariff. But the result of our getting together and frankly discussing the entire situation in all its bearings, was that we were able to induce the government to make some slight alteration in the tariff, with the result that there was established in the city of Montreal a large corroding work in which a large amount of capital is invested, and which has been a great employer of labour. Here is one of the natural resources of an outlying province, away out on the Pacific coast, and yet it directly and indirectly affects a great industry in the largest commercial city in the Dominion of Canada. There again is an illustration of the necessity for actual information in regard to these matters which concern the tariff.

Then we have another great natural resource in that province, one that has been recently discussed in this House, I refer to the great lumber industry, the one in which probably more capital is invested than in any other industry in our province, and one which is vital to the prosperity and growth of our province. Now I think every hon. member will admit there has been an effort made by nearly every hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House to try and set the farmer against any protection of that great industry in our province. It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the relation of that industry to the Bill before the House; I merely want to say that every lumberman in the province of British Columbia, yes, every lumberman throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion from Nova Scotia westward, would welcome a thorough investigation into their business, and I believe it could be shown, and would be shown, that it is not only in the interest of this great industry itself, but in the interest as well of the farmers and of all other people in this Dominion, that that industry should receive protection. So along these broader lines, not in any narrow way, but in the very broadest way, we believe this Bill is a great step in the right direction, because we think it will engender a confidence in the minds of all classes of the community. We believe in no other way could the same confidence be engendered in the minds of the people as by the appointment of this independent commission, which would be free from the control of parliament, and would be just as independent as the Railway Commission, which has won the confidence of the people of Canada. It is because I believe also, Mr. Speaker, that it will bring the consumer and the producer together and will thus be in the interest of the worker and the labouring man as well as the manufacturer, that I am strongly in favour of this Bill. I want to say that I have absolutely no sympathy with the little provincials, men whose vision is bounded by the gate posts of their front yard and the pumphandle in their back yard, men who would cut and carve this great Dominion into small sections, divided by schisms, men whose souls are shrunken by the dollars that they would tie around them. We take a broader view of the destiny of this great country. Indeed it is difficult for us to grasp the great future of this wondrous Dominion of ours. In addition to the music caused by the rustling of the golden grain on our wind swept prairies, in addition to the lowing of the kine and the bleating of the sheep on its foothills, we should yet see great factories established in our western districts, making use of our inexhaustible supplies of coal and iron, and yet cheaper raw materials of natural gas and electrical energies of our great water-powers, giving employment to an ever increasing population in varied industries. I call the attention of this House to the fact that there lies in our great west, not only the magnificent coal-bearing strata to which I have referred, but the very cheapest power known in the civilized world to day. We have this great glacier bed producing electricity in abundance, we have natural gas in abundance, we have the iron, we have the coal, we have everything that goes to form the basic necessities for a wonderful manufacturing development. On that ground I appeal to this House, to both sides of this House, in support of this Bill. We should not treat this as a political matter, we should seek the best way of developing every portion of this far-flung empire. On that ground, believing as I do not only in interprovincial, inter-dominion and inter-imperial trade, believing as I do that in working together along the lines outlined by this Bill, we can build up in this great Dominion the brightest gem in the greatest commercial empire the world has ever seen, I shall have much pleasure in supporting this Bill.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, New Brunswick). I do not know whether I would come within the class of the narrow, contracted back yard politicians that my hon. friend (Mr. Goodeve) has been so graphically describing, or whether I would be one of the empire builders that he has spoken of in the latter part of his peroration. But, Sir, unfortunately perhaps for myself, I am unable to arrive at the same conclusion as the hon. gentleman in regard to the value or necessity of this Bill. I think that no person can find fault with the government for attempting to get information on every question which enters into the lives of the Canadian people; and if I believed that this Bill was only for the purpose of getting accurate information on all the great trade questions, I could not find very much fault with it. I am bound to assume that the Minister of Finance is sincere when he tells us that he wants to get information. Perhaps it would not be derogatory to the hon. gentleman—I am sorry he is not in the House at this moment—to tell him that he has not been in public life very long; he does not know the wiles of the deceptive politician, and until we have some evidence to the contrary, it is only fair to say that he is sincere in trying to get the information.

Let us look for a moment at the origin and history of the scheme which has resulted in bringing down this Bill. We had not any difficulty when our friends were in power in getting information on which to frame a Tariff Bill. In 1897 and in 1907 the ministers of the Crown made an itinerary over the Dominion of Canada. They gathered a lot of information, they codified that information, and on that information they framed a Tariff Bill. I remember distinctly that instead of finding fault with these gentlemen for getting the information, fault was found that they were spending too much time over it. But let that be as it will, the late government were able to frame a tariff under which Canada prospered more in the next ten years than she had ever done in all her previous history. If conditions had remained as favourable as they were during those ten years, then I cannot say that there would have been much need of a change. But conditions change in Canada as well as in all other parts of the world, and the time came when the government found it necessary, in the course of eight or ten years more, to make another itinerary of Canada to see what the changed conditions were. Messrs. Fielding and Paterson, with a very able secretary, whom I am sorry to say is not now in the employ of the government, travelled from one end of this country to the other, they obtained further information, and on this further and additional information they framed the Tariff Act of 1907. There were not many changes made, perhaps not as many changes as some of us would have liked to see made; but I maintain that the viciousness which has sprung from the tariff had not commenced to show itself in 1900 or in 1907 as it does at the present day. Therefore, as there are changed conditions, we need a change in the tariff.

It is in the mind of every hon. member in this House, of every thinking man in Canada, that the time has come when there will be a change in our tariff relations. It has been argued here that all over the world where the highest tariffs prevail we have had the greatest prosperity and three-quarters of the speakers on the other side of the House have instanced Germany and the United States as evidence of the greatest prosperity and have ascribed that prosperity to a high protective tariff. If that be true, it is a remarkable thing that in all of these countries a very serious agitation is going on to get a reduction of these high protective tariffs. I spent a few days in Germany last summer and although I was not able to make as extensive economic investigations as I would like, every man I was able to talk with, and I am sorry their number was not large, claimed that the taxation was something terrific, the cost of living almost beyond endurance and what with the taxation and the army and navy they could not tell what was going to happen. It was prophesied to me by many people that the result of the next election would show a wonderful increase in the representation of the Socialists, and the elections have shown this prophecy to have been well founded. We know that the doctrine of the Socialists is not only to get rid of the army and navy expenditure, but to get rid of high protection as well, because high protection in Germany is producing to a very great extent the same results as it is producing in the United States and in Canada.

I come now to the greatest example of high protection the world has seen, the United States. I do not think my hon. friends the high protectionists of Canada will claim that the great development in the United States is altogether due to high protection. The United States would have developed in the last 50 years if they had not had a tariff at all. The very richness of their soil, the prodigality of their natural products, the great influx of population from all over the world, naturally make the United States great. The United States would have become a great country without a tariff. If they had resorted to direct taxation, they would have had an enormous prosperity, but they would not have had the conditions that they have to-day, the trusts, mergers and combines, with which they are now contending. The result of this high protection has been to create these trusts, mergers and combines, and now we have a revulsion of feeling, almost amounting to a revolution in the United States against the condition of affairs which the tariff has created. A year and a half ago when elections were held over a great portion of the United States, the high protection party was swept out of power from end to end of that country. It is hard to tell what may take place in the next elections owing to conflicting interests, all we have to do is to read the papers and there we will see that there is the same unrest in the United States to-day as there was two years ago and I do not think a person can be blamed for prophesying that no matter which party may come into power as the result of the next election there will be a reduction of tariffs and the voice of the people will be a protest against the high taxation under which they are groaning now. Take any newspaper in the United States, take the Boards of Trade, take any expression of public opinion and there you will find simply one outcry against the enormous cost of living.

Coming to the Dominion of Canada, we find exactly the same condition of affairs, we find the same outcry going up from the people against the high cost of living. Who are better able to judge the political and the public barometer than our protectionist friends or the Manufacturers' Association? We find that away back in 1909 the Manufacturers' Association at their annual conference first intimated or proposed this idea of a Tariff Commission and a resolution was passed at that meeting embodying this doctrine and suggesting that the government should appoint such a commission. We heard very little about that Tariff Commission for the next year or two. It is true that just before the election the right hon. the leader of this House (Mr. Borden) advocated it as a plank in his platform. But let me show you what was the attitude of the gentlemen who were the originators and the fathers of this scheme, who have urged it along and who will benefit by it. When you learn the views of these gentlemen you will not have much difficulty in arriving at a conclusion as to who is behind this scheme and whom it will benefit and what the result and general scope of the investigations of this commission will be.

I find that at the meeting of the Manufacturers' Association held in Toronto in October last this matter was referred to by practically every speaker who discussed tariff questions. I have no quarrel with the Manufacturers' Association as individual members of the community. They are gentlemen who are working in their own interests and when working in their own interests they probably believe they are working in the interests of Canada. They are controlling large industries, they are doing a great work for Canada, and I do not wish to say anything derogatory to the individual members. I do, however, say and I think I shall not be contradicted that the one aim and object of the Manufacturers' Association as an association is to secure as much protection as they possibly can for their manufactured products and to obtain their raw materials free of duty, wherever it is possible to do so. That I take as being the aim and object of the Manufacturers' Association of Canada. This matter was referred to by President Rowley in his address. He concludes that address as follows:

> No matter what the cost may be, and no matter whose toes may be trodden upon, let us first get our tariff right and fair——

That is right and fair from the manufacturers' standpoint.

> —then let us ensure its stability, making from time to time only such slight modifications as the changed conditions of the country demand. As manufacturers we should be able, we should be willing to view the creation of a Tariff Commission with complacency; so I hope we will all facilitate this work as far as we can, by giving such data as we are able to supply.

You do not find any protest on the part of the Manufacturers' Association. The president says: Let us get our tariff right and fair and as manufacturers we can view the workings of this commission with complacency. But that is mild compared with statements made by the chairman of the Tariff Branch of the commission, Mr. Russell, of the Russell Motor Car Company of Toronto. Mr. Russell makes a very exhaustive report on practically every branch of the Canadian manufacturing industries, and when he comes to this particular branch he makes some remarks which I think are of more than ordinary importance when we consider the manner in which certain gentlemen on the other side of the House have received the suggestions or perhaps stronger terms which we have used against this Bill. The right hon. leader himself, I thought with more heat than was really necessary or perhaps entirely proper in view of the splendid work which the Manufacturers' Association did for him in September last, took particular pains to disavow any connection with the Manufacturers' Association and even went so far as to say that only one member of that association had ever spoken to him about it and that member was opposed to it.

Well, we have to take the word of the right hon. gentleman, but I would like to know if the Minister of Finance would pledge his word to the same extent and I would like to know if the Minister of Trade and Commerce would make the same declaration as the Prime Minister has made. Does the Conservative party expect the people to believe that the Manufacturers' Association are not the originators of this scheme? Are not the men who are behind the Manufacturers' Association the men who are pushing this legislation along and are they not the men who will benefit by it? Why, you only have to take the history of the Conservative party since 1878, and the question is answered. The Manufacturers' Association and the high protectionists are the men who want this legislation and it is to pay them for their magnificent support in September last, and to carry out the principle advocated by them in all these years that this Bill is being promulgated. I make bold to say that on account of that very thing, more than anything else, I am opposed to this Bill. The Minister of Finance told us, and the supporters of the government have reiterated the statement, that it was never intended that the commission would have anything to do with making laws, and that the information they collect will be handed to the government and the government will frame the tariff as the government sees fit. That is true, taking the literal wording of the Bill, but what are the views of Mr. Russell, Chairman of the Tariff Branch of the Manufacturers' Association? I quote from 'Industrial Canada' for November, 1911, the words of Mr. Russell:

> Usually commissions which have been appointed have been appointed for administrative work, for carrying out administration. This commission has to do an entirely different thing. It has to do no administration work but law-making work, the actual making of the laws; the making of the laws for which the parliament of Canada will be responsible. The composition of that Tariff Commission and its ability to obtain information, the use which will be made of that information, whether public or private, and all that sort of thing is going to be of tremendous importance to the whole of Canada and to the manufacturng interests perhaps specially, and I think it is of tremendous importance that our tariff committee for this coming year shall be seized with the importance of that and prepare their recommendations accordingly.

Well, Sir, when you read that statement of the chairman of the Tariff Branch of the Manufacturers' Association, you have the whole thing in a nutshell; you have the very thing that the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) contended for; you have the very thing for which the Liberal party of Canada is contending today, and you have the pith of the reasons why we are asked to pass this legislation. Does anyone mean to tell me that the government are going to appoint a commission which will cost from $50,000 to $100,000 a year and keep this commission doing nothing else but investigating? Remember that this commission is only going to make such investigation as the Minister of Finance requires them to make and that when the Minister of Finance asks this commission to make an investigation into the cost of production of any article in Canada and they submit a report of their findings, does any man mean to tell me that the government will not accept the findings of that commission in framing their tariff? Why did the government appoint this commission, why did the government give this commission such powers, why spend all this money on it if they do not accept their recommendation? No matter how you work it out, indirectly this commission is to make the tariff law of Canada.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Will the hon. gentleman show me any clause in the Bill which authorizes the commission to recommend any particular line of action?

Mr. CARVELL. I am surprised that my hon. friend asked me that question. I tell my hon. friend that section 4 of this Bill provides what are the duties of the commission and the hon. gentleman cannot show me where that commission has power to make one bit of investigation except under the direction and at the instigation of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell), has not answered my question. The hon. gentleman said that if this commission made a recommendation the government would be bound to follow it, and I say there is no clause in the Bill which provides for any such thing.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not think my hon. friend does his intelligence the justice which it demands. In the first place I never said so. I said that no man could conceive of a government going to all that expense, and all this trouble unless they were to accept the findings of this commission, and I repeat it. And my hon. friend knows, and I repeat it, that they have no power to investigate anything except what they are directed to investigate by the Minister of Finance, or by the government, and my hon. friend knows they will make no investigation into anything only what they are told to investigate. I go further and I say that my hon. friend ought to know that they will only investigate that which the government wants them to investigate, and if the government wants to put a duty on a certain article they will send the commission after it, and they will be pretty liable to get the evidence which, in their opinion, will justify them in raising the duty. I believe this Bill should not be adopted because it is misleading; it will not produce the results expected of it in the way of taking evidence. The whole object of this Bill and the only powers conferred on the commission under this Bill are to investigate into cost, price, transportation, labour, &c., when so directed by the minister. My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), spoke last night on this question, and he is a gentleman whose honesty when discussing tariff matters I always admire. The hon. member (Mr. Ames) told the whole story. He said that these gentlemen need not necessarily be Conservatives in order to have a place on this commission, but he said they must be high protectionists.

Mr. AMES. I beg your pardon; the words 'high protectionists' were not used by me. I said they must be in sympathy with the well known sentiment of the present government.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend will not quarrel with me very much when I say that that means that they must be protectionists.

Mr. AMES. Yes, but I did not say anything about high protectionists.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames), said they are going to appoint a commission of protectionists, and he says this commission will not have any trouble in getting evidence, because, he says: 'we will furnish the evidence.' Well, that is just what we object to. When the minister sends out the commission to investigate the cost of boots and shoes, of course 'we' will furnish the evidence, and 'we' will take mighty good pains to see that no evidence gets before the commission except the evidence which justifies either a retention of the present duties or an increase as high as my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) can get it. That is the kind of evidence that this commission will get, and that is one reason why I object to it. I object to it again, because of the secret clauses in it. I do not believe the present parliament has any right to pry into a man's private affairs. The result of this will be that nine-tenths of the evidence which is adduced before this commission—because remember the only evidence we will have in the ordinary working out of it will be the evidence of the manufacturers themselves—will be evidence which the protectionists and the protectionists commission will consider as confidential, and therefore the public will not be allowed to have it.

The result will be that we shall have findings by this commission, but we shall not have the evidence on which those findings are based. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), last evening said that we on this side of the House should welcome this commission as a means of getting information, but in the working out of this scheme, we shall have very little information. There will be confidential information given to the commission, but we shall have only the conclusions of the commission without seeing the information on which its conclusions have been reached. There has been considerable talk here about the necessity for information. I do not think anybody denies the necessity for information, but I do not believe there is much necessity for more information than we have at the present time. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about this haphazard tariff; but this haphazard tariff has got along pretty well so far as Canada is concerned, and the people of Canada have got along pretty well under that tariff. If you went to-day to the Departments of Trade and Commerce, Finance and Customs, I believe that you would get pretty nearly as much information as you would require in order to come to a pretty good conclusion as to what is necessary in framing a tariff for any branch of Canadian industry. I wonder if the hon. member for St. Antoine thinks that it is necessary to appoint a Tariff Commission to tell the government whether the duty of 30 per cent on boots and shoes should be retained in the interest of this country, or raised to 35 or 40 per cent, when the fact is known to every man who thinks in Canada that the hides from which leather for those boots and shoes is made comes into this country free of duty. We had the admission of the hon. member for St. Antoine in this House the other evening that with a preference of only 5 per cent the Canadian manufacturers of boots and shoes could wrest the trade of Australia away from the United States; and then he tells us that we cannot make boots and shoes in Canada to compete with those from the United States without 30 per cent protection. Does he think the government wants further information on that point? If they ask the hon. member for St. Antoine, they will get all the information they want.

Mr. AMES. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the boot and shoe manufacturers of Canada were never able to persuade the Conservative government that they needed over 25 per cent protection, but that the Liberal government gave them 30 per cent without their asking for it?

Mr. CARVELL. I was not a member of that government, and, therefore, I cannot answer my hon. friend's question; but I can hardly believe it—I do not say that offensively. If the hon. gentleman wants us to believe that the boot and shoe manufacturers of Canada never asked for more protection during the days of the Conservative government, they were a different class of people from the men who are manufacturing boots and shoes in Canada to-day. Now, my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) this afternoon stated that he was not a high protectionist, but a low protectionist. Well, I have always a great deal of confidence in anything which that hon. gentleman says, because in my judgment he is one of the ablest men and possesses one of the best reasoning minds in this House. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie does not require information from a Tariff Commission to show him that the time has come when the duty on farm machinery should be reduced, because last year he introduced a resolution into this House, and spoke upon it on more than one occasion, declaring that the time had come when the duty on agricultural implements should be reduced. Do the other hon. gentlemen from western Canada want any further evidence? The manufacturers of farm machinery in Canada last year not only supplied two-thirds or more of the home market, but exported between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 of farm machinery to all the civilized countries of the globe, in competition with the whole world. In the face of that fact, do these hon. gentlemen want any further evidence from an expert Tariff Commission to enable them to decide whether the duty on farm machinery should be retained at 17½ per cent, or reduced? I will tell you in what respect I think the evidence of an expert Tariff Commission will be useful to our hon. friends opposite. The primary object of this measure is, I believe, to get at just such wavering minds as the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and other members from the western portion of this Dominion. In 1907 thirteen hon. members supporting the Conservative party did not want any further evidence to convince them that the time had arrived when the duty should be taken off agricultural implements, and I see two or three of those gentlemen before me to-night. So firmly were they convinced of the necessity of that demand that on the third reading of the Tariff Bill they moved an amendment, and compelled their own leader to vote against it, in order to put themselves on record; and these men have gone through western Canada from that day to this parading the fact that they had voted for the reduction or abolition of the duty on farm machinery. These hon. gentlemen did not want any further evidence in 1907; the hon. member for Portage la Prairie did not want any further evidence last year; but the government wants further evidence, because the government wants to show these men that they are wrong—and see how simple it is. The government appoints this commission; it hands over to it a certain statement; it says we want you to investigate the question of the duty on farm machinery, and give us the evidence that will convince the hon. member for Portage la Prairie that he is wrong; and in all probability they will produce the evidence. That is one of the reasons I am opposing this Bill. But it may be said that I am imputing bad faith, that I am drawing conclusions not warranted by the facts. I say I am not.

That is the logical conclusion of this Bill which is forced upon the government by the Manufacturers' Association. It is the logical conclusion of this Bill which only gives the commissioners the right to get information when directed to do so by the Finance Minister. It is the logical conclusion of a Bill which only enables the tariff commissioners to get the sort of information the Finance Minister may require. It these commissioners were at liberty to gather information at their own discretion and of their own free will, without dictation from anybody, one of the great objections to this measure would be removed. But if they had such power, that would defeat the very purpose of this legislation, because we might get a man on that commission who would have sufficient industry to do some work on his own initiative and who would summon before the commission parties who would not give the kind of evidence which the government required. Therefore the government have taken precaution to muzzle their own appointees so that they will not be able to do anything except what they are directed to do.

Do the government want information from an expert tariff commission to tell them whether it is necessary to grant a bounty to the manufacturers of iron in this country, after these manufacturers have received some $15,000,000 in bounties in the last 15 or 18 years? Surely not. Do the people of this country believe that the iron and steel industry needs a bounty? I am not going to talk bounties now because we shall probably have an opportunity later on to discuss them.

Mr. AMES. What does your hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) say?

Mr. CARVELL. I have no care for the opinions of any man on earth on this question. I am giving my own. Let me tell you, Sir, that when the Dominion Iron people were trying to get the bounties renewed last year, their great plea was that by the reciprocity agreement they were going to lose eight cents per ton on coal and therefore ought to be recouped by a duty on steel rods. Well, the duty on coal was not removed, yet they are coming here asking the government to make them a present of a half a million or a million dollars more in the shape of a bounty. Do my friends from western Canada, who are not directly interested in the manufacture of iron and steel, want any evidence to convince them that a bounty is unnecessary? I should say not.

I come to another item. I think it was the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) who wanted evidence regarding the cement industry. I am surprised that there should be a man in Canada who wants further evidence in order to come to a conclusion as to whether or not the duty should be retained on cement, after the evidence given by Sir Sanford Fleming during the last eight or nine months. Sir Sanford Fleming gave evidence which was incontrovertible. He proved that some shrewd capitalists bought up practically all the cement industries in the country for $12,000,000, merged them into a combine, issued $7,000,000 of bonds, and $10,000,000 of preferred stock, and placed that stock on the market at par. They paid for the property and had $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 to the good, then they issued $13,000,000 of common stock, which is now selling at 28 cents on the dollar.

Mr. EDWARDS. How much did the Liberal party propose to reduce that duty by the reciprocity agreement?

Mr. CARVELL. Eight cents per barrel.

Mr. EDWARDS. How does that compare with the duty imposed by the United States?

Mr. CARVELL. It brings it to about the same.

Mr. EDWARDS. I beg your pardon, it did not.

Mr. CARVELL. If that came from any other hon. gentleman, I would ask your ruling Mr. Speaker, but as I do not care what the hon. member for Frontenac may say, I shall not ask him to withdraw it.

But hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that they want further evidence on the question of cement.

Does it not, I would ask, appeal to the intelligence of every one, that when you can bring cement from England, Germany or Belgium and lay it down at any Canadian seaport or lake port at 50 cents per barrel cheaper than you can buy it from the manufacturing industry in Canada, and when you can go to any of the American lake ports and buy cement there 50 cents cheaper than you can in Canada, and when you have in the freight from the seaboard or lakeport all the protection that you can need—is it necessary to have a Tariff Commission to tell us whether the duty ought to be retained on cement or not? That is about as preposterous as the argument of the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) about the duty on boots and shoes.

Another objection I have to this Bill, which is as vital as any of the others I have enumerated, is that it does not provide for any investigation into the capital stock of any of those companies engaged in manufacturing. Take the cement industry as an example. Let us suppose that this Tariff Commission is going to investigate the cement industry. They will go to the cement combine and ask how much it costs to make a barrel of cement. They will ask that combine to produce its books and we will suppose that the combine gives correct answers. Let us suppose that the combine gives correct information and full information regarding the cost of transportation and the other expenses that enter into the cost of production, the commission will then be met by this plea on behalf of the cement company: You have no right to reduce the duty because if you do we shall not be able to pay dividends. We have to pay interest on the bonds, dividends on the preferred stock, and we ought to pay dividends on the common stock. But if you reduce the duty, we shall not be able to pay dividends on the preferred stock much less on the common stock; and the Tariff Commission will report that it would be an injustice to reduce the duty on cement. But, there is one thing, on which the commission will have no evidence whatever and on which they will not have the power to obtain evidence, and that is as to the amount of water in the capital stock. They will not be able to determine whether the $13,000,000 common stock is all water, besides $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 of preferred stock. The result will be that this commission will submit a report to the government, not based on the real facts at all. I would be glad if any hon. member will show me where, in the four corners of this Bill, this commission has the power to inquire into the capitalization of any company and ascertain how much is cash, and how much water and on what amount of capital the company ought to pay dividends. Without that power the commissioners might as well be kicking their heels around Sparks Street as trying to investigate any combine.

For these reasons I am opposed to this Bill. The only possible excuse for it is to furnish the government with some pretext for making the protective features of the tariff still more protective.

There cannot be any other reason for it. I oppose it because this body has not sufficient investigating power; it has no initiative. These commissioners can only investigate what they are told to investigate, and have no power to institute investigations of their own and learn the conditions of any branch of trade except those which they are directed to investigate. Their conclusions must of necessity be incomplete and inefficient, and must be an unsafe basis for action by the government. Above all things I oppose this measure because, in my opinion, no matter what may be the avowed intention, the logical result, the necessary, the only logical result, will be to foist upon the people of Canada a higher protection than that under which we are groaning at the present time.

Mr. J. A. M. AIKINS (Brandon). Mr. Speaker, I had always assumed that Don Quixote was the fantastical creation of a vivid imagination, nothing real about him, there may, perhaps be some allegory in it. Had the author lived now, he might have applied his idea of Don Quixote to hon. gentlemen opposite. They have raised in their imaginations ghosts, spectres and bugaboos in respect of this Bill, and, having raised them, they are prepared to overthrow them. It is stated of Don Quixote that on one occasion when he was riding with Sancho Panza and looked out upon the plains, and saw about thirty substantial windmills, he said to his companion, 'Providence directs our efforts better than we ourselves could have wished. Look yonder, friend Sancho Panza; there are at least thirty outrageous giants whom I intend to encounter, and, having deprived them of life we will enrich ourselves with the spoils, for they are our lawful prize and the extirpation of that cursed brood will be an acceptable sacrifice to heaven,' Sancho Panza tells him of his mistake, but his ears are closed. He mounts his steed, couches his lance and rushes on to overthrow these enemies of his imagination. His lance is splintered against the substantial mills, and he and his horse thrown to the ground. So hon. gentlemen opposite have been attacking creatures of their own imagination, and with similar result. They have assumed, as the hon. member for Carlton, N. B. (Mr. Carvell) assumes, that there are things hidden away in the Bill, which he admits he cannot find there, but which he supposes must be intended. One fantastic enemy raised by their imagination is that the Bill means a delegation to the commission of the authority, and responsibility of the Finance Minister and the government and parliament to decide on questions of taxation, and the tariff. Another bugaboo is that this means the encouragement of combines, another that behind it all is the Manufacturers' Association. Another ghost is that all that the government wants is something to bolster up a higher tariff, and more protection for the manufacturer. Seeing these things, they mount their dessicated steed, and, raising their paper shields they rush with their couched lance to overthrow these spectral enemies. And what will be the result? Instead of meeting these creatures of their imagination, they will meet facts. That fact that the Bill is conceived with the bona fide intention of benefiting all the people. That the object of the Bill is to ascertain facts to get at the truth of things; and they will find their lances broken against these facts, and themselves overthrown by the truth.

There gentlemen should have no doubt about what is in the Bill or its purpose for the honest Sancho Panza on this side of the House the Minister of Finance (Mr. White, Leeds), and the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), have told them of its purpose and of their mistake. But they persist in their attack, and the result will be that they will be unhorsed and their lances broken, and they will lie breathless upon the ground.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Never breathless.

Mr. AIKINS. No, never breathless. I take the expression back and apologize to hon. gentlemen opposite. They are never breathless. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have told hon. gentlemen on the other side that the purpose of the Bill is to ascertain the fact of the cost of production of commodities at home and abroad, and other facts. The hon. member who has just spoken, says that the inquiry is to be limited, and that the commissioners cannot inquire into such things as the capitalization of the companies. If the hon. gentlemen will look at the last two clauses of section — of the Bill, he will find the following:

All conditions and factors which affect and enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumer in Canada.

What does that include? It includes the amount of capital——

Mr. CARVELL. No, the cost of production, not the capitalization.

Mr. AIKINS. I presume that the capitalization of the company, the capital invested in it, will be a factor in determining the cost of production.

Mr. CARVELL. So do I.

Mr. AIKINS. Look further, and you find this provision:

Generally all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries.

We have been told by the right hon. the Premier and the Minister of Finance, that, in order to ascertain the facts broadminded, virile men will be appointed, men capable and experienced in investigations, men capable of ascertaining facts, analysing, and systematizing them, report them to the government and the House, and the House will give them to the people. For nothing will satisfy the people except full information. The safety of democratic legislation lies in publicity. So the hon. minister has said frankly that what is aimed at is to ascertain the facts and he will submit the facts to the government, the House, and the people. It is objected that the Bill says the commissioners are also to submit their 'results.' 'Who sticks in the letter sticks in the bark.' And what are their results? Simply the facts they have ascertained. Nowhere in the Bill is it stated that the board to be appointed is to submit its opinion and recommendations and suggestions to the minister, to the government, or to the House, and upon the facts so ascertained and reported is to be based a tariff which is to govern the trade of Canada. A tariff is essential and necessary. For the country is committed to the principle of protection.

We must have a protective tariff. I am well aware that some years ago hon. gentlemen opposite and their predecessors did not have that idea. For instance, at the Liberal convention in 1893 we find the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier saying:

But I appeal to your judgment in the face of the experience of the last fifteen years under the system which was introduced by the Conservative government which was dubbed the National Policy to say if that system is not vicious in principle, iniquitous in its terms and dangerous in its consequences. I say that it is vicious in principle. I want to know—and I put the question so as to be heard through the length and breadth of this country—by virtue of what principle will you tax a man to enrich his neighbour? By virtue of what principle will you tax the farmer in order to give work to the workingman? On what principle will you tax the workingman in order to give better prices to the farmer?

A little further on he stated:

I submit to you that the ideal fiscal system is the British system of free trade. Sir, my loyalty, as I have stated, does not ooze from the pores of my body, but I do want to go for an example to the mother country, and not to the United States, much as I respect and love the people on the other side of the line. I say the policy should be a policy of free trade, such as they have in England, but I am sorry to say that the circumstances of the country cannot admit, at present, of that policy in its entirety. But I do propose to you that from this day henceforward it should be the goal to which we aspire.

Three years after that the right hon. gentleman and his party attained power, and what happened then? Did they adopt free trade as it was in England? They adopted the policy that was dubbed the National Policy, and the country has lived under that policy to the present day. It is true that the right hon. leader of the opposition and his friends recently endeavoured to depart from that policy, and they have been corrected for it. So we may take it as a fact that the settled policy of Canada is a policy of protection. As other young nations have prospered under such a policy, as Germany and the United States have prospered under it, so is Canada prospering under it. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Carvell) has declared that Canada is prosperous. Why? Because of the protective policy. Now if a protective policy is right, and we believe it is right, we must see to it that the protection is a reasonable one. I believe that every supporter of the government in this House is in favour of a reasonable policy of protection. They do not want a high protection, but they want some measure of protection, and if it is necessary to have a tariff it must be a sane tariff. In order to have a sane tariff it is necessary to know the facts. I think I may state it as a principle that a protective tariff that will be justified by the country must be one which, in respect to the various commodities which are produced in Canada, either largely or entirely from our own raw material, will be based on the cost of the production of the article imported, the cost of its transportation to Canada plus the duty, equalling the cost of production in Canada plus a reasonable profit to manufacturers. Now what does such a principle involve? It involves the necessity of an inquiry into the cost of production at home and abroad, the necessity of an inquiry into the transportation rates, into the capitalization of great companies, into the cost of labour, and all other things which go to make up the equation I have mentioned.

If that be necessary, we must have capable men and experienced men to make that inquiry. It has been suggested by an hon. member on the other side that it was the duty of the Finance Minister to visit the factories and industrial centres, and find out for himself how matters stand. Imagine a minister visiting all those factories to find out what was going on; imagine him attending all the labour congresses, all the farmers' conventions, in order to ascertain their wishes and their views. What would happen in his department while he was gone? Already the ministers of this government have too much work on their hands, so much that it is impossible for them to look after the details of their offices; and yet this hon. gentleman proposes to throw upon their shoulders the additional duty of visiting all the manufacturing establishments in this country. I think the true solution of this question lies in the establishment of the commission that is proposed by this Bill. It will be necessary for the government to ascertain the facts in order that they may formulate a policy based thereon. It will not do for the farmer to say that he must be protected to the detriment of his fellow citizens, or for the labourer to say that he must be protected to the exclusion of all others, or for the manufacturer to say the same thing. This Tariff Commission must ascertain just what facts are causing the contention of each class. If the tariff is to be so arranged that important object which should claim the attention of this Commission, that the cost of the production of the article in the foreign country, with the cost of transportation to Canada plus the duty, is to equal the cost of production in Canada plus a reasonable profit to the producer, if then that point is departed from downwards, the result will be that the Canadian producer will lose the Canadian market, the labouring man will lose an opportunity for employment in Canada at fair wages and the manufacturer will have to go out of business. On the other hand, if the tariff is raised beyond that point, there will shortly arise what the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) described as informal trusts and combines, which are things not to be desired. The hon. gentleman said that they had already arisen. Perhaps they have, but why have they arisen? Because the tariff has not been properly adjusted, because it is not correct in principle. If they have arisen they have arisen under the administration of the late government. But a proper tariff will correct those evils, will prevent the origination of combines. Therefore, I say it is very desirable that the government should ascertain all the facts, obtain all the information possible, on which to base a sane tariff, and such a tariff will undoubtedly correct the irregularities and discrepancies which are now complained of. We are hearing complaints from the farmers of this country, we are hearing complaints from the western farmers that the tariff bears unequally upon them, and I am inclined to think that it does. But I am pleased to have the assurance of some members of the government that one of the first things that will be done by the Tariff Commission will be to ascertain the facts concerning the condition of the agriculturists in Canada. If that is done, I feel confident that better conditions may be brought about for the farmer, that the interests of the employed will be conserved without prejudice to the employer, that the interests of the manufacturer will be safeguarded without any detriment to the workingman or the farmer. All these various interests must be considered in order to frame a tariff that will bear equally upon all classes of our population. If a proper tariff is obtained protecting properly the farmer, the industrial labourer and the manufacturer our country will prosper and many people will not have to resort as they did before 1879 to the soup kitchen for their existence.

Mr. EDWARDS. I wish to direct the attention of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) to page 2495 of 'Hansard', January, 1911, which contained the speech of Hon. Mr. Fielding with regard to this reciprocity agreement. I asked the hon. member: How much did the Liberal party propose to reduce the duty on cement by the reciprocity agreement? His answer was, 8 cents. I said next: How did that compare with the duty on cement imposed by the United States government? His answer was it made it equal. I said no, it did not.

Under the reciprocity agreement I want to refer the hon. member to the page already quoted where the minister says that under the reciprocity agreement the United States tariff will be 8 cents. The rate proposed by Canada will be 11 cents. The reduction proposed by Canada was 1½ cents. I ask the hon. gentleman to take that into consideration along with his statements in answer to my questions a while ago and see if he feels justified in the heat he displayed and the rather discourteous manner in which he referred to myself.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend asked about coal, and I said 8 cents.

Mr. AIKINS.

Mr. EDWARDS. I was not talking about coal, I was talking about cement.

Mr. CARVELL. I was talking about coal, he asked the American rate, and I said it was the same, that it would bring it to the same.

Mr. EDWARDS. 'Hansard' to-morrow will show your position to be even more ridiculous than ever.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I heard the question put by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), and I am positive that the question could only have related to the proposed reduction of the duty on coal, under the proposed reciprocity agreement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). It does not do to say oh, oh. The hon. member was talking about coal when the hon. member for Frontenac put the question.

Mr. CARVELL. I was talking about coal.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina). It was not my intention to take any part in this debate, but after some of the views which have been expressed with reference to this Bill for the appointment of a Tariff Commission, I feel I would not be doing my duty to myself or to my constituents if I did not discuss for a few moments some of these questions. I was not surprised to hear the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) advocating the appointment of a Tariff Comission, or advocating a protective tariff in this country. This is the same hon. member who, last year, when the reciprocity proposals were before this House, a measure which presented to the people of western Canada at least, a measure of tariff relief, of freer trade and new markets, said that if the reciprocity agreement went through it was one bulwark of the grand old doctrine of protection gone. I am not surprised that he is in favour of a Tariff Commission which is designed to get excuses to increase the tariff instead of reducing it.

I was more surprised when I heard the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) who is a friend of mine, and whose friendship I hope always to retain, advocating the doctrine of protection in this House this afternoon. I am unable to understand as a western man how any man in this parliament who represents a western constituency can advocate protection. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) was the gallant champion of the farmers' rights in this country. He was the man who moved for the reduction of duties on agricultural implements and at the same time, when the reciprocity agreement was before the House and the country, an agreement which included the reduction of the duty on agricultural implements, was one of the most ardent opponents of that agreement. Hon. members must be judged by their actions rather than by their words. I was not so much surprised at the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins) to whose addresses I always listen with a great deal of pleasure, as they are full of poetry, full of eloquence, and whom I am glad to follow in most things except politics. But I apply to him the same remarks as I have applied to the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, how any man representing a constituency in western Canada with the economic conditions now existing there can stand here and advocate the doctrine of a high protective tariff, I cannot very well understand, and I think I know something about the economic conditions that exist at least in Saskatchewan and in part of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. STAPLES. Who advocated a high protective tariff?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend has heard what I have to say, I say again that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and the hon. member for Brandon have to-day advocated the maintenance of a protective tariff in Canada.

Mr. STAPLES. You said a high protective tariff?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). You can take that out of it if you like, and I have no doubt my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) is prepared to advocate the same views as the hon. member for Portage la Prairie. These hon. members during the late parliament and the parliament before, were the most ardent advocates of the reduction of the duties on agricultural implements and yet when the reciprocity proposals came before this House and the country every one of them, when they had a chance of supporting a specific reduction, opposed that particular agreement. That is the position they are in to-day and these gentlemen, ever since I have been in western Canada, have gone through that country stating that the Liberal party had never reduced the tariff and that the Conservative party in western Canada was the party in favour of a low tariff. I have heard these gentlemen say that on the platform. I would support the Liberal policy to-day as during the past few years, if for nothing else than for the reduction of tariff they made in connection with the British preference. That was a substantial reduction in the tariff. The Conservative party has for years been directly opposed as shown by their speeches and votes in this House, to the British preference. At the same time, during the recent election, they shouted loyalty from the housetops and said that we in the west would interfere with the British preference because we wanted to trade more freely with the United States. They say the Liberal party never reduced the tariff and there is no difference in the policies of the parties with respect to the tariff. Every member of this House who is familiar with the records of the Department of Trade and Commerce knows that the average rate of duty on goods dutiable and free entering Canada in 1896 was about 19 per cent, whereas in the past few years under the Liberal administration it has been about 15 per cent. You say that means nothing to the consumers? I say that during the fifteen or sixteen years of the Liberal administration, it saved the people of this country $100,000,000 as compared with what they would have paid if the old Conservative tariff of 1894 had remained in force.

The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) referred to cement this afternoon and he said that the reason for the difference in price of cement in western Canada as compared with Ontario is the excessive freight rates. The hon. member for North Grey was in a measure correct. There is a large difference in the price caused by the excessive freight rates we pay on cement entering western Canada. But I call attention to this fact that in western Ontario to-day the farmers and the contractors, every consumer, is paying for cement $1.75 per barrel whereas in Buffalo directly across the line, the price is $1.25. What is the cause of that? It is not freight rates, it is that immense cement merger which I believe was one of the greatest steals ever perpetrated in Canada, which has made a millionaire of one man, Max. Aitken, has enabled him to go to the old country, to get a seat in the House of Commons and obtain a knighthood.

And that was all done by the tariff. If these so-called lords of high finance sitting in Montreal can purchase cement plants throughout Canada for twelve million dollars, capitalize them for eighteen million dollars and put the rake-off of six million dollars in their pockets, who is going to pay for all that watered stock. It is the man who buys the cement, the man who wants to put a cement floor in his stable that pays for that over-capitalization. And Sir, I say that is caused by the protective tariff on cement.

But somebody will say to me: what is your position on the tariff; you are a moderate protectionist. Well, I do not acknowledge the name of protectionist at all; I have always supported a tariff for revenue, and I do not believe in framing a tariff from the standpoint of protection. I believe that the tariff of this country, particularly on the necessaries of life should be reduced. I do not want to see it wiped off altogether, but I say: reduce it gradually. I am not an enemy of the Manufacturers' Association, nor of any manufacturer in this country, but I say there are a great many manufacturing industries in Canada that could reasonably stand a small reduction in the tariff at the present time, and cement is one of them.

Take the tariff on agricultural implements. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) and the Conservative member for the province of Manitoba, will all agree with me when I say that the manufacturers of agricultural implements could reasonably stand a reduction in the tariff to the figure of ten per cent. I do not think that is an unreasonable proposition. I believe that some of my Conservative friends in Manitoba would vote with me in a proposition to reduce the tariff on agricultural implements to ten per cent. These agricultural implement manufacturers have been competing for years with other agricultural implements in Australia and in Russia, and of recent years in France, and surely they can compete in their own markets with a lower tariff than the present rate of seventeen and a half per cent.

Not long ago I referred to the Canadian tanner's combine in this House, and my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) did not agree with me, and he gave an explanation of why the price of canned goods in western Canada had increased since the formation of the Canadian Canners' combine. I may tell the House that during the past year and a half the price of canned goods in my district has increased from fifty per cent to seventy-five per cent on all lines of goods. Is it any wonder that the people of the province of Saskatchewan are not very anxious to support a protectionist tariff for the benefit of the manufacturers?

Mr. MARSHALL. What is the cause of the increase in the price of canned goods?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon friend will not be at a loss to give some explanation for that increased price.

Mr. MARSHALL. Answer that question if you can.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I will tell you then, it is because the Canadian canners have formed a combine in Ontario and have unduly enhanced the price of canned goods.

Mr. MARSHALL. That is not so at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say—

Mr. MARTIN (Regina).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) has the floor.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Does my hon. friend (Mr. Marshall) wish to ask a question?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes, you are making a statement which you cannot back up.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I quite realize the anxiety of my hon. friend (Mr Marshall) for whom I have the greatest respect, but I say that the great difficulty with the Tory government we have now in power, is that one half of its supporters in the House are mixed up with combines in the province of Ontario. I do not blame these men for making all they can out of their business, but I am giving you the point of view of the people in the province of Saskatchewan. If I lived in Ontario like my hon. friend (Mr. Marshall) I might take a different view of the matter and especially if I held a large block of stock in the Canadian Canners' combine.

I would take the articles which are necessities for the consuming population of this country and I would reduce the tariff on them until it reached, say, a minimum of ten per cent. It may not make much difference to some men in this House who become millionaires by reason of the protective tariff whether they pay five dollars or six dollars for a pair of boots, but it makes a great deal of difference to the people who live in the rural parts of Ontario and Saskatchewan and the other provinces of the Dominion, and so I would reduce the tariff on boots and shoes to a nominal rate. I would take gasolene, and oil, and tinware, and kitchen utensils and I would reduce the tariff to a minimum on them.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) aware that the late government which he supported raised the duties on boots and shoes by five per cent. and never reduced the tariff on boots and shoes at all?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The hon. gentleman and all other hon. gentlemen who sit on that side of the House are always very anxious to refer to what the late government did. In answer to what my hon. friend has said I want to say that I was not in concurrence with the policy of the late government on matters of tariff and I did not agree with the tariff that was maintained by the late government. I advocated time and again, although probably not from my place in the House, although I did on two or three occasions advocate here a reduction in the tariff—but before the various ministers of the government I did advocate the necessity in the interests of western Canada of reducing the tariff on the necessaries of life. That is the platform I stand on to-day and that is the platform I shall continue to stand on so long as I live in Canada. Will any one tell me what reason there is why by means of a monopoly in tinware, any man in this country should be allowed to become a millionaire by taking money from the pockets of the common people and putting it into his own pocket? And, Sir, these very same men who control the tin monopoly in Canada when other men wanted to get a tariff of ten per cent put on sheet tin to be manufactured in Canada, came to the late government in a body and opposed any tariff favour being given to anybody but themselves.

An hon. MEMBER. Who are they?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend knows them and he knows they sit on the government benches and not on this side of the House. I say that in any matter relating to the tariff I shall always view with the greatest suspicion the action of this government because many of the government supporters sitting in this House to-day are interested in the monopolies and trusts and combines in Canada to such an extent that they cannot let the interests of the people of the country appeal to them in connection with such matters when they come before this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LALOR. Is it not a fact that all these combines which the hon. gentleman speaks of were organized when the Liberal government were in power?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). If my hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) was sharp enough to get ahead of the Liberal government in organizing a combine he is entitled to great credit for it. I have no doubt that my hon. friend (Mr. Lalor), like the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Marshall), has something to do with the Canadian Canners' combine, and I have no doubt that no matter what commodity I refer to some hon. member on that side of the House would get up and put to me a question about it. I want to say that I am in favour of a gradual reduction in duties, especially on the necessaries of life, including such articles as agricultural implements, boots and shoes, gasolene, oil, cement, canned goods, woollens, and all articles which may be properly classified as the necessaries of life for the labouring and agricultural population. I believe that no member from the west, whether Liberal or Conservative, will venture to say that this is not a proper policy as far as western Canada is concerned, and so far as the consuming masses in any part of Canada are concerned.

Now, there does not seem to be unanimity among the members of the government with respect to the effects of this Bill. The Secretary of State, speaking in Arnprior the other day, said:

> The present government would divorce the making of tariffs from political pull; a new departure from the practice of their predecessors. A Bill has been already prepared for the establishing of a Tariff Commission which would thoroughly examine every tariff and see that it was not mixed up with politics.

According to the Secretary of State they are going to take the tariff out of politics, but according to the remarks of the Finance Minister when moving the second reading of this Bill, you cannot take the tariff out of politics and that is not the object of the measure at all.

Somebody is wrong; I presume it must have been the Secretary of State, because I believe that what the Finance Minister says is perfectly correct, that you cannot take the tariff out of politics, and I do not think we should try to do so. The tariff is a matter of taxation, and perhaps the most important matter with which this parliament has to deal from year to year. At the same time, there does not seem to be unanimity on this subject even in the ranks of the government themselves.

Now, the only reason given by the government for bringing in this Bill is that it is for the purpose of getting information. We all agree that it is very important that we should have information with respect to goods manufactured in this country—the cost of the raw material, the cost of labour, the cost of transportation—so as to enable us, when any item of tariff reduction or tariff increase comes before us, to form a proper opinion respecting it. But I say now exactly what I said when I spoke in the debate on the address—that I am absolutely opposed to any Tariff Commission being appointed in this country which would in any way tend to relieve the government of the day of the responsibility of dealing with the subject of tariff taxation. We can only judge of what is the intention of the government by certain things that have occurred. I would point to one thing that occurred. A request has been made of the Prime Minister to investigate the cement combine; and what does he say? He says: this is a matter for the Tariff Commission. The hon. member for South Wellington yesterday asked the Minister of Customs whether or not certain triphammers would come into this country free of duty. They are not manufactured in Canada, and there is no reason, according to protective principles, why they should not come in free. The Minister of Customs replied that this was a question for the Tariff Commission. Before the Bill has passed its second reading, the government are actually sheltering themselves from responsibility behind the proposed Tariff Commission.

Why does the government not take steps to investigate the cement combines? Why does it not appoint a committee of this House for that purpose?

Mr. BRADBURY. Why did not the late government investigate it?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). If the late government were in power to-day there would be a committee now to investigate the cement combine.

Mr. BRADBURY. Who allowed this combine to be created? Was it not the hon. gentleman's friends who refused to stop it when their attention was called to what was contemplated by the present combine?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend talks nonsense. He does not give the combinesters, the heads of the mergers who sit on his own side of the House the credit of having brains enough to form that cement merger. I have not a personal acquaintance with the men behind the cement combine; no doubt my hon. friend has. I say we can only judge of the object the government have in view in appointing the Tariff Commission by the straws which indicate which way the wind blows. That object is to have a body of men behind which they can shelter themselves from responsibility when any question of tariff increase or tariff reduction is brought before them.

Now, who asked for this commission? Certainly the people whom I represent have never asked for it. The statement has been made in this debate that this matter was discussed from one end of this country to the other. As far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned, that is not the case. No Conservative in that province during the recent campaign ever discussed it. We in the west have not asked for it; we would like some time to discuss it; I would like to know what the people of the province of Saskatchewan think of it before I can cast an intelligent vote on this measure. Therefore, I am in favour of delaying this Bill for a time. Some may say, as I have heard Conservative members say in the lobbies of this House, that it does not matter very much what the people of the west think about anything. There is scarcely a man from the province of Ontario sitting in this House to-day who knows anything about the needs of western Canada; otherwise the people of Ontario would not have voted against the reciprocity proposals to enable us to trade more freely with the United States. If I need any proof of what I say, it is found in the fact that just as soon as there is a grain blockade in the west, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Railways ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce the rates on grain to Duluth to correspond with rates to Port Arthur in order to give us temporary relief. Why did they not consider that last September? We have had grain blockades in the west for many years, and shall have them for many years to come, and the only way to give us relief is to allow us to ship our grain over American railways. If hon. gentlemen who occupy prominent positions in the government to-day would go into the province of Saskatchewan and see grain rotting on the farms of men who have not enough money, some of them, to build proper granaries to house their grain, I think they would change their views on this matter.

I was rather interested in a declaration of policy by the Minister of Finance. I have always regarded the Conservative party as the high protectionist party in this country. There is the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) for instance, he is a high tariff advocate; so are many other members from the province of Ontario. But I was somewhat interested in what the Minister of Finance said with respect to his policy, and I have no doubt it is the policy of the government with respect to protection. He said: I am a believer in adequate protection. He did not define adequate protection.

Mr. BURNHAM. How do you define high tariff?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I will give my hon. friend a definition of high tariff given in this House, I think, by the present Senator Taylor, formerly a prominent member of the Conservative party in this House.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). A Chinese wall.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). They mean a Chinese wall, as the hon. member for Red Deer has just said—a tariff wall high enough to keep out competition from any foreign country. Either the hon. member for Halton or the hon. member for Peel said he was a believer in putting a Chinese wall around this country so that it would prevent any goods from a foreign country coming into this country at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I never heard of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say for myself that the hon. gentleman has no right to make such a reference to me. I will state what I did say at one time in regard to agricultural protection, that I was prepared to put a Chinese wall around Canada, and for the protection of the western people I am prepared to do it to-day. I spoke of agricultural protection; I made no reference to manufactured goods. Now I hope the hon. gentleman will not repeat that again and misrepresent me.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The hon. gentleman is the last member of the House that I would attempt to misrepresent in any way; but in reading some of the speeches made by these hon. gentlemen, I got that impression. It may have been somebody else.

Mr. BLAIN. If it be necessary for me to deny it, I give the statement the most emphatic denial.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I am somewhat surprised at the anxiety of hon. gentlemen opposite to pose as free traders. We have had a definition of 'adequate protection' given by hon. gentlemen opposite. According to that definition, it is protection sufficient to keep out the competition of any foreign country. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has said that he would be glad to give the people of the west adequate protection to their agricultural products. The people of the west however would not thank him very much for any such protection. What they desire is not protection but more profitable markets for their products and easier access to those markets, but taking the meaning given to adequate protection by the Tory party, namely, protection sufficient to keep out competition from foreign countries, how would that affect the great provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, where there are practically no manufacturing establishments. We are compelled to pay excessive freight rates on a 2,000 mile haul of manufactured goods from the east, and are compelled by our protective tariff to buy these goods in our eastern provinces. If we had instead a tariff of 10 per cent on these goods, we could buy some of them in the United States, and the day is coming when we shall be forced to do so. We shall be forced to do so because of the increased cost of living in the west due largely to the excessive prices we have to pay for the purpose of building up the manufacturers in the east. Manufacturers in Ontario and Quebec will do well to consider this point, for the day will come, when we shall refuse to buy goods from Canadian manufacturers.

An hon. MEMBER. Are the manufacturers of western Canada in favour of adequate protection?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I shall have to refer my hon. friend to the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) for a definition of 'adequate protection.' So far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned and a large part of Alberta and Manitoba, we want no protective tariff at all because we have no manufacturing industries there. We are in the initial period of our existence, thousands of people are coming in to settle in these provinces, why should they be compelled to pay 17½ per cent duty on their agricultural machinery and 25 per cent to 30 per cent on their boots and shoes and 25 per cent on their tinware for the purpose of building up manufacturing establishments in eastern Canada.

An hon. MEMBER. Demagogue.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). An hon. gentleman has referred to me as a demagogue. I would like him to meet me on any platform in Regina and apply to me that epithet.

Mr. NICKLE. May I ask a question?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I have no objection to being asked questions but I have been interrupted pretty often.

Mr. NICKLE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he expresses the policy of the west, when he says they desire free trade and the complete overthrow of our present fiscal policy?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). My hon. friend is going too far when he imputes that statement to me. I do not want to be understood as saying that I am a free trader out and out at the present moment. The hon. gentleman could not have been here when I gave my ideas regarding a protective tariff, or he would not have put the question he did. I said I was in favour of a gradual reduction on the necessities of life until the tariff was reduced on such goods to a minimum of ten per cent.

Mr. BURNHAM. Is the hon. gentleman opposed to a protective tariff in the west just now because manufacturing industries there are in their infancy? In that case when would he be in favour of it?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). The hon. gentleman, I suppose, is trying to refer again to infant industries in the Dominion. We have heard in western Canada about infant industries needing protection, and no doubt my hon. friend thinks that the manufacturing industries in the east are still in the infant stage. What I say is that we have no manufacturing institutions of any kind in Saskatchewan to-day. Possibly if we had a large number of manufacturing industries there, which would supply our needs, the manufacturers, and probably a large number of the people, might be in favour of protecting them. But I am endeavouring to point out the urgent needs of western Canada at present, and what will be its urgent needs for years to come. There are people who think that in western Canada we are going to build up large manufacturing institutions. I do not think that is at all possible. It is certainly not possible to anything like the same degree as in Ontario where you have water-power, cheap fuel, and cheap labour to a much greater extent than in Saskatchewan, Manitoba or Alberta. I do not wish to acquire the reputation of being an extremist in this House, but I want to put my views fairly before you. I have expressed them to-night in a stronger way than I probably would if speaking in western Canada because here I am addressing many representatives from eastern Canada.

There is a provision in this Bill which strikes me as somewhat peculiar. We know now that the policy of the government is one of adequate protection. Section 4 provides:

> In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada per the commission shall, under the direction of the minister, make inquiry as to——

Under a government whose policy is one of adequate protection, the minister, who is the exponent of that policy, is to direct the Tariff Commission to inquire into certain things and report to the minister. It seems to me that instead of reporting to the minister, it ought to report to parliament, How is the ordinary member of parliament to get the information which this commission collects unless it reports to parliament direct? Then subclause 2 provides that the commission shall make inquiry into any other matter upon which the minister desires information. This whole Bill is based on the policy of adequate protection advocated by the Minister of Finance; and the members of this commission, who will no doubt be adequate protectionists, are only to investigate such things as they are instructed to investigate by this adequate protectionist minister.

Subsection 6 of clause 5 provides:

> Should evidence or information in its nature confidential, relating to the business or affairs of any person firm or corporation be given or elicited in the course of any inquiry, the evidence or information shall not be made public by the commission in such manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation, respectively, but this subsection shall not apply to an inquiry under subsection 3 of section 4 of this Act.

If that means business secrets, some peculiar method of carrying on business by which a manufacturer is enabled to profit more than his fellow manufacturers, I would not make any objection. But that section leaves the door wide open to make anything you like 'confidential information.' I submit that it would be safer to draft a clause more definite in its form to make clearer what is meant by this expression.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina).

I think the whole question of the commission comes down to a matter of what kind of men are appointed on it. As was said by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) there are various classes of economists in the matter of the tariff. There are high protectionists —perhaps nobody will admit that he is a high protectionist. Some call themselves moderate protectionists as does the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). Then there are men who call themselves free traders. I submit, with all due deference to the Finance Minister, that he ought to put a man on the commission whose views tend somewhat towards free trade, if he wishes to deal fairly with the consuming masses of the country. If he puts only protectionists on the commission, whenever they take evidence as to the manufacture of any class of goods, they will have their minds biased in favour of the view that we should have some protection for this particular class of goods, and, if possible, will increase the amount of protection given under the present tariff. I have no idea whom the Minister of Finance will appoint on the commission. But I venture to predict that its membership will not include a farmer from western Canada. The minister will probably say he wants tariff experts. If that be so, then why not increase the staff in the Department of Trade and Commerce and his own department and gather information in that way? I cannot see but that he will get exactly the same result, and with less expense than by creating a tariff commission. It is not likely that there will be on the commission a representative of the great consuming classes, but probably they will all be men who are in favour of protection, which means that they will be taken from the ranks of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I hope not.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) will see to it that a farmer from western Canada goes on the commission.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. gentleman may depend on it that I will do all I can to have that done.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). When the commission is appointed we shall be able to judge how much influence the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) has with the government. I have spoken a good deal longer than I had intended to, and I have dealt with a good many matters of which I did not intend to speak when I rose, but which I was led to discuss by questions put by hon. members opposite. I am opposed to the Bill and will support the amendment of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) for these reasons—some of which I have not dealt with at length: It tends to weaken the doctrine of ministerial responsibility; the purpose of the Bill, as stated by the Minister of Finance, can be attained by less objectionable methods; there is no demand for such legislation; the appointment of such a commission means the recognition of the principle of protection as a necessity in this country; this legislation is introduced at the request of the manufacturers who are interested in maintaining protection, and the result will be to foist on the people of Canada a higher protective tariff.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon). Mr. Speaker, it is a little difficult to introduce any new information into a debate which has commanded the attention of the House so long as this has done. But I rise, with your permission to speak on the Bill, and to give it my support. I believe that the principle of the Bill is proper and that the methods by which that principle is to be applied are workable. To my mind, there is no question more important that can engage the attention of parliament than one of this kind, one relating to the tariff which regulates the trade and commerce of our country. The tariff might well be compared to a tree. Trunk, branches, leaves, blossoms and fruit are in Ottawa, but its roots ramify to every part of this great Canada of ours. I think that an unprejudiced survey of the history of Canada since confederation, will convince any unprejudiced inquirer that the people of Canada believe in a protectionist policy. And no hon. member has yet risen in his place who has seen fit to deny that proposition. The hon. member from Regina (Mr. Martin) came near to denying that he was a protectionist, but he himself admitted that he believed in protection for revenue only. The money which we require to carry on our public works, to build our railways, to operate our canals, to dredge our harbours, to light our coasts, to pay our steamship subsidies, to protect our fisheries, and for all our public services, comes from this source—the tariff. Anything therefore which enters so completely into every phase of our national life is a matter which requires the most serious consideration of those whom the Canadian people elect to represent them in parliament.

The Finance Minister has substituted a Bill to create a tariff commission and to define the powers of that commission. Some hon. members have said that behind the clauses of the Bill there lie hidden in the deep recesses of the minds of the Finance Minister and his colleagues a desire to endow that commission with powers superior to the powers of parliament. Sir, in a democratic country like Canada, that would be impossible. The parliament of Canada could not and would not create a body superior to parliament itself; the creature is always inferior to the creator. And, as I read the Bill, there is no delegation wathever of the powers of parliament. Nor is there any conflict of power, if I read the Bill correctly, and I think I do. I anticipate that the men who are to be appointed on this commission will be, in time at least, specialists in that particular line. Some hon. members who have spoken in opposition to this measure, seem to believe that this commission will have legislative powers. The two gentlemen who spoke first in opposition to this measure, had that in mind, judging from the tenor of their remarks. This commission can have no legislative powers; at the very most, it can only be an advisory body. Canada is a democratic country, and the men who come here to legislate for Canada and the people of Canada themselves, would not stand for any abrogation of the powers given to parliament.

Parliament is the one body that legislates for the people of Canada, and if the government were to attempt to pass over to a commission that power which parliament possesses, parliament would be exceeding its functions. Now as I construe the meaning of this Bill, this commission is to be purely an advisory body, a body of specialists who shall gather information to submit to the Minister of Finance and his colleagues, upon which they may frame a tariff, should they at any time deem it advisable to do so. The government may accept the advice of this commission, the Bill does not say that they shall accept it; they may not. But that body will be in a position to furnish the Cabinet a large amount of information with respect to the various commodities covered by our tariff, information which they cannot get under the present system. It has been said that the Tariff Commission will not present opinions, but facts. Now if there is anything that the government require in framing a tariff it is facts relating to the cost of production of the various commodities that enter into our complex commercial life. Some one has said that this will result in an irrational tariff. I do not think any argument has been advanced which supports that contention. In fact, if I view the Bill aright it will have a tendency to keep a balance as between the manufacturer and the producer in Canada. Now, how is this to be done? It is going to be done by examining the cost of production at home and abroad. The commissioners will have power to investigate conditions, to learn how much it costs to produce the commodities we use in our everyday life.

It will also have power to take expert advice from specialists in any particular line. It seems to me that information of that kind would be of great use to the Cabinet. The commissioners will be able to find out the cost of the raw material. It has been well said that the raw material of one manufacturer is the finished product of another. I take it that the tariffs of all countries are more or less approximate to a scientific tariff. I believe it is impossible to frame a real scientific tariff. A tariff can only approximate the actual cost of any commodity. But if this commission submits to our government information that is only approximate as to the cost of an article, it will supply information that no Cabinet of Canada since confederation has ever had. Then they will inquire as to the cost of assembling these raw materials in the final manufacture, and that will include the cost of producing the raw material, and the transportation to the point of assemblage. After that, it will inquire into the cost of manufacture, and the factors which enter into that are the cost of labour, the cost of the plant and interest thereon, the insurance on the plant, and so forth. Further, they will inquire into the cost of selling that commodity. This is information which has never been given, either to the government or the people of Canada. With this information at hand they will be able to compare the cost of producing these articles in Canada and abroad. Then they will be prepared to advise the government as to what measure of protection is required upon any one of these commodities.

Mr. Speaker, I am a protectionist, I subscribe to the doctrine of protection. The protection I advocate is the difference between the cost of producing an article by our foreign competitors and the cost of producing that article at home, plus a reasonable profit to our Canadian manufacturer. That is the protection I believe in, and that is the protection which I believe the people of Canada in general endorse. But this profit must not be too large, nor must it be too small. If it is too large, it will create the combines and mergers which some hon. gentlemen opposite referred to. I think this commission, if it lives up to the expectations which we have of it, will prevent absolutely the existence of combines and mergers, that is one of the things which commends it to my mind. The commissioners will have information as to the cost of production which will make it possible for our government to frame a tariff under which combines and mergers cannot profitably exist. I take it that is a field where this commission will find its most useful work; it will maintain that balance between interests that is so esential for the permanent progress of Canada. Up to the present time we have had in Canada nothing but a hit and miss policy with regard to tariffs, absolutely without any sound reason at all. One section of the community interested in a particular commodity will come to the government and submit their arguments, while the people who are opposed to them will not have an opportunity of doing so; consequently the government will frame a tariff, not after investigation into both sides of the question, but upon the recommendations of one side alone. This Bill is going to eliminate that injustice, because this commission is going to investigate sources, to find out what it costs to produce an article that enters into consumption.

In the negotiations which preceded the reciprocity pact between Canada and the United States, we were shown the striking difference between the manner we frame our tariffs and the manner they frame them in the United States. I was much impressed with the fact, during these negotiations, that the men who came to Ottawa on behalf of the United States government were possessed of knowledge which our government did not possess. They had detailed information with reference to various branches of industry in the United States which our people did not have with regard to the industries of Canada. I am in the judgment of this House if that is not the fact. It was marvellous to my mind how the men who conducted the negotiations on the part of the President of the United States, and who came to Ottawa, were seized of all the conditions which surround the various products of this country as well as of their own country. They gave me information about the products of Canada and the cost of production in this country which I do not think our own government possessed, information which our own commissioners did not have, because they did not have a body of trained experts to procure the information for them. Now the commission provided for by this Bill will fill that gap.

Mr. Speaker, any man who studies political economy, even in the most superficial way, will admit that the home market is the best. It is our desire to preserve this home market. In an agricultural country like this we must have manufacturing communities to consume the products of the soil, the products of the farm, the products of the sea and the products of the mine. That is the policy which we are aiming at, we want to build up a home market which shall consume the products we produce within the borders of our own country. Now the more you reduce the cost of transportation between the producer and the consumer the cheaper will the article be to the consumer. Consequently the home market is the best.

It is, therefore, to build up a home market that the Conservative party has always directed its energies, and I hope always will.

Some one has been good enough to send to the members quotations on the question of trade. I have here a little card sent out by the Canadian Home Market Association. This contains a quotation by one of the greatest presidents the United States ever had, President Lincoln, who said:

> I do not know much about the tariff but I know this much: When we buy goods abroad we get the goods and the foreigner gets the money. When we buy goods at home we get both the goods and the money.

That epitomizes far better than any words of mine could do, the situation which confronts Canada to-day with regard to our home market; when we sell at home we get both the goods and the money. It is said by some philosophers and people who study political economy that there are three stages in the life of every nation. The first stage is that of free trade in which the nation trades with other nations further advanced in the arts of commerce. The second stage is that in which the nation promotes manufacturing and transportation and adopts commercial regulations and the third stage is that in which that nation gradually reverts to free trade, to lower duties and the removal of the restrictions on trade. If that is true, Canada is in the second stage, we are trying to protect our manufactures, to build up a home market and our history will show that we have mortgaged our future to advance the transportation of our country. Some one has said that this is an innovation. It is no innovation, some of the most advanced nations of the earth are adopting the policy which we are asking the parliament of this country to adopt. My hon. friend opposite yesterday said that this was a cheap Yankee device brought forth from the fertile mind of the Minister of Finance. Are we governed in Canada by the laws of the Medes and Persians that change not? Political economy is a progressive science and Canada, being a progressive country, requires a progressive political economy. We are the heirs of all the ages, we are the people who observe what other nations are doing and adopt anything that commends itself to us. Then why should we not adopt this method, why should we not adopt something originating in another country? Reference has been made to the fact that the United States has a tariff board. Is that a reason why we should not have one? What are the functions of that board. First to select an article and examine into its sources of supply; (2) to find out the actual cost of production as near as that may be, and (3) to get accurate information of prices at home and abroad, and investigate local and general conditions with regard to foreign competition. That is exactly what we want to do.

Some hon. gentlemen have referred to Germany, Gentlemen within the sound of my voice to-night know the history of Germany, how that country from a few scattered states has become not only one of the greatest martial nations, but one of the greatest commercial nations in the world. Why? Because she adopted the Zollverin and following the system of protection and so welded those states together with free trade between them and protection against the world until we have the Germany of to-day. How is that done? How does Germany make her tariff? Germany is competing in the markets of the world with the most economic nations. How does she make her tariff? Her tariff is revised annually by a commission of experts and further than that the German Emperor who has such a close interest in anything affecting the German Empire, a few years ago created what is called a Commissioneratz or Commercial Council and I have this from a gentleman who has travelled in the German Empire and has observed for himself the conditions there. This is what he says:

> The present German Emperor some years ago adopted the plan of calling this Commercial Council the leading commercial men of the empire, taking representatives from the most important branches of trade and commerce. This council has no political complexion whatever, but is simply an advisory board, who advise the Emperor and the government in regard to all commercial matters, such well known men as Herr Krupp, Count Hinkle Donnismarke, and Herr Tissen, representative ironmasters, were, or are, members of this council; at least this I know that Herr Krupp and Count Donnismarke were members, and I fancy Herr Tissen also now is; other men such as Director Stahl of the Vulcan Iron Works, representing the shipbuilding industry; Herr Balin, the general manager of the Hamburg-American Line, representing the shipping industry; other men recognized as being leaders in the textile trades; the coal and other mining trades; and the leading industries of the country, are also members. The qualification is that they must be eminent in their profession or business and in good commercial repute. Their duties are to advise the Emperor and the government on honour and to the best of their ability in regard to any question on which the Emperor may desire advice, or information, particularly when changes are contemplated in the German tariff, or when any foreign country contemplates or actually makes changes in its tariff which affect the export of the fatherland. The members of the council receive no remuneration whatever. They are given the title of 'Commissioneratz,' and the fact that a man has been called to the council is the highest possible acknowledgment that he is pre-eminent in the line of business with which he is connected.

Therefore besides having a Board of Experts to advise the government they have this honorary board composed of men eminent in the various lines they have adopted as their life work, and they advise the Emperor and his advisers as to what should be done in any given crisis.

In Austria-Hungary, a great commercial nation, the duties are revised annually by a permanent commission. Hon. gentlemen have objected to the fact that we have a permanent commission but this nation has the same thing.

I heard the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) lauding Belgium to the skies because of the great record she has made in commercial affairs. In Belgium they have a commission of five members who are advised by the Chamber of Commerce and the Bourse and other sources, as to variations in the duties on imports and exports.

France, one of the great protectionist countries in Europe, has a permanent commission which annually makes the variations in her tariff.

In Italy they have a permanent commission composed of officials and representatives of commercial bodies throughout Italy.

In Denmark they have a statistical bureau in connection with the business department, and this bureau fixes the values.

Thus, we say that this is no innovation, we are simply following in the footsteps of some of the most advanced nations in the world to-day and I think that in adopting this particular policy we are doing something for the benefit of Canada. The Conservative party in doing this is only living up to its traditions. The members of that party believe in protecting the home market. They believe in protecting the home market, in protecting the manufacturer not to the point at which he can become a menace through the organization of combines and mergers but to hold that balance which is necessary in a country like ours.

The question as to our fiscal policy has divided the political parties in this country. The Liberals have always wobbled on that question, while the Conservatives have persistently, continuously, and consistently adhered to the policy which was laid down by Sir John A. Macdonald in 1878, a policy of moderate protection. And, Mr. Speaker, no greater tribute can be paid to any statesman of any time than the tribute that is paid to the great chieftain of the Conservative party of that day, who foreseeing what Young Canada required in the way of a National Policy had the courage to adopt that National Policy and put it in force; no greaater tribute, I say can be paid to any statesman than to find that that same policy has guided the destinies of this nation for nearly forty years, and is just as strong in the affection of the people to-day as it was when first inaugurated. But, the Liberals of Canada, have they had a continuous fiscal policy? Not at all. Even to-day they have no special policy on the tariff. One of them is a free trader, another is a moderate protectionist, another a protectionist for revenue only, and in the course of twenty years they have as a party advocated in turn unrestricted reciprocity, tariff for revenue only, commercial union, and a sort of theoretical idea of free trade as they have it in England. We know that the distinguished gentleman who leads the great party opposite—the once great party-opposite—was so successful in advocating his ideas of free trade in England, that he was given the Cobden medal. We know that Cobden's policy was nothing short of a Utopian dream, for if Cobden were right, and if Cobden's prophecies came true, to-day all the nations of the world would be free trade. On four successive occasions the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition appealed successfuly to the people of Canada, and on these four occasions they forgave him and his party many sins. When he asked them to support him in building the Transcontinental railway they unstintedly gave their support, and again, when he asked the people to allow him to finish his work, they gave him a mandate. But the moment that right hon. gentleman and his followers touched the fiscal policy of Canada, that moment the people said: No, and out he went—and I have no doubt he will stay out for a long time. If the election of September 21 taught anything, it taught the one basic fact that the people of Canada are committed to a policy of moderate protection. The right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier came to the conclusion that the people of Canada wanted reciprocity with the United States, and when his policy was announced there was just a slight zephyr of public opinion wafted towards Ottawa in opposition to that scheme. Soon that zephyr became a sort of gale, and the gale became a hurricane, and the hurricane a typhoon that blew the party out of power, and to-day there is nothing but a remnant of them left. Canada is committed to protection, not a high protection, but a moderate protection, and I believe that this commission will assist this government and the people to adjust that protection to our needs. That is why I so enthusiastically support the Bill. This commission is going to assist the government to regulate protection, and in doing so it will enable our government to outline a policy which will conserve our resources and develop our trade and help to make Canada the great commercial nation she is destined to be.

Mr. THOMAS MACNUTT (Saltcoats). Mr. Speaker, had I spoken earlier in this debate I might have spoken at greater length than I intend to-night, but other hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, especially my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin) have dealt so exhaustively with the subject and have so ably placed the views of the people I represent before the House that little remains for me to add. However, I do not wish to give a silent vote on this important matter and I shall briefly state my views. Last summer the Prime Minister made a trip to the west and he was met at almost every point by delegations of farmers who asked him many questions in connection with the tariff and the reply of the right hon. gentleman always was that he intended if elected to appoint a tariff commission for the purpose of ascertaining the facts. That term 'ascertaining the facts' was a favourite expression of his, and the legislation we have before us to-day is evidently an attempt to carry out that promise on his part. Now, with regard to ascertaining facts I say that we have already ascertained many facts which it does not need the services of a commission to investigate. We have ascertained the fact that agricultural implements are very much dearer than they should be and that the tariff is to a large extent responsible for that. We have also ascertained the fact that the manufacturers of Canada are well able to do without the protection they have been getting. We know that they are able to compete successfully with their rivals in other countries, not only in Great Britain, but in South Africa, Australia, The Argentine, I understand too that even in the United States some Canadian agricultural implements have been sent over there, the duty paid, and actually sold at a less price than the articles manufactured in that country. These facts are known to us and I do not see why there is any necessity for an expensive tariff commission to make inquiry into them. Now, when a western man is speaking about the tariff the question of the duty on agricultural implements generally comes up. Every farmer is anxious to develop his land and he cannot do so unless he has the proper implements which are numerous and expensive, especially in the west. I might mention some of these implements that the farmer requires; he needs a breaking plough, a gang plough, a harrow, a drill, a disc harrow, a reaper, a wagon, etc., and the purchase price of these is a very heavy expense to him. It is not to the interests of eastern Canada that the farmer should be restricted in his operations and he certainly cannot farm to the same advantage unless he can get the necessary implements at a reasonable price. I think the very first thing the Tariff Commission should arrange for is that there should be a material reduction on the duties on agricultural implements, but I do not know that we can look for that from any Tariff Commission that will be appointed by a Conservative government.

We heard to-night some of the old protectionist theories that we have been hearing of for many years. We have heard about the benefit of the home market, a market which the people would build up with their own money. After all, we in the west do not find the home market to be a great benefit to us. Take the article of wheat. The quantity of wheat we can consume in Canada is not more than 50,000,000 bushels, and if the production of wheat in Canada were restricted to that quantity, a good many of the manufacturers might close up their businesses; there would not be much smoke coming out of tall chimneys, and there would not be many men employed to create this home market. The prices of most of the products of the west are based, not upon the prices originating in the home market, but on the export prices. This is true of wheat, cattle and other staple articles. I am not going to belittle the benefit of a home market, but at the same time we may pay too dearly for it, and that is what I think the people are doing. I do not think we can entertain any hope that this Tariff Commission will bring about very much change in that regard.

Now, Sir, I do not say that we should not have a tariff at all. A revenue must be raised, and the farmers like everybody else have to pay their share. It is a question, however, whether or not the implements of industry should not be as nearly free as possible. If the people are encouraged to greater production in that way, the revenue will not suffer. They will have more money with which to buy other duty-paying articles such as luxuries, which I think should bear the greater part of the cost of governing the country. That principle is observed in the tariff with respect to some of the professions, because I find that surgical and dental instruments are on the free list. I am not going to object to that. It probably enables surgeons and dentists to procure the most modern instruments, which should of course be encouraged, though I do not know that this will have the effect of reducing the fees. I find that there is no duty on surgical and dental instruments of metal, surgical needles, X-ray apparatus and parts thereof, surgical operating tables for use in hospitals, and microscopes valued at not less than $50 retail.; also professional and scientific books for the library of any incorporated medical, law, literary, scientific or art association or society. These are really the tools of certain professional men. I do not see why the implements of the farming class should not be dealt with very much on the same line.

Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be much exercised over the manufacturers; they are evidently wedded to their idols. The Tariff Commission is expected to take evidence as to the cost of production, so that the manufacturers can be protected in order that they may make large profits. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not appear to regard it as important to consider the cost of production of what the farmers produce. The cost of agricultural implements enters very largely into that, and the farmer is not in the position of the manufacturer in having a fixed price for his product. He has to have more than that—something that he has not now in the west—transportation to the markets. He has to take what he can get and pay the freight charged upon his product. I do not say that these matters can all be controlled, but some things could be controlled. The cost of the implements he has to use could to a certain extent be controlled, and I think the Tariff Commission—which no doubt will be appointed, though we on this side of the House are opposed to it—should take that into consideration. In order that there may be some chance of the Tariff Commission doing so, I would suggest that at least one western farmer, or at all events some capable person acquainted with the conditions in the west, be appointed upon it. Then we would have some hope of getting fair-play from this commission. Its usefulness will depend largely upon the personnel of its members. In conclusion, I will merely say that I am in favour of the amendment, believing that the government, instead of appointing this commission, should of their own accord bring in a Tariff Bill to reduce the duties very materially, especially on agricultural implements.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Guthrie).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 9, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CAR SHORTAGE IN EASTERN ONTARIO.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. PROULX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the government, and especially that of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell), to a matter of great importance and urgency. There is a great scarcity of cars to transport the hay crop of eastern Ontario. There are, between Vankleek Hill and Pembroke, at least 7,000 carloads of hay to be shipped and shippers have met with great difficulty in getting cars.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Proulx) is scarcely in order in entering upon a discussion at this stage of the sitting. If he desires to ask a question and simply wishes to make himself understood, he would be in order, but not otherwise.
