Mr. SINCLAIR. Referring to the illustration of my hon. friend I have never heard of any restriction in the number of witnesses that might be summoned in a case in a court of law. If they have relevant testimony to give, the court must hear them. The illustration of my hon. friend fails altogether and rather goes to prove the other side of the case, when he brings in a court of law. When the Tariff Commission of the late government visited my town in 1896, they put a notice in the newspapers that they were to hold a meeting in a certain place at a certain hour, and invited people to go and give their views on all questions under investigation. There was no trouble, the manufacturers and the consumers, any one who had anything to say, went before the commission and had a right to be heard. If, as has been intimated, the commissioners are to be in sympathy with the views of the government, and if the views of the government are in favour of a high tariff, then, if the commissioners wished simply to procure evidence to support the views of one side, they may invite to any sitting as witnesses only those whose views they knew to be in sympathy with what they desired.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I have not any doubt that the commission will be glad to hear the views of all classes of the community. I agree with my hon. friend that the effect of this amendment would be really to change the purpose that we have in view. It says that they 'shall' hear the evidence of persons who appear before them. That is to say, the control of the proceedings before the commission is taken away from the commissioners themselves, and any one who desires may appear before them and keep appearing as long as he chooses, with the result that it would be possible to block the operations of the commission and destroy their usefulness.

Mr. NESBITT. Does the minister think that the ordinary public would insist on continuing to appear before the commission in any numbers?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No, but we are making a law now, and it is not advisable to insert a clause which is mandatory and which may destroy the purpose we have in view and take the control of the procedure before the commission out of the hands of the commissioners.

Mr. NESBITT. Why refuse the people's right there?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). There is nothing in this Bill that will prevent the commissioners from taking evidence either on oath or in any other way. That is provided under section 5.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How would it do to say:

The commissioners shall also give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been so summoned to appear before them, and give evidence on any matter referring to an inquiry then being made by the commissioners.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I will consider that, if this section is allowed to stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is free from the objections which have been heard, it only imposes on the commissioners the duty of giving a reasonable opportunity.

Mr. EDWARDS. Who will define what 'reasonable' means?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is in the judgment of the commissioners.

Mr. EDWARDS. Then why not leave it all to the commissioners?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That is what we have done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As the law now stands it would be an impertinence for any one to come before the commissioners without having been summoned. It would be regarded as impertinent and people would not go. The result would be that when the commission would go into a town, they would issue subpœnas to people to come before them; that nobody who had not been summoned would think of going before them.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It would be necessary to change the preceding section if we adopt the amendment suggested by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). I do not see any objection to this amendment because the intention of the Bill is that the commissioners shall, in the exercise of their discretion, obtain all evidence pertinent or relevant to the inquiry they are conducting in order that their findings may be as accurate as possible. If the section is allowed to stand I shall consider the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. In subsection 1 of section 5, there is an ambiguity, I am afraid, in the last line and a half. The section reads:

> The commissioners shall have the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath, or on solemn affirmation if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and orally or in writing, and to produce such documents and things as the commissioners deem requisite.

That section would serve its purpose better if it stopped with the word 'requisite,' But it goes on:

> Requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.

That might refer to their original appointment as a commission or to their appointment to inquire into some specific matters.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think that probably the point is well taken, and that the last part of the section would be implied.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The amendment probably enlarges the powers of the commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would it not be clearer if it were worded:

> As the commissioners deem requisite for the full investigation of the matters then under inquiry.

Mr. MACDONALD. 'Matters into which they are appointed to examine,' is not good drafting at all.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think it will be better to put a full stop after 'requisite' as suggested by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie). I am inclined to think as it stands it is not at all objectionable.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Did the minister hear the suggestion of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley).

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I did. That was practically my own suggestion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is just changing the wording, that is all.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).

Mr. MACDONALD. I want to point out that the last words of this section as it is drafted, relate to the production of documents merely, and not the giving of evidence. The commissioners have the power to cause the production of such documents and things as they deem requisite. It is documents that are requisite and not the evidence.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). There seems no reason why the scope of the section should be narrowed, and if we stop at the word 'requisite' and strike out 'to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.' I think the subsection then will meet the case. Anything more after that would be by way of limitation. I think, therefore, the suggestion of my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) is a good one, and I therefore move that all the words after 'requisite' be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then the subsection stands for further consideration?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Yes.

On subsection 3—powers of commissioners,

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to express most strongly my objection to this subsection which breaks up this court of inquiry. We have heard from the Minister of Finance, and from other hon. gentlemen on that side, a great deal about the necessity of getting accurate information upon which a scientific tariff was to be based. I must say to the Minister of Finance that it would be impossible for him to get that scientific inquiry, or that scientific result from the court of inquiry proposed to be established under subsections 3 and 4. Section 4 of the Act enumerates a great many things into which the court may inquire, and then under subsections 3 and 4 the commission can be split up into a number of subdivisions—not more than three because I understand there are to be that number of commissioners—any one of which may hear evidence apart from the others, and then they are to get together and they are to evolve a scientific result from the evidence obtained in that way. Now I submit to the minister in all honesty that the kind of court which he proposes to establish under this Act is a gypsy institution which will not give the good results which he anticipates. In the judicial courts of the land three judges must sit, and when they hear evidence they are to notice the demeanour of witnesses. But the commissioners in this matter will have to deal with a greater matter than most of our judges have before them. They will have to deal with the whole tariff of Canada involving millions upon millions of money to the people, and, therefore, this court of inquiry is as important, if not more important than any court we have to-day. If it would not be tolerated for one moment that a court consisting of three judges could be split up for the purpose of hearing evidence here and there, and then coming together to agree upon a result, why should such a procedure be adopted in this case? I submit to the minister that notwithstanding any further expense that might be involved to the people, and the difficulty or inconvenience which might be caused to the commission, he should as far as possible insist upon these three commissioners sitting together and hearing evidence, and that they be not split up every which way and proceed according to what seems to me to be a rule of thumb method. We heard from the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day that after travelling over this country, that after a great deal of toil and labour, he had at last to sit down in his office and give this country a tariff by rule of thumb. Now, I submit that what is proposed here is the worst possible rule of thumb procedure, and I again urge upon the Minister of Finance not to divide the commission in the way proposed.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think the hon. member for Cape Breton is to be congratulated on coming so rapidly towards an appreciation of the necessity of this commission.

Mr. McKENZIE. My remarks do not warrant that interpretation.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The hon. gentleman argues that not only are the duties of the commission to be important, and not only is it vital that they hear witnesses and get evidence from all the sources they can, but he says it is even necessary that each of the commissioners be present in order that they may properly value the personal element in the evidence. So that those factors being also essential in the mind of the hon. gentleman, I am sure he sees that the objects to be served by the commission more than warrant its appointment.

Mr. McKENZIE. What I said was that if we are to have this commission at all, if it is to be forced upon us, let us have the best possible commission. I am not saying that I want it.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am sure that any one who reads the hon. gentleman's remarks in 'Hansard' will see that I quoted the hon. gentleman accurately and have made my point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What about yourself?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). We want a commission and we want a good commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The evidence to be brought forward is to be well weighed, and were it practicable within reason to have all the commissioners present at each hearing, I should deem it in a large degree important that they should be. But with the work to be done by the commission, and the limited number of commissioners, it would seem to me impossible that they can cover that work if the principle urged by the hon. member for Cape Breton were to prevail. There are thousands of items in the tariff, there are thousands of square miles of territory to be covered, there are scores of sources from which evidence can be obtained, and consequently there must be the utmost facility for division of the work consistent with doing it well. Now the Railway Commission is a body enjoying a judicial character, which this commission does not enjoy.

But even in the Railway Commission, one commissioner has certain powers, and two commissioners have very wide powers, given them, no doubt, for the very purpose under which powers are given to one and to two of the Tariff Commission under this Bill. Section 13 of the Railway Act is the section that gives individual powers to one and to two commissioners. In the case of the Tariff Commission, if all the commissioners are to be present, even when a sitting is held at the furthest end of Canada, it is going to be a decided inconvenience to the public that may, for some urgent reason, desire a hearing before the commission at the other end of Canada. So, the proposal may have disadvantages even greater than its advantages. But the insuperable objection, to my mind, is, that it would render the work altogether out of proportion to the number of commissioners appointed. And no matter how many were appointed, the same objection would hold. I think the Minister of Finance has struck the happy medium.

Mr. McKENZIE. So far, we have got along, perhaps not scientifically, but still we have got along, with ministerial tariff inquiries. And those bodies were not split up, but went as a body.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is, two members of the Cabinet went, and they did the work for fifteen. Then I cannot see why at least part of the work could not be done by one Tariff Commissioner for the three. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McKenzie) seems to be still labouring under the apprehension that this commission is to have executive and administrative powers. On the contrary, this commission is for the purpose of investigating and reporting, and that alone; and, that being the case, the hon. gentleman will see that two commissioners, or even one, in the majority of cases, is quite competent to make the investigation. It might, perhaps, be better that the three should hear the witnesses, observe the demeanour of those witnesses, and so on, but the object to be gained, is not worth the objections that there would be to it.

On section 5, subsection 4:—

Two commissioners shall have power to conduct any inquiry under subsections 3 and 4 of the next proceeding sections, and may, for the purposes of such inquiry, exercise the power conferred upon the commissioners by subsections 1 and 2 of this section.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Would the Minister of Finance please explain just the effect of that?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). In cases of inquiry to ascertain whether there has been a combine to unduly enhance prices, it was thought desirable that there should be at least two commissioners. My hon. friend pointed out the importance of an inquiry of that kind, and we thought that it should be safeguarded, by having at least two commissioners. I think that under the Railway Act, two commissioners form a quorum, and can hear causes. It seems to me that in this case, there should be two, instead of one. Subsection 4, to which reference is here made, covers inquiry into matters referred to the commission by the Governor in Council. This is made wide in its terms—purposely wide, and may embrace very important objects, for instance transportation by railway or by a navigation line, marine insurance, the question whether a monoply may exist in any part of the country, and so on. It seems to us that this should be safeguarded by a provision that at least two should be in an inquiry of that kind.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do I correctly apprehend the Bill as to the matter which I shall now explain? The commission is to be composed of three commissioners, and under section 4 the commission is to inquire into the matters assigned to them by the Bill. By subsection 3 of section 5, one commissioner may exercise all the powers vested in the three commissioners with respect to certain matters, including the price and cost of raw materials in Canada and elsewhere, the cost of transportation, the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere, the cost, efficiency and condition of labour in Canada and elsewhere, prices received by producers, all conditions which enter into the cost of production and the price to consumers, and generally all conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost, and freight, as compared with other countries. Under section 4 these are powers given to the commission as a whole. But by subsection 3 of section 5, one commissioner alone is given power to investigate these matters. Then, under subsection 4 of section 5, you say that with regard to combines, to go no further, two commissioners, and not one, must investigate. I thought that at first the intention of the Bill was that in these matters one commissioner or two commissioners, as the case might be, should investigate, and then that the facts should be digested by the three commissioners and a report made to the Minister of Finance by the commission as a whole. But as I understand the Bill as explained by the Minister of Finance now, one commissioner or two commissioners may report to the minister on the subject which they have been empowered to investigate, and therefore, you will not have the benefit of the three commissioners in such cases. I do not think the Bill can be read otherwise.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will look at section 4, he will see that it provides, 'in respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the commission shall, under the direction of the minister make inquiry,' and so on. Under the interpretation clause, 'commission' means the Tariff Commission provided for by this Act. This commission is to make inquiry and report. Now, under subsection 3 of section 5, one commissioner shall have power to make inquiry into matters covered by subsections 1 and 2 of section 4, and, for this purpose may exercise the powers conferred upon the commissioners 'by subsections 1 and 2 of this section'—section 5. Now, subsection 1 of section 5, gives the commissioners power to summon witnesses to testify and produce documents, and under subsection 2 of section 5, they are given the same power to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases. As I read the Bill, the Tariff Commission shall make a report. But we go on the analogy and in accordance with the practice of the Railway Commission, one commissioner being appointed to take evidence. Let me point out how that works out practically. There are several thousand commodities embraced under the tariff. Unless we make a provision of this kind it would be impossible to make any headway with a revision of the tariff. An inquiry may be going on in British Columbia or Alberta while another is going on in Nova Scotia.

It seems to me it is a common sense provision. It simply means that the commission must go to all these places and give a hearing, or obtain evidence in some other way. What we propose to do is to multiply the commission, and I think my hon. friend will see that, as I have pointed out, the matter is well safeguarded. The report of the sub-commission will be made to the commission, and while we are giving one commissioner power to take evidence, his evidence will have to be submitted to the board to be passed upon.

Mr. NESBITT. He reports the evidence back to the commission.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Yes.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). I desire to ask the Minister of Finance if this Bill provides for an investigation into the capitalization of bonds, into the value of the common stock, into the valuation of the physical assets of any 'company?' According to my reading the Bill does not go that far, it does not contain provisions sufficiently wide to enable the commission to investigate those matters. I think the Bill should provide for that, because there are certain interests that are, perhaps, seeking favours from the government, for instance, the Steel Company, and other corporations, and I think it would be well to have these matters thoroughly investigated so that all the facts may be laid before the commission and before parliament.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The primary purpose of this Act in appointing the Tariff Commission is not to investigate the matters referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe); but so far as those matters have any bearing at all upon the cost of production—and they have a very important bearing upon the cost of production—then, of course, they would come within the scope of the commission, under section 4.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In what way would they have a bearing upon the cost of production?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think my hon. friend can scarcely be serious in suggesting that they might not have a bearing upon the cost of production. Take, for example, the cost of the production of steel; if it was important that we should know the cost of the raw material and of transportation, that is to say, the cost of raw material laid down, is it not important that we should know what capital is invested in a particular business, in order to ascertain what the real cost of production is? Does my hon. friend mean to suggest that the cost of production does not depend to some extent upon the amount of bond issue upon fixed capital? Is it not a factor in connection with ascertaining the cost of production? In order to ascertain the cost of production of steel to-day, not only what I have said with regard to raw material should be considered, but we should also know, in the case of a particular company, what is its bond issue, how much did its bonds sell for, what are its fixed charges.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). In that event, then, the capitalization, the bond issue and everything belonging to a company in that line, would enter into the investigation?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No question about it at all—that is, your fixed charges, that is, your bond issue, what interest is paid. Then in addition, you have your cost of labour and cost of management; and then the question arises how much capital is invested, to what extent is the stock watered, or if it is watered at all.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). Then it might take cognizance of an over bond-issue.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The commission has power to go into that to ascertain the cost of production—as I have said, to ascertain what is your fixed charges, how much is your bond-issue, how much have your bonds sold for, what is your interest charges in the course of a year. Then you have the expense of management and the overhead charges as they are called, insurance, &c. Then the question arises how much capital was put in, in the case of an ordinary individual putting in a certain sum of money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Take an analogous case, that of a railway company; does the bond-issue or the stock-issue enter at all into the computation of operating expenses?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If you were pursuing an inquiry as to whether the freight rates, for example, were reasonable or unreasonable, does my hon. friend mean to suggest that we should not take into consideration the bonds, the interest on which must be paid first?

Mr. PUGSLEY. But your Bill does not provide for that.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It provides for it in the widest possible manner. My hon. friend will see that section 4 covers all that, as I explained when section 4 was under consideration, 'the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere.' All these are pertinent facts. And as I say, in the case of an individual who is producing a commodity of a certain kind, you will show in addition to his own services, and in addition to the cost of labour, and to any fixed charges, how much capital he has in this business, and what would be a proper or normal profit on that capital.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). Then the cost of production would vary according to the bond-issue in two analogous companies?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Not necessarily, because one might have a much larger output than the other. All these are questions of fact that the commissioners, in pursuing an inquiry as to the cost of production of a particular commodity, would have to inquire into, and obtain all the information available, in order to make a finding to show what is the cost of production of any commodity in Canada. All these factors will undoubtedly have to be considered in the inquiry.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It seems to me my hon. friend has not answered the point of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe). The cost of production cannot be extended to all the points he has just stated. It is obvious that the cost of production depends upon general conditions which affect all parties who are producing in a certain line. The fact that one man has put more water in his stock than another, or the fact that one has been imprudent in his bond-issue and another has been prudent, does not at all affect the cost of production. But the cost of production is regulated by general rules.

Mr. EDWARDS. Might it not affect the price to the consumer ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think it can. It can affect the profits of the man who has put his money into the business. But the cost of production is regulated by general rules, which will have to be regulated here. The cost of labour, for instance, is general, so is the price paid in interest on the money markets of the world. I think it would be proper that these matters should be considered whenever they do affect the cost of production. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for North Ontario should be included in the Bill as matters for the Tariff Commission to investigate. But I do not see how the imprudence of one man, because he does not administer his business properly, can be allowed to affect the cost of production, whenever he comes before the commission and asks for an increase in the tariff on his commodity.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I do not think my right hon. friend and myself are in disagreement at all. All the factors that have been mentioned undoubtedly enter into the cost of production. But if you have an inquiry into the cost of production, it is obvious that you must consider, among other things, the particular things mentioned by my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe).

Mr. McKENZIE. Suppose under the Bill, if it goes into effect, the commissioners were to undertake an inquiry into the watered stock, or otherwise, of any concern, and the manager or the president of the company refuses to disclose the facts, and says, it is none of your business; I would suggest to the minister that in a case of contempt of court the minister should have more extended powers to enable him to go into that inquiry. It is extremely questionable if there is anything in the Act that would enable him to ascertain the conditions of the company. But if the minister is so clear in his mind that he has that power, why not put it in the Bill ?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). You cannot put anything of that kind in specifically without limiting it. As clause 4 is drawn there are the widest possible powers given, and if you attempt in any way to limit it you fetter the commission. Clause 4 as drafted enables the commission to inquire into every factor that enters into the cost of production and, without question, the matters mentioned by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the matters mentioned by my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) are factors entering into the cost of production. I surely do not understand my right hon. friend to suggest that fixed charges are not a factor in the cost of production. Supposing an inquiry is to be made we will say, into the cost of steel, that investigation must take in all the companies which are manufacturing steel. It is true, as the right hon. gentleman has stated, that one might have sold their bonds more prudently than another, that one might have a larger bond issue than another, that one company might have no watered stock, that another company might have watered stock and that a company might have watered stock to a certain amount and stock not watered to a certain amount. These are facts that must be considered by the commission and they must apply their best judgment to the facts in order to form a conclusion as to what should be a reasonable figure at which to place the cost of production of steel in Canada. I pointed out at the time I introduced this Bill that the determination of the cost of production has not been reduced to a science. You may have in one country a cost of production different from the cost of production in another country, and you will have in the same country a difference in cost at different places and different times in the year. These are all factors entering into the situation, and they will all have to be considered. The fact that there are so many of them should not preclude the commission, or a commissioner, from investigating them. They have to consider all these matters and they have to consider them in order that they may make their finding as best they may

The argument, I have always understood, is, that watered stock, the selling of stock at a discount, and the selling of bonds at a discount, are undesirable, because they do in the end affect the cost to the consumer. If they do not have that result, they are of no importance. Therefore, if you have not only the cost of production, but the price to the consumer to be inquired into, it is perfectly obvious that the considerations which have been mentioned by my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) and hon. gentlemen on the other side, are within the scope of the inquiry which these commissioners may make.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like to suggest that the hon. member for North Ontario draft an amendment and submit it to the committee. I think it is a matter that is hardly covered by section 4. It is possible that a general inquiry into the capitalization of a company might not come within section 4 and, at the same time, as the Minister of Finance states, it is quite possible that the commissioners could conduct an inquiry to a certain extent into the matter of capitalization. There are two schools of thought upon whether capitalization has reference to the cost of production. Some say that it is not an element in the cost of production, but that it is an element when you commence to consider what profits shall be added to the cost when once determined. However, I just rose to call the minister's attention again to subsection 3, of section 5. It is suggested by my right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, that it is hardly clear whether the commissioner would report to the minister, or whether the commission itself should report, after having the findings of the commissioner. I was going to suggest to the minister this amendment, although I am not quite satisfied with it myself: After the word 'power' in the first line, you might add the words 'on behalf of the commission.' It would then read:

> One commissioner shall have power on behalf of the commission, &c.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If my hon. friend will look at section 4, I am sure that he will agree that it covers the point. It says that the commissioners shall report to the minister. In other words, when the report is made, it is the report of the Tariff Commission. Let me say to my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), in answer to his argument, that I would agree with him, that if stock is watered that should not be a consideration in determining the cost of production. But this commission, being a commission for the purpose of obtaining information, would endeavour to find out how much stock was actually cash. In other words, the commission, in ascertaining the cost of production, would say to the man referred to by my right hon. friend: You claim that you should make 5 per cent or 6 per cent, or 8 per cent or 10 per cent, as the case may be, upon your capital stock issued, so we desire to find out how much of your capital is actually bona fide capital, and how much is water. I think my hon. friend may be satisfied that the matters he has referred to, will be matters to be investigated by the commission.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Who would report under subsection 3, one commissioner or the commission?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My intention is that it should be the commission.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I know that is your intention, but does it say so?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). For the purpose of getting the best results I believe it is necessary to divide up the work.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I approve of the division of the commission.

On section 5,

Mr. McKENZIE. The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that whatever evidence would be obtained would be fully reported to the House although the Minister of Finance was not so explicit in his statement in reference to that, but sections 5 and 6 are closely interwoven and they provide for the taking of evidence which may not be submitted to the House. I do not think it proper that this commission should take secret evidence, I believe that this commission should give publicity to every kind of evidence that is submitted to them, and that nothing should enter into their consideration which would not be open to the public and open to parliament. I do not think this proviso for secret evidence is in the best interest of the country or in the best interest of the Department of Finance itself. During the fifteen years that Mr. Fielding was at the head of that department he refused to have anything to do with secrecy of any kind, everybody had to lay his story before him open and above board, and I think that practice should be followed. I move, seconded by Mr. Charlton, in amendment:

> That it shall be lawful for the commissioners to hear any application secretly, or to receive in writing any representation that is not to be made a public document.

In my opinion, there should be no objection to publicity being given to everything in the shape of evidence that is submitted to this commission. If the word 'unlawful' sounds harsh, the minister can substitute another word which will carry out my meaning, which is, that everything presented to the commission in the shape of evidence should be made public.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would think that probably under subsectioin 4 they could obtain evidence in any way they pleased and that section 5 is not necessary.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). One section provides that they are to make inquiry, and the other provides for the procedure. It appears to me that all sources of information should be open to the commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). One section refers to the subject matter of the inquiry and the other provides the method.

Mr. NESBITT. The purpose of this section is to relieve the commissioners from the necessity of taking evidence under oath.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Yes, and to obtain a great deal more information than could be obtained otherwise. This commission will have to accumulate a great deal of information, and they can collect that information from trade reports and all available resources. Then again, they might have to get information in a foreign country and we could not authorize them to compel the attendance of witnesses in such a case.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the idea is to apply this section only to foreign countries, I would have no objection, but in that case you have put this power in the wrong section.

Mr. WHITE, (Leeds). For instance this commission might have an accountant go into the affairs of a company and make a report, and the figures would be submitted and it surely ought to be open to the commission to act upon that information. Now, if you had a bureau, as has been suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of this board, your bureau would have to obtain information otherwise than by oath and affirmation, and they would act upon it. If a bureau would mean anything in connection with the Department of Finance, the Minister of Finance might act on the information obtained by that bureau no matter what source it came from, if the bureau deemed it authentic. There is, in this respect, no difference at all in principle between the two, except that this commission has very much wider powers. This being the case, I cannot see what possible objection there can be to subsection 5. My hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie), is looking at it entirely from a judicial standpoint; he seems to have the impression that this commission should not take evidence in any other way than under oath, but my idea is that it should very sparingly resort

If you attempt to restrict it you limit the powers of clause 4 which covers everything in respect to the factors relevant to price, cost, conditions of labour and all the conditions affecting manufacture or production in Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is perfectly right in what he states as to the object of the commission being to investigate all things that tend to disclose the cost of production. No one doubts that, but the point raised by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) is as to whether the powers conferred by the commission would authorize the commission to investigate the facts stated by him. For instance, a company may come asking for an increase in the tariff. They insist that the cost of production is much more than it is supposed to be by the commission and, desiring to give their reasons for that stand, the commissioners may say: Very well, let us look into the cost of production. We find you have put no capital into this enterprise, that it is all watered stock; you have given to the public a large amount of stock in which there is not a dollar but which is all water, and the company might very properly say: This has nothing to do with the cost of production.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It has a good deal to do with it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, it has nothing to do with the cost of production at all. Now, the company might have a million dollars of that stock. That does not affect the cost of production one iota, and it is quite evident that the object set forth by the hon. member for North Ontario is not served by this Bill. I do not think it is quite clear that the Bill would provide for such a condition. I speak all the more advisedly upon that because the other day upon a Bill which came before this House—I do not want to refer to a past debate, but merely to mention it—we saw how particular we must be when it comes to the interpretation of a statute.

Mr. BORDEN. It must be perfectly obvious that the cost of production includes the cost of raw materials, the cost of labour, what are called over-head charges, and the interest upon capital invested. You have to take all these things into consideration. I think that my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, is perfectly correct and logical in the position which he has taken. But, further than that, if he were absolutely wrong, you have the words of this statute which go beyond the cost of production, because if you look at subsection (f) of section 4, you will find that it includes:

All conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to consumers in Canada.

to taking evidence under oath. Of course I could not limit the commission in the exercise of its powers, but it seems to me that the commission will succeed very much better, in fact it will succeed almost in proportion to the degree in which it does not use these coercive powers of summoning witnesses. I believe the commission will obtain information very much better in most cases, and more accurate information, than if they insisted upon men going into the witness box. However, I believe it is necessary the commission should have that power; to have the power is one thing, to exercise it is another. To clothe them with that power gives them an authority and standing which no mere bureau could possibly have.

Mr. McKENZIE. Under subsection 2 the minister clothes his commission with the procedure of a court, but under the section we are discussing he deprives them of that procedure.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It merely provides that it is permissive to the commission to take evidence under oath if they so desire, or to act upon evidence not taken under oath if they deem it advisable.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think under subsection 4 they could obtain evidence in any way they pleased.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If that is so, what harm is there in defining what they may do, so as to make that point clear should any question arise. In reply to what was said by my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie), that my predecessor in office would not hear any confidential information, I may tell him that there is no office in all the departments of the government in which there has been more confidential information confided to the minister, and properly so, than in the Department of Finance. The Minister of Finance is the repository of the business secrets of a great many people. The Minister of Finance meets with all kinds of business people continually, and communications of the most confidential nature are necessarily and properly made to him. My predecessor, and his predecessor before him, were placed in that position time and again. There are hundreds of confidential communications on the files of my office. Now, suppose we had a bureau instead of a commission, and suppose that bureau obtained information as to the financial standing of a company or a firm, or the trade secret of a firm, or the names of customers of a firm, or the trade connections of a firm, does the hon. member suggest that such information should be made public? I do not believe that public opinion in this country would for a moment approve of a commission that would pry into business secrets, and make them public.

Mr. McKENZIE. Why should we want information of that kind?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Because we need all the information we can get, and if we have not a provision of this kind in the law we will deprive ourselves of information which we would otherwise get. It is quite possible that the financial standing of a firm might be in a precarious condition at the time the inquiry was being made, and would any one assert that that fact should be made known to the public?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Might not this commission consider and act upon certain information, given to it as confidential, without it being so stated in the Bill. What authority is there to compel this commission to disclose confidential information, either to parliament or to any one else. Of course, I agree with the general argument of the minister.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I believe it valuable to have such a provision in the law, because I believe it will encourage people to give information which they would not give unless they knew they were protected under the statute. It seems to me that the more it is looked into the more the value of that particular subsection will appear. Prima facie, it would seem to be open to objection, but the fact is that confidential information, of the nature referred to here, has been continually placed before the Minister of Finance, whoever he may have been, and has been continually acted upon. This report of the Tariff Commission should be sent on to the office of the minister, with all the information, and if there is any statement which is in its nature confidential, that would injure a firm either in its credit or give its competitors an unheard advantage, then I think, following the usual practice and the precedents which they have held in the past, that that information should not be made up in such a manner as to injure that firm.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think on looking at the section itself the minister will agree with me that the discretion is not with the Finance Minister, but with the commission.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The subsection does not say that the Finance Minister shall make the information confidential. Is not this the great objection to the clause: That the commission may be basing their report and taking such action under subsection 5, and yet not one particle of that information be given to the Finance Minister under this Bill ?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No, we think not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Under this subsection they may get such information and use it and act upon it, and yet there may not be a particle of that in the records submitted to parliament, and parliament would have no knowledge of the information upon which these commissioners have acted. Now it does seem to me that the evil of leaving these commissioners to act upon information of a private character, which is not to be communicated to parliament, is very much greater than eliminating the clause altogether and simply providing that if there is information of a confidential character the commissioners shall not take it at all. Any evidence that the commissioners may take, either under oath or otherwise, should form a part of the public records of the country, so that parliament and the country generally can judge of the wisdom, or unwisdom, of the conclusion which they have reached from the information submitted to them.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) will look at section 4 he will observe that the commission has to make inquiry and report to the minister. Not only must it report to the minister, but if he will look at subsection 5 he will see that > Inquiries under this section shall be conducted in a summary manner and the respective reports to be made pursuant to its provisions, accompanied by a copy of the evidence, if any, taken in connection with the inquiry shall succinctly state the result thereof.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They can hold back all confidential information.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). No, it does not say so.

Mr. GERMAN. Could they not hold back anything which they have taken orally ?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). They must give the results of their inquiries. In other words you must trust the commission with a certain amount of discretion. They could not pass on all the oral evidence they heard. We must look at this matter from a practical standpoint. They could pass on any evidence which they heard, but I imagine they will hear information on a great many things which it will not be possible for them to pass on. However, all this information will come to the minister. In other words, what I would like the House to understand in regard to this Bill, at least as to our conception of it, is this: that the situation is not changed radically at all. I have pointed out to the House that the Finance Minister to-day acts on information which he has on file in the department obtained from a man or two that he has there, and he acts upon information obtained from deputations that interview him from time to time, and he has in addition to that a very great deal of confidential communications in his office which unquestionably influence his mind in connection with tariff matters. I think I can recall one budget speech of my predecessor relative to the Tariff Commission going out to take evidence, in which he says a great deal of the evidence is given ex parte, that a good deal of it is tinged, so to speak, and evidence that he would not altogether care to rely on; but, at the same time, a very great deal of evidence of a confidential nature did come to him, as it comes to every Minister of Finance, and influenced him unquestionably in coming to a conclusion on tariff matters.

Mr. NESBITT. If subsection 5 were struck out altogether would it make any difference to the Bill? Would not the commissioners have the same power?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Except this: while to my hon. friend's intelligence, clause 4 may seem wide enough, he is a lawyer—

An hon. MEMBER. No he is not a lawyer.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Well if he is not a lawyer he ought to be one.

Mr. NESBITT. Just simply a common farmer.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If there is any doubt whatever—and there may be a doubt—then they have this specially mentioned power of summoning witnesses and any other mode which might be employed. Therefore I see no harm in having section 5 in for the reason it is to supplement the other provisions. In addition to obtaining evidence under oath they may obtain it in a mode they deem proper so long as they believe the evidence is authentic. Now with regard to confidential information. As I have said, the Ministers of Finance in the past have acted on all classes of information, and when they have come down to parliament with a tariff they have had to prove their case as best they could. They would give, I have no doubt, certain facts of which they were sure, which they had obtained in such a manner as they might be able to, in order to substantiate whatever tariff changes they proposed, but confidential communications in their office were never brought down, and the practice under this would be in no way different. All this information will come into the Minister of Finance's office and will be departmental papers precisely as it would be departmental information in the case of the suggested bureau. Now upon a return being called for by this House the information would be brought down in precisely the same way as it would be brought down in the case of a bureau. If any confidential information was obtained by the bureau or by the minister that information would not be brought down, has not been brought down, and should not be brought down.

Mr. MACDONALD. Why have the clause in, you are only making trouble for yourself.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds): My answer to my hon. friend is this: it is desirable to encourage people to give information helpful to the commission. Now if this provision is not in the Act the fact will be known and, therefore, men will not be as certain of their ground as they would be if the requirement were there. Now my hon. friend approves of the principle and I understood him to say he did not see any harm in putting something in the Act to show the business men clearly that they will be protected, under the provisions of this Bill, if they give information which in its nature is confidential, the publication of which might injure them in some way. It seems to me there can be no possible objection to that.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the minister tell me what this section means when it provides that the information shall not be made public by the commission in such a manner as to be available for use by any business competitor or rival? Does the minister say that information shall not be brought down to parliament? Is that what he intends by that provision? He has told us about the different Finance Ministers and the information which they received. Everybody knows that Ministers of Finance receive information in regard to matters of public welfare and this is made a matter of record; and it appears on file in the department, and I have never yet heard any Finance Minister in my short parliamentry experience refuse to bring down any papers relating to the public business of the country.

Mr. CURRIE. Mr. Fielding refused to bring down letters on the subject of reciprocity.

Mr. MACDONALD. They were private communications, not dealing with matters which come within the purview of what we are discussing here. Suppose that any public body interested in the tariff sent a delegation here to wait upon the Finance Minister, and they put their statement in writing and it became a matter of record. That would be all right, but can it be argued that parliament should abandon its right to have before it the information upon which the government acted, unless it was of such a confidential character as comes within the well defined rules of parliamentary practice?

Mr. BORDEN. I think it is in the practice not only of the Department of Finance, but in other departments of the government not to bring down certain information.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is well understood.

Mr. BORDEN. On confidential matters.

Mr. MACDONALD. Within the well understood parliamentary practice.

Mr. BORDEN. And in respect to matters with which parliament has to deal.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is well defined by all the books on the subject.

Mr. BORDEN. For example—one of hundreds of illustrations that might be given—some portions of the correspondence relating to the construction of the National Transcontinental were not brought down to parliament in the first instance, though the information was moved for. I am not criticising the action of the government of that day in that regard, but simply giving this as an illustration. The correspondence was brought down subsequently.

Mr. MACDONALD. If we have a well defined railway rule to which we can resort to understand parliamentary practice in this matter and know what is confidential in its nature, and if it is proposed by this section to extend that in any way—the Minister of Finance says that it is not. Then, why put it in?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The object is that business people and others giving information may feel certain that they will be protected. As between government and parliament there is no change under the Bill. But, if there were no such rule as this, based upon common sense and experience, that confidential communications should not be brought down, the effect would be that there would be no confidential communications and the Minister of Finance and the government would be denied information that might be of the greatest possible value. Take the case which has been instanced of a deputation coming, presenting their views and handing in a memorandum. That memorandum becomes public property and would be brought down to the House. But suppose the minister says to one company that has been a party to it: I would like to know your financial position. Or suppose that in supplementing the memorandum a company should write giving its balance sheet and saying: You see we are in a precarious condition. But if they indicated by marking the letter 'private' or 'not official' that they did not desire these the facts made public, then, under the unvarying rule, such a communication would not be brought down. This Bill does not effect any change in that respect. This commission is merely ancillary to government for the purpose of obtaining information such as up to this time we have obtained in another way, and, therefore, we make it subject to the same rule that has always prevailed with regard to confidential communications.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not this subsection 6 provide that the commissioners themselves may suppress sworn testimony——

Mr. MEIGHEN. It says they shall not make it public.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is not that the same thing? What, then, does it mean? It means that they shall not transmit it with their official report.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). Does not section 4 control that, in its provision that the commission shall report to the minister?

Mr. PUGSLEY. But this subsection 6 of section 5 qualifies that when it says that certain evidence or information 'shall not be made public by the commission,' as by sending in their report they would make it public.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Section 4 provides that all evidence shall be reported; and it does not confine it to evidence upon oath, or even to verbal evidence.

Mr. MACDONALD. But, on that point, this subsection 6 of section 5 refers to 'evidence or information.' That distinguishes between evidence sworn and information given otherwise.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If it is information that cannot be called evidence of any character, then, it does not come under the provision regarding the reporting of evidence under subsection 5 of section 4. But all information or evidence must be reported by the commission. Unless that is qualified, of course, it carries its weight throughout the Bill. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) argues that subsection 6 of section 5 qualifies that and authorizes the commission to subtract from the report to the minister such information as may be confidential. But the Bill does not say that. It says the commission shall not make public that part of the inquiry that is confidential. That does not say that it shall not be reported to the minister. But the commission, in the very hearing of the testimony might make it public, and might be compelled to make it public unless released from that obligation by subsection 6 of section 5. That subsection authorises them to refrain from making public evidence of that character, but does not release them from the obligation of reporting it to the minister. The minister must get it. Then, when it has reached the minister, it is in exactly the same position as other communications that come to him.

Mr. McKENZIE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) say that the report of this commission is in the same position as a private letter received by the minister?

Mr. MEIGHEN. In this respect, it is. The situation as between minister and parliament is altogether unchanged.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman say that the minister having received a report based upon sworn testimony, can refuse to bring that down to parliament, because he thinks it confidential.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have not said that. But I say that if the minister could have refused before, he can refuse now. As between the minister and parliament matters are in the same position as if there were no Bill. And it has been the practice that the minister receiving communications and reports is the judge of what is confidential and what is not, and what he deems confidential, does not come down to parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman does not forget——

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not forget the speech of the Minister of Finance on this point——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But he forgets that when we were on section 4, an hon. member moved that the commission, instead of reporting to the minister, should report to parliament, and then it was stated that what came before the commission would be brought down to parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Subject to this limitation.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I mentioned that specifically.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. One can well understand that if one communicates with a minister he has the right to set the seal of secrecy upon his communication. That is obvious. But the Minister of Finance has referred several times to the fact that we on this side were satisfied with a bureau of statistics. So we were. But he was not; he wanted to have a commission; and, as I understood it, this commission is intended to be a court for collecting evidence.

Then if the court is to receive evidence, and if any man comes before the court to give evidence, he should be told: What you say here shall not be treated as confidential; if you don't want to have it published to the world, then don't give it at all. This commission, if it is to serve any good purpose, is to collect information, not for the minister alone, but for parliament also. You are arguing now that the commission may collect information which the minister may keep to himself, and not disclose to parliament. I do not think that is the way the commission should proceed. Anything that is given to the commission ought to be given to parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not think the point raised by the right hon. gentleman is the same as that raised by the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), which I have answered, namely, that there is no restriction whatever which would relieve the commission of their obligations to report to the minister. As to the point raised by the right hon. gentleman, he says that inasmuch as parliament sees fit to appoint a commission instead of a statistical bureau, and the commission is in the nature of a court of inquiry, that necessarily evidence given before it to be transmitted to the minister is to be laid before parliament. Now there is nothing that should be public property that will not be public property after this Bill goes through. Every such piece of information presented to the minister before without the medium of a commission that was public property, and that was presented to parliament, will still be public property. Then the question arises: Is it advisable to give the commission power to go beyond that, is it advisable not to restrict the commission from investigating the private affairs of a company, and reporting that to the minister because the commission is a commission. Now that is the only question before us. If the right hon. gentleman takes the responsibility of saying that it is better to have all that shut out, that it is better for the minister to keep his eyes closed to all those facts simply because this is a court of inquiry instead of a statistical bureau, he takes the responsibility of fettering the commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not object to the minister's eyes being opened, but I object to his eyes being closed.

Mr. MEIGHEN. As the minister has pointed out, the course suggested by the right hon. gentleman will have the effect of closing the eyes of the minister and the eyes of every one else, because the evidence will never be given under these circumstances. There is nothing which was made public before that will not be made public now. No evidence of the character that before was necessarily public and came before the minister, will now be confidential. But it is in the public interest that the commission be not fettered from making such inquiries and such reports to the minister as are in their nature confidential, because we believe it is in the public interest to do so. I do not apprehend that there will be much evidence of this character. But it might on certain points be vital, and it is in the public interest that the minister should have it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I object to this Tariff Commission, which is to all intents and purposes to be a court, being allowed to act upon, and to report upon, and form their judgment upon information which is not to be submitted to parliament, and of which parliament or the public is not to have the benefit. We are taking a new departure now, the majority of the House has decided that these inquiries in future are not to be made by a branch of the government, but they are to be made by an independent tribunal, whose judgment it is supposed will be the justification of action to be taken by parliament in regard to tariff matters.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Why should that new departure affect any confidential communications?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell the hon. gentleman why it should affect proceedings so far as evidence is concerned. At present, if the minister makes a change in the tariff, although there may be private communications upon which he has acted, he can be questioned with regard to the information upon which he has acted, he can be questioned with regard to the exercise of his judgment, and will be obliged to give to parliament a substantial reason for making an alteration in the tariff. But in the case of an independent board, if this Bill passes, even the minister might not know the information upon which his board is acting.

Mr. BLAIN. The board does not act.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does. Under subsection 5 of section 5, the board may obtain information, upon which they may act, and yet not submit it to the minister. Let me read subsection 5:

> For the purposes of any inquiry under this Act, the commissioners may obtain information which in their judgment is authentic, otherwise than under the sanction of an oath or affirmation, and use and act upon such information.

Mr. BLAIN. According to the statement of my hon. friend, the Tariff Commission would have power to make changes in the tariff. As I understand it, they only report to the minister, and it is the government that makes the changes in the tariff.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The commission would have power to report in favour of such and such action being taken, and they need not submit to the minister the information upon which they base that report.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman himself has been a minister of the Crown, and so has the right hon. leader of the opposition. This Bill deals with the revenues of the Crown. Both hon. gentlemen know that the Customs Department can proceed and take evidence under oath. Information may be given relative to somebody smuggling goods into the country, and the department may take evidence under oath with reference to that. They may fine a man, and he has no recourse, and the department need not disclose that evidence nor even the names of the witness. Even this House has no power to compel the evidence or the names to be made public. Now, this Bill is exactly on a par. It deals with the revenues of the country. It is desirable that information should be got from all sources. It assumes an old prerogative of the Crown, that the commission will have a right to obtain that evidence; to say that that evidence must be made public, I think is going far beyond what any minister of the Crown or parliament have gone heretofore.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The two cases are not parallel at all. My hon. friend cites the case of a man who has been fined by the Department of Customs for infringing the Customs Act. That is an individual case, a direct case. Then, according to the law, the minister deals with that case, and he deals with it secretly; you cannot call for the papers under those circumstances. But here is a law which is passed, not to carry out an existing law, but to obtain information upon which to frame a tariff, the most important of all laws, because it relates to the collection of the revenue. This law is to supply general information upon which we can form our judgment as to what we should do in any individual case, what duties we should impose upon such and such an article. That is the object of the commission, to collect evidence to enable us to form our judgment. It is an open court to select evidence which can be digested. The two things are not at all on a par.

Mr. CURRIE. I think the two things are on a par. In the one case, the right hon. gentleman says we deal with the administration of the law. Now complaint has been made; and no doubt the right hon. gentleman knows himself how difficult it was during the last parliament to get any information with reference to tariff matters, or to the operations of the industries of the country. One of the great outstanding facts brought out last session was that the government had no information of any kind with regard to proposed tariff changes.

One of the great difficulties in connection with getting information is that, if you establish a tribunal that has power to compel witnesses to give information, you must necessarily dig into private affairs just as much as you dig into people's private affairs when a man from the Customs Department goes into a warehouse and says to the owner: You have goods here that you have smuggled and we are going to fine you $10,000. He pays the money and that is the end of it. This Tariff Commission is to be empowered to go into any factory or among any class of the community for the purpose of obtaining information. For instance, it could compel the Grange to appear and it could question its members privately with regard to some matter concerning the farming industry. It will do exactly what the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs have always done in the past. It is simply an extension of the old prerogative on the same lines and it is a very wise proceeding. It would be very unjust and unfair to compel people to come before this commission and to give evidence relating to their private business and have their affairs published to the world.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE. My right hon. friend does not agree with me.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is altogether wrong. I would not compel any man to give evidence that ought not to be made public, and I would not give authority to these commissioners to take evidence which might not be made public.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). Is not the cost of production a confidential matter? Surely you would not want the cost of production to be made known to competitors in some line of business? You nullify the whole effect of the Act unless you empower the commission to investigate into the cost of production.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely the citizens who have to pay the taxes that are going to be based upon the information collected have just as much right to and interest in a full knowledge of the information as the commission or as the government. They claim that right.

Mr. CURRIE. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that he would not compel a man to give evidence that ought not to be made public. This commission compels him to give evidence. We will say that a consumer complains to the commission that there is a certain article that is being sold at a very high price and that there is a combine existing; or a purchaser might say that this combine is selling goods cheaper to his next door neighbour than it is to himself. This commission can compel everybody to appear before it and give evidence. But, if you eliminate the possibility of compelling people to give evidence, you only have oral statements and hearsay. The right hon. gentleman has been so accustomed to going by oral statements and hearsay evidence that he cannot understand how it is possible to get down to facts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is mistaken. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has told us that the Budget was made by rule of thumb whereas Mr. Fielding never did anything of that kind. But my hon. friend will compel a man to give evidence about his business, compel him to disclose it altogether, for the benefit of the Minister of Finance who will put it in his bosom, who will not give it to me or to any of my hon. friends but who will prepare his tariff with it. We will ask him for it and he will say: I cannot give you the information. That is surely not the purpose of this commission. This commission, if it means anything, has for its object the collection of evidence which will be available to every member of parliament, nay, to every voter in this country. Unless that is the object, the Bill is not worth the paper it is written on. The object we have in view is to disseminate knowledge. I state again, as has been said by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), that the man who pays the taxes will be interested to know upon what information the law is made that compels him to pay his taxes. The commission say to a man who wants a change in tariff that he must disclose everything in connection with his business, but that the information thus secured shall not be brought before the public. On the other hand I would say to him: You are not compelled to give any evidence in this court, but any evidence which you do give shall be made public.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That would simply mean that a very large and important body of information would not be available to the minister at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Is that a desirable situation or not? Is it going to do any harm if the minister or the government is in possession of information which would otherwise not be open to them, even if the commission should resort to coercion by reason of their power of summoning witnesses and compelling evidence? My hon. friend seems to go a certain distance and then he says: Now, stop; you must not obtain any other information. I think he is overlogical in regard to this. How does it work out? The tariff may not be brought down to an absolute nicety. Both my predecessor and his predecessor had to content themselves with information obtained from committees, deputations and interviews. They had a great deal of confidential information, and if my hon. friend will read the speeches of my predecessor he will find that he said something like this: It has been made apparent to us, or from information we are satisfied that such and such is so. We have not had any sinister or untoward results flow from information of that kind. All we are doing is obtaining more information than possibly could be obtained under the old system by a tariff commission, and if we are also obtaining some information which is guarded by the seal of confidence we are not in any way changing the situation. The situation is precisely the same as it has been.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will tell my hon. friend what my conception of this law is. As was stated by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, this is a new departure. We used to obtain information in the way which has been stated by the Minister of Finance. The minister got it, some of it was confidential and some of it was not. But, we have now a new departure and my conception of this Bill is that it ought to be to get information for the benefit not only of the Minister of Finance but for every member of this parliament.

Mr. BORDEN. The information obtained under the old system was not solely for the benefit of the Minister of Finance; it was for the benefit of the government and of parliament. The information would be used in the preparation of the budget, and it would be disclosed in so far as it was not confidential. It is proposed now to gather this information in a more systematic and thorough way. Ought there to be a change in so far as confidential information is concerned? I cannot see any reason for any change in that regard Further than that, the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Pugsley) has spoken of the possibility of sworn information not being disclosed to parliament. What is the difference in principle as to whether you obtain that information not under the sanction of an oath or under the sanction of an oath?

It might be desirable for the considerations mentioned in this section and for other considerations not to bring it down in parliament.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Suppose evidence is taken in connection with the woollen schedule, and some of it is regarded as confidential and some not, then if a member moves that all the evidence taken in regard to the woollen schedule should be laid on the table, would this section restrict the right of the member to so move?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In any case, the government must take the responsibility for producing or not producing any evidence. If parliament does not consider that the government has given good reason for withholding any information, parliament is perfectly at liberty to pass a resolution accordingly. My right hon. friend would not say that because this information is to be gathered in a more systematic way by a commission than by a bureau, that the considerations which would govern the information obtained by the bureau should not be applied to the information obtained by the commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But there we are establishing a board to obtain information, and if that be so the information it obtains should be public.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is it intended that the evidence taken before these commissioners shall be open to the public or will it be a private investigation, a star-chamber proceeding? I would think it should certainly be open to the public.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am very much surprised that my hon. friend should even suggest such a thing as a star-chamber in a country like Canada. I do not know whether he does so on account of any past experience. The hearings before the commission, I assume, will be open.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then how can section 6 be made applicable? If the evidence is to be taken in public how could it be confidential?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Subject to the exception in the statute.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then the commissioners would have to know in advance that certain information of a confidential nature was about to be produced and would have to exclude the public at that point. The matters covered by section 4, the prices of raw materials, the cost of production, the cost of construction in Canada, the cost and conditions of labour, the prices received by producers involve inquiries into the books of individuals, firms and companies.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Does the hon. gentleman suggest that it should be a star-chamber?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That is what your argument amounts to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but the moment you give the commissioners power to exclude the public while certain evidence is given under oath you make it a star-chamber inquiry.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I presume that when the inquiry approaches a point where information confidential in its nature is about to be elicited, the witness could claim privilege or the court say that the information should not be made public. The alternative would be simply a star-chamber throughout. The public would not sustain a commission which would divulge information that would injure business houses. Even in an ordinary court it is common for a judge to receive information that is confidential.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Never.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). A name for instance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Any judge who would decide a case through information obtained otherwise than by evidence given in open court would not be discharging his duty properly.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). There is a great deal of discretion reposed in a judge. Either this information will not be obtained and consequently will not be available, or some such clause as this will have to be in the Bill. I do not see anything gained by leaving it out.

Mr. GERMAN. The Finance Minister stated this afternoon that the files of his department are loaded with private information which he would not divulge. There is nothing statutory to prevent him from giving out that private information and what is to prevent such private information coming to the Finance Minister in the future as in the past? My own opinion is that this commission, appointed and paid by this parliament, should report to this parliament and that all their evidence should be submitted to us. The best Tariff Commission this country has ever seen was the Tariff Commission, self-appointed in 1896.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That is up to date.

Mr. GERMAN. The best up to date and better than this one will be in my opinion. That commission went throughout Canada and made full inquiry into the whole business situation of the country. They did not make a decision by rule of thumb. The late Finance Minister submitted a tariff which met with the approval of the people of the whole country and for fifteen years with the approval of the present Finance Minister, the best tariff I believe that Canada ever had. I doubt very much if we can improve on it. I think it is quite proper to have inquiries made. I am not in favour of a permanent Tariff Commission.

I think it is quite well to have a Tariff Commission with ample authority to make all inquiries in regard to the trade situations of this country, but I think, Sir, that the evidence taken by that commission should be reported to parliament together with the commission's views on that evidence, and I think that should be made plain. I do not think that the commission should be allowed to hear evidence under oath, or any private conversation, that is not reported to parliament. Let those gentlemen who want to make their private suggestions to the Finance Minister make them, and let the Minister of Finance keep that information secret, as has been done in the past without any statutory provision to compel it to be done. But that this parliament should authorize a commission of gentlemen to inquire into the trade conditions of the country and to take evidence and report on that evidence to the Minister of Finance without making that evidence public, I think it wrong in principle, and will be detrimental to the interests of the country.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friend (Mr. German) has gone back to section 4, which was debated at length the other day. Now, I think it has been stated from this side a score of times that the information that will come to the Minister of Finance will be brought down to this House the same as any other information on record in the Department of Finance or in any other department. If there is any doubt about that I want to clear it up now. That information will be brought down. There has been absolutely no departure from the principle which has obtained in this House. If the information is in the departments here it is subject to the demand of parliament, there is no question about that. My hon. friend said why not report to parliament. Let me tell him one reason why that course should not be adopted. In the first place—as I pointed out this afternoon, and it seems to me a reason of the greatest weight—the time when the government has to consider the question of the tariff is between sessions. There is no time in the life of busy ministers, as any hon. gentleman opposite knows who has been in the ministry, to consider such an important matter as the tariff. Now if the suggestion of my hon. friend that the commission should report only to parliament, when would the scores of reports they should be studying and considering between sessions be available for the minister? My hon. friend fails to perceive that we are working under a system of responsible government. The government is responsible to this House and the country, and we want to ask this Tariff Board to pursue these investigations and report to us. When they are made to the Minister of Finance they are made to the government. The government will have them just as it has the reports which are on file in the Department of Finance and in the other departments to-day. There is absolutely no departure in principle. There will be confidential information given. My hon. friend (Mr. German) fails to perceive it is not possible to hold an investigation, such as is contemplated under section 4 of this Act, into the affairs of an industrial concern, into the affairs of the commercial concern, without happening across information which in its very nature is private, which in its very nature if it were published might do considerable damage to the firm by giving a trade rival an insight into the methods of that firm which would be extremely detrimental to it. If my hon. friend will realize that there is absolutely no difference in principle between the system which will obtain under this Act and the system in vogue at the present time, he will have gone far to understand this Bill and clear up his doubts in the matter. Hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon, suggested a bureau. Well, that bureau would have power to investigate an industrial plant, or a steel company, or any industry. They put accountants in, and those accountants would obtain a great deal of information. Some of that information is confidential. It is impossible to conduct an investigation by a commission without happening upon information that is confidential in its nature. It is precisely that kind of information that must be protected. It would be unreasonable to allow an investigation into the affairs of a firm if it is to be published to the world in all its particulars. If that were proposed to be done, public opinion would not justify the creation of a Tariff Commission; I think that must appeal to common sense. If my hon. friend will simply bear in mind that this is necessary to the government for the purpose of obtaining information, that nearly all the information they obtain, will be valuable, but in order to protect confidential information from publication which would do damage to those giving it, the difficulties which he seems to be afraid of would disappear, because most of them, I submit, are fanciful. The reason this provision is put in, as I have already explained, is this; it is an additional assurance to men who have come forward and given their evidence, and who then would be quite willing that evidence should be obtained. Mr. Emery of the Tariff Board of the United States, says that men have been very willing there to give information, and that such a clause as we have in our Act is necessary, in order to protect witnesses. When a business man produces his books, his list of customers, his trade secrets and his business processes for the inspection of the commission, does any one seriously contend that all that information should be divulged to the public? I think, upon reflection, my hon. friend will see that is not a reasonable position.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why would the commissioners want evidence under oath as to secret trade processes, and that sort of thing? Why should they take any evidence, except that which has a direct bearing upon the matters which they are there to investigate? Furthermore, why should they draw conclusions and report their opinions without the facts upon which they make the report being available for the information of parliament?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am glad my hon. friend drew my attention to the point, because I failed to answer the argument that he advanced before. He is of the opinion that the only way that information will be obtained, will be by judicial proceedings. The commission may obtain information in a hundred different ways, and put their expert accountants into the offices of a firm to investigate. For example, one man may be making a saving in the cost of production, due to some business process, or some better method that he has over a rival, and then with regard to an industry at a critical time in the history of that industry, they would find any number of firms that were really in a precarious condition. That investigation would disclose they were not making money, but were running behind so much every year. Now, that is information of a very confidential character. My hon. friend surely does not mean to say that the commission should publish the fact that A, B and C were in a certain line of business, were losing money, and that their business was in a precarious condition? It is surely to safeguard things of this kind that this clause is inserted, and it must be inserted, because, as I have said, the public would not permit a commission unless it were safeguarded; and in the second place, it is advisable that it should be inserted to give an assurance to business men who, knowing the subsection is there, will give information which otherwise they would not give at all. In other words, this subsection is absolutely in aid, not in obstruction, of the commission obtaining information which they would never otherwise obtain at all. I think that upon full consideration of these arguments, hon. gentlemen opposite will say that it is a necessary clause, otherwise you are forced back to this alternative: You are going to be denied a class of information that would be very useful. But you are not any further on even if you strike out this subsection. I mean to say, that, with this in the Bill, you do get the further information, but without it you do not get that information.

Mr. NESBITT. Why?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), knows very well that no coercion will enable you to extort from men information, the publication of which will mean injury to their business. You might succeed in extorting some information, but you cannot get all the information you need. And you should not extort such information in any case. It is not right. The public will stand behind this section, because it is plain business sense. There is not a man in this House who, being in business, would submit to have his whole business made known to his rivals—his better methods would perhaps have been devised by himself or have cost him money——

Mr. NESBITT. Is there any necessity for that?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). There might be. If there is not, the clause will not be operative. It is only to provide for a case that may arise.

Mr. GERMAN. The minister is assuming that some business men are going to give evidence to this commission, and through them to the Minister of Finance, which might be a detriment to their business. No man in business is going to give any information, private or public, that would be detrimental to his personal interest. The evidence he is going to give, and the only evidence he will give, will be evidence to show that he needs higher tariff protection.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Perhaps the hon. member (Mr. German), will allow me to ask him a question. Assuming what he says to be true, what is the objection to the clause? If no such information is given, the clause will not be operative.

Mr. GERMAN. The objection to my mind is just this, and the fear is just this —that this commission is to be appointed with a view to increasing the protective tariff.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GERMAN. That may or may not be true, but it certainly has a strong hold on the minds of the people of the country that that is the object of the commission.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Is the hon. gentleman a low tariff man or a free trader?

Mr. GERMAN. I am in favour of fair, moderate protection to the industries of this country. But I think that the fairest protection that the industries of this country can have is the protection they have had for 15 years. As I was saying, there is this underlying fear that the commission may be composed of high tariff men—I am not saying that it will be; I heard the other day in Toronto who was to be the chairman, and if the information is correct, that end of the commission will certainly be on the high protection side.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If he is a good man I will be delighted to tell the House, because, I am looking for a good chairman.

Mr. GERMAN. For a good many years he was a Liberal. He is a good man, but a high protectionist. If the commissioners are all of the same kind, is it not possible for them to get private, oral evidence to make their reports to the minister on lines that will go to justify high protection? And if that is done, the ministers can shield themselves behind the report of their commission who, they can plead, have gone throughout the country and made a full investigation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GERMAN. Well, I am afraid that that is what they will do; and there is a very strong feeling in the country that that is what they will do. The ministers will shield themselves behind the report, and it will be a report based on evidence that is not absolutely true to the facts, because it will be coloured by personal feeling or personal interest. There is the difficulty I see in regard to this Tariff Commission.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The hon. gentleman bases his case on a series of 'ifs,' none of which will eventuate.

Mr. GERMAN. 'If' it does not happen all right.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The hon. gentleman's mind is full of suspicion. I suppose he thinks it impossible to create a fairminded tribunal. I do not know his experience, but I would hate to think it impossible to pick out three disinterested, fairminded men——

Mr. MACDONALD. Who are they to be?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I should be glad of suggestions. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou) is available. He is certainly a fair-minded man, outside of politics, but when it comes to politics, he is not so fair-minded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The newspapers say that the hon. member for York is to be one of the commissioners.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean)?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for York, New Brunswick (Mr. Crocket).

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I have heard that newspapers have reported a number of gentlemen as about to be appointed on that commission. I have had a great number of applications. If there is any man in Canada who does not think he is fitted to sit on that commission I would like to know. I think it is possible to choose men who are not going to look at this matter from a standpoint of high tariff or low tariff, men who have a talent for economic investigation and who will regard the subject fairly. And I believe that those who want information with regard to the tariff, with regard to the dark places in the tariff, are the farmers and consumers; and I say that this Tariff Commission is more in the interests of the consumers and the farmers than it is in the interest of the manufacturers. I think it is in the interest of all. What is the purpose of the Tariff Commission?

Mr. OLIVER. To raise the tariff, of course.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The purpose of the Tariff Commission is to secure information. Now, there cannot be any harm in obtaining information; you can not know too much about the facts. Our methods with relation to the tariff in the past have been hugger-mugger methods, go-as-you-please methods, rule-of-thumb methods, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said. But this government comes in with a proposal for a commission to investigate this matter and obtain information, and hon. gentlemen opposite, who can find no fault with the Bill itself—for they cannot find in it, high tariff or low tariff—declare that they are fearful and suspicious, and to justify this declaration they conjure up spectres of various kinds. They say they fear that we will appoint a high tariff commission. We have responsible government in this country, and this government is responsible to the House and to the people, and must do right or the people will hold them to account. The government will be held responsible for the appointments they make, and in the last analysis, for the work of the commission. My hon. friends opposite are a little inconsistent, for, I believe, most of them believe in this measure. And I am the first to say that the measure should be debated because it is a departure from old methods. But now they suggest a statistical bureau. For what reason? To get information? They never made any such suggestion until this Bill was brought down. If such a bureau was a good thing, why did not they create it five years ago or earlier? Was it because they did not feel the want of information? or because they preferred to act without information? This Tariff Commission is simply a bureau clothed with powers that could not be given to a bureau. The men appointed will be the kind of men, we hope, who will make an impartial investigation. There is absolutely nothing in the Bill which indicates that the gentlemen who are to be appointed will be high tariff men, or moderate tariff men, or low tariff men, or free traders; and anything said as to the kind of men that will be appointed is entirely without foundation, because, as a matter of fact, not one of the men has yet been selected.

Mr. NESBITT. Section 5 gives the commission the right to obtain information without taking it under oath, and section 6 says that any information they take should not be given by one firm to another, they need not make it public. Now, I agree that there may be a good deal of information that probably should not be made public, that is, if the commission goes into the inquiry as far as it is suggested. For instance, information as to the process of manufacture should not be made public. I can imagine that there are many things people would object to say if they thought it was going to be made public. But after all, this Tariff Commission is appointed by the government, and have we a right to say that any evidence given before that commission should not be at the disposal of this parliament? I doubt it. I appreciate that there are many private communications given to the minister which he is at liberty to keep to himself; but the Tariff Commission, I think, is in a different position. But supposing these two sections 4 and 5 were stricken out entirely, would not the commission have the right to take evidence otherwise than under oath?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think my hon. friend must have been out this afternoon, because I have explained that many times over. Number 4 shows the scope of the Tariff Commission; it shall make inquiry as to certain specified things already mentioned. Number 5 deals entirely with procedure in obtaining information. Now, if we struck that out I have no doubt the commission might, in the exercise of its discretion, obtain the information which is mentioned in Number 4, and also keep it as confidential. But I have explained why that is put in. In the first place, it is to remove a doubt, and there can never be objection to putting in a clause to remove a doubt; it is to show that they may act upon information not obtained under the sanction of an oath. Further, it is an advantage that a clause safeguarding confidential information should be in the Bill, for the reason that parties outside may be willing to give confidential information of this nature if they know that their communications will be protected by a subsection in this Act; I think these clauses should remain in the Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For one, I am not yet convinced, notwithstanding that we are feeling so good on this side of the House, that I would be willing to do almost anything to cause even a momentary pleasure to my hon. friend; but in the public interest, I do not think we should do so. I move that section 5 be amended by striking out subsection 6. I do not think it is necessary. How would it do to dispose of the amendment already moved to subsection 5?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). When we resumed the sitting I had an amendment which we had considered. I think its substance is the same as suggested by my hon. friend. This amendment, I think, will add nothing to the Bill, except to make a little more clear what the hon. gentleman had in his mind. My own idea is that the commissioners, in the exercise of their discretion, and in the conduct of their proceedings, would be very glad to give a reasonable opportunity to all who might desire to be heard, that is, to take evidence on a particular inquiry, and if any one desires to be heard, I assume they would give reasonable opportunity to parties to be heard. I think that is what the commission would do, but there is no reason why it should not be made clear if there is any doubt. Therefore, I suggest the following as subsection 2, to section 5:

> The commissioners shall give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been so summoned to appear before them and give evidence upon oath or solemn affirmation as aforesaid, orally or in writing, upon any matter relating to the inquiry which is being held by the commission.

It is practically the same. My hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), got very excited when he was dealing with an amendment which gave absolute right to any number of persons to come in and pile up evidence on any subject, no matter whether the commissioners were dealing with that subject or not. I do not think the hon. gentleman quite understood the situation. 'Shall take evidence of person or persons.' That simply means that the commission would carry on its proceedings in the most desultory fashion imaginable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte), said he would accept the amendment which I sent to my hon. friend. We have gained two things in Canada to-day.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). You have one or two things to your credit for Canada, I know, but they are set off against a great many other things. However, I am very glad to see my hon. friend in such good humour. He is usually in good humour, but I have not seen hon. gentleman opposite very happy for a long time: They looked gloomy the other day when we brought in the 'implementing' Bill.

Mr. MACDONALD. How is the Minister of Finance himself feeling to-night?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). He is feeling fairly well, thank you.

Mr. MACDONALD. You are not looking very well.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I feel reasonably well.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wonder how the Minister of Trade and Commerce now feels about that poison which he said would be injected into the veins of the government if the election went against them.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think you will find that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is quite able to answer for himself and if my hon. friend will renew the question when he returns from Toronto, where, I believe he is to-day, I think he will get an answer which will be in keeping with the ability of my hon. colleague to take care of himself. The only reason I am explaining this at some length is because the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) stampeded a little this afternoon. There can be no difference between us when I make the explanation that there is no objection whatever to a reasonable opportunity being given to persons to state their views in any particular inquiry.

Mr. NESBITT. That is all I want.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). What I had in my mind to-day was one or ten or twenty persons coming in, offering such evidence as they might feel disposed to offer and having a perfect right to insist upon being heard. You will not find a clause like that in any statute, the railway Act or any other. This subsection, I think will make a little clearer the intention of the Bill with respect to this matter:

The commissioners shall give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been so summoned to appear before them and give evidence upon oath or solemn affirmation aforesaid, orally or in writing, upon any matter relating to the inquiry then being held by the commission.

Mr. NESBITT. Orally or in writing?

Mr. BORDEN. It follows the previous clause.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). We will put that in subsection 2.

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to say that I am very much satisfied with the clause as the minister has moved it. I am very glad that he is giving the people an opportunity to be heard. That is all I want.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). We always intended to give them an opportunity.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). In the practical working out of this matter I would like to ask the Minister of Finance how notice of the sittings or examinations or investigations into particular schedules will be given to the public? Is it the intention to publish the dates of the sittings and what will there be considered, or how will the various interests be notified? For instance, if they are going to discuss the cement schedule or the steel schedule or any such schedule will the interests be given public notice of it or in what way will the various parties receive notice?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Having put this clause in I feel that very great discretion must necessarily be reposed in the commission. I assume that the commission will, of course, carry out their duties in such a way as is best calculated to effectuate the intention of the Bill, namely, to obtain information, and I have no doubt they will give notice of their sittings. I think that if these matters were too closely prescribed we might fetter the commission in carrying out the work entrusted to them.

Mr. NESBITT. If I remember correctly the last part of the amendment that the minister read stated that persons would have an opportunity ' to give evidence upon the subject under investigation '?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Upon the subject of inquiry.

Mr. NESBITT. I want to know to what extent that goes. Supposing, as an illustration, that they were investigating the question of the yarn duties and they were in a town away from Ottawa, we will say, in the western part of Ontario. If they were investigating that question on a particular day would it be possible for those who wanted to be heard on other questions, that they knew the commission were going to investigate later and which did not have reference to the particular line of business that they were then taking up, to be heard, because, otherwise, it would be a great hardship. Suppose they were in Windsor, or London, and somebody wanted to be heard upon some other question; would it be possible for them to be heard?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That is in the discretion of the commission.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not think we could go into details of that kind in the statute. The language which has been used in that regard is the language that has been suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite—relative to the matter then under inquiry, or in relation to the matter then under inquiry. You leave it to the judgment of any tribunal as to what evidence would be relevant.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chairman has called my attention to the fact that the record is a little bit mixed by his receiving the amendment of my hon. friend from Richmond, then my suggested amendment and then the amendment of the hon. Minister of Finance, which is really the same as the one I suggested with the addition of a few words. How would it be if the amendment of my hon. friend from Richmond were withdrawn, if mine were withdrawn and the amendment of the Minister of Finance were adopted? That would keep the record right.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think that is the correct procedure.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not understand what is meant by evidence 'orally or in writing.'

Mr. CURRIE. Perhaps it means testimony as differing from evidence. People give testimony and the evidence is the truthful part of it.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think that my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) will understand that evidence, of course, may be oral. But evidence by way of affidavit is written evidence.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is never spoken of as evidence in writing.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Evidence in writing would be this: There is power taken in the Act for the employment of experts, accountants, and so on.

Mr. McKENZIE. You are apt to have lawyers before this commission and they will never agree that evidence in writing means an affidavit.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The commission is authorized to accept any evidence that they deem to be proper. Take the books of a firm——

Mr. McKENZIE. That is never evidence.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). But it is made evidence by this Act and they may accept it if they see fit. Then, there are the reports of various departments of government, not only of this government but other governments, such as trade reports and everything of that kind. These do not ordinarily constitute evidence given under the sanction of oath, but, by virtue of this section it is competent to them to obtain information of that kind. What my hon. friend says is not evidence ordinarily in the courts of justice is made evidence under this Act.

Mr. McKENZIE. If that explanation is to be accepted it is all right. I simply want to know if, when a man comes and places a set of books before the commission and says that is evidence, it is to be accepted as evidence. Ordinarily it is not evidence, but if that is what the minister means it is all right.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. CURRIE. I wish to speak on the amendment of the hon. member. Under the present law respecting the customs, evidence can be taken on oath, and it is provided that that evidence may not be made public. Not only is that the case, but the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when Prime Minister, and his Finance Minister, Mr. Fielding, introduced what is known as the dumping clause legislation, and under that law, a number of permanent officers were appointed by the government in Chicago, Pittsburg, Antwerp, London, New York, and other large manufacturing centres in Europe and America. If it is thought that there is any dumping of manufactured articles in Canada at less than the price at which these articles are sold in other countries these officers are empowered to go into the head offices of these manufacturing concerns interested, and to compel them to show their books and to give their cost and selling prices at home and in other countries. Now, under the legislation proposed by the late government, that information is considered to be confidential and no member of this House has the right to move for a return showing what that information is. Anyhow, it is to some extent one of the ancient prerogatives of the Crown, that secret information may be obtained for the purposes of protecting the revenue and the Liberal party, when in power, acted on that rule for a number of years. I consider it would be a very unfortunate thing if information given by manufacturers or traders in this way, was disclosed to the public and to the competitors of these manufacturers and traders. It would be absurd to appoint a commission such as this, and to provide that all information submitted to it must be made public. Then, if the rule were enforced, that whatever evidence was submitted to this commission, should be made public, occasion might be taken to abuse that privilege and some crank might take it into his head to read before the commission, the writings of Karl Marx, the great socialist, and tender it as evidence, and the writings of Karl Marx would have to be published and circulated throughout the country. In the same way, a member of Congress once wanted to get Henry George's work on 'Progress and Poverty,' circulated at the expense of the nation, and he read it in Congress and had it printed in the Congressional Record, and circulated throughout the country. When the Tariff Commission of the late government travelled around the country, they were met at every place by a delegation of Socialists, who preached the doctrine of single tax or low tariff or free trade, and these gentlemen quoted the most alarming statistics I have ever seen. I think the Grangers of Ontario followed that commission around the whole province, and presented their ideas wherever they went, but I did not notice that the ministers followed to any extent, the advice they got from the Grangers. What has surprised me most of all in this discussion, is the attitude taken by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German). I hope the manufacturers of Welland; I hope the people whom the city of Welland is inviting to come over and establish factories there, will pay attention to what the hon. gentleman has said to-night, because he has shown his absolute hostility to manufacturers and manufacturing in this country. He prides himself as being the one man on the Liberal benches who was against reciprocity, and who fought it strenuously, and he was returned by acclamation on that issue, but to-night we have him proclaiming himself along the same lines as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). The hon. gentleman, (Mr. German) says he is in favour of a lower tariff.

Mr. GERMAN. I will have to correct the hon. gentleman, because nothing I said could by any possible stretch of the imagination lead him to believe any such thing.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman for Welland can say whatever he likes, but if I understood him properly he said he was a lower tariff man.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I am not a low tariff man; I am a no tariff man.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. member for Welland is a low tariff man and he told us that the only people in Canada who wanted assistance from this commission were the manufacturers, and if the manufacturers of his riding give any evidence before that commission about the state of their industry; if the rope industry, if the iron and steel industry, and if the paper industry, come before the commission and state private matters concerning their business, the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) wants that information disclosed to the public. I challenge him to deny that that is what he said.

Mr. GERMAN. I am quite content with the opinion the manufacturers of my county have of me, and I am not concerned about what opinion the hon. member (Mr. Currie) has of me.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman is trying to quibble on this question.

Mr. GERMAN. The manufacturers in my riding do not think so.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman is trying to take two sides on this question.

Mr. PUGSLEY The hon. member is not dealing with the question before the House; he is obstructing the Bill in the most unwarrantable manner, and I ask that he be called to order.

Mr. CURRIE. The only trouble with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) is that he is not going to be a member of this commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. CURRIE. I hope the citizens of Welland will take cognizance of what their member has said to-night?

Mr. GERMAN. They certainly will.

Mr. CURRIE. The clause is carried.

Mr. McKENZIE. The purpose of my amendment is that nothing should be put in evidence that was not intended afterwards to be made public property.

Mr. CURRIE. I rise to a point of order. As the House is in committee the rule permitting the mover of a substantive motion to reply does not apply, any member may speak as often as he chooses in committee. The chairman has declared the resolution lost and I do not see why it should be reopened.

Mr. LENNOX. As a matter of fair play, I saw the hon. member for Cape Breton standing waiting for an opportunity to speak, but the chairman did not happen to see him.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I was just asking the committee if the amendment ought to be adopted. The hon. member is at liberty to proceed.

Mr. McKENZIE. There seems to be a conflict of opinion in the government on this question. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) at pages 1322 and 1323 of 'Hansard,' gave his idea of the intention of this Bill after it had been discussed in Council. He said:

You say sometimes that this is to relieve the government. It is a very poor idea of it, that, you say it is to relieve members of parliament, it is a very poor idea, that. The business of making tariffs will be just the hardest, the most delicate, and responsible business, when you have a basis of facts that a good commission has gathered, that it has ever been in the country. No minister or ministry will ever be able to shield themselves behind generalities. Parliament itself will be put in possession of every fact that the ministers possess;—

There is the point of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Subsection 6 of section 5 says that there shall be facts obtained by the commission and reported to the minister which never can become the property of parliament. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce is right the Minister of Finance and those supporting him do not understand the full force and effect of this Bill.

Mr. CURRIE. What the hon. gentleman wants is the evidence and testimony taken by this commission. That is altogether different from a summary of the facts.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is not what the Minister of Trade and Commerce meant. Whatever form the evidence may take it will surely all be facts. He continued:

—will be an efficient check upon the material quota that are laying before them what they propose to do in the matter of the tariff, and in the matter of charges. They will be able to judge. Heretofore a minister has been able to escape behind generalities, he has been able to shield himself behind the ignorance of parliament with reference to the real conditions of every item upon which it was desired to act. After this, if this commission is rightly appointed, and if it rightly does its duty, not only the members will be judging the ministers, not only will the ministers be put on their mettle, because they have got to come to the touchstone of facts, but the intelligent country outside will have a chance of judging of a tariff such as it never had before.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Is it my hon. friend's idea that these reports will be brought down to parliament?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I never had the least idea that they would not.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Is there any objection to making the Bill definite in that respect?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). All these reports given in the line of what is called for, there, in getting information which is the basis of tariff measures, is the property, not of the government, or of the minister, but of parliament and of the country. Nobody, I think in this House, has ever had any other idea of it.

Mr. EDWARDS. The Minister of Finance distinctly stated that yesterday.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think we elaborated this matter in council. So far as I am concerned, I never had any other idea of it than that. So I say that that will be the position of things. No one will be able to shield himself behind an ex parte statement, or behind lack of knowledge when the knowledge will be there, and every intelligent man will be able to draw his own conclusions.

The subsection with which we are dealing, subsection 6, says that information can be in possession of the commission and of the minister which can never find its way into this parliament, because it is to be private and confidential, and, so treated. We are told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that every one of the 220 members will be in possession of the facts and can argue for himself and can arraign the minister armed with the same evidence as the minister. The minister can reply to the member, if the evidence is to be taken as now proposed; that is all right as far as the evidence you have is concerned.

But we have information not in your possession. You are putting your facts all right, but you must not forget that power was given to us by parliament to enable us to collect facts and figures and information which you have not at all. On those facts and figures and information we have based clauses of the tariff in such a manner that you cannot criticise them. This is the position in which the members on this side will be placed, as against the idea laid down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that every member of the House on the government or the opposition side would have the same data upon which to base his arguments. Now, however it is now proposed to carry out a contrary idea, and to gather any quantity of information of a private character which the commission intend to use but which those members who are unfortunate enough to be in opposition will know nothing about. They can always be told that the tariff is perfectly scientific and supported by the evidence although that evidence remains secret and inaccessible to us. That was the basis and the reason for the ground which I took, that no information should be in possession of the commission, that nothing in the form of evidence should be used by the government which should not afterwards become public property.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would move that section 5 be amended by striking out subsection 6 as printed—being in reality subsection 7 because there has been another subsection added. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to this and ask him in the first place what it means, and secondly what is the necessity of the subsection. Now let me read:

Evidence.

Which, of course, would mean evidence taken under oath:

Should evidence or information in its nature confidential, relating to the business or affairs of any person, firm or corporation, be given or elicited in the course of any inquiry, the evidence or information shall not be made public by the commission in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation, respectively.

It seems to me the Minister of Finance, if he is going to insist upon this should simply say, 'it shall not be made public' but he says 'it shall not be made public in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival' etc.

Mr. CURRIE. Common sense would tell the hon. gentleman—

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am asking the Minister of Finance.

Mr. CURRIE. Of course if the hon. gentleman will not let me answer him the—

Mr. DEPUTY SPERKER. The hon. gentleman for St. John has the floor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the utmost confidence in the ability of the Minister of Finance to answer the question.

Mr. CURRIE. It has been answered several times already.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Currie) I hope will not feel that I am treating him with discourtesy when I suggest that the Minister of Finance should answer.

Mr. CURRIE. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the subsection containing the words which I have quoted, ought to be struck out. It does seem to me that where evidence is taken under oath—I am not referring now to confidential information which the commission and the Minister of Finance might get—but where evidence is taken under oath, I think such evidence should be published for the information of every member of parliament and the general public. Bear in mind that even the Minister of Finance is not to have the discretion to say whether the evidence is of a confidential nature or not, that power rests with the commission. They are the gentlemen who are to be the judges of whether the information is confidential in its nature or not. Now I say the commission ought not to have the power to say they can investigate one man's business and make it just as public as they please, and treat the business affairs of another man, who may be a rival, as being confidential in their character. The Minister of Finance stated that this commission was like a bureau or like the minister himself getting information. I say it is entirely different. If the Minister of Finance came into parliament with a Bill proposing a change in the tariff, and he stated in respect to some items that he was raising the duty, and in respect to other items, was lowering it, every member of parliament would have the right to ask him the ground on which he desired parliament to make the change. In this case, it is an independent body of men, independent of the people, and independent of parliament, and it does seem to me that they ought not to be allowed to report the results of their inquiries, the effect of evidence which has been submitted to them, and then withhold that information from the public. That, I think, is the clear distinction, and that we on this side of the House should insist as strenuously as we can, that whatever evidence is taken by this commission in respect to matters which may affect tariff action, and upon the strength of which the government may take action, that ought to be available for the use of every member of parliament. Now as my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), said in his very clear remarks upon another clause, when the matter was last before the House, the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave us to understand that whatever evidence the commission acted upon would be accessible to every member of parliament, that it would be open to us to ask him as to the facts upon which he based any proposed amendment to the tariff. Then we could examine those facts entirely for ourselves and criticise if we desired, the action proposed. But if this Bill passes, there will be an abundance of testimony, which these commissioners may say is of a private or confidential character, evidence relating to the cost of production, to the cost of the raw material, relating to transportation,—evidence which they must necessarily get by examining different individuals and different corporations, evidence which, under this section, they could say, was of a confidential character. They would report to the minister their conclusions, they would say to the minister the evidence was confidential, and the minister would have information and a report from the Tariff Commission, but the evidence on which the report was based would not be available for parliament. There is nothing in this law which would prevent my hon. friend from getting private information if he wishes to. There is nothing which would prevent these commissioners from getting private information, although it is objectionable that they should do so.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). Without this provision the commission could not compel the giving of that information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At all events under the Bill as it now stands, the amendment of my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) having been voted down, these commissioners could get private information, but the clear intention is that they shall take evidence under oath. They have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to subject persons to fine and imprisonment, if, on being summoned, they fail to attend and give evidence. I think that whatever information they get from witnesses under oath, that information ought to be submitted to the minister, and, in the ordinary way, by the minister to parliament. The court ought to be an open court, just as the Board of Railway Commissioners is. Whoever heard of a proposition to amend the law establishing the Board of Railway Commissioners so as to authorize them to hold a secret and private tribunal or to give them power to take evidence under oath secretly which they might declare should not be made public? I have never heard anybody suggest such a thing, and I should be surprised to find any such provision in the Railway Act, certainly I have never heard such a suggestion.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. member look at section 374?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may be that there is such a section, but certainly, I never heard of it. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be good enough to let me see it. This section reads:

> All returns made in pursuance of any of the provisions of the four sections of this Act last preceding shall be privileged communications, and shall not be evidence in any court whatsoever except in any prosecution for,—
> (a) Default in making such returns in accordance with the requirements of this Act;
>
> (b) Perjury making any oath required by this Act in connection with such returns;
>
> (c) Forgery of any such return; or
>
> (d) Signing any such return knowing the same to be forged.

That is entirely a different matter from the section before us.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Just the other day I had occasion to write to the secretary of the Railway Commission asking him for the list of complaints that were made in respect of a certain crossing, and was informed by him that it was not the custom of the commission to divulge any information obtained in that way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That may be. All I say is that every examination under oath before the commission should be a public examination and everybody should have the right to hear the evidence of every witness. All that this section 374 of the Railway Act—and I thank my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) for sending it to me—provides is that the return made shall not be used in any other proceedings which may be taken.

Mr. MEIGHEN. They are privileged entirely.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may be so, but they are public.

Mr. MEIGHEN. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are absolutely and necessarily public. But the evidence given in a case——

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). Section 374 refers to returns, not to oral evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What the section of the Bill now before us provides is very different from that provided by section 374 of the Railway Act. It is proposed here that the Tariff Commissioners taking evidence under oath may, in their discretion, determine that certain evidence is private and confidential and that it shall not be made public. Then follow the extraordinary words 'in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival.' If the section declared that such evidence should not be made use of in a court of law that would be in accordance with a well known principle of law, and I should have no objection to a section of that kind. But this provides that parliament shall, in the discretion of these commissioners, be debarred from the knowledge of the evidence on which they have based their conclusions with regard to tariff matters. I say that is unjust to the public. This commission being appointed by authority of parliament, parliament ought to have access to every fact on which these commissioners make their report.

Mr. MEIGHEN. While I should like to see better progress made, the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) may be worth replying to once more. The hon. gentleman started out by stating boldly that this was 'unprecedented', and suggested 'star-chamber' methods, and said he would be astonished to find such a provision in any other Act. But section 374 of the Railway Act, to which I have referred him, distinctly says that certain evidence to be taken before the Railway Commission shall be privileged and then goes on to specify that, besides being privileged, it shall not be available in any court of law. Is that evidence to be public property when it is specifically declared to be privileged? The hon. gentleman is too good a lawyer to say that. But if the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with section 374, he might turn his attention to section 292 of the Railway Act. The first subsection of this section provides that the commission may make investigation into accidents and causes of accidents, and that reports shall be made to them by the railway companies, of all the circumstances of these accidents. Then subsection 2 provides:

The board may by regulation declare the manner and form by which such information and notice shall be given and the class of accidents to which this section apply, and may declare any information so given to be privileged.

Mr. McKENZIE. 'Privileged' does not mean private.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) contend that information may be 'privileged' and still be public property?

Mr. GERMAN. Why, the statement the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) makes here is a 'privileged' statement, even though it may be libellous; but it is a public statement nevertheless.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) contend that the word 'privileged' is used in that sense?

Mr. GERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) inquire of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) made inquiries and the reply confirms exactly what I say. The information is given a certain way and is given under privilege, that is to say it shall not be public property. Here is another instance: The United States Congress, not altogether a star-chamber body, not a body wholly unused to constitutional methods, created a tariff board—or attempted to do so, and would have created it had not methods similar to those used by hon. gentlemen opposite filibustered it out of the House. Under this Bill, (No. 32,010) of the Congress of the United States, which passed the Senate, but was referred back by the House of Representatives, the following clause occurred:

No evidence or information so secured under the provisions of this section from any person, firm, co-partnership, corporation or association, shall be made public by such a manner as to be available for any business competitor or rival.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Precisely as it is copied into this Bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN. No doubt, it is very largely copied from it. If the hon. member will search the debate in the United States House of Representatives or Senate, where every imaginable attack was made on this Bill by members of the Democratic party, I think he will search in vain for any attack on this clause of the Bill. I read that debate and it seemed to be unanimously assumed in the House of Representatives—I did not read the debate that occurred in the Senate—that this was nothing more than expression of common sense.

There would be a body of information concealed from the commission and from the president if such a clause were not introduced. That is what is being presented here. I think I could go beyond the Railway Act, and beyond the precedent in the United States to find authority for such a clause as this. It seems to me the opposition have to show that the creation of this commission is an additional reason why the minister in framing his Bill should be debarred from the use of information which he has had before.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have here a copy of the congressional Bill, but the Bill did not pass.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It passed the House and passed the Senate, and was referred back, but was filibustered out of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has my hon. friend read section 6 in the congressional Bill? It does not only apply to private or confidential information, but applies to all evidence and information which the board may obtain. No wonder it was thrown out in Congress. Let me read the section of the Bill that Congress rejected:

In any investigation authorized by this Act the board may obtain such evidence or information as it may deem advisable, but said board shall not be required to divulge the names of persons furnishing such evidence or information; and no evidence or information so secured under the provisions of this section from any person, firm, co-partnership, corporation or association shall be made public by said board in such manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival.

Is it any wonder that that was thrown out?

Mr. MEIGHEN. That was not thrown out. This section was adopted, in the Senate but it was filibustered out of the House by people talking too long.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend has tried to copy that, because he is using the identical words, but adding 'evidence of a confidential nature.' The clause has been taken by the draftsman holus-bolus from section 6 of the Bill of the United States Congress, only adding these words. Some person who drafted the Bill for Congress provided that any evidence, whether confidential or otherwise, which was taken by the board, should not be made public in such a manner as to be available for use by any competitor or rival. But how could it be made public without being available for use by a business competitor or rival? It is absurd. And so it is absurd to say in this Bill that no evidence of a confidential nature shall be made public by these commissioners in such a way as to give advantage to any business rival. Once you make it public, it is open to business competitors as well as the whole world to make use of it.

Mr. CURRIE. Let us be fair and don't let us be partisan. The Bill introduced into Congress made a provision that the commission should be composed of both political parties, a certain number of Republicans and a certain number of Democrats. It was supposed to be a non-partisan commission. Unfortunately, or perhaps fortunately, in this country we do not recognize political parties as they do in the United States, where they give them a legal standing. That was the idea of the United States Commission, it was to be non-partisan. I hope that our commission will be a non-partisan commission; I only hope that the statement is true, made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that a very prominent Liberal is to be a member of the commission. and that the commission will be non partisan. Now why should that commission not stand as a buffer between the manufacturers, we will say, and a minister of the Crown? Suppose that a certain line of business in this country, say the leather manufacture, which is supposed to be carried on largely by Liberals, was investigated by this commission, which finds a state of facts, without giving the names of the people that were investigated. If hon. gentlemen have read, for instance, the schedule on woollens and other things in the States, they would understand it. Now, if the minister was unfortunately opposed to the majority, or to some of the members of firms engaged in that business, he might take advantage of his position to pass legislation that would seriously injure them. I could name another line of business, for instance, the manufacture of iron pipe. Most of the people engaged in the manufacture of iron pipe are Liberals, and if they were investigated by this commission, and facts were brought out, which they thought it would perhaps be well to withhold from parliament, largely composed of the opposite side, this commission, being non-partisan, would simply make a plain statement of the facts, without giving the names of any members of the firms or of any members thereof. Now, if there is a buffer offered by this whole Bill to the Liberals, who are manufacturers, it is that very clause in the Bill. I do not assume that the Minister of Finance is illiberal, but suppose he should be so unfortunate as to have strong partisan feelings, where would my good Liberal friends in the manufacturing business be, if the minister could compel this commission to be constantly investigating them to find out the condition of their business, and proclaim their financial standing to the whole world, and put their business into such a shape, that they could not get money to carry it on? I think the Bill is fair and just, and I cannot see that the hon. member for St. John city can oppose that clause on any fair ground in view of these facts. I do not think there is any ground of complaint.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Before six o'clock, I stated, in answer to a question put to me by the Minister of Finance, or in some manner at least, that I believed in the principle involved in this section. What I meant was that there must be many occasions on which the Tariff Commission would be in receipt of evidence which would be considered as confidential and which would be tendered to them only upon the understanding that it is to be held as confidential. In the very nature of things the commission must constantly be receiving information of a confidential character, but, I believe, that confidence can better be retained by the elimination of this clause. There is nothing in the Bill itself which compels the publication of any evidence or information which comes to the commission. If any confidential information comes before the commission, I assume it would be their duty to ascertain whether the facts stated therein were in substance true and if the commission found them to be true they could make them a part of the report of the findings of the commission. It is a very unfortunate thing to concede by statute the power of making evidence or information confidential particularly when received by a public body whose chief duty is to go around the country ascertaining information. There is nothing in this Bill compelling the commission to disclose information given to them confidentially, and it is in the interest of everybody that the commission themselves alone determine how to safeguard confidential information, permitting at the same time the person or persons tendering this information to decide as to what shall be the measure of it. I know of no other instance in legislation where a similar power was asked for. I do not think it is very important what they do in the United States in so far as the matter of the form of our legislation is concerned. I think we are very much ahead of Congress in this respect, and I do not think the fact that there is a similar clause in the United States Bill affords any justification for this clause. I propose voting for the amendment of my hon. friend from St. John simply because I think the restriction imposed by the Bill on the commission is absolutely unnecessary, and it is very much better to leave in the hands of the commission the power to determine how they shall treat confidential information.

Mr. CURRIE. I would like to point out to the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), that under a clause of the Bill which we have not yet reached the commission have power to pass regulations which, on being confirmed by order in council, and by the minister, become law. If you do not put limitations upon the face of this Bill the commission may pass what regulations they please. I believe that the proper way of framing a commission Bill is to make it as short as possible to place certain limitations upon their actions. That is identically the form of this Bill. It does not go into a long rigmarole and lay down in detail what they can and cannot do. This is the proper form of a Bill creating a commission. You have put a clause in permitting persons to appear before them and give evidence. Then you must also put in a clause preventing the passing of any regulations compelling the evidence to be made public. Then, the people who come before them will know that they have that protection. This is not a question of party; there are just as many Liberals, and perhaps more, engaged in manufacturing and other business in this country as there are Conservatives. Conservatives are not the only people whose interests are going to be involved by this commission, and it is in the interests of all that these facts should remain as they are, that the Bill should remain as it is and I believe that nobody who has at heart the best interests of individuals engaged in different lines of production will support an amendment of this kind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is one thing that I forgot to mention. It has reference to the Congressional Bill mentioned by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). My hon. friend also forgot to quote section 7 of the Bill which is very important as showing that the draftsman seemed to have in his mind that in some way the Tariff Board should be prevented from making evidence public in such a manner as to be available for any business competitor or rival, yet by the next section he was very careful to provide that all testimony should be available for the information of Congress. The words of the section are as follows:

That said board shall submit the results of its investigation, as hereinbefore provided, including all testimony, together with any explanatory report of the facts so ascertained to the President or to either House of Congress from time to time when called upon by the president or the leader of either house of Congress.

All I want is that whatever testimony is given before these commissioners who are constituted a court, shall be available to the minister, to his colleagues in the government and to this parliament. That is all we want and if my hon. friend will consent to another subsection being added similar to the one in the Congressional Bill I shall be quite willing to withdraw my amendment, and let the subsection be included. What I thought of proposing is this:

The said commission shall submit the results of its investigation as hereinbefore provided including all testimony to the minister who shall lay the same before parliament within ten days after the opening of the next then ensuing session.

If my hon. friend will consent to that I will be quite willing to leave the subsection just as it is. If the commissioners choose to obtain information privately let them do it. Give them large latitude in that respect; I think that is a just and sound principle. But what we do want is that whatever testimony they take, with all the power that they are going to have to go from one end of this country to the other to compel people to come before them and to examine into their business matters, shall be available for the members of this parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN. And made public?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then parliament can deal with it as they please. If this parliament is satisfied that there is information of a confidential nature that ought not to go to the public upon the recommendation of the Minister of Finance probably a committee of this House can be appointed to deal with it. But, at all events this parliament and not this Tariff Commission, should be the judge as to whether evidence is of a confidential nature or not.

It is contrary to every principle affecting the public interest that this commission should have power to say that they can keep their doors open or that they can close them just as they please. It is not right to give them the power to say that when they are investigating Mr. A's business the public shall be allowed in, and when they investigate the business of Mr. B that the doors shall be closed and the information he gives treated as confidential. That is a power which ought not to be vested in this board which is practically independent of parliament for a period of five years.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is it not the fact that in the past the Cabinet ministers have had the advantage of information which was not available to parliament and not in the public interest to disclose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Undoubtedly so, and they will still have that privilege. There is nothing in this Bill which takes away from the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Customs the power or right to receive confidential information. But, when the Minister of Finance asks parliament to make a change in the tariff he has to give the reasons to parliament for that change, and he is responsible to parliament. But that is a very different thing from constituting an independent tribunal with the power of examining witnesses under oath and to determine what evidence shall be open to the public and what evidence shall be private.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman that the Congressional Bill does not give the commissioners the same power as to subpœnaing witnesses as the Bill we have now under consideration. It is true that the Congressional Bill says the commissioners shall have power to summon witnesses, but if a witness does not appear there is no remedy and all the commissioner can do is to report the fact to Congress. Under the present Bill, if the witness does not appear he is liable to imprisonment. The reasons for protecting evidence of a confidential character under our Bill are much stronger than under the Congressional Bill, because under our Bill we can put men right into the factories and take the most confidential information that their books contain. The very fact that we are giving this commission these larger powers is the reason why we should treat the information we have thus compulsorily obtained, more or less confidentially. If you are going to get at the root of the matter and you want to get full and frank information as to any particular line of industry, the very fact that the manufacturer knows that the information will not go into the hands of a competitor in his business will be a reason why he will be more frank about it. We have to choose in this case between an absolute publication of all the evidence as to a man's private business, or we have to put in some limitation of this kind. I would not like taking on myself the responsibility of making the secrets of every man's trade in this country absolutely open to the public. The clause of the Bill simply says that the information shall not be made public in such manner as to be available to a competitor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does that mean?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think it would permit the commission to make the evidence public to the minister and it would enable the minister to make it public to the Cabinet Council which is sworn to secrecy. If you are at the stage where under this Bill you can give this information to the Minister of Finance and to the Cabinet Council, are you in any different position than you are to-day as to the confidential information you receive, and which of course goes to the council and which may never go a step further? When that information goes to the council chamber then you can as heretofore use your discretion as to whether it should be made public or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But is it not a fact that these commissioners can determine as to when the doors can be closed and a star-chamber investigation proceeded with, or when the doors can be opened and the public admitted?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. There is nothing in the Bill which says the commissioners shall not publish the evidence. It says they shall make a report of the fact and they shall submit the evidence, except that it shall not be submitted in such a manner as that it may be used by a trade competitor. There is no power in this Bill for the commissioners to refuse to give to the minister the evidence they obtain; the only restriction is that they themselves shall not make public the evidence in such a manner as to be used by a competitor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is it not so that if this Bill passes the commissioners can determine when they can hold secret inquiries or when they should hold public inquiries?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I do not think so; I think the minister would have the right to demand at any time all the evidence that the commissioners have gathered, but that evidence should not be made public in such a manner as that it might be used by a competitor. The minister would give the evidence to the Cabinet Council which is sworn to secrecy, and then you are in the same position as you are in to-day. You determine whether or not it is in the public interest that the information should be made public.

Mr. GERMAN. It rests with the commission to say whether the evidence shall be taken in open court or whether it shall be taken in secret.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friends are too theoretical about this. How it will work out in practice is this: suppose any business man in this House is asked to give evidence on oath before the commission, he invokes the subsection which says that evidence is not to be made public in a way to injure him with a trade rival, and as a matter of common sense is there a man in this House who would seriously suggest that a business man of this country should be subpœnaed by this commission and asked to divulge the last secret of his business before a crowded court room ?

The mere statement of the thing brings its own refutation. It is not to be thought of, public opinion would not stand for a moment for the creation of such a tribunal. It seems to me that every phase of this matter has been brought before the committee and considered. I am unable to adduce any further arguments and I think that none have been adduced since 8 o'clock and we might well proceed to a vote. In reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton, however, with regard to the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, there is absolutely no disagreement between the minister and the rest of us who have spoken on this question. The minister was acquainted with all the provisions of this Bill including the subsection now under consideration, he was speaking generally and was simply saying what I have said over and over again.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The minister has not said definitely whether or not he would accept the proposal of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). It would have some influence on my vote on section No. 6 if I knew he would consent to a section being inserted that would enable parliament to have possession of the facts. This clause is a dangerous one unless there is some restriction, perhaps a provision that ten days after the opening of parliament the evidence taken by the commission should be laid before the House.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think the clause as it stands is sufficient to protect all interests. I am sorry to say I cannot see any necessity for the amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question has been quite thoroughly discussed as the minister has said. Of course he discussed it himself quite freely and has been well supported by gentlemen all around him. When a government wants to shorten a discussion they can do it by limiting the number of their supporters who speak. We on this side are called upon to criticise and feel it necessary sometimes to take more time than hon. gentlemen supporting the government. I think the government should accept an additional clause, perhaps to this effect:

The said commission shall submit the result of its investigations as hereinbefore provided, including all testimony to the minister, who shall lay the same before parliament within ten days after opening of the next ensuing session.

With the Bill in its present form, if the commission should decide that certain evidence will be of a confidential nature, and so state to the witness, then when their report of that evidence was submitted to the Minister of Finance he could not properly bring that evidence down to parliament because the commissioners had undertaken that it should be confidential. Thus the Minister of Finance and his colleagues might have that evidence before them but parliament would be absolutely debarred from examining it. That is a condition of affairs that should not be permitted. If confidential information must be obtained it should be obtained by the minister as it has been in the past. I feel like pressing this amendment if the minister will not add a further subsection.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. McKENZIE. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not have to wait a minute. We will keep them very much longer if they get nasty. I wish to bring to the notice of the minister the scope of subsection 6, notwithstanding the fact that he may have made up his mind not to listen to us.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I shall be very glad indeed to listen to hon. gentlemen opposite, but I have really nothing to add to what I have already said.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the minister would bring his legal training to bear on subsection 6 he will see there is hardly any kind of evidence this commission could get or look for but would come within its operation. There is no kind of contract or undertaking which a merchant might enter upon but would be regarded as private except a public contract. The contract of a merchant to supply goods to the government, of course, is public in its character, because the public pays for it. Every other kind of business which a merchant or manufacturer is engaged in comes within the scope of this provision. The wages of his men doing his own private business, the price he charges for the article, the commodities which enter into the manufacture of the article, the transportation arrangements he makes with steamship companies or railways, all these are private under the terms of this section if it passes.

Amendment (Mr. McKenzie), negatived: Yeas 24, nays 50.

Section agreed to.

On section 7, staff,

Mr. PUGSLEY. I move, seconded by Mr. Sinclair, that the following be added as clause 8:

The said commission shall submit the results of its investigation, as hereinbefore provided, including all testimony, to the minister who shall lay the same before parliament within ten days after the opening of the then next ensuing session.

That would take the place of the present printed clause 7, which otherwise would be section 7.

Mr. CURRIE. That is an amendment to clause 8.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it becomes a new clause.

Mr. CURRIE. I ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman. It is the amendment to the clause which has just been carried

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is a new clause, but that is the order in which it will come.

Mr. CURRIE. It is simply an amendment to clause 7.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I do not propose to strike out clause 7 as printed, but this will become a new section.

Mr. CURRIE. The clause to which this amendment is proposed deals with the salaries. Clause 7 is the clause we have just passed.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). If the hon. gentleman's amendment is carried it will nullify the vote on the last amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). It must be out of order. The amendment of the hon. gentleman will have the effect of nullifying the vote on the previous amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will not be out of order even in the judgment of the Minister of Finance, because he says that while the commissioners shall not make the evidence public, they shall submit it to him, and then we provide by this amendment that the Minister of Finance shall submit it to parliament.

Mr. CURRIE. That is exactly what you asked before.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not inconsistent with the subsection passed.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). It is absolutely inconsistent.

Mr. CURRIE. It is the same thing.

Mr. NESBITT. We have been told by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and certainly by the hon. member from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), that it was the intention of the government, to submit the evidence taken by this commission, to parliament. If that is the case, why refuse this clause?

Mr. CURRIE. I have raised the point of order, and I would like a ruling from the Chairman.

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to see the minister accept this amendment, because it looks very simple to me. Of course it is all right to say that any information can be submitted to parliament, but it means when we ask for information, we are subject to the will of the government, no matter what it may be.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think the Minister of Finance ought to accept this amendment, more especially as it appears to me to be carrying out the idea he himself expressed to the House. I have been trying to think all through this discussion that the minister was sincere, that he was trying to give us a Bill that would be of advantage to the country, and I have not so far, been at all suspicious. The refusal of the minister, however, to agree that the evidence on which the tariff is based shall be given to parliament is inclined to make the suspicious that this subsection 6 may be used for a purpose for which it was not intended. Hints have already been thrown out by hon. gentlemen opposite, for example by the member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), who, it will be remembered, told us that the members of this commission must be men who would be in sympathy with the ideas of the government. In other words, they must be high tariff men, who would be inclined to raise instead of lowering the tariff. Then there is my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), who declared the other night, when it was suggested that the member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) might be a suitable man to put on this commission, that such a proposal would be absurd, and that the gun would not go off if such an appointment were made.

What did he mean by that? Does he mean that this is some deadly instrument that is levelled at the farmers and consumers, and that if my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) were put on the commission it would not go off? With statements like that made by two prominent men on the other side, men I suppose in the secrets of the government, and with the Minister of Finance refusing to adopt a simple suggestion that the evidence should be placed before parliament, what are we to think? How is parliament to get the evidence? Will it be necessary for some member to give notice and to move that the evidence taken by the commission shall be produced and if this is done, how do we know it will be granted? It is within the power of the majority to refuse it. It seems to me there ought to be some rule by which the evidence—or the main part of the evidence; if the minister wishes to qualify, let him suggest a form of words that would prevent the confidential and private parts of the evidence being called for, that would be a reasonable position for him to take—should, as a matter of course, be furnished to parliament. But that the minister should refuse to accept an amendment of this kind seems to me unreasonable. And I think that when he considers the matter he will not want to have it go to the country that he refused a proposition of this kind.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). I think the members of this House clearly understood that the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) merely expressed their private opinions and were in no way attempting to commit the government to placing high protectionists upon this commission. Representing, as I do, an agricultural constituency, I should be sorry to see high protectionists upon this commission. I have yet to learn that because a man is a free trader or a moderate protectionist, that he is, therefore, incapacitated from ascertaining the facts that this commission is created to ascertain. Hon. members opposite have repeatedly stated that this commission was not asked for by anybody but the manufacturers. That is not in accordance with the record. This commission is created for the purpose of benefiting the consumer, and as a representative of a rural constituency I am in favour of the creation of the commission, because I believe that it means that the tariff will be revised downwards if the facts justify it, rather than upward. The Minister of Finance showed conclusively that the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) favoured a commission similar to this when he was speaking before the manufacturers in Montreal. We also remember that in 1910 when that right hon. gentleman, touring the west, was approached by a delegation of farmers asking for a revision downward of the tariff, his answer was that the government would refer that matter to a commission. What did he mean?—what kind of a commission? A commission similar to that which it is proposed to create under this measure. When such a commission was conceived in the mind of their leader, hon. members opposite seemed to think it calculated to benefit the community, but when the idea is taken hold of by the Minister of Finance, elaborated and put into execution, it is calculated to benefit the manufacturers alone. In my opinion, it is calculated to benefit the consumers; and for my part. I am in favour of it because I believe it will do justice both to the consumers and the manufacturers. I think it would be unfair to make public the confidential reports of this commission. It is well that the commission should be in a position to learn the confidential facts relating to men's business, and it would be monstrous to have these things published. It seems to me that this amendment is only designed to re-introduce a proposal which has just been voted down by the committee. On that ground, it seems to me, the amendment should be ruled out of order.

Mr. McKENZIE. We were told a moment ago that there was not the slightest difference of opinion in the government in regard to this Act. There is a motion before the committee that the proceedings of the commission should become, at a certain stage, the property of parliament, and the Minister of Finance and his friends oppose that idea. I would like the hon. gentleman to square what he says with what was stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) with respect to this commission. In the same speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce which I quoted a moment ago, I find the following:

> Mr. GUTHRIE. Is it my hon. friend's idea that these reports will be brought down to parliament?
>
> Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I never had the least idea that they would not.
>
> Mr. GUTHRIE. Is there any objection to making the Bill definite in that respect?
>
> Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). All these reports given in the line of what is called for, there, in getting information which is the basis of tariff measures, is the property, not of the government, or of the minister, but of parliament and of the country. Nobody, I think in this House, has ever had any other idea of it.
>
> Mr. EDWARDS. The Minister of Finance distinctly stated that yesterday.
> Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think we elaborated this matter in council. So far as I am concerned, I never had any other idea of it than that. So I say that that will be the position of things. No one will be able to shield himself behind an ex parte statement, or behind lack of knowledge when the knowledge will be there, and every intelligent man will be able to draw his own conclusions.

I think the ingenuity of the Minister of Finance will be strained to the breaking point to show how he is in 'absolute accord' with the statement of his colleague and yet continue to hold his view that this evidence should not become the property of parliament.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) never asks me anything more difficult than that I shall be much obliged to him. There is no difficulty in reconciling the two statements. A few minutes ago, the committee voted against striking out subsection 6. My hon. friend from St. John now moves an amendment to the effect that the information that comes to the Minister of Finance, even if it is the confidential information which is absolutely safeguarded from being made public by this section of the Act, shall be brought down and made public. In other words, as pointed out by my hon.

friend from North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) he raises again the very question that was voted down only a few moments ago.

Now, what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) said, I say, that all the information would be brought down and would be subject to the order of the House, save only as expressly provided in the statute by this subsection. He was not discussing every section. Of course the Minister of Trade and Commerce knew what was in the Act, he had gone over it carefully. How could he say anything that, on the face of it, was in contradiction to the express words of the statute? How could he say that everything would be made public, knowing at the same time that there was a clause in the Bill that expressly forbade making public certain classes of information? My hon. friend failed to remember that the minister was speaking generally of the class of information obtained by the commission which would not come within this subsection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is there anything in this Act which provides that such report as can be brought down without any violation of the provisions of subsection 6 of section 5, will be brought down without being moved for? Surely we ought to be put in possession of a blue-book containing such evidence as is not objectionable under that subsection.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). I was going to rule that subsection 6 having passed, this amendment is inconsistent with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then I shall have to appeal against your ruling. It seems to me the point of order is not well taken. The subsection as now carried by the committee is simply that the commission shall not make the evidence public in such a way as to be available for use by any business competitor or rival of the person, firm, or corporation respectively. That is the section which has passed. It simply means that the commission shall not make the matter public, but shall report the result of the investigation, with the evidence, to the Minister of Finance; that is not making it public in such a way as to injure any business rival. Then the amendment further provides that the minister must submit the evidence to parliament within ten days of the opening of the session. Parliament may have it printed, or may treat it as it pleases. I take it that this parliament has just as much power as the Governor in Council to keep any of its documents private if it wants to. Parliament is the high court of the land, and has absolute control over its papers. I submit that there is nothing in my amendment which is inconsistent with section 6 which has already been passed.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). I see no reason to change my opinion, and I still hold that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then I appeal to the Speaker from your ruling.

Committee rose, and the Speaker took the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question before the House is, shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to explain to your Honour——

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not open to debate. Those in favour of sustaining the ruling of the Chair will please say 'Aye.'

Those opposed will please say 'No.'

I declare the ruling of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before you leave the Chair would you allow me to say that there has been no appeal made to the House, but an appeal to your Honour under the rules.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The appeal is to the House, not to the Chair.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I made no appeal to the House. Before you leave the Chair——

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot permit discussion, because the rules strictly forbid it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would your Honour not permit me to point out——

Mr. SPEAKER. No.

House again went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. GAUVREAU. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves on the other side.

Mr. CURRIE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) has used unparliamentary language.

Mr. GAUVREAU. I am going to bow to the ruling of the chairman.

An hon. MEMBER. There is no ruling.

Mr. CURRIE. It is an insult to the House and it should be withdrawn.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order; I want your ruling.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman has used unparliamentary language and I think he should be compelled to retract.

Mr. GAUVREAU. I do not think the hon. gentleman was in his seat when I spoke and I do not know what I am called upon to say.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman said that we should be ashamed of ourselves.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe) I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the remark.

Mr. GAUVREAU. I suppose, for the sake of peace that I will have to take it back.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe) The question is on clause 7.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Will the Minister of Finance permit me to make a suggestion here which is not strictly referable to this clause. Clause 5 provides that the commissioners shall subpœna witnesses. I notice in section 63 of the Railway Act in reference to witnesses and evidence—

Mr. CURRIE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is not in order—

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I have the permission of the Chairman.

Mr. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman has not permission unless there is a motion to go back to that clause. Otherwise he cannot discuss it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I ask the minister if he will be good enough to receive a suggestion upon a clause we have passed, and if the suggestion is worth anything I am going to ask him to consider the advisability of an amendment which perhaps cannot properly be made to the clause now before the committee. I wish to refer to section 63 of the Railway Act, providing for the summoning of witnesses contains this provision:

Provided that no person shall be compellable against his will to attend——

Mr. CURRIE. Now, Mr. Chairman again I ask for your ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). If the hon. gentleman is speaking with the consent of the minister—

Mr. CURRIE. It is patent to any person who has sat in this House for a number of weeks that the rules of the House in committee have been trampled under foot again and again. As one member who likes to see progress made I would ask for a clear interpretation of the rules. The hon. gentleman cannot discuss this unless there is a motion to reconsider clause 5.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I consider—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr Bennett, Simcoe). The hon. member is speaking with the concurrence of the minister.

Mr. CURRIE. No, he is not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He is not.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I have no authority to consent in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). Then the hon. gentleman must move the reconsideration of the clause.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I will try and discuss the question—

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). If my. hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will give me privately a note of the suggestion he wishes to make I will consider it but we cannot go back to this clause now.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think it is your duty, Mr. Chairman, to keep order in this committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). I rule that the hon. gentleman must move a reconsideration of the clause or else come back to clause 7 which is before the committee.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I was going to make a suggestion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Well, some hon. gentlemen may consider that very smart and indicative of some intelligence.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. I do not think it is very smart, but I do think that when the Chairman rules every hon. member of this House ought to bow to the ruling. The hon. gentleman who has just been speaking has refused to bow to the ruling and is persisting in going on. I therefore call him to order and unless he will move to reconsider this clause he has no right to discuss it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I deny the right of the hon. gentleman to say that I have disobeyed the ruling of the Chair. I do not propose to submit that statement being made by the hon. gentleman or anybody else in this House.

Mr. LENNOX. I will not withdraw it all the same.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The trouble with hon. gentlemen opposite is that I have not had an opportunity of making the statement that I propose to the committee. Section 7 provides that the commission may carry on an inquiry at some suitable place in the city of Ottawa and that in their discretion they may carry on that inquiry elsewhere. The only suggestion I was going to make was that the commissioners should not have the power of compelling—

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has to sit down when I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is proceeding to discuss section 6.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I deny the right of the hon. gentleman to say so.

Mr. LENNOX. He says that is the section that he is referring to. The hon. gentleman has no right to discuss section 6 unless he moves to reconsider it. The hon.

gentleman has had a long experience in this House and he knows that what I say is correct. I insist upon the rule being carried out, that the hon. gentleman shall obey the ruling of the Chair and that he must move the reconsideration of this section or else say no more about it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). So far the hon. member for Halifax has simply treated of the particular wording of clause 7 and until he transgresses I cannot rule that he is out of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise again to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise again to a point of order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Chair.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman did speak of section 7 but he went on from section 7 and he said: Now, the suggestion I want to make in reference to this section—referring to section 62—

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). 62 of what?

Mr. LENNOX. Section 62 of the Bill, as I understand. I have not the Bill before me.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). There is no such section in the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. Referring to section 62 is what he said. I have not the Bill before me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not going to take up time unnecessarily, and I am not going to be howled down by anybody. I am referring to the point now before the committee, and I say that this hon. gentleman is persisting, in defiance of the ruling of the Chair, in discussing that clause as having been passed. I submit to you, Sir, that he shall not be allowed to do so unless he will move to reconsider that clause and discuss it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Chair, chair.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Chairman, I wish to call your attention to a very important matter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). The hon. gentleman for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has the floor.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I wish to call your attention to the fact that the mace is on the table, and to ask whether that is proper?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I do not think or believe for a moment that I was out of order, and if hon. gentlemen opposite had been good enough to listen to me just for a little longer I am sure that they would have concluded in their own minds that I was not out of order. The section before us is subsection 7, which states that inquiries under this Act shall take place in the city of Ottawa or, in the discretion of the commission, elsewhere. A previous clause of the Bill which has been passed gives the commission the power of compelling the attendance before them of certain witnesses. The amendment I wish to suggest is that the commission shall not have the power of compelling witnesses to attend before the convention except in the province where the witness resides. I would suggest further to the Minister of Finance that possibly it would be better to have that amendment in clause 5. That was the suggestion that I wished to make to the committee earlier in the evening, and I submit there never was a time when I was out of order. That amendment might fairly be placed in some section of the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Yes, I think the suggestion of my hon. friend might fairly be taken into consideration. I am quite willing to consider that, and before we conclude with the Bill I shall see whether or not it is acceptable and if acceptable it might be inserted in section 5. Prima facie it seems to be a good suggestion.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is there any provision for the payment of the fees of persons who are summoned to Ottawa?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think it is covered by section 5.

Mr. MACDONALD. That language is not sufficient to provide for the payment of witness fees, because the procedure under which parties can be summoned and attendance compelled must be prefaced by an arrangement for the payment of fees.

Mr. CURRIE. I should think that subsection 3 of section 8 would cover it. It refers to the salaries and actual and reasonable travelling expenses and all other expenses incidental to the carrying out of the provisions of the Act, and makes these expenses payable out of the appropriation by parliament.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think subsection 2 of section 5 would cover it. It says:

> The commissioners shall have the same power to enforce the attendance of witnesses and compel them to give evidence as is vested in a court of record in civil cases.

Before you compel the attendance of a witness in a civil case you must tender him his witness fees.

Mr. MACDONALD. But you have a provision in the procedure relating to civil courts for the payment of witness fees and fixing what they shall be. Section 2 is not sufficient to provide for the payment of fees of persons who may be summoned to Ottawa.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I shall be glad to consider the point raised by my hon. friend. In the Railway Act there is a provision by which persons summoned to give evidence before the commissioners or any officer of it may in the discretion of the minister or of the Board of Railway Commissioners receive like allowances as if summoned before the Exchequer Court.

Mr. MACDONALD. That would be sufficient.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I shall consider the matter, and if the Bill as it stands is not sufficient to cover the point raised by my hon. friend I will introduce an amendment.

Mr. GERMAN. I hope it will be made clear that the commissioners should not compel gentlemen who are interested in business affairs, say in Hamilton or London, to come to Ottwaa simply on the payment of witness fees. The Minister of Finance is aware that men engaged in large business concerns cannot afford to come to Ottawa simply for the compensation represented by the fee of a witness. The commissioners should hold their meetings in the locality where the matter is to be inquired into. For instance, they might meet in Ottawa, or in London, or in Welland, or in Toronto, to take up any cases within those districts.

Mr. CURRIE. The Bill provides that the commissioners may in their discretion conduct their inquiries in whole or in part in any place in Canada, and they can go outside of Canada with the permission of the minister.

On section 8,

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). There is a clause in the Bill which says that the inquiry shall be conducted in a summary manner; what is the meaning of that?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The idea is to get at the result expeditiously without the formalities attending the procedure of a court of justice. For instance, a police court is called a court of summary procedure.

Mr. MACDONALD. Whoever drafted this Bill for the minister must have taken some sections from other statutes and put them in piecemeal without any regard to whether they were apropos or not. The minister has very aptly likened the procedure described here to the procedure in a police court, and whether it is or is not a police court commission that is being instituted I do not know. To say it shall be disposed of in a summary manner is certainly very poor drafting and I don't think it carries out what the minister has in his mind.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friend will find the description 'summary manner,' in many instances where it is intended to provide that the hearing it to be carried on without the formalities which cumber a court of record. The idea is that the commission will endeavour to get at the facts with as little formality as possible.

Mr. GERMAN. The word 'summary' is a well known legal term in Ontario.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Before we pass from the consideration of clause 8, I want to propose an amendment. This inquiry is for the purpose of ascertaining in what respect the tariff bears unjustly on certain industries. I presume it would be contended by certain interests that the tariff in certain cases, was too high, and by certain other interests that it was too low. In order to enable the commission to come to a correct and proper judgment as to whether the duties on particular commodities are sufficiently high to enable capital invested in them to earn dividends, it will be necessary to go into an inquiry outside probably of the inquiries we all have in our minds at the present time. We do know that in the last two years a great many companies have become reorganized, amalgamated and combined with other companies, and in the process of this reorganization, they have increased their capital to a very large degree; they have issued bonds and preferred stock and common stock to an extent which would appear to us to be altogether out of proportion to the amount of capital necessary to be invested in that particular industry. The amount of capital in a company has to do with the amount of earning power which that company possesses and the proportion of dividends that is divided from year to year among the stockholders. If the capitalization is large, the earning capacity relatively will be small. Owing to the enlargement of these companies, the presidents and directors vote themselves larger salaries than in the past. This has a bearing upon the dividends. In order that all the facts and circumstances may be before the commission before they report to the minister, I think it would be necessary to add an amendment. I propose to add to section 5, the following subsection:

Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the commission shall investigate the capitalization of the company and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers and the wages paid to their employees.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The question of capitalization of companies is a large one, and its investigation may have several objects. One object may be to ascertain whether over-capitalization affects in any way the cost of production. There might also be an investigation to see whether it affects the banking of the country generally, or if it affects the credit of our country or of our industrial institutions abroad and so on. Only one section is to be investigated by this commission, their only object is to ascertain how far, if at all, over-capitalization affects the cost of production or affects any matter that concerns the tariff. That is to say, under the Bill, as it stands, particularly having reference to subsection 4, the commission has full power to investigate over-capitalization or capitalization providing they are investigating it only for the purpose of ascertaining cost of production or such a subject as comes within the review of this Act. They have no power to investigate over-capitalization in so far as it affects such other objects as I have mentioned. This Bill already clothes the commission with all powers requisite for this purpose and requires no amendment.

Mr. KYTE. I quite understand the provision of the Bill limiting inquiry with respect to the subject to be dealt with by the commission, but I desire to enable the commission to have all the facts before it, particularly when a certain industry claims that it has not sufficient protection to enable it to earn dividends. The question of capitalization is a very pertinent one and ought to be considered in connection with this matter. The wages paid to their employees and the salaries paid to their directors all add to the cost of carrying on an industry, and if they are unnecessarily high there is no reason why the capital invested in that industry should make that an excuse to have further protection to enable them to earn greater dividends.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). It was clearly shown this afternoon that all these questions could be investigated and would be investigated by the commission in ascertaining the cost of production, as these are all factors entering into cost. It is not necessary to particularize in the statute, the Bill itself covers all those points and many others.

Mr. KYTE. To what section of the Bill does the minister refer?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Section 4.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). I raised this question this afternoon and was anxious to meet the objection met by the amendment now proposed. It was only on the assurance of the Minister of Finance that the Bill as drafted covered that point, that I accepted the Bill without the proposed amendment. The proposed amendment will be important if the Bill already did not cover the point. It is well that this commission should have power to investigate all these things in regard to capitalization, bonds, etc., but as the commission has that power according to the minister the amendment is not necessary.

Mr. CURRIE. As I understand that amendment covers clause 4 and should have been moved there. I ask your ruling if the hon. gentleman's motion is in order at this stage.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. minister is proposing to add a subsection to section 5. We are now on the last subclause of clause 5, and the hon. member is perfectly in order in moving it at this stage.

Mr. GERMAN. I am opposed to the amendment, and I am opposed to the proposition of the Minister of Finance, when section 4 gives to this commission as wide a scope of investigation as he describes.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I move to add as subsection 9 of section 5:

> All evidence of information taken by the commissioners, and not held to be confidential under the provisions of subsection 6 of this section, shall be laid on the table of the House within ten days after the opening of parliament.

It is the same subsection as was moved by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), excepting that it does not conflict with subsection 6. I think the Minister ought to adopt this subsection, because there really cannot be any objection why the evidence which is not confidential should not be put in the possession of the members of this House at the earliest date possible after parliament meets.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I would be very glad indeed to take the matter under advisement if the hon. gentleman will allow the matter to stand.

Mr. McKENZIE. If ten days is too short a period the time can be extended.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I will consider the matter carefully.

On section 7,

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I would suggest that the following be inserted after the word 'enquiries' on line 25 of subsection 2.:

And may employ shorthand reporters.

The commission will need to employ shorthand reporters to take the evidence whereever it may be sitting.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would point out to the minister that from my reading of the Act the staff should come under the provisions of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The employment given under this Act may be of a very limited character. The commission will have to employ different classes of men, and offhand I do not think it would be wise to put them under the Civil Service Act. The check upon employment is of course the Governor in Council.

Mr. NESBITT. And the reporters may only be employed for a short time.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 8—salaries of commissioners,

Mr. PUGSLEY. Are these not pretty high salaries, $7,500 for the chairman, and $7,000 for each of the commissioners, in addition to all travelling expenses? The Minister of Finance and his colleagues have to serve the country for a salary of $7,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. Look at the honour they enjoy though.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The judges of the Superior courts of the country get I think $6,000. That is the limit, in the smaller provinces. In New Brunswick $6,000 is the salary of a pusine judge of the highest court in the province. The salary of the chief justice is $7,000. Now, it is proposed to pay the chairman of this commission a salary of $7,500, and the commissioners $7,000 each. Although the tendency of late is to give pretty good salaries to commissioners, I am inclined to think that this goes a little too far in that direction. In this country $7,000 is a very good salary. In the public departments there are men in very high positions receiving $3,000 and $4,000 a year, men who have been in the service a long time, who are charged with great responsibilities and have the control of the expenditure of vast sums of money. The deputy ministers receive only $5,000, and they hold positions of the very greatest responsibility. It may be that some more liberal allowance should be made to the public officials, but up to the present time, we have not gone far in the direction of paying high salaries to anybody but commissioners. In this case it is proposed to follow that line and give very liberal salaries to these commissioners. I think it only fair to compare this with what public officials are receiving. The chairman of the managing board of the Interconial railway receives only $6,000. And he must be a man of experience, of good judgment, and of the very highest technical knowledge.

Mr. CURRIE. Under subsection 3 the matter of witness fees was brought up. I suggest that an amendment be made there and that the subsection be made to read:

All salaries and actual and reasonable travelling expenses, witness fees, and all other expenses incidental to the carrying out of the provisions of this Act shall be payable out of any appropriation granted to His Majesty by parliament to defray the same.

The addition there, is the words 'witness fees.' This insures that these fees shall be payable out of the appropriation.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I will consider that suggestion of my hon. friend when considering that of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. McKENZIE. If anything is to be governed by regulations surely this should be.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That might be. I will consider the suggestion. Now. with regard to what my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has said: I believe that no commission that has been appointed by the government, not even the Railway Commission, will be charged with more important duties than the Tariff Commission, a very high order of intelligence and special aptitude will be required for this work. And when we consider the scale of remuneration in recent years, the salaries paid to men in the world of business and finance and in professional life now as compared with a few years ago. I think my hon. friend will agree that $7,500 for the chairman, and $7,000 for the commissioners are not high salaries, provided we get the right men for this important work. In the Railway Commission the chairman who is a very exceptional man and occupies a very exceptional position, and who must be a lawyer of high attainments, receives $10,000 a year. That is a very small salary for him. The other members of the board. I understand receive $8.000. The salaries of the Tariff Commissioners are placed below these figures, and I think they should be placed below, although this work is fully as important as, or even of more importance than, that of the Railway Commission. It must be borne in mind also that when you ask a man to take a position on this commission, or in fact, on any other commission, if he is a man in active business you interrupt the business in which he is engaged, and unless you compensate him reasonably well the offer will not appeal to him.

Mr. NESBITT. He has to devote his whole time to the work.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Yes, that is provided for in the Bill. Take men of high ability and with the good judgment and knowledge required for the position, and I submit to the judgment of the House that the salaries fixed are reasonable. To be frank, I have been afraid we should not be able to obtain the class of ability I would like to obtain at the salaries fixed. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the salaries of members of the Cabinet. I think it is clearly understood. and the hon. gentleman would probably be the first to concede. that these salaries are probably the least consideration with those who take these responsible positions and give their time to these duties.

Mr. McKENZIE. What is the main one?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think it is the public service. If not, you reduce the position merely to a seven thousand dollar position. I should not like to believe that the ministers have that principally in mind. The hon. gentleman referred also to the civil service. Since coming to Ottawa I have been impressed with the very high class of men whom you have in the civil service who are not paid nearly enough, such men as the chief engineer and other engineers. I am assuming that the men occupying these responsible positions have the ability to fill them, as I believe they have. Those who have been longer in Ottawa than myself can pronounce upon that point better than I can. But some of these exceptionally able men have salaries out of all keeping with the importance of the positions they fill. That is a condition which in time may be remedied. Of course, there may be men in such positions who are overpaid, not having the ability to fill these positions properly. One difficulty of the civil service is that it standardizes positions, as it were, and brings men to a common level. Of course, there is greater certainty in their employment, and they have a pension to look forward to, and so their future is taken care of, and they have a fixity of position that does not apply outside. But, after all that is said, I have no hesitation in expressing my own opinion that the ablest men in the civil service occupying these high positions are not well enough paid. Of course, I am not speaking for the government, but give what has struck me in my own observation and express my own opinion.

Mr. OLIVER. I just want to put in my earnest protest against the amount that is being paid in these salaries. In my judgment, there is no warrant, in the statement of the duties of these gentlemen, for the payment of this salary. The idea that men whose business it is simply to make the inquiry into industrial or commercial conditions, should be entitled to the same compensation as members of this government, or members of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, or of the Railway Com-Commission, does not appeal to me at all. I certainly think that the salary of $7,000 each, proposed to be paid to the commissioners, who are not required to perform administrative functions nor yet judicial functions, but simply the functions of investigators, is out of all proportion to the duties they will be called upon to perform. If the civil service is underpaid, that is no reason why such a startling exception should be made in the case of these gentlemen, who certainly cannot claim any higher rank, or sustain any more necessary qualifications for the work they have to do, than the gentlemen who are in the higher positions in the civil service. If we can properly administer an expenditure of $60,000,000 within two years, under the control of one man, who draws a salary, I think, of $10,000, then I must protest that a proposed payment of $24,500 to secure the collection of information such as suggested in this Bill, is absolutely out of proportion. To say that these gentlemen have duties that require greater abilities or experience than a deputy minister of this government, has no foundation in fact. These extraordinary salaries give this proposition the appearance of being a gross political job.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think these gentlemen will find it very irksome business to keep tab on all their expenses from time to time. It seems to me, it would be better to give them a sufficient salary to cover once for all their travelling expenses.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think that would be impossible. We do not know how much a man will spend in travelling. In cases of this kind, travelling expenses cannot be foreseen.

On section 10, franking privilege.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I move that this section be omitted. The Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) has a strong objection to extending the franking privilege to every one who may have correspondence with this commission. He thinks that the Post Office Department should stand on its own basis, and I am disposed to agree with him. It seems hardly fair that the post office should be deprived of the revenue that it needs, to carry on its business.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The franking privilege may properly be extended in respect of letters which are sent by the commissioners from Ottawa; and don't you think that those who have business with the commission, who want to make complaints, should be allowed to write to them free of postage, as is done in every other public department?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) It is extraordinary how few people avail themselves of the franking privilege. I think a very large percentage of those who write to the departments, put a stamp on their letters for fear they will miscarry. The amount being so small, there is no hardship upon the people who desire to make communications to the commission, in asking them to pay the postage.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT.—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORDEN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my right hon. friend tell us what business will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN. We will take up government Bills.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Any particular one?

Mr. BORDEN. We will take up as many as possible—I think Item 25 which would have been taken up to-day except for the absence of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux).

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the Bill to amend the Civil Service Act?

Mr. BORDEN. Yes. We will probably take up Order Number 21, Bill (No. 77), and I would hope that we may be able to take up Order Number 3, Bill (No. 97), and possibly the second reading of Bill (No. 100); after that, Supply, the estimates of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. OLIVER. The Grain Act will not be taken up?

Mr. BORDEN. I understand the Grain Act is not coming up to-morrow, but it is to come up on Monday, I think.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Might I suggest that Friday would be rather an unfavourable day upon which to take into consideration the Highway Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. Why?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). There is usually a very small House.

Mr. BORDEN. The Highway Bill is not responsible for that.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I know, but it is rather an important Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

The report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, part 1.—Mr. Foster (North Toronto).

GRAIN ACT.—NOTICE OF AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I beg to give notice that on Monday next when the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the Grain Bill I shall move the following amendment:

Clause 57 is amended by adding the following as subsection 2 thereof:—

2. Notwithstanding any other provisions in this Act that may conflict therewith, sample markets may be established in the cities of Winnipeg, Fort William and Calgary, and the mixing of grain permitted in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as shall be recommended by the board and approved by the Governor in Council.

3. The provisions of section 208, with the exception of subsection 3 thereof, shall apply to sample markets when established.

Bill (No. 112) for the relief of James Denny.—Mr. Aikins.

YUKON TERRITORY JUDGES.

Mr. DOHERTY moved that on Monday next the House do go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the payment to each of two judges of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory of an annuity equal to the salary of the office now held by him; such annuity to commence upon the resignation of such judge.

Motion agreed to.

MANITOBA BOUNDARY EXTENSION.

On the orders of the day being called.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, from the papers brought down yesterday concerning the boundaries of Manitoba, one despatch has been omitted. Mr. Roblin in a letter to the Prime Minister says that he is forwarding through the regular channels to His Excellency the Governor General in Council a memorial regarding the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba and the terms and conditions on which such extension shall be made. This memorial is not to be found among the papers.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). I think it will be found in the other return.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I think not; I cannot find it.

Mr. BORDEN. I recollect seeing it, I think it is just a reprint of a memorial previously forwarded, I shall send for it at once.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With regard to the resolution itself, I observe in the papers brought down yesterday another communication of the Prime Minister to Mr. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, in which it is said:

> The extension of the boundaries of Manitoba has been under consideration at those interviews and a basis of settlement has been reached respecting the financial terms which hitherto have been in dispute. The basis adopts the principle of equality of terms as between Manitoba and the other Prairie provinces. The application of this principle to the details remains to be worked out.

I notice in the resolutions which have been introduced and are now before the House for consideration, it is proposed to allow to the province of Manitoba a sum equal to the interest on $7,631,683.85, the difference between a principal sum of $8,107,500 and $475,816.15 heretofore advanced by the government to the province for provincial purposes.

This, I suppose, is what was referred to by my right hon. friend when he wrote to Mr. Roblin that the details were to be worked out. I presume the details have been worked out and are in tabular form. It would facilitate the discussion if these details were brought down in advance. The same thing would apply to the other paragraph of the resolution with regard to the money in lieu of land.

It is proposed to pay to Manitoba an annual sum based upon the population of the said province as ascertained by each quinquennial census thereof, less certain deductions in respect of what are known as swamp lands and university lands. It would also facilitate the discussion if the acreage of swamp lands that has been disposed of in favour of Manitoba, or that is intended to be disposed of, should be brought down.

Mr. BORDEN. There is no objection to that, the statement will be prepared.

THIRD READING

Bill (No. 60) to amend the Civil Service Act.—Mr. Borden.

HARBOUR COMMISSION OF MONTREAL.

Bill (No. 97) to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—Mr. Hazen, read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT—AUDITOR GENERAL'S OFFICE.

House went into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to amend 'the Civil Service Act' by providing for the employment in the office of the Auditor General, for a period not exceeding two years, of such temporary clerks as may be necessary in connection with the audit and payment of fees and expenses under the Dominion Elections Act.—Mr. White (Leeds).

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Leeds). I am not sure that any explanation is required in connection with this resolution. Action is made necessary by a difficulty experienced by the Auditor General, because of the amendment to the Civil Service Act. Prior to 1908, temporary clerks could be appointed by order in council for a period not exceeding six months, and the appointments could be renewed for six-monthly periods indefinitely. But under the amended Act, these temporary clerks can hold office for only six months in any fiscal year. Very heavy duties devolve upon the Auditor General in auditing the election accounts, and six months is altogether too brief a period for the proper performance of these duties. The work is such that trained temporary clerks are necessary. As the law now stands, the Auditor General trains clerks for a period of a month or so, and about the time they reach their maximum of usefulness he is obliged to dispense with their services. He advises me that he discussed this matter with the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when leader of the government. That being so, I assume that there is no objection to the passing of this amendment. The Auditor General has only twenty of these clerks, but they are trained; and after six months the number will diminish. From the investigation I have made I believe that, if not absolutely necessary, at least it is highly desirable that this amendment should be made in order that the Auditor General may efficiently perform this part of his duty. I have figures here showing the amount of work, and other documents bearing on the subject, but I think it is not necessary to present them unless objection is taken.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I remember discussing the matter with the Auditor General. I understood that it involved nothing more than the employment of those already engaged; it does not involve new appointments.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That is all.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 113) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COLLINGWOOD DRY DOCK.

Hon. F. D. MONK (Minister of Public Works) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 111) to authorize the payment of a subsidy to the Collingwood Ship Building Company, Limited. He said: At the time the resolution was introduced upon which this Bill is founded, I gave a full explanation of the circumstances. It was a subsidy applied for and worked out under the Subsidy Act of 1908. The work was begun and an agreement was to be signed, when the Act of 1910 doing away with the Act of 1908 was passed. This subsidy conforms absolutely to the conditions of the Act of 1910, except as to the depth of water on the sill. The Act of 1910 requires, in dry docks of this description, a depth of 18 feet on the sill. This dock has a depth of only 16 feet. In every other respect the proceedings are absolutely in conformity with the Act of 1908. It was deemed necessary by my predecessor in office to ask parliament to legalize the change, but there was no time during that session to do so. Hence this Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On looking over the matter carefully, I think this legislation will be necessary in order to carry out the agreement. I think that in the agreement made by the company a clause was inserted providing for legislation. The dry dock referred to by my hon. friend is in some respects better than the dry docks provided for under the Subsidies Act of 1910. This is a wider, and in many respects a more expensive dry dock. But in the one particular, as my hon. friend says, the depth of water over the mitre sill, it does not comply with the legislation. I think this is very proper.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

THE IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

Mr. COCHRANE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 77) to encourage and assist the improvement of highways.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Before we proceed to the consideration of this Bill I will have to ask your ruling on the objection I raise that the Bill is not in order. It contravenes article 54 of the British North America Act, and rule 77 of our own rules, inasmuch as it is a money Bill to all intents and purposes. I have to call your attention to section 3 of the Bill which is in these terms:

> The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province in aid of the improvment of existing highways or the construction of new highways in such province, or for both such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

The only answer which can be made to the objection I now raise is that the Bill does not actually dispose of money. The money which it is intended to dispose of in this Bill is to be appropriated later on; the appropriation is to be carried out later on. But the purposes for which the appropriation is made are now disclosed. I have also to call your attention to article 54 of the British North America Act, which makes my point very clear, that this Bill cannot be considered at this stage. In article 54 I find these words:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or Bill for the appropriation of any part of this public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or Bill is proposed.

I call your attention to these words:

> To any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or Bill is proposed.

The purpose now indicated in the Bill is the disposition of money which it is proposed to vote later on. But according to my reading of article 54, that very purpose must first be preceded by a recommendation to the House by message of the Governor General. Later on it is indicated that an appropriation will be asked for from parliament for a certain purpose, that is to say, to aid in the building of highways. But that purpose, according to my reading of section 54, must be first considered by resolution upon a message from the Governor General. As I said a moment ago, the only question which can be raised is as to whether there is an actual disposition of money and I have to call your attention to the fact that according to the jurisprudence of the House upon section 54 the rule applies not only to moneys which are actually voted but to all Bills which involve an expenditure of money. You will find the explanation and authority in 'Bourinot,' page 568:

The constitutional provision which regulates the procedure of the Canadian House of Commons in this respect applies not only to motions directly proposing a grant of public money, but also to those which involve such a grant.

Well, Sir, this rule applies particularly to this case. It is quite true that the Bill at the present time does not actually propose a grant of money, but it involves such a grant of money, because it is intended to make disposition of the money which it is proposed to ask for later on. Bourinot goes on to say:

A member who has not received the permission of the Crown has not been allowed to move the House into committee on a resolution providing for the purchase and exportation by the government of certain depreciated silver coinage.

Then he goes on to give another illustration of it, and I would call your particular attention to this:

In 1871 it was proposed to go into committee on an address to the Queen for a change in the Union Act, so as to assign the debt of old Canada to the Dominion entirely, and to compensate Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in connection therewith; the Speaker expressed the opinion adverse to the proposal on the ground that it was intended as preliminary to legislation imposing a public burthen, and was consequently not a mere abstract resolution which did not necessarily involve a future grant.

This decision of Mr. Speaker Cockburn is to be found in a book which we have in the library entitled 'Decisions of the Speakers of the Legislative Assembly and House of Commons of Canada,' No. 181. On the 6th March, 1871, Mr. Dorion moved as follows:

That this House will, on Wednesday next, resolve itself into a committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1st. That the division between the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec, of the surplus of the debt of the former province of Canada, over and above the sum of $62,500,000, assigned to the Dominion of Canada by the British North America Act, presents great difficulties, which it has not hitherto been possible to overcome in a satisfactory manner.

2nd. That the difficulties, resulting as well from the uncertainty as to the amount of the debt to be divided, as from the absence of an acceptable base for the making of such division, and that of the assets remaining in common to those two provinces, threaten to give rise to serious embarrassment.

3rd. That for the avoidance of such difficulties, the debt of the former province of Canada should be assigned entirely to the Dominion, as though it had been so from the first, with compensation to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the share which those provinces would have to pay upon the surplus of that debt.

4th. That an humble address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her to be pleased to recommend that the British North America Act, should be amended in accordance with these resolutions.

There was no disposition of actual money in that resolution; it was simply that an address be presented to Her Majesty praying for an amendment to the Act so that the parliament of Canada could make a disposition of money as between these different provinces. Objection was taken by Sir George Cartier:

That the resolution cannot, under the provisions of the 54th section of the British North America Act, 1867, be considered by the House, unless recommended by message from the Crown.

Mr. Speaker decided as follows:

The motion proposes that an address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her to recommend that the British North America Act be amended, so that the public debt of the Dominion be increased, and that compensation be made to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

In my opinion this motion cannot be entertained, it being in contravention of the 54th section of the Imperial Act for the Union of British North America. In that section it is provided that this House shall not adopt any vote, resolution, address, or Bill, for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, &c., &c., to any purpose that has not been first recommended by message of the Governor General. The contention—— —is that the proposed appropriation being beyond the power of the parliament of Canada, this provision of the statute cannot therefore apply.

On the part of the mover, presumably,

If any answer is made to my objection this will be the answer:

The contention is, that the proposed appropriation being beyond the power of the parliament of Canada, this provision in the statute cannot therefore apply.

Mr. Speaker Cockburn went on as follows:

In its literal construction it does apply to the motion, and certainly it seems to me to the full as necessary in a constitutional sense, to interpose the check of a message from His Excellency, under the responsibility of his ministerial advisers, before adopting an address which may be followed by legislation, imposing a burthen on the people by a parliament and ministers, owing it no responsibility, as in the case of a Bill or motion for the appropriation of money within our direct control.

The same question came before the House again a few days after in a different form. Mr. Dorion again brought the matter to the attention of the House, by moving as follows:

That an humble address be presented to Her Majesty, representing that an equitable and satisfactory division of the surplus debt of the late province of Canada, between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, is not likely to be effected in the manner provided by the British North America Act, 1867, and that the difficulties which beset the question have been greatly aggravated by the award rendered by the arbitrators appointed by the Dominion government and by the government of Ontario, in the absence of any arbitrator for the province of Quebec, which is regarded by the government and the people of Quebec as illegal and unjust, and praying that Her Majesty be pleased to recommend the passing of an Act by the imperial parliament, so amending the British North America Act as to authorize the parliament of Canada to deal by legislative enactment with all questions connected with the said surplus debt.

That was simply an abstract question, and it was met by Sir George Cartier with the following amendment:

That all the words after 'that', in the original motion, be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—'The validity of the award rendered by the arbitrators appointed by the Dominion government and by the government of Ontario in the absence of any arbitrator for the province of Quebec, being contested by the province of Quebec; and the government of Canada having come to the conclusion not to act on such award until its validity shall have been determined by a competent judicial tribunal, this House refrains from expressing an opinion on the award so rendered.

Mr. Chaveau moved in amendment to the amendment that:

It is highly desirable that the difficulty now existing between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario concerning the divisions and adjustments of the debentures, liabilities, credits, properties and assets of Upper and Lower Canada, provided for by the British North America Act, be speedily set at rest, and that this House will give its most favourable consideration to any measure to be introduced by the government, having this object in view, and involving any aid on the part of the Dominion commensurate with the importance of the object itself, and with our resources; due regard being had to the rights of the other provinces.

I would specially call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the effect of this amendment:

That this House will give its most favourable consideration to any measure to be introduced by the government, having this object in view, and involving any aid on the part of the Dominion commensurate with the importance of the object itself, and with our resources.

There was nothing there to bind the House. It was simply a proposition that this House would give its most favourable consideration to the object which would be a charge upon the public revenue. Objection was taken by Mr. Mills and the objection was sustained. That was on the 9th of March. On the 13th of March, Mr. Speaker Cockburn made the following statement to the House:

I observe that it is entered on the Journal of the 9th March, that upon objection taken by the honourable member for Bothwell, the motion of the honourable member for Quebec county was declared out of order for the reason there alleged.

I desire to correct that entry. The motion was out of order, in my opinion, not because it proposed an appropriation of public money, within the meaning of the 54th section of the British North America Act, and should have been preceded by message, but because it involved an increase of the public debt, and should, therefore, have been first considered in Committee of the Whole.

I am aware that it is doubted whether it is a correct rule of parliamentary practice, that every abstract proposition which, if acted on, would increase the public debt of the country, should be first considered in committee, but my opinion on the point has been expressed on two or three occasions, and I shall so continue to decide, unless the House should think proper to express a contrary opinion. This rule, however, being self-imposed, may be enforced or relaxed, as the House shall determine. But the constitutional rule, contained in the 54th section of the Imperial Act, is one that, being absolutely binding, should be neither extended nor restrained by implication but should, at all times, be most guardedly considered by the House. I desire, therefore, to correct the error on the 'Journal', so that the precedent shall not be understood as having any relation to the 54th clause of the Constitutional Act, 1867.

What is most remarkable about this, is that the opinion of Mr. Speaker Cockburn on that occasion was ordered to be printed in the Journals of the House, and it was, therefore, incorporated as a rule of the House, which has not since been repealed, and which is at present the law of this House. In my humble opinion, the case seems clear that the present Bill, although it does not actually appropriate money, is the first step towards the appropriation of money, involving therefore, the appropriation of money and is consequently quite within the rule as interpreted by the Speakers who have been your predecessors in office, Sir. I have only to add that this objection is not made in any captious spirit, but it has a purpose behind it, and a very important one. The Bill that is now before us, proposes a wide departure from what has been hitherto our constitutional law. It proposes to extend to the building of new roads or the improvement of old roads, moneys out of the federal treasury, and which roads have hitherto been under the charge of the respective provinces. I do not say that I am against this legislation; on the contrary, I think, under the circumstances of our buoyant revenue, this legislation may be wise, but we have certainly the right to take exception to the manner in which it is proposed. It proposes to give to the Governor in Council all moneys that may be appropriated, without any regard to the future action of parliament, and to bind ourselves in advance without any rule to be followed, but simply the intention or the action of the government of the day. If we are to discuss this Bill, and vote appropriations of this kind, the time when we should dispose of the manner in which the money is to be expended, is when the money is appropriated, and therefore, it should be first of all, introduced by resolution, when any objections which may properly be urged against the legislation should be urged. All the conditions which are to be attached to the expenditure of that money, should be set forth at the time the principle of the Bill is being discussed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I invite your ruling upon the objection I have raised, for the reasons I have given.

Mr. BORDEN. We have no fault whatever to find with the right hon. gentleman for raising the question which is always an important one to consider in connection with the introduction of Bills. The very language of the British North America Act, which he has read, shows that there is no ground whatever for the objection my right hon. friend has made. Section 54 of the British North America Act reads:—

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or Bill is proposed.

I venture to submit that this Bill is not within the meaning of that section. It does not appropriate any part of the public revenue, it does not appropriate one dollar of the public revenue for any such purpose. It merely does this: It provides that if parliament shall at any future time appropriate a certain sum of money for that particular purpose, then that money shall be expended by the Governor General in Council under the provisions of this Bill, according to the method now laid down in the Bill before the House. The provisions of the Bill are perfectly simple and plain and not to be misunderstood.

The Governor General in Council may in any year and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council grant to any province in aid of improvement of existing highways or the construction of new highways in such province, or for both such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in each year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

Therefore, it is apparent that before one dollar of public money can be expended under the provisions of this Bill, a resolution must be brought down in parliament, assented to by His Royal Highness the Governor General, considered in Committee of the Whole, and be the foundation of a Bill which will alone justify any expenditure under this Act. When I have said that, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that I have said all that is necessary to be said upon this subject. Not one dollar can be expended under this Bill until a resolution has been brought down in the House of Commons, passed through Committee of the Whole, and until it has also passed through all the stages of a money Bill in this House and in the Senate. Therefore, to suggest, as the right hon. gentleman has done, that this is a Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenues, seems to me to be entirely a misstatement of the case. The simple answer to it is, that without this Bill, if an appropriation were presented to this House, passed through Committee of the Whole and embodied in an Act of this parliament, the Governor General in Council would be left without any machinery whatever for the expenditure of that money. This Bill is solely designed to furnish machinery for the expenditure of a certain sum of money which may or may not be voted by parliament for that purpose. There is no question of the appropriation of one dollar of the public revenue of this country for this purpose until an appropriation Bill has been brought in founded upon a resolution which shall conform to section 54 of the British North America Act.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say that when this Bill was introduced I took advice, as it seemed to me to be the kind of Bill that it was contemplated should be introduced by resolution under section 54 of the British North America Act which says:

54. It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by a message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or Bill is proposed.

Bourinot goes further and refers to a Bill which 'involves' the expenditure of money but no authority for that is found in that clause of the British North America Act. My attention was drawn to the fact that this Bill did not come within that class of Bills, for the reason that the clause which refers to the money says:

The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province in aid of the improvement of existing highways or the construction of new highways in such province, or for both such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

My attention was drawn to the fact that when parliament could vote any money for that purpose, the resolution must pass through the usual course required for all money resolutions or Bills; it must first be founded on a resolution, and it must afterwards be considered by a committee of the House, and then pass the House in the form of a Supply Bill. That in my judgment seems to be ample guarantee for the House that it would have the full consideration that all money Bills have, and therefore I thought it unnecessary at the time that it should be introduced by a resolution. That was my opinion then, whether it was correct or not, and I still hold the same opinion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is nothing more to be said on this point, and I shall now proceed to the consideration of the Bill itself. We had an explanation of this measure on the first reading. The Bill is a short one, and, as my hon. friend himself stated in introducing it, is rather meagre. It disposes, in a manner which I think it not in accordance with true constitutional principles, of the money to be expended, by giving the control of it absolutely to the Governor in Council without any guidance as to the manner in which the expenditure should be made. The Bill contains only six clauses. The first is the title. The second is the definition of the word 'Minister'. The third provides:

The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province in aid of the improvement of existing highways, or the construction of new highways in such province, or for both such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

The fourth section provides simply that the specifications for the improvement and construction of highways are to be contained in an agreement between the minister and the government of the province, and are to be approved by the Governor in Council before the money is expended. The fifth section provides:

Each highway to be constructed or improved shall be defined or described in such agreement, and provision may be made therein for the future maintenance of such highway in good condition according to a specified standard and to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council.

These are all the dispositions of the Bill. Under this Bill, if it were to pass as it is, the Governor in Council would be given the most extraordinary powers. We on this side of the House have no exception to take to this new departure for the purpose of aiding in the construction of highways out of the federal treasury. This has not been the practice hitherto, but in the affluent condition of the treasury today, it may not perhaps be unwise that we should apply money in that direction. Moreover, the demand for highways is today more acute than it ever was before, and if it is intended to build new highways of a certain standard and to assist the various provinces in that respect, for my part I see no objection. The only exception I have to take to this Bill is that any such exception should be made upon some rule provided for in the Bill, and should not be left to the whim or caprice or favour of the government of the day. If this Bill passes in its present form, any appropriations for this purpose can be devoted to one or two or three provinces, according as the ministry of the day may determine. In a matter of this kind there should be a principle of equity and equality applied as between provinces. What is to be the line that is to determine how the money shall be expended? Shall the larger provinces of Ontario and Quebec be taxed for the benefit of the smaller provinces, or shall the new and younger provinces be taxed to enrich the already richer provinces? Shall the whole matter be left to the ministry of the day without any rule of guidance? I think hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will recognize that the Bill in its present shape is altogether undesirable and goes to the verge of unconstitutionality if it be not altogether unconstitutional. I submit that any expenditure of this kind should be regulated by some principle. Now, what shall that principle be? For my part, I submit that the only principle for the expenditure of such money is the principle to be found in the British North America Act, which in section 118 provides that the moneys paid out of the treasury to the various provinces shall be according to population. This provision was amended subsequently, complaint having been made that the allowances to the provinces were based simply upon the census of 1861. There were several conferences of the provinces, first in Quebec and then in Ottawa, commencing in 1887, all protesting that the allowances made to the provinces were not made on the principle of population, but on the population as it was in 1861.

It was felt and contended with great force that the allowance should be regulated on the principle of population, not on the fixed population of 1861, but on the moving population as determined by each census. There were several conferences of the provinces, they all joined unanimously in asking that the principle should be amended so that the allowance should be made on the scale of moving population as determined by each census, In 1907 this House unanimously adopted this view, amended article 118, and provided that thenceforward the allowances to the provinces out of the treasury should be in accordance with the population as determined by each census. This seemed to me the most regular and the fairer way of approaching the subject. I do not presume that any man in this House will find fault with me if I say that there should be some principle to regulate these appropriations and I do not believe that any fairer principle can be found than that of population. If anythink fairer can be devised I would be willing to consider it, but after giving the matter the best consideration I could, I did not find anything fairer than the principle of population. The great province of Ontario would be the largest beneficiary out of this appropriation. Nobody can find fault with that because if the province of Ontario is the wealthiest of the provinces it is also the province which has the largest charges to maintain. The province of Quebec would come next. This would also be natural because the province of Quebec has also large charges on her treasury. Therefore, I submit that this House should adopt the basis of population in making these grants and that the appropriation should not be left to the arbitrary disposition of those who for the time being happen to be the advisers of the Crown. Therefore, I beg to move:

That the Bill be not now read, but that it be resolved that while the House is favourable to the granting of federal assistance towards the construction of permanent roads it is of opinion that such aid should be given to the governments of the provinces for such purposes, and should be granted on a fixed basis similar to that now prescribed by the British North America Act and amendments thereto for subsidies to the provinces.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) professes warm sympathy with the purposes of this Bill, but he adopts a very peculiar way of indicating it. He meets the Bill with an objection which was made at the first reading and answered at the time. Unless his memory is very short indeed he did know that the question as to the allotment of any moneys to be voted by parliament was raised on the first reading of the Bill by himself and an answer was given at that time by the minister in charge of the Bill, the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), who said that the distribution of this money among the different provinces was to be on the basis of population or to use the phrase he then used: On the same basis as that on which the subsidies are granted to the provinces. My right hon. friend seems to have doubt on that question now, notwithstanding that assurance. Let me say to him that that doubt is unnecessary.

This is not a government which proposes to deal upon the principle of warm sympathy and cold justice, which actuated hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. When these subsidies are brought down we propose to vote a specific amount for each province which cannot be appropriated to any other province, and we propose to proceed on the basis of population or amount of subsidy. So far as I understand, that will amount to the same thing. My right hon. friend also says that this Bill gives extraordinary powers to the Governor General in Council. In that he is mistaken again. This Bill was introduced by my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways and Canals, who in framing it, adopted the analogy of at least half-a-dozen Acts introduced by the right hon. gentleman or his government. I refer to the Bills providing for railway subsidies. It is impossible in a Bill of this kind to indicate particular highways, because the province in each instance must be consulted in regard to that. Provision is made for consultation and co-operation with them. But apart from that, the safeguards which have been introduced in this Bill by the Minister of Railways and Canals, with regard to the character of the highway, and the expenditures of this money upon permanent work and upon work that will bring the highway up to a particular standard, have all been taken from the Bills providing for subsidies to railways, and according to the very lines of these measures which have been introduced not only by the late administration, but by previous administrations.

I do not know that there is very much else in what my right hon. friend has said that deserves consideration. I do not propose to reserve to the Governor General in Council, power to determine what amount shall go to one province or another. When the estimates which are necessary before one dollar can be paid over in aid of the construction or improvement of a highway are introduced it will be found that they provide for a particular amount to each province and that those amounts will be regulated according to the principle mentioned by the Minister of Railways when he introduced the Bill.

My right hon. friend speaks of the importance of highways. They are very important indeed, and it is for that reason that this proposal has been made in order that provinces with limited revenues may thus be enabled to keep up the standard of their highways, and that that standard may be improved from time to time, by means of this grant from the federal exchequer of Canada. I think that is a very worthy purpose.

I do not claim that this Bill is a perfect Bill. It has been prepared in the hurry of a session, by a government which had to meet parliament within five weeks after it assumed office, and the Minister of Railways and Canals, who introduced the measure, stated that it was introduced as the best method of dealing with this matter that could be devised by the government in the short time at their disposal for its consideration. It is very likely that in the next, or the following session, a more elaborate measure may be introduced, but it is considered desirable by the government that no time should be lost in implementing the pledge made by the Liberal-Conservative party in the last elections, that it would provide aid from the federal treasury of Canada towards the improvement of highways throughout the country.

I have not found that this proposal has been greeted by the people of Canada in quite the same spirit as that in which the right hon. gentleman seems to regard it. I have found unanimous approval among the people towards a measure of this kind, which follows the analogy of the Railway Subsidies Act, reserving to the Governor General in Council, certain control over the expenditure, in order to ensure that that expenditure may be made wisely and in the public interest.

We have no desire or intention to discriminate against any province on the ground of the political complexion of the government; we propose to deal with every province justly and fairly and without the slightest discrimination. We shall be glad indeed, after the close of this session, to take up this matter with the governments of the nine provinces of Canada, and to deal with them on fair, reasonable, and just lines, in order that this expenditure may be wisely and properly made. Having regard to these considerations, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is no ground whatever for the obstructive motion which the right hon. gentleman has made, which seeks to delay the passing of this measure, and to prevent the people and governments of the nine provinces of Canada from receiving any measure of assistance from the federal treasury for the very important purpose of improving the public highways. I should have thought that if my right hon. friend had entertained the opinion that the principle of this Bill was in the public interest, he would have allowed the second reading to pass without seeking to delay or obstruct it, and would have sought to introduce by way of amendment, to the Bill in committee, some of those precautions which he mistakenly supposes to be necessary in regard to the measure. He has not seen fit to take that course. He has asked this parliament to postpone the second reading of this Bill to another day, and to pass a resolution which is entirely unnecessary in view of the statement made by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, on the introduction of this Bill. The resolution says:—

That this House is of opinion that such aids should be given to the governments of the provinces.

The third clause of the Bill does that very thing:—

3. The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are proscribed by order in council, grant to any province in aid of the improvement of existing highways or the construction of new highways in such province, or for both such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

It is perfectly true that section 6 makes another provision:—

6. The minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council and uopn such terms and conditions as are prescribed by order in council, may undertake the construction of any new highways or the improvement of any existing highways in any province, and may expend in such improvement or construction the whole or any part of the sums voted by parliament for such subsidy to that province. Provided, however, that the minister shall first obtain the necesary authority from the legislature of such province and the consent of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Thus, not one dollar can be expended under section 6 of this Act without the authority of the provincial legislature, and the consent of the provincial government having been first obtained. So that this is a Bill to grant aid to the provinces in the first instance, under proper regulation by the Governor in Council, in order that the money may not be expended for any other purpose and may not be unwisely expended, or else it provides an expenditure by this government in any province but only with the consent of the provincial legislature, but also of the provincial government. Are not the rights of all the provinces, and all the provincial governments thoroughly safeguarded under the proposal? The right hon. gentleman's resolution says also:—

The assistance should be granted on a fixed basis similar to that prescribed by the British North America Act and amendments thereto.

He was assured on the first reading of the Bill, and has been assured again today, that when the estimate in furtherance of the purpose of this Bill is introduced into this parliament, the amount payable to each province will be set forth and that amount will be based in each instance, upon the population of the province, and upon the subsidies founded upon that population. Under these circumstances, it does not seem necessary for me to say anything further in reply to the observations of the right hon. gentleman, but to ask this House to vote down his proposal and let us proceed with this Bill in order that the highways in the nine provinces of Canada may be improved by means of aids from the federal treasury with the least possible delay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not need the statement of my right hon. friend the leader of the government, that this Bill was prepared in a hurry to convince members of this House of that fact, for an examination of the Bill, I think, will show them that the measure is of the most slip-shod character, that it is rough, crude and immature in its structure. And, having in view the importance of the subject, I think it would be difficult for any hon. member to call to mind any Bill introduced into this parliament which has shown such a want of care in preparation. I do not wonder that my right hon. friend the leader of the government thought it desirable to make the excuse which he has made. But he coolly tells us that if the time be given, if we will leave it with the government until another session comes round, having more leisure, they will no doubt prepare a measure which will be more acceptable to parliament. That is the effect of what he says. He says that the government have not had very much time to prepare a measure. Well, they have been in office since the 10th of October. From current rumour, they have been very busy, but only in one direction—in wielding the axe, and decapitating officials in the public service, and have not even had time, some of them to give attention to the business of their departments. After four months we have a Bill which takes up not quite two pages, and which certainly could not have occupied a great deal of time. And I do not think it would take a great deal of time to prepare a Bill which would be thorough in its character, and would accomplish what is intended. There was a rumour that the Bill was hurriedly prepared, and submitted to parliament in order to give some evidence to one constituency in Canada—the constituency of South Renfrew—that the government intended to improve the highways. For the report in the public press shows that very great stress has been laid upon that provision, and very great efforts made to capture votes in the constituency by reason of the government having determined upon this policy.

So much for the reason of the hurry which the right hon. gentleman admitted in connection with the preparation of this Bill. Now, he admits that the Bill ought to contain the provision embodied in the amendment of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition.

Mr. LENNOX. He did not say so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He admits, in effect, that the moneys ought to be expended upon that basis. If that is so, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of this House, that before we are called upon to support this measure these provisions should be in the Bill. The Bill is of the most meagre description, as I have said. It contains no statement as to the basis to be adopted for the expenditure of these moneys.

It lays down no principle upon which the government shall act. All we have is the statement of my right hon. friend that when, later on, they come to submit estimates to parliament, they will ask for amounts for the different provinces. If that is the intention of the Bill it ought to say so. Before parliament is to be committed to this expenditure there ought to be a provision as to what shall be the basis of the appropriation. Now let me call your attention to the third section of the Bill:

> The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council, grant to any province in aid of the improvement of existing highways or the construction of new highways in such province, or for both such purposes, a subsidy not exceeding such sum as may in such year be voted by parliament for that purpose.

Under that section it would be open to the government to come down to parliament and ask for a total vote for the improvement of highways throughout Canada, and if parliament passes this Bill with that section, we shall entrust to the Governor in Council the manner in which this lump sum shall be divided between the different provinces. If my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, when he had this Bill drafted, had clearly fixed in his mind that there should be a definite sum for each province to be voted by parliament, based upon population, I think he would have said so in the Bill, I think he would have laid down distinctly the basis upon which the appropriation should be made. Either he had not made up his mind when the Bill was drafted, or had not time to prepare a section which would cover the ground when the Bill was submitted to parliament.

Now as to section 4, I think it is a very wise provision that a highway which is to be aided shall be built or improved, as the case may be, according to descriptions, provisions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the minister. I think it is very desirable, and everybody will admit it is desirable, that federal aid should only be given to what, as stated in the amendment of my right hon. friend, may well be termed permanent highways. There should be no federal aid given to roads of a temporary character. The highways which the federal government are to aid ought to be in the nature of main highways, of important highways, and those highways should be built up to a high standard, and be in all respects permanent roads.

I object to the Bill upon another ground, that it leaves it open to the government to take either one of two courses. They may either make grants to the provinces in aid of the construction of highways and allow the moneys to be expended by the provinces, or they may make arrangement for the construction of some highways as federal works entirely, and entirely outside co-operation with the provinces. I think we ought to determine upon one course or the other. Either these grants for permanent highways should be entirely for the provinces, and we should allow the provincial governments to expend the moneys, subject to the specifications being approved by the Minister of Railways, or we should, as a federal government, undertake the construction of these permanent highways ourselves. We should not have an alternative provision in the Bill. That I think is a most objectionable feature of it. I think hon. gentlemen on consideration will see that it is objectionable. See what an opportunity for undue influence it gives to the government of the day in respect of any province. If they cannot agree as to the specifications with regard to any particular highway, or as to the particular highways to be aided, then the Minister of Railways can very well say: Oh, well, we will undertake the construction of highways in some particular province where we don't want the provincial government to have anything to do with the matter; we will undertake the construction of those highways ourselves. It is true, the right hon. gentleman says that the government cannot do that unless with the approval of the government of the province. But you can easily see what an engine for pressure upon the government of any particular province this would give to the federal government of the day, in case this section were passed. Surely there can be no objection, if these grants are to be based upon the population of the province, to limiting the provisions of the Bill to that mode of aiding public highways. I think it is extremely objectionable that this double-barrelled provision should be contained in the Bill, that in some provinces, or in some localities in a province, the provincial government may have charge of the building of highways; and in other provinces, or in other portions of the same province, the federal government may carry on the construction of a highway as a federal work. I think heretofore highways have been entirely attended to by provincial governments and by the municipal authorities, largely in co-operation with the provincial governments, and I think the better way would be that, whatever money the federal government is to give towards improving or constructing highways, should be handed over to the provincial authorities. Then there is another objection which I find in section 6. Certain roads may be undertaken as federal works.

Mr. BORDEN. Only with the consent of the provinces.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is objectionable, because if that is done, you may have to have a staff of highway engineers in the employ of the federal government to carry on these federal works. I submit it should be one way or the other; either the federal government should take charge of the highways—which, of course, would be limited to trunk lines or main highways—and aid this work entirely as a federal work, to which a strong objection can be urged, or the work should be done wholly by the provincial governments by means of the money which is to be paid out by the Minister of Railways. I think myself the proper way is to leave the matter of expenditure to the provincial governments, always making provision that the highway to be aided is subject to the approval of the minister.

Now I think there is another provision which ought to be in the Bill. It ought to be provided that if, during any year, a provincial government does not expend upon highways the amount to which they would be entitled according to population, that money should remain in the federal treasury, and should bear interest, to be paid over to the provincial government at such date as it will be required for the particular highway it was proposed to undertake; that is to say, that if the amount is not expended in any one year, the province should not lose it, but it should remain in the fund to be added to the payments which might subsequently be made.

Now in conclusion, I think my right hon. friend the leader of the government is not doing himself the greatest possible credit when he accuses the leader of the opposition of obstructing this Bill. I see no obstruction to the Bill. My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition is simply moving an amendment declaring the opinion of this House that the Bill ought to contain just what the Prime Minister I think himself is almost disposed to admit, and which he would have inserted in the Bill when it was brought down if he had given the subject longer consideration. All that the leader of the opposition is contending for is that a principle should be adopted that the whole people will approve of. If the leader of the government were to approve of the suggestions contained in this amendment, it would be the easiest thing in the world to adopt the amendment, take the second reading of the Bill to-day, and then we could expedite it in every possible way. There is no disposition on this side to obstruct the Bill. We are anxious to facilitate its passage just as much as gentlemen on the other side of the House, but what we do desire is that when this Bill passes it shall be a proper Bill, that when this parliament engages to approve of the appropriation of federal moneys for the construction of highways, the Bill shall provide that the appropriation shall be based upon the proper principle. We say that the principle should be the population of the different provinces which is the basis upon which the subsidies are now payable under the British North America Act. With these objectionable features removed, and the Bill improved and made what, I am sure, my right hon. friend the leader of the House will agree the Bill ought to be, because he says that is the way in which they propose to work it out, he will find no disposition upon this side of the House to offer the slightest objection but every disposition to facilitate its passage just as rapidly as possible.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the government and the country upon the introduction of this Bill. I can hardly conceive of any Bill which would be more to the credit of the government, or which would give more substantial benefit to the country than this Bill. I congratulate the country particularly because it is a distinct act in favour of the farmer and the rural population. With a somewhat lavish hand, at all events with very great generosity, we have been from year to year voting large sums of money for the construction of railways, the development of our canal systems and the improvement of our ocean ports, but we have not been doing very much that brings aid directly to the farmers' door. For many years I have felt that, however much we might devote to the construction of railways, so long as the main highways of the country remain in the imperfect condition in which they have existed in Canada, the farmer will be handicapped both as regards getting his products to the markets of the world and also in the matter of the valuation of his land. There is nothing which detracts so much from the ready sale of land at a good price to people coming from Great Britain visiting Canada and inspecting our homesteads as the fact that they contrast the condition of our roads most unfavourably with that of the roads they have been accustomed to in the land they come from.

So, I hope that the government, having embarked upon this policy, will be generous—very generous indeed, almost lavish—in the expenditure of money which will so directly concern the farmers of Canada. I congratulate the government, too, upon the fact, which seems to irritate and annoy hon. gentlemen oposite, that the government have not lagged back and for years and years been prodded on to implement their promises, but that they have come down at the very first opportunity to make good the promises which were made on the hustings or elsewhere in this regard. It does not agree with our hon. friends opposite, because they are not accustomed to that kind of thing. It does not agree with them for another reason—because they know that it is in such marked contrast with the flagrant way in which they disregarded their promises during the whole period of their administration, and so the people cannot be slow to notice the contrast between the present administration and the administration recently led by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). So. this government have brought down this measure speedily, in haste, in a hurry—as the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Pugsley) says, bearing evidence of hurry—and to the extent to which it may bear evidence of hurry it redounds all the more to the credit and honesty of the present administration, as showing that they are prepared to-day, to-morrow, and always to advance step by step in the redemption of the promises made on the hustings and otherwise to the people of Canada. So, I hope it will always be. These hon. gentlemen do not understand it. For sixteen years they avoided the fulfilment of every promise—I think every promise—they had ever made. I think I have heard them say that they redeemed one, but I do not know which one it was. I could never recognize any.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The reform of the Senate was one.

Mr. LENNOX. The reform of the Senate has been very considerable. I think that is one they claim to have carried out. But, for sixteen years they had the hardihood, if the expression is parliamentary, to ignore their promises, to fail to implement them although they were very prompt to implement that very unfortunate contract which they entered into in 1903 for the construction of the Transcontinental railway, so far, I mean, as the expenditure of money is concerned. Now, the hon. member for St. John says that this money is to be expended outside of the co-operation of the provinces. That is not correct at all. This section of the Act provides that the government may themselves directly expend the money in the permanent improvement or construction of main roads through the country. But if they see fit they may do it in co-operation with the governments of the provinces. Why should not the federal government spend the money if they will? Why should not the federal government have the option on other occasions of placing it in the hands of the provinces to be spent in co-operation and in conjunction with liberal expenditures at the same time and perhaps on the same works by the provinces? This is a gift, it is a voluntary contribution by the Dominion. Just as we have been expending enormous sums of money in the promotion of railways—and nobody has ever said that we were bound to consult the provinces as to that expenditure and nobody has ever said that we were bound to expend it in proportion to population—so this government, a progressive government, a government that is going to mark a new era and a higher plane in the history of Canada, have come to the conclusion that not only the great water routes should be attended to and the iron highways should be developed, but that the highway which practically goes to every farmer's door in Canada shall be attended to and that the government of Canada shall embark in the enterprise and bend their will and energy and intelligence to the solution of this great problem.

My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition thinks that this should be an expenditure in proportion to population, and he is so concerned about that that he would give this Bill a black eye in order that he would be able to say that he has brought in something new in connection with this scheme. My right hon. friend the leader of the House (Mr. Borden) has pointed out that already the desire of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition has been gratified. But, if there is anything on which I would be disposed to express a regret and a hope at the same time it is that it has been announced that this money, or this initial vote and the inauguration of this system, will be upon the basis of population or some analogous principle. I want to be distinct upon this point. Whilst I congratulate the government most heartily upon this great advance in the development of Canada—and it is one of the most important steps in the advancement of Canada that has been taken for a long time—yet I would have been a great deal better pleased if this really generous appropriation of money was not to be spent exactly upon that basis. This is a progressive government and I cannot believe that they will not come to my view some time. I am quite sure that if they believe it is right they will. That is the difference between this side and that. I would be glad if we had been allowed more latitude and probably we will take more latitude later on in this respect in the appropriation of this money and shall say that not the question of population alone shall govern us, but that we shall be guided by the question of the need of the various provinces and localities.

I believe that in the future in some instances it will be advisable to give even larger than a fair proportion according to population, to some provinces, in order to develop their highways, and for the reason that the more sparse the population the greater the need of assistance is, I trust that in time the principle will be recognized by the government that the need of localities throughout the Dominion shall be the guiding rule in expenditures on highways from time to time. On behalf of the people whom I have the honour to represent, the farmers of the great riding of North Simcoe, typical of the farmers of Canada, I congratulate the government most heartily upon this great advance in progressive legislation.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). The manner of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is so different from the benevolent and smiling addresses which he used to direct towards us in opposition, that I cannot help thinking that he is sharing in an unusual degree the evidence of perturbation and excitement which are animating the ranks of our opponents generally today. Recent events have evidently produced an undue effect upon my hon. friend from Simcoe. I am surprised, very much surprised, at the tone and substance of the remarks of the Prime Minister. He terms this amendment an obstructive amendment. I think he cuts the feet from beneath such a charge by the admission which he himself made that the Bill was drawn up in a hurry and was capable of improvement, and, if the Bill be capable of improvement, what more natural on the part of the opposition than immediately to attempt to improve it. Sir, this is not an obstructive amendment; it is an improving amendment. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister's argument faltered so and his manner was so different from usual that I could not fail to recall a few nights ago our having the assurance of so high an authority as the Minister of Trade and Commerce that if a certain event happened yesterday it meant the injection of venom into the veins of the government. Most clearly the venom is in the veins of the government and a double portion of it appears to be in the veins of the Prime Minister. We on this side of the House hope it will go on working, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce prophesied it would work, until the government is destroyed. Now, the amendment proposes to insert in the Bill a provision that this expenditure upon the highways shall take place upon a fixed basis. Of course, if we were always to have in power a Minister of Railways such as the present, I do not know that such an amendment would be necessary to be written in the Bill. We know that he is a non-political minister; we who have listened to him in the House are aware of the almost metaphysical detachment of his intellect. We know the high planes of political thought in which he wanders; he takes no interest in elections; elections are things apart altogether from his consideration. We know his political career; he would never use the money for highways for the sake of winning an election; no one could think it for a moment. But, then the present Minister of Railways will not always be in power. We have the assurance of the Prime Minister, and I accept it, that he would not use this money for such a purpose and that so far as his government is concerned this money for roads would never be used for electioneering and polical purposes. The fact that my right hon. friend gave us that assurance almost amounted to an admission that as the Bill is drawn it suggests that that is a possibility, because the suggestion did not proceed, so far as I heard, from the right hon. the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BORDEN. I beg my hon. friend's pardon, it was in reply, to a remark made by the leader of the opposition that I spoke.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I may not have heard the address of my right hon. leader as carefully as did the Prime Minister who was to reply, and therefore I accept the correction. In any case I accept the statement of the Prime Minister that he himself would be the last man to use this money in such a way. But I contend that the force with which he made the denial indicates the suspicion that the way this Bill is drawn up would leave such a possibility open. I say to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister as I said in regard to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, that he will not be in power for ever. Recent events would almost indicate that he may be in power for only a very short time. From all that I hear by correspondence from every portion of Canada, his government has gotten in wrong, and there is widespread thought in the minds of the people of this Dominion, and in many cases in the minds of people who are not by any means strong Grits, that this will be a short lived administration.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Be that as it may, I am going to take a ground that gentlemen opposite cannot jeer at, and I say: you wont' be in power for all eternity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). And, it may just be that when this government—to which I will attribute for the moment all the perfections that they themselves claim—passes out of power, some wicked Grit administration may come in.

An hon. MEMBER. Never.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Well, there is a gentleman over there who believes in eternal possibilities. As I say. some wicked Grit government may come in which would use this Bill improperly. Why not provide against such a possibility in the future; why not act in some reasonable and statesmanlike manner in respect to this matter. There is a better reason to demand that the government should accept this amendment and that is, because the Prime Minister only differs by a hairsbreadth from the leader of the opposition. He tells us that the government purposes doing what the amendment demands they shall write it down they will do. His purpose is exactly the purpose of the amendment only that the government prefers to keep a loose hand; they prefer to keep a roving commission.

If the principle be a good one—and every man of us, on both sides, I think, will be inclined to follow our respective leaders in agreeing to the principle—none of us dare do anything else in the face of public opinion—if the principle be a good one, why not put it in the Bill? What has the hon. gentleman to fear about printing it? If the Bill has been drawn in a hurry, we have at any rate taken enough leisure to arrive at the common opinion that the object is a good one. Then print it in the Bill, and it will bind not only this administration, but future administrations as well.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who has just sat down has put the issue very properly to the leader of the government. The leader of the government told us that his Minister of Railways and Canals, in moving the first reading of this Bill, stated that this money was to be paid to the provincial governments that was the purpose and object of it.

Mr. COCHRANE. No. I was asked by the right hon. leader of the opposition on what basis the money was going to be expended, and I said on the same basis on which the subsidies were paid.

Mr. MACDONALD. That means exactly what I said, that the provincial governments were to receive this money in the same proportion in which the subsidies are at present divided.

Mr. COCHRANE. No.

Mr. MACDONALD. If that is not the meaning of the Minister of Railways, I am at a loss to know what the English language means.

Mr. COCHRANE. Read 'Hansard,' and you will find.

Mr. MACDONALD. Perhaps my hon. friend will explain; I do not want to take any advantage of him. I understood the right hon. leader of the government to say that the Minister of Railways had taken that position in moving the first reading of the Bill, and he himself stated to-day that the object was to utilize the money provided under this Bill in the same way as the subsidies to the provinces were granted. That being so, my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark), has put the proposition to the House in a form from which there can be no escape. If that be so, there can be no objection to the Premier causing to be put in the Bill that provision in the amplest and clearest way. That is what the leader of the opposition seeks for in his amendment. It is absolutely essential, it seems to me, when you come to consider this whole question, apart from the abstract way in which my hon. friend from Simcoe put it, unless by some unseen method the federal government of Canada shall provide money for the highways. Underneath this proposition is involved the question of the relative powers of the provinces, and the Dominion in regard to the building of roads. Now, under the British North America Act the sole right to deal with local works of that character is vested in the provinces. Outside of the western provinces, where the title to the land is still vested in the Dominion, the title to all the highways is vested in the provincial governments or in the municipalities, as the case may be.

An hon. MEMBER. In the west also.

Mr. MACDONALD. That being so, the federal government, for the first time in the history of confederation, are proposing to step within the boundaries of provincial authority and legislate on this matter. Now, why was this question of roads left to the provincial governments? Why have the provincial governments been needing more money in order to deal with them properly? Why was the suggestion made that the federal government should provide funds for this purpose? Simply and solely because apparently there has not been enough money in the hands of the various provinces to deal with the highways as the public opinion of the country would like them to be dealt with. In order that the provincial governments might be in a position to deal wtih the highways and other matters, the federal government in 1867 agreed to give certain amounts by way of subsidies to the provincial governments to be expended by them for this and other purposes within their jurisdiction. That was the reason why, from that period down to the present, the federal government has granted subsidies to the various provinces. The area within which the provincial governments could raise money by taxation was defined and circumscribed in such a way that it was impossible for them to obtain within that area the necessary money which would enable them to keep pace with the development of the provinces. As a consequence, there were repeated conferences of representatives of all the provincial governments, in which the whole question of the relation of the subsidies to their expenditures was discussed, in 1887, in 1902, and in 1907, when the provincial premiers met and decided to ask the Dominion government for larger subsidies in order that the needs of the various provinces might be properly supplied. The result was that in 1907, the federal parliament gave to the provinces increased subsidies. All the while the provinces have been dealing with the question of roads. In the province of Ontario at confederation there was vested in the municipalities the right to deal with this whole question, and the municipalities have gone on raising money by direct taxation for the purpose of improving the roads. I understand that the same system obtains in Quebec. The governments of these two provinces have used provincial funds for the purpose of building colonization roads. In the province of Prince Edward Island there is no municipal government, but the provincial government has maintained the whole road system of the province out of the subsidy paid by this government. In the province of Nova Scotia we have never had muncipal taxation for roads except that there is vested in each municipality the right to tax up to a certain amount each year for the purpose of improving the roads, but the title to the highways is vested in the province, and the provincial government makes expenditures in various parts of the province for the improvements of the roads. The same principle prevails in the province of New Brunswick. Where does the money come from? From the subsidies paid by this government under the terms of 1907. That is the position of affairs. Some of the provinces repair the roads, and there are municipal road inspectors, whose salaries are a matter of criticism in some quarters on the ground that a certain amount of money is voted for that purpose.

Then you come into another arena and you have a provincial road inspector and his staff of assistants whose salaries and expenditures are also deducted from the total amount provided by the central authority and you have criticism there as to the large amount that is expended. Does the right hon. the Prime Minister propose under this Bill to set up a third system of officials in Canada to deal with the question of roads or does he not? If he does we are going to have a very peculiar condition of affairs. You will have municipal officials paid out of municipal funds, provincial officials, responsible to the provincial government but really paid out of the funds of this government and then federal officials paid out of the money provided for in this Bill. Roads have been discussed in my province for years and the leader of the local Conservative party has been preaching there during the last four or five years that the one thing wanted in regard to road expenditure was unification of authority, the adopting of a more comprehensive plan to which every one would give adherence.

This is not a subject which can be treated lightly and my right hon. friend cannot dispose of the proposition of my leader by speaking of it as obstruction. I am sure the right hon. leader of the House will realize the position of affairs that for the first time since 1867 the federal parliament is entering upon this arena which is peculiar to provincial governments and that in so doing he is interfering with provincial rights. True you may be interfering in a way which the province will not mind, you are going to give them money but you are entering upon the trend of an expenditure which is wholly confined to the provinces, you are undertaking to go in and spend money on roads which has never been done before. It will not do for my right hon. friend to say that this resolution follows in a general way legislation used in regard to subsidies for railways. It is all very well to reserve to the Minister of Railways and his engineers the right to prescribe the methods and the usual restrictions under which subsidies can be earned by the construction of railways. That involves only the making of certain specifications well known to engineers, But here we have a new departure. The government say to the minister: you are going to start out for the first time in the history of confederation on a Bill made in a hurry without deliberation, without stating in the document the thing you say you are going to do. No one has a right to enter upon a constitutional question in such a light hearted and careless way as these hon. gentlemen are doing.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Are you against the Bill?

Mr. MACDONALD. I am in favour of the federal government giving to each province by way of additional subsidy more money for the improvement of roads. That is my position and I hope it is my hon. friend's because I understood the Premier to say that was his position and all we want to do is to put into the Bill a statement of the fact, a statement of the position of the Premier. Of course the Premier says that this money which is to be expended under the first five sections of the Bill has to be spent in co-operation with the provinces. It is true that you have to deal with the provinces. Why does not my right hon. friend amend that a little and say that the sums of money to be granted shall be in proportion to the amounts which have already been granted to the provinces by way of provincial subsidy? My right hon. friend goes further and by section 6 of the Bill proposes a system of expenditure which is not by way of subsidies to the provinces. That is a peculiar clause of the Bill, an entirely new proposition, and one which calls for the fullest consideration by this House. He tells us there is not much to be criticised about that because if the federal government propose to go in and expend money itself in any province, it cannot enter upon the expenditure without obtaining the necessary authority from the legislature of the province. Of course it cannot, how could it? The title to the highways is vested in each one of the provinces. It is very doubtful if there is any necessity for the latter portion of the provision. What power or authority has this government to interfere with the roads in any province of the Dominion? These roads are held by the Crown in the right of the province, not in the right of this Dominion. My right hon. friend would be a trespasser, and any one of his officials would be a trespasser if he went on any public highway without the consent of the provincial government concerned. Not a dollar could be spent for that purpose except with the consent of the provincial government. If that is so would my right hon. friend tell us whether the government intend to inaugurate a new department to be known as the department of highways, as stated in the newspapers, through which department the minister is going to start upon a system by which the federal government will deal with the highways of the country? The right hon. gentleman tells us that is not the policy of the government. If that is the policy of the government we want to know, because if so, this parliament is entering upon an absolute interference with provincial rights, and undertaking to deal with matters over which they have no jurisdiction, and with which they cannot deal except with the concurrence of the provinces.

Mr. BRODER. What objection would you have in the case of an interprovincial road?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend would have to come before this House with a separate proposition dealing with that problem, and it would require the greatest possible care. Of course, we have section 92 of the British North America Act, which gives to the legislatures the right to deal with local and private works within a province, except in respect of such works as may be declared for the general advantage of Canada, but the use of highways in that connection up to this moment has never formed the subject of consideration by this parliament. Of course the federal government has legislated in regard to railways which were interprovincial works, and I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite wail on this question of provincial rights in the last parliament and before the Railway Committee, day after day, complaining about the federal government undertaking to grant local charters.

Mr. LENNOX. As they had a right to do.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then they ought to be thinking about provincial rights in connection with this Bill. This House has not yet secured from the government a statement as to what its policy will be. In replying to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the right hon. the leader of the House (Mr. Borden), said that the Bill in the preamble states that this money is to be spent on the same basis as the provincial subsidies. My right hon. friend is going to carry out that policy. Let us go on in the enacting clause and provide for that assistance. But the nigger on the fence is this section 6, and it is in regard to that that I hope the Minister of Railways, when he comes to speak, will tell us whether or not it is the purpose of this government, over and above the assistance they propose to give by way of subsidies, to inaugurate a new department to be known as the department of highways, with officials and all that. If that is the proposition I submit to the House that before we consider it, the government ought to place before the House a well defined plan dealing with the various conflicting bodies that have to do with road expenditures in this country to-day.

The unification of authority and expenditure is the policy of the Conservative party in the province of Nova Scotia in provincial affairs. Is it the policy of the leader of that party in federal affairs? That is the question upon which we ought to be informed. Have the government had any inquiries made on this subject throughout the country? The Prime Minister is reported to have said to a deputation that waited upon him about two weeks ago that it was not the intention of the government to engage in the repair of old roads, but to engage in the construction of new ones. If that is so, we ought to know it; if it is not so, we ought to know that. I saw that statement reported the other day; I do not know whether the Prime Minister cares to give assent to it now——

Mr. BORDEN. I am responsible for what I said, not for what is reported.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is, of course, not a very brilliant remark. But it does not take much to please our friends opposite since the event of yesterday. But perhaps they should rather wait for some greater utterance on the part of their leader before they break forth in applause, for, certainly, that remark of his was not exactly profound. He is responsible, of course, for what he says, aud not for what he is reported to have said. Well, that only means that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane), when he speaks, will have to tell us a little more fully what is the policy of the government in this regard. Either the policy of the government is to construct new roads or its policy is to repair old ones. This discussion, I am sure, has shown, it must have satisfied hon. members, that there are very great questions involved in this Bill which cannot be disposed of so easily as is suggested. Has the Minister of Railways made any inquiries whatever with regard to the conditions under which this federal money is to be granted? For, unquestionably, section 6 provides for the granting of that money. Has the minister any information and comprehensive plans to submit to the House? If he has not, then the House ought not to give adherence to a Bill that is put forward apparently on the basis that the money is to go to the provinces, yet with a little clause behind to enable some kind of system to be built up for other reasons. Clearly we are entering upon an arena of legislation for the first time since 1867. This means that we ought to take great care in framing that legislation. The Prime Minister's statement that the Bill was prepared in a hurry and perhaps is not so complete as it might be, but a better one, a wider one, will be introduced at another session, is not good enough for this House. Legislation under which it is proposed to trespass upon provincial authority ought to proceed with the greatest deliberation and care, and before we are asked to crystallize this Bill into law we should understand thoroughly what we are doing. Each and every one of the provinces of the Dominion, at a conference or in some other way, ought to be consulted upon the question how far they are willing to give up their authority in relation to highways and the expenditure on them, before such a measure is introduced. It does seem to me that, so far as federal assistance to highways is concerned, as the leader of the opposition proposes, it should be confined to grants based upon the provincial subsidies.

Mr. FOWLER. So far as I could follow the hon. member for Pictou, (Mr. Macdonald), his chief objection seemed to be that the Bill involved a new departure. A strange doctrine, surely, to come from a so-called Liberal in this House—that, because this is without precedent, because never before in the history of Canada, has a government been in a position, and been wise enough, and broad enough, to introduce a measure such as this for the benefit of the people of Canada, therefore the measure is to be declared bad. This is a measure for the benefit of all the people, irrespective of class, or occupation or of where they live; it applies to every province and covers the whole Dominion.

I have also been amused by the attitude of our friends on the other side, with regard to an occurrence of yesterday. One does now begin to realize the depth of gloom into which these gentlemen were plunged, when one finds them rejoicing with exceeding great joy—over what? Over the fact that they have been able to hold half the majority they had on September 21. Just as proper would it be for our friends the Dutch, to rejoice over taking Holland, or the Irish over the retention of Cork, as for these gentlemen to rejoice so hugely because genial George, the Bill Nye of Canadian politics, has been able to hold South Renfrew, by something like half the majority by which it was carried on the 21st of September. Why do not these gentlemen remember, do they not realize, that the 'great chieftain' was there with his 'white plume.'? How could George help being elected under the circumstances. True, the 'white plume' did not have much effect on the 21st of September, but it did seem to be able to hold what they had on the 22nd of February.

Now, my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), finds fault with this Bill, because it is crude, rough, rude. He is such a polished, courteous gentleman, that I can understand how his sensitive soul would be affected by anything that is rude. He also complains of the Bill because it does not go enough into detail. He has forgotten the investigation of the Central railway. If he had remembered that, he would not have spoken against this Bill, on the ground that it did not contain details enough. He will remember that there was a Bill referred to there; it was brought up in the evidence,—a Bill in which was so little detail that it had on it only 'Five thousand W. P.' So, surely the hon. gentleman was not serious when he spoke of this Bill as being improperly drawn because it did not go sufficiently into detail.

It seems to me that the people of this country will look with very little favour upon the criticism of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to this matter, whether that criticism be based, like that of the hon. member for Pictou, on the lack of precedent for the introduction of a measure of this kind, or whether it be criticism like that of the hon. member for St. John, based on the statement that the measure is crudely drawn and the language not so perfect and not so Addisonian as if it had been drawn by the hon. gentleman himself. I think the people of this country, irrespective of party, will hail this Bill with great satisfaction, implementing as it does, the promise of the party now in power when it went to the country in the late election, and showing that this government is a government which proposes to carry out the pledges it made to the people, in sharp contradistinction to the party that, for the last fifteen years, misgoverned this country, who carried out no pledges that they made. They said they did carry out their pledges with regard to the Senate, but it was Providence that helped them out with the Senate and 'reformed' that body to the extent to which it was reformed by making the majority Liberal instead of Conservative.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland). I do not intend to detain the House more than a few moments. But this question of good roads is one which, in the section of the province of Ontario from which I come, is of such momentous importance, that I feel that it is my duty to say at least a few words in regard to the Bill before the vote is taken on the amendment of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

I might say without, perhaps, wounding the feelings of the hon. gentlemen, that if they have no better arguments to advance in favour of this Bill than those put up by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, they have a very weak case. Now, if it were not for the last clause in this Bill, I would not care much whether the amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition were carried or not. But it seems to me that clause goes to the very crux of the whole matter. The right hon. leader of the government has told us that the Bill was quickly drawn, perhaps crudely drawn, and will be supplemented perhaps by a better one during the recess. We wish to supplement it by a better one now, and to define clearly and emphatically how the distribution of the money shall be made so that there may be no dispute about it hereafter. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has very properly stated that though the right hon. gentleman is Premier at present, he might not be Premier next year, not that his party will be defeated, but that he himself, whom we hope will live long, might not be in this House. There are lots of contingencies that may arise between now and the next session of parliament, and another leader, another king, may arise who knows not Joseph; another king may arise who may not feel that he is bound by the statements of the present right hon. Prime Minister of Canada, and who may not agree that this money should be divided in accordance with the suggestions made to-day by the leader of the government. So that, now is the accepted time, now is the time to rectify this Bill, and put it in the exact shape in which the leader of the government says he intends to put it. There is no question of obstruction. The amendment can be adopted now and the Bill can be put through probably this afternoon or at the beginning of next week. I want it to be distinctly understood that I am not endeavouring to obstruct the passage of this Bill. I am strongly in favour of this government granting aid for the construction of good roads throughout the country, and will do everything in my power to assist the passage of a Bill for that purpose. But I desire to protest against the way this money is to be expended. Though it may aid in the construction of good roads throughout the country, it can also be used in a way which will not conduce to the advantage of the people, or to the construction of these roads in such a way as we would like. I have my own views as to how this money should be distributed, and those views I intend to suggest when we are in committee on this Bill. I am not in favour of handing this money over to the provincial legislatures at all, but of paying it out to the municipalities directly, as the provincial governments do—of course under certain restrictions and with certain supervision. That is the proposition which I believe the people of the province of Ontario would approve. I think it would meet with the approval of ninety-nine per cent of all the municipalities in the province, that the money should be paid directly to the counties and not be paid to the provincial government. If the municipalities did not use it properly, then let this government implement, or supplement, whichever word you like to use, the moneys paid by the provincial government in that direction.

Mr. COCHRANE. I agree with the right hon. the Prime Minister that, judging by the remarks we have heard from hon. gentlemen opposite, their idea is to obstruct this Bill. As I understand parliamentary procedure, the discussion that takes place on the second reading is for or against the principle of the Bill, and hon. gentlemen have been talking directly against it. Now I do not know of any other federal government which has adopted this system of aiding highways, that work has generally been left in charge of the provinces. I do not know of any other country where the federal government contributes or co-operates with the province for that purpose, as it is proposed to do in this Bill. At Washington, I understand, there is a Bureau of Education for the very purpose of instructing the people on the necessity of good highways, and the manner of constructing them. I think probably it would be well if we had in Canada such a bureau as that, because the construction and upkeep of public roads are certainly very necessary in a country like ours. I want to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) in his reference to what I said on the first reading of this Bill. The right hon. the leader of the opposition asked me:

> I would ask the hon. gentleman to tell us if there is any basis of allotment among the provinces. The provincial subsidies are based on population; is this based on population?
> Mr. COCHRANE. It is to be on the same basis as that on which subsidies are granted to the provinces, in other words, by population.

I have no doubt whatever but that this government can work in conjunction and in harmony with the provincial governments in carrying out the purposes of this Bill. I think every provincial government, whether Grit or Tory, will welcome this Bill and co-operate with us in carrying it out. Moreover, the government will not undertake to force any local government to join us if they do not wish to. I hope we shall be able to arrange with the provincial governments so that they will make a grant equal to the grant given by the federal government, and that we may be able to go on within a very short time and construct these roads. But if any provincial government does not wish to contribute, I see no reason why we should not go on and do the work ourselves. But if they join in with us, so much the better. We will co-operate with them in making the specifications. Evidently no specifications can be laid down in this Bill. You cannot draw up specifications to cover all roads, because some might cost much more, and others much less than others. The right hon. the leader of the opposition objected to putting so much money in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. What did they do last session, or the session before? They gave a subsidy to a road to be built from Montreal to join the Transcontinental railway in Quebec, and there was no company named to which the grant was to be made; it was left to the government to name the company, and they manipulated it in such a manner as to give the money to their friends. We do not propose to take that course; we propose to work with the provincial governments, not with individuals or with companies. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the second reading of the Bill.

Amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) negatived.

Motion (Mr. Cochrane) agreed to, Bill read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 3—grant of annual subsidy for highways.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) if he would explain what he has in his mind as being the purpose of these words:

The Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by order in council.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would understand that terms and conditions would have reference to the specification of the roadway.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought so at first but on reading the section which comes next I have my doubts because the next section provides exactly for the specifications:

4. Any highway for which aid is granted to a province shall be improved or constructed, as the case may be, according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the minister, and specified in each case in an agreement between the minister and the government of the province, which agreement the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make.

Mr. COCHRANE.

I think this clause is perfectly unobjectionable; on the contrary, quite proper, but it disposes of the specification in so far as clause 3 is concerned. My hon. friend must have something else in his mind. I do not exactly understand what the purport of those words is.

Mr. BORDEN. There are a great many considerations which will occur to my right hon. friend in addition to those already mentioned. It will be desirable, for example, to have precaution taken that the money should be expended for this purpose and this purpose alone.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is hardly what is meant. The money must be expended for this purpose; it cannot be expended for any other. I ask for this information because I have been unable to satisfy myself as to what is intended. I do not see what conditions are to be imposed which are not to be found in section 4.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not agree with my right hon. friend in his construction of this matter. This money is intended to be handed over to the provinces for the purpose of the construction of new highways or the improvement of existing highways. It will readily occur to any one that, in the agreement which must be entered into between the government of Canada and the province in respect of such matters, terms and conditions of various kinds have to be provided for. For example, the government of Canada might be authorized by parliament to make a grant of a certain amount of money to the province of Ontario and a certain amount to other provinces throughout the Dominion. It would have to be understood, I suppose, in the first place, as to whether the money was to be applied by the province in the improvement of highways or in the construction of new highways. You have to have some understanding to that and that understanding would properly come under the expression that is used in clause 3 of the Bill 'Upon such terms and subject to such conditions.' Then, in addition to that, the question of the maintenance of the road might come up. It is true that it is referred to in another section—the following section, I think. Still it would be undesirable that money should be expended in the construction of a permanent highway of a certain recognized standard without some provision being made that the road that was so constructed would be maintained up to that standard. It would be an idle thing for the government to spend money on public highways if there were to be no assurance whatever that the road, after it was constructed, would be maintained in good order and condition so that it might be used by the people to advantage. I do not think it is necessary to elaborate this matter; no doubt a great many other illustrations of terms and conditions could be given.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no exception to take to the statement which my right hon. friend has made; there must be conditions which will be covered by the agreement, but everything that has been said by my right hon. friend so far comes within and is covered by section 4. It is because section 4 is there that I do not appreciate the purpose of the words 'Upon such terms and subject to such conditions,' which are to be found in section 3. I would again call my right hon. friend's attention to section 4.

Mr. BORDEN. That is entirely as to the character of the road.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, that covers everything. Section 4, as I understand it, means that money may only be given to the province after an agreement has been made in regard to the specification and the conditions and everything else about the road. Then, I ask what is the meaning of these words in section 3?

Mr. BORDEN. I could give my right hon. friend many other illustrations if he is not satisfied with those I have already given and which seem to me to be amply sufficient. Let me point out in the first place that the words in the fourth section which he has referred to are taken from the Railway Subsidies Act in the form in which it has passed this parliament on many occasions. I read from the Subsidy Act of 1908:

> Shall be constructed according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor General.

What else do we find in the same section of the Railway Subsidies Act? —that there are provisions which are to be insisted upon by the Governor General in Council in regard to the date at which the work shall be commenced, in regard to the speed at which the work shall be carried on and in regard to the date at which the work shall be completed.

It would be eminently proper that some of these matters should form part of the terms and conditions upon which the money should be handed over to the provinces. For example, we would not hand over a large sum of money to any province except according to the terms and conditions that it should be expended, not only for this purpose, but within a reasonable time, and further, that the work should be carried on with certain safeguards to satisfy the government of Canada that the work would be conducted economically and under proper supervision.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Are not all of these comprised in the section?

Mr. BORDEN. No. I believe 'the descriptions, conditions, and specifications,' refer only to the character of the road, and the expression in section 3 deals with matters to which I have alluded, and many others that I might suggest. It is impossible to foresee at the moment what terms and conditions may be thought desirable, but, those conditions I have brought to the attention of my right hon. friend will no doubt occur to him as conditions that ought to be agreed upon between the governments before the money is handed over.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not dispute that at all. I simply say that in my humble opinion that is included in section 4.

Mr. GERMAN. I call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals and of the Prime Minister to my suggestion that the best way to distribute this money and the proper policy to adopt is, not to pay the money directly to the provinces, but to distribute the money among the various municipalities in the same manner as the Ontario Act distributes the money among the municipalities in Ontario. The Minister of Railways knows that the Ontario legislature appropriated $1,000,000 in aid of good roads in that province, and that money is distributed by granting to each municipality one-third of the money which that municipality itself expended for the construction of good roads.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is given to the county municipality.

Mr. GERMAN. That policy has worked out with the greatest possible degree of satisfaction and that is the policy which I am convinced ninety-nine per cent of the county municipalities in Ontario would wish to see adopted with reference to this money. In this way you will do away with all possible chances of extra officials. You can say to each county municipality: When you have expended $20,000 or $100,000 in the construction of good roads according to certain specifications and standards, we will pay you a proportion of the money you have expended. If you give the money directly to the provinces it simply means an increase of the provincial subsidy because the province is very likely to use this money for good roads, but they will not use any money of their own for such a purpose.

Mr. LENNOX. What the hon. member (Mr. German) says may sound very plausible, but you have to consider how it will work out. Should the Dominion government take upon itself the burden of directly dealing with all the county municipalities in Canada? I do not think so. This emphasizes just the meaning of section 3 as contrasted with section 4. The right hon. the leader of the opposition will not think it is an unfriendly statement if I say that he has told us a great many times that he is not a business man and I think that is true of him so far as I have been able to observe from his actions. There is a very clear emphatic distinction between clauses 3 and 4. Clause 4 is directed to the character of the road that shall be constructed and in which the Dominion government will put its money, but it goes no further, while clause 3 deals with the question of the terms upon which the Dominion will agree to give its money. For example, some of the municipalities have adopted toll gates upon their highways and the Dominion government would probably say: As we are expending this money not for local or sectional purposes but for the general advantage of Canada, we insist that the beneficial results of this work shall not be hampered in any way by the erection of toll gates, and if you have toll gates we will not pay over any of this money. It may be true that this money could be best expended through the instrumentality of the county councils. The government of Ontario arranges that by contributing a certain proportion of the amount expended by the municipalities upon the improvement of the highway. We might make it a condition, if we wished to, that this money shall be expended directly through the county councils in certain cases where that system has been found to be working satisfactorily, and we might say: We will pay the money over to the province to be handed by the province to the county municipalities. It might be that in the case of a very expensive bridge we would contribute a certain amount towards it if the province would contribute another certain amount.

Mr. GERMAN. Will the hon. gentleman approve of the proposition, as far at any rate as the province of Ontario is concerned, that the money should be expended by the county councils in the same manner as the appropriation of the Ontario legislature?

Mr. LENNOX. No, I do not say that I would go that far, though the system has worked fairly well. The Dominion parliament, in dealing with this matter, can, if it chooses, stipulate that the money shall be expended by the municipalities in such a way as the hon. gentleman refers to.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

House resumed in committee on Bill (No. 77) to encourage and assist the improvement of highways.—Mr. Cochrane.

On section 3, grant of annual subsidy for highways,

Mr. BRODER. I think the importance of this legislation justifies the new departure. Perhaps it has scarcely dawned on the people of this country what this measure means to the rural sections of Canada, and to the agricultural interests. Let us look at what has been done elsewhere in regard to highways. In France, for instance, a country where agriculture has reached as high a condition, perhaps, as in any country in the world, they have 23,600 miles of what are called national highways, 28,600 miles of departmental highways—all of these roads being paid for by the state—390,000 miles of municipl roads, upon which there is an annual outlay of 125,000,000 francs, or $25,000,000, and, in addition, a great mileage of what are known as rural roads, narrow roads connecting with the greater highways throughout the country. Consider also what is being done in the United States. In the state of New York, a few years ago, they bonded the state to the extent of $50,000,000 for the purpose of improving the roads, and the state proposes to build absolutely at the public expense 3,000 miles of state roads. They propose also, with the money raised by this issue of bonds, to assist what they call towns—we call them townships. In the state of Ohio, the estimate generally accepted is that the improvement of the road system adopted by the state, has increased farm values by from 25 to 50 per cent.

I asked the state engineer of what is called the State Commission, what effect the improvement of roads in the state of Massachussets had had in bringing back occupants to the abandoned farms, of which they have a good many, and he said that hundreds had returned to the farm in consequence of good roads. So it is a very important matter from that point of view. I am glad to see the unanimity existing in the House with regard to the importance of this question.

Now, it might be wise to consider carefully whether we should not have, to some extent, what we might call federal roads built and maintained by the federal authorities. There is danger, if you come down to the municipalities with this money, that we will have a lack of uniformity, we will not have that distinctive system which should govern the outlays on these roads. Now, we have nad some experience in Ontario with reference to giving municipalities money for this purpose. Several years ago there was what is known in Ontario as the Municipal Loan Fund. A number of counties borrowed largely from this fund, while others did not borrow from it. Some counties borrowed so largely that, after a few years, they found it difficult to pay; and away back in 1871 or 1872, I think the Hon. E. B. Woods devised a scheme of settling this vexed question. The legislature passed a law to forgive the debt to many of the borrowers, and in order to do justice to those who had not borrowed, they gave them so much per head. Now, it was not easy for some years to see any real benefit following the gift of that money to the municipalities. The difficulty was that they lowered their taxation instead of using the money to make improvements. I suppose under this Bill that difficulty could scarcely occur, because this money cannot be put to any other purpose than that of assisting in road construction. But if you relieve the people along the line where you build one of these roads from road taxation, then there should be some arrangement by which the province would tax them for the purpose of forming a road fund, to build roads some where else. There has been a good deal said with reference to some definite plan or scheme being mentioned in the Bill. If you consider for a moment the varied climate of our extended country, you cannot have any uniform system that would apply to all the provinces, because our winter in some parts of the country affects the roads adversely. If you go into the far west and into British Columbia where they have a mild winter a different system would apply altogether. Then another thing is that the material out of which you have to build roads is of a different kind in different sections of the country. There are some places where road material is much more easily got than in other places. All these matters have to be considered in dealing with this question.

The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), has raised the question of provincial rights. I think there is very little danger of any sharp trouble arising on this point so long as we are giving them something. The difficulty under the administration the hon. gentleman supported, was that the government was always taking something away from the provinces. That was a very different proposition. I am not a lawyer, but I believe this question of provincial rights, is largely a growth of sentiment rather than a difficulty in law. Expediency must to a large extent decide these questions between the federal and provincial authorities. Now the Americans are strong on state rights. When the federal government in the United States proposed to appropriate large sums of money to lend to the state for the purpose of encouraging agriculture, they said in the Act by which they made the appropriation that nothing in this Act should interfere with the right of the state to deal with this question; and there was no difficulty. Now it seems to me there ought to be no difficulty in this country, because our system is more elastic than theirs. I do not fear any difficulty along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Pictou. It seems to be that it will be ultimately a matter of agreement largely between the provinces, and the federal authorities. I think the direction of the road, or the location of the road, will largely be decided by conference between the provinces and the federal authority, because you must of necessity consult the provinces in a matter in which they have to so large an extent the local control.

Now, I feel that it would not be an unwise thing for the federal government to build certain roads as distinctively federal roads, and maintain them as such, because the question of maintenance is as important as the question of construction, and perhaps more so. If a road is not properly maintained, then you might just as well not build it, because it will very soon become dilapidated and useless. That is the experience of every one. Now, I wish to say that so far as I am concerned the proposal of the government has my most hearty and warm support. It is something that will affect the future of this country as nothing else will do that has been proposed for a number of years. As has been so well said by hon. members on both sides of the House, if we make such large outlays in other directions affecting transportation, the burden of which has been largely thrown upon the agriculturalists throughout the country, and while he has to bear his share of other burdens in which he is also interested, the time has come to consider the advisability and wisdom of doing something to help the farmer, to get nearer to the door of the man who has worked so hard to solve the agricultural problems of this country. I can see no reason why this scheme should not be carried out successfully, and in such a manner as to result in general welfare to the country. I was much interested in reading the early history of the eastern New England States in reference to roads. Before the railway, there was a strife between different neighbourhoods to secure what was then known as the 'general travel' along those roads. The well-to-do people who rode in their carriages would choose the best roads, and the different farming communities vied with each other in constructing good roads so as to secure that travel; there was a sort of rivalry between them which resulted in better roads than would have otherwise been made. But when the railways came, they did away with all that. And, now, the era of automobiles is coming in, and is bringing that class of traffic back to the farmers' doors that has not been there before for a great many years, although it must be said that he is not very anxious sometimes to get it. But we must deal with all these questions as they arise, and they will have to be dealt with in this country. It is said that in the state of New York the outlay on roads will be largely repaid by the tax imposed on automobiles in that state. It seems to me that while this House has a right to deal with the matter, it will be a question to a considerable extent of co-operating with the provinces in carrying out the object of this Bill. I wish to say in conclusion that whatever may be the outcome, I hope and believe that great good will result from this legislation to the community in general.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think we are all agreed that the legislation which is now before the committee is per se good legislation, subject, however, to the limitations which were formulated in the amendment proposed by the right hon. leader of the opposition.

However, this amendment was lost, and we are now face to face with the legislation as introduced by the Minister of Railways and Canals. As I said a moment ago, every class in this country will readily admit that a good roads policy is a safe policy. I have always been of opinion, and this opinion is shared by many, that the provinces at the time of Confederation were not given their proper share of subsidies. They were given only limited powers and thereby limited resources. As the roads were more under their control than under the control of the federal authorities, the highway in the various provinces has not been what it should be. However, Sir, we must not forget that time flies, and that immediately after the old days were past, when that lonely trail was kept open by the settler, came the railway age which did away practically for at least forty years with the immediate necessity for an improved highway. People thought only of railways and of the settlement of the country through the railways. But a new era has dawned in this country, and not only in this country but on the whole of the continent. It is that of the good roads. My hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) has referred to the state of the roads in France and England. A comparison between the roads of the old country and the roads of the new continent cannot hold good, because the roads in France and England date as far back as the Roman conquest in some cases, and the climate on the other side contributes towards maintaining in their proper condition the highways of both these countries. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that there is nothing so glorious as a ride or drive on the highways of France or England, but, as I have just stated, it is impossible for Canada or even for the northern portion of the United States, to maintain roads in that condition on account of the climate. But we can imitate, even though it be at a distance, what has been done in the old country and by the richer states of the United States commonwealth. We have passed the age when railways were the exclusive necessity. We, of course, admit as a foregone conclusion that the whole country must be a network of railways, but our attention must also be turned towards the establishment and maintenance of a perfect system of highways. I do not know what has been done in the other provinces, but I can speak of what I have seen in Ontario, where a forward policy has been the aim of the government for the last twenty years. I have noticed, especially around Toronto, Hamilton and London, that they have almost reached perfection as regards highways. I do not know how it is in other sections or in other provinces, but the province of Ontario has had very good roads for the last twenty years. In the province of Quebec we have just inaugurated a good roads policy. The progressive administration of Sir Louis Gouin has just decided that $10,000,000 would be appropriated towards the opening and maintaining of good roads within the boundaries of the province. The municipalities are going to share in the construction and maintenance of the highways. There will be a consortium between the municipalities and the government of the province. Each will contribute its share. No later than last week the Minister of Agriculture was given new powers by legislation for the carrying out of that policy.

Mr. BRODER. I think the people only pay two per cent and then the government create a sinking fund.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, that is the basis of the arrangement. I do not share the view of my hon. friend from Dundas with reference to the establishment of a federal roads system in Canada. I believe that we are almost all agreed that the money to be voted by this parliament for good roads throughout Canada should be distributed in the way suggested this afternoon by both my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) and my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think the Minister of Railways should prepare a concrete plan which might be submitted to the different provinces and the moneys might then be handed to the provincial exchequers, and expended under the conditions imposed by the authority of this parliament and by the authority of the minister. I believe that under that system we could have shortly in Canada a splendid highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. My hon. friend from Dundas stated quite rightly a moment ago that the automobile had completely changed the conditions of, shall I say, existence—in America. I know that in the old country conditions have been changed completely since the appearance of the automobile. There the leisurely class of people travel more by automobile to-day than they do by railway. People go across the Atlantic, and take their automobile with them in order to see the country that they do not see well when they travel by rail. I do not wish to be provincial, but I can speak for my own province where I spend the summers. Even in the remote districts of Quebec, on the coast of Gaspe and at Murray Bay in the county of Charlevoix where they have no railway system, I have seen during the summer, hundreds of automobiles coming from the United States loaded with tourists, visiting our highly favoured, picturesque regions and spending money lavishly. Their visits have had a twofold result. First of all, the people have become a little more proud; they look after their gardens, their farms and keep their habitations more clean and tidy. They supply butter, cheese, fruits and other staples to the tourists and above all they are inclined to do a little more towards maintaining the roads than before. Above all the automobile has been a blessing in disguise in that we have now, in the remotest country districts, better hotel accommodation. Though the automobile is dreaded by many habitants because some horses take fright when they see it coming, it has nevertheless been a blessing in disguise.

The advent of the automobile has unquestionably been a great inducement towards the betterment of highways, and has given us better hotel accommodation. This is Sir, a progressive policy, and provided the money we grant is not spent to debauch the electorate, but in the public interest, and with safeguards thrown around its expenditure, I believe this legislation will be most beneficial to the inhabitants of Canada.

Mr. GOODEVE. I endorse the suggestion of the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) that this expenditure should be on trunk line roads, and I do so all the more readily, because of our experience in British Columbia. A few years ago, Mr. Taylor, Minister of Public Works for British Columbia, conceived the idea of setting aside a certain sum of money each session for the building of a trunk road from Burrard Inlet to the provincial boundary of Alberta. That proposal when first made was received not only by a large number of the members of the House, but by a large number of the people of the province, with very grave doubt, fearing, as they did, that a special trunk road of that nature was scarcely warranted by the then development stage of our province. However, only two or three sessions passed before Mr. Taylor was able to demonstrate the great benefit such a trunk line bestowed on the province. Mr. Taylor is now affectionately called by the people 'Good Roads Taylor,' and there is no more popular grant made in the legislature than the annual appropriation for the continuation of that provincial trunk road. To give an idea how such a trunk road advertises the province, I may mention that last winter I delivered a lecture in Toronto and having referred to this British Columbia provincial road, a number of gentlemen waited on me after the meeting; they were men of leisure and means, and they decided to so arrange their summer tour that they might motor over that scenic route in British Columbia. I feel strongly that if this grant of Dominion money is merely distributed throughout the provinces here and there, for municipal roads, you will not get the same concrete benefit you would if the expenditure were made on a distinctive trunk line road; a road that eventually would stretch from Halifax on the Atlantic to Burrard Inlet, on the Pacific. Were such a road constructed, the municipal roads would become feeders to it, with the result that they would be greatly improved and the whole Dominion would reap untold benefits. I was present at the Yukon Exposition in Seattle, and I attended there an illustrated lecture on good roads. One of the pictures thrown on the screen showed a team of horses with a wagon containing two or three bales of cotton, the wagon stuck in the mud, the fences broken, and everything dilapidated and dismal looking. Then, another picture showed the same place five years after the construction of a trunk road, and on this road was a wagon loaded with a ton and a half of baled cotton, drawn by a splendid team of horses, and with fine residences on each side of the road. The lecturer assured us that all this change had been brought about inside of five years by the good roads improvement commission of that district, and the illustration impressed itself very vividly on my mind. It is my opinion that the municipalities should continue to look after their own roads and that the Dominion grant should be devoted to a trunk line system of roads, such as I have referred to. The trunk road would be in the nature of a model road; it would be laid out with the idea of reaching from one specific point to another, exactly like a transcontinental line of railway, and the municipal roads would become feeders to it. I believe that is the correct principle upon which the Dominion grant should be expended. A splendid trunk road extending through the entire Dominion would be an incentive to the municipalities to put their roads in first class order; it would induce travel by tourists who would be free spenders; it would encourage the erection of first class tourist hotels at various places, and on the whole it would in every way benefit every part of the Dominion. I most heartily endorse that portion of the remarks of the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) in which he advocated this trunk line road.

Mr. GERMAN. I must express my absolute disapproval of the statement made by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) as well as by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) in regard to a general trunk line. The hon. member for Dundas stated that many years ago municipalities in the province of Ontario borrowed money from the government under the Municipal Loan Fund Act, and that in the settlement of that indebtedness things did not work out satisfactorily. I think they worked out with absolute satisfaction. Those municipalities which had borrowed money received certain sums from the government of the province, and that money went into permanent improvements such as the building of town halls or other public buildings.

Mr. BRODER. That was not done at all.

Mr. GERMAN. It was done in every district that I know anything about. It may not have been done in the district which the hon. gentleman comes from, because the people there may not have been as careful in the management of their affairs as they were in my section. The hon. gentleman talked of a main highway through the length of this country, as though it were as important as a new trunk line of railway, saying that the money which is voted by the Dominion parliament should be applied to the construction of a main trunk line of highway from east to west, and, as the hon. member for Kootenay said, feeders built leading to that. Let me tell my hon. friend that the good roads which the farmers of this country want are good roads leading from their farms to the railway stations in their own localities, and not good roads which lead to any trunk highway which runs from east to west, and which is built simply for the automobilist and the tourist. The farmers of this country want good roads; they are in favour of this Bill, and the Liberal party are in favour of it, because it was the Liberal party of the province of Ontario that first introduced the proposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GERMAN. Let me tell the hon. gentlemen who smile that the first good-roads legislation that was ever introduced in Canada was introduced by the government of Sir George Ross in the province of Ontario. That legislation was accepted by the succeeding government, of which the hon. Minister of Railways was a member. They improved on it, to some extent, I admit, because they increased the amount of the allowance to the municipalities. I want to emphasize that the money which is to be appropriated by this parliament for the construction of good roads must be devoted to the construction of good roads throughout the various municipalities in the Dominion—not to a main trunk line. When the government sees fit to appropriate money for that purpose, we will discuss that proposal when it comes. But this Bill is for the purpose of aiding the provinces in the construction of good roads under the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces and that is to aid the municipalities in building good roads for the use of the farmers generally in carrying their wheat and other products to the markets on the lines of the various railways, and not for the construction of a main trunk line from one end of this country to the other.

Mr. BRADBURY. I want to congratulate the government on having brought this Bill before the House. I believe the remarks made by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat are on the right line, so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned. The trunk road idea is a good one, but the roads through our different municipalities are of more importance to us at the present time. In my province we have laboured under great difficulties for many years from the fact that we have had very poor roads and very little money to make good ones. I have often wondered why the Dominion government did not take this matter up years ago. I know that the late government, or at least some of the ministers, were approached on different occasions, but they were afraid to bring the subject before the House; they said it was too great an undertaking. That was the answer that some of my friends from Manitoba got, and I want to congratulate the government to-day on having the courage to bring this measure before parliament. To my mind there is nothing that concerns the province of Manitoba more than the question of good roads. In my own county, which is nearly 150 miles square, we have been labouring under great difficulties. Indeed, throughout the whole province the question of making roads is a very difficult one, owing to the lack of money. The provincial government has come to our aid from time to time, but owing largely perhaps to the manner in which the province has been treated for many years by the Dominion government, the funds at their disposal have been insufficient to aid us to any great extent. The consequence has been that in the settled districts after a heavy shower of rain, it is almost impossible for a loaded wagon to pass along the roads. Therefore, the proposed Bill is a blessing to the province from which I come, and I trust that there will be a well-advised scheme for giving effect to it. Some hon. members spoke of the money being handed over to the different municipalities. If I read the Bill correctly, there is no such intention. I understand that the money will be expended under a well-devised scheme between this government and the provincial governments. In that way I believe we shall obtain value for every dollar of this money. While on my feet I want to say a word about a federal road. There are some districts in Canada where I believe a distinct federal road would be justified, and I have one in my mind's eye at the present time. At Stony Mountain, about twelve miles from the city of Winnipeg, we have a large penitentiary, and the road between that point and Winnipeg is almost impassable. There is a daily train service, but we ought to have a federal state road between the penitentiary and the city of Winnipeg. We have a mountain of stone, and the government could construct the road cheaply by using the prison labour.

I hope the government will use that prison labour to construct between Winnipeg and Stony Mountain a first class state highway. The distance is about 12 miles. This would be in the interests of the whole community, and the employment of prison labour in the construction of roads throughout this country is highly desirable. The section of road I have mentioned would afford a very valuable demonstration as to the practicability of this system. The material is at hand and the road could be built as a distinctive state road. I hope that a large portion of the roads for which money is provided in this Bill will be built in the different municipalities throughout the country, especially in the province of Manitoba. For instance, a large amount of money has been spent on the road between Winnipeg and Selkirk during the last 30 or 40 years by the different municipalities, assisted by the provincial government, but it is still a very indifferent road, and I trust it will be one of the roads to receive attention. The idea of a trunk line from coast to coast is an admirable one and when the country feels it can afford the luxury of a road of that kind I will endorse the proposal as quickly as any man in the House, but at present I hope the money that is being voted will be spent to aid the farmers in getting their produce to the markets and railway stations, and the only way to do that is to spend it in the different municipalities. I want to congratulate the government on their courage in introducing this legislation, and I hope that the appropriation that is made will be a liberal one.

Mr. NESBITT. I am in favour of good roads, because naturally I like to drive on them. The people of Oxford county have built many first-class macadam roads under what they call the county roads system, assisted by the province. My support of this measure would depend entirely on what is proposed. One section of the Bill provides that the assistance 'shall be given upon such terms and subject to such conditions.' Does the minister mean that he will keep control of the money granted to the provinces to a certain extent, after it is granted? That, I think, makes a material difference. If, as has been stated by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways, the money is intended to be granted on the principle laid down by my right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), then we will have no quarrel with it. As to the construction of a trunk road, if the government intend to keep some control of the construction of roads by the various provinces they could acquire a trunk road without building it themselves by seeing that the various provinces constructed roads which would connect so as to make a trunk road from province to province. I quite agree that what the farmers principally need is good roads leading to their nearest markets.

As to the benefit to the community from having a trunk road with automobiles running along it, the farmers in my sections of the country are not so keen on having automobiles on their roads; in fact. they are rather opposed to them. The ladies, who after all, should govern, are very much opposed to them, and say they cannot go out without having their horses frightened. Automobiles do a great deal of harm to macadam roads, and I wonder the provinces have not long since taxed automobiles to help construct roads. While I am not opposed to automobiles, as I like to ride in them myself on occasions, at the same time they sweep up an enormous quantity of dust, and farmers with fields adjacent to roads suffer loss from the dust raised by automobiles. I would like the Minister of Railways to consider seriously the amendment moved on the second reading by the leader of the opposition, with reference to giving the money only in the form of subsidies to the provinces. The movement is an excellent one that should receive commendation if properly carried out, but I think it dangerous to build trunk lines, and absolutely unnecessary if the government retain the right to control the building of roads. The money should be given to the provinces on the distinct understanding that it will be given to the municipalities, and in Ontario I think it should be given to the county councils.

Mr. COCHRANE. What would my hon. friend do in the case of counties that have already constructed good roads and taxed their people for them under the system spoken of by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), or with reference to the unorganized sections of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec ?

Mr. NESBITT. To equalize them ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes.

Mr. NESBITT. I think the moneys could be easily expended in maintaining the roads. The provincial grants made in Ontario lack provision, which is very necessary, for the maintenance of the roads after their construction.

I know that in our section of country—and we have, I suppose, as many miles of road as any other county in the province—the provincial government assisted the county in building roads. But the great difficulty is that the roads are not maintained in any such condition as they should be. Now, where, it seems to me, our section could well be assisted by the Dominion, would be in seeing to it that the province made a condition that the road should be properly maintained according to a certain standard as well as being built to a standard. I may be wrong, but that would be my idea of the way to assist those who have already built roads. There is no county in Ontario, so far as I know, that has built anything approaching the number of roads it required. That is one of the troubles in the sections of country that are building these roads—the jealousy that arises on the part of those sections which have not good roads. I do not wish to take up time, but I would urge my hon. friend the Minister of Railways to drop that portion of his Bill that, apparently, goes into the building of federal trunk roads.

Mr. LENNOX. We haven't come to that yet.

Mr. NESBITT. I know that; but, in the meantime, I hope the hon. gentleman will think it over and be willing to drop that clause, so that the subsidies may go to the provinces to be spent under the control, after all, of the Dominion.

Mr. STEELE. The Bill now before us is, I am sure, one of the most important that the government will bring forward this session. Especially is it important on account of the direct benefit it is going to bring to a very large proportion of the people of this country. It is a Bill which affects the interests of all classes. We often speak as though good roads affected only the farmers, but they affect far more than the farmers. Good roads affect the people of every village, town and city. They affect the welfare of the workingman and business man as well as that of the farmer. Good roads will tend to lessen the cost of living in our urban centres. Some years ago, when many of our towns had a population of 4,000 or 5,000, the people could be supplied with farm produce by the farmers living within a radius of five or six miles. But many of these towns, especially in the province of Ontario, have grown so that they have a population of ten to fifteen thousand. The result is that the farmer living within a reasonable radius are unable to supply all the produce which is required. Unless a farmer lives within seven or eight miles of the centre, he finds it too expensive to market his produce in that center by driving over a road which is not in good condition. The result is that the middleman is coming in. Produce is being brought to the former by train, and the workingman in these centres is being compelled to buy the farmer's produce not from the farmer direct, but from the middleman with the middleman's profit added. The greater portion of the municipal taxation of the present day is levied for the purpose of building and maintaining roads. So much is this the case, that we find the farmers of Ontario labouring under a heavy burden of taxes. We may not say so much about the burden of the farmers of Ontario as some of our western friends say about the burdens of the western farmers, but none the less it is a fact that municipal taxation in Ontario to-day is becoming very heavy. Anything which will assist in lessening that taxation, anything that will alleviate to some extent the burdens of the farmers in that regard will be received with a great deal of favour by them. I have just said that the greater part of the taxation in municipalities to-day is raised for the purpose of building roads. Yet, notwithstanding that, we find that the municipalities are often unable to raise sufficient to construct permanent roads. The result is that the roads throughout our province generally, are not improving at anything like the rate they should improve with the vast amount of money that is spent annually upon them. The cost of labour is increasing and we find to-day, notwithstanding the generous aid given by the Ontario government to the municipalities of that province, that the taxation levied upon the farmer is just as great or greater than it was when the road system of Ontario was inaugurated. So while the assistance given has in a measure relieved the burden, it has not reduced the cost which is levied upon the farmer. This is, therefore, an opportune time for the Dominion government to come to the aid of the agricultural population in this way and assist them in maintaining the roads that they require.

I am not in sympathy at all with those who talk of building trunk lines. Every municipality to-day is labouring and wrestling with the problem of how to build and maintain their roads without raising the taxation on their farms to too great a degree. That is a need which is urgent not only in one section of the country, but, I believe, in all sections. And it seems to me that it becomes the duty of the government first to relieve the urgent needs of the farmer. Therefore, the first duty of the government in granting aid to roads, I think, is to give aid in such a way as will relieve the municipality of at least a portion of the cost of constructing and maintaining roads. Trunk roads may be all right after a few years, but the time has not yet come when the people are demanding that. What benefit would a trunk road be to the great mass of the farmers of any of our provinces? It might assist those living along that road; but I doubt very much, especilly if a trunk road is to be used solely by the automobiles, that the farmers living along that road will receive it with favour, for we find that those living adjacent to roads most travelled by automobiles say that their crops are being injured by the dust caused by the traffic. In addition to those living along the road, a trunk road might aid those living within ten or twelve miles of it. But we know that farmers living beyond that radius will benefit little or none. Farmers are not travelling fifteen, twenty or thirty miles to market as they did years ago. Every farmer has a market town within ten or twelve miles of his farm; and the road he wants improved is the road he is using from his farm to the market town.

I am sure that while we appreciate the value of the tourist travel in Canada, and while there are many counties in every province that are attractive to the tourist, I hardly think the country is at present prepared to enter upon the task of building roads for the purpose of encouraging tourists to visit Canada. I think that our most pressing need at present is to build roads for the benefit of the farmers. I hope that whatever aid is granted will be expended in such a manner as to benefit the townships and counties, to aid the farmer who is anxious to have good roads, and who is willing to pay generously to build and maintain them. At the same time, we know that he needs assistance, not only from the provincial governments but from the Dominion government, and for that reason I am in favour of this Bill.

Mr. ELLIOT. The question which seems to engage the attention of members on both sides of the House is how best to apply this money so as to get the most benefit out of it for the Canadian people. I had the pleasure the other day of attending the Good Roads Convention in this city; a majority of the representatives were from the province of Ontario. A great many of the delegates expressed their views with regard to good roads, and it was the unanimous opinion of the convention that this money should not be expended in building trunk lines throughout the province, or throughout the Dominion. When that deputation appeared in this Chamber before the Prime Minister and some other members of the Cabinet, they were addressed by five or six persons, the majority of whom represented the cities, the manufacturers and the motormen of Canada. The president of the Motormen's Association, in the course of his remarks, said that our roads were generally in a deplorable condition, that they were greatly in need of improvement, and he also favoured the system of building trunk lines throughout the country The argument of the representative of the Manufacturers' Association was along the same line. The only sound views, in my estimation, were given in the address of the president of the Good Roads Association. He expressed his confidence that the government would expend this money in road building so as to make it of general benefit to the country districts.

Some hon. members to-night have argued in favour of a system of trunk lines throughout the country. I listened with much pleasure to the remarks of the hon. member from Dundas (Mr. Broder) in explaining the system of trunk lines in other countries. He told us that in the state of New York they had about 3,000 miles of trunk roads, and he argued that if we are going to build a system of trunk lines the federal government should construct them solely out of the federal chest, the same as they are doing in the United States. In New York state they have 7,000 miles of country roads and 2,700 miles of state roads constructed and maintained entirely by the state. The state contributes fifty per cent to the cost of the county roads, the county contributes thirty-five per cent, and the township only fifteen per cent. No doubt hon. gentlemen are aware that a few years ago a Highways Improvement Act was passed by the Ontario legislature, setting aside $1,000,000 for the improvement of highways in that province. There are at the present time 17 counties in the province that are building roads according to the regulations of the Public Works Department, and are participating in that grant. When they build roads according to the regulations they receive from the provincial government one-third of the cost, and the municipalities, or the townships through which the road passes, contribute the other two-thirds; whereas, in New York state the townships contribute only fifteen per cent. In New York state they have no less than 70,000 miles of township roads. The state contributes thirty-five per cent to the cost of their construction, whereas, in the Dominion, the farmers contribute the full cost of the township roads.

Now, let me give the experience of the county of Middlesex. It has been suggested that the trunk system would be entirely satisfactory to the people. We have in the county of Middlesex at present about 110 miles of road set apart by a county by-law. We are building sections of that road yearly, according to the regulations of the Public Works Department. The work is under the supervision of a competent engineer, Mr. Talbot, of the city of London. He attended the good roads convention in Ottawa a few days ago and gave his views on the subject. He suggested that the system followed in building roads in the county of Middlesex was not satisfactory to the people. In laying down a system of road building through different counties, in order to make a connecting link between counties, certain roads have to be set apart, and it sometimes happens that these roads are not the ones most travelled by the people, and of course thepeople in the other parts of the country object to paying for roads that they do not use. Then, again it is sometimes necessary, in order to make the connecting link, to set apart too great a mileage of road according to the appropriation at the disposal of the townships. Therefore, in expending this money, we must arrive at some basis. In some counties the rate is based on the assessed value of the property; in my own township, the township of West William, our appropriation is based on the assessed value of our property, amounting to about $1,328. We have nine miles of road set apart under a county by-law. If we go to work to build a standard road according to the regulations of the Public Works Department, we have only $1,328 to expend each year, and we are not able to build half a mile of road per year. At this rate it will be over twenty years before that nine miles of road is built. The latter half of the road will be practically worn out and will be in a deplorable condition before the other half is built. Before we complete the road the first half will be worn out. The cost of these roads in Middlesex county is too great, because we are not in a position to get the crushed stone that is needed.

Last season there were two miles of road built near the town of Park Hill and the crushed stone came from the St. Mary's quarries. Counting the cost of the stone, hauling, laying the stone on the road, rolling, watering, spreading, and everything in connection with this road, it cost the township of McGillivray, which was building this road, $10 per cord. It cost $6,700 for the two miles of road which they built, or $3,350 per mile. By building a road of that kind according to the regulations, with an appropriation of $1,328 per mile, we cannot hope in years to come to have in our township nine miles of what will be a standard road. Then again it has been argued that we could go on and build this road, raise the money and distribute it over a certain number of years. Suppose we build this road, taking into account its situation, cutting the grades as they ought to be and building a standard road it would cost not less than around $5,000 per mile. We have nine miles of it and that would mean $45,000. As I said before, this road runs in such a way across the township that part of it is the least travelled road that we have there and it would cost $45,000 to construct it up to the standard which I have mentioned. If we extended the payment over a period of twenty years it would mean that we would have to take from the citizens of our township over $2,000 per year in increased taxation together with interest and the people in the township object to building that road and going to that expense especially when so few people are travelling on a considerable portion of it. If there was some other method of expending this money I think it would be more satisfactory to the people. For instance, if we were allowed, with the gravel that we have in our township, to gravel this road instead of constructing a macadamized road, we could gravel it in three years. Then we could go over it again, regravel it and we would have a first-class gravel road which would give us a road as we required and it would not mean the imposition of a high rate of taxation on the farmers of that locality, or if the local and Dominion government will grant dollar for dollar with the sum set apart by each township for road building, said moneys to be spent by the township councils it would be satisfactory to my people.

We have heard it stated in the corridors and also in the House that our roads, instead of improving, are going back. I do not agree with that statement. When we consider how Canada has advanced and progressed in the last few years we cannot help but think of the time when our fathers and our forefathers moved into this and other provinces of this Dominion. When the county of Middlesex was first settled the older men came in there with their families, settled on their farms, lived in log houses, cleared their land, fenced it, drained it and they also, in the meantime, built roads. When taxes first came into force they paid their taxes and they or their successors have continued to pay their taxes ever since. They have built these roads, they have improved them, they have made them what they are at the present time, and they would rather continue as they have been doing, than to saddle their county with an enormous debt in order to have standard roads. Is it fair that these people should have to go into a system of road making which would increase their taxes year by year? However, I am glad that this government have shown a willingness to assist the farmers of Canada in this matter and I assure them that my people will greatly appreciate their efforts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have anything further to say. The question to be settled is how this money is to be expended. I am in favour of this Bill. I have every confidence in the Minister of Railways when he has laid this Bill before the House and I am going to take much pleasure in supporting the Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few general observations regarding the Bill which is now before the committee. I suppose it is unnecessary for me to say anything as to the value of good roads, for I imagine that we will all be in unison upon this question. There is no doubt that highways have been the greatest element in the civilization of countries. Nothing can promote commerce to a greater degree than good highways, and, perhaps better still, nothing tends to give to a country greater social and national contentment than a good system of highways. The intrusion, however, of the federal parliament into a public service which has heretofore been cared for altogether by the provinces is, as has been stated, a new departure and it raises problems, many of which, I think, will be found by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) and the government, difficult to solve. However, I am sure that hon. gentlemen in this House will agree that if any workable method can be devised of assisting the provinces in securing good or better highways than they have now, the measure before the House will meet with commendation from everybody in it and from the country generally. Great care should be exercised in working out any system, and I think that on the occasion of the introduction of this Bill by the Minister of Railways he spoke as one who felt that it was a very difficult task to prepare a suitable Bill. If I may make a suggestion—not that I expect it to be carried out—I would say that the government might very well have taken the months which will intervene between the closing of this session and the opening of next session and devoted the time to the study of this question and to conferences with the several provinces, so that at the next session they would have been able to have presented to parliament a Bill containing a definite scheme. Had this been done it would have been more satisfactory to parliament and to the country generally. Of course, it was to be expected of the government that they would, at the earliest possible moment, implement the pledge which they made to the country during the recent campaign, namely, to grant financial aid to the provinces towards highway improvement. But I am sure that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House and the country generally would have favourably considered a statement from the government to the effect that before introducing this legislation they desired time to consider the whole subject. It would have been very much in the interest of parliament and the country and possibly to the betterment of our highways, had the government devoted a little more time to the study of the question with its many problems and presented their decision at the next session of parliament. I think I can venture the statement that it is highly improbable that any work can be done upon the highways of any province during the year 1912. After the closing of parliament, conferences must take place with the several provinces, and when these conferences commence many problems will arise which none of us perhaps foresee to-night. The discussion this evening upon this Bill discloses the fact that hon. gentlemen entertain many different views.

I therefore, believe it will be impossible for the provinces and the federal government to reach a working agreement and to form an organization which will carry out any scheme of expenditure ultimately agreed upon between the Dominion Government and the several provinces. I venture the opinion that there can be no expenditure of moneys by the federal government for the year 1912, which will go to the provincial governments. If there is, I do feel it will not be profitably expended for the reason that no well-thought out scheme will be possible of attainment in such a short time. While the expenditure of federal moneys upon the public highways is a new thing in this country, I do not think for my part that it will be objectionable. The financial strength of the several provinces is limited indeed and I think before many years the federal government will find that they must, for different reasons, augment the provincial subsidies. In the United States this matter has been frequently discussed. In the early days of the history of the United States, that country did embark in the building of trunk lines, notably one known as the Cumberland Road, starting from the headwaters of the Potomac River in Maryland, going through Pennsylvania and West Virginia to Ohio, and that road was completed in 1805. The federal government constructed ten or twelve other roads, but no great expenditure was made and after the Civil War that policy ended. These roads were constructed largely for military purposes, and while many requests have been made of recent years upon the United States federal government for expenditure on highways, so far nothing has been done. They have however a Good Roads Bureau in Washington which is doing excellent service. I would like to read from an article by a magazine writer, upon improved highways, the following short extract concerning the good roads work done by the United States Government.

Foremost of these outside agencies is the United States office of public roads organized in 1893 with an appropriation of $14,000, with offices in two attic rooms. This bureau has increased in usefulness until now it occupies a four story building of its own which includes within its walls, physical, chemical, petrographic and photographic laboratories and a machine shop, and has at its disposal an appropriation of $116,000. A staff of twenty-four engineers and superintendents of road construction are employed to teach the art of road building to any community that will take the trouble to ask for their services and provide the material and labour. A favourite feature of the bureau is the object lesson road project. This consists in assigning an engineer to supervise the construction of a short section of road to demonstrate the proper methods aand instruct local builders. Up to July 1st, 1909, 264 object lesson roads had been built in thirty-five states, demonstrating the proper methods of using crushed stone, sand, clay, shell, earth, bituminous materials and brick. Besides this, the engineers of the bureau give special advice, deliver technical lectures, introduce model systems of construction, maintenance and administration in counties and study and report on practical methods for a series of years.

That is as far as the United States have gone in the way of assisting public highways, although demands have been made for direct contribution to the several states as is contemplated by this measure. However, I believe that public opinion is travelling very rapidly in the United States at present upon the question of improved highways, and that the federal government will ultimately come to the aid of the states possibly in the manner contemplated by the Bill now before the committee. In other countries of the world in which the federal system does not prevail direct expenditures of moneys are made for the improvement of highways by the government. As has been stated by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) we find an illustration of this in France, which spends seven million dollars annually upon its highways. There are four systems of roads in France; the national roads which are built and maintained by the state; the military roads, which are maintained by the state; the departmental roads which would correspond to the county roads in this country, and which are maintained by the state and by the department themselves, and the communal roads, which correspond to the ordinary highways in this country, and which are maintained by the people. In England and Wales fifteen million dollars are spent annually upon highways, and, according to the magazine writer from whom I quoted a moment ago, one hundred and sixty million dollars annually are expended by fourteen nations of Europe upon their highways. Now, while the House will cordially support this measure and will give to the government every assistance to extend to the country the benefits of this measure, still in this departure of financial aid to the provinces for highway improvements we should exercise caution. Personally, I regret very much that the government have seen fit to deal with the Bill this year. I would never, for my part, have censured them for not presenting to parliament such a measure at this session. In fact I will go as far as to say that they have hardly given us a measure at all because the Bill before the House is hardly worthy of the name of a Bill. I approve of the preamble and that is probably the best part of it. But I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite must agree with me that the Bill is very indefinite, that it discloses no plan and no matured scheme and that everything indicates that the government have so far, given little, if any attention to the principle involved in the Bill. I do not criticise the government for that. I recognize the fact that since their advent to power, they collectively and individually have been very busy, but I think they should realize that in embarking upon a policy of Federal expenditure in connection with roads in this country, they are adopting a policy which is new to Canada, which involves many important questions, and I think they might have well asked parliament and the country to give them a few months to enable them further to study the measure before presenting it to this House.

Now, let me point out some of the matters which should be considered in connection with this Bill. Section 3 says that the Governor in Council may grant money in any year to any province. That is hardly satisfactory legislation. It breaks every canon of legislation with regard to the expenditure of moneys. It is not the practice to give legislative powers to the Governor in Council in matters of this kind. Then I think we should know approximately what sum of money the government propose devoting to roads in the various provinces. It must be a very substantial sum or it will be of no use. It is important also to know how many years this expenditure will continue—whether it will be perpetuity or for a fixed number of years. I understand that the government of Nova Scotia propose to expend money on capital account for road improvement in the very near future; and if they knew definitely what sum of money they would get from this government, and over what period it would continue, I am sure that it would affect their policy materially. There are many other questions which it is important to consider in connection with the expenditure of money for the improvement of our highways. We should have some information as to the total mileage of the roads in the several provinces. There should be some classification of these roads. There should be some standardization of the work that is to be performed. There will be the question of maintenance, which is far more important than construction and involves more difficulties. I venture to think that it will require many months to develop a method of expenditure which will be acceptable to the government itself, to parliament, and to the country; it will take a long time to reach an agreement with the several provinces; and I am sure that if the government appealed even to their own supporters in parliament, they would find many varieties of opinion as to the form this expenditure should take. I trust, however, that if the government decide to proceed with the expenditure this season, which I very much doubt, they will be able to develop a policy and a system of expenditure which will meet with the concurrence of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. I trust that they will not pay very much attention to the suggestion of a trunk line from coast to coast. We may possibly reach such a thing some day, but in view of the present condition of the ordinary highways of the country, I think I can say with considerable confidence that the suggestion of a federal road from coast to coast would not meet with very much favour. There is this to be remembered, however, that as our highways in the several provinces are improved by a better system of construction, reconstruction and maintenance, gradually the scheme of a national highway from coast to coast will develop itself. Neither do I favour the idea of giving this money to any municipality, for the reason that I think experience teaches that the expenditure would not be made by any municipality in such a way as to secure permanent results. If the money proposed to be granted under this measure were given to the municipalities, I believe that it would not be expended in accordance with any system. The provincial governments would be better equipped to make the expenditure, and they can better than any municipality rise above local considerations.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not given this matter very great consideration, but of all the municipal expenditures throughout the country nothing pleased me more than an expenditure for providing good roads. I am sure that the people are coming more and more every year to appreciate good roads.

The objection to municipal taxation for the improvement of roads which we heard in bygone days is gradually being removed. The advantages of good roads in country places is so much appreciated by the ordinary public that I do not think any objection can be found in Canada against the measure proposed by the government. I appreciate the efforts the government are making on behalf of the people to provide a good roads system. I want to endorse their action, to give it my sanction, and to say that in the part of the country which I represent I believe their action will be heartily endorsed. Nothing so strikes our attention in the old land as the admirable roads, founded I suppose on a basis that was laid by the Romans in the olden times. These roads are repaired yearly, practically they are never allowed to get out of repair, and so the cost of repair is light, while the people always have good roads. It may be said that this measure is immature, but the government are making a beginning, people will begin to talk about good roads as they are proposed to be developed by the Dominion government, or through the provincial governments, or municipalities, whatever system may be adopted, and in that way the government will gradually get a great deal of information that will assist them in maturing their scheme. I, therefore, think they were wise in bringing down this measure at this early date. Very much cannot be done this year, but a start has been made, and I look forward in the near future to a great improvement in the scheme which is as yet only in its infancy. I have never known any measure to receive such cordial support in this House. There may be differences of opinion as to the time and methods of carrying out this proposal, but on the principle of improving the highways of the country I believe both sides of the House are unanimous in heartily supporting the Bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This question affects almost every one in Canada. It must be satisfactory to the government to realize the approval that has been manifested throughout the country, and by those who have spoken on this question to-night. Since the most primitive times the highway has been of the most vital importance to every one. The foot-passenger in years gone by considered that when he was on the King's highway he was safe, and as time went on he was by statue compelled to go out and help to construct a highway that would meet the requirements of the country. We have reached the time when it is necessary not only for the provincial governments to do something towards building and maintaining the highways, but for the federal government to relieve the burdens of the people in this respect. It has been said to-night that the civilization of a people can be judged from the standard of their highways. This is quite possible. The hon. member for Rouville said that we have passed the railway age, and must now devote our attention to building better highways. It struck me at the time what a welcome such a system as this would have received from the people of 80 to 100 years ago, the system that has been advocated by several speakers, that is a provincial or federal highway, east and west from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Happily we are living in an age of progress, and I believe the day has passed when any such system as that is required in this country. The roads radiating from the different market centres throughout Canada are the roads that ought to receive the greatest attention. I believe the statements made here to-night to that effect are an echo of articles that have been appearing in the public press for some time past and that we may rest assured that those articles have been inspired by those who desire the construction of a great continuous highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific for a specific purpose. I do not believe that such a system would meet the requirements of the people to the same extent as roads radiating out from these different points. If that were the intention of the government in this Bill I would be opposed to it. If such a system of roads as that were to be constructed the government ought to buy a right of way and build a road of that kind because it certainly would be monopolized for three or four months of the year by the automobilists to the exclusion of those using horse vehicles. If such a system of highways were built it should be built apart from our present highways, it should be built on a right-of-way acquired for the purpose; where you could turn the automobiles loose and let them run as fast as they like, where they would not interfere with other people. I believe that such a road for the use of automobiles would have to be of different construction from any road yet built in the rural districts of Canada. The very best macadam-roads in our country have been absolutely ruined in three or four years by automobile traffic. On a dusty summer day an automobile travelling at the rate of forty or fifty miles an hour raises a cloud of dust that settles anywhere between twenty and forty rods of that road. The unfortunate people who live within a few rods of a highway are made very uncomfortable through having to keep their windows closed to keep out the dust. For that reason I contend that if such a system is intended it should be a road constructed of material that would not be drawn up by the suction of the tires of an automobile and sent broadcast over the country.

Now, I desire to say a word about the tourists. We certainly welcome the tourists to our country; we are glad to see them come here. And, as a rule they are people who have time on their hands and are not necessarily as much hurried as those who have business pressing upon them. You notice how the automobile is becoming very fashionable during the past few years. But the rage at present seems to be not to travel over our rural roads, but to travel through the air. We do not know how long it will be before these tourists will not require our roads at all, and I do not know but that we ought to take that into consideration. Another feature of this road situation is this, that for four or five months in the year it does not matter what the nature of that road is. We have a coating over our roads now, and have had for months, which makes it not very material whether those roads are constructed of macadam, asphalt, clay or gravel. For about two or three months in each year it is important that we should have good roads, but for the balance of the season it is not of such great importance.

I believe the government are to be commended for endeavouring to relieve the pressure resting upon the people of this country for the building and maintaining of roads. I believe that a great deal of money has been wasted, and worse than wasted, through the manner in which it has been expended on our highways. If, through the influence of the government a more scientific mode of road construction can be adopted, a great deal will have been accomplished. But it is in the maintenance of the roads that the greatest work can be done. I believe our municipal councils, many of them, would do a great deal better if they would expend double the money they do in maintaining and looking after the roads. I believe also that the narrow-tyred wagons hauling heavy loads over our roads do more to spoil those roads than anything else. If the government would encourage the use of wide tyres on wagons—I suppose that is outside the scope of the federal government, but perhaps something could be done—a great step towards the better maintenance of our roads would be taken. These narrow tyres cut up the roads, let the water into them, and so the frost gets in two or three feet deep where there is an upheaval, and consequently the roads are thrown out of balance.

It is argued here that the government is too hasty, that there are bound to be delays before anything can be done. But is it not therefore, all the more important to pass this Bill, so that the initial stages of this movement may be accomplished? Then, when the Dominion and provincial government authorities get together they will find out what difficulties there are and how they are to be overcome. But I do not think any difficulty will arise that cannot be overcome. All the details will have to be worked out; and then it will come before the House and it will be time enough to deal with the question. I am heartily in favour of the grants to be made. I do not know that it is necessary for us to know at this stage, just how much is to be spent or how many miles of road is to be constructed. That will all come out in good time. The improvement of rural highways is something that needs encouragement. At the same time, I must express my strongest disapproval of the views that have been expressed by a number of members to-night with regard to trunk roads. I think the day has long passed, with our present network of railways, when anything of that kind is required.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm) (Translation). Mr. Chairman, representing as I do a thoroughly agricultural constituency, it is in order that I should, on behalf of the people who have sent me here, refer briefly to the bill now before the House.

I have carefully gone through the provisions of this Bill and I certainly cannot approve of it, for several considerations. In the first place it is not definite enough. After reading it through I am not in a position to give in connection with it an intelligent vote, not having been able to ascertain the manner in which the moneys voted by the House will be applied.

The preamble states that it is desirable to improve and extend the existing highways. Why not state which existing highways it is the intention of the Government to improve? Then we might be in a better position to vote in regard to it.

Mention is made also of opening great trunk roads, of assisting in the building of highways which it is proposed to build. Why not state what highways are meant? Why not locate them, why not state, for instance, in what provinces it is intended to build them? No, there is vagueness and indefiniteness about it all. Nobody knows anything as to the government's intentions. Well, whenever I am called upon to cast my vote, I like to know what it is I am voting for. When I agree to an expenditure of public funds, I like to be posted as to the use it will be put to, and not leave matters to be dealt with entirely at the sweet will of the minister and the government. Even the quota to be granted to the various provinces it not mentioned, neither is it stated in what provinces it is proposed to build those great highways. The minister will decide everything by himself. Well, to say the least, that is not of a nature to satisfy my constituents.

The government is desirous of making a new departure. This is the first time, we hear it said on both sides, that the Dominion government goes in for road-making in the various provinces. If the hon. minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) were in his seat, just now, I would enquire from him whether for such an undertaking a referendum is not in order?

We have had elections in 1908 and in 1911, and never has the question been raised before the electorate, at any rate before the electors in my constituency, never have they been notified that Parliament would ask for an appropriation with the object of carrying out work which properly belongs to the provinces. That is why I am in favour of a referendum, of an appeal to the electorate. There is no more talk of referendum nowadays. How things must have changed in the meantime!

Which of the two parties was the first to think of improving our roads? The former government, for it was due to them that further subsidies, amounting to millions of dollars, were granted to the provinces, whereby the latter were enabled to adopt a policy towards the building of better roads and the improvement of those already in existence. It was owing to those subsidies, granted by this Parliament, at the request of the former government, to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and to the other provinces as well, that those provinces were in a position to help considerably and to a far greater extent than heretofore, in the improvement of roads and highways. For instance, the government of Sir Lomer Gouin, at Quebec, has quite recently appropriated millions towards the improvement of roads in the province. Now, how comes it that the Dominion government is meddling with the work entrusted to the care of the provincial governments, endeavouring to take the latter's place and undertaking to build roads, though refusing to state where it is intended to build them.

Reference is made to trunk roads, to the improvement of highways for automobiling. I am fearful of these new schemes. I fear there are trusts at work behind them. If the object was a good one, and one of which they were proud, the actual grounds underlying that new policy would be stated, the House would be apprised of them and enlightened as to the existing roads which it is the intention to improve and those which it is intended to build.

It is the intention to build great national highways, so is it stated in general terms, without defining or furnishing any particulars. I shall certainly withhold my support from any proposal of such an indefinite character.

New highways will be opened, it is stated, existing roads will be improved. In the county of Montcalm, there are no millionaires touring in their automobiles. There are farmers, tradesmen and merchants, and automobiles are not considered a necessity; we are content with driving about in the ordinary way.

There is no touring, the roads do not allow it. To my mind, existing roads should be improved before thinking of building those great national highways. What is needed is roads leading to school houses, flour mills, saw mills, agricultural fairs, and other meetings, to church, to ploughing matches, etc. Those are the roads which should be improved in the first place.

At the opening of parliament I was glad to read in the speech from the Throne that the government intended to extend further protection to agricultural interests. But I am altogether opposed to the building of those great trunk roads which are to run from the Atlantic to the Pacific, at any rate not until local roads have been improved in the interest of the country people.

The hon. minister will alone have the right to say where highways are to be built, in what provinces the money is to be spent. I for one am of opinion that if the government is desirous of improving the roads, it should do so in accordance with the policy laid down by the former government, that is br granting a subsidy to each province. For it is a known fact that the men who are entrusted with the management of provincial affairs are better acquainted than is the minister with the needs of each municipality and of each county. I shall say further: before building those great highways, it would be of greater importance, to my mind, to improve existing roads by improving the grades, the hills which are to be found throughout the province, widening and straightening the roads, having them provided with proper ditches, having them lighted at night, and replacing the old wood bridges, which are washed away every spring and nearly every autumn, by iron structures.

Let public funds be applied to the improvement of our county roads, by affording to the farmers greater facilities to reach, for instance, their county town, when the court is sitting, or the registry office, or else when they are drawing milk to the creamery or cheese factory; those are the roads which the government should improve.

Automobiles are mentioned. Those vehicles are nice to look at, they are fine for speeding, but at times the occupants are apt to break their necks. The automobile is suitable for a certain class of people: people whose business is rushing require an automobile; but the farmer can make a better use of time repairing his fences and buildings and buying more land, than touring in automobiles.

Automobiles are great speeders, but it often happens that thieves take advantage of them. As Crown prosecutor, I have some experience in this connection. Farms are raided by automobilists at night, and it is often very difficult to get hold of them.

Automobiles are modern inventions, and worthy of admiration; but I can assure you that they cost an awful lot for maintenance, and more than one young spendthrift may find himself before long under the necessity of returning it to those from who he bought it. That craze has even got hold of our young country people. Farmers' boys occasionally apply to the "old gentleman" for the gift of an automobile. Rubber tires are no longer the thing; it must be an auto.

Well, that is an incentive to extravagance and most of the time has a demoralizing effect. People go in debt to keep up with the times; they have an auto waiting at the door, and sometimes creditors too. Therefore I say: let us have roads that enable the farmer to reach the market, the court house, &c.; that is all right. I realize that the farming community have undergone great hardships in the past, and it is only right that they should now have some reward. Country roads during dark nights should be lighted. That would be of greater usefulness than highways for autos.

Again I say that it is an encroachment on the rights of provincial governments. The representatives of constituencies, mayors, councillors, aldermen in the various municipalities, are in a better position than the Minister of Railways to know in what manner and in what localities, in connection with what roads, such improvements should be carried out.

Since the government is in a giving mood, and I rejoice at it, let us grant a subsidy to each province, to be expended as they think best, as was done by the former government. But patronage is a great thing; the minister alone will decide that such a province should be granted so much, while another province will go without it perhaps. The minister alone will decide; in the constituencies represented by friends of the government, lots of money will be spent, while in my county nothing will be spent, because I am a Liberal. I know how it works from experience; an amount had been voted for my constituency in last year's estimates, and this year it has been left out. I am afraid the same will happen again.

Let us build suitable roads leading to railway stations, so that farmers may reach them easily and send their products to market. Let us improve our highways, and in this connection, it is not necessary to build great national highways for automobilists and other swells. There is no hurry for improvements of that kind, it is preferable that we should help out the farmer. Automobiles are great at slaughtering people. Some time ago an unfortunate young lady, by the name of Smith, was thrown down and instantly killed, on Victoria bridge, by an automobile carrying four or five young men who were slightly intoxicated. I for one fear them.

Once more I say I cannot support that measure, considering that my constituents have not been consulted by means of a referendum, as requested by the Minister of Public Works whenever there is a new departure. I insist that this Bill should be rejected on the ground of its unfairness to parties interested.

Mr. J. P. O. GUILBAULT (Joliette) (Translation). Mr. Chairman, I have had great pleasure in listening to the speech of the hon. member for Montcalm, whose constituency adjoins mine. However one thing surprises me: his pluck which I thought was great and indomitable, has failed him entirely. He is afraid of automobiles; he considers them a calamity. I should have judged that he would welcome with joy the building of fine highways in the counties of Joliette and Montcalm. My wish is that the county of Joliette be provided with good roads, and even that visitors may be seen touring over them in their automobiles.

It rather confuses me to hear the hon. gentleman state that the bill under consideration is an infringement on provincial rights, seeing that while it provides granting assistance to the provinces, it is not until an agreement has been entered into with the provincial governments. I cannot see any encroachment when such a course is adopted.

The hon. member asks for a list of all roads which are to receive help from the government. However, has he considered that a great deal of work would be implied in such a task? To point out all the roads which require improvements throughout the country would be an impossibility; as that would actually mean almost a book, for the counties of Montcalm and Joliette alone.

No, what the government intends to do, I understand, is to improve existing roads, so that farmers may find it easier to move about in the wet season of spring and autumn. What the government intends to do is to put county towns in closer touch with the adjoining country, to help on agriculture by facilitating assistance at fairs and agricultural competitions, through the building of good roads.

If it were proposed to build a great commercial highway between Montreal and Quebec, I do not think it would be necessary, as suggested by the member for Montcalm, to have a referendum to find out whether the farming community would approve of such a plan. Well, that is exactly what the government intends to give us, with the approval and aid of the provincial governments. Automobiles may be safely met on such a road, and besides, I believe farmers' sons are not quite so anxious as the member for Montcalm suggested to be provided with automobiles.

I was pleased to listen to his address, and I think others were pleased also. I shall be happy to give my support to the government's proposal. For a long time past we were met with the cry: What are you about, are you not going to do something towards the improvement of the roads? Now this government had pledged itself, at the very opening of the session, to introduce a measure to that effect, and I am happy to see that it has redeemed its pledge. When I visit my constituency, and possibly that of my hon. friend for Montcalm, I shall be happy to be able to state that all hon. members, whatever their party ties, have acknowledged the desirability of helping on the farming community and of developing the resources of the country through the building of good roads.

Mr. SINCLAIR. There are some points on which I think the minister ought to give us further information. I would like to know whether he is to define the classes of roads on which the money is to be expended. We are aware that in this country there are a great many roads on which provincial and municipal authorities are spending money. So far as I understood the minister's statement, he has not given us much information on that question. I think it is very material to know whether this money is to be spent haphazard on all kinds of roads, or whether the government intends to define the classes of roads on which it will be expended. Then with regard to the maintenance of highways after they are built, another question on which the minister has given us insufficient information. Is it the intention of the government not only to construct these highways but also to maintain them; or is it the intention to cast the burden of their maintenance on the municipalities? That is also a pertinent question. Again, the matter of bridges has not been referred to in the discussion; I do not know that it has been mentioned at all. In my province of Nova Scotia the question of permanent structures across streams is a very important one. The province of Nova Scotia has borrowed the sum of $2,000,000, and has expended that money in the construction of steel and iron bridges throughout the province. Now, is it the intention of the government to spend any part of this money in the construction of bridges across streams? These questions are all of interest, on which I would like to have the views of the minister before I am asked to vote. I may say that I am heartily in favour of expenditures of this kind on roads throughout the country. There is nothing so much needed in the county I have the honour to represent as good roads. The Bill, so far as it will tend to the improvements of roads, will have my hearty approval.

The clause that has been discussed a good deal this evening, namely, clause 6, is the one to which I take especial objection. I was disappointed that the minister did not adopt the suggestion of the right hon. leader of the opposition and frankly say that this money would be distributed according to the population of each province. There is another method that might be adopted, and that is the mileage of the roads and which I think perhaps would be the fairer method. At all events, we are accustomed to the principle that moneys given to the provinces should be given according to population, and I would suppose that on so elementary a matter the minister would have no hesitation in adopting that principle. I do not see why he refuses to adopt it. If money is to be awarded to the various provinces it should certainly be awarded on some principle, and that principle ought to be contained in the Bill.

Mr. BURNHAM. Does the hon. gentleman consider that mileage is a true basis? If so, why does he consider the other principle elementary?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would be willing to adopt either basis. But for my part, I would favour the mileage system. In certain localities the other principle would not work out fairly. At present I am not prepared to say which principle would work out best throughout the Dominion. My province is cut up with rivers and streams, which makes it necessary to build roads in many places on both sides of the river. In some counties there is great mileage of road compared with the size of the county; this great mileage is necessary, and perhaps such a county would not receive its fair share if the sum was divided according to population. But why should the minister refuse to place that in the Bill? We are told by the Prime Minister that the appropriation will define the amount that is to be given to each province. Now that is a very haphazard way of settling it. The appropriation is made every year. The government may divide the money on that principle this year, and may retain the principle of population; but some future government may not do that. It strikes me that one of the first things that ought to be laid down specifically in this Bill is the principle on which the money should be given to the various provinces. The provinces all contribute alike, I suppose to the revenues of this country according to population.

Mr. LENNOX. Surely the hon. gentleman does not suggest that all the present provinces contribute alike on the basis of population?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think so.

Mr. LENNOX. They do not.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think it will be admitted by everybody that the provinces contribute to the revenue of the country according to population.

Mr. LENNOX. The provinces mainly contribute according to the amount they consume, because the revenue is mainly made up from the customs duties.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Quite true, and taking the country all over, I suppose the consumers in one province consume as in a like proportion. A thousand consumers in the various provinces consume much as a thousand in another province. I do not think my hon. friend will deny that the provinces contribute according to population to the revenues of this country, and that if money is to be taken from the public treasury, and awarded to the provinces for the purpose of building roads, it ought to be awarded on that principle. Now, if it is a good principle it ought to be embodied in the Bill; otherwise the division will be made, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), would say, according to the rule of thumb. Then in order to be of service to the country, in order that we may know how much we can depend upon each year, there ought to be a stated sum. For example, at the present time the municipalities have to take the responsibility, or the provinces if you like, of maintaining and building roads. They would like to know how much they are to receive from the federal treasury in order that they might make their plans, and decide what improvements they can afford to undertake. Of course, if you are to build roads throughout Canada and make them permanent, it is a very large undertaking. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), stated that there were 50,000 miles of roads in the province of Ontario. He calculated that $2,000 a mile would build roads in that province. I do not agree with him at all, I think that figure is too low. In my own province I believe it would take at least $3,000 a mile to build and maintain a macadamized road, or to build a road that would be an approach to a macadamized road; it would take $3,000 at least. If that is true for the province of Ontario, you would require $150,000,000 to build roads over the province of Ontario, and make them permanent. You would require $60,000,000 in the little province from which I come; and taking the country all over it means that an immense sum of money would be required. It strikes me, therefore, that the government will not be able to grapple with this great question for a number of years to come. That makes it all the more necessary that they should define just what they are undertaking to do, that they should lay down some principle on which they propose to act, in order that each province may get its fair share of the benefit of the expenditure. As I said before, the question of bridges ought to be dealt with too. They are very much required in some of the provinces. The provincial governments are at present constructing these bridges. What does the present Bill mean so far as bridges are concerned? I trust that when the minister addresses the House again he will deal with that question, and inform us whether the government is going to undertake the construction of bridges.

But my main purpose in rising was to object to the provisions of clause 6. I regard that clause as very objectionable. In the first place, it involves a divided authority, it involves an expenditure of money by order in council under the control of this government. It also involves an expenditure under the control of the local government. Now, a divided authority is not good in the construction of roads. One party will be throwing it off on the other, whereas, the responsibility should be under one authority.

Mr. EDWARDS. But divided authority was all right when the hon. gentleman's party in power was appointing fishery inspectors throughout the province.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am not now dealing with fishery inspection. We have no divided authority in my province. But I wanted to say something to the Prime Minister, if he were present. In the province of Nova Scotia the leader of the Conservative party in local politics, for the last twenty years has been preaching to us that we ought to have the administration road money under one authority.

In that province we had the municipalities constructing the roads, we also had the local government constructing the roads and there was a conflict of authority which has not worked out well in Nova Scotia. Very recently the duty was taken from the municipalities and given to the local government with the exception of the expenditure under the statute labour law of the province. If we are to have money expended by the counties, by the provinces and by this government we will have three authorities in Nova Scotia looking after our roads. That is an undesirable system and if we retain clause 6 in this Bill we will have that system. I object to clause 6 because I submit that it will be a constant temptation to the government to use this money for an election fund. I see that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) laughs at that, but let me tell him that we have had the spectacle within the last few days of a minister of the Crown wading through the snow banks of South Renfrew peddling out road commissions in order to get votes. I would not like to see this temptation placed in the way of this government because I am afraid that they would not have sufficient moral backbone to stand up against it. I do not think they will find it possible to make a fair distribution in that way. The pressure on them will be very great in order to get favours here and there—

Mr. BURNHAM. Does the hon. gentleman think it is fair to presume upon the moral rottenness of the people of this country?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I may say to the hon. member for Peterborough that I was much pleased to know that these corrupt proposals did not work in South Renfrew, that the people rejected them and that the leading Conservative paper in that municipality denounced and reproved the Minister of Customs for what he had done. I was much pleased to know that that was the case. If the government have the courage to make this a good Bill, a Bill that will have all objectionable features eliminated from it, a Bill that will give the money to the provinces according to the population, to be expended on the roads and not for election purposes, I can assure them that they will have the hearty support of every man on this side of the House and they will also have the support of the whole people of Canada.

Mr. JAMESON. Mr. Chairman, I think that the measure which the government has brought down and which is now before the committee for consideration should receive the unanimous approval of the members of this House. I believe that it will meet with the approval of the people throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. I must confess that I was somewhat surprised at some remarks which were made by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). He stated that in his judgment the government should have deferred bringing down this legislation for a year. Well, Sir, the hon. member for Halifax has been a member of the government of Nova Scotia and I presume he is somewhat familiar with the financial conditions of that province. I observed in an 'associated press' despatch which appears in the papers throughout Canada today a reference to the speech from the Throne at the opening of the legislature of Nova Scotia which makes particular allusion to the financial condition of the province. This is the statement which was made in the speech from the Throne with reference to the finances of Nova Scotia, as reported in the Ottawa 'Citizen':

The speech commenced by saying that the growing expenditures of the province in connection with the administration of the various services of the government necessitates provision being made for the obtaining of additional revenues to meet the requirements, and a measure dealing with this question will be presented to the House.

If that means anything, it means that the province is perilously near the time, if indeed, it has not reached it already, when direct taxation will have to be resorted to, in order to provide revenues to carry on the public service. Yet the hon. member for Halifax, when this government proposed a measure which will be a relief to the people of the province of Nova Scotia, in that respect, says that it should be deferred. I think that a statement of that sort, made upon an occasion of this kind, made when legislation of this nature is brought down to the House, shows that the hon. gentleman is exhibiting a spirit of partisanship, which, I think, should not be in evidence in considering a measure of this character. It would have been very much better, in my judgment, if he had accepted the situation, if he had endorsed this legislation and, if he desired to make any suggestions as to amendment, to have done so, rather than to have proposed that there should have been a delay in bringing down legislation of this character when the province from which he comes, stands so much in need of assistance in regard to the maintenance of its roads. One disadvantage which the province of Nova Scotia has suffered for a considerable length of time, and, I presume, it is one that is in a measure common to all the provinces of Canada, is in reference to the state of the roads. We in Nova Scotia have of late years, been endeavouring to secure an increase of immigration into that province. We believe we have there splendid opportunities for those who desire to secure homes in Nova Scotia, but one of the disadvantages we are confronted with, is the condition of the roads, and this legislation which proposes to assist very materially in improving that condition, unfortunately does not meet with a very hearty reception from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. What is the objection which they are urging in this connection? It is simply that the government at this time does not give details as to how this money shall be expended. I do not think that is a very serious charge. I do not think that the government should at this time, say how this money is to be expended, nor do I think it is necessary that particulars in connection with the expenditure of the money, which the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), has requested, should be given at this time. The hon. member for Guysborough has said that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), who has charge of this legislation, should state to this committee how this money is to be given to each of the various provinces of Canada. That was stated by both my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) and the Minister of Railways and Canals, when this legislation was introduced into this House. It was understood, and it is understood, by every fair minded man in this House, I think, that this money is to be distributed amongst the various provinces, practically upon the same basis as the subsidies to the provinces are paid. I do not think that any person who is prepared to consider the matter fairly can say that this is not a reasonable and proper manner in which to distribute the money. The hon. member for Guysborough finds fault because the Bill does not say that certain sums of money are to be expended upon the bridges of the various provinces. The Bill leaves that very largely in the hands of the governments of the different provinces to deal with.

Mr. LENNOX. A road would include a bridge, would it not?

Mr. JAMESON. I think that it would, but anyway, I take the ground that under this Bill the legislature of any province of Canada that desires to do business on business principles with the government of the Dominion, will have no difficulty whatever in securing its fair and reasonable share of the money that is proposed to be devoted to roads and these legislatures can do with that money, in connection with the construction of roads and highways that, which, in their judgment, under the agreement is fit and just.

But we find that there is a very distinct difference in the opinions of hon. gentlemen opposite, upon the other side of the House, with regard to the cost of the construction of highways, and from the province of Nova Scotia we have had two opinions this afternoon with regard to that matter. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) considered that $2,000 per mile would be sufficient to construct permanent roads in the province, while my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) thinks that $3,000 per mile will be necessary. And although there is this diversity of opinion between these two gentlemen in respect to this one particular subject, yet they expect the government to come down now and say how every dollar of this money will be expended in all the various provinces throughout the Dominion. Nothing could be more unreasonable and nothing could more pointedly show the partisan spirit in which they are considering this proposed legislation. I have noticed that throughout this whole discussion every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, no matter in what state of mind he approached the consideration of this measure, always came to the final conclusion that he was not prepared to oppose it in any way, shape or form. Every one of these gentlemen came, so to speak, with the intention of cursing the legislation, but before they concluded their remarks we found them blessing it. There is not one of them who dares to vote against this measure, because they know that the fair-minded people of Canada are going to support it and to support the administration which has implemented one of its pre-election measures this early in its career. I believe that the farmers and those who are general users of the highways will declare that in the initiation of this legislation the government of this country has taken an advanced step. I believe that in submitting this Bill to parliament the government will meet with the unanimous endorsation of all reasonable and fair-minded people in Canada.

Mr. McKENZIE. I did not intend to join in this discussion, but the debate has taken such a trend that in justice to the people I represent I must make a few observations upon the measure. I regret that the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson) found it necessary to drag political issues into the discussion of such a measure. He wanted the world to understand that Nova Scotia is in a deplorable state financially. Well, there is no evidence, public or private, upon which the hon. gentleman can base that statement with any degree of certainty. The only thing he could quote in support of his statement was a press despatch, which has no authenticity whatever. All I have to say to the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson) and to this House and to the country generally is that the revenues and financial standing of the province of Nova Scotia are on a better foundation to-day than ever before. The observations of the hon. member (Mr. Jameson) compel me to review to some extent the relations of the party to which he belongs in that province towards the financial condition of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia has the unique record of having been governed by Liberals for the last forty-five years, except for one four years of the Thompson-Holmes government, which stands forth as a bare spot in the desert, as a pelican in the wilderness. At the end of the four years of the Conservative government in Nova Scotia the revenues of that province amounted only to $500,000, while to-day, through the various legitimate means which were taken by the Liberal administration, the revenue is fast approaching the two million dollar mark. And, what is the record of the Tory party in Nova Scotia in regard to every measure taken by the Liberal government to put that province on a sound financial basis? When Mr. Fielding took steps to bring about the consolidation of the mines and to raise the royalty on coal at different stages from seven and a half cents to twelve and a half cents a ton, the Conservatives fought that proposal at every stage; they said that the coal business of Nova Scotia would be runied if the royalty were raised in that way.

An hon. MEMBER. Cut it out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I fear that the hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question before the Chair.

Mr. McKENZIE. Some hon. gentleman told me to cut it out, but I do not know what he means exactly by that, because I cannot cut out what I have said already, and I do not know by what process I could cut out what I have not yet given expression to. I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman, if you will pardon me. You were kind enough to allow me to go thus far, and I want to point out, that the revenue from coal in Nova Scotia was brought to its present excellent condition in the teeth of opposition from the Tory party. We got $675,000 from the eastern extension award, and that we fought for in the teeth of the Tory party, both in Ottawa and Nova Scotia. We got better terms for the province of Nova Scotia, as well as other provinces of the Dominion, through negotiations conducted by the Liberal government in Nova Scotia with the Liberal government in Ottawa. All of these things were fought by the Tory party, to which my hon. friend from Digby belongs. Therefore, if Nova Scotia has a good financial standing to-day, we have nothing to thank the Tory party for. That is all I have to say about the remarks made by the hon. member for Digby.

Mr. JAMESON. Does the hon. gentleman deny that in the speech from the Throne at the opening of the Nova Scotia legislature, an intimation was given that some means would have to be taken to raise additional revenue to meet the increased expenditures of the province?

Mr. McKENZIE. The province of Nova Scotia is going along at very rapid strides.

Mr. JAMESON. Will the hon. gentleman answer the question?

Mr. McKENZIE. And in providing for these new departures in which the province of Nova Scotia is launching forth, keeping the lead educationally and otherwise of every province in the Dominion, I suppose the Premier of Nova Scotia finds it necessary to take steps to add to the revenues of that province. But that is not because there is anything the matter with the financial standing of the province, if they choose to keep within the narrow compass which no doubt the hon. member for Digby would prescribe for them.

Mr. JAMESON. Does the hon. gentleman not admit that what I said is absolutely correct?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not admit anything of the kind. I do not know what is in the address at the opening of the Nova Scotia legislature, I did not see it, and I am not going to commit myself or my friends to press despatches which do not give the text of the address at all. The Premier of Nova Scotia last summer told me in conversation that there were some sources in the province which should contribute something towards the revenue, and it is possible he is going to take steps to bring about such a condition as he had in mind, not because of lack of prosperity in the province, but in order to secure contributions to the revenue from sources which are not contributing at present. When my hon. friend comes to deal with the matter, I think he will find that this is not from any urgency for a fair distribution throughout the province of the collection of the moneys necessary for the different purposes which come within the purview of the provincial government.

Mr. JAMESON. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman favours deferring to another year the payment to the province of Nova Scotia of any portion of the money proposed by this legislation to be distributed amongst the various provinces?

Mr. McKENZIE. I am certainly in favour of a fair contribution to the provinces along the lines suggested in this Bill, but I am disposed to agree with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) that the government should be in possession of some further information before dealing with this Bill. When the Bill is passed, as it no doubt will pass, and when the hon. Minister of Railways or some representative of his department goes with that Bill in his hands to negotiate with one of the provincial governments, I think he will have very insufficient and meagre material with which to negotiate. If the negotiations had taken place first and the conditions and circumstances had been known to the minister, I think a better Bill could have been framed. I do not think the passing of the Bill at this session of parliament will hasten things very much, if clause 6 is permitted to remain in the Bill, because it evidently contemplates some legislation by the legislatures of the different provinces before anything can be done. I think it is a fair assumption that before this Bill becomes law, the legislatures of the different provinces will have prorogued, and there will be no opportunity of implementing this Bill by provincial legislation this year. If this is the case, there would not be very much lost if the government adopted the course suggested by the hon. member for Halifax. Some of us have the misfortune to be lawyers, and when we come to deal with questions involving constitutional considerations, we wish to keep as much as possible within constitutional lines. Some hon. gentlemen may think that it is not very difficult to take any amount of money and spend it on the roads of the different provinces. If the hon. Minister of Railways had come today with a Bill asking that a certain amount of money should be devoted to education in the different provinces, it would strike us at once that he was up against a difficult situation, because it is well understood that education is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces; but when you come to look at the provisions of the constitution under which we live, you find that roads and education are in precisely the same condition, both being under the exclusive control of the provincial legislatures.

Mr. HAZEN. If that is correct, how was it that the previous government was justified in appointing a commission for the purpose of investigating and reporting on the whole question of technical education?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is quite easy, and if this government had taken the precaution to appoint one of their numerous and prolific commissions to inquire into the condition of the roads, they would have been able to offer a better Bill. The outgoing government wanted to know whether it would be advisable or not to depart from the beaten path with regard to education, and to appropriate some money for the advancement of technical education in this country, and for the building of institutions devoted to technical education. I am proud to say that the province of Nova Scotia had blazed the way and had given the cue to the government of Canada in that respect, and that commission was appointed for the purpose of finding out whether or not the conditions of the country would justify this wide departure of taking the moneys of this Dominion and applying them to technical education. That is my answer to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I think it is satisfactory. But he, lawyer as he is, will not for a moment question my statement that this road question is entirely within the purview and scope and authority of the local legislatures. The hon. gentleman shakes his head; but I shall be thankful if he can find one line of authority in the British North America Act giving us power to devote the moneys of this country to be expended on public roads. There is nothing of the kind. But I am not finding fault with this measure. I am glad the government are taking this course, only I want it done in the proper way. We know that in the province of British Columbia, and some times in the province of Ontario, a great deal of difficulty has been experienced by reason of overlapping authority with regard to the fisheries. In those two provinces it appears that the local governments can issue licenses for fishing purposes, and the Dominion government can issue them also, so that there is always a conflict of authority. The Minister of Railways and Canals, by this Bill, is bringing about a condition which will cause a similar conflict of authority, and if he will follow the course suggested by the right hon. leader of the opposition, he will avoid that. It would appear to me that, as far as any political favouritism is concerned, or favouring one regulation more than another, the chances are that the division will be pretty well balanced for many years, perhaps always. We have nine local governments, some will be Liberal, some will be Conservative, probably they will be pretty well balanced at all times.

Mr. BURNHAM. Do I understand that this measure is, in your opinion, ultra vires?

Mr. McKENZIE. While I am not opposing the measure in any way if I were called on as a lawyer to give an answer on this as a question of law, I would have to say that I do not think that there is any provision in the constitution as it stands now which would justify this legislation. If the money thus voted would come as an addition to the subsidies to the provinces and within their control, I would endorse it, but if it is the intention of the government to keep this money under their own control and to work through officers appointed by this government, the Act is going to be a source of inconvenience and very difficult of operation.

In answer to the argument of the Prime Minister that this is analogous to the subsidies granted to railways, I would point out that whereas the subsidy granted to a railway company is hedged in by three Acts of parliament, the Act incorporating a railway company to which the subsidy is granted, the subsidy Act itself, and the general Railway Act, this is not hedged by any Act, it is entirely controlled by the will of the Governor General in Council. That is why we on this side want something in the statute providing that this money shall go to the provinces and shall not be expended according to the caprice of Dominion officers, or of whatever government may be in power here. I think that section 3 of the Act vests the title to this money in the provinces. Once you grant the money to the province, there is only one way that the province is represented and that is by its government, so when you grant the money to the province you vest it in the government of the province and that is the end of it.

What I particularly wish to point out is that what is required on this side is that provincial rights shall be observed. When we are giving this money to any province, we are not giving anything but what is their own. The people of this country are the people just as much in the right of the provinces as in the right of the Dominion; and we must not assume that we are giving gifts to paupers in making these grants. But when we give to the provinces it is our duty to leave it to the provincial authorities to deal with the money. They have the control in dealing with the roads through their representatives in the provincial legislatures and through the provincial government. The only objection I have to this measure is the mode in which it is proposed to carry it out. I am perfectly satisfied that a fair amount of money should be afforded to the different provinces for the purposes of roads, but I hope it will be put absolutely under the control of the different provinces, subject to the supervision by the department. As the Prime Minister said, it was analogous to the railway subsidies. And these subsidies are paid, I understand, on the certificate of an engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals that the railway is finished up to the standard set by certain well defined plans and specifications. All the Minister of Railways need do, if he wishes to keep control of it, is to pay out money to the provinces on the certificate of some officer of the department that the work was properly done according to the standards of the department. Beyond that the expenditures should be entirely under the control of the local government.

Mr. HUGHES. (Kings P. E I.). I wish to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals whether the appropriation made for each province will be the same year by year. I could see great objections to it if the amount were large one year and small the next. This point has not been touched upon before, so far as I know.

Mr. COCHRANE. I can give no promise or statement on that; it is a matter of policy.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson) accused the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) of displaying partisanship. But it seems to me that the display of partisanship, if there was any, was made by the hon. member for Digby himself. He spoke of the provincial finances of Nova Scotia and mentioned a telegraphic communication from Halifax. As to what he read, I do not think anybody on this side could raise objection to it; but the inference he drew from it is what we object to. He said that the province is perilously near the time when direct taxation is at hand.

Mr. JAMESON. If the hon. member will pardon me, I think I said, it would seem from the speech from the Throne that such was the case.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). This bugaboo of direct taxation we have been hearing out in Nova Scotia for a quarter of a century, and we are no nearer it now than we were twenty-five years ago. The hon. member from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) has well said that the finances of Nova Scotia are, taking everything into consideration, in a very healthy state. What I object to particularly is the insinuation that we on this side are opposed to this legislation and to assisting the provinces in providing improved roads. For myself, sitting on this side of the House, I am in hearty accord with any measure that would improve the condition of the roads in Nova Scotia and elsewhere in Canada. After hearing the discussion, I believe that this Bill, as has been charged, is a very crude Bill. Still, the object of the Bill is a good one—to assist in improving the highways. But when we examine the Bill we find that, stripped of verbiage, it means that this parliament proposes to assist the various provinces by giving them an additional grant for the maintenance and improvement of highways.

Mr. BURNHAM. Does the hon. gentlemas disapprove of that?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I do not say I do. But why sail under false colours? Why not put clearly in the enactment what is the effect of the Bill? It does look as if there were something behind the motives of the government in bringing in this legislation. It is true, they say, that this will implement the promises they made before the election. But the hon. member for Cape Breton and others have pointed out that so far as roads and bridges are concerned, these are entirely within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures. I had the pleasure of being present when the right hon. the Prime Minister received a delegation from Ontario on this subject of improved roads, and I remember distinctly that he stated that the fathers of confederation never expected that this parliament was going to deal with the maintenance of roads and bridges and that we were going very far when we proposed to assist the provinces in the manner we intend to do this session. It does seem that you do not go very far if this parliament is not going to maintain the roads after they are built. Reference has been made to trunk roads. I agree with those hon. gentlemen who say that that is not what this country requires; what we want is improvement of the highways that are being used every day. The great trouble with us in the older provinces is that we have many roads but not enough money to keep up the roads we have.

Mr. LENNOX. Will not section 3, cover all that?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I am not referring to any particular section, I am merely referring to the conditions as they obtain in our province. Our roads were not laid out as systematically perhaps as they are in some other provinces, or as they should have been. There is no such regularity about our roads as there is in the western provinces. In Nova Scotia we have a greater mileage according to population than any other province in the Dominion, and we have to bear a heavier burden to maintain our roads than any other province according to population. The discussion this evening has shown that what will suit one province will not suit another. It has been pointed out that in some provinces the municipalities are bearing a certain proportion of the cost of maintaining roads, that in other provinces is borne by the provincial governments, I believe in the province of Ontario the municipality pays $\frac{2}{3}$ and the Local Legislature $\frac{1}{3}$ of the cost of improving the highways. In certain provinces the municipalities are prepared to bear a certain burden of taxation for the maintenance of roads. But in the province of Nova Scotia we are not prepared at present to tax the municipalities to the same extent that they are taxed in Ontario, our people have not been educated along those lines. Now in view of these different conditions in the various provinces, is it not better to hand this money over to the provincial legislatures, who can spend it more judiciously for the improvement of roads? The member for Digby (Mr. Jameson), remarked that my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean), had criticised the government because there was no conference provided for between the provinces and the federal government with the view of working out a scheme; he intimated that my hon. friend from Halifax was arguing in favour of delay, and that he was inconsistent in view of the fact that Nova Scotia required more money to enable it to conduct its affairs. But I want to point out that if the member for Digby is sincere in this matter, he will ask the government he supports to pass this money over to the province so that the roads may be put into good condition at once. The province has all the machinery now, we have engineers as good as this country can furnish. We have in the road engineer, Mr. McKenzie, as good a road maker as can be found in the whole of Canada. If the member for Digby is desirous of helping out the province of Nova Scotia and guarding against delay, he will urge the government to pass this money over to the local legislature.

Mr. JAMESON. Does the hon. gentleman disagree with the member for Halifax?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I do not. The member for Halifax made no appeal for delay, but he pointed out, what is true, this if this Bill passes now we are going to have delay. If this Bill passes there will be no improvement of the roads in Nova Scotia or elsewhere next summer, because this legislation provides practically for an agreement with the provinces. Why an agreement with the provinces? Because it is recognized that under the British North America Act any man who goes to work on a road in another province would be a trespasser and liable to indictment. If the Minister of Railways sent one of his men down to Nova Scotia to attempt to improve the roads, he could be indicted for interfering with the public highways, unless there was some previous consent obtained from the provincial government.

Mr. JAMESON. How does the hon. gentleman expect to make an agreement until he has authority to make it?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I say that the member for Halifax was not arguing for delay in the expenditure, but he was arguing for delay with a view of getting this government and the provincial government together so that everything could be made ready and the machinery could be put into operation for improving the roads as soon as an arrangement had been made.

Mr. JAMESON. Does the hon. gentleman think that a delay of a year in passing this legislation would mean an equal delay in the payment of any sum of money which might be made eventually under this legislation to the various provinces?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). What difference would it make if the Minister of Railways conferred with the provinces in the month of June, and made an arrangement for working out this scheme, this parliament would not meet again until November, so the Act could not be put into operation until the following year. Now I regard clause 3 also as rather suspicious. In the marginal note it states that it is a grant of an annual subsidy for highways. I say the marginal note is misleading, it is not an annual subsidy at all. In the Act itself, it says that the Governor in Council may, in any year, and upon such terms and conditions as are prescribed, grant to any province. It does not say that this grant shall be actually made, it is an appropriation made at such time as suits the Governor in Council. I have no doubt, that in an election year, you will find there will be a grant, but the year after election there will be no grant.

Mr. LENNOX. You ought to know.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). It is practical politics, I suppose; but this is too big a matter to be used as a political question. On this side of the House, we think this matter could be better worked out if the money was given to the various provincial legislatures to expend. It is also to be noted in this clause, that the grant may be made to any province; it does not say to the various provinces, but to such province as the Governor in Council may decide. The whole Act seems to have been framed with a view of having more patronage to distribute.

That is exactly what one would conclude from reading the Act. It is true the Act speaks about highways, but the desire is to get the money for election purposes. This is the construction that one would have to put upon the Act from the way in which it is drawn. I do not wish to be taken as criticising the Act. I am strongly in favour of the principle, but I think that the provinces could get far more and the roads would benefit to a much greater extent if a certain amount were apportioned among the provinces either according to mileage of road or population. It is time that there should be an increase in the subsidies to the various provinces. Since 1896 the subsidies to the provinces have been increased twice under the Liberal administration, and I think it is time there should be another increase. After 1896 the amount of the subsidy was doubled. I think it was $4,500,000 and it was increased to $9,000,000. Another increase is due and, as my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) said, it is only what the provinces are entitled to.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Guysborough called the minister's attention to what is unquestionably an omission from section 3 in regard to the question as to whether or not the aid that is proposed to be given by this government shall be extended to bridges. It must be manifest to the minister that it is absurd to talk about improving existing highways or constructing new roads if you are not going to have power to improve old bridges and to construct new ones. That I need not argue, because I am quite sure that the hon.gentleman will agree with me that the government would have no power to make any expenditure under this Act for the improvement or construction of a bridge as distinct from a highway.

Mr. EDWARDS. Why not take the bridge to be part of the road?

Mr. BELAND. Sometimes it is not.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) may dispose of it in that easy way.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am not disposing of it, but as we understand it in our part of the country a bridge is part of the highway.

Mr. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman looks up the legislation in the province of Ontario dealing with the question of roads, he will find that the legislation deals specifically with bridges in addition to roads. There is no such thing as a grant of money to roads without dealing specifically with bridges at the same time.

Mr. EDWARDS. Certain bridges.

Mr. MACDONALD. No, not certain bridges.

Mr. COCHRANE. Up to a certain extent.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. LENNOX. In Ontario it is provided that if a bridge exceeds a certain length it is within the jurisdiction of the county council, and in other cases it is under the jurisdiction of the township council.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is what the minister means. There has been a great deal of discussion as to the general principle of this Bill, and it has been very interesting to hear what hon. gentlemen have had to say with regard to it, but I am free to say that I think a good many of them have taken a great deal for granted in the discussion and in the speeches which they have made. I want to look at this measure in a careful manner, and I submit my hon. friend could not spend money upon bridges unless he put in an amendment which would entitle him to do so.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think so.

Mr. MACDONALD. He may have some familiarity with the practice in Ontario but the legislation in other provinces is different. Bridges are one thing and highways are another. They have been dealt with in many provinces of the Dominion as being entirely apart one from the other. Legally they are entirely apart when it comes to a question of liability in regard to the repair of highways. I do not have to go into this question or to make any very elaborate legal argument about it because in the constituency from which I come there was a leading case on the question of liability for non-repair of a highway—the case of Gerdert vs. Municipality of Pictou county which went to the Privy Council and in which the municipality raised an issue in regard to the maintenance of the highway which had never been raised in any part of the Dominion before. We are here to legislate seriously and if the Minister of Justice, who must take the responsibility for legislation of this character, were here I would go into the question with some degree of elaboration for the purpose of showing that my hon. friend under this Bill could not deal with bridges either for their improvement or construction unless he includes in the section the words which I propose. My hon. friend surely can take no objection to it. It is extending the principle of his measure and I apprehend that if the proposition is to be a working one, if it is intended that we are going to have anything at all in this measure, we want to get it in such a proposition that can be worked out.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not object to putting it in.

Mr. MACDONALD. I rose for the purpose of suggesting an amendment which I thought should be accepted.

Mr. COCHRANE. It does not have reference to clause 3.

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes it has. I propose:

That clause 3 be amended by inserting the words 'or bridges' after the word 'highways' in the fourth line and the words 'or bridges' after the word 'highways' in the fifth line and by striking out the words 'both' in the fifth line and inserting instead the words 'all or any.'

Mr. OLIVER. What is the contemplated policy of the government under subsection 3? Does the government contemplate aid to local roads, to trunk roads, or to colonization roads? That is important in deciding as to the merits of the Bill as respects each individual member's vote upon it. If the policy of the government is to use the money for the improvement of local roads, that is a matter of general interest, and I think everybody in the House would vote for it. If it is for the improvement or construction of colonization roads, then certainly those of us who represent the provinces where there is new country to be developed, would, of course, be strongly in favour of that. If, however, the proposal is to expend any large proportion of this money in the establishment of what might be called trunk roads, for the benefit particularly of the automobile section of the population, I am not so sure that every member of this House would be prepared to strongly support the measure. It is important that the minister should give us some information as to what policy the government has in mind.

Mr. COCHRANE. This will be largely a matter of policy to be determined on between the local governments and the federal government. I would hope, in dealing with the different provincial governments, to lay down a policy that could be worked to from year to year, so that we would not have checker-board improvements. In my opinion the scheme will be largely worked out in connection with the local governments of the different provinces, probably one province might prefer one scheme and another province another.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that is any explanation at all. The Bill is couched in very general terms, and that being so, it is only fair that the members should know what policy the government proposes to pursue. Of course, if the minister says the Federal government is going to pursue any policy that will suit any of the provincial governments that would be quite intelligible.

Mr. COCHRANE. Probably the roads in the provinces represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) would require different treatment from the roads in Ontario or Quebec, and I have had no hesitation in saying from the very beginning that we would work in connection with the local governments.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is understood that what is done will be on the responsibility of the local governments, then we can understand where we are, and I would be willing to accept that position, but if the Federal government is going to exercise jurisdiction in the distribution of the money it is only fair the minister should say what particular class of roads he proposes most to favour.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I did not propose speaking on this question, but the hon. gentleman from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), in reply to what I thought was a respectful question, took occasion to make a personal reference to me. I asked him if he thought there would be any danger under the arrangement proposed, of the money advanced by the Dominion government to the provincial government of Nova Scotia, being garnisheed by creditors of the provincial government, and, for want of a better answer, the hon. member stated that perhaps I had in my own experience, suffered from the garnishee laws of my province. Now, I do not pose as a millionaire; I am not wealthy at all; I am not in the fortunate position of some gentlemen opposite in that I have not received offices of emolument from the government, and I have not had an opportunity of laying by money in that way. I have not fed extensively on the public treasury nor do I expect to do so, and consequently, I am not a millionaire, but my assets have never been garnisheed, and I never expect that they will be. I want to say that if I had been as prodigal with the expenditure of my income as the province of Nova Scotia has been, I would expect such a procedure. I want to say further that in the carrying out of the provisions of this Bill, I hope the minister will exercise a great deal of care, in respect to the province of Nova Scotia. Hon. gentlemen opposite who come from Nova Scotia have advocated that the money be paid over directly to the province and that the Dominion authorities part with any control over its expenditure. Well, judging from the history of the Nova Scotia government in the past, with regard to road construction, that would be a most dangerous policy to follow. Several years ago the province of Nova Scotia borrowed some $600,000 for the purpose of constructing permanent roads, and they used this money, not to make roads, but to make votes, and to-day there is not a foot of permanent highway in that province.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Is that the policy you propose adopting now?

Mr. DAVIDSON. That is a policy I do not propose adopting. I advocate that the Dominion government working in conjunction with the provincial government, should be thoroughly satisfied that every dollar is being expended in making roads and not in making votes. These gentlemen opposite do not seem to have any conception of making roads; their idea in reference to the Road Act is something to make votes with for themselves, and consequently you see them divided as to how this money shall be expended. The hon. member from Welland (Mr. German) says: Don't give this money to the provincial government. And why?

Because the government of Ontario is Conservative he says, give it to the municipalities. The hon. member for Halifax, the hon. member for Antigonish, and the illustrious member from North Cape Breton say, give this money to the provincial governments, because they know that the provincial government in the province of Nova Scotia is in a very difficult corner, and they want this money to be expended to make votes for themselves in the coming elections. My hon. friend from North Cape Breton represents a constituency in which there was a good deal of jobbery in connection with the expenditure of the $600,000 to which I referred, and he should be the last man on earth to advocate giving the provincial government a free hand in the expenditure of this money. I sincerely hope that nothing of the kind will be done. A few years ago the federal subsidy to the province of Nova Scotia was materially increased. It was hoped by some admirers of the provincial government that it would use those funds for constructing highways; but instead of doing that, they used it to increase their own salaries and appoint certain zealous officials. I venerate to a large degree the hon. member for Halifax, and on most matters would be inclined to take his opinion, but I cannot but remember that he sat for some years in the provincial government of Nova Scotia, and if he had any knowledge of roads he did not show it then, and I do not think he is in a position to instruct this House on that subject.

Mr. McKENZIE. There is no one in this House who is more willing to give a respectful reply to a respectful question than myself. I would be the last man in this House to give any other than the most respectful reply to the hon. member for Annapolis if he had asked a respectful question; but I leave it to the judgment of any hon. member whether it was a serious or respectful question to ask a representative of the fair province of Nova Scotia if I did not think it was a dangerous thing to pay money over to the credit of that province for fear it might be garnisheed. There is an old saying and a true one that it is an ill bird that befouls its own nest. Let the hon. member for Annapolis think what a reflection he has put upon the province that has given three premiers to this Dominion. The province of Nova Scotia is proud of having given to this Dominion the present Premier. Yet the hon. member for Annapolis stands up in this House and says seriously that the financial condition of that province is such that any moneys paid to its credit are liable to be garnisheed. I want the province of Nova Scotia to know that that is the reputation which the hon. member wishes to give to the province of Nova Scotia in the presence of this House. Every province of this Dominion has been represented in this discussion, but not a man has said anything disrespectful of the credit and standing of his own province except the hon. member for Annapolis. I want the good people of Annapolis to know that they have sent a gentleman here who thinks it his duty to speak in such a disrespectful manner of the fair province of Nova Scotia. The hon. member says there was jobbery in my county. I do not know to what county he refers.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Victoria.

Mr. McKENZIE. I defy him to produce the record to show that there is a word of truth in that statement. It would not be parliamentary to say that the hon. gentleman uttered a falsehood, but I do say that he was born with a predisposition to strike the truth at an impossible angle.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The hon. gentleman is very bold in challenging me to produce records that are about a thousand miles away. He knows very well about the circumstances. He says that I spoke against the reputation of the province of Nova Scotia. He must know that that is incorrect. I never said a word against the reputation of the province of Nova Scotia, and I want to say, in justice to the reputation of my province, that the good people of the province intend at the very earliest opportunity to put out of office the men who have put the province in debt and have given it nothing but bad government.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Clause 3 of the Bill provides that the Governor in Council may in any year grant to any province in aid of improvement of highways; that is, it may grant to any one province and leave out all the others. The language bears that construction, at all events. I do not think we should allow the clause to pass in that shape. I think we should assert the right of each province to participate in any grant that is made. I know that the Prime Minister has stated that he will observe that principle in the distribution of the money that is proposed to be spent under this Act. The Minister of Railways has also made the statement that the money will be expended according to the population of the various provinces, but they will not be here forever, and my objection to the clause is that it does not express that idea. As it reads, it simply gives the government power by order in council to grant money to any one province. Therefore, I beg to move that the following be added to clause 3:

Provided always that when any such grant is made to any one province each of the other provinces shall be entitled to a proportional grant based on the population of such province.

Mr. MACDONALD. I desire to second this resolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friends are calling 'lost' as if this discussion had been carried on altogether by hon. gentlemen on this side. Quite as many have spoken on the government side as on this side, and there is no desire on the part of the opposition to obstruct or delay this Bill. What objection can there be to putting in the Bill what the Prime Minister to-day said was the policy of the government. It would not be fair for the government to say that in one year all the grant would go to one province. That is surely not the intention of the government.

Mr. HAZEN. The adoption of the amendment proposed would render the Bill useless and abortive. The Bill is based on the idea that the money is to be spent by arrangement with provincial governments so that if we adopted this amendment, then if the government failed to come to an agreement with Nova Scotia, for instance, no money could be spent in New Brunswick or any other province because of this amendment.

Mr. MACDONALD. There is nothing in section 3 in regard to agreement with the provinces, that is fixed by subsequent sections.

Mr. HAZEN. I do not see that it would make any difference whether that is fixed by section 3 or a subsequent section.

Mr. SINCLAIR. We are not saying you must spend money in the province, but, that you must appropriate a similar sum.

Mr. HAZEN. Which means that unless you make an arrangement with every province the whole scheme will fail. The matter may be safely left to the good sense of the government and to the good judgment of the people who would not tolerate any injustice as between the provinces.

Mr. MACDONALD. The minister's argument is erroneous as a matter of law and of interpretation of this Bill. There is not a line in section 3 which makes the voting of the money contingent upon the making of an arrangement with a province. Sections 4 and 5 control section 3 and limit the power of the government and prevent them making an expenditure except under the conditions contained in the agreement arrived at with the provincial governments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When the Bill was introduced some days ago the minister stated that the money which was to be appropriated every year should be apportioned among the different provinces as the subsidies are now apportioned. The object would be to work in with the different local governments. In order to make the intention surer, I said:

I was asking the hon. gentleman to tell us if there was any basis of allotment among the provinces. The provincial subsidy is based on population.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, I explained it was to be on the same basis as that upon which the subsidies are granted to the provinces.

When the Bill was distributed and I came to read it I found no such disposition in it.

Therefore, in order to make the matter certain, I moved an amendment to insert this in the Bill. But the Prime Minister said there was no necessity for that, because the Minister of Railways in introducing the Bill, had told us that such was the intention, and upon this he asked the House to vote down the amendment. I supposed then that matter would be disposed of in Committee of the Whole, and that words would be inserted to carry out what was declared to be the intention of the law. But that has not been done. Surely, so important a matter is not to be left simply to the good-will of the government. As I have said, governments do not live forever and a succeeding government may not agree with the disposal of money in such a case as this proposed by the government it replaces. And even the same government will sometimes change its mind. So, if it is the intention of the government that this money is to be divided among the provinces according to proposal, surely that should be incorporated in the Bill. The amendment of my hon. friend, I think, does not convey the idea. Therefore, I move, in amendment to the amendment, that the following words be inserted as subsection 2 of section 3:

The sums of money voted in any year to be expended under this Act shall be apportioned among, the different provinces of the Dominion according to the population of said provinces as established by the last census for the time being.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. MACDONALD. Before that vote is taken, it is surely due to the committee that the government should state why they decline to implement the policy stated on the introduction of this measure and on the second reading. We have discussed this measure assuming that at the proper time the government would express their policy in the Bill. Why is it not done? Hon. gentlemen onposite are saying 'lost,' but there is no explanation.

Mr. ROGERS. My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) heard the right hon. leader of the government this afternoon make a clear and distinct statement that when parliament was being asked to vote this money the money would be appropriated an amount for each province in Canada, and there is no purpose to be served by the amendment of the right hon. leader of the opposition. The motion was rejected this afternoon, and I am sure it will be rejected again to-night.

Mr. BELAND. That is not the intention as explained by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen). He just intimated to the committee that an agreement could be made regarding one province only, and an appropriation made for it while the rest of the provinces would be left out.

Mr. HAZEN. No, no.

Mr. BELAND. What, then, is the contention of the hon. minister?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. BELAND. Hon. gentlemen opposite say 'lost.' But we want to know why this amendment should be rejected. That is all we ask. We propose that the money be distributed according to population. The Prime Minister has said that it is the intention to do so. We want that put in black and white in the law. And not only is that refused, but we are refused an explanation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. MACDONALD. Surely a proposition of this kind, a serious proposition, and one involving a new departure is not going to be disposed of in this fashion. Hon. members opposite cannot complain of captious discussion on the part of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONALD. Hon. gentlemen who have been here all evening know that more members spoke on the government side than on this side. And they spoke at length. They lauded the government for this Bill. One hon. gentleman wanted to see a great federal highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Others on the same side opposed that, and propounded all kinds of theories as to how this money should be spent. After listening for three hours to a discussion of these academic problems, we come to the details of the Bill. We ask the government to incorporate in the measure the statement made by the Minister of Railways in introducing it and by the Prime Minister on the second reading. And the only answer we get is the cry of 'lost.' That is not a dignified way to deal with a great question, and one in which this parliament is entering for the first time upon an expenditure of road money, dealing with a matter which seems to trench upon the sphere of the provincial authority. And we have this anomaly that while the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), is the third minister to state that the government is to divide this money among the provinces, according to population, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen), tells us that that is not the policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONALD. On the contrary the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hazen) argued against the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) by telling him that it would have this effect, that, if the government should vote money for expenditure in any particular province, having made an agreement with that province, the amendment would compel them to vote money for expenditure in other provinces where they had no agreement.

Mr. HAZEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald), must know that he has misconstrued me, or, I should say that it is evident that the hon. gentleman has misunderstood me, and I am sorry I did not make myself clear. I said that the effect of the amendment of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair)—which by the way, was not accepted by the leader of the opposition——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was an improvement.

Mr. HAZEN. —the effect would be that if the government made an agreement with the government of one province for an expenditure of a certain sum in that province and failed to make an arrangement with some other province, they would be precluded from spending money in any province; just the reverse of the position stated by my hon. friend from Pictou.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am glad the minister has succeeded in getting himself into a position which, he thinks, in some degree consistent with that taken by the other ministers.

My hon. friend has reaffirmed his attitude. The committee has not forgotten the discussion we had a few moments ago in regard to that matter, when I showed him that the amendment of the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) would not have the effect which he anticipated. Do I understand the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say now that it is the policy of the government, when they take a vote in any one year, to take a vote for all the provinces at the same time?

Mr. HAZEN. That is the policy laid down by the Prime Minister, to which I adhere.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that was the policy of the government as stated by the Prime Minister this afternoon, and as stated now by the Minister of Railways and Canals, but the hon. gentlemen opposite who are responsible for carrying out this Bill will not put it in the law. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) seems to be the boss of this administration. He stated—I remember his words very well —after the Prime Minister spoke and said that was the intention of the government, the member for Simcoe made a general demurrer. Oh no, he says, I don't think that is the proper principle, to expend this money according to population, there are some localities that should have more than others. That was the view taken by the hon. member for Simcoe, and he is the real master of the administration. Now, the government will not put into the law what the Prime Minister declared was his intention this afternoon, because the member for Simcoe objects to it. I congratulate my hon. friend on his power over the present administration.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Sinclair) negatived.

Amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) negatived.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is time to adjourn now.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, finish it up, it won't take us long.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. You cannot do it. It is not fair at one o'clock in the morning to ask us to sit here any longer.

Mr. COCHRANE. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. COCHRANE moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will we take up the same thing on Monday?

Mr. COCHRANE. No, the Grain Bill will be up on Monday, and other government Bills, and then estimates of the Department of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.58 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 26, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

EDUCATIONAL BILLS.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I wish to call attention to two Private Bills, No. 68 and 69, relating to Queen's University, Kingston. These are both educational Bills and I think properly belong to the province of Ontario. It would be well to refer them to the Minister of Justice before proceeding with them.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou) moved the adjournment of the House in order to discuss the rules of the National Rifle Association and their effect on the status of Canadian riflemen competing at Bisley.

He said: The matter to which I wish to call the attention of the House is one which I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me is of considerable importance. The distinction which has been won by Canadian riflemen in competition with the other militiamen of the empire at the Bisley meet, particularly during the last five or six years, has attracted a great deal of attention in Canada and elsewhere; and the desirability of having our militiamen expert in rifle shooting, together with the interest that attaches in a sporting way to these very important functions of militiamen, is one in which the House is deeply interested. Any rules or any regulations which might be adopted which would interfere with the success of our riflemen in the future, or prevent them from succeeding in the future, as they have done in the past, is of great consequence to the country. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Hon. S. Hughes) had occasion in 1910 to call the attention of the House to the matter of the rules of the National Rifle Association, and their unreasonable character as they were attempted to be applied that year. As a result of the representations which were made at that time by the then Minister of Militia, through, I assume, the proper channels, the difficulties were removed, and it was hoped an end had been put to any captious quibbling such as existed at that time, or any interference with the full right of Canadian militiamen to use the prescribed arm of the Canadian service in competition in the mother country. My hon. friend's efforts at that time, as I say, were crowned with success. But, unfortunately, the difficulties of which he complained then have been renewed in another form, and a very annoying form, to everybody connected with rifle shooting. Now the original rule of the National Rifle Association, section 98, with regard to the rifles that could be used at Bisley, reads as follows:

> Any 303 rifle as issued by the British government or the government of any British colony or dependency for the arming of the troops, including the Charger Loading M.L.M. and M.L.E. rifles, or similar rifle of private manufacture of bona fide government pattern and bearing the government viewer's mark.

Our riflemen had been using the old British Snider rifle, and sometimes the Martini-Henry, and rifles of that character, until the Ross rifle was adopted by the Canadian government as the service rifle in Canada. Immediately it was adopted our riflemen began to meet with unprecedented success at home, so much so that in 1909 efforts were made in a private way by those connected with the National Rifle Association to endeavour to induce our riflemen, when they went over, to use the English rifle instead. Those efforts failing, it was intimated that steps would be taken, on account of the superiority of the Ross rifle, to prevent its full and free use in subsequent years. As a consequence, in the year 1910, there was promulgated a rule in the following words:

> The council have decided that no service rifle of any pattern other than the official pattern in use by the British army be admitted in the service rifle competitions unless on officially certified specimen of such rifle be deposited with the National Rifle Association at least three months before the commencement of the Bisley meeting and approved for use at the Bisley meeting.

That was the rule to which the present Minister of Militia took exception in this House two years ago. There was an imputation contained in this rule to the effect that the rifle which was being used by the militiamen who went home to shoot was not the regulation rifle, and under that pretext this rule was promulgated by which it was declared that every rifle used there should have a preliminary examination through a sealed pattern having been deposited some months before the meeting at Bisley. The result, as I have said, of the agitation which arose at that time was that the National Rifle Association withdraw the objection and withdrew that rule. The year 1910, was one of great success at Bisley with the Canadian riflemen, and the desire to use the Ross rifle by other people who were competing there became very general, and the agitation in regard to the subject continued. Now, that agitation was not based upon any sound reason. As a matter of fact, the evidence which has been submitted to me in regard to that, shows that the men of the National Rifle Association Council were aminated by peculiar motives. For instance, here is a letter written in August, 1910, by a member of the council :

> Well, I am a member of the N.R.A. Council and my duty is to the N.R.A. competitors. These latter pay some £15,000 a year in entrance fees and win £13,000 in prizes; they pay £2,000 towards expenses.
>
> Naturally they desire conditions to be the same for all.
>
> Our Canadian friends come over, to the tune of about 20 each year, and if they subscribe as do our people they pay £200 a year and ought to win £180. Being picked men they, on equal terms in 1906-7-8, averaged £420 a year winnings and no one grudged it to them.
> In 1909-10 they shot with a new rifle and averaged £825 (alternatively £860) winnings. It is noticed: poorer men grumble: they say that conditions are not equal. They also notice that a very few of our best men use this new rifle and are very successful with it. They grumble still more.

Now, apparently that is the basis of this frank statement made in that letter, which is not an official one, as to the reason of all this nagging and quibbling on the part of the National Rifle Association.

Canadians with the Ross rifle win too much to suit these sportsmen over there. Here is another letter written on the subject in the same year:

Some people are evidently afraid that if the Ross rifle wins many prizes at Bisley it will debar or frighten competitors who have only Lee-Enfields, and who cannot afford a second rifle from attending the meeting. The N.R.A. can scarcely insist on the Canadians using Lee-Enfields in the Kolapore and Mackinnon matches, and if members of the Canadian team are permitted to use Ross rifles in the S. R. matches, the other competitors must also be allowed. But the N.R.A. has to make ends meet financially and the council is seriously frightened at present about the outlook.

Now, these letters contain within themselves the evidence that the exceptions that were being taken by the National Rifle Association to the use of the Ross rifle by Canadians were not based upon any substantial reason, nor indeed could any good reason appear where you had a government arm, properly certified, being deposited for examination by the National Rifle Association people, and when the rules from time immemorial had been such as I have read. But this difficulty continued, this pin-pricking towards our Canadians went on, and consequently in 1911, there was another rule made to the following effect:

It has been decided that in service rifle competitions the rifle shall be the British service rifle, but troops armed with other than the British service rifle may use the rifle with which they are armed. This will admit the use of the Ross rifle to members of the Canadian team.

So apparently there was a desire to lead the public to believe that they were actuated by some generous motives on this subject. But the meaning of that rule was this, that while Canadians could use the Ross rifle, it was not permitted to be used by any other corps or laymen from any other country. Last year our riflemen won great praise and an unprecedented amount of prizes, and easily led the whole empire in the success of their shooting. The grumbling went on, and the pin-pricking continued. I have some evidence under my hand which I am satisfied the House will regard as being of a very surprising character, indicating the attitude which those gentlemen over there have adopted towards our Canadians who shoot at Bisley.

Last autumn the National Rifle Association published a new rule dealing with rifle sights. It was not pretended that there could be anything said with regard to rifles, but the regulations prescribe the conditions with regard to rifle sights. The regulations, which are extremely technical, I need not read in detail to the House, but there is one clause which I will read, because I want to refer to it later on:

A substituted backsight must be attached to the rifle solely by the removal and re-insertion of the method of attachment of the long range aperture backsight used on government rifles, and must be so attached, when used in any competition.

Interpreting the technical language that is contained in this regulation into every day plain English, it means that if you use a backsight on any rifle you must attach it to the rifle in the way in which the back sight is attached to the English rifle, and if you do not attach it in that way you cannot use a rifle with that sight attached to it at all. While on the face of this regulation it would appear there was some issue being raised with regard to sights, as a matter of fact, there is no issue being raised here at all. The despatches with regard to the matter indicate that. You find in the English 'Daily Mail' of January 29, the following:

A special despatch of the Montreal 'Star' from Toronto says that information has reached there that the executive of the National Rifle Association of England has decided to recommend the prohibition of the Ross rifle. On the strength of this statement representations are being made to the government that as the Ross rifle is a service arm of the Canadian militia it should not be debarred.

The 'Star's' despatch intimates that the agitation is due to the success of Canadians at Bisley with the Ross rifle and also to the hostility of the British rifle makers.

It would almost seem to me, without drawing any deductions which are unfair or unwarranted by the evidence, which is available to any one who cares to investigate it, that the statement in that despatch that the hostility of the British rifle-makers was an important element in this pin-pricking and quibbling which have been going on in regard to this matter is absolutely correct. Let us see another despatch which appeared in the Montreal 'Star,' published on February 12:

At the National Rifle Association meeting to-day Lord Cheylesmore read correspondence between the association and Captain Birdwhistle, at Ottawa. Lord Cheylesmore declared that the allegation regarding the prohibition of the use of the Ross rifle was without the slightest foundation. The Council of the National Rifle Association was giving the Dominion authorities opportunity for altering the Sutherland sight, and had accordingly extended the time for submitting these sights till the end of April.

There were no comments from these at the meeting on this statement, although one member remarked that rifle shooting was dying out in England, while in the Dominion it was promoted in every possible way.

I want to say that the statement there attributed to Lord Cheylesmore, that they were giving the Dominion Rifle Association an opportunity of altering the Sutherland sight is absolutely incorrect. There is nothing in connection with any sight involved in these regulations. It is not a matter of sight in any manner whatever. The Sutherland rifle sight is a sight which has been made in Canada, it has been adopted by the Militia Department, and it has turned out to be a great success. But, when I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no possible provision in these regulations that in any way interfere with the use of the Sutherland sight, you will see that I was warranted in my language when I spoke of the Chairman of the National Rifle Association being entirely wrong. The same objection which is urged to the attachment of the Sutherland rifle sight applies to what is known as the B.S.A. No. 9 sight, or No. 7 Martin sight, or Parker sight, or any sight whatever that may be used in England or which has been prescribed by the National Rifle Association rules. The impression has gone abroad in Canada among those who have not looked into this question, that it was something in connection with the Sutherland rifle sight that caused the National Rifle Association to interfere to prevent its use at Bisley. That is not so. They have adopted a resolution which provides a method under which a rifle sight can be attached to the rifle. This is the method which they have adopted at home. They say that unless you attach the rifle sight to the rifle in that way you cannot use the sight. That is the whole proposition, and that is the cause of the quibbling and pin-pricking on the part of the National Rifle Association. This rule was framed especially to bar out the Ross Mark 2 xx, the reason being because the sight when it lies over in a forward position covers in some part the loading part.

If you were to take the B.S.A. sight, the No. 9, the No. 7 Martin, or the Parker, and attach it to the rifle in the same way as the Sutherland rifle sight is attached to the Ross rifle it would clearly cover the loading part in exactly the same way. Any of these sights under the rule are attached to the War Office rifle in the most unserviceable manner, and hung down over the left side. The question is whether the rifle sight would be attached by some contrivance which is peculiar to the purpose on the left side of the rifle or whether it would be where it is now on the Ross rifle. They say that if you attach it as it is now in Canada you cannot shoot with that rifle, that you must attach it the way they attach it to the other rifle which is the most unserviceable way ever dreamed of, and which would expose the sight to the liability of destruction at any time. That is the ground they take, and the Dominion Rifle Association, through its secretary, in calling the attention of the National Rifle Association to this fact pointed out to them that the Ross rifle was the service arm of Canada, that the rule with regard to the sight was especially provided for the purpose of barring the Ross rifle, that there is no question of sight involved at all, that under these circumstances it is most unfair and that, in so far as the Dominion Rifle Association is concerned, it is questionable whether it would send a team to Bisley this year unless this difficulty is removed. Therefore, I submit that this proposition is a very serious one and one that is worthy of the attention of the House, the government, and the country as well. This last quibble, this last pretence, absolutely without any foundation, puts a bar and a ban upon a certain rifle sight, which is acknowledged everywhere to be a first-class rifle sight, in order to debar this rifle from use.

The facts are exactly as I have stated them. Let us see, however, how this new rifle which it is proposed shall be the one and only thing to be used at Bisley is regarded at home. Take the London 'Gazette,' of January 18, 1912; speaking about this very rifle that is prescribed, with the attachment which is said to be essential before you can use the rifle sight, the 'Gazette' says:

> The new rifle that is shortly to be issued to the infantry of the line is summed up as 'a failure from the start' by those who have had an opportunity of examining it or witnessing the tests that have been carried out with it at the School of Musketry at Hythe and elsewhere.

Hon. S. HUGHES (Minister of Militia and Defence). That is not the Ross rifle that is referred to there; that is the new British rifle.

Mr. MACDONALD. I know that. I am speaking now of the British rifle, and this is a statement published in regard to it in the 'Pall Mall Gazette.' It is the new English rifle and the attachment is made obligatory under this new rule:

> It is, admittedly, an improvement upon the short rifle now in use by the troops, with its terribly weak bolt-action, but it lags far behind the rifles in use by almost every continental army, and this despite the time that has been devoted to its consideration.
> The one great thing that can be said in favour of the new rifle is that it will be comparatively cheap to produce, and that much of the machinery laid down for the construction of the present pattern rifle can easily be adapted for its manufacture. Against this has to be set the sportsman's old maxim that a 'poor gun is dear at any price.' It has admittedly a flatter trajectory than the present service rifle, especially when used with the new pointed weapon. Its ranging qualities, however, leave a good deal to be desired, and it is asserted by those who have handled the rifle that the old, long Lee-Enfield had a longer range. At the present time the sighting would likewise appear to be defective, but no doubt this is a matter that can be rectified.

There is a general feeling among the musketry experts of the army that the manufacture of the new rifle should be 'hung up' until it has been further tested, especially in comparison with the Ross rifle of Canada. This is regarded by many well qualified to judge as the very finest all-round small-arms weapon that has ever been evolved, and surprise is expressed upon all hands that the military authorities should seek further for a rifle for our troops, or, with such a rifle already in existence, should proceed to manufacture an admittedly inferior weapon.

One well-known soldier, interviewed upon the subject of the new weapon, summed up the situation rather neatly. 'The rifle is obsolete before it is issued,' he remarked, 'and so soon as the entire army at home and abroad has been armed with it, the fact will be officially recognized.

That is the opinion of a leading organ of public opinion in London of this new English rifle.

We are, therefore, in this position that an absolutely unserviceable method of attaching the rifle-sight to the rifle is made obligatory upon Canadians who go to Bisley to shoot. Under a pretext they attempt to lead the public to believe that there is something the matter with our rifle-sight, and that unless you can attach their rifle-sight to the rifle in the way they prescribe our men cannot shoot at Bisley at all Now, it is impossible on account of the construction of the Ross rifle to attach the Sutherland rifle-sight or any of these other sights in the method prescribed by the National Rifle Association regulations. The evidence to my mind is conclusive that there is another attempt for what reason we may infer one way or the other, on the part of the people of England, and whether they are interested in English small arm factories or not to attempt to exclude Canadians from using the service arm of Canada when shooting at Bisley. They tell the Canadian militiamen that unless they find some scheme of performing the impossible feat of attaching in the manner prescribed the Sutherland rifle sight to the Ross rifle before the first day of April next, the Canadians cannot shoot at Bisley. This is another evidence that the National Rifle Association is not in good faith in the reasons given for its action. I feel sure that the Minister of Militia is very much interested in this question and I hope he will take the matter up. If financial conditions are at the base of the action of the National Rifle Association, it is a question for the War Office to consider in their contributions to that association, and for all the other militia departments of the empire to consider whether or not a trifling matter of finance is going to interfere with the cultivation of rifle shooting amongst the militiamen of the empire. That is a question that ought to be settled very readily. It seems to me that it is very unsportsmanlike for Englishmen to say that because Canadians have won and are winning year after year more and more money at Bisley, that they should take some way to prevent them from so doing. Unless Canadian militiamen are allowed to shoot with the Canadian service arm, the supremacy of which is recognized everywhere, it seems to me the Dominion Rifle Association should take some drastic action to bring the matter to a head. But, this is not the only difficulty in connection with the Bisley rifle shooting that deserves the attention of the Minister of Militia. Every one will remember how proud Canadians were to hear last summer that Canada had won the King's prize. There were at the same time mutterings here and there of the ill-treatment of the Canadians by the officials of the ranges at Bisley, but perhaps in the excitement of the elections these complaints were overlooked. It is, however, a very serious thing for the riflemen of Canada, and I have here a declaration made by Private Clifford who won the King's prize last year at Bisley, and which I shall read for the purpose of explaining to the House and the country the difficulties with which our riflemen were surrounded. This declaration reads:

Dominion of Canada,
Province of Ontario.
To Wit;

In the matter of the treatment of the Canadian rifle team at Bisley at the National Rifle Association meeting in the year 1911.

I, William J. Clifford of the city of Toronto, in the county of York, do solemnly declare;—

1. I attended and competed at the meeting of the National Rifle Association at Bisley in the month of July 1911 as a member of the Canadian Rifle Team.

2. That during the first week of the competition in shooting in a sweepstake competition at two hundred yards, I had five shots on score when I was interrupted and stopped by the range officer who claimed that my position with the butt of the rifle resting on the ground was against the rules. I asked to be allowed to finish my score under protest but the range officer refused and stopped me while he consulted with another range officer and looked up the rules, and after considerable delay and discussion found that my position was quite correct when they allowed me to complete my score. I understand that this was immediately brought to the attention of the executive of the N.R.A. and my position upheld, as it is clearly defined and allowed by the rules and the executive promised that such interference would not be allowed again.

3. That notwithstanding the above I was afterwards several times interfered with and stopped and delayed in my shooting during the meeting on account of the position of my rifle, which was clearly allowed by the rules and upheld by the executive.

4. That during the second week of the competition at the six hundred yards range of the King's match my register keeper in the middle of my score and while I was aiming pulled my arm and stopped me from shooting, claiming that my position was not allowed by the rules. I had been interfered with so much previous to this on that account that I had the exact number of the rule in my mind ready for the occasion, so I referred him to the exact number and as ordered by him waited, he looked it up, when he had looked it up and found that I was right he gave me instructions to carry on which I then did without further delay and fired well within the time limit allowed from the time I was told to shoot. Upon my firing and making the bull's eyes the register keeper scored it in the usual way on the block board but one Major Silverthorne, a range or executive officer who had been standing by took the chalk and scored out the bull's eye on the blackboard saying that he would not allow that bull's eye as it was not fired within the time limit. He had counted the time which I had been prevented by the register keeper from shooting while looking up the rules which I explained to him could not be counted and also that the register keeper had no right to pull my sleeve or interfere with me in the act of aiming which the register keeper denied but which my two competitors in their statements to Major Silverthorne bore out and for their pains were told to mind their own business. The bull's eye was not at that time allowed to me and Major Silverthorne said that I was on his butt all day and threatened that he would watch and catch me yet. Under the circumstances I finished my score with an outer and the bull's eye that had been scratched off was afterwards allowed me.

5. When I shot the next range of the King's 500 yards this Major Silverthorne was waiting behind my target for me to come up. When I was shooting my score he sat behind me with his watch out and timed every shot I fired.

6. At the next range 200 yards he was right after me and repeated his actions of previous ranges.

7. I understand that the adjutant of the Canadian team put in a protest against the treatment I had received at the 600 yard butt and the executive of the N.R.A. said that they would look into the matter again.

8. During the second stage of the King's match this same Major Silverthorne hovered as closely behind me at each range during the whole shoot, although he was without his official badge on his arm, and I and the Canadian competitors were of the opinion that he was there officiously and not officially but had been relieved from duty.

9. During the whole of my shooting in the first and second stages of the King's, Major Silverthorne watched and timed me and appeared to entirely neglect the other competitors in the neighbourhood, although some of them took more time to shoot each shot than double that taken by me.

10. It appeared to me that this Major Silverthorne and a number of the range officers were watching the Canadians much more closely than the other competitors (in fact almost entirely) and interfering with our shooting unduly from time to time.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

Declared before me at the city of Toronto in the county of York this 23rd day of February, A.D. 1912.

J. P. WHITE.

W. J. CLIFFORD.

I have no less than five other affidavits corroborative of this story. I do not want to take up the time of the House further than to make clear that these complaints are not made in any captious way, but are made under oath. Here is a declaration made under oath by Mr. Charles D. Spittal, of the city of Ottawa:

I, Charles D. Spittal, of the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, do solemnly declare:—

1. I am a commissioned officer in the Canadian Army Service Corps, was a member of the Canadian Rifle Team of 1911, which attended and competed at the annual meeting of The National Rifle Association at Bisley in the month of July, 1911.

2. As I had had previous experience in the way of unnecessary interference by officious range officers, I went to the adjutant of the team, before the commencement of the meeting, and asked him to go to the National Rifle Association officials and have a perfect understanding in regard to the matter of the shooting position assumed by some of the Canadians and undue interference on the part of their range officers; I also asked him to make sure that said range officers were made perfectly acquainted with the rules and regulations. I understand he went to the National Rifle Association people; however he came to me later and said he had settled the matter and that there would be no trouble this time. I informed the other members of the team, and we were all delighted to know that it would be plain sailing.

3. The meeting had only commenced when different members of the team began to complain about interference, and I did my utmost to adjust matters by informing the adjutant and requesting him to see to it further. Nevertheless, the interference occurred right along at intervals, and the most glaring offence happened when Private Clifford was shooting at the 600 yards range in His Majesty the King's match. He was making a good score when the register keeper interrupted him, and by using physical force prevented him from firing his next shot. Clifford thereupon told him to look up rule 40 and he would see that his position was legitimate. This argument took up more than 45 seconds (the time allowed a competitor to fire each shot) and when the register keeper was satisfied that Clifford was right, he allowed him to proceed, but a certain Major Silverthorne, the executive officer of the Century Ranges, came up to the score board and crossed out the bull's eye which Clifford had made, claiming that he had exceeded the time limit. Clifford very politely informed him that he could not shoot and argue at the same time, but Silverthorne would not listen to reason, and partly lost control of his temper with other competitors who endeavoured to explain. He afterwards allowed the bull's eye but, looking at Clifford's ticket said 'Never mind young man, you will be on this range all day, and I will look after you.'

4. After the above occurrence I again requested the adjutant to make another complaint, which I understand he did. During the day I paid particular attention to what was going on while Clifford was shooting, and again at the 500 yards range Major Silverthorne appeared, brought a chair and seated himself directly behind Clifford with his watch in his hand, evidently timing his shots. Clifford had four bull's eyes on score when several members of the National Rifle Association council came along. I could hear Major Silverthorne telling them of the trouble with Clifford at the 600 yards range, and he drew their attention to his shooting position, whereupon they all gathered about him on both sides while he was actually shooting. For this shot he scored a magpie. I thought this was really persecution, and when Clifford arose I shouted to him 'Hail, hail, the gang's all here'. Silverthorne looked at me with a scowl, and came over my way to give some orders to some soldiers who were beside me, but the sergeant in charge informed him that they were not under his charge; he turned, then some one laughed audibly, and then he came back towards me with a wild look in his face and asked me to tell him what remark he heard. I politely told him that I did not have his ears on my head and could not say what he might have heard. We had quite a set-to, and for this he followed me up until it came to my turn to shoot. When I took my position he brought a chair, seated himself and took out his watch and stayed there until I had finished.

4. That, during the Kolapore Cup match, I was a coach; upon the commencement of firing Major Silverthorne brought his chair and took up a position immediately to the left of Corporal Mortimer. Another range officer was with him. Mortimer called me and complained about these range officers talking and commenting upon his position, and asked me to have them removed. I then went to Silverthorne and told him that their conversation was bothering the competitors and requested them to move a little farther away. He replied that I should not trouble myself, that he was alright there. Later on Mortimer again complained and the adjutant requested him to move.

5. That, when the final stage of the King's match was reached, Major Burland and I proceeded to the 1,000 yards range and took up a position behind private Clifford, actually prepared to fight any one who interfered or attempted to interfere with him, as the situation has become so desperate, and unsatisfactory from a Canadian point of view. It was quite apparent that there was a dead-set against the Canadians, and I did not see, nor did not hear of, a British competitor being interfered with.

I have declarations of a similar character made by Mr. H. R. Roberts, of the city of Toronto, Mr. Bayles, of the city of Toronto, and Mr. George Mortimer, of Quebec, all well-known rifle shots, who were at Bisley last year. When the facts were called to my attention, I could hardly believe the conditions to be as they are; but the evidence is overwhelming that for some reason the officials of the National Rifle Association have made a dead-set against Canadians in this matter of rifle shooting. The statements under oath showing the unfair treatment accorded to the Canadian who had the distinction of winning the King's prize must have caused a feeling of resentment on the part of every one in Canada interested in this matter. When we realize that year after year, by petty quibbles and pin-pricks which have no merit whatever, the association has been attempting to prevent the use at the Bisley meet of the Canadian service arm, which is conceded by public opinion, expressed by the leading newspapers in England, to be the best arm of its kind extant, it does seem incredible that that kind of treatment should be meted out to the greatest colony of the empire. The last treatment accorded to the Sutherland rifle-sight, by which the impression has been attempted to be created that there is something the matter with that sight, was based on actual mis-statements, a method of attachment having been prescribed which the men who made it knew would prevent the sight being attached to the Ross rifle at all. These are conditions which I think warrant me in calling the attention of the House to this matter. I know the interest which the minister takes in rifle shooting. I recall the occasion two years ago when, dealing with a similar rule, which had no foundation in merit, and which was afterwards removed, he addressed the House on the matter; and I would ask him to look into the facts which I have brought to the attention of the House, and to take such steps as are within his power or the power of the Canadian government to see that the rights of Canada in this matter and the rights of the men who go to England to shoot are safeguarded in future. If not, let us have a clear understanding on the matter, and let the Canadian boys not go home, and let it be well understood all over the empire why they do not go.

Hon. SAMUEL HUGHES (Minister of Militia). Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of the discourse of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is not new to the House. For a number of years, ever since the long Ross rifle has attained the high standard of perfection which it has now reached, our riflemen have been subjected at the Bisley and National rifle ranges to such obstruction and annoyance as the hon. member has referred to. In the first place their declaration was that the Ross rifle as shot at Bisley was not the arm with which the Canadian troops were universally armed. Well, Sir, it was pointed out on that occasion that the rifle which the British riflemen used at Bisley was not the arm which was furnished to the British army. The British army is supplied with the short Lee Enfield rifle, and not one weapon of that kind has been fired through the matches at Bisley. We had the short Ross rifle for Canada, many of which were in the hands of our troops, and the disadvantages arising from the use of any short rifle—disadvantages which I shall not enter upon here to-day—were patent, and so our government decided to use the long rifle. When the Canadian riflemen appeared at Bisley with this rifle objection was taken to it. However they fired with it through the matches and came out winners—three years ago. Then the National Rifle Association passed the rule which my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) has referred to, that no rifle other than the recognized arm of Britain—either the long Enfield rifle or the short Enfield rifle—could be used at Bisley unless it had first been submitted to, and had received the approval of, their committee. The object then was patent. After the success of the long Ross rifle three years ago, thousands of these rifles were ordered by the British rifleman as well as riflemen from other colonies. Therefore, something had to be done to stop this sale of Ross rifles to the riflemen of the empire. Accordingly the National Rifle Association issued this order which threw a doubt upon the fact as to whether the Ross rifle would be permitted to be used the following year or not. However, Sir, the Ross rifle was used the following year subject to more or less restrictions on their part. Then came the rule for the next year that none but Canadians could use the Ross rifle; and then, following the great success that has attended the use of the Ross rifle for three years, came the very objectionable treatment of our men at Bisley last year. I shall not go into details of the treatment which our men with the Ross rifle received on the ranges at Bisley during the last three or four years. Let me point out the injustice with which our men on those ranges who adopted what they called the Clifford position were treated. Yet Lord Kitchener himself highly commended the Clifford position inasmuch as it keeps a man's head much closer to the ground in firing than does the ordinary prone position. Lord Roberts, I understand also commended the position, and I know that Lord Grey also sent for Clifford, had him show the position and commended it most highly. Then, Sir, while in the very act of shooting our men have been subjected to all sorts of annoyances, not only over the Clifford position; but again and again remarks have been made by register keepers after a man had made a bull's eye, such as, 'Were you shooting with British or Canadian ammunition?' evidently designed to annoy the rifleman, for any one who is familiar with rifle shooting knows what annoyance it is to have any one whispering and murmuring behind his back, much less interfering with him. The climax has now come in the action of the National Rifle Association. They now propose, Sir, the rule that:

> Except in competitions restricted to 'sights as issued' an additional or substituted backsight may be used provided it complies with all the conditions set out in subsection (e) and that, whether in use or not in use, it does not interfere with the charging of the magazine or the working of the bolt when loading and unloading and that, when not in use, it does not interfere with the use of the leaf backsight, as issued, no part of which may be removed from the rifle.

Now, Sir, the British rifle has a special place where an attachment is made and held by a screw to the side of the barrel but the Canadian has not. Thus you will see that unless this special fixture which is on the British rifle is also on the Canadian rifle, the Canadian rifleman is ruled out. The National Rifle Association therefore, take advantage of that technicality and the Canadian rifle is not to be used. Then section 3 says:

> An additional backsight may be attached to any part of the rifle provided that this be done without alteration of or damage to any part of the rifle.

Now lest we should be able to overcome these technicalities they go on and provide:

> A substituted backsight must be attached to the rifle solely by the removal and re-insertion of the method of attachment of the long range aperture backsight used on government rifle, and must be so attached when used in any competition.

Now, I maintain, Sir, that in so far as the National Rifle Association is concerned their needs would have been equally met by one of two rules; by saying no Ross rifle should be used in the competitions, or that only Lee Enfield rifles should be used in these rifle competitions at Bisley. I am not speaking here on behalf of the Dominion Rifle Association, which has the matter under consideration, but there is a great deal to be said in favour of the contention of my hon. friend, that when the Canadian Government send their men out armed with a certain rifle it does not rest with the National Rifle Association to pretend to define for this country any form of rifle its riflemen shall use so long as they comply with the general requirements of the military sight. We know what is at the bottom of this matter: this is an agitation on the part of the English rifle manufacturers. A few years ago five thousand Ross rifles were ordered in less than two days on the ranges and the English manufacturers stood aghast. Later the order came out cancelling the use of any rifle excepting under the conditions I have referred to, and then the story went abroad that the Ross rifle could not be used at all. Accordingly all these orders were cancelled. because between the 1st of April and the time of shooting one could not possibly manufacture such a number of rifles in time for the competitions; the thing is an absolute impossibility. In other words it is practically prohibitive for the Ross rifle. But that rifle has attained the proud position of being recognized not only in Canada but the world over, as the best military rifle to be found anywhere today, has caused the British government to take action, and for a number of years they have been perfecting the rifle which my hon. friend referred to in the extract which he read from the 'Pall Mall Gazette' of London, the extract which I also have before me, where they demand that the Ross rifle shall be used by British troops. I might say incidentally, in passing, that the colonies, so far as I can learn, have not been consulted directly or indirectly in regard to the issue of this new British rifle. For years not only Canadians, but riflemen the British Empire over have demanded that the calibre of the Ross rifle shall be reduced down from ·303 to ·280, or even less. The British government, we understand, although we have no official authority yet, are reducing it down to ·276 and are changing the weapon in many ways. As this article quoted says:

The rifle in advance is condemned.

As the article which has been quoted says the rifle is condemned in advance. While in Washington last winter to my surprise I learned all the details of the new British rifle. In Germany this summer, in conversation with German officers, I learned the details of the new British rifle. I visited Great Britain and consulted the authorities there, but could learn nothing whatever of the new British rifle, it was an absolute secret in England six months after the United States officers could tell me all about it. That is a strange way to treat those of us in the colonies who are interested in military affairs.

In order to get over the difficulties in the way of young British soldiers or soldiers from other colonies who naturally felt handicapped in using their obsolete Lee-Enfields as compared with the long Ross rifle, the Canadian government have offered to loan to the British National Rifle Association without charge any number of rifles they may wish, up to 10,000 if they desire them, for this competition. So far there has been no acceptance of the offer.

It is unnecessary to go further into the rifle-sight, that matter is being considered by the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association. It has only recently been brought to my attention.

Mr. MACDONALD. Does the minister agree in my statement that there can be no possible imputation against the Sutherland rifle-sight?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is not the Sutherland rifle-sight that is concerned; it is any sight. I may explain the matter. The British rear aperture sight is attached on the side of the rifle, the Ross rear aperture sight is attached to a bridge which is used also as a clip loader, attached across the bridge of the rifle. All you have to do with the Ross rifle is to remove a pin holding the back sight in the middle position, take off the back-sight and move it back to the rear. The one sight does. With the British rifle they must have two sights, when they use the rear aperture sight they must use a second sight which is attached to the screw-hole on the sight; a very awkward thing, much more awkward than if it were attached to the bridge as we attach it. I maintain that of the two the Ross rifle position is much better. It is true that when the Sutherland rifle-sight is turned down the end projects over the end of the receiver, but that is a mere detail, and the point is taken advantage of in order to bar out our rifle. This was recognized by British riflemen who have pointed out to me again and again that the whole question is a financial one on the part of these rifle companies and the riflemen of the old country feel handicapped in having to use their obsolete British rifles as against the Ross, and I do trust that the offer of the Canadian people to loan them 10,000 of our long Ross rifles, which will place them on a par with our boys, will be accepted, because there is no doubt that men shooting with the Ross rifle have a great advantage over men shooting with the Lee-Enfield.

Mr. NORTHRUP. After listening carefully to the remarks of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) I must confess that I was unable to hear one word that would show any justification for holding up the House during this discussion unless it be the urgent need of advertisement for the Sutherland sight or the Ross rifle. I would join my hon. friend in one respect and ask the Minister of Militia when making his appeal to the Home authorities to do one further thing, to take steps not merely to protect the rights of our marksmen in the old country but also—and I make this request in all sincerity—to take the necessary and proper steps to protect the reputation of Canada, which, rightly or wrongly, has suffered very much in the old country owing to the conduct of some people in connection with the use of the Ross rifle at the Bisley ranges. I am not here to make charges, I am here to state facts and I state that not only in England but in Canada there are a great many people who very gravely doubt the truth of a certificate given by the late Minister of Militia at a time when a question was raised on the Bisley range as to the use of the Ross rifle, and I venture to think if some of the marksmen from Canada who have been interfered with, as apparently they have been from the declarations read, could investigate to the bottom of their troubles, they would find in all probability that the reason they were interfered with was the want of confidence on the part of people in the old country in the honesty of Canadians in using the particular Ross rifle they were then using and representing it as the service rifle in use in Canada. The Minister of Militia says that the Ross rifle, is the noblest arm this world has ever seen, and I am not ready at this moment to contradict him—but he must remember that he used almost the same language in describing the primitive Ross rifle which was so hopelessly stupidly conceived that the Militia Council declined to receive it until five or six changes had been made, and although it was foisted on the country at an enormous expense, some $600,000 before 30 of them were delivered to the militia, 90 changes had to be made before it could be accepted. The Ross rifle that is being used at Bisley is a long barrelled rifle. There is one rifle called the Ross rifle with a long barrel and another with a short barrel. It was stated in England and I believe in Canada that there were practically no Ross rifles in use in Canada of the style then used on the Bisley ranges. There were Ross rifles with short barrels but the great advantage of the Ross rifle, as has always been alleged in this House and in the investigations was its lightness, whereas the rifle for target practice was too heavy to be an effective service rifle, and I am informed that it was not the service rifle in Canada, that our troops were not armed with it, that it was not known in Canada unless possibly a favoured individual here or there had been presented with one. Under those circumstances a question arose at Bisley as to whether Canada would be allowed to shoot with a rifle that might not comply with the requirement that it should be a service rifle. A certificate was given by Sir Frederick Borden, then Minister of Militia for Canada over his own signature that the rifle used there, the long-barrelled Ross rifle, was the service rifle used in Canada. I am appealing to the Minister of Militia to take the trouble to ascertain and give the House a statement showing how many rifles of that character were purchased and how many had been distributed to the militia of Canada at that date. That information might go a long way towards removing a very serious suspicion both in England and Canada that the so-called Ross rifle used at Bisley, while certainly manufactured by the Ross Rifle Company, and while no doubt an excellent rifle as proved by its shooting, was not a rifle that should be used there by honest competitors because it was not a service rifle. I have not a word to say against this rifle which has been so well advertised, but I would like for the reputation of Canada that these grievances of militiamen in Canada should be thoroughly investigated, and the suspicions cleared away by seeing whether or not the long barrelled rifle manufactured by the Ross Rifle Company was then or is now in the hands of the militia of Canada.

Mr. HUGH CLARK (North Bruce). My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has referred to the mutterings that were wafted across the water some time ago, with respect to undue interference on the part of range officers with Canadian riflemen. He has quoted affidavits and declarations made by Canadian riflemen which prove that there was such interference. The Minister of Militia I think has corroborated this. The member for Pictou is privileged to read these affidavits in this House. The Ottawa 'Journal', on the other hand, not long ago published an article in which it gave voice to these mutterings of the annoyances and penalties that were imposed by these range officers on Canadian riflemen. As a result of that, a libel action has been entered against the Ottawa 'Journal' which must be brought in England, and which is bound to be an exceedingly expensive piece of litigation for the Ottawa 'Journal', whether it wins or loses. That article was written in good faith, and was written on behalf of Canadian riflemen. It was merely giving voice to the charges that have been made to-day by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). If the Minister of Militia believes that these charges are well founded, then I think that the Department of Militia ought to come to the assistance and defence of the Ottawa 'Journal;' at any rate, if the Militia Department is not able to do that, I believe the Ottawa 'Journal' should receive tangible and substantial sympathy and support from the Dominion Rifle Association.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not know to what my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup) refers in his remarks when he repeats a statement that the rifle was rejected, after I gave my certificate in its favour. There is not a tittle of fact in the statement to which the hon. gentleman refers. I was not present at the time the committee first adopted the rifle. At that time I was investigating the conditions of the rifle at my own expense, in every arsenal in the United States of America, and getting information, and I have defended the rifle as an old and straight arm through all these years; until we find almost every gentleman in almost every country, who formerly opposed the principle and the use of the Ross rifle, has been forced by the sheer success of that rifle, to bow to the inevitable, and to acknowledge that the rifle has proven itself the best weapon in the world. As to the question of the honesty of the Canadian government, I have nothing to say. But I do know, that whether the certificate was given or was not given, by my predecessor in office, at that very moment, there were 1,000 of these rifles ordered, and they were nearly all in the hands of volunteers in Canada. I want to point out that that number is fifty per cent higher proportion in the hands of volunteers in Canada, considering the number of troops we have, and the number of volunteers, than 10,000 would be in the hands of British soldiers, and 1,000 is the usual number put into the hands of British soldiers to test a new rifle. The libel suit against the 'Ottawa Journal' is a matter with which I have nothing to do, either in my personal capacity, or as Minister of Militia, or as president of the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association. I may point out that the libel suit is brought by reason of one statement in the 'Ottawa Journal' that Major Silverthorne was suspended. Now I know as a matter of fact, it was current rumour all over the range that he was suspended for his conduct in interfering, and I have no hesitation in saying here, as I would tell Major Silverthorne to his face, that if he was not suspended he should have been, for his action towards our riflemen on that occasion in Bisley. The British riflemen do not wish to use their own rifle, and I do not blame them a particle for not wishing to use the Lee-Enfield rifle. It is true that there was a public offer made to these people of the loan of 10,000 rifles, if they wanted 20,000 I could furnish them, of these long Ross rifles, so that the British riflemen may have an opportunity of competing in the coming matches, and in order that Canadian boys in future may be armed with the Ross rifle, and that there may be no more friction in the matter. For unless this is done, in the first place, I doubt if the association will send them over again, and in the second place, I doubt if the riflemen will go.

Mr. MACDONALD. Notwithstanding the doubts from my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup), as to the wisdom of my bringing this matter before the House this afternoon, I have no apology to make for my remarks or for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. My hon. friend from Hastings seems to be in bad humour this afternoon, and some choleric movement has induced him to take a curious position in this matter. He suggests a doubt as to the accuracy of the statement when the Minister of Militia, in 1910, sent the certificate home to England in regard to the rifle that was being used by the men who shot at Bisley. But as a matter of fact, as the present Minister of Militia has pointed out, not only was this arm used at that time in great numbers among the militiamen of this country, but the Militia Orders and Minutes of those dates will show conclusively that at a period long anterior to the rising of this issue by the National Rifle Association, that particular arm had been prescribed as the service arm of the Canadian militia. My hon. friend tells us that Private Clifford, the winner of the King's prize, an act which won him great distinction, has no ground of complaint, because Major Silverthorne or some other gentleman had a right to interfere with him when he was shooting, and suspected he was using a rifle that was not of the prescribed pattern. Complaint was made by Private Clifford in 1911, of his treatment by the authorities in England, a period long after the time when Major Silverthorne or any other gentleman had expressed any doubts whether these gentlemen were using the prescribed Canadian rifle in the old country. It does seem to me that this House and the country generally have every right to treat with absolute credence, and give full weight to, the statements made by the gentlemen whose affidavits I have read. They are men of standing in this country, who are engaged in rifle shooting as a part of their business as militiamen, men whose words can be accepted. When this evidence was first submitted to me I did not know that any issue had been raised in a libel suit. I do not know what the libel suit is about. But I say that when you have Canadians who have done honour and have brought credit upon this country as militiamen abroad, and when you find men making statements as these men have made, this parliament would be recreant to its duty if it did not take notice of it. I hope the minister will take steps to see that the rights of Canadians in this regard are vindicated.

CHANGING NAMES OF POST OFFICES.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I desire to ask the Postmaster General with regard to a report appearing in the press that the name of the Post Office at Stony Point has been changed to Pointe à la Roche, and that the names of River Canard and Belle River, in my county, have been changed.

Mr. PELLETIER. This is a matter of which I would like to have some notice.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). I will let it stand.

Mr. PELLETIER. I may tell my hon. friend that there is not a word of truth in what the 'Globe' said. Let him renew his question to-morrow.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Will the hon. Postmaster General answer to-morrow in regard to this matter ?

Mr. PELLETIER. Certainly. I would have answered to-day if the hon. member for Algoma had been allowed to go on.

MANITOBA BOUNDARY EXTENSION.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. May I ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) if he will give me his attention for one moment ? I am thankful to him for the information which he has sent over to me with regard to the resolution on the Manitoba boundary. I would have expected that we should have also had a statement of the number of acres of swamp land which had been dedicated to Manitoba.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I shall have pleasure in bringing that down.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

DISMISSALS.

Mr. KYTE:

1. Was Laurence G. Powers, superintendent of the lobster hatchery at Arichat, N.S., dismissed?
2. If so, what were the charges alleged against him, and who made them?

THE GRAIN ACT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) respecting grain.—Mr. Foster (North Toronto).

On section 124—hospital elevators,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The first subsection provides that a hospital elevator shall be situated only at a terminal point. There does not seem to be any reason for that limitation. A hospital elevator is for the treatment of sick grain, and if at any time large storage elevators are erected at Winnipeg or in the interior, it will be economical to have the hospital elevator nearer to the central point where grain is brought for large storage purposes and have it treated there. I propose, therefore, to strike out these words, so that the subsection will read as follows:

There may be such number of hospital elevators as may be determined by the board, which shall be governed by such regulations and restrictions as are imposed by the board.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 99,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). In subsection 3, providing that no grain shall be allowed to pass inspection except on a lower grade, I propose to add, 'subject, nevertheless, to the provisions of section 99 and' before the words 'subsection 5 of section 115.'

Mr. OLIVER. I do not suppose it is the intention of the minister to meet the point I raised in the former discussion of this section? If it is, I do not think these words meet it.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They are not for that purpose. This seems to be a sort of governing clause, and I wanted section 99 included.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection to that, but I would like to ask if the minister has considered the point I raised as to the necessity of providing specifically that sound grain shall not be mixed with sick grain in the hospital elevators?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have gone over that carefully with the officers of the department, and I have had the advantage of having Mr. Horne here for a few days, during which I have gone over the matter with him, and it does not seem to me that it would be fair to do that with reference to the hospital elevator, if you wish to nurture and keep up an institution of that kind. In a time of great fatality and wide sickness, a hospital elevator has a great deal to do. Grain may come in, part of which is sound and part being mixed with oats or seeds, and this will be cleaned and separated. Then, when there is not this large amount of diseased or mixed grain to be treated, if you took away the storage privilege from these hospital elevators, they would be left bare of work, and it would be almost impossible to keep them in operation from year to year.

Mr. OLIVER. That hardly is the point. The hon. minister is arguing as though the contention were that good grain should not be stored in the hospital elevator. That is not the contention. The contention is that there should be a specific provision that sound grain should not be mixed with unsound grain in the hospital elevator. If the intention is to prevent such mixing of sound with unsound grain, then as I read the section it would be desirable, to say the least, that that idea should be more clearly expressed. If, of course, it is the idea to permit the mixing of sound and unsound grain in an hospital elevator, then the section is all right as it is.

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto). As a matter of fact in the hospital elevator at Fort William no mixing has been done.

Mr. OLIVER. I assume that.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). And it has been carried on in that way because supposed to be contrary to the provisions of the Grain Act.

In no case, whether in a terminal elevator in the western inspection division or in a public elevator in the eastern inspection division, shall grain of different grades be mixed together while in store.

Now this is subsection 8 of section 126 and it refers to a terminal elevator. Well the hospital elevator is a terminal elevator.

Mr. OLIVER. When you read subsection 3 of section 124, which governs the action of a hospital elevator, in my reading it would permit of grain being mixed as a necessity of the operation of the elevator.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is in the second part of the subsection?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That seems to me to refer to the shipping out of the elevator.

Mr. OLIVER. So it does.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). For instance suppose you should take any grain there which was of a rejected grade, and that grain is treated in the elevator and is made into a good grade. What reason in the world is there, that when it is so treated and renovated it should not get the grade upon inspection?

Mr. OLIVER. No reason whatever.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is what it is meant to do, it seems to me.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the minister say specifically that it is the intention to prevent the mixing of sound grain with unsound grain in the hospital elevator?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is prohibited to my mind at the present time.

Section as amended, agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER North Toronto). Now clause 2, the interpretation clause, will have to be amended in order to bring it into accord:

'Hospital elevator' includes every elevator or warehouse situated at a terminal point——

I move to amend that by striking out the words, 'situated at a terminal point.'

Section as amended, agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Now come back to section 92 which, after the amendment in section 124 needs to be amended also. I propose to drop the words from the beginning to the end of the word 'elevators' in the seventh line and commence the section with the words:

All grain shipped——

Then drop the words:

For eastern points.

The rest of the section remains. I think that makes still more clear the point we spoke of a moment ago.

Section as amended, agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. While you are on this section there is a case which has been brought to our attention by wire, and perhaps the minister would not object to considering it in connection with section 91, at least I think that is where it would properly come in. The telegram to which I refer is as follows:

Car 142982 loaded with wheat was inspected at Winnipeg, February 8, and unloaded at Fort William February 12. Grade lowered two grades causing loss of 20 cents per bushel to shipper without notifying shipper or inspection department at Winnipeg of such change. Grain Act should provide some protection in such cases and shippers be given an opportunity to dispose of grain before identity is lost.

(Sgd.) RANDALL, GEE & MITCHELL, LTD.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am informed that that occurred from mistake. The Canadian Pacific railway clerk made it No. 6 instead of No. 4, but the error was detected and the Canadian Pacific railway has arranged the matter.

Mr. OLIVER. That incident has been dealt with?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to delay the committee, but I thought it might be desirable to make such provision as is suggested in this telegram, that in such case the car should be held for some portion of time, the shipper should be notified so that he might make other disposition of the car before the identity of the grain was lost.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am informed that has always been done, and the grain either turned into a special bin or some other provision made for it.

Mr. OLIVER. Then the identity of the carload is preserved until the question is settled?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The identity is maintained until an arrangement has been made and a settlement reached. However, I will look into the matter and see if anything is necessary to be done.

On section 145,—hospital elevators.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I move to amend this by striking out in line 29 the words 'at the same terminal point.'

Mr. ROBB. How will the minister prevent the grain inspector from running that grain back to an elevator west of the point where he found it out of condition. It should be so arranged that the grain would at least work its way towards the seaboard.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If for any reason it is not possible to treat it at an elevator in its course of transport, why should it not be sent back? No inspector would do that if it could be avoided.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 150,—seed elevators, &c.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The millers have requested to be placed on the same footing as seed elevator men in regard to elevators used solely in connection with their business. I, therefore, move the following as section 150a:

On application by the owner of an elevator which is part of a plant engaged in the manufacture of grain products in the western division stating that he does not wish to engage in the business of storing grain and that such elevator will only be used for the storage of grain owned by the said applicant and used in the process of the manufacture of such products, the board may exempt such elevator from that part of the Act which relates to the storage of grain for the public. The license issued shall be a special license for such class of elevator and the bond required, if any, shall be at the discretion of the board.

2. Any owner who violates the conditions under which such license is issued shall be guilty of an infraction of this Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that is quite clear in providing that it is intended to apply only to elevators at the point where the mill is situated.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Then what would be the objection ?

Mr. OLIVER. The mill for its own special purposes gets all the general protection and advantage that is given the elevator for the general and public good. The mill would be able to demand the right to erect an elevator for its own private purposes on railroad property, and would get for its own private purposes all that protection and special legislation which is only justifiable when it is absolutely for the benefit of the public.

Mr. TURRIFF. Then, too, all the big milling companies buy millions of bushels of wheat which they do not grind. They all have their system of analysing wheat and sell all wheat which, while it may grade well, does not make good flour. If they are going to engage in that business I do not see why they should not have a different license.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The application was made simply for the elevator run in connection with the mill itself. Perhaps this would define it:

On application by the owner of an elevator which is connected with and part of——

Section as amended, agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will these people be under bond the same as in any other elevator?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Has any organization been asking for this?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The Dominion Millers' Association have been asking for it.

Mr. KNOWLES. Who are they?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They are Dominion millers, a very important organization.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does it include the western millers in such towns as Saskatoon and Calgary? The Dominion Millers' Association is a very important organization spread all over the country.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I only know it by the name of its organization. They appeared before me, through their officers, at the same time that the Grain Growers' Association were here. I move that section 121 be adopted. This is one of the clauses that stood.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I think there was a very special point in connection with this clause when it was allowed to stand. Would the minister be good enough to tell us why he has come to the conclusion that it ought to be adopted in its present form? The minister's attention was called to the fact that there is a very radical difference between this clause and a similar clause in Bill (Q) of last year. According to this Bill certain privileges are to be given to the operators of terminal elevators east of Fort William and Port Arthur, in the eastern inspection division, that are not to be given to the operators of terminals in the western inspection division. If it is any disadvantage to mix grain and depreciate grades thereby in the terminals in the western inspection division, why should that privilege be given to the operators of terminals east of the western inspection division? It is a very serious proposition that the minister asks us to adopt. He ought to be able to give us some satisfactory reason why that special privilege should be given to operators of terminals further east than the western inspection division.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What privileges does my hon. friend refer to?

Mr. NEELY. If he has given this matter enough consideration to ask that this section be adopted as it stands, the minister will understand the difference there is between this clause and a similar clause of Bill (Q) which was before the House last year. Section 121 reads:

In sections 122, and 125 to 150, both inclusive, unless the context otherwise requires.

And so on. Sections 123 and 124 apply only to terminals operating in the western inspection division. The minister, by reading sections 123 and 124, will see that terminal elevator operators under very heavy penalties are prevented from doing certain things.

No person owning, managing, operating or otherwise interested in any terminal elevator shall buy or sell grain at any point in the western inspection division.

And so on. Penalties are provided for the violation of this provision. Why should that section apply to operators of terminals in the western and not to operators of terminals in the eastern inspection division? In the second place, the minister must have had some reason for making this change. At whose instance was it done? The same officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce undoubtedly assisted in the preparing of this legislation as assisted in the preparation of Bill (Q) last year. If there is a radical change of this kind between the two Bills it must have been at somebody's suggestion, on somebody's initiative. On whose initiative? The minister's? If not the minister's, then whose? That is information that we are entitled to when we come to this very important change from the Bill of last year.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). So far as I am informed section 121 is the same as that in Bill (Q) that was passed by the Senate and that was introduced into this House last year.

Mr. NEELY. Has the minister not a copy of Bill (Q) in his possession, because I can read him section 121 from Bill (Q). It says:

In the following sections of this Act, from section 122 to section 143, both inclusive.

Section 121 in this Bill omits sections 123 and 124.

On section 122—terminal, public and hospital elevators,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). One clause of this section provides that the board may revoke a license upon summary proceedings before the board. It gives an appeal to the Governor in Council, and it says that pending the hearing of that appeal the revocation of the license shall continue in force. That seems not only a drastic interference with business, but it may possibly lead to dislocation and confusion in the grain transport, because pending the decision on the appeal everything is stopped on the elevator. I propose to substitute for that provision the following as subsection 4:

Upon complaint by any person in writing under oath, setting forth the alleged particular violation of law, rule or regulation, the board shall forthwith examine into such complaint, and may require such proof as seems necessary, and if the allegations made are proved to the satisfaction of the board, it may recommend to the Governor in Council the revocation of such license, accompanying such recommendation by the evidence on which it is based, and the Governor in Council may thereupon, in his discretion, revoke such license.

Thus, pending a decision by the Governor in Council, the business of the elevator will not be interfered with. We suppose that the board would probably be right, but if there is an appeal provided, it implies that the board may make a mistake, and until final judgment is given and the revocation confirmed, business may be carried on as usual.

Mr. NEELY. This is one more absurdity that we are discovering as we go along in some of the most important working sections of this Bill. One is inclined to ask what authority and power this board is really going to have under the provisions of the Bill. Now, we have what is supposed to be a board of experts on the ground, and that board is asked to make an expert investigation into a charge laid against the operations of a terminal elevator, and after a most thorough investigation they render their decision, saying if the charge is well founded, that the license should be revoked. Surely that is not a case for hanging up the operations of the board or any one else by reference to the Governor in Council. We quite understand that the decision of the board holds good until the further decision of the Governor in Council is obtained, but in the name of common sense why should there be any reconsideration of the decision of the board. They are on the ground, they have the authority, they have everything that will enable them to make a thorough and first-hand examination into the facts of the case.

They have the witnesses before them, and the hearing of evidence at first hand gives the man who is the judge, an advantage in deciding whether or not a witness is telling the truth. It appears to me that every argument is against any appeal from the minister to the Governor in Council. The fact that this provision is similar to the one in Bill Q of last year does not affect the argument. That Bill, with the exception of two or three clauses, was not considered either by this House or by the Senate. If the license of a terminal warehouse is revoked by the board, I think their decision should stand as final. I am free to say that I do not like the appearance of this proposition at all. If this board are to be free and independent to do what they think is right in every instance, I think their judgment should be untrammelled. If the matter is to be referred to the minister, there might be instances in which the minister might consider it advisable to give special consideration, where an independent board might think otherwise. For these reasons I am opposed to this provision.

Mr. TURRIFF. If the board decides that any elevator has been guilty of wrongdoing, there is very little doubt that it has. Take the case of an elevator at Fort William which got into trouble a couple of years ago, and was heavily fined for wrong-doing. Should that elevator in a similar case be allowed to go on, and do the same sort of business after the commissioners had found them guilty, until the Governor in Council should go over the evidence? It seems to me that there is no good ground for going beyond the decision of the board of commissioners, who are supposed to be experts, and who ought to be in a better position than the council to come to a just decision on the evidence brought before them.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I suppose that similar reasoning might be applied to upset the present jurisprudence of this and every other British country. Whatever else you may say, a man whose property rights or liberties are at stake has a right to a thorough trial, and I think to a thorough revision of the trial. At the present time there is an appeal from the subject all the way up to the Crown, it may be through half a dozen intermediate processes. This subclause 4 was embodied in Bill Q; and such independent and assiduous consideration as was given to the framing of this Bill and to the basis upon which it is framed, has seldom been given to any Bill that has received the assent of this House. After having gone over the whole subject, the framers of the Bill proposed to give the board the right to revoke the license. Then they evidently felt that that was drastic, and that a man who had a million or a million and a half dollars, and vast business interests which could hardly be weighed and estimated by the amount of fixed capital in the business, ought to have a chance for an appeal, and they provided for an appeal. As the clause stands, I do not think there is any doubt that it does not meet what the business sense of this country would consider to be just and fair. If you are going to allow an appeal at all, surely after the first court has adjudged a man guilty of murder, it is not right to say that you will hang him on the first judgment and then allow him an appeal to a higher court. Let the man have the breath in his body until the final court reviews his case. It is true, this is not a case decapitation or hanging, but it involves a vast amount of money and vast business interests, and in looking to a man's property interests we give him all the protection that the law can give. It seems, therefore, absurd to say that the commission should revoke the license, that is, put the punishment into effect, and then allow an appeal to a higher body. To make this provision reasonable and logical you should knock out the proviso. Then we would come back to where my hon. friend says he stands, and make the commissioners' decision the final judgment of the court from which there would be no appeal. They are on the ground, they have heard the evidence, they are the men who ought to make the judgment, and it should not be appealed from. The same course of argument could be made with reference to all appeals. The first court has the atmosphere of the case, it has the evidence, it has looked into the eyes, and seen the demeanour of the witnesses; and yet we do allow appeals. For my hon. friend and myself, who have not a million dollars or a great interest in an elevator, it is easy to say, let the first judgment take off the man's head or take away his property rights; but if he or I were in the position of the elevator man, with all the interests involved and the business responsibilities that he has, we would be disposed to take the other argument and say: Give us a chance for a review; we are not saying anything against these three commissioners, but we are saying that the matter involved is too important; it is not a matter of a hundred or a thousand dollars, but it concerns all we have; therefore give us a chance at least to have the case reviewed by a higher court. I think it would not be reasonable that in giving effect to the verdict, we should stop all operations, and then allow an appeal. If the original decision were set aside, and after a week or a fortnight, or a month, you would say to the elevator man, now start up your business again, it would seem to me that he would have a good claim for damages.

Now on both these counts it seems to me that the proper business view to take is to let this board investigate, and when they have investigated and taken the evidence and all other necessary proceedings, we give a chance to appeal to the next court, and let that court decide whether or not the person adjudged of being guilty in the first instance is, in its opinion to be held guilty and the penalty is to take effect.

Mr. McKENZIE. The minister draws an analogy between appeals in this case and appeals in other courts. But it is well understood and well defined machinery exists in connection with appeals in other courts in many cases, where the rights of the appellee are protected. Is there any machinery provided for an appeal under this Act, defining how it shall be brought about, and so on? What is the procedure under the Bill?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am not a lawyer and, not taking the legal ground, it seems to me to be a very simple and very common-sense business. The commissioners have heard the case and said: Your license is revoked. These gentlemen make their appeal to the Privy Council, and that body calls for and reviews the evidence which has been adduced and the report of the commissioners. It does not need a group of lawyers or a court of justice, or anything of that kind, to carry that simple process to its simple conclusion.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). What objection would there be to substituting an appeal in the ordinary course in our courts instead of to the Governor General in Council.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). In that case there would be very long delay. A matter of this kind, it seems to me, ought to be quickly adjudged. If the license were revoked and an appeal were provided to the judges of our courts, it might take months and months before the revocation became effective, after you had the judgment of the first court against these men, and before you got to the final court, and there is the added expense which is involved. I suppose if the matter went to one court, it could go to another court in the way of further appeal?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the minister in his argument, does not apprehend the situation exactly. This is not a matter simply between the elevator owners and the government, it is a matter between the elevator owner and the people who are storing grain in the elevators, whose business is being handled from the elevator; and the owner of the elevator is there to a certain extent as a trustee under bonds to the government. Therefore it is not a matter of whether he is in any degree breaking the regulations which the government has laid down. That is not the question. The question is, what is he doing with the property of other people, which is contained in his elevator? The section as it stands was not prepared for Bill (No. 32), as I understand the matter, but is part of the existing Grain Act, and has been on the statute-books for some time, at any rate since 1908.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, it has been the law.

Mr. OLIVER. The very purpose of it, in the case of this man who is handling other peoples' property, is that action can be taken on the moment to protect that property. That is the purpose of the section as it stands, and in my judgment, it is desirable that that should continue to be the position.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. At six o'clock I was drawing attention to the proposed amendment to subsection 4 of section 122. The section is taken from the Grain Act as amended in 1908, as a result of careful inquiry by a commission especially appointed to look into that Act. The minister has said that the provision is drastic. It is drastic but it is an extraordinary provision to meet extraordinary cases, and it is not to be presumed that the warehouse commissioner, in whom that authority has heretofore been vested, would exercise it lightly or without due consideration. So I think the minister is taking a doubtful course in the amendment he proposes. It is essential that action should be taken promptly, otherwise the interests of the third parties, innocent parties, might be swept away before anything could be done. Surely it would be safe to entrust to this highly-paid, responsible and competent commission the authority which has heretofore been vested in the warehouse commissioner. While, of course, it is not likely that occasion would arise for the exercise of this drastic provision, it is possible, and the section is intended to meet the extreme and extraordinary cases that might arise. The minister has increased the authority of the Board in the matter of car distribution and it seems to me that their authority in this instance might very well be maintained.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think I said all I have to say before six o'clock. I would point out that under the existing law the right is given to the warehouse commissioner to revoke the license and then there is an appeal to the Governor in Council. The principle of a higher authority is therefore recognized in the old Act. That makes my hon. friend's position different from that of the hon. gentleman who sat by him this afternoon, and who did not want any appeal at all. I think my hon. friend's course is the more reasonable, because he has some regard for the widespread and British idea of having a review of the case from the court of first decision.

Mr. OLIVER. While I put a different line of argument before the committee from that of the hon. member from Humboldt (Mr. Neely), it was not because I disagreed from his view, but because I was arguing for the section as it stood. For my part, I wish to say here that in many cases justice delayed is justice denied.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There are many other cases where justice performed too quickly is the rankest kind of injustice. Lynch law is an example of that, and we get as far away from that in this country as we can. So I will still credit my hon. friend with favouring an appeal. It does not seem to me a sensible thing to stop, say, a seven million bushel elevator on the decision of a board or commission, to hang it up perhaps in the very midst of a busy season, when cars are rushing down, and all the elevator facility possible is requisite; it does not seem to be the sensible way of carrying out the law, if you are going to give an appeal, to stop the whole operation of that immense factory until the appeal is heard. The appeal is heard, it is decided in one way or another. If the appeal is favourably considered, then the court of first instance made an error, and still you have stopped the whole operation of the elevator. But it does not merely take away some of the profits of the elevator company, it inconveniences the whole grain trade of the country to a large extent. A third party comes in there. The man who wants storage, the whole transport business, the people who own the grain that is to be transported—all these come in, and you hold that up before you have had the case finally decided. That, I say, does not appear to me to be a businesslike method. You say, and rightly too, that it is not a matter simply between the elevator man and the commissioners, but that the elevator man has interests in trust, he has the grain in storage. That is just what gives a great deal of force to the legislation as I propose it. He has other people's interests in his hand. If the appeal in the end carries out the decision of the commissioners it is proved that he has been doing what he ought not to have been doing, with property not his own.

But how does the mere revocation of his license make reparation to the man whose properties he has misused? There is other reparation to him. We look for reparation to the man who has been misused, to the penalties attached—the revocation of the license is only one—to the bonds that the elevator company gives, which I am going to make very heavy bonds so as to make that part of the security just as valuable as it can be made. There are securities for reparation to the individual, there is the penalty, which is what you may call a fruitful penalty. The revocation of a license is not a fruitful penalty in the way of restoring rights of which some other person has been defrauded by the elevator man. So I think we are sufficiently safeguarded by those other securities and penalties so far as the interests of the third party are concerned that have been confided to the elevator man. Then again I think there is this in it. This is to be a case which will never occur, it is a penalty which we hope will never be invoked, because we hope there will be no violation which will make it necessary to invoke it. It is an extreme penalty that can be invoked on the elevator company or the warehouseman for any misdirection of his effort and for any violation of the law. The very fact that it is there will prevent the thing being done in a maximum of cases, and maybe in all the cases. There is held out before him the revocation of his license. He does not feel that the penalty is one whit mitigated to himself, he is not encouraged one whit to a violation by the fact that there will be a court of appeal. He does not want to be brought into it at all in that way. It will be just as effective a penalty by having an appeal as it is if there is no appeal. You have it more in the one instance, but it is not a healing penalty in any way by its being immediately inflicted. You cut off a man's head, you revoke his license, you stop the whole business, but there is no fruitfulness in that penalty, you have to look for that in other directions. Why then not go the length of not penalizing the public, of not stopping the operation of a great factor in transport? Why not go that length, and let this alone until the appeal is heard, for it is possible that things will happen during that time.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the very point.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My view is this, that if a man who violates the law knows that the revocation of his license is likely to take place, he will not mix wheat. But suppose he mixes 1,000 bushels, he is liable to a revocation of his license, and the penalty of revocation may be put upon him. Once that issue has been raised, and information has been laid against him, and his case goes before the board, do you suppose that man is going on in the same careless way, or the same wilful way to a second, third, fourth and fifth violation? I think not. I think the tendency will be for him to say: Well, I have been caught once, it is my neglect, I think maybe it is by connivance, maybe it is by wilfulness; I have been caught once, I am not going to put myself in the position to be caught again. It will make him extraordinarily careful, and it will do another thing. The board is there all the time, the officers of the board are there all the time. Here is a violation of the law which they have discovered. Their oversight will be all the more keen and careful, and in both these ways it will operate to make a second violation almost impossible. I think that the whole business, the information laid, the action of the first board, the penalties, the bonds—all those put together seem to make an accumulation of penalties and cause a maximum of carefulness that you will scarcely find in any other legislation we have upon the statute-book. You may say this is extraordinary legislation, and I think we ought to be guided by a common-sense rule in not applying a penalty over and above what is necessary to correct the offence.

Mr. OLIVER. I have been unable to get my idea before the minister. An elevator is full of grain. That grain is worth a great deal more than the elevator. It is worth more than the bonds that the elevator man has given. It belongs to a dozen different men. The elevator man, we will assume, is dishonest. We will assume this to be an extreme case. He is found to be dishonest in some part of his work, in mixing grain, or in selling grain, if you like. A charge is made against him before the board. The board, under the present arrangement, decide that the charge is sustained. At once they may shut down the elevator; that is to say, take control of the elevator. It does not necessarily mean that the elevator will stop; it means that the license will be withdrawn and the board will take the responsibility of handling that elevator and thereby absolutely save the rights of the people who have grain in the elevator. But, as proposed, they can only hear the evidence. The dishonest elevator man has warning. While the case is passing from the board to the Governor in Council and waiting the action of the Governor in Council, the elevator man is still in absolute control of the elevator.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Under supervision.

Mr. OLIVER. Under supervision—and he makes such disposition of the property of others within that elevator as he sees fit while the case is going on. I submit that is not good business and it is not in the public interest, assuming such a case to have occurred. This man is handling a vast amount of property which is not his own, but the property of other people, being of more value than his own property and if he is found to be in the wrong to the extreme degree, it is common sense and plain business that his authority over the property of other people which he is using dishonestly should be turned over to the board and that the responsibility for the exercise of that authority should be assumed by the government through the board.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend's argument would be very strong if it were the case, we will say, of a cashier in a bank who had charge of all the money, documents and securities of the bank.

Mr. OLIVER. The case is very nearly parallel.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will follow that out and see whether it is or not. That cashier is found guilty of having forged a cheque for, we will say, $125. He is brought up on that, you give him his trial and you give him an appeal. You continue him in the office of cashier.

Mr. OLIVER. No, no; it is not done in that way.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). But suppose you did it.

Mr. OLIVER. But you do not; no such thing ever occurred in the history of a bank.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend must allow me to carry out my own reasoning. You keep him in his office of cashier and let him do the business—keep an eye on him as much as you like. It is possible for that man to make away with securities and cash, to get them out of the bank, but it is not the same with the elevator man. The cash with the elevator man is in his elevator —the wheat—every bushel of it is inspected in under grade and not a bushel of it can go out unless it passes the eye of the inspector, the same weight, the same quantity and the same grade. The cash is all kept in the bank. What can the elevator man do with the wheat? He will not burn it, he cannot sell it, he cannot take out of his elevator one single bushel more than the warehouse receipt calls for having reference to the proper numbers in the register and under the supervision of the inspector.

The millions of bushels are kept there, except what goes in the regular way and it can go in no other way. He might steal a little good grain from one bin and put it into another, but that is a trifle in comparison. My hon. friend is not right in saying that should not allow him to continue in operation under supervision because in the meantime he might get away with the goods. He simply cannot get away with the goods.

Section agreed to.

On section 123—buying and selling of grain by owners, &c., of terminal elevators,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I want to add there before the word 'western' in the third line the words 'eastern and'.

On subsection 2,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). After the word 'which' I wish to insert the words 'with the approval of the Governor in Council'.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand my hon. friend is putting the words 'eastern and' before the word 'western' in the third line of the first clause?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). 'Eastern or.'

Mr. OLIVER. I think I understand the idea that my hon. friend wants to convey, but I do not think this is the place to put those words. The buying will take place in the western division, but the man who owns an elevator in the western division, as the clause stands and as I understand my hon. friend wishes it to read, with the addition of the word, 'eastern', still shall not buy grain in the western division.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The object of the clause is, first, to separate the terminal elevator operator from the business of buying and selling grain. If the terminal elevator operator is in the western division the clause as it was would cover him. But if there was a terminal elevator operated in the east it would not cover him. You think the words do not carry that idea out?

Mr. OLIVER. They are not in the right place to carry out that idea.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What is the suggestion?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that if, in the second line the words 'public or' were inserted before the word 'terminal' it would cover the case.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No, we do not propose to extend it to public elevators—only to terminal elevators.

Mr. KNOWLES. Why?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that either a public or terminal elevator comes under the supervision of the board for the storage and handling of grain, but that the owner of that elevator should be divorced from the business of buying or selling grain.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No, simply as regards the terminal elevator; that is the public elevator at the terminal point.

Mr. ROBB. This legislation has been drafted largely at the demand of the western grain growers. Has the minister considered that in making the restrictions and regulations so strict at Fort William and Port Arthur he is running the risk of diverting the trade of the west down to Duluth, where they can handle grain without being subject to such strict regulations. After all, the men who put money into buying the grain are going to handle it at the point where they can get the most profit out of it, and if we tie them up by hard and fast rules at Fort William and Port Arthur the business will be diverted to Duluth, because they will be able to secure freight rates just as cheap to Duluth, and the rates east of Duluth will be just as satisfactory to the man who is shipping grain as they will be from Fort William. It seems to me that the government should take carefully into consideration the fact that they are probably making legislation that is going to drive the business away from our own Canadian routes.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Robb) that I have given a good deal of consideration to that side of the question. I have heard all the arguments pro and con from the different interests, and I think I have read every scrap of evidence there is extant with reference to the matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Robb) started by saying that we are making this legislation largely in the interests of the western grain growers.

Mr. ROBB. At the demand of the western grain growers.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will acknowledge that the legislation would not be as it is if it were not that the west was there, and that the western demand was there; but at the same time we are a Dominion House of Parliament and I think we have to look to the interest of all Canada as well as to the interest of a part. That is the reason this legislation does not go as far as some of the western grain men would like it to go, because, when we are asked to bind this around and around with restrictions and with regulations which will inevitably hamper traffic to a certain extent, we ought, I think, to be wise enough not to go so far as to strangle the growing child and in the end find that we did not conserve for this country the whole strength of its manhood's powers. I think it is a very important point to consider whether or not we are going so far that we will make it a preferable thing for men with western grain to ship it through another country than our own. I think we have not gone too far in that direction in our legislation up to the present. I think the members of the House, no matter what section of the country they come from, whether it be east or west, ought to face that part of the problem, and be very careful in that respect. It is said that we have advantages in certain respects which will keep the grain in our own routes. I am not foolish enough to-night to stand here and say that we are going to have this year, next year, or the year after, or for many years to come, or perhaps for ever, the handling through Canadian routes of all the grain that grows in our northwest. There will be preferences and there will be conditions which will take a portion of our grain by the southern routes no matter what may happen in the way of our legislation or of our development.

But, proper and conservative legislation, joined with good and increased storage and the multiplication of methods of exit which are as cheap as they can possibly be made, will I think keep the great majority of that western grain in our routes, and maybe draw some of the grain from the western United States into that channel. I for one would be very sorry to bind up the whole business so that it would have the effect of precluding capital from going into that western country and into the grain business; capital from the United States; capital from Great Britain, or capital from our own country. I know there are men in the west who say; hang capital, we don't want it; we want this thing made hard and fast. But, if any part of this country wants capital, it is the west. I am glad to see it coming in, no matter whence it comes. There is an outcry raised against American capital that is coming in, building terminals, building line elevators, and there are some men in the west who would burn up the whole shebang, and keep everything that has that sort of development in it out of the country. I do not think the majority of the west would do so; I do not think sensible thinking people, taking the whole case all around, would do that. I think, for the development of storage capacity in the west, (storage capacity which is sadly lacking and which that country is crying for), you have to make some concession to capital, and you have to give it fair-play and maybe something more than fair-play in the early part of the development of that country, in order to get the required storage facilities. I do not want to put restrictions in this Act which would drive that capital out of the deep interest it has taken and the large development it has made, but at the same time we don't want any monopoly in the west and control will keep monopoly in bounds. And, a little patience and the cultivation of good feeling, and a little sensible action will I think make matters much better than they have been for the last few years. The point brought up by my hon. friend (Mr. Robb) is an important point and none of us should allow it to escape attention while we are considering this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER (N. Toronto).

Mr. KNOWLES. I do not just see the point my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) makes. The premise which he bases his remarks upon is that we are able to get in the west the same rate to Duluth that we are able to get to Fort William. We are not. It so happens at this very moment, or it very soon will happen, that we will have it, but we do not have it as a normal thing and everybody in this House is aware of that. For my own part I am not afraid that the influence of the grain growers is ever going to be so great on this government, and probably not on any government, that the interests of the moneyed people, the great capitalists to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has referred, will have any violence done them in this House. We need not stay awake late at night being afraid that the pressure will be so strong from the farmers that this government will be driven in a moment of reckless calamity to put its foot on the neck of the capitalists. Another point, especially with reference to what the minister has said is that his remarks struck me as being rather incongruous. He says with one breath that if there is any place that wants capital it is the west, and in the next breath he says this Bill is going to be framed for the whole of Canada. Both statements are true, but I could not see any co-relation in the two statements. If, as he says, the Bill will be passed for the benefit of Canada, he means there will be that protection to the eastern interests which my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) has referred to. The coming of capital for storage purposes at our great terminal elevators is a matter—if you speak of it from a sectional point of view—is a matter of absolute indifference to us. Looking at it from that point of view it is indifferent to us where our wheat may find its storage on its way to Liverpool. Speaking of it in the sectional sense we would not care whether we found facilities at Duluth or at Fort William, and I mention that because I think I see in the remarks of the minister a certain inconsistency in his commencing by saying that the Act should be framed in the interest of the whole of Canada and then, in a gentlemanly way, lecturing us because the west wants so much capital. It is true we do want capital, but I do not see how it is of concern to the west whether this particular capital is located at Fort William or at Duluth. For that reason I am not able to follow my hon. friend's reasoning as far as I usually do.

Mr. OLIVER. I would still like to have from my hon. friend a clear explanation of the insertion of these words 'eastern or' before the word 'western.' I would like to know what he understands the effect of that to be.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What I have in mind is this. We are legislating for terminal elevators. They are such public elevators as are located at what may be denominated a terminal point. If a principle is right to be applied to a terminal elevator at Fort William or Port Arthur, it is right to be applied to a terminal elevator doing the same kind of work east of Port Arthur or Fort William or wherever it may be. If, for instance, we come to have terminal elevators at Vancouver, if that is declared by the Governor in Council to be a terminal point, then the same principle would apply to them. I do not see any argument on the ground of consistency which would apply to one terminal elevator and not to another, because one was a few miles east or west of the other.

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend speak of terminal elevators in eastern Canada—for instance, on the Georgian bay or at Montreal?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They are not now terminal elevators in the sense of the Act, but it might be that the Governor in Council would declare St. John or Montreal a terminal point, and then the same principle would apply to them that applies to elevators at Fort William or Port Arthur.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not think there was any question as to the purchase of grain in the eastern inspectional division, but only in the western.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It was in the west that the question arose and that the necessities were pressing; but if the necessity arose in the east, we would have the power to apply the same principle.

Mr. OLIVER. It is the purpose to put the purchase of grain in eastern Canada on the same footing as in western Canada?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not see why this provision should not apply to public elevators as well as to terminal elevators. A public elevator is on all fours with a terminal elevator, except that it is not at a terminal point. It is under government supervision, under the control of the board, and subject to the provisions of the Act. In every particular, except as to the granting of warehouse receipts, it is in the same position as the elevator at the terminal, and my contention is that, being of the same kind and character as the terminal elevator, so far as the provisions of this Act are concerned with regard to the mixing of grain, the owner or operator of that elevator should be prohibited from the buying and selling of grain just the same as if he were the owner or operator of a terminal elevator. The principle may be right or it may be wrong, but if it is a sound principle, it is just as sound and just as necessary in the case of public elevators as in the case of terminal elevators.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend may be right on the question of principle, and yet there is a difference between what we call a public elevator elsewhere and a great terminal elevator at Fort William or Port Arthur. What we are trying to do in this legislation is to cure what is said to be a very great evil that is concentrated at Fort William and Port Arthur. We are making what my hon. friend says is very drastic legislation, and does he not think that we have gone far enough in confining it to the terminal elevator? What would happen if we attempted to apply the same principle to public elevators? No need has yet arisen, and in legislation of this kind we should not be ahead or needs. If it becomes necessary in the future to apply this principle to public elevators, this House, I suppose, would be prepared to do it; but this House will think a good deal before it does. You go a long way when you eliminate the interest of an eastern man from your western field in the buying of grain. After all, who does the buying of grain, and what is the reason for all this machinery? The love of gain, the speculative interest, on the part of the buyer; yet behind it all is the farmer with his grain to sell. He wants every buyer and every storage facility he can get to ease his position and increase his profit. We do not want to interfere with that more than is absolutely necessary, and the government does not think at the present time that a case has been made out for applying this principle to public elevators.

Mr. OLIVER. If public elevator meant only an elevator in the eastern inspection division, I could appreciate my hon friend's argument, and, for my part, I would be quite willing to agree to the clause being framed to give that effect, but, as a matter of fact, there are at the present time, I understand, and the number may be greatly multiplied, public elevators at Winnipeg and at St. Boniface, public elevators that are west of the terminal elevators, and unless these elevators of which I speak are put under the same control as the terminal elevators, the whole position that is in view in the making of this resolution applicable to terminal elevators is lost.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not think so.

Mr. OLIVER. It is really of no serious effect. It was proposed to be brought in last session in the Bill which was discussed before the Senate and came down to this House. It may be that it is not a proper principle, but if it is to be embodied in the Act as a principle I am urging that it be made effective with a declaration that it be carried out in fact, not that it will apply only to one section of the trade and not to the other, although the trade will be affected practically just as much in one case as in the other. I do not speak particularly of the public elevators east of Fort William. I am quite willing that they should be excluded on the argument my hon. friend has given. But that is not the case in regard to such elevators west of Port Arthur, and I would still urge that this provision be made applicable to them.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is one other point that I want to call the attention of the committee to, and I think it is a pretty important one. We may call for railway openings. It takes an immense amount of money and a great deal of time to increase our railway openings from the west. They will come in time, but it will be long, while there is one thing that can come in a very much shorter time, and that is storage facilities. Now the building of storage facilities for western grain has, to a large extent, been at a standstill for the last few years. Why? Because people did not know the ground upon which they were standing, because capital was not willing to put itself into the building of storage elevators. The railroads themselves had not been adding to their storage facilities because they did not know what was going to happen. They have not been building large elevators as they otherwise would have, because they did not know what was going to happen. What was the use of building elevators if the government was going to take these elevators away from them, by expropriating or leasing them and until that doubt is settled you will not have a move forward in the efficient multiplication of storage facilities where large capital is to be invested in order to secure them. Now I think we have gone as far as we possibly can go when we apply this principle, this drastic principle, in an experiment to the terminal elevators only. I would not like to go so far as to apply it to public elevators.

Mr. OLIVER. Either west or east?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I look for an increase in the coming year of from seven to ten millions of capacity in the public elevators in the west. That is outside of private enterprise, outside of government elevators in the northwestern parts, outside of the combination or co-operative elevators, whatever you are minded to call them. I want to see them all for my part and I believe everybody in the west wants to see that storage. I would like to see storage elevators at all the great strategic points. That matter is now being considered. What will eventuate I do not know, but I think my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) will agree with me that if we could have four, five or six big elevators at strategic points in the west, scattered here and there, it would be a great insurance against what is taking place there this year, and against what may take place other years as the productive facilities increase with such rapidity in a ratio greater than the transport facilities themselves can possibly increase. My hon. friend behind sounded in our ears a note to which we might very well listen and restrain ourselves from attempting to go too far all at once.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have the same ambition and the same hope for the increase of elevator storage that the minister has. I do not think, however, that we are going to affect the matter detrimentally by putting the trade of handling and storing grain on a strictly well defined basis. Representations have been made to the government that those who handle grain now, and store it, make their money not out of storing grain and handling it, but out of manipulating it. Naturally people may have hesitated in the past few years in putting further capital into this business. I have been told on what I consider good authority that the storing of grain at the prices which are charged, does not pay, that grain and storage men make money out of dealing in grain, and not out of the storing of it. That is what I have been told by an authority as high as there is in any railway company in Canada practically. Now we are going to make it more inviting for men to put their money into the storing and handling of grain by providing that it shall be carried on as a business separate by itself. I think we will make it appeal to the ordinary hard-headed business man better if we divorce that business entirely from the business of trafficking in the grain itself. In any other commodity which railways handle for example, they handle it by itself. I think the grain trade is unique in this: That the interests that handle it, that transport it, and that take care of it on its way to the market are the same interests to a certain extent that make a business of buying and selling the very commodity which is in their custody and in their hands so much of the time. I have understood, and I still understand, that it was proposed to divert these two businesses, to make the storing and handling of grain a separate business from the buying and selling of that grain. I think it will do more to invite capital into the construction of public elevators if you make this a strict business proposition so that those who engage in it will not have to compete with men who are skinning and manipulating the grades. It may be there has been a standstill in the past with regard to the increase in our storage elevators. There has been the question, as the hon. minister has said, that it was not known whether these elevators would be expropriated or not, but I have not heard very much talk about public elevators being expropriated. And these are the elevators of which the hon. minister has been talking to-night. Naturally for a year or two there may be some uncertainty about this business, just as there was when the Bill was brought down, as there was last winter, since the present Prime Minister went throughout the country saying in most unmistakable terms that he was going to put into effect the public ownership of elevators now.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). Does it not occur to the hon. gentleman that a grain firm engaged in a very large way in the purchase of grain for shipment to the old country, will, from the very necessity of the case, require an elevator of its own. There is a case in Midland where a firm has an elevator with a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels. Probably 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 bushels pass through it every year, but the bulk of this is owned by the company owning the elevator, although it is true they handle grain belonging to other people.

Mr. KNOWLES. No one has asked that this should apply to the eastern division, which would eliminate the case mentioned, and I do not think any one would object to placing in the section a clause that it would not apply to elevators handling their own grain.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). I said simply that the bulk of it is owned by them.

Mr. STAPLES. How would that work in practice? In the west the farmers are building many elevators and they are putting their own buyers on the market. If you applied this you would prohibit them from doing that and thus deprive the farmers of the very best service and protection they are getting. Then the large milling companies afford a great deal of storage capacity to the farmers, but this would prevent them from handling grain for others, and so you would decrease the storage capacity of the west to that extent. This clause would not work out to the advantage of the farmer.

Mr. KNOWLES. It has not been suggested that this should affect the country elevators.

Mr. STAPLES. Would that apply to a firm like the Ogilvies?

Mr. KNOWLES. If they own terminal elevators, it would. I do not believe the same people would have the custody of the grain after inspection and also ownership of it.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Subsection 2 of the section covers the case of millers like Ogilvies.

Mr. KNOWLES. Subsection 2 of section 123 reads:

> 2. Subsection 1 of this section shall not apply to any person who owns, manages, operates or is otherwise interested in any terminal elevator,—
>
> (1) which has been leased to the board for operation, or which has been leased to any person, firm or company for operation with the approval of the board or which is managed and operated by persons approved by the board; or—
> (2) which is used or operated in connection with any flour mill situate at the same terminal point as such elevator.

That means that once an elevator is leased, and many elevators are leased, then if that lease is approved by the board any one who owns or manages or operates it escapes from all penalties of that section. It is too wide altogether. The board must approve in practice of any proposed lease of an elevator. If a man is operator and lessee he is permitted to go out and buy millions of bushels of grain. If the clause means anything it means that once an elevator is leased and the lease has been approved the lessee or any person interested in the elevator can go out and buy and sell all the grain he likes.

Another point affecting the legal interpretation of the section. It says it shall not apply to any person interested in the ownership, management or operation of any elevator the leasing of which has been approved by the board, but it does not say that this immunity is only with regard to that elevator. Suppose a man is interested in the ownership of elevator A, and that is leased to a company. He has only a small interest in it, but he would go into court if charged with breaking this Act and say that subsection 2 says that this shall not apply to him because he is interested in the ownership of an elevator, the leasing of which has been approved by the board, although he may have a mammoth interest in other elevators. The clause should read so that it protects him only with regard to that one elevator; as it reads he can commit any infraction of the Act so long as he can prove that he is interested in an elevator which has been leased. I would move the following amendment:

> No person owning, managing, operating or otherwise interested in any public or terminal elevator shall buy or sell grain at any point in the western inspection division.

Subsection 1 of this section shall not apply to any person by reason only of the fact that he:

(a) owns or is otherwise interested in the ownership of any such elevator leased to the board for operation, or which has been leased to any person for operation with the approval of the board;

(b) is an owner or holder of stock or shares in any railway company which owns or operates such elevator and which does not as a business buy or sell grain;

(c) which is used or operated with any flour mill situate at the same terminal point as such elevator. Provided, however, that such elevator shall be subject to such restrictions and regulations as are imposed by the board, with the approval of the Governor in Council.

My first amendment with regard to immunity is meant to apply to those who are interested in the ownership, management or operation of an elevator, the leasing of which has been made. I have made this immunity so that a person shall not come under the penalty of 123 by reason only of the fact that he is interested in such ownership, that shall not be sufficient to penalize him, he shall not be prosecuted for that reason alone. Then there is this further remedy when I say 'owns or is otherwise interested in the ownership of any such elevator.' The clause as it now reads 'owns, manages or operates' should not apply when he is only custodian of the grain. He can buy all that grain he likes because he has divested himself of the management or control of the elevator. I put in the clause about owning railway stock for the reason that those who own money in the country, many of them, have stock in railway companies as well as own the elevators; consequently they are interested.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. gentleman think that, were his last exception eliminated there would still be any application to the person who held stock in the railway company?

Mr. KNOWLES. If the company owned or operated the elevator, I think he would be indirectly interested.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does he contend that under the wording of the Bill he would be held to be interested?

Mr. KNOWLES. I think under a strict interpretation of the clause a man who owned or operated an elevator would be debarred from buying or selling grain.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Could not the whole clause be avoided simply by the same company organizing again under another name, that is to say, might there not be two companies taking out separate charters and calling themselves different names? Then Company A, being engaged in the purchase and handling of grain, and B engaged in the storage of grain, would not that means avoid all the effects of his amendment, and would not it avoid the effect of the clause as it stands?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is difficult at first sight to tell just what the effect of the amendment would be. I think 123 is meant in the first place, by a general provision, to prevent any one who owns, manages, operates or is otherwise interested in a terminal elevator, from buying or selling grain at any point in the western inspection division. That is a general prohibition of the double interest in grain buying and elevator operation. The board itself can insist on that absolutely, and, therefore bar out any person so interested from dealing in grain in the west. Whether it will do that entirely or not depends upon how far the subsections that come after may vary the effects of that prohibition. If the government comes to the conclusion to lease or expropriate the different terminal companies that are there, suppose that it undertook to lease them all, then these men have no longer any interest in the operation of that elevator. It is manned by government officers, that is, by the officers of the commission, it is supervised by the commission, tolls are arranged by the commission, and the company that owns the elevator which was leased by the commission gets nothing out of it but the amount paid in compensation for the lease year by year. That divorces them from their business in the elevator itself, which is more than the simple storage of the grain while it is in the elevator.

That is all, with respect to the divorcing of interests, that is asked for. It would have been asked for if there had been nothing in the operation inside of the elevator, either actually or supposedly, beyond the mere proper storage of grain, and the fee that would be paid for that storage. If that is carried out, and in so far as it is carried out by the government leasing through the commission these elevators, the separation of interests is actually made in all these cases. The government undertake to put into operation the principle of government ownership either by construction or leasing, but to what extent the government will go is not yet determined. We may determine in the end to lease one, two or three of the elevators that are there at the present time and thus apply, to a certain extent, the principle of government operation and give to the people of the west a choice between the elevators at that point that are run by corporations or individuals and the elevators that are run by the government themselves either as the lessees or the owners, and, in both cases, the operators of the elevators. I am not going to say to-night on behalf of the government that we propose to lease all the terminal elevators there, or that we propose to take absolute charge of all for the present year. I am going to say that we do not. There is no use talking to this committee otherwise than frankly of what we propose to do. We may lease two of these elevators, we may lease three of them, but we do not intend to undertake the financial or experimental responsibility of taking the whole terminal elevator system at Fort William and Port Arthur under government operation for the present. We propose to apply the principle and to undertake the experiment to see whether or not the claim on behalf of that peculiar type of operation is well founded. If it works out well it will be for the government and this House, if they think it wise, to apply the principle still further but I want to guard against its being stated that because this much has been said the government propose to take the whole of the terminal facilities under their operation. In so far as the government leases some of these elevators the separation is absolutely made. In so far as it does not lease them it has this hold over the others that remain not leased by the government that it has the absolute power of saying what persons shall be allowed to operate them. That is to be done with the approval of the board and with the subsequent approval of the government. In that way you have a hold over that class of terminals that you never had before. Heretofore, we have simply had supervision. After this Act has passed we will not only have supervision but we will also have the power of direction. If those who propose to run these elevators should own them their management has to be satisfactory to the government. If they lease them the lessees are to be to the satisfaction of the commission and the government. In that way it seems to me that we get a hold added to the supervision that we already have and that we propose to maintain and we get these elevators on the basis of absolutely honest and straightforward work. That is all that the west asks and that is all that any section should ask. The demand of the west is that their grain shall not be manipulated at the terminals. That is the thing they want. It does not matter a pin as to how that is brought about so that the thing itself is accomplished. He is a hard headed man who will say: I want a certain thing done, but there is only one way in which it can be done and that is my way and if you do not do it that way I do not want you to do it in any other way. There are men who are so constituted and so fully seized of the belief that their way is the best—and honestly so—that they would rather see a thing not done at all unless it is done in their way. After all, am I not right in saying that the thing itself that the west wants is the non-manipulation and honest treatment of their grains in the elevators at the terminal points? In this way we propose to make the experiment. We do not relax one single iota of their supervision. We shall either lease or construct some elevators at terminal points and have them managed by the government, and have absolutely clear test of government operation on a large enough scale to make the experiment a good one. Then we have this added power over the elevator interests that are there and besides that we are making the bonds stronger and greater. Now, I say this and I say it upon the testimony that I have had that, although in the earlier work of these elevators I am not free from the belief that they did manipulate and wrongfully use the property of others—I do not know that I can say I am absolutely convinced of it, but I will go far enough to say that I am not free from that belief—I have yet to find, from what has happened in 1910, any instance of them having done so. From the uniform testimony I can get on all sides, in the business, of actual grievances and complaints, and in the observance and knowledge of the officers of the department, I have come to the conclusion that in 1910-11 these terminal operations were carried on with due regard to honesty and efficiency looking to the rights that were given to these men under the law. I believe that that statement can be substantiated. Add this other to these things and I believe that under the present supervision a system will be formed that will make the operation of the elevators at Fort William such that every man can entrust his interests to them with the full belief that these interests will be safeguarded. The government has given the best attention it could and has framed what it considers a piece of machinery that will carry their idea out. It may be that others have a different opinion. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat has his and he has embodied it in the shape of an amendment. All I can say, without going into the legal argument for which I am not very well fitted, or without taking more time of the committee, is that this embodies about what the government thinks it can do, and if you place this machinery in the hands of the government we propose to make a trial honestly and carefully during the next year and we hope to bring out the result which we believe will be brought out—the honest treatment of the grain of the people in its passage through the terminals at Fort William.

Much as I hate to do it I think we will have to oppose the amendment of my hon. friend. If he presses it to a vote, as I suppose he will, we will have to stand up like little men on each side and vote for and against.

Mr. ROBB. Having admitted that the government are going to either construct or lease some terminal elevators, is the minister prepared to say what charges will be made in the rates for winter storage at government elevators?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Why, bless you no. We shall have a commission that will look into that and come to their conclusions from their knowledge. That will be all arranged by the commission with the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. KNOWLES. The minister (Mr. Foster) has been good enough to make a few remarks on this matter, but they are either above or below the points to which I drew his attention. The point I most emphasized was that the Bill, as at present drafted, permitted men who would be interested in the operation of it, to be also interested in the buying and selling of grain, and he did not refer to that. In his remarks the minister gave us a general essay on human nature and uttered a great many valuable truths but I noticed he very carefully kept away from the task of trying to show us any real effect that the present Bill will have as he recommends it to the House. He has not shown us that the present clause will touch anybody. He has given us a few kindly words in commendation of the honesty and efficiency of the men who controlled the great terminal elevators during the years 1910 and 1911. I cannot understand why the minister will not tell me wherein my argument is wrong when I say that his drafting of the Bill leaves it open to men who operate elevators, once the lease is approved by the board, to go in and buy and sell grain, and once you do that you virtually take all the good effect from clause 123 away. I would like to say that I rather deprecate the way in which the government is announcing to us their policy of the government operation of elevators. The Prime Minister went through the country last summer and he told the people that he was going to get them government ownership and government operation. It is his own business whether he sees the thing in the same light to-day or not, but I do say that now after parliament has been in session for a long time, and after we have discussed this Bill which goes right to the root of the whole matter, he should have enlightened the House on what his present view is. We are to-day without any light as to whether the Prime Minister is still of the same opinion now as he was when he went through the western country last June. The right hon. gentleman did have a little glimmer of light on the matter one day about a fortnight ago, when a political pet of his, Mr. Frederick William Gordon Haultain, being pressed with his back to the wall in the Saskatchewan legislature, and having no other help and succour, went to the telegraph office and wired in his distress to the right hon. the leader of the government here to send him a telegram saying if he was going to have something in the supplementary estimates for that purpose. And the same leader of the government who refuses us in this House any information, hurried to the telegraph office in Ottawa and replied: yes, it will be in the supplementary estimates. And, in a few days afterwards, when I asked the right honourable the leader of the government whether it had been decided to place a sum in the supplementary estimates for this purpose or not, he said: no, it has not yet been formally considered. Then I read the telegram, and I asked him if he had sent it to his political pet, Frederick William Gordon Haultain, and he said yes, he sent it, but he said: the estimates are not all completed yet. And, in this House, in which there is in power a body of men who are proud of their British connection, they do violence to the first principle of British government, which says that the House of Commons shall be informed first of the policy of the government and of any contemplated expenditures. And to-night, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has handled this Bill very politely throughout, tells us with a nice flow of language and with nice epigrams, a great many truths about human nature, and quite a few other things worth remembering, if we had them at the proper time and place. But, we are not concerned this evening about what the Minister of Trade and Commerce may think about human nature and these things that would fit very nicely into an essay. We want to know more about his policy of government ownership and government operation of elevators. This is the time and this is the place, not to moralize and not to generalize as the minister has done, but to tell us something about the government policy for the ownership and operation of terminal elevators. We know less about the intentions of the Prime Minister to-day than we did when he was leader of the opposition ten months ago, and I doubt very much if he knows as much himself, or if he is as clear on it now as he thought he was then. We want the Minister of Trade and Commerce to tell us to-night whether he will give us any explanation of the fact that Frederick William Gordon Haultain got information ahead of this parliament.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Are you sure you have all his name?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, Frederick William Gordon Haultain, and if the minister wants further identification, I will say he is the man who said that reciprocity was a great thing for the country once upon a time. Frederick William Gordon Haultain is British born, and as loyal as the next man on the government benches, but for eight months he supported reciprocity, and on the eve of the election when the whip was laid on his back, the same Frederick William Gordon Haultain came and supported a policy that the people of to-day are finding has put them in the position of being losers of millions of dollars. That is Frederick William Gordon Haultain. I think I have a right to ask, as a member of this House, why that information was sent to Mr. Haultain before we were given the same information, and why, three or four days after the telegram I have referred to was sent, when I asked whether there would be an appropriation for this in the supplementary estimates, the Prime Minister told me as a member of the House that it had not been considered.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What was the question the hon. member asked?

Mr. KNOWLES. Whether it had been decided to place a sum in the supplementary estimates for the taking over of the terminal elevators.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Where can I find that?

Mr. KNOWLES. I do not remember the page, but the minister will find it in Hansard, and I would ask the explanation now which I think I have the right to ask.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would like to see how you put the question to the Prime Minister?

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, there are lots of your friends around you there who will find it for you in a few minutes; they are not busy; they are not taking very much part in this discussion. I am sorry to see that the western members on the Conservative side are not taking the part they should in trying to get this Bill modelled up as they know the great majority of their constituents would like to have it modelled. However, it is not passed yet and I hope they will give us their opinions before the final stage. Wherein does the Minister of Trade and Commerce think my argument was wrong when I said that this Bill would leave it open to anybody who was operating a terminal elevator to buy and sell grain.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not intend to make any reference to the celebrated personality who seems to hover around the imagination of my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles), and I apprehend that if he were present to-night that gentleman would be able to take care of himself quite as well as would the Prime Minister, were he present. However, as to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Moosejaw, personally, in so far as it differs—which is not by a very wide margin—from the Bill as it stands, I would have no objection to it.

It seems to me that it would be well to move very cautiously in this matter. If men wish to evade section 123, I cannot see how they can be prevented from doing so, either under the amendment as moved by the hon. member for Moosejaw or under the Bill as it stands. For instance, suppose five men desire to go into the grain buying business and also in the business of a terminal elevator. They know that under this clause they cannot do it in their personal capacity, nor can any one of them. All they have to do is to form two joint-stock companies, calling the first the Brown Elevator Company, and the other the Brown Storage Company. Under these two names these five men can, in defiance of both the Bill and the amendment, conduct the joint business.

Mr. McCRANEY. Does not my hon. friend think that the words 'or otherwise interested in' would cover the case of holding stock in both companies?

Mr. MEIGHEN. No. The five men are stockholders in both companies, and they own all the stock. 'A' cannot buy and sell grain while the Brown Storage Company is storing grain because he is interested in that company. But the joint stock company which 'A,' 'B,' 'C,' 'D' and 'E' form, called the Brown Elevator Company, is not interested in the Brown Storage Company, directly or indirectly, and the Brown Elevator Company can go into the field and buy and sell grain. I am thoroughly convinced that the whole object of the Bill can be evaded in that way. No individual who is interested in a company doing one line of business can himself engage in the other line of business, but a joint stock company might be formed which as a company had no interest in the other, and it could do the business. Nor can you get away from that difficulty unless you have legislation that will prevent the interlocking of both directors and shareholders; because, while you might say that no company owned by one set of men could under the name of another company owned by the same set of men perform the two businesses, you would have to say that no man could be interested in two companies which performed as part of their business both of these lines. And suppose we went so far as to legislate that no company which had a shareholder owning even one share of stock could do business as an elevator company if he had also one share of stock in a company doing a grain business. That would be of course absurd legislation on its face, but we would have to go that far at least to get over the difficulty; and even if we went that far, all they would have to do would be to put their stock in trust, and the wit of a legislature could never get over that difficulty. By means of a trusteeship the law could be evaded in spite of us. I only say this to urge that we had better go slow and see how this works out in practice, and if we find that it is absolutely worthless, we might as well quit. This is not the first time that this difficulty has been encountered. The practice of the interlocking of shareholders and directors is at the bottom of the biggest difficulty in the republic to the south of us. That is the reason of the difficulties in regard to what is called the money trust, which it is so far impossible to get over. The same difficulties exist here in a smaller way. While I appreciate the purpose of the government, and hope that they will have some success, I have great doubt whether the clause as it stands or as proposed to be amended will have very much effect.

Mr. NEELY. I am sure that we have listened with great interest to the very frank statement of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Do you think it is true?

Mr. NEELY. In the last parliament my hon. friend was very much interested in what he and other western members considered to be the only effective remedy for the evils that existed or that were supposed to exist in the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur. If the hon. member for Portage la Prairie is so frank in expresing his opinion that this clause, or even the amended clause proposed by the hon. member for Moosejaw, will not remedy the evil that we seek to remedy, why does he not state with equal frankness what he thinks would be an effective remedy?

Mr. MEIGHEN. For the simple reason that that is not under discussion now, and I try to stick to the point.

Mr. NEELY. I think it is under discussion. I think the minister by his statement has brought it under discussion. The whole question of the government's intention in regard to taking these elevators out of the hands of the present owners, or rather the operators, is very much the question before us at the present time. I myself was responsible in the last parliament for making certain statements in regard to the situation at Fort William and Port Arthur that brought me a certain amount of criticism, because, like the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, I was somewhat frank in dealing with the subject, and I said on one or two occasions that I could hardly understand why the present system of supervision of the terminals could not be made effective if it was not effective. Hon. gentlemen opposite found great fault with the position I took at that time—insinuated that I was not fairly representing the farmers of the west. The hon. member for Souris, the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, and other gentlemen thought the government should immediately place a sum in the estimates for taking over the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur.

It must be done. The farmers said it was the right thing to do, they declared it was the only remedy, and they were the people who knew. And these gentlemen stood right at the farmers back at that time, Mr. Chairman, and they refused to have anything to do with the government legislation until the government of the day would make a pronouncement as to their position on this question of taking over these terminal elevators. Now, look at the situation to-day. The Minister of Trade and Commerce makes a statement to-night as to what so far as he knows, he considers the intention of the government to be. He tells us that they propose to make an experiment, and that experiment is to take over, either by construction or leasing, one or two terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and operate them for a year or two alongside of the elevators that are being operated under present conditions, and see by this experiment whether or not this method believed by the farmers of the west to be the effective remedy will have any value or not. In the very next breath the minister tells us that so far as he knows those elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur in the year 1910-11 were operated in a manner that was absolutely above suspicion, and that so far as he knew no fault could be found with the method already in vogue as to government supervision of them. That was the effect of his statement—that in 1910-11 those elevators were operated without reproof or without cause of complaint. What brought about that change in the year mentioned from preceding years? We did not hear anything of that in the last parliament. The minister may say that we had not an opportunity because the session was not closed until very nearly August, but a great part of the information as to the operations of 1910-11 at the places in question was available before the close of the last session of parliament, and if the minister and hon. gentlemen from west of the great lakes did not have that information they could have obtained it. Yet that did not make any difference in their attitude of opposition to Bill Q. They said that Bill could not be passed unless the government put so many millions of dollars in the estimates for the taking over of the terminals. Now, what does the minister propose to accomplish? I am looking for light, I am looking for information. What does the minister propose to accomplish by taking over simply one or two terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur? The shipping season begins in the fall of the year, the government will have one or two of these elevators, and the first thing we know is that the elevators are full. The other ten or twelve elevators are there waiting to do business; and the farmers who cannot get their grain in the government elevators are going to be compelled to send it to the other elevators. How does the minister expect that the operation of one or two elevators at the terminals will enlighten the public as to the benefits to be derived from government operation, especially when he tells us that so far as he knows in 1910-11 there was no fault to be found with the present system? That is a sort of piecemeal proposition. My view is that the government should go either all the way or go no way. They should either perfect the present system, or else go the distance of taking over the whole system of terminals. How else can they get any results from government operation? The whole object of this Bill is to remedy conditions, or supposed conditions, about which we have heard a great deal of fault found—the conditions existing at the terminals. If you are not going to take the radical steps demanded by the men of the west, and the minister evidently considers them to be radical, then I would like to know what sense there is in taking the position at all, and what benefit there is in this whole legislation. I have listened to the member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles), explaining the advantages of the amendment that he proposes in lieu of this section. I think I am somewhat of the opinion of the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), probably neither the section itself, nor the proposed amendment, will be efficacious in preventing the men who own the interior elevators throughout the west from also being interested in the operation of the terminal elevators. If the minister, with the aid of his legal advisers—and I am sure the member for Portage la Prairie is willing to give him all the assistance possible in this respect—is unable to draft a section that will prevent the condition complained of, that is of the men who own and operate lines of country elevators from also owning and operating the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, is unable to bring here a clause that will absolutely commend itself to this committee as meeting this situation, then it seems to me this section is absolutely of no value, and it is only fair and right that the minister should tell us he does not think this section will fill the bill. If the minister does not think he can draft a section to meet the requirements, and if he is going to try any experiment at all, he ought to try the experiment that the farmers of the west have asked for, and take over all the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I am rather surprised to hear the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), confess that there is a wrong, for which there is practically no remedy. The government is assuming that there is a wrong, and where there is a wrong, I think—although in this I am contradicting the hon. member for Portage la Prairie—there is a remedy, and this committee should find that remedy. It is all very well to use destructive arguments as the hon. gentleman has done. Destructive criticism is of very little use, we want constructive criticism. I was also surprised to hear him say that the matter referred to by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down was not in discussion—that is of finding a remedy for these wrongs. If it is not under discussion why waste time, we should not have anything to do with this matter at all. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says there is a wrong, and that he is trying to rectify it; and I think he has satisfied himself—I am sure he must have—that so far as rectifying the wrong complained of, the proposed section 123 is so much useless paper, it is not worth the paper it is written on.

The mere fact that he refuses to discuss that section now, and in connection with it the amendment of the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) convinces me of that fact. There is something in the suggestion of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and I think he could easily rectify it by the insertion of a word or two in the 4th line, so that it would read:

> No person owning, managing, operating or otherwise interested in any public or terminal elevator shall buy or sell or be otherwise interested in the buying or selling of grain, etc.

Let us compare for a moment, the section as it stands, and the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Moosejaw. In the first place you will find that by section 2, subsection 1, it says that section shall not apply by reason only of the fact, etc. The hon. member for Moosejaw has shown the difficulty that will arise as the section is at present drafted. That is, a person may be interested in, or may be the owner of a terminal elevator, which shall be leased in accordance with the provisions of the following subsections. He may own half-a-dozen elevators, but so long as he has one elevator in which he is interested, leased to some person else, he is exempt. The other subsection (b) should commend itself to the approval of the minister, where the person who is the owner of stock or shares of any railway company which owns or operates any elevator, shall also be exempt. I think the hon. member for Portage la Prairie is satisfied that this can be remedied, and that the minister must see that this clause is defective and can and should be improved.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think that both of the suggested amendments are perhaps worthy of more consideration than I was at first disposed to give them, and what has been said by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie has also impressed me, as all his utterances on these legal questions do. I would be sorry to have the clause pass without getting as near as possible to the intent of the Act. We might allow this to stand and think it over, and see if we can get any better construction of this clause. My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) has also a suggestion to make I understand.

Mr. AIKINS. I would move to add as an amendment at the end of section 123:

But if the person who is mentioned in subsection 2 owns, manages, operates or is otherwise interested in any terminal elevator other than a terminal elevator mentioned in subsection 2, he shall not be exempted from the provisions of subsection 1.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). That only covers one of the difficulties.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will allow this to stand at present, and take it up again.

Mr. KNOWLES. The minister asked if I would read the question which I had asked the Prime Minister. It is at page 2911 of 'Hansard' February 12.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether any decision has been reached to place a sum in the supplementary estimates for the securing of elevators by lease, purchase, or expropriation.

Mr. BORDEN. That question has not yet been formally considered. An announcement will be made in connection with the supplementary estimates.

Mr. KNOWLES. Might I ask the right hon. gentleman if he sent the following telegram to Mr. F. W. G. Haultain:—

F. W. Haultain,

Regina

Telegram received. The statement you bring to my attention is utterly untrue. Bill now before the House includes power for purchase, lease or expropriation of terminal elevators; an appropriation to be placed in the supplementary estimates for this purpose.

(Sgd.) R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. BORDEN. Yes, I sent that, but it is quite true that the supplementary estimates have not yet been formally considered, and that an announcement to the House will be made when that takes place.

I understood that the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce would give some information as to how this information came to be given to Mr. Haultain several days ahead of the time when the Prime Minister told us the matter had not yet been formally considered in council.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not think I promised my hon. friend to give him any explanation at all.

Mr. KNOWLES. You raised a hope.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am sorry if I raised a hope that now I shall have to dash to the ground. I quite see what an important influence this has in the proper arrangement of section 123 so as to make it effective. It has been the only little divergence from the straight and narrow path that we have carefully followed, which was to discuss this Grain Bill on its merits. This little episode, however, shows how manfully we have stuck to the right principle. But as there is always an exception, my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) has formed the exception. However, knowing him as we do, we will forgive him that breach of the general method which has been adopted in the discussion of this Bill. I do not think the Prime Minister was much out of the way. I think he explained himself, he gave an answer, and he gave an explanation. He said it had not been formally considered, and in following up the answer he said that the supplementary estimates had not been considered. This, if it comes in anywhere, as it will come in, will be in the supplementary estimates. I think the Prime Minister was quite consistent in what he said as to why he sent a telegram to Mr. Haultain, and the Prime Minister when he comes will give that explanation himself. I suppose it was to give certain information to Mr. Haultain.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think I had a perfect right to bring this to the attention of the minister. I contend that we should have been given every particle of information that the government possesses. The Prime Minister was possessed of certain information that he was in a position to impart to a political pet, Mr. Haultain, of Regina. The Prime Minister, I think, had a greater duty to perform to us than he had to perform to Mr. Haultain. Mr. Haultain was told in categorical terms that such money would be in the estimates. I asked: Had the decision been reached to put that in the estimates, and I am told the matter had not been formally considered. Was Mr. Haultain told that it had not been formally considered? No, he he was told in the most formal way that the vote would be in the supplementary estimates for such and such a purpose. I think we are entitled to just as much information as Mr. Haultain was, if not a little more. It is an important matter for us in the west. I have letters upon letters from people in the west, people whose hopes have been raised that they would secure terminal elevators by lease, expropriation or purchase by this new government. Perhaps those hopes are to be dashed to the ground. If the minister will be more particular to execute his promise of expropriating the elevators and less particular about establishing a Tariff Commission, he will confer greater benefit on the people in the west. We have been told that the one great reason for the haste of the government in instituting this Tariff Commission was that they made a promise, and the promise was weighing heavily upon their conscience until it was fulfilled. Surely if they are so much in a hurry to fulfil their promise in regard to the Tariff Commission, why should they not be equally in a hurry to keep their promise in regard to terminal elevators? Their rule seems to be that promises to the manufacturers must be kept, but promises to the farmers may be 'chucked.'

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) to say that although an individual in his private capacity could be prevented from doing a thing that was subject to a penalty, if he were to join a corporation he could secure immunity for doing that very thing which he could not do otherwise. All I have to say is that corporations are subject to the penal laws. In redrafting this section I hope the minister will do it in such a way that it will apply to corporations as well as individuals. The criminal law deals with corporations just as well as with individuals. True, you cannot put a corporation in jail, but you can reach them by heavy fines. As this would be an indictable offence, I would suggest that whatever penalty applies to an individual should be made to apply to a corporation.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The point is that the corporation would not be violating the law, and therefore would not be subject to the penalty. The corporation would be quite within the provisions of the Act. Certainly a corporation under the Act as it stands, if it violates the law, is subject to the penalty the same as any one else, because the word 'person in the interpretation clause covers 'firm "or corporation'. I do not see at present what remedy there would be that would not make the evil worse, that is to say, that would not entail an even worse confusion. I do not think my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) would advise the government to frame this clause so that no person could be an owner of stock, however small, in one company doing a grain business, and also own stock in another company doing a storage business. If he did that what would happen the unfortunate individual who received by will stock in one business, when he himself owned money in another? He would be violating the law without any act of his own whatever.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 125—security by license,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I propose to amend this section by striking out all the words after 'sum' in line 24 to 'elevator' in line 26.

The words struck out will be 'of not less than ten thousand nor more than fifty thousand dollars, in the discretion of the board, for each terminal.' Then I propose to insert the words 'of seven thousand five hundred dollars for each terminal elevator of fifty thousand bushels capacity and under, and of a proportional sum for each terminal elevator of more than fifty thousand bushels capacity.' That puts it upon the basis of $7,500 for a bond for a 50,000 bushel elevator or under, and on the same proportional basis for an elevator of over 50,000 bushels. Seven thousand five hundred dollars is 15 cents per bushel and that is based on the principle of 15 cents for every bushel of capacity in the elevator. That is the same bond that is given in Minnesota; it is not considered too large, and it is cheerfully given there, I understand.

Mr. OLIVER. How would that rate compare with the rate actually required now?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is much larger. We cannot go above fifty thousand. If you have a seven million bushel elevator you get a much larger bond.

Mr. OLIVER. I draw the minister's attention to the fact that a little while ago his argument was that the bond was sufficient security and that there was not the necessity of action by the board to close an elevator. I must say that fifteen cents a bushel is not a very adequate security.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon. friend will make the calculation he will find that it gives a very large security.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a large security, but it is not an adequate security.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think it is an adequate security, if you take into consideration that the grain itself is within the elevator. It is not taken out. Of course, if it were something which was dissipated and if all you had was 15 cents a bushel, it would not be a very large proportion compared with the price of the grain, but this is a large bond for security.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not complaining of the bond, but I am complaining about the application of the minister's argument in a former case.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 57—sale by sample.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Section 57 at present reads as follows:

Nothing in this Act shall prevent any person from selling or buying grain by sample regardless of its grades.

I propose to add the following:

Subsection 2. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act that may conflict therewith, sample markets may be established in the cities of Winnipeg, Fort William and Calgary and the mixing of grain permitted in connection therewith under such rules and regulations as shall be recommended by the board and approved by the Governor in Council.

3. The provisions of section 208, with the exception of subsection 3 thereof, shall apply to sample markets when established.

Mr. OLIVER. On the face of it, this amendment would seem to contemplate the mixing of grain at terminal points, or at any rate it would contemplate the mixing of grain after inspection. I think that in the beginning of our consideration of the Bill it was generally conceded that that principle was objectionable to the spirit of the Bill; that is to say, that there should be no mixing after inspection. I think the committee would be glad if the minister would give a somewhat full explanation of this proposed amendment, because it seems to contradict the principle of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Of course, the object of this amendment is to introduce the sample market into the grain trade and the introduction of the sample market carries with it the mixing of grain under certain conditions and under certain supervision. I do not suppose that the members of the committee wish me to go into a long statement as regards the differences between a sample market connected with a grade market and a purely grade market.

Mr. OLIVER. I think we do. We want to have a very thorough understanding of this question which is a vital point of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Very well, if my hon. friend requires a fairly full explanation he has a perfect right to have it. Perhaps it would be as well to premise the statement in reference to this by a little glance at the history of the grain business in the United States of America. Instead of travelling all over the States and particularizing, it would be just as well for the purposes of this explanation that we should take the state of Minnesota and confine ourselves to that. The facts of the case in reference to the development of grain marketing in the state of Minnesota are briefly these: The time was when they had no sample market and allowed no mixing of grains. They had a grade market and a grade market only. Gradually, in the evolution of the grain trade and public sentiment developed and in the course of time, in the early eighties, I think it was, the grade system pure and simple was superseded by the sample market system. For a number of years the sample market system has been the one in vogue in that state. The modus operandi of the system is something like this:

Grain coming from the west to Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, is at a certain point outside of Minneapolis sampled by the samplers of the Grain Exchange of Minneapolis and also by the samplers of the state who correspond to our government inspectors. These samples are sent in the one case to the members of the Exchange, and in the other to the proper state officials. The object of the sampling by the state official is to set the grades of the grain; the object of the sampling by the grain exchange is to get from these cars sale samples which are placed in the hands of the members of the exchange. These samples appear in the exchange when the exchange opens for business. There is a sample of the grain taken from each car, the number of the car, and the district from which the car comes, and these samples are viewed by the buyers, and according to the quality of the samples shown the purchase is made. The samples taken by the state officials, have by an early hour of the day been inspected by the state inspectors and the grades for the cars are fixed and the certificates are sent up to the grain exchange and the buyer then has the advantage of the sample itself which he can see and feel, and of the grade and standard which has been established by the state inspector. The purchases are then made and the cars have gradually made their way down to the city and they are to remain for a certain period. These carloads of grain are bought then by people upon the sample market. They are afterwards taken, if bought by the millers, to their mills, and if bought otherwise they are taken to the warehouses as they call them, or the public or terminal elevators, as we call them. They are inspected into these elevators and are stored in them and are again inspected out, and are to be inspected out at the same grade and at the same weight as when inspected in.

Mr. OLIVER. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say there were two inspections?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is a sample inspection by the state and that becomes the inspection into the elevator. I did not mean to say there were two inspections into the elevator.

Mr. OLIVER. When the grain leaves that elevator is there a verifying inspection or a different inspection?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is a verifying inspection out, exactly the same as we have. That warehouse man is under bond and he has to keep the grade and he has to give out the same grade and the same weight as under our law. Then, there are special bins provided for in these terminal warehouses and the operator of the warehouse must give a bin to any person who wishes it, and that bin is to be at the disposal, of the person who has it and he can authorize the mixing, the cleaning, improvement and treatment of grain in that bin, by the warehouseman. That cannot be done except under the instructions of the owner of the grain. That is about the modus operandi so far as the terminal elevators are concerned. They have also a system of country elevators or as they call them local warehouses, which are operated much the same as our country elevators in the west. They have also what are called private terminal elevators where grain is taken in and where it is mixed, whether under license or not I cannot quite gather from the reading of the law. These mixing elevators are mixing almost entirely what belongs to themselves. They also come under bonds in some way but these are not essential to the system which I have been describing. They, therefore, have both the sample market and the grades as well. Now, there has been for some time in our country a disposition towards the establishment of sample markets for our western grain. I have here a report of an elevator commission appointed by the local government of Saskatchewan which held extensive investigations in 1910 and took evidence at a great many different places and embodied a great deal of valuable information in their report. I find in that report some statements which bear upon the matter in hand. They give a list of the charges against the present system which operates in the province of Saskatchewan. They give the grievances and charges against the system as brought together by those who appeared at their investigations and particularly as advanced by the Grain Growers' Association of the province of Saskatchewan. One of these complaints is against the grading system and is denominated in this way:

1. That the grades do not represent different values of the grain for milling purposes.

2. That good grain in any one grade gets the grade price only, and that selling by grade enables the millers and elevator companies to lower the quality of each grade, and so to fix the export and home prices upon the basis of the lowest level of each grade.

3. That the existing grading system is unfair to grain which though slightly bleached, smutted or frosted, is nevertheless of good quality for milling purposes.

4. That mistakes are made in sampling and grading.

These are the chief grievances or complaints that came before that commission with reference to the grading system. Another grievance against the large western milling companies is thus formulated:

That the defects of the grading system, and the absence of a sample market, enable them to buy grain which though slightly bleached, smutted or frosted. is of superior quality. and to buy it at a price far below its value.

On page 22 of that report they again formulate their grievances against the present system in this way:

The selling by grade alone is one main condition of their buying the grain below its value.

Again, on page 25, in formulating what is demanded in regard to the grading system, they say:

What is demanded in regard to the market? To have a sample market which will remedy the defects of the grading system, and give to the farmer the actual value of his grain, whether it is especially good, poor bleached, smutted or frosted, as distinguished from a general grade price.

Again, on page 28, in a resumé, under the head of 'Sample Market,' the commission says:

There is a general demand among the farmers for a sample market. It arises from the belief upon their part that the general grade price does not do justice to particular lots of grain, either lots specially good or lots that are low or off grade.

I make these quotations from the report of the commission as corroborative of my statement that there has been, and is now amongst the farmers of the northwest, a demand for a sample market. I find in the report of the proceedings of the Grain Conference, on page 100, a statement also bearing upon this point, given by Mr. Partridge, who, I think, represented the Grain Growers' Association at that conference. He said:

I could go into details with regard to the matter, but I want to point out that I am fully convinced, as the result of the tests that I have spoken of concerning different types of wheat, that it becomes absolutely necessary, if we are to have an ideal market, that we must have a sample market to temper the inefficiencies and inadequacies of the grading system, and in order to have such a sample market, we cannot, rely on the western millers, who can place a carload in a special bin, but we must have the grain specially binned in the terminal elevators in order to enable the eastern miller and the old country miller to enter into this competition.

I find also, on page 103 of the proceedings of the same conference, a statement from Mr. Henders, who I think is at present the president of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association, as follows:

We cannot compete under the present existing conditions, but if we could be put in such a position that we were able to go on a sample market in Winnipeg and select our types of wheat and compel the Ogilvie Milling Company and the Lake of the Woods Milling Company to go on the same market and select their types of wheat the same as we do and compete with us, we could go into the business. On the other hand we put ourselves in this position that we send to the old country the wheat which is not selected by the Ogilvie people or the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, a secondary article which goes into a general bin, and this fixes the price at which we have to sell our good stuff.

In the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate Committee, on page 200, I find in a formal statement put in by Mr. McKenzie, the secretary of the Grain Growers' Association, the following:

There is a consensus of opinion that a sample market established in Winnipeg would be in the interests of the grain producers. In my judgment, that, however, can only be made effective by permitting dealers special binning privileges in terminals so as to preserve the identity of their purchases on the sample market. I cannot conceive of a purchaser on a sample market storing his grain in a special bin in an elevator operated by his competitor. The risk would be too great; his competitor would soon put him out of business. The only effective special binning privilege that could be secured would be in government owned terminal elevators.

I read these as sample statements from those who in the west represent the organized grain producers in the associations known as the Grain Growers' Associations. I might quote from Mr. Fream, of the Alberta Farmers' Union, to the same end, that he is in favour of a sample market, but he wants to see government elevators at the terminals before he would be in favour of having a sample market introduced. Thus much for the opinions of those who represent the grain producers of the Northwest. When we come to other classes who are interested in the grain business, we find probably different views. Many of them are in favour of a sample market; some of them are not. On the whole, I should judge that the preponderating opinion of those most vitally interested in the grain business of this country is in favour of having a sample market in Canada. It is in deference to the course which history has taken in Minnesota and generally in the United States, and also in deference to this opinion, which I believe to be general, that the government has determined to introduce at this time into the Grain Bill a provision under which sample markets can be established at Winnipeg, at Fort William and at Calgary.

The arguments on general principles, without taking up too much of the committee's time, seemed to me in general to be these: The natural method of buying and selling is for the seller to show and the buyer to examine the article which it is proposed to exchange between them. A man wants to buy a horse, some one else wants to sell a horse. The buyer and the seller come together, and the buyer examines the points of the horse with what knowledge he may have and he fixes his price for that horse on his own examination. He does not sit in his house and buy a horse by grade or anything of that kind. That is probably an extreme illustration, but what I want to come to at first is, that the natural way of buying and selling is to buy and sell by an actual examination of the article of which an exchange is to be made between the two. Now it would seem to be plain that where you have three or four standard grades of grain, the standard being fixed as being of a certain weight, of certain texture or kernels of grain, certain colours and so on, that you will have as between the different grades established varying degrees of excellence in the grain. You will have a No. 1 which is flush and full. You will have a No. 1 which is between that and a bare No. 1 which the inspector looking at in sample, and knowing what the various standards are, will say: 'Yes, that can go into No. 1'; and so you have these spreads in value between the different grades as far as the grades go. From what study I have given to the matter the impression is strong with me that the farmer gains less and loses more by sales under grade, than he would if he made his sales by sample. If you have a sample market in Winnipeg, where the farmer's grain, sampled from his car, goes on inspection, and the buyers are present in the sample market the grain of the farmer is not simply bought by those who are upon the sample market because it grades No.

2, and the price just given simply on the grade of No. 2, but the price will be proportionate to the qualities within the grade itself. A man will see a plump good quality of No. 2. He will see a less generous quality in No. 2; he will see one that goes down very close to the border. In a competition of buyers it is plain to me that the better price will be given for the higher quality within the grade. By the other system it is sold out of sight and by grade. It seems to me that it is rather paid for to the farmer by the lowest of the grade than by either the average or the highest of the grade. The trouble which is complained of, and it is a grievance, is the spread in price between the different grades. Those who are in favour of a sample market believe that the purchase thereon by the competitors will bring out the value for all these qualities between the grades, and that those values will certainly be shared and gererously shared by the farmers. That is the argument for the sample market so far as that is concerned. The argument against the sample market is one that says: 'Hold by the grades' and avoid mining. Now it seems to me a necessity for a sample market that you should have mixing privileges as well, and mixing privileges, says the man who stands by the grade, and that alone, will deteriorate the grades themselves, and on the ultimate market you will therefore, get a less price than you would if you had no sample market, and no mixing of the grain as a concomitant of the sample market. The man who buys on the sample market with the privilege of mixing in a bin at the terminal elevator or anywhere else, buys the different qualities within the grades and he directs them to his bin. He will buy, for instance, a good grade of No. 1 and he will buy the best grade of No. 2. He will direct both of these—if he buys a carload or two or three carloads of each—to his bin in the terminal elevator. They will go into that bin, and the two of them mixing together will make a good grade of No. 1, and before they go into the market they pass the inspection and receive their grade out. That grade out given by the same inspectors is a uniform grade, and the grain goes upon the market with the impress of the grade, with the certificate that the government inspector gives it. I do not know if there are any other points that should be mentioned in giving this very cursory, and of course not very full or complete, description of the sample market as contrasted with the grade market, or the difference between the two. No doubt we shall have some conversation upon this, and other gentlemen will have their views upon it. We will discuss it and I shall have further opportunity for speaking upon it. Probably I have said sufficient in introducing the question to the committee for its consideration. and by and by for its conclusion.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Is the sample market in the United States under federal control, or state control?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is under state control.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure the committee is indebted to the minister for the statement he has made on the introduction of this very important amendment. But I am bound to say that the explanation he has so far given does not meet the questions that are in my mind. First let it be thoroughly impressed that for good reason or bad, whether wisely or unwisely, it has been the principle contended for, especially by the western farmers, but acceded to by everybody—that it was in the interests of the trade and in the interests of the grower of grain, that grain should go forward to its ultimate market according to the inspector's certificate.

That has been a cardinal principle of our grain trade which has been held more and more strongly every year, and the desire to maintain that principle is the foundation of the demand for government ownership of terminal elevators, or for the divorcing of the ownership of terminal elevators from the buying and selling of grain. The minister did not make it clear whether this is an amendment that applies in fact only to grain bought for local consumption and not in serious measure to grain for export. It seems to me that while ostensibly and according to the argument of the minister it is a provision which will be applied particularly to grain intended for local consumption, as a matter of fact the mixing privileges which this contemplates will apply to grain for export quite as much as to grain for home consumption.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon. friend understood me to limit it to grain for home consumption he took from my words a meaning that I did not intend to convey. They apply generally.

Mr. OLIVER. If he had given it to be understood that it applied especially to grain for home consumption I could then have seen the force of the argument, but if it is to apply to all grain I fail to see the logic of his explanation. It is then in direct contradiction to the principle that has been established and carried on for so many years. I am not going to argue for the moment that that principle is right. it may be that in the quotations he has given my hon. friend finds good reason for reversing the principle, but before reversing it there should be the most substantial reasons and the most complete explanation.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). After the grain arrives at an elevator at Fort William it is allowed to be mixed, and a man buying on sample market is allowed to mix it, and the grain is graded out.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what is proposed under the amendment and I say that is contrary to the principle which now prevails. To-day the principle is that the grain is inspected as it comes from the country elevator, at Winnipeg; it goes forward under that inspection and it is held most strongly, especially by the farming community, that it should still go forward on that inspection, and should not be mixed at Fort William.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Did they not pass a resolution at Brandon last year asking for the establishment of a sample market?

Mr. OLIVER. In my humble judgment there is an effort under the name of establishing a sample market to secure unlimited rights for mixing grain for export and that is entirely contrary to our present principles of handling grain.

There can be no question of the advantage of selling grain on a sample market if there is a demand for that grain which demand can handle it without requiring it to be graded or to go through varying channels of transportation. Then, undoubtedly the farmer will get a truer value for his grain. But that only applies and can only apply so far as there is a consuming market within such range as will allow that grain to go forward without breaking bulk, so that the grain which has been bought on sample will be actually delivered to the place of consumption. Once bulk has to be broken before grain reaches its ultimate point of consumption then, in order that the grain trade may be carried on with facility, it must be carried on under grade and not under sample. You cannot preserve the identity of grain in practice between Fort William and Liverpool.

You must carry on the trade between Fort William and Liverpool on grade and not on sample. You can only carry on the trade by sample where you can reach the point of consumption without breaking bulk from the point of shipment. When conditions in Minneapolis are cited as conditions that might prevail at Winnipeg, you lose sight of the fact that at Minneapolis a large percentage of the wheat is for home consumption, and a small percentage is for export. But at Winnipeg the small percentage is for home consumption, and the large percentage is for export. That makes a radical difference in conditions. In the case of Minneapolis it matters little what happens the small proportion of wheat that is exported; the great bulk of it is milled for home consumption, and the great bulk of the mills are right at Minneapolis. But in our case, where only a small part of the whole product is locally milled, the large proportion is for export. Therefore, it makes a great difference to us how that grain that goes to the export market is handled; it makes less difference how the grain that goes for home consumption is handled. Therefore, when a proposition is made which, under the name of giving our farmers the advantage of a sample market, merely becomes a proposition to legalize the mixing of grades for export, it is a matter of a most objectionable character. I wish to place myself on record as being strongly opposed to the proposition of legalizing the mixing of grain in the terminal elevators, because that is what this proposition is.

Mr. STAPLES. It is a proposition for a sample market.

Mr. OLIVER. A sample market has nothing whatever to do with the mixing of grain for export, or has no necessary connection with the mixing of grain for export. So far as there is a milling demand which can be centred in Winnipeg for the purchase of the farmers' grain, that milling demand can be exercised without mixing the grades in the terminal elevators. The two things have no necessary connection. Provision can be made in the Bill, if necessary, for selling grain on sample in Winnipeg. The provision exists in the Bill to-day, but it has never been taken advantage of, because I presume, the time has not arrived when conditions were favourable to dealing with it in that way. At present, in the Bill of 1908, provision is made that the shipper of a car of grain can order it stopped at Winnipeg for the purpose of giving him an opportunity of selling it on sample, and afterwards within six months he can ship it farther east at the same through rate, a provision absolutely intended to facilitate the establishment of a sample market in Winnipeg. So far as I can see, that is all that is necessary to the establishment of such a market, except the local milling demand, which is the only thing after all, that will create a sample market. When my hon. friend gave notice of the amendment, I wired Mr. R. McKenzie, at Winnipeg, whose name has been mentioned here, asking him his opinion of the amendment. I will read his reply:

Suggested amendment positively no value to western farmers. Opposed utterly by our association. Ostensibly to establish sample market, effect will be to enable few private individuals to make immense profits out of second-class grain at expense of reputation of standard grades, with no advantage to farmers. Conditions essential to establish sample market at Winnipeg, involve making Winnipeg an order point, and sending samples from points west of Winnipeg in advance of cars, as in Minneapolis, and equal opportunity to all dealers to have identity of grain purchased on sample preserved at terminals.

The suggestion of Mr. McKenzie has all been met in making Winnipeg an order point, that is, a point to which cars may be ordered and held for the purpose of the load being sold. In regard to the other suggestions that he makes, they can be dealt with very easily, and in no way do they involve the question of mixing at terminals. I have here a copy of the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' containing an article by the editor upon the sample market in Minneapolis. I think it was perhaps from this article that my hon. friend got the information that he gave to the House to-night. Mr. Chipman went to Minneapolis for the express purpose of studying the sample market, and his conclusion is this:

It was quite evident from the best advice to be received in Minneapolis that the sample market cannot be created by statute. The only thing that can be done in the matter by law is to make the conditions favourable, and the sample market will follow promptly. These conditions will include:

1. Sampling of cars at divisional points outside of Winnipeg.
2. Increased terminal elevator accommodation.
3. Permission to special bin and mix grain purchased on the sample market.
4. A prompt and efficient system of handling appeals against the grade given by the government inspector.

In regard to number 3, I take it that is mixing for the purpose of local use, that is to say, for home milling consumption, which of course must be done. When the grain goes to the ultimate consumer the miller must, of course, mix the grain to suit his particular trade. No doubt the British miller has to do the same. When the grain is bought on sample and can be delivered with the package unbroken, it is perfectly legitimate to mix that grain to make it suitable for the miller's market. But that is a different proposition altogether from mixing that grain for the purpose of sending it across the water. If the grain to be exported is to be scientifically mixed, it necessarily follows that it will always be only what will pass the grade; it will be of a lower standard than if it were not scientifically mixed, and the result of that is that our trade is affected to that extent in the British market, and our home prices are correspondingly affected.

That is necessarily the result of permitting or legalizing the mixing of grain in the terminal elevators for export. Let me draw the distinction absolutely between the question of establishing a sample market and the question of mixing grain for export. The one has no necessary connection with the other and while the establishment of a sample market in so far as it could be established would necessarily be to the benefit of the farmer, and particularly to the benefit of the farmer producing the highest quality of grain, the privilege of mixing for export would necessarily have the absolute contrary effect and would be a detriment to the good farmer inasmuch as he would not be getting the grade for the higher quality of grain that he produced.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Mr. Chairman, I regard the amendment moved to-night by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) as being perhaps the most vital feature of this Bill and I welcome with all the earnestness I can the principle launched in this amendment. I believe that it will open up a line of legislation and of grain operating in western Canada that will go far, in the course of time, to get over all the obstacles under which we suffer now. I cannot say that I am surprised that the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has a telegram in his possession that the clause is absolutely worthless from Mr. Roderick Mackenzie of the Grain Growers' Association. I regret that the officers of that association cannot see their way at the present time to give their assistance to the establishment of sample markets. But while I cannot feel myself to be in touch with them so closely as are the hon. member for Edmonton and his associates I do feel that on this subject I am certainly as closely in touch as I can be with the farmers of my own constituency. I did not learn until I reached this House and knew that sample market provisions were in contemplation by the government that those at the head of the association had become antagonistic to the idea. During and before the last contest I was met by farmers at every point in my constituency and at points in other constituencies in Saskatchewan as well as in northern and southern Manitoba and the desire seemed to be universal that sample marketing privileges and machinery should be provided. I believe that desire is universal to-day and that the gentleman who sent that telegram will become aware of it in due course of time. Why is this proposition made and what is the object to be served? I do not know that I am capable of stating it as it appeals to my mind. I think it appeals to my mind fairly clearly, I will do the best I can to state it and I will be brief. Our grading system is at present in vogue and in order to carry out that system we have to have certain specified and defined grades. We must have a certain number of grades ranging in merit from the best to the worst. Each must be defined in so far as words can define it and the grading is done according to the definition. Let us take the case of wheat in order to make it simple. If in buying all the wheat could be divided into certain sections in such a way that each would just reach the grade that is to say if it could be so divided that all in each section would just be No. 1 Hard and no more, all No. 1 Northern and no more, all No. 2 Northern and no more and so on down the list, the farmer would get the full benefit. Then there would be no means of extracting from him a certain amount of the value of his wheat. As the system is operated up to this point, by means of one device or another, the purchaser of the grain, chiefly by mixing, has been enabled—I am dealing now with the export trade because it will make the argument clear—to make the export grade the minimum in each case. By mixing perhaps two different samples of No. 3 Northern he is able to make them No. 2 Northern, the one making up what the other lacks. By mixing a high No. 2 and a low No. 3 he is able to make a No. 2 Northern. At all events he so arranges that, generally speaking, he is able to export different classes of grain, each of the minimum of its grade. He does not buy that grade. On account of the grading system in vogue he is able to buy on one basis and sell on the other and by this means he is enabled to snatch and appropriate to himself the excess of value that comes by reason of the fact that a certain sample of grain stands between the grades. It is to get over that disadvantage under which the farmer labours that this provision is introduced. The question before us is: Does this provision for a sample market get over it? I contend it does. What is the machinery? What does the Minister of Trade and Commerce present to the committee? It is that markets shall be arranged at certain points and it is provided that all that is necessary for that arrangement shall take place there. In addition, in so far as the grain that is bought by sample is concerned it may be specially binned at the terminal elevators or at the public elevator at Winnipeg and may be mixed; that is to say that grain that is bought by a purchaser may all be mixed together and he may do what he likes with it. In so doing he divides it into certain grades and he is able as well to so arrange it that it will be the minimum of its class. But in order that he may do that and get the grade he is bound to pay the farmer what that grain is actually worth because he buys it by sample and his competitor is right there to compete with him. He is therefore bound to give the farmer what he formerly has been able to extract himself. He is bound to pay the farmer every cent that that farmer's grain has in value over and above the minimum of its class. So that the establishment of a sample market and allowing mixing at the terminals, in so far as the grain is bought by sample, gets over the difficulty under which the farmer has laboured for a number of years as, by virtue of the fact that under these mixing privileges and on account of the practice of purchasing by sample there will be returned to the farmer that which has formerly gone to the purchaser and the operator. The hon. member for Edmonton seemed to argue that this was all right in so far as the home market went, that in so far as grain was bought for milling purpose the sampling provisions were good and would redound to the farmer's benefit, but they had no application to grain bought for export.

In the first place I do not think the practice has so settled. I have spoken with men in the grain business in Duluth. I refer now especially to one who is on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange at present—and my information is that grain is bought by sample for export just as generally as it is bought for local milling. It appears to me that the advantage to the farmer is just as clear in the one case as it is in the other. The mixing is done when it is bought for milling purposes at home and the sample provisions are provided in order that the farmer may get the benefit of that mixing. It applies just as well to what is bought for export. The provision must be made that only grain bought by sample can be so mixed, and that it cannot be mixed in such a way that other grain bought by grade under the old system, can be mixed with it. The point that did appeal to me, and I think both the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) raised it, is that mixing being allowed in the elevators at Fort William that contain the grain bought by sample, that mixing will result in enabling the purchaser to ship across the water to the ultimate purchaser the minimum grade of No. 1 hard, and the minimum grade of No. 2. That is to say, that the grain which goes across the water will always be at the minimum, instead of it being, if no mixing were allowed, much of it above what is the minimum of No. 1 Hard, and much of it above what is the minimum of No. 1 Northern, and so on all the way down. Of course, it is quite clear that if we could provide that our grain should go over there intact, and much of what goes over as No. 1 Hard, is really above No. 1 Hard, that would enhance the reputation of our wheat, and if the machinery were just up to that point the farmer would get the benefit. But I apprehend that by the sampling provision the farmer would have his option to sell one way or the other; the competing buyers are there, the man who is buying by sample and the man who is buying by grade, and the farmer can sell either way. The man who is buying by sample could get the benefit of the mixing provision, and he will consequently pay a much higher price, and the man who is buying by grade has to pay it or he won't get the grain. It appears to me very much could be done through the machinery provided by this section to meet the difficulty that was in the mind of the hon. member for Edmonton. I do not pretend that I have always understood this question, or even that I fully understand it yet, but I know that a very strong feeling has prevailed that only by government operation can the difficulties be overcome. I am still an advocate of government operation. I earnestly hope that the government shall adopt not only this provision but the other also, and by means of the two together we will I feel certain be able to work out a satisfactory solution. The sample market is certainly popular in the constituency of Portage la Prairie. I have no doubt whatever of that. I would need evidence greater than could be read by the hon. member for Edmonton, to convince me that it is not. I have certainly failed to read the mind of the farmer in my constituency if I have not read it right when I say that he is heart and soul behind the proposed sample clause submitted to this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. NEELY. I would like to see the Bill in proper form carried very promptly through the House, and to see its provisions, so long as they meet the necessities of the case, become effective at once. But, we are called back to consider this clause for the purpose of considering an amendment, which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen), admitted in his opening remarks, was an absolute reversal of the whole policy of the past in dealing with our grain. The minister makes practically the same admission, and the question is too serious to pass over lightly. We discussed some days ago the value of a sample market, or the possibilities of a sample market under the present conditions. Is the minister going to ask us to insert a provision now which will permit the very thing that is complained of by the men who are asking for this legislation? There would not be any Grain Bill at all before this House if it were not that the farmers of the west have complained in the past that mixing of grades had been carried on in the terminal elevators, and that as the result of that mixing our grain standards had been depreciated especially in the Liverpool market. As we all know, we have a condition in the grain trade in western Canada that is not altogether analagous to the condition in the grain trade of the states across the line. We know that practically all the wheat grown in Minnesota and the Dakotahs is exported in the form of flour if it is exported at all, and that practically none of it goes to the outside world's markets in its natural condition. The hard wheat that is graded according to our grading system is almost entirely milled in the mills of Minneapolis. On the other hand, the bulk of the Western Canadian grain is sold in the markets of Great Britain and elsewhere. The present system, whether it is right or wrong, has been the only system in vogue in this country since we have had a grain trade from the east or from the west. The farmers of the west have made complaints—and that is the cause of this legislation—that until last year the elevator operators at Fort William and Port Arthur had been mixing in their elevators the different parcels of grain shipped into these elevators, some labelled No. 1, and some No. 2, or No. 3, as the case may be, and that they have been raising a great quantity of the producer's wheat to a grade higher than was given to it by the inspector's certificate it received when it passed through Winnipeg. Every year our inspectors select samples of the different official grades, and in every case those samples which are sent to the world's buyers are a better average than the minimum of the grade requires. The western grain producer claims that as a result of the mixing that has gone on in the terminals in years gone by, the Liverpool purchaser of his wheat has not been getting the kind of wheat he might expect to get from the sample furnished him by the government inspector at the beginning of the shipping season. That is why this grain legislation was introduced in the last parliament, and has been re-introduced this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. This does not prevent that at all. The grain would still be inspected out, and the grain thus inspected, must be equal to the sample in the hands of the purchaser in England. This legislation has no effect whatever on that.

Mr. NEELY. The point I am making is, that if this legislation goes into effect, it will bring about a condition of affairs absolutely identical with that which the farmers have been complaining of in years gone by—that, instead of the Liverpool buyer getting the average of the grade which he might expect to get, judging from the sample which the inspector sends him, he has been getting, as a result of the mixing that has been going on at the terminals, the minimum of the grade, and this has depreciated the standard of our grain in the Liverpool market, and lowered the price. If these practices have not been going on, the farmers are mistaken, and there is no necessity for any legislation, other than what we have on the statute-books at the present time. If, on the other hand, the farmers have been suffering, as they have been complained of doing, from this very condition at the terminals, what does the minister mean by undertaking to legalize the very condition that has been complained against, and that is the cause of any new grain legislation at all? I can quite conceive that a sample market under proper conditions, might be of very great benefit to the grain producer. There is no doubt that the farmer loses and is bound to lose, by having to sell all his grain on the straight grading system, because there is, and must always be, such a difference in the prices paid for the different grades that the man who has a very high average of a certain grade is necessarily losing to some extent; but if the buyer in the world's market could be assured every shipping season, that he was getting something more than the minimum, that he was getting the average of the grade he had been led to expect to get, from the samples he receives from the government inspector at the beginning of every shipping season, the farmer would not be losing as much as he does at the present time. I can quite see, that beyond all that, there are conditions under which a sample market might be an advantage; but I do not think the sample market would be of any advantage whatever if we are going to insert a clause; such as this amendment is, that will permit of promiscuous mixing at the terminals, and of re-grading the grain out of these terminals for export purposes. If, for instance, a miller from Ontario wishes to go to the sample market at Winnipeg or at Fort William, and purchase a certain brand of No. 3, and a certain quality of No. 2, and intends to take that grain down to his mill in Ontario, certainly if a sample market is going to be of any advantage in that case, you must give him the privilege of leasing a special bin in the terminal at Fort William; but if he does so, and the different parcels of grain which he purchases on the sample market are, inspected or not, I say that if you give him the privilege for his own convenience of putting a certain parcel of No. 3 and a certain parcel of No. 2 or of No. 1 into a special bin at Fort William or Port Arthur, you have no right to allow your government inspector to re-grade that grain out of the elevator. Then, if the Liverpool buyer wants to purchase grain and comes over to our sample market—we will say that he is a miller, or is buying for a mill or a number of mills—if he wishes to come over and buy certain qualities of grain on the sample market and ship them in one parcel to the mills for which he purchases, there is no reason why he should not have special bin privileges at Fort William and Port Arthur. There is no reason why you should not have a sample market and the mixing privilege if you restrict them in the ways I have suggested; but there is no evidence of any restriction. If you are going to allow a Liverpool buyer to come to the sample market and take a certain sample of No. 3 and a certain sample of No. 2, and send them to a special bin at the terminal, mix them and have them regraded out, you are going to have continued in the grain trade, exactly the condition which the farmers are complaining of at the present moment. The grain dealer is not a philanthropist, and he will deliver to the purchaser, to whom he sells, either in eastern Canada or in Liverpool, a grain not a bit better than what the absolute requirements of the case demand.

And what are you going to have with this anomalous mixing privilege as suggested by this amendment? You are going to have continued in existence, only on a much larger scale than at present, the mixing of grain to the disadvantage of our grading system and to the advantage of the man who comes between and sells the farmers' grain to the world's buyers. This, Mr. Chairman, strikes me as being such an important amendment that I do not know but that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might very well give us a little further time for its consideration. I am not blaming the minister for the fact that on his own side, as well as on this, there is not as full a House at the present moment as there might be. But whether this amendment is carried out or not, I want to say, so far as the position taken by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) is concerned, I think when he says the farmer of the west would like to have a sample market he is perfectly correct, but my hon. friend knows under what conditions the farmer thinks that a sample market could be safely and properly established.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. member not think that the conditions set out by Mr. Chipman are not satisfactory?

Mr. NEELY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Chipman guards his position very thoroughly.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Those conditions are all provided for here.

Mr. NEELY. Does my hon. friend mean to say they are all provided for in this amendment?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I think so.

Mr. NEELY. Then the hon. gentleman's vision is much clearer than mine.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Read it and see.

Mr. NEELY. I have read it thoroughly again and again, and I can see no safeguard in any shape or form for the evils that would be brought into being in my judgment. If the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) takes a different view, his vision is much clearer than mine.

Mr. MEIGHEN. What I stated was that in my judgment the Bill provides the conditions set out by Mr. Chipman, and I think my hon. friend would hardly dare—I am sure he would not dare—to stand up in this House and say there was anything wrong in the 'Grain Growers' Guide.'

Mr. NEELY. I will frankly say that I am not the proprietor or publisher of the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' and I am not a shareholder or stockholder in it or any similar publication. I am not a member of the Grain Growers' organization, or any business concern connected with it. I do not think that my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen), should take such a position——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. NEELY. —because anything that emanates from the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' or the officials or head men of the Grain Growers' Association in his own province, seems to contain in itself the germ of disapproval so far as the hon. gentleman is concerned.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Oh, no, not necessarily.

Mr. NEELY. Apparently so. It appears that when the minister is making use of a quotation which bears out his argument from some member of the Grain Growers' Executive, or from the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' it is very acceptable, but when anything to the contrary is suggested by way of authority from these very same sources, that is enough to condemn it in the eyes of the hon. gentlemen opposite, including the member for Portage la Prairie. Now, I think hon. gentlemen opposite ought to be reasonable in this matter.

Mr. MEIGHEN. My hon. friend knows the rule, which is a very good principle in law or anything else, that a man's admission can always be used against him, but it can never be used in his favour.

Mr. NEELY. I am not going to split legal hairs with the hon. gentleman, because I am not a lawyer, and I do not propose to enter into any fine legal discussion, but I am lawyer enough, I think, to see the effect and the tendency of this amendment, and I fail to see yet—and I have read the article of Mr. Chipman, editor of the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' who let me say takes no active part in politics whatever—that the article makes any such admission as claimed by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and the minister in dealing with this proposition to allow mixing privileges at the terminals and then grade the grain out again for export purposes.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I am really anxious to have a little light on this question. I listened extremely carefully, with all the care I was capable of, to the minister and my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), but I cannot say that I understood the question much better after they were done than when they began. It may have been my obtuseness, it very likely was; but a man rarely gives up some belief in his own judgment, and I have some suspicion that they do not understand the question themselves as well as they might do. Now, with regard to the minister's statement of the general desirability of buying upon sample there can be no two opinions. In the internal markets of the old countries of Europe no other kind of selling of grain is known. The farmer takes his sample to the market, and he sells upon that sample, and he sells the bulk at the price he has arranged for. But why do we have a system of elevators and grades in this country? I think the answer is very simple and on the surface. It is because we have an enormous export trade. We cannot sell our grain to the consumers as they sell their grain to the consumers in the old countries of Europe. These grades and elevators, and all this complex and large machinery that is unknown in Europe, are necessary here because of our enormous export trade. Now that would seem in itself to cast some doubt upon the general argument in favour of this amendment that has been presented to this committee by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) does not agree with the leaders of the grain growers nowadays. This nonagreement is of somewhat recent origin surely. There was a time, if my memory serves me right—very likely as my hon. friend's memory is younger he may be able to correct me, but I am almost sure I am right this time—when there was mention made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House of government ownership and operation of elevators. I am surely right in that recollection, and at that time the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and Mr. Roderick Mackenzie were absolutely at one. The vote of my hon. friend was in accordance with the opinion of Mr. Roderick Mackenzie.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Not on reciprocity.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). What in the world has that to do with the matter under discussion? When the hon. member becomes a little older and wiser, he may come into accord with Mr. Roderick Mackenzie on reciprocity. If this blockade continues, it will be necessary to find an outlet for our grain somewhere. There was a time when he was in accord with Mr. Mackenzie to this extent that he voted for a resolution in favour of government ownership and operation of elevators.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Hear, hear, that is correct.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Then his education has gone on very rapidly in the last few months. I am only sorry that he cannot carry on that education in such a way as to convince me of what he has learned. He dealt with a matter that is elementary to us who are trying to get to the bottom of this very complex question. For an amateur he gave a fairly good description of what has been the evil with which we are contending, that is the mixing of grain. It is just the description I have heard Mr. Roderick Mackenzie give of that very evil so that on this head also he is in agreement with that gentleman. His peculiarity is that he has voted for an amendment which will allow this mixing to go on. The mixing is the evil we want to get rid of.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The mixing of itself is not the evil we want to get rid of, the evil we want to get rid of is that the grain buyer is getting the benefit of the mixing instead of the farmer.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). My hon. friend overlooks one half his case. Canadians have been proud of our grain product and we wanted to preserve that grain product according to its grade on the Liverpool market. If the mixing lowers the character of the grade it lowers the value of the grain at Liverpool and to that extent lowers the price which would be obtained by the farmers at Portage la Prairie as at other places. I contend that the mixing is the evil and that being the case the Grain Growers came here two sessions ago and said that the only way to cure that evil is by government ownership and operation of elevators.

We have now come to this situation that our friends opposite are doubtful about the establishment of government ownership and operation being the cure for this mixing; they tell us that the sample market will deal only with a very small part of the grain that is grown and exported. They will agree only to a sample market in conjunction with the carrying out of the promises which our friends opposite gave and the Grain Growers are looking to hon. gentlemen opposite as they have a right to look for the fulfilment of the promises by which they won the last election. I would be the last man to say that government ownership is an absolute panacea for all the evils the farmers suffer from, I was brought up in too individualistic a school for that. But the Grain Growers will be less interested in my opinion than in the vote of hon. gentlemen opposite on this question.

This buying on a sample market in the first part of the amendment cannot be objected to but where we are left in the dark is in the second part of the amendment. I do not see how we can possibly meet the views of the Grain Growers or deal with the admitted evil of mixing by embodying an amendment which allows the very mixing we have been trying to stop.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). The minister quotes the Saskatchewan Elevator Commission as authority for the proposed amendment. I have met within the last few days two members of that commission, Mr. Green and Mr. Langley, and if these gentlemen ever approved of the mixing of grain under present circumstances, they have since changed their minds, and are now strongly opposed thereto. I don't think they ever approved of allowing mixing under existing circumstances. If these gentlemen could see that we would be allowed to dispose of our grain on the American market, then possibly they would not consider the mixing of grain so great an evil, at least the sample market would be of much more use to us. I do not know that these gentlemen would be so strongly opposed to a sample market, even with mixing, provided that we had government ownership of all terminal elevators; without that they are as strongly opposed to it as they can be. Mr. Fream is of the same mind. There is no use casting slurs at these gentlemen. They are careful, conscientious men who have gone over this thing, and know more about it than most of us do. I have listened with attention to the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). I do not know how long he has been engaged in farming. I have been at it for over a quarter of a century, and I am beginning to doubt my knowledge of some of these things. My hon. friend, I fancy, thinks he knows all about this question. Perhaps after he has been dealing with wheat as long as I have he will find out that he does not know so much about it. We have a good deal to learn about it yet, even those of us who live in the west. I would ask the minister not to press this amendment.

Mr. NEELY. Will the minister tell the committee on whose recommendation, by whose advice, he has come to the conclusion that it is advisable to legalize the mixing of grain as he proposes to do by this amendment? The member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) tells us that many of the farmers in his constituency are in favour of a sample market. Are they in favour of mixing as is proposed under this amendment? How many communications can the member for Portage la Prairie give us from farmers in his constituency to that effect? Did the Minister of Trade and Commerce get his advice from the farmers, from the men who came down here and discussed this legislation with him? I would like to know that. The member for Portage la Prairie tells us that it is in the interest of the farmers. Now the farmers should know something about what is in their interest, and will the minister say whether it is the farmers who advised him along this line? Did they suggest this legislation legalizing the mixing, the very thing they have complained of for years, the very thing that this legislation was originally intended to stop? If they did not advise him to do so, then at whose request is he doing it? I cannot forget that a few days ago the member for Rainy River (Mr. Carrick) made a very strong speech in favour of this very provision in the amendment. But what sort of a constituency does that hon. gentleman represent? It is not a constituency of farmers by any means.

The chief interests in his constituency are industrial interests, are terminal elevator men, mill-owners and proprietors, men interested in the buying and selling of grain. That hon. gentleman was strongly in favour of the enactment of just such legislation as the minister proposes by this amendment, and his whole argument, and the argument of the member for Portage la Prairie, are along the same line. The argument of the member for Rainy River was all to the effect that this would be in the interest of the grain producer and not of the men who operate the terminal elevators. Beautiful philanthropy! The hon. gentleman who represents the elevator interests and the milling interests in this House, those interests being the chief industrial concerns in his constituency, advocates this very thing, and his reason is that it is in the interest of the western grain producers. And the member for Portage la Prairie, who represents a rural and farming constituency, strange to say, can support that for the very same reason. It is a remarkable state of affairs. No doubt the minister is also legislating in the interest of the grain producers, because they are the men who handle the grain and who take their profit out of it. I say these gentlemen should have some knowledge and some information to show us why the minister is making this proposition, and why he proposes to change the whole current of legislation in this country by this simple looking amendment to clause 57. As I said, certain gentlemen representing the western grain producers were here, I believe, when this Bill was first brought into committee; they no doubt made certain representations to the minister. I took an opportunity to discuss this very question of the sample market with some of these gentlemen, Mr. Fream, Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Henders, and they said they did not want a sample market under present conditions.

Mr. STAPLES. Under what conditions would they accept it?

Mr. NEELY. Under government operation of terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. STAPLES. Suppose you got them?

Mr. NEELY. That is the point. We are legislating so as to legalize mixing, but we are not legislating for government ownership or operation. We are making it permissible for the government to do it, but that is all. We had the definite statement from the Minister that he would not lead the committee into any false conclusions by saying the government propose to go into this matter on a wholesale scale.

Mr. STAPLES. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of providing sufficient money to buy all the terminal elevators at Fort William?

Mr. NEELY. The question of government operation does not involve the question of buying.

Mr. STAPLES. Well leasing then?

Mr. NEELY. I do not know that leasing would be any particular cost at all because the elevators under their present operators are supposed to pay dividends.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Are you in favour of leasing then?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the government, but I am willing to say that if the government should stay by the present system, or if they propose, as they pledged themselves to do, to go into the business of operating the terminals, they ought to do it in a straight, upright manly way by taking over the whole proposition. They cannot show the farmers of the west what they can do by taking over one or two elevators for a season. That particular season the rest of the elevator operators may find it a very useful thing to be on their best behaviour in order to show that the government-operated elevator had not turned out any better results than they had. But, we have had the results of the operation of these terminals year after year. The government cannot carry on a successful experiment unless they take over all the terminals and the handling of the whole year's output. This is not the way by which they can demonstrate the success otherwise of government ownership as compared with private operation. But, that is not the question under discussion. I do not want to say that my hon. friend was asking me any question to divert my remarks from the line on which I had started out, but I do say again, Mr. Chairman, that it is a strange situation that presents itself. We have one hon. gentleman from Port Arthur and Rainy River telling us that he wants this kind of legislation because it is in the interests of the producer, although he represents an industrial constituency, and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) telling us the same thing because he represents a rural constituency. The conditions might be worse than they are at the present time, but if the farmers of the west are not to be consulted with reference to this legislation, if their views and wishes are absolutely to be lost sight of, and if the present conditions of marketing the grain of the west are to be reversed in a way in which the western grain producer does not want them to be, I think it is only fair that the minister should give us the reasons why he desires to make this change, and at whose instigation the change is to be made.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the passage of the Bill. I would like to dispose of this amendment to-night, in fact I would be glad if we could carry the Bill out of committee to-night, but it will not be possible to take the Bill out of committee to-night because section 123 stands for consideration, and while I would not suggest that possibly very much more could be said in regard to this amendment which is now before the committee, it will be admitted by everybody that it is the most important feature of the whole Bill as a matter of policy, and as a matter of legislation. The membership of the committee at the present time is very small, and I would suggest to the minister that it would not be creditable to pass such an important amendment in such a small committee, and that as the Bill is not going out of committee anyway, and must be considered at another time the amendment be allowed to stand until the consideration of the Bill at a future date.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want to press unduly for the passage of this amendment, or of the Bill, and I do not think that my hon. friends on the other side can say that I have been pressing unduly, but we do want to get the Bill through. I do not know, if we were to let it go until to-morrow, what could be said further than what has been said. The hon. gentlemen who are opposed to this certainly are the pick of their side, and they are the men who have grown up on grain. They come right out of the atmosphere, they have it in their boots, and in their hats, it is through them all the way. They are the competent ones, they are the ones who have stayed by this Bill manfully as we have been carrying on the discussion for the last fortnight, and I am sure that nothing can be said, but what has been said so eloquently, and so well by the members who have had their full say to-night. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), is not satisfied. I would invite my hon. friend to make himself over a little if it is not too late. What is the reason a man who is not a farmer cannot express his views and give his quota to legislation in the interest of farmers, and of the grain producers of the country? Is it absolutely impossible? The whole argument of my hon. friend was based upon a remarkable conjunction of feelings and of sentiment. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Carrick), was in favour of this very thing and he favoured it because it was beneficial to the producer of grain. Why, should the argument prejudice the case? Could not my hon. friend (Mr. Carrick), hold that sentiment, and advance it in this House, and be thoroughly honest in it? Does it depreciate his argument because it is not made by a man who raises grain? Surely that is not what my hon. friend (Mr. Neely), would say. But the strangeness of the thing went still further. There was a complete agreement between the argument of my hon. friend from Rainy River and the argument of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). They were on the same line. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie says that his farmers are in favour of it. He advocates it because it is in favour of the grain producer, not of the grain handler. Did my hon. friend mean to throw discredit on that argument because my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie was not a farmer? Here are two arguments, one from a gentleman who is a business man, who is not a farmer, and one from a lawyer who is not a farmer, but who represents a farming constituency. But the whole point of my hon. friend's argument. if he means to throw discredit on the thesis that was being advocated, because it was advocated by men who were not farmers, falls to the ground when he sees that the arguments, sentiments and reasons of these two gentlemen were exactly in accord with what I have read here to-night as the printed statements of the Grain Growers' Association's officers who are farmers. There is an argument that compels me, if I were not perfectly clear in my own mind before, to come to the conclusion that this plan must be right. These are the sentiments of the men who grow the grain in the west. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie from his acquaintance with and knowledge of the farmers whom he represents is entitled to give the reason which he has given for supporting this proposal. He believes that it will be a benefit to the farmer.

The man of general business knowledge looks over the whole scene with just as good a business head as my hon. friend has, and he says he advocates it for the benefit of the farmer. There is a concurrence of testimony that must carry weight in this House. The hon. gentleman is anxious to know why I introduced the amendment, and what did it arise from. I will tell my hon. friend. I have given what study I could to it. I am a novice in the business but I have some power of reasoning and of getting a grasp of facts, and this proposal is here because after a thorough study I believe that the sample market is in the interest of the grain producer. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) admitted it himself to-night; he said: The farmer loses and is bound to lose under the grade system. So did the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) admit it.

Mr. OLIVER. Both myself and Mr. Chipman say you cannot create a sample market by statute.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I deny that Mr. Chipman's whole article and the conclusions from it are anything else but an argument in favour of a sample market. I have read it carefully and it seems to me that the whole description is sympathetic to a sample market. I believe that the main thing to keep our minds on is what is in the best interests of the producer of the grain. The exporter and the buyer will take care of himself. The eternal battle point between buyer and seller is where the farmer comes in and at the present time he comes in at a disadvantage. The sample market to my mind will give him the advantage he has heretofore been deprived of and that is sufficient reason for me to favour the passage of this amendment. I have a good deal of respect for theory. There are just as good men who can be found who out of a life-long experience in the grain business will stand up and say that as far as this whole matter is concerned the buyer on the European market buys by grade under our present system and his price is predicated upon that grade. He buys on grade and he fixes his price according to the grade and whatever is over the grade upon which he buys it, is so much advantage to him and so much taken from the farmer. It is the farmer who has been missing the fatness of the grade and it is the handler and the miller here and the miller in the old country who gets the advantage of the fatness of the grade. To hear some of my hon. friends opposite you would think there was a generic difference between the miller who bought for milling purposes in Ontario and the same miller who is the ultimate buyer in the English market.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Will the minister explain how you can sell on sample from here to Liverpool?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I believe that with the establishment of a sample market within five years you will find the biggest grain market in the world in the city of Winnipeg, and I believe when a sample market is established in Winnipeg the European buyer and the Ontario buyer will be there in person or by agents and will be buying by sample on that market. I believe that the possibilities of the market in Winnipeg are illimitable. You say that Minneapolis has the advantage in the sample market because Minneapolis has the advantage of the millers close by, but Winnipeg has the advantage of the millers on the sample market itself in the person of commission agents who will buy for them. You say that we are perpetuating mixing which we have been trying to minimize by previous legislation. Will my hon. friend talk with Mr. Mackenzie from whom he received that telegram and put to Mr. Mackenzie this question: do you believe in a sample market and Mr. MacKenzie will say: I do. Then ask him: Mr. Mackenzie, do you believe a sample market is possible without mixing, and he will say I do not. Then ask him are you in favour of a sample market now, Mr. Mackenzie, and Mr. Mackenzie will answer: I am, provided we have the proper mixing—no, I will not put it in that way: provided we have our mixing in the place where no other mixers will be allowed to meddle with us and provided we do it ourselves. That is what Mr. Henders will tell you, and that is what Mr. Fream will tell you. They are all in favour of a sample market and they will tell you that a sample market is impossible without mixing, but they do not trust their mixing to go on in the other fellow's shop; they want a government shop in which they can do their mixing in their own bin. We will give them a government shop in which they can do the mixing in their own bin. Before next season's grain is ready to be shipped there will be elevators placed under government operation where these gentlemen can have their bins and where they can do their mixing under conditions which they themselves declare will be honest conditions. In the face of this why is it that my hon. friend must seek for reasons for my bringing this proposal in? These are the reasons. I may be in error but my position is that if we have a sample market, then with the other conditions which will go with it, we will be helping the farmer directly and we will be helping him greatly. You say that the grain out of these bins where grain has been mixed will be degraded on the European markets and so lower the price. Let me take two branches of that argument. Suppose it does slightly degrade, and suppose the English buyer there puts his price down a little the reflection of that fact on the farmer in the west will be something, but a sample market in Winnipeg where his grain is bought on sample will take away the spread that now exists and he will thus get two or three times on the balance of price.

I believe more. Here is the gentleman who inspects the grain out in bodily form. He inspects out the grain which comes from the farmer; on that inspection it is put into store on grade, and is inspected out by himself on grade. It comes out as he sees it. It comes out good and easily goes as No. 1. Another lot comes out. He says, I am afraid of that a little; it is very close down to No. 1, the very lowest point of No. 1; it is a little shaky; that will go down into No. 2; and so all through. He will not pass a grade to go to the old country market or to the ultimate buyer unless he knows that it is without suspicion of that grade. That is the system on which the grading has been done, and to-day I have talked to one of the best and oldest graders in this country, Mr. Horn, who tells me that the complete testimony from the English market is that the grades of Canadian grain have been remarkably even and satisfactory, and that therefore, there is scarcely any grievance or complaint on the other side. The man who grades out those grades, and sees that they are not skin grades, but are generous grades, is the very same man who will grade out the grain that is mixed in the bin for the sample market buyers, and will see that it goes out on exactly the same level as the others. Therefore, I do not look for that degradation of grades that is feared by some.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). If everything is so satisfactory, why pass an Act at all?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I pass the Act because I think it will be for the benefit of the men who ought to have the greatest benefit, that is, the farmers who produce the grain.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). They are getting it now, according to your own statement.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They are not. It is the ultimate buyer and the handler who are getting all the fatness, and the farmer gets paid only for the very lowest grade, and even for a grade below what is the real grade. This dread would be to my mind diminished by the sample market, and the ultimate good resulting from it would be infinitely greater than any possible harm, if we admit a possible harm, from the degradation of the grades if that should take place.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. OLIVER. Has the minister anything to tell us in regard to the questions with regard to the Manitoba extensions which were on the order paper to-day in my name, and which were passed over?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). To-morrow I will move that the resolution be taken up on the next day. I do not think the Prime Minister will be with us to-morrow, but I will communicate with him at once and if possible will have those questions put down for to-morrow. I do not know anything about them myself.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a rumour in the Montreal papers that the Manitoba boundaries question will go over to the next session.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If I were my hon. friend I would not put my faith in rumours.

Mr. OLIVER. What will be the business taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If I can get that clause fixed up, I will try to get the Grain Bill out of the way, if possible. Then there will be one stage for the Manitoba Boundaries Bill, but that, I imagine, will not cause any discussion. The Tariff Bill will probably be taken up, and the Highways Bill, if the Minister of Railways is back, as I hope he will be, and after that we shall probably go into Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. Tuesday.

FISHERY REGULATIONS.

Rt. hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) if the question at issue between Canada and the United States with reference to the Fishery regulations on the treaty shore under the award of the Hague Tribunal and the recommendations of that tribunal has been settled.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN. I scarcely know how far I should go in reply to the inquiry of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at the present time. Perhaps my right hon. friend will allow the question to stand and I shall reply to him to-morrow, and in the meantime I shall see my right hon. friend.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I simply want to know if it has been settled; if not, I shall not press my question.

WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island) moved the adjournment of the House in order to call the attention of the government and of the Minister of Railways to the inadequacy of the train service for the transportation of passengers between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

He said: Mr. Speaker, for some years past it has been the practice of the Prince Edward Island railway to have a special train to meet the winter boats at Georgetown to take passengers who come by those boats from Pictou to Charlottetown without delay. This year that train has been taken off and the consequence is it is exceedingly inconvenient to the travelling public. There is only one train a day between Georgetown and Charlottetown and passengers wishing to go to the mainland from Charlottetown have to leave for Georgetown by the early afternoon train, remain there for a considerable portion of the afternoon and cross to Pictou the following morning. It takes about twenty hours to go from Charlottetown to Pictou, a distance of about ninety miles. Going the other way the conditions are still worse. The boat cannot possibly arrive at Georgetown until after the regular train leaves in the morning. She arrives at Georgetown about two hours after the train leaves and, there being no other train, passengers have to remain there until the following morning, twenty-two hours after they arrive, before they can go to Charlottetown where business is generally done, or proceed by the regular train to their destination. In former years we had the privilege of a special train leaving Charlottetown in the evening about eight o'clock meeting the boat at Georgetown and passengers could go on board and proceed to Pictou the following morning. In the morning the train would take the passengers on the return trip on the arrival of the boat. The train would take the passengers to Charlottetown where they could do business and proceed by the regular train to their destination the same day. This train has been taken off I suppose by the Railway Board or perhaps by the management at Charlottetown for purposes of economy. I do not think there is any economy in it for this reason that under such conditions as I have pointed out, travel would practically cease. The railway management at Charlottetown will give a special train to Georgetown and return at any time for $40 and, therefore, I presume that $40 will pay the expense and leave something over, probably $30 would be the expense of a special train. As the fare between these two points would be about $1.25 or $1.50. I am sure I shall be well within the mark when I say that an extra fifteen or twenty people would travel by that road per day if that accommodation was given and that this would pay the whole cost of the special train. I am convinced that no money is saved by this policy. But for some reason or other the Railway Board appointed a few years ago seem to do strange things, they do not seem to take into consideration to any great extent the convenience of the public, but in order to save a dollar they give these peculiar orders or perhaps the management at Charlottetown is to blame. But there is more than that to it. When Prince Edward Island joined the confederation we came in under a bargain and that was that we were to have efficient and continuous steam communication for passengers the year round with the mainland.

I do not suppose that the present hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane), is familiar with that. I do not know that the board of railway management are familiar with it, but they ought to be familiar with it, because it is important. In order that the present minister may have his attention called to it I shall read the clause in the agreement made at confederation which says that we are entitled to have a better train service than we are getting. Then, among other things, the Dominion government undertook this:

> Efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers, to be established and maintained between the island and the mainland of the Dominion, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial railway and the railway system of the Dominion.

I am sure that no man will say that the service that I have pointed out is either efficient or continuous, for passengers landing at Georgetown have to remain at least 22 hours before being able to proceed to any other point on the island. I would ask that the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways and Canals take this matter into consideration, and give an order by wire to the management at Moncton, and the management at Charlottetown to put a special train on at once such as we had in former years. This matter has been going on for six weeks. Possibly it has been brought to the attention of the minister because I see by letters and papers, some of which letters I have myself received, that the inconvenience is so pronounced that the people are very much put out by it, and I would ask the minister to send a telegram either to the management at Moncton or at Charlottetown instructing them to remove these grievances immediately. I would ask him also to see that these vexatious and cheese-paring regulations are not continued by the board in the future.

Hon. Mr. COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals). As the hon. member from Kings, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes), says, I am not familiar with the train service down there, but I will take it up with the board at once, and see what can be done. It is only one other evidence that the hon. gentleman and his party have not done their duty during the last fifteen years, because, if they had, they would have had a ferry in operation such as we are proceeding at once to construct, and which we hope to have in operation in a few months.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). I have the privilege of replying.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, go on.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). I am pointing out to this House and to the minister, that we have not as good a service as we had in former years under the late administration, and that we would be satisfied if we had such a service.

Mr. COCHRANE. If you had had a car-ferry you would have had a good service.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). I hope we will have a car-ferry within the time that the minister has promised.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well then, be satisfied.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). If we have that, and if it removes all the difficulties, that we have laboured under for many years it will be a very good thing, but the fact that under this government, the privileges that we have had have been taken away from us is not the best proof.

Mr. COCHRANE. I said to the hon. gentleman that I would look into the matter at once.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). Yes, but somehow or other the service has been taken from us in the meantime. I am sure that I presented the case reasonably fairly to the minister and I do not hink that the minister should in his reply have made the statement that he was doing much better or intended to do a great deal better than the late government had done.

Motion (Mr. Hughes, Kings, Prince Edward Island) negatived.

NEWS SERVICE FOR MAGDALEN ISLANDS.

On orders of the day being called.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Speaker, I am told that a Marconi service has been established by the government in order to supply the news every week to the Magdalen Islanders. Would my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) inform me by whom that new service is provided and what is the nature of it? I see that the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) announced in the press the other day that the service had been established.

Mr. HAZEN. I will be delighted to look into the matter and get the information for my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) at the earliest possible date.

BOUNDARY WATERS TREATY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the House (Mr. Borden) if the papers connected with the negotiation of the boundary waters treaty have been laid on the table.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). I am not aware that they have been laid on the table of the House. On a former occasion I mentioned to the hon. gentleman the reason. I am not aware that the matter has been arranged. It is necessary to obtain consent. However, I shall make inquiry about it and ask why there should have been such delay. I think the delay is greater than should be necessary.

DISMISSAL AND APPOINTMENT OF PUBLIC EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). I would like to draw the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) to the fact that on January 24, 1912, an order of the House issued on my motion:

> For a return showing all the employees of the different departments at Ottawa, and also in the nine provinces and territories of Canada, and other places outside of Canada, in the inside and outside service, who have left their employment since the 1st October, 1911, up to the 10th January, 1912, inclusively, with their names, Christian names, age, nationality, employment and salaries respectively; the date of their appointment; the date of their leaving; their salaries at the time of their appointment and at leaving; the reasons of their leaving; and if replaced or not; the names, Christian name, age, nationality, employment and salary of those who have replaced them; and in the case of dismissals, a list of the persons who asked for their dismissals; in the case of those replacing them, a list of the persons who recommended their successors.

I want to draw the right hon. Prime Minister's attention to the fact that this return has not yet been brought down. It seems to me that it would be very easy to procure the list. The heads of the different departments have pay lists.

Mr. BUREAU. Too long.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). I do not think it is too long. I would like to have the answer of the Prime Minister as to that.

Mr. BORDEN. I shall direct that attention be given to the motion, which, as far as I can gather its terms, seems to be pretty comprehensive.

MANITOBA BOUNDARY EXTENSION.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to renew the inquiry I made yesterday as to the answer to a question relating to the resolution in regard to the boundaries of Manitoba. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) said yesterday that he would draw the attention of his colleagues to it and have the information produced as soon as posible.

Mr. BORDEN. I am afraid I did not have my attention directed to it. However, I am supposed to move the resolution as soon as the government orders are called and possibly I may be able then to give my hon. friend the information desired.

Mr. OLIVER. The notice appeared in the Votes and Proceedings on Friday last and it is rather important that the answer should be in such shape as to enable the basing of an argument upon it before the resolution is moved.

PAYMENT OF CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) if the amounts due the census enumerators have yet been paid. The Minister of Agriculture smiles—let me say to him that to hundreds of people all over Canada the matter is quite serious. Only to-day I had a letter from a settler in the province of Saskatchewan who tells me that he has as yet been unable to market his grain and he is in a position almost of poverty and yet there is quite an amount due him by the Department of Agriculture. I have letters also from quite a number of others. I do hope that the matter has been settled, or that it will be in the course of a few days. What is the position now?

Hon. MARTIN BURRELL (Minister of Agriculture). I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) that this matter is being expedited as fast as possible by the officers of the department. I am unaware that hundreds are unpaid, but I do know they are being paid as fast as it possibly can be done, and my impression is that there are not a great many left to be settled with at present. Those who are not paid, will be paid as fast as we can do it, probably within a week or two.

PROVINCE OF MANITOBA—EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

Resolved, that it is expedient, (a) to extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba northward to the sixtieth parallel of latitude and northeastward to the shores of Hudson bay, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the legislative assembly of Manitoba and by parliament;

(b) to authorize the Governor in Council, inasmuch as the province was not in debt at the time of its establishment, to pay to the said province an annual sum of $381,584.19, being the equivalent of interest at five per cent on $7,631,683.85, the difference between a principal sum of $8,107,500 and $475,816.15 heretofore advanced by the government to the province for provincial purposes; such annual sum to be paid as and from the first day of July, 1908, but subject, however, as to payments due upon the coming into force of any Act founded upon these resolutions, to the deduction of certain sums received by the said province by way of interest on capital allowance in lieu of debt;

(c) to authorize the Governor in Council to pay to the said province, in lieu of ownership of public lands, an annual sum based upon the population of the said province as ascertained by each quinquennial census thereof, such annual sum to commence with $562,500 (less certain deductions in respect of what are known as swamp lands and university lands) and not to exceed the annual sum of $1,125,000 (less equivalent deductions); the same to be paid as from the first day of July, 1908, but subject, however, as to payments due at the time of the passing of any Act founded upon these resolutions, to a deduction of the aggregate of certain sums received by the province on and after July 1, 1908, on account of indemnity in lieu of public lands;

(d) to authorize the Governor in Council to pay the said province one-half on July 1, 1912, and one-half on July 1, 1913, the sum of $201,723.57 towards the construction of public buildings.—Mr. Borden.

Mr. BORDEN. It will be remembered that on the 13th day of July, 1908, the right hon. the then Prime Minister moved certain resolutions in this House with regard to the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec. The resolution so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned, was in the following words:—

Whereas, petitions have been presented to the government and to this House from the legislative assembly of Manitoba, praying for an extension of the boundaries of the said province northward and eastward, and for an additional subsidy to the said province in lieu of the ownership of public lands in the territory to be so added.

Be it resolved.

That it is expedient that the prayer of the said petition should be acceded to, and that upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislative assembly and by parliament the boundaries of Manitoba be extended as follows:

The Northern boundary to be the sixtieth parallel of latitude; the western boundary to be the present eastern boundary line of the province of Saskatchewan to the said sixtieth parallel, the eastern boundary to be the present eastern boundary as far north as the northeast corner of the province, thence on a straight line to the most eastern point of Island lake and thence on a straight line to the point where the eighty-ninth meridian of west longitude intersects the Shore Line of Hudson bay.

And, be it further resolved:

That whereas, notwithstanding the extension of territory above described, the ungranted lands of the Crown in the territory so to be added to the said province will still continue to be administered by the government of Canada, for the purposes of the Dominion; and the said province will not have the public land as a source of revenue.

It is just and equitable to recognize the increased cost of civil government which such extension of territory will occasion to the province, and in view of the premises, to make to the said province an increased allowance by money payment, the amount of which should be the subject of negotiation between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba.

For some time afterwards, the question of the financial terms was the subject of negotiations between the government of Canada on the one hand, and the government of the province of Manitoba on the other, but without any definite result. So, the matter stood when the present administration took office on the 10th of October last. Shortly after we had taken office, the Prime Minister of Manitoba and one of his colleagues, visited Ottawa, and after some negotiations a basis of arrangement was arrived at, which is set forth in a letter which I wrote to the Hon. R. P. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, on the 20th day of November last. The letter is in these words:—

Ottawa Ont., November 20, 1911.

Dear Mr. Roblin,—Referring to our interview, I beg to say that the conclusions arrived at are as follows:

The extension of the boundaries of Manitoba has been under consideration at those interviews and a basis of settlement has been reached respecting the financial terms which hitherto have been in dispute.

The basis adopts the principle of equality of terms as between Manitoba and the other prairie provinces. The application of this principle to the details remains to be worked out.

I may add that we shall introduce the necessary legislation at this session.

Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

R. L. BORDEN.

Hon, R. P. Roblin,
Premier of Manitoba,
Ottawa, Ont.

This principle has been worked out with results which are briefly set forth in the resolution which is now submitted to the committee. Perhaps it would be advisable to place these results before the committee a little more in detail, and I shall begin by stating the amount of subsidy to which Manitoba, apart from this resolution, would be entitled for the year beginning July 1, 1911.

The following statement shows the amount of subsidies to which Manitoba is entitled for the year beginning July 1, 1911:

Allowance for government and local purposes, B.N.A. Act, 1907, sec. 1 (1) (a)	$190,000 00
Eighty cents per head per annum on 455,614 population, as ascertained by the census of June, 1911	364,491 20
Indemnity for want of public lands (cap. 50, Acts of 1885)	100,000 00
Interest at 5 per cent on capital allowance in lieu of debt (various statutes)	178,947 66
Total	$833,438 26

The following statement shows the approximate amount of subsidy Manitoba will receive under the resolution now under the consideration of the committee for the year beginning July 1, 1912:

Allowance for government and local purposes, B.N.A. Act, 1907, sec. 1 (1) (a)		$190,000 00
Eighty cents per head on 455,614 population, as per census of June, 1911, B.N.A. Act, 1907, sec. (1) (b)		364,491 20
Indemnity for want of public lands	$562,500 00
Swamp lands deduction, about	$134,230 00
University lands deduction	15,000 00
	149,230 00
		413,270 00
Interest at 5 per cent on $8,107,500	$405,375 00
Less interest at 5 per cent on $475,816.15	23,780 81
		381,584 19
Total		$1,349,345 39

This might be compared with the amount of the subsidies which the two neighbouring provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan will receive during the year beginning July 1, 1912, under the statutes which were passed by this parliament in 1905, creating a portion of the Northwest Territories into those two provinces. The following shows the amount of subsidies that the province of Alberta will receive for the year beginning July 1, 1912:

Allowance for government and local purposes, B.N.A. Act, 1907, sec. 1 (1) (a)	$180,000 00
Eighty cents a head on 374,663 population, as per census of June, 1911, B.N.A. Act, 1907, sec. 1 (1) (b)	299,730 40
Allowance in lieu of debt, 5 per cent on $8,107,500 (chap. 3, sec. 19, Acts of 1905)	405,375 00
Allowance in lieu of public lands cap. 3, sec. 20, Acts of 1905)	375,000 00
Total	$1,260,105 40

The following shows the amount of subsidies that the province of Saskatchewan will receive for the year beginning July 1, 1912:

Allowance for government and local purposes, B.N.A. Act, 1907, sec. 1 (1) (a)	$190,000 00
Eighty cents a head on 492,432 population, as per census of June, 1911, B.N.A. Act, 1907, sec. 1 (1) (b)	393,945 60
Allowance in lieu of debt, 5 per cent on $8,107,500 (cap. 42, sec. 19, Acts of 1905)	405,375 00
Allowance in lieu of public lands (cap. 42, sec. 20, Acts of 1905)	562,500 00
Total	$1,551,820 60

The resolution embraces some other considerations to which it will be desirable to call attention. As far as some of these allowances are concerned, it is proposed that they shall date from the 1st day of July, 1908, and, therefore, as to these there will be arrearages. The province of Manitoba took the ground that the extension of its territory should have taken place at the same time that the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were constituted, and that it should have received from the federal treasury the same consideration which was at that time extended to the two new provinces then created. This contention was pressed with a great deal of earnestness and persistence. We found ourselves unable to assent to it; but, inasmuch as this parliament did on the 13th day of July, 1908, by the resolution which I have already quoted, determine that the boundaries of the province of Manitoba should be extended in accordance with the terms set forth in that resolution, it seemed to us a fair proposal that the treatment now proposed for the province of Manitoba should begin as and from the 1st day of July, 1908, and with a good deal of reluctance, the province has eventually come to the conclusion to accept those terms. It will be desirable, therefore, to submit to the committee a statement of what those arrearages will amount to.

I have an approximate statement of them here. It will be necessary probably to work them out more definitely and more fully, but in the meantime the committee is entitled to such information in regard to this matter as is in the possession of the government at the present time. The following is a statement showing approximately what arrearages will be paid to Manitoba, should the proposed Bill become law forthwith:

(a) Annual allowance in lieu of debt under Bill..		$381,584 19
Annual allowance already received..		178,947 06
Arrearage each year..		202,637 13
Arrearages for four years, July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1912.. ..		810,648 52
(b) Annual allowance in lieu of lands under Bill..		562,500 00
Swamp lands deduction, average say..	$105,500
University lands deduction..	15.000
Already received..	100,000
		220,500 00

Deducting that sum of $220,500 from the proposed annual allowance in lieu of lands under this resolution, namely, $562,500, the difference is found to be $342,000. The estimated arrearage each year will, therefore, be $342,000, or for four years the sum of $1,368,000. Adding that to the sum of $810,648.52, above mentioned, we have the estimated total arrearages of $2,178,648.52.

Then it is desirable that the committee should have before it such information as is in our possession respecting swamp lands. Members of the House are aware that under a statute passed some years ago there was conveyed to the province of Manitoba a very considerable area of lands known as swamp lands. I believe that the total acreage up to the end of 1909 so conveyed was approximately 2,009,368 acres. The way in which that works out, according to the information at present in our possession, would be somewhat in this wise:

	Acres.
Swamp lands conveyed to Manitoba up to the end of 1909, approximately..	2,009,368
Sold by the province as per statement furnished by the province. January, 1912..	838,484·16
Balance to be reconveyed to the Dominion under Bill..	1,170,883·84
Estimate of swamp lands in the existing province of Manitoba still available—
(a) Balance as above..	1,170,883·84
(b) Classed as swamp lands by Dominion government but not transferred..	431,948
(c) Estimated acreage of swamp in surveyed part of the province, exclusive of (b).. ..	1,760,000
(d) Estimate of swamp lands in unsurveyed part of the province..	4,870.000
Total estimated swamp lands..	8,232,831·84

Then I have a note which reads as follows:

The specifications (b), (c) and (d) were made by the late R. E. Young, chief geographer and superintendent of railway lands, in February, 1911. With reference to item (d) Mr. Young said:—The unsurveyed area in the province is estimated at 12,900,000 acres. This is largely unexplored. It is thought thirty per cent (4,870,000 acres) may be swamp. This land will be of considerably less value than the swamp lands already referred to.

It does not occur to me at the present moment that there is any further information which I could profitably give to the committee at this stage, but I should be very glad to give any further information in my possession to any hon. gentleman desirous of having it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Chairman: Whatever there may be in this resolution of a controversial nature, I do not, for my part, intend to advert to upon the present occasion. I think the time of the committee will be better employed in endeavouring to get information, which has been partly presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) in order that we may appreciate the reasons of the policy which has been adopted by the government with respect to this matter, and the basis of the financial terms which they have given to the province. The resolution in that respect is simply meagre, and I am sure there is further information which could be got, by inquiring for it. I have to observe first of all, that in regard to the territory added to Manitoba the resolution as introduced by the Prime Minister will have to be amended by him, so as to conform to what I understand is now the settled policy of the government, with regard to those boundaries. My hon. friend has based his resolution in that regard, upon the resolution which was adopted by this House in the month of July, 1908, in which the boundaries intended to be assigned to Manitoba were thus defined:—

The northern boundary to be the sixtieth parallel of latitude; the western boundary to be the present eastern boundary line of the province of Saskatchewan to the said sixtieth parallel; the eastern boundary to be the present eastern boundary as far north as the northeast corner of the province, thence on a straight line to the most eastern point of Island lake and thence on a straight line to the point where the eighty-ninth meridian of west longitude intersects the shore line of Hudson bay.

The resolutions now proposed, although based upon that of 1908, do not seek to define the boundaries intended to be conveyed to Manitoba. My hon. friend in his resolution simply says:—

Resolved, that it is expedient, (a) to extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba northward to the sixtieth parallel of latitude and northeastward to the shores of Hudson bay, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the legislative assembly of Manitoba and by parliament.

There never has been any difficulty at all on this question of boundary between Manitoba and the Dominion government, in so far as the western boundary is concerned, because though the province of Saskatchewan made application to have its boundary extended eastward to the shores of Hudson bay, north of the territory which now constitutes the province of Manitoba, the Dominion government of that day could not see the propriety or the justice of this wish on the part of Saskatchewan, but thought, on the contrary, that territory geographically belonged to Manitoba, and ought to be given to her. There never was any difficulty either as to the northern boundary of the province, it was always understood that it should be the 60th parallel of latitude. The difficulty arose with regard to the eastern boundary. and that difficulty was that the province of Ontario made a large claim to have its territory extended north of what is now the present boundary of Manitoba—in fact at the conference which took place between the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario, in 1906 the government of Ontario asked to have its boundaries extended up to the Churchill river.

On the other hand, the House remembers that the province of Manitoba asked to have its boundaries extended eastward over the territory which was claimed by the province of Ontario, north of the Albany river up to about the longitude of Fort William. The government of that day could not see its way clear to grant either the prayer of the province of Manitoba or the prayer of the province of Ontario in its entirety, but thought that justice would be done both if the boundary between the provinces were made as described here, that is to say an extension of the present boundary of Manitoba from the northeast corner of that province by Island lake to about the 89th degree of west longitude. I am aware that the province of Manitoba at first demurred strongly to accepting the boundary which we had assigned to them. Several conferences were held between the government of the Dominion and Manitoba. I had the pleasure on more than one occasion of having conference with my hon. friend the present Minister of Interior (Mr. Rogers) when he was a member of the government of Manitoba, not only as stated by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), as to the financial terms, but also as to the actual location of the boundary. And I may say that it was only last winter, after the conference we had between the Dominion government and the provincial government, that the boundary which we had offered the province of Manitoba was accepted. The record of that conference is before the House. In the memorial which was sent to my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) after he had accepted office, and which also he has laid before the House, the government of Manitoba officially and formally accepted the boundary which had been offered. It is also of record—or, if not of record, it is of public knowledge—that the government of Ontario was not satisfied with that boundary and pressed to have its claims accepted, that is to have its boundary extended northward to the Churchill river, as it had claimed originally. I assume that, as the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has brought in the resolution in its present form, 'extending the boundaries of Manitoba north-eastward to the shores of Hudson bay' without stating precisely the point at which the boundary is to touch the bay, the government have not yet decided whether they should or should not accept the pretensions set forth by the province of Ontario.

Mr. BORDEN. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is mistaken in that regard. The boundaries are the same as those defined in the resolution of 1908, except that they have been set forth in more explicit terms by the Dominion geographer. This more definite and explicit description was placed in the hands of the proper officer of this House to prepare such resolution as might be necessary, and he has prepared the resolution in the way in which it is set forth, and which seems to be all that is necessary, inasmuch as the lands are not being handed over as they are being handed over to Ontario and Quebec.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Whatever may have been the cause which inspired the present resolution, as to the effect of it I am obliged to differ with my right hon. friend. If the resolution were to be adopted as it is, 'to extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba northward to the 60th parallel of latitude and eastward to the shores of Hudson bay,' there would be no actual definition of the boundary. I presumed, in the innocence of my heart, that it was because the boundary had not been decided. For it is reported that Sir James Whitney said no later than last week that he expected that Ontario would have a harbour on Hudson bay. Therefore, I assumed, that the question had not been settled. But, if there is any doubt on this point, a new resolution has been given notice of by my right hon. friend in which it is stated that the eastern boundary of Manitoba shall be that set forth in the resolution of 1908, the production of a line from the north eastern corner of Manitoba to Highland lake and from that to the 89th degree of latitude. I apprehend that the matter has been settled finally and that the province of Ontario has agreed to have its boundary such as was set down in that resolution of 1908, that is to say it will have no harbour at Churchill or Nelson, but is to go no farther northward on the shores of Hudson bay than the 89th degree of latitude. But I persist in saying that if the resolution were to remain as we now have it under consideration, and the Bill were to be put in this form, it would be impossible to say where the boundary of Manitoba was. My right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will not pretend seriously that there is any definition of a boundary in the resolution we now have before us. I presume that if he is to introduce legislation that will be effective he must amend his resolution and state that the boundary of the province of Ontario is to be the 89th degree of latitude. If it is the intention of my right hon. friend in this way to settle the boundary of Ontario, it would be preferable to make the matter perfectly clear.

Mr BORDEN. I have no objection to that. But, perhaps the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) did not understand me. For what reason is a resolution necessary at all? The proposed Bill will not alienate any part of the public domain of the Dominion, and in that way it will not constitute a charge upon the treasury. It would not occur to me—with all deference to the right hon. gentleman—that any resolution was necessary so far as the question of boundaries is concerned. The resolution is necessary so far as the increased subsidies are concerned, these being a charge upon the public treasury. If my right hon. friend who has had great experience, thinks it would be better to state the boundaries in the resolution exactly as they are to be defined in the Bill, I should have no objection. But it occurred in the way I have stated. The specific boundary, more definite and more specific than as expressed in the resolution of 1908 but covering exactly the same territory, was placed in the hands of the officer of the House for the purpose of preparing the proper resolution. He has framed it in the way in which it appears before us. But, as I say, if an hon. gentleman of the experience of my right hon. friend thinks it would be better to express it more fully, I have no objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it ought to be expressed. But, even from the point of view of my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden), I think it essential because the money terms to be granted to the province must depend largely upon what territory is given to the province.

My hon. friend has copied the resolution adopted in 1905, with regard to Saskatchewan. Under the resolutions now before us; the territory of Manitoba will be about the same as the territory of each of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and, therefore, I do not see how it is possible to offer to the province of Manitoba any compensation in lieu of the lands which are to be retained by the Dominion unless we know exactly the area of the province, and you cannot know what is to be the area of the province unless the boundaries are settled. That is an additional reason why the boundaries ought to be settled here and now. I am glad that my hon. friend agreed to the suggestion I made which, if there was any doubt, will remove that doubt. So it is settled that the boundaries of the province of Manitoba are to be the boundaries which we offered in 1908.

I said to-day that I did not want to enter into any matter of controversy on the present occasion, I am seeking for information, but I would observe to my right hon. friend that there is no justification that I can see why these four years' arrears set forth in the resolution should be given to the province of Manitoba. What reason can there be? The province of Manitoba has contended that its boundaries should have been extended at the time that the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were created. I cannot see that there is any connection between the two ideas. If Manitoba were entitled to an increase of its territory—and for my part I have always been of this opinion—this question had no relevancy whatever to the creation of the new provinces. Everybody knows that in 1908, when we created the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the province of Manitoba made a strong effort to have its boundaries extended. But parliament has not forgotten that the reason we did not extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba at that time was that we thought it would not be advisable to extend those boundaries unless the two neighbouring provinces of Ontario and Saskatchewan had an opportunity of presenting their claims to us. It was well known to us that the province of Manitoba was making a claim for the extension of its boundaries eastward, and it seemed to us that, although we had not then received any request for the extension of the boundaries of Ontario, it would not be in the public interest, and we would be inviting trouble if we were to attempt to settle the boundaries of the province of Manitoba, where they come in contact with the boundaries of Ontario, unless we had also the opinion of the province of Ontario.

Therefore, we held a conference in 1906, with the three provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario. I stated a moment ago that the government of the province of Saskatchewan, asked to have its boundary extended eastward along the present northern boundary of Manitoba to the shore of the Hudson's bay. I must say that after having heard what the province of Saskatchewan had to say upon this point I could not see my way to recommend this to my colleagues or to parliament. It seemed to me that that territory belonged to Manitoba and should be given to Manitoba. When it came to the discussion of the eastern boundaries of Manitoba where they touched Ontario we found, as I said, quite a cleavage of opinion between the two provinces, and neither would give way. Ontario insisted on having its territory extended westward as far as the Churchill river, and Manitoba claimed an extension eastward to Fort William. We could not see the propriety of these respective pretentions of either province, and we struck what I then thought was a legitimate boundary of the two provinces, and I am very happy to see that it has been at last accepted.

The province of Manitoba has sought to have these terms date back to the year 1905. This pretension of the province of Manitoba has not been accepted by the government. My hon. friend tells us that after a conference they have determined to extend the terms back to the time that we made this offer, in July, 1908, and no further back. What reason can there be why Manitoba should be given any terms dating back to 1st July, 1908? The reason which is given us is that at that time the province of Manitoba was offered these boundaries. There was a controversy between the late government and the government of Manitoba as to the financial terms which would be extended to Manitoba as a consequence of the extension of its boundaries. If that had been the only controversy between us and the government of Manitoba, the government of Manitoba might perhaps say: We were ready to accept those boundaries in 1908, and if we did not accept them it was because the financial terms which we asked were not granted, and if those financial terms for which we then made a claim and which have now been granted, had been granted then, we would have had those financial terms since the 1st of July, 1908. If the government of Manitoba were in a position to make that statement there might be some basis for giving the province those terms as from the 1st of July, 1908, but I have to call the attention of the House to this fact, that the boundaries which we offered to Manitoba in 1908 were not accepted by Manitoba in 1908, or in 1909, or in 1910, or until about the month of March, 1911, and then were not officially recorded until the month of October, 1911. Under such circumstances I fail to see upon what basis it can be claimed that the trems which are now extended to Manitoba should date back not from the time the statute is passed, but to July, 1908. For my part I repeat that this seems to be a claim for which there is not a shadow of foundation. But I shall not press the point to-day, I said I would not enter into any controversial matter, but would put forth my objection as I conceived it to be, and as I think it must impress the mind of any one who thinks that Manitoba ought to be treated fairly, even generously, but at least reasonably.

I have nothing more to say except that I shall ask the Finance Minister to give us the reasons why he has agreed to these terms which are proposed in these resolutions. These terms were pressed upon us more than once by the government of the province of Manitoba. We have always treated any new province coming into confederation on the terms which are given in the Confederation Act, that is to say that the province must be given a portion of the revenue of the Dominion to carry on its affairs.

This was done by the Act of Confederation of 1867, the terms of which were revised in 1907 and put upon a new basis.

It seems to be reasonable that if a new territory is to be added to Manitoba where they will have to carry on the civil government, they should be given a reasonable allowance to meet the increased expenditure which this increase of territory will entail upon them. That, I say, seems to be reasonable. But, what is proposed to-day is not to give to Manitoba a sum of money to carry on the civil government in the new territory which is to be allotted to the province, but the whole financial terms which are now granted to Manitoba are to be revised and Manitoba is to be given compensation in money above anything that it is receiving at the present time. That is my first objection. My second objection is that Manitoba is given a sum of money in compensation for land not only within the extent of the territory which is to be added to its present domain, but over the whole of the province. In other words, Manitoba, which has been for forty years in Confederation, is to be treated exactly as if it were a new province entering to-day the family of provinces. It has been for forty years a member of confederation; it has received the same terms as those which have been given to the other provinces. It has been given special terms from time to time on account of it being a new province and being therefore entitled to special treatment, but to-day it comes in and is treated exactly as if it had been the same as the territory which we are adding to the province. I do not think there is any justification for that. But that point I shall not press any more to-day. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) what reason there can be for the proposal as contained in clause (b) of the resolution:

(b) to authorize the Governor in Council, inasmuch as the province was not in debt at the time of its establishment, to pay to the said province an annual sum of $381,584.19, being the equivalent of interest at five per cent, on $7,631,683.85, the difference between a principle sum of $8,107,500 and $475,816.15 heretofore advanced by the government to the province for provincial purposes; such annual sum to be paid as and from the first day of July, 1908, but subject, however, as to payments due upon the coming into force of any Act founded upon these resolutions, to the deduction of certain sums received by the said province by way of interest on capital allowance in lieu of debt;

To find the origin of this disposition we have to go back to the Act of Confederation itself. When the four provinces formed the confederation each had a debt. Old Canada, afterwards Ontario and Quebec, had a debt of $67,000,000, New Brunswick, $7,000,000 and Nova Scotia about $8,000,000; $62,000,000 of the debt of Canada $8,000,000 of the debt of Nova Scotia and $7,000,000 of the debt of New Brunswick were assumed by the new Dominion. Compensation was made because the debt of one province exceeds the ratio per head of that of other provinces and since then whenever we have brought a new province into the Dominion we have always given it an allowance calculated on this amount of the debt of the province entering into the confederation, the sum being $32 per head of the population. That is what was done with Manitoba. By the last Act upon this point, the Act of 1885, Manitoba was given an allowance for debt calculated upon its population at the time. What reason can be urged why, when Manitoba has been in confederation for forty years, these terms should be departed from and it should be given the same treatment as was given to Alberta and Saskatchewan? I have only to answer my hon. friend saying that Alberta was given an allowance for debt because it had no debt at the time, the same as the other provinces of $32 per head upon a population numbering 250,000. My hon. friend has departed from these terms and he has applied others to the case of Manitoba. Upon reviewing the whole situation I cannot see that there is any basis for that departure. But, he has a right to his opinion and I would be glad to hear what he has to say upon this point.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the Bill which will be founded upon these resolutions is to establish equality between the province of Manitoba and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan; in other words to do simple, plain every-day justice to the province of Manitoba, which, I am sorry to say, was withheld from that great province by my right hon. friend when he was Prime Minister of this country. I am sorry to say that the statesman in my right hon. friend is being lost in the lawyer. What he has said is substantially correct with regard to the principle upon which the allowances were made in lieu of debt, but the situation in regard to the provinces forming the confederation to-day cannot be described as otherwise than anomalous in regard to the amounts which have been given them from time to time. I do not believe it possible to say that the allowances which are now made to the several provinces in lieu of debt are on any logical basis. From time to time changes have been made and if my right hon. friend will bear in mind that what we desire to do in the case of the Bill which will be founded upon these resolutions is to put Manitoba upon a precise equality with Saskatchewan and Alberta he will have no difficulty whatever in understanding the terms of this resolution. Take the statements submitted to the House by my right hon. friend. The position with regard to the subsidies to-day is that the amount of subsidy to which Manitoba is now entitled for the year beginning July 1, 1911, is $833,438. The approximate amount of subsidy which Manitoba will receive under the proposed Act now under consideration for the year beginning July 1, 1912, will be $1,349,345.39. Under the proposed Act Manitoba will receive an additional amount of subsidy of about $516,000. Let us consider these figures. The allowance for government and local purposes to which Manitoba is now entitled $190,000, will remain precisely the same under the new Act. Manitoba's position in regard to that is precisely the same as the position of the other provinces. By the British North America Act, 1907, it is provided:

> That the following grants shall be made yearly by Canada to every province which, at the commencement of this Act, is a province of the Dominion, for its local purposes and the support of its government and legislature.

And then, a fixed grant is given, according to population. The grant that Manitoba is entitled to under the provisions of that Act, subsection 1 (a) is $190,000; the province of Alberta is receiving under that same section, and will receive, $180,000; and the province of Saskatchewan $190,000. Therefore, so far as these three items are concerned, Manitoba and Saskatchewan and Alberta are in precisely the same position, under the Britith North America Act of 1907, which applies to the several provinces.

Take the next item, eighty cents per head per annum on 455,614 population as ascertained by the census, June, 1911, $364,491.20. That is precisely the same amount as Manitoba will receive under the new Bill, and that compares with $299,730 that Alberta will receive, and $393,945.60 that Saskatchewan will receive. In other words, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta take only what they derive under the British North America Act of 1907, as to these two items which I have mentioned. In connection with the item to which my hon. friend has directed my attention most particularly—under the resolutions, Manitoba will receive an indemnity for want of public lands,—because Manitoba has no lands, as the House knows, as Ontario had, and as the eastern provinces of the Confederation had. The indemnity for want of public lands, fixed under the Act and subject to increase is $262,500. If Manitoba had received no swamp lands and no university lands, Manitoba would receive under the terms of the Act, $252,500. But Manitoba received about two million acres of swamp lands, of which some 838,000 acres—speaking from memory— have been sold. The position is that Manitoba has sold 838,000 acres of land, received the money, or will receive the money, if the sales have been made on the installment plan, and has a balance of some twelve hundred thousand acres of swamp lands still vested in her. It would not be fair to give Manitoba the full $562,000, and the result is, that there must be a deduction, representing five per cent. interest upon the selling price of the swamp lands, which Manitoba has already sold. The estimate of that is about $134,230, and I may say that the Bill will make provision for a careful audit of the accounts of Manitoba in that respect, in order that the proper amount may be accurately ascertained. The deductions which would take place from the selling price of the swamp lands are these: certain amounts were charged by the Dominion to the province, in connection with the expense of surveys, and Manitoba should also be made an allowance for the expense connected with the sale of these lands. Those amounts will be deducted and as nearly as we can ascertain. Taking the figures of Manitoba, the amount which would be deducted on the basis of five per cent which is the basis as between the provinces and the Dominion, is about $134,230.

Then, in the year 1885, under chapter 50 of the Dominion Statutes of that year, in the settlement with Manitoba as of that date, 150,000 acres of land were given by the Dominion to the University of Manitoba. The lands, as of that date, were placed on the basis of two dollars per acre making $300,000, and five per cent upon that equals $15,000. Add $15,000 to the amount of $134,230, which I have mentioned before, and you have a total of $149,230, which must be deducted from the total amount of $562,500, stated to be indemnity for want of public lands, leaving the balance $413,270, which Manitoba would be entitled to receive under that heading.

That is putting Manitoba precisely on the same basis as Saskatchewan and Alberta, but making the necessary deductions Manitoba will receive less by reason of having obtained the moneys representing the selling price of these swamp lands.

I come to the next item, viz., the allowance in lieu of debt. The province of Saskatchewan gets an allowance in lieu of debt, five per cent on $8,107,500—that is under the Autonomy Act of 1905, chapter 42, section 19—and Alberta is put on precisely the same basis getting also an allowance in lieu of debt, five per cent on $8,107,500, or $405,375 for each province. Now, the position, so far as Manitoba is concerned, is one of perfect equality. Manitoba is given 5 per cent allowance on the same sum of $8,107,500 or $405,375, precisely the same amount as is given to the province of Alberta and the province of Saskatchewan, but less interest at five per cent upon $475,816.15. Now, what is that $475,816.15. Let me explain: some of the provinces have borrowed from the Dominion certain amounts, and have to that extent diminished their capital allowance upon which they have received the five per cent in lieu of debt. The province of Manitoba has diminished her capital sum on which she has been receiving interest in lieu of debt, to the amount of $475,816.15, and taking five per cent interest upon that we have the sum of $23,780.81, and subtracting that from the sum of $405,375——

Mr. MACDONALD. What has been the total debt allowance to Manitoba, previous to this proposition, say on March 31, last?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). $178,947. At five per cent on capital allowance in lieu of debt, Manitoba is now receiving $178,000 and if you multiply that by twenty you will get the total of about $3,570,000.

Mr. MACDONALD. I thought my hon. friend would have the figures at hand. Can he tell me whether or not Manitoba has withdrawn on her credit at Ottawa?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That is precisely what I am dealing with.

Mr. MACDONALD. Does my hon. friend know what the total debt of Manitoba is?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I do not know offhand.

Mr. MACDONALD. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in discussing the subsidy resolution of 1907, laid it down that it was absolutely essential in considering this question that the fact should be ascertained as to the total debt of the province. I thought my hon. friend would know what that is.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I do not think it is essential myself, but it can be easily found out.

Mr. MACDONALD. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought it was essential three years ago.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That may be, but I cannot undertake to get figures for hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with everything my colleagues may think. However, the interest at five per cent on this sum of $475,000 is $23,781.81, and the result is that Manitoba receives in lieu of debt the sum of $381,584.19.

These figures show that we are placing the province of Manitoba upon a precise equality with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and that is what we are trying to do. We are trying to do simple, plain justice to Manitoba—to put it in the position in which it should have been put in the year 1905, when the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were constituted. Manitoba contends that these increased subsidies should date back to that year, and there is very much to be said in favour of that contention; but, as the resolution of this House, concurred in I think unanimously, was passed on July 13, 1908, Manitoba with some reluctance has consented to accept the increased subsidies from July 1, 1908. My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition has I think in his mind that the increased allowance should only be in lieu of such sum as might reasonably be required for the increased expenditures of Manitoba in connection with the added territory.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). In that case, Manitoba would receive a comparatively small sum. I think this matter goes very much deeper than that. The province of Manitoba has been dissatisfied for years, and where you have such a province as Manitoba dissatisfied, and expressing that dissactisfaction, irritably, as my right hon. friend once said, something is wrong in the political situation; and what we are trying to do is to remedy that. In 1881 Manitoba's boundaries were greatly extended by the Campbell Act; but the boundary award deprived Manitoba of that territory. I have said that we are seeking to put Manitoba on the same basis, as far as financial terms are concerned, as the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I have figures submitted by Mr. R. E. Young, the chief geographer of the Dominion, on February 6, 1911, in which the total area of Alberta was placed at 253,000 square miles, Saskatchewan at 250,000 square miles and Manitoba at 73,000 square miles, or less than one-third of the area of Saskatchewan or Alberta. Now, we propose, by enlarging the boundaries of Manitoba, to increase its area to 251,832 square miles, which will bring about practical equality of area in the three provinces.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Are we to have a map laid on the table of the House showing the boundaries of the enlarged province?

Mr. BORDEN. I will have that before the second reading.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My right hon. friend has instituted a comparison between the treatment accorded to Manitoba and that accorded to the other provinces. Manitoba is of course giving back her swamp lands, a statement with regard to which was given by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. With regard to those swamp lands, I am unable to estimate their value, but Mr. Young, who is responsible for the figures which have been submitted to the House by my right hon. friend says:

The unsurveyed area in the province is estimated at 12,900,000 acres. This is largely unexplored. It is thought that 30 per cent (4,870,000 acres)) may be swamp. This land will be of considerably less value than the swamp lands already referred to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If Manitoba has disposed of these swamp lands to the extent of 800,000 acres, is there any information as to the price realized for them?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). In the figures submitted by the province of Manitoba, which, as I have said, must be checked on behalf of the Dominion before a final adjustment can be made, the total acreage sold is stated to have been 838,484·16 acres; the amount received for them is $3,137,399.30. Dominion deductions from provincial subsidy with respect to surveys of swamp lands, &c., amount to $211,942.95; provincial expenditure on account of swamp lands, proportionate estimate, $240,854.60. These two make a total of $452,797.55; leaving the net amount received or to be received by the province from swamp lands at $2,684,601.75. Five per cent of this amount is $134,230.08, which I deduct, as I have previously explained. That would give an average of about $3 an acre for the swamp lands already sold by Manitoba. As to the swamp lands, the right to which Manitoba will now surrender, estimated at over 8,000,000 acres, what the value of these is I am unable to say; but Mr. Young expresses the opinion that these lands are of considerably less value than the swamp lands already referred to. Of course, they are not yet surveyed, and it may be a considerable time before they are available for sale.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Were the sales of the swamp lands cash sales or on credit?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). On credit, most of them, paid for in instalments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is more money expected to be paid on account of these sales?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The figures given represent the principal sum. They will have to be made the subject of an audit. But so far as this Bill is concerned, that makes no difference, for this reason. We charge Manitoba with the total amount for which she sold these lands. Manitoba will continue to hold that amount, and we charge her 5 per cent upon it, and deduct the interest from the amount she would receive if she were placed in the same position as Alberta and Saskatchewan, and did not own swamp lands.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the charge of 5 per cent on the proceeds of the sales of swamp lands date from the 1st of July, 1908, or from the time the sales were made?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). We consider the state of the account as from the 1st of July, 1908.

Mr. PUGSLEY. From the time the sales were made.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Up to that time Manitoba had been deriving certain subsidies under statute. Well, we start afresh as on the 1st of July, 1908. We take the total capital amount for which on that date Manitoba had sold the lands—because the province will continue to administer these lands and receive the payments—we take 5 per cent upon that, and deduct from the 5 per cent upon the total capital allowance of $8,000,000, and the result is the balance which Manitoba will receive under the proposed new Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Manitoba, for instance, 10, 15 or 20 years ago received cash from the swamp lands. Why, then, should she not give credit to the Dominion for the interest which she has received upon them in the meantime?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). As a matter of fact, whatever Manitoba derived was derived by virtue of the statutes at that time. What we are doing, as I have already said to this committee, is to place Manitoba on a footing of equality with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and we are commencing to make a fresh start as on July 1, 1908. So far as the suggestion of my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is concerned, that Manitoba might very well reply—although I do not think it necessary for her to reply—that she would be justified in asking for these increased amounts from July 1, 1905——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I think I have answered the questions propounded to me by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), although I do not know whether it is entirely to his satisfaction or not. With reference to the boundaries, I think the leader of the government has mentioned all that is necessary to be stated, namely, that the boundaries are precisely the same as those fixed by the resolution adopted by this House on July 13, 1908. As to a point made by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to the effect, as I understood him, that Manitoba had not accepted the boundaries, my understanding is a little different from his. I believe Manitoba would have been willing to accept the boundaries defined in the resolution of 1908 if the financial terms had been satisfactory. That is my own belief in regard to the matter. The whole question of dispute between the government of Manitoba and the Dominion government related, as I understand, to financial terms; the boundaries proposed would have been entirely satisfactory. In that connection, I will read a letter from the then premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to Mr. Roblin, which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Roblin,—I have the honour to enclose the draft of a Bill for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. This Bill is on the line of the resolutions adopted by the House of Commons at its last session. The amount of allowance to be paid to the province in lieu of lands has been left in blank. According to the aforesaid resolution of the House of Commons this amount should be fixed by negotiation between the Dominion government and the government of the province.

We will be happy to confer with you at any time that may be convenient to yourself and to your government.

Yours respectfully,
WILFRID LAURIER.

I will now read a letter in answer to that from Mr. Roblin. It is to the following effect:

Winnipeg, March 1, 1909.

My dear Sir Wilfrid,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 26th ult with enclosure as stated. I have read the Bill and, as I presume you would expect, I am disappointed. The preamble in the Bill only recites one of our requests, viz., subsidy in lieu of lands, where our petition also asks for a readjustment of subsidy or capital account; but which I presume, can be dealt with in the conference.

Our legislature has unanimously passed a resolution authorizing the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada to be memoralized along these lines. I presume the material will reach you in a day or two, if not already in your hands. In the meantime I enclose you a copy of the resolution on which the memorial is founded.

I accept the invitation you have extended by your letter to the members of my governmen to a conference regarding the terms upon which the said extension of boundaries is to be made.

As your parliament is in session I can understand that your time is considerably taken up. I therefore will ask you to be good enough to name the day or days that you can give for such conference and in that way avoid the unnecessary and tedious delay of the representatives of Manitoba at Ottawa

You will therefore be good enough to name the day or the days and advise me.

Yours very respectfully,
(Sgd.) R. P. ROBLIN.

It will be seen that the premier of Manitoba raised no question, so far as the correspondence goes at that particular time, with regard to the boundaries. I have understood subject to correction—because I was not in any way privy to the negotiations and my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) may have a different view, and may recall that some objection was raised with regard to the boundaries—that Manitoba would have been willing to have accepted the enlarged boundaries which we now propose, provided the financial terms had been satisfactory. The point as to which the province of Manitoba and the Dominion government were unable to agree was principally with regard to this matter of financial terms, to which I understand the leader of the opposition now objects. I think that is all that I have to say upon this occasion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand the important difference between the Dominion government and the government of Manitoba until quite recently was this: that the former was quite willing to make an allowance to Manitoba in respect to the added territory—that is to make a reasonable allowance to cover the administration of the government so far as the added territory was concerned. It was also willing to make a reasonable allowance by reason of Manitoba not getting any of the public lands in the added territory. The government of Manitoba, however, said: 'We are not satisfied with that. We want, as a condition of our accepting the larger boundaries, the whole basis of Confederation, so far as Manitoba is concerned, to be readjusted.' The Dominion government said: 'That is a matter which will stand upon its own merits, which must be settled at a conference of the family of provinces, and all we can do is to give you such reasonable and fair treatment as may be necessitated by reason of adding this additional territory.' But is not the important point this, that the question never was settled? It is only a few months ago that the question was settled as between the two governments, and upon what reasoning can the argument be founded that the Dominion should go back some four years, and make to Manitoba an allowance just as if the settlement had then taken place, and as if the terms had been readjusted four years ago? I quite agree with my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that Manitoba having been dealt with not only fairly in the past under conditions existing where previous allowances were made but generously, there is no argument or justice that can be urged in favour of carrying the terms of settlement back four years and giving the province in a lump sum, as is proposed, something like $2,000,000. Now, the Minister of Finance has dealt with this question just as if it were a question between Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. He has forgotten that there are other provinces, besides the three provinces named, in Canada, and when we come to consider as to what should be a readjustment of the terms with respect to one province, we have to look to the question as to what is just and fair to all the other provinces of Canada, which as I have said, constitute the family of provinces composing Confederation. Now, take first the question of the debt allowance. What was the theory upon which the fathers of Confederation agreed to admit a province into confederation at a certain date? original provinces had gone into debt for

It was based upon this—that the four the purpose of constructing public works of a useful character, some more useful than others, some of a revenue producing character, but some not revenue producing. In the case of Ontario and Quebec, as my right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says, these two provinces of old Canada had actually gone into debt for public works to the exent of $62,500,000, or thereabouts. These public works were handed over to the Dominion, and so the Dominion had something to represent the expenditure, and the provinces were allowed 5 per cent. interest on debt account from the Dominion on entering confederation. Then, take the case of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, a case which, I think, is of the most striking character, for their treatment then as compared with the treatment now being accorded to the province of Manitoba, I am satisfied, will impress the people of those provinces as being most unjust. Take first, the case of New Brunswick. That province was allowed to come into confederation with a debt of $7,000,000. She had actually, at the time of confederation, expended $6,500,000 or $6,600,000 on public works, which were handed over to the Dominion. Nova Scotia had expended even more. The public works which these provinces had constructed were, like the canals and other public works of Ontario and Quebec, handed over to the Dominion. In the case of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, a part of the property handed over consisted of the railway between Halifax and St. John. That road had been almost completed at the time of confederation, and the additional amount required to complete it was charged up to these provinces upon debt account. That piece of railway, now a portion of the Intercolonial railway, was actually earning a dividend at that time, was actually a revenue-producer, as you will see, by looking through the Debates at the time of confederation. It was handed over by these provinces to the Dominion as an asset, and to-day I venture to say, pays as well as any piece of railway property in the Dominion of Canada. It helps to equalize the expenditure and receipts of the Intercolonial railway. And by itself, it would be a splendid piece of property, a revenue-producer for the two provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. But for that property, New Brunswick gets no allowance; she gets no 5 per cent upon what it represents in the way of expenditure. She incurred a debt in the construction of that railway, handed the railway over to the Dominion, and it has become a valuable and paying asset of the Dominion. But what is proposed to be done in the case of Manitoba to-day? After Manitoba has been forty years in the confederation, it is proposed to raise her debt allowance from $3,500,000 to upwards of $8,000,000. And upon what ground? Upon the ground that Manitoba had no debt at the time of confederation. What does that mean? It means that she had not incurred expenditure in the construction of public works and had no public works to hand over to the Dominion to become assets of the Dominion as the public works handed over by the other provinces became assets of the Dominion.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What explanation has he of the fact that Alberta and Saskatchewan were each allowed 5 per cent on $8,107,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Those were territories of the Dominion of Canada. They had no public works. New provinces were being created. The whole territory had to be developed, and so it was reasonable to give them a certain allowance to construct parliament buildings, to build roads and other public works, and to make the other expenditures necessary to the work of a provincial government. But Manitoba, as I have said, has been forty years a province of Canada. Her people agreed to enter into confederation on the terms arranged at the time she entered. If the hon. gentleman will look at previous legislation he will find that, almost without exception, when it has been deemed advisable to increase the debt allowance of any province, there has been a readjustment in the case of all the provinces. He will find that some years ago the debt allowance of Ontario and Quebec was increased from $62,500,000 to $73,000,000, and that New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were treated on a similar basis. You are adding to the debt allowance of Manitoba, one of the old provinces of Canada, to the extent of about $5,000,000, and basing that allowance upon its population. But if you were to do the same with Ontario and Quebec, what would you have? Ontario and Quebec now have a population of about 4,500,000. Give them the same debt allowance per head, as you propose to do in the case of Manitoba, over and above the cost to them of the assets which they handed over to Canada, and they would be entitled to a debt allowance of about $130,000,000, as against $73,000,000 which they have been allowed. This would at once give to these two provinces an additional revenue of about $3,000,000 over that which they are now enjoying. Take the case of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. If you deduct from their debt allowance this revenue producing property, the railway between Halifax and St. John, which was built by the two provinces and handed over to the Dominion, and treat these two provinces in the same way as you propose to treat Manitoba to-day, you would add a good many hundreds of thousands of dollars to the revenue of these provinces on debt account. And I presume the same would apply to the province of British Columbia.

What I ask is not that the government should decline to take into consideration the necessities of the province of Manitoba, if it is thought necessary to increase her debt allowance. I would not complain if all these provinces were being treated alike. But what I do complain of is that the government should come down with exceptional legislation proposing to deal with one of the old provinces of Canada, one member of the family of provinces, upon an exceptional basis, while altogether ignoring the claims of the other provinces. Because Manitoba is close to the other prairie provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and because she has an alleged grievance which has been assiduously cultivated by gentlemen in accord politically with the present government, we are to deal in an exceptional way with Manitoba in order, as it is said, to put her on an equality with Alberta and Saskatchewan. But Alberta and Saskatchewan, as I have said, were created as new provinces. It had always been recognized that in the case of new provinces there should be a debt allowance. There was a debt allowance given to Manitoba, an allowance which was then thought to be fair, and with which the people of Manitoba were perfectly satisfied. In the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan it was thought reasonable to make these debt allowances. When these new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were created from the territories of the Dominion there was every prospect of their increasing rapidly in population. And to-day, Saskatchewan, after having been in confederation only about six years, has a population larger than that of Manitoba. There would be reasonable justification to look forward and make a debt allowance somewhat in accordance with what it was supposed would be the population of the province within a comparatively few years.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Cannot my hon. friend see that when you attempt to treat an old province which has been in the Dominion for forty years on a basis which will put it on an equality with two other provinces of the Dominion, utterly ignoring the claims and the position relatively of the other provinces of Canada, you are doing an injustice, and more than that you are creating a source of dissatisfaction which is going to lead to infinite trouble in the future? The idea of the fathers of confederation was that these subsidies should be upon a fixed basis, and if the hon. gentlemen will look back to the legislation which was enacted not many years ago when the debt allowance was last increased, they will find that that was accepted by the province of Manitoba as a full and complete settlement of all claims up to that time. Surely it is better that when there is any proposition for an increase of subsidy to any of the provinces, the negotiating should be done as it was a few years ago by a conference of representatives of the different provinces, so that they might agree upon what would be satisfactory to all, and so that no injustice might be done. It is not in accordance with the scheme of confederation, it is not in the best interests of the country to pick out any one province and attempt to alter the terms of confederation in relation to that province.

But this government is moving along these lines in other directions. The province of British Columbia has made claims which were also submitted to the conference, and the conference unanimously decided that it would be against the interests of the people of Canada to determine the claims of any province by arbitration. Yet my right hon. friend, as reported in the Toronto 'World,' has sent a telegram to the Premier of British Columbia agreeing to refer the claims of British Columbia, which were dealt with at the provincial conference, recognition of those claims being then refused, to a commission, one of whose members is to be chosen by this government, another by the government of British Columbia, and the third by these two, or, in case they fail to agree, by the Colonial Secretary—to all intents and purposes an arbitration, the arbitrators being allowed to determine as to the claims of a province for consideration in a financial way beyond what is provided for by the British North America Act. As well might Saskatchewan make a similar claim now or in the not far distant future, as well might New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario or Quebec. To say that it is unwise, is simply to say what all public men from confederation down to the present time have said should not be done, that whenever there was a proposition to increase the allowance to any one province, the subject of the allowances of all the provinces should be dealt with. Surely the province of New Brunswick, for instance, would have as much right to have her subsidy readjusted, to have her debt allowance readjusted, and surely Ontario and Quebec would be entitled in the same way to have taken into account the valuable properties which were handed over by those provinces, and which became a part of the assets of the Dominion of Canada. If this Bill goes through, I do not see upon what ground a separate application from any one province could be refused recognition by parliament, if you get away from the well settled principle adopted at the time of the British North America Act which has been recognized ever since.

Let it be well understood that what it is proposed to do by this resolution is to increase the debt allowance of Manitoba, which had no debt at the time of its establishment, after it has been forty years in the Dominion from $3,500,000 to upwards of $8,000,000, and the government base their argument entirely on the fact that they want to place Manitoba on an equality with Saskatchewan and Alberta, altogether ignoring what would be justice to the other provinces of Canada. The Minister of Finance says that we want to do justice to Manitoba in another way, we want to give her territory as large as that of Alberta or Saskatchewan. We often hear of Manitoba being a postage stamp upon the map but Manitoba to-day contains 20,000 square miles more than the three maritime provinces. The three maritime provinces have but 52,000 square miles, while Manitoba has something like 73,000 square miles, and it is proposed at once, without consulting the other provinces, without seeing what New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island may think, to add something like 200,000 square miles to the territory of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Was it not proposed in July 1908 by resolution of this House to do that precise thing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it was, my hon. friend is entirely right.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Did you object to that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I intended to urge certain terms which I thought would do justice to the maritime provinces, and I propose to urge those terms in a little while upon the attention of this government and this committee.

We come now to clause (c) which authorized the Governor in Council:

To pay to the said province, in lieu of ownership of public lands, an annual sum based upon the population of the said province as ascertained by each quinquennial census thereof, such annual sum to commence with $562,500 (less certain deductions in respect of what are known as swamp lands and university lands) and not to exceed the annual sum of $1,125,000 (less equivalent deductions); the same to be paid as from the first day of July, 1908.

What is the position Manitoba is put in? When she received those swamp lands she was not entitled to any more debt allowance than she then received, that is absolutely clear because she started with a population of 15,000 when she entered confederation. She had a reasonable debt allowance, I think considerably beyond what she would have been entitled to simply on the basis of population. The Minister of Finance says she has sold the best of her swamp lands at low prices. She does not propose to account for the interest on the moneys she has been receiving during the last twenty-five or thirty-five years, but she proposes simply to begin to hand back what is left, the worst of them, and then to begin paying interest as of the first of July, 1908, of $130,000 a year when she is to get from the Dominion something like $700,000 or $800,000 a year or perhaps even more than that. The paragraph contains these words:

The Governor in Council to pay to the said provinces in lieu of ownership of public lands,

That is not the language which was used by the late government away back some thirty or forty years ago; when an allowance was made to Manitoba it was put in as for want of public lands. This resolution would seem to imply that in some way or other Manitoba is entitled to the public lands within its boundaries and that as it is not intended to give these lands to the province, this large sum of money, $562,500, should be given to her in lieu of public lands. I notice that when the resolution was first placed on the order paper the words were:

—in lieu of ownership of public lands in the added territory.

When my right hon. friend the Prime Minister had the resolution drawn no doubt he saw that the only thing which he could logically ask parliament to do was to make an allowance in lieu of public lands in the added territory.

But that would not suit the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), because he was wanting a bigger haul out of the Dominion treasury than would be represented by anything commensurate for the loss of the lands in this added territory, and so I take it for granted that he succeeded in getting the resolution altered and that a day or two afterwards, when it appeared again upon the order paper, it was to authorize the Governor General to pay this amount in lieu of ownership of public lands.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I can assure my hon. friend that that is not a correct statement of the case. The change was due to the mistake made by the law clerk in regard to the matter. The Bill as it now stands is precisely as it was in the beginning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very glad to accept the statement of my hon. friend, but certainly the law clerk has a good deal of ability, and his legal instinct would show him that the right thing to do was to put it in because he would hardly assume it to be possible that my hon. friend would be making an addition of this territory away to the north which will not have very much settlement for a hundred years to come the ground for such a large allowance. Some parts of it will be settled, like the Pas and around the mouths of the Saskatchewan, Nelson and Churchill rivers, but, speaking generally, it will not be of enormous value to the Dominion or to the province for many years to come. The law clerk would see that it was proposed to do something by reason of adding this territory, and that the words 'in lieu of ownership of public lands' should be in. But, there is no doubt that the scheme of the government is to make the addition of this new territory an excuse for altering the whole terms of confederation in so far as Manitoba is concerned, for picking out Manitoba as a favourite child in this family of provinces, and for giving it exceptional treatment, and giving it in such a way that I am sure, if we were dealing with Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward Island, my hon. friend would be terribly shocked if such a proposal were made. I desire to take the position that these lands do not belong to Manitoba. Those of us who come from the smaller provinces to which no territory can be added, in order to do justice to the people we represent, have to take the ground in the strongest manner possible that neither Manitoba, Ontario, nor Quebec, is entitled to one acre of these lands which are outside the bounds of these respective provinces. These lands formed a part of the Hudson bay territory, they were bought by the original four provinces of Canada, and they paid their hard money for them. While it may be natural and right that they should be added to these provinces, yet if they are to be so added the addition ought to take place upon terms upon which the other provinces have been consulted, and with which they are satisfied. The Act of 1871, I think, provides that the boundaries of a province may be extended. But it expressly provides that in case the rights of any other provinces in the confederation are in any way affected by that extension these provinces shall be consulted, and the government or the legislature—I forget which—of the provinces concerned shall be assenting parties.

It is proposed to enlarge the territory of Manitoba. It is proposed to give her $560,000 a year in lieu of public land. On the order paper also we find a proposition to enlarge the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and to give to them vast tracts of territory which, I say, belong to the whole people of Canada, the people of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island, as well as to the people of other sections of Canada. In regard to the question of representation, I would like to invite the attention of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, to the point as to how this addition to the territory of the province of Manitoba—and of course the same question would come up—when we come to deal with Ontario and Quebec, and more especially in reference to Quebec—will affect the representation of the other provinces. When we come to Quebec the contention, I think, can very properly be raised—and I submit it with all seriousness to my right hon. friend—that the added territory shall form no part of the province of Quebec, so far as the unit of representation is concerned. Quebec, under the British North America Act, is entitled to 65 representatives. I think it is impossible to successfully meet the contention that that means Quebec as it existed at the time of confederation. I observe in the resolution upon the order paper that there is no saving clause in regard to that. If I remember rightly, in the resolution which was passed in 1908, there was a saving clause. My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, then Prime Minister, suggested, or consented to, an amendment by which it was provided that the added territory should not count in the estimate of 65 representatives for the province of Quebec, but that the additional territory should have representation, just the same as if it were another province.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That condition was accepted by the province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that condition was accepted by the province.

Mr. FOWLER. Does my hon. friend give it as his opinion, that it is within the power of this House to pass legislation limiting the representation of Quebec, as far as added territory is concerned, or would it not require an Act of the Imperial parliament?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would think not, because I think Quebec means Quebec as it existed at the time of confederation. But, at all events, my own view is, that if the terms of confederation are to be re-adjusted with respect to Manitoba, there ought to be Imperial legislation and the boundaries should be fixed. But, that is a matter for the legal advisers of the government. What I submit is, that as Quebec is to be the pivot upon which the representation of the different provinces turns, it should be Quebec as it existed at the time that confederation was formed. My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, when he was leader of the government, recognized that principle and introduced a saving clause into the resolution. I would like to direct the attention of my right hon. friend the leader of the government to the fact that the boundaries of Quebec have already been enlarged. They were enlarged in 1898. I know the argument has been raised that the statute simply fixed the boundaries. I do not think so. I think that by that statute, there was something like 200,000 square miles added to the territory of Quebec. At the time of confederation, everybody recognized that Quebec extended to the height of land. We know that in the olden days, when the province of Quebec was owned by the French and Prince Rupert Land was owned by the English, Prince Rupert Land was understood to cover all the territory which was drained by the rivers that flowed towards Hudson bay, and in the old geographies, the height of land was shown as the northern boundary of Quebec. This is very important, because all that section of country through which the Transcontinental railway runs from a point,—I do not know what distance from Quebec, but extending north of Lake Abitibi, is included in the territory which was formerly Prince Rupert Land, because, as hon. gentlemen know, the river Abitibi as well as all the other rivers in that territory drain through to Hudson bay.

I would suggest to my right hon. friend that when he comes to consider the question it cannot do much harm to extend the proposition of the right hon. the leader of the opposition a little bit further and as regards the basis for representation leave Quebec as it was at the time of confederation. So far as Manitoba is concerned, and also so far as Ontario is concerned, the subject of representation is also important. As my right hon. friend knows, there is in the British North America Act, section 51, what is known as the saving clause, so far as the other provinces apart from Quebec are concerned. That provides that although relatively to Quebec a province might lose its representation as a result of the census, yet such province shall not lose unless it has fallen a certain percentage behind all of the provinces of Canada. In the case of New Brunswick, after the last distribution, if the computation were confined to the original provinces of Canada, New Brunswick would not have lost in her representation, but it was because of the new provinces being considered that the effect of this saving clause was done away with and our province lost in representation. In the representation case which came before the Supreme Court of Canada and afterwards went to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and in which I had the honour of being concerned, I took the ground—as the court held that the population of the new provinces should come in against us in considering the effect of that saving clause—that the population of the territories should not count. The point was left undecided. There is no principle upon which the population of the territories should count; it could not be brought in under the terms of section 51 of the British North America Act in any way. You will have this result, that in all these additions to Quebec and Ontario and Manitoba you are bringing in a portion of the territories; you are making them a part of the province, and their population, which, if they had remained territories would not have counted against the older provinces in respect to representation, will count from the day you make them part of a province. Therefore, I do submit that the provinces ought to be consulted. I do submit that before you strike a blow at the provision of the British North America Act which was intended to save these smaller provinces from the loss of representation, you ought to expressly provide that the population of these added territories shall not at all interfere with the operation of that saving clause or affect the rights of the other provinces so far as representation is concerned. I have felt it my duty to mention these matters, which hon. gentlemen may think more especially pertain to the province I have the honour to represent, and I do so because I believe it is important. I remember very well when the matter was discussed in the New Brunswick Legislature some years ago, when I was Attorney General of that province, that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries expressed himself as very strongly of the opinion that in any redistribution these questions ought all to be taken into consideration. I am relying with the utmost confidence upon his being a strong advocate of the course which I contend ought to be adopted now. I have not dealt very much with the subject of the public lands in the territories because that question will come up more appropriately when we come to deal with the resolution as affecting the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. But, these questions are germane to the subject because it is proposed to give Manitoba this very large allowance in lieu of public lands to which the province of Manitoba is not entitled. I am fortified in that view by the statement of Sir James Whitney, Premier of Ontario, made in the legislature a few days ago, when he said that neither Manitoba nor Ontario was entitled to these lands and that they are lands which belong to the Dominion. That is the view I take and that is a view that cannot be too strongly urged. No province ought to be allowed to receive a subsidy upon the theory that it is any more entitled to the public lands of the Dominion than any other province. Whatever else it is deemed desirable to give to Manitoba in order to enable her to carry on government by reason of the added territories and discharge her duties in respect to the people who are there now, or may be there in the future, well and good; and I would not only be just but generous to the province in that respect. But, I do not want to express my approval of taking up the case of any one province and making it a separate case and attempting to take it out of the well settled principles which govern the status of all the provinces under the British North America Act.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I wish to say a word with reference to the last paragraph of the resolution, which reads:

(d) To authorize the Governor in Council to pay to said province, one-half on July 1, 1912, and one-half on July 1, 1913, the sum of $201,723.57 towards the construction of public buildings.

The explanation of that is that the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan respectively received under the Alberta and Saskatchewan Act, to provide for the construction of public buildings, the sum of $468,750, the payment of which was spread over five years. The province of Manitoba has heretofore received from the Dominion on account of the construction of the legislative buildings and government house at Winnipeg $267,026 and the sum of $201,723.57 referred to in the resolution is the difference between the two amounts I have mentioned. I have listened with very much interest to my hon. friend and to his expression of opinion that the other provinces will be dissatisfied with what he calls the exceptional treatment of Manitoba. In my judgment, if there has been any exceptional treatment of Manitoba, it has been by the late government and not by this government, and in that connection I would call the attention of the House to the differences between the status of the several provinces of the confederation with regard especially to the ownership of their natural resources. All the provinces of Canada, with the exception of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, were made sovereign provinces and the lands belonging to the Crown were vested in these provinces. The result is that they have had the advantage of their lands, their minerals, and the royalties consequent thereon. That is not the case with the three prairie provinces. They have no land, they are not sovereign states in that sense as the other provinces are, and the result is that prima facie they should be entitled to the same treatment. Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba not being sovereign provinces, not being entitled to their lands, minerals and royalties, should prima facie, other things being equal, and having regard to their status in the west, be entitled to precisely the same treatment. That is what we are trying to accord to them. My hon. friend said that no province is entitled to an acre of land without the consent of all the other provinces.

Mr. PUGSLEY. To an acre of Dominion land.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). And he was speaking of the extension of the boundaries at the time and I am not sure whether he meant the transfer of lands to the provinces or the extension of their boundaries. I understood him to mean that the extension of boundaries could not take place without—

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I said was that the Dominion lands belonged to the whole Dominion.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Which Dominion lands?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Wherever they are in the territory. The lands north of British Columbia belong to the Dominion, the lands north of Ontario belong to the Dominion, and the lands north of Quebec belong to the Dominion and the lands in the prairie west all belong to the Dominion.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Do I understand my hon. friend to object to the transfer to Quebec of the added territory which is proposed, or was he referring to Manitoba?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and Ontario too without treating the other provinces fairly and justly.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). We are now dealing with the resolutions regarding the province of Manitoba. As far as the other provinces are concerned, I have no doubt that when they understand the situation they will be satisfied that it is only fair and just to Manitoba that this Bill should be enacted, in order that it may be placed on an equality with these other provinces, because Manitoba, like them, was deprived of its lands, minerals and royalties. Let me point out also that Manitoba under existing legislation, is entitled to receive about 8,000,000 acres more of swamp lands from time to time as they would be selected. It is getting an increase of about $500,000 a year by way of subsidies, and a total cash payment in respect of arrearages of about $2,000,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. From the standpoint of the Dominion, would it not be better for Manitoba to keep her swamp lands and sell them, because the Dominion gives away its lands free?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Manitoba has applied for an extension of her boundaries and for better financial terms. Presumably Manitoba knows her own business. A portion of these swamp lands will not come in for many years. But looking at the question at large and from the Dominion standpoint, having regard to the future as well as the present, the swamp lands represent in value a very large sum of money, which will be a set-off as far as the other provinces are concerned to the increased amount of money that Manitoba is now getting.

Mr. TURRIFF. Is it the intention of the government of which the hon. Minister of Finance is a member to hand over the lands to the provinces, as was promised by the right hon. leader of the government in the last campaign? If it is, it seems to me that this would be a good time to start doing that instead of giving an increased subsidy.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The right hon. leader of the government, I have no doubt will be able to answer my hon. friend; but that question does not arise in connection with the present situation. This matter has been a long-standing sore to Manitoba. She has asked for an extension of her boundaries and a revision of her financial terms, and when we are proposing to meet her in these respects, hon. gentlemen opposite are seeking to confuse the issue by asking such questions as that of my hon. friend. From my knowledge of the right hon. leader of the government I have no doubt he will be prepared in time to carry out explicitly whatever he promised. This question with regard to Manitoba should not be regarded from a narrow point of view. As the hon. member for St. John has said, Manitoba has been virtually a postage stamp on the map. A man has only to look at the map to see that great injustice has been done to Manitoba for years. Manitoba's claim has been soundly based, and everybody now, as in 1908, is in favour of enlarging her boundaries. The west is not entitled to exceptional treatment, but it is entitled to just and generous treatment. I am the first to rejoice that Saskatchewan and Alberta were dealt with so liberally as they were. I like to see those new children in the confederation treated properly. I have no exception whatever to take to the subsidies that were granted to Alberta and Saskatchewan. But we must go farther and put the pioneer province of the west in the same position as those favoured children in the confederation. And public opinion in eastern Canada will sustain that position, because it is the application of simple justice to Manitoba. The commercial hope of Canada to-day lies in the great west. There is room there for millions and tens of millions of people, and Manitoba is the pathfinder, the province that blazed the trail and suffered the privations of the pioneer in the early days of the west. We should not approach this question in the spirit of lawyers looking for technical points in statutes, but we should approach it in a broad statesmanlike way, with a desire to redress the injustice which Manitoba has suffered, and to put her in the same position as Saskatchewan and Alberta. It would be unfair in the extreme to put the province which has borne the burden and heat of the day in a subordinate position as to her territory or financial subsidies. Not only will the other provinces not be dissatisfied, but they will abundantly approve of the course which this government is taking in redressing the injustice under which Manitoba has laboured, and in putting the pathfinder of the west in as good a position as the two sister provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. BORDEN. In compliance with the suggestion of the right hon. leader of the opposition, I have asked the clerk of the House to amend the first paragraph of this resolution so as to set forth specifically the boundaries as they are proposed in the Bill. I have already informed the right hon. gentleman that those boundaries are the same as those defined by the resolution of 1908. The description is more elaborate. It has been prepared by the Dominion geographer, and with great care. I would therefore move that the first clause of the resolution be amended by substituting therefor the following:

That it is expedient to extend the limits of the province of Manitoba so that the boundaries of the province shall be as follows:

Then follows the description.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to follow the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance on the point that he made that there should be equality of treatment between the different provinces in regard to subsidies and territory.

I want to point out to him and to the committee that equality of treatment does not involve merely an intimate knowledge of the multiplication table, or the other rules of arithmetic, but that equality of treatment necessarily involves due consideration of the physical and other conditions surrounding and connected with, the provinces with which it is proposed to deal. For instance, because the province of Ontario has a certain area and receives a certain consideration from the Dominion treasury, it does not by any means follow that part of the territory of Canada, lying beneath the Arctic circle and of the same area would be entitled to receive the same consideration, if erected into a province. That is an extreme illustration, but I want to make a statement of the position, as between Manitoba and Saskatchewan, to which no person can take exception. A provincial government is charged with certain duties of administration in behalf of the people under its jurisdiction, and the cost of that administration depends somewhat upon the area over which the people are spread, and as well upon their occupations and the means of communication. Now as between the province of Saskatchewan and the proposed province of Manitoba, each province will have an approximate area of 250,000 square miles. Of that area in the province of Saskatchewan it is fair to assume that not less than 200,000 square miles will be occupied by agricultural settlement. I think it is fair to assume that of the 250,000 square miles of the proposed province of Manitoba, that part which will be effectively occupied by agricultural settlement, will not be more than 50,000 square miles. That is to say, the area over which the respective provincial governments will be required to administer justice and deal generally with the subjects which comes within the range of a provincial government, will in the case of Saskatchewan, be over an area of 200,000 square miles, and in the case of Manitoba, over an area of 50,000 square miles. So that if there is to be equality of treatment in regard to the conditions as they exist, on the face of it, the province of Saskatchewan is unquestionably entitled—if the justice for which my hon. friend (Mr. White, Leeds) clamoured so loudly, is to be done—to receive a larger grant from the Federal treasury than the province of Manitoba. I do not want to be understood as objecting in any degree to liberality being extended by the government to the province of Manitoba. If it were possible to be generous to Manitoba without being unjust to the rest of the Dominion, then there would be no objection whatever to any amount that might be given to Manitoba. I am not even suggesting that the generosity shown in this case is an injustice to the other provinces, but I am bound to place before the committee the fact that what is an adequate and proper payment from the Dominion treasury to the province of Manitoba for the services of provincial government in that province, is by all right and reason, not an adequate payment to the adjoining province of Saskatchewan for the same purpose. And the same argument holds good in regard to the province of Alberta, but to an even greater degree, because that province is recognized as being of agricultural capability from north to south and from east to west. So that there is in that case, an area of presumably 250,000 square miles over which agricultural settlement may be spread, and which will require the administration of the provincial government which will have to incur corresponding expenses because of that. Therefore, if this question is to be decided as a matter of strict justice, and only as a matter of justice, I submit to the committee that that is not the basis upon which it is being decided now.

There are two features of provincial subsidies which are being dealt with in this arrangement: One is the feature in regard to the debt, and the other is the feature in regard to lands. The feature in regard to debt is dealt with by simply doubling the present debt allowance of Manitoba, or placing it on an equality with the province of Saskatchewan. I take a somewhat different ground, possibly, from my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), and I offer no criticism against that increased debt account. I offer no criticism of the increase of debt account, because of equality of population between Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Be it remembered that the debt account is adjusted by population and not by territory, and that the addition of the new territory to the province of Manitoba has nothing whatever to do, either nearly or remotely, with the question of debt account. If Manitoba is entitled to an increased allowance of debt account it is entitled to that because of its population, and not because of its territory. But if I say that I am not exactly in accord with the remarks of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), I want to follow it with a statement that will be absolutely in accord with what he says. It cannot be held to be reasonable that there should be a readjustment of debt account in regard to any province without the consent of the other provinces. So when this government undertakes to readjust the debt account of the province of Manitoba, admitting that it is in itself a fair adjustment, it is taking upon itself the responsibility of disturbing the fundamental elements of confederation, and giving good and sufficient reason for some, at any rate, of the other provinces to come forward and demand a similar readjustment of debt account; and if the plea as to justice is to obtain, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance insists that it is, then the other provinces have just as good a right to claim justice as Manitoba has. That is a matter that I think the committee should consider very gravely; that it is not for any government to gratuitously disturb the basis of confederation and introduce an element of discord when that condition could be avoided.

This should certainly never be done under the conditions that exist at the present time, where a government deliberately comes forward and, under a plea of doing justice to one province takes it upon itself to readjust the debt account of that province—at once holding out to the other provinces the promise, or at least making the suggestion, that if they will only bring sufficient pressure to bear, their debt accounts may be readjusted as well; placing a premium—absolutely placing a premium—upon agitation against the fundamental basis of confederation. I think that a government which takes that attitude has something to answer for to the people of this country, altogether of more importance than the doing of what may be called justice in this particular to one province. The government has a duty to perform and a responsibility to bear, to the whole Dominion of Canada which weighs as heavily upon it as its duty and responsibility to the province of Manitoba. There is a proper way to secure a readjustment of the debt account of the province of Manitoba, but I submit that this government has not taken that proper way.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

On the order being called for the House to go into committee on Private Bills,

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point or order. I claim that these two Bills (No. 68) and (No. 69) are exclusively educational Bills, with which this parliament has no right to deal. The Ontario government were represented before the Private Bills Committee, and opposed the Bills.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is out of order in attempting to discuss that question now. The motion is to go into committee, and it would be improper to discuss the question of the constitutionality or the principle of a Bill. That could be done in committee.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I can only raise the point of order when you are in the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no point of order in it, because it is a legal and constitutional question which the Speaker never decides.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have raised the point of order; you can do as you like with it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE AT KINGSTON.

House in committee on Bill (No. 68), respecting the Queen's College at Kingston, and to change its name to Queen's University at Kingston.—Mr. Nickle.

On section 1—existing rights and liabilities continued,

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I would again raise the point of order that this is a purely educational Bill, and has no right to be brought before this parliament, that the Ontario legislature would have just as much right to issue a bank charter as this parliament has to issue an educational charter. Consequently I object to the Bill being passed. The proper course would be to refer it to the Justice Department for their opinion. There is no question in the minds of many of the best lawyers in Canada that this is a matter over which this parliament has no jurisdiction, and is exclusively a matter for the Ontario legislature. Therefore, I move that this Bill, and Bill (No. 69) be referred to the Justice Department for their opinion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid that this motion is out of order.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. NICKLE. I hardly think I would be discharging my duty to my constituents, and to those who have placed this Bill in my charge if I allowed the hon. member's motion to go without challenging the correctness of his statement. In order that the House may adequately understand the relation of this institution to the national life, it is necessary that I should go into its history, take the House into my confidence and explain to them what legislation has been passed in this House affecting the university that now presents this Bill for consideration. In 1849 Queen's University was incorporated, not by an Act of the parliament of Upper Canada, but by virtue of Her Majesty's prerogative. From 1841 until 1874, the original charter granted by Her Majesty continued unchanged and under it the university was governed. In 1874, after the union of the Free Church of Scotland and the old Kirk in Canada, it was necessary to make application for fresh powers and at that time the legislature of the province of Ontario passed an Act in regard to the matter, which was then thought to be constitutional. However, a case commonly called the Temporalities Fund Case, was taken to the Privy Council, and that body laid down the principle that in the case of any corporation or institution enjoying privileges that affected the citizens of the two provinces, it would be ultra vires of either province to legislate away the rights of citizens of the other province. Believing that decision to be good law, the trustees of the university in 1882, made application to this parliament for a confirming statute and this parliament passed such an Act. Again in 1889, when fresh powers were required, application was made to this parliament and a most vigorous debate took place in this House, participated in by men like Sir John Thompson, Hon. David Mills, Sir John A. Macdonald, Mr. Weldon, of St. John and other eminent constitutional lawyers, after which by a vote of 104 to 35 this House decided that it had authority to deal with this question, because the rights of citizens of Ontario and Quebec were at issue. Again in 1906 the trustees came to this House for legislation when this House took the responsibility of passing legislation affecting Queen's University.

We come to the present. The hon. gentleman says that he understands the representative of Ontario contends that this House has not jurisdiction. It is well that the entire facts should be in the possession of the House. It is quite true that the province of Ontario did stand represented before the Private Bills Committee and the matter was thoroughly canvassed from every point of view. The stand taken by the province of Ontario was, that if clause 2, which reads:

> The university is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

—were eliminated the province of Ontario had nothing more to say and was satisfied that this Bill should be passed. The hon. member for St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike) has opposed this Bill from its inception to the present. From the time his voice was first heard in opposition to it, until to-day, he has left nothing undone that could secure the overthrow of this Bill. Imagine if you will, the scene in the Private Bills Committee a few days ago. The hon. member for St. Lawrence, contended that clause 2 infringed on the rights of Ontario, but when those who had charge of the measure withdrew the objectionable clause, he immediately changed his position, and said that with that clause out, we had no jurisdiction. The legislative authority rests somewhere in regard to this university, and those who have this Bill in charge contend that as the Dominion parliament has three times passed legislation affecting the university, as the Privy Council has given a decision that would seem clearly to indicate that jurisdiction lies here, this House should take the responsibility of legislating. The hon. member for St. Lawrence says that we should ask the opinion of the Justice Department. The hon. gentleman at the first meeting of the Private Bills Committee caused such a motion to be put, and the question was referred to the Department of Justice. But the hon. gentleman for St. Lawrence was not there at the second meeting when Mr. Gisbourne, the representative of the Department of Justice, came and gave an opinion.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). Do I understand the hon. gentleman to state that the question has been referred to the Justice Department?

Mr. NICKLE. I said that at the first meeting of the Private Bills Committee it was moved that the question be referred to the Justice Department. It was then referred to the Justice Department, and at the second meeting of the committee the representative of the Justice Department was present and he said that the question of jurisdiction was so shrouded in doubt that the Justice Department would not take the responsibility of saying that jurisdiction did not lie within this parliament, that the courts were open to any man who felt himself aggrieved and if it were not constitutional the fact that this House had arrogated to itself a right which it did not possess would in no way affect the rights of those interested in this Bill.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). Was that opinion given in writing?

Mr. NICKLE. I am not aware that it was.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). It would be very useful to the committee if it was in writing for the benefit of everybody.

Mr. NICKLE. Does the hon. gentleman doubt my word?

Mr. WILSON (Laval). Oh, no.

Mr. NICKLE. That Bill was held up at the first meeting of the committee and I do not think that the hon. member will question my statement that it was referred to the Justice Department and the passing of the preamble was held up until such time as the Justice Department could give an opinion. At the second meeting of the committee the Bill was taken up clause by clause, and at the last, when every clause had been considered, the preamble was considered, it secured the concurrence of the committee and the Bill was reported to the House. The Bill has since with amendments, been before the law clerk of the House and no objection has been raised by him. I can do no more than explain to the House the position that I and the promoters have taken. I am giving to the House my recollection of the opinion of the Justice Department, and if any hon. gentleman for one moment doubts what I say, I would be only too glad that that opinion should be asked in writing, but I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that they are inflicting a great hardship on this university by retarding the passing of this legislation which means a great deal to the university which I have the honour to represent here to-night.

Mr. BURNHAM. I can enlighten the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) who has just spoken a little on this subject because I took the liberty of referring the matter to the Department of Justice myself. We had a great deal of confusion in the committee, and we became entangled in a variety of religious questions which some of us, including the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) did not understand. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) objected on the ground of jurisdiction and the Bill under that reservation was considered very minutely and in every particular and detail and eventually was reported. The only question was that with regard to jurisdiction. In regard to my reference to the Justice Department, I do not suppose I am violating any confidence of the Justice Department when I say that one of the most important officials of the department took the trouble to come over to the committee room. He took me to one side and said: You will not consider it offensive on our part if I say that we do not care to put down in writing any opinion on a subject of this description for it is outside of the function of the Justice Department to advise in such matters. The hon. member for Kingston has stated accurately what has occurred and I am very glad indeed to be able to say that that is why there is no opinion in writing.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) deserves credit for having taken the trouble to procure the opinion of the Department of Justice on this question. We also owe some gratitude to the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) for having communicated to the committee the opinion which he has had from the Justice Department and the opinion of the representatives of that department in the committee. But I think it would have been better for the members of this committee to have had the opinion given in the House by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) himself. The opinion given by an official of the department to the committee is very useful, no doubt, but the committee, being informed of that opinion, should have reported to that effect and I am not aware that the report which the Chairman has laid on the table of the House relates that fact. It seems to me that the motion of my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) is only reasonable. We will have the opinion of the Justice Department by to-morrow, and the department is ready to give its opinion according to the statement of the hon. member for Kingston. I have no doubt that the department is ready, and I would, therefore, second the motion of my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Lawrence, that the proceedings should be suspended until this favourable opinion to my hon. friend's contention shall be brought before the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Bickerdike moves that the committee rise.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). This parliament has already assumed jurisdiction in this matter. Now, I think myself that it is too late to raise the question of jurisdiction. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) has shown clearly that the matter has been before parliament on a previous occasion and that it has been considered by such eminent authorities as Sir John Thompson, Hon. David Mills and others, and it seems to me pretty clear that the question of jurisdiction should not be raised. It will stultify this parliament as to its previous action. If there is any doubt in regard to the matter it is open, as my hon. friend from Kingston has said, to any one interested to test the matter in the courts. Then possibly the jurisdiction of the Dominion can be determined. But it does seem to me that, this matter having been before parliament, not only once but more than once——

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Not this Bill, Sir.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). But this question in substance has been before this parliament.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Not in the present shape.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Well, not in the present shape, but still in such shape as to be dealt with under the jurisdiction of this parliament. The same question I have no doubt arose then that is raised by my hon. friend now—the same question of jurisdiction, the same question of whether we really had legislative authority to deal with it. It does seem to me that we are not going to be freed from that doubt. The proper way is to assume that parliament has the powers which it has already assumed to have and which, according to the opinion of the eminent jurists referred to, it had. The proper procedure is to take up the clauses of this Bill, make such progress as we can with them and subsequently allow any question to be raised. We stultify parliament by attempting to determine whether it has jurisdiction which it has in fact already assumed in the past.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). The minister contends that it is too late to raise the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Not too late.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). The question of jurisdiction was raised the first time the Bill appeared before committee. It was raised to-night when Mr. Speaker was in the chair. It is raised now when the Chairman is presiding over the proceedings of this committee. It is all very well to say that because Sir John Thompson, or some other eminent jurist, gave a certain opinion we should assume the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament. It is all very well for my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) to be the commissionaire of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) to bring his opinion before the committee, but it seems to me if the Minister of Justice himself would give his opinion to the committee it would be better, or if the Minister of Finance undertakes to say that this is the opinion of the Minister of Justice, supported by a full Cabinet, that is another proposition entirely. I do not think we deserve any reproach.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am not reproaching you.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). Perhaps the word 'reproach' is not the right word, but I do not think we have been negligent at all. We have been awake from the first time the Bill appeared before the committee. I have no other motive than the welfare of Queen's University, but above all, the rights of the citizens of this country without any consideration or regard for their nationality. The word 'national' is mentioned in the Bill connected with the word 'undenominational.' If the minister will look a little further on in the Bill he will find, in clause 20, that notwithstanding all the privileges they want to get from this House, and which it is proposed to grant to them, the university is still to continue distinctly Christian, putting away all British subjects in this country who are not Christian.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friend (Mr. Wilson, Laval) must have misunderstood me, because I certainly did not mean it was any reproach to hon. gentlemen opposite that they had raised this question of jurisdiction. We were discussing the question of jurisdiction which had been raised, and properly raised by another hon. gentleman. The position I have taken is that we have already created our own precedent. Parliament has already dealt with this matter, and I understand from the hon. member for Kingston, that when the matter was being dealt with before the committee, a member of the Department of Justice attended and stated that while there might be some doubt about the matter, it had already been dealt with by parliament. I think it inadvisable to confuse the terms of the Bill with the question of jurisdiction. If my hon. friend desires to discuss the terms of the Bill—the clauses of the Bill, why, of course, that may properly be done in the committee. But, that should not be confused with the question of jurisdiction. The question of jurisdiction is one thing, the question of the propriety of the main clauses of the Bill is another thing. They may be discussed separately. But the point I am endeavouring to make, is that as the subject of Queen's University has been heretofore dealt with by this parliament of Canada, I do not say it is too late, but I say it is inexpedient to raise the question now, to raise any doubt as to the proceedings of parliament in the past, especially if the Minister of Justice, or the Department of Justice, have any doubt about the matter which they are unable to resolve. There are a number of matters which come up before this parliament in regard to which the question of jurisdiction arises. It may be that it is very difficult to determine these questions, but the fact remains that this subject has been dealt with from time to time by the Dominion parliament.

There would therefore be no harm in taking up this Bill and considering its several clauses. As I understand it, a representative of the province of Ontario attended the Private Bills Committee; the University being situated in Ontario, and that province being the authority to raise objection on the question of jurisdiction. but as I understand from my hon. friend (Mr. Nickle) the representative of Ontario withdrew opposition as to clause 2 which declares the University to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I do not think the hon. member for Kingston would say that.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Of course I was not present and I cannot speak on the subject from personal knowledge, but my understanding is that the representative of Ontario did not object to the jurisdiction of the Dominion having regard to clause 2 declaring the University to be for the advantage of Canada.

Mr. NICKLE The province of Ontario objected to that clause being inserted in the Bill, but Mr. Code, who represented the province, said that if that clause were deleted the province had no further objection.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think my hon. friend from Kingston is in error.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Well, I was not present, and I had better not deal with that feature of the case. It is an essential point that parliament has already dealt with the matter.

Mr. NESBITT. When?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). On three occasions as I am told by my hon. friend (Mr. Nickle).

Mr. NESBITT. There is nothing before us to show us that such is the case.

Mr. NICKLE. The question was dealt with in 1882, 1889 and 1906 by the Dominion Parliament.

Mr. NESBITT. In what way?

Mr. NICKLE. It was rather complicated and it may take some time to explain the details.

Mr. NESBITT. Can you do so briefly?

Mr. NICKLE. I can and I cannot. I have done it once and I will try again. In 1882 the legislation that was then found necessary was promoted to confirm an Act of the Ontario legislature owing to the decision of the Privy Council in Dobie and the Temporalities Fund. Hon. gentlemen who are of the Presbyterian persuasion may remember that after the union of the Free Church of Scotland and the Old Kirk, questions arose in regard to the administration of certain church funds, and the litigation went to the Privy Council when it was decided that where a citizen of two provinces, that is of Upper and Lower Canada, had rights, that the legislature of neither provinces could destroy or annul these rights. It was to conform with that decision that in 1882 the university came to this parliament to get confirming legislation for the Act of 1874 passed in the Ontario legislature. Then, in 1889, the trustees again came to this House for legislation, at that time the question involved was the giving to graduates the right of representation on the trustee Board. Again in 1906 a further extension of the franchise, so to speak, to the graduates, was desired, and again this House was appealed to, and again this parliament decided it had jurisdiction. I may read for the information of the House what Sir John Thompson said in 1889:

I am afraid that in the short time remaining for the disposal of private Bills, it may be almost impossible if the objections are insisted on, to close the discussion. If hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken intend to insist on those objections, it is not worth while, I confess, to proceed; but, perhaps, they have merely spoken for the purpose of asserting their view of the jurisdiction of this parliament and they will permit the Bill to pass. If the Bill is to be opposed I shall offer a few observations in regard to it. There has been much argument offered on both sides, in which I cannot concur, but the strong point in favour of the passing of this Bill, if it is a Bill which commends itself to the House on its merits, is this: that this parliament in 1882 asserted its jurisdiction and passed an Act by which it arranged the organization of this college. I must assume that in passing that Act it made provisions and regulations which were unwise or inconvenient in their operation, and the promoters who submitted to that Act in 1882, come now to the same body and ask for the removal of those unwise or inconvenient restraints. I think the House, under such circumstances, ought not to decline jurisdiction, especially in regard to a private Bill.

And, Sir John Thompson was thought to be a pretty good constitutional lawyer.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Minister of Finance is hardly fair in preventing this committee from knowing what the Minister of Justice or the Justice Department has replied to the question that was asked. I am not a member of the Private Bills Committee, and, therefore, I do not know what the opinion of the Justice Department is. So far as I can learn there was no such report presented to the Private Bills Committee, and if there was such a report, then the Committee of the Whole is entitled to see it. Why not let this Bill stand until the Minister of Justice is present to state his position on the matter? It is my opinion that the Ontario legislature would have as much right to issue a bank charter, as for this parliament to issue an educational charter, and the fact that parliament has in previous days dealt with this legislation, is no reason why, if parliament was wrong then, we should perpetuate the wrong now. I will take every means I can to get the opinion of the Justice Department before this committee.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). It is my duty to strongly object to the manner in which the Minister of Finance has expressed his satisfaction with the report made to him by the hon. gentleman from Kingston (Mr. Nickle). Suppose, for example, that that famous officer of the Law Department expressed his opinion to the hon. member for Kingston and to myself, each of us might draw a different conclusion from that opinion, and, therefore, we would be no better off than we were before in coming to a determination, unless we were able to present that opinion to the members of the House to enable them to form their own judgment on it. It is the duty of the hon. member for Kingston to place the opinion of the Justice Department before us. If the other practice is going to be followed in this House, it will undoubtedly lead us into error.

If the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice were contained in the report of the committee, the situation would be different. When I asked my hon. friend if he would take the responsibility of saying that the opinion given by the Minister of Justice was as stated by the hon. member for Kingston, he would not take that responsibility. If Laval had given the same opinion instead of the hon. member for Kingston, I am inclined to think that the hon. Minister of Finance would have taken it cum grano salis.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I came into the House while this matter was under discussion. I understand that objection is taken to the Bill by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence division, Montreal, (Mr. Bickerdike) on the ground that this question concerning Queen's University is a provincial question. I must add my testimony to the statement made by my hon. friend from Kingston by saying that to my personal knowledge this parliament has already dealt with Queen's University. I remember the occasion to which my hon. friend has referred. I do not remember what the question was, but I know that it arose from a division which took place in the Presbyterian church in 1882. I have not forgotten the other incident referred to, when the opinion of Sir John Thompson was given that this parliament had jurisdiction. The matter presents itself in this way. The university was in need of legislation, and it had to decide whether it would go for it to Toronto or to Ottawa, and I presume that, following the precedents of 1882 and 1889, it decided to come to Ottawa. In my judgment this parliament has certainly jurisdiction, because we have these two precedents. Under such circumstances I would be loth for my part to vote to kill the Bill for want of jurisdiction. I understand that the motion made by my hon. friend from the St. Lawrence division is that the committee rise. If this motion were carried, the Bill would be killed. I would be averse, for my part, to take such a course, and I think the House should be chary about doing so. I think my hon. friend from the St. Lawrence division will agree that it would be hardly fair to the university to kill the Bill. My hon. friend may be entitled to information, and I am sure that the hon. member for Kingston would not object to giving it. For these reasons I could not vote for the motion that the committee rise; but in the meantime parliament will not be prorogued for some time yet, and it should be possible to furnish the information asked for by my hon. friend from the St. Lawrence division.

Mr. WILSON (Laval).

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). What has been pointed out by my right hon. friend had already been pointed out by the hon. member for Kingston. It seems perfectly clear that parliament has dealt with Queen's University on two previous occasions, and no less eminent a jurist than Sir John Thompson expressed the opinion that this parliament had jurisdiction over the subject matter of this Bill. The hon. member has pointed out that this legislation is of supreme importance to this university and to its adherents and supporters, who are a large and influential body of people, and it seems to me that we should proceed with the Bill and the question raised as to section 20 or any other section may be discussed afterwards in the committee or in the House. There is no question involved in this Bill that cannot be discussed apart from the question of jurisdiction. This parliament would stultify itself if it decided that it had not jurisdiction in this matter. I entirely concur in the view of the right hon. the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I do not wish to kill the Bill, but I have endeavoured on three occasions to get the opinion of the Justice Department on this question. My hon. friend from Kingston states that the Private Bills Committee has had that opinion. I am not a member of that committee, and I think we are entitled to have that opinion laid on the table of this House. There are some clauses in the Bill that we have pleaded with the promoters to leave out, because they are insulting to a large number of people. As long as clause 20 remains in the Bill, I will take every chance to defeat it. I stated to the promotor of the Bill that if that clause were struck out, I would not raise the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. member for the St. Lawrence division evidently feels strongly on this matter, and I understand he is speaking from information given to him by people who are supposed to have some authority. Personally, I do not think there is anything in the objection as to the jurisdiction of this parliament, and that opinion is fortified by the fact that on two previous occasions parliament has exercised jurisdiction by dealing with Queen's College. But the law officer of the Crown is the Minister of Justice, and I must say that he does not honour us with his presence in parliament or in parliamentary committees as frequently as he ought. When hon. members raise a serious question, I think the committee is entitled to know what the Minister of Justice thinks of it, just as a few years ago when a question was raised on a similar Bill, Sir John Thompson as Minister of Justice gave his opinion and settled the question. While not agreeing with my hon. friend from St. Lawrence in the objection he has raised, I think the promoters of the Bill would be well advised if they allowed it to remain in committee until the Minister of Justice stated to the House the opinion which he is said to have given.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. MACDONALD. Hon. members know that it is near nine o'clock. I say that the Minister of Justice should be in his seat to give his opinion on a serious question raised in this committee, and that question will not be settled by the hon. gentlemen saying 'lost.' Hon. members who do not belong to the Private Bills Committee, and who had not an opportunity to hear the discussion there, cannot form an intelligent opinion on the legal question from the short discussion we have had to-night.

All I wish, with the desire of assisting the Bill—not believing in the point raised by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike), because there is no political question involved in this matter, not the slightest in any degree—is this: that my friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) having raised a question upon which the opinion of the Minister of Justice ought to be given; that he is not unreasonable, and that he is not stating a position which is untenable, when he suggests to the committee that we should have an opinion from the Minister of Justice before a conclusion is reached upon the matter. Can any reason be seriously urged in opposition to that course? Hon. gentlemen want to rush the Bill through without giving those who apparently have some ideas upon the subject, time or opportunity to present those views, without giving them an opportunity of having the legal question determined which they are instructed and advised is a very serious and important one. That is the whole issue and that is the question. Therefore, I would ask my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) to recognize that it is impossible for the Bill to go through at this sitting of the House and to accede to the request of my hon. friend, Mr. Bickerdike.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). I want to make my position very clear on the question, and I desire to state that I do not want to kill the Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). Hon. gentlemen may protest; they seem to be in a great hurry. If the ministers had been in their seats at eight o'clock, instead of 8.15, we would have been able to proceed very well with the business before the House. I remember in the old days when we on this side occupied the seats to the right of the Speaker, and those gentlemen who now sit there were sitting on this side, that a certain hon. gentleman who was a plain member of parliament and not a minister, took very good care when the member for Laval was absent from his seat, to express deep sorrow that that hon. gentleman was not in the House when a public question of interest to his riding was being considered. I shall not mention the hon. gentleman's name.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He is not in his seat now.

Mr. WILSON (Laval). No, he is not in his seat now. I do not know whether that hon. gentleman wishes to refrain from giving his opinion on this Bill. At any rate the position I am taking now is the position that every member of the House, in my opinion, should take. I want to know whether the hon. member for Kingston is sure of his ground, or whether he is afraid to knock again at the door of the Minister of Justice in order to have his opinion confirmed and submitted to the House? I think, Mr. Chairman, my demand is a reasonable and just one and should have been accepted by my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle).

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for Private Bills having expired, the House will go into Committee of the Whole on the resolution in regard to the Manitoba boundaries.

PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.—EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES.

House again in committee on resolution respecting the boundaries of Manitoba.

Mr. OLIVER. When the House rose at six o'clock I was discussing that part of the resolution which deals with the question of debt account. I want to point out to the committee, that the question of the readjustment of the subsidies to the provinces was dealt with in the conference that was held, I believe in 1906, and the conclusion of which conference was afterwards embodied in an amendment to the British North America Act. At that conference a change was made in the basis of two features of the subsidy allowance, namely, in regard to civil government, and in regard to payment per head of the population. It was arranged at that conference, and afterwards sanctioned by the Imperial authorities, that hereafter the allowance for civil government, and the allowance on account of population would increase from time to time with the increase of population. There was no such readjustment in regard to debt account. But in my humble judgment, Mr. Chairman—and I am speaking now on behalf of the western provinces—such a readjustment would have been right and proper at that time, and not having take place at that time would be right and proper and would be in order to be taken into account at some future conference. The idea of the subsidy is for the purpose of enabling the provincial governments to discharge the responsibilities which confederation lays upon them, and it is an evident fact that these responsibilities, speaking generally, have increased with increase of population, so that, however the original basis of subsidy was arrived at, or for whatever reason a certain sum was fixed upon, if the population has increased largely then that fixed sum becomes inadequate and should, outside of the question of law, as a matter of equity, be subject to readjustment. What has occurred in the case of Manitoba is liable to recur in the case of that province, and still more liable to occur in the case of the three provinces farther west: That is, that their debt accounts being adjusted on the basis of present population, the population of those provinces is liable to increase so very rapidly that the provision towards their total subsides on debt account is certain to be inadequate. It is I presume, that reasoning which leads the government to make provision for an increase of Manitoba's subsidy on debt account by doubling the calculation, that is to say increasing the population basis from 125,000 to 250,000, the basis of population adopted in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan. But the arbitrary adoption of the same basis of population as was adopted in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan does not by any means settle the question, does not by any means bring it to finality. Once the government undertakes to depart from the original fixed basis without consultation with the other provinces there is no finality. And in my judgment there should not be a finality so long as the population is increasing, but there should not be action by the government dealing with the case of a single province, unless there is an arrangment and understanding with all the other provinces, so that every province shall feel that when a certain province has received an increase of subsidy the other provinces have been fairly dealt with at the same time. With our vast area of agricultural land in Alberta and Sasketchewan, with the increases of population that have taken place since these provinces were organized, it is clear to-day that the subsidy allowance on debt account is not adequate, and is not fair to those provinces of Canada.

Mr. OLIVER.

Now, to repeat. The population of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba is a larger precentage greater than the basis of the debt account, than is the population of any of the eastern provinces. Therefore, if I were making an argument on the grounds of pure justice, I would claim at once that the debt allowance of these provinces should be increased in order to put them on an equal footing with the eastern provinces so far as population is concerned. But I have taken the ground that the government should not interfere with the basis of calculation of subsidy on its own initiative and should only interfere with it with the consent of all the provinces.

To emphasize the point, let me illustrate: Take the case of the province of British Columbia. That province to-day receives a smaller allowance on debt account in proportion to its present population than any other province in the Dominion. If there were any ground for increasing the payments on debt account to the province of Manitoba, that reason is just as strong or stronger in the case of the province of British Columbia; and by making the increase that has been made in the case of the province of Manitoba, I take it, the government is thereby compelled to make a similar increase to the province of British Columbia,—or, if they do not, the province of British Columbia will rest under a sense of injustice at the hands of this government.

I have gone into this in detail for the purpose of demonstrating that this portion of the subsidy grant in regard to debt allowance should not have been interfered with by this government except as part of a general scheme in which the rights of the provinces should have been considered and, as far as possible the consent of the provinces obtained. Again I say that I deal with this question at such length because I am quite aware that the late government will be subjected to adverse criticism because of the cash payments proposed to be made by that government in connection with the proposed extension of the boundaries of Manitoba as compared with the cash payments proposed to be made by this government; and I point out that in my judgment the late gevernment had good and sufficient reason, and was well advised, in not undertaking of its own motion to increase the subsidy of the province of Manitoba on debt account as this government has seen fit to do. I do not speak of the matter with any idea of preventing the province of Manitoba from getting a larger payment on debt account, but in order that there may be a square deal amongst all the provinces; so that there may not be raised a sense of irritation on the part of any of the provinces which, as I have pointed out, is bound to occur in the case of British Columbia at any rate and which would not have occured had not the government taken the course it has taken in this connection.

Now, as to the item in the resolution in regard to subsidy in lieu of land: The resolution before the House sets out that there is to be paid each year $562,500 on account of land, less certain deductions; and I am informed in reply to a question that the actual cash payment less the deductions to be made is $413,270 a year. This is $313,270 more than the province is now receiving on land account and $113,270 more than the province would have received under the arrangement offered by the late government which involved practically a payment of $200,000 on land account. The deductions that have been made from the nominal sum placed in the resolution, we have been informed by the Finance Minister, are deductions on account of swamp and university lands handed over to the province by the Dominion and disposed of, either in whole or in part, by the province and charged up to the province. On that point, I think my hon. friend is hardly dealing fairly with the Dominion in the calculation that has been made so far as the university lands are concerned. It is true I have not had very much time to consider the figures, but if this land transaction is to be a purely business transaction, and if the province is to account to the Dominion for that which it has received and the amount thus accounted for is to be deducted from the cash to be paid, then it is fair and reasonable that we should consider whether the calculation has been rightly made or not. The province is charged with $15,000 a year, presumably interest on the value of the university lands, none of which are to be returned to the Dominion. The quantity of university lands is 150,000 acres. These were selected lands, selected as being farming lands. Being within the province of Manitoba and being selected, they must have a very fair market value; and as they are acquired by the province for the purpose simply and solely of securing a revenue from them for university purposes, of course the province is entitled to dispose of them so as to get out of them the last cent of value that is in them. Now, I think it would not be an unreasonable valuation to put on these lands to say that they were worth $10 an acre. In fact, it is in my mind—having had some occasion to go into this matter in the past—that an actual accounting giving all the sales of these lands would indicate that the price at which they had actually been sold was in the neighbourhood of $10 an acre.

One hundred and fifty thousand acres of land at $10 an acre would mean $1,500,000, and if interest is computed on that at 5 per cent, it would make an interest value of $75,000 a year which has accrued to the province of Manitoba in respect of the university lands on the calculation which I think it is fair to make, while the Dominion is only credited and the province is only charged with $15,000 a year. Of course, the expense of handling, selling and selecting these lands is properly chargeable to the amount received from them, but I do not think that even under the able administration of my successor in office, who may be supposed to have had something to do with the management of these lands, it can be presumed that the expenses of sale would make the difference between the $15,000 and the $75,000 per year. It is only fair that the minister should at a later date give us the grounds upon which he arrived at the calculations by which he charges the province and credits the Dominion with $15,000 in respect of 150,000 acres of selected lands in the province of Manitoba, the interest upon which is, according to his own figures, computed at 5 per cent.

In regard to the swamp lands, 836,430 acres realized $3,137,389. It will be observed that the swamp lands have not brought the returns per acre that I have placed as a valuation upon the university lands, but the swamp lands are not selected lands; they are taken because they are swamp lands, and they must be sold as swamp lands, but I submit that if the swamp lands are sold as they have been to the extent of over three quarters of a million acres at $3 an acre, they not being selected lands, surely the university lands, which were selected, were worth a great deal more. I am not objecting to the calculation in regard to the swamp lands, as far as I can see it appears to be a fair calculation of value.

I observe, however, that the Dominion is charged with the cost of sale amounting to something like a quarter of a million dollars. I have not the figures absolutely correctly, but it is over $200,000 a year and something less than $250,000, so that undoubtedly the Dominion is being charged up with every expense that can reasonably be charged against it. Thus, as far as the swamp land is concerned, it must be presumed that it is a business transaction as set down here and that the Dominion has got no advantage in it.

On land account, as I have said, the province is to get, over and above what it now receives, $313,000, and over and above what it would have received under the offer of the late government $113,000. The figures I have been dealing with have been the figures which were used by the government in its calculation as showing that as a proper deduction from those values, and in the case of university lands I am suggesting that the calculation has not been altogether fair to the Dominion. But there is a serious difference beyond what I have mentioned between the offer made by the late government in regard to the extension of the boundaries and the offer contained in this resolution. By the offer of the late government the province would receive $200,000 a year in cash with a certain increase in case of increase of population, and the province would retain its swamp and university lands. There was no returning of the property rights of the province in regard to these lands. So that, if we are to make a comparison, and I may be permitted to take a little time in making the comparison because we all know that these terms are going to be used as a political argument by our friends against the late government, it is fair and reasonable that a comparison should be made as between the offer of the late government and the resolution before this House in regard to that part of the subsidy relating to land. This offer is better in cash by $113,000 a year than the offer of the late government, but it is worse in land by the amount of some 7,000,000 acres of swamp lands. This swamp land is not all of saleable value at the present time, that of course must be admitted; but on the other hand there is no doubt that a very large proportion of it is of saleable value at the present time and I have no doubt that if the government of Manitoba had advertised that they had 7,000,000 acres of swamp lands for sale they could have found buyers who would have given them a cash price for that land of not less than $3 an acre. The province of Manitoba could have sold out their right to that 7,000,000 acres of swamp lands any time within the last two years at the prices they actually received for the three-quarters of a million acres or nearly a million acres they have already sold. I have said that there is no doubt that all possible deductions have been made from the value of the lands sold. The Dominion has evidently not been given any advantage in the calculation. Therefore the figures that are here are the figures of actual value of the swamp lands and the province, so far as swamp lands are concerned, stands in the position of getting under this arrangement $113,000 in cash as against the ownership of 7,000,000 acres of land worth $3 an acre or $21,000,000 at 5 per cent, a yearly value of $1,050,000 under the arrangement proposed by the late government. I am quite aware that those lands, although they represent value, are not cash but no person I think will argue that the cash value I have mentioned is not in those lands and, therefore, the position is as I have said that so far as the land is concerned the province is getting better terms than the Liberal government offered by $113,000 in cash and getting worse terms than the Liberal government offered by 7,000,000 acres of swamp lands, worth on a fair calculation $21,000,000 in capital sum or $1,000,000 a year in annual revenue.

Dealing with the question of swamp lands themselves and the principle on which they were first allotted to the province, I wish to again call to the attention of the Minister of Finance the fact that the multiplication table is not the only rule that governs values in this connection.

It must be assumed that when that arrangement was made with Manitoba, I think, in 1886, whereby all lands declared to be swamp lands by the Dominion government, should become the property of the province, the arrangement was arrived at for some good and sufficient reason, some reason that had to do with the well-being of the province and with the successful administration of its government. Every man who has lived in Manitoba, and I lived there, knows the reason why the swamp lands of Manitoba were handed over to the province by the Dominion. The provincial government is necessarily charged with the construction of public works, and necessarily drainage falls into the line of responsibility of the provincial government. Naturally, if there are settlers upon low lands within the province, these settlers will, from time to time, demand from the provincial government the drainage of these lands, or some action that will help the drainage of these lands. Inasmuch as we cannot drain private lands without draining the adjoining public lands, it will be a reasonable proposition that, as the province would have to incur large expenditures from time to time in order to drain lands that would be occupied by settlers, the lands which were swamp lands not occupied by settlers, but which would be benefited by these expenditures, should become the property of the province, so that the province might be able to recoup itself for the expenditures made on drainage. That was the principle upon which the action was taken. It was a sound principle, it was for the good of the province, both for the settlers of the province, and for the government of the province in carrying out its work of administration.

My hon. friends, in dealing with this question, as they are, in the resolution, ignore that condition altogether. They simply consider these swamp lands as something to be dealt with merely for the purpose of revenue. They have lost sight of the necessity of draining swamp lands in order to give them value. They have lost sight of the fact that if the provincial government is to do its duty, it must make drains in order to relieve the settlers who are now on low lands and, with these swamp lands handed back to the Dominion, they will be spending provincial money for the purpose of giving value to Dominion lands, which is not a sound business proposition from the standpoint of the province, nor a sound business proposition from the standpoint of the Dominion, because it is reasonable to conclude that, if the province is not to get the value that is going to be given to these lands, by reason of the drainage, then the province is not going to incur the expenditure that it otherwise would incur and the lands are going to remain swamp a great deal longer than they otherwise would.

Mr. STAPLES. Why did not the hon. gentleman work along this line at the creation of Saskatchewan and Alberta?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples) is worrying about. Conditions in Alberta and Saskatchewan are not the same as they are in Manitoba. In a large part of Alberta and Saskatchewan the trouble is to get water on the land, whereas, in a large part of Manitoba, the trouble is to get water off the land. That is the difference between the two conditions. Just as irrigation is an important question in parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan, drainage is an important question in a large part and a very valuable part of Manitoba.

I think the government of Manitoba, if I am permitted to criticise it, as well as this government, in this transaction whereby swamp lands are returned to the Dominion in consideration of a money payment, has made a mistake because this is not good business either for the province or for the Dominion, it does not tend to the development of the province and it does not tend to the progress of the Dominion.

As to the amount of money that is provided for in the last part of the resolution, a sum of $201,723 to be paid to the province in two annual payments, that is a small amount and it is not perhaps necessary to delay the committee in discussing it. So far as this resolution goes with regard to the increase of subsidy to the province of Manitoba, either on debt account or land account, I have no objection to it. I think the government are ill-advised in dealing with the debt account as they do. I think it would have been very much wiser, if it were desirable to increase the allowance to Manitoba, that the whole sum should have been put on land account and that the question of debt account should not have been raised. But, the government has seen fit to take the responsibility and, of course, it will have to take the consequences of what it has done. I am prepared to support the resolution so far as the debt account is concerned as a western man believing that the debt account of all the provinces should be subject to a readjustment with the increase of population just the same as the per head allowance and just the same as the allowance for civil government. If Manitoba is satisfied with the arrangement in regard to land account I have no reason to complain except in so far as the handing back of the swanp lands to this government will be a detriment to the development of the province, as I see it.

But, there is one feature of this resolution, as it is brought out in the speech of my hon. friend and as I find it in answer to the question which I placed on the order paper, that I must take very strong exception to. I refer to the arrearages which are paid there. I find that an arbitrary sum under the heading of arrearages, amounting to $2,179,000 is to be paid to the province of Manitoba aside from and over and above the increase of subsidy on debt account, the increase of subsidy on land account and the special allowance made in regard to buildings. It is not because the sum is very large, it is not that anybody would wish that Manitoba should not have that beyond the grant which it gets now, if it had a right to it, but the principle of this payment is, it seems to me, absolutely objectionable.

My hon. friend has said that the province of Manitoba has claimed the payment of these so-called arrearages from the date of the organization of the two new provinces, but the government compromised with the provinces by giving payment for one-half that period. Well, if the province of Manitoba is entitled to arrears for a period of three years, or, as they claim, for a period of six or seven years, why were not the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan entitled to arrearages upon their being organized into provinces, because of the subsidy payments that the adjoining province of Manitoba had received during the previous thirty years, as against the amount that had been paid in regard to these provinces. If the principle of arrears is good in one case, it is just as good in the other. But the fact is that there is no ground for it in either case. This proposition to pay a bulk sum of two million dollars to the province of Manitoba is not a proposition that can be justified on any ground of fair-play to any other province in the Dominion, nor can it be justified on any argument of the right of Manitoba to that payment. If I appreciate the meaning of the payment, it is, on the one hand to compensate the province for the loss of its swamp lands, to make the people of the province feel that because they are getting a great big bulk sum in cash, therefore they are getting a great deal the best of this bargain.

And particularly, that they are getting a much better bargain out of the present Conservative government than they were offered by the late Liberal government. Or, on the other hand, it is to stand in the place of the granting of the demand that was made by the opposition in the Manitoba legislature, and that has been made by a large number of the people of the province. That demand, as I understand it, was absolutely conceded and promised by the Prime Minister no later than last summer, namely, that the natural resources of the province would be handed over to the province. This appears to be a proposal to pay two million dollars in a bulk sum without justification, without rhyme or reason, to the province of Manitoba, and I can only conclude it is done for a purpose. The only purpose I can see in it is to make the people believe they are getting value in the case of the swamp lands and to keep them from complaining because the leader of this government, who is the maker of this bargain, has not in the bargain implemented the promise he definitely made only last summer.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I would ask the Prime Minister for a little information. I would be glad to know if the government of the province of Ontario has been consulted in regard to the proposed boundary line and has it assented to the line which is set out in the resolution in the amended form in which it was proposed this afternoon by the Prime Minister?

Mr. BORDEN. When we dispose of this resolution which is concerned purely with the financial terms and come to the Bill, I will give to my hon. friend information with regard to that. I would like to say to the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) and to other hon. gentlemen who have discussed this question at great length, that I do not want them to understand that I refrain from answering all the arguments they have addressed to the committee for any reason of discourtesy but because I realize these matters must be gone into probably at considerable length on the second reading of the Bill and when the Bill is in committee. It is purely with a desire of not repeating arguments and to save the time of the House that I refrain from going into all these matters now. I am very glad indeed that these gentlemen have put forward their views and they are certainly deserving of consideration and a reply, and they will be replied to in due course so far as we are able to. I would say one word in answer to my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) with regard to the restoration of their lands to the prairie provinces. I understand perfectly the promise I made in that regard and I want to assure my hon. friend that that promise will be carried out. But I want to tell him this: that I do not think it could have been carried out at this session, nor could the necessary consideration have been given to it, nor the necessary inquiry made. This question of extending the boundaries of Manitoba has been before parliament for a very long time and therefore it seemed to the government, whether rightly or wrongly, that the best course now was to put the province of Manitoba as nearly as might be in the position of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and then take up after due consideration, and upon proper inquiry, the question of restoring to all these three provinces their natural resources upon terms that would be just and reasonable. I would like to point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) that one of his own colleagues on that side of the House has raised an important question this afternoon, and has expressed views with which perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) may not be inclined to concur; namely, that when this question does come to be considered, some regard will have to be given to the claims of some other provinces in Canada and especially the three maritime provinces whose boundaries have not been increased, whose boundaries cannot very well be increased on account of their natural situation. That is a matter that will have to be taken up in connection with the handing over of their natural resources to the three prairie provinces. I would like my hon. friends from the maritime provinces to understand that that is a matter which has not escaped the attention of the government. But, I want to say that I realize the importance of getting through with this session as soon as may be after the very considerably large dose of politics we have had for the last eighteen months, and in that view we realize that it would be utterly impossible to deal with all these matters if we are to prorogue at a date when most hon. gentlemen of this House would like to be rid of political affairs for an interval.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Would the government think of increasing the representation of the maritime provinces even if the number of sixty-five representatives was not increased in the province of Quebec?

Mr. BORDEN. For the time being I do not wish to be understood as dealing with the question of representation; I was dealing with the question of the financial terms. The point was very distinctly made by my hon. friend from St. John as to the necessity of some consideration being given to the other provinces in Canada, particularly the maritime provinces; because the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are getting an extension of their boundaries and are receiving the public lands within those boundaries, while the maritime provinces have no opportunity to extend their boundaries; and some considération must be given to the feeling on their part, that when the public domain of the western provinces, a very valuable public domain, is being taken into consideration, they have a right to be consulted and to have some voice in regard to it. All of us, I am sure, will agree that they should not be permitted to labour under any sense of injustice in that regard. The proposal before the committee, so far as Manitoba is concerned, is to retain the public domain in the Dominion and to take back that portion already handed over to Manitoba in the shape of swamp lands. At the same time, in connection with the extension of the boundaries of Ontario and Quebec, the public lands within the extended boundaries will naturally follow under the terms of the proposed resolution, the lands already within the existing boundaries of Ontario and Quebec, as indeed was the case in 1898 when the boundaries of the province of Quebec were extended by an Act of this parliament. If the resolution is permitted to pass, I will endeavour to give to my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) on the first reading of the Bill the information to which he has just alluded.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not want to continue the discussion, but it is rather important to those of us who represent Ontario constituencies to know whether the government of the province of Ontario has been consulted by this government in regard to the line which it is now proposed to lay down as the extended boundary line of Manitoba. The resolution upon the order paper was indefinite upon that point. As pointed out by the right hon. leader of the opposition, it did not show at what point the boundary line would strike Hudson bay; but in its amended form it is to a point on the shore of Hudson bay at or near the 89th parallel of longitude. That is a reasonably definite point, and, in view of the fact that the discussion this afternoon and this evening has been almost entirely upon the financial aspects of the question, I think it would be well to have it pointed out as clearly as possible to those hon. members who represent constituencies in the province of Ontario, that the line proposed as the extended boundary line of Manitoba is an absolutely arbitrary line, and reaches a point on the shores of Hudson bay below both of the ocean ports of Fort Churchill and Port Nelson. That is the point which I think we in Ontario are chiefly concerned about. It may be said that in July, 1908, this House unanimously adopted that line, and that I, as a member of the House, while I did not dissent, must have assented to the proposal. Well, if I did, I have certainly had more light upon the subject in the meantime, and I most emphatically dissent from the proposal at the present time. Now, the shore of Hudson bay, upon which both of these harbours are to be found, is in territory which should really belong to the province of Ontario and not to the province of Manitoba, if you go upon geographical lines. If you draw a merely arbitrary line, as is proposed in this resolution, you may give those ports to Manitoba. But the natural boundary line of the extended province of Manitoba would be a straight line northward, following, not the 89th parallel, but the 95th parallel of longitude up to the 60th parallel of latitude. If that were done, the province of Ontario would get the ocean ports on Hudson bay. I think that we from the province of Ontario should bear this in mind in this discussion. I have always understood that the government of the province of Ontario had contended, and would continue to contend, for those ports, or one of them at least, but I see no reason why both of them should not be in Ontario, and, with a representation of 86 members in this House, I should think that we ought to be able to hold for the province of Ontario one or both of these ocean ports.

Resolution as amended reported, and amendments agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 115) to provide for the Extension of the Boundaries of Manitoba. He said: I will proceed to give my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) the information he asked for a moment ago, as to whether or not the province of Ontario had been consulted with respect to the line which will constitute the eastern boundary line of the province of Manitoba and the western boundary line of the province of Ontario. I would say, in the first place, that before this administration assumed office, I understand that the province of Ontario was consulted, and I think the return already brought down to the House in connection with this matter will show that I am not mistaken in that regard.

I would also like to inform him that the province of Ontario has been consulted since the present administration took office; and so far as that is concerned every hon. gentleman in this House who has given any attention to this country knows that there was a difference in the views put forward by the province of Manitoba, and the views which were put forward by the province of Ontario in that connection, and particularly in regard to the question of ports on Hudson bay. Negotiations have gone on in regard to that matter. The importance of a port on Hudson bay to the province of Ontario was this: That province at the present time owns and operates a railway known as the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway. It is anticipated that that railway will be extended still farther to the north, or to the north and west, and it is expected by the government of Ontario, as I understand it, that one day that railway may require an outlet on Hudson bay, and, therefore, a port. The boundaries of Manitoba, of Ontario, and of Quebec, we are presenting to the House to-day are those which were agreed upon unanimously by the House of Commons on the 13th July, 1908. Now, it is apparent that boundaries so agreed upon unanimously by both sides of the House, should not be departed from lightly by a succeeding administration, and so, after a good deal of negotiations and consideration of claims which had really been passed upon by the administration which the hon. gentleman supported—and I would like to observe that, as he himself has said, he is one of those that assented to the boundaries of Manitoba, of Ontario and of Quebec exactly as they are proposed by this Bill and the other Bills which are to be brought before the House later on—the question arose as to how Ontario might be granted a port on Hudson bay, because it was desirable in the interest not only of Ontario but of the province of Manitoba and of the Dominion of Canada as a whole, that if Ontario desired to extend its railway to Hudson bay it should be given every opportunity of doing so. That is to the advantage not only of Ontario but likewise of Manitoba, and every hon. member in this House, whether representing Ontario, Manitoba, or any other province, will agree at once in the truth of what I have just stated. It is apparent to every hon. gentleman that the lands within the extended boundaries of Manitoba are to be retained by the federal government, so it was suggested, and eventually the suggestion was carried out, that a grant of certain lands, within the ownership and control of the government of Canada, might be made to the province of Ontario sufficient for the purpose of extending the Ontario government railway to a port on Hudson bay if it should desire in future to adopt that policy. In that view the Governor in Council passed on the 20th of February an order in council, which I will lay upon the table of the House for the information of hon. members, couched in the following terms:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report from the right hon. the Prime Minister submitting,— in connection with the proposed extensions of the limits of the respective provinces of Ontario and Manitoba as defined by resolutions of the House of Commons passed on the July 13, 1908, —that the government of Ontario represents that upon the enlargement of the territory of the province as proposed it would or might be desirable in the interests of the province to extend the provincial railway, known as the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, at present in operation between North Bay and Cochrane in the said province to a suitable port on Hudson bay. That it may be found necessary or expedient to select for such Hudson bay terminus a point at or near the mouth of the Nelson river, and that as the estuary of the Nelson lies some distance westward of the proposed western or northwestern boundary of the province, the government desires that such arrangements be made as will enable the province, or such commission or public corporation as may be thereunto authorized on behalf of the province, to construct, maintain and operate that portion of the proposed extension of the said provincial railway which may be projected within the extended boundaries of the province of Manitoba for the purpose of reaching the terminus to be selected as aforesaid upon the waters of Hudson bay.

The prime minister states that he considers that reasonable provision should be made to give effect to this request on the part of Ontario in so far as it is within the authority of the government and parliament of Canada, and, therefore, recommends that:—

1. The government of Your Royal Highness be authorized to transfer to the government of Ontario or to a minister of that government or to a commission as may be authorized or required by the government of the province of Ontario on behalf of the province, in so far as the lands hereinafter mentioned or described shall be vested in His Majesty in the right of the Dominion.

(a) A parcel of land of a uniform width of five miles commencing at a point to be determined by the government of Ontario on the proposed eastern boundary of Manitoba, within fifty miles of the point of intersection of the said boundary with the shore line of Hudson bay, and extending from the said proposed eastern boundary of Manitoba to the Nelson river, but so that no portion of the said parcel of land shall be more than fifty miles in a direct line from the shore of Hudson bay; also such further parcels of land not exceeding in width one-half mile upon the east side of the said river extending up river or along the shore of Hudson bay as may be necessary to entitle the province to a continuous water front of ten miles upon the Nelson river and Hudson bay, including the water front which will lie within the parcel five miles in width just hereinbefore mentioned or described with such right, interest or easement in the river-bed upon the eastern side and the foreshore contiguous to the land so to be transferred, as may be necessary or reasonably required for the erection, maintenance and operation of docks, elevators, or other structures for the purposes of the said railway, provided, however, that the total combined frontage of the said two parcels of land upon Nelson river and Hudson bay shall not exceed ten miles.

(b) If the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway be established at Fort Churchill, and if the government of Ontario prefer to make Fort Churchill the terminus of their said railway, a right of way two hundred feet in width from any point on the Nelson river to the nearest available point on the Hudson Bay railway, so that the provincial railway may connect with the Hudson Bay railway at that point, Your Royal Highness' government in that event agreeing for running powers over the Hudson Bay railway.

2. Your Royal Highness' government undertake in the event of the extension of the said provincial railway beyond the limits of Ontario, to promote such legislation as may be necessary within the powers of the parliament of Canada, to authorize such extension and the construction, maintenance and operation of the railway within the province of Manitoba, with powers to construct and operate telegraph and telephone lines, docks, elevators or other structures of every kind, to develop and operate water-powers, and generally to do all things necessary or convenient for the operation of the said railway.

3. A period of five years be allowed to the government of Ontario within which to select and designate the said lands intended to be transferred as aforesaid, and to notify the location thereof to Your Royal Highness' government, and that this order shall cease to be effective if such location be not made and duly notified within the said period.

The Prime Minister further recommends that, if the government of Ontario assent to the foregoing recommendations the necessary legislation for the purpose of carrying them into effect shall be submitted to parliament as soon as practicable thereafter.

The committee, concurring herein, submit the same for approval.

(Sgd.) RODOLPHE BOUDREAU,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

I might say in addition, that I understand that an arrangement has been made between the government of Ontario and the government of Manitoba that if the railway shall be constructed along the strip of land which it is thus proposed to transfer to the province of Ontario for that purpose, the province of Manitoba will agree to exempt the railway and structures connected with it from provincial taxation. This land will, of course, be within the province of Manitoba and will be subject to the provincial legislation; but, so far as ownership is concerned, it will be in some corporation, public body or minister selected by the province of Ontario. And, so far as we understand, there is no constitutional difficulty in bringing that about, inasmuch as it is competent for the province of Ontario to own land in the province of Manitoba or any other province of the Dominion, just as it would be competent for Ontario to own land or buildings in the city of London or any part of the United Kingdom. Under the arrangement which is made it will be entirely competent for the province of Ontario, should the government of that province see fit to do so, to extend the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway to the shores of Hudson bay. And in doing so it will have the co-operation of this government, and not only of this government but, I believe, also of the government of Manitoba, because the government of that province realizes that the extension of a great railway like that to the shore of Hudson bay would be eminently in the interest not only of the province of Ontario but of the province of Manitoba as well.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not follow very closely what the Prime Minister said. Is the transfer of this land contingent upon railway construction, or is it contingent merely for railway construction?

Mr. BORDEN. It is to go to the province of Ontario for the purpose of railway construction if the province of Ontario determines to extend the railway to the shores of Hudson bay; and when the land is once located and transferred to the province of Ontario—which must be done within five years—it becomes absolutely vested in Ontario and is not contingent upon the construction of the railway.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It seems difficult at first sight to completely realize this arrangement as stated by my right hon. friend, and involved in the order in council which he has read to the House. But it seems to me an extraordinary jumble, one of the most extraordinary that ever came before parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. Might I remind the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that it is not permissible to debate a Bill on the first reading. Rule 49 is as follows:

> When any Bill is presented by a member, in pursuance of an order of the House, or is brought from the Senate, the question, 'That this Bill be now read a first time,' shall be decided without amendment or debate.

If I understand it correctly an explanation should take place on the proposal to introduce the Bill, but other discussion of a Bill does not take place on the first reading.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling. But I have seen, and so have you, again and again, discussion upon the first reading of a Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. I think the rule might be waived if the right hon. gentleman desires to make any observations.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House, because then it will not be establishing a precedent which might be inconvenient should it be necessary to enforce the rule in the future.

Mr. BORDEN. Carried.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation which was introduced by my right hon. friend seems to be of a most extraordinary character. There has been a difference of opinion, naturally, between the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba as to the location of the boundary line, each endeavouring to have the line extended as far as it could in its own favour. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Guthrie), has taken the view that the province of Ontario did not get its share. I have heard this idea before; and, having heard it, we of the late administration, thought it desirable to give a decision in which we took the side neither of Ontario nor of Manitoba, but looked at the matter only with a view to the Dominion at large, and concluded that the best division as between the provinces was to fix the 89th meridian of longitude; the territory to the west of that point to be given to the province of Manitoba, and that to the east to Ontario. But my right hon. friend takes out of what is given to Manitoba a strip of land ten miles wide and gives it to the province of Ontario.

Mr. BORDEN. Five miles wide.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, it matters little, whether five or ten miles. At all events, the province of Ontario is allowed under this arrangement to encroach upon the province of Manitoba to the extent of five miles.

Mr. BORDEN. My right hon. friend is mistaken. The grant is being made to the province of Ontario just as it might be made to any individual or corporation for the purposes of the construction of a railway, but the land is not the less within the boundaries of Manitoba. But, inasmuch as we are not handing over the Crown lands to the province of Manitoba but retaining control of them, and as Ontario desires a port on Hudson bay, we are granting to Ontario within the limits of Manitoba a right of way five miles in width from the eastern boundary of Manitoba to this port on Hudson bay.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understood that. But I see a difference between making a grant to a province and to an individual. Any grant to an individual or company must become subject to the legislative power of the province in which the grant is made. In this case such a company would be subject to the jurisdiction of the law of Manitoba. Do I understand that the great province of Ontario is to be subject to the laws of Manitoba and to become liable to the serious obligation involved in this arrangement? My right hon. friend stated a moment ago that he proposed legislation to hand over the natural resources of the provinces to each of these provinces—though he said also that he was not going to give them to Manitoba—and he disposed of five miles of the resources of Manitoba in favour of Ontario. How Manitoba will be satisfied with that is more than I can say.

Mr. BORDEN. I can say that Manitoba is perfectly satisfied.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sure that the government of Manitoba is perfectly satisfactory. But the government of Manitoba is not exactly the people of Manitoba. The government of Manitoba will be satisfied with anything that the right hon. gentleman offers them; but that the people of Manitoba are satisfied, there may be some reason to doubt. At all events we shall have the new problem in the Dominion of Canada of the great province of Ontario—the banner province as it likes to style itself becoming subject to Manitoba. We have heard that there have been considerable difficulties between Mr. Roblin and Sir James Whitney. All that is done now,—Sir James Whitney becomes the subject to Mr. Roblin.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not think my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is very very well satisfied with this arrangement. But I should have thought so old a parliamentarian as he is might have concealed his disappointment much more cleverly than he has done. Under the circumstances, his heat, is very natural, and we are not at all disturbed by it.

For the extending of the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario railway through Manitoba territory these 5 miles have been set apart just in the same way as they might be set apart for any great railway corporation desiring to build a line through the province of Manitoba to a port on Hudson bay. It is to be expected that any province would welcome the construction of such a line if built by any of the railway corporations of this country and I do not know why Manitoba should not welcome the construction of such a line by the great sister province of Ontario. I believe Manitoba will welcome it. As to the difficulty with regard to jurisdiction, my right hon. friend perhaps forgets that the Intercolonial Railway of Canada, extends through the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and that the Canadian government has a very considerable mileage in Prince Edward Island. My right hon. friend knows that each one of those provinces has jurisdiction within the territory through which those lines of railway run, and I do not see any greater incongruity in the somewhat alarming picture which he endeavoured to draw, than there would be in having the Intercolonial railway of Canada, run through those four different provinces, and perhaps in the future through other provinces of Canada. There will be no difficulty in working out the proposal, at least none is apprehended by those who have given it a great deal of consideration. It gives to Ontario a port on Hudson bay and if the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario railway should be constructed to that port, it would be an advantage not only to Ontario, which will thus secure the desired port, but to the province of Manitoba, and to every province of Canada that that should be brought about.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my right hon. friend think that under the British North America Act the province of Ontario could build a railway in another province?

Mr. BORDEN. I have not the slightest doubt that the province of Ontario can do it, and I have not a doubt that the province of Ontario will do it, will extend that railway to Hudson bay when that northern country is more fully developed than at present.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I understand my right hon. friend to say that the government of Manitoba was perfectly satisfied with the arrangement, but I did not understand him to say whether the government of Ontario had consented to it.

Mr. BORDEN. The government of Ontario has assented to this arrangement and the government of Manitoba has assented to this arrangement, and every one has assented to it, except my hon. friends on the other side of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand then that there is some correspondence which has not been brought down.

Mr. BORDEN. I think not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I found nothing in the correspondence brought down showing the consent of Ontario or Manitoba to this new arrangement.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not think there is any correspondence on the subject. The government of Ontario has been represented here by a member of that government, who came and consulted with us on the subject. The government of Manitoba was represented here also by two members of that government, who came and consulted with us on the same subject.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. All this has been verbal then?

Mr. BORDEN. It has all been verbal, but none the less satisfactory.

Mr. MACDONALD. Do we understand that the title to the lands east of the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario is to go to the Ontario government or is it reserved to the Dominion?

Mr. BORDEN. In extending the boundaries of the province of Manitoba the Crown reserves, as was done in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the title to the public domain which has not passed to private hands. Therefore the Crown, holding title to the public domain in the district indicated in the order in council, proposes to make a grant of a strip five miles in width from the eastern boundary of the province of Manitoba to the mouth of the Nelson river. The point at which that strip is to begin has not been precisely defined.

Mr. MACDONALD. I was asking in regard to the title of lands in what would be New Ontario; does the federal government exercise the title or is it given to the province?

Mr. BORDEN. It passes as the other lands within the province of Ontario. It is to be administered by the Crown on the advice of the government of Ontario.

Mr. MACDONALD. In the right of Ontario?

Mr. BORDEN. Of course, my hon. friend understands that there is never any transfer made in such cases because the land is vested in the Crown in the one case as much as in the other. The only question is by whose advice shall that land be administered, by the advice of the federal government or by the advice of the provincial government. This land, like the rest of the land within the limits of Ontario, will be administered by the Crown on the advice of the provincial government.

Mr. MACDONALD. And on the other side of Manitoba it will be administered by the federal government.

Mr. GERMAN. Who will have jurisdiction over these five miles? Will it be the Dominion government or the government of Ontario or the government of Manitoba?

Mr. BORDEN. It will be subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the province of Manitoba just as any other portion of land within the boundaries of that province.

Mr. GERMAN. Then will the hon. gentleman tell me who owns the land? Is it owned by Manitoba or Ontario or the Dominion government?

Mr. BORDEN. It never has been owned by Manitoba, it is at present owned by the federal government and as soon as this grant is passed it will be owned by the Ontario government.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What considerations induced the government to establish the width of five miles for this right of way?

Mr. BORDEN. We gave consideration to it and concluded that five miles would be a convenient strip.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—MONTREAL CIRCUIT COURT.

Mr. BORDEN moved that the House go into committee of Supply.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is it the intention of the government to appoint additional judges for the circuit court of Montreal? I see there is a great agitation in Montreal about this and I have tried since the beginning of the session to get an answer from the hon. gentleman. I notice that the members of the bar of Montreal are very insistent and many delegations have called on the hon. gentleman or at least many letters have been sent to him. Has he given a decision?

Mr. DOHERTY. I have not had any delegation nor have I had a large number of letters. I have had communications from a representative committee of the bar of Montreal upon the subject and, co-operating with that committee, I have given the very best consideration in my power to the problem presented in connection with the circuit court of Montreal and I have to thank that committee for having devoted a great deal of time and consideration to the subject.

That committee have agreed to a suggestion made by me, and I understand that the Prime Minister and Attorney General of the province to whom that suggestion was communicated has no objection to it. It has been agreed that it would be desirable, before proceeding to appoint the three additional judges who have been suggested for the circuit of Montreal, to endeavour, by selecting three judges from the rural districts in Quebec where there is the least work to be done, to dispose of the arrears that have accumulated in the circuit court. It is the intention of the government to ask the House to vote such additional funds as may be necessary to provide for any expense that may be incurred, and if the arrangement can be carried out it will place us in a position to start the present court with a clean sheet. If I mistake not, a measure has already been introduced into the Quebec legislature, intended to provide for the simplification in some respects of the procedure of the circuit court, with a view to enabling the court to deal with cases more expeditiously. It is hoped that if the circuit court is given an opportunity of starting with a clean sheet, and its operations are further facilitated by a simplification of procedure, at all events, in certain cases, it will prove possible to carry on its work without doubling the number of judges. The present idea is that there should not be any immediate increase in the number of judges, but that an endeavour should be made to ascertain whether the work can be satisfactorily carried on with the present number of judges. I may say that the hope I have that that may prove possible is not confined to myself. It is shared by the members of the Bar who, on the selection of their confreres, have been specially dealing with this matter of the business of the circuit court of Montreal. I may add further that I have had a conference with the present judges of the circuit court and they have expressed their satisfaction with this proposed arrangement and stated that, while they do not feel quite confident that even under this arrangement three judges will be sufficient, they do believe, after carefully going into the matter and coming to a conclusion, that once they are relieved of all these arrears and placed in the position that I have suggested, four judges will prove quite ample. In order to carry out this arrangement effectually, to obtain the results we desire, it will be necessary that we shall have the co-operation of the judges themselves, and they have expressed their perfect readiness to facilitate it and to co-operate with us. We need and I believe have further the good will of the members of the Bar and the sanction and approval of the government of Quebec. As I say, I have seen the communications between the Attorney General of Quebec and the committee of the Bar to which I have referred, in which that gentleman declares he has no objection to this endeavour being made to ascertain whether the problem that presents itself—and which, as I think everybody knows who knows anything about the administration of justice in Montreal is a serious problem—may not be more satisfactorily settled in this manner than it would be by merely appointing three additional judges to the circuit court and leave the matter in its present position. I would not like to give rise to any hopes that might later on be disappointed, but I think I may add that it is hoped that if this plan can be carried out, and if the circuit court can be carried on with the present number of judges, or only with four, possibly this House may look more favourably upon a proposition in future to increase the salaries of the judges of the court.

DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTER AT CRYSTAL BEACH, ONTARIO.

Mr. GERMAN. Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply I wish to bring up a question which I referred to about two weeks ago when the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) was not in his seat. It is a fact that the Postmaster General has dismissed in the county of Welland a young man by the name of A. or E. W. Buck, postmaster at Crystal Beach, and he has appointed a United States citizen to his place named Rebstock. There is no reason why my friend, Mr. Buck, who has held the position for many years should have been dismissed. The Postmaster General has received, I know, a large petition signed in favour of that young man retaining the position. He was not a partisan, he is not a politician and he never took any part in politics. Why the hon. gentleman saw fit to dismiss him I cannot understand. There was a large petition in favour of him retaining the position as postmaster and retaining the post office in the building where it has been situated in the past. I would not object so seriously to the dismissal of this officer if the Postmaster General had not appointed a United States citizen to fill his place. After all the waving of the flag by hon. gentlemen opposite I cannot quite understand why the Postmaster General should dismiss a good strong healthy Canadian citizen who will wave the Union Jack and appoint a fellow who is a United States citizen and who waves the Stars and Stripes. If the Postmaster General can explain that satisfactorily to me I will submit, but I doubt if he can. I would ask the Postmaster General to reconsider his decision in regard to the matter. The hon. gentleman dismissed the postmaster at Bridgeburg and reappointed a good Conservative. I did not make any complaint about that because I had that man dismissed some years ago and appointed a new man in his place. Therefore, he has simply restored the status quo. I am not objecting to that particularly. I think he made a mistake there, but I do ask that the Postmaster General should reconsider his position in regard to the Crystal Beach postmaster and reinstate a young man of good ability, and good habits and a Canadian citizen who has taken no part in politics.

An hon. MEMBER. He is not a good citizen then.

Mr. GERMAN. Some one says he is not a good citizen if he does not take part in politics. If he does take part in politics he is dismissed—so what is he to do?

I would ask the Postmaster General to look into the question of the dismissal of this postmaster and if he has to appoint any person in lieu of the man whom he dismissed and who should not have been dismissed, let him appoint some man who will wave the Union Jack instead of the Star Spangled Banner.

Mr. PELLETIER. My hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German) has stated that I reappointed a man whom he got dismissed without reason or investigation and the inference is that he admits he was wrong when he did that, and that I am right in making restitution. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) any remorse for having deprived this man of his office during fifteen years?

Mr. GERMAN. No, he is worth fifty thousand dollars, and he did not need it.

Mr. PELLETIER. Well, if it was his own money, that was no reason for his dismissal. The hon. member for Welland got him dismissed without reason or investigation.

Mr. GERMAN. There was an investigation, and there was a reason. He was an absolute partisan. He would not allow a Liberal poster to go into the post office; it was a public Tory committee room. That is why he was dismissed.

Mr. PELLETIER. But the hon. gentleman has told us that he had not much fault to find with the reappointment of the man who had been dismissed.

Mr. MACDONALD. What about Crystal Beach?

Mr. PELLETIER. One at a time. I will come to Crystal Beach in a moment. I am afraid my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German) has forgotten the usual courtesy of giving notice to the minister that a certain question is to be brought up on going into Supply, so that the minister may have the papers with him. I have fourteen thousand postmasters, whom I carry in my heart, but not in my head, and I fear that I am not capable of picking out any one of these fourteen thousand postmasters and tell on the spur of the moment all about the case, when I have not received notice. If my hon. friend from Welland gives me notice, I will have the files here and I will be able to give him satisfaction. The hon. gentleman tells me that I have appointed a gentleman from the United States to be postmaster, but that is news to me. The hon. gentleman from Welland was strong against reciprocity at one time, but he has now joined the party which is keeping reciprocity as one of its platform planks.

Mr. GERMAN. No.

Mr. PELLETIER. Well, I will inquire if the gentleman who has been appointed is a United States citizen, and if he has not taken the oath of office as a British subject, we will have to see about it.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Interior Department—Immigration contingencies—Canadian and British and foreign agencies and general immigration expenses, $800,000.

Mr. GERMAN. I wish to call the attention of the minister to certain regulations of his department which, in my opinion, operate very unjustly. The regulation now is that, if a foreigner starts for Canada he cannot remain in any intervening country, say the United States, for a week or two, and then come into Canada. This is a very serious matter, and I would like the minister to consider it. . I shall give one instance as an example of what is happening continually. About two years ago the Ontario Iron and Steel company employed a foreman from Pittsburg who was an expert iron worker. He had worked in the Pittsburg mills for several years, he had never become a United States citizen, he being a Swede. He came to Welland and he had to put up seventy dollars as security that he would go back to the United States within thirty days.

This man stayed for thirty days. He had to go back or lose his $70. He could not stay in Canada unless he was a United States citizen. That is happening continually. There are good men, who would make excellent citizens of Canada, who have come from a foreign country and have lived in the United States for a year or two or three years; they have not become naturalized as citizens of the United States, and they cannot come into Canada and stay here. This is the most absurd problem in connection with the immigration matters that is confronting the Minister of the Interior at this moment. I have talked it over with the chief immigration officer, Mr. Scott, and he sees the difficulty. The only way out of it that I can see is to allow the immigration officers some degree of discretion in the matter, if you have the right kind of officers, as you have in Welland, because I saw that they were appointed. Make the regulations more elastic and give the officers some sort of discretion. This is not the first time that I have called this hard and fast rule to the attention of the Minister of the Interior. I called it to the attention of the former Minister of the Interior. I hope that the present minister will see some way of getting over a very serious difficulty that stands in the way of our getting first-class settlers into Canada.

Mr. PARDEE. I want to supplement the remarks which my hon. friend from Welland has just made. I can understand that, with the hard and fast regulations which the United States has against us, there should be something along the same line in Canada. But it does seem ridiculous that persons coming from one part of Canada through the United States to another part of Canada, should, under the regulations of the Immigration Department, be disturbed and put to the trouble of proving exactly who and what they are, and going through a course of sprouts which, if nothing else, is humiliating to the person who is subjected to this treatment. A short time ago I brought to the attention of the minister a case in which an officer, acting entirely in accordance with a memorial that had been sent out a day or two previously, had stopped a person who had come from Winnipeg, had passed through the United States, and was coming to Sarnia, and had almost turned him back because some slight part of the regulations promulgated by the department had not been lived up to. Having regard to the regulations of the United States in regard to our workmen going into their country, I think we should have as high a wall against them as they have against us; but when you have a set of officers, as you have on the border, who are above the ordinary intelligence, and who realize that they hold a more or less delicate office, in which a mistake on their part might lead to trouble between us and the United States, I think the minister should allow them to a certain extent to use their discretion. In some of the smaller centres, it is necessary at certain times to bring in labourers to perform local work, and in those cases I think the immigration officers ought to have power for a certain length of time to allow labourers to come in, in order that not only public works, but private enterprise, should not be kept back. I think it would be well that both the Department of the Interior and the Department of Labour should take this matter up, and see if the immigration regulations cannot be so framed that they will work more smoothly with regard to people who come to Canada with the intention of becoming good citizens and helping the country along.

Mr. ROGERS. I appreciate the force of the argument made by my hon. friend from Welland and my hon. friend from West Lambton; but I am free to confess that I am not sufficiently conversant with the regulations to give the hon. gentlemen an answer off-hand. While the regulations may entail a certain amount of hardship, I am sure that they were not adopted without some good and sufficient reason in the judgment of the department. I shall be glad, however, to take the matter up at the very earliest opportunity with the officers of the department, and see if some modifications along the lines suggested, consistent with safety to the administration of this very delicate matter, cannot be made in the regulations.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not wish to criticise for a moment the administration of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rogers), I do feel more like criticising the administration of his predecessor, because I took the matter up with him, and wanted him to do something but I could not get him to act. All I want is that the present minister will take this matter into consideration and decide upon some beneficial action. This situation, as I understand it was created in order to keep the Hindus out of British Columbia. But that does not apply here. This is a grievance which must be remedied, and it will be remedied, I am quite sure, by the minister.

Mr. BEATTIE. I think these troubles are largely caused by want of judgment on the part of the officer. A case came under my notice the other day where a lady who had lived all her life in a Canadian town along side the border paid a visit to the United States. On returning to Canada she was stopped by an officer who would not allow her to pass. Fortunately there was another officer present who knew this lady, and so she was allowed to proceed. She was a very respectable, well dressed lady, and there was no reason whatever for the indignity to which she was exposed. The trouble is that a lot of messengers have been taken out of this House and appointed to positions on the border. I think if good officers were appointed there would be no trouble whatever. It is simply due to the stupid officers that were appointed by the late gouvernment.

Mr. PARDEE. I do not at all agree with my hon. friend from London, in the remarks which he has made concerning the officers. It is not at all, in my opinion, a question of the fitness of the officers, but the responsibility lies with the regulations which have been made in the past, due perhaps to certain exigencies which arose. From my experience, which has been very considerable, along the border, the officers have been men above the ordinary intelligence, but they have simply done these things from a desire to live up to the regulations, and thought they were only carrying out their duty in that regard.

Mr. BEATTIE. Do you consider a man is fit for such a position if he refuses to admit to Canada a respectable lady who lives here?

Mr. PARDEE. The officers have to act according to the regulations.

Mr. BEATTIE. I do not think such conduct is the indication of intelligence on the part if the officer.

Mr. GERMAN. I cannot allow the statement of the hon. member for London to go uncontradicted, because I know these officers, I realise that they would like to use a certain amount of discretion, and discrimination, but they are tied down hard and fast by the regulations, and as I have already said I tried to get the ex-Minister of the Interior to change them, but he would not do it, and he deserved to be turned out I think. I hope the present minister will do better and make these regulations more elastic so that the officers in whom he has confidence may exercise some discretionary power.

An hon. MEMBER. If they do not give efficient service put them out.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not think the minister should take such an extreme course in the case of officers who are intelligent and efficient. Let these officers have some power of discretion, and let the regulations be sufficiently elastic so that an intelligent immigration officer can admit a foreigner possessed of means, who is on his way from the United States into Canada. Under the regulations at present the officer cannot do that.

Mr. LALOR. I agree with the arguments presented by the member for Welland (Mr. German) and the member for Lambton (Mr. Pardee). Undoubtedly a great many very objectionable cases occur at present in connection with the officers questioning people who are coming into Canada. Only last Saturday I was coming across the border and saw a poor woman being stopped, and one time I was afraid she was going to be put off the train by the officer. It turned out afterwards that although she could not speak very good English she lived a short distance from the border at a village called Sherkston, where she lived with her family. I believe these officers are painstaking and careful and do anything they possibly can to assist immigrants, and it may be the regulations are too strict. But at the same time I call attention to the fact that these troubles do not all exist on the Canadian side. I live close to the border, as my hon. friend from Welland does, and travel backwards and forwards to Buffalo very often, and I think he will agree with me that we see more objectionable cases on the American than on the Canadian side.

Mr. GERMAN. That is quite right.

Mr. LALOR. If some international arrangement could be made between Canada and the United States under which there could be a change in the regulations with respect to people who have to cross backwards and forwards, it would be a great advantage, because I have seen cases of very great hardship. I know the case of a respectable young lady, whose father lives in my own town. She was taken off a train on the way to visit her sister and had it not been for my intercession she would have been detained and not allowed to proceed. These cases occur on both sides of the line, but by means of an international arrangement there might be some beneficial relaxation of the regulations as regards people travelling both to the United States and to Canada.

Mr. BELAND. I would like to call the minister's attention to the fact that some of the officers in the port of Sherbrooke are not very conversant with the French language. Trains of the Boston and Maine and Grand Trunk railways enter Canada through to Sherbrooke from all points in New England. The New England states are inhabited largely, as you know, by French population, and during the summer months their relatives in the eastern townships go down to visit them. Sometimes aged relatives go there and spend a few weeks, but when they return home they experience a good deal of trouble. I have a case in mind which happened last summer of an old French settler returning from a visit to his son in the state of Maine, but who was turned back at a point below Sherbrooke and had to go back to his son before he could get home. These cases are quite frequent. I would impress the minister with the necessity that all immigration and customs officers, for instance, in eastern townships, should be thoroughly conversant with both languages. I think that it is a fair request to make to the minister who knows the importance of the French language as he speaks it very well himself.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know who the officers are at Sherbrooke, and I am not conversant with the conditions to which he refers. But I certainly can appreciate the point that it would be very advisable that the officers in charge should speak both languages. I shall be very glad indeed to see if we cannot arrange that at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MICHAUD. Living as I do near the border, between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine, I am in a position to know that Americans are dealt with very fairly by our people. They are allowed to come with their teams or to walk across the boundary line, and our immigration agents are very considerate in dealing with these visitors. But it is entirely different when we go to the other side. At St. Leonard when an international bridge was under construction I went there to see the work. I crossed on the ferry, and when I landed on the American side I had to give a long account of myself to the United States immigration officer before I was allowed to proceed. I explained that I wished to stay there for only about ten minutes, but he told me that I must give my pedigree or he would not allow me to cross. Other Canadians there have had a similar experience. Canadians walking or driving to the other side of the line have to give an account of themselves. If a man has his wife with him, he has to give an account for her; if they have children with them, it must be explained to whom the children belong. It is very annoying to our New Brunswickers. If the minister could bring about arrangements under which people from our side could be allowed to drive or walk across on telling the immigration officer their names and what they are going for, it would be an advantage to many of our people.

Mr. McKENZIE. This will probably be my only opportunity to bring to the attention of the minister the facts with regard to a matter of importance to the people I represent. There is an agent of the Department of Immigration at the port of North Sydney, and quite a number of immigrants from the other side of the Atlantic arrive at that place. But in case of those who are sick a different situation arises from that at Halifax or Montreal. The immigrant from Liverpool goes direct to Halifax, and he can be sent back, I presume, if the officers deem that course proper. But immigrants coming to the port of North Sydney generally come from St. John's, Newfoundland. Restrictions upon immigration such as are known here are not in force in Newfoundland. Immigrants land in Newfoundland whose real destination is Canada.

After staying in Newfoundland for as long as they please, they take the train from St. John's to Port aux Basques thence cross in the steamer 'Bruce' to North Sydney. It often happens that immigrants arrive there suffering from trachoma. The immigration officer at North Sydney is not in a position to send them back to the old country, because they do not come to North Sydney from the old country, but from Newfoundland. The only thing he can do, is to send them back to Newfoundland. But to send an immigrant to Port aux Basques is to send him to a place where there are no hospitals, and where he cannot get treatment. Sometimes cases arrive involving no little distress. A wife may arrive with her children to join the husband and father, who may have been in Canada for years preparing a home for them. But if one of them has trachoma, they may all have to be sent back to Newfoundland, and the husband, though a Canadian citizen, can do nothing for them. But at North Sydney we have excellent doctors, and two excellent hospitals, one at North Sydney and one a mile and a half further down, with a tramway from the terminal wharf to both hospitals. If the regulations permitted it, we could treat these people on the spot. If it turned out, after a fair term of treatment that a cure could not be effected, the immigrant might then be deported. But in some cases those sent to Newfoundland afterwards find their way into Canada without complying with the regulations. These people are mostly Assyrians. Many of them are already in Canada. We find them honest, industrious citizens, willing to do any work that comes their way. All I ask is that these people should be put on the same footing as Europeans in regard to this matter. We are anxious to have them in Nova Scotia, for we need people to work in our mines or about our steel works, and we find these are good people. I hope the minister will give this matter consideration and place these Assyrians on the same footing as Europeans coming into Canada.

Mr. ROGERS. The point the hon. gentleman raises is a rather important one. Some of the hon. members who have participated in the discussion this evening have pointed out the difficulties in connection with immigrants coming from the United States. It is true, we need to have fairly close regulations to prevent people coming in who are undesirable. And I understand that some attempt has been practised in connection with their finding their way around through Newfoundland to avoid certain regulations they would meet if entering by other ports.

For that reason the point raised by my hon. friend is rather a difficult one but the chief officer of the department is present and has heard what my hon. friend has said; it will have very careful consideration in order, if possible, to remedy the trouble and remain consistent with our rules and regulations. I understand we have a doctor at North Sydney who looks after any person coming in who requires medical attendance.

Mr. McKENZIE. He is not permitted to treat them?

Mr. BELAND. Why?

Mr. ROGERS. He is permitted to examine and see what is the matter and if there is nothing serious the matter he passes them on to some other doctor.

Mr. McKENZIE. If he finds they have trachoma he is not permitted to treat them but must send them out of the country.

Mr. ROGERS. In that case I understand he returns them to Newfoundland.

Mr. McKENZIE. And they cannot get treatment where they are sent.

Mr. ROGERS. That is unfortunate for them. However, it is a matter that is worth looking into.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. In the early part of the session I made some suggestions in regard to improving the immigration system and I hope the minister will be able to say to-night that he has adopted those suggestions. One of them was that the inspection should take place before the immigrants go on board the vessels.

Mr. ROGERS. There is reasonable precaution taken in that way in view of the fact that all immigrants are examined by the ship's doctors and by the board of trade doctors before they are allowed to take passage for Canada. In that way the department feels they are fairly well protected. Less than 1 per cent of the immigrants have been returned.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If the same care was taken in inspecting them before they embark at Liverpool, the trachoma would be discovered there and that would relieve the troubles we are experiencing at Montreal. The expense would be great but surely it is worth while to go to any expense. The introduction of cholera to this country some years ago was owing to lack of inspection on the other side.

Mr. ROGERS. When we looked into this matter we found that the question arose whether we had authority to undertake the inspection on the other side. The cases of trachoma that have been reported are very few.

Mr. BELAND. Has the department immigration hospitals in St. John and Halifax?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). In granting aid to the provinces in the matter of immigration, does the minister intend to vote money directly to each province to supplement expenditures made by the provinces for immigration work, or will the aid merely be limited to the payment of salaries of persons named by the provincial governments to attend to immigration work in England?

Mr. ROGERS. It would not be wise for the government to make a direct grant, because you have to keep control of your whole machinery to make it as effective as it should be. We are suggesting to the provinces that we are prepared to carry out any reasonable policy that they will recommend that will be in keeping with that effort to improve, if possible, the conditions of the different provinces, and we shall endeavour to circulate literature that in consultation with them we will agree upon as being the most desirable for each province.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that one office is occupied by the provincial and federal immigration branch at Toronto. Where is the office, and who pays the rent?

Mr. ROGERS. The office is in the Union station and we pay the rent.

Mr. OLIVER. I am interested in this matter of immigration work, especially in the project of co-operation with the provinces which my hon. friend has put forward as the leading feature of his immigration policy. What is the intention in regard to the number of provincial agents to be appointed and paid by the Dominion, and are these agents to be nominated by the provincial governments?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know that we have any special rules as to nomination of officers. We have not accepted any nominations or asked any government to nominate any special officer, but we have asked them to give us all the information they possibly can. I thought we ought to have about two agents for each province to work up this matter of co-operation and work together. That was the suggestion with relation to the maritime provinces, which, with Ontario, have taken the most active interest in the plan.

The work in the prairie provinces has been pretty actively canvassed and in so far as the western country is concerned my hon. friend quite understands that we will give it every possible attention in order to continue as aggressively as we possibly can the policy in that direction in co-operation with the provinces, or in any other form that will be best calculated to bring in all the immigrants that we can secure.

Mr. BELAND. Will the agents be sent abroad or will they remain in Canada?

Mr. ROGERS. That is a point in regard to which we will take advice from the provinces concerned and we will be guided by their judgment.

Mr. OLIVER. Will this force of provincial agents be in addition to the Dominion force that is now at work in Europe?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, it is extra over and above the officers now engaged.

Mr. OLIVER. That would mean the addition of eighteen salaried agents to the staff at work in England and on the continent?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, two for each province.

Mr. OLIVER. It would be a very important addition to the cost of the Immigration Department and I will risk the expression of the idea that the expenditure of such a large sum as would be necessary under that proposal with the special view of introducing legislation into the eastern provinces where there is no free land, nor the same opportunity as there is in the prairie provinces, will certainly not produce the same result to the Dominion as like effort or like expense would if directed towards the prairie provinces where the opportunities at present exist.

Mr. ROGERS. I can appreciate what my hon. friend says in respect of the western provinces and their possibilities. At the same time we must all realize the feeling that exists in the maritime provinces with respect to the matter of immigration. They have certainly not received much attention in this regard. In the province of New Brunswick they have adopted a very aggressive policy involving the purchasing of considerable tracts of land and dividing it up something in the form suggested by the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) when he was discussing the same thing in respect to the province of Nova Scotia. I certainly think it is worth while for the department to lend what assistance they can to the provinces which are so desirous to secure immigration and which are putting forth such an effort as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are. We would be failing in our duty in administering the immigration work of this country if we did not lend that assistance that their energies appear to entitle them to. If it does not turn out as they expect it would be their misfortune and we would be very sorry but at the same time they have possibilities that entitle them to the consideration that we are suggesting.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). When Mr. Hawkes was in the maritime provinces conferring with the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in connection with immigration matters, a suggestion was made to him by the Secretary of Immigration for the government of Nova Scotia as a means of inducing immigration. There was brought to his attention the idea of organizing a corporation sufficiently strong to purchase a great area of vacant or abandoned farming lands in that province and to help along intending settlers who might eventually determine to locate on this land. I think I mentioned this suggestion to the minister during the debate on the resolution of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes). I know that such a thing is now receiving the consideration of some people in Nova Scotia with the view of organizing a company for that purpose. I would like to inquire of the minister if he would consider it a practical thing from his view point to aid a corporation of that kind in some form or another, such as a guarantee of interest upon bonds, or the payment of a subsidy according to the results, and if it would be possible to enter into any contract with the department. That suggestion has been made, I know, to the Department of the Interior by the government of Nova Scotia. Possibly the minister has not had an opportunity of seeing it or of giving it consideration. I would like to know if any suggestion in that form would be apt to meet with the favour of the minister?

Mr. ROGERS. I have not seen or heard of a proposition of that kind as coming from the government or as a suggestion in the department up to the present time. I would rather fear that the suggestion might be surrounded with a certain amount of difficulty in connection with the department being a party to any undertaking of this kind which might be regarded as speculative in its nature. I would want to have that matter very carefully considered before I would venture to make my hon. friend anything like a definite answer. I have not heard of it yet and I have not had under consideration the representations which he said have been made to the department.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I think they were made to Mr. Hawkes, as a matter of fact.

Mr. OLIVER. In the case of agents who will specially represent the various provinces, are they selected by the provincial governments or will they be selected by the Immigration Department?

Mr. ROGERS. We propose to consult every government and agree with them as to what agent we will select and as to who will be a desirable and useful man as publicity man for the province that he represents. We propose to invite every government to give us their advice and join in the recommendation of the man who will be useful to carry on the work.

Mr. OLIVER. As a matter of fact the federal government will actually engage the man and pay him?

Mr. ROGERS. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER. And he will actually be under the federal government's supervision from start to finish?

Mr. ROGERS. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to know if the $50 as laid down in the regulations is in force during this season?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, until the end of this month. The money qualification for immigrants other than Asiatics is $50 from the 1st of November to the 1st of March and $25 from the 1st March to the end of October, just the same as it has been.

Mr. OLIVER. When the estimates were up before I made an inquiry in regard to the closing of offices in Great Britain and I was informed that none had been closed. Have there been any changes in England?

Mr. ROGERS. No changes.

Mr. OLIVER. And the same on the continent?

Mr. ROGERS. No change either.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Has the Boston office been opened?

Mr. ROGERS. No, but we hope to open it on the 1st of March.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Who are the officials to be appointed?

Mr. ROGERS. They have not been named yet.

Mr. OLIVER. I have been informed that the immigration agent at Edmonton has been dismissed.

Mr. ROGERS. What is his name?

Mr. OLIVER. Webster. I would be glad to know what was the reason of his dismissal.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not remember the case now, but I will supply the information to the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Webster was a gentleman of very considerable standing in the community when he was appointed, and I believe he was a very competent agent. Mr. Webster was a Liberal, but I am well aware there were no grounds for his dismissal because of partisanship. He certainly did not show any partisanship during the recent election. I am therefore, entirely at a loss to understand on what ground he has been dismissed. I want to place on record the facts in connection with the appointment of the man put in his place. I understand that the man who is to be appointed is one W. H. Clegg, who was president of the Conservative Association in Edmonton during the last election, and who was a party to an attempt to discredit me in the elections by giving an order for the manufacture of a ballot box which was put before the public as having been made in my interest, and improperly made for the purpose of misdirecting the results of the election. This is the man who has been appointed in Mr. Webster's place, and I must say that I do not think the appointment reflects any credit upon the minister or upon the department.

Mr. ROGERS. I am very sorry to learn the information which my hon. friend has imparted to the House. I will have the matter looked into and if the information is well founded I will deal with it in the proper manner.

Mr. HENDERSON. Some years ago there were appointed in different towns and villages of Ontario a number of agents whose duty was supposed to be to bring in farm hands or domestic servants, and some of these agents were very active and some of them did little or nothing. They were paid at the rate of two dollars per head for each farm hand or domestic they induced to come into the country. Now, in my view these agents have not been a very great success, to say the least of it, and I wish to know if it is intended to continue them.

Mr. ROGERS. The returns for last year show that 4,224 males, 2,144 females and 157 children were distributed by these agents, in the province of Ontario. We have about seventy-five of these agents and the amount paid them last year was $5,152. I discussed this question with Mr. Duff, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, a short time ago, and although he is thoroughly informed in matters of this kind, he was not in a position to say definitely and off-hand whether, in his judgment, it was a wise thing to discontinue the agents. He is making inquiries into the matter, and we expect to hear from him in the near future, when I shall be glad to communicate his views to my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Judging from the fact that $5,152 was paid to these local distributing agents in Ontario last year, it would seem that 2,576 farm hands and domestics were placed by them in the province. A return brought down to the House some time ago shows that about two hundred and fifty of these agents were appointed throughout Ontario in 1907 and that the number has been reduced from year to year until last year there were eighty-eight. The demand of western Canada has drawn heavily on some of the oldest and best agricultural counties in the province of Ontario, and consequently there has been in some of these counties quite a decrease in the population. In my opinion, these local distributing agents have proven nothing less than an absolute failure in carrying out the business for which they were supposed to be appointed. The fact is that many of the Ontario counties which are most in need of people have not received one man or one woman through these agencies during the past two years. During the last ten years there has been a decrease of 3,476 in the population of the county of Dufferin, and not one person was placed in that county in the last two years by these agents. The same remark applies to Lennox and Addington, where there has been a decrease of 2,965.

In the county of Prince Edward, the population is less now by 714 than it was ten years ago, and not a single person was placed in that county through the medium of these local agents. In the county of Lambton, where the population in ten years has decreased by 5,380, there was just one person placed there by the local agency last year and nine in the year 1910. I do not believe there is any excuse for continuing a system of that kind, which in my opinion was devised for no other than political purposes. The province of Ontario has given liberally of its people to meet the demand of western Canada, and, Sir, it is the duty of this government to see that justice is done to that province with respect to this question. You may talk as you please about the demands of the maritime provinces and of western Canada, but, if this heavy drain on Ontario is continued, disaster will overtake the province, there is, in my opinion, danger of opening and developing the west more rapidly than the circumstances appertaining to the whole country would justify.

According to a return brought down there were 4,177 people placed by these agents in Ontario in the last two years. In twenty-one counties there were 1,450 people placed; yet in one county alone there were placed more than half of that number or 767, leaving 683 for the other twenty counties. Surely nobody can defend such a system as that; there is no equality or right of justice in it. Many of these counties are so handicapped to-day by the labour situation that many of the farms are not producing one half what they otherwise would do, and are used for grazing purposes because of the lack of labour. For instance, the county of Lambton received only ten men in two years, and yet, notwithstanding the increase of the towns and cities, it has fallen off in population 5,380 in ten years. The county of Oxford showed a falling off of 1,032 people in ten years, yet it received only 125 in two years. Prescott received only 5 last year and none in 1910. The county of Durham received none in 1910 and four in 1911; yet there is a falling off there of 1,555. Middlesex received six in 1910 and 15 in 1911, and shows a falling off of 4,285. The census returns show an alarming condition of affairs in the province of Ontario, and the absolute necessity of the government seeing that something is done to meet the conditions that have arisen in that province.

A few days ago I urged on the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he was putting the grain Bill through, to do something to offset the spread of noxious weeds in the province of Ontario and provide for the destruction of weed seeds in screenings at the elevators, and thus prevent them being fed on the farms.

The absence of farm labour and the spread of noxious weeds in Ontario demand the consideration of the government. I do not believe that this government can afford to place the responsibility on any other shoulders than their own. I do not think they can depute their responsibilities to the provincial government or to any one else. I believe it is their first duty to see that in the older provinces that are annually denuded of farm labourers by the excursions to western Canada to harvest the crops there, that something is done to meet the conditions that exist, as a result of the policy that has been in force for many years. I do not object to these people going to western Canada. We are glad to have our people go and settle in that country; but I believe that the previous government lost sight of the fact that it was their duty to see that other people took their places in the older provinces, where they would find the conditions more congenial and the training they would receive such as better to equip them for their experience in the newer country. I am glad the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has brought up the matter of the local distributing agents in Ontario. Any one who knows the circumstances of their appointment and the manner in which they have discharged their duties knows that they have not been satisfactory. I understand that they were to receive applications from farmers and forward them to the superintendent of immigration to Ottawa, who was to send them to government agents in the old land and they to the boking agent there. This would entail a delay of several months before the farmers could be supplied. That policy has proven so unsatisfactory that very few of the booking agents to-day care to have men sent out in that way. I believe it is the duty of the government to see that there is a labour bureau establishment in every province of Canada, and that the booking agents in the old country are kept in touch with the conditions here. The labour bureau would receive applications from the farmers, and the immigration authorities would have absolute knowledge of the conditions in this country, and would see that men were sent out and placed by the bureau which would be in direct touch with farmers. I know as a matter of fact that at the present time the provincial department of immigration in Ontario has about 800 applications for men; yet we have in force a regulation preventing immigrants from coming here between the months of November and March unless they have $50 in their possession. As far as Ontario is concerned, I do not think it is advisable to enforce these regulations. particularly in face of the conditions that exist in this province at the present time. In 21 of the very best counties of the province of Ontario, there has been a falling off in the population of 56,352 people, and the farmers are handicapped by the lack of farm labourers. There is a great outcry in the newspapers that the farmers of Canada are not producing enough to meet the requirements of the people. Why do we devote all our energies to the growing of wheat for the people of Europe, and fail to look after conditions in our own country, and to see that we do not have to import butter from Australia and New Zealand and eggs from Kansas and potatoes from Ireland as at present. Our friends opposite were very anxious a few months ago that reciprocity should be adopted, not for the relief of the farmer but for the relief of the consumer; but if they had done their duty by the older provinces, the conditions that are in existence here would not be in existence. I would therefore earnestly urge the minister to see that different methods are adopted, and that the province of Ontario receives at least equal treatment to that extended to the other provinces, and to see that the whole energy of the government is not devoted to western Canada as it has been heretofore.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman please inform the minister and the House, if he can, how emigration from the older provinces can be prevented?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that it can be prevented or that it would be advisable to attempt to prevent it. I believe that in the west, with the opening up of new territory and the building of railways, there is a considerable spirit of speculation.

The rapid increase in the values of land is going to attract people there. The young men of the older provinces are bound to go out there, and you cannot blame them. They can get a homestead there, which is going to be worth by the time they obtain their patent, $10, $15, $20 or $25 per acre. Is it any wonder that the people are flocking to the west? But here are the conditions in Ontario: We have the demand for labour and there are splendid opportunities for farm labourers on our farm lands. After they have been here for a number of years and become acquainted with our methods of farming, they are better qualified to succeed in the west if they wish to go there.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I have heard it stated—I do not know whether it is correct or not, or to what degree it is correct—that it was the practice some time ago in the province of Ontario to secure farm labour, employ that labour for a few months during the summer, and when the crops were all harvested, to permit that labour to go away. If that is true it is a very unfair and unjust thing to Ontario or any other province.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may tell the hon. gentleman that that statement is not correct. I have been connected with immigration work in the province of Ontario for nearly three years and at no month in the year have we been able to supply the demand for farm labourers in that province. That may seem unreasonable. A few years ago there were people in the city of Toronto clamouring for assistance from the city authorities, yet those people would not go and work on a farm, although there was an abundance of such work to be had. If they were not qualified for farm work they would not be of any use on a farm. There are applications on the books of the Department of Immigration at Toronto, as I said a few minutes ago, to the number of upwards of 800, at the present time. Many of these applicants are asking for married men by the year, undertaking to provide them with houses, offering wages of at least $300 or $350 and more per year, and free fuel, free milk, a garden and other things. There is in the old country an abundance of such labour to be had. Last year the Ontario government advanced upwards of $25,000 to assist farm laborers and domestic servants to come out here, and place them on farms in Ontario, the provincial government is still pursuing that policy. Why should they be compelled to do that? Is it not the duty of the federal authorities to see that that is done, and to see that these demands are met, thus freeing the provincial governments from the necessity of entering on work of that kind? I may say that two years ago I was compelled to cable to a booking agent of the old country because the Dominion regulations were so strictly enforced by the late government as to prevent a number of men accepted by an Ontario government agent from coming out here and assure them of employment. I was told that the booking agents had been threatened with the loss of the bonus which was paid to them if they continued to send immigrants to the provincial authorities and not to the local distributing agents. But notwithstanding that, we find from the return brought down, that many of the best counties, counties that are most in need of men, are not getting one single man through the medium of the machinery which has been in existence in Canada for many years past.

Mr. LALOR. Does the Ontario government or the federal government conduct any system of assisted immigration, or do immigrants coming out to Canada for employment have to pay their own fares?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The provincial government has been advancing $20 towards paying the fare of each farm labourer that came here.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax).

Mr. LALOR. I have had some little experience in regard to importation from the old country, not of farm labour, but of a different class of labour, and I must say that assisted immigration has been, so far as my experience is concerned, a failure. I have paid out a good deal of money for assisted immigration in connection with institutions with which I am interested, and I do not think I would be very far astray in saying that in nine cases out of ten these immigrants jumped their bonds, beat us out of the money, and proved very poor labour indeed. Therefore, I am not a very strong advocate of assisted immigration. I believe the proper class of immigrants to come to this country are men that will pay their own way. They will make better help and be more dependent on their exertions than immigrants who are assisted by benevolent or manufacturing institutions, or by the government, be it provincial or Dominion. My experience has been that assisted immigrants have been a complete and absolute failure.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to say a word in connection with the information my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) has been good enough to give. We can well understand that the views of a gentleman who has had such a large and varied experience as he has had in the past in connection with immigration are of great practical importance, not only to the minister, but also to the department which carries on immigration work. I have listened with much attention to the hon. gentleman's statement as to how matters have been working in the province of Ontario, and I am bound to think that perhaps these local agents, as they are called, have not been the greatest possible success so far as regards contributing anything to the immigration policy in that province. I find on glancing over the return that 2,000 of these immigrants were distributed by the Salvation Army, and I am glad to say—in so far as the west is concerned, at all events—that the officers of the Army have been very satisfactory, very energetic and very honest in their business dealings in connection with the immigration work which they undertook. In my judgment, it would not be desirable to discontinue in any form whatever the efforts which they are now making with respect to immigration work. I appreciate very much what the hon. member for South Oxford has been good enough to say in connection with immigration, a matter which is of such deep interest to himself personally, and I hope he will do me the honour of calling on me some time in the near future so that we may have an opportunity of discussing in more detailed form the views which he holds and gathering more detailed information on the subject with the idea of doing the best we can on immigration work in Ontario.

Mr. OLIVER. If the figures are available, would the minister state the number of persons excluded from Canada last year coming from Great Britain, from the United States, from the continent of Europe and from Asia?

Mr. ROGERS. Persons excluded last year: British, 247; United States, 21,466; European, 607; Asiatics, 60. Total, 22,580.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to have the number deported, if that can be given.

Mr. ROGERS. I have not that at hand, but will be glad to give it later.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly at some other time, when the minister's estimates are up, these figures can be given. I wish merely to get them on record. I ask also with regard to the Boyce-Sneed case in Winnipeg. These two parties come from Texas, and one of them was deported while the other was not. On what grounds was one of them allowed to remain in the country?

Mr. ROGERS. The immigration officer in Winnipeg, when I was there last Christmas, gave me the explanation verbally, and his statement, as I recollect it, was that the woman was deported on the ground that she had just come out of an asylum, and under the Act such people are subject to deportation. In the case of the man we had not the same right in the judgment of the officer, and, therefore, he did not order the deportation of the man.

Mr. OLIVER. Does not the minister think that both man and woman were subject to deportation regardless of the fact that one of them had lately been in a lunatic asylum?

Mr. ROGERS. I am free to say I am inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman. But Mr. Bruce Walker, the officer in charge, did not take that action. I do not know what reason influenced him. Perhaps he thought he was going to save the life of the man; perhaps he did.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to ask a number of questions with regard to Asiatic immigration, if convenient. How many Japanese arrived within the last calendar year?

Mr. ROGERS. There were 727 men, and 337 women.

Mr. OLIVER. How many Japanese are estimated to be in Canada now?

Mr. ROGERS. The figures are not available.

Mr. OLIVER. How many Chinese arrived in the past calendar year?

Mr. ROGERS. The number was, men 6,794; women, 79.

Mr. OLIVER. How many Chinese were exempt from the head tax?

Mr. ROGERS. I have not the number, but I have the class of people exempt.

The members of the diplomatic corps or other government representatives, their suites, their servants; consuls and consular agents; the children born in Canada of parents of Chinese origin who have left Canada for educational or other purposes on substantiating their identity to the satisfaction of the officer of the port or place where they seek to enter on their return; merchants, their wives and minor children; wives and minor children of clergymen, tourists, men of science, subject to such regulation as may from time to time be made by the government; duly certificated teachers.

Mr. OLIVER. In connection with the Japanese students, would the minister give a statement on a future occasion of the number of Japanese returned to Japan, and the same of the Chinese returned to China?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Can the minister give me an idea of the means now taken to check the arrival of Chinese, to see that they comply with the law with regard to the head tax.

Mr. ROGERS. They are examined at the ocean port under the Chinese Act.

Mr. OLIVER. Are there special officers to deal with the Chinese?

Mr. ROGERS. They are dealt with by the immigration officers.

Mr. OLIVER. Under special instructions under the Chinese Act?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. How many Hindus arrived during the past year?

Mr. ROGERS. There were 13 men and 1 woman.

Mr. OLIVER. I have seen in the papers a statement that two Hindu women had arrived and were held for deportation. Have they been deported?

Mr. ROGERS. They arrived and were held for deportation, and their time was up on the 6th of February, but the time was extended in order that we might ascertain whether they came by direct passage or otherwise. When we get that information we shall be able to decide what course to take.

Mr. OLIVER. Is there any special regulation to prevent Hindu women from coming in?

Mr. ROGERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. Hindu women can come in the same as Hindu men?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. So, if the women in this case are rejected, it is because they did not comply with the ordinary regulation?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Are there many Hindu women in Canada?

Mr. ROGERS. Very few—half-a-dozen or so.

Mr. OLIVER. How many Hindus are resident in Canada?

Mr. ROGERS. From 2,300 to 2,500.

Mr. OLIVER. How many is it supposed returned during the past year to India?

Mr. ROGERS. I have not that information.

Mr. OLIVER. Would it be in the department?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, we can supply it very readily.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the minister make any statement as to his conclusions in regard to the relaxing of the regulations for the admission of Hindu women, the wives of Hindus living in Canada?

Mr. ROGERS. We have had a special officer investigating those conditions and as far as we can judge from the information we have been able to obtain about 5,200 Hindus have come to Canada and to-day we have less than 2,500 left so that they are evidently finding out for themselves that either the climate or conditions are not suited to their wants. Some of their number were anxious to promote immigration and increase their numbers in Canada and to bring as they claimed their wives. But on investigations the report I get is that the class of Hindus we have in British Columbia are not a class who would possibly bring their wives to settle in that province. I do not of course mean that in every case; I am speaking in general terms. The police of Vancouver complain rather bitterly that some of the Hindus are rather a troublesome class and the health officers of Vancouver make a similar complaint that they are not a desirable class of settlers to have if it is possible to avoid doing so. In view of the condition and class of Hindu that we happen to have in Canada I do not think there is any chance of women coming out to take up their homes here and continue as residents in Canada. I am speaking only from the information handed me by the special officer detailed to ascertain this information. I think that 300 of these Hindus left Canada last year, but I hope to have the report of the special officer in a short time and to submit to the House.

Mr. OLIVER. The committee may assume that it is not the intention of the minister to relax the conditions in regard to Hindu women?

Mr. ROGERS. Not at present, no.

Mr. OLIVER. Can the minister explain the apparent fact that the number of Japanese who have arrived in the past year is in excess of the number provided for in the understanding with the Empire of Japan? I think the understanding is that about 400 labouring people may be admitted in a year. Last year 727 entered. Of course the difference may be made up of Japanese of other classes.

Mr. ROGERS. In 1911 we had 427 and in this year apparently 727.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a serious question. If the arrangement made is being adhered to by the government of Japan it is perfectly satisfactory but if not it is desirable that parliament should be advised of the fact. There is really a total of over a thousand.

Mr. ROGERS. I shall look into that.

Mr. OLIVER. Is there any change in the regulations regarding the admission of Chinese that would increase the exemptions from the head tax formerly in force?

Mr. ROGERS. No there has been no change.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the Chinese immigration increasing?

Mr. ROGERS. To some extent, but not very largely.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the appropriation of $75,000 which is not required for 1912-13?

Mr. ROGERS. That is for seed grain. We will have a supplementary for seed grain this year.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. ROGERS moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the order of business for to-morrow?

Mr. ROGERS. We will take up government Bills.

Mr. OLIVER. Which will have precedence?

Mr. ROGERS. We will take up probably the Tariff Commission Bill. I think that will be ready to go on to-morrow.

Mr. OLIVER. The Grain Bill is first on the list.

Mr. ROGERS. Probably the Grain Bill too. I expect my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be ready to go on with that.

Mr. OLIVER. And if not that, the Tariff Commission?

Mr. ROGERS. If not that, the Tariff Commission.

Mr. OLIVER. And the highways?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, and then we will go into the estimates if we get through with those.

Mr. OLIVER. The boundaries question will not go on to-morrow?

Mr. ROGERS. No, not till Thursday.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 28, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. SEXSMITH moved:

That the first report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization be referred to the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is adopted I would like to say that it seems to involve a different procedure from what we have been accustomed to in past years. Formerly the House ordered at once the printing of the report of the evidence taken before the committee on Agriculture and Colonization and members were able to get copies during the session and send them out into the counties. Now, if we have to await the action of the Printing Committee, which only sits now and again, I am afraid we will not receive these copies until after the House prorogues and the result will be that they will be sent home to us when we will be too busy, or when we will not have the facilities for distributing them, and they will practically be unused. I would certainly favour very much the old procedure in which the House adopts the reports and recommends the printing of them forthwith.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to remind my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) that we adopted a different rule this very session, only a few days ago. Everything now has to go to the committee on printing.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware of such a rule. If such a change has been made I do not think it is in the interest of this report.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to say in reference to this report that it was handed in before, that the committee have sat at least once or twice since and it might have been passed long ago. But, at any rate, the rule was adopted that no printing of this nature would be ordered unless it was submitted to the Printing Committee appointed for the purpose of considering such questions.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. SPEAKER. With reference to questions Nos. 2 and 3, I notice that they are not in proper form, and therefore will stand until they are brought within the rule.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand you to rule, Mr. Speaker, that question No. 2 is at variance with the rules of the House. The question is as follows:

Is the government aware that Frederick Passmore Gutelius, recently appointed to the National Transcontinental Commission, is not a British subject?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is an allegation of fact in the question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A statement of fact is allowed in so far as it is necessary for the purpose of the question. Rule 37 says that 'no argument or opinion is to be offered or any facts stated except so far as may be necessary to explain the same.' I think the facts stated in this question are only stated so far as is necessary to explain the question.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). I do not agree with the right hon. gentleman in the view he takes. The proper way to ask a question of that kind, according to my apprehension, is this: has Frederick Passmore Gutelius been appointed to the National Transcontinental Commission? If so, is the government aware that he is not a British subject?' As a matter of fact, he has not been appointed to the National Transcontinental Commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a sufficient answer, that he has not been.

Mr. BORDEN. We are not dealing with the answer, but with the propriety of the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement of fact is that he is not a British subject. The question should have been asked, is he a British subject?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, about your ruling on the question of Mr. Lamarche respecting the resolution of Mr. Sevigny, relating to the repeal of the law respecting the naval service of Canada? I understood you to rule that it was out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not rule that question out of order. I merely requested that it stand to be a little differently arranged. My attention was drawn to it hurriedly just before coming into the House, and I thought it well to let it stand until I could consult the member who is asking it, and have it put in proper form.

PROVINCE OF MANITOBA—EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES.

Mr. OLIVER:

1. What is the eastern boundary of the territory to be added to the province of Manitoba, in accordance with the resolution of which notice has been given by the Prime Minister?
2. What is the approximate area of the territory to be added to the province of Manitoba by the resolution?

6. Upon what basis are the deductions mentioned to be made and what are the details of those deductions?
7. Is any portion of the swamp and university lands mentioned in subsection (c) of the resolution to be returned to the Dominion? If so, what acreage is to be returned?

10. What is the basis of the calculation upon which the sum of $201,723.57 is to be paid to the province of Manitoba towards the construction of public buildings?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know whether it is present to the mind of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) but I notice that this refers to a Bill which is before the House. Perhaps the question was asked with the intention of bringing out this information at a time when the Bill may not have been before the House.

Mr. BORDEN. I think the information was sent to the hon. gentleman yesterday. It was also given in debate as far as I know. Perhaps the question might drop.

Mr. OLIVER. The information given in the debate may have covered the points embraced by the questions, but the questions were asked before the Bill was brought forward. Certain consecutive, and at the same time, pertinent questions are asked, and I think they are entitled to an answer.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not agree with my hon. friend that a question can be asked about a Bill which is to be founded upon a resolution on the order paper. At all events I do not agree with him upon the necessity of answering any such question before the Bill is introduced. However, it is not necessary to argue the question because although the information has been communicated to the House there is no reason why it should not be given again in answer to these questions. That, however, is entirely without prejudice to the position I have just taken and which I shall maintain in the future.

The question was answered as follows:

1. The eastern boundary of the province, including the added territory, is as follows: Beginning at a point on the international boundary dividing Canada from the United States, in the southwestern portion of the Lake of the Woods, where said international boundary turns due north; thence north along the said international boundary to a certain monument thereon at or near the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods; thence continuing due north along the western boundary of the province of Ontario, by virtue of 'The Canada (Ontario Boundary) Act, 1889,' chapter 28 of the statutes of 1889 of the United Kingdom (the said western boundary being the eastern boundary of the province of Manitoba) to the most northerly point of the said boundary common to the two provinces under the said Act; thence continuing due north along the same meridian to the intersection thereof with the centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line of the system of Dominion Land Surveys; thence northeasterly in a right line to the most eastern point of Island lake, as shown in approximate latitude 53° 30′ and longitude 93° 40′ on the railway map of the Dominion of Canada published, on the scale of thirty-five miles to one inch, in the year one thousand nine hundred and eight, by the authority of the Minister of the Interior; thence northeasterly in a right line to the point where the eighty-ninth meridian of west longitude intersects the southern shore of Hudson bay.

	Square Miles.
Approximate area of Manitoba as at present constituted (land and water)	73,732
Proposed addition:	Square Miles.
Land	166,100
Water	12,000
Land and water	178,100
Total approximate area of province if the proposed extension of boundaries is made	251,832

3.

(a) $381,584.19 from and after July 1, 1912.

(b) Arrearages for the four years, July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1912, payable as soon as any Act founded on the resolutions comes into effect:

Annual allowance in lieu of debt under Bill	$381,584 19
Annual allowance already received	178,947 06
Arrearage each year	$202,637 13
Arrearages for four years (July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1912)	$810,548 52

4. During the years preceding 1898, the Dominion had made advances from time to time to the province of various sums for various provincial purposes, the aggregate of these sums at that date being $475,816.15. A deduction of five per cent on this amount has been made from the allowance to the province in lieu of debt annually since 1898. Before that date a deduction of five per cent had always been made from the allowance in lieu of debt, according to the amount of advances by the Dominion to the province for provincial purposes then outstanding.

5 and 6. As to the future, an approximate annual deduction of $134,230 will be made from the annual payment of $562,500. This deduction is arrived at by taking five per cent upon the difference between the aggregate of the sums for which the swamp lands have been sold by the province, and the aggregate of the sums from time to time charged to the province by the government of Canada, in connection with the survey and transfer of these lands, and the sums expended by the province which may be fairly chargeable to the administration and sale of such swamp lands. The difference referred to will be determined by the Governor in Council after audit on behalf of the government.

A deduction of $15,000 per annum will also be made from the $562,500 on account of university lands. This sum of $15,000 is arrived at by taking five per cent of $300,000, or at the rate of two dollars per acre for the 150,000 acres granted as an endowment to the University of Manitoba under chapter 50 of the Acts of 1885.

7. Section 1 of chapter 50 of the Acts of 1885, under which swamp lands have been transferred to the province, will be repealed and all lands known as swamp lands transferred to the province under said section 1, and not sold by the province prior to the time at which the terms and conditions of the Act founded upon these resolutions shall have been agreed to by the Legislative Assembly of the province will be transferred to the government of Canada. Approximately 838,484.16 acres have been sold by the province out of the 2,005,439.96 acres of swamp lands conveyed to Manitoba under this section up to the end of 1909. No portion of the university lands will be returned to the Dominion under the resolutions.

8 and 9. As to the four years, July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1912, there will be payable to the province approximately an estimated arrearage for each of the four years of $342,000, made up as follows:

Allowance in lieu of lands		$562,500
Swamp lands deduction, average say	$105,500
University lands deduction	15,000
Heretofore received under section 3 of chapter 50 of the Acts of 1885	100,000	220,500
Estimated arrearage for each year		$342,000
Estimated arrearage for the four years, payable whenever any Act founded on these resolutions comes into effect		$1,368,000

There will be payable to the province of Manitoba yearly, after July 1, 1912, in respect of indemnity for want of public lands, until the population of the province exceeds 800,000, as follows:

Indemnity for want of public lands		562,500
Swamp lands deduction, approximately	$134,230
University lands deduction	15,000
		$413,270

10. The provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan respectively received, under 'The Alberta Act,' and 'The Saskatchewan Act,' to provide for the construction of public buildings, the sum of $468,750, the payment of which was spread over five years. The province of Manitoba has heretofore received from the Dominion, on account of the construction of the legislative buildings and Government House at Winnipeg, the sum of $267,026.43. The $201,723.57 referred to in the resolutions is the difference between the amounts already mentioned.

MARRIAGE LAW.

Question not in order.

The following question having been called:

Mr. BURNHAM.

1. Has the right hon. the leader of the opposition seen the article from the Toronto 'Star', as quoted below:—

THE MARRIAGE LAW.

Although Judge Charbonneau's judgment clears the air, it does not settle the question. It is not the judgment of a final tribunal, and there are other decisions which conflict with it. Even if a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada or the Judicial Committee be obtained it may not cover the whole ground.

The Dominion parliament ought to enact a law covering the full extent of its power. At present, although it is generally admitted that the Dominion Parliament has full power to declare who shall and who shall not be competent to marry, the federal statute legalizes a marriage with a deceased wife's sister. The law should set forth exactly what are the prohibitions to marriage. It should declare that no spiritual court has any power to annul a marriage or grant a divorce, and impose a penalty upon any person attempting to exercise that authority.

Mr. Holmested, in his book on the marriage law, says that all provincial courts which now grant divorce should be superseded by a Dominion court. At present the law is not uniform, and the administration is not uniform. In the maritime provinces and in British Columbia there are divorce courts; and there is a different law on the Atlantic and on the Pacific. In the other provinces there is no divorce court, and resort must be made to the Senate. It is easy to see how this diversity would facilitate the making of unfounded claims to authority in the province of Quebec.

A Dominion statute, covering the grounds thoroughly, would be a strong assertion of the civil power, which would tend to discourage usurpations and unfounded claims to authority. It is true that the provinces have power to deal with solemnization. But the question of solemnization may be confused with that of competence. Thus, in Quebec, the attempt was made to distinguish between the kind of solemnization necessary for Protestants and the kind necessary for Catholics.

It may also be found that provincial legislation is necessary. Mr. Holmested, for instance, says that a minister should be forbidden to exact, as a condition of solemnizing marriage, any condition as to the education of children. It may be necessary also to make further provisions for surrounding the solemnization of marriage with safeguards, and protecting innocent parties from deception. The more strongly and definitely the civil power asserts itself, the less danger will there be of clerical interference. The State has been neglecting its duty; the remedy lies in its doing its duty.

2. If so, does he approve of the sentiments contained in the same?

3. If not, wherein does he disapprove of them, speaking generally?

Mr. SPEAKER. In my opinion this question cannot be asked as at present worded in that it does not comply with the rules. Under the rule, it is the right of an hon. member to ask any question of a minister of the Crown or of a private member as to a Bill, or motion, or some order before the House in which that private member is interested, and beyond that I do not think the rule goes. I shall quote several decisions of Mr. Speaker Brand, which apply to questions of this kind, so that hon. members may have knowledge of the rule and be guided by it in puting questions on the order paper. Mr. Speaker Brand says:

A question which involves a matter of argument and statements of opinion is irregular.

This question asks for a statement of opinion from an hon. member and is, therefore, irregular. Mr Speaker Brand further says:

A question must not contain a statement of fact which is disputed nor a matter of opinion.

This question contains a statement of fact which may be disputed and it asks as well for an expression of opinion, all of which is irregular. Then, Mr. Speaker Brand says:

Expressions of opinion cannot take the form of a question.

This question asks for an expression of opinion and to that extent it is outside the rule. Mr Speaker Brand further says:

An argumentative question, not referring to anything arising out of debate in the House, or with intention to draw an argument from a comparison of two statements is out of order.

In my opinion this question to some extent violates that rule. Mr. Speaker Brand also says:

An allegation of fact which is disputed ought not to appear in a question.

This question deals with an allegation of fact which is, of course, disputed, and to that extent it would be irregular. For these reasons I will have to ask the question to stand until the hon. member puts it in proper form.

NAVAL SERVICE ACT.

Question out of order.

The following question on the order paper, having been called.

Mr. MONDOU.

1. Does the government intend to repeal the Naval Service Act?

2. Will the proposal for the repeal of this Act be followed immediately by the proposal of another Act containing the new policy of the government in the matter?

3. If so, will this new policy be submitted for the approval of the people before being put in force?

Mr. SPEAKER. In my judgment this question ought to be put in different form before it is properly permissible to be asked in the House.

HUDSON BAY PORTS.

Mr. AIKINS:

1. What steps have been taken during this year, or are being taken, to ascertain the practicability of Port Churchill or the mouth of the Nelson river as ocean ports, and as to which of the two will be the better for a terminus of the Hudson Bay railway?

2. What steps are being taken to provide for the better navigation of Hudson straits?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Department of the Naval Service.—In the season of 1910 a hydrographic survey was made of Port Churchill by the Department of the Naval Service. A chart of the harbour has been prepared, which is at present in the hands of the printer, and will shortly be published.

In the seasons of 1910 and 1911 hydrographic surveys were made at Port Nelson by the Department of the Naval Service. A chart of the harbour has been prepared, which is at present in the hands of the printer, and will shortly be ready for publication.

Department of Railways and Canals.—The department is sending engineers to make observations, and report, as to the conditions of the harbours of Port Nelson and Churchill, that may assist in reaching a conclusion as to the suitability of those points for the terminus of the Hudson Bay Railway.

2. Department of Railways and Canals.—This department has taken no steps in the matter.

MONTREAL HARBOUR EMPLOYEE, J. A. MASSE.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Is the honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries aware that J. A. Masse, employed by the Harbour Commission of Montreal, is said to have published over his signature in 'La Patrie' of February 22nd ultimo, a letter censuring the conduct of the Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, in the matter of patronage?

2. Is it the intention of the honourable minister to dismiss Mr. Masse?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has no knowledge of the letter in question.

Mr. MONDOU.

2. No. The power of dismissal is not vested in him.

MONTREAL HARBOUR OFFICIALS.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Who appointed the various officials employed by the Harbour Commission of Montreal?

2. Are said officials allowed to canvass members of parliament to obtain promotion?

3. Are any of the officials of the Harbour Commission of Montreal to be shortly superannuated?

4. Is it the intention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to promote Toussaint Bourassa, deputy harbour master of Montreal?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

2 and 3. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has no information on this subject.

4. No. Under section 18 of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners Act, 1899, the right of appointment is vested solely in the Harbour Commissioners.

BOUNDARIES OF QUEBEC.

Mr. BORDEN moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions:—

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committe of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution.—

Resolved, that it is expedient to extend the limits of the province of Ontario so that the boundaries thereof shall include, in addition to the present territory of the said province, the territory bounded and described as follows:—Commencing at the most northerly point of the westerly boundary of the province of Ontario as determined by the Canada (Ontario) Boundary Act, 1889, chapter 28 of the statutes of 1889 of the United Kingdom (the said westerly boundary being the easterly boundary of the province of Manitoba); thence continuing due north along the same meridian to the intersection thereof with the centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line of the system of Dominion Land Surveys; thence northeasterly in a right line to the eastern point of Island lake, as shown in approximate latitude 53° 30′ and longitude 93° 40′ on the railway map of the Dominion of Canada, published, on a scale of thirty-five miles to one inch, in the year one thousand nine hundred and eight, by the authority of the Minister of the Interior; thence northeasterly in a right line to the point where the eighty-ninth meridian of west longtitude intersects the southern shore of Hudson bay; thence easterly and southerly following the shore of the said bay to the point where the northerly boundary of the province of Ontario, as established under the said Act, intersects the shore of James bay; thence westward along the said boundary, as established by the said Act, to the place of commencement.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. PARDEE. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a return which was asked for on the 22nd of January, regarding certain harbour improvements in the town of Sarnia, and which has not yet been brought down.

Mr. BORDEN. I will direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the question of my hon. friend.

ST. JOHN VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. CARVELL. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a question which was answered on the 14th of February, regarding a proposed agreement between the Dominion government and the government of New Brunswick, and the Quebec & New Brunswick Railway Company. In his answer to that question the minister stated:

As soon as the necessary documents are prepared a copy of the same will be laid on the table of the House.

I would ask the hon. minister if an agreement has been entered into, and, if so, will the document be laid on the table of the House?

Mr. COCHRANE. It has not yet been entered into; it is under discussion.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 77), to encourage and assist the improvement of highways.—Mr. Cochrane.

On section 5—provisions of agreement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would like to ask my hon. friend if it is intended to have a general rule with regard to the maintenance of highways, applicable to all the provinces, or is each case to be dealt with by itself?

Mr. COCHRANE. There is nothing in the Bill about maintaining highways. It refers to the construction and improvement of highways.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This section says: 'That provision may be made for the future maintenace of such highways in good condition, according to a specified standard and to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council.' This legislation is altogether new, and everybody can foresee that in the application it must meet with several practical difficulties. It has been observed in the discussion of this Bill that the maintenance of the highways may be as costly as their original construction, if not more so. What I asked my hon. friend is, whether he intends to have a general rule, applicable to all highways or whether each case shall be left to itself. That is to say: Will the Dominion itself undertake to maintain any highways or will these be left to the local authorities? Or is it intended by my hon. friend to maintain some highways and leave others to the care of the province? In many provinces the municipality within which the highway is situated, is charged with the maintenance, and it would seem to me to be obvious that a general rule should be applied in the case of all highways, otherwise serious difficulties are liable to be encountered.

Mr. COCHRANE. There is a great deal in what the right hon. gentleman says, but I think that for the first few years at least the money should first be expended on the improvement of highways leaving the other matter to the counties in the province until later on at all events. The object of the Bill is to obtain good roads all over this Dominion as soon as we can possibly get them, and I think it would be a safe policy to leave their maintenance, for a time at any rate, to the provinces or to the counties in which they are situated.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the minister tell us what he proposes to do in a case where the right to open a new highway in a province is vested in the municipal council, and the provincial council as such has nothing to do with the matter? Apparently under this section the minister proposes to leave that as a matter of agreement to the provincial government, but that may not give them any right whatever in the road at all. In the province of Ontario, I think, the title to a highway is vested in the municipality. The right to open a new road, or to divert or close any existing road, or anything of that kind, must come from the municipality. How does the minister propose to reach the municipality in such a case?

Mr. COCHRANE. Through the provincial governments. I do not anticipate any trouble of that kind. I think the hon. gentleman is right about the municipality having control of the roads within its boundaries, and if it objected I do not know but that we would have to stop unless some amicable arrangement was made. I do not think there is any law to compel the municipality to give up control. However I do not anticipate any trouble, on the contrary I think the municipalities will welcome the proposal.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Obviously however there is some difficulty. At the present time in the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec the highways are all under the control of the municipal council. The municipal council would have no objection at all—

Mr. COCHRANE. In Ontario the county council has jurisdiction too I think.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The county council has jurisdiction over some roads, the local council has jurisdiction over others. I am prepared to believe there is no municipal council, whether it be a county council or a local council, which will have any objection to its roads being improved, but the law may be of such a character as to make the maintenance of highways more expensive than it is at the present time. I foresee some difficulties in regard to this matter—difficulties not unsolvable by any means, but certainly of a real character—and what I was anxious to know was, whether my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) intended to have a set of rules published and made known so that all municipalities might be aware of them, or whether if it is his intention to have each case determined by itself as it arises?

Mr. BORDEN. Conditions of course might vary, not only as between provinces but within a province—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that.

Mr. BORDEN—and I do not know whether it is possible in considering this matter to foresee how best to deal with all those varying conditions. It was in the mind of the members of the government, in framing this measure, that it would not be a wise policy to spend a great deal of money in bringing any particular road up to a high standard, unless some reasonable arrangement could be made for maintaining that standard. The right hon. gentleman says very truly that that might perhaps be a larger burden than the province or municipality might be willing to undertake. I appreciate that fact, and certainly it must be taken into consideration in carrying out the assistance which is proposed by this Bill. I do not know at the present moment that we can foresee what difficulties such considerations may absolutely present, but I do thoroughly realize that these difficulties will have to be met. I agree with the right hon. gentleman that such difficulties ought not to be insuperable; that where a road has been constructed, according to a certain standard, by the assistance of moneys contributed under this Bill, it would be practicable to provide some measure of assurance that that road would be maintained at the standard at which it had been constructed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What I had in mind was, that unless the minister in charge of this Bill came to the conclusion that we must have a general set of rules which ought to be applicable in all cases—not in any absolute manner, because it would not be possible—that he will be led into very serious difficulties. If such a set of rules were published, which every municipality would be aware of, and to the standard of which it would endeavour to attain, I think a great many difficulties would be obviated.

Mr. BORDEN. I think there is a great deal of force in what the right hon. gentle- has observed in that regard, and we shall certainly bear it in mind. As I understand him, he thinks the government should prescribe some general standard, for a particular district at least—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. And that standard must be lived up to before aid is to be given. I think there is a great deal to be said in favour of that idea.

Mr. G. H. BAKER (Brome). Before the clause passes I have a word or two to say in reference to the matter. It seems that on the second reading of this Bill the general principle of road aid was pretty well admitted, and for very apparent reasons. The roads form an important part of the large problem of transportation, to which the government has given great attention. We can understand that the broad question of aid to roads would be a principle to be generally admitted. Transportation is one of the principle factors in the nationalization of our country. It is an important factor in commerce and in production, for without good roads the development of our country would be absolutely impossible. Of what avail would be the great crops of our farm and the products of our mines if there was not proper transportation to carry these products to the markets of the world? The good roads question has received the attention of the several provinces. Within comparatively recent years the province of Quebec took the matter up, and has now a measure before it to deal with the matter. Last year the province of Quebec spent about $400,000 on the development of highways. Previously its policy took the form of aiding the different parishes and the different municipalities, by making to them certain grants and paying for a certain proportion of the work. That scheme went on for several years and some advantage has been derived from it. Now it seems they are departing from that mode of giving aid, and have set aside $10,000,000 by which they propose to pay interest and a sinking fund to aid municipalities. That is to say the municipalities will borrow money for the purpose of the construction of roads, and the provincial government will undertake to pay two per cent on the interest and two per cent on the sinking fund so that the debt will be eventually wiped off.

The amount of aid granted under this new system will not be materially more than the aid under the old system. Under the old system about $400,000 was granted, which is just the interest at 4 per cent on $10,000,000. But, for some reason or other the Quebec government felt that they would rather have the money in their pocket in order to deal with the matter in this new way. I would not presume to venture an opinion, but perhaps they feel that the way to their return to power in the next provincial elections would be improved, if they had the money in their pockets——

Mr. BUREAU. Is that the way you feel about this measure so far as the federal government is concerned?

Mr. BAKER. I have no particularly keen feeling about the measure, Mr. Chairman; I am only remarking that though the scheme in relation to Quebec is changed, yet the amount of aid is not really materially increased; and some of us are of the opinion that the fact that the general elections are about to come off in Quebec may have something to do with the change of system, and the desire of the government to have cash in their pockets before they discuss the question of highways. That may or may not be, but from experience in the past, some of us hold that opinion. Now, in Quebec the dealing is directly with the municipality; each parish, each township is dealt with directly by the government in constructing these good roads. In Ontario, the system is different. Before the Ontario government will aid in the development of roads, the county must take over the roads, lay out a large county system and then expend the money in the development of that system. In that way in Ontario they would have between forty and fifty county systems, which, you can readily understand, could be developed into a provincial system. But in the province of Quebec, dealing as they do with municipalities, parishes and townships, they would have about six hundred separate systems, about six hundred different modes of building roads, making it much more difficult to reconcile differences and unite all in a provincial system. Viewing this question from a Dominion point of view, my opinion is that we must not come in too close contact with the separate municipalities. We must keep at a view point from which we can see the system as a whole and consider its advantages to the Dominion as a whole. Therefore, it seems to me better to deal with the provinces than with the municipalities. Although I am interested in getting all possible aid for for the province of Quebec, yet I am in duty bound to say that with a system of dealing directly with the municipalities it will be difficult to form a workable provincial system. I would warn this government not to expend large amounts of money in any system with a province until they can feel sure that the province has a definite provincial system to carry out. The difficulties of dealing with the different municipalities are obvious. Some are wealthy; some are not so fortunate in their wealth; some feel that they can take up the burden of road building and bear their share; others do not. For that reason, if we dealt with the municipalities we should have a varied system under which a uniform good road movement would be impossible, and the work when complete could not form part of a great Dominion system. Therefore, I would urge upon the government that, when the time arrives, they should impress upon the different provinces, the necessity of adopting such a method as will lead to a provincial system of roads, so that there may be uniformity and not patch-work—a piece of mud road followed by a piece of gravel road, and then macadam—but uniformly good roads, each made to meet the needs of the traffic which is likely to go over it.

Far more importance than the question of money subsidy, in my opinion, is the question of organization, the question of getting ready to spend the money. With the proper understanding by the people of the provinces, with plans laid before them in such a way that they can understand them, you will find all the provinces ready and willing to do what they can and what is necessary in order to provide these good roads. You will find the people of this Dominion ready to grant almost unlimited money for the purpose of carrying out the work. But the great point to begin with is organization, providing a method by which the people's money will be expended to good advantage. By organization, I would mean the establishment of a bureau in one of the departments—preferably the department which now has this matter under considération,—with men qualified by education and experience to deal with the work, men who have had experience in road building and who would give the matter their attention. In that organization probably would be included a laboratory, under skilled experts who would give the provinces the benefit of their investigations into the nature of soils and of the materials to be used in the building of the roads. In that organization also I would include a system of education, by pamphlets and other literature, of the people of this country in the importance of this great road-building movement. For I believe that at the present time the real significance of this great movement is not understood by the rank and file of the electors of this country. When it is understood, I am sure, they will with one accord help that movement forward.

I have the honour to represent a rural constituency; and I feel that it is a most important factor in our life as a community to have this system of good roads go into operation. The farmer, above everybody else, will benefit by this improvement. It means a profit on his produce the moment it leaves the farm; it will mean a saving in transportation to the markets of the country on every pound of produce that he raises. For that reason it will benefit the farmers generally from a financial point of view. It will affect them in a larger sense in that it will give them attractive social advantages, and will therefore offset the lure to the cities which is now so strong. For instance, it will enable them to get better schools for their children, and help them to unite school districts in order to procure greater benefits for their children in the way of education; and will thus tend to draw families together in social intercourse and enjoyment. For that reason I am strongly of the opinion that the present legislation will promote the interest of the farmers in various ways.

Now as regards the mode of conducting the work. I think, in dealing with this matter, we should, as I have already said, deal with the provinces, and lay out large provincial systems as Ontario has already begun to do. It is not necessary to lay out a plan with the idea of carrying it into operation within one year or two years; but a definite plan should be laid out that will meet the needs not only of to-day but of to-morrow, and of a still more remote future. I would suggest laying out provincial plans, on a map as it were, in order to reconcile them the one with the other, with the object, eventually, of harmonizing them all into one Dominion plan. Of course this development must take place by degrees. I would lay out provincial plans with roads between market places and various important towns, which should first engage our attention, because they are the most essential to meet present needs. It might be that before all these provincial systems are fully developed the Dominion government would think it wise to join together the main provincial roads before the smaller arteries are completed. Some hon. gentlemen have advocated great trunk systems extending from one end of the Dominion to the other, but I am not at present in favour of that idea. But I am convinced that in the first place we must lay out provincial systems that can be linked together. Let me illustrate what I mean. We have heard hon. gentlemen opposite say that reciprocity is not dead, despite the lesson they were taught last September. I do not believe the people of Quebec are still of that opinion, but suppose that the provincial authorities were still of that opinion, and were to proceed to lay out roads north and south, with the expectation that when a Liberal government came into power it would carry out reciprocity. In that case the Dominion government would have to oppose the system of roads north and south, and would have to insist on the roads running east and west, to join the roads of the other provinces also running east and west to form one great Dominion system.

In the past the work of building roads has been left, as we all know, to the local efforts of the farming communities, and to inexperienced men. That system has done good service in the past, it is what we call the statute labour system. It prevails in Ontario, Quebec, and in some of the other provinces, and has worked fairly well to meet the needs of the farming communities up to the present time. But the country is developing too fast to make that system any longer sufficient. The importance of road building is too great to allow that method any longer to continue in the haphazard way it has gone on in the past. Under the statute labour system the work in each district was done under the direction of a wide-awake farmer, who was called the path master, and it was done at certain seasons of the year only by the collective efforts of the farmers of a road district. But the time has come when such primitive methods of road making will no longer meet the necessities of our agricultural communities. Conditions are changing rapidly, and we must prepare to meet them as they develop. The fact that during the past year Ontario has spent $553,000 on roads alone, that Quebec has spent $400,000 and the Dominion government is contemplating spending more, shows that we must look forward to spending large sums of money on this kind of improvement. The capital to be expended is so great that the government will need to employ scientific men to oversee the work, capable road engineers, who understand, for instance, that the road must be rounded in such a way as to shed water, and that the ditches must be kept open in order that the roads may drain.

In constructing the main portions of a provincial system it would seem to me essential to bear in mind that Canada has a great future before her and that what might be sufficient for the needs of to-day will not be sufficient for the needs of to-morrow. We must see to it, therefore, that the main arteries of these provincial systems are laid broad, and firm, and sound, so that they may be fitted to form part of the greater Dominion system when that comes about, and be sufficiently well made to deserve the name of national highways. We shall be shortsighted if we content ourselves with building these main arteries to satisfy only the provincial needs of to-day.

I would not expect the municipalites to bear all, or the great proportion of the expense of such main arteries which would be more substantial, more luxurious than their own needs would require, but I would arrange it in such a manner as that the Dominion government would bear the larger proportion of the cost of construction of such broader and better highways. There is one other factor in connection with these roads and that is the repairing of them. Our roads in Quebec have suffered materially from want of systematic repairing. Holes and ruts have been allowed to develop and wear for months without any attention in the way of repairing. If we get, as we are looking forward to have, broad, national highways, I submit that there should be some system by which repairing should be done continuously, by the constant overseeing of the highways, so that the moment a rut is discovered there will be some officer on the spot whose duty it will be to fill it up. In that manner you would keep the roads up to the highest possible degree of efficiency with the least possible expense. There can be no comparison between the cost of repairing, when the work is done from time to time as it is required, and the cost of repairing when the hole or break is allowed to wear for several months until the damage becomes serious and the repairs costly. In dealing with the provinces the Dominion would have reliable, substantial parties to the agreement who would be in every way responsible for any agreement they entered into, who would have under their jurisdiction the different municipalities which form the component parts of the province and who could regulate the matter in accordance with the requirements of the work to be carried out. That, in my opinion, is another reason for dealing directly with the provinces. You have responsible parties to the contract who have the right and power to enforce any regulations which the minister desires to carry out. There may be a question as to whether new roads should be constructed or old roads repaired. In many parts of the country in general it will be found more expedient and less costly to construct new roads than to repair old ones. In many instances old roads have been laid down by ordinary laymen without a full appreciation of the effect of grades, of the rise and fall of the land and without due regard to the topography of the country. In many cases it will be found expedient to build around grades and hills which will make the road very much easier and, therefore, much more useful to the public. Under the direction of a scientifically trained engineer, who understands the technical requirements of road planning and construction and who is familiar with the topography of the country, a road could be built in such a way that its usefulness to the public would be very materially increased. By forming these roads in the provinces, by joining them up into Dominion roads, by having a Dominion highway when the time comes for it, and I trust it will not be very many years, an extra bond will be created to bind the different parts of this country together. The present bond of the railways has worked wonders, but the great distances between the stops, travelled at a high rate of speed, lessens the advantages of this mode of intercommunication as compared with the advantages that will be derived from a national highway. There will be upon the national highway greater intercourse between the people of the different provinces, there will be slower locomotion and the life on the roads will tend to bring the citizens of the different provinces shoulder to shoulder in daily intercourse, and will do much in the way of enabling the citizens of the different provinces to understand each other's weaknesses, and each other's strength. In that way there will grow up, I believe, through the aid granted to these national highways, one great Dominion fellowship the effect of which will be greatly enhanced by the existence and influence of such a gigantic work as that which is contemplated by the measure now before the committee. For these reasons I have great pleasure in supporting the Bill.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—the minister may undertake construction and improvement of highways,

Mr. PROULX. I think the government is making a mistake in going into the construction of roads and not giving the money to the provinces. The provinces have now a system of road construction. Ontario went into the construction of roads some years ago. The government of Sir George Ross provided $1,000,000 to help the counties in building roads. About twenty counties received the provincial aid. What the people want is not trunk roads. The Ontario Good Roads Association met the other day in Toronto and that opinion was expressed by many of its members, amongst whom was the president, who said that the people wanted township and county roads, and not trunk roads. The province, I think, is in a better position to build township and county roads than trunk roads. If the government is going to undertake to build roads it is going to duplicate the work of the provinces, and, therefore, it is going to spend the money uselessly. I think the proposition of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), was right that the money should be given to the provinces according to population. The province of Québec also inaugurated a system of good roads a few years ago, and it is going into the work this year very extensively. I believe that the people would get much more benefit from the money spent in this way than if the work were left to the Dominion. We want roads leading to the villages and towns, especially the county towns, to the local markets of the farmers, since we cannot get the American market. I therefore, propose that section 6 be stricken out.

Mr. MACDONALD. Before this clause is considered I would like to say a word or two in order that I may understand really just what is the position of the government, in regard to this whole Bill. On the first reading of the Bill my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition asked the Minister of Railways, the following question:

I would ask the hon. gentleman to tell us if there is any basis of allotment among the provinces. The provincial subsidies are based on population; is this based on population?

The Minister of Railways and Canals said:

It is to be on the same basis as that on which subsidies are granted to the provinces, in other words, by population.

Mr. BLAIN. What page? ,

Mr. MACDONALD. That is read by the minister at page 3734 of 'Hansard.' When this Bill was introduced and discussed on the second reading it clearly went on the assumption that we were dealing with a proposition by the government to grant to each one of the provinces, under a system which would be on a parity with that which exists in regard to subsidies, a certain sum of money to be devoted to the improvement of roads.

Sections 3, 4 and 5 of the Bill contemplate the federal government making a grant to the provincial government in aid of the construction of roads, the presumption being that the expenditure would be made by the provincial government. I do not think there can be any objection to that method, but if that method be not pursued, then we will have a most curious jumbled up system of road expenditure in the country. Apparently, under the first five sections of the Bill, the idea is, that the Dominion government will, in agreement with the provincial government, utilize all the provincial and municipal machinery and have a unification of authority and a practical working out of a system under which the roads will get the benefit of the money without any unnecessary expenditure for supervision or inspection by the federal government. But section 6 is entirely out of touch with that theory. Under section 6 it apparently is contemplated to originate a new system of expenditure by the federal government in the construction of roads, entirely apart from the provincial and municipal arrangements. The Prime Minister argued the other day that at the end of section 6, there was a limitation, because the federal government had to obtain the authority of the provincial legislature and the consent of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, but that addendum does not mean anything at all, because it was not possible for the federal government to enact any law that would enable it to spend any money upon any provincial road in this country without the consent of the provincial government or the municipality that owned the roads. The officers of the federal government would be trespassers if they ventured to go on any road anywhere in Canada without the consent of the provincial government. The important feature of this is that under section 6, the minister is given power to take the whole amount allotted to any province to expend it as he pleases. We ought to be frankly told what the policy of the government on this question is, because if it be as I have indicated then I would move that the clause be stricken out. I submit that the provinces are the proper authorities to deal with the roads; they own them, they have for fifty years provided machinery for making and approving them.

Mr. COCHRANE. Did you not say that the townships owned the roads?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, according to your view, we would have to go back to the townships.

Mr. MACDONALD. Certainly, you would have to go to the municipalities. If the minister expends any money on roads in Nova Scotia he would have to go to the municipalities. Not only that, but we have the statute labour system there under which every person who lives along the highway is compelled to contribute in labour or money annually for its maintenance. The provinces have had years of experience of working in conjunction with the municipalities; they have provincial engineers who know all about the character of the soil and the difficulties to be met with in permanent road construction and drainage, all of which must be considered when you come to expend money on roads, and if the federal government is to spend the money, exercising only its own judgment, then we will be throwing away the experience of fifty years that the provinces and the municipalities have had in road construction. Where you have had wise expenditure on roads by municipalities and provinces, and in view of the growing public opinion and the growing interest in favour of good roads, it seems to me that the federal government should not directly enter into the arena and complicate the whole situation. I can conceive that the federal government could render valuable aid in this matter by the establishment of a good roads bureau such as the federal government has established in the United States, and by which uniformity of conditions could be brought about throughout the Dominion. But, if the federal government is going to undertake the work of constructing roads themselves, I believe they will throw away a tremendous lot of money on inspection and supervision before they get down to actual real expenditure of money on the roads themselves. The first five clauses of the Bill, with certain amendments which have been suggested, would meet with my approval, but section 6 is entirely in subversion of the principles laid down in the previous clauses.

Mr. BORDEN. It seems to me that my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) is unduly disturbed about this. The first part of the Bill provides for grants out of the federal treasury to the provinces, under certain safeguards as to expenditure, cost of construction and various other considerations which ought be taken into account, and my hon. friend is willing that these sections should become law, while to section 6 he strongly objects. Well, the sixth section provides that where the government of a province is willing, the federal government may undertake the work itself instead of handing the money over to the province, and that seems to be a very proper provision. The hon. member inquires whether there is to be a general policy of federal expenditure under this section in every province of Canada.

No one could give him that information in the first instance, because I am sure he would be the first to understand that the efficiency of the organization may vary greatly in different provinces. In one province you may have a thoroughly effective system, under which the construction and improvement and maintenance of highways are carried on. In such a province it is perfectly clear that the best course would be to hand the money over to the provincial government or under some arrangement with the provincial government, so that the existing official organization might be made use of in the expenditure of money. But it may happen that in some other province the organization is not very effective, and that the provincial government itself, under the authority of the provincial legislature, might desire the expenditure of the proposed aid in this way. If such a condition should arise, the money could only be expended in that way with the consent of the province. I see no reason why authority should not be given in this Bill to enable a proposal of that kind to be carried out. It was for that reason that this clause was inserted in the Bill. It is possible that it may be used only very occasionally, but, whether occasionally or otherwise, it seems to me to be one to which no valid objection can be made, and one which might be found very useful in carrying out the proposal of the government for the improvement of highways in the various provinces.

Mr. DEVLIN. What organization does the right hon. gentleman refer to when he says that the organization in some of the provinces may be effective?

Mr. BORDEN. The organization of the road service.

Mr. GORDON. I want to ask the Prime Minister a question in reference to this matter. This is one of the most important proposals ever made in the country, and the government deserve great credit for it. What I want to see is something that can be worked out in a practical way to bring the greatest good to the farmers who use the highways. The federal government might make a grant of a certain percentage, to be supplemented by the provincial government wherever the people in any community agree to raise a certain amount for the purpose, and then have the counties take over and maintain these roadways thereafter at their own expense. The community in which I am interested is ready at the present time to raise a certain amount of money; but how can it under this Act get the assistance it wants from the provincial and federal governments, and then get the money expended in a way that will secure permanent roadways by having uniform specifications and a method of construction that will ensure the judicious expending of the money? If the community wishes to get the assistance that is supposed to be within its reach through the medium of this Bill, how can that be worked out so that the parties will all come together and build these roadways?

Mr. BORDEN. I can say to my hon. friend, who has made a very practical suggestion, that in the course of preparing this Bill a good many suggestions more or less along the line which he has mentioned were brought to our attention. We had under consideration the placing in this Bill of some percentage which must be provided by the province and by the municipality if a certain other percentage were provided by the federal government; but it was impossible to get the necessary information as to conditions in all the provinces of Canada to justify us in fixing a hard and fast rule of that kind in this Bill. I would like to assure my hon. friend that the idea which he has just presented very clearly to the House is one that has been in the mind of the government, and I would like also to assure him that it would be perfectly possible under the provisions of this Bill to work out a scheme of that kind, and it is for that reason that the provisions of this Bill are couched in the general form in which they now appear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question at present before the House is not one connected with the general purpose of the Bill. That general purpose is to aid out of the federal treasury in the building of highways. Up to the present time this has been considered to be not only a provincial work but a municipal work. Section 6 is not at all a corollary of the previous sections. All the previous sections converge to one idea, that is, that the money should be voted by parliament and should be expended by the provinces or in concert with the provinces. But the section now under consideration defeats to a large extent the previous sections. It provides that the money, instead of being handed over to the provinces to be by them expended, may be expended by the Dominion government or by the Minister of Railways. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has I think very properly suggested the objection there is to investing the Minister of Railways with such a power as is described in that section, and the only answer which the Prime Minister has made is that if it is to be done at all, it must be done by the Governor in Council. So far so good. What I say is that there should not be even the power to make such a bargain with the local governments. This work is not intended and cannot be intended to come within the purview of the federal parliament. It cannot be contended that it was ever the intention of the British North America Act, in making a division of powers between the local legislatures and the Dominion parliament, that the Dominion government should become highway constructors. The fathers of Confederation laid down very clearly what should be the duties of the local legislatures and what should be the duties of the Dominion parliament. We are going to some extent out of our way, but still we are within our jurisdiction, when we provide that out of the federal treasury assistance shall be given to the provinces, not for general purposes, but for one specific object, that is to say, the making or improving of highways.

But, Sir, it is conceivable if the Railway Department is going to become a constructor of highways that it will be able to do the work to-day which is done by the local legislature? It is part, and a most important part, of the duties of the local legislatures to look after highways, and as has been stated by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), a moment ago, they have a special organization for that purpose. That money should be supplied to them, more than they have been given, for the purpose of making or improving highways, is accepted by everybody, but, Sir, power is given now to the Minister of Raiways to inaugurate a new system altogether, and himself to become the contractor or builder of these roads. That in my humble judgment, is reducing very much the usefulness of the Minister of Railways. At present the minister has only to do with administering the railways and canals of the country. If, in addition, to that, he is given the subsidiary task of looking after the highways of the country he must have a new staff, a new organization. What reason can there be why the organization which now exists in all the provinces should not be continued as it is at the present time? The policy proposed can be carried out with the consent of the provinces I know, but I repeat that it is not at all in accordance with the spirit of the constitution, and I can conceive of no reason why there will be more advantage in having this work performed by the Minister of Railways than by any of the provincial governments. The minister is not equipped for this work, it has never been the object of his department to do it, it is a new thing altogether, and when the machinery already exists in the provinces to carry out the work which is intended, I cannot see why new machinery should be organized, which, in the nature of things, cannot construct highways as efficiently as that construction must and can be done by the local authorities.

Mr. DEVLIN. Unfortunately when the first discussion in connection with this measure took place I was not in my seat. Like a good many hon. gentlemen opposite I was engaged in examining the highways—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And the byways.

Mr. DEVLIN—and the byways of the county of South Renfrew, and so I must apoligize if some of the remarks I may make this afternoon might have been delivered at an earlier stage. I want to say that I am entirely in favour of any aid which may be given to the highways of our country, but I think there should be some provision in the Bill by which the money grant to be made under it shall reach the municipalities and the portions of a county where the money is most needed. I asked the Prime Minister a moment ago what nature of organization he was referring to when he said that the money would be given either to the organization or to the Minister of Railways, to act in conjuction with the organization in this province. From my modest experience in matters of organization when dealing with the government of the day, the only organizations I know of are political organizations, and I hardly think that it would be in the interest of the country, much less in the interest of the rural municipalities, that the Minister of Railways should be let loose to deal with political organizations in handling the money of the country given for the purpose of aiding in the construction of roads. I would very modestly suggest to the government that they go about this matter of improving our highways in a more systematic manner. Speaking more particularly for the province of Quebec, I know of no particular organization such as that to which the Finance Minister refers. The custom there is for the legislature to vote a certain amount which is placed at the disposal of the Minister of Colonization. That minister visits the different parts of the province and studies the local needs personally and accepts advice from those who are most concerned in the matter of municipal roads, how best to expend the provincial funds in improving colonization and other roads. There is absolutely no such provision in this Bill. In the province of Quebec the money is handed over to some party who is directly interested—and preferably to the municipalities—somebody who is authorized by the municipalities to expend that money. If the government of the day were to establish a system by which they would hand first to the provinces a set sum of money with the understanding that the provinces would get into touch with the counties, and that that money should be expended for the purpose first of municipal roads, then county roads, and then provincial and interprovincial roads, all parts of the country would be benefited. But to say that the Minister of Railways shall go forth with a sum of money in his pockets and meet his friends in the different counties and have the right to expend that money is simply ridiculous. That money will not reach the portions of the country where it is most needed for the highways. On the other hand, if by this Bill the government of the day, through the Minister of Railways, is forced to expend that money right in the municipalities where it is needed, then I conceive that this Bill will work for the greater advantage of the country. I believe that no amount of money, properly expended, will be too great to aid in the construction of roads in this country; but I want to see the money reach the proper source, and under the Bill in its present form I cannot possibly see how that will occur. I know that the Minister of Railways, having power to expend this money right and left, will want to disburse it for the greater advantage of the country, but if he goes into the county of Wright, for instance, I hardly think he will go to any of those who may be friends of this political party and ask their advice. Rather will he go to the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and spend that money in those portions of the county which will benefit the party to whom that expenditure has been entrusted. I say without taking a partisan view at all of the subject——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DEVLIN. I am in earnest in that statement because I foresee that the moment this Bill becomes law it will be placed in operation by the present government. But in a few years' time, perhaps sooner, hon. gentlemen may have changed places, and we on this side of the House may take their seats and operate the Bill to the disadvantage of municipalities that may not be exactly in sympathy with the political views which they entertain. Now is the time, whilst the Bill is under consideration, to insert provisions which will prevent any operation of the measure against the advantage of the whole country, so that neither hon. gentlemen opposite, nor any other political party for the time being in power, will be able to use the people's money for any other purpose, good, bad or indifferent, than the improvement of the highways and the byways of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I think this clause, giving the minister power to go throughout the country with the people's money in his pocket, and to expend it where he will, without any rider attached to the clause, is a very dangerous power to give to any gentleman in this House or in the government. I do not wish to hamper the government in any way in improving the highways of this country, but I would like to see the people's money reach a proper object.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). Living close to the province of Ontario as the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) does, and having taken, as he has always taken, a lively interest in Ontario provincial politics, he has probably heard from hon. members on his own side, who have been in the local legislature, how their friends, when in power in Ontario, annually dispensed an amount of approximately half a million dollars on roads in that province. And he probably knows that his political friends got good political results from the plan which he says might be followed by this government in the expenditure of the moneys under this proposed new system. But I hope for the sake of the government, and for the reputation of the Dominion, that this government will not resort to the means resorted to by the hon. gentleman's friends in Ontario in road expenditure.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a question? Under the clause as it stands, if the political party in power in this country, wishes to do so, will they not be able to carry out the plan which he condemns?

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). I think my hon. friend is unduly afraid that the bad example set by his friends in Ontario—and it may be also in the province of Quebec—will be followed. And, knowing that this plan was used very successfully from a political point of view by his friends in Ontario, he thinks the same force may be arrayed against him under the present proposal. But the principle here is a larger one. It contemplates probably a very large expenditure. And as this whole plan rises above the realm of party politics, I think the people of the Dominion will feel secure in the belief that this fund will be administered rightly, and not merely for political purposes, as was unfortunately the case in the province of Ontario for so many years. Speaking for myself, and I think I voice the sentiments of hon. gentlemen on this side, I would be loath to believe that a Minister of Railways and Canals, representing the government of the day, would ever resort to mere pettifogging in the matter of this expenditure. I believe the whole scheme will be a broad, comprehensive one that will enure not only to the political advantage of the party now in power, but to the practical advantage of each province where the work may be undertaken.

Mr. DEVLIN. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe) I want it to be clearly understood that I was not referring in any way to the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, nor to any other hon. gentleman. But, to cite the example given by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is to prove conclusively that the case of which I have spoken might arise. The hon. gentleman tells me that it actually did arise in the province of Ontario. I have not known it to arise in the province of Quebec, and I hope it never will. But should such a case arise in the province of Quebec, it will only be an addition to the proof that is already conclusive that a gentleman occupying the position of the present Minister of Railways, a gentleman perhaps less scrupulous than he—he may be a Liberal; I am not speaking of Liberals or Conservatives, but of the power given to expend the money in a way beyond the control of parliament—may do what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe) accuses his opponents in Ontario of doing.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Devlin) answer me a question? Is there not every year in the estimates a very large aggregate amount voted for dredging? And is not the Minister of Public Works empowered to spend that grant as he will? I have not charged my memory with the amount of this vote for each province, but it is a very large sum, and it is not voted for any particular work.

Mr. DEVLIN But tenders must be called for.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). Not necessarily in every case. But the point is that the work is undertaken at the discretion of the minister. The expenditure of the money may be safeguarded afterwards by calling for tenders which is right; but the Minister of Public Works can allot the money to this work or that, as he chooses, without asking the authority of parliament for that distribution of the vote.

Mr. DEVLIN. If I may be allowed—and I do not wish to speak too often—that is a purely administrative matter. But here is a case where one gentleman will have the right to go about this broad Dominion expending money right and left wherever he likes without parliament being able to say a solitary word about it, and not always, perhaps, applying the money to an object to which this House would wish to have it applied.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). But is it not exactly the case of the Minister of Public Works under the general grant for dredging?

Mr. TURGEON. I desire to say only a few words in support of the arguments of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on the constitutional aspect of this clause. We have heard a great deal about the conservation of our wealth, the conservation of our resources and the conservation of our flag. I am in favour of conservation, and especially of the conservation of the flag. But, as a Canadian, I am in favour of the conservation of our constitution which is the best protection that our flag can have. A few years ago, the government of the day, increased the allowance made to the several provinces. This was done upon a plan which received the unanimous assent of the provinces themselves. For my part, I stated at the time my regret that the increase of subsidies to the provinces was not made larger, as I believed that the time would come when the provinces would have to come back to the Dominion government for still further additions to their subsidies in order to efficiently maintain the schools and roads for which especially these subsidies are granted. I agree that it is an advantage to have more money spent upon our highways with a view to improving this means of communication throughout the Dominion. But I believe, as the right hon. leader of the opposition has said, that we should give the money to the provinces according to their population, the basis adopted years ago, and allow the provinces to distribute that money. This plan would avoid the friction which is certain otherwise to arise. It was stated in this debate a few days ago, I believe by an hon. gentleman on this side representing a Nova Scotia constituency, that. as the government of the province of Nova Scotia is a liberal government, it was likely to be discriminated against in the distribution of this money. I come from a province where the provincial government is to-day Conservative. But, as every member on the other side of the House knows, I am rather indifferent to the influence of any provincial government in my own riding, regardless of the money that may be at their disposal.

I say that according to the constitution, when you give money for local and provincial purposes, you should give it to be distributed by the provincial legislatures themselves, who are the properly constituted authorities for that purpose. That is the only way in which we can avoid future friction between the Dominion and the provincial governments. I have no doubt that the present Minister of Railways will endeavour to do the best he can. I am in favour of the federal government assisting the provinces to build roads; but my objection to this clause is based altogether on the constitutional ground that the money should be spent by the provinces and not by the Dominion government, and that is why I shall oppose this clause.

Mr. CARVELL. I think the Minister of Railways would do well to take the advice tendered him this afternoon by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Baker). Of course, the member for Brome was not discussing section 6, he was discussing the general principle on which this money is to be spent. It is all very well for the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to defend the Minister of Railways, and say that he will not do what the local government in Ontario did prior to 1905. I want to tell my hon. friend from East Simcoe that the old government of Ontario were human, the present government of Ontario is human, and so is the present Minister of Railways, and so will all the gentlemen be who will compose the Dominion government in all time to come. Now it may be that the Liberal government in Ontario were able to do everything crooked and wrong and that the present government may be able to do everything right. But I want to say that there is a Conservative government in power down in New Brunswick to-day who can do everything which the old Liberal government did in the province of Ontario; and I think I can ask this House to believe that it is possible that the present Minister of Railways may be influenced by his friends, at least in the province of New Brunswick, to do the very things that the member for East Simcoe objected to. Why, Sir, there is no use in mincing matters; the most of us have had a hand in provincial politics, I have for one, the Minister of Railways has for another, and we all know how this road money has been bandied about and used as a matter of barter and sale from time immemorial. What I fear is that notwithstanding the good intentions of the Minister of Railways and the government as a whole, notwithstanding all their professions, the actual result will be, if this clause 6 becomes law, that they will be doing the very things which have been pointed out by the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) and others on this side of the House. If you want to know what the result will be, you have only to go back to South Renfrew during the last three weeks. There you find half-a-dozen government members of this House going the length and breadth of that riding, and telling the people: You should vote for the Conservative candidate because we are going to give you a great slice out of this road money.

Mr. TURRIFF. What did the minister say?

Mr. CARVELL. I am only speaking of the men who are behind the minister. This will be the result if you place the Minister of Railways and Canals in a position of an ordinary road builder, and the pressure behind him will be so great that, I do not care who he may be, he will not be able to resist it. Even if this Bill provided that he should build permanent roads, it would not be so bad; if he had even said that he was going to drain his roads, it would not be so bad; it would have been much better if he had said: we must build a macadamized road with steel bridges and culverts. But without one specification anywhere, without saying whether it is to be a permanent road or a mud road, every time an election is brought on, even a municipal election, you will find the changes will be rung, the party whip will be cracked and men will be told: 'If you don't vote for the county council we want you to vote for, you won't get any portion of this grant.' The member for Simcoe says: But we are bigger and broader than all that, this is a great national enterprise, we are going to run it on big broad lines. That is what we were told in New Brunswick before the elections of 1908; we were told that when the Conservative party got into power they were going to take the roads out of politics and hand them over entirely to the municipalities. They appointed in each parish a road board, composed of two municipal councillors, and a third man appointed by the government, and let me show you how it works out after three years of experience. In that province, we do not have local councils as they do in Ontario, we have municipal councils, consisting of two members from each parish, and all meet together in a county council. Wherever we have a Liberal and a Conservative on the road board, the government appoints a Conservative as a third man, and naturally he is the whole thing, he is president, secretary, treasurer, and the board is run on Conservative lines. Where we have two Liberal councillors, then invariably they are wholly ignored, and the road money is handled entirely by the man appointed by the government. I can tell him that there are dozens and dozens of road boards in the province of New Brunswick, that only meet once a year when they have to have an annual meeting, and they have squandered the money just as bad as it was squandered by these men that the member for East Simcoe was telling us about. Now they will be able to do these things in the future, just the same as they have done in the past, they will make these roads grants for purely political purposes. They will rake up the mud which was raked up the year before, and put it on top of the road, and they will pay the good money of the country for doing so, if they can get votes out of it. That is what they are doing in New Brunswick, and what they will continue to do under this Bill. Therefore, I think my hon. friends opposite must realize that this legislation is not in the spirit of the British North America Act. Does anybody suppose that when the British North America Act was framed a proviso was put in making the Minister of Railways a road builder with a right to go on any highway and by way in any province and build roads?

Mr. COCHRANE. This Bill does not give the minister that right.

Mr. CARVELL. Of course it does not say so, there is a saving clause which says that permission must be obtained from the legislature. But does the Minister of Railways suppose that any legislature in Canada will refuse to allow him to go into that province and spend money on its roads? He knows better than that, he is not sincere in making that statement. Under the wording of this Bill he can give a $5 grant to build a little culvert if he thinks he can get a vote out of it; he can spend money on any road wholly or in part, and do absolutely as he likes with it. He does not even have to call for tenders. The hon. member for Simcoe told us about the expenditure of a general grant for dredging; but there at least tenders were supposed to be called for. But here the Minister of Railways is not even supposed to call for tenders, and he proposes legislation in the most vicious form known in order to get political support. Wherever a by-election comes on, he can appropriate a portion of this road money, and put it into the hands of his political friends, and they will say to the electors: Now you vote right and you will get so much. They will go further than that and they will say: You will not get this grant until the election is over, and if the election does not go right, you will not get the money at all. I am only pointing out what they are doing in New Brunswick, and I am pointing out what they will do all over this country, if this legislation goes through. Therefore, I say it is a piece of vicious legislation, and ought not to be passed.

Mr. PROULX. Under the Ontario system the initiative was left with the counties. The county passed a by-law and adopted the system and the government had to contribute a portion of the cost of the road to the county. If this government gave the money to the provinces then the provinces could increase the sum to the counties and still leave the initiative with the counties. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Kent is a very good one. The people should be interested and the initiative should be left with the counties.

Mr. MACDONALD. I asked the right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Borden) in the few remarks I made a few minutes ago, to explain to the committee whether he understood the effect of clause 6, to mean that the federal government were to enter practically into the business of looking after the roads of the country. That, I submit, would be the effect of the section because it would give them the power to do so. The right hon. gentleman stated that this was intended to apply to a case where, for instance, a province did not have an adequate system in regard to the expenditure of its road money, under which circumstances the government could go in and expend the whole of the money that was appropriated for that province itself. That answer is not a satisfactory one because it is not to be supposed that any province would consider itself as not having an adequate system for spending road moneys and it would not therefore give to the federal government an opportunity of making that expenditure. The right hon. gentleman has given no reason why the government should enter into the arena of provincial powers and engage in the task of looking after the roads of the country. He was good enough to say to the hon. member for Kent, who made a very practical suggestion as to the utilization of the road money generally, which meant nothing more nor less than a suggestion that we had previously made, that the wisdom of the expenditure of road money depended on the unification of the authority so that the roads would get the benefit of the assistance that came from the different quarters. If that was the proposal that came before the government it can never be worked out under section 6. It would be impossible to work conjointly with the provinces or with the municipalities along the lines proposed here. Manifestly the Minister of Railways and Canals has not the equipment in his department to deal with roads at all. Before the minister could pass judgment upon the question as to whether the roads system of any province was good or not, or the engineering facilities and equipment of the province were such as that the country could expect a wise and prudent expenditure of the road money entrusted to him, the minister would need to gather around him a very large staff of specialists on that subject, not a staff which would be adequate for any particular province, but a staff greater and more numerous than that which they have in any province to-day. The minister would need to have such a staff before he could safely expend a dollar of the money that was put in his hands for better roads. Are we going to originate a system of that kind? The government disclaim any such idea. Still, they have power to do it at any time and, as my hon. friend from Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) has pointed out, evil results will follow from it. My right hon. friend said, with regard to the constitutional difficulties that were suggested the other day, that no province would object to the federal government giving them money, or spending money in the province, and that therefore there was no constitutional obstacle. Well, the fathers of confederation, fifty years ago, said that it was a wise and prudent thing for Canada that the provincial governments should look after the roads of the country. Having regard to that distribution of power they said: We will provide the provinces with funds from the central treasury in order that they may look after the roads of the country. They have been doing it for fifty years. This government say that they propose to continue that system by giving additional aid, yet they put in the Bill a power which will nullify the rest of it and endanger the constitutional system adopted fifty years ago. It certainly will dislocate the system under which municipalities all over the country, look after the repair of the roads because it will nullify the system of statute labour. I submit that this is not a wise measure and I would therefore move, seconded by Mr. Proulx, that the clause be struck out.

Amendment negatived (Yeas 48, nays 52.).

Mr. KNOWLES. I would ask whether the hon. member for Perth was in the chamber when the motion was read.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The vote has been declared. Put your question on the order paper.

Mr. KNOWLES. I want to know whether the hon. member for North Perth, or South Perth, was in the chamber when the question was put.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand this rule does not apply in committee.

Bill reported.

The salary of such senior clerk shall be from $1,200 to $1,600 per annum.

Mr. BORDEN. I understand from the Minister of Customs that this is practically the same legislation as was introduced by the late government last session, but on account of the sudden dissolution, no doubt, it was not proceeded with. I would suggest that the resolution be passed and the discussion, if any, take place on the second reading.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The policy involved in the proposition made requires some discussion, but we will take it on the second reading of the Bill.

Resolution concurred in and reported.

Mr. BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 116), to amend the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—MOOSEJAW ARMOURY.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (Moosejaw). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the government to the need of an armoury in the city of Moosejaw. I want, for the benefit of the Prime Minister, to read certain correspondence which has passed between the city of Moosejaw and the government, or rather the Minister of Militia and Defence. The following is a letter addressed to the Hon. Colonel Hughes by Mr. W. F. Heale, city clerk of Moosejaw:

Honourable Colonel Hughes,
Minister of Militia and Defence, Ottawa.

Sir,—I am instructed by the Moosejaw City Council to communicate with your department re the delay in bringing the armouries on the Fairford Street site. The following resolution was passed by the council at their meeting held on January 8th and I am instructed to forward it to you with the request that you kindly deal with the matter as early as possible.

That the council very much regret that no move has been made to construct the armouries so long promised, and that the Minister of Militia and Defence be requested to state as early as possible the intention of his department in this connection, as the council are desirous of using this very valuable site for other purposes unless used by the department without further delay.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. F. HEALE,
City Clerk.

A reply was made to that letter, and it is to that reply that I ask the very particular attention of the Prime Minister. This is it:

Minister's office,
Ottawa, February 1, 1912.
Re Drill Shed.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 10th, 1912, with the 'instructions' from your city council re 'the delay in building the armouries on the Fairford street site.'

I do not understand what your letter means. Nor can I comprehend what you mean by your use of the word 'delay.' Nor can I imagine what your reference is about the 'armouries so long promised.'

I have been Minister of Militia since October, and am responsible for no promise made before that time. Will you permit me to say that I think it would be much better taste on the part of your council, instead of passing a resolution of regret and fault-finding, to have quietly made a request and placed the facts before me.

Your fault-finding letter is the first intimation I have had officially that there is such a place as Moosejaw or that you want an armoury. While in the west, I met a number of splendid fellows from Moosejaw, officers and others, who spoke to me like gentlemen on this matter, and I promised them, and have carried out my promises, to recommend a sum of money, not for an armoury, which is of no use for a large and growing place like Moosejaw, but for a drill hall and armouries.

I also suggested the formation of a city corps for Moosejaw.

Might I suggest that as your council seems to go about it in a blundering sort of fashion that they should appoint some of those gentlemen whom I had the privilege of meeting in the west to carry on the negotiations in the matter? They seemed to know their business and were very judicious.

If it were left to them, I think Moosejaw would soon have a splendid drill hall and armouries attached and would also have a city regiment.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) SAM HUGHES.
City Clerk,
W.F. Heale, Esq.,
Moosejaw.

I wish to say that the property offered by the city of Moosejaw had been accepted by the government, but there was a slight cloud on the title, the circumstances being that the prior holders of the title had passed it over to the city as part of a park, and in the deed to the city it is stated that it must not be used for commercial purposes, and must not be alienated. The city of Moosejaw naturally can only give the same kind of title to the government that they themselves have, and I understand that between the Department of Public Works, the Department of Militia and the Department of Justice who are mixed up in it, there is delay because of this. In reference to the answer given to the city of Moosejaw by the Minister of Militia, without saying anything offensive to the Minister of Militia, I deem the letter he wrote to be unworthy of the high and dignified position that he for the moment holds.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Knowles), is scarcely within the amenities of debate when he says that a certain tion is unworthy of any member of the House.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, it is quite worthy of the Minister of Militia. I submit to the government and especially to the right hon. the Prime Minister, that I would be very pleased if any technical difficulties with regard to the transfer of this site to the government could be overcome as soon as possible, so that the city may not use this property for any other purpose. I would be personally very glad to see an armoury erected on this property, and I trust that a good substantial armoury and drill hall will be erected there such as the minister suggests.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. member did not do me the honour of sending me word that he was going to bring this matter up to-day, or I would have been in my place in the House when he began his remarks. I may inform him that the negotiations in reference to the matter to which he has referred have been handed over to the Moosejaw Board of Trade, the city council being too hidebound a Grit institution to treat any one with proper courtesy. This action has had this effect: The city council of Moosejaw, having been relieved of the necessity of sending letters of a blustering and threatening description, the matter is working out very nicely. It appears that the property which Moosejaw is offering does not belong to Moosejaw, but was handed over to that municipality by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for public purposes, and it cannot be sold or used for any other purpose.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think the minister is in error. They never said they would alienate the property. They would use it for other purposes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The city may use it for public purposes, but it cannot sell it to any one. These gentlemen talk as if they owned the property and were giving us a $40,000 site. However, the matter is proceeding very nicely now. The Moosejaw council has come to its senses, and the board of trade is dealing with the matter.

GRAIN CONGESTION IN THE WEST.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the following resolution, of which I gave notice some time ago:

That all the words after 'that' in the main motion be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:

That the House heard with satisfaction from the Minister of Trade and Commerce that as a result of a conference recently held by him and at his request with representatives of the three railway systems operating in western Canada, these railways have 'lowered their rate, making the rate to Duluth and Minneapolis the same as to Fort William and Port Arthur.'

And that as a further result of the conference mentioned, 'application has been made to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States for leave to file grain rates from the Northwest down to Minneapolis and Duluth, and to ease the pressure in the congested districts by taking the grain away by more western routes down towards the south.'

The House is informed by the public press that the reduced rates as mentioned have been granted by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern railways on wheat and oats for export only.

As the reduction of rates so announced can only affect the situation to a limited degree, the House would urge upon the government the advisability of securing further consideration of the matter by the Railway Companies with a view to having the reduced rates apply to wheat and oats for grinding in bond and for consumption in the United States as well as for export;

The House would further urge that such means as may be practicable be taken by the government to have the through rates on barley and flax to Duluth and Minneapolis which became effective on January 23 reduced to the Fort William rate.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon. friend will allow me for a moment, this motion was given notice of, I think, some two weeks ago. As a great many things have happened, and some of them began to happen about that time, and as nothing has since been said about it by my hon. friend, I had supposed that it had passed out of the region of discussion, and was not aware that my hon. friend intended to bring it up. Now, this will bring on a discussion on a very wide subject, and I imagine that my hon. friend wants to have the matter discussed with all the information possible. If it is agreeable to him to postpone his motion to another day, it would be much more to the interest of a general discussion on the whole matter. I suggest this to him; it is for himself to make his own decision.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection, if my hon. friend will fix a day this week for the discussion; but I have been anxious to press this discussion forward ever since I gave notice of the motion, and this is the first occasion on which it seemed convenient to bring it up.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Does my hon. friend intend to press the matter to a vote?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is the intention.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If not, Friday might be agreeable to both of us. If the hon. gentleman intends to press it to a vote, he might let it go over to Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Mr. OLIVER. I certainly could not move such an important motion without bringing it to a vote, and either Thursday or Friday would suit my purpose very well; but I would not like to postpone the discussion any longer than is absolutely necessary except on the responsibility of the government. The conditions which the resolution takes notice of are urgent, and, as my hon. friend has said, many things are happening and I would wish to have this matter considered before the condition to which it relates has passed out of existence by effluxion of time. I have been ready to bring the motion forward on every day since I gave notice of it, but this is the first occasion on which it seemed convenient to bring forward a motion of such importance.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Well, my hon. friend can go on.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to call attention as strongly as I can to the condition of affairs which exists today in the western provinces, and which is generally spoken of as the grain blockade. I do not suppose it will be necessary for me to spend any serious length of time in demonstrating that there is such a blockade. About the time this notice was given the leading newspaper of the west took measures to inquire into the conditions as they then existed. That paper wired on January 29 to 150 points. At the time notice was given of this resolution it had heard from 49 points, and at only nine of them was it reported that there was no blockade.

I will not trouble the House with any long list of the facts as shown by the newspaper mentioned, the 'Free Press.' They are, I have no doubt, within the knowledge of many members of the House. But here is one instance, the very first one I took down. The wire is from Quill Lake, Saskatchewan. There were 52 orders or cars. A car was ordered on November 9, which was placed on January 23, and 50 per cent of the grain was still in the farmers' hands. At Foam Lake, Saskatchewan, there were 60 orders on the order book, the elevators were full, there were 100,000 bushels in the farmers' hands, and 50,000 bushels threshed. Other members of the House will, no doubt, give the committee further information as to the existence of the blockade. But it may be of interest to give some facts as to why there is a blockade, and why that blockade should be of such an extraordinary character and at such an extraordinary time of the year as this information establishes it to be. A blockade is the condition in which grain is offered for sale beyond the quantity that can be, or is being, transported to market. In every year there is shortly after the beginning of threshing, and before the close of navigation, in the nature of things, if the markets are good, necessarily a rush of grain, and a car shortage, or a blockade, or a partial blockade, during that period of the year is something that has occurred frequently, and may be looked for to occur in the future on many occasions. Last year it did not occur. The year before it did occur, and so on from year to year, as the occasion was, the blockade existed or did not exist. But this year the conditions were extraordinary. In the first place the acreage under crop was much larger than it ever was before. In the next place the crop, so far as its growth was concerned, was probably generally heavier than it ever was before in the history of the country. Over and above that, the season was unfavourable for harvesting, and the harvesting did not begin as early as usual. When the work of transporting the crop to the lake front began, it began later than usual, and the result has been that from the time transportation of the crop to the lake front began until the present time, there has been a condition of grain blockade. Under ordinary circumstances the car shortage or blockade that would exist between the beginning of the transportation of the crop and the close of navigation, would be to some extent practically eliminated after the close of navigation. The rush to get the grain forward would stop at that period, and the gradual movement of grain out of the terminal elevators by the all-rail route to the seaboard, and the gradual coming forward of the grain, would militate against a condition of car shortage or grain blockade shortly after the close of navigation.

This season the condition is that instead of the close of navigation marking a finish of the grain blockade, it was after the close of navigation that the grain blockade became more acute than before, and that the damage to the business interests of the country resulted more strongly than before. The conditions have been aggravated by the fact that, owing to the bad weather of last fall, it is practically impossible to get all the grain threshed, and a great deal of the grain that has been threshed was in a damp condition at that time, and having been placed in storage, in the farmers' granary or in a country elevator, has become liable to destruction, because of being heated as the result of its being damp when it was stored. So that we are in the face of a condition which not only operates against the price which the farmer received for his grain, but that tends to the actual destruction of a considerable part of the total crop of the northwest by reason of the blockade.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Have you any definite, or fairly definite, information as to what percentage of the grain has not been threshed as yet, and what percentage is in a damp condition and likely to be destroyed?

Mr. OLIVER. The most definite information that I can give is the representation of the manager of the Ogilvie Milling Company, who reports that there are 30,000,000 bushels of damaged wheat in the west unfit for milling, and about that amount was unthreshed in the middle of January. This is the condition as it exists at the present time. With a larger crop than we ever had before, and with that crop in danger of being destroyed to a considerable extent, because it is not going forward, we have a more extraordinary condition of grain blockade than ever before existed in the northwest. Just as to the magnitude of the damage, I will not say the disaster, to the interests of the country let me give the figures as to the amount of grain that has to be handled. I take the estimate of Sir Byron Walker as placed before the directors of the Bank of Commerce at their annual meeting. He estimates the total yield as 400,000,000 bushels of grain, of which 175,000,000 bushels are wheat, 180,000,000 oats, 35,000,000 barley, and 6,000,000 flax, and he values this crop at $200,000,000. He also states that the crop of wheat was expected at one time to be 200,000,000 or 225,000,000 of bushels, so that the condition is that the farmer of the west who—by reason of the area that he had sown, by reason of the expenditure that he had incurred, by reason of the conditions that prevailed in the early part of the growing season—had reason to expect 200,000,000 or 225,000,000 bushels of wheat, has only, as a matter of fact, secured 175,000,000 bushels. That is to say by reason of the unfavourable season the farmer is short, according to Sir Byron Walker, between 25,000,000 and 50,000,000 bushels of his reasonable expectation.

And let it be remembered that these expectations are not pencil and paper estimates, but are based upon the expenditure that the farmer has incurred. He has ploughed his land, he has sown his seed, he has maintained his help and, having incurred all these expenses, he might reasonably have expected results aggregating 200,000,000 or 225,000,000 bushels. But, notwithstanding these expenditures on his part, he has secured only 175,000,000 bushels. That is, he is between 25,000,000 and 50,000,000 bushels short of his reasonable expectations of the result of his investment, the shortage being due to the unfavourable conditions of the harvest season.

Mr. BLAIN. Does that include the three western provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. I assume that it does. I am merely giving the House Sir Byron Walker's statement, which, I understand, covers the three western provinces. And I know of no place where I could get a more complete, comprehensive and, I presume, accurate statement.

Mr. BRODER. That result might follow great drought as well as too much rain.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly. I am merely giving the facts Sir Byron Walker has stated. My hon. friend need not be alarmed; these facts have only an indirect bearing on the argument I wish to make. Of the movement of this crop, Mr. Thompson, of the Ogilvie Mills, estimates that there were 100,000,000 bushels of wheat marketed by January 11. Estimating that 25,000,000 bushels would be needed for seed and bread, that would mean 50,000,000 bushels of wheat still to be marketed on January 10. Then, as I have already said in answer to the hon. member's inquiry, the same authority estimates that there was from 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 bushels of wheat still in the farmers' hands at that time much of it unthreshed, most of it damp, and all of it unfit for milling. As to the grain going forward, there was inspected at Winnipeg up to January 10, of wheat 67,000,000 bushels, of oats 17,500,000 bushels, of barley 250,000 bushels, of flax 250,000 bushels. So that, of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat marketed up to January 10, only 67,000,000 bushels had reached Winnipeg up to that time.

Deliveries began about September 10. Owing to unfavourable conditions of weather, the deliveries were not very strong at first. About November 10 the blockade became acute and continued until the close of navigation. It was expected that at the close of navigation the blockade would be to some extent relieved. But, contrary to common expectations and the experience of previous seasons, the blockade has been more acute, not less acute, since the close of navigation. At the close of navigation there was 6,000,000 bushels of wheat in store at the terminal elevators. At last account there was 18,000,000 bushels in store at terminal elevators at Fort William, and these elevators were full. The total capacity of the elevators is, of course, much greater than the figure I have given; but, owing to the great number of grades this season and to the damaged crop, the actual capacity of the elevators is reduced to this extent. So, we have this condition: A blockade beginning on September 10th which continued until the close of navigation, and which after the close of navigation became more acute, and continued to January 10th, the date I have mentioned. Of the 100,000,000 bushels of wheat marketed —according to Mr. Thompson's statement —up to January 10th, at least half must have been marketed under blockade conditions. That is the season began on September 10th. We will assume that there was no blockade until November 10th. Two months marketing, free of blockade up to November 10th, and from that date to January 10th two months of actual blockade. Therefore, it is fair to assume that if we had 50,000,000 bushels marketed free of blockade, we must have had the other 50,000,000 bushels marketed during the blockade. So, whatever loss would occur from blockade conditions would have to be suffered on not less than 50,000,000 bushels.

When I gave notice of this motion, the terminal elevators were full of grain, and no matter what the world's market price might be, the grain in the farmer's hands must remain in his hands. It could not be stored in country elevators, for the country elevators were full; the country elevators could not empty into the terminal elevators because the terminal elevators were full; and apparently it was not possible to transport the grain from the terminal elevator to the eastern seaboard at a rate that would give any substantial relief to the condition of blockade existing. I have here a despatch appearing in the Winnipeg 'Free Press' of January 25, which states the condition in regard to the elevators at Fort William:

There were in the Fort William books last night 3,577 cars on order not loaded——

That is, cars ordered for eastern shipment.

—representing over 4,326,500 bushels of grain of all kinds; and for over three weeks there has never been less than 3,000 cars on order, but not loaded. The daily storage on 3,577 cars is $1,300 and the interest on money thus tied up is over $600 per day, making a direct daily loss to the shippers of $12,000 or $14,000 per week, making no allowance whatever for the heavy losses sustained because shippers cannot fill contract while these cars remain undelivered at destination. Railways promised to load 200 cars a day. Evidence that they have requested terminal elevators not to load grain. Situation worse now than two weeks ago. Fort William key of situation. Without relief at terminals situation in interior becomes increasingly acute. Must move 300 cars a day from terminals.

At six oclock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. When the House rose at six o'clock I was reading a dispatch to the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' dated January 25, which showed that on that date a condition of blockade existed in the terminals at Fort William. How long previous that condition had existed we are not able to say. But I assume, for the purposes of my calculation, that it began not later than January 10. At that time there was about 18 million bushels of all kinds of grain in storage in the terminals, and I find by the latest report of the Department of Trade and Commerce that on the week ending February 2 the amount in store at the terminal elevators was still approximately 18 million bushels, showing that whatever the condition was at the time mentioned, it still continued up to February 5. What I desire to bring to the attention of the House is the statement made by the 'Free Press' that the railway company was not able to forward the grain from Fort William at the rate of 200 cars a day, and allowing a period from January 10 to April 1 for the relief of the blockade conditions in time to be of any use in the case of damp grain, we have eleven and a half weeks. Moving that grain at the rate at which this despatch says it can be moved, something less than 200 cars a day, the railway company would be able to move 12 million bushels during that time, and they would relieve the terminal storage to that extent. If they were also able then to bring 12 million bushels forward from the wheat fields to the terminals they would relieve the conditions in the wheat fields to that extent. But on the statement of Mr. Thompson, of the Ogilvie Milling Company, that on January 10 there were 30 million bushels still in the wheat fields, that is to say, in the farmer's hands, either in the stook or threshed, there would still be from 13 to 18 million bushels left in the fields or on the farmer's hands on the 1st of April, after which date the grain that was damp and liable to heat would practically be useless for commercial purposes. Unless damp grain is kept in condition by cold weather or reaches a drying plant before the 1st of April, it has, in all human probability, become destroyed, so far as commercial value is concerned. Therefore, on the statement which I have before me, and I am sure it is a very moderate statement, the country is face to face with a probable loss of some 13 to 18 million bushels of wheat by reason of this blockade.

I have said that the loss to the farmer on the expectation of his crop was estimated at about 25 million bushels. At 60 cents a bushel the loss to the farmer will be $15,000,000. But, unfortunately, besides the shortage of the crop is the loss to the farmer by reason of depreciated quality, owing to the unfavourable season of late growth and harvest. What the depreciation actually is must be a matter of estimate. But we can form a fair estimate by taking the quality of grain in store at the terminals at a certain date. I find also in a statement of the Department of Trade and Commerce that there was in store in the terminals in January, twelve and a half million bushels of wheat. Of this, four and a half million bushels graded No. 3 and upwards; 3 and a quarter millions graded 4, 5 and 6; 4 and three-quarter millions were below No. 6. That is to say, speaking roughly, one-third of the total was good milling wheat, one-third was poor milling wheat, and one-third was unfit for milling. As to the depreciation in price because of the depreciation in quality, I quote Winnipeg prices of January 25. No. 1 Northern was worth 96¼ cts.; No. 3 Northern, 88 cts.; No. 5, 73 cts.; Feed, 57 cts.; Feed tough, 51 cts; a spread of 8 cents between 1 and 3 Northern, of 15 cents between 3 and 5 Northern, of 16 cents between 5 Northern and Feed, and a spread of 6 cents between Feed tough and Feed, or a gross spread between Feed tough and 1 Northern of 45½ cents.

I think it would be fair on this showing to say that the total crop actually harvested is depreciated in value by reason of depreciated quality not less than 14 cents a bushel. A loss of 14 cents a bushel on a crop of 150 million bushels for sale is $20,000,000. Therefore, on the crop of the past year, from natural causes, that is, from shortage of crop and from inferiority of quality, the farmer may be presumed to have lost $15,000,000 by reason of the shortage, and $20,000,000 by reason of depreciated quality, a total loss to the farmer from natural or unavoidable causes upon the crop of the past season of some $35,000,000, as compared with his reasonable expectations. This sum is about one-third of his total expectations for his whole crop—wheat at 60 cents a bushel would have been about $105,000,000. That is, he goes into the season of marketing with one-third of his reasonable expectations cut off by natural causes. I dwell on this point for the purpose of showing how important it was to the farmer and to the country at large when he had suffered so greatly from unavoidable causes, that every possible means should have been taken to prevent any further loss from causes which could by any means have been avoided.

The loss which results to the farmer from the condition of grain blockade or car shortage may be thus described: When the operator of the country elevator becomes impressed with the idea that he cannot get the grain that he buys on the country market forwarded promptly to the lake front in the ordinary course of business, he must reckon on the consequence of delay and as the season for the close of navigation approaches he must take into account that the delay in the forwarding of the grain that he buys is going to throw him into winter storage at the terminals. It will be plain, Mr. Speaker, that if by reason of the delay of a week in the forwarding of a car of grain, the country dealer is thereby saddled with the cost of from five to seven months storage upon that grain, he must make allowance accordingly in the price that he pays. Just as soon as there is a suspicion of a car shortage or blockade condition, then and there that condition is reflected in the price that the operator of the country elevator is able to pay to the farmer. The operator must allow in such a case for interest, insurance, storage and risk of the market. He must, in fact, allow as the minimum, from six to eight cents a bushel. Remember that the first effect of a car shortage or blockade condition to the farmer is a cut of from six to eight cents a bushel in the price that he receives as compared with the then market price. Usually, at the close of navigation, conditions settle. The grain goes into storage, it is not forwarded as rapidly, some relief is given by transportation eastward, and, generally speaking, the condition of blockade ceases at or soon after the close of navigation. But, in the case of this season, instead of the expectation of relief being realised, the condition of blockade was made permanent and was accentuated. While there was a reasonable reflex on the farmer in his price because of the blockade condition existing before December 10, after December 10 a panic condition ensued and panic prices became the rule to the farmer. Instead of the country operator paying the farmer the winter price subject to the reduction that I have made for storage, insurance and other charges, being faced with the possibility that he could not get the grain forwarded at all, or did not know when he could get it forwarded panic prices resulted to the farmer, panic conditions prevailed and have prevailed ever since.

I have already said that unless the damaged grain gets to the hospital elevator by the first of April it is, in all probability, destroyed. This fact, of course, accentuates the panic condition that prevails this season. Of course, all figures must be estimates, actual accuracy cannot be demonstrated, but the figures which I propose to give the committee are unquestionably within the mark. On the 50,000,000 bushels of grain marketed between November 10 and January 10—that is marketed between the first blockade condition and January 10 when the blockade condition was demonstrated to be impossible of relief—estimating the loss to the farmers at six cents a bushel, the loss to the farmers would be $3,000,000. But, on the 50,000,000 bushels remaining to be marketed after January 10, and, which, according to the statement of Mr. Thompson of the Ogilvie Milling Company, must be marketed under panic conditions, I think it is a very moderate estimate to say that the loss would be ten cents a bushel to the farmers, or a loss of $5,000,000 from January 10 to the end of the season and of $3,000,000 from the beginning of the blockade on November 10 to January 10.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that 50,000,000 bushels was the amount of wheat in the farmers' hands on January 10?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I presume that the hon. gentleman must know that it has never been the custom of the western farmers to ship all their grain out, but that a great deal of the grain is kept over until the following summer and that it would not have been shipped if there had been ever so many cars.

Mr. OLIVER. I have already said to the committee that the fact of so much of the grain being damp, makes it necessary that the grain shall be got forward to the drying or hospital elevators, or it will go out of condition. It will be seriously damaged or altogether destroyed. The conditions this season differ from ordinary conditions.

Mr. STAPLES. What percentage of this 50,000,000 bushels was damaged?

Mr. OLIVER. I have the statement of Mr. Thompson, of the Ogilvie Milling Company, and also of a Mr. Black, I think—at any rate of two gentlemen connected with the Ogilvie Milling Company—both estimating that 30,000,000 bushels will be remaining in the farmers' hands or damaged by reason of being damp, a large part of it unthreshed at that time, and a considerable part of it is unthreshed yet. My hon. friends, who are acquainted with farming conditions, know that if grain in the stook when the snow comes on, is threshed, that grain must get to where it will be dried before the hot weather comes on, because, otherwise it would be very much damaged.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is not threshed yet, is it?

Mr. OLIVER. A great deal of it is not threshed. When a blockade exists, and it becomes impossible for either the farmer or the dealer to get the grain forwarded, then certainly the grain is safer in the stook than it is in the farmers' granary or in the country elevator.

There is no doubt that there is a great deal of grain to-day remaining unthreshed in the stooks, that if there was no blockade would have been threshed and gone forward, and the farmer would have got the money for it.

Mr. STAPLES. How does the hon. gentleman make that out?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Staples) lives in a farming constituency, and he knows perfectly well that what I am saying is correct, and there is no use arguing it between us.

Mr. STAPLES. I am only asking the hon. gentleman for information. I am proud to say I am a farmer and have a fair knowledge of what takes place amongst the farming community, and I can state that every available threshing machine has been working overtime trying to get the grain threshed.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I am not disputing that at all. I have said that there is a great deal of the grain still unthreshed, and I have said that in my judgment it is more than likely that a great deal of that grain would have been threshed if there had been no blockade. But, there being a blockade, there was no object in threshing it when it would have suffered greater damage after being threshed than it was suffering by remaining in the stooks, when it was not possible to get it forwarded properly.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the threshing machines in the west have been idle instead of operating?

Mr. OLIVER. I mean in some cases they have undoubtedly.

Mr. STAPLES. I can assure you they have not.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Staples) is no doubt familiar with the constituency he represents, but the conditions in that constituency, as the House knows, are not the same as they are in other parts of the west.

Mr. STAPLES. I have a fair knowledge of the whole west.

Mr. OLIVER. Then my hon. friend will have to allow us who represent other parts of the west to speak for our own constituencies just as we will be glad to have the hon. gentleman speak for the part of the west he represents.

Mr. STAPLES. Then I understand the hon. gentleman to say that in the part of the west he represents the threshing machines have been idle.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, at some parts of the year undoubtedly. I was giving the House an estimate, a conservative estimate I believe, of the direct loss to the farmer as the result of the blockade conditions. I got as far as the estimated loss on wheat, but I wish to add that in my judgment it is reasonable to consider that on oats, barley and flax, which are subject to the same blockade conditions, there would be a loss of no less than two million dollars. My estimate is that on wheat, oats, barley and flax, and because of the depreciation in price to the farmers resulting from blockade conditions in this season the farmers have suffered a loss of not less than ten million dollars.

Mr. STEVENS. The hon. gentleman stated that there was a loss of five million dollars on wheat, taking fifty million bushels at ten cents a bushel, but a moment afterwards the hon. gentleman admitted that there were about thirty million bushels of this which was damaged and it would necessarily be forced to go forward, and, as we know, it is the custom of the farmers to hold a large quantity over. So, I think, if he is fair in his estimate, it would be right to cut his five million bushels down to at least three million bushels. We want to have as fair an estimate as we can.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to say to my hon. friend and to the House generally that I have made this estimate as moderate as in my judgment the circumstances will admit in accordance with truth. When my hon. friend suggests that we have thirty million bushels of damaged grain which must go forward or be lost, and which cannot go forward by reason of the blockade, he surely must also admit that my estimate is below the mark rather than above it. But I want to dwell a little on this point of the damaged grain and the liability of the total destruction of that grain. I have only dealt with the loss that is accruing to-day, and it is a very moderate estimate of the loss that I have given on the grain that is going forward; that is, the grain upon which the commercial value is not altogether destroyed. But there is no doubt that there is a large part of the grain crop—and the evidence of Mr. Thompson and of Mr. Black and the evidence of the sense of any man who has travelled in the west this winter shows it, there is a large part of the grain crop that stands in danger of total destruction. To repeat: every man knows that when wheat is threshed in a damp condition, when that wheat is stored as it must be stored, unless it is dry before being stored it is bound to heat and if it heats its commercial value will either be destroyed or be depreciated to such an extent as to be a very great loss. That is the condition we are face to face with. Remember, I have shown that on the statement made as to the possibility of transportation out of the terminal elevators there must be left in the farmers' hands anywhere from thirteen million bushels to eighteen million bushels of wheat until April 1st.

Mr. BURNHAM. Can they not feed that wheat to anything?

Mr. OLIVER. If they had something to feed it to they could—well, perhaps I had better stick to the subject. I was going to make a remark about certain classes of live stock that might be used to feed the wheat to if we had our farms near Peterborough, but I won't. I said, Mr Speaker that on Mr. Thompson's estimate there were thirty million bushels unfit for milling, on Mr. Black's estimate there were thirty million bushels unthreshed at the time he made the estimate, and I say that if the damaged grain is not in the hospital by April 1, its value will be either altogether or largely destroyed. The farmers have been advised to build granaries; the farmers have been advised to do a great many things, but I want to say to the House that the farmers' granary does not meet this case. Let the farmer have as fine a granary as he may please, if he stores that grain in it that grain will be damaged or destroyed and the same exactly applies in the case of a country elevator which has no drying facilities. The damaged grain must get forward to the drying plant before the warm weather sets in or it will be lost. I am assuming that out of the thirty millions that are said to be unthreshed there is a possible loss of fifteen million bushels. If the value of that is estimated at forty cents a bushel to the farmer—because understand it is damaged grain and not grain of full value—that would be a loss of six million dollars. I want to impress upon the House and upon the Government the contingency which they are face to face with in this case. I therefore estimate the unavoidable loss to the farmers from shortage of crop and from damage to grain in this season at thirty-five million dollars, or one-third of the total value of their wheat crop.

But if he is to lose $10,000,000 by reason of the grain blockade—and any man who is interested in either the growing or marketing of grain will say that he is going to lose a great deal more—and if on top of that, he is to lose $6,000,000 by reason of damaged grain, his loss will be on account of unavoidable causes, $35,000,000, and on account of avoidable causes, $16,000,000; a total of $51,000,000, or one-half of the total value of his crop. We have heard that the west is a rich country and that the people there are optimistic and recover from a condition of difficulty very easily; and it is pointed out to us that parts of that country have been settled for 30 years, and that the farmers should be in a condition to take care of their crop, and should not be in such a condition as to have no place to store it safely when it is out of condition. Let me remind the House that 150,000 homesteads have been taken in the four years from 1908 to 1911, as many as were taken in the years from 1875 to 1903. That is, there were as many homesteads taken in the western provinces in the last four years as were taken in the 28 years which ended in 1903. That is to say, we have as many absolutely new settlers in the country as we had old settlers between those dates. It is a necessary condition of the rapid expansion of settlement in that country that there must always be, so long as that rapid expansion continues, a very large proportion of people who are only in the beginning of establishing themselves who are not by any possibility in a position to protect themselves on such an occasion as the present season. It is well, I think, that the House and the country should understand that at least one-third of the homesteading population of that country, have come there within the past three years; and let it be remembered that it is on the new settler, who is not well fitted with buildings and equipment, who is farthest from the railroad and therefore, under the greatest disabilities, that the bulk of the loss falls. I want to impress upon the House the serious damage that is being done to the progress of that country by reason of the losses that are being suffered this year.

It is not only the settler who suffers loss. The farmer buys largely on credit, and the storekeeper sells when he knows that the farmer has no money. They all expect to get their money out of the crop. So that the store bills, and all other bills and notes mature in November or December; and when the whole business of the country depends upon the collection of the year's accounts in either of these months, and the accounts cannot be collected, because the grain has not been marketed, although it has been grown, there is a disarrangement of the business of the country, which is damaging to its every interest. The damage is not confined to the farmer; it spreads into every line of business. Cases have come to my notice, and I have no doubt to the notice of many other members of the House, of not only farmers, but business men who have been actually put out of business by reason of the grain blockade this year. Farmers and business men who were doing the best they could, and would have succeeded, even in the face of the unfortunate weather conditions that prevailed; have been put out of business absolutely because the money that the crop was worth, could not be realized because of this blockade.

As the resolution which I have placed before the House mentions, action has been taken by the government to give some measure of relief. The railway companies have been consulted. and I presume, in response to suggestion or pressure by the government, have made certain arrangements which will result in their being able to give transportation to elevator accommodation by shorter hauls than up to the present time exist. I have inquired into the measure of relief that has been proposed, and I desire to give to the House some of the particulars. The Canadian Pacific railway has issued a rate sheet on wheat and oats to Minneapolis and Duluth, giving the same rate of freight to those points as to Fort William. This rate became effective on February 16, and it expires on April 30. It is effective for 74 days. But 34 days expired between the date of the issue of the rate sheet, and the date of its coming into effect, and 67 days expired between the close of navigation and the coming into effect of this rate. This rate applies only to the province of Saskatchewan and only to grain for export.

The Canadian Northern railway have given a rate on wheat to Duluth and it is also the same rate as to Fort William, which applies only on shipments in transit in bond through the United States for exports. It was approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission on January 20, 1912, and became effective on January 29. It expires on April 30, and will be in force 91 days. It became effective 49 days after the close of navigation, and was effective 9 days after it was approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Canadian Pacific railway also gave a rate on barley and flax to Minneapolis. This rate was issued on December 20, 1911, and became effective on January 23, 1912. It expires on April 30, and is effective 98 days. It became effective 43 days after navigation closed, and 34 days expired between the date of its issue and the date of its coming into effect. This rate on barley and flax is not the Fort William rate. It is 4 cents higher per 100 pounds than the Fort William rate, on barley and flax from Manitoba, and 9 cents per 100 pounds higher than the Fort William rate on barley and flax from Saskatchewan. The difference is practically 2 cents a bushel for barley and flax in Manitoba, and 4½ cents a bushel in Saskatchewan. I want to give the House some facts in regard to the possibilities of the marketing of barley under this arrangement. Because it will be observed, that while the wheat rate is only for bonding in transit, the barley and flax rate is for consumption in the United States, and so it is interesting to us to know if there is any market for barley for consumption in the United States. I have here a statement in regard to a car of feed barley shipped from Carman, Manitoba, to Minneapolis, on December 8, 1911. The car contained 1,253·06 bushels, and was sold at Minneapolis at $1.07 a bushel realizing $1,340.84. That is to say less freight charges $72.53, customs entry charges $1.20, weighing charges 40 cents, switching charges $1.50, commission in Minneapolis $12.53, commission in Winnipeg $12.53, total $100.69; net proceeds of the car in Minneapolis $1,240.15. The Fort William price was 50 cents a bushel, the Minneapolis price was $1.07 a bushel. The Minneapolis net price, that is less the expenses I have mentioned was 99 cents a bushel.

Mr. BRADBURY. What was the duty?

Mr. OLIVER. The duty was 30 cents a bushel, and the Minneapolis net price less duty, was 69 cents a bushel. The value of the car at Fort William was $626.54, and the net value of the car at Minneapolis was $864.61, an actual difference in favour of Minneapolis of $238.07. But if the duty had not been paid the difference would have been $613.98. But even paying the duty there was a substantial advantage in shipping the car to Minneapolis at a rate of 6 cents per 100 pounds over the Canadian Northern from Carman.

Mr. BRADBURY. If these figures are accurate, and I presume the hon. gentleman thinks they are, does it not seem reasonable that the farmers would ship all their barley to the United States and pay the duty?

Mr. OLIVER. I think they are going to ship a very large proportion of it there once they get the freight rates. But the rates that applied on that car were rates on the Great Northern which has always had a through rate to Minneapolis. Points on the other two railway systems did not have through rates to Minneapolis until this arrangement was entered into which became effective on the 23rd of January. Since that rate became effective there is no doubt that very large shipments have been taking place, and that the congestion or grade blockade has been relieved to some extent by that means.

But what I want to draw your attention to, is the paragraph in the resolution which I have placed before the House which asks the government to make such arrangement, or to urge such arrangement, as will give the same rate on barley and flax to Minneapolis as to Fort William. On the barley that is now being shipped to Minneapolis the farmer pays two cents a bushel more than if it were shipped to Fort William, if it is from Manitoba, and 4½ cents a bushel more than if it is shipped from Saskatchewan. That makes a difference of $25 a car on barley from Manitoba, and $56 a car on barley from Saskatchewan. The barley crop is estimated at 35 millions of bushels the flax crop at 6 millions of bushels. I find from the returns from the Trade and Commerce Department that 2 million bushels of barley, and 2 million bushels of flax have been received at Fort William between September 1st and December 21st. If 2 million bushels of that grain came from Manitoba, and 2 million bushels from Saskatchewan, it means that the farmers have had to pay $130,000 more upon that barley and flax in order to get the advantage of the Minneapolis market. I want to impress upon the government there is no reason, there is no justice, in making that discrimination in these rates; that if they are going to give an outlet to the western farmer who grows barley and flax, if the railroads can afford to haul wheat at the same rate to Minneapolis and Duluth as to Fort William, they can afford to haul the barley and flax at the same rate, and the farmer should not be required to pay that 2 cents a bushel from Manitoba, and 4½ cents a bushel from Saskatchewan for the privilege of getting the benefit of the Minneapolis market after paying the duty as well.

I have given the House the informado in order to relieve the conditions of which we have complained. Now I want to draw attention to what they might have done in order to relieve those conditions and to demonstrate how very far short they have fallen of even measurably attempting to meet these requirements. I have pointed out that the panic condition which exists to-day in the west is the consequence of the blockade in the terminal elevators.

And the reason for the continuance of the blockade in the terminal elevators is that the railway company, or companies are not able to forward the grain fast enough to the ocean port to relieve that situation. The only remedy is to find a shorter outlet. The outlet in such a case is any place that will take the grain; and Minneapolis and Duluth are the places which are able to store the grain and are able to mill and market such of the grain as is fit for milling and marketing. As to the effort to relieve the grain blockade, let us consider a few figures. The length of haul from Winnipeg to St. Paul is 462 miles, as compared with a haul from Winnipeg to St. John of 2,178 miles—four and a half times the distance. From Moosejaw to St. Paul is 738 miles, and from Moosejaw to St. John 2,571 miles, or three and a half times as far. From Calgary to St. Paul is 1,166 miles, and from Calgary to St. John 2,979 miles, or two and a half times as far. By taking measures which will enable the grain marketed within a radius of Winnipeg to be sent to St. Paul instead of to St. John, the capacity of the rolling stock of the railway is practically increased four and a half fold. That is if they have been able to carry 10,000,000 bushels from Winnipeg to St. John, they would have been able to carry 50,000,000 bushels in the same time from Winnipeg to St. Paul. It is obvious that there was a means of preventing the blockade, a means of breaking the blockade, but the means were not taken in time to do the work. Let me point out that if my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), had taken in time the measures which he proposes to take—I understand from the press—there would have been no blockade and the losses that have been suffered would not have been suffered. If the rates and conditions which, I understand, it is proposed to put into effect on March 7, had been put into effect on November 10, when a condition of blockade actually existed, not in expectation but in fact, the Canadian Pacific railway wheat rate would have been 98 days longer; the Canadian Northern railway wheat rate 74 days longer, and the Canadian Pacific railway rate 74 days longer. On the average there would have been twice as long a time in which to deliver this grain and reduce the blockade. But although these special rates are allowed until April 30, again I submit to the committee that the month of April may be counted out so far as the transport of damaged grain is concerned with any result of saving its full value. If the period of transportation at the rates that came into effect on the date I have mentioned are taken with that month of April deducted, as it must be, the Canadian Pacific railway are giving the wheat rate for 44 effective days, the Canadian Northern railway for 61 effective days, and the Canadian Pacific railway on barley for 68 effective days. I claim on behalf of the people of the west that measures should have been taken to have these rates brought into effect at any rate as soon as the condition of blockade existed, and that had that action been taken the blockade, which had begun, would have been relieved and the country would have been many millions of dollars better off than it is going to be to-day.

To what purpose did my hon. friend take measures with the railway companies in this direction? Was it to relieve the situation for the farmer? If it was, then he certainly did not take measures as he should have done. Why did he restrict the operation of the rate on wheat and oats over the Canadian Pacific railway to the province of Saskatchewan? Why were the rates on barley and flax made higher than the corresponding rates on wheat and oats? Why were not these rates secured at an earlier date? Was it because he and the railway men came together and said: There is so much storage in Minneapolis and Duluth and we will reduce these rates low enough to enable us to haul the grain that will fill that storage, and if we do that the rest of the grain can wait our convenience to haul it out as it best suits us? For what other reason could it have been that my hon. friend secured the regulations with these restrictions? Does he say that it was because the Interstate Commerce Commission would not give permission sooner? All I can say is that all he had to do was to ask the Interstate Commerce Commission sooner and he would have got the permission that much sooner. There is no possibility of laying the blame anywhere except on the shoulders of my hon. friend and of the government of which he is a prominent member. I find a reference to the despatches in the press that the Interstate Commerce Commission did not put any bar of lapse of time in the way of notice of the going into effect to these rates. The following despatch appeared in the Winnipeg 'Free Press' of January 22:

Washington, D.C., January 21.—The United States laws require thirty days' notice, and the commission never grants permission to establish rates on less time except under extraordinary emergencies. The commission's invariable policy is never to grant permission to establish rates on grain because it is such a sensitive proposition, inasmuch as a slight disturbance of a rate line of adjustment at any given point throws the whole matter out of gear.

In these cases it was represented to the commission that grain at certain Canadian points was damp and spoiling. The rates of Canadian carriers have hitherto been made to Fort William and Port Arthur, but storage capacity at these places has been entirely exhausted, and was so inadequate that it was desired to establish these new rates to United States points only for storage, drying &c., while in transit in bond through the United States for export only.

Now, in face of that fact, I want to draw the attention of the House to the rate sheet issued by the Canadian Pacific railway on the 12th of January 1912, giving rates on carloads from stations in the western provinces. It became effective on the 16th day of February, 1912. I presume that this rate sheet had the approval of the commission before it was issued; if so, I ask what excuse was there for not giving effect to that rate before the 16th of February. In the case of barley and flaxseed, the rate issued on the 20th December became effective on the 23rd of January. In the case of the Canadian Northern railway, for some reason or other, there was not the same interval between the issue of the rate sheet and its coming into effect. The Inter-state Commerce Commission gave permission, and in nine days afterwards the rate became effective. I think it is demonstrated that the delay that has occurred in bringing these rates into effect is not due to the Inter-state Commerce Commission, it is due to the arrangement entered into between my hon. friend and the Canadian railway companies, and I want to insist that that arrangement was entered into for the benefit of the railway companies instead of the benefit of the farmers. If not, why these restrictions? Why not open the door, if it had to be opened, as soon as possible and as widely as possible? My hon. friend must have known that the conditions were as I have stated. He has under his control the machinery of the Grain Act, he has officers in touch with the grain situation throughout the west, there could not be a grain blockade in the western country without his having knowledge of it. I say, therefore, that when he has taken action at all he is condemned because he did not take action in time to be effective. To make it sure that the government had knowledge of these conditions, I read the report of E. D. Eddy, B.S.A., published by the Department of Agriculture under date of Ottawa, January 12. This report deals with the crop and climatic conditions throughout the west, it is a part of the public service for which this country pays, and the government not only had it in their hands, but it is their statement for which they are responsible. This report says:

The climatic conditions prevailing throughout the prairie provinces of Canada were very abnormal during the season of 1911. Seeding was largely done about the usual time, from the middle of April to the middle of May and under favourable conditions. During the latter part of May and June the conditions were favourable, with sufficient rain in most parts and reasonably warm weather. July was cloudy, showery and cool, growth being rapid and almost rank, but toward the end of the month rust appeared in some parts and there was little sign of ripening. During August unseasonably cold weather prevailed, preventing ripening, rust became prevalent in some districts, and frost occurred from August 22 to Aug 28 doing great damage. During September the weather was generally cold and wet with heavy damage resulting to the crops from frost and rust. Damaging frosts occurred in many districts on September 6, 8, 21 and 25. During the first part of October the weather was moderately dry and warm, but owing to rust and the abundant supply of moisture crops refused to ripen. The freeze up came on October 25, or three weeks earlier than usual. Much cutting still remained to be done, and as the stooks were wet from recent rains considerable injury resulted to even fairly well matured grain which was in stook. The latter part of October was cold and on November 1st the temperature dropped to 6 below zero. On November 4th something very unusual in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, after the freeze up, happened; the weather suddenly turned warm and rain fell all day. This was followed on November 8 with from 3 to 5 inches of snow and on November 10, 20 below zero was registered. The snow and extreme cold in November came when a large proportion of the threshing remained to be done. December was remarkably fair and mild and the threshing was continued, but the grain that was in stock is very tough and a large proportion of it unmarketable.

With these facts in hand, with the knowledge of the conditions that must have come to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I again ask what excuse has he to offer for failing to take the action that lay before him from the beginning of the season? When he did take action why did he not take effective action? I have asked a question, and I propose to give to the House the answer that appears to be correct. I think a large part of the answer may be found in a dispatch from Duluth, Minnesota, dated January 21, which appears in the Winnipeg 'Free Press' of January 22, 1912. It reads as follows:

The expected advantages to Duluth millers from the granting of a special low rate on grain from the Canadian Northwest to this city, have been dispelled by advices received here that a ruling had been made prohibiting the admitting of this grain unless the duty on it, plus the difference between the regular rate and the special rate, shall first be paid. The ruling is said to be the result of a protest by Canadian millers, who claimed that permission to mill grain here without additional costs could constitute discrimination against them.

I have a further light on that subject contained in an interview which appeared in the Montreal 'Gazette" of July 11 with Mr. F. W. Thompson, vice-president and managing director of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Company in which he said:

Even Canadian millers may experience considerable difficulty in getting sufficient high grade wheat to fully meet their requirements, and the question of an export duty on the high grade wheats, as a matter of protection to the home requirements and seed, may with every justification be seriously considered.

I find in the speech that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) delivered in this House on November 28, 1911, the following remarks:

Why should Canada not do the milling business that will go to the millers of Minneapolis?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman is transgressing the rule. It is not permissible to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall not make any further reference to it and I shall not quote any further from it. The rule was not in my mind or I would not have transgressed, I assure you, Mr. Speaker. Action should have been taken by the government according to the knowledge that was in their possession at the time.

The policy of the government, as they are pleased to say, looks to building up the industries and interests of this country of ours by a process of restriction. It is distinctly in giving effect to that policy that these millions of bushels of damaged wheat in the Northwest are in danger of absolute destruction and it is in pursuance of that policy that the people of the Northwest, the farmers and business men, have lost the millions of dollars that they have lost during the past season from the blockade conditions. There is no escape from the condition. The remedy my hon. friend proposes shall be taken on the 7th of March when, if the newspapers inform us correctly, the rates on barley and flax to Minneapolis and Duluth will be reduced to the Fort William rates and the rates on wheat and oats will be the rates for grinding in bond and for home consumption as well as for export. But I say that if these conditions had been allowed to prevail at the beginning of the grain blockade on November 10 there would not have been that loss and damage to this country that have occurred. If my hon. friends see fit in pursuance of their policy of building up this country by a process of restriction to violate that policy, then it is only right that the country should be made aware of the consequences that are being suffered now by reason of that policy. It is too late, I am sorry to say, to save the situation now. My hon. friend has allowed it to go too far, but he shows that he has knowledge of how it could have been saved and he shows that even this process of restriction which he advocates so capably, and which is none the better for his capable advocacy, has broken down and he is compelled by the force of circumstances to abandon it, but he is abandoning it too late. The condition which has existed this past season and which, in the estimation of my hon. friend himself and his colleagues, has called for the abrogation of that policy of restriction at the last moment when it is too late, may be repeated in future seasons. Probably it will be measurably repeated in all near future seasons unless the country has suffered such a set-back by reason of the results of last season's operations that its expansion in production will be checked.

If, that expansion in production proceeds as rapidly in the future as it has in the past then it will be, if not as necessay, yet still necessary to find an outlet for our western grains by the shortest rail-haul in future seasons or the country will suffer damage—incalculable damage—such as it has suffered this season. My hon. friend and his colleagues are face to face now with a condition, not a theory. I hope I have been able to impress that point on their minds and that if they are instrumental in bringing into effect on the 7th March a reduction in grain rates from western points in Minneapolis and Duluth and placing them on the same level as to Fort William they will use the same endeavours to have these rates permanently continued for the benefit of the western producer and for the benefit of the developement of this whole country. I want to ask my hon. friend and those of his colleagues and supporters who believe in that policy of restriction in this country where the benefit to any interest comes out of the loss that is being suffered on the prairies to-day. I ask, is it the banker, is it the merchant, is it the manufacturer, is it the railway company—which of all these interests if benefiting by that loss? It is a loss to the farmer, it is true, but it is a loss to every other interest in this country. Right in the cities of Toronto and Montreal, the very chapel, the very church, the very cathedral of the doctrine of the restrictive policy, in these very centres, the effect of the losses that are being suffered to-day by reason of the restrictive policy of the government that is in power, is being felt. Those losses are being suffered in those cities as well as on the prairies of the west. Although we have great confidence in the future of our country, although our country has made great progress in the past and we believe will make good progress in the future I want to warn my hon. friend that it cannot stand a continuation of such shocks and losses as it has suffered this season at the hands of himself and his colleagues and still prosper and progress as we wish it to do.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I would like to know what effect the resolution of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) would have upon the trusts the mergers and the combines; I do not think he made that point clear.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend will explain to the House what relation his question bears to the subject I have been dealing with, I will try to answer him.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I thought that was a point the hon. gentleman left out.

Mr. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver.) It is not my intention to detain the House at any length in speaking on this question. I certainly congratulate the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) for the exhaustive study he has made of this question, and I also wish to state that a great deal of the information he has gathered will no doubt be of great value to the members of the House and to the public. But, I do not agree entirely with him in the conclusions he has arrived at. In the first place, I think every member of the House will agree that it is a most regrettable thing that this grain blocade prevails to-day in the Northwest Territories. We are all exceedingly sorry that certain losses will occur, but I think it reasonable and fair that we should take into consideration all of the factors that have operated in the causing of this, what we may call, almost a national calamity. The hon. member (Mr. Oliver) has pointed out that there will be considerable monetary loss occurring as the result of the damage to the crops of the Northwest, but the chief object of his speech was to lay upon the shoulders of the present administration certain responsibility for the prevailing conditions.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is his whole object.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to draw the attention of the House to some of the causes which have led to the existing conditions. The chief reasons for the conditions which obtain in the northwest at the present time are natural causes over which no human power has any control. In the first place as pointed out by the hon. member in the quotation he gave from the official bulletin of the Department of Agriculture, the season was a most extraordinary one, wet weather having come in the middle of the year. I think if the hon. gentleman had been as careful to quote the press reports up to about the first of August he would find the utmost optimism running through them, and the cry 'bumper crop' was on the lips of every one from ocean to ocean. We all rejoiced at the prospect of the large crop that the farmers of the west were going to have, but a little later in the season a most unusual thing occurred, when wet and cold weather set in, with the result that the grain did not ripen. That was a condition over which no government had control and against which it was impossible for any human agency to guard. It was consequently, late in the fall before harvesting was begun, and then when harvesting was actually in progress, the continued wet weather hampered further harvesting operations, and threshing. As a matter of fact, a great deal of the grain had been cut green, taking the chance of it drying in the stooks. No matter what your transportation facilities might have been, that grain which was cut partially green, would have been of a much inferior grade, and in all probability would have gone to the elevators in a semi-ripened condition. All these factors are entirely beyond the control of any government or of any human being. Another point I wish to draw attention to, is that, the congestion of grain in the northwest is a thing that will obtain every year, just so long as the farmers of the northwest follow the system of harvesting and marketing which they follow at the present time. A few weeks ago those of us who were not prairie farmers, were told we should mind our own business, and not make suggestions to the farmers of the Northwest, regarding granaries. But, I make bold to state that if the farmers of the Northwest were to provide suitable granaries for their grain, they would experience a great deal less trouble. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite, who scoff at that idea now, that the time is coming when the farmers of the northwest will have to provide granaries for their grain, and they might just as well admit the fact now as later. How in the name of common sense can they expect that the huge harvest in the west in a good season, can be marketed within four or five weeks, and that is really what they are demanding. They cut their grain, thresh it right out of the stooks, and haul it immediately to the market, and expect to have cars enough to carry that grain to the seaboard within a few weeks. It would be far better for the farmers of the west, if they had granaries in which to store their grain, so that they could market it gradually.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does the hon. gentleman recall the fact that 150,000 of these farmers are still homesteaders who have gone in within the last four years. How could they be expected to have granaries, considering their financial circumstances?

Mr. STEVENS. What the hon. member says——

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). They are glad to get shacks.

Mr. STEVENS. The hon. member from Red Deer is heard from.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I know all about it.

Mr. STEVENS. As a matter of fact it is not the homesteader who has just gone on his land and cropped twenty-five or thirty acres that is to blame; it is the men with four hundred acres, one thousand acres, and two thousand acres who cause the congestion.

Mr. OLIVER. They are not the men who suffer.

Mr. STEVENS. The man who suffers is the homesteader who has just cropped his few acres of land. I say that it is the system that is followed by the old timers comparatively speaking of the Northwest that is responsible to a large extent for the suffering of the other settlers.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stevens), is familiar with the conditions in the west, and I want to ask him: if a farmer has a granary, the best that ever was built, and his grain is damp when he threshes it or has snow in it, and he stores it in that granary, and it remains until the warm weather sets in, what happens to that grain?

Mr. STEVENS. As a matter of fact the condition of the grain when it is threshed is a thing over which no transportation companies or no government can exercise any control whatever, and while it is a matter for regret that that man shall suffer because of that fact, we cannot blame the government, because his grain is wet when he threshes it.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman answer my question?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes; I will go a little further; I do not say that a man should put his grain in his granary and keep it there until the hot weather comes. The hon. member (Mr. Oliver), is authority for the statement that if it is not moved by May, I think that is what he said.

Mr. OLIVER. I said if it is not in the drier by the 1st of April in an ordinarily early spring it is practically gone.

Mr. STEVENS. Take it at the first of April, and, therefore, the farmer is not called upon to store his grain until late in the summer. The point is this, that if the farmers had these granaries the bulk of this partially damaged grain, or grain that would be damaged if it is kept into the spring, could be moved during the winter months. The hon. member will agree with me that in the majority of seasons the farmer is better off to hold his good grain until May or June.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, I think that is the case. I will tell you what a number of farmers in the northwest are doing at present, because some of them have told me this themselves.

They get the grain to the market as rapidly as they can, and then play the wheat market in Winnipeg for a rise in the price, and get a profit in that way. They sell their grain in the fall instead of holding it, and then buy wheat on margin in Winnipeg for a rising price. Any number of them do that, and it is a practice for which I have very little sympathy. On the other hand, if the farmer had his granary, so that he could hold his wheat and sell it whenever he liked, he could control the market and get a better price. But none of the farmers have granaries, and the result is that they are compelled to sell their grain at the price which the owners of the small elevators in the small centres choose to give them. If these elevators are full, the farmer has to keep his grain, and his only choice is to leave it in the fields or bring it to market and sell it at a figure which is arbitrarily fixed by a congested market.

Mr. WHITE (Victoria, Alberta). Does the hon. gentleman know that the cash price of wheat to-day in Minneapolis is four cents over the May price?

Mr. STEVENS. That may be. I am not disputing that fact at all.

Mr. OLIVER. Why would the farmer hold his wheat in that case?

Mr. STEVENS. It is optional. If a man has his wheat in his granary, he can sell it, or he can hold it and control the market. The reason the market is not steady is that at certain periods of the year it is flooded with grain while at other periods there is not sufficient supply. In any case, if the present system were changed so that the farmer had granaries in which his grain would be stored, the present conditions would be completely changed. I quite admit that this year is an extraordinary one. There is a large amount of grain which it is necessary to rush to the drying elevators; but that is accentuated by natural conditions over which no government could have any control. The hon. member for Edmonton tried to estimate the loss which was sustained in the northwest, saying that 50,000,000 bushels of grain were in the hands of the farmers, of which he admitted that only 30,000,000 bushels were partially damaged. It is well known that a large number of farmers are in the habit of holding their wheat until May, June or July of the following year, and sometimes it is held over for two years, but not very frequently.

Mr. TURRIFF. They must have granaries if they do that.

Mr. STEVENS. There are a few. The 50,000,000 mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton represent about the average that is held, compared with the full crop this year. So that it is reasonable to say that his estimate of the loss is an exaggeration by at least two or three million dollars. There is no necessity under present conditions of exaggerating the loss that will occur this year, nor is it necessary to draw these pessimistic pictures which have been drawn here for the last couple of months of conditions in the northwest, with one sole object, namely, to cast reflections on the present administration. As a matter of fact, the present administration have done everything that is within human power to do to meet the conditions that obtain in the Northwest at the present time.

Mr. KNOWLES. Would it not help the farmers in the northwest to have access to the drying facilities in Minneapolis and Duluth, not to mention better prices, and could not the government have got that if they had wished?

Mr. STEVENS. As a matter of fact, the government have got it. I am perfectly sure that had the hon. member from Edmonton been on the treasury benches at the present time, he could not have done anything more to secure that relief than the present Minister of Trade and Commerce has done.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Reciprocity.

Mr. STEVENS. Reciprocity is dead. All that the hon. members of the opposition hoped to have received from reciprocity was access to the American market. If the American people wish to remove the duty from wheat, they can do so, we are not hindering them. All that we refused to do was to pay them a bonus to remove that duty. When the hon. members trot out reciprocity as a relief to the farmers of the northwest in the the present condition, it is an absolute bugaboo.

Mr. KNOWLES. The hon. member has not answered my question. I ask: suppose reciprocity had been taken advantage of, and access to the American market had been secured for our farmers, does the hon. member not think that it would have afforded a very substantial measure of relief for them this season?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not, for this reason. Had reciprocity passed, it would simply have made a slight difference in the duty on wheat going into the United States.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). 25 cents a bushel.

Mr. STEVENS. If the American people want our wheat so badly as the hon. members intimate they do, they can remove the duty and get it; but they are not inclined to do that. As a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman's question was fully answered on the 21st of September. The hon. member for Edmonton asks why action was not taken sooner in order to give certain relief which as he suggested could have been given by the Minister. In the same sentence almost he made the statement that the wheat was in the stook, and that it was impossible to harvest and thresh it up to a very recent period. As a matter of fact, throughout the whole northwest to-day every threshing machine, as far as I have been able to learn, is working overtime trying to thresh the grain that has been lying on the ground during the winter. The reason the grain has not been threshed is not because the farmers do not want it threshed, but because there are not the necessary threshing facilities to do it.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has presumed to quote me, and I wish to say that he has not quoted me correctly.

Mr. STEVENS. The hon. gentleman will admit that he read a circular as the authority of the government for its knowledge of the conditions, and it set out the exact conditions that I have stated.

During the balance of the season and through certain rains that came on in December, and through a subsequent thaw, and through snow, and so on, it has been impossible to get threshing done. Now I think I am perfectly correct in that statement, and so I affirm that I care not what the transportation facilities were, the same condition would have obtained, namely, that a large amount of the wheat would have been lying on the ground at the present time in exactly the condition in which it is, because every threshing machine has been doing its utmost and working to its full capacity to thresh that grain. Therefore, I want to point out to the hon. members opposite, that the condition which obtains in the northwest to-day in reference to the grain blockade, is to a large extent, or almost entirely, the result of natural conditions, over which no human being has any control, and to the system which obtains in parts of the northwest. Another point is this—I have not the exact figures here, I have not time to secure them, but I think probably the Minister of Trade and Commerce may have them, and will supply them later on—I think some 10,000 cars more were moved within a given time this year by the Canadian Pacific railway than were moved last year or in any other previous year, showing that the transportation companies have done a great deal more to move the grain this year than they ever did before, and that it is unreasonable to expect a transportation company to have sufficient cars lying idle on the prairies of the Northwest to handle all the wheat, out of the large crop of last year, within the short period of two weeks. Another thing that the transportation companies are faced with is this: A farmer will order a car for, we will say, the 20th of October, or some like date. When that date comes around Mr. Farmer is not prepared to load the car, and he puts his name down the list a month, with the result that while the car may have been assigned to him he is not using it, and it is necessary for the transportation company to switch that car off to some other farmer. This is a matter of common occurrence. I think it is only reasonable and fair that we should take into consideration all the facts of the case, and while I have no brief for any railway or transportation company, not for one moment, at the same time, I do believe that the blockade conditions are due more to natural causes than they are due to the negligence of the railroads in the northwest. I certainly think no case has been made out which would warrant hon. members of this House in condemning the administration in this matter, but the Minister of Trade and Commerce should rather be highly commended for his efforts to relieve the situation there, and not only that, but for the introduction of the Grain Bill, which is one of the most up-to-date pieces of legislation which has ever been introduced into this House. I believe that instead of trying to work up an imaginery case, based on inferences, and not facts, against the administration, it would be a great deal better if hon. gentlemen opposite had some concrete and reasonable suggestion to make which would assist the administration, rather than to hamper it.

Mr. W. A. BUCHANAN (Medicine Hat). Mr. Speaker, the matter now before the House I consider, as a western member and also as a citizen of this Dominion, is one of the most vital questions that has so far been presented for our consideration during the present session, and I believe that every hon. gentleman will agree with me in that view. If western Canada suffers from a car shortage, or suffers in any other respect, so that the people there cannot get returns for their crops, then the rest of Canada must suffer as a result. I have heard gentlemen in this House make the statement that the welfare of eastern Canada depended upon the welfare of western Canada, and I believe most of us will concur in that observation. In considering this matter I want to discuss it as fairly as possible, but before entering upon some arguments in regard to the resolution now before the House, I would like to enlighten the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), although I am afraid any attempt to enlighten that hon. gentleman along the lines indicated in his speech would take up a great deal too much of our time. All that I can say to him is that I would be very glad to exchange my place of abode with him for a few months each year and give him the opportunity to become acquainted close at hand with the conditions in the prairie provinces. I believe that if he had been acquainted with those conditions he would not have made the remarks he did to-night in regard to this question. The hon. gentleman endeavoured to relieve the present government of any blame in connection with the situation in western Canada and he said there were exceptional conditions there, which we all knew of or heard of through the press and from reports that came down from the west. I admit we had to face exceptional conditions, but I urge the government should have immediately proceeded to deal with them in the most drastic manner possible, and should have put into effect what we are urging to-night in this resolution—that is have given the western farmer other trade outlets for his grain, the closest possible outlets, in order to relieve the congestion which has prevailed in the west during the past season. That was the duty of the government, and the members on this side are criticising them to-night, because of their inaction in this critical matter. They attempted to afford relief in regard to export grain, but they should have gone further at the same time and given the farmers in the west an opportunity of getting their grain into Minneapolis either for grinding in bond or for consumption in the United States. I can tell hon. gentlemen that there was a ready demand for the grain of western Canada in Minneapolis. I had a statement made to me by a gentleman from western Canada, who was in the elevator business, or at least is in touch with large interests there, that the representatives of one of the grain growers' associations of Saskatchewan went down to Minneapolis and ascertained that they could sell there to a commission house 100 cars each of every grade of grain up to No. 6, and also what is known as Feed Wheat. They could have sold that grain in the markets of Minneapolis. All they wanted was to get a better railroad rate and they could have obtained, even after paying the duty, a better price for their grain than could be got in Canada. I was informed of that condition by a man who is intimately acquainted with the elevator business in the province of Saskatchewan. I want to say that if we had had in western Canada a crop such as seemed probable in the early part of the season, we would have had the greatest crop that the west ever had. If we had had that crop and ideal conditions for harvesting, the railroads there simply could not have handled it any more than they are in a position to handle the crop that we actually had this year smaller and damaged though it was.

I also want to point out to my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) that when he states that the railroads have been keeping in touch with the advance of western Canada in regard to the supplying of cars, he is, in my opinion, entirely mistaken. I do not believe that the railroads have been keeping in touch with the growth of the country in that respect, and I think one of the reasons for the car shortage this year is that the railroads have not the motive power and have not the cars available to relieve the prevailing congestion. In my part of the province of Alberta—and I had occasion to draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the conditions there some time ago—they have now the first car shortage they ever experienced. I believe that particular part of western Canada is in better shape this year than any other part of the country, I believe that more of its crop is threshed and ready to be shipped than in any other district of the various provinces. Nevertheless they have a car shortage. I would like to point this out: I know a farmer in the vicinity of a village called Barons, near the city of Lethbridge, who was 294th on the list for a car at that station. He was 294th on the list in the early part of September of last year and up to the first of this month he had not been able to get a car. That is in the southern part of the province of Alberta. I also have the statement that a farmer in the vicinity of High River had only been able to get one car since December 31st. He wrote me to that effect in the beginning of this month, and he said there were 144 cars at that time on the order book at the station of High River. Now these are simply two instances to show that the Canadian Pacific railway in that particular part of the country has not been able to keep up with the demand for cars. They have not been sufficiently acquainted with the crop conditions and the need of cars to supply the demand in that particular section of the west. The railways are not prepared to meet the emergency, and I say more that the railways are responsible, to a considerable extent, for the prevailing conditions. Now let me explain that statement. The railways in the west make the announcement very freely that they are going to build a certain branch line immediately. Two instances of that occurred in my own district. For instance the Canadian Northern company announced two or three years ago that it was going to rush the Goose Lake branch of its line. People flocked in there and homesteaded in that country. Others bought what land they could buy, they have been in there for two or three years, they have had to raise crops in order to live, and some of them have had to go 70 to 80 miles to sell and to ship their grain. These people would not have gone into that district if the railroad had not induced them to go in there by stating it was going to build that branch line immediately. A similar instance has occurred in the southern part of Alberta, in that part of the country south of the Crows Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway which is thickly settled.

The people have to go from fifty to sixty miles to sell their grain. These people went into the country because the Canadian Pacific railway promised to build the Weyburn branch, and they thought that that line was to be immediately put under construction. And now we find that construction is only to commence this year. The railways have encouraged the people to come into the country; they encouraged them to raise crops. Yet, when they do raise crops, they have to go fifty or sixty miles to a station, and when they get there they find that the Canadian Pacific railway cannot supply them with cars and that there is no elevator accommodation. Frequently these farmers have to go back with their grain that distance. It means practically a complete loss of the crop. My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) has had something to say about storage. He advises the farmers of western Canada to store their grain, and wait until they have a favourable opportunity to sell it. The hon. gentleman is totally out of touch with the conditions in western Canada. Those farmers who are in the best financial position provide storage facilities. But he must understand that the people who are going on homesteads in our west, are people, as a rule, with very little capital. They come to the west to make a home and a fortune for themselves. Most of them have been there but a few years, and the greater part of their money has been spent in building a home and barns, and in purchasing machinery at the high protection prices they have to pay. They must sell their crop as soon as they possibly can, in order to get the money to meet their payments. They cannot afford to store their grain and hold it until the Canadian Pacific railway or some other railway can supply them with cars or the elevator can afford them storage. They do not want to store their wheat, and cannot store it under present circumstances. Something was said by my hon. friend from Vancouver also with respect to reciprocity. He expressed the views that I expected he would, when he said that reciprocity was practically a bonus to the United States. Those of us who lived in western Canada, do not so regard it. We think that reciprocity would have met a situation such as that which has arisen. But we believe that the attitude the people of Canada took on that occasion was a bonus to eastern Canada, and not to the advantage of western Canada. And I believe that the manufacturers and interests of eastern Canada, in taking the action they did on September 21, did the thing which was most injurious to themselves. I found this feeling among our western farmers during the discussion of reciprocity. Reciprocity would be helpful to them and would not injure any of the interests of eastern Canada; but, in the face of that, the men who have been made rich by the development that has taken place and the business they have secured from the farmers of the west have opposed what was considered by the farmers of the west to be in their own interest. If there is any cleavage between east and west, it is not due to what the farmers did on the 21st of September, but to what the manufacturers of eastern Canada did on that day. I believe we have in eastern Canada people who will soon come to realize that it is in the interest of all Canada that the farmers should have the opportunity to sell their grain in the nearer market of the United States. What we want is the larger market and nearer market, and I believe that the people of the east will come to realize the benefit that that will afford to the whole country, as we have realized it already. We are simply demanding in this resolution that we should be given an opportunity to sell our grain in the United States markets, with a railroad rate which is better than that afforded us at the present time. We believe that the government had an opportunity to relieve the situation that has arisen from this blockade which commenced six months ago and it sadly neglected to provide it.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce). Mr. Speaker, the rather long and exhaustive speech of my hon. friend of Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) had a good deal in it which was an attack upon Providence, but it ended up with an attack directed against the government and particularly against the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the ground that he had not performed the duty he might have performed. The one question that came to me over and over again while my hon. friend was speaking might be expressed in the old Latin words 'Cui Bono?' I could not but ask myself as he was speaking, what is the good of all this that he is saying? A man in the responsible position of my hon. friend, an old and tried statesman, one who has been a member of the government for years, is not generally supposed to occupy the time of a deliberative assembly unless he has something in view for the benefit of the public. The first half of his speech, taking up an hour or more, was devoted to detailing the hard usage which nature and Providence had dealt out to the western farmer during the last season. What remedy does my hon. friend propose? He cannot move a vote of want of confidence in nature and Providence. If he did it would not have much effect; he would not be able to turn nature and Providence out of office or change their action. He detailed with minute particularity the loss to the farmer in the west.

The first thing they lost was a slice of their expectations. For some reason or other they ploughed, they harrowed and sowed their seed, and came to the conclusion that if Providence was at all fair to them they ought to get 225 million bushels. It turned out they only got about 175 million bushels; there was a big slice off their expectations. Does my hon. friend blame the government for that? Worse still happened. Not sufficiently satisfied with cutting a slice off their expectations —not asking here whether their expectations were pitched too high or not—not satisfied with that, Providence continued to pour too much rain down, and give inlet to too little of the sun's rays. So the crop, instead of ripening as it should have, continued to grow rather than to ripen, refused to ripen, and the season was, we will say, a month late. Is my hon. friend going to move a vote of want of confidence in the government because the sun refused to shine with sufficient brilliancy, because the heavens refused to be economical of their stores, and were lavish during all that month? It is a thing for which nobody is to blame or can be blamed, and a thing which could not have been avoided, even if somebody had acted as somebody should have acted.

There was another point to be taken. Contrary to the wishes of the government, there occurred a row between the miners and the mine owners, and the miners refused to work without certain conditions, and the mine owners refused to come up to those conditions. Work stopped in the mines, and a thing which, in some respects, is just as bad as the loss of the harvest, threatened the people of the northwest. The very farmers and dwellers that my hon. friend is rightly concerned about, were threatened with a coal famine. My hon. friend knows that. Does he blame the government for that? The railways had to meet the situation; and, talk as you will about the railways, and rail against them as some people who are not over thoughtful, do, talk as you will and rave against them, the railways came to the aid of that situation in the northwest, and they took 600,000 tons and more of coal and spread it through all portions of the northwest, in order to provide against a possible famine and a possible freezing in consequence of a coal famine. That took a great deal of the available resources of the transport companies. They carried their cars, subject to delay, and with these heavy burdens of traffic, carried them to all parts of the northwest. When these were unloaded and were ready for transport out, the season was so far behind and the harvest was so unready for shipment, that there was not grain to be put into these cars to be taken back at that particular time. Does my hon. friend propose to move a vote of want of confidence in the government because of that occurrence and the consequent disruption of business?

Mr. OLIVER. In what direction was the coal hauled by these cars?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It was not hauled easterly. So I will allow my hon. friend to exercise his judgment to find in what direction it was hauled.

Mr. OLIVER. The coal was hauled westerly. In which direction was the grain hauled?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The largest part of the grain was hauled easterly.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend will have to be more than amusing in order to satisfy the House that hauling coal westward prevented the hauling of grain eastward at the same time.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend has made his rejoinder to that after I had stated the facts of the case. If the grain was not ready to be hauled it could not be placed in the cars for hauling.

Mr. OLIVER. Then the hauling of coal west did not have any effect on the case.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend does not know much about the transport conditions, if he does not know of that shortage of coal in the west, and if he does not know that the hauling of that coal resulted in disorganization and confusion to the railway traffic. He will only have to talk to railroad managers to understand that, but I think he does understand it. There was then another thing that operated very hardly. The harvest was late in coming to maturity and afterwards was late in coming to the point where it could be transported. The season was, as my hon. friend admitted, at least a month or a month and a half shorter for haulage purposes. Thus you had a larger output of grain to be hauled, and you had the hauling season a month or a month and a half later than it usually began, and consequently the railway was deprived of that much of the time for the transport of the grain. Now take all these things into consideration, and going no further than the time of the freezing of the lakes and the stoppage of lake traffic, the disadvantage that the railroads were under from these reasons was a great disavantage. Every man who wishes to talk of the question in a businesslike way, and fairly, must take that into account. Now what did the railroads do? My hon. friend read a list of cases, in one of which a car, loaded at a certain time, was 64 days before it got to its point of consignment; another that was loaded at a certain other point, was 113 days before it got to the place to which it was consigned. So you could read dozens, scores, and hundreds of abnormal cases. My hon. friend gave little credit to the far larger number of cases in which assistance was rendered to the extent of the railroads' power. Take the total number of cars that are being hauled on the railroads in the northwest, and put against them the whole list you have read of these abnormally long delays that took place, and when you bring it down to a percentage, these abnormal delays were a very small proportion indeed in comparison with the whole number of cars that were hauled.

Now what have the railways done in the way of hauling? I think it is well for us to look into that for a moment. I have here a statement of the shipments of grain at Fort William and Port Arthur and the receipts. If you take two years and compare them, you will find this result: In four months ending on the 31st December and 3 weeks of the month of January bringing it down to the 21st day of January in the season of 1911-12, you have the total receipts of sixty-five and a half million bushels of wheat at Fort William and Port Arthur; of all grain you had a total of 82,243,230 bushels. You had shipments at Port Arthur of wheat in that time of fifty three and a half million bushels and of all grain of sixty-six and a half million bushels. If you compare that with what was carried in the preceding year, you will find that the percentage is very much larger in the short season of 1911-12 than in the longer season of 1910-11.

Mr. TURRIFF. Were there not three railways hauling that number of cars this year as against two railways in all previous years?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There were three, but the third, although it took a certain quantity, took an inappreciable quantity as compared with the others.

Mr. TURRIFF. The Canadian Pacific railway was double tracked.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern railway did the bulk of the hauling and the Grand Trunk railway, while they did some, did not count very much in the total. What do you find? In 1910-11, for the five months ending January 31, 61,014 cars were hauled. In 1911-12, 96,829 cars were hauled. Take the first week ending February 7, 1911, and 356 cars were hauled; in the corresponding week of 1911-12, 3,021 cars were hauled. In the second week of February, 687 cars were hauled in 1910-11, and 3,131 in 1911-12. In the week ending the 21st February 1910-11, 999 cars were hauled, and in the week ending the 21st February, 1911-12, 3,888 cars were hauled. That is that 63,056 cars were hauled in the preceding year and 106,869 cars were hauled in the year that we are now passing through, about 70 per cent more than were hauled in the preceding year, and in a season which was at least six weeks shorter than the preceding season.

But, there is something more than that, and let us state it to be perfectly fair. It has been a long series of years since such a prolonged spell of absolutely strenuous weather prevailed in the west as prevailed through a portion of December and through the month of January of this year. Any one who knows the northwest and has seen railway traffic taken on there with the thermometer, 10, 15, 20 and 40 degrees below zero, knows that it is almost impossible to maintain traffic under those conditions. The best engine that you have and under the best management that you can get, under certain conditions of atmosphere there, has, perforce, to lie still. If she goes to work she blows herself to pieces, she so lames herself that she cannot do effective work. That must be taken into account as well and yet this six weeks of hard weather for which Providence must be held responsible and for which my hon. friend should not blame the government, had an important effect upon the haulage of grain. Notwithstanding the shorter season, notwithstanding the trouble in reference to the coal famine, notwithstanding the late harvest, notwithstanding this extremely cold weather we have the result that I have just read that the railway companies took out 106,000 cars, where, in a previous season, without these disabilities, they only hauled 63,000 cars. Blame the railway as much as you reasonably can but do put the other side at least when you are making up the whole account and let us see what lies to the credit of the transportation companies as well as the disadvantages under which they labour.

My hon. friend went on to say that not only were there late crops and a diminution in the expected crops, but that there was also a degradation in quality, and he makes an elaborate calculation as to how much the farmers of the northwest have lost by a depreciation of price owing to the poorer quality of the grain. The government is surely not responsible for the poorer quality of the grain. He counts that $20,000,000 have been lost by the farmers of the northwest for that reason alone. That is surely not a count that he can make up against the government or the administration. Then he goes on to calculate the shortage at $15,000,000, making $35,000,000, then he goes on to make a loss of $10,000,000 on account of depreciation by blockade and $6,000,000 on account of what may be the total loss, making altogether $51,000,000—an enormous loss if the calculation is correct, but not one cent of which loss can be attributed to the fault of any government or any administration, as it seems to me.

My hon. friend went on to draw this gloomy picture. What boots it to have drawn such a gloomy picture as this? It seems to be almost like a man who had suffered from wounds by accidents and who was laid up in the hospital; he gets out of it, gets back to his home, and is able to move fairly comfortably. Some kind friend knocks at the front door and when he goes to the front door the friend hauls him out, tears apart every one of his wounds, takes every plaster off the healing bruises, drags him out into the light of day, and shows him to his neighbours with his wounds uncovered and freshly opened, but he applies to them no balm, he pours no oil into them. What kind of a mind must a man have who expects to help his neighbour by that kind of treatment? So I thought and when my hon. friend was speaking I asked again the question: What good is coming out of all this? What man is to be helped by opening his wounds afresh? Does it give him greater hope, instil into him a greater spirit of optimism, put into him courage and vigour? I do not think it does. Does it help Canada as a whole to have that dull, dark picture brought again to view, not once, or twice but for the tenth or eleventh time? Surely we want as bright an atmosphere and as hopeful an outlook as possible. What in the world would become of us as a community if when a man got sick all sorts of physical troubles were portrayed to him. Would it help that man or the community or the country in which he lived? So my hon. friend was not doing any good to the farmer of the northwest and he was not doing any good to the reputation of Canada. He was not doing anything to help Canada's future prospects in the eyes of the world by portraying these dark pictures of how Providence maltreated and illused the farmer in the northwest.

But, he says, this present government do not seem to have alleviated the situation. What about himself and his own government? Had not he the Northwest Territories in his hand? Was not every man in the northwest his particular charge? He knew them, their paths, their trails, their incomings and their outgoings. He was the strong member of a strong government.

For fifteen years that government and for eight or nine years he, as a member of that government, had the northwest at heart, slept with it at night and walked with it by day; the country they had decried in preceding years they took to their bosom and made their pet child of it for fifteen years, and yet left it in this kind of incapacity which we are told of to-day. And the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) comes down like the wolf on the fold on a poor Minister of Trade and Commerce who has been here only four months, and he wants to know why I have not made everything right within that time. Well, my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) travelled through that northwest at a period very slightly anterior to the time when we came into power, did he not? He was travelling in the northwest for the benefit of the farmers of the northwest; of course he was. Did he not know that there were troubles; did he not know that Providence was not smiling, that the heavens were pouring out too much moisture, and that the sun was not doing its proper business for the farmer. He saw all these conditions about him, and what steps did he take? Coming down to one simple thing, that which would have done more to have alleviated this trouble and to have broken this blockade than anything else, would have been another line of railway out of the congested district down into that eastern portion of Canada. Why was it not built and ready? In 1903 my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) and his government undertook to build another outlet from the northwest. There was no other reason presented by them for that huge scheme of the Grand Trunk Pacific. It was to be another outlet for the west where the grain was piling up breast high, and there was but one single track to bring it out. Well, Canada put all her courage and all her energy into getting that other outlet; Canada put all her credit at the back of it, and you over there used it right royally, too. Canada put her good millions in your hands; what did you do with the money? You talked about making another outlet for the grain of the northwest, but you went down diligently and spent thirty million dollars of it between Quebec and Moncton where you did not expect to get a bushel of grain out from the northwest; you sunk a lot of it in the Quebec bridge, and you piled it up west of Quebec, but you diligently kept from building that portion of the road from Winnipeg to Cochrane, which, if you had built, would have given you an outlet. Canada was not to blame because she did not put money in your fists; you had all of it you should have had, and a mighty sight more. There was no lack of money and credit, and you gentlemen and my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), as one of you, were recreant to the bargain by which you got authority to build that road in that very essential part which should have been first built but which you neglected to build.

And the things you ought not to have done you diligently went on to do in a lavish manner. And so, ever since August of last year there has not been another pair of shining rails from the congested wheat district out to the east, and the reason is that these gentlemen opposite did not do their duty in their fifteen years of power. And now they come and they have—what shall I say—they come and they have the assurance to throw all this blame upon the present administration. Well, if this present administration stays in power not fifteen years but five years and does not do more to alleviate the conditions in the northwest than you did in your fifteen years of office,———

An hon. MEMBER. Turn us out.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, turn us out. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) after drawing that dark picture on the canvas, after having presented the wounds of his friends and patrons in the west, dragged them out and made them bleed anew, and then he comes to his point. And what is his point? It is: you should have less restriction and more reciprocity. What is the use of fighting over the events of last September in the attempt to find a remedy for what lies before us at the present time or in the near future. What ever gentlemen may think as to reciprocity being good or bad, the country never had as fair a chance at any subject as it had on the 21st day of last September. These gentlemen opposite brought forward their scheme the fruition of fifteen years of cogitation and incubation, and they exhibited it to this country and praised it up for at least nine or ten months. Then they went to the country with all their power and eloquence and force and they again exhibited that nostrum for the healing of Canada as ably as any Liberal party has ever presented its case in this country. And the people, without excitement, and after studying and weighing the question for eight, ten, or eleven months, came to vote and give their answer. Why may we not just as well for present purposes accept that answer in good faith and instead of bringing it out in this way, put our minds to some practical thought as to what can be done under the present circumstances? Do not let us cry for the moon when there is a piece of good cheese near at hand to satisfy our appetite. Now, Sir, this government is not going to cry for the moon, it is going to set itself to work to remedy as quickly as possible these grievances and evils such as they are in the northwest. Will hon. gentlemen opposite help us to do that or will they continue the somewhat dark practice they have lately entered upon; will they continue to harp back upon the differences between the east and the west; draw a gloomy picture of the travails and trials of the west, and in that way fan a feeling of discontent. Will they help us by some hopeful impulse and hopeful energy to portray the bright side of the question and will they set themselves with us to a helpful and hopeful attempt to solve the difficulties of the northwest? That is not to be accomplished by preaching cleavage between manufacturers and farmers; it is not to be accomplished by playing on the feelings of antagonism between capitalists and labouring men; it is to be accomplished only by a calm and frank and hearty acceptance of the situation, saying to us and with us: 'Here is the country's position; we will not make this a disunited Canada; we will further you in your efforts to make it a united Canada.'

The farmers of the west and the men engaged in the industries of the east are not aliens to each other, neither are they enemies tearing out each other's hearts. As the one prospers, the other prospers; the interests of both are intertwined; and we do better, all of us, to show the identity of interest between the two than to dwell upon imaginary differences. Does anyone pretend to tell me that a great railway company goes into that northwest and deliberately tries to block its development? Why, a man would be a fool who scared away or killed the trout in the stream before he let the fly fall upon the water; and the railway organization, if it lives at all and has profits, has to live out of the prosperity of the people through whose district it runs. It would be a fool not to do its best to develop that country, and in the large I believe the railway companies have done their best to develop it. I am not in favour of railway monopoly or railway control, and I believe the farmer, the storekeeper, the man of leisure, the man in the college or the school, every man, has a right to be protected by the central government against arbitrary or wrongful exactions by any man or any set of men. So I believe the railroads ought to be carefully supervised and controlled, and we are doing that. There never was so much supervision and control exercised over the transportation interests of this country as there is this very day, and there never was better accord between the transportation interests and the great interests of the shippers and producers than there is to-day. Not to say that they are all agreed on all points; but they are agreed on more points than they have been up to the present time, and our object should be to bring them to agree on still more points of confidence and helpfulness one towards the other. I am not a farmer, but I have a right to my opinion. I was born on a farm, I grew up on a farm, I have had interests connected with farming ever since I was a boy, and I have full sympathy with the farming community. But I say that our brothers and kindred in the northwest would do well to pay attention to the methods of cultivation and farming in the east. I have no sympathy with the miner in the shape of an agriculturist, who goes into the great northwest and takes hold of 2,000 or 10,000 acres of the bank that God has filled with rich vital energy, and makes it his sole purpose to mine every ounce of that out that he can by machinery and all the agencies that he can add to his power. I would like to see that man cut up into about 20 different men on the same amount of land; for I believe that ten farmers with 160 or 320 acres, and farming it well, will do much better than a smaller number of men who are mining out the energy and vitality of the country. The small farmer in the northwest has a good deal of ground for complaint against that class of farmer. His lot is made harder because that class of farmer exists there. A question was put to my hon. friend: suppose the eastern farmer has coarse grain, and it is injured by frost to a certain extent, he does not much feel the loss of that—why? Because he feeds it; he has something to feed it to, and he makes more by feeding it and selling the product than he would if he had sold the grain even if it had been good. And when we hear about these places in the west with their frozen grain, we ask, why do they not feed it, and the answer comes, they have nothing to feed it to. Should we not remedy that condition of affairs as soon as possible? And shall we remedy it in any other way than by constant teaching, constant advocacy and constant impulse along the right line? In this matter the Northwest must help itself, or it never can be best helped, by changing graudually but surely its method of farming, and introducing mixed farming—not putting all the eggs into one basket. Instead of going to outside countries to bring in all their food except grains from time to time, they have an inestimable opportunity there for the production of all that class of articles. That is one part of this problem of coarse grain. Then, I think we cannot put the question too strongly to the farmers of the west that they must look to the storing of their own grain to a certain extent. My hon. friend's argument seemed to have weight when he said, what is the use of having a granary and putting damp grain into it? But all the grain of the northwest is not damp grain. There is plenty of grain there which was not and is not damp, and which maybe would have paid the farmer still better if he had had a granary into which to put it and keep it. It would certainly make him the master to some extent. When he goes now with his grain and wants to sell it to the elevator man, and it has to be transported to Fort William and to stay there until the navigation season opens, he knows that he is paying storage for all those months, and he is paying a good slice more than the storage because of the lessened price that he gets from the man who buys it who has that storage possibility and contingency in view. A granary owned by that man at home, in which he would store that grain, would to my mind have two effects: it would make him a master of the situation to this extent, that if the street buyer did not give him what he thought he ought to have, he could put his grain into the storage granary and keep it.

He would be paying the cost of his granary, but if he had not the granary, and had sold his grain at the lower price, and with a discount on it for the storage for 4, 5 or 6 months, he would lose more in the second transaction, whereas he would gain if he had taken the first method of handling his grain. Now, I am not here to teach the farmers, but that seems to me to be sensible. I think it is sensible, and I think the older farmers in the west are proceeding along that line, and the sooner more of them do that, the sooner this problem will be solved. What else will help to solve that? It seems to me that it will be helped by extra storage outside of individual granaries, and farmers. That is what we should bend our energies to, and to that the government is devoting its energies.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the minister under t' impression that the farmers of the north west do not have granaries on their farms

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am under this impression, which I think is the true one: That the system pursued by the farmers in the west, is very different from the system pursued by the farmers in the east. The first thing an eastern farmer looks out for, is to get some place to stor his products until he makes a sale of them. Almost the last thing the ordinary settler in the west looks at, is to get some storage capacity for that which he raises. Now, that is my impression. Am I right?

Mr. OLIVER. No, you are absolutely wrong. If my hon. friend wishes to be correct, let me say to him that the first thing the farmer does in the northwest when h has wheat, is to provide some storage on his place for it. But the question is not the storage of the grain on his farm, it is a question of storage of the grain at the railway station. That is where the grain is piled on the streets.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend tries to persuade this House that a man who has a granary which can store his grain and keep it from the weather will, instead of storing it in that granary, draw it out and pile it up in a lean-to somewhere. Well now, that is less of a compliment to the western farmer than I would like to pay him. I do not believe the western farmer deserves a left handed compliment like that.

Mr. OLIVER. I am anxious to inform the hon. gentleman, and if he will not ac cept the information, I cannot help it.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is always well when information is handed out to you in that way, to exercise a little caution before you accept the information as being correct, and I am bound with what sense I am gifted, to discriminate in the kind of information that I am going to take in to digest, and I cannot take that kind of information. Now I do not want to keep this House any longer. There is one point that I have yet to mention. Here was the question that my hon. friend put to me: Why did you not compel the railways to make effective and so get into operation these reduced traffic rates to the south part of Canada before you did? Why didn't you move earlier? Well my hon. friend will recollect that his government kept in office so long beyond what they should have, that they prevented us from getting where we could find out the facts of the case until it became later than it otherwise would have been. My hon. friends did not vacate there until, I think it was the 6th, 7th or 8th. of October.

Mr. LENNOX. They hated to leave.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Now to get an effective rate on the arrangement with the United States through the Interstate Commerce Commission by the 10th of November, as my hon. friend said we should have, we would have had to make a movement several days before the 10th of October. Did my hon. friend who knew the conditions make that movement? When our railways deal with the railways to the south to arrange a rate and have it made effective, they have to deal with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission is that it will not grant an effective rate without thirty days' notice being given and that they adhered to. The Canadian Pacific railway on December 28, took up this matter with the United States connections, agreed upon a schedule of rates, and made application to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to make it effective within three days. The Interstate Commerce Commission refused to make it effective within three days. That was not my fault nor the fault of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The second application was made, and an urgent appeal went with it, and the permission was given to put rates into effect on short notice but to be confined to export through the United States and not for the market of the United States. That much was gained and it was gained as speedily as under the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it could be obtained. The other permissions were in the same way followed up and got just as soon as, with the time limit which was obligatory, they could have been got. The Interstate Commerce Commission, declined to allow the new rates and make them effective on short notice for consumption within the United States. They said: 'This thirty days' notice is for the purpose of a caution and warning, we do not think we can, within shorter notice than the legally authorized rules, do this thing, which will bring articles from Canada into competition with our own supply on this side of the line. Our people ought to have warning, and they ought to have what the law gives them, a thirty days' notice.

Mr. OLIVER. Did the Interstate Commerce Commission insist on a thirty days' notice on the application for rates for export only?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No. I have just stated that they refused at first when the proposition was made to them to put it into effect on three days' notice. Afterwards another request was made and an urgent appeal went with it. Then they gave permission to put the rates into effect but for export only.

Mr. OLIVER. How long after the second application was the consumption permission given?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think the permission, if my information here is right for export rates, went into effect on either the 20th or 23rd of January. My hon. friend has stated what was done with reference to the Canadian Northern railway, and, so far as I gathered he has stated the circumstances correctly. Afterwards, and in gradual order, as the notice was conformed with and the Interstate Commerce Commission gave their permission these rates came into effect, and on the 7th of March all of them will be effective not only for export but for domestic purposes, for consumption within the United States. So far as fair despatch, and urgency impelling to fair despatch, goes our railway companies, and I myself—not as an autocrat of those companies for I am not, neither is the government—with a sympathetic endeavour to hasten things as rapidly as possible, made every effort that could be made and these rates have gone into effect just as soon as they could have gone into effect. Unless, indeed, my hon. friend, knowing the circumstances very well before he went out, had started the ball rolling before he went out of office and so had antedated the action that took place afterwards. I am willing to take the responsibility that fairly falls to me, and the government is willing to take all the responsibility that fairly falls to it. In this matter, I think the government and I are not to blame. By the way, my hon. friend, I think, read some of the quotations for wheat, going to show that prices in the United States were much higher than in Canada. I have a telegram here which advises me that May wheat in Minneapolis is at present only four cents higher than May wheat in Winnipeg.

Now, although I have not fully covered all the ground, I think I have made a fair reply to my hon. friend. I come now for a moment, to ask what my hon. friend wants by his motion. I should think, by the speech which was made by the hon. member from Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) that the motion had more point to it than it seems to have. What is the first clause?

That the House has heard with satisfaction from the Minister of Trade and Commerce that as a result of a conference held by hon. member and at his request with representatives of the three railway systems operating in western Canada, these railways have lowered their rate, making the rate to Duluth and to Minneapolis the same as to Fort William and Port Arthur.

Is there any reason in this why a motion of want of confidence in the government should be moved? 'Heard with satisfaction'—the hon. gentleman and his friends are satisfied, and say they are satisfied. Then, what is all this bother about so far as this is concerned? And the second clause is this:—

And that as a further result of the conference mentioned, application has been made to the interstate commission of the United States for leave to file grain rates from the northwest down to Minneapolis and Duluth, and so ease the pressure in the congested districts by taking the grain away by more western routes down towards the south.

My hon. friend is pleased with this. Why then, a vote of want of confidence in the government so far as this is concerned with which he is so much pleased? Again:

The House is informed by the public press that the reduced rates as mentioned have been granted by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern railways on wheat and oats for export only.

So far, so good. He is pleased that this has gone——

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The hon. gentleman is not pleased that from 250 to 400 cars a day are leaving taking grain out of congested districts and carrying it down to storage? And not being pleased, he moves a vote of want of confidence in the government, because that is being done. And again:

As the reduction of rates so announced can only affect the situation to a limited degree, the House would urge upon the government the advisability of securing further consideration of the matter by the railway companies with a view to having the reduced rates apply to wheat and oats for grinding in bond and for consumption in the United States as well as for export.

The government has done it. The reduced rate goes into effect on March 7th, as soon as the time limit runs out. Is my hon. friend displeased with that? Is he moving a vote of want of confidence in the government because we, before he moved his resolution, took action in the matter? Why, this has been done; it is now in the way of fulfilment. It does seem to me that my hon. friend is somewhat belated. The bugaboo died, and it is a corpse he is exhibiting. The living bugaboo departed this life two or three weeks ago. In the name of common sense and philanthropy, I want to know why a motion of want of confidence is moved on any of these four counts. He has got it all, he gives thanks for it all, and yet he gets up and moves a motion of want of confidence because he has got what he wanted. And here is the last clause:—

The House would further urge that such means as may be practicable be taken by the government to have the through rates on barley and flax to Duluth and Minneapolis which became effective on January 23 reduced to the Fort William rate.

If my information is correct, the Fort William rate will rule upon this also after March 7.

Then, what is it that my hon. friend wants? I do not think there is any use of my belaboring this stiffened corpse-like bugaboo any longer. I would invite my hon. friend to withdraw it from the public gaze. Though it was a child of his own and dear to his heart, why the indecent spectacle of having the corpse dragged around?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Speaker, if anything could justify the motion of want of confidence it would be the frivolous manner in which—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). —my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) approaches a condition of real suffering in western Canada and the hilarity with which his frivolous remarks are hailed by the gentlemen behind him. I shall endeavour before I sit down, to show that we are dealing with a larger problem than the government, I think, have any proper conception of. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) asks about the speech of my hon. friend from Edmonton. 'Cui bono', Well, the answer seems to me to be on the surface. If he means that this debate cannot do much good in regard to the present condition of affairs, one may agree with him. But there will be other seasons, So the problem is much larger than my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has yet seen it to be; and if, out of this debate the government can be guided to some better conception of the problem with which they are dealing, and if suffering be saved in future seasons, Canada will have reason to be grateful to the people who have raised this debate and have taken part in it in a serious way, however little she may think of those who consider the present economic conditions of western Canada a matter for levity, hilarity and fooling.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer) My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) went on from his Latin query to give an excellent example of what I will venture, with due deference, to call confused thinking. In making the wealth of a nation there are two elements: One is production and the other is the disposal of the produce. As my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) pointed out Providence and nature had a great deal to do with production but the government has to do with the disposal of the produce. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) was dealing with the disposal of the produce; and by a turn of sophistry of which my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce used to be a master—we have not had so much of it from him while he has been on the government benches—he proceeds to distract the attention of his easily misled followers from the question of disposal for which he is responsible to the question of production, and he says to my hon. friend from Edmonton: Do you blame the government because Providence and nature have not been as kind to you as you had hoped?.

It is my hon. friend himself who blamed Providence, and yet he tried to shift the attack from the government for their failure to dispose of the produce, to Providence and nature, forsooth, for some breakdown in their methods. Well, that is marvellous sophistry, and I hope my hon. friend, before he goes to sleep, will be proud of it. Now if his economical thinking was a little halting, I must say his surgery is bad in the extreme. He turned to the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) and he says: What is the use of taking the dressings off the wound? Well, I think I may speak to him on this subject; I will not say I may give him lessons even in thinking, but certainly I have a right to talk to him as a surgeon, and I must tell him that the proper way to treat a wound is not to keep the dressings on it until it stinks and the patient dies. That is the kind of medical metaphor with which my hon. friend pleases his friends. I am tempted to try a little Latin myself. There is an old Latin proverb which says: Parvum parva placent—little things please little minds. Then, of course, when my hon. friend was in the vein of bad logic he could not get off the use of the tu quoque. He says that my hon. friend has slept with the west. Wonderful discovery. He says, you have walked with the west. A very original idea. But he says, what did you do to relieve the evils? We provided a remedy, which you misled the country to turn down. Then my hon. friend goes on to say, what reformatory steps ought to be taken? And he gets back to his old calling of an instructor of the farmers. He says, you have got to improve your methods of cultivation. If we improve our methods of cultivation what will be one of the first results? Increased crops, more grain to dispose of. So my hon. friend's method of treating a grain blockade is to double the amount of grain he has got to handle. He has got more to handle now than he can take care of, and his recommendation to the western farmers is, improve your methods of cultivation, double your crop, and then you will get rid of your grain. Then of course mixed farming came in. Well, now the difficulty with my hon. friend, as with some others who have spoken here is that they really do not know the west. There are places in Saskatchewan where you cannot water your stock within seven miles of your farm buildings. In addition to that, when men go into the west they go for the purpose of tilling large quantities of land, and taking advantage of that very wheat production which my hon. friend is condemning here, which is the secret of Canada's prosperity to-day, the secret of the growth of the cities of which you are so proud. Then my hon. friend went on to give other directions to the farmers. He says they have got to store their grain. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) gave the same advice. Well, now I speak with some knowledge on this question, and I want to tell my hon. friends in all good faith that I have been living ten years among those people, I have been endeavouring to make my livelihood upon the western lands, and I want to assure them that when men go into that western country they have to make a careful reckoning of cents and dollars before they undertake any expenditure whatever. I do not know the owner of a homestead who would not be anxious to improve his buildings, improve his dwelling house, I do not know one in my own neighbourhood. But I know that a large number of them have a great anxiety to keep out of debt. They want to get along in the world. I intend to preach this doctrine to eastern Canadians, because a large number of eastern Canadians are only removed two generations from the time when their own forefathers were going through the same trials and difficulties that the western pioneers are going through to-day. To tell a man who has got to his last dollar that he must build barns is rather an unfeeling way to approach this problem. I make that personal appeal with an intimate knowledge of the conditions. But I want to go a step further. My hon. friend says, store the grain. How far will that carry you? We do not raise grain to store it, but we raise grain to sell it. We raise it to get it to its final repository, which is the stomach of a human being, either in this country or some other country. If you store your grain, and go on and break up your soil and produce more for next year, does my hon. friend not see that he simply moves his problem six months back, and that the next year things will be worse than they are now? The farmer cannot build a granary in every field. I think that is a fair way of looking at it.

But there is an additional reason under this head, why I think this is an absolutely insufficient and paltry remedy to offer to the farmer. The farmer has to sell his grain in the fall, because, apart from the mere matter of a living, he needs the money to pay his way. What is the use of telling a farmer who is being worried by the representative of a firm of implement dealers in Toronto for a high price for his implements, and who has interest to pay on that price to store his grain? The implement agent does not say that; he says: here is your note, can you settle it? Between the implement dealer who says: here is my note, can you settle it? and my friend who says: store your grain, the farmer is in a pretty tight position. I am the farmer, I feel that difficulty. I hope that my hon. friend, when he talks about barns and storehouses—and he reminds me of the foolish man in the Scripture when he does it—will deal with this point, and that he will tell me how the farmers of western Canada are going to get out of this difficulty.

I do not know that there was a great deal in the speech of the hon. gentleman further than what I have already dealt with, but I am far from having said all I want to say on this problem, because when I rose I promised to endeavour to show to the government that it was a bigger problem than they have any comprehension of. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said: What is the use of fighting the battles of last September again? He re-echoed a remark in the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), and it had been re-echoed already by the hon. member for Vancouver from the maiden speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White), in this House. I do not want to fight any battle of this life over again except in so far as I can learn lessons from it for the future battles of this life. I take it that it is the duty of the government, who are responsible for dealing with the affairs of the country, to solve this problem. We are all alike in being anxious to do the best we can for Canada. I would like to say to my hon. friends that they might happen to have on this reciprocity question a change of heart and a change of mind. I know that none of us can teach the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce anything about the great principles of politics. He knows, if any man knows in this House, that, as Mr. Asquith said the other day, there is no finality in politics. It is excusable in the hon. member for Vancouver, it is excusable in an inexperienced member like the Minister of Finance, to say that reciprocity is dead. That is the kind of political opinion we expect from such inexperienced quarters, but I know that, like Mr. Asquith, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will say that there is no finality in politics. We know that home rule was killed twenty-five years ago by the defection of a certain number of the followers of a great leader, but the same slaughterers are having all they can do to hold down the corpse to-day. I have seen these corpses before being dragged about, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce put it, and I have seen them rise up and overwhelm the slayers. Is there anybody who would say that home rule is dead to-day? Yet, it was killed twenty-five years ago. I should not wonder if my hon. friend resuscitates this very corpse, and I believe he is brave enough to do it, yet if he sees that it is the best thing for Canada and for the world. I am going to try and show him that there may be more in it than he thinks.

We will leave these corpses and party questions on one side if you like, but let me take up the question of the economic condition of western Canada. I want to endorse what my hon. friend from Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) said that this is not a party question. It is not a western question; it is a Canadian question. From the national point of view I believe that there was an honest note of regret in the last election. We have heard many explanations of it, but, after all, what was the cause of the victory in the last election? We have been establishing Canadian clubs, we are growing, we are a young nation, youth is naturally sensitive and touchy, and an appeal was made to the national sentiment, which was victorious. But, when you have established the consciousness of nationhood you have not settled your problem. When you have established a young man's consciousness upon his having grown to manhood, you have not settled this problem. Those of us who have reached middle age know that he is just about tackling the problems of life. You have to settle the question of Canadian nationhood, you have to assume a nation's responsibility and discharge a nation's duties. That is what you proclaim yourself a nation for. Amongst the primary duties of a nation is that of solving the very problem against which we are fighting in western Canada to-day. The problem is there after all. The sentiment has passed for us. I have thought all good, I believe all good, but the economic problem remains. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has disclosed a consciousness of that fact, and while the economic problem remains, who can proclaim that reciprocity is dead? That is a prophecy—and I have given the grounds in a few words for my disbelief in that prophecy. John Morley said that the only thing that you can do with a prophet is to disbelieve him. But, you cannot disbelieve that the wheat is rotting on the prairie and that the people are suffering. If you are responsible for the government of the country, you are responsible for the welfare of these people, and yet you have not finally met that problem. What is the problem? The problem is the disposal of the produce of our magnificent western country. As my hon. friend from Lethbridge so well pointed out, it is not a western problem but it is a Canadian problem. The moment the west suffers the east suffers in sympathy and the prosperity and wealth of the whole of Canada decline. The position is a worse one, politically, for my hon. friends opposite, because we had a plan for the disposal of this produce. That plan has been turned down in the meantime, and our function under the constitution of this country is to say to the government: What are your plans? You defeated our plan, it is defeated pro tem. Now, what are your plans? This is a serious question for the government politically, because the responsibility at once comes to their door. The material is being produced, the people are there and they are coming, we are told, this spring still in greater numbers to find homes, till the soil and produce more. What are your plans for the disposal of what they produce? That is the serious problem that the government have to consider from a political standpoint. But, from a national standpoint—and I shall always wish to view such public questions in that way—the question is still more serious because, if you continue to advertise Canada as a splendid field for immigration in the United Kingdom and people come in as a result of the advertising carried on by the railway companies and by the government, you are, if you continue to do that and do not solve the problem of the disposal of the material that these people produce, engaged in a pitiless campaign, and you are in a fair way to make Canada the laughing stock of the world. I pointed out, in speaking on the immigration estimates, the other evening, to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, that in a recent debate we had an admission from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which after all was a serious admission, and one which was scarcely calculated to produce the tone of frivolity in which he mainly spoke to-night. What was his admission? He said: I am bound to admit that for the moment production has outrun transportation in western Canada. That is your problem. Men are on the farms, they are producing the material and for the moment it cannot be hauled out of the country. That is the admission of the hon. member (Mr. Foster); that is the problem that has to be solved. And, when I called attention to that problem, the Minister of the Interior answering presumably for the government upon the point, said he was not so pessimistic as I was, but, I am a confirmed optimist as a matter of fact. And he went on to say: We are having two lines of transcontinental railway built and we are also building the Hudson Bay railway. And that was his solution of the problem. He had some wonderful peregrinations in connection with the Hudson Bay route; he talked about some part of the waters up there being navigable for twelve months in the year, and of going to cross some portion of the bay and connecting with another railway; I really had not sufficient knowledge of geography to follow the hon. gentleman's movements. But I want to ask this, and I ask it in all seriousness from my right hon. friend and his colleagues in the government, is that all the answer they have to make for the solution of this difficulty. I need not point out that as an immediate solution it is a perfectly farcical answer, because it is no answer at all. The Hudson Bay railway after all may be an interesting speculation; it may be an interesting road for grain some time in the future, but for the immediate relief of the conditions in western Canada today it is no answer whatever. Any way, is it an ultimate answer? What about the ultimate relief, and what about the ultimate development of Canada in that way? That resolves itself into this question: When you have your two lines of Transcontinental built and your Hudson Bay railway built then you say we will be better able to transport the grain of western Canada. Where would you go? To the seaboard of course, and when you get it to the seaboard where will you send it? Well, during the last campaign these gentlemen opposite having declared they would have no truck or traffic with Yankees, of course the answer from them comes: We will deal with the old country. Well, I am not talking for this season; I am talking for the future of the country of which I have the honour to be a citizen. We are going to send it to the old country, they tell us. Well, Mr. Speaker, the old country is well known to be a country with an excellent appetite; they eat four and sometimes five times a day, but they don't get up in the night to eat. Their appetite is good, but it is not infinite, and we happen to be able to reduce to figures what the result will be. We have got our transportation running now, in the imagination of the Minister of the Interior, we will say; we have got our grain to the seaboard and we have Britain as the object to which we are sending it. After all, we can reduce to figures the exact amount of wheat that Britain can take in any given year, and as a matter of simple arithmetic Britain takes less than two hundred million bushels of wheat from the whole world in twelve months. She takes it from twelve different countries of the world. It is impossible by any fiscal arrangement (even if you could make such a fiscal arrangement with Britain), it is impossible by any fiscal arrangement whatsoever for Canada to capture that wheat market; quite impossible. It is particularly impossible at this moment when the apostle of protection in Britain, Mr. Bonar Law, has just delivered a long speech on the Address, and never once mentioned tariff reform. It is impossible with both parties in Britain practically united upon a free trade basis. But it is economically impossible that Canada should ever capture the whole of that market and for this reason: that when Britain sends a load of Sheffield hardware to the Argentine she is not going to send, out of sympathy, that ship right up to the Hudson bay to get a load of Canadian wheat; no, she will load with Argentine wheat, and so Britain will be found to take a certain amount of wheat from some of these other dozen countries for many a long year to come. But, if we did capture the whole market, what we could supply to Britain is what she could take of wheat and that is two hundred million bushels annually. Now, I think my hon. friend sees the problem he is up against. Is this the Canada that this government is seeking to build, a Canada which will have a surplus of two hundred million bushels of wheat and that only. If these gentlemen are the big Canadians of whom we hear, surely they are the smallest Canadians, economically considered that one can have any conception of. Why, it is estimated that in a very few years, if you have immigration coming in and if you have development going on, and if you have cultivation going on at the rate which it has been going on for some years past we shall have to dispose of a billion bushels of wheat more than we need in Canada. There is not a Canadian on the other side of the House who dare contradict that prophecy, because if he did contradict it he would place himself inevitably in opposition to the confirmed optimism of this grand young country. Now, when you get your billion bushels of wheat to dispose of, Britain's capacity is only two hundred million bushels and the problem I have been bringing home to my frivolous old friend is: what are you going to do with the other eight hundred million bushels. I listened with interest to his impassioned appeal for union between the East and West. I think he will do me the credit that I have never uttered a word in his hearing in this House which did not resound with the same sentiment. There is not a particle of dust in the British Empire that I would sever, politically speaking, from another particle of dust in the British Empire. I believe that the British Empire is the greatest engine that the world has seen up to now for the propagation in this world of the principles of freedom and justice, and I would not lift my little finger to break or hurt that empire in any way or to sever the sections of the integral portions of that empire. But when we are talked to in that way as to the necessity of maintaining a proper connection between the East and the West I want to say in conclusion that the only way you will maintain it is in the way my hon. friend indicated: by tackling manfully these problems, and if my hon. friends opposite are to be allowed to imagine all they like about building a few railroads I ask them to extend their imagination to the production of some hundreds of millions of more bushels of wheat than Britain can possibly take, and then I ask them where they are going to turn for a market. Consistency has been described as the last infirmity of noble minds—let me concede to my hon. friends all the nobleness of mind they like but I say to them: for goodness sake don't hang on to the last infirmity.

Look into the history of your own party and see if there is not yet time to turn in the one direction in which you can turn for a ready and larger market for your products. We can only solve the problem of east and west by the sincere spirit of the closing words of my hon. friend. Now, I want to put this to my hon. friends in the east: if they were western farmers, would their attachment to the east be increased by your saying to them: produce your wheat, it is a beautiful thing to grow wheat, sell it if you can after we have built the Hudson Bay railway and have made a way out for it through the icebergs to a limited market; but do not sell it to the Yankees; they eat wheat and will pay a good price for it, but they should not eat Canadian wheat; do not sell it to them. If you were a farmer in the west would you be bound by ties of affection to the people of eastern Canada if they said: we are going to put all the obstacles possible in the way of your selling your produce, and at the same time we are going to take the last cent out of you by preventing you from buying where you like? I do not think anything can shake the loyalty of the west, and I want to say that there is no section of the people of the west who are more loyal than our recent American immigrants. I want to pay that testimony to them. Nine out of ten of them say: we prefer the laws of this country to the laws of the United States, and to that extent they are loyal; but their loyalty will not be strengthened by the kind of treatment I have described. You cannot show your affection for a man by hanging around his neck with one arm and rifling his pocket with the other. It is not a square deal to tell us, You must be restricted where you sell and equally restricted where you buy. This question will have to be carefully looked into. I really think from the careful way in which my hon. friend is following me that he is taking this thing seriously, and I have good hopes that he will look into this question thoroughly. Let him throw consistency to the winds, as all the great statesmen have done. Sir Robert Peel went into power in 1841 pledged to maintain protection, and in 1846 repealed the corn laws; and the people of Huddersfield erected to his memory a monument which I walk around every time I visit that town and read the inscription on it. Let the hon. gentleman throw consistency to the winds and deal squarely with this problem, and then you will see a prosperous Canada, a Canada that will be the marvel of the world because I think that with a proper economic system and good government it is destined to be the greatest nation on earth.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has treated the House to a dissertation the major portion of which consisted of platitudes uttered with a loud voice and in a bumptious manner that rejoiced hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who mistook noise for argument. The hon. gentleman, during the course of his somewhat discursive speech, the best portion of which consisted of quotations from John Morley on Gladstone, took occasion to read to this House a lesson on parliamentary ethics. The hon. gentleman seemed to find fault with a harmless and innocent remark that was made on this side of the House while he was speaking. The words used were, 'go easy,' surely harmless, innocent words, that one would think would not call forth the diatribe that we heard from the hon. member. The hon. member told us about the mother of parliaments. It strikes me, judging from the usual condition of the hon. member for Red Deer, that he is much better acquainted with the purlieus of Whitechapel and Seven Dials than he is with Westminster.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Everybody knows that Whitechapel is a district where you will find the lowest class that inhabits the city of London, and I think it is an injurious remark for any hon. gentleman to suggest that another hon. member of this House is fitted to be an inhabitant of those purlieus.

Mr. SPEAKER. The remark was scarcely within the amenities of the debates of parliament, and I would ask the hon. member (Mr. Fowler) to withdraw it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr Speaker, just a moment——.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, chair.

Mr. FOWLER. You will permit me to say that many very good people, actuated by the very best motives, go into the purlieus of Whitechapel.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is only making the offence worse attempting to justify the remark. I think it would be more appropriate to withdraw it.

Mr. FOWLER. In deference to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, if I have made use of any remark which is unparliamentary, which if it were not for your ruling I would not consider so, I will of course come within the parity rule and withdraw the remark. But at the same time, I have a right to say this, that the personal remarks made by the hon. member for Red Deer were quite as injurious, as far as I was concerned, as anything I said about him. The hon. gentleman has told us that he himself is a farmer; and, Sir, if any argument were needed to back up the statement made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that a considerable part of the difficulty in the country was due to bad farming, the statement made by the hon. member for Red Deer that he is a farmer would amply supply that argument. It is a remarkable thing that men who have been failures in every other sphere of life, hearing of those fertile lands in the west have gone there hoping to achieve success, and that is one of the ills that this country is suffering from at the present time. I will not say that there are not other ills. I will not say that the transportation facilities are yet sufficient to carry out the products of the country. But it does seem to me that what the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out is absolutely true, that the fault cannot lie with the government, who have not had either time or opportunity to take this matter into proper consideration and provide the necessary remedy.

But, Sir, the fault does lie at the door of hon. gentlemen opposite, and mainly and principally at the door of the ex-Minister of the Interior, the man who moved this resolution. Because. Sir, charged as he was to look after the interests of the people of the west he took no steps whatever to provide the necessary remedy for evil which he never saw impending but which was rapidly approaching. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) in dealing with this matter can only hark back to the old threadbare subject of reciprocity, a subject which was threshed out in this country from end to end, and which the people of Canada voted against with such almost surprising unanimity on the 21st of September last. The hon gentleman is not original at all. He never makes a speech in this House in which he does not discuss the question of reciprocity. That seems to be the only thing on which he can talk with any lucidity at all, that is the very thing which is troubling him most. The hon. gentleman also says: You cannot expect Britain to take your grain no matter what means of transportation you may supply, no matter how you may increase the facilities for carrying that grain to the markets of the world. Then what country is going to take it? 'Oh, the United States'. Mr. Speaker, the lack of knowledge the hon. gentleman has with regard to farming, the lack of knowledge that he has with regard to parliamentary ethics is to be regretted. The same hon. gentleman quoted my allusion to Whitechapel and was so lacking in proper respect to members of this House as to refer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as 'My frivolous old friend'. The hon gentleman holds himself at all times as conforming to the proper parliamentary attitude as observed in the Mother of parliaments, where they almost fought across the benches on one occasion a few months ago. We have not yet come to that in this House, although with the example of the hon. member for Red Deer before us I do not know to what length we may ultimately go. Well, Sir, he has told us that the great remedy. the sovereign panacea, the cure-all for the ills from which the people of western Canada are suffering to-day, is to send their grain away to the United States which to-day exports more wheat than we in Canada raise altogether. That is the sort of remedy this great and wonderful statesman from—I will not say Whitechapel because you Mr. Speaker, have said that I should not use the term—but this great and wonderful statesman this modern miracle worker in statesmanship is able to supply to the people of western Canada. It seems to me that nothing could be more absurd, robbed as I say of its noise and its quotations from Gladstone, than the speech we have listened to to-night from the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. OLIVER. I have the right to close the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, this is not a substantive motion.
