HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 30, 1974

FIRST SESSION—THIRTIETH PARLIAMENT

[English]

The twenty-ninth parliament having been dissolved by proclamation on Thursday, May 9, 1974, and writs having been issued and returned, a new parliament was summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Monday, September 30, 1974, and did accordingly meet on that day.

Monday, September 30, 1974

This being the day on which parliament is convoked by proclamation of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada for the dispatch of business, and the members of the House being assembled:

Alistair Fraser, Esquire, the Clerk of the House, read to the House a letter from the assistant secretary to the Governor General informing him that the Honourable Bora Laskin, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Administrator of the Government of Canada would proceed to the Senate chamber to open the first session of the thirtieth parliament of Canada on Monday, the thirtieth of September, at ten thirty o'clock.

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Members of the House of Commons:

It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate chamber, when the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate,

and Members of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency, the Administrator of the Government of Canada does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law, but this afternoon, at the hour of three o'clock, His Excellency, the Administrator of the Government of Canada will declare the cause of calling this parliament.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

MR. JAMES JEROME, MEMBER FOR THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF SUDBURY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Fraser, at this point—

An hon. Member: The same old bunch!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The same old bunch, Mr. Fraser, but a little more numerous this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: At this point in the opening of the thirtieth parliament we are engaged in the election of a Speaker. Few people outside this House realize how basic the choosing of this officer is to the functioning of this institution and to the course of our mandate for the next few years.

The qualities which a Speaker is supposed to possess are truly formidable. I doubt that anyone outside of politics would consider for a moment stepping into a position which demanded so much. My predecessor, the late Lester B. Pearson, when nominating a Speaker, described his qualities in the words of Socrates. Referring to the requirements for a judge, the Greek philosopher said: "Four things belong to a judge; to hear courteously, to answer wisely, to consider soberly and to decide impartially."

[Translation]

It is fitting that the Speaker of the House of Commons should seek inspiration from these wise words. At various times in our history, there have always been some exceptional men to take on the very difficult task of conducting with fairness and self-control the proceedings of colleagues with very decided and widely different political convictions. We are all aware of the courage and the wisdom, the experience and the sense of humour that this task requires.

Regardless of his background and of his political affiliation, the designated candidate is in duty bound to serve the members of parliament from all areas and of all political parties. This duty is fundamental.

On the other hand, during the proceedings of the House, members of parliament are equally in duty bound to cooperate fully and entirely with the Speaker, and I am certain that all join with me in wishing great success to the holder of this position. During three parliaments, Mr. Lucien Lamoureux served the House of Commons with the greatest distinction, in a most polished manner and with remarkable firmness.

It is difficult to find all these qualities in members of either official linguistic group. However, we always do, which undoubtedly proves the value of our system.

It is therefore with great pleasure and pride that I move that Mr. James Jerome be Speaker of the House during this parliament.

Mr. Jerome is a member of the government party. According to tradition, the Prime Minister designates the candidate to the position of Speaker and his nomination is moved according to the traditional rules.

Mr. Jerome is particularly well-prepared for the office of Speaker. He has practised law and during the last few years, he has spent a great deal of time looking into delicate social problems in his constituency of Sudbury. Not only has he applied himself to serve his constituents better, but he has also tried to participate more fully in parliamentary life by striving systematically and successfully to learn the official language which was not his mother tongue.

He has acquired the sensitivity, the shrewdness that can be called the sense of Parliament. Indeed, since his election in 1968, he has followed very closely the proceedings of the House. For two years he was Parliamentary Assistant to the President of the Privy Council, the Government House Leader. All hon. members will no doubt agree with me that such an experience is in itself an excellent preparation for the responsibilities of the Chair.

But Mr. Jerome's contribution as Chairman of the Justice Committee was also most remarkable. In that capacity he demonstrated not only his legal expertise and political ability, but also his fair-mindedness in difficult situations, where no partisan pressure could make him alter the decisions he felt were well-founded.

[English]

The Speakership of the chamber is serious business. Naturally, the cornerstone is fair play. But it also requires toughness, equanimity, compassion and the ability to laugh, not just with others, but at oneself. Anyone who has enjoyed the companionship of Mr. Jerome in his years in parliament knows his ability to find a spark of laughter in even the most tense and difficult times.

Mr. Fraser, I frankly look upon this parliament as a challenge and as an opportunity. I have asked my colleague, the leader of the House, to explore realistically with his counterparts in other parties ways in which we can smooth out the procedures of the House of Commons to make them more meaningful both to the members and to the public. I sincerely hope we can work together toward an accommodation. I know there are divisions among us as to the route we should be following. I know that one of them concerns the concept of a permanent Speaker. My objections to the idea are common knowledge and have been for years, and they have been shared by some hon. gentlemen in the opposition. But in the process of studying possible reforms, the government does not have a closed mind on any of them, and these propositions can be discussed in specific ways in the appropriate parliamentary committee.

However, today my thoughts and intentions are directed toward an individual whom I strongly hope all members of the House will support, knowing as we do the strains and challenges that will accompany his acceptance.

Mr. Fraser, it is a privilege for me to move, seconded by the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) that James Jerome, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Sudbury do take the Chair of this House as Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Fraser, at this time I should like to say a few words to the House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) invited me to second the motion he has just put before the House. I should like to say a few words in explanation of the fact I declined to second the motion. I fully agree with the Prime Minister and other members of the House about the importance of this great office. I have attached great importance to the achievement of what I call, perhaps imprecisely, a permanent Speaker, a Speaker who continues in office regardless of changes of government, a Speaker who is completely free of partisan politics once he is elected to this House by the House.

For this reason, I asked my party's association in the constituency of Stormont-Dundas not to present any candidate against Mr. Lamoureux at the 1968 election. Following his election, I was honoured and pleased to second his appointment.

The agreement concluded with the Stormont-Dundas association was designed to find other means to succeed in appointing a permanent Speaker and it provided the association with the right to choose a candidate in a new election.

[English]

Between the election of 1968 and the election of 1972, the Prime Minister and I had discussions to explore an alternative method of achieving what I had in mind, and what others had in mind, which was a method alternative to that by which the associations in the Speaker's constituency would be denied the right to nominate a candidate. These discussions were not fruitful, much to my regret. Mr. Lamoureux ran in the election of 1972. He was opposed by a candidate from my party. Mr. Lamoureux ran as an independent and was elected. Following the election of 1972, the Prime Minister discussed with me a choice of Speaker and indeed a Deputy Speaker. There was no difficulty and we reached an understanding and agreement. I felt this was a substantial step forward, and compensated in part at least for the earlier failure to agree on a method of securing a permanent Speakership and a method of completely removing the Speaker from partisan politics on his election.

Following the election of July and prior to the calling of this session I read in the press that the Prime Minister would propose Mr. Jerome's name as Speaker; but there was no consultation, no prior knowledge, despite any suggestions in the press to the contrary. There is no need here to go into the details or to take you, Mr. Fraser, or the House through a controversy between the Prime Minister and myself following the announcement of the Prime Minister's intention. There was no consultation. In my judgment, in the absence of such consultation, this was a substantial step backward from the position we had achieved through 1968 and 1972.

Mr. Fraser, I can hardly exaggerate my personal disappointment at this turn of events. In these circumstances, as I told the Prime Minister, I could not second the nomination of Mr. Jerome. Mr. Jerome, of course, will receive the full co-operation of myself and members of my party as he discharges his difficult and very important responsibilities of presiding over this House. I hope, as the Prime Minister has indicated here this morning, that we can again take up the question of achieving a permanent Speakership totally removed from partisan politics once a Speaker has been chosen for this high office by this House.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Fraser, at the outset I am tempted to make quite clear that we were not consulted in this process either. In the past 18 months or so, we had grown accustomed to being consulted on a number of matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps this is a sign of the times. On a more serious note, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I should like to indicate our support for the nomination of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome). In assuming this high office he is, of course, following an exceptional man, Mr. Lamoureux, who combined to a great degree the exceptional qualities of wit, intelligence and impartiality. It is our hope that in assuming his duties the hon. member for Sudbury will maintain those high standards established by Mr. Lamoureux. We wish him well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Fraser, I am very glad to see that I am recognized by most members as the leader of the Social Credit Party.

The right hon. Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) proposition is agreeable to us since the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) is a conscientious man. Indeed he hails from northeastern Ontario, a region neighbouring mine, northwestern Quebec. Although we have not travelled much together, I know the hon. member for Sudbury well enough to believe in his impartiality, the prime quality of a Speaker.

We have been spoiled for the past 12 years by Mr. Lucien Lamoureux, an excellent Speaker. I would hope that the hon. member for Sudbury will follow in his steps, that he will be impartial and will acknowledge the existence or the presence of each member of this House. As was said by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) a moment ago, I regret that the Prime Minister chose not to consult the representatives of the other political parties in this House on the nomination of the Speaker, as it is the custom to consult the Leader of the Official Opposition.

We nonetheless recognize the merit of the nomination proposed by the Prime Minister. We wish the hon. member for Sudbury a long and successful stay in the Chair and few annoyances from the members and the parties. We have no intention of being troublesome, unless it is necessary, yet we will not carry things too far.

We are happy with this nomination and, as I have said, we wish the new Speaker many satisfactions in his new role.

● (1110)

[English]

The Clerk of the House declared the motion carried in the affirmative, nemine contradicente, and James Jerome, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Sudbury, duly elected to the Chair of the House.

Mr. Jerome was conducted from his seat in the House to the Speaker's chair by Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau and Hon. Mitchell Sharp.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members, I beg to return my humble acknowledgements to the House for the great honour you have been pleased to confer on me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

If those words sound familiar, it is because they have been said here by Speakers for the last 100 years or so, and for many hundreds of years in other parliaments. Perhaps it is an appropriate way for every Speaker to begin, because if you start to tinker and tamper with the traditional way of doing things, the lesson you learn is that no matter how you try to modify or improve tradition it has a certain value which perhaps you did not fully appreciate when you first looked at such a simple sentence. When you try to put it in your own words it does not come out as well, no matter how you try to change it; so perhaps there is a lesson that some of the traditions are more than just traditions but have other values attached to them. Perhaps that is a proper subject for a new Speaker to think about as he begins his task.

There is honour, of course, in being a member of the House of Commons. It is an honour that we all share, a very special honour conferred upon us by those who are the final judges in our democratic system. It is a great honour to be a member of the House of Commons, but to receive a favourable judgment from the members themselves is an even greater honour which perhaps only the members of the House of Commons can fully understand. Sometimes the work we do here appears to be a battle for individual advantage or party advantage. But all of us realize that what is done here is extremely important work on behalf of all the people of Canada, not only for their individual rights but, in addition to that, is an example to all the people of Canada that change must be brought about through the process of law and order in a proper, democratic way. So, every meeting we hold here should be an example to our people.

To be given the honour to preside over these important meetings, and obviously the session cannot begin unless somebody takes on the role of Speaker, is an honour greater than any that has been conferred upon me at any time, and greater than anything my imagination could have conceived might happen to me in the future.

With the honour, of course, goes an obligation to do the job to the best of my ability, and, it goes without saying, to give it my best efforts at all times. At this moment I want to assure hon. members on both sides of the House, lest there be any doubt about it, that I place the fulfillment of this obligation ahead of every other consideration. Whether it be a question of party politics, personal considerations, friendships or otherwise, this obligation must at all times come first. I will fulfil the role as best I can. I will not always make everybody happy. However, if I can carry out this role to the best of my ability without losing the respect and the good will that you have extended to me at the start, because there could be no beginning without that, then I will finish the role a happier man than I began it.

[Translation]

I would like to thank all the hon. members, and particularly the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). Upon undertaking as important a task as this, it is absolutely essential that one have the support and the good will of all the hon. members, and if I manage to perform or endeavour to perform my task without losing the respect of my colleagues, not only shall I be happy, I shall also be proud.

[English]

I again thank all hon. members for their very kind remarks, and for the great honour that they have conferred upon me in choosing me to be their Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITTING SUSPENDED

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this sitting be suspended until three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the right hon. member. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: This House stands suspended until three o'clock this afternoon.

At 11.20 a.m. the sitting was suspended until 3 p.m. this day.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at three o'clock.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's secretary announcing that His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada would proceed to the Senate chamber at three o'clock on this day for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the pleasure of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber. Then the Hon. James Jerome, Speaker of the House of Commons, said:

● (1600)

May it please Your Excellency,

The House of Commons have elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate, addressing the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, then said:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, he grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to His Excellency upon all seasonable occasions, and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

Then His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada was pleased to open parliament by a speech from the throne.

And the House being returned to the Commons chamber:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to report that, the House having attended on His Excellency the Administrator in the Senate Chamber, I informed His Excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen upon me and, in your names, and on your behalf, I made the usual claim for your privileges, which His Excellency was pleased to confirm to you.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to welcome you to the First Session of the 30th Parliament of Canada.

I am here today in my capacity as Administrator of the Government of Canada, duties which I assumed following the illness suffered by the Governor General last June. Canadians were saddened to hear of His Excellency's stroke, but have been encouraged by reports of his steady progress. I am happy to say that his recovery is such that providing all continues to go well he will be able to resume his role before too long. I am sure I reflect the feelings of all Canadians in expressing gratitude that he will be able to give further service to his country in the high office which he holds.

This year marks an event of particular interest and importance to all Canadians—the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the entry of Newfoundland into Confederation. We anticipate with great pleasure the visit of His Royal Highness, the Duke of Edinburgh, who will shortly join us to share in this happy occasion. In November the citizens of Ontario will welcome Her Royal Highness Princess Anne and her husband who will attend the opening of the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair and other civic engagements.

The international economic situation is serious, with a high rate of inflation, balance of payments problems, lower growth rates and the rapid accumulation of large currency reserves by a few countries. Canada is engaging in bilateral and multilateral discussions as part of a concerted effort to ensure that the current fragile state of the world's economy is strengthened. Those developing countries lacking the natural resources which have enabled others to benefit from high commodity prices have been particularly hard hit by this situation. Canada is contributing to international measures to reduce the unjust and potentially dangerous gap between the rich and the poor. This will involve us not only in increasing the flow of financial assistance to developing countries but in re-examining other policies which affect our economic relations with the Third World.

Canada has contributed to many international peacekeeping operations. A source of special concern at present is the instability in Cyprus and in the Middle East where 2,000 members of Canada's Armed Forces are performing dedicated service with the two peacekeeping forces which the United Nations has established there. While these forces have had some success in keeping the belligerents apart, the necessary policital solutions appear distant and, unhappily, civilian casualties, as well as casualties among members of the peacekeeping forces, continue.

In the context of the United Nations, Canada will also take:

—initiatives to provide for adequate safeguards so that spreading nuclear technology and materials are not perverted for military purposes;

—initiatives to increase world food aid so that the disastrous shortages some countries are experiencing may be alleviated.

[Translation]

For Canada as well as for most of the world the most serious problem is inflation; it is necessary both to deal with its causes and to mitigate its effects. This world-wide problem had its origins in the largest increases in food, energy and other commodity prices in a generation, occurring at the same time as an upsurge in economic activity in all major industrialized nations. The policy of the Government on inflation has been to pursue appropriate fiscal and monetary policies, and:

—to increase the supply of goods and services;

—to protect those least able to protect themselves; as well as —to soften the impact of soaring oil prices on Canadian consumers and to cushion the economy against disruptive increases in other commodities.

It was generally expected, inside Canada and outside, that the tide of inflation would recede as conditions in the international food and commodity markets returned to normal, but a new situation has been created. The major oil exporting countries have re-affirmed their determination to keep the prices of their oil to importing countries, including Canada, at a high level. New adversities have fallen upon crops in Canada, the United States and elsewhere with possible adverse effects for food prices. Industrial commodities have not generally fallen in price as much as some expected in a world of static or falling industrial production. International interest rates have been pushed up to record levels and financial markets have been seriously disturbed.

Industrial unrest has become more prevalent in the world as a result of inflation. Agreements reached through collective bargaining are being abrogated as workers feel they have inadequate compensation to deal with inflation. In some countries there is a threat to the cohesion of the very fabric of society.

As various groups in society try to protect themselves against rising prices by seeking higher incomes, a stronger element of cost derived inflation is created. It is clear that some groups are much better equipped to protect themselves than others. Corporations, trade and professional associations, labour unions and governments are in most cases all able to adjust to inflation, but there are many Canadians on fixed incomes and others lacking economic power whose incomes are not rising as rapidly as the rate of inflation and for whom the consequences of inflation are a cause for concern.

Canada has thus far suffered less from inflation than most other countries, but the problem is serious and urgent. For its part, the Government will exercise restraint in its own expenditures with particular emphasis on improving effectiveness and efficiency in its existing operations while controlling expansion of new activities which, although desirable, would contribute to inflationary pressures. The Federal Government will urge that provincial and municipal governments take similar steps.

The total expenditures of the Federal Government in the 1975-76 fiscal year are expected to incorporate the costs of certain major new measures, including payments to equalize prices of petroleum products in Canada. Insofar as further new initiatives are concerned, the Government will be conscious of the need for restraint and careful phasing in relation to the state of the economy. Federal expenditures on goods and services, as opposed to various transfer payments, have remained relatively constant as a proportion of Gross National Product for some years, and their proportion was lower in 1973 than it was in 1961.

The Government does not intend deliberately to generate slack in the economy in order to combat inflation. Higher production, not lower, is essential to slowing down price advances. The Government does intend to ask all Canadians to join with it in a co-operative effort to achieve by non-inflationary means an equitable sharing among all groups in the community of the fruits of our productive efforts.

[English]

In order to increase the supply of goods and services, which is the first objective of the Government in dealing with inflation, a number of measures will be proposed:

—To increase food production—

—incentives to farmers and fishermen including the stabilization of incomes and markets,

—continued international action to ensure that Canada has the right to manage its coastal resources and environment, including the conservation of fish stocks;

—To increase construction of homes—

—financial assistance in order to reduce the cost of serviced land and to encourage land assembly;

—To increase economic productivity—

—greater financial and other support for small business,

—continued reorientation of manpower activities so that Canadians are trained and available in the right locations to fill the increased number of job opportunities,

—amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act,

—extension of the Regional Development Incentives Act;

—To increase the supply of energy—

—the establishment of Petro-Canada, the national petroleum corporation, —guarantees for domestic control of uranium and for adequate future supplies related to Canadian needs,

—steps to ensure that the price of Canadian oil and gas is regulated in a manner which will encourage necessary exploration and development in Canada;

—To ensure continued export of Canadian grain—

—legislation to ensure the resumed movement of Western grain, if the current dispute has not already been resolved, —steps to facilitate grain handling this winter.

In order to help protect those particularly hard hit by inflation, which is another objective in the battle against inflation, the following measures will be taken or proposed:

—To monitor food prices—

—renew the mandate of the Food Prices Review Board until the end of 1975 so that it may continue to report regularly on trends in food prices and analyze the reasons for price changes in specific areas;

—To help home buyers—

—additional assistance to buyers of moderately priced housing who have not owned a home before,

—ask financial institutions to continue to direct all low down payment high ratio mortgages exclusively to moderately priced housing,

—a Registered Home Owners Savings Plan,

—a system of warranties which will protect new buyers of National Housing Act financed homes, —better disclosure provisions for the true interest rates on mortgages;

—To protect the consumer—

—first stage amendment of the Combines Investigation Act, including measures dealing with unfair or uncompetitive business practices such as misleading advertising and pyramid, referral or bait-and-switch selling,

—a comprehensive overhaul of consumer credit legislation, including disclosure by all lending institutions of effective rates of interest on all loans,

—a total revision of our bankruptcy law, including special procedures to help the consumer debtor,

—improved safety of consumer electrical products,

—establishment of more consumer storefront offices;

—To assist those having difficulty finding employment, and in cooperation with the provinces—

—a community employment strategy for people who experience chronic and particular difficulty in finding and keeping regular employment,

—special efforts on behalf of individuals and specific groups who are ready and willing to work but tend to experience particular difficulty in finding regular employment;

—To help older citizens, the needy and war veterans—

—provide for regular increases in the Year's Maximum Pensionable Earnings in 1976 and subsequent years, revise the Year's Basic Exemption, and eliminate the earnings test on retirement pensions for people aged 65 to 70, —provide for the payment of allowances to the spouses aged 60 to 65 of Old Age Security recipients effective October 1975 and eliminate certain hardships involving Canadians absent from Canada for limited periods of time,

—achieve equity as between provinces in the application of the Canada Assistance Plan in respect of the treatment of youthful offenders in other than welfare institutions, and in respect of the care given needy persons in nursing-homes in provinces that have introduced universal nursing-home care programs, and —further increases in war veterans allowances.

The third objective of the Government's policy to combat inflation is to take such specific initiatives in the economy as are required in order to deal with unjustified increases in incomes, prices and profits.

The Government will introduce legislation to deal with unjustified price increases where such increases are identified. This legislation will be designed to ensure that unacceptable profit levels are not being realized.

You will be asked to approve the imposition of an export charge on crude oil and certain other petroleum products to provide compensation for Canadians who consume imported oil and to regulate the price of Canadian hydrocarbons in interprovincial trade, so that all Canadians pay the same basic price, plus appropriate transportation charges, no matter where they may live.

There must be a greater awareness of the need for restraint by everyone in what each seeks to secure in incomes, profits, prices or taxes if inflation is to be mitigated. Demands to secure more than the economy can provide, or indeed for those who already have a respectable return to seek to benefit relatively from inflation, must be resisted, and the Government believes it has a clear responsibility in this area. Just as no one group in society should benefit at the expense of others from inflation, so should no one group shoulder an unfair burden.

The Government has therefore initiated a series of consultations with the principal groups in our society—business, professions, farmers, labour and provincial governments. They will be asked what proposals they can suggest and what contribution they are willing to make to defeat inflation. They will be asked how productivity can be increased. They will be asked if improvements can be made to the basically adversarial nature of the collective bargaining system, leading toward a joint search for solutions to mutual problems. Representatives of the private pension industry will be asked to explore jointly with Government ways of protecting pensioners against inflation. The Government will ensure that these consultations deal with the problems of those lacking organized power in the economy and retired people, for in many cases they are the ones most adversely affected by inflation.

The Federal Government believes that it has the responsibility of playing the leading role in bringing Canadians together to discuss their common problems and challenges and to develop proposals for their solution. The Government intends to fulfill this leadership role with vigour and determination. These meetings will form part of a major effort by the Federal Government to enter into a dialogue with all segments of the Canadian community.

In the inter-related society and economy of today, a clear distribution of responsibilities among the different levels of government in a federal state cannot in practical application have the neat precision that it has in political theory. Few actions can be taken by one level of government without affecting, or taking into account, the policies and programs of another. In many areas of government activity, effective implementation of a government's policy depends upon the cooperation of other levels of government. Consequently the Government will:

—propose a number of conferences with the provinces during the coming year, including one at the First Ministers level early in 1975; and —take new measures within the federal administrative structure to improve the coordination of federal policies and programs that are of interest to the provinces and to make consultation with them even more effective.

[English]

A key factor in increasing supply is transportation. More generally, transportation is vital to Canada providing for the flow of people and goods that link and bind our regions. It is at the heart of our ability to function as a domestic economy, and as a trading nation. Transportation must be an instrument of national purpose, designed to achieve broad social and economic objectives. While the scale of Canada is one of its greatest assets, equally, it poses challenges of distance and communication virtually unique in the world. These problems are particularly real for the provinces and regions away from central industrial Canada. The Government does not believe the principles underlying the present transportation system or its methods of management and operation are adequate to meet current and future national aspirations.

The Government believes transportation rates should continue to be based on the principle of competition among alternative modes of transportation in areas where there is effective competition. Where such competition does not meaningfully exist, transportation rates cannot be allowed to exact what the market will bear. Consideration of costs, as reflected in the provision of comparable services in circumstances where competition is effective, is a more acceptable guide, and it is toward the achievement of equitable arrangements on such a basis that the Government will work. Even as so qualified, the principle of effective competition may have to be subject to exceptions to permit the achievement of national policies relating to the reduction of regional economic disparities and the encouragement of a more balanced distribution of industry.

The Government is conducting a comprehensive examination of the ability of existing ground, air and marine transportation systems to meet present and growing future demands for passenger and goods services. Also under review are the roles of the various bodies which manage, operate and regulate the transportation system. The aim is to determine the role of government in both the public and private sectors of transportation, the most rational use of available capital resources, and the most appropriate means of balancing existing regulation and direct government intervention. While the cooperation of all parties will be sought, these problems are of a scale that they require Federal Government coordination. This work will lead to the implementation over the next several years, at a rate matched to the Government's overall financial ability, of a program of changes designed to produce a modern, safe, efficient and coordinated transportation system.

There are a number of new initiatives that the Government is prepared to undertake immediately designed to improve transportation services in Canada which will not in any way prejudice the review of basic policy to come:

—a program in cooperation with the railways which will lead to the eventual creation of new Government machinery to ensure the effective management of all ground transport; —immediate implementation of experimental programs designed to upgrade progressively a number of intercity passenger train services;

—ensuring an adequate supply of rail cars for the future and to resolve rail access problems to all major ports and distribution centres;

—improved transportation to and from remote areas, including further assistance to airports in small municipalities, and a new program to fund airports located in developing areas of the country;

—legislation to provide for the most efficient port system for Canada compatible with local, regional and national interests;

—steps leading to the creation of Canadian-owned ice-breaking cargo vessels for use in the North;

—establishment of an Independent Accident Investigation Board;

—new laws concerning shipping and the coasting trade in Canada;

—ensuring rail costing data will be made available to provincial governments pending consideration of a more comprehensive transportation information act;

—additional steps to strengthen the effectiveness of urban transportation systems and improvement of commuter services compatible with regional and provincial plans for urban development.

[Translation]

The Government believes further steps must be taken to enhance Canada's independence and sense of identity. To this end measures will be proposed to:

—revise the law governing corporations including the introduction of a provision whereby a majority of directors of federally incorporated companies must be Canadian;

—provide for Government intervention in cases where a Canadian company may be prevented from fulfilling export orders by its foreign ownership;

—enhance Canadian processing of the country's natural resources which are exported, involving consultations with the provinces and negotiations with other countries;

—ensure Canadian technological innovation is encouraged and available for the benefit of Canadian industry;

—ensure ownership of fishing vessel licenses is retained by Canadians;

—produce a new Citizenship Act;

—confirm O Canada! as our national anthem;

—restructure federally supported granting councils which provide money for university research in the humanities and social sciences as well as the natural sciences;

—establish an integrated regulatory body for telecommunications;

—establish a Joint Committee of the House and Senate to consider questions relating to the future of the National Capital Region;

—preserve the national heritage by providing incentives for the purchase by Canadian institutions of works of art which might otherwise be exported; and

—bring assistance to Canadian cultural enterprises by extending the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act; by promoting the sale of Canadian books and magazines; and by opening discussions with provincial governments about ways to increase the exposure of Canadian films in commercial theatres in Canada.

[English]

The health of Canadians will be a priority for the Government, with emphasis being placed on the prevention of illness, which includes raising the level of physical fitness of Canadians. A series of major athletic events including the Canada Winter Games in 1975, the Olympic Games in 1976, the Canada Summer Games in 1977 and the Commonwealth Games in 1978, should stimulate all Canadians, and particularly youth, to higher levels of participation and achievement in this area.

The federal-provincial Social Security Review is continuing on an urgent basis. Studies on alternative approaches to the reform of the income security system are expected to be sufficiently advanced to enable federal and provincial ministers to agree upon a preferred approach at an early date. Similarly it is anticipated that proposals for the reform of social services will have been agreed upon shortly.

Stemming the despoilation of our planet and returning our water, air, and land to a more natural state are urgent and challenging goals. Legislative measures toward these goals will include:

—greater protection from contaminating substances in the interests of human health and ecological stability; and —curtailment of ocean dumping through international agreement.

The Government is also determined to continue its program of extending equality before the law to all Canadians. To this end wide-ranging legislation will be introduced to guarantee the equal status of women in areas within the Federal Government's jurisdiction. In this respect the Government is planning a substantial program of activities to mark International Women's Year in 1975.

Other measures related to equality before the law include:

—human rights legislation;

—substantial amendments to the Criminal Code;

—legislation to provide for royalty rates for oil and gas on Indian reserves comparable to those charged by oil-producing provinces;

—amendments so that the Supreme Court can deal more expeditiously with cases which come before it and to remove the right of appeal based solely on financial considerations.

There has been a rapid expansion in the numbers of people seeking to come to Canada as immigrants, as students, and as temporary workers. A Green Paper will be published shortly which will form the basis for public and federal-provincial discussion.

The volume of public business before Parliament increases with each passing year and this Session will not be an exception. The view is widely shared within and without Parliament that the rules and procedures of the House of Commons should be adapted to enable Members on all sides—supporting and opposing the Government—to discharge their growing responsibilities more effectively. The Government will seek, as a matter of urgency, support on a non-partisan basis for the necessary reforms of Parliamentary rules and for measures to be laid before you dealing with:

—redistribution of seats in the House of Commons;

—broadcasting the proceedings of the House; and —possible conflicts of interest of Members of the House of Commons and the Senate.

Amendments will be proposed to the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

You will be asked to consider other legislative proposals.

Members of the House of Commons,

The Government intends to present a budget early in this Session.

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry on the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons,

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

The Late M. J. Coldwell

● (1610)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the House to table a list of the titles of some of the measures which the government proposes to place before parliament during this session, and if I could have the permission of the House I would ask that this list be appended to the proceedings.

[Editor's note: For list of legislation referred to, see Appendix A]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Administrator delivered this day from the throne to the two houses of parliament, be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE LATE M. J. COLDWELL

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, during the past summer Canada lost one of its most respected citizens, a man whose name is indelibly etched in the pages of our history. I pay tribute today to the late M. J. Coldwell who represented Rosetown-Biggar in this House for 23 years.

Although Mr. Coldwell represented a Saskatchewan riding, his constituency, as we are all well aware, was far greater. He served all Canadians, and not only Canadians of his time but those of generations to come. The social security system we have in Canada today, which among the best in the world, was created by those who saw injustice and could not rest until they saw it corrected. M. J. Coldwell was one of those.

At age 21, he emigrated from England and settled in Western Canada, where he taught for 24 years in Alberta and Saskatchewan. While a teacher he took up politics, with a concern for the well-being of have-nots. Farmers and their employees were the first to benefit from his efforts, but by helping them he also helped fishermen, miners and workers across the country.

As leader of the Farmer-Labour Party of Saskatchewan, he helped establish the CCF Party, predecessor of the New Democratic Party. Later on, as parliamentary leader and head of the CCF Party, he became so to speak the social conscience of Canada.

[English]

His legacy to Canada came not because he held power—he led a minority party in this House—but because he had power: the power of high ideals, strong principles, and total commitment. Mr. Coldwell once observed: "If you live by your principles and are true to them, you can't fail". That explains his success.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

As a politician, as a humanitarian, as a parliamentarian, as a man of courtesy and grace, Mr. Coldwell is greatly missed. He has left us with much to remember.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I join the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the tribute he has paid to the memory of one who was a true parliamentarian and whose life was epitomized by the quotation which the Prime Minister placed before this chamber, that he lived a life of principle. I knew him from the earliest days, when he was an alderman in the city of Regina, as a candidate for the legislature of Saskatchewan, and finally as a member of the House of Commons. Both of us attempted to enter the political field federally, unsuccessfully, in 1925. He came to parliament in 1935 and I came in 1940. Both of us were middle-aged when we came to this chamber.

I recall as if it were yesterday the untimely illness of James Woodsworth, the leader of the CCF, who indeed was a conscience in his own day and generation. When he became unable to carry out his duties following a speech, I think it was during the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar became the House leader and acting leader of the CCF. He was a parliamentarian who understood parliament. He had wide knowledge of the history of our institutions, the meaning of our traditions. He was meticulous in preparation for debates.

I saw him but once when he became greatly disturbed at what he considered action dangerous to parliament. It was during the 1956 debate on the pipeline. There is nothing more sacred, as you know, Mr. Speaker, than the mace. It remains inviolate. Only once, as I recall my history, was it ever grabbed by any member of parliament. So disturbed was Mr. Coldwell that he rushed up and grasped the mace—a dramatic event that had only been equalled in 1641 or 1642 when Cromwell grabbed the mace at Westminster. I think of Mr. Coldwell as an individual, as a family man. For many years his wife was an invalid. He bore that burden of responsibility with admirable and indomitable courage.

This place has memories for those who have served in it. I recall when I came in here in 1940 seeing the front benches of the government of Mackenzie King. There were giants—

An hon. Member: Just like now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —on the government benches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a belief that the tradition of 1940 has been continued is something that is furthest from my mind.

Mr. Coldwell had a sense of humour, too. I remember on one occasion how unusually happy he was at the location of two hon. members of the Social Credit Party whose names were Fair and Kuhl. He called them the weather prophets of the House of Commons. I can only say that if he were here today as I am, looking across the floor and seeing the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) sitting side by side, separated from the Minister of Consumer Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), who is placed there for the purpose of keeping order in this honourable chamber, I am sure he would mention it. He would say that Damon and Pythias today have their counterparts in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the spirit of this institution. We may disagree, we may profoundly criticize those who sit in other parts of the House, but where there is sincerity and a devotion to idealism there is always respect shown to members no matter where they sit. We have no Watergate tradition in this country. Mr. Coldwell was a man who embodied the finest principles of parliamentary democracy in the British heritage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) for the thoughtful words they have uttered in memory of the late M. J. Coldwell.

Mr. Coldwell was a leader of our party for 18 years and was a member of this House for 23 years. There are many things one could say about him. A number have already been said this afternoon. But what struck me as most important about Mr. Coldwell was the cause to which he devoted his life. Above everything else, even above his concern for the important question of civil liberties, was his concern for the poor in Canada and for the poor and underprivileged abroad. It was that kind of passionate commitment that led him finally to the acceptance of the principles of socialism. It was that kind of commitment that provided sustenance for himself and his family, and leadership for so many people in my party over so many years.

A second point to be made about him is that although he was tough in commitment to his ideals and firm in his convictions, he was also among the most considerate, polite and tactful of men. This is a rare combination to find in one person, a solid commitment and strong determination accompanied by a total willingness to be always civilized and considerate of one's opponents. That leads to my final observation on behalf of my party this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. It is with respect to Mr. Coldwell's fundamental commitment to this institution.

The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert has already referred to the esteem that Mr. Coldwell had for this institution. I think that when the history is written for this century there will be few others, if indeed any, who could be singled out in terms of their contribution to the House of Commons while displaying as great a combination of concern and thoughtfulness for the well-being of men, understanding of their opponents and commitment to serious action. He was a truly exceptional Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I wish to join with the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) in expressing our most sincere sympathy to the Coldwell family.

I had the privilege of knowing Mr. Coldwell personally in 1946 when the seat he occupied was exactly the one where I am now, while I sat behind Solon Low.

Our party was larger then than the CCF Party. Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to you something very important, namely that Mr. Coldwell was the leader of eight federal members and was recognized by everybody as a rightful party leader.

A while ago the right hon. member for Prince Albert mentioned Mr. Coldwell's great interest for his country, Canada, and it is true that notwithstanding our political convictions, we must all recognize that Mr. Coldwell was relentless in his efforts to promote Canadian unity and especially to help the underprivileged classes.

At that time, we Social Crediters, perfectly agreed with the CCF members about that goal. However, we did not agree about the methods to be used. They advocated socialism while we advocated private enterprise. It is still thus today. As far as the goal was concerned, I believe he sincerely aimed to reach it: to help the working classes, the neglected people, as the right hon. Prime Minister said a while ago. His efforts were sincere. In 1946, 1947 and 1948, the Prime Minister worked towards the same goal. That is why he said a while ago that he knew him very well. I know he knew him very well.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has certainly lost a great citizen, a man who showed devotion to his country, who commanded respect in the House of Commons. Everybody listened to him attentively, even the right hon. member for Prince Albert who occupied then the second seat behind the leader of the then official opposition, Mr. Bracken, I believe.

As a man, Mr. Coldwell was held in respect as much by the Liberals who were in power as by the opposition parties, which were all duly recognized without exception.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues and on my behalf, I wish to express my deepest sympathy to the Coldwell family. Again I say that Canada lost a great Canadian in Mr. M. J. Coldwell.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada:

His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an Order in Council appointing the following members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as

Commissioners of Internal Economy

Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of Chapter H-9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, entituled, An Act respecting the House of Commons: The Hon. Mitchell Sharp, the Hon. Allan Joseph MacEachen, the Hon. Charles Mills Drury and the Hon. Jean Chrétien.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege at this juncture.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lambert: The question relates to the privileges of the House as they are affected by the implementation by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of section 16(1) of the Senate and House of Commons Act. Because of today's timetable, however, and because there has been agreement, I shall defer my argument and exposé of the question of privilege to a date which has been mutually agreed. In effect, it means that the legislation does not require that the Commissioners of Internal Economy shall be members of the cabinet. They must be Privy Councillors. The interpretation of the legislation, as I am advised and persuaded, is that the commissioners should come from members of the Privy Council in the House generally, and not exclusively from within the cabinet.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ORDER PAPER AND NOTICES

REQUEST FOR CORRECTION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning certain notices given by the government yesterday. There are four bills for which there are recommendations which appear at pages 21 to 23 of the notice paper. The recommendations all read: "His Excellency the Governor General recommends . . . ". In fact, these recommendations are from His Excellency the Administrator, and I would ask that the necessary alterations be made in the text that appears on the notice paper.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF REPORT ON EGG MARKETING TO STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of widespread public indignation over the disclosure by the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency that 28 million eggs had to be destroyed and the need for complete public disclosure into this whole affair, I ask for unanimous consent under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move the following motion, which perhaps will commend itself to the government, especially the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) I move:

That the first and second reports on egg prices by the Food Prices Review Board be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 43, which requires the unanimous consent of hon. members. Is there unanimous consent to receive the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Without unanimous consent the motion cannot be presented.

FISHERIES

SUGGESTED UNILATERAL ACTION BY GOVERNMENT TO CONSERVE FISH STOCKS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. The urgency of this matter is recognized in the Speech from the Throne, which declares that the first objective of the government in dealing with inflation will include measures to increase food production, and to this end will provide incentives to our fishermen and ensure that Canada has a right to manage its coastal resources and conserve our fish stocks. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That this House, noting the failure of the recent Law of the Sea Conference to recognize and confirm Canada's right to protect and preserve its fisheries resources against reckless over-fishing by foreign nations, urges the government to take immediate steps by unilateral action to conserve our fish stocks, and thereby enable our fishermen to increase production and to assist the government in its fight against inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Again hon. members have heard a motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. Since the motion has been moved under the terms of Standing Order 43, it requires the unanimous consent of all hon. members. Is there unanimous consent to receive the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Without unanimous consent, the motion cannot be received.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF NATIVE PEOPLES TO STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43. This motion arises out of the demonstration that took place on Parliament Hill yesterday. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

Supply

That this House refers the economic and social problems of Canada's native peoples to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for immediate consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion which was presented under Standing Order 43 and, therefore, requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be presented for debate. Is there unanimous consent to proceed with the motion at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent the motion cannot proceed at this time.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF MOTION CONCERNING TARIFF REDUCTIONS

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the last session the House had not completed consideration of the proposed tariff reductions provided for in Bill C-21. This bill was given first reading on April 8.

Pursuant to Standing Order 60(1), and on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), I wish to table a notice of ways and means motion which reintroduces the tariff reductions provided for in Bill C-21.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

GOVERNMENT ACTION ON REPORT ON EGG MARKETING—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON SUPPORT OF BOARD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the report of the Food Prices Review Board of August relating to egg marketing and egg pricing, and the finding of that board that the pricing of a substantial proportion of production was high both in relation to consumer demand and the production of eggs, has the government accepted this finding and other recommendations by that Food Prices Review Board in the August report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and I have discussed this matter several times in Cabinet, and we find that the best way of getting the facts before the House is to refer the matter to a standing committee of the House. We will be prepared to do that.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will please the House that the matter is to be referred to the committee. Now that he has referred to discussions with the Minister of Agriculture, I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question.

In view of the fact that the Speech from the Throne yesterday indicated that the mandate of the Food Prices Review Board would be renewed for a further year is it the intention of the government to support the board or to continue to have one minister supporting the board and another minister, the Minister of Agriculture, attacking the board just about as fiercely as he can?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course the government supports the board, Mr. Speaker. Otherwise it would not have renewed its mandate.

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION UNDER PUBLIC INQUIRIES ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has given consideration to having this matter investigated under the terms of the Inquiries Act as opposed to having a parliamentary committee look into it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, we considered the alternative method of ensuring that parliament would get to the basis of this whole situation. We considered that parliament probably would want to look into it and that is why we decided on the reference.

EGGS—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO SELL TO AUSTRIA

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister take the first opportunity on motions to explain to the House why his government was unwilling to sell 50 million of Canada's surplus eggs to Austria recently at a good price rather than allow 28 million of them to rot here in Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are quite accustomed to this type of allegation but I had forgotten about it over the summer. I hope the hon. gentleman will substantiate this particular story before the committee.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON MEASURES TO DEAL WITH HOUSING PROBLEM

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of yesterday's demonstration in front of the Parliament Buildings. In view of the deplorable housing conditions on many Indian reserves which prompted these people travelling to Ottawa in protest, what new measures does the minister propose to deal with this serious problem?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which is very much on my mind and one which I have asked my department to research to provide me with information. However, one point I should like to make is that this will have to be a co-operative endeavour. There simply will not be sufficient funds in the department to supply all the funds required under the housing program. There will have to be a greater willingness on the part of the Indian people to assume a greater responsibility under CMHC and so on.

EGGS—ALLEGED DISRUPTION OF PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the high price of eggs to the Canadian people can he assure the House that the wholesale disruption of egg production will cease forthwith.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have stated there would be a public inquiry. I want it made known that I do not run CEMA. It is run by a group composed of people from provincial marketing boards across this country. They are honestly trying to do a good job. I hope when the hearings are held the hon. member will suggest to the Board that he wants wholesale destruction of eggs. No producer in this land wants the wholesale destruction of any product. He is a creator of things, so does not want to see them destroyed by anybody.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EGGS—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF REPORT OF FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING COUNCIL—DATE OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has agreed to have this matter of egg marketing referred to a standing committee of the House I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture in the interest of assisting that committee if he will now release the report of the Farm Products Marketing Council on egg marketing which he had commissioned last March. Secondly, would he tell the House exactly when he proposes to refer this matter to the standing committee?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned an unfortunate incident caused this House to adjourn, and therefore I was not allowed to present that report to the House of Commons. It has been ready for several months and will be presented shortly. I have forgotten the other question the hon. member asked.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member repeat his question?

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister when he proposes to ask the government House leader to move the appropriate reference so the matter will be placed before the committee as soon as possible? Can he also tell the House when he will table the report of the Farm Products Marketing Council which he has had in his hands since early last April?

Mr. Whelan: I told the hon. member when the report will be tabled. The report of the Farm Products Marketing Council will be tabled in the House as soon as possible, possibly tomorrow. I hope that the committee made up of members of the House of Commons can be established as soon as possible, as I said earlier, so that all the facts will be made known. I am not scared of it because the real, honest facts will be presented to this committee, I hope, and it will be up to members of that committee to see that they are presented and presented to the public also.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE BETWEEN CORPORATION AND ITS NEWSREPORTERS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Secretary of State.

There is unfortunately a dispute going on between the CBC newsmen and the Corporation, so that last night, for example, we did not get any national nor provincial news owing to this dispute; does the Secretary of State intend to intervene so that the dispute could be settled to the satisfaction of both the newsmen and the Corporation?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, my intention is not to intervene at this point in time. If at a point in time it appears that an intervention will be useful, I will certainly consider it.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I am informed that the union asks the CBC officials for a meeting which they refuse; in those circumstances, is the Secretary of State not entitled to force the Corporation to meet its newsmen?

[English]

Mr. Faulkner: I will look into that particular allegation and decide what is best to do.

EGG MARKETING AGENCY—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE WITNESSES PROPOSED BY OPPOSITION WILL BE CALLED BY INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Prime Minister which is supplementary to previous questions that have been asked. The Prime Minister has rejected an inquiry into the egg marketing agency under the provisions of the Inquiries Act. One of the advantages of that procedure would have been to guarantee impartiality. Given the government's decision to have a House committee investigate the matter, a committee on which Liberal members form a majority, would the Prime Minister assure the House that members conducting this inquiry will have the full right to call witnesses proposed not only by Liberal members on the committee but by members of the opposition?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was my honest understanding, and I may have been misinformed, that the leader of the NDP himself proposed an inquiry carried out by a House committee rather than a public inquiry. It seems to me that he is nodding in assent. I suppose that if we had proceeded by way of the Inquiries Act, the hon. member would now be asking why we did not proceed by way of a committee. We have tried to do exactly what he himself was suggesting—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: —and it happens to coincide with what the government thought would be the best way to put the facts before the public.

The rest of the question appears rhetorical. The House leaders will discuss in the usual way what will go before the committee, when it will be set up, when it will be convened, what members will be on it, and so on.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Broadbent: I am pleased that the Prime Minister has decided to accept my advice. My question is whether he would assure the House that he will accept the procedure that we would follow if we were in the position in which he happens to be now, that is to make sure that his party's majority on the committee will provide true impartiality in the committee's proceedings by hearing witnesses proposed by members of the opposition parties.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it will continue to be my policy to accept constructive suggestions from all corners of the opposition, but I think if they want the government to continue doing that they will have to live with the advice they give us. The electorate decided that there would be a majority on the government benches. If the hon. member is suspicious of proceedings in parliamentary committees, perhaps he should not ask for the referral of such subjects to parliamentary committees.

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is suggesting that there is a suspicion of government motives. None was suggested. He was simply asked for an assurance. All he has to do is give us a clear assurance.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, for the convenience of members with regard to the business of the House, and for the information of the new members who may not yet have been advised by the veterans about the benefits of being here on Fridays and Mondays, would the government House leader indicate if it is the intention of the government to proceed with the Throne Speech debate without any interruption or, as was indicated some time ago, does the government intend to interrupt that debate? If so, when and for what purpose?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is the government's intention to proceed to debate the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne without interruption, but I would have to qualify that by saying that if the government does decide to bring in legislation to deal with the western grain handlers' strike, probably the debate would be interrupted for that purpose. However, since we have not made such a decision, I am not in a position to announce that now.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—POSSIBILITY OF SETTLEMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a related question to the Minister of Labour. Now that management has refused the latest offer with respect to the grain handlers' dispute, can the minister advise whether he is still optimistic regarding a settlement between the two parties?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the proposal made yesterday for consideration by the union and the grain companies set out the fact that there were two remaining unresolved issues. One was interpretation of the COLA clause, and the other was union pensions.

The union has accepted this proposal, but I must say the hon. member is quite right since it would now appear that several of the companies have rejected it. But not all have done so as yet, and I would have to wait for a reply from them all before I could absolutely confirm, without doubt, the hon. member's interpretation. If that is the case and the proposal is rejected then, as the House leader has indicated, the government might consider introducing legislation.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSURE MOVEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As the grain handlers' strike has cost the producers millions of dollars in demurrage charges and we have now lost a large part of our grain markets, will the government assure the House and the country that upon settlement of this strike, either by agreement or by legislation, the government will take reasonable remedies to avoid a railway strike or any other strike that would impede and stop the movement of grain, something which is not only of importance to western Canada but to the whole economy of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government certainly would be prepared to take reasonable remedies. It would be interesting for us to hear what the hon. member has in mind. Perhaps he might want to give us his views.

An hon. Member: You are in the hot seat now.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I did not think I would have to rise so soon on a point of privilege, but with that wishy-washy answer of the Prime Minister's I can readily foresee his answer when the grain does not move to the ports this winter. He will blame it on the snow, just as he did last year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED ACTION BY UNITED STATES BORDER PATROL AGAINST CANADIAN CITIZEN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. While doing so may I congratulate him on his appointment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the fact that according to my information a Saskatchewan resident, a Canadian citizen, after landing his aircraft on a Canadian airstrip south of Estevan, Saskatchewan, adjacent to the Canada-U.S. border, was accosted by the U.S. border patrol, escorted across the U.S. border, threatened with confiscation of his aircraft, and had to leave a $25 deposit on an alleged $1,000 fine, may I ask the minister if he is making inquiries into this matter, and whether or not he can advise the House what he has found out for us?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by thanking the hon. member for his good wishes and also for sending me notice of his question. I have not got the information at hand but I have asked that the matter be investigated and that information be sought from the United States authorities. Just as soon as that has been done I shall be happy to provide it to my good friend.

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT PERMITING UNITED STATES BORDER PATROL TO EXERCISE AUTHORITY IN CANADA

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it from the minister's answer that he has requested the United States authorities to make inquiries there. May I ask whether he is aware or can find out from the Minister of Transport if there was any arrangement, agreement, understanding, regulation or law pertaining to air strips adjacent to the Canada-U.S. border which would permit U.S. border officials to exercise their authority on Canadian soil?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We both shake our heads, Mr. Speaker.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF BILL 22 PASSED BY QUEBEC—POSSIBILITY OF DISALLOWANCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and concerns Bill 22 passed by the legislature of the province of Quebec which is now admitted across the country to be a knockout blow to national unity and to be unconstitutional. Can the minister say whether the law officers of the Crown have looked into this question and if so, what view they have expressed. In the alternative, what is the minister's view, having examined what the law officers say, concerning the constitutionality of the bill?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the law officers and I have looked at the bill for the purpose, as is usual, of supplying advice on the subject to the government of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that answer, of course, is in keeping with the minister's general evasions. May I ask him this supplementary question? Has the government given consideration to disallowing this legislation because of its nature and the danger it represents to the unity of Canada?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the government has certainly taken no decision in connection with the bill or questions arising out of it. If it does so, of course, it will let that decision be known to the House in the usual way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister say that this legislation, so disruptive of Canada, has not been considered by the cabinet yet or by him? What kind of nonsense is this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for South Shore.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FROM RUSSIA FOR DESTRUCTION OF LOBSTER TRAPS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT RECURRENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, but first I should like to congratulate him on his appointment to his new post.

My question comes close to home. In view of the destruction caused by the Russian fishing fleet on July 11, 1974 to the deep sea lobster traps which are valued by their owner, McLeod Fisheries Limited, in excess of $170,000, what steps have been taken by the Canadian government to secure compensation from the Russians for these and other staggering losses? Also, what steps, if any, have been taken to prevent a recurrence of these losses which are destroying the livelihood of our east coast fishermen and fishing companies?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I also thank my hon. friend for his good wishes. Replying directly to his question, I would advise him that statutory declarations have been taken from the fishermen who have suffered losses. These have been transmitted to the Soviet authorities through diplomatic channels and compensation has been requested. We expect that the Soviet authorities will take a reasonable attitude.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. minister would answer the latter part of my question, namely, what steps are being taken by the government to prevent a recurrence of these losses which are literally destroying our industry?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, subject to further investigation I understand that arrangements have been worked out between the Department of Fisheries and the Soviet fleet in an effort to avoid these destructive forays, especially with respect to the lobster fishermen. These are continuing arrangements and the department keeps in touch with the fleet in an effort to avoid further incidents. I believe the most recent incident was the subject of discussion between the department and the fleet commander in an effort to avoid further incidents.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REGULATIONS GOVERNING WINE INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the widespread concern regarding the regulations published in the Canada Gazette last July concerning the Canadian wine industry, may I ask if the minister now intends to abandon these proposed regulations?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all interested parties had 60 days to present their observations. In light of the interest shown in the matter, I extended the period to November 24 next. I appreciate the interest of the hon. member and I know that he and some of his colleagues from that area of the country have already made representations. I can assure them, as well as the other hon. members, that no final decision will be reached before all points of view have been looked into.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID FOR QUEBEC POLICE FORCES—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General of Canada.

In view of the numerous resolutions the minister has received from municipal councils requesting the federal government to review the financing of the Quebec police force with a view to granting them financial assistance, does the minister intend to discuss the matter in the near future with the Quebec Minister of Justice or does he consider the matter closed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already discussed the matter with the Quebec Minister of Justice. I sent him a letter a few days ago advising him that we have no program providing for assistance to Quebec or any of the other provinces with their police force.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION TO DEATH OF CANADIAN CITIZEN BY U.S.S.R.—GRANTING OF PASSPORTS TO PERSONS SUSPECTED OF WAR CRIMES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs as well as offer him my good wishes.

Has the minister, through his discussions with U.S.S.R. delegates at the United Nations raised the matter of the death sentence pronounced against the Canadian citizen, David Geldiaschivilli?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can advise my hon. friend that I did not raise that particular case with the Soviet foreign minister. I did raise another case but not that particular one for a number of reasons, primarily because at the moment the case is still before the Soviet courts. I understand that the lawyer acting on behalf of the gentleman in question intends to make a further appeal. The Canadian Embassy in Moscow has been following the case very closely from the beginning.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question.

Further to the minister's answer, would he agree to make a statement on motions, in the coming days, to inform the House of the facts of this case and thus answer the many questions raised by the public with respect notably to the protection given to persons with Canadian passports, the extradition of alleged war criminals living in Canada requested in the past and the apparent easiness of getting a passport even when the government is aware of the questionable background of an applicant, as is the case now?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, a good deal of information has been made available about this case. I will consider whether it will be possible, by a statement or other method, to add to that information. The case is complex because the person in question is a Canadian citizen and also a citizen of the Soviet Union under the law of that country. He is being tried under that law as a Soviet citizen.

PARLIAMENT HILL

SECURITY MEASURES—PERMISSION FOR USE OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked earlier of the Solicitor General, whom I congratulate for being able to retain his portfolio. I am surprised that the minister did not make a statement on motions today about the ugly occurrences which took place on the grounds of Parliament Hill yesterday. As this is the second time in the last six months that such violence has occurred on Parliament Hill, will the minister tell the House what steps the government is taking to prevent its recurrence?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, considerable measures were taken yesterday. In addition to the RCMP constables who were on guard on Parliament Hill, there was the guard of the Armed Forces. We had in reserve the RCMP riot squad which acted with restraint and which came into action at the last minute late in the afternoon. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the RCMP, in conjunction with the authorities of this House, are in charge of security on Parliament Hill. We wish to keep Parliament Hill as open as possible to members of the public who wish to come here. We do not want to deter peaceful demonstrations. On the other hand, we want to intervene when violence occurs, as happened yesterday.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As I understand the law, before members of the Armed Forces can be called out in cases of civil disorder, either the provincial attorney general of the province concerned or the Attorney General of Canada must give permission. Was that permission granted yesterday?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that such permission was granted. Since members of the Armed Forces were on the hill for the opening of parliament, they were ready to assist the police, if necessary. I think some of them did assist.

GRAIN

POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT ASSUMING DEMURRAGE COSTS CAUSED BY GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Since the government intervened, I think as early as May, in the grain handlers' strike on the west coast and since it seems reluctant to bring in legislation which will end the strike, is it prepared to pick up the shipping demurrage charges which are increasing every day to millions of dollars?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government, particularly through the Minister of Labour, has worked diligently in attempting to bring the parties together to settle the dispute. If, in the end, the attempt to settle proves a failure the government has made clear its willingness to legislate. The government does not intend to pick up any of the costs associated with the strike, anymore than it would pick up those associated with other strikes. It was always within the power of the grain companies, many of them owned by the farmers, to avoid such costs by accepting the recommendations of the Perry report.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO HAVE SOVIET AUTHORITIES RELEASE VALENTYN MOROZ

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister in a position to report to the House on steps the government has taken, since we were last in session, to try to persuade the Soviet authorities to release the scholar Valentyn Moroz.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I raised the question of the condition of this scholar with the Soviet foreign minister. There was a good deal of interest in the country about his condition. Representations had been made by the Prime Minister and my predecessor to the Soviet authorities, particularly concerning his state of health. Obviously, the requests for information were taken seriously and Mr. Gromyko was able to advise that Mr. Moroz was in normal health. A physical examination had been undertaken, and his condition was satisfactory; he was taking regular exercise and was under normal medical care.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister made representations to the government of the Soviet Union to the effect that, regardless of Mr. Moroz's health, justice calls for his release?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that raises a different question. My purpose at that particular meeting, in conformity with representations which had been made all during the summer, was to seek some assurances about the condition of this particular person. My representations at that stage did not go beyond that point.

EGGS—POSSIBLE USE AS PROTEIN SUPPLEMENT FOR ANIMALS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of "Eggriculture". It concerns eggs. When his department learned that 28 million eggs might go bad, did it investigate the possibility of salvaging most of them and using them as a protein food supplement to reduce the high cost of protein feed for animals?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the public hearing which will take place will bring out all the facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: It will show that everything humanly and physically possible was done with resources inside and outside Canada to process these eggs as quickly as possible. I point out to the hon. member that egg powder is one of the most expensive proteins one can use for food.

MANPOWER

POSSIBLE CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ABOUT ALLEGED SHORTAGE AND INCREASE IN APPLICATIONS FOR IMMIGRATION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Did he consult with provincial governments, especially those of Alberta and Ontario, about certain manpower shortages and other factors relating to the selection of immigrants. Also, would he dispel fears and doubts created by yesterday's front page story in the Globe and Mail by making any necessary clarifications?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of manpower shortages has been a matter of constant and considerable discussion in depth with all provinces, particularly those to which the hon. member referred. With regard to the speculative story in the Globe and Mail of yesterday, I can confirm that we are examining the implications of the dramatic increase in applications for immigration to Canada from abroad. These are related to our comparatively better economic situation and the constraints on immigration by other countries which traditionally receive immigrants. We will make a statement on what we seek to do in response to this as quickly as possible.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Prince Albert a moment ago asked the hon. Minister of Justice a question about Bill 22 which was adopted by the Quebec Legislature. I wish therefore to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Has the Prime Minister had discussions with the Quebec premier concerning Bill 22 which I feel is a disgrace for the Province of Quebec within the federal context, and can he advise the House whether there has been an exchange of correspondence with him concerning this?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY IN RELATION TO WAGE SETTLEMENTS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to others asked earlier today, most recently by the hon. member for Crowfoot. It is directed to the Prime Minister. Only yesterday we heard in the Speech from the Throne that there is such a thing as cost-push pressures and we should exercise restraint. Does the government have a policy related to the scale and scope of wage settlements, bearing in mind the potential settlements in the Thunder Bay area as well as those on the west coast affecting wheat? If so, what is the policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the subject of the discussions that are taking place with representatives of labour is along the lines about which the hon. member is asking. I suppose the best way to answer is to indicate to the House and the hon. member that we do not expect labour to be the only group in the community to bear the burden of inflation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the Prime Minister for answering my question in part. In view of the statements of the resurrected minister in charge of the post office on the program "Question Period" on Sunday to the effect that he did not think a 60 per cent increase was inflationary, is this 60 per cent going to be government policy in relation to government contracts and wage negotiations with which the Post Office and other departments will become involved?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the program to which the hon. member alludes. It would obviously depend on the particular settlement and what period of time it covered. I must remind the House we gave ourselves a 50 per cent increase not too many years ago. That, of course, covered several years. It was a catch-up operation.

HOUSING

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES TO EXPAND PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I congratulate him on his elevation to that portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: People on low incomes who are trying to keep their homes up to standard are suffering because of inflation. The Neighbourhood Improvement Program, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program and the rural housing program are moving forward at a very slow pace. What progress is being made with the provinces to expand the programs and direct more funds into this very worthwhile effort?

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his kind words and the goodwill he has expressed. I hope this will remain with him. I am very much concerned about the NIP, RRAP and other programs which the hon. member mentioned. I am actively meeting with the provinces. I have met with the premiers of several and will be meeting with others as well as my counterpart ministers in the provinces to speed up implementation of these programs which are urgently needed to regenerate some of the deteriorating housing stock in our cities.

INFLATION—REQUEST BY PROVINCIAL PREMIERS FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER PRIOR TO PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the importance stressed in the Speech from the Throne about all levels of government working together to deal with inflation, is the Prime Minister now prepared to meet the request of the provincial premiers, which was recently renewed by the four western premiers, to have a meeting with the federal government prior to the presentation of a budget in this House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out there have been meetings between myself and some of my ministers with provincial premiers and ministers. Some of these meetings have already taken place. Discussions concerning the budget, particularly with regard to the western provinces, have been going on between myself and Premier Lougheed and Premier Blakeney through correspondence. There have been meetings of officials and at other levels. I may be incorrect in suggesting that I wrote Premier Blakeney. I did write Premier Lougheed. I will have to check on the other case. However, these meetings are taking place and I think the consultations are fruitful.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister to state quite frankly whether he is too busy to meet the urgent request put forward by or on behalf of all provincial premiers for an informal meeting prior to presentation of the budget. Why can the government of Canada not meet this very simple request in view of the urgent state of inflation in this country, which even the government belatedly seems to recognize?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is not because I am too busy, as the Leader of the Opposition put it. I am prepared to meet these gentlemen at any time. I would not want them to believe, as the Leader of the Opposition seems to suggest, I would discuss with them the federal budget in any detail any more than they would discuss their budgets with the federal government. With regard to constructive proposals they might have in mind with regard to ways of combatting inflation, I feel they are able to make them just as easily on a one-to-one basis as on a ten-to-one basis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. LOUIS DUCLOS AND SECONDED BY MR. ART LEE

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be words of thanks addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet for having entrusted me with the pleasant task of moving the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Not only is it a mark of confidence which I appreciate greatly, but it is as well an honour of which I am very proud and which is shared by my family and the population of my riding of Montmorency which was kind enough to trust me in the last general election.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to congratulate you on the important task that has been entrusted to you. I wish you every success and satisfaction in the performance of your duties as Speaker of this House.

In another vein, I am sorry the absence of our Governor General has cast a shadow over the opening session of this 30th Parliament. I am sure that I speak for all hon. members in this House in wishing him prompt recovery and return to the performance of his high duties. It is however reassuring, Mr. Speaker, to see that he is replaced, in the circumstances, by a person of the calibre of the Right Hon. Justice Bora Laskin.

Mr. Speaker, as is the tradition, I would like to begin by saying some words about the riding I have the privilege of representing since the election of last July. The constituency of Montmorency was created for the election of 1965. Located northeast of Quebec City, it stretches from the towns of Charlesbourg and Orsainville, directly north of Quebec City, whose northeastern limits it follows, then along the St. Lawrence River, down to the town of Saint-Joachim, located some 30 miles east of Quebec City. In short, there are approximately 21 towns and cities in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, most members would better understand if I told them that in the constituency of Montmorency we find this natural jewel that is Île d'Orléans, also Montmorency Falls, the well-known sanctuary of Sainte Anne de Beaupré as well as Mont Sainte Anne ski centre.

A large part of the riding of Montmorency covers what used to be an agricultural area, the Île d'Orléans on the one hand and the stretch of land bordering the St. Lawrence between Ange-Gardien and the municipality of Saint-Joachim, on the other hand.

It is said that today hardly 2 per cent of the labour force in the riding of Montmorency are working in agriculture. Indeed, most of the people are employed in the manufacturing and construction industries, in government and related services, in business and the public service in general.

An integral part of the greater Quebec City area, the riding of Montmorency experiences a progress that is closely dependent on and related to the development of the area as a whole. Some of the investments the federal government contributed these last few years to the substructure in the greater Quebec City area directly benefitted the population of the riding of Montmorency. I would like to list a few of these investments. For instance, there is the $18 million granted for the construction of Capital Boulevard, the circular road around Greater Quebec City which allows the people of the Montmorency constituency to gain quick access to the western part of the Quebec City area. There are also the facilities at Mont Sainte-Anne to which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has earmarked $13 million. Finally, there is the widening of Henri-Bourassa Boulevard, for which the Department has spent $9 million to link Capital Boulevard to the sand banks of Beauport so that, eventually, and as soon as possible, they may be converted into a port.

I have mentioned all these investments, Mr. Speaker, but, in my opinion, they must be only a beginning. Indeed, the economic development needs of my constituency are great, especially since it has an unemployment rate of approximately 8 per cent. It is therefore important that policies be implemented to create in Greater Quebec City a centre of economic development which will allow it to back up the area of Montreal, which now contains the whole Quebec manufacturing industry. In my opinion, any strategy aiming at creating such a development centre must be based upon the development of the port of Quebec City. But, as shown in a report prepared for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, it would be only natural for the port of Quebec City, where activity has more than doubled during the last five years, to be expanded eastwards, in other words, towards the Montmorency constituency. This would mean a gradual conversion of the sand banks, that is, of the part of the constituency which includes the land between the properties of the Anglo Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills Limited and the bridge of Orleans Island.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, several factors would make such a government initiative desirable. First, the fact that the channel to the south of Orleans Island is now being dredged to a depth of 41 feet, which would allow access to 125,000-tonners, ships with a 54-foot draught. For example, because of the river's configuration, only ships of 40,000 tons can reach the Montreal harbour.

One must also take into account the quantity of space available; there is a five mile long zone, which is about 500 feet deep, that could be used for a port.

There is also additional space available behind port facilities that could be used for an industrial harbour sector.

Finally, the sandbanks are linked by the Henri-Bourassa boulevard I just mentioned and boulevard de la Capitale with the main roads of the Quebec and Canada network.

Such a development of the port of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, would undoubtedly attract advanced technology industries that would create well paid jobs for this group of technologists and skilled workers formed of many young people entering the labour market.

Those industries can pay attractive wages more especially owing to their extremely high productivity rate.

I also wish to point out the importance of a direct air service between New York and Quebec City. Such a connection would promote the development of tourism which is centered in my constituency on the sports activities at Mont Sainte-Anne. Indeed, it would give rise to a greater influx of American tourists who would come to ski during winter. I therefore hope that the government will take the necessary steps in order that the difficult negotiations undertaken with the American government be successfully completed.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned a while ago that the Orleans Island appeared to me to be a natural gem. For this reason, I would like to express my appreciation to the federal government for its financial contribution for carrying out a protection and development plan of the Orleans Island.

It seems essential to me that we avoid that economic development, without being against it, should be tantamount to the destruction of this peaceful green oasis. The agricultural character of the Island of Orléans must also be protected.

Concerning this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the government's interest, as it was set out in the Speech from the Throne, in encouraging farmers—because, on the Island of Orléans, there are still many farms—to increase their production thanks to policies concerning the stabilization of income and markets.

I am therefore inviting all hon. members to come visit the Montmorency constituency to know it better. They will soon see that the people are hospitable and that it is a good place to live.

I would, however, like to address this invitation more particularly to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I can assure him that the population of Montmorency will make him forget the comportment of the loudmouths that he met in the Quebec region at the opening of the "Superfrancofête", and who tried to violate his rights of liberty of expression in our democratic country. The great majority of the population of Montmorency disapproves of such actions and I wanted to tell this to the Prime Minister in the House.

Mr. Speaker, Paul Valery has said: If the state is too strong, it crushes us; if it is weak, we perish.

In 1967, he who is now head of the Canadian government today, wrote, on somewhat the same lines:

> The oldest problem in political philosophy and almost its only one, is to justify authority without, for that, destroying the human person's independence. How can we reconcile the individual and society? The wish to be alone and the need to live in a group? The love of liberty and the necessity for order? . . . Now, the most useful thing that philosophy has been able to tell us concerning this problem is that one must stay at equal distance from both ends of the alternative. Too much authority, or too little, and that is the end of liberty.

This is the political philosophy on which are based all the legislative measures which the government intends to take within the next few months to ensure Canada's social and economic progress in these difficult times, measures which are fully described in the Speech from the Throne. No doubt the present situation demands a positive and strong action on the part of the government, but an action which nevertheless shows respect for the individual and his initiative.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of inflation will indeed be at the focus of the government's preoccupations within the next few months. Nearly everybody will agree that, if we want to attack the root of inflation, this is a problem whose solution must be of world wide dimension.

● (1510)

In that respect, Mr. Speaker, one must welcome the intention of the government, as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, to participate actively in bilateral and multilateral discussions with a view to ensuring that the present economic difficulties of the world be gradually ironed out and a recession avoided. Under the present circumstances, the state of the world's economy must be the main field of interest of our foreign policy.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is in a position to play a decisive and vital role in bringing together the nations of the world in view of the enormous prestige, respect and moral authority enjoyed by its Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the international arena. As of now, all our efforts must be geared toward bringing as many countries as possible to a better understanding of the urgency of genuine international co-operation in the field of monetary and trade policies.

The Speech from the Throne also refers to the government's concern with respect to the spreading of nuclear technology and materials. This is, in my view, a problem of utmost importance in view of the always increasing number of countries which have developed, or appear on the verge of developing, nuclear capability. I would hope that Conrad Adenauer, the late father of West Germany, was mistaken when he said: "God made a great mistake when he limited the intelligence of man but did not limit his stupidity". The American novelist, John Steinbeck, once wrote on the same subject: "Our civil war has been called the last of the gentlemen's wars". The so-called Second World War was surely the last of the long, global wars. The next war, if we are so stupid as to let it happen, will be the last of any kind; there will be no one left to remember anything—and if that is how stupid we are, we do not, in a biological sense, deserve survival.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as regards the inflation problem I mentioned a while ago, one may be sure that if international concertation is necessary to really tackle this problem, we should not for all that minimize the importance of the measures proposed by the government, measures that follow those taken in the past and which permitted Canada, in the circumstances, to show a lower price increase rate than that shown in other industrialized countries.

Mr. Speaker, therefore I should like to suggest a serious examination of the part played by credit cards in the inflation problem. Indeed, one can wonder if their extensive use nowadays could not destroy the measures that the government might put into effect to restrict the demand for goods and services.

Housing is another sector of our economy where inflation is causing havoc. All were able to notice the abnormal rise in housing during these last years, especially in the great urban centres of this country. There are obviously various causes, but it seems to me that we should examine the part played by land speculation and, if need be, the possibility of introducing a special tax on profits derived from speculative transactions.

Mr. Speaker, it is all the more necessary for our economy to keep and increase its strength since that is the essential condition to the improvement of our social security program. For it is basically the increase in the strength of our economy that will allow this government to be even more generous in the case of the small and the underprivileged in our society. I always thought, Mr. Speaker, that the role of the government in a country as affluent as Canada is basically to be with the small, the underprivileged, and to stand for them.

I am also pleased to note in the Speech from the Throne the government project with respect to allowances for the spouses of old age security recipients between the ages of 60 and 65. I hope this will be a first step toward the eventual payment of old age security to those reaching 60 and wishing to withdraw from the labour force. Of course, one must be fully aware of the costs inherent in such social legislation but it will be through the expansion of our economy that we will be able to help the truly needy.

The Speech from the Throne is also quite comforting as far as housing goes, particularly as it relates to making it easier for young people to buy a first home. I refer particularly to the $500 grant on buying a first home, and in the case of a new house. Finally, I refer to a measure contained in the budget—the housing savings plan—to allow at last young people to prepare through the years for the purchase of a home. I also point out a proposal quite popular and welcomed in my riding. I am talking about the federal rebate which allows the government and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to reimburse part of the monthly mortgage payments actually beyond what Canadian families can afford to pay.

Those proposals are quite welcomed in my riding where there is a large proportion of young households anxious to settle down in their own homes after a few years of married life.

Mr. Speaker, at the opening of the first session of the 29th Parliament, the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) who seconded the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, stated:

> There are those who claim that the bilingualization of the public service has gone too far too fast. May I say with great respect to the members of this House that it has proceeded not too quickly, but altogether too slowly.

I would like to tell, Mr. Speaker, how much these comments seemed right to me then. I know that there is constant progress in that field but I also know that there is still much to be done.

However, being forever concerned about the rights of the people in office the government must nevertheless increase its efforts so that French-speaking Canadians may carve out a career in the Public Service of Canada while keeping their culture. It is imperative that the experts trained by Quebec at the cost of huge sacrifices on the part of the Quebec population find outlets in the Public Service of Canada and contribute to increase further its quality.

It is regrettable that due to the nationalist wave which has invaded many Quebec sectors too many young French Quebecers give up in such a way quite interesting careers and deprive society of valuable services.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, the text of which is as follows:

To His Excellency the Right Hon. Bora Laskin, Chief Justice of Canada and Administrator of the Government of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

[Mr. Duclos.]

[English]

Mr. Art Lee (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege for me to be accorded this opportunity to second the motion of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos). It is an honour for the people of my constituency of Vancouver East and a recognition of my province and the west.

I am deeply appreciative that I have been chosen to represent one of the most interesting and challenging constituencies in Canada, an area made up of hard working and talented people many of whom have come from other countries to make this their home. There are thousands of native born as well, and together we represent a great range of ethnic backgrounds and many political parties. We have Canadians who have come from Italy, Germany, Yugoslavia, The Netherlands, from other European and Asiatic countries and, of course, from Great Britain. We are glad they chose Canada, and I shall represent them with pride.

Then there are the Canadians of Chinese descent. If you will forgive a personal note, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, my election to parliament as the first Canadian of Chinese descent from my party tells something about this great country of Canada. My family had its beginning in Canada when my great grandfather came here in 1883 to work on the Canadian Pacific Railway as a labourer. It may be said that in a very real and tangible way Canadians of Chinese descent helped unite Canada in the first place with bands of steel. My grandfather ran a grocery store and restaurant in the Cranbrook and Kimberley area from 1902 to 1937. His son, my father, continued my grandfather's business until World War II, when he served as a pilot in the Royal Canadian Air Force. My father later co-founded an independent retailer-owned wholesale business in Edmonton, Alberta, which services northern Alberta, the Northwest Territories and the Arctic.

Within four generations this great country of ours has provided the chance for our family—yes, and to many other families of many other backgrounds—to build our lives and careers and to take advantage of the great range of opportunities available to all Canadians.

Of course, together with certain other groups in society, the efforts of Canadians of Chinese descent to achieve the full privileges of citizenship have not been without problems. Many of my ancestors have known hardships born from misunderstanding and language barriers. But, through perseverence and patience and by drawing on their strength and cultural upbringing, they have now achieved full and equal participation in Canadian life. Many of us have entered the professions but, more important, we as an ethnic community have become more actively involved in our society and will continue to do so.

I stand before you, Mr. Speaker, as a member of a new generation of Canadians and I consider it my task as a member of parliament to represent and serve all the people of my riding of Vancouver East, my province, British Columbia, and my country, Canada. I consider myself privileged to be a member of the post-Second World War generation. We are fortunate that our grandfathers and fathers defended this nation in two world wars and overcame the very real hardships of the depression years. I think I speak for all young Canadians when I say that we have had opportunities like no one before us. At times, admittedly, some of our actions and expressions would not appear to express this gratitude, but many of our critical attitudes and actions have been inspired by a sincere desire to better what we believe to be basically a good society. I am young in years, but my cultural heritage has taught me to draw on the wisdom that comes with age. I look forward to drawing upon the wisdom of my new colleagues be they on this side or the other side of the aisle.

My great constituency, Vancouver East, is an urban riding. The eastern half of the port of Vancouver is its northern boundary. Another notable landmark, the Pacific National Exhibition—the largest exhibition on the west coast and the second largest in Canada—is held yearly in Vancouver East. Vancouver city hall and the Vancouver General hospital are situated in my riding. The second largest Italian community in Canada is also in Vancouver East. Because of these special attributes and, if I may say this in all modesty, Mr. Speaker, because my riding is in Vancouver, one of the most beautiful cities in the whole of Canada, I believe I have been afforded the opportunity to serve and represent the most interesting and unique riding in the country.

Because Vancouver East has been, and still is, the staging ground for many new Canadians, the general question of assimilation is of special concern and importance to many of the people I represent. I trust that the measures outlined in the throne speech will give some of the answers to this question. Housing in general is also of great concern to the people of Vancouver East. I welcome the measures outlined in the Speech from the Throne. Hopefully, they will assist greatly in alleviating the need for improving accommodations.

Furthermore, my riding, being an integral part of the greater Vancouver area, is faced with the problems of an urban environment. The quality of the environment in physical, economic and social terms is of great concern to the people of Vancouver East. I trust the measures outlined in the throne speech will help to alleviate this problem of urbanization.

Many senior citizens live in my riding. My cultural heritage has taught me to respect my elders and to be responsible for them. In exercising our responsibility for our senior citizens, we should do so with dignity and honour; not out of a sense of charity but because our senior citizens have earned it.

Of great concern to the people of Vancouver East is the state of the nation's economy, particularly in these times of inflation. I have the fullest confidence that the measures outlined in the Speech from the Throne will help to control and curb the problem of inflation. Most gratifying is the policy that inflation shall not be combated by the government's deliberately causing slack in the economy.

Mr. Speaker, because of my family's roots and because I represent British Columbia, one of the western provinces, I feel that I should speak briefly as a westerner. It is true that Canada is made up of many diversified regions and economies. It is equally true that western Canada in its make-up is not homogeneous but is, in reality, very heterogeneous. There are, however, some regional traits common to British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. First, industries in western Canada are predominately resource-oriented. Second, westerners are individualists; each of us has a feeling that we can make our own way and direct our own life. Third, westerners judge a person for what he or she is, and not so much on the basis of where he or she comes from. Fourth, westerners take great pride in our earnest hopes for a unified Canada based on the diversity of our ethnic origins. Because of these regional traits, we feel that the west is unique and we earnestly hope that this thirtieth parliament, as have parliaments in the past, will give more recognition to the problems of the west.

We are gratified to see that the throne speech for this session is working toward a long-term program in transportation. Our concern is based upon the fact that western Canada's economic position depends heavily on transportation, and any attempt to strengthen western economy will necessarily involve improvements to the transportation system. In addition to our concern over transportation, we earnestly hope that more recognition will be given to the fact that western Canada needs to develop a viable secondary industry. To accomplish this goal there is further need for more decentralization of industrial activity in the west, both in the private and government sectors.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that the northern boundary of my riding is the eastern half of the port of Vancouver. Being also an integral part of the west's economic structure, we earnestly hope that more recognition will be given to that port's need for future development. Our concern is based upon the fact that unless further recognition is forthcoming, the hopes and aspirations that western Canada, and Canada in general, will become an integral part of the Pacific rim will be frustrated.

I should like at this time to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for giving me the opportunity to second the motion of the hon. member for Montmorency. I should also like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members present, for your courteous patience with a freshman member of parliament. I take pleasure in seconding the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate, I am sure with great disappointment to all.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF QUEBEC BILL 22 TO SUPREME COURT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to request the permission of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity concerning a matter referred to during the question period yesterday by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette).

I would ask permission to move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the House requests the government to immediately take the necessary steps to refer the Official Languages Act of the province of Quebec, known as Bill 22, to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion as to whether or not such legislation is unconstitutional.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 which cannot be presented for debate without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

HOUSING

POSSIBLE MEASURES TO INCREASE HOUSING STARTS—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask some questions of the new Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is now responsible for housing. With reference to the crisis which now exists in respect of the housing situation in Canada and in view of the fact that statistics now show that housing starts declined across Canada from August 1973 to August 1974 to the extent of 24.3 per cent, what immediate measures or plans if any does the government intend to take to assist people to obtain decent housing at a cost they can afford, particularly at a time when inflation is out of hand?

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, I suggest there is not a housing crisis in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: We are still the best housed people both quantitatively and qualitatively of any nation in the world, and I think we should be grateful for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: I think one should keep things in perspective. It is true that the actual housing starts are down 9 per cent this year and on a seasonally adjusted basis as indicated they are down somewhat more. But aggressive government action has been taken in the form of the AHOP program which has been extremely well received. Some $450 million of funds have been applied for or committed to date. This is an extremely successful program.

In addition, we have the limited dividend section 15 on housing, which has already been called for proposal, the land assembly program of the government, the proposed registered home ownership savings plan which will help young families accumulate funds, etc. I could go on, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, it is a long time since I heard so much verbiage.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: In the light of the fact that many builders have halted construction because of current high mortgage interest rates, could the minister inform the House whether he is considering taking action to implement a program of lower or subsidized interest rates for builders to ward off a future housing shortage crisis and to prevent excessive unemployment in the construction field?

Mr. Danson: We have already done that through our AHOP programs which will bring effective interest rates down to a maximum of 8 per cent and in some cases, depending on family income and size, as low as the rate of 4 per cent. In addition to that, the limited dividends on housing in our proposals in section 15 for which I have just called give effective rates of 8 per cent to builders. These proposals will help to keep interest rates moving and to house Canadians at reasonable rents.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North on his final supplementary question.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact that the minister is admitting that housing starts are down and in light of the fact that the Assisted Home Ownership Program fund for low income groups is limited by instructions from the regional offices of CMHC, and they only now apply to new houses, how can the minister justify his directive that these funds not be used for the purchasing of other homes which are already built for people?

Mr. Danson: The hon. member has already referred to inflation and the restraints imposed upon us. In view of that I thought it much more important that those funds under AHOP be directed to new housing so as to increase the housing stock. I appreciate the fact that this does not help people buying existing houses, but my main job is to ensure that more houses are built in Canada, and that is what I am trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSULTATION WITH INDIANS ON AID IN HOUSING PROGRAMS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question also is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the deplorable housing conditions of our native Indians and the necessity for a group of them marching to Ottawa to demonstrate their plight, has the minister or any of his officials contacted any of the leaders of the Indian group now in Ottawa? Has he made any arrangement with regard to financial assistance to help them?

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): We deal regularly on a most co-operative basis with the Indian associations in Canada. Of course, my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, has been in direct contact and close co-operation with those who are in Ottawa at this time. Certainly, so far as Indian housing is concerned we have demonstrated our deep concern through our native housing programs and the minister and I have been discussing ways to resolve this problem and improve the situation.

MILK—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF PHASING OUT OF SUBSIDY—POSITION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the expressed opposition of a number of provinces to the federal government's decision to phase out the 5 cent per quart milk subsidy that is now being paid, could the minister inform the House whether the government has reconsidered its decision to pay the subsidy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this 5 cent a quart consumer subsidy is one that the Department of Agriculture was asked to administer. The government made that decision earlier this year in the month of August.

Mr. Broadbent: After the election.

Mr. Whelan: We have agreed to do what the provincial ministers had asked us to do. The provinces asked us to phase it out over a longer period of time.

● (1420)

The record will show that many of the dairy producing and dairy processing groups felt they should not be included in this. Most of them felt it should be given in the form of direct social assistance. Where we go from there, Mr. Speaker, I do not know. I do not know whether it will be passed on in the form of social assistance, but I would point out that when the government introduced the milk subsidy we had not indexed old age pensions, we had not increased veterans pensions and other benefits received by those on fixed incomes. Those people now are in a different position from that in which they were at the time when we put the consumer milk subsidy program into effect.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to clarify what he just said in order to make sure that I heard him accurately. If I did hear him accurately then what he said was that the provincial governments requested him to phase out the subsidy. Does he mean they accepted the notion of the cancellation of the subsidy in total, or does he mean the federal government told the provincial governments that they were going to lose the subsidy and, in reply, they said they preferred to have it phased out? I want the minister to clarify that, and then to explain how the federal government is going to replace the revenue that was going to the provinces for this needed food product, that is, if it is going to abandon the 5 cent subsidy that was in the program previously and which is still so badly needed.

Mr. Whelan: I will try to remember the whole statement which the hon. member made, Mr. Speaker. I want to make it perfectly clear that some people are under the impression that because of the 5 cents a quart consumer subsidy there was no increase in milk prices last year. I would point out that some of the public utilities and other systems throughout the country controlling the dairy industry had to meet extra costs, that they received increases as much as five or six times, and all they had to do in order to increase their prices was to prove that their costs went up. That applies to both processing and producing industries.

I met ministers of the provincial governments in Winnipeg in July, and they asked that this program be phased out, but over a longer period of time than we in the federal government had decided it should be phased out. I would point out that a year ago they condemned us for introducing the program. Mr. Speaker, we made it pretty clear a year ago that it was a one year program.

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has just misinformed the House, inadvertently or otherwise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If the backbenchers on the other side will be quiet for a minute I will explain my point of order. I have been informed by Premier Schreyer of Manitoba that in the month of July he specifically requested the minister to extend the subsidy. Either Premier Schreyer has misinformed us, or in his loquacious manner the minister has so confused the point that in the process he misinformed the House. I want him to state clearly whether Premier Schreyer requested an extension of the subsidy or not.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I can table all the letters that were sent from the time the subsidy was introduced by the government of Canada to help consumers. At that time many people were on fixed incomes, and have now received some assistance through the extra social benefits passed by the federal parliament for them. As I say, I can table those letters and show how often the producers, the processers and the provinces have changed their opinions on what should be done.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PAYMENT OF OLD AGE PENSIONS TO WOMEN AT 60

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

At the last election, the Prime Minister promised to grant the old age pension to 60-year-old women. Now, in the Speech from the Throne it is mentioned that the pension to the 60-year-olds would be paid only in 1975. Since this promise should be fulfilled immediately after the election, does the Prime Minister intend, under the future legislation, to make those pensions retroactive to August 1, 1974?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the member is somewhat interpreting what I said. During the campaign, I stated the program which the government would carry out under normal conditions, that is considering the election of a majority government for a 4-year mandate. The Social Credit leader was the first surprised, but he will have to remember during this entire Parliament that we expect to fulfil our election promises, but not all during the first session.

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

In July 1974, the Prime Minister made promises to the women of 60. Those women are now 60, and the government has a majority. That is why I wonder whether the government intends to wait four years before acting, when those ladies will have reached the age of 64, instead of paying the pension now, retroactive to the 1st of August. The government would then be keeping its promise. Doesn't the government intend to do so?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should not speak of four years. If he refers to the Speech from the Throne, he will see that we speak of next October.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary.

In view of what the Prime Minister has just said, and the fact that, on the one hand the government has the majority and therefore total say in its work and, on the other hand, that it can bank on the support of the Progressive Conservatives, the New Democrats as well as the Social Crediters, specifically for this measure, why does the Prime Minister put it off so long? He can pass the measure when he will and he has the support of the opposition.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take note of the words of the hon. member. If the opposition is willing to co-operate on all aspects of the legislation we will introduce, then we can discuss them, but it would really be incongruous for the hon. member to think that he and his party can choose which bills shall first be introduced and which shall have to wait.

TURKEYS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE SURPLUS WILL NOT BE DESTROYED

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that in the first week of September there were 40 million pounds of turkey in storage according to the Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board, would the minister initiate an inquiry into this surplus so that we can be assured that there will not be any wholesale destruction of turkeys as there was of eggs, particularly with thanksgiving day less than two weeks away?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would point out here that the turkey growers and the industry run their own business. This government does not run it; they run it themselves. The turkey marketing board has not control over the product, so let us get the facts just a little bit straight. I think we are a very fortunate nation that we have a group of producers so very efficient that they keep a high quality product available for our consumption.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Will the minister advise the Canadian turkey marketing agency to distribute its surplus turkeys, in co-operation with the provinces, to welfare recipients and old age homes so that more people may enjoy thanksgiving dinners?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the correspondence that I have received recently shows that first and foremost most people and most producers, do not condone waste of any product. Most of them feel that it is the job of society as a whole to distribute any product, and not just the producers' job. It is society's job to make sure that those in need are taken care of; it is not just the job of one little segment of society to look after the rest but it is society's job as a whole. I am sure the hon. member means that also.

Mr. Baldwin: Come on, the election is over.

BEEF AND MILK—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON PAYMENT OF SUBSIDIES

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Does he intend to meet his provincial counterparts in the near future, in order to elaborate an emergency program to help Canadian cattle producers survive these very difficult times which also affect to a great extent the producers of milk and dairy products?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the beef problem facing the nation, I must point out that we have been asked by the ministers of agriculture and consumer ministers in the four western provinces to hold an inquiry into all phases of the industry. I point out, Mr. Speaker, that at the moment there is no marketing board in that industry. We are considering holding an inquiry and if we do I feel sure it will bring out the facts. Our authorities are meeting with provincial authorities on Monday of this week to consider the plight that the nation's beef producers find themselves in. After that meeting we will be in a better position to know just what, if anything, will be done.

BEEF CATTLE—POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF QUOTA BY UNITED STATES—CONSULTATION WITH CANADA

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

The hon. minister has probably been advised of the recent U.S. government's decision to impose a quota on Canadian beef exported to their country. Was this American decision made during consultations with the Canadian government? Were there discussions with the division concerned within the Department of Agriculture?

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my information, according to the last report, is that they were considering taking such action but no action had been taken by the American authorities by the time the House resumed sitting today.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED TABLING OF DRAFT AGREEMENT WITH INTERNATIONAL ENERGY AGENCY—PROVISIONS RELATING TO EXPORTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the draft agreement which is now being considered by the member nations of the International Energy Agency. I ask the minister, first, will he be prepared to table a draft copy of that agreement prior to cabinet making any final decision; second, does the agreement, in addition to providing for cutbacks of domestic consumption under certain circumstances, call for mandatory reductions or increases in exports? If so, is there a formula to determine price?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the definitive draft of the agreement arrived at by the energy consulting group is received from Brussels, I will be glad to table it in the House so that members can examine it. As the hon. gentleman suggests, it provides an obligation for participating states to enter into energy consumption control programs. According to my recollection of it, there is no provision which would require Canada as a net exporter, as such, to increase its exports to the United States or, indeed, to any other country.

REPRESENTATIVE OF CANADA AT MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL ENERGY AGENCY—POSSIBLE COMPENSATION TO OIL PRODUCING PROVINCES IF PRODUCTION CURTAILED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell us who represented Canada at the meetings of the International Energy Agency which drafted this proposed agreement. Also, as he has sent copies of it to the provinces, has he made any offer to the oil producing provinces relating to any financial compensation they might receive in the event of a serious curtailment in oil production?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation was led by our ambassador to the OECD, who attended in Brussels after leaving Paris. He was advised by officials of my department and of the National Energy Board. As I said, the definitive text has not yet been received. When it has been it will be sent, of course, to both the consuming and producing provinces. As yet there has been no suggestion of compensation, in that sense, to any province of Canada.

Oral Questions

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FORBES REPORT ON CONSUMER INTEREST IN MARKETING BOARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I congratulate him on his elevation to what seems to be a portfolio with a high rate of mortality. What action has the government taken or will it take on the recommendations contained in the Forbes Report on Consumer Interest in Marketing Boards, especially since the government has had that report in its position since last March?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the hon. member that what appeared in the papers is only part of a study sponsored by the Canadian Consumer Council. The work carried out by Mr. Forbes deals with only one part of this report. May I therefore ask the hon. member to wait patiently for a few weeks, pending the publication of the full report.

[English]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FORBES REPORT AND REPORT OF FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING COUNCIL

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When does the minister propose to table the report, especially since it seems to have been leaked to the press? While I am on my feet, may I ask the minister to use his considerable influence with his colleague, that other great consumer advocate, the Minister of Agriculture, and find out when he will table the report of the Farm Products Marketing Council on marketing boards?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer the first part of the question, I wish to assure the hon. member that the report will be made public as soon as possible. As to the second part of his question, I am convinced that it will be done very shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE USE OF SURPLUS EGGS TO HELP FEED PEOPLE IN COUNTRIES OF THE THIRD WORLD

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question relates to egg marketing boards and is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister considered explaining to the ambassadors of third world countries whose people often go to bed hungry that, in Canada, we destroyed millions of eggs which could have been made into protein foods for the people of those countries? At any time in the past has the Minister of Agriculture or his officials communicated with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to indicate that a surplus of millions of eggs could have been sent overseas to those countries, in the form of high protein food?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is, no.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—COMMUNICATION OF MANAGEMENT OFFER TO UNION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. With regard to the grain handlers' dispute, can the minister say whether a management offer of settlement, delivered to the Department of Labour on September 19, was ever communicated to the union?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yes, it was.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain why the head of the union negotiating committee said yesterday in Vancouver that the union had no knowledge of any offer having been made by management?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, no, I cannot.

GRAIN HANDLERS' STRIKE—POSITION OF MINISTER ON POSSIBILITY OF SETTLEMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister was not prepared to indicate if he was optimistic about the settlement of the grain handlers' dispute. Can the minister now advise the House if there are grounds for optimism, or is he prepared to hang his head in defeat as a result of government intervention in this important matter.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the House Leader indicated yesterday, we shall consider the possibility of legislation, but no definite decision has been made so far as to when we shall propose that legislation.

Mr. Woolliams: How long are you going to wait?

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect, yesterday I wished to ask a supplementary question but was overlooked, which does not seem possible. With all due respect, and I will sit down after I have said this, members on the front benches have a responsibility. I submit that we ought to be entitled at least to ask a question and a supplementary, in the discharge of our responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member is not easy to overlook, not only because he is visible but also because of his stature in this House which has been amply demonstrated. I have tried to give original questioners the opportunity to pursue their subject with a supplementary question, and, occasionally, second questioners as well, in order that we may run a subject properly to the ground. However, I do not want to stick on one subject for too long, because I do not wish to see others who hope to ask questions denied their opportunity to ask questions. The hon. member for Athabasca.

MULTICULTURALISM

ALLEGED CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE TO MINORITY GROUPS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the apparent importance the Prime Minister attached to multiculturalism following the 1972 election, as was evidenced by the appointment of a minister to administer that policy, can the Prime Minister explain what factors following the 1974 election led him to dispose not only of the minister but also of the portfolio?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is based on an erroneous premise. A very high level and responsible minister will carry forward the implementation of that important policy.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As it appears clear that the post has been downgraded by this move, will the Prime Minister assure the minority groups of this country that they will not once again be relegated to the role of forgotten people?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is expressing his own opinion about appearances. This government, which brought in that policy, is strongly committed to its implementation.

Mr. Hees: Poor Stanley Haidasz.

UNITED NATIONS WORLD FOOD CONFERENCE—CANADIAN POSITION—COMPOSITION OF DELEGATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the dramatic depletion of available world food reserves and a shortfall in world food production resulting in a situation which may lead to international disaster and widespread famine, and in view of Canada's position as a leading food producing and industrial nation, will the minister, either in the course of the Throne Speech debate or in a statement on motions, tell the House what plans the government has to give leadership at the forthcoming United Nations World Food Conference in Rome in November?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will consider the hon. member's request as to whether it would be helpful for me to take part in the debate. I wish to assure him that the government is taking the possibilities open to the world community by this conference very seriously. It is presently preparing the position we will take in an effort to advance the objectives mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Brewin: Will the minister state whether he has any plans for strong Canadian representation at this conference in Rome, including members of parliament and representatives of non-governmental agencies?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the composition of the delegation is presently under consideration. My hon. friend can be assured it will be a very strong delegation. I am considering going myself.

ALLEGED ACTION OF LAURENTIAN PILOTAGE AUTHORITY CHANGING BASIS FOR PILOT'S CERTIFICATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. Does the minister consider this proposed change to be in the interest of safety or efficiency?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this report is on my desk. I am now studying it.

An hon. Member: You study?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, I do. You see what it does not to study.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CONSUMER REPRESENTATION ON MARKETING BOARDS—CONSULTATION WITH ORGANIZATIONS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is based on the September 13 letter to him from the Consumer's Association of Canada. Given the support for consumer representation on CEMA by the Consumer's Association of Canada, the Food Prices Review Board, the Forbes report and at least one of his cabinet colleagues, can the Prime Minister say what steps are to be taken or are proposed to ensure consumer representation on consumer marketing boards and will the Consumer's Association of Canada be consulted with regard to any such appointments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a very sound principal and in general terms it has the government's support.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Can the Prime Minister tell the House when this will be put into action?

Mr. Trudeau: Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED INCREASES IN FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND OLD AGE PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recommendation made to the government a few days ago by the chairman of the Food Prices Review Board to the effect that because of drastic increases in the cost of food there should be immediate increases in family allowances and in old age security, is the government giving consideration to this recommendation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is surely aware that old age security pensions will be raised during October and that family allowances will also be increased as of next January 1, so as to compensate for the rise in the cost of living.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the minister not aware that what has been recommended is not the regular escalation, but an increase in the basic amounts?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked if there will be increases in old age pensions and family allowances, and my answer was yes.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The answer really was no.

BEEF CATTLE—PROPOSED UNITED STATES IMPORT QUOTAS—CONSULTATION WITH CANADA

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the cattle quotas announced in the Gazette this morning. In view of today's announcement by United States trade and agricultural administrations that new U.S. cattle quotas will be initiated in retaliation to Canada's new global quotas, has the minister or his officials held recent discussions with United States official relating to U.S. quotas on Canadian cattle?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, our officials have had discussions on this, but I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs has had more direct meetings with United States officials and can probably give a more detailed answer.

Mr. Hargrave: In view of the very real possibility that Canada's calf crop will not find adequate homes in feed lots in western Canada and Ontario and may have to go to the United States, does the minister not feel there should be immediate negotiations to forestall trade wars over quotas with the United States? Does he not agree this is most essential because in any trade war we would be the loser?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of what could possibly happen. However, we do not know whether the United States is going to do anything. This is a press report. We do not know what action they will take. We will have to wait and see. There has been discussion. We are also very much aware of representations made to us by western provincial ministers of agriculture and consumer affairs. These will be considered in detail next Monday.

POSSIBLE ELIMINATION OF MINOR ATTACHMENT PROVISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister or his department considering eliminating the minor attachment under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

FINANCE

REASON FOR FAILURE OF CANADA TO PARTICIPATE IN INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL MEETINGS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): In the absence of the Minister of Finance, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the government has expressed its intention to participate in the development of international solutions to world inflation, will the Prime Minister explain why Canada did not wish to attend or was not invited to attend the international finance meetings near Paris in early September and the preliminary International Monetary Fund conference at Camp David last weekend? Decisions taken at those meetings will have far reaching effects on Canada, one of the world's greatest trading nations.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Group of Five is composed of five representatives, not six, seven or eight. The Minister of Finance of Canada has talked to representatives of four of these nations and I have talked to the Prime Minister of the other. We are being very well informed by these nations.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister believe that Canada's participation in attempts to solve international inflation can best be handled on a second-hand basis, that is that Canada should consult with major powers after agreements have been reached and decisions taken, when our participation at the initial summit meeting itself was vital?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems that the hon. member is second-handing the question because the minister is now present at these top level meetings in Washington.

Mr. Stevens: After the fact.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS CONCERNING ESTABLISHMENT OF LIMITS ON CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Norway intends to establish its territorial limits at 50 miles in 1975. Does Canada intend to give notice to the North Atlantic countries that in 1975 it will establish the limit of its territorial waters to 100 or 200 miles, or will it wait for the results of the second conference on the law of the sea which is to be held in Geneva in 1975?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the action to which my hon. friend refers is proposed, as I understand it, for 1975 or later. I believe that the reports that I have read are somewhat vague as to when such action might be contemplated. In the case of Canada, it is not the intention of the Canadian government to take unilateral action in present circumstances, particularly in view of the substantial progress that was made at the Law of the Sea Conference in reaching the objectives of the coastal states, including Canada, and because the conference itself will be resumed in the spring, at which time it is expected that further progress will be made.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

STUDY OF SITE FOR STEEL MAKING COMPLEX ON EAST COAST—POSSIBILITY OF PUBLICATION—SECOND STUDY BY DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In the closing days of the last parliament the minister commissioned a study to examine the question of the new steel making complex on the east coast, the question of sites and so on. I wonder whether the minister would advise if the study has been officially completed, whether it is being made public or is going to be made public, and whether another study has been commissioned by the Department of Supply and Services to cover practically the same ground.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on the question of the study commissioned by DREE, I received a copy this morning but have not yet had a chance to look at it. My disposition is to make it public and I have so stated. The only qualification would be with regard to confidential information provided by private companies on the understanding that the information would not be made public. However, I understand that this will not detract from the usefulness of the study, and as soon as an examination has been completed I will be most pleased to make it available to interested parties.

In reply to the second question, I am not personally aware of any study undertaken by the Department of Supply and Services.

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE IN CARACAS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is supplementary to that already asked by the hon. member for Gaspé. Because of the great importance of the matter to Canadians in general, whether they are concerned with food, fish, mineral resources, pollution, defence, or offshore jurisdiction, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether he intends to make a report to the House on the proceedings and outcome of the United Nations conference on the Law of the Sea held in Caracas between June and August of this year?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by the hon. gentleman and I will consider—indeed, I have already considered—the possibility of making a statement either on motions or in one of our debates in the near future. The matter is of great importance to Canada.

IMMIGRATION

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF GREEN PAPER—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF POINTS SYSTEM

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. My question relates to the study presently taking place and the proposed green paper that the minister announced as far back as June 20, 1973 would be tabled in the spring of 1974. In view of the present apprehension faced by many groups very interested in immigration, would the minister tell the House when the green paper will be tabled?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I was so precise as to say it would be tabled in the spring; I expressed hope that we would have it by the summer, and this might have been the case but for the election which was concluded in July. I now anticipate being able to present the green paper for public examination perhaps early in the new year. In the meantime I anticipate making an interim statement within the very near future.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the expressed intention of the department to have open consultation with various groups, would the minister indicate whether amended regulations have been sent to departmental officials regarding the so-called points system?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it is still our commitment, one that we will honour, to hold consultations regarding the green paper process. I think that at the time I talked about it in the House, and certainly on other occasions, I indicated that there was a continuing responsibility to manage the immigration program in the interim. We will not be doing anything that, in my opinion, will pre-empt discussion of the green paper which is designed or intended to develop long-term immigration policy.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BANNING OF PESTICIDES ALDRIN AND DIELDRIN BY UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF SIMILAR ACTION BY CANADA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, and I congratulate her on her appointment. I am sure members of all parties wish her well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: My question is this. In view of the announcement yesterday by the United States environmental protection agency of a ban on the pesticides aldrin and dieldrin, and in view of the evidence presented to that organization, can the minister advise the House whether she intends to take action to prevent the production and distribution of these two chemicals in Canada?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his very kind words and good wishes. As the hon. member knows, the United States makes great use of aldrin and dieldrin for their crops of citrus fruits. We have very little use for these particular pesticides but we are looking into the matter. For the time being we are not contemplating the same kind of action as that taken by the United States.

Mr. Leggatt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether her department has had a chance to review the evidence presented to the United States environmental protection agency which caused it to make this decision, in view of the direct link between human cancer and these two chemicals?

Mrs. Sauvé: This evidence is being reviewed by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the report they have given us to this time indicates there is no urgency for Canada to introduce this kind of regulation.

EGGS—TIME WHEN DEPARTMENT LEARNED OF DETERIORATING SITUATION—POSSIBLE CONVERSION TO ANIMAL FEED

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and is similar to a question put to him yesterday by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo. Would the minister tell the House how long it was before the public announcement was made that a large number of eggs were about to go bad that the Department of Agriculture or the minister learned of the situation? Secondly, what steps is the minister's department taking to investigate the possibility of some salvage of all or part of these eggs for use as animal supplement feed, thus reducing the $900,000 loss to producers by the destruction of their eggs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all of the facts and information concerning CEMA will be put before the parliamentary hearing. I could take half an hour or even two hours to explain all the details to the House. I think it would be irresponsible of me to try to answer this important question shortly on the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot may ask a final supplementary.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the minister to take half an hour, but would he simply say how much notice he or his department had of the destruction of these eggs before the public was informed through the media?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member the exact length of time, but I can tell him that the time was very short.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as leader of the opposition, I would like first of all to express to His Excellency the Governor General how happy we are to hear that his health is improving rapidly. Please convey to him our best wishes and our sincere hope that he will soon resume his duties.

I also offer my best wishes and congratulations to the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), both new arrivals on the front-line, who did so well in their respective tasks of moving and seconding the throne speech.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, it has been the custom, and one I have followed in the past, to congratulate new and shuffled ministers at the first opportunity in the House. It is a little difficult, however, to simply follow that past pattern on this occasion because some ministers went up, some went down, a few came in and a few went out. It hardly seems fair to extend congratulations where appropriate without also extending some commiseration where that is appropriate. I spent a good deal of time thinking about this, trying to find a succinct and heartfelt phrase to convey my feelings to some of the new ministers and some of the former ministers. Perhaps it will convey the depth of my empathy if I simply put it this way: speaking very personally, we do not all win.

I remember very well, following the election of 1968 when I entered parliament, that I had to contend with the charisma of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). As we meet this time, sir, a new shooting star is streaking across the firmament, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who, by his own honest admission, is more popular than ever. In fact, it is very difficult to tell which is going up faster, the price of food or the minister's popularity. I must concede that the minister has succeeded in doing something that hardly anybody believed was possible. He has made Mrs. Plumptre's organization look useful.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: The Speech from the Throne contained a good deal of reference to inflation. The government has discovered that inflation is a serious and urgent matter. This must rank almost with Columbus's discovery of America. We are now told that inflation did not recede as expected. I do not know where that expectation existed outside the federal administration. I have to believe it existed there because in Hamilton, on April 25, the Prime Minister was talking about an impatient opposition when he said it did not, and I quote him as reported——want to wait the few more weeks or months that will make it evident that we've solved the problem.

More than five months have passed since then, and we are still waiting. A little later the Prime Minister told Canadians that his government was wrestling inflation to the ground. Now we have received the virtual admission that inflation really has a full-nelson grip on the government. It is true that the Prime Minister slipped out of the ring to pursue some other sports, like puck-dropping and trampoline gymnastics, and for a time has probably forgotten about this wrestling. Now we have the impression that the government has called off all this business about wrestling inflation to the ground and has decided, instead, to try to talk inflation into the ground in dialogue with the people of this country.

A few months ago a spokesman for the philosopher kings said inflation was like rain during a vacation. Obviously, sir, they knew a great deal more about vacations at that time, at least, than they knew about inflation. "Don't get excited", the Prime Minister said. At an earlier time he told us inflation was good for the farmers. I think it is a tribute to the intregrity of his administration that during the 1974 election campaign it kept the lid on a public-funded report which said inflation was particularly disastrous for the farmers. That must have been one of those items that ran into the screen which the Prime Minister's office erected for Senator Davey.

It is not my intention this afternoon to re-fight the election campaign piece by piece but I am obliged, through you, Mr. Speaker, to remind the Prime Minister and his friends opposite that this government ran on the theme of leadership. I felt and still feel that the Prime Minister did not offer Canadians leadership in that campaign but that he encouraged the country not to face, rather than to face, the great challenge of the present and that his campaign's objective, in that well-known marketing term, was to sell the sizzle and never talk about the steak.

But all that is history now. The government is in office and if it so wishes, it has four years to govern. My party outlined an overall program to fight inflation, but the government sees nothing acceptable in it. In fact, the present paralysis of the government seems to derive for the most part from the fear of an economic recession or an increase in the unemployment rate that would result from its using traditional fiscal and monetary policies to overcome inflation. I dare remind the government that my party's plan of action against inflation was precisely designed to avoid this pitfall. But the government called it disaster-prone and it is just beginning to see that rampant inflation has already become a disaster for millions of Canadians.

[English]

The question now is, not what we would do if we had the responsibility; the government has the responsibility. The question is, what does the government propose to do?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: What can we look forward to in the way of leadership from the government? The Speech from the Throne contains much talk about leadership but there is absolutely no indication that leadership in fact will be provided. The commencement of this session, opening as it does a new parliament, is an appropriate time for an assessment of our position as a nation. I think it is of some value to all of us to look back on the last few years to see where we have been going. I believe this can be a helpful process in facing up to the dangers which can confront all of us and in helping us to establish goals to be achieved during the life of this parliament. Certainly this involves the control of inflation, but much more as well.

When I entered parliament in the fall of 1967 there was an atmosphere of great confidence, great expectation across this country. I do not think this was entirely attributable to my arrival on the federal scene. The whole country was aware of the spirit of 1967, our centennial as a nation, the year of Expo '67. In the following year we saw the launching of the just society in an election campaign, as a keynote for the opening of the twenty-eighth parliament and indeed as a keynote for the whole of the twenty-eighth parliament. In starting this thirtieth parliament we must ask ourselves what has been accomplished in the first few years of Canada's second century since 1967. Are we any closer to a just society today than we were in 1967?

No doubt some members of parliament will use this debate to point to a number of measure designed to eliminate or to reduce some injustices, and quite properly so, but are we really any closer in total to a just society? Have we reduced disparity between individual Canadians? Certainly we have had economic growth, but disparities between individuals in Canada today are greater than they were in 1967. The degree of inflation which we are experiencing, and which we have experienced for some time, in itself increases inequality and social discontent. We have the plight of those millions of Canadians who are not part of big business or big unions and who are not organized in a way to protect themselves.

While inflation may provide fortunes for the powerful, the nimble and the fast-buck operators, there is no way Canadians of modest means can protect even their savings. So they are ravaged by a form of theft which up until now the government largely has been condoning with hand-outs and the application of a few band-aids. So the gap in respect of individual disparity has been widening. The Prime Minister once said that rampant inflation restricts the idea of a just society. I believe he was right. And when he said that, inflation was running at roughly one-third the rate at which it is running at the present time.

But our failures in government are not confined to inflation. Any kind of a just society in Canada should include an overhaul of our welfare system. We are assured that a very comprehensive review is about to bear fruit. If that is true, it will be very welcome news to anyone who wants to see an effective way of helping people in need, at the same time minimizing the stigma attached thereto and preserving incentive and the morale of those affected. In the meantime, the federal government saddled us with changes in our unemployment insurance arrangements which cost contributors and taxpayers over $2 billion in what the government tells us was a good year. Who knows how much this sum will be in a bad year? We may soon find out. There is widespread belief in the country that unemployment insurance is abused, is milked and ripped off. This is damaging to the morale of Canadians and is unfair to those who make legitimate temporary use of the program. The government says there will be amendments. These amendments may be cosmetic, on the one hand, or unfair on the other. We want a review and a full investigation of this program. Such action would clear the air. Then improvements should certainly be undertaken and completed early in the life of this thirtieth parliament.

In six years, what have we accomplished toward easing regional disparity in this country? Much has been spent, but with little resultant narrowing of the gap. There has been no integrated approach toward fighting regional disparity. Transportation remains a mess, and that alone is sufficient to dilute drastically the effectiveness of any regional disparity program. Bad transportation policy and asinine economic policy combined to make the establishment of DREE, in its first half-decade of operation, almost fruitless. DREE seems to be run by improvisation and has accomplished very little. What is worse, because it has accomplished so little it has created a growing feeling in the more prosperous parts of the country that the program is wasting money which should be used to reinforce economic strength where it exists, rather than being haphazardly thrown after bad. The government must get down to business during this parliament and make DREE mean something coherent, so that it can accomplish something that is so important to our confederation and which we all believe to be so worth while.

In 1973 the government met the premiers of the western provinces. Just the other day we received copies of an update from the Prime Minister addressed to Premier Barrett on the event of the recent conference of western premiers. Some of that process is worthy of commendation, which I sincerely extend to the Prime Minister. But why should he, a couple of weeks ago, find it necessary to make some smart-aleck remarks about impotence when there was a call for consultation as the premiers were about to begin their annual national meeting? Perhaps things would go more smoothly if he restricted himself to the written word and tight editing. I do not think it is unfair to say that federal-provincial relations in general have deteriorated since 1967, since the days of co-operative federalism, and that in particular they have reached new heights of tension in the field of resource royalties, taxation and revenue sharing.

If co-operative federalism was at best an imperfect process, its subsequent replacement by confrontation of federalism in this field will be tragic if continued. What has happened to constitutional reform? Federal-provincial priority regarding constitutional reform was set very early during the twenty-eighth parliament. It has been put quite simply: there has been no success in that matter. We remain a sovereign, independent country with no agreed formula for amending our constitution. Today, as we had then, we have the same Prime Minister with some claim to constitutional expertise. So I do not think it is too much to ask for such an agreement, at least on an amendment formula, during the life of this parliament. But there was no mention of this subject in the Speech from the Throne.

Individual economic injustices increase and regional disparities remain as big as they were in 1967, and world disparities also. Back in those heady days of our centennial year we were going to do our part about world disparities, not only in quest of human justice and morality but also in our own self-interest, because these disparities have long been recognized as a threat to world peace. We were then dedicated to committing 1 per cent of our gross national product to easing these disparities, but we have not met our commitment.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, we met it.

Mr. Stanfield: We are way behind today.

Mr. Sharp: We met it the year before last.

Mr. Stanfield: We are well behind in our commitment. We have not met our commitment in that regard. We had the recent warnings of the World Bank and others as to the inadequacy of the existing development plans. We hear news of mass starvation and the threat of war. At the same time, we see in the House the government's casual attitude toward rotting eggs and we hear the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) muse about a policy to encourage the feeding of grain to livestock so that a product of higher value can be exported, although clearly the same amount of grain would feed more people who are hungry.

Then we heard the remarks attributed to Mr. Head, that we were going into a whole new era of left-wing activist international involvement. I wondered, in the first instance when I heard that, where was the will to keep our commitment to supply food and aid, a commitment we had adopted back at the time of our centennial. I wondered what we were going to supply to the underdeveloped and hungry nations. Would it be philosophy, revolutionary fervour, or handbooks on how to form and develop a just society? My reaction to that kind of puffery was this, sir: let us get off that sort of thing fast, and do something in this parliament more worthy of the spirit of generosity and helpfulness that is in tune with the hearts, minds and spirit of the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister subsequently said this was fiction. I never really regarded Mr. Head as a master of fiction. In any event, I trusted we would get back on track with our commitment of assistance to those nations which are far less fortunate than we are. References to the just society disappeared from throne speeches with the termination of the twenty-eighth parliament. That is fine; a slogan has only a limited lifetime. But I am concerned, as we begin this thirtieth parliament, that reference to matters of importance and substance have been omitted.

[Translation]

The linguistic rights constituted an essential commitment for the government. That concern was clearly stated in the 1968 Speech from the Throne and still recently in the speech preceding this one. The government commitment in this connection read as follows:

> The Government will continue to work in furtherance of the objectives of the Official Languages Act. Further assistance will be offered to the provinces to help ensure that to the extent possible—Canadians can educate their children in the official language of their choice; . . .

However, Mr. Speaker, in the ministerial statement just made to us, the concern over the linguistic rights seems to have vanished. We could think that all problems on this matter are resolved while in fact they are not. The meaning of the Official Languages Act, its aims and its scope are greatly misunderstood, even rejected by many Canadians. This, because the government has not yet explained adequately this policy throughout the country. Indeed, this failure was underlined in the Report by the Commissioner of Official Languages.

And further, the passing of Quebec's Bill 22 goes contrary to the government's policy on official languages, according to which Canadians should be entitled to education in the official language of their choice. Bill 22 at any rate impedes the official policy on bilingualism.

[English]

In the circumstances, I have to wonder why the Prime Minister chose these circumstances above all to eliminate the Minister of State for multiculturalism, a matter on which he was questioned a short while ago. I said repeatedly that an initiative to support multiculturalism should have accompanied the launching of the Official Languages Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Such an initiative would have made that act more acceptable, and certainly would have reduced the feeling among Canadians who are neither British nor French by descent that they were being treated as second-class citizens. The Prime Minister seemed to be a late convert to multiculturalism when he appointed the Minister of State. But why did he eliminate him so quickly after the election? Will not millions of Canadians look at that exercise and be entitled to regard it as an example of cynical political opportunism? Misunderstandings are too easily generated, particularly in a field as sensitive as this. Where they exist, they must be met by some explanation given in a spirit of frankness.

I make a similar plea for frankness, for some explanation, in another important area on which the government expressed itself at the start of earlier parliaments and said nothing about it at the commencement of this parliament. Aside from a reference to royalty payments on reserves, there is no mention in the Speech from the Throne of the government's intentions regarding our native people. The new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), according to press reports, considers the 1969 white paper scrapped. At the moment, then, Canada's Indian population is faced with a vacuum as far as future federal government intentions are concerned. Two days ago a demonstration took place in front of the centre block. Disturbances were extended into the streets. Responsible Indian leadership shunned that operation, agitators took advantage of the demonstration to promote the communist party Marxist-Leninist activities and the whole affair ended up marked by foul language and hooliganism.

This demonstration, and others like it, can only hurt the legitimate cause of all native people in this country. Responsible leaders among the native people who are trying their best to control the impatience which has been magnified by years of dissatisfaction, and indeed hardship, need some public expression by the government to support them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Those who have lost patience and manifested that loss in this demonstration were few in number on Monday, but that number could grow rapidly if it appears the government has lost interest or is too preoccupied with other needs even to include an expression of concern for their interests in the Speech from the Throne. I wish the new minister success in his difficult task. He will find an early opportunity, I trust in this debate, to make up for this omission. We in Canada lost several years as a result of the government's setting false directions in that white paper of 1969—surely one of the most monumental pieces of ineptitude in our recent history. Time is running out. We must make up for lost time, and we must do so during the life of this parliament.

Another area of concern to which we must give attention is the lack of public confidence in politicians and the political process. Since our centennial year we have seen some improvements which should help reduce the suspicions that many Canadians harbour about politicians and about what is often called the political process. With respect to the matter of financing political parties, the new election expenses legislation, for example, requires disclosure of all substantial donations.

[Translation]

The right hon. Prime Minister issued certain guidelines to ministers and public servants respecting conflicts of interest. On this matter, I can only repeat what I stated at the time, that they are inadequate and I find unbelievable that the guidelines issued by the Prime Minister on December 18 on disclosure of holdings are not implemented to this day. I feel it would be possible to develop more adequate rules during this legislature. Rules binding ministers, government officials, members of parliament and even hon. senators, if one is to judge by remarks recently attributed to the new government leader (Mr. Perrault) in that place.

[English]

Even though we have opened up the affairs of our political parties, excessive secrecy in government continues to breed suspicion. In this House of Commons there is now no way to force information from a minister who does not want to give it. That power disappeared when the right to unlimited debate on estimates was eliminated. When the House could hold up estimates, it could get answers. Now it cannot get answers unless the minister concerned graciously wishes to furnish them.

As the official opposition in this new parliament, we intend to devise and relentlessly pursue means of getting accurate and straightforward information from the ministry. This is absolutely essential in these days of mammoth government which enters daily the lives of our citizens. We intend to be a constructive opposition, but a vigorous one, especially when the rights and paramount obligations of parliament are involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The existing practices relating to secrecy of government documents are absurd. They operate for the convenience of the government and not for the benefit of our society. We must terminate this business whereby virtually every government document is marked "secret," the only exception perhaps being that absorbent paper which comes in little rolls.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: The automatic presumption of confidentiality should be reversed and replaced by an information policy which guarantees that all documents and information in the possession of the government are made available to the public, unless they fall within very carefully defined exceptions which are spelled out. These are some of the things we must fight for, in the interests of a free society, during the life of this parliament. The right to information is one of the foundations of a free society. A free society can flourish only within a framework of order, order which is respected, order which is reasonably just, order which permits individuals to fulfil themselves. We do not have that sort of order in Canada today. We do not have the economic stability necessary for such an order. Instead, Mr. Speaker, we have increasing chaos which flows from the inflation that is now rampant in our society. Many individuals have seen the plans of a lifetime completely frustrated. Planning for the future has become virtually impossible for others. The increasing number of disruptions and strikes is a manifestation of loss of order attributable to chaotic inflation, as those who are in a position to do so try to protect themselves and sometimes seem to take advantage of the situation.

Erratic interventions such as those made recently by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), the Minister of Justice, and I think by the Prime Minister himself, in relation to one particular dispute only exacerbate the problem. We just cannot drift along and dialogue, as the Speech from the Throne envisages. This parliament must insist on action as an absolute priority. It is said, it has been said and will be said again, that we are relatively well off, economically, in Canada compared with other countries. Our economy has remained relatively strong because of world demand for the products of western agriculture, something which the government was about to write off about two years ago, and our mining and petroleum resources which were treated with a great deal of contempt by many Canadians for a long time.

Let us not be under any illusion that we are doing relatively well economically because we have solved the basic problem of manufacturing in Canada, the problem of access to large-scale markets on competitive terms, because we have not. And some apparent success with CANDU is no substitute for an effective and comprehensive science policy, something which we still lack. Relative good fortune, economically, has been ours as a country, largely independently of the policies of the government from 1967 to this time. But this cannot be assumed to go on indefinitely. We must quickly begin to prevent, to fight, to stop the spread of the sickness of disorder in our society which comes from inflation. It is no answer to be told that inflation and resulting injustices and tensions are worse in some other, indeed in most other countries. I say, sir, that we have received a great inheritance in this country. Let us do something with it.

I have heard it said that Canadians complain about inflation but are not willing to do anything about it, that they are not willing to accept the restraint necessary to fight this menace. How do we know that? The government spent a lot of time telling the country that nothing could be done, that inflation was due to factors that we in Canada could not control. This spread and attitude in the country of every man for himself. That is what we have spreading through our society today—every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost.

I believe, sir, that our democracy is being tested as it has seldom been tested in the past. What is being particularly tested in this circumstance is the competence of our national government to lead. Leadership of the order required to meet the need must have at least three attributes. First, there must be an exhibition of both the will to take the situation seriously and the will to do something about it. Second, there must be the capacity to create stability and throughout the country a climate of confidence in that stability. Third, there must be the ability to inspire self-discipline in the day to day activities of individual Canadians. This individual discipline will not be there unless the leadership of the government demonstrates that it is disciplining its own operations.

We are not simply dealing with something that can be fixed by pulling levers or pushing buttons. We are dealing with a psychological force. The problem must be met in a way that takes that into account. If there is one point that we have tried repeatedly to emphasize to the government over the past two years, this is it. If there is one thing which above all this administration chose to ignore and slough off, this is it. Now we are beginning to hear a different tune. The Prime Minister spoke at the opening session of the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' Conference. He spoke about confidence. He said he hoped the meeting would be marked by a great demonstration of confidence, and went on to say, "It is the essential element in the world economic structure—perhaps the only element in the world monetary system that is of any consequence at all."

How can Canadians have confidence unless there is order and stability? This government has over the course of six years indulged in a welter of so-called tax reform, confused competition policy and bizarre anti-profiteering legislation. It is a government whose only cure for inflation five years ago was unemployment, and whose more recent approach has been to play ostrich. The leader of this government is now cognizant of the problem being serious and is overcome with the importance of confidence. I refer him to his interesting "zap" speech and ask, is the Prime Minister now saying to the country, "Zap, you're confident"?

It is almost five months since we last met in this chamber. Five months ago the previous parliament rejected a budget which did not base itself upon generating confidence. Rather, all too much of it was premised on generating confrontation. Within six weeks, according to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), we will be looking at another budget and we will see whether the Prime Minister, the minister and the government really have learned anything in the interim. I hope they have, sir, because I believe we are on a very dangerous course if they have not.

We are in a period of some sobering problems, and we are in for more difficult days ahead. That is a fact. That is not the simplistic, professional pessimism of those who sit in the official opposition. It is also a fact that the government has not yet come clean with Canadians. I know the Minister of Finance, if he were here, might resent that charge. But he simply cannot defend the integrity of the ministry which he heads. There have been virtually as many different stories, explanations, conflicting advocacies and alibis emanating from cabinet today as there are members in the ministry.

Speaking for his leader and colleagues, the Minister of Finance for almost two years has been offering a one-string bow as the policy to fight inflation—to increase supply. "Increase supply," he said, "and things will improve." Now perhaps we will hear the minister and the Prime Minister tell the House where this policy went to ruin in relation to the quota-setting, marketing and storage of eggs. I have not heard either of them pronounce on that situation.

We need an end to this sort of tragic nonsense. Canada needs leadership. It needs it now, and through the life of this parliament, if we are ever to achieve real justice in our society, justice rooted in order and nurtured by freedom. Democracy is being tested. I believe the tensions associated with inflation and related economic and social disorder and discontent may destroy democracy in some other countries. We must show that our democracy is strong enough, that our sense of citizenship, our sense of community and our democratic institutions are strong enough and responsive enough to control inflation in our country to provide a framework of order in which freedom and justice can flourish. That will take leadership. That is what I demand of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe

(Mr. Wagner), that the following words be added to the Address:

We respectfully suggest to Your Excellency that the failure of your ministers to act resolutely after the election of July 8 last has contributed to the increasing disparity and the social and economic disarray in the country, which require prompt, decisive leadership which is lacking in the Speech from the Throne.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Monday morning the representatives of the various parties pointed out the great qualities of mind and spirit, the courage and firmness that must be shown by the individual holding that high office. This post is surely the most difficult that can be assigned by the House to one of its members and I would like today on behalf of the government and myself to express our gratitude to you for having accepted that burdensome task without which this House could not make any expected progress.

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to assure the constituents of Sudbury that the great honour bestowed upon them as a result of your appointment will not be prejudicial to the expectations that they can entertain as your constituents; Mr. Speaker, as for the government members, we will do our utmost to support you when you will be trying to meet the wishes and aspirations of your constituents.

I should also like to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for his excellent speech which extended somewhat the electoral campaign but still touched upon several important topics all of which, it is only fair to say, we were unable to deal with in the Speech from the Throne especially, Mr. Speaker, to avoid repeating what we intend to do to ensure the progress of our country, but topics with which I myself intend to deal in the House in the course of my speech today; topics, may I say again, which we agree with him are important and make me realize that indeed the opposition is really very fortunate in having such a leader and that it will be no easy task for the Progressive Conservatives to find within their ranks a man or woman capable of replacing him adequately.

I should like to address a word of congratulations to the electors of Montmorency and Vancouver East for their good judgment in electing two young men who stand out for their competence, their political qualities and their sincerity, and who, as they indicated yesterday in their speeches as movers of the address in reply, certainly represent that new generation of Canadians who expect of Canada and its government actions that are truly worthy of the people.

Naturally, I am most happy, as leader of the Liberal party, to see that such promising young men should have chosen to fight in the ranks of the Liberal party, should have chosen our party as the instrument with which to attempt to build together a better Canada. I am also very happy, as a parliamentarian, to see the House welcome not only the two hon. members I have just mentioned but also, on the other side, the new recruits whose talents will doubtless soon become obvious.

● (1550)

Apart from my pleasure in being leader of a party, and a parliamentarian, I feel pride as a Canadian in seeing so many men and women of high quality who have chosen to make the considerable sacrifice entailed in setting aside their personal business, private affairs and a large part of their family life in order to seek the high honour of representing their fellow Canadians in this House. Only those who have been elected by their fellow Canadians know the great privilege of serving in this House. Only they realize the awesome extent of the power conferred upon them to legislate on behalf of and to govern their fellow Canadians.

Since 264 of us have been elected, the difficulty lies in defining the ways in which millions of Canadians who are separated by geography, social conditions, race, colour and creed want to be governed by those sitting in this House and in the other place. In this chamber sit 264 people of strong character. Each has his own beliefs, his own interpretation of the voice of the Canadian people, his own desire to fulfil the mandate which he alone can define precisely, because every member received it in his or her constituency.

As a Liberal partisan, it is easy to count numbers and be convinced that in the numbers lies the total message expressed by the Canadian people. The truth is much more elusive. There is more to the message than party standings. In a free society, no majority can rule effectively if it pays no heed to the minority. No majority can give leadership of any value unless it is prepared to listen attentively to the voices of the opposition and try to accommodate its legislation and policies in ways which express the total will of the Canadian people.

● (1600)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Nonetheless, as members forming the government party we have to ask ourselves why the people voted as they did, why they decided collectively to give us a second majority; to give us, as it were, a second chance. How can we respond to the wishes of the people? The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has, for his part, given some of his answers. I must say that he seems to have asked more questions and underlined more problems than he was able to provide answers. The one answer he did give on the problem of inflation was rejected not only by the Canadian people but by many members of his own party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Through the Speech from the Throne and speeches that will be made in the course of this debate by ministers and other members of the government party, we are attempting to give some of the answers, at least for this session. Today I would like to try to describe the larger framework, the one that hopefully will last beyond the first session and carry us further into the life of this parliament. In view of the fact that we were given a mandate which in the normal course of events will last some four years more or less, we have to assume that the people of Canada do want this government to tackle tasks which are of longer duration than perhaps one or two sessions.

I think it is fair to say that before election day most of the pundits were predicting another minority government. They were writing that, in the midst of anguish and global uncertainty, in a country which very exceptionally gives majority mandates because of the vast cultural and geographic distances which separate us, most predictions were not for a majority government. If the Canadian people, in their collective wisdom, gave one party a majority, I think it is the duty of the leader of that party to try to express some of the larger tasks, some of the unfinished business which could not be properly handled or tackled in parliaments of shorter duration.

It is comforting to me that in his remarks the Leader of the Opposition touched upon several of those larger subjects. He mentioned several of the items of unfinished business which we will attempt to settle in this parliament. It is comforting because the very fact that the opposition has pinpointed them as important gives us on this side great hope that, though we may differ in specific methods of tackling some of those problems, at least our goal will be largely the same, that all the unfinished business which lies before us will be finished, hopefully, by the end of this parliament.

The first matter I should like to deal with is that of a major parliamentary reform. Mr. Speaker, it is essential to the survival of democracy and freedom in this country that Parliament remain at the core of this nation. It is therefore necessary for this institution to be able to express the collective will effectively and completely. Far be it from me to equate effectiveness with a certain type of chain production. I should not like the hon. members on this side to think that we wish to increase the powers of the government at the expense of those of the opposition.

On the contrary, we are perfectly aware that a major parliamentary reform is only possible if all hon. members, regardless of party affiliation, are in favour of this reform. The government House leader has already told me that he is heartened by the spirit of co-operation he has found in all members and other House leaders. I do not want to labour the point, but I think it is important to realize that when we compare the Canadian House of Commons with provincial legislative assemblies, we are oftentimes outrun by them because of their ability to pass bills that are generally good much faster than we do. Considering the list of bills introduced in the House last Monday, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to realize that we are again with this good old practice of carrying bills unadopted because of time during one session to the next session or Parliament.

In most departments, I am sure lots of reforms pile up that would be for the advantage of Canadians if only both Houses had time to process those bills. For sure, people looking from the outside get the impression of a Parliament somewhat paralyzed by outdated procedures and antiquated traditions, and of a Parliament that will itself become inefficient and out-of-date if it is satisfied with giving the impression of efficiency instead of realizing it.

The leader of the House, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), and myself have discussed many of these things together and I am sure that during this Parliament, and I hope during the first session, there will be a wish on all sides to introduce many of these reforms and I mention a few of them: The first one should certainly be the more rational use of our time, and I do not mean reducing the length of the discussions when we are studying substantial questions, but by reducing it when we are concerned with purely technical questions or minor amendments; when there is a general understanding, we should be able to put our legislation through much faster and not find ourselves having to put off from one session to another bills that should be adopted in a much shorter period of time.

A second subject which, to my way of thinking, deserves more of our attention is that of the time we give to the second reading of bills. When a bill comes back for second reading, according to tradition and the rules, we are supposed to discuss mainly the principle of the bill.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that a reasonably united and coherent party should be able to give a general opinion for this party on a bill in one, two or three speeches. This should be done in one or two days but unfortunately we often see that second reading lasts for weeks and even months.

This is a reform that our colleagues in Westminster Parliament have adopted some time ago and I for one am somewhat scandalized by the fact that every time we have discussed imitating this practise there are people, especially on the other side of the House, who are ready, if I may quote Montesquieu: to cough and spit like Englishmen but who never want to adopt what good there is in English institutions—

The third subject is a touchy one and pertains to the remarks made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition; it is a subject I would like to say a word about and it is that of the oral question period.

The Leader of the Opposition asked, demanded, rightly so, that the government give better and more appropriate answers to questions put to it.

Mr. Speaker, here also I suggest that the oral questions period become a really serious and productive one, in which the government will do its best to answer questions properly, that it does so following agreements—perhaps following an amendment to the Standing Orders or practices—agreements that would enable the government to know in advance, as it is the usage in the Westminster Parliament, the questions put to it. If questions are asked for technical reasons or to gain debating points, one should not be surprised to see the government reply likewise. But if, indeed, the opposition parties want to obtain proper and precise answers, it seems to me that they could not object too strongly to their giving us notice and allowing us a few days to get the information.

● (1620)

An hon. Member: As it is done for the questions put on the order paper.

Mr. Trudeau: Again, as it is done in the place called the mother of Parliaments, Great Britain. The hon. member mentions the order paper of the House. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if he looks over his files a little, he will see that in the great majority of cases, around 90 per cent of cases, we give answers—

An hon. Member: Not adequate answers.

Mr. Trudeau: —to questions put on the order paper. Also, as far as supplementary questions are concerned, we are prepared to follow the practice existing at Westminster. This problem of the oral question period is closely related to another question which is still sensitive, that of the roll call which is called in English the roster system. I would be unwise to move back to this system. I would merely like to put before the House and the public opinion a rather simple proposition: there again, if we think that a modern government must be efficient, if we feel that every minister must discharge at the same time several duties, if he must represent his riding properly, if he must be partisan and take care of his party's affairs; if, at the same time, he must administer a department sometimes a major one and take part in the business of the House. If we consider all that, Mr. Speaker, it seems a wastage to require that the entire Cabinet attend constantly every oral question period, because according to the statistics, it is obvious that a third or a quarter of the ministers are asked questions each day.

I think that it should be possible to agree on certain days for debating or asking questions on certain matters and at that time the ministers would be available to answer these questions.

Again, I do not consider this idea to be so revolutionary and I do not understand the opposition's distress. I simply hope that the House leader of the opposition will take these questions into serious consideration and try to give them an answer which, if not ours, will at least be adequate.

There are several matters, Mr. Speaker, that will surely be discussed by the leaders of all parties. I would simply say again that our party is not afraid of the electronic media, that we are ready to accept the broadcasting of House debates.

There are arguments for and against such a reform, but to my mind the decisive argument is the importance of bringing the federal presence and of making the existence of this very Parliament felt in all parts of the country. Canada is such a vast country—a topic to which I will return later on—that too often Canadians are somewhat unaware of what goes on in the House. I believe that television and radio would bring them closer to us for our mutual benefit.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) mentioned an electronic machine. I would even accept, if that is what he wants, to introduce an electronic vote device which would eliminate this long process which obliges us to spend a lot of our time doing gymnastics.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word about the Senate. I know that it is not for me to say too much about that subject, but I think that it would not be more than good neighbour policy to suggest that at least a few reforms should be considered, reforms which would in no way interfere with the authority of the provinces, but which could be considered under section 91, subsection (1), of our Constitution. As a matter of fact, I have discussed these reforms with the government leader in the Senate, Mr. Perrault, and I hope that in this area also, this Parliament will accomplish some progress. The two reforms that I have in mind are as follows: First, we should limit the duration of senatorial appointments to a certain number of years, seven, for instance, with the option of reappointing senators when they have well served their country. Secondly, we could follow the example set a long time ago by the British Parliament and give only a suspensive veto to the second House.

Hon. members opposite talk about partisan appointments. This is a serious matter which I have already had the opportunity to discuss several years ago with the authorities of opposition parties, and I had then suggested, and I repeat my suggestion today, that if indeed the senators of the Progressive Conservative party, of the Tory party, who wish to retire from the Upper Chamber, refrain from doing so because they do not want to be replaced by Liberal senators, I repeat what I told several years ago to Senator Flynn who, if I am not mistaken, represents the opposition party in the Senate, that, for my part, I would readily appoint Progressive Conservatives to replace the Progressive Conservatives who voluntarily retire from the Upper Chamber. I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that some of them accept my suggestion, but there were many more when I first made this offer several years ago, and if the official opposition party continues to act so speedily, they may be even fewer in four years.

It is a humble start but the House will certainly recall that several years ago the government had proposed a much more thorough reform of the Senate which involved provincial participation. But I will not talk about this today. If, in the context of our constitutional reform, we must come back to this subject, the government always has an open mind to discuss this problem.

[English]

Another area of unfinished business, and one which is very important for the conduct of this nation, is that of federal-provincial relations. The Leader of the Opposition did deal with that subject. It is certainly one of great importance. One of the notable trends in Canada in the last ten years has been the great increase in the importance of federal-provincial relations. Meetings and discussions at all levels, political and official, have become steadily more frequent. I believe that not a day passes without there being at least one, and sometimes more, meeting of federal and provincial governments or their representatives. It is apparent that this is a trend which will continue, because if our system of government is to be effective at the two levels, federal and provincial, we have to meet the complicated questions which face us in a spirit of understanding and co-operation.

In most of the important areas of government there is no possibility of drawing clear and straight lines dividing purely federal from purely provincial functions. Nor is it realistic to think that action at one level will not have, in very many instances, an important influence on the responsibilities which belong to another level of government. Whether we like it or not, and whether hon. members opposite understand it or not, governments spend a great deal of time, as we do in cabinet committee, on federal-provincial relations, trying to ensure that the decisions we take which are closely interrelated with provincial problems in their areas of jurisdiction are dealt with in a way which behooves our very complex society. We must recognize that and organize accordingly. That is why several provinces, and I do not know if it is most, have sought to ensure that degree of co-ordination by establishing a department of intergovernmental affairs with a minister at the head of such department.

In our government we established a branch of the Privy Council office to co-ordinate policy under the direction of the Prime Minister. My predecessor and I were of the view that it would not be wise to establish such a department of federal-provincial affairs. It is not feasible to have one minister other than the Prime Minister charged with the final responsibility and authority of co-ordinating the policies and actions that in substance fall within the ambit of one or another ministerial department.

I am satisfied that this decision was right. We have had improved co-ordination of policy and of federal-provincial discussion in recent years. There is obviously much room for improvement. However, I do not think there is a need to change the basic organization. What is needed, in light of the increasing scope and complexity of federal-provincial questions, is a strengthening of the resources which we at the federal level devote to these problems and the negotiations related to them. That is the reason the government decided to create an independent office for federal-provincial relations, to be responsible to the Prime Minister.

This office will be headed at the official level by one of the most senior officers of government, who will be titled "secretary to cabinet for federal-provincial relations" with the rank of deputy minister. The responsibilities will not be substantially different from those of the federal-provincial relations branch of the Privy Council office. Nor will the office be unduly large at the outset. The principal difference will lie in the capacity to maintain relations with regard to federal-provincial policy generally at a more senior level than has been possible thus far.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, another topic I would like to discuss and which I also find important in the context of our federalism, is to increase the federal presence in a general way across the country. A while ago I referred to the great distances that separate us. Now I say that if we look at the political competition between the federal and the provincial powers, we notice that each time the federal government representatives are penalized, at least as far as their number is concerned, by the provincial representatives. There are almost three times as many provincial members as federal members, there are more than six times as many provincial ministers as federal ministers in our cabinet.

Of course, and I cannot count the politicians working at the municipal level, for every political man and woman in this profession it is desirable to make oneself known, to be seen in the best possible light and because of this competition, it often happens that the federal presence is not really felt as it should be in every part of the country.

Quite often a federal policy is known through the media and by the reactions it causes from provincial governments. Since the country is vast, the distances separating us have prevented us—and I find that a serious matter—from seeing to it that all Canadians never cease to consider Ottawa as the capital of every citizen, as their capital.

We have enacted much legislation in the 28th and 29th Parliaments to increase the influence, the working capacity and the privileges of the hon. members. We shall continue to make progress in that direction but today I would like only to point out how important is this federal presence for the government and tell the House that in our discussions with the provinces we shall put greater emphasis on the principle that moneys coming from the federal tax payer and spent by the federal government on behalf of that tax payer must be recognized as coming from the federal government. I would hope that the various reforms known to this House and which have already been mentioned, like decentralization, keep on making progress, that an organization like Information Canada be entitled to express in an even more real and vigorous way the federal presence throughout Canada. I talked earlier about the advantage of having radio and television broadcasting of the House of Commons debates.

[English]

There is another area of business which has remained unfinished ever since we became a country 107 years ago. I was very pleased to note that the Leader of the Opposition gave importance to that fact when he noted that constitutional reform had not yet succeeded in bringing back our constitution to Canada. We were the first portion of the then British empire, after the great revolution which created the United States of America, to establish a constitution which could be the basis for an independent, self-governing country. I say "the basis" because we did not become independent in 1867 in every sense of the word. Among other things, the tutelage of the mother of parliaments was reflected in the fact that we were provided with no way to amend our constitution, as was pointed out by many speakers including the Leader of the Opposition. With all our freedom to choose and all our ingenuity to revise, we have never been able to agree on how to amend our constitution.

Every other country in the world, with no exception, has been able at least to do that. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that it is a standing reproach to us as Canadians, and particularly to those of us engaged in the activities of politics, that we have so totally failed in this kindergarten, fundamental structure of political independence. I believe it is time we got into grade one. It is time we in this government, in this parliament, decided that we are going to solve that problem before we pass from the scene.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I hear some hon. members opposite refer to the Victoria 1970 constitutional conference. I would point out to them that there have been 50 years of effort to achieve what we attempted at Victoria and failed. During nearly half of our national existence—just think of it—we have been trying to solve this problem and have constantly failed. The problem was first fully considered at the dominion-provincial conference of 1927 where it was agreed that Canada should have the power to amend her own constitution. That was under Mr. King's government. The matter was again studied by parliament in 1931 when it considered the Statute of Westminster under Mr. Bennett's government. In 1935, parliament set up a special committee "to report on the best method by which the BNA Act may be amended". The same year, another dominion-provincial conference set up a continuing committee of attorneys general to prepare a draft of a method of procedure to amend the BNA Act. That committee reported in 1936, but again to no avail.

In 1949, Mr. St. Laurent decided to cut out part of the problem and to introduce the first amendment to the BNA Act, which was passed, to provide certain powers to amend purely federal aspects of the BNA Act. He initiated a federal-provincial constitutional conference which met twice in 1950 but, again, produced no real agreement. Then in January, 1960, the dean of this House, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he was prime minister spoke of this matter in the throne speech debate. He expressed the hope "that the time will not be too long delayed when we will be able within our own country to arrive at a basis for the amendment of our own constitution". He set up a conference of attorneys general which took up the matter in 1960 and 1961. Most of the provinces agreed on a formula, but differences of view remained and that exercise failed.

In 1964, Mr. Pearson took up the challenge, and once again progress seemed to be made. The House will recall that the Fulton formula became the Fulton-Favreau formula. There were more conferences, more proceedings, more high hopes, and more failures. In 1968—the Leader of the Opposition reminded us of this—we began a most serious assessment and review of our whole constitution. We had a series of conferences and special committees, which all members of this House will recall, and the culmination was in the Victoria conference in June of 1970 when there was at least agreement by all provinces, all 11 of them, on a procedure for amendment. But in the end, the Victoria charter failed to receive acceptance from Quebec, not because of disagreement with the amending formula but for quite another reason.

I have gone into this history for two reasons; one is to show how long and how hard we have tried to achieve complete agreement for action on the basis of unanimous consent and the other is to show how general has been the agreement by statesmen of all parties and in all parts of the country that the problem of the amending procedure and of bringing back the constitution across the ocean to be domiciled wholly and entirely in Canada is one that should be solved. It is one on which there seems to have been a general will to reach agreement, I repeat, for 50 years.

I can quote something that scholastics used to quote as being a test of a general desire to seek the truth, "quod ad omnibus, quod ubique, quod semper". It seems to me that this is something that meets the test. Everywhere, everyone has always wanted to have this done, yet we always seem to have failed. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition and I am very happy to have the support of his party in saying that it is time to decide that this will be done and that we will settle on an amending procedure within four years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am confident of the support of the party opposite, and I say that I will seek the agreement of all provincial governments in achieving this end with great determination. If no better formula can be found, then we will propose the adoption of the formula which received agreement in 1970 in Victoria. I am confident that the people of Canada will agree with whatever action is required to settle this question once and for all.

[Translation]

I should like to address my colleagues from Quebec in a special way, because we know it is often there that the stumbling-block was, in 1970 as well as for the Fulton-Favreau formula. I am convinced this applies also to my colleagues on the other side: some will possibly find unthinkable that we should explain to people in Quebec that all we want is to bring back in Canada our own Constitution. But I think it will be fairly easy to convince them that they no longer need to seek the help of Great Britain, that they no longer need to hide behind Great Britain's skirts when we discuss among ourselves political issues affecting us all.

[English]

I want to talk about one more piece of unfinished business, and here too I am very happy that the Leader of the Opposition underlined it as one on which serious action should be taken. It is the question of bilingualism. I was, I admit, surprised to see the Leader of the Opposition wring his hands because we had not mentioned that subject in the Speech from the Throne. He will no doubt recall that when we did mention it in the first Speech from the Throne in the last parliament, members of his party and the New Democratic Party told us that it was much too sensitive a subject to be brought before the House of Commons. Now he is telling us that we should have brought it before the House. I am bringing it before the House of Commons and I hope that here, too, we will agree that it is absolutely vital that we use these four years of reasonably and, hopefully, stable government to establish firmly the federal capital as the capital of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: To the separatists who argue that that could never be so for a French-speaking Canadian, all parties in this House can respond that the Official Languages Act would make it so. Therein lies an obligation that we all have, a kind of political contract with French-speaking Canadians under which they would reject separatism and the federal parliament would guarantee the right to French Canadians to communicate with and work in the federal administration in the French language. I solemnly believe that if we do not or cannot make that right a reality during the life of this parliament with its commitment to bilingualism, with the very emphatic words of the Leader of the Opposition in his speech an hour ago, with the strong French-speaking representation in government, then it will never be done and separatism will have proved its point and Canadian unity will cease to have meaning for the majority of Quebeckers.

Mr. Speaker, I will give a straight answer to the question of the Leader of the Opposition: The government maintains strongly as ever its official language policy and will pursue with renewed vigour the basic goal it set for itself when it came into power in 1968, namely to make it possible for all Canadians throughout Canada to deal with their federal government in the official language of their choice.

In that respect, we should be happy about the progress made during these last five years and regret the slowness that still delays the implementation of the law, but I should like, Mr. Speaker, to express my delight to the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) who, in his first speech in the House yesterday, pointed out that bilingualism is one of the main concerns of Quebeckers. He thus expressed a government policy, a policy that we intend to carry successfully during the next four years.

Therefore the Canadian government will continue to promote vigorously the use of the two official languages in its own field and to encourage the provinces to do the same in their fields of jurisdiction.

This government will stand in opposition by all possible means to any legislative or other measures liable to restrict the use, on the part of citizens of the official language of their choice.

Therefore we shall carry on our efforts to remove certains obstacles, for instance those related to the working language, which French-speaking candidates encounter whenever they wish to make a career in the Canadian public service.

Those obstacles, which are too numerous to list in detail, create a serious anomaly in our federalism. French-speaking Canadians, and particularly Quebeckers, are still far from having in our public service a position equal to their number and their ability.

Moreover, they still do not hold the number of high positions to which they would normally be entitled and consistent with their competence, in the best interests of the federal government and the Canadian people. For instance, at the executive level of certain key departments, the French-speaking representation is still under 10 per cent. And in general, very little progress has been accomplished in the use of French as a working language. This is an unfair and therefore unhealthy situation which must be corrected as soon as possible.

We could undoubtedly ramble on about the historic and other causes of this situation, about the procedures and the sharing of responsibilities. But the government of Canada is much more interested in applying the remedies which come under its jurisdiction. We are therefore planning to take the necessary means, of which several have already been implemented, for the representation of French Canadians in the public service to reach as soon as possible, in number and importance, the critical mass required to create an irreversible situation. Once this objective is reached, the French-speaking community of our country will be able to carry on. We will have solved the problem which has concerned us for several generations and Canadian unity will have reached a very important phase.

Mr. Speaker, in so doing, the government was hoping that provincial authorities would follow suit. We were confident that if they did not already do so, they would take it upon themselves to provide their own services in both languages, at the option of their residents.

Yet, even though we have noted some progress in certain provinces, and even in some cases significant progress, we must realise that elsewhere the situation is at a standstill and that, in some areas, regression towards unilingualism is threatening.

In this respect, the legislative measures adopted by Quebec, Bill 22 for example, have not failed to give rise to some concern, not only within Quebec's population but all over the country. This law has been very much discussed and the constitutional orthodoxy of certain articles has been questioned. It is not impossible that some people might want to contest certain articles to check their constitutionality. If that should happen, the courts would have to decide as was done in the case of the federal law on official languages. Anyway, and even though I personally regret the aspects of this legislation which seem to contradict contemporary trends towards more liberty on the subject of language, we should not lose sight of, and I feel that the Leader of the Opposition seems to have done this, that even after the adoption of Bill 22 Quebec is still, among all Canadian provinces, the one which treats the language of the minority on her territory with the most equity, the most liberalism and the greatest generosity. If, Mr. Speaker, the other nine provinces suddenly decided to show the same respect towards their own official language minorities we would witness a miraculous blooming across the whole country. I hope that there is no question of using a law for one's friends and another for one's foes depending on whether one is judging the laws of Quebec and the customs of Quebec as opposed to those of provinces where the majority is English-speaking. The Montreal Gazette has understood this and even though it is a newspaper that was not always easy on Bill 22, they published an editorial dated September 23rd last entitled "Making Bill 22 Look Good", and this editorial examined the customs used in Ontario and in Manitoba and concluded in the following way:

[English]

Whatever the failings of Quebec's Bill 22, it still preserves a substantial place for English education in the province. Manitoba and Ontario should be prepared to do no less for their French minorities.

I dwell somewhat on this subject, Mr. Speaker, because it is important that people throughout this country understand in some way the spirit that prevails in Quebec in this regard. It is obvious, and I said so many times, that if Quebec is not vigorously French-speaking and does not fully participate in the Canadian life as a French-speaking province, the whole country will soon proceed towards English unilingualism, thus destroying one of the characteristics that constitute the richness and originality of this country. And when I am speaking of a vigorously French-speaking Quebec, I do not mean a unilingual Quebec, on the contrary, in the mind of a great number of French-speaking Quebeckers, the knowledge of English as a second language seems essential to Quebec's and Canada's welfare. But all Canadians, whatever their origin and in whatever part of this country they may live, should understand that the universal use of French in Quebec as a working language and as a cultural instrument, as a recreation and teaching language, is as natural as the universal use of English in British Columbia or in Newfoundland.

We should all be glad that Quebec is using all the means available to it to emphasize its French nature, strengthen its culture and ensure its radiance as long as it always acts with all due respect for minority rights, a respect that has always characterized the Quebec attitude in the past. As I said and I repeat, in a continent threatened by uniformity we should all welcome that effort. There are in us as in all human societies prejudices as tenacious as harmful. Persisting in believing that one is less of a Canadian if one speaks French or that the linguistic dualism and cultural diversity threatens the Canadian integrity is, as I have said, one of the most pernicious prejudices that continue to exist among us, a deplorable relic of past times.

We must get together to wipe out the myth of English unilingualism but we must accept both sides of the linguistic partition, the concrete consequences of linguistic dualism not only tolerated with more or less silent resistance but openly accepted, supported, promoted. It is obvious that the French language spoken by six million people on a continent on which live about 240 million English-speaking people, if it is to survive and expand, must be carefully attended to.

So one should not panic nor be content with a reaction of indifference to the efforts undertaken in Quebec and other French-speaking communities in Canada to promote and develop the use of the French language. For its part, the federal government will continue to do its large share to strengthen the French fact through its legislation, its policy in the area of culture, broadcasting, movies, even immigration.

And it was essential that the government of Canada, aware of its linguistic duality, projected a true picture of what we are, and that is why in the same sense as we maintain privileged relations with Commonwealth countries we wanted under the leadership of the minister seated on my right, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), we wanted in the same spirit to strengthen the ties that bound us already with French-speaking countries. This thing must go on and we will soon have the opportunity to extend it in a new area. In fact, the satellite Symphony built jointly by France and the Federal Republic of Germany will be launched in December and I intend, during my next visit in Paris, in the next few weeks, to initiate a Canadian participation in the new international cultural exchanges that will be made possible through this instrument.

When the large majority of Canadians will have understood the importance of an active and earnest cooperation in the objectives I have just listed and will have put to silence all the bigots, the province of Quebec will no longer consider itself apart from the rest of Canada. Its own anxieties being removed it will be able to cooperate more fully than ever in building the country we are forming all together.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, if I had not moved a motion on Monday to continue this debate until the leaders of all parties be heard, I would not mind pursuing my speech to the bitter end, as it were.

Mr. Dinsdale: "Bitter" is right.

Mr. Trudeau: I think I will—

An hon. Member: Summarize it.

Mr. Trudeau: —summarize it, as the hon. member opposite suggests. I will summarize some of the topics which my ministers and myself will be dealing with in the course of the present session.

I have now spent a great deal of time talking about unfinished business which would probably carry our endeavours over the next few years. I would point out that I think without exception they were suggestions that the Leader of the Opposition reproached us for failing to deal with, so I hope I will not be faulted for having dealt with them at some length in response to his suggestions.

The other subjects are ones which perhaps are not so easily encompassed in a period of four years. They might take less and they might take more, Mr. Speaker. Many of them are not within the control of this parliament alone, and for that reason I will deal with them today. They concern suggestions made by the Leader of the Opposition. Native rights is one, the problems of poverty is another, and the problems of the status of women is yet another. Inflation is another one, Mr. Speaker. There will be other occasions for talk and discussion, and the subject of inflation, which is of very great interest to all members of this House, will be dealt with at some length by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he returns from Washington.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I will bring these remarks to an end, just using these last few minutes to say that if the Canadian people wanted action in this parliament, they are going to get action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: They wanted a government which would face the difficult issues, make decisions and move Canada forward, and they voted Liberal because they knew we would do the job. We did not fight and win an election to come back here to play political games, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: There is a French saying which I hope translates well. It goes something like this: one does not cross the Rubicon in order to go fishing. We Liberals have work to do and we are determined to get on with the job. I hope opposition members will share our commitment to action and will not engage in the kind of partisan irrelevancies which cost them countless thousands of votes on July 8. We want the confidence of the people. We are dedicated to the principles of individual freedom and equality, principles which are basic to Liberal philosophy. This will be a Liberal government on the move.

● (1710)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, boy. Who wrote that?

Mr. Trudeau: I commend the Leader of the Opposition on his speech, which was short and to the point. I only regret that, short as his speech was, he took considerable time in licking partisan wounds. The time for action is now. The next four or five years will be years of solid Liberal achievement on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: At the outset of my speech I invited opposition members to contribute to that achievement with hard work and constructive advice; and, who knows, they might get used to the phenomenon of forward movement and even enjoy the movement.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, before commenting on the dissertations we have heard, I wish to pay tribute to a distinguished Canadian, the present leader of the New Democratic Party, the former member for York South, David Lewis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: No man has worked more ably and diligently in this House and outside for the building of an independent Canada in which our citizens can live in social and economic equality. I can think of no higher praise for a Canadian politician. I am sure I speak for all members of this House in wishing him well in his new contribution to Canada as a professor of political science at Carleton University.

It would have been interesting to note the reactions of certain people if they could have been here this afternoon to listen to the Prime Minister's speech. For example, Nero, if he had been here, would have been embarrassed. Professor Laski would have failed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as a student, and the Canadian people, if they had all been present, would have been thoroughly disenchanted. Consider the subjects which came before the House in this afternoon's question period. They included the fate of Canada's Indians, 25 per cent of whom live in housing unfit for human beings. Questions were raised about starvation throughout the world. A member of the Conservative party, by way of a question, initially brought attention to the fact that housing starts in Canada, on a yearly basis, have declined by 60,000 units.

A question was asked about the 28 million eggs which, through maladministration, were deliberately allowed to go rotten. It was brought to our attention that milk will increase in price by five cents a quart. This will affect the nutrition of many people, particularly of children whose families are poor. Questions were raised about pensions and about energy. We know that the unemployment rate in Canada is extremely high. According to forecasts, by next spring it may run at about 8 per cent, which will be the highest rate of unemployment Canada has seen in 13 years. We also know that inflation in Canada now runs at 11.5 per cent. All this came before the House. To his immense credit, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) tried substantially to deal with these subjects. He recognizes that these are the issues which concern the people of our country.

But what did the Prime Minister talk about? He talked about bilingualism, and I agree that that subject is important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Apart from that, what did he say for one hour and ten minutes? In a general way he talked about the theory of democracy. Seriously, if he were a first year student of mine and came forward with such rubbish, I would fail him. Then he talked about parliamentary reform and Senate reform, and gave a general description of dominion-provincial relations. After that he talked about constitutional amendments. He raised five subjects which do not affect even .05 per cent of the people of Canada, and spent one hour and ten minutes lecturing us on them. That was disgraceful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister went to the people of Canada on July 8. In my view, he conveyed the impression that he cared emotionally for the welfare of our people, particularly of working families. He dealt with wage and price controls. I agree with what he said. I think such controls are harmful. I respect the integrity of the Leader of the Opposition. I think his judgment is wrong on that issue, but he argued it with conviction. I also thought the Prime Minister argued out of conviction. It seemed that he was concerned about poverty in our country and about inflation and he wanted to do something about them.

What did we get today? In all seriousness, I think we saw a rerun of a 1968 movie. Compare the speech given to the House after the 1968 election with the one given this afternoon and you will find the same subjects discussed, the same general talk and the same lack of concern about what is bothering people in Vancouver, in St. John's, in the north or on the prairies. The Prime Minister gave us no indication to show that this country's real problems matter very much to him.

I now intend to speculate on where the government intends to go. The speech we heard this afternoon shows the government's general economic philosophy. It shows how it intends to deal with those issues. It is clear from the Speech from the Throne and from two recent speeches delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that the government intends to deal in the coming months with at least one issue—inflation. It is also clear that it is moving to the kind of deflationary policy which was pursued with disastrous results in the 1969 to 1971 period.

An hon. Member: There is no evidence of that.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister says there is no evidence of that. The allegation is serious and I will try to give my reasons for it.

Mr. Stanfield: There is no evidence of any direction.

Mr. Broadbent: In Vancouver, on September 13, the Minister of Finance asserted that his reaction was one of, and I quote, "deep concern" to the cost increases which he said resulted from collective bargaining. He went on to say:

● (1720)

—we must as a people muster a great deal of self-discipline and self-restraint . . . I hasten to acknowledge that a heavy onus rests on governments to set the example by curbing increases in their own spending.

Three days later, similar sentiments were expressed by the Minister of Finance in a speech he made in Montreal. In the Speech from the Throne we get exactly the same message. I quote from the Speech from the Throne:

For its part, the government will exercise restraint in its own expenditures—

Two paragraphs then follow in the Speech from the Throne about the supposed virtues of general restraints in spending by the government. Just in case anyone should draw the unpleasant but proper conclusion from this, the government quickly covers itself by the following totally misleading suggestion which appears on the next page:

The government does not intend deliberately to generate slack in the economy—

Presumably we are to conclude that if slack, which is really a euphemism for unemployment, occurs as a result of deliberate government restraint policies, the government cannot be held responsible because it did not desire the necessary consequences of its act. This is both absurd and deceptive. We heard it all in 1969 from the Hon. Edgar Benson. In that year the government went in precisely the same direction. It is very important that members of this House and the people of Canada consider in all seriousness the results of that government policy in 1969. Between June, 1969, and June, 1970, unemployment increased from 385,000 to 592,000, an increase of 67 per cent. During the same period, prices continued to increase at a rate only 1 per cent lower than the previous year. There was a reduction of only 1 per cent in the rate of inflation.

The point is clear. In our economy, general fiscal and monetary restraints have no significant effect on prices. However, they do have a direct and profound consequence on the level of unemployment. Textile workers, electricians, plumbers, sales persons, cab drivers, waitresses, all those the government should be concerned about, are affected by that kind of fiscal restraint exercised deliberately by the federal government. Not only are working families affected by such a policy. There is also a cruel redistribution of income which takes place. The rich clearly gain over the poor. Those whose income is made up in large part from interest rates charged to others, naturally benefit from a tightening of the monetary screws. Consider the following figures from that period. Between 1969 and 1971, the share of family income possessed by the bottom 20 per cent of our population, after only two years of the kinds of restraints the government is now talking about, dropped by over $1 billion. I repeat, the share of income of the bottom 20 per cent of our families in that two-year period dropped by over $1 billion. During the same period, the share of family income of the top 20 per cent of our population increased, surprise of surprises, by about $1 billion.

This is a vivid, tragic and sad fact that we must keep in mind. The government in particular must keep this in mind when it embarks upon such a policy. A major redistribution of income takes place and it favours the rich over the poor. Not only are the ordinary people seriously harmed by a deliberate cutback in the economy, but the loss to the economy in the output of goods and services is immense. During the 1969-71 period, it is estimated that more than $6 billion in output was lost. In concrete terms, that meant new housing, hospitals, roads, railway cars and many other essentials simply are not produced because of a cutback policy. For these reasons the New Democratic Party will strongly oppose any move by the government to place the burden of inflation on the backs of the average income earner and the poor. We will do so because it is economically foolish and socially unjust.

In rejecting the traditional Liberal approach to inflation, I want to emphasize that we do so because the intended cure of restraint adversely affects the very groups the government invokes to justify it. That surely has to be the test. It affects the elderly who spend more on food, housing and drugs than is accounted for in the cost of living escalator clauses that we now have. It affects those in Atlantic Canada more than those in Ontario. It affects both organized and unorganized workers. It marginally affects the unorganized workers more than the organized. It affects women more than men because on the average their wages and salaries are lower. Above all, such a policy affects the five million poor in Canada whatever their age, sex, region or occupation.

I want to say something in this context about the trade union movement. There are those who have attacked the New Democratic Party for its alliance with the trade union movement. The fact that 2½ million Canadians have banded together, office by office, factory by factory, to fight collectively for economic security and better working conditions is to be applauded. The fact that our political party, dedicated to the pursuit of equality, allies itself with 2½ million working Canadians is a matter of pride for all New Democrats.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The suggestion by the Minister of Finance that trade unions must exercise restraint in their wage demands is, I suggest, totally insupportable. Since they are organized, and hence more visible, Canadians in trade unions have been singled out by the government and urged to hold back on their legitimate claims to a greater share of our gross national product. The fact is that, while unorganized workers suffered a net loss in real income during the past year, organized Canadians during the same time barely maintained their position. The men and women in our trade unions simply are not making great gains at this time. They are barely keeping at, or are just slightly above the cost of living increase.

To ask organized workers to suffer a decline in real income, as the Minister of Finance has asked in recent speeches, is to beg the question of who benefits from such restraint. The suggestion that even the tiniest fraction of these sacrificed earnings would find their way into the pay cheques of the unorganized, or the social allowances of those in need, or the pension cheques for the aged, is a lie, and a dangerous lie. It is a lie because no mechanism exists in our society to enable such a transfer, and it is a dangerous lie because it sets against one another two groups whose interests are not antagonistic.

I want to make a point with an analogy. The kind of argument one hears from the Minister of Finance, certain editorialists and many other people in the country, is that somehow the interests of the unorganized worker and the interests of the organized worker are antagonistic. Consider the following analogy. Picture a shipwreck. There are people in the water. Some on one side of the ship get together and hold each other up in order to keep afloat. Others on the other side of the ship are struggling individually; one by one they sink below the surface of the water and drown.

Then along comes a yacht. The captain of this yacht—let us call him Trudeau—and the first mate, a man by the name of Turner, see the wreck. On the one side they see individuals bobbing in the water, gradually disappearing beneath it one by one. On the other side of the shipwreck they see a group banded together, and because they have banded together they are managing to stay afloat. The captain and the first mate discuss the situation. One says, "If we take them aboard it will be crowded and things might not be so pleasant".

Mr. Trudeau: Why did you wreck the ship in the first place?

Mr. Broadbent: I will deal with that later. So they discuss the situation and develop a very clever strategy. The captain approaches the ones who have banded together and are managing to keep afloat, and says, "You know, your problem is an international problem and the only way we can save you is to drain the ocean. If we drain the ocean we can save you fellows". While he is talking to the organized ones, the ones who have managed to hold each other up and keep afloat, the first mate of the ship, Mr. Turner, goes over and talks to the ones who are drowning one by one. He says to them, "You know what your problem is. You know what is causing the difficulty you are in. It is the organized guys over there who are holding each other up. They are bouncing up and down so much in the ocean that they are causing you to drown". The unfortunate thing about this is that each having told his respective tale, they return to the captain's cabin and sail off into the distance, leaving all those who were united and those trying to stay afloat individually still floating in the ocean.

My point is that instead of attacking the trade union movement, in the weeks ahead the government should set an example with its own thousands of employees by making sure that future wage settlements are based on real, not current dollars. I might add that it should encourage the private sector to do the same.

Far from harming unorganized workers, many studies both at home and abroad, including the federal government's own Woods report, have shown that trade unions have provided the stimulus for wage increases among the unorganized. An effective wage restraint program in the organized sector—I want to stress this point—would not leave more to go round for others; it would simply lessen the pressure to pay adequate wages to the unorganized workers in Canada. We New Democrats will not support a restraint policy for trade unions because it is both unfair to them and harmful to those Canadians who are not in the trade union movement.

The throne speech makes it clear that the government intends, as I have said, to introduce a program of restraints rather than to meet the real needs of Canadians by constructive, imaginative and positive government action. Just as restraint is wrong and divisive when applied to wages, so too is it wrong when it is applied as a general injunction to government programs. Both Liberals and Conservatives view government spending in itself as inflationary. In my view, such thinking is the inevitable product of a rigid, private enterprise mentality. Such thinking permeates the throne speech, and I am not going to trot out all the examples I could. In the speech, the government states its clear intention to make future cutbacks on its programs.

Government spending is in itself no more nor less inflationary than spending by any other group in the economy. The test is what the money is spent on. In some areas no spending by the government is, in itself, an inflationary act. No other issue as this so clearly defines the difference between our economic philosophy and that of the old parties. It is our opponents who are rigid and inflexible in their thinking, and it is they who feel the need to apologize for any public enterprise. It is precisely this state of mind that causes the government to fail to see that what is now required is not a general withdrawal of government activity but, rather, of specific points in its expansion. Left on its own at this time, the private sector both at home and abroad will not only fail to deal with the twin evils of inflation and unemployment but could lead the world into a depression—and I say this with care and seriousness—of the scale experience in the thirties.

There is not an economist in Canada, the United States or western Europe who does not believe that the economic situation today approaches the seriousness of the situation in 1929. I do not say that they all predict an inevitable recession of the scope of the thirties, but I do say that they see the situation potentially as serious as that. One would never have thought it, having listened to the Prime Minister this afternoon. In the view of most economists, the changes that have taken place in the role of government in the western world since 1929, more than anything else, will likely be that which will enable us to survive, but only if government has the intelligence and will to use the instruments of government with seriousness.

The New Democratic Party has always favoured the strong, positive and flexible use of governmental authority to achieve economic and social justice. In confronting the economic problems facing us this fall, we must use these instruments with vigour and imagination unapproached in recent years, and precisely because of the seriousness of the situation. There is no evidence in the throne speech that the government is at all aware of the need for such imaginative and positive action by the state. They want to relegate the instruments of government to an insignificant role, in principle to go back to 1929. I do not mean to suggest, of course, that they want to move back to that kind of role for government, but they have the same defensive reaction to imaginative use of government that was set in their minds as a carry over from the 1920s. In my view, this is what is causing the profound inhibition that we find in the cabinet. The selective and strategic use of public investment, public ownership and government expenditure must be at the centre of a national development plan that meets the real needs of the people of this country today.

The level of government spending is only one issue. The question that must also be faced is the allocation of that spending. A number of examples of the need for a shift in government expenditures and of the opportunity for creative public enterprise can be suggested, and I will so suggest now. For example, the 1974-75 estimates reveal that the federal government plans to spend $128 million on 19 office buildings. They intend to spend an additional $403 million to complete those office buildings. These same funds could be used to provide housing for 100,000 Canadians. I suggest that they be transferred to that kind of spending now.

Such a change in government spending priorities would meet a number of needs. First, it would provide housing for those who need it. Second, by increasing the supply, the cost of housing in general would be reduced. Thus, in this particular instance we have illustrated that by spending money in a certain sector we would have a deflationary effect on the economy rather than an inflationary one. Third, by this change thousands of lumber workers currently unemployed in British Columbia, Quebec and New Brunswick would once again gain employment as a result of a resurgence of building in housing.

The issue of housing is one I have spoken about in parliament on a number of occasions. In the context of the current economic situation, however, it is more important than ever before that housing construction not be used as a convenient means of slowing down the economy, which has been the real effect of the high interest rate policy the government has maintained now for many months.

In 1972 the Prime Minister requested that the Economic Council of Canada study the role of the construction industry in the economy. Its report and recommendations were released this year. It recommended that future low-income housing efforts be organized and funded so as to ensure a smooth growth pattern over a period of years. In its recommendations it also stated that low-income housing should not be used as an economic valve, yet that is exactly what is happening in Canada today. It is exactly that which I have opposed in the past in this House as the housing spokesman for my party. Low-income housing starts have declined more drastically in our economy in the past couple of years than the over-all decline in housing. CMHC loans for low-income housing covered 52,000 units in 1970, for example, only 47,000 in 1971 and a mere 34,000 in 1972. The projections for this year indicate that even fewer units for low-income housing will be built.

One of the most cruel acts of the government was to increase, within a month of the election, by 1 per cent or so the interest rate it was charging provincial governments in Canada for mortgage money to construct public housing. This it did after the election, instead of doing the reverse, that is, bringing down the interest rate for the construction of that kind of needed housing. The decline in housing construction in Canada is not merely an example of the unwillingness and inability of the government to view housing as a social priority; the decline in housing starts has also deprived many Canadians of acquiring the most important asset available to them in past generations. For Canadians earning less than $25,000 per year, a house is the most important asset. It is their major source of savings for the future. To allow an absolute decline in housing starts, which is what we are now experiencing at the rate of 60,000 a year, is to allow further concentration of the wealth in the nation where wealth is already concentrated, that is, in the hands of the few. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the following statistics.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 38 his time has expired. He would be entitled to an extra ten minutes if he has an amendment, and I would hope he would indicate to the Chair whether that is the case. In addition, he could also seek the unanimous consent of the House if he wishes to continue.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I say that the Chair was informed that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) would be moving an amendment. I understood from Mr. Speaker, therefore, that it would not be necessary to interrupt him at this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am very sorry, but the present occupant of the chair was not so informed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I remind you that the wealthiest 1 per cent of Canadians now own 12 per cent of all assets in Canada, that the wealthiest 10 per cent own 41.8 per cent of all assets, and that the majority of Canadians, that is about 50 per cent of them, own a mere 6.7 per cent of the wealth. Therefore, if we persist in following what has gone on for the past couple of years, and particularly in the last few months, unless there is a major shift in the production of housing, what we will see, precisely because housing represents the major source of wealth for the majority of people in Canada, is further concentration of wealth in the upper income groups. Surely no democratic society can tolerate that kind of development.

A massive increase, not merely a transfer in housing from one sector of government financing to another, in housing funds is required. In no other area is it so obvious that the multiple objective of meeting social needs, providing jobs, levelling prices and effecting a redistribution of wealth can be achieved only by imaginative and positive government action rather than by general government restraint.

A further example in the same domain, in its vividness that should be very much with us today, concerns the situation of the Indian on the reserve. Last year the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development paid $21 million in social assistance payments to Indians who could not work because there was no work available, yet 25 per cent of Indian families, as I said at the outset, need new housing desperately. The government of Manitoba has shown what can be done. That government started a housing project in Churchill with public money and public initiative. Previously unemployed Indian people learned skills, built houses and received wages, not welfare. This is an example that could be duplicated right across Canada if this government were capable of creative, public initiative. Instead, we will get a continuation of governmental paternalism vis-à-vis our native people.

Many specific steps should be taken to both minimize the effects of inflation and maximize the opportunities for employment. The level of government spending must be increased in certain areas, and the priorities for spending must be changed. In part this is needed to ensure that full employment is established. We must not restrain ourselves into a depression. In part this will be needed to provide the funds necessary to meet pressing needs in energy, transportation and agriculture as well as in housing. The government must take steps to ensure that it has a determining voice in all large investment decisions in the private sector. Concern with the right set of social priorities, for example, would lead to the prohibition of department store chains' decisions to expand in 1975. Despite excess capacity, these department store chains in Canada have embarked on building plans which will use up sufficient resources that might have been used alternatively to build more than 8,000 houses.

In guiding the economy to deal with both inflation and unemployment, the government must intervene not only in the investment but also in the pricing decisions of large corporations. It is at best naive, and at worst dishonest, to continue on the assumption that a mythological entity called the free market will ensure that all prices will be just prices. There is no free market and there are few just prices. The government was willing to intervene one year ago to prevent increases in the price of milk, and then we had a minority government. We learned this afternoon that, no longer under the pressure of losing any votes, it has decided to take off the 5-cent subsidy. A just price would require, as a minimum, the maintenance of that 5-cent subsidy.

A tough excess profits tax must be introduced at the time of the budget. The purpose of this tax will be to ensure that companies, knowing that only profits up to a certain level will be permitted, will decide to moderate their price increases. Through changes in the Canada Pension Plan, the equal rights of women must be recognized. Private pension plans should become schemes of the past. The pensions of men and women should no longer depend on the whims of the stock market, as is the case now, when many people are in danger of facing a decrease in the value of their savings. A substantially altered Canada Pension Plan must offer real security against inflation. The level of pensionable earnings must be substantially increased in order to include the majority of Canadians.

In summing up this part of my speech, I want to stress that we New Democrats do not believe the only economic issue is that of inflation, which seems to be clearly the government's judgment. It is also that of unemployment. As I said earlier, it is forecast that we will reach 8 per cent some time next year, the highest level of unemployment in 13 years. We reject as morally and intellectually wrong any moves in the direction of general restraint in government spending, precisely because it is ineffective in terms of prices and disastrous in terms of both employment and the distribution of income. Our plea to the government is to abandon this course and to pursue a variety of specific measures or some others along the lines I have suggested.

In concluding, I wish to make a couple of general observations about what motivates the members of my party and what underlies the approach we will take to legislation in the coming session. All parties in the House work for what they regard as the general good. Good motivation is not in dispute. Well-motivated members permeate all parties in this House. What is in dispute is the kind of society each of us wants Canada to become.

From the very beginning, democratic socialists in Canada, like our friends throughout the world—including Mr. Palme, who will be here shortly—have sought to work for a society in which all would have full and equal possibility for developing, exercising and enjoying their talents or capacities. More specifically, this has meant working for a basic change in our economy both to achieve independence and to effect a just distribution of its benefits. It has meant leading the battle for the first old age pensions. It has meant being the first to establish medicare. It has meant calling into question the immense power of modern corporations. It has meant standing up for the rights of Japanese Canadians in the 1940s and standing up for those unjustly imprisoned under the War Measures Act in the 1970s.

We make no spurious distinction between economic and civil liberties. None of these positions was popular when first pursued. None was first supported by parties seeking only electoral majorities. It is our commitment to genuine equality that has motivated our past and will determine our future.

Because of what I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:
> "and we regret in particular the failure of Your Excellency's advisers to make immediate proposals to assist those who are hardest hit by inflation, and also their failure to take immediate steps to increase the production of necessary goods and services and thus reduce the unemployment that so seriously affects the lives of so many people."

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I earnestly thank my colleagues on my right as well as those opposite for their courtesy towards me. I do not intend to defend my case but in the past, during my sixteen years in Parliament, I had the opportunity to see in this House political groups much less numerous than we are but which were really recognized. For instance, in 1946-1947 the Bloc populaire was sitting here in this House. Its leader was Maxime Raymond who was sitting here on my left as well as René Hamel from Shawinigan, both members of the Bloc populaire. Mr. Raymond was always considered as the leader of the Bloc populaire Canadien.

As I mentioned yesterday, I think, Mr. Coldwell was elected along with seven members, and he was always recognized as a party leader. Even before his death, he was recognized as a man of great value.

I should like to thank again the hon. colleagues who recognize me as a leader of the Social Credit party of Canada. It is obvious that I was not elected by Parliament. It is obvious that I was elected by members of my party throughout Canada. It surely does not behove Parliament to say whether the leader of a political group should be its leader. However, the law could have been amended, instead of lowering the number from twelve to ten or eleven, by adding that from now on, a political group of twelve members elected in the House, as long as members are reelected, even though the number would be less than twelve, should continue to be officially recognized as a party. It seems to me that it would eliminate all the big fuss we see these days in the newspapers.

Mr. Speaker, we intend to work not to destroy Parliament, but to abide by the law and to co-operate with all the members whether they are on the government benches or on the other side of the House. We shall work conscientiously, we shall participate in parliamentary business as much as possible in order to be serious men, accepted men, men who participate in the best administration of Canada. That is why my ten colleagues will contribute as well to the effective operation of our Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I read with attention the two sub-amendments now before the House, and I listened carefully to the speech delivered by the opposition leader (Mr. Stanfield) and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I read the Speech from the Throne and I made a great discovery. The Speech from the Throne informs us that there is inflation, as if we did not know it. The Prime Minister barely spoke about inflation this afternoon. He mentioned the word "inflation" only once and he discussed some quite important matters such as bilingualism. I heard him and I greatly appreciate what he said about the recognition of the two official languages in Canada.

There is some room for improvement, as moreover he admitted it, in almost every field, for example in Crown corporations. Some time ago, I took an Air Canada plane on which the stewardesses did not speak a word of French. I would not object if the said lady was called Plamondon or Harris, but I object if she is unilingual. I also noted that a young French Canadian who applies for the job of stewardess at Air Canada is required to be fluent in both official languages when the same is not required from an English-speaking applicant elsewhere than in Quebec. She is required to speak English only and have the qualifications of a stewardess which is fine. However, why have a law for the rich and one for the poor? Why require both languages from the young French Canadian when there is no such requirement for the English-speaking? This is simply to draw the attention of the government on that matter. There are fanatics in Quebec, and in great numbers.

When I see Mr. François Albert Angers on TV, he makes me sick a little. As far as he is concerned, only French should be spoken. I also regretted the introduction of Bill 22 in the Quebec National Assembly. With Canada's official languages act, I think that people in the province of Quebec can very well take care of themselves without Bill 22, which creates more confusion than anything else. It should never have been introduced.

Today, there are fanatics like Angers, not only in Montreal but also in Winnipeg. I just received a letter dated September 30, 1974, the day of the opening of the session. The address, in case anyone would like to write back is as follows:

303-139 Roselyn Road,
Winnipeg, Manitoba
R3L 0G7

● (1800)

[English]

Mr. Real Caouette,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.
Dear Sir,

I have just been listening to your speech on the nomination of the new Speaker for the House of Commons.

I regret very much that your speech to your fellow Canadians was given in a language that the vast majority of your listeners could not understand. Perhaps you intended it as a joke!

Yours truly,

(Sgd) G. Christy (Mrs.)

Making a joke of the French language.

[Translation]

In French, G. Christie.

Mr. Speaker, people of that kind are harmful to the national unity of Canada. She tells me:

[English]

—the vast majority of your listeners could not understand.

All she had to do was to do like me. I learned English. To speak, I had to learn it. To understand it, I had to learn it. And I did. And I am happy to know the second official language. Why did she not learn French? She would then not have written such a stupid letter. I hope she reads Hansard, because her letter will be published in it.

People say: Oh! in Quebec, you have a bunch of fanatics. All Quebecers are not fanatics. We Social Crediters are not fanatics; we were elected members of Parliament, and we seldom bring up questions of languages among ourselves. Had that lady listened to the French television station in Winnipeg, where the Speech from the Throne was read as it was in the province of Quebec, we would be spared such situations, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister said that we would stress bilingualism even more. This will serve the whole population. When he said that the English-speaking minority in the province of Quebec was perhaps the best treated minority in the whole of Canada, I believe he was absolutely right. The laws and rules in the province of Quebec did not prevent me from learning English. I therefore advise Quebecers to learn the two languages.

In Europe, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, it is not a rare thing to meet people mastering seven or eight languages. It is fascinating how those people speak to each other and go from one language to another. It is a fantastic sight.

In Canada, we have only two official languages, and we spend our time arguing about it.

There is no sense in that. The Prime Minister therefor deserves commendation for his firmness in supporting Canada's two official languages.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to the Speech from the Throne, which is not a novel thing. The speech proposes to increase production, when it is not possible to sell existing goods. Millions of eggs are destroyed because we have too much, and we hear its said "We did not know"! In other areas, turkeys have been destroyed, not so long ago—25,000 at a time. They are still destroyed. Chickens are destroyed almost all the time. There is horrendous destruction in farm products.

What is the purpose, Mr. Speaker, in increasing production if it cannot be marketed? I quote from the New Democratic Party's amendment:

[English]

Steps to increase the production of necessary goods and services in Canada. Our stores are filled to capacity.

All our stores are full to capacity. Some industries have closed because of a product surplus. Last year, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) said: Tighten your belts, there will be a shortage. I was the only one in this House to say to the hon. minister that he was pulling our leg and that there was no oil or gas shortage in Canada. Today, the Golden Eagle Canada Limited which received five to seven million dollars subsidies from the government is laying off 250 employees in its Saint-Romuald plants because the stores are full to capacity. In the United States they speak about reducing the price of gas by 13 cents a gallon because stores are full to capacity. Arabs and Venezuelians have tremendous surpluses and the government has just told us: We have to increase our productivity. We have in the St. Lawrence River oil resources that are undevelopped because we prefer to develop those of the North Pole where it is colder and the guys perspire less.

In the St. Lawrence River? No, it is too near to us. They squander the funds and then they say: it is necessary to increase production. Mr. Speaker, it is not production that we must increase, but the purchasing power of consumers, so that these raises do not enter in the prices of goods. There is no other solution.

At the present time, there are guys all over the country who are running after escalation of wages in line with the increases in the prices of goods; they go on strikes in Montreal, Vancouver, on the Great Lakes, everywhere, to obtain this escalation. They are granted this escalation, which is to the benefit of the provincial and federal governments, because when they get higher wages, these guys must pay higher income taxes. Once the escalation has been granted, the prices of goods are in turn increased in line with the wages. It is like a dog trying to catch its tail. No solution is ever found. This is to the advantage of the government. Inflation is useful to it. If a product sold for $200 was subject to a 10 per cent production tax, that would bring in $20. But if the price is increased to $400, this will yield $40. This is why the government is not speaking too loud against inflation, being merely satisfied with saying that it is unfortunate. But it will impose no control and will accept stiffer interest rates. Soon, the government will have to pay 10 per cent interest when borrowing money. Do you know that when you borrow $100 million at a 10 per cent interest over a 20-year period, it will yield $200 million in interest only. And you still have to reimburse the $100 million you borrowed initially. The government does not talk about that, that is inflation. So inflation must be fought but there is no talk about that and no steps are introduced. In the amendments introduced by the Tories and the NDP there is nothing to fight inflation.

We Social Crediters have a solution that several still find funny, and the majority of Canadians still do not accept it. We saw that at the last election. That does not mean it is wrong. We ask for an income security plan. During the last election campaign the Prime Minister promised a guaranteed annual income, old age security at 60. That was in our program. That is what led me to say at the end of the campaign, I think the Prime Minister is going to vote Social Credit Monday. The actual terms used by Social Crediters!

We proposed and still propose a guaranteed annual income of $1,500 a year payable to all Canadians over the age of 18 whatever their income may be. Those monies should not be taken out of the taxes because that would bring about price increases. We propose benefits of $300 a year for children under 18; additional benefits for the disabled now faced with small, shameful pensions, a supplement of $1,500 a year for a total of $3,000 a year. That is called the threshold of poverty. A spouse would also be given a supplement of $1,000 a year for a combined total of $5,500. Today $5,000 or $5,500 in income allows a couple to live and not only exist, complain, feel dejected. Everybody knows that.

Mr. Speaker, the disabled would get $5,500. A widow or widower with dependent children would receive $3,000 a year. For older citizens 60 or over—I do not know what program the Prime Minister will be introducing—but we recommend for them a supplement of $1,500 a year, and $1,000 a year for the spouse, man or woman, for an amount of $5,500 a year.

Mr. Speaker, in the area of fiscal policies I said earlier that the government is pleased with the increase in prices as well as the increase in the incomes of corporations, big companies and individuals because the higher they are the more the government gets. Social Crediters suggest basic exemptions of $3,000 for single people, $6,000 for a married couple and $500 for each child under 18. The taxation system itself would be simplified. Nowadays, we pay a lot of taxes to everybody, we can't make head or tail of it, we don't know where we are going. Now, that's what the government is saying in the Speech from the Throne, we have lost our reason.

Nobody but the Social Crediters suggests an alternative solution, unless we take the financial decisions to settle the whole problem. That's why we always insist so strongly on the services of the Bank of Canada, which is the Parliament's institution, the country's institution.

I got today another letter, from Roxton Pond (Quebec), which says, and I quote:

Dear Mr. Caouette:

I was listening this morning to radio station CKVL. Someone was speaking of savings bonds at 9¾ interest rate. I can't understand why the government has to borrow money since it has its own central bank and can create money anytime it needs it.

The required money, not for the sake of it, but according to the available production. I quote further:

This seems to me to be nonsensical and at the same time stealing the people. This measure puts the whole country into debt. There is always the interest to be paid to finance people. Why doesn't the government abolish all this interest on created money which should never have seen the day. I think that nothing is more unjust on this earth, that it is exploitation of the worst kind.

Another problem in this country: the unions that will make prices go up.

And I was wondering if you could not convince your colleagues, make them understand, so that once and for all they will set their minds to work for the people and not the financier. Disaster will be upon as sooner or later if nothing changes.

We are very close to disaster, Mr. Speaker, and there is no intention of changing anything. The financial, monetary and fiscal structures are one thing, but they are not the monetary system. Taxation is nothing more than taking money from the pockets of some to put it in those of others. So, instead of helping one get richer, we make him poorer, make poor people out of them both and things get worse. The situation deteriorates from day to day. Production, as I said earlier, is good. The consumers are there, but the distribution to consumers is lacking.

We have therefore been suggesting for many years the granting of a national dividend based upon products surpluses, upon the real gap between products and the purchasing power of today's incomes. This would not be included in prices: it would be a new credit issued by the Bank of Canada. It would restore economic and social order throughout Canada: there would be no more strikes like those we have today; there would be better understanding among human beings. And we, members of Parliament would have done our job, we would have taken our responsibilities in order that Canadians may be pleased with the administration of public affairs.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had some informal discussions and I understand there would be agreement to revert to Routine Proceedings at two o'clock today for the purpose of striking standing committees and dealing with procedural matters referring to estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED MINISTERIAL MEETING WITH NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS TO RESOLVE PROBLEMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because of the confusion that now exists in the minds of many Canadians concerning the demonstration on Parliament Hill on Monday last, and because of the publicity accorded the events which is undermining the progress that has been made by the democratically elected native peoples' organizations which represent the vast majority of our native people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark):

That the House urge the government to initiate an immediate ministerial meeting with leading officials of the democratically elected National Indian Brotherhood and Native Council of Canada to clarify the situation and to demonstrate the government's serious intention to resolve housing and other urgent social and economic problems whose persistence among our native people helped precipitate the unfortunate events which occurred on Parliament Hill on Monday last.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion being presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 which cannot be received without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

PARLIAMENT HILL

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER SECURITY MEASURES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. The use of explosives by criminals and mentally unbalanced persons to achieve their perverted ends of political terrorism, private vengeance or other purpose is increasing. In Canada, as elsewhere, the intended victim is often connected with one of the established institutions of society, such as a court of justice, penitentiary, legislature, or other symbol of government. Not only the intended victim is endangered but no one within that particular institution is safe from the indiscriminate blast of the explosive. I need only refer to the recent incident in the courthouse at Winnipeg.

I move the following motion with particular reference to this institution of parliament:

That Mr. Speaker be authorized to meet with the Speaker of the other chamber to select a committee of both Houses to assist them in recommending to both Houses security measures for the protection of the public, the staff, and members in the parliament buildings and surrounding grounds.

And that Mr. Speaker be authorized to communicate this resolution to the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent to it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous agreement, it cannot be presented.

TABLING OF REPORT OF TARIFF BOARD

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with section 6, chapter T-1 of the Revised Statutes, I wish to table a copy in English and French of a report of the Tariff Board in respect of photographic equipment, reference No. 147, together with a transcript of the proceedings on the reference.

This report contains recommendations relating to the tariffs on imported cameras, projectors and other photographic equipment, related accessories and parts. I assure

REFERENCE TO CONSULTATION WITH INTERESTED GROUPS ON PROPOSALS TO FIGHT INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of the indication in the Speech from the Throne that he intended to consult the principal groups in our society with regard to proposals they might make or contributions they might make to defeat inflation. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this is simply a question of looking for ideas or whether he and the government are putting proposals of a specific nature before what he refers to as the principal groups in our society?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this stage I think the best description would be to say that we are exchanging views.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not the Prime Minister would like these questions in writing. In the course of exchanging these views, is the government putting specific views before these groups with regard to the defeat of inflation?

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you are exchanging views you are obviously exchanging views on things and that is what we are doing.

Mr. Hees: Is that wrestling inflation to the ground, Pierre? Boy, what a wrestler!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the purpose of this exchange of views to just talk about things and not necessarily make specific proposals? Is the purpose of this exercise in leadership to obtain some national consensus on guidelines or what?

An hon. Member: Delay.

Mr. Trudeau: To wrestle inflation to the ground, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: The old Trudeau is back.

GOVERNMENT GOAL FOR LEVEL OF INFLATION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those of the Leader of the Opposition. Is the Prime Minister now telling this House that the government has no specific goals for the level of inflation this nation ought to have? Does the government have a policy with respect to an effective level of inflation for this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON MAINTENANCE OF SUBSIDY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday I asked the minister if the government was reconsidering its decision to cut off the five cents per quart milk subsidy that had been in force. The clearest part of his rather short answer that I heard was, "Where we go from there, Mr. Speaker, I do not know." In the period that has elapsed since, I wonder if the minister has reached a decision and can tell the House whether the federal government intends to maintain the five cent per quart subsidy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question earlier and said that our decision was still the one we had made early in the month of August.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since that decision made earlier in August was "no", I assume the minister intends to maintain that position. In view of the opposition he has received to that decision from some of the premiers, I should like him to follow through on the suggestion that he made yesterday and table all the correspondence on the subject between him or his officials and the provincial governments. I refer in particular to a strong letter from Premier Schreyer which was in direct opposition to the position the minister has taken.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that after following the usual procedure of getting their permission.

HEALTH

POSSIBLE ACTION TO AID LOW INCOME FAMILIES IN VIEW OF ELIMINATION OF MILK SUBSIDY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the elimination of the subsidy on milk, what steps does the government propose to take to ensure that Canadian children, especially children of low income families, will not be deprived of this very essential element of their diet?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to follow the debates during this session to find out which measures will be proposed. I merely wish to remind him that family allowances will be raised next January in line with the increase in the cost of living.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY INTO SHORTAGE OF CONSTRUCTION MATERIALS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Could he advise the House whether an investigation is being or has been carried out to discover the reason behind the shortage in building materials and household appliances which occurred during the summer of 1974 and which is still being felt in some areas?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laprise: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. minister has stated that an investigation has been made. Will he table soon a report concerning this?

Mr. Ouellet: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, if it is indicated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED REFORM OF PROCEDURES—GUIDELINES ON ACCESS TO INFORMATION—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC DISCUSSION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether my question should be directed to the Prime Minister or the government House leader. It has to do both with the comment in the Speech from the Throne about parliamentary reform and the Prime Minister's own comments yesterday afternoon in the Throne Speech debate. My question concerns some items which were not mentioned by the Prime Minister but which are ultimately important to any parliamentary reform. It relates to the business of supply and the control of expenditure of parliament as well as the cold question of access to information referred to by the Leader of the Opposition. Could the Prime Minister or the government House leader indicate whether these will be subjects for discussion when parliament considers these matters. Also, will there be opportunity for well informed members of the general public to make submissions on a matter which is vitally important to members of this institution and, ultimately, to the Canadian people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, answering the first part of the question, I am convinced that the Leader of the House will be prepared to look at any constructive suggestion made by the opposition and by government supporters for improving procedures of the House. Dealing with the second part, the hon. member will no doubt recall that in the last parliament we tabled guidelines, which we thought were useful ones, which tried to combine the right of parliament and people to know with the right, the necessity, of the government to keep certain types of papers confidential. These guidelines and rules were referred to a committee of the House, which did not report in the last parliament. I hope that it will resume its work in the present parliament.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Prime Minister will recall that there was not much opportunity either for the committee or the general public to respond to the guidelines which were merely a consolidation of accepted practice, and the practice was not too widely accepted, at that. My supplementary relates to the second part of my question. I asked the Prime Minister if there will be an opportunity for views to be expressed by those who are concerned about the nature of parliamentary reform. Will there be an opportunity for the parliamentary committee to receive such submissions, and will there be full public discussion of the nature and extent of reforms which may take place in the thirtieth parliament?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I attempt to answer this part of the question. I have had informal talks with the leaders of the various parties in the House. We decided tentatively that before referring reform to a committee of the House there should be some consensus between the parties on how to deal with these difficult questions. I am sure the hon.

member will agree that this will probably result in greater progress than would otherwise be possible.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

DATE OF OPENING TO PUBLIC OF REGISTRY SHOWING FINANCIAL HOLDINGS OF CABINET MINISTERS—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of his undertaking to this House on December 18 last that he would soon have open for public inspection the material in a registry being set up to indicate the financial holdings of cabinet ministers of this government, why is that material not open for public inspection today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is very timely. The hon. member is certainly justified in expressing concern because, for internal purposes, I had given the ministers only until early in the new year to comply with the guidelines. The registry was not ready for operation at the time the work was done by an official in the Privy Council office. However, over the summer arrangements were made, proper staff was found and offices have been allocated. I have been discussing the matter with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who will be responsible, not for the application of the guidelines, but for the physical presence of those who will be operating the registry. He told me that November 15 will be the date on which this register will be opened to the public. I assure the hon. member that, internally, compliance with the guidelines was urged on ministers as early as January or March, I believe.

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the fact in other jurisdictions in this country where this registry system has been set up they were able to operate this system within two weeks of the announcement by the leader of whatever government it was, can the Prime Minister indicate why there has been this delay of seven or eight months from the time the undertaking was given in the House.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there was an election which intervened in the spring. The cabinet was busy—

Mr. Stanfield: Wrestling.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition says wrestling.

An hon. Member: You still have muscle?

Mr. Trudeau: We still have some muscle left. I should inform the hon. member and the House that the new ministers may not all be able to comply by November 15.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That deadline obviously applies to ministers who have been in previous cabinets. I have given a little more time to the new ministers to arrange their affairs in compliance with these guidelines.

[Mr. Sharp.]

UNITED AIRCRAFT COMPANY—SUGGESTED TAKE-OVER BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the federal government has given grants of over $60 million to the United Aircraft Company and at the same time is proposing to take over de Havilland Aircraft and Canadair, is the government considering taking over the United Aircraft Company which has been on strike in Longueuil for over nine months and is sending a substantial part of work previously done in Canada to its parent company in the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this stage, all I can say is that I will give the hon. member's question consideration. However, I want to tell him the government has discussed and is concerned with situations, not only that of United Aircraft, but other like situations where control of companies is exercised abroad, sometimes not to the benefit of Canadian workers and the Canadian people.

ALLEGATION MONTREAL OFFICE DIRECTING PEOPLE TO UNITED AIRCRAFT TO ACT AS STRIKE BREAKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Why are Manpower offices in the Montreal area directing people who are looking for work to the United Aircraft plant in Longueuil? If these people accept this advice which is being given by the department, they will, in fact, be acting as strike breakers.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's information. I doubt whether it is totally the case. If it is, I will certainly step into the situation because it is not the policy of the government to act as a strike breaker.

EGGS—TIME WHEN DEPARTMENT LEARNED OF DETERIORATING SITUATION—ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. It is further to one raised yesterday by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot. The minister indicated he knew about the destruction of $900,000 worth of eggs shortly before that destruction. Were the minister and his officials aware last spring and early summer that the stockpiling of eggs had reached the point where they had overflowed the storage facilities and had to be stored, among other places, in apple storage facilities? If so, what action was taken by the department to reduce the stockpiling before the eggs became rotten?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it must first be made clear that the Department of Agriculture does not run CEMA.

An hon. Member: CEMA runs the department.

Mr. Whelan: CEMA runs its own business. I will be saying more about this later today.

● (1130)

Mr. Beatty: Can the minister tell us whether he and his officials were aware of the fact that the supply of eggs had exceeded the capacity of the storage facilities and that stocks had to be held in facilities normally used for storing apples? Were they aware that the eggs would probably go bad unless something was done about this situation? This is quite apart from whether or not the hon. gentleman wishes to disavow responsibility for the actions of CEMA.

Mr. Whelan: The reason a public hearing is to be held is so that all the facts can be brought to light. If the hon. member wants a public hearing—and I believe, from what he has told me, that he does—we should see that all the facts are on the record, and not make hit-or-miss statements beforehand.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION OVER COASTAL WATERS—POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL ACTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the Law of the Sea Conference refused to accept Canada's position with respect to the conservation and management of our marine resources to the edge of the continental shelf, can the minister tell us what action the government intends to take to protect the fisheries against the plundering which is still continuing on the part of foreign fishing vessels?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member is not correct in saying no progress was made in terms of a consensus developing about the 200 miles. The Canadian government is still pressing its views within the context of the Law of the Sea Conference.

Mr. Carter: With regard to what the minister has just said, the Law of the Sea Conference brought about no change in the situation. May I direct my question, now, to the Prime Minister? Can the Prime Minister tell us whether it is his intention to honour the commitment made by two of his cabinet ministers during the election campaign to the effect that if necessary Canada would take unilateral action to preserve our marine resources?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would have to check the exact words used by the ministers. I suppose the key words are "if necessary". However, I can assure the hon. member that the position of the government is the one stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs: it is that we do not contemplate taking any unilateral action. We are seeking to modify the regime of international law by agreement among the nations of the world, and we are hoping to be successful. The hon. member will recall action taken to this end as far back as the legislation concerning pollution in the Arctic. We were in the forefront by assuring, through legislation, that pollution of the seas would not result in detriment to the coastal states, and we shall continue to act in this way, avoiding, in every way we can, appearing to act unilaterally.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege arising from the answer which was given a few moments ago by the Prime Minister. Replying to the hon. member for St. John's West he said it was not the intention of the government to take any unilateral action in the area covered by the Law of the Sea Conference. However, according to the Evening Telegram of June 24, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is reported to have said privately that Canada would act unilaterally to take control of the continental shelf off its coast should the current Law of the Sea Conference negotiations not go mostly our way. In view of that statement, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what is Canada's position on the continental shelf control issue, one which is vitally important to fishermen in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With all due respect to the hon. member, while he may wish to illuminate a difference between statements made or opinions held by one or two of the ministers of the Crown, I seriously doubt whether this raises a question of privilege. It is, of course, a subject upon which a question may legitimately be addressed to the Prime Minister at a suitable opportunity.

POLLUTION

OIL SPILL OFF COAST OF NEW BRUNSWICK—ACTION TAKEN TO ELIMINATE CONTAMINATION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us whether his department took all the steps called for as a result of the unfortunate accident of the Golden Robin tanker in which, on September 30 last, roughly one thousand barrels of oil were spilled in the waters of Chaleur Bay polluting not only those waters but also the magnificent beaches of my riding on the Quebec side of the bay, and causing some damage to the fishing equipment?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have done everything in our power in an effort to limit the disaster. Approximately 35,000 gallons of oil were spilled. At the present time, 13,000 have been absorbed through the different techniques we have developed. We have kept in touch constantly with the people on the site. I believe the fishermen, municipalities and people concerned are aware of what we are doing, and to date everyone seems to be quite pleased with the work that has been done.

TRADE

JAPAN—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO INCREASE PERCENTAGE OF CANADIAN MANUFACTURED GOODS EXPORTED

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In his recent talks with Prime Minister Tanaka of Japan was he able to persuade that gentleman to allow Canada to increase the proportion of its exports to Japan which are manufactured products from the present 1.7 per cent of the total, bearing in mind that more than 70 per cent of Japan's exports to Canada are fully manufactured products and that these, as he knows, are the products which give rise to employment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is the very essence of a part of our discussions. It is a matter which causes us concern and one which brought this meeting into being. It will be a continuing theme of the discussions between us. Of course, neither the government of Canada nor the government of Japan directly controls all the enterprises within their respective countries and it would be a matter of ensuring that the trade and investment pattern goes in the desired direction. This can only be done by continuous exchanges between the governments, particularly between the ministers of trade and commerce in the two countries.

Mr. Hees: The Prime Minister refuses to answer my question, and it is obvious that nothing has been done in this regard. May I ask him, then, how long is it the intention of the government that Canada should remain a mere hewer of wood and producer of iron ore to feed Japanese factories instead of getting a fair exchange of the trade in fully manufactured products between the two countries?

Mr. Trudeau: Unfortunately, I do not seem to be able to give replies which are satisfactory to the hon. member. I shall attempt to reply to the second question—how long we are to remain hewers of wood. The view of this party is that we are not hewers of wood. That is the view of the hon. gentleman's party, not of ours.

Mr. Hees: When only 1.7 per cent of our exports is in the form of manufactured products?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED IRREGULAR ACTIONS BY MEMBERS OF FORCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

Owing to the compromising or at least strongly questionable dealings of some members of the RCMP for some time, can the minister tell us whether he has ordered an inquiry in this connection and what steps he intends to take?

[Mr. Marchand (Minister of Transport).]

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): It is difficult to know exactly what incidents the hon. member has in mind. We instituted an inquiry on two matters during the summer. We set up a commission under Justice Marin of the Law Reform Commission to investigate the procedures followed by the RCMP in disciplining members of the force and, in the course of the same inquiry, we are looking into the procedures under which complaints are received from the public and dealt with.

● (1140)

Mr. Matte: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In order to inform adequately the people due to the fact that a member of the special antimob squad seems to be responsible for setting a bomb, will the minister undertake a thorough inquiry to discover to what extent the members of the RCMP have acted as agents provocateurs not only in the underworld but more especially within the FLQ from 1963 to 1970?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is completely against RCMP policy to have its members act as agents provocateurs. In the case referred to by the hon. member the man was dismissed from the force on five different counts. He had the opportunity to appeal his dismissal but did not take advantage of that opportunity within the time allowed.

TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENT AND EXPIRATION OF FREEZE ON FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the reference to transportation in the Throne Speech is somewhat vague and broad, I should like to ask what the intention of the government is in respect of future branch line abandonments since the freeze in this regard will expire at the end of this year? Arising from the fact that the across the board freeze on freight rates will also expire soon, is the government establishing any guidelines or have there been any discussions going on with the railway companies for the establishment of fair guidelines in order that the fantastic rate increases predicted will be somewhat tempered?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure but I think it is public knowledge that I will be meeting with the western transportation ministers about October 20 and that these two subjects will be on the agenda. Before making any report to Cabinet I would like to have the opportunity of discussing this with the western ministers in order that we might know exactly what we are going to do in this regard.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES BY MEMBERS OF THE FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like permission to ask a supplementary question to that directed to the Solicitor General concerning the RCMP. As one who has had such a high regard for the mounted police, as have most Canadians, since the days of the Northwest Mounted Police, and in view of the serious situation revealed by the Samson case and by other recent events that have cast a shadow on this great force which is recognized nationally and internationally, I should like to ask whether the minister would consider appointing another judge to the commission now presided over by Judge Marin, in order to look into these matters which will result in the mounted police losing a portion of its magnificent reputation if they are not faced publicly?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, we have now established a five-man commission headed by a judge. The commission is made up of two representatives of the RCMP, one elected by the non-commissioned officers to present their points of view and one representing the administration. The other two members include one appointed by the department and one from the general public. We feel this five-man commission is adequate at the present time, but if further developments occur I will consider the proposal of the right hon. gentleman.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SHARING COST OF NURSING HOMES AND HOME CARE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very serious effects of galloping health care costs on the economy, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the government is prepared to enter into shared-cost programs with the provinces for nursing homes and home care which would get people out of expensive active treatment beds in hospitals?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member that the federal government participation in financing these costs would not have the effect of preventing their rise in the health area. As for the federal government participation in general health costs, we made a proposal some years ago regarding a financing formula; this formula did not seem to please all provinces and I am waiting for their reactions as well as new proposals or alternative solutions. We will surely consider these proposals when provinces will want to apply them.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not realize the difference between the cost of an active treatment bed and a nursing home bed?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the costs.

COMMUNICATIONS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES—POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL ACTION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the bill given first reading yesterday which will merge some of the functions of the CTC and the CRTC under a new regulatory body, has the minister decided to act unilaterally in this whole field of communications with no further federal-provincial conferences, keeping in mind that the first and only conference was held about a year ago and was to be followed by another one within six months, would the minister indicate—This is the problem, Mr. Speaker, there is no communication.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is certainly a problem and it is going to get worse if we do not stick to one question of one minister at a time. Perhaps we could finish this question before we go on to the next one.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the minister heard the question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would like to repeat his question for the benefit of the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I should even amplify it for him. In view of the bill yesterday which will merge some of the functions of the CTC and the CRTC under a new regulatory body dealing with communications, has the minister decided not to continue federal-provincial conferences in this field? If that is not the case when is the next conference scheduled, since it was supposed to occur within six months of the first and only conference held last November?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises two questions that have absolutely no connection. The merging of the two regulating bodies, which the bill presented yesterday seeks to achieve, has absolutely nothing to do with our relations with the provinces. The provinces know that it is an internal reshuffle of regulatory agencies of the federal government. That brings no change whatsoever to the respective authorities nor to the administrative dispositions between the provinces and the federal government as regards the regulation of telecommunications.

As for the second question of the hon. member, I will soon know the results of the conference which the provincial communications ministers held Monday and Tuesday of this week. If the message from the Ontario communications minister who presided over the group confirms some conditions we had expressed to the provinces about holding a conference this fall, then the date of the conference will be set. We even reserved certain days to make sure that we could hold the conference if the provinces met the conditions we have laid down.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that elaborate answer. In order that the House and the country might understand just where the holdups exist and what are the problems and conditions in respect of arranging another conference, will the minister indicate whether he has had communication with the provincial ministers and is he prepared to table those communications? If those communications are not set out in letter form would the minister be prepared to table them at a later date, if and when they take that form?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is correspondence and I will be very pleased to table it in the House, obviously with the permission of my correspondents which I will try to get as soon as possible.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

METHOD OF CONDUCTING DISCUSSIONS WITH INTERESTED GROUPS ON PROPOSALS TO FIGHT INFLATION—POSSIBLE DATE OF COMPLETION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, relating to the exchange of views that is to take place between this government and the principal groups in our society, could the Prime Minister indicate who will conduct this exchange so far as the government is concerned? Will it be done by himself? How is the exchange to be structured? Will it be informal or will there be some formality about the discussion? Most important of all, when will the process be completed as now envisaged by the government? For example, will it be completed before the budget is presented to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the questions are quite important. The government has been working on answers to all of them. In other words, the questions involve the type of serious consultations in which particular ministers will be involved, and when and where the groups will conduct the meetings as well as what type of exchanges will take place. I understand the concern of the Leader of the Opposition about this, but for the same reason that we do not judge at this time that it would be useful to have open summits on the subject of inflation it is doubtful that I would want to make progress reports on these matters, what went on at that time or what particulars were involved.

At some stage the debate will have to become public. We have indicated through the Speech from the Throne that there would be a federal-provincial conference early in the new year, and there is no doubt that it will deal with inflation. However, I would not want the Leader of the Opposition to believe that at an early stage, certainly before the budget, we will have made public the details of these consultations.

[Mr. Pelletier (Minister of Communications).]

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I long since gave up any hope of being told anything about what was being discussed. I should like to ask the Prime Minister how long he sees this process continuing. Is this being followed up with a sense of urgency with a view to these discussions being completed prior to the budget or are they to be terminated sometime next year?

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly not before the budget, but unlike the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings we have muscle that can endure.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONDURAS—POSSIBILITY OF ASSIGNING ANOTHER PLANE TO TRANSPORT RELIEF SUPPLIES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the buildup of materials in Ontario and across Canada, particularly the nine tons of milk in my riding, I wonder whether the minister is planning to send another plane to Honduras in the very near future.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows the Government of Canada has made a substantial contribution to the relief of the tragic situation in Honduras. Transportation assistance has been provided for the movement of supplies to that country. At the present time a National Defence plane is in Honduras assisting in the movement of suplies within that country. Also at the present time I have under consideration with the officials of CIDA the question of whether it would be appropriate in the circumstances to provide additional transportation for materials which have been generously donated by the Canadian people to assist Hondurians in this crisis.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE OF MARINERS ON GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE SETTLEMENT WILL BRING STABILITY TO INDUSTRY

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that more than twice as much grain passes through the harbour of Thunder Bay as passes through Vancouver, and that virtually no grain has been moved through the harbour for nearly two months, can we have some assurance that yesterday's announced settlement of the marine strike on the Great Lakes will bring some long term labour stability to this industry?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I might say that we are particularly pleased with regard to these two settlements voluntarily arrived at between the parties. I think they will relieve a great deal of the pressure.

TRADE

DANGER OF CONFRONTATION BETWEEN OIL PRODUCING AND CONSUMING COUNTRIES—POSSIBILITY OF MEETING OF THE TWO GROUPS IN CANADA

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the very dangerous confrontation that is developing between the OPEC or oil producing exporting countries and the currently designed organization of industrial states of Europe, North America and Japan to form an opposition consumers group, would the Prime Minister seriously consider offering Canada as the host country, as both an importer and exporter of oil, to bring these consumers and producers of oil together to set up an international commodity agreement on oil so that we can have a rule of law instead of this dangerous confrontation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right in talking about the danger of any confrontation developing. He will recall, of course, that the position of the government all through the time of the crisis has been one of trying to avoid that kind of confrontation between the two groups. It still is the policy of the government. As to the suggestion about having the meeting here, I would certainly discuss it with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to see whether this is a proposition which could advance the debate. However, I certainly share entirely the hon. member's concern.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL AID TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES IN THE FORM OF OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question which I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the tremendous difficulties the world is facing because of this imbalance in respect of oil supplies and so on, would the new Secretary of State for External Affairs seriously consider, since we have not too much grain to give the newly developing countries which are bothered by balance of payment difficulties, adding oil as a new product in our foreign aid program helping the nations and hopefully to encourage other exporting nations into taking similar action and thereby give a new dimension toward helping the third world?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian effort up to the present has been not inclusive of oil to my knowledge. It has been concentrated on food and fertilizer for which the Canadian government has made a substantial contribution. I will be happy to consider the implications of the hon. member's question because I have not considered it up to the moment.

CANADIAN POSITION ON PROLIFERATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN VIEW OF ACCEPTANCE OF SUCH WEAPONS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the minister's recent address to the United Nations in which he expressed concern over the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the world, would the minister advise the House if the long standing government policy of accepting United States nuclear weapons on Canadian soil will now be reviewed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that particular aspect was not included in my speech.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, since the reply of the minister was really not an answer I think I am entitled to repeat my question briefly. Does the minister not consider that this long standing position adds to the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the world in terms of this government's policy, and will this government now review its position in terms of accepting nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be highly obstinate not to agree to consider this proposal advanced by an hon. member. I will make that commitment, but I do not ask him to hold his breath for an answer at this time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED MINISTERIAL MEETING WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS TO DISCUSS PROBLEMS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I should also like to wish him well in his deliberations as he assumes this most sensitive and increasingly crucial portfolio. Could the minister advise the House on whether the government has taken any initiative or any steps to arrange an immediate—and I stress "immediate"—ministerial meeting with representatives of the national native organizations to discuss the urban, social and economic problems which are causing mounting concern and frustration among our native people?

● (1200)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Will the minister undertake to discuss with his cabinet colleagues the arrangement for such a meeting?

Mr. Buchanan: I will be happy to consider that, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFORM OF PROCEDURES—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO A COMMITTEE—EXAMINATION OF POWER OF PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister is supplementary to the questions asked earlier by the hon. member for Egmont. Does the Prime Minister, as part of the general parliamentary reform, propose to make a reference to a committee which will allow either a standing or special committee of parliament to undertake a complete inquiry into the actual role and powers of the office of the Prime Minister and the Privy Council office, including an examination of the influence on policy matters of Ivan Head, Jack Austin and others who presently operate beyond the official scrutiny of parliament?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: There being no obligation on a minister to answer an oral question, I do not know how I can allow a supplementary to a question that has not been answered.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is simply that the Prime Minister yesterday proposed to this House a far ranging review of the powers of this House and also proposed to limit the powers of this House, which is certainly a matter of concern to each and every member here. I and other members of the House are simply asking for some elaboration of the context within which he proposes to have this inquiry proceed and I would ask for an answer.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): One of the proposals I had in mind was that members of the House use the rules for purposes for which they were devised. The hon. member may have a valid point and he may want to express it in debate, but he should know—and if he does not know, he should be told—that a point of order does not allow him to make a speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Physician, heal thyself.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have gone as far as we can on what is essentially not a point of order. The question has been as fully aired as possible, bearing in mind the fact that I have extended the question period for a few minutes to try to accommodate members such as the hon. member who is on his feet.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): On a point of order, and in the interest of defending the Chair, I would simply like to raise the question of the propriety of the Prime Minister assuming a role regarding what is and what is not a point of order in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Buchanan.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think we have to get into a controversy on what the answer contains. It is an answer to the question, so be it. I have recognized the hon. member for Villeneuve, and that should be the last question for today.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF BENEFITS TO CERTAIN PERSONS REGISTERED WITH MANPOWER

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Would he tell us how it is that someone who wishes to prove his availability for work by registering with a Canada Manpower Centre cannot receive unemployment insurance benefits because the Commission considers it to be insufficient proof?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the requirements and obligations of the claimant under the Unemployment Insurance Act are clearly defined. We have augmented the definition of that by the publication of a booklet and in the counselling and interviews with individual claimants. I can only presume, without specific information regarding the particular case to which the hon. member is alluding, that he or she has failed to satisfactorily pursue a job.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege along the lines of the question put by my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and further to the answer given to a question put by him this morning. My question is for the Prime Minister regarding the Law of the Sea Conference. The hon. member for South Shore brought to the attention of the House the fact that a commitment was made and an undertaking given by certain ministers of the Crown having to do with Canada's position at the Law of the Sea Conference. He asked whether or not we would be prepared to take unilateral action to protect our fish resources. The hon. member read from the St. John's Evening Telegram the statement made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson).

I might draw the attention of the House to the statement made by the previous minister of fisheries who in his official capacity as minister of fisheries issued a statement in Halifax which was later reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald issue of June 15 at which time he made the same undertaking. I might add that at the meeting referred to earlier with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion the Prime Minister was present, so I do not think he can shake it off and say that he was not aware of the promise made.

This is a very important matter which affects the lives, the livelihood and the future prospects of many thousands of Canadians living on the eastern seaboard and on the west coast of Canada. I take strong exception to these people being misled, and I might add maybe deliberately misled, by ministers of the Crown who for political purposes or political expediency promised the people of Canada, the people of Newfoundland and people in other parts of Canada that this action would be taken, in the full knowledge that this government would not support the action if Canada's position was not improved at the Law of the Sea Conference.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed both previous members, the hon. member for South Shore and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter), some time to express their points of view on this. Earlier I expressed serious reservations regarding whether in fact this was question of privilege.

Mr. Stanfield: It is a question of integrity.

Mr. Speaker: Or it may be a question of debate. In fact, it certainly is a question of debate. It may be the proper subject of questioning of one or the other minister during the time of the question period, but contradictory answers, no matter how clear they may be, are not a matter for the hon. members to expose within the time limits given to them, and certainly when there is a debate in progress during which any subject can be brought forward. I am unable to see any precedent that establishes it as a valid question of privilege.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jamieson: I do not propose to take the time of the House with regard to the substance of what has been discussed this morning; there are other forums for that. If I heard correctly, I have the impression that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) made some reference to being deliberately misled. I suggest that that is not parliamentary, and I feel quite certain that he would not want to make that assertion. I would ask Your Honour's ruling on that point.

Mr. Speaker: I was listening to the hon. member very carefully and, if I recall correctly, I think he said that the House had been misled, perhaps deliberately or accidentally. I did not take it that he had made the direct charge clearly that it was deliberate. In any case, we are on what has been a nonpoint of privilege for some time, and I would be grateful if we could go on to orders of the day.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, commencing with the usual fraternal and friendly relations of a Thursday afternoon this Thursday morning, I should like to ask the government House leader to tell the House what business it will be engaged in this week and next week, and whether the government has made up its collective mind if the situation in Vancouver is sufficiently serious to warrant interrupting the Throne Speech debate?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the decision was made by the government today to introduce legislation to bring the grain handlers strike on the west coast to an end. Notice will be given tonight of this legislation. I have had some informal discussions about this legislation, and I understand it would suit the convenience of members if the debate were to be called for Monday.

Mr. Baldwin: On the same point, Mr. Speaker, of course the government House leader realizes that this party would be quite prepared to waive reasonable notice because the interval of time which would normally prevail between giving of notice and the commencement of debate is not possible. We have always done that on those rare occasions when the government has overcome its ineptness sufficiently to bring in good legislation. I wonder if the government House leader would try to devise some way, without revealing the actual details of the bill, of making us aware of its general trend? This might facilitate commencement of the debate.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to do so. I am sure we will have the co-operation of all members in dealing with this legislation within a day if possible.

Mr. Benjamin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hopes of the government House leader that the bill will be dealt with in short order, may I ask if it will be possible to make hon. members aware of its contents somewhat in advance of first reading?

An hon. Member: You were asleep, Benjamin.

An hon. Member: That is what he was just asked.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will comply with these requests. I think it would facilitate the debate and I am very happy to co-operate.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an Address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, as well as the amendment introduced by the hon. Mr. Stanfield (p. 42) and the subamendment introduced by Mr. Broadbent (p. 53).

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, transportation problems in Canada remain a present-day issue. There was talk about it during the last election. The Speech from the Throne reflected a large part of the public discussions which took place during the election campaign, and we intend to continue the discussions and implement the proposed measures.

During the summer, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to read perhaps with closer attention the history of Canada as related to the development of railways, and I had the pleasure to read among other things that great book by Pierre Berton the National Dream, and The Last Spike. And I had never realized, Mr. Speaker, how closely the history of the development of Canada was related to the development of the railways. The whole development of western Canada is interrelated with the development of the railways. Furthermore, if one reads the first debates that followed the creation of this beautiful country that is ours, one realizes that railways were a focal concern of politicians of that time.

Sir John A. Macdonald spent a great deal of his political life trying to solve the railway problem in Canada, or rather build a railway that would link eastern and western Canada. So the problem of transportation is undoubtedly vital to any country but particularly for Canada. Because of the vastness of the Canadian territory, differing areas which are so far apart, it is essential that this country be linked by the best means of transportation known.

So it is not surprising that even in 1974 there is still talk about the transportation policy, new means to link Canadians, setting up faster and easier communications so that our country will be more united.

There is no doubt that the unity of this country is impossible without an excellent transportation system, not only for passengers, but also for goods. Transportation in Canada includes not only railways, but also transportation by bus, by car, by boat, by airplane. This includes airports and seaports, which means that the greater part of Canadian activity is related to the development of our transportation policy.

I am therefore happy, Mr. Speaker, that the government has decided to make a special effort to make the required improvements, and there are many of them. Regardless of any statement that can be made, I am convinced that many things should be changed. I just read the speech that I made last March, Mr. Speaker, and there is not a single sentence in it that needs to be changed, despite any direct or indirect accusation that may have been made. I am not speaking of my friends opposite, but of other people more directly involved in transportation. Transportation is directly related to the public interest. This is why, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, no individual, no private company should have an advantage over the government in the development of transportation.

I would not want it to be said, Mr. Speaker, that I suggest that the government should acquire all transportation means in Canada; this is not at all what I want. I believe this would be the greatest mistake we could make. There are several other areas where we can invest our money, but I believe that the general transportation policy must be developed by the government and followed by all those who work in the transportation field and who have a right to make a profit in this field as long as their search for profit is in the interest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have already started to make some changes. We have already developed some plans.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[English]

We signed a bilateral air agreement with the United States. We allocated routes to the carriers.

An hon. Member: Not very well.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If ever you want to discuss them I am ready any time. There is an airline in this country which belongs to the citizens of Canada, so if some people on the other side of the House do not like that they should say so publicly. I am sure they are never going to be elected on such a platform.

We have signed this agreement. We have adopted the Darling rates on coastal trade. We have met again and again with the Atlantic provinces on freight rates so that we can develop that part of the country more than it has been in the past. The committee of western ministers on transportation has worked well.

● (1220)

An hon. Member: Who told you that?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think some members on the other side of the House have met those ministers and have seen how seriously they do their work. They are interested in transportation, in the problems of Canada, and not in politicking, as some are.

Mr. Hees: Of course, you never indulge in that, do you?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I don't know why some members are not happy when something good happens to Canadians. The ministers are satisfied. We are working together and solving problems. We meet in a cheerful and non-partisan atmosphere.

An hon. Member: Oh, boy!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Why is the hon. member so sad about that?

Mr. Hees: You will strain your wrist patting yourself on the back.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You are quite an adviser, George.

We are experimenting in Ontario with the Richmond Hill to Toronto commuter train, which is important but only a start. The STOL program, which is being developed rapidly, has become a real success.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we are seeing a repetition of what happened a few minutes ago. When something works well, members opposite are unhappy. I don't understand.

An hon. Member: Who's unhappy? We are surprised.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Are you surprised that it works so well?

An hon. Member: No, that it works at all.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is a very important program.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I sincerely regret interrupting the minister who is making an excellent speech. Will he permit a question now or at the end of his speech about the STOL program?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question before the hon. member puts it. I think the hon. member wants to know if Mr. Sinclair was right in saying that the STOL program cost $135 million. Mr. Sinclair is wrong. Is the hon. member satisfied? As I said previously, the program cost $25 million. That is the correct figure, and not the one suggested by Mr. Sinclair. I don't know why he said that. Of course, that $25 million figure does not cover everything carried in the budgets of all the different departments concerned.

An hon. Member: What is the total?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We are talking about STOL.

An hon. Member: You are stalling.

An hon. Member: You don't know.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do know, but I am not going to mention it, for obvious reasons. I am being perfectly honest. I am telling members the plain truth, but I am not going to reveal all the details. I repeat, the figure of $25 million which I mentioned previously is the right one. If Mr. Sinclair contends the STOL program has cost $135 million, let him prove what he says. I think he is wrong. He should not consider himself as speaking for the government of Canada. He is speaking as a citizen, and that is all. My interest in this is no smaller than his.

We are already on the way to transforming and improving transportation throughout Canada. Here I shall mention the CNR Turbo train which runs between Ottawa and Montreal and Montreal and Toronto. The Canadian Pacific Railway is about to enter into service a train which will be a bit faster. We hope that company will change its policy. Why do I say that? A few years ago everybody in Canada, including the railways, thought we should eliminate passenger trains.

Mr. Benjamin: Not everybody.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Everybody thought we should use cars.

Mr. Benjamin: I didn't.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): People thought that motor cars and airplanes were the vehicles of the future. Now, people notice that this is not so. I do not say cars will disappear from our highways or that aircraft will not fly. I do say that there are plans for improved passenger train service. We want people to be happy to travel by train instead of by car. It should not take two or three hours, as happens now, to go from St. Hyacinthe to Montreal if you leave at nine o'clock in the morning. That is awful! We can do better than that.

The railways have given a commitment to improve services. In the election campaign and in the Speech from the Throne we said that the government intends to create a corporation for operating passenger trains. We still support the idea, as announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the west. We are not anxious to do this. It is not our first priority. We will say this to the railways: "You contend you know the business better than we do. Show us how good you are. Demonstrate to us that you can improve the service to a greater extent than we could if we were to create a corporation." We have not abandoned the idea but want to give the railways a chance to show they can do better than we can, as a government. There is no rush to create a corporation, but there is a rush to improve passenger train service.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, when you deal with transportation, it is like being in a restaurant. Some are interested in the food, some in reading the menu and some in changing the cook. I am interested in having good food on the table, that is, in good train service for transporting people and enough cars to carry our goods, so that we can export manufactured products and create good service to our ports. This holds true particularly for Vancouver and some parts of eastern Canada. This is what I am interested in and the government is ready to take all legal and moral measures to achieve this result. We do not want to be unnecessarily doctrinaire. We do not intend to do things just one way and say there is only one way of doing them. There are several ways of doing things. We know that. We are ready to be flexible but we will not be flexible in reaching the objectives defined during the election campaign and the Speech from the Throne.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a vast country—as is well known and, evidently, I have not discovered it—and some of its regions are isolated. We must therefore find a way to bring these regions closer so as to provide them with communication and transportation facilities in order to allow Canadians to live everywhere on the Canadian territory and not only in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver or Calgary. Some people are living in the far north, others in remote communities. Ways must be found to enable them to travel fast and in comfort, so that they may thus contemplate living either at the place where they were born or where they have elected to settle down.

But how should it be done? The plane seems to be most appropriate to that end. This means that we will have to launch a program for the development of small airports from which we could reach by air nearly any place in Canada, especially where there is no other available means.

This is another area where improvements are to be introduced, clearly within eventual budget restrictions, because such a program may cost billions. Everything then will depend on the government's general economic policy, the fight against inflation and so on. We will however proceed with all due speed, in order that Canada may have the best transportation system.

We propose to develop navigation in the north because we know natural resources are there and the world will need them. This is common knowledge, after such painful experiences. Why not then give Canada better specialization in far north shipping? Why not have better ice-breakers, better ice-going ships. All this belongs to us, here in Canada, and we will have to specialize in that field.

We have a program for developing navigation in the north. Speaking of navigation in the north and coastal shipping—that is water transport from one point to another in Canada—it will be done in the future by Canadian ships with Canadian crews. And with our existing lake-going fleet, we already have the elements of a merchant navy large enough for Canada. We will then have to look.

● (1230)

Mr. Forrestall: That is the merchant marine.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It is part of the merchant marine. It is not complete because we still do not have ocean going ships. This is something I hope we will have in the future.

There is not only the problem of inter-city communication, but urban transportation. This is in the provincial and municipal field, not the federal field. However, we are ready to co-operate as we are doing with the provinces and municipalities in order to solve this very serious problem of urban transportation. This can only be done through co-operation because we do not have any specific jurisdiction in that field. This is a problem that must be solved because it is becoming more and more impossible to live in certain large cities because of the poor transportation system. We are offering our co-operation to the provinces and the municipalities in order to improve this situation.

We want more information about transportation. We do not have all the information. As hon. members know, private enterprise is involved. There are bus companies, private railways and provincially-owned railways. We will be asking the House to adopt an information act of some kind in order that we may get all the information.

We now have a commitment from the railways that they will supply, at the request of the Canadian Transport Commission, all information that is asked for by the provinces. We were asked for this by the provinces previously, but unfortunately the election prevented us from doing anything about it. The provinces have asked us to amend the Railway Act so that we not only have a promise from one man or one board of directors. The provinces want to have a definite right. If the opposition parties are interested, I think an amendment to the Railway Act can be passed compelling the railways to supply information at the request of the Canadian Transport Commission or the Department of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There is also the problem of freight rates. We are still discussing with the western provinces what criteria should be established for freight rates in Canada. Are we going to use the railways as an instrument for regional development? This will have to be defined so we know exactly what we want to do. The railways are costing the Canadian people a lot of money. In the passenger field alone, the cost is $100 million a year.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

That is a lot of money and I think the government and this House should have some say in this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I read this morning that some people contend we do not have to change anything, that everything is O.K. in the transportation act of 1967. However, that is not the way we feel. I regret to say we think it is far from being perfect. Even though it costs a lot of money to maintain our railways, the general public profits by it. For example, I am sure the Richmond Hill-Toronto commuter train will not make a profit, but the whole community will profit. If two or three thousand people save two or three hours a day, that is worth a lot of money and must be taken into account.

Even though what we propose will involve a lot of money, if that is transposed at the national accounts level, it will be seen that it is probably the best way to save money. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) agrees. I see he is leaving.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I wish to make one more point. I've really just begun my speech.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I want to underline one point, the problem of consultation.

Consultation is very important in this field. If there is a field where things are cut up, it is that of transport. You have provinces which make the roads. Private companies like the bus companies. There are national companies, like the Canadian National, not to mention the Canadian Pacific and the airlines. There are municipal jurisdictions, provincial jurisdictions, private interests and Crown corporations. As we look at the whole, we come to the conclusion that it cannot work unless there is a state of permanent coordination and consultation between all the agencies concerned.

There are towns where you might have an excellent air service, perfect roads and train and bus systems that are quite up-to-date. There are other places, however, where there is nothing of all that; so there is going to have to be coordination so that everything is not concentrated in the same place. And, if our means are limited, well then, let us try to spend and invest our money so that the greatest possible number of Canadians can benefit by all known modern transportation means.

I do not want to start a discussion in the House, Mr. Speaker, but I remember very well that there once was an air company that abandoned a small line in the west. Today, they have a bus to replace this and they would not want to go back to the old system because they found that they saved much more time this way. As far as we are concerned, we find that with the small STOL aircraft between Montreal and Ottawa a lot of time is saved even if the aircraft flies a bit slower.

We need some sort of total planning which cannot be exclusively brought about by the federal government but by all the provincial governments as well as the municipal governments when it comes to urban transport.

So we will have to discuss these problems. It will not be easy because I know this will be extremely expensive. Recently I spent a few days in England and France. I remember that after the war when I went to France for the first time, I was shocked by the bad rail service. Of course, the war was somehow responsible for that situation, but today their trains are more comfortable than ours, and it is the same thing in England. Why do people use trains? Because those trains are comfortable and fast.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Whose fault is it?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Whose fault is it? Anyone who wants to make a trial can do so. But I am here to build trains, so I will try to do just that. Everybody will be working. I will be busy with the railroads while others make trials.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to point to the House that the good feelings we had expressed concerning transport, passenger services, freight transport, freight rates, lack of discrimination—

● (1240)

[English]

We still believe in all this. Even though the election is over and we have a majority here, we believe in it—even more so, if possible. We are in a good position, now, even if hon. gentlemen opposite are not happy, to do all the good things Canadians are waiting for us to do.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister if he will agree to answer. It is stated in the Speech from the Throne that the government intends to establish machinery to ensure the effective management of all ground transportation. Would the minister elaborate on this proposal and tell us what is meant by the statement to which I have just referred?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister's time has expired and I would not wish him to embark on any lengthy explanation, though he may wish to reply briefly.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I think we will develop our transport policy as we go along. The Speech from the Throne mentions a corporation for passenger cars and a corporation for rail cars to assure an adequate supply of those. More problems will arise as we go along, but we are determined to take all the means necessary to realize the goals we have set, and we do not have to bother with a full list of those means.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Just railway transportation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Railway transportation.

Right Hon. J. G. Dienfenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure for me to hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) even though, in matters affecting transport, he sometimes allows his imagination to take the place of facts. He is a remarkable orator, one who enlivens the House, and I have always tried to be present whenever he speaks. Whether I agree with him or not, he has developed that undefinable parliamentary quality to such an extent over the years that I always enjoy hearing him speak even though, when he has finished, we have little or no idea of what he was actually endeavouring to prove.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: However, I say in all sincerity that I have great admiration for him as I have for all hon. members who endeavour to express themselves clearly and with honesty of purpose. I cannot say more of anyone than that. I did notice, though, that in his praise for himself and his department in connection with the allotment of air routes from the United States he forgot the province of Saskatchewan. This is not the first time Saskatchewan has been forgotten, particularly since it turned to the former allies and bedfellows of the Liberal government during the last parliament. When they ceased to support the government, Saskatchewan was forgotten.

Furthermore, I should like to have heard the minister say something more about the transportation of oil and gas by railroad from the north. This matter has been thoroughly looked into by the Queen's University Committee which came to the conclusion that such a railroad would cost no more than a pipeline and that the environmental difficulties inherent in a pipeline would be completely eliminated. What has been done in that connection?

I should also have liked to have heard the minister say something about the Canadian Transport Commission. This Commission, during the last several years, has brought in recommendations and decisions which, in several cases, have been entirely unmindful of the average Canadian. I think of the recent acceptance by the Commission of the application on the part of Bell Telephone which in my opinion was unjustified and could not be justified. It can only have the effect of stoking still further the inflationary fires in this country.

Now, I wish to deal with one or two matters of particular interest to me arising out of the Speech from the Throne. It was a speech grandiloquent in words, outstanding the sentiment and completely devoid of any serious effort to meet the problems facing Canada today. It was designed to delude the people of Canada into believing that a government which has been sound asleep since the election has suddenly ended its hibernation and that things are being done. Where, in that Speech, is there anything which will help Canadians today? It is beyond me why in all the circumlocution of that Speech there is nothing which meets the major problem facing this country, that is to say, inflation. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) dealt with inflation throughout the campaign, calling it the number one danger facing our country, he was ridiculed. Now there is suddenly a recognition that such a thing as inflation does exist. It is still apparent that the sloth and inaction of the past weeks, months and, indeed, the last year and a half is what will continue to guide this government.

Government expenditures are on the increase and there is no attempt at control. Budgetary expenditures on September 26 totalled $9.2 billion, some $1,800 million more than the same period in the previous year. Where is this nation going? I am not going to get into a discussion of inflation as it no doubt will be dealt with at length during this debate, but I do suggest that this government could have acted.

What is the government's excuse now? It says it is waiting for the budget. We have had budgets and budgets over and over again during the last three or four years with nothing to meet the serious situation of inflation. As I listened to the unveiling of the Speech from the Throne I could only come to the conclusion that its purpose was simply to becloud the fact that our financial situation in Canada is very serious and to put the blame on international causes when at least 55 per cent of inflation here in Canada is the result of inaction on the part of this government.

Why has there not been some action taken? There is nothing to prevent the government of Canada, even without a budget, from doing something about the awful interest rates which today make it virtually impossible for people in all walks of life to continue. The government has the power to do something and does not have to wait for a budget. Why does it not act now?

I remember very well that when I was Prime Minister the great banking institutions of Canada came to me seeking my agreement to legislation removing the 6 per cent ceiling on interest. I asked them what their purpose was, and they said it was to make the financial situation more flexible. I asked them whether they intended to use such legislation and they said no, at which time I said that under the circumstances my answer was no.

People in Canada today are aroused as never before. The government won an election and boasts of it. I do not object to that feeling of exhilaration that comes from victory, but where is Canada going? If it is going to follow what is set out in the throne speech I wonder what the consequences will be?

This brings me to something that happened on Monday on Parliament Hill. I stood against violence weeks ago when the situation at Kenora showed a degree of dangerous chaos. I said that those who were raising the trouble among the Indians were not the responsible ones but were troublemakers obtaining their inspiration from the United States. What happened here on Parliament Hill will be known throughout the world as an indication that we in this nation are in no different position than other nations, many without the same background and tradition of respect for law.

However, I must add that the government of Canada must bear a large share of the responsibility for what happened as a result of its inaction and the official decision that the minister would not meet with the Indians without the meetings being subject to certain qualifications he wished to impose. That is not the way to deal with difficulties and problems, and certainly not the way to deal with the first race of our country.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

I have no sympathy for what these people did, but when I heard that the government refused to meet with them, as it was reported, I feared for the consequences. As an indication of how serious this matter is let me point out that yesterday the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, himself a full-blooded Cree, speaking with the magnificent record he has had during the years, to the benefit of his people, spoke out strongly and definitively. That is an unusual thing for a representative of Her Majesty, provincially or otherwise.

I say to the government through you, Sir, that I have no consideration for the irresponsible individuals involved, but the vast majority of the Indian race whose contributions to this country have been tremendous and law abiding deserve more than the consideration they have been given to date. I would go further by asking whether the use of the RCMP on Parliament Hill on Monday was a course in keeping with the traditions of the force and the excellent relationship that has prevailed between that force and the Indian peoples?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock the House will take recess until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will revert to routine proceedings.

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the parties and agreement has been reached with regard to the method by which the House will be asked to deal with supply. I understand there will be unanimous consent for a special order, which reads as follows:

That, each standing committee to which the main estimates, 1974-75, or supplementary estimates (A), 1974-75, are referred, shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the said estimates to the House not later than October 22, 1974:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 58(4) (a), twenty-four hours' notice shall be given of motions to concur in the said estimates or to restore or reinstate any item in the said estimates;

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, any bill based upon the said estimates may be advanced any number of stages in any sitting;

That, on Wednesday, October 23, 1974, Thursday, October 24, 1974, and Friday, October 25, 1974, the only business taken up under government orders shall be the consideration of the said estimates and of any bill or bills based thereon;

That, on the aforementioned days, no private members' business shall be taken up and Standing Orders 15(3), 26 and 40 shall be suspended;

That, the hours of sitting on Wednesday, October 23, 1974, shall be 2:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., and the hours of sitting on Thursday, October 24, shall be 11:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m., 2:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.;

That, at 4:00 p.m. on Friday, October 25, 1974, the proceedings then in progress shall be interrupted and every question necessary for the disposal of any item of business relating to the said estimates and the passage at all stages of any bill or bills based thereon shall be put forthwith without further debate or amendment;

And that, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 6(3), the House shall adjourn on Friday, October 25, 1974, immediately after completing the business of supply referred to in this order.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the order proposed moved, I take it, by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) and seconded by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). Shall it be so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I say very briefly that there have been the usual interesting exchanges among the House leaders. Because the government got itself into an unfortunate predicament and had to be defeated last May 8, it is now in the position where procedures have to be adopted to deal with the 1974-75 main estimates which, together with Governor General's warrants—which I see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has before him in large quantities—have almost been expended. So we are prepared to accommodate the government. I want to say, in light of the rather extraordinary claim the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made yesterday for further streamlining and thereby loss of opposition privileges, that when the government is in a position where it needs assistance, there is always on an individual basis a willingness to co-operate. This is what is being done now. As time goes on, I am sure the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) will see how much more co-operation he receives from government House leaders than he did when he was in his other occupation dealing with people at the United Nations.

There is another matter which I think I should mention. The three days which will be devoted to discussion of the estimates in the House will be without interruption either by the opposition attempting to make use of Standing Order 26 or by the government bringing in large clutches of government statements to be made on motions by ministers. This will give the House, and particularly members who have come here since 1968, an opportunity to see how this House can operate in what will be an atmosphere and climate resembling the old committee of supply. We hope ministers will bring forward the details of their estimates without any sins of omission or commission, and that we will have an interesting debate. I say this because it may well be that in the discussion of our rules this procedure will serve as a pilot plan for the proposition this party will make so that we can work out a system of reverting, at least in part, to the old committee of supply rules.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker I wish to confirm the fact that the motion presented by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) does represent an agreement arrived at among the four House leaders. If some members think that not sufficient time is allowed for debate of these estimates, and others think there is too much time, I can tell them that the amount of time in the motion represents a compromise.

I believe the point made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) should be emphasized, namely, that what we are dealing with here is not a brand new set of estimates but, rather, estimates for the current fiscal year, seven months of which have already been voted or approved in one way or another, most of which has already been spent. It seems, therefore, that we should handle the discussion of these estimates with as much expedition as possible. I feel the arrangement worked out by the House leaders in bringing in this motion takes into account all the important factors.

Perhaps there is one other element in the so-called agreement, among others, which should be mentioned. It should be understood that during the three days October 23, 24 and 25 when we are debating the estimates on the floor of the House, most, if not all, of that time will be spent, in committee of the whole so that there can be an honest back and forth discussion of these estimates.

● (1410)

On behalf of my party, I wish to support this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has said, that there was unanimous agreement between the House leaders of the four parties. We took part in the discussions and we endorse it completely for it meets a need we have often stated in this House that the spending of the taxpayer's money was not discussed sufficiently in the House. This agreement provides for three days' discussions in Committee of the Whole, with additionnal sittings, which constitutes some kind of compromise as was said previously. Some would say it is not enough, others that it is too much. To my mind, it is one step towards more effective and better planned procedures in the short and the long term.

I sincerely hope. Mr. Speaker, that there will be more agreements of this type to make House business more effective and better adapted to current needs. These would give each member the opportunity of putting forward his ideas and of checking on the present administration.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the proposal. Is it agreed that it shall become an order of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

MAIN ESTIMATES AND SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) FOR YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1975

Two messages from His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1975 and supplementary estimates (A) for the financial year ending March 31, 1975 be presented by Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the main estimates that I table today are identical to those which were introduced in the last session of the previous Parliament. Hon. members will recall undoubtedly that the examination of that budget was nearly completed by most standing committees at the time Parliament was dissolved.

In March last, the Commons voted interim supplies for the period from April to June inclusive. For the four following months, from July to October, the government obtained its operating funds through special warrants as authorized under the Financial Administration Act. The funds provided in those warrants should meet government needs only until the end of October. I trust that by that time Parliament will have voted all the necessary votes for the current fiscal year. For that matter, Mr. Speaker, agreement was reached on that a moment ago.

Nearly all budget items for which special warrants were issued were already included in the estimates under study when Parliament was dissolved.

The supplementary estimates that I also table today provide for the issuance of special warrants for any budget items not provided for in the main estimates. They also cover expenditures to be incurred in weeks to come to subsidize consumer oil product prices as well as the price of wheat for Canadian consumption. The amounts required to subsidize consumer oil product prices represent 90 per cent of the supplementary estimates.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order, or comment, which I think I am entitled to make at this point. I understand the gratitude which the minister feels at being in his present position and not in the one he held previously. As a result, he has probably forgotten to let us have copies of the supplementary estimates which usually come to us, or copies of the statement. I let it pass for that reason, although I think I should file a caveat at this time, on behalf of our party, that if on examination of those supplementary estimates we discover in them any dollar items or votes of expenditure covering some of the lavish promises in money which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his friends were flinging around during the course of the election campaign—such as the Toronto park, of which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) is aware—we will reserve the right to deal with them. We have not seen them, and it may well be that the government is virginally pure.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not believe so.

Mr. Baldwin: I have my doubts, also. But I simply point out that if we find that this is not the case, we will take very strong exception and will have to take action against the government.

Mr. Chrétien: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was happy in the other portfolio, and I am happy here—because I am a happy politician.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I would like to tell the opposition House leader that there will be another series of supplementary estimates presented in the House later in the year, probably in November.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1974-75—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move, pursuant to Standing Order 59, a motion to refer the main estimates to the several standing committees. This is a very long motion; it would take me ten minutes to read it.

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Sharp: In order to save the time of hon. members, I have circulated to all parties copies in both official languages. It is exactly the same as the motion passed at the last session, and in view of this perhaps it can be agreed to dispense with the reading.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it can be agreed that although the text of the motion is not fully read it be included in Votes and Proceedings and in Hansard as if it had been read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion would be correct if it were to be put in this way.

[Editor's Note: The motion referred to is as follows:]

HON. MITCHELL SHARP (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the estimates of sums required for the service of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1975, be referred to several standing committees of the House, as follows:

Vote 5 relating to the House of Commons.

Vote 10 relating to the Library of Parliament.

Mr. Stanfield: There must be some misunderstanding, Mr. Speaker. We have not received a copy—

Mr. Baldwin: It has just arrived by special messenger.

Mr. Stanfield: While we do not desire to hold up the House, I think we should have an opportunity, not only in self-defence but in the interests of the country, to read this motion before we pass it, perhaps on the understanding that we could revert to it later in the afternoon in order to get the business done.

● (1420)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I apologize. I thought that arrangements had been made to have the orders distributed. They are exactly the same as on the previous occasion, and I have no hesitation in giving the usual assurance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At the moment I have a motion which is properly before us. If we are going to deal with it now, I must read the entire motion or have the mover read it.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, you can dispense, or let the matter stand. We have no objection to proceeding with it a little later this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: It is proposed that the matter stand over until later this day. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us fix the time at six o'clock.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be any doubt about the second motion which I shall now move.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of Privy Council) moved:

That supplementary estimates (A) tabled this day be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will resume the business that was interrupted by the order made earlier.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada, the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 42) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 53).

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the adjournment, which now seems like a millennium ago, I was dealing with the situation on Parliament Hill. I had mentioned that I felt, disagreeing to the utmost with resorting to violence, that the government must assume considerable responsibility for the manner in which, from the time this group left Vancouver, the government continued to vacillate and did not take action. I mentioned the RCMP and rather questioned the use of that body for the kind of action it was engaged in here on Parliament Hill. Indeed, when I was prime minister I refused to permit the RCMP to be used for strike breaking in Newfoundland because I felt that that body should not be used in any way, directly or indirectly, which was inconsistent with its tradition.

Now, sir, I intend to say a word or two regarding parliament, and in particular some of the changes that have taken place in the last few months. I mentioned that there had been changes. As one looks at the government front bench, one cannot but be impressed by the fact that today you are a minister and, with your government still in office, tomorrow you are not. It is a case of in again and out again. The only one who ever found a way to get back again was the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey).

I think of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who brought many votes to the Liberal Party in the election. I remember him being spoken of by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in words of adulation and eulogy which could only lead one to believe that he was a minister who was certainly in the best graces of the Prime Minister. But out he went. Then there is the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury). He, too, was in that delightful position. He was a minister of national revenue who had performed in a way that met the praise of the Prime Minister and other ministers. He is gone.

Then you think of one or two others who disappeared, and one can only think of the Biblical words, "greater love hath no man than this"—that he lay down the portfolios of his friends for his own survival.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is the strangest thing I have ever known. If I were to use the language that might be used by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in reference to the chickens of two years ago, I would say "the slaughter of the innocents". It is all because for some reason the Prime Minister decided they must go. However, there is another minister who apparently saved himself by his tears, and I know he will identify himself immediately.

I congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) on his victory in his constituency. I will always defend my brother members in my own province, so I was deeply concerned by the reply given to Douglas Fisher by the Minister of Agriculture when asked how things were going. Mr. Fisher said that when he asked the minister about his party's prospects, he was his usual candid self and said, "If the Prime Minister would send Otto Lang off to China on a mission, things would be better". The interesting thing is that he did not go, Mr. Speaker, and I saw the two of them sitting together, placed there no doubt by the Prime Minister because of this little interlude. I can only conclude that great are the uses of victory because there they sit, cheek by jowl.

I am concerned about the way in which the Minister of Justice, in giving some legal opinions on what should be done, is not only being overawed but overruled by the Prime Minister. He will recall various incidents, but I remember the one on June 24 when the FLQ kidnappers of Mr. Cross were found in Paris. The Minister of Justice said that he did not see any difficulty in extraditing them.

He said the prisoners were originally sent to Cuba in exchange for Mr. Cross, but that did not protect them in other countries. An hour or two later, the Prime Minister said it would not be this government's plan to take steps for extradition. That must have been an awful setback for the Minister of Justice.

Parliament is a great place, Mr. Speaker. I never get over my admiration for the place or my interest in it because of incongruities such as I have mentioned that happen with great regularity on that side of the House.

Mr. Lang: Remember 1962.

An hon. Member: Otto, you just sit quiet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, I am glad to have Otto's participation. I have two or three more here, but I did not want to use them because he was so jovial with me today. As I have said on other occasions, when you come to parliament on your first day, or indeed during your first six months, you wonder how you ever got here. After that you wonder how the other 263 members were elected. In this place there is strong argument, but nonetheless there is respect and regard for the integrity of those who sit opposite. Above all, I am interested in seeing the quality of the members who come to this House after every election.

● (1430)

I am not being perfunctory when I say that the mover and seconder of the address in reply performed their duty admirably, difficult as it must have been, when measured by reason, to say the things that they said. I admire those who can speak in both languages with the facility displayed by so many. I recall that the former member for Prince Albert, also the then prime minister of Canada, had a wonderful hold in the province of Quebec. He made only two speeches in French in his years in office. Once he said "oui" and the second time "oui, oui". That had a tremendous effect. When I listen to those who are able to speak in both languages, I have a deep sense of regret for never having been able to do it. I understand what is said. When I try to reply, the quality of my French is such that nobody, from Vancouver Island to Newfoundland, who does not speak French understands. That is trilingualism, as practised in Prince Albert.

Speaking seriously about the Prime Minister's speech—I wish he were here; I know how busy he always is when I speak—he said parliament must be the heart of the nation. I did not read Hansard this morning, so I must depend on memory. Mr. Speaker, who was it who drove a dagger into the heart of parliament when the rule changes were forced through by closure two or three years ago in this House? Those rule changes turned this House into a puppet, to be pushed around by the Prime Minister and those associated with him.

When the so-called reform of the rules of parliament began under Mr. Pearson and was continued under the present Prime Minister, I stood against most of the changes and was virtually alone. Many of my colleagues fell for the argument that parliament must be made more efficient. That is always the Machiavellian argument used when parliament is about to be emasculated. I can tell the House this about the proposed rule changes: as far as I am concerned they will not pass unless they are based upon the principle that we in the opposition have rights, as well as the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to see the Minister of Justice applauding.

Mr. Lang: That is what the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think we all know how the minister voted last time. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) always approves of strengthening parliament.

When the Prime Minister spoke, he did so in solemn tones saturated with sacrament. He spoke feelingly of his high regard for members of parliament. But, Mr. Speaker, I have a good memory. What manner of changed thinking has come over the Prime Minister who on July 26, 1969, said that members were nobodies! Well, the nobodies of 1969 became the subject of his appreciation in 1974. Then he spoke of some of his fellow members in the Liberal Party. Once he said, "I think we will get rid of some of them; they are bums." Some of them who were here in those days are still here.

An hon. Member: Some of them just came back.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One hon. member said that they have just returned. They have returned while yet the light holds forth and burns. It is interesting to note the attitude taken in the last few weeks by some great American papers toward the parliamentary system. They pay the system great tribute. I will not quote because my time is limited. They said, in so many words, that so long as the representatives of the Crown live true to their oaths of office, there cannot be a Watergate in Canada. That was a tremendous tribute to our parliamentary system. The Americans, in attempting to get away from the British parliamentary system, made the president an all powerful king who might believe, as some of his predecessors did, that he is above the law.

In successive amendments to the rules of this House we have lost control of a basic right which is fundamental to parliament—the right to the fullest examination of expenditures. Today there is no such right. Despite all the gyrations we witnessed this afternoon, one cannot get around the situation that there are estimates unpassed from the previous parliament. The first thing we must do is this: we must return to this House, as a committee of the whole, the right to examine ministers on their shortcomings and on their achievements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know the attitude of ministers. I have seen it from both sides. When ministers came to me and said, "My estimates are coming up before the House," I said, "You had better be right." There is none of that today. There is virtually no control over the profligate wastefulness in the spending of money. That wastefulness has characterized, in the last six or seven years, the government of this country. Expenditures of ministers, wasteful beyond words, have been unchallengeable in the House. You cannot move a motion against an individual item of expenditure except in those few last hours when the matter comes before the House, as happened three years ago when the House voted expenditures of $18 billion between 8.30 at night and 1.30 in the morning.

The first thing that must be restored to parliament is this right: that ministers shall stand in their places and shall be questioned individually in this chamber, sitting in committee, on their expenditures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If that right were in existence, do you think that the Prime Minister would have spent $95,000 refurbishing his summer residence; that there would have been an expenditure on the official residence, 24 Sussex Drive, of a quarter of a million dollars; that the centre block office would have been refurbished at a cost of $61,000? That would not have taken place if in this chamber we had the right to vote against such expenditures. And so on I could go on the subject of waste and extravagance.

● (1440)

Under my government, the total expenditure was around $6 billion. It is now four times that amount. There is no control whatsoever. When the Prime Minister is soliloquizing about parliament, let him make that change in our rules. I do not care about limitation of time in which to discuss, but I think it is necessary to make changes. However, if the Prime Minister seriously wants to restore parliament, the acceptance of that suggestion which is traditional in our country would do more than all the verbal promises and exhortations in which any of us may indulge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the right hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had no idea of the time I had left; because I have been interrupted. I express to the House my deep appreciation.

The Prime Minister says the question period should be improved. I am not at all convinced that oral questions have not arrived at the point where they bear no relationship to the necessity of being answered immediately. We have spread this period out and out. When I first came here, if there were two or three questions before orders of the day, that would be it. One of the reasons for the lengthy question period today is that this government will not answer questions that are put on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: They simply leave them there. Time goes on. From session to session and parliament to parliament, they remain unanswered. What should be done is this. Starred questions should be answered in three days, at the outside. Other questions should be answered within four or five days. If that were done, it would save a great deal of time for the House in the three-quarters of an hour or hour before orders of the day. Will it be done? Will we be able to get answers to questions?

I wish to refer to one example of how the government answers the opposition. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is not a provocative person. Some others around me are. I have been in his position. He asked an ordinary question today. Did he get an answer from the Prime Minister? He was simply playing around. Absolute power is a wonderful thing, as long as it is not used absolutely. That is what was shown here today. I want to give a prize example, for the benefit of those members who just came into the chamber. On February 28, 1972, the Leader of the Opposition asked a question of the Prime Minister. It was not of a nature that should arouse one at all. After he decided he would listen to what was being asked, the Prime Minister said:

> That was your God-damned question.

That is in Hansard. That is not parliamentary language. If it is, this institution will certainly not live. When you think of all that could be done by parliament, with all the ability that is here, when you finally come down to it it is the government that decides whether or not it is going to live up to parliament. Your Honour has been in the chair for three days. It is not for me to say anything of a flattering nature. All I say to you is this: the manner in which you have discharged your responsibilities assures that you will indeed be a spokesman for all members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let us together restore parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government House leader applauded. If he, in his august and high position as leader in the House, will translate that applause into actuality in the rules, his arrival at that position will be marked as a forward day in the history of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not expect answers to be so full as to cover everything under the sun, but I do expect them to be handed down and, above all, to be true. If we together bring about reform of the House and its rules, no one will be a more enthusiastic supporter than me. However, if the House leader brings in any substitute, caricature change in order to gain for the government more and more power, to the absolute exclusion of the opposition, parliament will in fact cease effectively to exist.

The Prime Minister said he was going to reform the Senate. Whenever he is in difficulty, he thinks of things to be done to take the eyes of the people off the problems that face the country. I remember very well when Mr. King defeated me in Prince Albert in the election of 1926. The major part of his policy was that he was going to reform the Senate. In sepulchral tones he spoke of that body. He said, "We are going to put an end to it." He secured the consent of everyone he appointed to the Senate that they would agree to their own dissolution. When in 1940 we asked to see those consents, he said they were personal. The only change was that he substituted live Grits for dead Tories: that was the total reform.

I can see the Minister of Justice avidly thinking of the Senate. I cannot hear his judicial words. We now have a new promise. The Prime Minister is giving a sop to the opposition. If any old Tories in the other place die, he will appoint Tories in their place. That is reform. With support amounting to 85 per cent in the Senate, that statement on his part is indicative of the degree of his desire to bring about the change of which he speaks.

Then there is the question of constitutional reform. During the election campaign the Prime Minister spoke critically of the government of Quebec for having brought in Bill 22. I was able to quote him. In my opinion, it was the worst action which could have been taken in relation to national unity. All over Canada the doctrine of bilingualism was accepted. Now, the province of Quebec turns its back on that doctrine and says: It can apply elsewhere but it is not going to apply here.

What should be done? I would have thought a government with courage would have disallowed that legislation as being unconstitutional. Let the Minister of Justice not tell me it is constitutional, because the godfather of constitutionalism in the Senate, Senator Forsey, says it is entirely unconstitutional. So does Frank Scott. Well, the excuse now being given for not disallowing the bill is that the disallowing process is dead.

Mr. Lang: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the Minister of Justice indicates that he does not hold the view to which I have referred, because the statement he made recently was this: as far as the legislation passed respecting oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan is concerned, if necessary it will be disallowed. So disallowance is still a constitutional possibility, or was only a matter of six months ago. Now the Prime Minister tells us he intends to ride the horse of constitutional reform, that he intends to patriate the constitution and make it truly Canadian. Mr. Speaker, every word and line in the British North America Act of 1867 was prepared in Canada by Canadians before it was ever sent to the British parliament for ratification.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then he says that if he cannot do it by agreement, he will resurrect—he did not use the word "resurrect" because he does not use Biblical expressions—if he could not do it by agreement, he would resurrect the Victoria charter. Sir, the premier of Quebec was wiser than all the other premiers when he refused to accept the Victoria charter while it was up for ratification and acceptance. What would have happened to us in western Canada if it had gone through? I am surprised the premier of Saskatchewan and the premier of Manitoba accepted it.

Mr. Broadbent: Not the present premier.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no; that is right. The Premier of Saskatchewan, who also exercised quite an influence in the affairs of the NDP, gave it his support.

An hon. Member: Thatcher?

Mr. Lang: No, it was Schreyer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was just about to pay a tribute to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on becoming acting leader, but because of this interruption I shall have to omit doing so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is a section in there which emasculates the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba by providing for a certain population basis affecting the four western provinces. In Manitoba and Saskatchewan our populations are declining. We would be the only two provinces under the Victoria charter to be placed in a secondary position had that proposal gone through. I hope the Prime Minister will not try to bring back that charter.

Something else is to be brought about. Apparently we are not getting enough information in Canada. We are told that the powers of Information Canada will be strengthened so as to provide a mechanism for disseminating the kind of information which is necessary. Well, some of the information which has been disseminated by that body certainly does not come within this ambit. If we can patriate the constitution, well and good; but not until changes can be brought about in the Victoria charter which will meet general agreement.

I shall conclude by dealing with certain recent activities in the field of foreign affairs. We did not get a chance to discuss foreign affairs while the present leader of the House was foreign minister. Foreign affairs during that period were as foreign as the constitution of Timbuktu.

Mr. Sharp: There was more debate during my time than at any other time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was none whatsoever, except in the most general way. The other day Mr. Ivan Head let the cat out of the bag and I think the time has come to say to him, "Ivan, ho. Stop. Whoa." He has no business whatsoever to be enunciating policy. I do not normally mention civil servants, but I cannot forget that Mr. Ivan Head wrote the introduction to a book of speeches by the Prime Minister and pronounced them to be pure poetry. And he had written them himself! What is the situation? The Prime Minister cannot be permitted to get away with the idea that he can deny that Ivan Head expressed himself regarding the new leftward turn in foreign affairs in Canada. I will read a few excerpts. These are from the Canadian Press:

> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau is determined to give Canada a strong, new activist role on the left wing of international affairs, Ivan Head, Mr. Trudeau's special foreign affairs adviser, said Wednesday.
> With the help of Allan MacEachen as his new external affairs minister, Mr. Trudeau will seek to heighten Canada's world influence by taking a more moralistic approach to world problems.

Do you have to be on the left to be moralistic?

> The new emphasis will be on the human problems affecting people wherever they live and on strengthening Canada's ties with Europe, Japan and the developing countries of Asia and Africa.

That is Mr. Head speaking, and Mr. Head knows. He went on to say the Prime Minister will be making many visits abroad. He will be visiting the Swedish Prime Minister who, Mr. Head said, has greatly impressed the right hon. gentleman with his "outspoken left-wing approach to international problems. According to this report, Mr. Head went on to say that the Swedes, with their denunciation of the Viet Nam war and the military revolt in Chile, had become "the cutting edge of the left—very active, outspoken and moral." The report adds:

> Canada can be expected to take a similar, though not necessarily identical, approach to such problems in the future, he said.

And a little later:

> Mr. Head said Mr. Trudeau met the Swedish prime minister in Austria last winter and was keenly interested in learning more about Sweden's activist foreign policy.

● (1500)

Mr. Head did say there was a leftist turn. Indeed, the day before he spoke to the Canadian Press reporter there was a dispatch from the United Nations under the heading "MacEachen to initiate shift in foreign policy". This is an article by Duart Farquharson in which we find the following:

> External affairs minister Allan MacEachen believes a renewed era of tough U.S. bargaining with Canada may have already begun—

In the same article, the following is stated:

> Canada's image abroad, so far as it is reflected in the personal characteristics of its new spokesman to the world, is also in for a change.

They infer that from his transfer from House leader to minister of foreign affairs, because apparently he cannot be pushed around by "Heads". The article continues:

> Turning to Canada's relations with the rest of the world, the external affairs minister confirmed in broad terms a recent report out of the prime minister's office that the Trudeau-MacEachen foreign policy will be to seek a strong, new active role on the left wing of international affairs.

That is a report from New York of what the minister said. But the Prime Minister says that Mr. Head never said the same thing. When Mr. Head gets a full head of steam, one never knows what he will say when it comes to leftist ideas. I am not satisfied with the position in which this very reliable young reporter has been placed. He is in the position of having it look like he had written something that was fiction. What is the foreign policy of this country with reference to leftist turns? Why should we not know that? Is this a radical departure from current policy which has never received the support of public opinion, which has never been discussed nationally and which has never been dealt with in this place, where foreign policy views should be accepted?

Because there is so much approval of the committee system, I make the suggestion that the foreign affairs committee be called together—and I should like to be a member of it, if I might be chosen for this purpose—so that Mr. Head can be given the opportunity to state what he has said, rather than hearing these alibis for his statements. What did he say, and where are we going? Is Canada taking a turn to the left? Does all this result from what the Prime Minister of Canada said when in Russia speaking to Sacha Kosygin, that we in Canada fear the United States economically—and we do—that we fear the United States culturally—and we do—and that we even fear the United States militarily? Is it any wonder that our relations with the United States today are at their lowest ebb?

It has now been revealed that the CIA has been upsetting governments, undermining governments and giving bonuses to those it has been helping. This is something I have said on other occasions since 1963 when the Liberal party was the beneficiary of the antagonism of the government of President Kennedy, when the president's chief lieutenant in relation to polls and the like, Mr. Harris, came to Toronto with a certain group, following which the Liberal Party found itself with endless funds during the last two weeks of the campaign. I could not understand that. There was also the interference which took place when General Norstad was sent here to say what Canada should do.

In addition, there were schools for pressmen, held by the United States Embassy, to give them the basis upon which to attack the government which I had the honour to lead. Why? Because we took the position that as the danger of air attack on America from the north no longer existed, there was no reason that we should extend the nuclear family. The United States itself had determined that in fact there was an end to the danger of attack from the north. We were reviled for that. The Liberal party turned a complete somersault following the visit of a former prime minister to New York. After his return in the month of January, he said in Scarborough that Canada should accept nuclear weapons. I would like this whole matter looked into.

We noticed the other day that the CIA revelations are not to cover the period 1959 to 1964. I should like to have some of these CIA individuals on the witness-stand before our foreign relations committee, so that they might have the opportunity of explaining whether Canada was one of the nations that received treatment similar to other nations in North America as a result of the unjustifiable and unnatural actions of the CIA. For this and other reasons I should like an opportunity to be provided for a discussion of foreign affairs in this House. Until we have had that opportunity of discussion, let Mr. Head keep his mouth shut, and those connected with external affairs not push Canada into a leftist position.

Where are we going? The minister was in New York the other day and he suggested that Mr. Moroz, a patriot who has committed no offence, like hundreds of thousands of others in the U.S.S.R. who have been put into mental hospitals and the like, is getting along fine and is enjoying good health. What manner of nonsense is it, that Canada does not speak out in the United Nations calling upon the U.S.S.R. to uphold the principles of the United Nations charter which provide for the right of self-determination and which deny those things contrary to every concept of democratic government? Why has Canada not spoken out? Why the silence, as well, regarding the three Baltic countries and the Ukraine? Why does Canada not speak out, instead of taking this attitude of saying nice things to the U.S.S.R.? Why does Canada not get down to asking that immortal question: How is Moroz getting along, and is his health good?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I follow the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) with mixed feelings. He is certainly eloquent and humorous. He can fill the galleries, but I noticed that many did not stay for his entire speech. Nevertheless, he is always in the right place at the right time.

Mr. McGrath: Look at the galleries now.

Mr. Herbert: Quite frankly, he says very little. He spoke about this institution. I have heard the remark that the day he retires we will probably save four days each session. Considering the length of the speech he has just made, I am inclined to agree.

An hon. Member: That is an uncalled-for statement.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

● (1510)

Mr. Herbert: The opener in this debate spoke about Quebec Bill 22. I wonder what his qualifications are for talking about Bill 22, particularly when we consider what action should be taken to protect minority rights in other provinces. I found his comments on the constitution rather strange. The nub of the problem, surely, is that it is the desire of the vast majority of Canadians that we settle our own destiny in our own country.

Mr. Speaker, may I offer you my sincere congratulations upon your appointment. May I also extend congratulations to the member from my neighbouring constituency of Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) upon his appointment as Deputy Speaker, and to the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), and Louis-Hebert (Mrs. Morin) who will be assisting the Chair. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to convey to the Governor General the hopes of my constituents and myself that he will soon be fully recovered and able to resume his arduous responsibilities.

The mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne deserve our plaudits for their professional maiden speeches in this House. This is an indication of the calibre of the contribution which we can expect from the newly elected members.

The recent election has undoubtedly taken away the weight of uncertainty that characterized the twenty-ninth parliament. Action by government or opposition supporters was influenced by the daily possibility of an ending of that parliament. It is remarkable, and I am sure it will be so recorded, that so much was achieved under those extremely difficult and trying circumstances. I am proud that, though legislation tended to be either popular or relatively short-term, we can look back and say that it was a good job well done.

Now that the strain of minority government is removed, we can include long-term plans. I hope that an early step will be the revision of our rules, to improve our efficiency. It would take more than a supreme optimist to believe that under our existing procedures the more than 60 pieces of legislation which the government wants to present this session can be dealt with through to the stage of royal assent. Yes, there will be moans from the opposition about time to study. They tried that argument in the last session when they had a majority in each standing committee. So many of the opposition did not do their homework in the twenty-ninth parliament. With relatively few new faces on the other side of the House, I am not expecting much improvement in this thirtieth parliament, and that is a pity since I firmly believe that good opposition is essential for good government.

I am fortunate indeed to be the representative of one of the most interesting constituencies of this country. I sincerely thank the electors who have expressed their trust in me by sending me here for a second term. I hope I can render to all constituents the kind of service that they expect and deserve. The constituency of Vaudreuil is almost equally divided by language groups, French mother tongue citizens being a small majority. The constituency includes a large rural area, where the language used is mostly French. The soil is good and in addition supports many stables, so that the number of horses in the riding is considerable. Farming is mixed, with the emphasis being on dairy herds. The mainly urban area on the island of Montreal is one of the fastest growing regions in the country. The people in this area, who are mainly English-speaking, commute to the big city to work. An improved public transportation system is a major need.

The constituency of Vaudreuil probably includes, in total, as many sporting clubs and establishments as any other in the country. Very few sports are not actively pursued in this region. It is in part because of this local interest that I have been trying, and will continue to try, to persuade the government to form a ministry of sports so there can he much greater federal influence in this area. I believe that the present level of federal financial involvement is totally inadequate.

During the election campaign, the two subjects that were included in three-quarters of the questions posed to me were inflation and the future of agriculture in the province of Quebec. I intend to refer to both of these subjects later in my remarks. Quebec Bill 22 was also raised. Like the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), whose reference to the subject will be found on page 54 of Hansard, I think that people in the province of Quebec can well take care of themselves without Bill 22. However, the bill has been passed, and today I wish only to echo the sentiments expressed yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). His remarks can be found on pages 47 and 48 of Hansard. I heartily and enthusiastically endorse his comments on Quebec Bill 22.

A subject raised since the election has been the question of the sharing of police costs, activated by Quebec Justice Minister Choquette by letter to our Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). As you know, I have taken a strong stand in support of Mr. Choquette—not on his figures, which I am not qualified to judge, but on the principle that financial aid obtained from the federal government to assist in a matter falling under provincial jurisdiction should be available, on a comparable basis, to all provinces.

Furthermore, I contend that the special protection which must be afforded Canada's two largest cities, Montreal and Toronto, is a national responsibility which should fall, in some proportion, on the federal treasury. Some members perhaps are surprised that I, a government supporter, would openly discuss a difference of opinion with a minister. That is one reason I am proud to be a member of the Liberal Party. We represent many differing opinions and we can be said to range all the way from left to right. I must admit that this terminology frightens me a little. If one supports increased pensions, one is left; if one supports a healthy industrial climate, one is labelled right. This is unfortunate, since each of us must use our abilities in the areas best suited to our talents. Nevertheless, in the final analysis, and after full debate, we all accept the majority opinion of our party. We vote together. Diversity of opinion and solidarity of purpose is our strength.

Another matter raised since the election is the discussion, reactivated by the government of Quebec, relating to the transfer of the Ste. Anne de Bellevue veterans' hospital to provincial control. This has raised doubts and fears in the minds of both veteran patients and employees. The problem of shortage of nurses at this hospital has not been helped by the news of the discussion. The town in which this hospital is situated is also concerned, since federal compensation to this municipality forms a large part of its annual budget. Transfer of control could mean a cut in revenue of $200,000 per year. An early statement on the probable course of events at this hospital is imperative.

I stated earlier that I would be making some reference to the state of agriculture, specifically in my constituency but more generally throughout the province of Quebec. The British North America Act provides that parliament and the provincial legislatures shall exercise concurrent jurisdiction with regard to agriculture, subject to the provision that when a provincial law is repugnant to a federal enactment, the latter shall prevail. This means that a provincial statute cannot apply within the boundaries of the province whose legislature enacted it, if it conflicts with or duplicates a federal enactment. In other words, it shall apply only when the subject matter it deals with is not regulated by federal legislation or, if the said subject matter is regulated by a federal enactment, when it merely supplements the federal statute.

The power to legislate with regard to agriculture does not imply the power to legislate with regard to the disposal and marketing of agricultural products. It does not allow the federal government to legislate with regard to the disposal and marketing of agricultural products in any province, nor does it allow a province to legislate with regard to the disposal and marketing of agricultural products within its boundaries. If the federal government wants to legislate with regard to marketing, it must invoke the power it possesses to legislate with regard to trade and commerce, in which case its legislation, to be valid, must regulate international and interprovincial commerce only. As for a province, it can also legislate with regard to marketing, either because of its power with regard to property and civil rights within its territory or because of its residuary power over all things local in nature within its territory. The exact scope of provincial powers with regard to marketing is unknown, but it seems to include the creation of a marketing agency which shall be designated as the only buyer for a product which the local farmers want to sell on the local market.

The basis of Canada's national agricultural policy is the premise that "a stable agriculture is in the interests of the national economy and that farmers as a group are entitled to a fair share of the national income". Quebec's Department of Agriculture and Colonization has one overriding and clearly defined objective: it wants to make agriculture profitable and bring it into line with the social and economic needs of the 1970s. The over-all trend in Quebec agriculture is a declining farm population and a reduction in total farmland. In the last decade, the farm population decreased by one half. It would therefore appear that although the federal and provincial objectives are excellent and the jurisdictional responsibilities are reasonably definable, somewhere and somehow the respective legislative bodies are failing to meet their objectives. This problem must be tackled as a priority consideration by this parliament.

Questions in my constituency during the campaign, and since the election, on the subject of inflation fall into three groupings: government programs, regulations concerning the application of these programs, and the public service or bureaucracy which administers these programs. Regarding the programs, while there was often broad criticism it was difficult for me to pin down specific suggestions for change. Because, personally, I dislike generalizations, I am not bringing back to this parliament any ideas for change. However, the way in which the application of the programs is handled has been criticized in great detail. The three matters most mentioned are the Unemployment Insurance Commission's handling of the unemployed, the Local Initiatives Program, and the Opportunities for Youth program. All these emanate from the one Ministry of Manpower and Immigration.

It is not hard to understand the background to the criticism which originates in my constituency. There is a shortage of help in many skills, as well as a shortage of unskilled labour, and this in a province where the total rate of unemployment is too high. This shortage of labour covers all segments of the economy, such as industrial help, farm help and service help, and it is a natural reaction to criticize those thought responsible for this apparently inequitable situation.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) has told us that soon to be released is the report on what we popularly call the work ethic. If, as he suggests—and I do not have any reason to take issue with his statement—the general attitude of Canadians toward productivity is very healthy, then as a logical sequence he will have to find more efficient ways to get the unemployed into the job vacancies. With regard to the public service, the criticisms arise from publicity that has been given to the number of persons in the service. I had correspondence with the previous president of the treasury board and he knows I am far from satisfied with the approach that is being taken to establish the level of efficiency in the various departments. I intend to maintain communication with the new President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) to follow closely the progress of the studies under way. Perhaps I should get off on the right foot by saying how pleased I am about the appointment of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice to this important post, and despite the timing I do make my comment most sincerely.

Last evening I had the pleasure to visit the newly redecorated Victoria Memorial Museum. I certainly recommend this display to all visitors to the capital city. This museum building was used by parliament after the great fire that destroyed our previous chambers. It was also in this building that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was elected from Soulanges county in my constituency, suffered a stroke.

In the few minutes remaining to me I would like to refer to the Senate. I am convinced of the need for a second review of all legislation. In the previous parliament there was, and probably there will always continue to be, an objection when the Senate returned a bill which had been passed by this House. Heated debate and emotional effect make a second look extremely important. However, to be fully effective and to achieve maximum efficiency, the manner of the appointment and the term of office of Senators must be reviewed. I am introducing a private member's bill that would vacate the seat of a Senator at the time of a general election, which would effectively limit the term of appointment to between 10 and 15 years.

I would also like to see a system introduced whereby the leaders of recognized parties would be consulted after a general election in provinces where Senate vacancies were created. These parties would have to obtain 50 per cent or more of the votes cast for the party with the greatest number of votes in that province. Such a system should heavily favour the elected government, but would also ensure reasonable representation from other parties.

I listened attentively when the Speech from the Throne was read, and although much of it is by necessity repetitious of the previous Speech from the Throne, I am most pleased with its content. Add to that the listing of the bills that are to be presented to this session of parliament and it will be readily understood why I look forward with keen interest and enthusiasm to the weeks and months that lie ahead.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke for the first time in the twenty-ninth parliament I addressed my words to the youth of Canada. I do so again because I want to repeat my plea to them to have faith in the political and parliamentary process of our country. I want them to participate in the continued development of our country and to help make our society more human in an age when the computer threatens to submerge the individual. We are not at the end, but only at the beginning of a new century of development in Canada.

As we begin our work in this parliament, I wish to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on election to your high office. Your task is more difficult than the public may know. I wish you well and pledge my co-operation. I am delighted to see the table officers back in their accustomed positions. They perform invaluable work in this chamber.

It is a privilege for me to come here to represent again the people of Edmonton-Strathcona. We are an integral part of the vibrant city of Edmonton whose charms, business development and social and cultural services have been captured in a new, handsome booklet, "Edmonton", published by the Chamber of Commerce. Among the developments within Edmonton-Strathcona are three of current significance to the federal government. First, the old Strathcona Heritage conservation area, a fascinating project aided by Heritage Canada, which will both preserve and develop the core of our community; second, Fort Edmonton park, a very attractive reconstruction of the earliest history of Edmonton, well deserving of federal support; third, the relocation of the CPR Strathcona yards, facilitated by the railway legislation passed in the previous parliament.

I shall be working in the months ahead to advance these major projects which will have significant benefit for the people of Edmonton-Strathcona. But I want to place the interests of Strathcona within the larger area of the interests of Canada. It is essential for all Canadians to understand what is happening, not only in our own country but throughout the world. No longer is it sufficient for us to come into parliament and confine our interests to the area between St. John's, Victoria, and Inuvik. The whole world has become a community, and while it is true that we legislate only for Canada, it would be tragic if we failed to respond to the crisis of humanity that now dominates world concern.

The government's throne speech is not oblivious to this point. We read the following words in the speech:

> Canada is contributing to international measures to reduce the unjust and potentially dangerous gap between the rich and the poor. This will involve us not only in increasing the flow of financial assistance to developing countries but in re-examining other policies which affect our economic relations with the third world.

This paragraph, inadequate as it is, prevents the throne speech from being a total disaster in the area of international relations. The complacent tone of the throne speech betrays a lack of concern—it can hardly be ignorance—for the true state of the world today. The Secretary General of the United Nations, Mr. Kurt Waldheim, is warning us that we are in a "global emergency". Our times are characterized by an interlocking set of problems on a scale never seen before: mass poverty, food shortages, an energy-cost crisis, a continuing oppressive burden of military expenditure, inflation exacerbated by world monetary instability, and the prospect before us of a doubling of world population by the turn of the century.

These new problems are not simply extensions of old ones. As Maurice Strong, the distinguished Canadian who directs the United Nations' environment program, says, "they are of a wholly new character and require new perceptions and new kinds of responses." Here I welcome the appointment of the new Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) because he has revealed in the past sensitivity to the economic and social breakdowns that are a fall-out of technological excess. In a far-sighted speech to the University of North Carolina in 1971, the minister said:

> We begin to see that public problems bedevilling us are rooted in our inadequate world view and impoverished social ethic . . . Once man—the human person in community with others—is given first place in our perception, we begin to reassess economic systems and political ideologies in this light. We try to think through how systems can be changed to fit and serve people, not the other way round.

When to this philosophy is added the power to make Canada's foreign policy, I see a sign of hope despite the throne speech. When he was in New York for his first United Nations speech, the minister gave a press interview in which he said:

> We will seek out new approaches in an effort to reduce economic disparities in the world. I will have the department looking for new and imaginative developments in this field.

Mr. Speaker, in encouraging the minister to develop a more active Canadian policy "to reduce economic disparities", I want to tell him the answers are at hand. There is no need to grope in the dark. The global problems that have produced a suffering humanity in the developing nations have been analysed by the international experts. The United Nations has told us what must be done. What is required is strong political leadership by Canada and the other developed countries—a leadership that recognizes the moral, economic and social responsibilities of our technological power.

I want to propose two specific steps to help Canada more adequately to meet our responsibilities: first, recognize the new international economic order advocated by the United Nations; second, develop a comprehensive national population policy. These two steps go together. Let me explain. In the spring of 1974, the sixth special session of the United Nations General Assembly, dealing with the distribution of raw resources, pointed out that the bulk of the profit from the whole vast expansion of trade and wealth in two decades had, to an overwhelming degree, ended up in the pockets of the rich. The "trickle down" theory, by which the poor are supposed to be better off when the rich get richer, has not worked even in the context of the most rapid economic expansion in human history.

As the outstanding economist-environmentalist Barbara Ward puts it, the world economic system is proving unable to deal with two fundamental disruptions. She said:

> On the side of demand, it does not enfranchise the mass of the people. On the side of supply, it may not be able to mobilize sufficient resources at a tolerable environmental cost in order to check inflation and preserve the biosphere.

World debate is sharpening on what are called the two limits: the limit of endurance of human beings deprived of the essentials of life, and the limit of the planet's endurance of the rising claims made upon it. The way out of this dilemma is the systematic acceptance of distributive justice. This, of course, has long been talked about by a small minority of people within politics, religion and the social sciences.

Now the gravity of events has propelled the United Nations to take concrete steps to obtain it. The most significant of these is the General Assembly's adoption of the new international economic order. The new order is needed because the poor nations are falling farther behind in the development struggle. They are caught in the present crisis which is itself the outcome of all the problems that have accumulated over the years in the field of trade, in monetary reform, world-wide inflation and inadequate financial assistance for development. The new order thus attempts to resolve these outstanding problems through "a fundamental restructuring of the world economic system."

The capacity of the developing countries to produce and earn more must be expanded. Expanded emergency assistance and forgiveness of outstanding debts on the part of the developed countries are initial moves. This would prepare the way for structural changes in international relationships that would include such efforts as these—now I am going to make a very brief digest of what is proposed by what I call "international order"—first, to evolve a just and equitable relationship between the price of raw materials, primary commodities and manufactured goods exported and imported by developing countries; in other words, to work for a link between the prices of exports of developing countries and the prices of their imports from developed countries.

[Mr. Roche.]

Second, to reverse the continued trend of stagnation or decline in the real price of several commodities exported by developing countries—for example, cocoa from Ghana—despite a general rise in commodity prices, resulting in a decline in the export earnings of the developing countries. Third, to ensure that developing countries can import the necessary quantities of food without undue strain on their foreign exchange resources and balance of payments, to ensure essential imports, including fertilizers, from developed countries on favourable terms. Fourth, to improve access to markets in developed countries through the progressive removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers and of restrictive business practices.

Fifth, to increase participation by developing countries in the decision-making process of world monetary organizations, so that the international financing of development can be speeded up. Sixth, to formulate an international code of conduct for the transfer of technology corresponding to needs and conditions in developing countries. Seventh, to regulate the activities of multinational corporations so that they conform to national development plans in host countries, to prevent their collaboration with racist regimes and colonial administrations.

These and other steps are regarded by the United Nations as necessary for the establishment of a new system of international economic relations based on equity, sovereign equality and interdependence of the interests of developed and developing countries. In short, the new order provides an instrument for a world-wide partnership for economic and social development. There is a long way, however, between the United Nations advocating a new international economic order and its acceptance by the developed countries. There is no hint about this in the Speech from the Throne.

At the World Population Conference in Bucharest, Canada carefully avoided even mentioning the new order, even though many nations called for the World Population Plan of Action to be constructed within the framework of the new order. For example, Finland stated unequivocally that it supported the new order as "a prerequisite for the realization of the Plan of Action." This brings us to the need for a comprehensive national population policy, which in turn requires an understanding of the world population problem. The problem has a double thrust: rapidly expanding numbers of people in the developing regions of the world, and the high standard of living in the developed regions.

It took from mankind's first evolution until about 1800 to reach the one billion mark. We reached two billion in about 1928, and three billion in 1961, with four billion expected next year. Thus, the intervals for accommodating an additional billion human beings have fallen from 128, to 33, to 14 years. The time span continues to shrink. Demographers can now say with certainty that there will be seven billion people by the year 2000—nearly double the amount today. In 1972, world population increased by 71 million, the difference between 120 million births and 49 million deaths.

Medical and health advances have cut mortality rates at both ends of life; more babies survive and people live longer. Nearly half the population of the world is under the age of 15. There are now twice as many potential mothers alive as a generation ago. Even with declining fertility rates, world population will continue to climb and not level off until well into the next century at the earliest.

It may not sound serious when we state that world population is growing at an average of 2 per cent a year, but it is the cumulative effect and uneven distribution of this growth that makes it extremely serious. Most of this increase is taking place in the developing world, which already contains two-thirds of humanity. In many countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America are found millions upon millions of people who exist in poverty-stricken conditions.

Our understanding of the population problem is incomplete if we do not grasp the fact that the one-third of humanity in the developed nations consumes more than 60 per cent of the earth's wealth and resources. A baby born in Canada, where the population problem is not visible, will grow up consuming 50 times the resources and energy that a baby in the heavily populated developing regions will consume. This implies that the developed world is responsible for a much greater per capita environmental impact than the less developed nations, which naturally view this situation as exploitative.

Therefore, the problem in the third world is not population as such. Rather, the problem is extreme poverty perpetuated by the control which the developed world exercises over the bulk of the earth's wealth and resources. In taking for granted ever higher standards of living, which put such strain on the resource and environment capacities of the planet, the minority of rich get richer at the expense of the multiplying poor. The World Population Conference emphasized that large populations are not the cause of underdevelopment but are the result of underdevelopment. The population problem, therefore, concerns not just members but the quality and dignity of all human life.

Family planning programs alone will not solve the problem because, as we have seen, the problem is bigger than the number of births taking place. India and many other developing countries are telling the world that since poverty is the main cause of the massive increase in population, poverty must be eradicated. Then will follow a sharp decline in the rate of population growth. In the development countries, population stability has followed economic development. Family planning, when pushed by the west, can easily be construed by the third world as a device to salve our consciences without adopting structural reforms of world economic and social systems. As so many countries told the World Population Conference that family planning was not a magic panacea, the World Population Plan of Action was rewritten to put a heavy emphasis on "rapid socio-economic development" rather than family planning as the route to population stability.

On economic and social policies, the plan of action states that fertility rates have declined relatively slowly in developing countries partly because of "the inertia of social structures and the insufficiency of economic progress." Development efforts should be aided by the entire international community, and "attention must be directed to the just distribution of resources and to the minimization of wasteful aspects of their use throughout the world." Implementation of international strategies "should lead to a reduction in the widening gap in levels of living between developed and developing countries and would be conducive to a reduction in population growth rates particularly in countries where such rates are high."

The plan also proposes "more rational utilization of natural resources, without excess, so that some are not deprived of what others waste." Other recommendations call for high priority efforts to improve food production and develop new food sources, and international co-operation to ensure provision of fertilizers and energy.

The answer, then, to what constitutes a global population policy is indeed an involved one, reflecting the complexity of the problem. The United Nations' answer gives the highest priority to the protection of those already born. Implementing such a global policy—before it is too late—will challenge the ingenuity and moral strength of man as never before. In a world preoccupied with increasing worries about today, it is not easy to mobilize public opinion to support population policies the effects of which can only be seen over very long periods. That is why the attention of the people within developed countries must be immediately obtained, to get on with the job.

Because of our international reputation, technological capacity and wealth, Canada is in a unique position to give the leadership for which mankind is crying out. As Canadians begin to comprehend the full dimensions of the population iceberg, the help of non-governmental organizations will be especially valuable in not only transmitting ideas to the government but in developing public opinion.

Shortly before Bucharest, the Canadian Council on International Co-Operation brought together 280 representatives of 40 major non-governmental organizations who proposed an outline of a national population policy for Canada. The thrust of the recommendations made to the Canadian government was to be responsive to the social and economic needs of the world population in meeting our global responsibilities. The group set down some principles that I consider to be a firm basis on which to build a policy. I shall list just four. First, as a wealthy nation, Canada should set the example in reducing the growth rate of consumption of resources, increase our food production, particularly of plant proteins, and press for the development of fair global distribution systems for food products and natural resources. Second, administer a clearly stated immigration policy fair to all prospective immigrants, and stop promoting the brain drain of developing countries. Third, improve family life education and family planning services while recognizing that the widespread and growing use of abortion is the antithesis of the concept of family planning and reflects a lowering of respect for the value of human life. Fourth, give higher government priority to the social and economic development of the poor countries by more equitable trade, monetary and capital investment arrangements.

The recognition of the new international economic order and the development of a comprehensive national population policy are urgent steps to take if Canada is to meet the desire of the new Secretary of State for External Affairs to "reduce economic disparities in the world." It is time to replace band-aids with structural solutions. The United Nations World Food Conference in Rome, in November, is the place to demonstrate this new approach. Emergency food aid by Canada is necessary, but it will not be enough. The food problem does not stand alone. Measures to resolve famine must be situated within a total strategy of development. I appeal to the new minister, on behalf of those millions who see in Canada a sign of hope, to give this new leadership.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my first reaction in looking at the House of Commons today is to see a combination of the old church and the new church. I see the old church in terms of the stained glass windows, and the new church in terms of the many empty pews that are evident.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogan: I think the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) is a really good preacher. We must get to know one another better. I think the members of the House, regardless of political persuasions, would want to wish my predecessor, Donald MacInnis, the best of health and success in his retirement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogan: As a member of a social democratic party, I would be remiss if I did not mention, with much respect, that great Canadian who represented the old Cape Breton South constituency as a CCF'er for many years, Mr. Clarie Gillis.

In listening to, reading over and considering the contents of the Speech from the Throne, I came up with the following observations for the consideration of the House. I first want to speak on the international financial crisis as it pertains to Canadian leadership. I find the throne speech, even given its traditional time limits, very deficient in not stressing for us members of the Commons and for all the Canadian people the serious international financial crisis which is presently upon us. It is true that there is a line in the speech about balance of payments problems and the rapid accumulation of large currency reserves by a few countries, but that reference scarcely brings out the urgency of the situation.

The combined monetary reserves of the importing countries at the end of 1973 aggregated less than $150 billion. An increased cost of oil by the OPEC countries suggested for January 1, based on inflation on their imported goods at that time, could lead to losses of reserves in the realm of $7 billion a month. This haemorrhage of reserves at that rate could quickly lead to an anaemic and mortally wounded international economy.

Because of the extremely serious implication of this still evolving confrontation between the oil producing and oil consuming nations, it seems that Canada as an important middle power should have long ago shown leadership by initiating attempts to get these countries together. If we had tried to play a role in creating a conciliatory environment, it might have avoided the harsh and threatening words exchanged by Mr. Kissinger, President Ford and some of the Arab leaders only last week on this issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogan: As a new member, I may be revealing an innocent naiveté, but it surely looks as if Canada missed a chance to play a limited but crucial conciliatory role on this matter of international oil producers versus consumers confrontation, fully more important to the world in the long run than helping to set up a Cyprus peace force. Even at home we have witnessed the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in a worth while defence of the need of the agricultural producers receiving a just price, and the necessity of marketing boards helping them do this, going too far and attempting to exclude consumer representation from any producer marketing boards, and thus indirectly promoting an increasing conflict between producers and consumers. Thus, as I see it, we as a nation have failed to help bring together the oil producers and consumers at an international level, and at the national and domestic level there has been a tendency to at least indirectly encourage a confrontation between farmer-producers and Canadian consumers.

Surely we have enough conflicts in our society between races, as we witnessed recently outside these walls, as well as linguistic, regional and labour-management conflicts and we do not need a minister of the Crown, with chauvinistic departmentalism, indirectly encouraging, even if inadvertently, another one. This type of talking and thinking seems even more inexcusable when we realize that, given increasing world-wide demands for food because of growing population and rising expectations, coupled with decreasing, scarce food supplies, the situation likely will require that this government will need nation-wide support in a serious attempt to revamp and overhaul much of our present agricultural policy. That is, of course, if Canada is to play an important role, not only in satisfying our own national needs but the needs of the developing countries for at least the next 25 years. I say this recognizing, of course, that in the longer run these countries will have to gradually learn to feed themselves.

I am confident that the world has the capacity to increase food production more rapidly than the growth of population, as it has in the past two decades. I am, of course, not an agricultural economist, but this view is expressed in the preliminary assessment of the world food situation, present and future, which was prepared for the World Food Conference to be held in Rome in November. Canada ought to have, for humanitarian reasons as well as for reasons of national interest, an increasingly larger stake in helping, through its food policy and other general trade and aid policy, the forgotten billions of human beings who live in the third world.

In mentioning the need for international aid, many hon. members probably saw the statement by President Perez of Venezuela in response to President Ford's recent plea for lower oil prices. In an open letter to President Ford which appeared in the New York Times last week, the Venezuelan president reminded him, among other things, that the developed countries had some years ago made a commitment to give at least 1 per cent of their gross national product in aid to the developing countries. He pointed out to the United States president that this had still not been done. We in Canada, who are among the fat cats of this world, should consider it shameful that as of 1974 we have not fulfilled this obligation. Let us hope the present government, now that it has a progressive left wing Cape Bretoner as head of the external affairs department, will fulfil this promise during the life of the thirtieth parliament. It is, surely, the least Canada can be expected to do.

During the election, government spokesmen argued that inflation was largely an imported phenomenon and that little could be done about it except such things as indexing income taxes and pensions so as to relieve some of the worst effects. To judge from the Speech from the Throne, having been given a decisive mandate to govern, hon. members on the treasury benches seem so uncertain about what to do that they are talking about meeting all kinds of groups in Canadian society to find out from them what action the government should take. This suggests a series of mini summits which would be a pale imitation of the recent international summit meeting in which the President of the United States took part. In my opinion, it also suggests an abdication of the role of leadership which the party opposite has just been given.

Their spokesmen argued successfully before the electorate that they indeed possessed the capacity for decisive leadership. Let them now show it and govern this country and fulfil their mandate. We heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the campaign proclaim that as well as seeking votes he was exercising his notion of participatory democracy in order to set the stage for action in the next parliament. Mr. Speaker, the next parliament is here. Hon. members and the Canadian people are asking for action, not for more words and public relations meetings without action.

We are all interested in that part of the Speech from the Throne which says the government is "conscious of the need for restraint". There seems to be an implication here that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will be using fiscal restraint when he hands down the budget. The Speech from the Throne goes on to say that the government "does not intend to deliberately generate slack in the economy to combat inflation".

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians have heard this song before. My mind goes back at once to 1969 and 1970. Surely the government has learned this lesson. It would be the poor, the working poor, the Atlantic region in general and parts of it in particular, that would bear a crushing and uneven burden if this path were again followed. I mention in particular a good deal of Newfoundland, which is surely due for some special and positive consideration on the twenty-fifth anniversary of its entry into confederation, as well as particular areas in New Brunswick.

With this Liberal policy of 1969-70 came the usual increase of unemployment in the Atlantic region which has become the earmark of our place in the Canadian confederation. In Cape Breton, for example, that policy helped to bring the unemployment figure to some 20 per cent, as reported by the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion in 1973. In this connection I want to remind the government that in concocting the formula for this winter's LIP program, the office of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) reported a figure of 16.6 per cent for unemployment in my constituency of Cape Breton-East Richmond, a 15.5 per cent figure for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, and a 15.3 per cent figure for Cape Breton-Highlands-Canso.

These were last winter's figures, and it would take more than "lip" service and LIP grants to prevent them rising to 20 per cent or even 25 per cent if the government pursues a policy of tight money and fiscal restraint which would see national unemployment increase substantially from the present rate of 5.3 per cent, seasonally adjusted, to the 7.8 per cent forecast for the fourth quarter of 1975 by the independent researchers of the conference board. In terms of the current labour force, this will mean an increase from slightly more than one-half million unemployed at the present time to some 780,000 people unemployed. Expressed by way of annual averages, this will mean the highest unemployment experienced in Canada for many, many years and will amount to the highest percentage figure in 13 years. We all recognize the dilemma which the government presently faces, but when it comes down to choosing between inflation and the rate of unemployment suggested, my colleagues and I would always have to choose what we consider in these circumstances to be the lesser evil—inflation. Why? I repeat, it is because government policy, designed to create unemployment, has always in the past, even in the very recent past, fallen most brutally on those who are most helpless.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having to read extensively from notes, but this is my first speech in this House. We all entered kitchens and living-rooms across this country during the last election campaign and looked face to face at human beings who in this seemingly affluent Canada lack money on which to live in 1974. There are people in this nation making trips to the supermarkets to look for bones for soup, as many had to do in the depths of the depression, scrounging for the cheapest possible cuts of meat, whenever they can afford meat at all.

These women and men, many of them old, some of them working poor, many of them native people, go from aisle to aisle in stores and supermarkets hoping they will not meet any of their friends and thus reveal the desperateness of their situation. Moreover, in my riding—as many national reporters testified during the last campaign—the housing situation is, for some, desperate and almost beyond crisis proportions.

As my time is drawing to a close, Mr. Speaker, in this my maiden speech in the House of Commons, I would be less than honest if I did not pay tribute to the hard working efforts of the Cape Breton Development Corporation to reverse an economic situation in that part of the world that almost seemed impossible as recently as eight years ago. The corporation, which was set up in 1967, for which I among others, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs, fought hard to bring about, seemed doomed to failure in the early years. In recent years, buoyed by the Arab oil-jacking policy that breathed new life into the coal industry, with some solid support from the federal government and hard headed planning and work by Devco leaders, we have found ourselves in the position of being able to express the hope that this depressed economy within the next ten years, with the same government support and enthusiastic leadership, can see a complete reversal of the despairing situation that has existed for the residents of industrial Cape Breton for practically 50 years.

If this is to be more than a hope, then a decision by the federal government to co-operate in an equity position with the government of Nova Scotia in establishing a new steel complex in the Cape Breton industrial area, as recommended recently by the site location experts of the Steel Company of Canada hired by DREE, is an absolute necessity. This unique experiment in a depressed area in an attempt at rehabilitation, initiated by the federal government, in my opinion depends for its sucess on the establishment of such a complex. Such a complex will mean stability of employment in the coal industry that will fairly quickly be almost paying its way again, so that eventually that area and the proud and courageous people who built it will be making a more positive contribution to the tax coffers of this nation. It is up to this government to make sure this experiment that was carried out, popularly called Devco, will not be allowed to die for lack of proper investment funds.

On a final note in connection with the coal industry, many members of this House have heard my predecessor make claims on behalf of coal miners who were pre-retired between 1969 and 1971 as part of the federal government's package to meet the crucial problem that then existed. These men, in receiving their pre-retirement benefits, had those benefits reduced to the extent of their unemployment insurance benefits in the year following their retirement. In 1971 the Cape Breton Development Corporation changed its policy and now unemployment insurance benefits are not considered part of the pre-retirement benefit.

The previous members who represented this constituency took the case of the coal miners who were pre-retired between 1969 and 1971 to the courts against the Cape Breton Development Corporation. They lost the decision in the courts. Before that happened, the chief officer of the Cape Breton Development Corporation had offered to arbitrate with the pre-retirement committee representing these men. This offer was refused.

I note that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) is not in the House this afternoon. I hope some of his confrères will bring my comments to his attention. I plead with him to make funds available to the Cape Breton Development Corporation so that these miners who were pre-retired between 1969 and 1971 can receive a benefit to which I believe, while not being a lawyer, they are not legally entitled, but to which I believe they are morally entitled. I make the case for them in terms of morality rather than legality. I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to call a meeting with the head of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, Mr. Kent, and myself in order that we might rectify this situation as soon as humanly possible, and give these men their moral due.

The minister and members of the committee on regional development went on record in the last session in support of these men, and I ask now that this verbal support be translated into action in terms of payment to them that is, while not legally due on the part of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, morally due. God knows they need it and would appreciate it, as I found out during the last election campaign.

In part of my constituency there lives a hardy breed of men who, like other maritimers, make their living from the sea by fishing. The east coast fisheries are in serious straits, especially the inshore fishery. I promise to do my best to co-operate with the new minister of fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) and maritime representatives from other fishing areas to help devise a short and a long-term policy for the maintenance and rebuilding of this industry, to prepare for a world, as we have previously noted, that is facing an increasing deficiency in food, especially in high-protein food such as fish. The fishermen in my area, from Glace Bay to Louisbourg through Morien, Main-a-Dieu, l'Ardoise and Bateson, are anxious to have the new minister meet with them to dialogue about their needs. During this session of the House we will be attempting to bring their pressing needs to his attention.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, may I suggest that the throne speech, as the expression of the government's supposed legislative program in brief outline, leaves a lot to be desired. It does not appear to represent an adequate response to the serious international and national problems that face our nation at this time. On a more positive note, may I express the wish, in this my first speech in the House of Commons, that this thirtieth Canadian parliament, which will likely last for four years, may go down in the history of this country as the parliament that, despite grave national and international problems, did most for the poor of this country, for the underdeveloped areas of this nation and especially for the needy countries in the world.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will allow me to congratulate you upon the election to your high position. Having known you as long as I have, I am sure you will bring honour to that position. I should also like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne for their very excellent contributions.

Much has been said of CEMA and marketing boards in general. Let me be the first to say that I am, and always will be as long as I am a member of this House and a farmer, a strong supporter of national marketing boards. I suggest that they very closely represent the true concept of confederation, perhaps more than anything anyone else has attempted in this nation. These marketing boards are composed of producers all across this great land who work together not only for their own good but for the good of society. I say that regardless of what anyone has suggested.

We all realize that in our confederation which was created a little over 100 years ago there are still some problems. The Canadian Egg Marketing Agency has been in existence a little over one year and one might expect that there would still be problems. It is for this reason that I am pleased to note there will be public hearings by a parliamentary committee in order to determine the real facts in respect of what CEMA has been attempting, along with the real facts about what it and others have done.

Yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) referred to me as a shooting star. I have heard the Leader of the Opposition referred to as a model of the early experimental space ship called "Stasis," a Greek word meaning one who stands still. It was a rocket space ship which did not go anywhere. This Minister of Agriculture wishes to make clear from the start several points about his own personal life, because many things have been stated recently in the press. I can understand the feeling of members of the press about this character because many of them blame him for proving them so wrong on July 8.

It has been stated that I am a corporate farmer. I am not. I have only 216 acres of mortgaged land, with buildings which need paint. Some people have said that I am a chicken farmer. I have never in my life raised a chicken on my farm. They say I am a beef farmer. I am not a beef farmer. Never in 20 years have I raised beef cattle. They say I am a rich man. I want to say I have a richness that cannot be deposited in the bank: the bank will not accept it as collateral. It is a richness which I know is enjoyed by some other members of this House. It is the richness of the knowledge of having worked for people in an elected position. I am 50 years of age, but I have worked in this way for 29 years. This has included work in respect of co-ops, credit unions, farm organizations, municipal bodies, and so on. I have enjoyed every bit of it. I have the richness of knowing that I have done and can do something for my fellow man. This is a richness that no one can take away from me.

Mr. Alexander: This sounds like your maiden speech.

Mr. Whelan: I just want to put the facts straight, since certain articles have been written about me. I want to make clear that I have been on my own since I was six years of age. I was one of nine children, raised on the great sum of $45 a month called mother's allowance, during the dirty thirties when there was no medicare or anything of that nature. So when anyone says—and some have been guilty of this—that this farmer, this member of parliament, this minister, does not know what hard times are, he is not being factual. Sometimes I find it difficult to understand what people write about the actions of the government and the actions of this speaker. This reminds me of an editorial which appeared in the Financial Times of August 5. The article contained these words:

> It is time that federal farm policy took account of the fact that this is one of the most urbanized countries in the world. At the last census, 76 out of every 100 Canadians lived in cities and the farm population had dropped to 6.6 per cent from 9.5 per cent five years earlier.

If that were said about some other minority group in Canada, or some racial group, we would have every civil liberties group fighting for them. I take it from that article that people who produce the very fruit of life are nothing more than mere peasants—but not a sound is made. I am placing this on the record because these are the things that have been said. Everyone realizes that what I am saying is true. People would not dare say these things about some other minority group.

We hear talk about the waste of food. This was mentioned by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan). I do not think any human wishes to see food wasted because this is deplorable whether it be by flood, by hail, by drought, by disease, by snow or by man. Farmers are food producers and creators of things, and they find this deplorable. I wish to make sure it is fully understood that I feel it is just as deplorable to throw away millions of tons of food every year in Canada.

In the city of Toronto there is a train that hauls away the food every so many days. It is taken to the garbage dump. In one week the city of Toronto throws away more food than has been thrown away in the form of eggs in a year. They feel they have the right to throw it away. A garbageman came to my office and said that he had something in common with me. He told me that I produce the food and haul it to the people, and he hauls it away from the people to the garbage dump.

It is estimated that the food that is thrown away in some of our large metropolitan areas—any of the large cities of our nation—would feed a city of the same population in the have-not world. Each day it is thrown away—and people could live on that little food in some cities. Some of us who have visited other countries in the world such as India and South America surely realize that what I say is true. I visited Lima, Peru in South America, several years ago: there were 500,000 people outside that city with no social services; they had nothing going for them. The companies which owned the fishmeal plants in that area were exporting the fishmeal and depositing the money at that time either in the United States, in Geneva or in some other country, rather than in Peru. The President of Peru made a strong appeal that we assist him in finding protein for his people.

We would find the same type of situation in India or in some other countries. Some people try to create the impression that the Minister of Agriculture, the farm population or the egg producers are happy that food has gone to waste. I suggest it is wrong to attempt to create such an impression. While we are talking about protein, and so on, I may say that according to the letters I receive and the things people say, they would seem to be under a misapprehension about what can be done with a certain quantity of eggs or with any product in the world in the way of food aid. Let us take dry whole eggs. An amount of $1 million will buy enough for a month for 127,000 children. Let us take wheat. An amount of $1 million will buy enough protein for 518,000 children for a month.

In respect of skim milk powder, $1 million will buy enough for nearly 300,000 children for a month. It is not as easy a matter as some people try to suggest when they say that this product could be put into food aid. The people who supply food aid buy it where their dollar will go the furthest. Although egg powder has a very high protein content, it is one of the most expensive types of product that you can use. It is packed in five-pound tin cans, with nitrogen, and sealed. If the can is pierced, the product deteriorates quite rapidly. You can see the difference in price between the milk powder, which costs 55 cents a pound, and egg powder which is $1.75 a pound. Skim milk powder is shipped in 50-pound bags and the only time you have to worry about it is in times of high humidity, because it has a tendency to sweat inside the bag.

The purpose of our program is to assist other countries to become more productive. If anyone thinks that those countries want us to give food away, let me tell them that this is not so. You can bet your bottom dollar that it is not so. They themselves want to be sure that their people become more productive. Our product is sent to their country at a reasonable price; it is not just thrown away. It is only given away in cases of disaster. Our food aid program is excellent.

We show other countries how to produce their food, we educate them, and so on. Our programs are second to none in the world, mainly because of the productiveness of our farmers. That is why we have been able to play such a large part in providing food aid in the world. Let no one tell Canada, a small country of less than 23 million people, that we have to take a back seat to anyone. The only country which surpasses us in direct food aid is the United States of America.

Shortly we will be announcing some new appointments to the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: These will include a consumer representative, a labour-oriented representative, and a businessman. We want people of high integrity, of fairness and understanding. I have no fear of persons of this calibre on this board because I am sure they will recognize what we are trying to do. I do not care who we have on this board, because any reasonable person will understand our aim and aid the competent members who are now on the board. This will make the operation of the National Farm Products Marketing Council better than it has been. Let me point out that it is a very new board; it was established only a few short months before I became Minister of Agriculture. I hope it will be recognized that we in agriculture have taken the lead and that we may expect representatives of the agricultural community to be appointed as members of other boards and agencies, such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Canadian Transport Commission, the CNR and Air Canada.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Whelan: This is nothing new to agriculture in Canada. We have accepted scientific change and automation to a greater extent than any other segment of our society. No other segment of society has accepted it as well as we have. That is why so few of us in agriculture produce so much. When I, as Minister of Agriculture, say that I am proud of Canadian farmers, I mean that. We are the envy of nearly every other nation.

[Mr. Whelan.]

The minister of food production in China pointed out to me how lucky we Canadians are, being a nation of 23 million producing so much food that we can sell to China, a nation of 800 million people. He remarked to me that in our country only about 6¼ per cent of our population is occupied in food production, whereas in China nearly 80 per cent of their population of 800 million is in food production. He told me that our country is the most amazing country and our farmers a most amazing group of people. I agree with him; they are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: For the past few weeks the news media have been full of editorials, stories and opinion columns about egg marketing. Many of the stories have been accurate but only a few of them have been complete and have told the whole story. Many of them are based on partial information and recommend action that would put our egg industry back in a state of total confusion and chaos. This is one of the prime reasons I believe there should be a full and complete investigation of the egg marketing situation, which is something I have said both inside and outside the House. I want all the facts to come out and all the truth to be told, not just bits and pieces here and there. The consumers of Canada want to know the full truth, and so do the egg producers. I have full confidence in the ability of members of the House to investigate the facts and to conduct a fair and complete inquiry.

I have said that administrative mistakes have been made by CEMA. That should surprise no one, because the agency itself has admitted that mistakes have been made. However, some other things have been said that warrant correction. I should like to answer some direct criticisms from Canadians who have written to me. The federal government has not made loans to CEMA, as was stated in many reports. Many news reports to that effect are false. There have been no subsidies and no grants other than the $100,000 provided as a start-up for any new national marketing agency, and there have been no hidden financial arrangements between the federal government and CEMA. The federal government is not managing CEMA; CEMA has managed on its own, just as has any other company set up under federal legislation.

CEMA has gained certain rights under that legislation. It must also meet certain obligations and carry out certain duties. They are clearly spelled out in the national marketing plan recommended to the federal government only after the National Farm Products Marketing Council held full and complete public hearings across the nation, and only after the council was able to satisfy itself and the federal government that a clear majority of producers favoured that plan. CEMA has admitted mistakes and has taken action to make sure that those mistakes are not repeated. As Minister of Agriculture, I was just as upset by the loss of eggs as anyone else, but I am willing to give CEMA a chance to prove itself, always keeping in mind that the agency must stay within the terms of their plan as set down in the law.

Statements have been made that eggs could be bought much cheaper in Canada if we could follow what is done in the United States. We can look at the prices between January and September 10th. In January of 1974, eggs in

New York were $1.01.6 and in Toronto they were 84.6 cents. In February they were $1.00.3 in New York, and 85.3 cents in Toronto. In March they were 90.8 cents in New York, and 88 cents in Toronto. In April they were 80 cents in New York, and 84.8 cents in Toronto. In May they were 66.3 cents in New York, and 77.7 cents in Toronto. In June they were 66 cents in New York, and 81 cents in Toronto. In July they were 71 cents in New York, and 79.1 cents in Toronto. In August they were 79.4 cents in New York, and 78.7 cents in Toronto; and in September they were 85 cents to 89 cents in New York, and 80 cents to 81 cents in Toronto.

These figures show that more stability was provided to egg marketing in the months when the agency has been in operation than ever before. History will show that the buying power of people in Canada for eggs may have been higher in 1971, when farmers went broke because they were selling eggs below the cost of production.

How could some of the mistakes made by CEMA have been prevented? Steps are being taken now to ensure that these mistakes are not repeated. There are people who are not satisfied with investigating the mistakes and errors of CEMA. Instead, they want to destroy the concept of the orderly production and marketing of farm products. Some of the things that have seen said about what I should do, and CEMA should do, put me in mind of the Texas hanging judge called Judge Roy Bean. Do you remember what he used to say, Mr. Speaker? He said, "We are going to give you a fair trial and then hang you". Some of the critics of CEMA do not want to go even that far. That is why I am so anxious for a public hearing to be held because I honestly feel, on the information I have, that the public will be satisfied when they know the true facts.

I want to remind people that egg producers have been trying since the 1930s to establish a national system of orderly production and marketing. I would remind them that the ten ministers of agriculture unanimously urged the federal government to set up national marketing agencies. Ontario even had a judicial inquiry under Judge Ross, who said he never saw anything so chaotic or unfair in his life and recommended that it be brought to order.

I would remind them that every political party in Canada, federal and provincial, has supported the concept of orderly production and marketing. I would remind them of the situation that existed before the national marketing agency for eggs was established, and I would add that the same forces exist today. A collapse of the national marketing agency for eggs would probably lead immediately to cut-throat competition among provincial marketing boards for their own provincial markets plus a share of the market in other provinces.

I would remind the hon. members of this House of the situation that exists today in the United States, where there is no form of orderly production and marketing for eggs and poultry products. Broiler producers are going through the most drastic cutback in production in American history right now. Hatcheries have cut egg placement for broilers by 12 per cent, which means that production will be cut back by 23 million pounds per week.

Bankruptcies are hitting the egg and broiler producers across the United States. According to George Watts, president of the National Broiler Council in the United States, the situation is a catastrophe. Three major companies have already closed part of their plants because they do not have the money to keep operating. Mr. Ed Covell, Jr., of Easton, Maryland, has cut back his production by 15 per cent. That cutback amounts to a million birds. Another major outfit in Maryland has gone broke. Otis Esham, the owner, says it happened so fast he is not sure what went wrong.

That is the kind of choice we have here in Canada: we have the choice of an open market, without any form of orderly production and marketing. That choice would mean that egg prices, broiler prices and turkey prices would go right out of the roof in a few months' time. It would mean that the economy would have to pick up the bills for the bankruptcies. It would mean that eventually the economy would have to pay the price to build brand new barns and brand new farms to replace the ones that end up in bankruptcy today. And who, I ask you, would benefit from that type of chaos? Nobody. Certainly not the farmers. Certainly not the consumers. Certainly not the economy of the country. That is why so much effort has gone into setting up a national marketing plan for eggs and turkeys and broilers here in Canada. And that is why a properly run marketing plan can, and should, benefit everyone in our economy, not just the producer and not just the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, I have a document here which was prepared by a very efficient person in my department before I became minister. It has been mailed to every hon. member, and I suggest they read it because it tells what a marketing board is supposed to do and explains it in a very good fashion. It was prepared by a Mr. Thomas A. Bennett. The document was mailed on Friday or Monday. I believe our efforts today should not be directed toward weakening or destroying national marketing agencies and plans, but toward improving their operations, and I am confident that the members of this House will come to the same conclusion when they complete their inquiry into the egg industry.

Some of the critics of CEMA have said there should be no production controls. Others have said there should be no marketing controls. Some have said that producers should not try to recover their full costs of production from the marketplace. But these criticisms strike at the very heart and principle of an orderly production and marketing plan for the egg industry. Without some form of production control, without some form of marketing control or some method to achieve a return that will over the long term at least cover the costs of production, we simply cannot have orderly production and marketing.

History will show that over the years egg prices have been stable compared with other food products. Some critics have said CEMA amounts to a monopoly in the market. But what is their definition of a monopoly? I find it hard to believe that we can have a monopoly when it involves more than 15,000 producers. I find it hard to believe that we can have a monopoly that excludes control over imports, excludes production from tens of thousands of small flocks, and excludes control over alternative foods. That, my hon. colleagues, is less of a monopoly than any one of a hundred labour unions that exist in any part of Canada today. Look at the PCV licences given to trucking organizations, the licences given to radio stations and the other things that exist in our nation today which operate under federal and provincial legislation. Are we going to ask farmers to accept less freedom and fewer rights than we are willing to grant to other citizens in this country?

There are those who will argue that food is an essential item in our economy and that farmers cannot be given the same rights and freedoms as labour unions. As a former member of a labour union, I just do not understand that. But there are tens of thousands of unionized Canadian workers who are involved in the Canadian food system, and if they do not do their jobs they can disrupt our food supply every bit as much as production decisions made by our farmers; and their impact on our food economy can be much more abrupt and much more disruptive. The west coast grain handlers' strike and the Great Lakes shipping strike mean that billions and billions of pounds of food will never get to the starving people of the world. They will never catch up with deliveries, no matter what anyone says, especially as we are not far from the freeze-up of the Great Lakes.

I do not advocate an end to workers' rights to strike and to bargain for better wages and working conditions. But I do argue that it is irresponsible and unfair to grant rights and privileges to one group of society that we deny to other groups in our society and economy.

Canada's farmers are among the amost efficient, most productive and the hardest working people in our society. I think they deserve at least an even break to achieve a decent standard of living. That is what the movement to establish national marketing agencies for eggs, turkeys and broilers is all about. Yes, mistakes have been made. But what segment of society can claim that it has never made a mistake? What member of this House can claim he has never made a mistake? And some of the mistakes made have been far more costly to our economy than the errors of CEMA. What about oil spills, for example? Why should we demand that egg producers give up their right to control the production and marketing of their product?

I could be persuaded to really dig in my heels and fight every inch of the way to defend the egg producers' rights to run CEMA just the way that many other groups in our society have the right to run their own affairs. I have never suggested that farmers hold their products from the markets, Mr. Speaker. These people get into trouble because they are overproductive, and for no other reason. History shows that in 1971 they were getting 12 cents a dozen for their eggs at the grading station, but consumption did not go up in 1971. The then minister of agriculture paid $2,300,000 to farmers to kill hens in order to take them out of production because they could not find storage or markets or put them into aid programs.

However, I understand the importance consumers place on a continuing supply of top quality food at reasonable prices, so I have agreed to a full inquiry into the egg industry. Also, I have taken action that has limited the price producers can charge for eggs, particularly with respect to imports. But I do not intend to sell our egg industry down the river or to deny egg producers the fundamental and basic right to establish an orderly system of production and marketing for their commodity, if they want to exercise that right within the boundaries set out in the legislation approved by parliament.

Some people seem to be afraid that farmers will abuse their rights if they gain control over the production and marketing of their commodities. But let us look at the record for the egg industry. Egg prices in Canada averaged 84.6 cents a dozen at Toronto last January, while prices in New York were over $1.00 a dozen. Prices at Toronto averaged below New York prices for January, February, March, August and September. It is precisely because prices in the United States dropped in late spring and summer that they face the bankruptcies, production cuts and upcoming shortages which I mentioned earlier—no planning, no stability, nothing for their producers.

Egg producers have increased their productivity and efficiency much faster than society as a whole. As a result, the average worker in Canada today can buy 4.8 dozen eggs with one hour's pay, compared with 4.4 dozen in 1969, 3.4 dozen in 1966, 2.4 dozen in 1956 and 1.6 dozen in 1950. If the price of all other products had inflated by as little as the price of eggs, there would be no such thing as inflation in Canada today. Egg prices have remained low, mainly because egg producers have increased their productivity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. minister, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue only if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whelan: I thank hon. members of the House for their courtesy, and will try to finish as quickly as possible. The record for eggs during the existence of CEMA has been better than the over-all record of the total consumer price index or the index for all foods. The consumer price index rose from 139.8 in 1972 to 150.4 in 1973. The index for all foods went up from 141.4 in 1972 to 162 in 1973. But when we look at eggs, we see that the index in 1973 stood much lower, at 136.5. It was only 22.6 points higher than in 1966, and only 27.2 higher than in 1949.

Anyone who says that the high price of eggs is the real culprit in the food basket is not being factual. I challenge the critics of the orderly marketing of our eggs to point to any other sector of our economy which has been able to hold the line so well between 1949 and 1973. As I say, the line has been held precisely because egg producers have improved their productivity. They have introduced scientific ways of taking care of chickens. As a result, production has increased and mortality reduced to practically nil. Research in the field over the years has led to a fantastic increase in the production of this high-protein food. We have come to expect such productivity increases in agriculture. That is partly the reason so many farmers have been put out of business.

Let me turn now to the selected leaks from the Forbes report. Nobody can get that report. At least, I cannot get a copy of it. I asked for a copy and was told that the report will not be published until mid-October.

Mr. McGrath: I will send you a copy of it.

Mr. Whelan: You can't get a copy. The public cannot get a copy, but reporters working for the Financial Times and the Toronto Star got selected leaks. Those selected leaks add up to a straight smear job. The report allegedly says that higher food prices will not help the farmer. I wonder if the writers of such an alleged report believe that economists would be better off if their salaries went down. I wonder if they believe all Canadians would be better off if the return on their labour and investment went down. Try telling the farmers of Canada that they would be better off if the price of their produce went down. You know what the answer would be. It would be a dead halt to farming in Canada, with no more grain, no more beef, no more dairy products and no more fresh fruits and vegetables.

You hear people talking about the production of chickens and eggs in the same way as they talk about the production of other commodities. Well, chickens are not like other commodities. For example, look at a factory which makes television sets or cars. The people running it use computers and marketing specialists to judge demand. On the basis of the advice they are given, they produce so many cars, refrigerators or television sets. What happens if they make a mistake in forecasting? They turn the production-line off and put their men on unemployment insurance. In the case of eggs, if there is a mistake we all pay, because everybody pays for unemployment insurance. On the other hand, if the farmer loses he pays for his own loss. You can't turn a chicken off, like a machine. Has anyone ever tried? You just can't turn him off.

An hon. Member: No, you just can't turn off.

Mr. Whelan: The chicken, which if fed high protein food just cannot be turned off. I did not mean to refer to the male species of the chicken. You can only stop a chicken from laying by chopping off its head. That is the least costly method. Regardless of what is said in this so-called report just referred to, a copy of which I have not been able to get, in my part of the country a lot of egg producers run their operation as a family venture. Judging from what has been said, one would think such people have gone on unemployment insurance. Our farmers are growing older. The average age of farmers in this country is close to 60 years. There are more senior citizens in farming than in any other occupation. Do you think they stay in it for so long because there is so much money to be made? There is no pension available for them and they must keep on producing. Some people think a chicken is a machine. It is probably a much more efficient machine for turning grain into a high-protein food than one which any scientist could devise. A chicken produces one of the best foods in the world.

The writers of the report allegedly say that 80 per cent of our farmers should be shoved off their farms and put on the public dole. Since there is so much talk about how much farms should produce, perhaps we could look at the universities of Canada. Ten of our biggest universities are turning out nearly 50 per cent of all students. If we adopted the philosophy of efficiency as set out in the report, the inefficient, smaller universities would be shut down. Furthermore, carrying the comparison further, egg producers are not indentured as some professors are. Our egg farmers do the best job in the world in creating something the consumer needs. Should anyone cut their income? Try doing that to university professors who are indentured. They enjoy more security than members of this House.

The world needs Canadian farmers, Mr. Speaker. They are the best, the most efficient, the most productive farmers in the world, considering the climatic conditions they work under. This country needs good farmers a heck of a lot more than it needs half-baked economists or half-baked economic reports.

I believe some hon. members opposite know a fellow named Dalton Camp. A few weeks ago that gentleman wrote a column in the Toronto Star about the beef industry. I expect a few members opposite wished he had never written that column. Mr. Camp said that beef prices should have been forced down in this country. He wanted beef prices forced down at a time when producers were already losing $100 and more for every head sold to the meat packers. He wanted the federal government to brew a recipe of certain bankruptcy for every beef producer in this country. Why, Mr. Speaker? So that consumers could buy beef for a few cents a pound less for a few months. And what about the long term? Mr. Camp didn't mention that his policies would force beef prices right through the roof two or three years from now. He didn't mention the fact that thousands of Canadians who work in the beef industry as meat packers, truckers and butchers would be thrown out of work. He didn't mention that Canada would then have to depend totally on imports of beef supplies in the future and probably pay a lot of money for low quality meat.

He also did not mention, when alluding to the use of DES, that the Department of National Health and Welfare was against its use. If he had talked to officials of the department here in Ottawa, I am sure they would have told him that they were against its use. That department, and not the Department of Agriculture, wanted to ban the use of DES for the protection of human beings in Canada. The only country in the world which allows the use of this substance is the United States. He didn't say that in his column, but tried to intimate that the ban was a gimmick which we used to protect the cattlemen.

● (1700)

Mr. Camp implied that the Canadian Cattlemen's Association contributed money to the Liberal election campaign, but he did not bother to check his facts with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association or with the Liberal Party. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association set the record straight, but only after the damage had been done. In a letter to the editor of the Toronto Star, Charles Gracey of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association said that not one penny was contributed to any political party during the last election campaign. I wish Mr. Camp had used his connections within the Conservative Party to check his facts with a former president of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). I expect that the policies the federal government has implemented for the beef industry are closer to the policies of the hon. member for Medicine Hat than they are to the policies put forward by Mr. Camp.

Ministers of agriculture and ministers of consumer and corporate affairs have asked for an inquiry into the beef industry. I understand this will also be asked for by the first ministers of the four provinces concerned. We are taking a very hard look at an inquiry into the beef industry because there is utter chaos there at the present time. I receive many letters from beef producers setting out what they are receiving for cattle, how they are being bought, and many other things. They may not all be right, but they certainly cannot all be wrong. I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly on the action we intend to take in accordance with the request of these people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Hon. members who represent ridings where farmers and agriculture are important to the local economy know that this country needs to return farmers and agriculture to their proper place in our national society and economy. I wish to put the record straight. The riding I was re-elected to represent is 88 per cent urban. I am sure the members of the New Democratic Party realize this. That is why they threw all their weight behind the president of local 444 of the Chrysler union in an attempt to defeat me. I got the biggest urban vote ever. I said the same things to the people of that city as I am saying here. They realized what I said was right and better for the nation. That is not what the other candidate said. Some people who represent rural ridings should check to see what he did say. I am referring to representatives of the NDP. Those representing rural areas realize that maintaining high agricultural production is most important.

One of my main concerns is what we are doing to our producers through some of the things we are saying. If we destroy the morale of any person who is a productive entity, we will not get any production out of him. I appeal to everyone, when talking about the agricultural industry, to be factual, honest and straightforward. This country needs to return farmers and agriculture to their proper place in our national society and economy. We cannot have anyone, let alone editorial writers who do not sign their names, saying, "What is the matter with the government? They are only a minority. Why don't they forget them?" They know that the policies and programs put forward by this government during the last election campaign are headed in the right direction. Those hon. members know that wage and price controls on farm products would be a disaster. They know that farmers need incentives to increase production. The Leader of the Opposition knows that better than anyone.

They know that farmers need some guarantees of stability for the future. They know that young farmers need assistance to establish viable farms. These are all programs and policies this government intends to present to the House of Commons for approval. People are beginning to see the points I have been making. Last night a local television station showed a farm here in Ontario that is going to be paved over soon because, as I have said all along, our priorities have not been on agriculture and food and farmers but on highways and parking lots.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) spoke about the world food meeting which is to take place in Rome. I attended the FAO meeting last year. I can say that the farmers cannot be blamed for poor world distribution of food. Society as a whole has not accepted the responsibility of assisting those who are not as fortunate as we. In some instances people think it is morally right to throw away almost as much food as they buy. Not many think it is morally right, but some do because they continue to throw away large amounts of food. When I attended the FAO meeting last year I did not meet one minister of agriculture who was a farmer. Therefore, the farmer certainly cannot be blamed for poor world distribution of food.

I have said the farmers of this nation will increase their productivity by 50 per cent in five years if they are given a decent return for what they produce and a guarantee that they will receive the same as the rest of our society wants, demands and receives. Some people do not think that is necessary for the agricultural industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: We know that if we could control wild oats in western Canada, in one year we could increase our cereal grains by $1 billion. This would require added fertilizer, better seed, and so on. If the incentive were there, we could increase our productivity in western Canada by 50 per cent in five years. We know the beef industry increased by nearly 10 per cent every year until this year. That is a 50 per cent increase in five years. We also know that we can increase productivity in our industry because of automation and other things that go along with productivity.

As one hon. member previously mentioned, it is not the farmer's job to give away his turkeys. That is the job of society as a whole. Farmers will participate in it. It has been proven in western Canada that they held over 30 per cent of the world stock of grain without receiving any compensation. We are able to take our place in food aid mainly because of our farmers, their productivity and the fact they store grain on their own. They do not receive any help from the do-gooders who run around this nation challenging anything and everything. I would sometimes like to check their bankbooks to see their donations to CARE or other food programs. I am very suspicious of some of those people when they make so much noise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I welcome the comments of hon. members. I welcome their sincere criticisms and efforts to improve the programs and legislation we will introduce. The farmers of Canada expect this parliament to take action on the policies and programs outlined during the last election campaign. I look forward to your co-operation in getting on with that job.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We were kind enough to let the minister go beyond his time. Perhaps he will permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member can ask the question and the minister can agree to answer, but that would extend his time still further. It will require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: I thank the House for the unanimous consent. What prompts my question is that the minister's speech was supposed to contain all the answers regarding the egg affair. My question to the minister is this: why was it necessary for CEMA to allow 28 million eggs to rot, and why is the minister withholding from the House the results of the special study undertaken by the Farm Products Marketing Council which he commissioned early this year, and which has been in his possession since early April?

● (1710)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has used extreme figures—28 million eggs, which is equal to 88 tons of protein, out of a total production of 5.7 billion eggs, or 475 million dozen or 32 million boxes or 16 million cases or 32,000 rail cars of eggs produced in Canada in one year. And out of that total production less than one half of one per cent was lost.

Mr. McGrath: It was 15 per cent of CEMA's total.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member, who is, I am sure, a realistic person, knows one has to consider total production. Where any perishable commodity such as eggs is concerned, over production by as little as one per cent can cause utter chaos in the marketplace.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to take part in this debate. Before going further, I wish to congratulate you, Sir, upon your elevation to the position of Speaker. It is a position which I know you will fill with dignity and with fairness to members in all parts of the House.

I wish, also, to congratulate the mover, the hon. member for Montmorency, (Mr. Duclos) and the seconder, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne on the capable manner in which they have represented their constituencies.

The first session of the thirtieth parliament meets at a time of great uncertainty within Canada. I think that the 30-member riot squad of the RCMP and the 100-man Canadian Forces guard which were required to deal with the riot on Parliament Hill on opening day are symbolic of the unrest which exists not only among Canadian Indians but also among other segments of society throughout the length and breadth of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: It is wonderful to receive that applause. I hope some of it is for me.

At one time we were known as a peaceful country full of patriotic love for our traditions and our symbols, the true north strong and free. But times have changed and there are many Canadians today who feel, as I do, that they have not changed for the better.

Speaking of symbols, one which we hold dear is the Canadian beaver. It is pictured as a strong, energetic animal, a worker and a builder. What is implied is stability. All this is true, of course. Canadians are supposed to be like the beaver. However, the beaver has one strange characteristic. In order to build his dam he must first cut down the trees adjacent to the site with his teeth. All goes well with the beaver as long as he is chewing and working, but if he stops chewing his teeth continue to grow at a phenomenal rate. Soon, he is unable to open his jaws either to chew trees or to eat the food he requires. Eventually, he dies of starvation, in the midst of plenty, all because he stopped working and producing.

I believe the analogy of the beaver may well apply to Canadians at this stage in their history. For years the government has adopted policies which tend to curb rather than increase production. This impression is reinforced by figures contained in the booklet "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent" for the year 1974-75 which show an increase in expenditure from $10,767 million in 1968 to a proposed $29.3 billion in the fiscal year 1975. A large proportion of the increased expenditure went toward nonproductive, bureaucratic empire building, with the largest percentage of this occurring right here in Ottawa. Now we read in this year's Speech from the Throne the words of a subservient, frightened cabinet stating, and I quote:

> For Canada as well as for most of the world the most serious problem is inflation; it is necessary to deal with its causes and to mitigate its effects.

Of course inflation is not becoming less evident; every financial paper in the country is predicting that it will become even more serious than it is today. What happened to the glib election-time assurances by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he is wrestling down prices? The Speech from the Throne warns about the impact of higher oil prices, the adversities which have fallen upon crops in Canada, the failure of industrial commodities to fall in price as expected, declining industrial production, record interest rates and industrial unrest.

Obviously, though, this new awareness of the seriousness of the situation is not matched by any program of action. The Speech from the Throne is nothing more than a proposed five-year plan, a rehash of promises which sadly lacks the one ingredient the situation so urgently requires, namely, leadership.

Weakness in leadership has been the trademark of the Prime Minister ever since he took office in 1968. Like a rudderless vessel, the ship of state has been drifting, buffeted by every economic wind that blows. Instead of laying down a course to be followed, the captain of this ship keeps asking questions. However, neither his first mate, the bosun, or any of his executive officers will give him any worthwhile answers. They need only look at what happened to the former minister of national revenue, the former minister of public works, the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs and the former minister of state for multiculturalism in order to see what happens if you talk back to the skipper.

This lack of direction is evident in the Speech from the Throne. Having admitted that inflation is far more serious than it thought six months ago when preparing the budget, the government nevertheless offers Canadians the same old economic strategy, namely, appropriate fiscal and monetary policies, the raising of pensions to protect those least able to protect themselves, together with measures to soften the impact of soaring oil prices and cushion the economy against increases in the prices of other commodities. The speech contains at least one ambiguous promise. On one page we find the statement that the government will "exercise restraint in its own expenditures" while on the very next page we read:

The government does not intend deliberately to generate slack in the economy in order to combat inflation.

Which of these statements are we to believe? Hon. members can search as they may; they will not find a single specific federal commitment to set an example by tracking down wasteful spending.

I would be the first to agree that some of the policies set out in the Speech are commendable. However, they will be nothing more than sounding brass and tinkling symbols unless the government can conquer the meanest thief of all, namely, inflation which is threatening the very foundation both of our economy and of our society. Obviously, the government is unaware of the gravity of the situation. I say this not only because of the ineffective nature of the proposals put forward by the Prime Minister but also because of the attitude taken by his heir apparent, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), when he stated at his informal news conference early in September that there would be no recession and that Canada would experience a real growth this year amounting to 4½ per cent.

● (1720)

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) made this prediction despite the fact that every economist in the land sees little hope for significant real growth in our economy for the rest of this year and for most of 1975. In fact, at a recent meeting of economists in Montreal it was predicted that inflation will continue at its present 11 per cent rate while our national unemployment rate will rise to 8 per cent. This, of course, would be nothing new for Atlantic Canada, for in August of this year our unemployment rate stood at 9 per cent, which is some kind of tribute to the inefficiency and lack of effectiveness of the policies planned by this government for Atlantic Canada.

At this same news conference, the Minister of Finance did break the news gently that the cabinet will be delaying the implementation of some election promises. He said:

Some social programs and some housing programs may be moved ahead toward the end of the current five-year mandate.

In other words, the promises and programs solemnly pledged for the purpose of getting votes in the July 8 election can now be shelved or postponed until just before the next election. If it were not for the human tragedies brought about by the Liberal Party's broken promises, which mean broken dreams for many Canadians, the finance minister's statement would be almost humorous. I say this because his own leader is reported as saying in Vancouver on June 5, 1974, as reported on the front page of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, "Trudeau tells voters to be skeptical of promises". The article reads:

Prime Minister Trudeau yesterday began phase two of the Liberal campaign by telling voters to be skeptical of political parties with election promises.

[Mr. Crouse.]

From now until election day the Liberals would elaborate on policies and programs that had already been made public, but there would be no new promises.

"We'll show you how our platform is not invention for an election," he told audiences both here and on Vancouver Island.

The whole thesis of the campaign was that Liberals were running on deeds, rather than promises.

Later in the same article the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is quoted as stating:

"We're not just coming up with invented ideas at the last moment," he emphasized.

He was campaigning with the candidate from that area, Dr. Oberlander, who, as the article states:

—accompanied Mr. Trudeau, interrupted a group of young boys tossing a basketball through a hoop.

He tried, and missed. He then encouraged Mr. Trudeau to take a shot, but the Prime Minister declined, saying he wasn't an exhibitionist.

My, Madam Speaker, how things have changed. That statement was made on June 5, 1974. However, by June 29 the Prime Minister had changed his tune. Promises were made and on the strength of them the Liberal Party improved its standing in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere. On the strength of those promises the Prime Minister and his colleagues received a mandate to go ahead, unhampered by a minority parliament. In Atlantic Canada all the Liberal candidates pledged themselves to 34 action programs to increase wages, to stimulate growth and to cut living costs in the Atlantic provinces.

These promises made by the Prime Minister, backed up by the Liberal premiers in Atlantic Canada, must be a prime consideration of this government. Even though we were told by the Prime Minister to be skeptical of his promises, the people in Atlantic Canada believe easily what they hope for earnestly, and they took him at his word. I say these promises must be kept, for Atlantic Canada lags behind the rest of Canada by all measurements, including that of per capita income. Yet at the same time prices in Atlantic Canada are as high or higher than those in other provinces. It therefore follows that this as an area, and especially my constituents, has less to spend while trying to keep ahead of runaway living costs. You promised action programs. Action programs are essential and must be the government's number one priority.

These are the words and promises of the Liberal candidates as they sought office in Atlantic Canada in July, as advertised on June 29. Listen to what they had to say:

Every action taken and program initiated by the Atlantic province Liberal candidates and Prime Minister Trudeau will ensure that the complex fabric of our economic, social and cultural life developed over generations in the Atlantic provinces will be preserved and strengthened for the people of this region. Our efforts must maintain strong rural communities, strengthen and expand local industries, improve family farm operations, revitalize our fisheries and continue and increase social improvement within the Atlantic environment.

I could not have stated our problems in more fitting words, and having recorded them in Hansard I would remind this Liberal government that they are not to be forgotten in the weeks and months ahead. We must not forget, for example, the promise to lower income taxes for those earning less than $14,000 per year. We must not forget the promise to provide a home ownership savings plan that allows savings up to $10,000 tax free for use as a down payment on a first home. We must not forget the promise to provide transportation links and facilities to assure adequate power supplies at the lowest possible price throughout the Atlantic provinces, or the promise to develop an across Canada oil pipeline, extending it beyond Montreal to the Atlantic provinces.

We must not forget the promises to provide special funds to assist rural industrial development; to continue the decentralization of the federal government to better serve the residents of the Atlantic provinces, providing more jobs in the process—and I hope the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is listening. We must not forget the promise to examine regional wage policies to ensure equity for all public service employees, something that has not been done for generations in our area. We must not forget the promise to provide assistance to the shipbuilding industry, or the promise, in co-operation with the provinces, to provide a complete network of all-weather highways through the Atlantic region, connecting to major markets in central Canada and the United States.

We must not forget the promise to expand the interprovincial ferry service, with new modern ferries for Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and a replacement for the Yarmouth ferry, the Bluenose. We must not forget the promise to ensure an adequate reserve of freight rail cars for the shipment of Atlantic products and to develop three deep water ports in the Atlantic provinces. We must not forget the promise to invest $150 million over the next five years to provide better breakwaters, wharfs and haul-outs, to provide a new assistance program for vessel and gear improvement, and to implement an income stabilization plan for fishermen to ensure a reasonable average level of earnings.

We must not forget the promise to extend CMHC housing programs to rural parts of the Atlantic provinces and to provide increased financial assistance to the provinces for land assembly programs. We must not forget the promise to provide a $3 million program to promote and market agricultural products from the Atlantic provinces and to provide a special loan and grant program to assist and encourage family farm operators to modernize and improve their farm operations. These promises, and many more—and I will not burden the House by reading them all—must not be forgotten.

Neither must we forget the Prime Minister's special policy on fisheries as announced on June 21, 1974. His 17-point program covered the waterfront, from extending Canada's jurisdiction for fisheries to the edge of the continental shelf and slope to providing incentives so that fish catches are processed in Canadian plants, a program which would be very helpful today in Nova Scotia.

These are some of the solemn pledges they made. They won votes for this government, and the Prime Minister and his colleagues have had ample time to enact these promises into legislation. I, for one, Madam Speaker, as well, I am sure, as my colleagues from Atlantic Canada, intend to hold this government to its promises—promises which the Liberal party has claimed can be the salvation of an area neglected and discriminated against since confederation.

Mr. Stanfield: They have already been repudiated.

Mr. Crouse: As my leader has said, some of them have already been repudiated because I do not believe many of the promises made by the Liberal Party as priority items were included in the Speech from the Throne. I would point out to you, Madam Speaker, that promises without performance will do nothing for our people.

During this inflationary period we have heard much about the cost of food and the impact of rising food prices on our urban society. I am very happy to be following the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). When considering this matter, I believe we must be realistic. I believe we must take a long-term view of the problem. Canadians, in their own self-interest, must protect their agricultural industry and their supply of food. Obviously, consumers must pay a reasonable share of their income for food now so that our farmers can stay in business, or in a few years' time there will be even greater shortages and consumers will have to pay unrealistic prices by today's standards.

We have heard much in recent weeks about the spoilage of eggs. Canadians will not condone the mistakes made by the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency in allowing this to happen. However, this is only the tip of the iceberg and points up the need for closer supervision of our food stocks once they are produced, as well as the need for improved storage facilities. Our surplus eggs should have been made into egg powder, as they were in war time, and either stored for future use in times of scarcity or donated to the millions who are today starving in developing countries. There is absolutely no excuse for allowing food, once produced, to rot and be destroyed when we consider that right now, while I am speaking in this House, millions of people are starving throughout the world.

However, I hope that the officials of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency have learned a lesson from their mistakes and have taken steps to make certain that they will not happen again. I say this because the world's population is increasing.

We are told that the next generation will have to produce twice as much food because the world's population is expected to double by 1980. Other expectations and demands are also doubling. But the weather is not co-operating. All the productive land is now being farmed or utilized, and the possibility is being discussed of farming the vast areas of muskeg in Northern Canada. This, of course, would require tremendous expenditures in labour and energy, and if the world's supply of food for increasing populations is to be sought from these latitudes, the cost will be so excessive that the world's standard of living must go down and down.

For every problem there is a solution and I believe that if Canada is to play its role in meeting the challenge of feeding a hungry world, then this country will have to give agricultural development the same priority in future years that it has already given industrial development.

The present government, in establishing new priorities for agriculture, must give consideration to the organization and application of our human resources. I realize that in our so-called free enterprise economy we cannot force people to work on the farm. But the fact that a majority of our labour force accept urban employment in preference to working on farms reveals something about our over-all attitudes, priorities and incomes. Canada, and this government, will also have to give a high priority to improving agricultural productivity through research into new agricultural technology and the provision of capital to farmers so that they can use the new technology.

All of the points I have raised, namely, the supply of arable land, the supply of farm labour, the supply of credit or capital, have become problems for Canadian agriculture, because Canadian agriculture has been at a disadvantage in competing for these resources against the financial power of consumerist, urban, industrialized Canada. Before Canada as a whole can change its priorities toward agriculture, it is necessary for urban Canada to realize that the world is facing a first-class crisis in meeting the need for food.

I do not think many Canadians realize this fact. The stark reality of massive food shortages was made evident to me in January of this year when I visited India, where thousands are dying every month because of malnutrition and a lack of food. In Canada we possess so much that we have not felt to the same degree the impact of the energy, food and other commodity problems falling on most of the world.

The potential for higher food production in Atlantic Canada, and especially in Nova Scotia, is higher than at present, but this potential can only be realized if farming is made more attractive to existing farmers and to our young people. If production is increased beyond our own needs, the surplus will always be in demand somewhere in the world, provided we have the necessary infrastructure established in our marketing and distribution system to take care of it. The ocean washes our shores and we are able to use water transport to the markets of the world. There is also the fact that we are next door to the richest consumer market on the globe.

However, for our Canadian farmer to go ahead under present circumstances and plan maximum production would be to invite financial ruin. He could easily find himself with fields of bountiful crops and no place to sell them. This has happened in the past even when demand was high. Foods must be warehoused, protected and processed, and it may be months from the time of harvest to the time of consumption, not to mention the thousands of miles in distance between the producer and consumer. The farmer as an individual cannot provide what is required in either a regular flow of machinery, seed or fertilizer. Neither can he provide the warehousing, processing and transportation facilities required. Let's face it. Due to the risk nature of his industry he cannot be expected to take all the risks when dealing with the corporate world.

I, as a free enterpriser, am generally opposed to government intervention in trade and business. As a general rule, speaking as a Progressive Conservative, I believe this is the correct position to take. However, changing world economic conditions require some changes in our thinking, and I believe there is a role that society or government can play in developing agriculture in Atlantic Canada by providing the security necessary for the industry to flourish. Our over-all market at present is too small to be a good commercial risk in many fields.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Atlantic Canada requires a machinery parts depot large enough to ensure that our farmers can get fast, efficient delivery of what they need. It also requires grain receiving and distribution depots so that supplies of grain can be delivered in sufficient quantity to guarantee a continuity of feed grains. As production is stepped up locally there would be an assured storage place for produce for later use or for sale.

There is also required a fertilizer depot, large enough to hold sufficient quantities and variations to meet demand. There is especially required cold storage and other receiving facilities, so that the food producer can go ahead and produce, knowing that when he takes off his crop it has an assured storage area.

These facilities should all be at tide water, and some of them could well be located in my constituency where we have adequate harbours in Lunenburg, Bridgewater, Liverpool and Shelburne. In fact consideration should be given to establishing these depots outside our city areas which are becoming congested. I believe the establishment of these administrative and physical facilities would encourage the maximum use of farm land in Atlantic Canada, and with world food demand as it is at present there should be little risk of loss on any public investment.

This would appear to be a job for government rather than private industry, for society as a whole can make an investment for production and take a long-term position on recovery of that investment. Industry, on the other hand, must operate on an immediate balance sheet. However, if such a program as I have outlined were adopted, I see no need for conflict with the private sector. It should be possible to work out, with private industry and the farmer, what is required so that maximum food production becomes possible in Atlantic Canada.

Another basic primary industry which is undergoing many hardships today is the fishing industry. Each month the landed number of pounds of mixed fish declines, while the cost of operating the fishing fleet, both inshore and offshore, keeps soaring higher and higher. The problems of the fishing industry received considerable attention during the recent federal election, but since July 8 we have seen very little action by the government in solving our difficulties.

We in Atlantic Canada believe that states bordering the coastal areas where most fish stocks are found must be given the right and the responsibility to manage these stocks in accordance with agreed principles, in the same manner as they already manage the mineral and living resources on the continental shelf. Freedom of fishing as it has been traditionally practised is an approach that is no longer acceptable, and it can be no longer tolerated if we are to avoid the total exhaustion of this most urgently needed resource.

I believe that coastal states must have the right to reserve for themselves that portion of the fisheries stocks under their jurisdiction which they have the capacity to harvest. Only under these conditions can we hope to conserve the world's fisheries, and only in this way can we protect the vital interests of the coastal communities that depend on this resource in Canada.

I am well aware of the position put forward by our government representatives at the recent conference on the Law of the Sea at Caracas, but despite our best efforts the conference ended without a draft treaty or agreement settling either ownership of marine resources or the width of a coastal state's jurisdiction over those fisheries resources adjacent to its own shores. I do not attach any blame to our negotiators for this situation. I am told that they worked hard. I was not there, but I am informed they worked hard and diligently in putting forward Canada's position. However, time is running out. For years, going back to 1964, I have been asking the government what it intends to do for our fishermen in Atlantic Canada. I believe we must take a firm stand. This is a view that is shared not only by me but also by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and by the former Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Jack Davis.

Both ministers stated prior to the July 8 election that Canada should unilaterally take control of the continental shelf off its coasts, if current Law of the Sea negotiations do not go our way. We have strong precedents for following this course. For example, in 1964 the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act unilaterally established a nine-mile fishing zone contiguous to the three-mile limit. Then in 1970 the territorial sea was unilaterally extended to 12 miles. We next established unilaterally our 100 mile limit Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and, in my opinion, it is now opportune to implement the pledge of the Prime Minister in the July 8 election to ensure that Canadians have exclusive fishing rights within 200 miles of the Canadian shoreline. We, as Canadians, need this type of management control, not only for the conservation of our fisheries resources, but also for the protection of our deep sea fishermen.

Foreign fleets have overrun our main fishing areas, bringing disastrous losses to our deep sea operators. For example, Centennial Sea Foods Limited of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, and C.W. McLeod Fisheries Limited of Port Mouton, Nova Scotia, are now in the process of filing claims totalling more than $225,000 with the Department of External Affairs for damages inflicted by Russian trawlers to lobster traps in July of 1974. Our own Department of the Environment sent officers on an overfly in one of our aircraft to take pictures of these large lobster traps on the decks of the Russian trawlers. There can be no doubt that the Russian fleet is responsible for that, but, they have been responsible in meeting our requests for justice in the past.

What I am concerned about is why it has taken so long for the Department of External Affairs to take up this claim with the Soviet government. I have a letter here from one of the owners of a Canadian ship dated July 11. His name is Crosby McLeod. He made representations to the government, asking it to take up his complaint over his $170,000 loss. On September 19 he was informed that no formal complaint had been lodged up to that date with the Russian embassy.

When I posed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) on the subject, he stated that representations had now been made. So they must only have been made since September 19, even though the loss occurred way back on July 11.

Mr. Dinsdale: The government has been on holidays.

Mr. Crouse: This is what I was going to say next. Nothing could better exemplify the holiday spirit which has prevailed with the present government.

The delay in taking up this claim with the Soviet government by our Department of External Affairs is inexcusable and unexplainable. I ask the government, and especially the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if they are going to wait until the companies concerned go out of business due to their heavy losses before any effort is made to secure restitution from the Soviets?

I am pleased to see the new Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) in his seat and I congratulate him upon his appointment to this new portfolio.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope he is better treated than his predecessor.

Mr. Crouse: I should like to ask him—and I am sure he will answer in due course—what steps he has taken, since receiving this appointment to the cabinet, to restore the Canadian swordfishing industry, worth at one time some $4 million annually to the fishermen of Nova Scotia alone. At present a fleet of 20 swordfishing boats is operating out of New Bedford, Massachusetts. Fishermen operating out of that port are being paid $1.70 per pound for swordfish. Obviously the warnings of the U.S. food and drug directorate about mercury in swordfish are having no effect whatsoever in Massachusetts.

I hope the minister will make it a priority project to visit Washington soon to discuss with his American counterpart the possibility of restoring this important industry, for at one time Canada exported to the United States some 25 million pounds of swordfish annually.

I also hope that the minister will give consideration to opening up the Canadian market for swordfish because there is no reason why we should let Massachusetts alone enjoy this delicacy from the sea. Many Canadians would enjoy a swordfish dinner and perhaps the minister could lend his good offices to the opening up of the Canadian market to our fishermen. It would be a great boon for the Nova Scotia fishermen.

Another serious problem faced by our fishermen is—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member as he is beginning to develop a new point. However, I wish to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Crouse: I have only a few more observations and I ask for the indulgence of the House to complete my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Crouse: I thank the House through you, Mr. Speaker, for its indulgence in permitting me to complete my remarks. I can assure you I shall not be very long.

As I started out to say, another serious problem faced by fishermen in Atlantic Canada is the ICNAF regulations which are considered unrealistic and unworkable. The present allowable catch of haddock, for example, is discriminatory. It is causing Canadian fishermen to destroy as much as 85,000 pounds of haddock per trip. I could not help but think, as we heard about the loss of eggs, that that loss is minuscule when compared with the weekly loss of haddock caught on deck and thrown back into the sea as a result of the regulations that have been established under ICNAF.

While Canadian fishermen are being forced to hold the line, foreign trawlers continue to come to the banks, taking as much as 95 per cent of their catch in haddock. In fact one foreign trawler seized by the Americans under ICNAF regulations had more than 95 per cent of haddock iced in the hold. This practice is annoying our fishermen, decreasing their earnings, and destroying valuable food at a time when half the world is going to bed hungry. The system we have adopted at present is not working to the benefit of Canadians.

Not only haddock but stocks of cod, pollock, herring, flounders and silver hake are also being depleted, with the huge Russian fleet being the biggest offender when it comes to overfishing.

All these problems point out the need for some searching questions to be put. For example, are we carrying out conservation policies for the benefit of our Canadian fishermen or for the benefit of all foreign fishermen? Will we increase our surveillance fleet, as promised by the Prime Minister and, if so, can it take any action against fleets which are overfishing and destroying our fishing gear unless we unilaterally declare some form of control and some form of sovereign rights over our resources on our continental shelf?

Should we continue to spend millions of dollars annually to improve Canadian salmon runs if other countries continue to catch salmon on the high seas, thereby defeating our purpose and our efforts? Unless concrete answers to these questions are found the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada and the people dependent on it will, I am sorry to say, face a very bleak future.

MAIN ESTIMATES 1974-75—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. Speaker: Before we go on to the next speaker may I interrupt to complete a point of procedure. Earlier this day a motion was proposed which required the consent of the House because it had appended to it a schedule of assignments to committees and the order of estimates being referred to them. It was suggested, at the time of the presentation of that order, that it stand until later today. I understand that there is agreement that that moment should be now. If that is the case may I ask if it is agreed now that the motion earlier moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) will carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 42), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 53).

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to congratulate you on having been elected Speaker of the House. Your integrity, your sense of duty and your vast knowledge of legal matters led you to fill this high position which is the key one in the House, the basis of our activity. I also offer my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker and to the chairmen and deputy chairmen of the committees.

I am also pleased to praise the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The people in each of their electoral districts were wise in choosing men of such calibre to represent them in the Canadian Parliament. While listening to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), I was moved when he said that he represented Canadians who came from Italy, Germany, Yugoslavia, the Netherlands, other countries of Europe and Asia and, of course, Great Britain. He is the first Liberal member of parliament of Chinese origin and he is proud to be in Parliament the spokesman for Canadians coming from so many places. Those people chose Canada as their land and we are proud that they did so.

Canada is a prosperous country, a country of great and varied natural resources. We enjoy an enviable prosperity and one of the highest standard of living. Canada is a country where it is good to live, where a most sophisticated social security system has been developed. Considering that more than one third of the total budget has been invested in the area of health and social welfare, and that during the last decade we have quadrupled the budget in this field, I believe that this social security system can be envied by several countries.

We have also an increasingly sophisticated education system and a climate of freedom of speech which keeps all politicians alert. We are lucky, because our country represents a great potential in all kinds of resources, because Canada is one of the rare countries which produce more foodstuffs than it needs. Because of all these considerations, we also have great responsibilities toward less favoured countries, especially since God has granted us privileges which were not due to us when two thirds of the world demand a more just society.

I was listening this afternoon to the hon. members for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) and for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan), and I think that we all agree that we must be more concerned about the help that we can give these countries. When I use the expression "just society", several opposition members cannot help smiling but the fact remains that the objective of implementing a just society is a continuing concern of the Liberal government. This may be the difference between the Liberal philosophy and the philosophy of the Conservative Party. To govern a country founded by two ethnic groups, a people including various races and cultures, made up of ten provinces with unequal resources and economic disparities, to strengthen an unbalanced unity and to put in spite of all this a country of 22 million inhabitants at the first rank on the world scene, is that not a difficult task?

The Canadians are well aware of it and that is why they chose to elect the team of the Liberal party, led by Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, to guide that very fragile bark through ocean climates that are not always temperate. That is why the Canadian electorate expressed the wish to entrust to the Liberal party the destiny of our young country.

One needs but read the newspapers and reflect briefly on the problems other countries must face, some of which are the most highly industrialized, to realize to what extent we are privileged. I have no intention of dwelling further on this subject but on behalf of my electors, they who have elected me for a third term with the Liberal party, it is only fair that I should express those feelings and pay homage to our right hon. Prime Minister, to whom especially we owe the recent Liberal victory in Canada.

During the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, we can put before the House generalities concerning the ridings we represent. When we study specific bills, we are bound to stick to the question before the House.

I therefore take the liberty of explaining a few of the accomplishments of the riding I have the honour to represent. One of them, which I feel is responsible for the development of Ville-de-Laval, is the construction within a short distance of the city of the new international airport. The economic consequences are in fact quite extensive in respect of the postal service, considering that five new postal stations are under construction at the present time, including one which is situated within an industrial complex.

We could also talk about the full transformation of the highway system through grants.

● (1750)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned at six o'clock, I was pointing out just how Ville-de-Laval stands to benefit from the construction of the international airport in Sainte-Scholastique, now known as the Mirable International Airport. The establishment of that airport near the second largest city in Quebec has contributed to improve considerably the road system in Laval. Thanks to a federal grant of $15 million under an investment fund program, the residents of Ville-de-Laval will not see their municipal property taxes earmarked for the construction of service roads and for a lighting system on autoroute 440 from the intersection of autoroutes 15 and 440 nor for the construction of an overpass at the crossroads of the Laval autoroute and the Laurentides Boulevard nor for the expressways and the overpasses on it. With this capital fund available from December 6, 1972 to June 30, 1975, Laval taxpayers will not have to pay $15 million. This might not bring a reduction in property taxes in Laval, but it will help prevent any further increase in years to come, because I do not think those funds were a foreseeable item in the municipal budget.

I would also like to talk about the considerable increase in federal services in Laval: a Manpower Centre has been built, an unemployment insurance office has been established, and in a near future there should be a Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation office to serve the people of Laval.

After talking of the considerable help of the federal government in the construction of the road system, I do not want to forget its help in the construction of highway 13 between Dorval airport and Mirabel. This grant is about $30 million, not to mention $70 million loan from the Bank of Canada at a preferential interest rate. Therefore, we see the importance the federal government attaches to the development of a road system that will link, as I have said, the two airports. But the great disappointment about this project, as I pointed out to the Laval residents, is the decision taken by the province to install toll stations on this highway which has already greatly benefitted from the federal government financial assistance. I strongly opposed such toll stations and I suggested the construction of an access and exit lane in order that the residents do not have to pay an additional tax for the use of this highway which is the only solution to the road traffic problem in the western part of Ville-de-Laval.

This being said, I now come to the content of the Speech from the Throne, in particular to the transport chapter where it says that a program will be developed in cooperation with the railways which will lead to the eventual creation of new government machinery to ensure the effective management of all ground transport. Moreover, immediate implementation of experimental programs designed to upgrade progressively a number of intercity passenger train services will be undertaken.

Other measures, compatible with regional and provincial plans for urban development will be taken in order to strengthen the effectiveness of urban transportation systems and improve commuting services.

That part of the Speech from the Throne and the speech delivered today by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) were of particular interest to me as a member of one of the two federal constituencies representing in this House the second largest city in the province of Quebec. Indeed, Ville-de-Laval has more than 240,000 people and is situated on Jésus Island, north of the metropolis.

I think I should avail myself of this opportunity to state the main problem of my constituency, a problem that restricts the development of our city which is nevertheless experiencing rather remarkable development and, as I said, that is in part due to the economic results of building Mirabel, the international airport. That problem is common to all Canadian cities. I believe that from Vancouver to Halifax, in all cities in the process of development, there exists a common problem, that of public transport. This problem being a common one, I believe it can be solved only with the cooperation of higher governments, because it is impossible, considering the municipal tax basis, to finance public transports and provide for their maintenance. I believe that in the light of present experiences, and whatever may be the municipality, having read all those statements and reports, we find a 50 per cent deficit in the operation of a public transport system.

To the north of Montreal, we have already laid down the basic elements of a solution, namely the TRRAMM report, the object of which is to study the means of transportation between Montreal and Mirabel. The cost of that study was shared by the Federal government and the province of Quebec and the report was tabled last February.

The report mentioned two ways of establishing such a service between Montreal and Mirabel, namely the use of the CP railroad through Laval-des-Rapides and Sainte-Thérèse, through the industrial centre of Laval and Sainte-Thérèse, thence Mirabel. The other alternative was to use the CNR line via Côte Vertu, Roxboro and Laval Ouest, without serving at all the western part of Ville-de-Laval, to head finally towards Saint-Eustache and Mirabel.

In view of the importance of economic and industrial development, while encouraging housing construction, we must decide to go ahead with this project which provides for the use of the CPR line through Laval-des-Rapides.

I have already made the regional authorities aware of this on March 28 last. This application reflects the opinion of the Ville-de-Laval authorities as well as those of my colleagues in the nearby riding of Duvernay, and those in Laval North.

Moreover, last Wednesday, during a weekly dinner, I explained these alternatives to the Laval Board of Trade, that is, the possibility of using either the CNR or the CPR line. The CNR line was the unanimous choice. Therefore, we shall follow very closely the progress of this project, which is an important stage in the development of Ville-de-Laval.

Still on the subject of public transportation, which is the main problem of the constituency I represent, and also one of the main problems of our expanding municipalities, may I suggest to the Minister of Transport that he study the possibility of extending the CNR's electric train line to the Cartierville Station in the centre of Ville-de-Laval, so as to join the centre of Canada's metropolis to the centre of Ville-de-Laval. During the last metro strike in Montreal, the only public transportation system in the northwest end of Montreal was this CNR electric train which, unfortunately, stops in Cartierville.

This suggestion was made over and over again during the last election campaign and I think that this extension of the electric train from Cartierville to the centre of Ville-de-Laval, where there is now a vacant parking lot, is the most economical solution to public transportation north of Montreal and for Ville-de-Laval, especially when considering the possibility of extending the metro to Ville-de-Laval. It would seem to me that this "extension outlet" of the electric train on to a piece of property where expropriation costs would be at their minimum would constitute the most economical solution to the transportation problem. This train is now in operation and carries more than 20,000 passengers a day. I was glad to hear the Minister of Transport, the first time, when he mentioned that we have much to do in the public transportation field.

If we consider this train, which is very popular in the west end of Montreal, I believe that improving it has unfortunately been far too often neglected. I think that this is a philosophy which should be subject to further discussions or thinking. We are building expressways every here and there. There is one that goes through the town of Montreal. We have invested huge sums of money to build these expressways. We are even cutting the grass on private properties for esthetic purposes, while we are neglecting to invest in the public transportation field. So, that suggestion seems to me to be the real solution. It would offer the following advantages: it would relieve the congestion on bridges, in the streets and in parking lots in downtown Montreal, allow gas savings and especially savings in parking costs, reduce pollution and nervous tension for those who use public transports to get to work and come back home. As for Ville-de-Laval, that project would encourage the construction of residential buildings near the planned station.

I therefore make that humble suggestion: why not look into the possibilities of such an extension. Without claiming to be an expert in the matter, I feel that it should be looked into.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about our housing policy. To my mind, it is a comprehensive program for the development of municipalities. There is no doubt that it encourages home ownership, that it strive to help low- and average-income families with one or more dependents to buy and live in their own homes. So the help supplied is based on the cost of houses and the current payments within the region; it must not exceed 22 per cent of the income.

In my opinion, this policy is quite popular but the prospective buyers are not sufficiently aware of it. In the last three years we have noted a surplus of 100,000 housing units. I happen to have the figures in hand and I notice that we have built over 236,000 last year, that is 100,000 over the normal demand. These units certainly represent a great step toward solving the housing problem and helping low-income families.

To conclude, I am happy that the right hon. Prime Minister intends to reform House procedures during the current session. Looking over the list of the 70 pieces of legislation mentioned in our already lengthy file, I think that in a modern country it is quite natural to have more modern laws in the Canadian Parliament.

In my opinion, when the federal government will have to consider customs, transportation or canals, we will have a heavy load of work and legislation to pass in Parliament. I think that a complete review of the parliamentary procedure will certainly be welcomed.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my address by congratulating you on your appointment. I have sensed in you, Sir, an amiable spirit and a genuine desire to be impartial in the regulation of the affairs of this House.

As the newly elected member for Surrey-White Rock I cannot help but compare the issues that face the people of Surrey-White Rock with those that face the people of Canada as a whole. Surrey-White Rock is a cosmopolitan riding and, in many ways, a cross-section of all Canada. We in my riding face the difficult consequences of urban sprawl.

Immigration policies and people moving out of metropolitan Vancouver have created a housing problem in Surrey-White Rock that is not acute—it is desperate! With a 1 per cent vacancy rate in spite of astronomical housing costs, the local governments have inherited a problem which is not their creation.

It gives me small comfort to see that the Speech from the Throne states there will be government help. I remember all too well the campaign promise describing the help as $32,000 for a minimum priced home. In Surrey-White Rock that would only pay for the lot.

There is also the concomitant transportation problem. There is a crying need for a public rapid transit system to move people, together with greater development of rail and highway facilities to move goods. There are farmers in my riding whose production is vital to the metropolitan area of Vancouver. Each year when these farmers are ready to harvest their crops they are inundated with an oversupply of goods from California. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) really wants to help the income level of the farmers, that is one area where he might help.

Mr. Friesen: Surrey also contains very modern port facilities, built by the National Harbours Board. These will provide tax revenue for the area but as yet they provide no direct tax base in themselves—the only revenue is that derived from the wage-earners working on these port installations. White Rock and South Surrey each have beautiful recreational beaches, but these face the threat of oil spills and other forms of pollution. The Fraser River borders the northern part of the riding and is the source of the salmon fishing industry. All these resources have attracted many kinds of heavy and light industry to Surrey-White Rock, and we welcome them.

Finally, Surrey-White Rock is the home of many senior citizens. They have found the area a desirable place in which to live but now they are desperately trying to cling to their savings, their security and their self-respect. All these problems will find a solution if we have a government which sees itself as the government of all the people of Canada.

I must confess that my heart skipped a beat yesterday when I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say the government could not afford to "pay mock heed to the opposition". As is quite evident, the people of my riding have for the past 12 years not chosen to elect a representative of the party opposite. Thus, I am not a little encouraged to believe that the government will view the needs of my riding with the same degree of sensitivity as it does those represented by government members.

The Prime Minister then went on to speak of reform, emphasizing the need for greater efficiency in government. I would say to the Prime Minister and to other members of the government that the ultimate goal of parliamentary democracy is not efficiency—we have just experienced five months of that kind of efficiency. The ultimate goal of parliamentary democracy is representation and service. This representation is based upon human relationships, and when we work with human relationships we had better be careful about how much efficiency we introduce. I might add that if the Prime Minister is really anxious to bring greater efficiency to the House he might instruct his ministers to answer opposition questions in the most concrete terms rather than by making those terribly inefficient statements such as "My department is well aware of the problem and is looking into it."

Certainly, I am not at all worried that the government will, as the Prime Minister suggested, go fishing after it has crossed the Rubicon. It is not even interested in protecting the fishermen of the west coast or of the east coast, as a matter of fact. What worries me is that after government members have crossed the Rubicon and got to Rome they will not know what to do. It seems to me that disarray, the social, economic and political problems, which faced the people of Rome in those days find a striking parallel in our own country today. I might add there are other parallels in that metaphor which one had better leave alone.

The Prime Minister made several references to the mother of parliaments. It was that parliament, 100 years ago, which had in its ranks an outstanding Liberal member in the person of John Stuart Mill. Mill was a practising non-conformist in the best sense of the word. All his life he fought a personal battle to preserve the dignity of his individuality. All his life he saw himself perpetually in a minority situation, threatened, as he said, by the "despotism of custom".

In the context of the pressures to conform placed on him by the majority, Mr. Mill coined a phrase which is highly relevant to this House today. He spoke of "the tyranny of the majority"—not the kind of tyranny which issues from rule by dictatorship but rather the kind of tyranny which has confused the will of the majority with an acquiescent acceptance of the rightness of majority opinion. It is for this reason that I take comfort, as I said, in the Prime Minister's assurance yesterday that the government cannot afford to take lightly the views of minorities.

When I speak of minorities I realize that we immediately relate the term either to minority political groups or to minority ethnic groups. And, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that I have had some experience in both, especially the latter. Having grown up in a minority ethnic group I have come to appreciate the richness of the cultural, moral and spiritual heritage that is mine as a member of that group. Nevertheless, I recognize the fact that these groups are easily overlooked by the masses. I am sure members of other groups can give similar testimony. However, it is not to the needs of these minority groups that I wish to address myself. It is, rather, to the needs of minority groups which cut across political and ethnic boundaries and which are all too easily the victims of the indifference and tyranny of the majority.

I speak on behalf of the senior citizens of our country, those who have contributed so much to the greatness of Canada, and who now all too often have to depend upon the capricious gratuity of big government. What kind of bargaining rights do they enjoy? There is no Perry Report guaranteeing them a 60 per cent or even a 40 per cent increase. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that today it does not pay to be a member of that minority group.

There is another minority group with no bargaining rights. I speak of the thousands of Canadians who are victims of incurable and crippling disease. Thousands of dollars have been spent each year on Canada Council grants to fund the most inconceivably esoteric projects possible. And all the while medical research projects go begging. When was the last time there was a demonstration on the steps of parliament by people suffering from MS, or muscular dystrophy or diabetes or who were on dialysis machines? These people, Mr. Speaker, are not the kind who demonstrate; they just suffer. They form a group, made up in every sense of the word, from victims of the "tyranny of the majority".

And there are the hundreds of small groups of workers, non-unionized, who work for a minimum wage, who have no bargaining rights and whose minimum wages are also being eaten up by inflation.

It is easy enough for any party having a majority to confuse power with greatness, but the greatness of which I speak is not simply the power to overcome the opposition and the ability to flex political muscle.

The greatness of which I speak is the kind which is strong enough to allow one not to be afraid to display his own humanity. It is the kind of greatness which allows one to realize and accept his own limitations. It is that kind of greatness which, realizing his strength, allows one to accept the risk of admitting mistakes once in a while. It is the kind of greatness that allows one to see that the admission of a mistake is not necessarily the sign of weakness but, in the truest sense of humility, a display of one of the qualities of strength.

I recognize that the Minister of Agriculture admitted this afternoon that perhaps he made a mistake; I suggest to you that he was not admitting a mistake but rather admitting to a peccadillo, a little error. If he admitted to a mistake that would lead to openness and an opportunity for everyone to examine the situation. As yet there has been no evidence that this kind of openness is going to exist.

As I flip through the pages of history I see two kinds of great leaders who are remembered to this day. There are the Alexanders, the Caesars and the Napoleons. Then there is Abraham Lincoln, Mr. Ghandi and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The former inflame the mind and the latter inspire the heart. The former had super efficiency while the latter had heart and humanity. There is the centre of that great biblical paradox, "for when I am weak, then I am strong".

If it is the goal of the government simply to cling to power only because it feels a majority is right, I am sure it can summon from a large store of political dexterity enough gimmicks to satisfy even its least disciplined backbenchers and remain in office a full term. But if its goal is to aspire to greatness then its motives must transcend the goals of immediate expediencies. Rather, it must begin by admitting to its own limitations. It must touch base with its own humanity. It must do more than sympathize, it must empathize. It must learn to feel. It is still a fact that you should not get so worked up over your own cause that you forget your humanity and consequent imperfection.

Yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in commending the two freshmen government members who moved and seconded the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, said of them that they:

—certainly represent that new generation of Canadians who expect of Canada and its government actions that are truly worthy of the people.

I agree with the Prime Minister. Together with many other Canadians I just hope they do not have to wait too long.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for letting me take part at this time in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech fron the Throne.

First I wish to congratulate you, on behalf of my colleagues of the Social Credit Party of Canada, for your nomination, as you have been chosen to chair the very important business taking place in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, our congratulations are heart-felt and we assure you of our co-operation so that our business reflects the opinions of our fellow citizens and that it be effective. For these reasons, we had a warm welcome for your promises. We hope that yours will be more than promises, unlike those of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he stated his intention to modernize procedure in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, for many years our party has been calling for a speeding-up of the dispatch of business, for a reform of the antiquated and obsolete British procedure, through common agreement, without any partisanship, so that the Canadian Parliament would evolve into a true reflection of our society of 1974 and of the society of the future, providing for better planning and greater effectiveness.

● (2040)

Mr. Speaker, without prejudice to the excellent work performed by the former President of the Privy Council, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), I gladly note that the new incumbent seems to work in close co-operation with other House leaders, not on a daily but on a planned basis. Thus he allowed us, for example, this afternoon, to pass a measure which will only be enforced when the supplementary estimates will be under consideration at the end of October.

Mr. Speaker, this allows us to get ready and be more efficient in the House and perhaps say fewer platitudes and make more serious comments which are right to the point. Consequently, the public who hear us or read Hansard will not be under the impression that our proceedings are long, tedious and fruitless.

My colleagues and myself of the Social Credit Party of Canada who have been elected here have adopted a realistic attitude. We are sitting here to do some inquiries and solve problems. We will work in a spirit of cooperation, but we will not necessarily bless everything the government will do nor everything the opposition will say. Mr. Speaker, as you know by your experience in the Chair, Whigs and Tories have been returning the ball to one another for a century. But the Social Crediters have in this House the reputation of fighting for particular problems of a social or economic nature, and of making suggestions often termed as idiotic but which are adopted afterwards. It sometimes takes several elections before traditional parties promise what we have been asking for. What is important, though, is not that we should be the ones carrying out our suggestions, or the Whigs, or the Tories, but that they should be implemented at last.

My colleague from Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) has proposed repeatedly, ever since he came to this House, as hon. members on this side remember, that the old age security pension be granted to any person whose spouse is 60 years old. This is a motion he presented year in and year out, and he valiantly upheld his cause in each and every session.

At the very start, our colleagues on both sides of the House were not even listening to his proposal. Then, they lent a distant ear, then two, and finally a promise was made to act just before the election, and all of a sudden the Spirit came down from heaven and fell on the seat of the right hon. Prime Minister. There is an announcement in the Speech from the Throne that it will be done in October 1975.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it was in a positive spirit that yesterday during the question period we asked of the right hon. Prime Minister that that promise not be implemented in October 1975 but well before that since the government holds a majority and the power. That is what he wanted since people put their faith in him following the promise he made. In fact, he was already assured of the co-operation of all three opposition parties to support and quickly pass that measure which is absolutely vital if we are to put the economy back on its feet again in certain areas of our society, particularly in the case of those who have reached the critical age of 60.

Mr. Speaker, the papers will say this is a Liberal accomplishment. We do not mind. The Tories will say this is a government accomplishment. We are glad about it because we know for a fact deep inside that had it not been for a little member for Abitibi, had it not been for his perseverance, his honest tenacity, that proposal might never have seen the light in this House.

That is the example, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to give at the very beginning of my speech to show our colleagues, particularly the newly arrived—whom we welcome wholeheartedly—that our work, that the meaning of our presence here is precisely that—not to claim the credit for accomplishments beyond our control but at least repeat in this House what our fellow citizens ask of us, to give a different bell ring, and God knows how many different bell rings there are in society, so that in the final analysis the legislation passed here during a session reflects a true picture of us and give results.

Mr. Speaker, we shall work as a team to do something like the hon. member for Abitibi has done in this matter. This is the meaning of our work here. We shall not work with a partisan spirit. The Chair as well as the Cabinet and the other parties of this House can be assured that we shall respect this position.

Mr. Speaker, the federal election of last July 8 marks an unhappy date. We continue to think so because of the unfortunate strategy of the Progressive Conservatives which caused an election and which punished those who had provoked it, since the New Democratic Party has much fewer members then before. This proves that the population wants us to work in the House and not play politics. This is a lesson, maybe the only one, that can be drawn from the last election. Our fellow citizens want us to work and to legislate in the common interest.

For this election, Mr. Speaker, some people wanted again to do away with the Social Credit Party. It was once again predicted that this party would disappear because our opponents knew about our lack of financial and other means. Yet we may be even stronger than before, strenghtened and enriched by a great experience, that of having fought against gigantic machines with makeshift means. And God knows that having elections in Quebec is no holiday. Yet we went through this period.

Since my return to this House, I have heard about the famous problem of official regognition for the Social Credit Party. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who may still be in doubt, I believe that there is a rule which should be present in the mind of everyone, to the effect that the House of Commons must accept the popular verdict without any hesitation. It the population has decided to send 11 members to Parliament under a certain label, it is not up to the House to decide whether or not to accept this verdict, since in our system, an election is the supreme decision. This is why, Mr. Speaker, we shall demand that this principale be respected even though at the present time the whole matter seems to be settled, and for that I wish to thank my colleagues of all parties. I hope that this principle which has now been established will continue to be accepted on both sides of this House, with a friendly attitude.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point to come back to the Speech from the Throne—

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): It's unique!

Mr. Fortin: It is unique, as stated by my colleague from Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), who won brilliantly no doubt because he did a good job in his constituency with his "office work". I know all about it. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the example set by the hon. member for Sherbrooke may influence other Liberal members around me, who do not do any "office work" in their constituencies, so I can deal with my own rather than caring for the four surrounding constituencies. So I wish a lot of courage to my colleague from Sherbrooke, in order that he may convince his colleagues from surrounding constituencies.

Mr. Speaker, a sentence especially struck me in the Speech from the Throne: "It is necessary both to deal with its (inflation) causes and to mitigate its effects".

That's a sentence we heard here before in 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972 and 1973. And now we hear it again: deal with the causes, mitigate the effects. Liberals are very consistent. That is, they often repeat what they would like to do. But when it comes to inflation, Mr. Speaker, the government is always at a loss to come up with a real remedy.

On the one hand, he tells us, production must be increased. That is obvious. There is a commodity shortage in many areas, and the shortage results in higher prices, and higher prices result in an economic imbalance for the consumer. I will give but one example. I will not try to discover obvious truths, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said this afternoon, that he could not keep a hen from laying eggs when the rooster is well fed. Only he could invent such a theory. But, Mr. Speaker, I would remind this same minister, however brilliant—

Mr. Béchard: Roosters were needed.

Mr. Fortin: Roosters were needed, particularly in Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. Mr. Speaker, I will recall for him something that happened in my riding along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River. I was coming back from my office in Sainte-Croix and I stopped in Saint-Pierre-les-Becquets which is, as everybody knows, a tomato kingdom. There you find little stands along the road, and the garden is in the back. The tomatoes are freshly picked from the garden and put in those little stands. I stopped and asked my fellow citizen to sell me a basket of tomatoes. He was asking $1.25 for the biggest one. There were actually 21 tomatoes in that basket. So that cost me $1.25. He was satisfied, he had found an opportunity to work and profit. He was satisfied and happy with his sale and his work.

Two weeks later, my wife went to the Dominion Store to buy some of those famous tomatoes. The store was asking $1.23 for seven small tomatoes wrapped in a cellophane stamped "Dominion". That was two weeks later, Mr. Speaker. Then we are told that the inflation problem cannot be solved. It was not because that tomato grower had no guts, it was not because he did not have a good product to sell. For that matter, Mr. Speaker, it is not because consumers do not have needs to meet.

If there is a problem of increase in the cost of living, that is in our opinion due for a large part—and I say this though I am an eager defender of private enterprise—to businesses that monopolize increasingly the market, that accumulate stores and then, by creating shortages, increase their prices and thus exploit the consumer to the knowledge of the government. There are many reasons for which I cannot accept this, Mr. Speaker, that those large companies should exploit the situation creating shortages, and exploiting the consumer through exorbitant prices.

Those large companies, which are called private, harm the small businesses. In a few years they will encourage the socialization of private enterprise; this has indeed begun. Yet, the small businesses are not responsible for that abuse; the large ones are which take advantage of their financial power to take over the market in a given sector, such as that of food products.

This also applies to supplies of lumber, building materials, anti-freeze, milk, bread, nearly all commodities, especially perishables, those products which cannot be renewed, which are wasted. Mr. Speaker, a mother of a family in Victoriaville, Sainte-Croix, Dosquet, Deschaillons or Parisville or in any other constituency—

Mr. Francis: Or in Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Fortin: —or in Ottawa-Carleton, who goes to a store with the $100 weekly pay of her husband in order to get some food finds that her husband's money which has been painfully earned brings nearly nothing on the table.

● (2050)

The wage earner and his wife are victims of conditions beyond their control which they are in no position to alter, because this government, as the previous ones, has always encouraged agricultural and commercial measures setting a ceiling on production. For example, in the dairy industry, we have known and are still aware of a ceiling set on production more commonly known under the name of quota policy. The application of such a policy has been so ridiculous that our quotas have been set at low levels which farmers could easily reach by toiling and moiling. They could also often exceed them.

According to our genial Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and his predecessor, not only the farmer's production was not paid nor encouraged, but he was penalized and compelled to pay a fine if he had worked or produced too much. Now our government in the Speech from the Throne suggests that we should fight the causes of inflation and lessen its effects by increasing production.

Mr. Speaker, we are going through a period of inflation, independently of international influences. This inflation was brought on in a great measure by ourselves, through lack of foresight and planning.

I see some of my colleagues shaking their heads. I would invite them to go and visit farms in the province of Quebec, in the eastern part of the country and in some parts of Ontario, they would see entire ranges that have been abandoned while some of them had been productive for two, three or four generations. Today, such a farm is not profitable because the farmer does not reap a fair return proportionate to the amount of work he puts into it.

Mr. Speaker, I recall a meeting held in Drummondville which was attended by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté), the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) a former minister, I have lost track of him—because with Mr. Trudeau, things change rather quickly—the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). During this meeting, the farmers were asking for understanding, demanding a dairy policy that would enable them to survive. My colleagues remember that. What was the minister's position? He said: I promise you I shall faithfully voice your grievances and just claims within the Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, this will not prevent the prices consumers have to pay for milk to increase either tomorrow or the day after. This will bring hardly anything more to dairy producers, and some people will once more take advantage of the situation.

I say that the government must do more than keep an eye on rising prices. I have with me a report on the prices of dairy products which was tabled by the Food Prices Review Board on March 20, 1974. What happened to this report? It was placed on shelves to collect dust.

We are told to increase production. All of us have received, in both official languages, a report from the Department of Labour, dated October 1, which provides statistics on strikes and lock-outs for the sole month of July 1974. How does it read? If it is thought production should be increased, let us encourage workers to work and follow the same logic as the Minister of Agriculture. In order to do this, we will have to pay them reasonable wages. Why do we have strikes and lock-outs now? Because workers, who have no other choice, demand that their wages be adjusted to the cost of living and break their collective agreement. There are conflicts in my riding, in the Princeville slaughter house, for example; there was a lock-out because employees wanted a cost of living adjustment. In some other place, there were also problems of cost of living adjustment.

There have been such events in Montreal too, much to the prejudice of the common good. Elderly persons had to walk, and the common good has been completely overlooked. And why is this? Because workers demanded that their wages be adjusted to the cost of living.

Some people would put the blame on the workers, others on the government of Quebec. However, Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Montreal and the area have been through this situation, because everyone wants a higher salary to "run after" prices which "run" faster than income, like a dog after his tail. Absolutely nothing comes out of it. It is completely useless.

The Minister of Agriculture spoke of the eggs. Did he have them destroyed, did he call for the destruction of these eggs? Is it because of a glut of eggs on the market or because these eggs were not up to market prices?

They were destroyed, rather than provide a compensated discount to encourage the consumption of this product. This destruction is truly a national shame, similar to such other wartime actions, like throwing butter in the St. Lawrence, and other foods.

Mr. Speaker, I come back to the subject of production. An October 1 release from the Department of Labour says, and I quote:

> In July 1974, there were 236 work stoppages affecting 105,213 workers. In June, there was a total of 227 work stoppages involving 218,367 workers and last July, 137 work stoppages concerning 74,509 workers.
> In July this year, 39 work stoppages involved 500 workers or more, compared with 31 in June.
> Of those 39 work stoppages, 25 occurred in manufacturings—

—as in Victoriaville, where the main industries are furniture and textile manufacturing, two prosperous industries whose high quality products are in demand but where wages are not so good compared with the provincial average.

Mr. Speaker, the workers cannot make ends meet and keep up with the cost of living. What is being done? Absolutely nothing except talks about the need to deal with the causes and mitigate its effects.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the field of labour in Canada will be studied during this session thanks to the initiative of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). We should find new ways of negotiating, new ways to see that collective agreements are respected and to ensure more justice and a greater share for the working force in a concern's profits. We should allow labour to participate in the planning and growth of businesses.

Mr. Speaker, we must show imagination if we want to increase our production, if there is really a lack of production on our part. When it is realized that there are 39 work stoppages involving more than 500 workers, they themselves involving more than another 500 workers, that means, Mr. Speaker, that we are facing an extremely serious situation.

In the Speech from the Throne, it is mentioned that the social fabric of some countries is crumbling because of pressure on the part of the workers. Mr. Speaker, Canada's social structure may not be crumbling but its citizens are bending under the burden of the increasing cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss another extremely important point. But first I would like to summarize my comments on the Speech from the Throne, as I do not want to prolong our work uselessly. It is important to say what must be said and then put an end to it. I think that the problem I have raised is extremely important and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will stop playing the game of chicken, egg and rooster and that he will really take the situation in hand, tell the truth in this House, clarify his position and give us an intelligent production policy.

I hope the government will realize that production will not be promoted by discouraging workers. I hope the government will realize also that sound consumption and sound distribution of riches cannot be ensured by taxing and overtaxing small taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the hazy Social Credit philosophy, as our colleagues opposite would say, reveals itself today as a philosophy that can really meet the needs of our modern society, since Social Credit is essentially a policy for a just distribution of riches to all consumers, without endangering private enterprise in any way. We are the happy medium of a modern solution and I sincerely hope that during the next sittings, we will have the opportunity of convincing more and more our fellow citizens as regards such positive solutions.

Before resuming my seat, I should like to point out to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) something that is related to the constituencies of Lotbinière, Richelieu, Trois-Rivières—Métropolitain, Portneuf, Champlain, Kamouraska and all constituencies along the St. Lawrence river whether it be the left or the right bank, to the north or to the south. We must all face the same problem, namely erosion on the banks of the St. Lawrence. Under an old law, the federal government cannot do anything if the boats sail at more than 3,000 feet from the bank.

Mr. Speaker, when that legislation was passed, boats were not going as fast as they are now, especially where the river is narrow. Moreover, the tonnage is not the same today as it was 10 or 20 years ago so that in the Lotbinière area, from Saint-Pierre-les-Becquets to Saint-Antoine-de-Tilly, the damages are tremendous. Petitions were signed in all municipalities without exception, resolutions were passed by all municipal councils calling for some financial aid from the federal government for repairing existing wharfs or retaining walls, in order to build new wharves if necessary after having amended that famous legislation. Mr. Speaker, I know that the member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) is aware of that problem since he has made some statements to that effect during the election campaign. I am convinced that all the members of the House whose constituency is situated on the shores of the St. Lawrence have the same problem as in the Lotbinière constituency.

I urge my colleague to set an example for our fellow citizens and stick together whatever is our political allegiance to convince the minister to review completely that part of the legislation and grant financial assistance either to the municipalities, to the riverside companies or the riparian residents themselves, in order to solve that extremely serious problem. The river is a source of wealth and river transportation is an opportunity for us to trade with other countries. The St. Lawrence River is the greatest island sea in the world but it has become the nightmare of our fellow-citizens, for all those who live on its shores. Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to hear the comments of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) on the matter.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate all those who have been elected to preside over our debates. I am confident that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) has been appointed to his high position with the unanimous consent of the House because of his personal qualities; I congratulate him and assure him of my support.

I also want to congratulate the hon. members for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel), Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) and Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) and I wish them the best of success in the tasks to which they were elected.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate and to welcome in this House the hon. members for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) and Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), two hon. members who have already demonstrated that they are formidable speakers.

[English]

York Centre constituency, Mr. Speaker, has sent me back to parliament after a two year absence, helping to create a strong Liberal majority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Kaplan: As I am on my feet for the first time in this session I want to thank all those who encouraged me to stay in politics, to run in York Centre, and who worked to win this seat for me and for my party. I am following here in the footsteps of Jimmy Walker who retired from this House after 12 years of devoted service to York Centre. I want to thank him for his years of hard work in his riding, work which I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, stood me in good stead when he committed his support to me. Jimmy Walker is a credit to this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: York Centre voted Liberal because York Centre people expect that a Liberal government will serve them. I see it as my job for the next four years to make sure, in so far as I can, that it will.

In the Speech from the Throne the government has made a good start. The world is suffering from inflation and from recession, and although Canada is suffering less than other countries from both these problems, my constituents and I myself would identify them as the most serious problems we face in Canada today. The Speech from the Throne addressed both these problems.

I was relieved to see that the government specifically will not follow the traditional approach to fighting inflation, the traditional approach which includes raising taxes across the board, reducing the money supply and cutting back on government programs. I was afraid that the government would follow the lead of the United States where the conservative government of the former president, Mr. Nixon, a few years ago began cutting back government programs. It reduced government involvement by cutting back things like the Great Lakes cleanup and important social and health schemes. These policies, begun by President Nixon will, it seems, be continued by his successor, President Ford.

Here in Canada there are some taxes which should be increased and I am going to refer to them in a moment, and there are a few programs which should be cut back and I should like to refer to them too. By and large, however, York Centre people want good programs to be expanded, and in the Speech from the Throne we see that this will be done. There will be more help for housing; there will be subsidies and supports for farmers to keep the supply of food improving and increasing; there will be higher pensions, especially for veterans and retired civil servants and there will be—and I particularly welcome this—a new entitlement of spouses of senior citizens at the age of 60 to draw old age pensions.

The means test, as applied to entitlement for Canada Pension Plan payments, for those between the ages of 65 and 70 is to be removed. I hope, although the Speech from the Throne did not say this, that these measures will be made retroactive to the date of the last budget, and that all the pensions I referred to will be increased, effective as of that date. I say this because in the election campaign the Canadian people showed strongly that they wanted the increased benefits which were proposed by the government. So I hope that when these programs are introduced, they will be made retroactive.

I have described a number of programs which will cost money. We, in York Centre, will not complain if such programs are expanded. We are willing to pay for them.

Those who attack government spending usually focus on government bureaucracy and government waste. I remind members that it is not only the opposition which is responsible for worrying about government waste. Waste, wherever it occurs in misdirected government planning, is the responsibility of every member of this House. We all represent taxpayers and we all must worry about these things.

But it often happens that those who complain about government waste and alleged government extravagance are really attacking the redistributive function of government. They are against the idea of the government being committed to redistributing a larger part of the Gross National Product to those who need help. That is a responsibility this government recognizes. The amounts spent on bureaucracy are a small proportion of total government spending. Naturally, we must watch waste, but we cannot cut back, particularly not at this time when one of our main worries is the problem of a possible recession.

Government cut-backs never encourage the business community to expand. The government cannot ward off a recession by cutting back on spending. Business is stimulated by valid confidence on the part of the government. A confident government will produce confidence in the business community, which will confidently produce goods knowing they can be bought and provide services, new homes and jobs.

Let me now turn to the problem of inflation. The Speech from the Throne outlines a variety of important programs which will help the needy to catch up with the rest of society. A number of programs are aimed at increasing supply. Hopefully, when the budget is introduced the government will bring back the proposed excess profits tax.

Here I want to focus on an important piece of legislation promised by the government, the bill dealing with unjustified price increases.

Unjustified price increases are not always easy to identify. Statistics can be misleading. One hears of a business or an industry's profits increasing by 300 per cent. Sometimes one may find that the profit in the preceding period, the base year, may have been the equivalent, say, of 1 per cent on invested capital. In that case 300 per cent increase over the base period may be justified. The consumer must face the fact that business faces rising costs, just as he does.

Yet I honestly believe that, although some increases are justified, some increases in our economy are unjustified. They happen in sectors of our economy where the market system is not working properly, where goods are in short supply. Let me refer to the steel industry.

About two years ago the steel industry committed itself to almost doubling production in Ontario alone. That showed great confidence in the future of Canada. It also showed that at the then current price levels the steel industry felt justified in expanding. At present, as steel is in very short supply, great price increases in steel have taken place, and not only at this primary level. I submit that very great profits are being earned, profits which are not justified because the industry had already responded to the incentive to expand. It had already made its decision to expand. So, it has been taking advantage of the situation in which industries, other consumers, are in desperate need of steel. They are in the hands of the steel industry.

I urge the government to bring forward rapidly legislation for dealing with unjustified price increases. After that legislation has been passed I urge that it be enforced vigorously. If it is enforced vigorously it will affect not only the specific prices it is addressed to. Knowing the new power of the government, other businesses and industries will tend to act with restraint, especially in areas of the economy where the market mechanism is not working properly.

Let me turn next to the problem of housing. Housing costs have become the most serious single item facing the people of my constituency and, indeed, of metropolitan Toronto. The retired couple living on a fixed income takes small comfort from a pension which increases by 11 per cent, 12 per cent, or by whatever high figure the cost of living increases, if, in that same period, their rent goes up by 30 or 40 per cent. A pension geared to cost of living increases means little to people in that situation. I welcome the appointment of a new minister responsible in the field of housing. I welcome his vigour and his determination to cope with the problem. I am glad to see important housing programs outlined in the Speech from the Throne. Yet I suggest that the problem of housing is really one to be dealt with by the provinces and municipalities.

Let me ask this question, and suggest an answer to it. Why does a house on our side of the Canadian border cost almost twice as much as a similar sort of house in the United States? Why does a house in Ottawa cost three times as much as a house in a community of about the same size in New York State?

Mr. Benjamin: This is what happens under your version of free enterprise.

Mr. Kaplan: The climate is almost the same; houses in both places need to be built equally well. The mortgage interest rate is about the same. Actually mortgage interest is deductible from income in the United States. From this one would expect the price of houses in the United States to be higher, but it is not.

I have looked at policies pursued by our municipalities regarding the provision of housing and have come to the sad conclusion that those policies are designed largely to serve the interests of those who are already settled, already satisfied with their accommodations, and the communities in which they live. Theirs are the voices which carry most weight with the municipalities and provinces of this country. I suggest there has been a trade-off between accommodation and amenity. In this country, they have worried more about providing amenities, acceding to the wishes of those who are the power behind municipal and provincial governments, than about providing needed accommodation for those who are underhoused and whose housing needs are not well looked after. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government must take on the responsibility of protecting the others, those who do not have the kind of housing they want.

When I look at the policies that are outlined in the Speech from the Throne I see there is some hope that, if co-operation can be obtained, the federal government can make a lot of yards and bring a lot of benefit to people who are presently not in the kind of accommodation they want or deserve.

I want to refer back for a moment to the problem of the powers of municipalities. In the municipality of metropolitan Toronto there is now a policy that discourages the city from going up. At the provincial and regional levels there is a policy that discourages the city from going out. When you have a growing city that cannot go up and cannot go out, what happens is that a pressure starts pushing downward. That is exactly what I noticed as I campaigned in York Centre in the last election.

What is taking place in York Centre and other parts of metro Toronto is a doubling up of people in the existing accommodation. In North York and York Centre there is a phantom population in a vast number of single family residences living in basements and on second floors.

At the moment all of this is illegal. People are unsure of their status. They are afraid to move into this kind of accommodation because they do not know if they can put their children into school. They are reluctant to put their names on voters' lists. They live under the eyes of neighbours who have the power at any time to complain and have them driven out.

Although this is not a federal responsibility I did come to a conclusion during my campaign. I urge that the borough of North York and other municipalities recognize as a fact the existence of this population. Thought should be given and policy should be implemented to legalize the status of the second family, the outsider who is sharing a single family home.

This would have a number of benefits. It would automatically increase the stock of housing in Toronto by many, many thousands. It would make family home ownership easier, because the family that wants to buy a house could do so knowing with certainty that it would receive income from the rental part of the house. This would help pay the mortgage. It would be easier for senior citizens to hold on to their homes by taking in another family to share their residences. Most important, it would normalize the status of the phantom population.

I have been talking about policies of the province and the municipality. I want to turn to policies the federal government should look at in addition to those contained in the Speech from the Throne.

It should be observed that rental accommodation is no longer being built in the municipality of metropolitan Toronto. Rents on existing accommodation are rising very high. As high as they are rising, this is still no incentive to builders again to start building rental accommodation. They are holding back.

I urge the government to consider doubling the capital cost allowance which is applicable under the Income Tax Act to rental accommodation such as apartment buildings.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

With the interest rate as high as it is today, a doubling of the capital cost allowance would be the equivalent of an interest reduction of 3 or 4 per cent. That is very substantial. That kind of reduction should get building going again on badly needed rental accommodation in the metropolitan Toronto area.

I also urge the government to consider looking at the park property that has been acquired along the waterfront of Toronto and consider building on it or dedicating a part of that for accommodation. This was very expensive land. Park accommodation and recreation are badly needed in the municipality of metropolitan Toronto. However, considering the need for housing, some consideration should be given to using part of that newly acquired land for the development of balanced housing communities.

I am inspired to say a word about the Downsview air base which I now represent. I want to address myself to the problem of housing for veterans. Unless there is a change in the government's plans, the policy of giving a concessionary mortgage to veterans to assist them in establishing themselves on land or in housing will be terminated next March. I urge the government to consider using a part of Downsview air base for housing, particularly housing for veterans.

One factor which may not have been noted is that a person who is still serving in the armed forces is not eligible for the benefits of land acquisition under the Veterans Land Act. This means that unless the person quits his job and leaves the service before next March, he will lose the right to any benefit under that program.

I urge the minister to look at the Downsview air base. A lot of land included in that base is not required for its present purposes. Balanced housing is a need. Balanced housing would be an acceptable solution for the use of part of that property. Keeping in mind the needs of veterans and others, that could be a development of tremendous importance to York Centre.

I wish to conclude by making a few comments about the unemployment insurance situation. At the time of the 1972 election the administrative problems of the Unemployment Insurance Commission were extremely serious. During that election unemployment insurance was the major issue in many parts of Canada. Since then the control of that system has been very greatly improved. In fact it could be argued that in the balance between service to the client and control, we have pretty well done as much as we can do on the side of control.

As a member of parliament I receive many calls from people who have been cut off unemployment insurance, something that did not happen very much in 1972. Some are justified and some are unjustified. This suggests that there may be a good balance between control and service. I would like to see the government turn to the concept of unemployment insurance with the basic fundamentals of the plan. I submit that adjustments can now be made in light of the experience with that plan over the past few years.

I was very pleased to find that in a speech delivered by the responsible minister during the election campaign last May, he described two of the changes that would have been brought about in the legislative program then before the House. I hope those two changes will be brought forward quickly.

One of these changes would have the effect of increasing the amount of service required before there is entitlement to unemployment insurance. It is presently eight weeks. During the election campaign the Conservatives argued this should be increased to 12 weeks. That was their policy. What is needed is a cutback in the amount of benefits that are acquired after a small amount of service. In light of experience there is justification for giving only four or five weeks' entitlement after eight or 12 weeks' service, or whatever it is going to be. I thing it is wrong to give 20 weeks of benefit after only eight weeks of service. That is an undue incentive to people who are only marginally committed to the labour force.

● (2130)

Mr. Benjamin: What does that mean?

Mr. Kaplan: "Marginally committed to the labour force" refers to an individual who works from choice and not from necessity.

An hon. Member: Sounds like a Liberal Member of Parliament.

Mr. Kaplan: I was glad also to see that the minister intends to do something about the regulations which apply to people who quit their jobs or who are dismissed for cause. Right now some weeks of benefit are lost, so there is a measure of disincentive if a person quits or is dismissed for cause. However, the minister has noted that the disincentive is not sufficient—there ought to be stronger provisions.

Back in 1972, people who criticized this aspect of the Unemployment Insurance Act were often accused of being against the working man. Some of us suffered unfairly under that label at the time. But today I do not believe it appears reactionary to be critical of the way in which unemployment insurance is working. I believe the working man, too, is critical of a system which allows someone beside him to quit, or be dismissed for cause, and then proceed, virtually on the same basis as the person who has been laid off, to claim unemployment benefits.

An hon. Member: Five weeks.

Mr. Kaplan: Well, two weeks goes for everyone. So the penalty is only three weeks, and that is not enough. I was glad to hear the minister say before the election he was prepared to do something about this situation. I can assure the minister that changes of this kind will be supported, not only by the business community but by the population at large who are disappointed that a small but important number of people have been abusing the unemployment insurance plan.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is now 9.35 p.m. and I recognize that at 9.45 I shall have to call a division on this matter. For this reason I am reluctant to recognize an hon. member who has obviously prepared remarks of a duration longer than the eight or nine minutes remaining to us. It was my intention to recognize the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) as the next speaker, but rather than have him begin his speech and see it abruptly terminated I wonder whether the House would not be prepared to proceed with the division at this time, recognizing that the hon. member would technically be the first speaker on the amendment tomorrow, once we had disposed of the sub-amendment.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lefebvre: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, might I say that the vote has already been announced—that the bells are to start ringing at 9.45—

An hon. Member: Let them ring that much longer.

Mr. Speaker: It would be the idea that the bells would ring somewhat longer so that no hon. member would be inconvenienced. The question is on the amendment to the amendment in the name of Mr. Broadbent. All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost. It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock a.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 2(2).

At 10.14 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 4, 1974

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT (EDMONTON WEST)—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS OF INTERNAL ECONOMY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, one that I raised on the opening day of this session and which, by agreement, was deferred for presentation to this House for determination by Your Honour as to whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. I have a motion which, on that determination by Your Honour, I hope to present to this House. I may say that I have had consultations and my presentation this morning is by agreement with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) as to its timing. I hope that the question I raise and the way that it will be presented in the motion will commend itself to members of the House.

I am speaking to the interpretation of section 16 of the House of Commons Act, principally subsection (1), dealing with the composition or the nomination of the commissioners of internal economy. As you know, the commissioners are appointed to assist and advise Mr. Speaker in determining the questions dealing with the administration of this House. There are financial questions, questions of administration, and so forth, as laid down in sections 16, 17 and 18 of the House of Commons Act. In so doing, and in calling into question the practice that has existed of naming the four commissioners to assist Mr. Speaker exclusively from the cabinet, I am putting to the House that this interpretation is too restrictive and that it affects thereby the privileges of all members of the House. This House is its own master; the cabinet is not master of this House. This House stands on its own.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In raising the point may I hasten to add that I am not challenging the nomination of the present four members of the Privy Council who were named on September 30. That to me is clearly correct under the act. However, my point is that section 16, subsection (1) reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council shall appoint four members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who are also members of the House of Commons, who, with the Speaker of the House of Commons, shall be commissioners for the purpose of this section and sections 17 and 18.

I find the method of appointment and the reporting to the House perfectly correct. However, I have raised this point on previous occasions in various Committees and also with the Prime Minister, and I may say that in the reply I received from the right hon. Prime Minister, he raised certain points to substantiate the present practice which were wrong in law, and I want to touch on those briefly.

First of all, the point is made that the presence of cabinet ministers is necessary to supervise the provision and the payment of funds voted to this House as required. This argument falls to the ground immediately because in the other place, which is an integral part of the parliament of Canada, there are no commissioners. There is a committee of internal economy composed of hon. senators from all parts of that chamber who advise Mr. Speaker of the Senate, and they have the same function as have the commissioners in this House. Therefore, there is no requirement, in so far as parliament is concerned, to have cabinet ministers only supervising the distribution of funds as required under sections 17 and 18 of the House of Commons Act.

Second, it is said in justification that in 1868, when the House of Commons Act was passed, it was the practice that members of the Privy Council on leaving office resigned from the Privy Council. That is wrong in law and in history, because in 1867 there were cases of members of the Privy Council who, on vacating their position as cabinet ministers, attempted to resign. The Governor General of the day refused their resignations. In 1868 the predecessor to the House of Commons Act, the Titles Act, was passed along with the first table of precedents. It was made clear that members of the Privy Council, who then were not of the cabinet, still remained members of the Privy Council. It is a well known fact that a member of the Privy Council cannot resign without the consent of the Queen. He cannot resign unilaterally, nor can he be forced to vacate his position except at his specific request and with the consent of the Queen.

A further point is made that there is some sort of constitutional convention governing this interpretation of the words "Privy Council". Mr. Speaker, constitutional convention never established law. I am looking at the interpretation of a statute. A further point was made that one must look to the events surrounding the passage of the legislation and the intent of the legislation as evidenced by what was said in the House at the time of passing the law. Of course, that is a totally erroneous premise in so far as the interpretation of the statutes in Canada is concerned. In support of that contention we have the opinion of no less an august body than the whole membership of the Supreme Court of Canada, to cite the latest case of 1961, the Reader's Digest versus the Minister of National Revenue. The court said there is no way, in our jurisprudence, of introducing evidence of intention of strictures by citing speeches in the House of Commons, or elsewhere in the parliament of Canada, in order to arrive at an interpretation of the statute. The statute speaks for itself.

I trust other hon. members may express themselves with regard to this point of the privileges of hon. members, Mr. Speaker. On this narrow basis I submit to you, and to the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that the interpretation of section 16(1) has been and still is far too narrow and that it could encompass the appointment of privy councillors not of the cabinet, for purposes of the statute, that is to assist you in the administration of this House. I hope my suggestion commends itself to hon. members and to members of the government. As in so many other legislatures all around the world, this question should be in the hands of a small committee of senior members from all parts of the House. Such small committee could, of course, include one or two cabinet ministers, though no more.

In summary of my submission I submit that there is a prima facie case for your consideration, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I have not the text of my motion at the present time because of a problem with translation and transportation from the Confederation Building, but it will be forthcoming. In effect my motion will be:

That section 16 of the Senate and House of Commons Act shall be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for examination as to its interpretation, its suitability, and report to this House.

I hope that other hon. members will be prepared to comment on my motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member did raise this point on Monday last, which was the first occasion upon which it could have been raised. At that time he indicated that rather than take the time of the House then, his argument would be deferred to another occasion. I am not sure that wording was enshrined in an agreement, but as a result, the matter is being raised this morning.

At this point I may say that I did not on Monday, I have not now nor do I propose at this time, to rule on whether there is in fact a question of privilege involved. I have some doubt about that as it involves the interpretation of a statute, an interpretation which may have been made on a wider basis. I am troubled as to whether there is any indication of privilege and that it must have been or ought to have been raised as such.

In any case, the hon. member has given an indication that, after some consultation, there might be unanimous consent and that his motion would carry this morning with the subject referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I am prepared to seek that unanimous consent now. If it is forthcoming then the motion will be put and carried. If it is not, I would propose to reserve on the basic question of whether it is a question of privilege, hear argument and deliver reasons for my decision at some later date. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member's motion, as he has outlined it, to be put at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion and about the difficulty of tabling it physically. Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROCEDURE FOR DEALING WITH BILL CONCERNING GRAIN HANDLERS STRIKE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, there stands on notice, in the name of the Minister of Labour, a bill respecting the grain handlers' work stoppage. This bill will be introduced on Monday.

In order to expedite this matter perhaps we could make it an order now that, when orders of the day are reached on Monday, we will proceed with the motion for second reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is this agreed?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I think we can agree. May I make a further suggestion. I am aware of the difficulty the government faces with regard to this legislation and I appreciate having been made aware of the physical contents of the bill by the President of the Privy Council. This will enable me to advise our people. Because of the difficulty in which the government finds itself I want to co-operate. I am bound to say that the position of the Minister of Labour, and of the government, is very much like that of a client of mine with whom I dealt with some years ago. When his wife was already in labour he applied for hospital and medical insurance. When challenged, he could only reply weakly that the situation was one of sudden and urgent necessity. He had forgotten about it in the last nine months.

Nevertheless, we are prepared to co-operate. May I make this additional suggestion. Because of the need to facilitate passage of the legislation which the House in its wisdom may decide to enact, and also because many members will want an opportunity to intervene in that debate, could we not add to the order already suggested this: that we suspend the usual rules as to adjournment on Monday, deal with the bill on second reading—I am talking of second reading only—and then, after all members who wish to make a contribution have done so, refer the bill to the appropriate standing committee.

This would give an opportunity for hon. members to voice their opinions and at the same time advance the legislation so that it can receive examination in committee. If necessary, the committee will consider the question of witnesses as well and proceed with the bill expeditiously, having in mind all the circumstances.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we are anxious to expedite dealing with this bill, but we think a better way of doing it would be to agree to a limitation on the time of speeches, perhaps not for the introducers and main reply from the opposition, but generally reduce the length of speeches to try to get it through in one day without prolonging the session of the House. In addition, we would much prefer that it be dealt with by committee of the whole rather than referred to another committee of this House. It is a matter of great importance to Canadians generally and we think the whole House should deal with it in committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the discussions we had with the hon. President of the Privy Council, we still agree to support his motion and further agree with the suggestion the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) of the New Democratic Party has just made that, when the time comes, instead of referring the bill to the standing committee, perhaps we should rather discuss it in committee of the whole, so that considering the importance of the bill, we can pass it as speedily as possible.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I suppose we can hardly anticipate now what the House will decide on Monday with regard to where the bill goes. It may be a question for argument, but I feel it would be most improper not to have the opportunity of examining the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) at least with regard to what has happened and with relation to the details of the bill. That cannot be done effectively in the House. The bill would come back to the House for third reading and there would be an opportunity then for members to make further decisions. We will facilitate the committee proceedings. For our part, there cannot be any agreement to dispense with the normal course which is that the bill go to a standing committee, unless the House should make an order otherwise. We are not prepared to consent to that order.

There is one other point. With regard to the proposal made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), we are willing to suggest that after the original speeches there be a limitation of 20 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: There is no motion before the House at this time; simply a statement on motions by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). However, this is a matter which will be dealt with on Monday. If there are further consultations and an agreement that an order of the House be made later this day, so be it. In any case we have no proposal for an order, simply an announcement. In any event, that will be the business of the day on Monday. Have I misunderstood the nature of the remarks?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be desirable that an order of the House do issue today so that preparation can be made for the debate on Monday. Like the spokesmen for the NDP and the Social Credit party, the government would prefer that the bill be referred to the committee of the whole. However, the Progressive Conservative party House leader will not give consent to that procedure. It would expedite consideration of this very important measure if, notwithstanding our particular reservations about the committee to which it might be referred, we could agree today to an order that it follow the ordinary rules of the House.

As hon. members know, it is part of our rules that bills of this kind are referred to a standing committee and that consent is required for them to be referred to a Committee of the Whole. I would hope that later this day an order might be made which would be acceptable to all members.

Mr. Speaker: Is the President of the Privy Council seeking an order now that the bill should be dealt with on Monday in any case, with an order later as to how and when, or does he consider it better to leave it until a full order is put forward later in the day?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question about the importance of dealing with this bill immediately—

Mr. Diefenbaker: After five weeks of delay!

Mr. Sharp: I think an order should be made now. I would prefer it if the House leader for the Official Opposition could frame an order now, and then, perhaps, we could dispose of the matter immediately.

Mr. Baldwin: If the hon. members speaking for the New Democratic Party and the Creditiste Party, despite their very reasonable reservations, would agree at this time to the course I have mentioned, we could dispose of the matter now and make the one order.

Mr. Brewin: I have consulted with the other members of my party and they are agreeable.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, this proposal is also agreeable to us.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall it be ordered, then, that the bill be introduced and stand for second reading on Monday?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: And could we not add the items with which I believe we have already agreed in principle—that the ordinary rule as to adjournment be suspended and that the—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Well, I gathered this was the understanding on the basis of which I made my suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: I would respectfully suggest we have gone as far as we can go at this moment. If there are other consultations which might result in an order later in the day, so be it. But, for the moment, enough is enough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I should like to take this occasion to remind hon. members that since this arrangement varies the order of business for Monday we shall not be debating the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne on Monday, with the result that the House will not sit at eleven in the morning but rather at two o'clock in the afternoon.

THE EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE AUTHORIZED SHARE CAPITAL, CLARIFY DEFINITIONS AND POWERS

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-9, to amend the Export Development Act.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO DEAL WITH ACCIDENTS IN THE NORTH—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT ON PLANE CRASH NEAR FROBISHER BAY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the number of air crashes in the north and the grounding of the motor vessel Minna in a break-up of the ice, and since obviously there is no means in the north to prevent or to deal with this kind of situation, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to request or instruct his ministers of defence, the environment and transport to get together and produce measures that will permit our government, through the armed forces and other services, to provide an expert presence so necessary in the north to deal with this kind of tragedy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take that suggestion under very serious consideration.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Transport relating to the inquest into the tragic plane crash that took place near Frobisher Bay last February. May I ask the minister why the report, which is apparently fully prepared, of the investigation conducted by the minister's own department has not been made available to the coroner. I ask the minister why it will not be made available until release is authorized by some very high level in the transport department.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there must be a mistake in the way the question has been put, a mistake the hon. Leader of the Opposition made when he said the report is "fully reported or ready"...

[English]

It is not complete because there are some technical things that have to be added. I am just waiting for that before making the report public.

REPORT ON PLANE CRASH NEAR FROBISHER BAY—REASON FOR DELAY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since this kind of investigation involves the department's investigating itself, and since presumably this is one of the matters the minister has in mind overcoming or dealing with in the commitment in the Speech from the Throne, is it not open to suspicion, to put it very bluntly, that the report has not been released because officials or others in the department wish to edit the report, since it involves an investigation of the department itself and may mean some finding of default or defalcation on the part of the department?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): If this is so, Mr. Speaker, then I think I have the same interest as the Leader of the Opposition. I am going to look into it. I asked the question myself in the department and was told the report had not been published because the department was still waiting for the complete report. If the hon. gentleman thinks somebody has something to hide, then I will try and get it revealed.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Since his department promised me that the report would be ready in June, why has it taken so much longer to produce this report? After all, the truth cannot be changed after the accident in February.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker, the truth cannot be changed, but sometimes it takes time to reveal the truth.

POLLUTION

OIL SPILL FROM MOTOR VESSEL "MINNA"—MEASURES TO CONTROL DAMAGE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment which relates to the question of the Leader of the Opposition regarding the oil spill from the motor vessel Minna under charter to the oceanographic service and which ran aground in Brewer Bay off Resolution Island on August 18. In view of the fact that the crew and scientific equipment were removed on August 21 and the vessel declared abandoned at that time, why was the supply of light diesel fuel not also removed then, or in the intervening six weeks, so that the present damaging oil spill could have been avoided?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there were attempts to empty the ship's fuel oil but they were unsuccessful. This is quite understandable and is one of the reasons for which the ship went aground. The sea in that region is very active. It was impossible to remove the oil, which of course was the responsibility of the owners of the ship. At that time DOE was not responsible for the ship but felt it had a moral responsibility to insist that attempts be made to remove the oil. That has not been possible.

Our assessment is that damage to the environment will be minimal because the sea is active and the oil will be flushed out to sea. Since it is light fuel oil it will be rapidly emulsified and evaporated.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River may ask a final supplementary.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, if the responsibility lies with the owners of the ship, has the government taken any action to ask the owners to provide for cleaning up? I cannot agree with the minister that because of the lightness of the oil there is no damage.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It would be preferable if we simply confine ourselves to questions, especially when we are well down the line in supplementaries. I thought the question was clearly put; perhaps the minister would answer.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, we did try to take measures to avoid damage, but the damage is minimal. We knew that the only thing to do in a case like this was to hope the oil would be washed out to sea, and this is what will happen. It will evaporate in a matter of weeks, and this is the best way to deal with that particular situation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST OF INDIAN BROTHERHOOD FOR MEETING WITH CABINET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the request of the National Indian Brotherhood representing some 300,000 registered Indians for a meeting with the cabinet and the Prime Minister to deal with the urgent problems facing the native peoples of Canada in a co-operative atmosphere, will the Prime Minister arrange to meet this request and agree to the interview proposed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will consider the matter very seriously, and if a meeting is arranged I will let the House know.

TRADE

ALLEGED DETERIORATION OF CANADAS' TRADE BALANCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since Statistics Canada stated on September 27 that during the first eight months of the year real exports from Canada had decreased by 5 per cent compared with the same eight month period the year before, and that during the first eight months real imports to Canada had increased by 4 per cent, would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what steps he and his department plan to take to overcome this serious and continuing deterioration of our trade balance?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is well aware, the strength of Canadian exports depends very much on the health of foreign economies and the willingness and ability of our foreign customers to buy. Unfortunately, foreign economies have not been as strong as the Canadian economy. Our exports have not increased as fast as our imports, and that is the reason for the figures the hon. member has just given the House. At the same time, I should like to assure the House that Canadian exports are very strong, and are up 26 per cent this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gillespie: Also, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I should like to make this further comment. We will be seeking in all manner of ways to liberalize world trade, and it is particularly significant that in the Speaker's gallery today is the director general of GATT—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—who is visiting Ottawa, Mr. Olivier Long. We welcome him to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister not aware that the real figures I have indicated, as expressed by Statistics Canada, show what the true picture is? They take the exports and imports in dollar value and subtract the inflation figure from them, which leaves the real picture. The picture that I have given is that given by Statistics Canada, showing that exports have been decreasing and imports increasing.

Mr. Gillespie: I should like to reassure the hon. member that Canada is continuing to run a favourable trade balance.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MINISTERIAL MEETING WITH NATIVE REPRESENTATIVES—REASON FOR DELAY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he has been meeting with representatives of the Indian caravan group. Have there been any communications and what has been the nature of any discussions which may have taken place.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, to date I have not met with representatives of this group. We had a tentative meeting set for two p.m. on Monday. They were otherwise occupied. Since that time there have been, I think, three communications between representatives of this group and my office. I have indicated I am prepared to meet with them but there apparently has not been willingness on their part to take advantage of this opportunity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, apparently the minister is now willing to meet with these people. Has there been any suggestion they have demanded terms before they will meet with the minister? Has there been anything of that kind to delay a meeting which should take place? Otherwise, the situation will be exacerbated the longer they remain here.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, the only condition I imposed is that I am not prepared to go down to the Indian embassy at Carbide Mills.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That means you closed the door.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister also accept the suggestion made by the National Indian Brotherhood that there should be an independent investigation of the violence of Monday on Parliament Hill?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of that suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I will discuss that with the minister. I do not know what is deemed to be an independent investigation. We believe the facts are well known to the public. The government has hidden nothing.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FERRY SYSTEM—REASON FOR FAILURE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO SUBSIDIZE

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister or possibly the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the B.C. ferry system is the only ferry system that is part of the trans-Canada highway and not subsidized by the federal government, could the Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport tell us why the government refuses to subsidize the B.C. ferry system?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think, Mr. Speaker, we subsidize only ferries which service two provinces. I do not think there is a borderline between Victoria and Vancouver. This ferry system is within the same province. This is the reason we do not give any subsidy.

Mr. Reynolds: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That answer might make some sense if there were not a ferry service on Lake Huron totally subsidized by the federal government. I would still like to know why the government refuses to subsidize the B.C. ferry service when it subsidizes a service within one province.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we have to take one or the other decision, that is either to subsidize the first one or subsidize the second one.

Does he intend to take action on the recommendations made in the report of the Economic Council of Canada on the problem of housing construction, particularly concerning the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Concerning this particular suggestion, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. As to the general recommendations in the report, many of them are quite interesting and the government intends to take action on them.

EGGS—KNOWLEDGE OF DEPARTMENT OF OVER-PRODUCTION AND MEASURES TO DEAL WITH IT

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that there is circulating in the egg industry, as well as branches of his department, weekly statistics with regard to not only egg production but also hatching of chicks which eventually become pullets, and in light of the fact that over a long period earlier this year these statistics clearly showed not only an over-production of eggs but also chicks, would the minister tell us what action he or his department took either personally, through CEMA or through the council to avert what is obviously an over-production of both eggs and chicks.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hatchery people run their business and CEMA runs its business. The total over-production of eggs which caused the problem amounted to one-half of one per cent. If the hon. member has any way to solve that problem I think CEMA, the provincial marketing boards and the hatchery people would be most interested in receiving his advice.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. In view of the fact that statistics of April this year, for example, showed an obvious over-hatching of chicks which would eventually find their way into the pullet market, was the minister's department not prepared at that time to avert the possibility of those chicks finding their way into the laying market which would obviously create an over-production some months later.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be made very plain that there is no control over the hatchery people of this nation in respect of how many eggs they can set in their incubators or how many chickens they can hatch. We do not have that kind of control. The provincial marketing board does not have total control and therefore does not have authority in that area. It is asking for changes so that more control can be established in order to properly stabilize the market and so on. This will all be brought out at the hearing. They will tell us what they have asked for, what they suggested and so on. But I make it very clear that the Department of Agriculture does not run their business. It can advise people in respect of over-production. The publications issued by the department have shown what the department thinks about over-production and so on, but I repeat that if you can show me any industry that can come any closer in estimating the production of such a perishable, fragile product as eggs, that is, not be out more than one-half per cent of total production, I would like to know it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a final supplementary.

Mr. Jarvis: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence. Would the minister then simply tell the House whether it is his position now that production at the hatchery level should be controlled be it through CEMA, the council or whatever. Is that the position he now takes in respect of hatchery production in the poultry industry.

Mr. Whelan: I said yesterday in my speech that you could not have stability in any market, let alone that involving a perishable product, unless you have some control. That is up to the producers or those who organize this program. This government said it does not intend to run their business. In any country where the government runs the agricultural business there is not over-production but rather under-production most of the time. The problem here is over-production. If we had that problem in other parts of society we would not have the problems we have today.

Mr. Hees: That is the gospel according to St. Eugene.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON EXPIRATION OF FREEZE—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF PROFIT POSITION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement made by the President of the CPR, which had the appearance of a decision already made, that there would be heavy freight rate increases when the freeze expires on December 3 which will be made in two or three large bites, may I ask the minister whether the government has any intention of extending the freeze or calling upon the Canadian Transport Commission to severely restrict any proposed freight rates increases of Mr. Sinclair.

● (1150)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think we read the same newspapers but I am not sure to which newspaper the hon. member referred. I said yesterday or the day before that I was meeting with the western ministers on October 20 or 21. I want to discuss this problem because, as the hon. member knows, the freeze applies only to about 22 per cent of the rates. So we have to see really whether this is something we should maintain or whether we should do something else. But I would like to discuss it with the interested ministers, not only the western ministers because the others are interested also. So at this moment we have no decision but we are considering the matter.

Mr. Benjamin: I wish to ask the minister whether, in view of the profits of CP Ltd. of $122 million last year compared with $170 million in 1974 and $200 million in 1975, and in the light of the fact that the railways have large investments in real estate and other such operations which have nothing to do with transportation, as well as in the light of the very healthy position, to put it mildly, of CPR, he would require the railroad to direct a larger proportion of its profits and capital into railway plant and equipment than into other enterprises.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the only comment I can make at this stage is to say I am very happy to see that CPR recognizes that, while it is a very profitable business to move goods in Canada, we will have to take that into account in any future move we will make.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONSULTATIONS ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF TRIPARTITE BODY OF LABOUR, MANAGEMENT AND GOVERNMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Given the fact that there will be problems resulting from the fact that the government does not have any inflationary policy in particular and noting that last month in Vancouver the minister called for an intensive examination of the collective bargaining process which could involve a tripartite body of labour, management and government, could the minister give us any advice as to what steps were taken to date in order to bring about the establishment of such an important and much needed body?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have held informal meetings with some principals involved in the labour and business communities but, more important, some of them dealt with the over-all inflationary situation. The Prime Minister has also taken part in such meetings. We hope that at meetings of this kind some suggestions will be made to deal with the problem.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the importance of the adoption of the principle of public interest, which he discounted yesterday, I should like to ask the minister whether he would give further particulars regarding the terms of reference that he discussed with the parties involved and give us some indication as to their reaction or any other particulars.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I think that the hon. member might agree that it is not particularly helpful, when you are discussing these matters, to come up with specific proposals before you have even had a chance to meet with the parties and obtain their views regarding how they wish to proceed. We have been criticized before, not only by some of the interested parties, but by the opposition, for totally undermining any meaningful consultations by coming to conclusions prior to consultations with the parties.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUCCESS OF DEPARTMENT IN OPERATING NEW BUDGETING SCHEME—ALLEGED ORDERS TO CUT OPERATIONAL COSTS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. On October 10 last year he announced a new budgeting scheme for the armed forces which would "allow for substantial increases in capital expenditures for badly needed new equipment". Could the minister advise the House as to the success of his announced program?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will realize that in the intervening period there have been vast increases in costs. Our main expenditures in national defence are in the categories of personnel, maintenance and operations, and new equipment. We have found it necessary to reduce the expenditures, or try to, in all three of these categories in order to stay within the budget.

Mr. McKinnon: Could the minister inform the House whether his budget is now in such disarray that he has ordered commanders in the field to cut their operational and maintenance budgets by 30 per cent or, alternatively, does he contemplate a further reduction in the strength of the forces?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Richardson: I have indicated that we have found it necessary to reduce expenditures in all categories. We are by no means in disarray. We are operating in an orderly way under difficult high cost conditions.

ALLEGATION EGGS SHIPPED FROM NEWFOUNDLAND TO BRITISH COLUMBIA WERE DESTROYED WHEN USABLE—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR PROCESSING

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Agriculture please tell the House and the people of British Columbia who are currently paying not 84 cents but 94 cents a dozen for eggs, whether or not many of the supposedly rotten eggs shipped all the way from Newfoundland to British Columbia for final destruction were not actually rotten but rather many were in a whole and usable form and declared rotten or cracked in order to justify their destruction. Furthermore, in view of the fact that major plants processing raw eggs to powdered eggs were and continue to operate at less than 50 per cent capacity, is the minister prepared to purchase or subsidize the processing of current or future surpluses to ensure that this despicable waste does not continue to occur?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is not aware of all the details regarding the shipment of those eggs. Some of the things he said would not have been said by him if he had been aware. The eggs shipped from Newfoundland were commercial eggs. They were transferred from 40 foot cars to 50 foot cars without government inspection. Then they were shipped for processing because I was told there were no eggs available for processing at the plants in western Canada. Why in the world did it take three weeks to ship eggs to British Columbia? In spite of this, some people are suggesting we should have shipped them to Austria. If it takes that long to reach western Canada, I do not know how in the world we could have shipped them overseas. I am sure the hon. member would not blame CEMA which does not set the price of eggs in British Columbia. It is the British Columbia egg marketing board which sets the price of their own eggs, as do the other provinces. CEMA has the obligation of taking surplus eggs from the provincial marketing boards. If the hon. member thinks that they are happy about the waste or that anyone else is happy about it, he is wrong. He should check the history of egg production and see how eggs were destroyed by farmers feeding them to their livestock. He should go back to 1971 and see what people did with eggs then.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE GRAIN IS MOVING FROM THE LAKEHEAD—AMOUNT OF DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to direct my question either to the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Transport. A report in the October 5 issue of the Financial Post shows that 145 ships have waited for more than six weeks to be loaded with wheat, 75 million bushels of which are piled up at Thunder Bay contained in 4,000 railway cars. Can we be sure that at least grain from that port is moving at this time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. gentleman knows that there has been a strike in the great lakes area. I should like to know if he has a solution to that, other than getting the parties together and settling it.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I misunderstood one of the ministers who spoke yesterday—that is quite easy sometimes—but is the strike at Thunder Bay and in the St. Lawrence area over and is the grain moving? One minister says it is not moving and he cannot do anything about it, he is paralysed, and the other minister says he is not paralysed and things are going ahead. Surely, we can get an answer.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Grain is moving out of Port Arthur.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask one more question. When the bill is introduced on Monday, will the Minister of Labour presenting the bill be prepared to tell us how much the demurrage charges to the western farmers amount to because of the strikes which were allowed to drag on as a result of the paralysis of this government.

Mr. Munro: Without indicating any agreement with the excessive comment of the hon. member with respect to this matter, it seems that he wishes to discuss the bill next Monday. Perhaps he has come to a conclusion before the start of the discussions. I can certainly advise the hon. member that we are trying to get this whole grain matter resolved as quickly as possible.

MANPOWER

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN ALLOCATIONS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA AND QUEBEC IN VIEW OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the unemployment in the lumber industry, particularly in British Columbia and Quebec with 11,000 workers laid off in British Columbia and 9,000 in Quebec, and in view of the depressed state of that market, will the Prime Minister advise if his government is considering increasing the allocation for the winter works capital fund this winter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any announcement we make in that regard will be made to the House.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION AND INCREASE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs but I do not see him. Is the parliamentary secretary for the minister present? Anybody present? I will direct my question to the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that this depression in the lumber industry has been exacerbated by the state of the housing market where most of the domestic consumption of lumber takes place, will the parliamentary secretary advise if the interest rates being charged by Central Mortgage and Housing will now come down so that we can increase construction of houses in this country and get some of those people who have been laid off, back to work?

SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENT OF WHARVES AND RETAINING WALLS ALONG ST. LAWRENCE TO PREVENT EROSION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

I have no doubt that he feels concern over the problems of the riparian dwellers of the St. Lawrence River who see their properties worn away by erosion. Will the minister soon introduce amendments to modernize the eligibility standards thus allowing his department to intervene financially with a view to protecting properties on both shores of the St. Lawrence, building retaining walls and modernizing present wharves?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to consider the suggestion and act accordingly.

REFERENCE TO ALLEGED STATEMENT BY DEPUTY MINISTER CONCERNING RATIFICATION OF WAGE CONTRACT SETTLEMENTS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Labour. According to recent reports the assistant deputy minister of labour, Mr. William Kelley, in a speech to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce is supposed to have suggested that wage contract settlements should be concluded without final ratification by union membership. May I ask the minister if this is now government policy or is it going to be government policy and if not, would he take steps to have these nonsensical statements cease immediately?

Hon John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member's conclusion would indicate that he did not read the speech in detail. If he would like to read it I will send it to him.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the minister and I wish to thank him for his reply. I will be glad to have a copy of the speech; however, all the newspapers cannot be wrong. May I ask if the assistant minister of labour was being used by the minister or the government to fly a kite?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and is prompted by the recent report of the Food Prices Review Board from which I should like to quote one short statement: "The sugar situation is anything but encouraging." That is in the September report, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister, first, if he is in a position to present to this House his national sugar policy and second, what progress has he made on fulfilling his commitment to re-establish the sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the sugar beet industry had been re-established a year ago or even two years ago, I am sure the hon. member would agree that it would probably have paid for itself several times in view of the over 300 per cent increase in sugar price to which the consumers of Canada have been subjected to. We only supply 10 per cent or 11 per cent of our normal consumption of sugar from our own production. We are continually working on advancing a sugar policy and I am sure the hon. member realizes that this has international complications which have to be worked out. However, we are still working on it and as soon as possible I will be submitting a paper to my colleagues.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the House when the first of the military Boeing 707's is to receive the 10,000 hour overhaul at the Winnipeg air base?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the commitment to have the 707's repaired in Winnipeg is being implemented and the personnel are being trained. I cannot give the date, but it will be early in 1975.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Are funds from the DND budget to be used to establish and tool a Boeing overhaul base for CAE, and is there difficulty at the present time in securing the necessary funds?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, funds will be provided by the federal government, probably through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There may also be some assistance from National Defence because this is an undertaking of the government to help build a Boeing overhaul facility in Winnipeg.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have had some difficulty deciding to whom I should address my question and perhaps you can help me. The Minister of State (Fisheries) or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development might be able to answer because the question involves a marina on Saanichton Bay on an island near an Indian reserve. I believe the Minister of Fisheries is responsible for the marina policy. I should like to know from either minister if they would be prepared to tell the House what action either department took in having development of the marina suspended?

MONTREAL OLYMPICS, 1976—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR FINANCING IN VIEW OF FAILURE TO CALL PUBLIC TENDERS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the city of Montreal voted itself the unprecedented right to spend Olympic funds without public tenders, could the Prime Minister advise this House if the government is going to continue to support the financing program for the Olympic games as authorized by Bill C-196 without first demanding public tenders on all Olympic expenditures as has been the case in all other Olympics and if so, could the Prime Minister justify that support?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the bill to which the hon. member refers was adopted with the support of all parties in the House. The bill is being applied. As to the particular jurisdiction of the city of Montreal, that city does not operate under federal jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jelinek: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was asking about the public tender part of the spending since the federal government is responsible for the whole financial program. May I ask if the Prime Minister intends to demand that public tenders be sought by the city of Montreal if this House is going to continue to support the program.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misinformed. The federal government is not responsible for the overall financing of the games.

MINISTER'S VIEW ON UNILATERAL ACTION TO ESTABLISH LIMIT OF TERRITORIAL WATERS—MEASURES TO INTERCEPT FOREIGN VESSELS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fisheries). Following yesterday's exchange on Canada's position of extending its fishing limits, would the minister indicate if he supports the position of his predecessor, the Hon. Jack Davis, who repeatedly stated that if Canada did not succeed in getting acceptance of the continental shelf limit at the Law of the Sea Conference he would recommend unilateral action on Canada's part? Would the minister report if he has recommended to cabinet that Canada take such action?

Hon. Romeo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, of course I share my predecessor's view on this. This is a very serious matter.

I do not share the hon. member's view that the conference failed. I believe there is still some important and difficult work to be done, and I am very hopeful about the extension of our fisheries jurisdiction. There has been extraordinary progress. Over 100 nations seem to have accepted this view. I remind hon. members that even unilateral action will not protect an important source of wealth in this country, salmon. We must be very careful when we assume that unilateral action would solve all our problems.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I also hope that the conference will eventually succeed. In the meantime, while our fishing industry is deteriorating to the point of obliteration, is the minister consulting with the Minister of National Defence, to step up our capability for intercepting and observing foreign vessels which still come within our 12-mile limit, let alone our 3-mile limit.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, we are engaged in constant talks with the Department of National Defence. I wish to underline the extraordinary useful role which it plays. I am thinking of the sort of case which was mentioned yesterday regarding the destruction of lobster gear on the east coast. I think that the defence department, considering the funds available, has been extremely helpful. We are working closely with it and will continue to do so.

MANPOWER

ALLEGATION MONTREAL OFFICE ISSUING BOGUS WORK PERMITS—REQUEST FOR FULL DISCLOSURE OF RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the allegations made respecting the Montreal Canada Manpower office, allegations which centre on the issuing of bogus work permits, will the minister make full disclosure of this matter which is presently under investigation in the same way as the Minister of Transport said he would make disclosure some time ago. As the minister's department is investigating its own affairs, in order to remove any doubt, will he undertake to make full disclosure once the probe has been completed?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, from time to time allegations of this nature arise and are made, and the only responsible course, before making a decision, is to see whether they are based on fact. Right now a preliminary investigation is being conducted by people in whose objectivity I have total faith. There will not be any cover up in that probe. If there is a prima facie case indicating irregularities, we shall proceed to a more formal investigation. The result flowing from that will be this: we shall want to make sure that this is not done again. I would tend to be prepared to disclose totally what this investigation will bring forward, but I want the opportunity of seeing it myself. I do not want to see people maligned. I hope hon. members will share that view. I do not want them maligned, for obvious reasons, namely, that some of these allegations may not be based on any foundation.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his answer. Can the minister say whether any employees of the Montreal office have been either dismissed or suspended because of the probe now taking place?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the preliminary investigation is underway. I think that speaking in detail about the investigation before I have received a report on it would be premature.

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN REGULATIONS COVERING ISSUANCE OF WORK PERMITS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to change the regulations with regard to the issuance of work permits so that they may be issued in the country of origin rather than in Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge that matter is not, in those precise terms, under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 42).

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my first words are directed to you. I thank you for the consideration you have shown us so far, express my personal confidence in your ability, integrity and fairness, and look forward, as I am sure other hon. members do, to your presiding over this thirtieth parliament. May I also say, for the record, that it is always pleasant to see former colleagues returned to this chamber and to meet new members. I note particularly that all those who came to this chamber after the by-elections of 1971 have been returned. Perhaps now that we have been involved in three elections in a little over three years, we can settle down and concentrate on our parliamentary duties, secure in our new and longer tenure of office.

Before dealing with transportation, may I congratulate the Minister of State (Mr. LeBlanc) responsible for fisheries on his new appointment. We in Atlantic Canada recognize the importance of his portfolio, which will place great strain upon him. If he does not produce results, if conditions do not improve for the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada, he will run into difficulty in four years or whenever the next election is called. As time goes by, I hope his ministry will gain more status. It should not be subordinate to or associated with any other ministry. At present it is connected closely with the Department of the Environment. In some ways that may be desirable. Still, let us keep in mind the importance of our marine resources. This is why I suggest that the status of the minister's portfolio should be upgraded and I hope it will be.

May I say a word about regional economic development, a subject which has interested me since I was first elected. I hope the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) will initiate programs, perhaps in conjunction with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), for developing further the coal industry of eastern Canada. Such development is necessary, keeping in mind the increased price of fuels, including fossil fuel, in this country. The minister might consider what has happened to Devco. Let him take advantage of the expertise of this Crown corporation, learn from its mistakes and apply his knowledge to other parts of eastern Canada.

This country is blessed with great resources and a variety of talent. We have our folk heroes, entertainers and other performers. Sometimes I think we could include the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in their number. Recently, I understand, he saw himself portrayed in a play which depicted many of the things which happened to him before he was elected to this House. When I think of the minister I think of another great Canadian performer, Gordon Lightfoot, who sings a popular song which may have been dedicated to the minister. It is entitled "The Canadian Railroad Trilogy" and begins something like this, "There was a time in this great land when the railroads did not run." In recent times it has been my impression that history is repeating itself. The Minister of Transport spoke extensively in this debate about the railways. I am glad that for the moment he does not want to create a corporation which will take over rail passenger transportation in this country. He wants to give the railways a chance to co-operate with the government and address themselves to the difficult problem of passenger transportation. I commend the minister on that position and wish him well.

It is incumbent upon the minister, in working out any new policy affecting transportation, to establish guidelines which will affect the Canadian Transport Commission and its influence on the minister in the discharge of his responsibilities. The minister has said he will be bringing forward new legislation in this field. I welcome this, but I think it is worth reminding hon. members of the House that this is not the first time a minister of transport has made a specific commitment to change the legislative intent and effect of transportation in this country. I refer to page 808 of Hansard for March 14, 1972, when the then minister of transport said:

I agree with the claim that a reorganized structure is necessary in order that member and the country generally can obtain more information, and obtain it more easily, about all aspects of transportation.

That passage has a familiar ring.

With this objective in mind, I propose to bring before the House in the next session three important pieces of legislation on which work is proceeding at the present time. The first of those is a bill designed to reconstitute Air Canada as a separate Crown corporation, thus divorcing it, as it were, from the CNR. I will also introduce a Canadian National Railways revision act and a companion piece of legislation covering amendments to the Railway Act. Hon. members will know how involved and far reaching these changes are; they have been asking for them for the last two or three years.

When one considers the record in this respect it tends to make one a little cynical. I hope the present Minister of Transport will now address himself to the need which has been expressed in this chamber so many times by so many members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I also hope—this is very timely in view of questions asked this morning—that the minister will do something else that has been urged by many members, particularly by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), that is, set up a truly independent accident investigation body which will clear the air for all time of the well-founded suspicion that sometimes the Department of Transport is investigating itself. This type of thinking should be done away with and such a commission of investigation established.

Yesterday the Minister of Transport was so well informed and clairvoyant that he was able to say, even before I put a question to him about STOL, that Mr. Sinclair was wrong. The minister stated unequivocally that Mr. Sinclair was wrong, but left it at that. Despite his statement that he would disclose information, he would not indicate in what respects or by how much Mr. Sinclair was wrong. The fact is that there appears to be a discrepancy in the calculations on the cost of the STOL program, a discrepancy of approximately $130 million between the calculations of the government and certain private interests.

Considering the magnitude of this discrepancy, the government ought to clarify these matters immediately and specifically, particularly when the passenger train subsidy for the whole of Canada in a fiscal year is approximately $140 million. It also appears that the past president of Canadian National Railways, Mr. MacMillan, had very serious doubts about the cost efficiency of this STOL program and whether it was in fact the best way to move passengers between large cities. Mr. Sinclair of CP stated that his calculations were based on, among other things, the cost of construction of airports, pilot training facilities, six Twin Otter Aircraft purchased, the construction of access routes to the airports, and navigational systems installed, all of which appear to be a reasonable basis for his calculations.

As a last word on this subject, I did a little checking. It appears the cost of one-way flight by STOL from Ottawa to Montreal is $20. When travelling by Air Canada, our large modern air carrier, or CP air—that bastion of private enterprise—it costs $13 on Saturdays and Sundays, and $18 on week days. So STOL is expensive. I have reason to believe a great deal of the passenger traffic flying between the STOL ports in Ottawa and Montreal is made up of cabinet ministers, colleagues and civil servants. It appears that the STOL program is being used extensively by government employees, at government expense. It is being subsidized with civil servants. I wonder if that is the purpose for which STOL was established. I leave that point for hon. members to consider.

I wish now to say a few words on a topic respecting which I recently addressed a question to the minister. I will not touch upon it in any great detail because it is to some extent sub judice. It involves an inquiry presided over by Mr. Bruno Desjardins, a Montreal barrister whom I understand has some nautical experience. The inquiry concerns the action of the Laurentian Pilotage Authority which, pursuant to subsection 14(3) of the Pilotage Act, decided to make an amendment to the Laurentian Pilotage Authority's regulations. Pursuant to this course of action, notice of which was published in the May 18 issue of the Canada Gazette, the Minister of Transport very properly commissioned an inquiry under Mr. Desjardins.

Although I do not want to prejudge the situation in any way, I wish to put on record some reservations about the terms of reference of this inquiry. They seem to be a little unusual, at least according to the traditional concepts of natural justice. Some of the conditions are as follows:

The investigation shall be conducted in as thorough and complete a manner as the circumstances of the case require.

That is good. The next one reads:

The investigation shall not be subject to the customary rules of evidence nor need evidence be taken under oath.

I object to that very strongly.

The investigation shall not be conducted by means of public hearings but, on the contrary, through the investigation and examination of those persons whom the said investigator deems possessed of evidence relevant to the subject matter and whose evidence should be examined in the public interest.

This provision prevents one party knowing what the other's position is and having the right of rebuttal. As far as I am concerned, the only issue in the Laurentian Pilotage matter is whether this change, which disrupts long standing procedure, is in the interests of safety and effeciency and whether it is good for shipping in that particular region of the country. I do not think it is helpful to bring in questions involving language or other social consideration. Because I have noticed in the French press words which indicate that I may be against bilingualism, I want to put on record the fact that I am very concerned that any unilingual Canadian may be deprived of earning his livelihood by reason of language qualifications, unless there are very unusual circumstances which can be justified as being of national importance such as our transportation system being improved, safety reasons, or things of that nature. Any other considerations which are regressive and counterproductive of this very worth while bilingualism program may be interpreted as being in the selfish interests of a particular group.

In his speech yesterday the minister said there will be more disclosure. I think he was referring specifically to the railways when he said that. If he is serious—and I hope he is—he should begin by permitting the Auditor General, or some other independent person of his stature, to look at some of the Crown corporations and public utilities generally whose accounts are not examined. For example, there is Air Canada, the Bank of Canada, Canadian National Railways, Canadian National Railways Securities Trust, the Canadian Wheat Board, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and the Industrial Development Bank. It would be very useful if someone of the stature of the Auditor General took an independent look at the internal financial procedures of these Crown corporations.

Also, as we discovered in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, it is not permitted to ask, as I did when checking on the qualifications of some of the directors of Air Canada and the CN, questions relating to their tenure of office, their salaries, by whom they were appointed, their specific responsibilities, and so on. Questions of this kind are not permitted and need not be answered. However, I believe there is no reason the public of Canada should not be told a little more about the executives who run their Crown corporations.

There is another matter which concerns me—an issue which has to some extent been neglected or perhaps even forgotten. It concerns the well-being of thousands of people in this country. What is the real status of insurance policies covering air passengers in Canada? Are these passengers as well protected as they believe themselves to be when they board aircraft operated by one of our national carriers? When one looks into the details of some of these insurance cases, one cannot avoid speculating on the trouble and difficulty to which bereaved people have been put when they have tried to collect the benefits which they believed would be paid to them as a matter of course.

Again, in the standing committee I tried to learn a little more about the particulars of this type of insurance, but I did not make much progress in my questioning of Mr. Pratte on this subject; and I do not blame him because I realize he was not prepared to give me this type of information. However, I asked him the following question specifically:

> From the point of view of the travelling public and for their information, is it fair to say that the amount of insurance, whatever it is, is not necessarily theirs, or their estate's, as a matter of right, and each individual case must be looked at? In other words, if a person's status is such that he has no dependants, or that he is no great loss in the eyes of the law because he has no young children, or no widow, or he is an old man, a young person, or what have you, it does not necessarily follow that they get that courage. And they have to prove it in each case.

I have the view that the airlines have introduced a class or type of coverage which places the onus of proof on the bereaved family. The legal expenses and other complications involved in this procedure involving burden of proof make the insurance coverage of far less benefit than is generally believed by those covered by these policies. Mr. Pratte said to me at the time:

> I am sorry. I should know the answer but I do not. I will provide you with the information.

Again, I do not wish to be unfair to Mr. Pratte, for whom I have great regard, but I have not yet received that information. When I asked him a little later about the insurance payment which Air Canada was due to receive after an incident in Toronto in which one of the planes was burnt because of a fuel spillage, Mr. Pratte informed me that the corporation had already been paid. He mentioned that payment had been made within 48 hours, or something like that, and another Air Canada witness, Mr. Cochrane I think it was, said, "Yes, 24 hours."

I commend Air Canada for having taken out coverage of that type for their aircraft, but I should like the Minister of Transport to find out whether he can obtain similar protection for the people who use Air Canada aircraft and for those who use aircraft generally in this country. I do not wish to leave the impression that I am questioning everything the Minister of Transport proposes to bring before us. That is not the case. I do not know the Minister of Transport especially well, but I have great respect for his ability and I think he definitely has the capacity to do great things for Canadian transportation. However, this remains to be proved, just as the Speech from the Throne remains to be proved. It reads well. It is full of platitudes and good wishes, and it is difficult to criticize good wishes.

Those less kind than I might describe the Speech from the Throne as a manifestation of one of the greatest political con jobs in this country, but I do not think that type of comment is necessary at this time. As the session progresses, though, if we are not presented with a solid legislative program and a definite commitment on the part of the government to implement some of its policies, no one will be able to criticize members on this side for making that type of comment. By the same token, without wishing to exaggerate the importance of the matter, and in the interest of harmony in this place, I should like to say a few words about a remark made yesterday by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) concerning my right hon. friend from Prince Albert.

I do not have Hansard before me, and I do not wish to misquote the hon. member, but it seems to me he said yesterday that my right hon. friend, our former prime minister, did not say very much in the course of his speech. That may, of course, be his opinion, but it is not shared by many. What bothered me was the fact that he went on to say something like this, "When he leaves this place we shall probably save about four days every session." I hope the hon. member for Vaudreuil will not be insulted if I say that when members like he and I leave this place, it is probable that not many people will take account of our going, or perhaps notice, but when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) leaves this place it will be an occasion for mourning and great sadness across the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I shall be very surprised if in the next generation Canada is fortunate enough to have a parliamentarian of his ability, his spirit and his devotion to Canada. I urge the hon. member for Vaudreuil to clarify his remarks, because I thought they were unkind, uncouth and uncalled for.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Cheap.

Mr. MacKay: While we are talking about possible reforms in this place in the context of the Speech from the Throne I would urge the government, the Commissioners of Internal Economy and all those who have anything to do with providing facilities for members of parliament and for others, to take a look at the type of benefits and facilities which are made available to former prime ministers. Former prime ministers are a rare breed and they have usually devoted the whole of their lives to the service of their country. It seems to me, therefore, it is time we determined whether they have received sufficient recognition when eventually they cease their work in parliament.

The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) just mentioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I would remind hon. members opposite that some day they may be in a similar position to the one in which I find myself today, making a request for some increased respect and recognition in the case of a man who presumably—

Mr. MacFarlane: You must expect him to live as long as Diefenbaker.

Mr. MacKay: Well, I would not want to go on record as saying he should live any shorter life than the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. It seems to me that if the government were really sincere about making parliament a better place in which to serve Canada, they should not be too quick to bring forward ill-conceived reforms. Those which have been brought in since the present Prime Minister took office have not, I think, worked out as well as some had hoped. There was an editorial in the Globe and Mail today suggesting that perhaps the government should start at home, as it were, by instructing ministers of the Crown to be a little more honest and forthright in their answers to questions. I think that would go a long way toward expediting business through this chamber.

I suggest that when the government does make up its mind that it is concerned about matters of practical significance to this country, such as labour-management relations and making productivity as important a factor in labour-management negotiations as it is possible to do so under the circumstances, and makes an earnest effort to deal with the economic problems besetting this country, instead of concerning itself with esoteric affairs like constitutional reform and questions of that type—important though they may be under some circumstances—then the country will be much better off and there will be much less dissatisfaction on the part of the Canadian public with the performance of the government and members of parliament generally.

I urge the government, through you, Mr. Speaker, to devote its main thrust to finding practical solutions to the problems besetting this nation. If the government does this and demonstrates that it is doing it in good faith, it will certainly have no difficulty obtaining support and co-operation from members like myself in the official opposition.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to extend to His Excellency the Governor General our best wishes for a prompt recovery. I am convinced that we are all anxious to see him soon resume his official duties.

I should also like to congratulate you, Sir, on your appointment as Speaker. I am sure your wisdom, your parliamentary experience and your great integrity are guarantees of success in the task you are undertaking.

In addition, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate two new hon. members in this House, the hon. members for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) and for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) who, although newcomers, acted with considerable self-possession, self-assurance and even with dash as mover and seconder respectively of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot come back to the House and speak for the first time without pointing out the extremely important event that occurred last July. I am referring, of course, to the Canadian election which brought the government of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back to power with a majority in the House of Commons.

It is normal that, following a general election, many comments be heard here and there which are often original in their treatment but generally lacking in their inner meaning. I am referring especially to the remarks made shortly after the election by Mr. Marcel Léger, a PQ member in the Quebec National Assembly, who tried to question the mandate of the Quebec federal deputation. His remarks clearly were aimed at trying to correct a situation he did not like and to infer that Quebecers had not really given a clear and precise mandate to the Quebec hon. members in this House.

It is often easy to draw conclusions from statistics by isolating them or by completely disregarding certain factors. Mr. Léger was right when he claimed that the level of absenteism was higher during the last federal election in Quebec than during the 1972 election. But there is something that is very important and that he overlooked and it is the fact that the rate of absenteism in Quebec has remained nearly the same as during previous elections. It holds true nevertheless that federal Liberals have obtained more votes in 1974 than in 1972, that is, a little over 1.3 million votes compared with 1.2 million in 1972. This fully demonstrates, in my opinion, that Quebecers very clearly and positively support their federal representatives in this House.

And this in spite of the fact that the Parti québécois urged people to spoil their ballots. Rejected ballots in Quebec decreased to 133,475 in 1974 from 165,000 in 1972. Moreover, it does not follow that all rejected ballots were the direct result of urgings by the Parti Québécois because, as is well known, there are many reasons for rejecting a ballot.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, the representation of federal Liberal members from Quebec cannot be questioned. I am convinced that members on this side of the House, Social Crediters, or even the three Conservatives who were elected, nobody here would want to trade their majority with that of the few Parti Québécois members at the Quebec National Assembly. In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, particularly after the speech made by the Prime Minister in the House this week, there can be no lingering doubt about the role that federal Liberal members from Quebec intend to play in Parliament in Ottawa, and that will certainly not please Mr. Léger and his few separatists. I think that any well meaning French Canadian happy to live in this beautiful and large country that is Canada could only be happy at the words spoken by the Prime Minister who said and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I will give a straight answer ... the government maintains strongly as ever its official language policy and will pursue with renewed vigour the basic goal it set for itself when it came into power in 1968, namely to make it possible for all Canadians throughout Canada to deal with their federal government in the official language of their choice.

Mr. Speaker, that is basically the government option, the option taken by all federal Liberal members in the Canadian Parliament. I watched members of this House after the Prime Minister's remarks, and noticed that all Social Crediters applauded. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle) also applauded but I could not believe my eyes when the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) was unable to react and applaud such remarks. I cannot conceive or understand this unless his mind was on something else, on some futurist and far-away dreams. He was probably lost in the clouds. However, I can say that since the hon. member's election to this House, we have witnessed an extraordinary change and we no longer recognize him. From the "Red Menace" that he was, he has now become the "Blue Angel". I believe that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe should agree completely with the remarks of the Prime Minister. I think that the hon.

member for Saint-Hyacinthe must have a very well-defined position on this matter.

I dare believe that he was thinking about something else when the Prime Minister was talking about what is most important, most basic for any member from Quebec who wants to promote national unity in this country. I was very happy, Mr. Speaker, about several aspects of the Speech from the Throne. First, it gives a significant role to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs during the next few months, during this session. The Speech from the Throne meets squarely a serious and weighty problem which now faces Canada, the problem of inflation. The Speech from the Throne and the remarks of the Prime Minister show that the government, in cooperation with all members of parliament, clearly intend to amend and improve parliamentary procedure so that bills may be passed more easily, which would enable us to act much more quickly to bring in the legislation required to govern this nation ably. I would be remiss if I did not express first of all what I feel about taking over my new responsibility as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I intend to speak not only in the House but also in the public forum with all possible strength, determination and haste in favour of the Canadian consumers.

Some will say that it is practically impossible for a minister to be at the same time the minister responsible for both Consumer Affairs and Corporate Affairs. I should like to correct immediately any misunderstanding about that view.

It is clear that such a statement shows a lack of understanding of the kind and scope of responsibilities coming under the jurisdiction of my department.

In a way, the Bureau of Corporate Affairs is not the spokesman for a client which would be the businessman. It is rather an organization responsible for the orderly conduct of business in Canada in the field of corporations, bankruptcies and investment markets. While seeing that the law is complied with in those fields and while developing projects to update the legislation, the Bureau is acting in the interests of the public, the shareholders, the creditors and debtors. I can see no conflict whatsoever as regards my responsibility towards the consumers.

Needless to say, the same can be said of the competition policy office for the application of the Combines investigation Act, striving for free and effective competition on the marketplace. I see this as the best way of protecting the interests of the consumer. I am convinced that the distribution and redistribution of resources according to the needs and fancies of the consumers can best be achieved by not restricting the dynamics of our current market system.

I think that an effective market based on freedom and common knowledge on the part of both consumers and producers is the best guarantee that the needs of consumers are met.

My department is thought to be the department of consumers, and that is good. But it could also be referred to as the department of the law of economics or of free trade. These are two different ways of describing one desirable reality which we all seek.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

I will now take the liberty of drawing a parallel regarding the role of my department on what is justly considered the most serious problem facing this country, I mean inflation.

We are not on the forefront of the fight against inflation. Within the federal government, that responsibility lies with my hon. colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the main advisor on the effects of handling various areas of macro-economic policy.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs however, often viewed as the ministry of micro-economics, has an important support role. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that my department will actively pursue that role within the government's overall commitment to fight the causes and effects of inflation. And I will see to it, within my responsibilities as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that such complementary effort is made in order that within the framework of overall measures taken by the Canadian government, inflation may be more efficiently tackled.

Mr. Speaker, in order to overcome inflation every sector in our society will have to exercise restraint. The government undertakes to establish limits and priorities in its own spending. It invites all the other levels of government to do likewise. It is also imperative that industry as well as unions attempt to co-ordinate their respective requirements in order to insure good balance in salaries, prices and profits.

Consumers can also do their share by shopping wisely and by taking measures to conserve certain commodities such as oil and gas which are in limited supply.

In the fight against inflation, the government has three objectives which I support thoroughly. I shall be able to say more about them at two o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted at one o'clock, I was saying that in its fight against inflation, the government is aiming at three objectives: to increase the supply of goods and services, to protect those who are badly hit by inflation and finally to take the necessary steps to discourage unreasonable increases in incomes, prices and profits.

It is clear that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs can do something there. Our main programs that can help to fight inflation are those related to the Competition Act and those designed to assist consumers.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the government intends to overhaul completely the Combines Investigation Act through a legislative procedure divided in two stages, because it is obvious that the present legislation is not an entirely effective tool in 1974. I tabled Bill C-2 last Wednesday. It is the fourth time that a minister has introduced such a bill in the House. I think this legislation is long overdue. It is essential that it be given swift consideration and passage by hon. members, for it is greatly needed. Its goals are very simple. What we are trying to achieve by amending this act is firstly to encourage fair competition between companies and, secondly, to give consumers better protection against reprehensible trade practices. In fact, Mr. Speaker, those amendments to the restrictive trade practices legislation have already passed the first and second reading stage in the last session.

Since I have reintroduced this bill without any new amendment last Wednesday, I hope hon. members will co-operate and give this bill second reading as soon as possible so it may be referred to committee.

I have already announced, and I say it again to the House, that it is my intention to introduce as soon as possible at the committee stage important amendments that will further clarify the scope of the bill. I think that several briefs were submitted to the parliamentary committee during the last session. Those were useful briefs that will be considered, but I want to say again and again very clearly that some action is required in this area, for the Canadian public is increasingly suspicious, for good reason perhaps, of the mechanics of competition in this economic world where big corporations sometimes get, in the mind of the public, too big a piece of the cake.

And I think that if nothing is done, we may slowly lose our free enterprise system as we know it, through our own inaction, because the public will expect more direct action from governments. When seen in its true light, the right of competition therefore is not government intervention in the field of industry and business but rather a safeguard against such action.

Mr. Speaker, while I must insist on the importance of bringing the legislation on competition up to date, I would not want to leave the impression that this act is now being administered inefficiently. We know that the director, under the law, must initiate inquiries when he has reason to believe that the law has been broken. Few of these inquiries are known to the public, because their confidential nature must be ensured. In a way, I regret it because the public would be able to see that in the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Department there are people working to protect their interests.

Without giving too many details on these inquiries, I can assure the House that many investigations are now under way and we are doing our best so that the Combines Investigation Act is respected. Some investigations, of course, are a better known to the public because there have been leaks and we are already in court. I am thinking of the investigations concerning oil and sugar. Mr. Speaker, three big sugar refineries were brought to court having been accused of conspiring to fix the price of sugar and to prevent free competition in this area. This case is now before the courts and, therefore, I cannot say much more about it. I regret it as there is much I would like to say. I think it essential that the investigation process, followed by the legal process, follow its course in Canada. If I have a wish, it is this one; that judges be more conscious of the importance, when it is appropriate and necessary, of handing down even stiffer sentences than in the past. I am happy that in many cases the judges have imposed exemplary fines.

In too many cases, however, the fines imposed were unfortunately not those I would have handed down had I been the judge. And I will go even further. In some cases in the United States, the courts did not hesitate to jail the directors or executives of some companies. If there are cases now in Canada which justify such sentences, I trust the authorities will have the courage to send to prison those who deserve it. I should like to deal briefly with some of the measures I intend to introduce to the House in the next few weeks, measures designed to ensure the consumer greater protection and more information. I intend to take several new steps in the field of consumer credit. I shall bring before the House a bill to amend section 6 of the Interest Act with a view to forcing lenders to specify clearly their true rate of interest and imposing a uniform base for the calculation of interest rates.

Secondly, still in the field of consumer credit, I intend to bring forward soon a bill to amend the Small Loans Act. Thirdly, I am contemplating a complete revision of the Interest Act, especially with a view to ensuring a uniform method of disclosure applicable to all lenders for the protection of borrowers.

I think it is essential that Canadians become more and more aware of my department as a useful instrument of protection and information to the consumer. To this end, we have set up regional offices in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. We also have district offices and we intend to open more in order to better serve the Canadian consumers. We shall also open several consumer storefront offices providing various community services especially to underprivileged consumers, such as low-income families, older people or new immigrants.

I think it is essential that we go ahead in this field to open about twenty of those consumer information services across the country during the present fiscal year. And that work will be done in co-operation with voluntary organizations that already exist in several cities in Canada.

Of course there will be budgetary limitations but as we will try to expand and improve our services as much as possible so they will be available to the consumers in the various areas of Canada.

Finally, non-profitable organizations, community services certainly already play an important role that we want to support. My department will try and give as many grants as possible to encourage them to continue to play their role to provide better protection for the consumer.

Time is running and I will soon have to conclude my remarks. I would also like to talk about an extremely important organization which has made the headlines in recent weeks, the Food Prices Review Board and its role.

However important all the steps I mentioned earlier to protect and inform consumers, as well as the instruments available to me to fulfill adequately my task as minister, I am fully aware that although I am well supported by the Canadian Consumer Council, the Consumer Research Council, voluntary groups, or the many pieces of legislation we intend to introduce in this House, a basic fact remains—Canadians are still greatly concerned about the question of price increases.

So it is extremely important that we deal efficiently with the rate of inflation. And to do that we need to know better the reasons for price increases, and whether they are warranted. That is why I was happy to see in the Speech from the Throne that the terms of the Food Prices Review Board will be extended until the end of 1975.

I think that board plays a very significant role. I want to pay tribute here to the chairman of that board and its members for the impartial and consistent manner in which they conducted their surveys and for all the recommendations they made.

All we need to do is take a look at an article in this week's Citizen to find to what extent more adequate information given the public will directly influence Canadian firms that otherwise might be led to exaggerate and abuse the situation in this climate of steadily rising inflation, in order to unduly boost their prices. We have found surprising results following the publication of weekly bulletins by the Food Prices Review Board: food prices in the Ottawa area supermarkets have been lowered. Suddenly, people have come to realize this and I quote this article from the Citizen which states:

● (1410)

[English]

However, an IGA store on Tache Boulevard in Hull has managed to slash its price index by 9.8 per cent from last week.

This week's index indicates that most stores have again lowered prices marginally, a couple a good deal.

An hon. Member: For how long?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker, at the end of my speech I will be delighted to answer a question.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this proves that such a body can play an efficient and important role. I hope this investigation will not be limited to the Ottawa area only, but that it will be conducted throughout Canada, because I feel that the better informed consumers are and the more business and private enterprise people realize they are being watched, the better market and competition we shall have in Canada.

I wish to complete my remarks by saying that a great many measures remain to be adopted to better protect consumers. The Speech from the Throne dealt with reforms aimed at accelerating parliamentary proceedings. Notwithstanding these reforms, I urge all hon. members to co-operate closely with my department when it introduces measures during the next few months, because the better acts we have, the better protected Canadian consumers will be.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) wishes to ask a question of the minister. The time of the minister has just expired, so the hon. member may ask a question only by unanimous consent. Is it agreed that the question be allowed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not refer to the need for consumer representation on marketing boards, notwithstanding the announcement made by his colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) yesterday. He did not refer, either, to the report of Professor Forbes which was commissioned by his department, although it was made to the Consumer Advisory Council. That report has been in his possession since May at the very latest. What recommendations has the minister made to his cabinet colleagues, and what steps has he taken to implement the major recommendations of that study?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is merely because I was too pressed for time that I was not able to deal with all the important subjects I wished to deal with today. I can say to the hon. member that I am extremely happy that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced last evening, during his speech in this House, that there would be an important representation of consumers on the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

As a matter of fact, I had asked that consumers be represented. It seems there will be three new representatives of the general public on the marketing boards. I think that is of the utmost importance because one must never forget that it is essential, whatever the responsability of an organization may be, whether the agency controls the marketing of eggs or any other product, whenever an organization is granted almost absolute powers, it is essential, I repeat, for members of that body to be conscious of the public interest and to be more concerned with the interests of the general public than with those of a particular group, especially when an organization is being given almost absolute powers.

I believe that such a representation of the public, of consumers, of businessmen, of labour in that organization will take care of that situation and enable that body to be more accountable to the public.

As regards the last part of the question of the hon. member, concerning the Forbes report, I must say that I have just received it. I asked the Council that does research in the field of consumer affairs to let me have officially its views on that report. I know that the hon. member seems to have received a copy of it. I am told that he did indeed but that it is not on official copy. I will be pleased to make that report public sometime next week. The document will then be official and I will be in a position to talk about it in due course and at length, which is not the case this afternoon.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you and to tell you, on behalf of my constituents in the Burnaby-Richmond-Delta riding, how pleased we are to see you and your deputies hold your respective parts.

[English]

Some hon. Members: More.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, members across the floor are asking me to speak more French. I am saving it for later. Next week I will begin taking French lessons. In case hon. members opposite do not know this, I lived the first half of my life, the first 16 years, in Quebec. I am proud to say this. When I left that province I was bilingual. However, after living in British Columbia for 16 years I do not remember much of my French. We really do not have a second language in my province; we speak only one language. It will be a privilege to begin taking French lessons next week. I hope that within one year I will be able to stand in this House and deliver a speech in French.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: It is a great attribute for one to speak two languages, be they French and English or, as one sees in Europe, French and German.

Mr. Paproski: Or Ukrainian.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, as you know, our deputy whip comes from Edmonton. My first two children were born in Edmonton, so I can understand why he wants to include Ukrainian. My riding of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta has the largest population of any riding in western Canada. I represent a large number of people of German descent. Ten per cent of the people of British Columbia are of German descent; they make up the largest minority group. The next largest group in my province consists of Dutch people. There are also large numbers of Chinese in Vancouver and in the rest of the province.

Language should not be an issue at election time, but that is one of the first things I shall talk about today because the subject came up more than once in my riding during the last election campaign—and not because I brought it up. This member supported bilingualism when first he was elected to this House in 1972. I think the previous sitting Liberal member was not as strongly in support of bilingualism as I was. In the last election campaign some things happened across the country which bothered me. Why did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) allow his advertising people to put up, in his own province, billboards which said "Monsieur Trudeau or Mr. Stanfield"? What kind of prime minister would allow that kind of advertisement in his own province when he expects us all in this country to support bilingualism? it should not have been allowed; the Prime Minister himself should not have allowed it to happen.

The Prime Minister came to my riding. As an aside, may I mention that the former parliamentary leader of the New Democratic Party came to my riding. He spoke on behalf of his party and tried to convince the people of my riding not to re-elect me. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) also came to my riding and was made welcome by the people, as was the minister responsible for DREE. The result was interesting. In 1972 I won about 34 per cent of the vote and squeaked in. In the last election I received 58 per cent of the vote and won with the largest majority. I hope the ministers come back to my riding in the next election. If they had visited a few more ridings in Ontario, they might have changed the results of the last election.

I want to talk about the Prime Minister coming to my riding and standing in a shopping centre in front of approximately 2,500 people. He came in his usual manner. I give credit to the Prime Minister. He is one of the greatest debaters Canada has ever had. He has charm, he has charisma. In the last election more people preferred to have him as Prime Minister. I accept that. I accepted his coming to my riding and telling people, "Ask where John Reynolds stands on wage and price controls." I supported my leader on that issue. I still do. I think such controls would be good for this country. Then he said, "Ask John Reynolds where he stands on bilingualism." The inference, according to a press report, was that I was not in favour of bilingualism and that I had not voted for it in this House. That was a low thing to do, a cheap shot for him to take. He should not have done it. I do not know why he would want to bring up that subject in western Canada. Bilingualism was not the issue in western Canada in the last election. The state of our economy was the issue, and leadership.

An hon. Member: May I ask a question?

Mr. Reynolds: If the hon. member will ask his question when I have finished, I will be glad to answer it. I was also bothered by the Saskatchewan Liberal Party displaying an advertisement which depicted chickens being burned. The ad said this was being done in the United States because of the price freeze. But the truth was that the chickens shown in the ad had been burned in Canada because they were diseased. I raise this matter because the Prime Minister's actions in the election with regard to the language issue made me mad. People in my riding said to me, "We did not think you had voted against the language bill; we thought you were in favour of bilingualism in Canada." I am. That is one program which we need in this country. If we are ever to solve the problem of bilingualism, the Prime Minister and all members of this House should convince the premiers of this country that we had better teach French in the nine provinces which do not teach French from kindergarten on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: Otherwise, we will never solve the problem of bilingualism in this country. We will not solve it by doing what we are now trying to do. We are trying to work from the top down, and it is not working. We have Quebec bringing in Bill 22, which has angered the people of British Columbia. We are doing our best in British Columbia to teach our children French. We do not think the people of Quebec should know only French, in a North American society of 250 million English-speaking people. In Quebec, English should be taught in French schools starting at kindergarten. As federal politicians, it is our responsibility to start at the bottom in this respect: let us start teaching French in the schools where such teaching belongs, so that in ten or 15 years the question of bilingualism will never again be raised in the House of Commons.

I have a few more things to say about British Columbia. This morning I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) why the British Columbia ferry system is not being subsidized by the federal government. The British Columbia ferry system is an extension of the Trans-Canada Highway. The Trans-Canada Highway Act says that the federal government will pay its fair share for the setting up of the Trans-Canada Highway and its maintenance. The minister said this was not being done because such payment is made only where the highway system links two provinces. Mr. Speaker, the province of Ontario runs a ferry service on Lake Huron. The service is subsidized by the federal government.

For years, British Columbia has felt that it has paid more than its fair share to the Canadian economy. We are one of the "have" provinces and we do not mind paying more than our share. Also, we are the fastest-growing province. After arriving in British Columbia many of us do not like to leave, because the weather is better there than it is back east.

● (1430)

The Conservative and New Democratic Party members from the province of British Columbia had a meeting with the Premier of British Columbia a short two weeks ago. The Liberal members said they could not attend the first meeting. I will accept that. I am usually naive about these things. I hope they will come to the next meeting because the first one was very productive.

The premier provided us with figures which showed that Canadian National Railways is receiving great benefit from the federal treasury for its ferries. In 1973, CNR received $44.6 million to operate their ferries on the east coast of this country. British Columbia will lose $20 million in the operation of their ferry service this year. Much of that $20 million loss will be spent on servicing tourists coming into British Columbia. Tourism is our number one resource. The province fills up with tourists in the summer. Anyone who has been there and has tried to cross using the ferry system knows it takes a few hours to get to the island.

I keep raising the subject of the meeting the Conservative and NDP members had with the Premier of British Columbia. We feel the federal government should sit down with British Columbia to work out an agreement whereby the B.C. Trans-Canada Highway will really become part of the Trans-Canada Highway and be paid for by all the people of Canada.

Another topic discussed at that meeting with our premier, and quite an important one, involved the supertankers that will be coming down the west coast. All British Columbians are concerned about this. In the last session, all members of this House were concerned about it, because we passed a motion to tell the United States government we were concerned. The Premier of British Columbia sent a note to this government on March 13, 1973, with regard to a program called The Way Out. Everyone in my party does not necessarily agree with our premier that this is the best way to solve the supertanker problem, but it is certainly a way out over what we will have to put up with. At that meeting we were told the federal government had not replied to the premier's letter, and a follow-up letter was sent.

I think it is shameful that this government did not answer the provincial government on a matter as important as supertankers travelling down the coast of British Columbia. If I replied to letters from my constituents as fast as this government is replying to the province of British Columbia, I do not think I would have been re-elected.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

I think these two matters point out one of the problems we face in British Columbia. We are a rich province, a "have" province. We have great lakes, great oceans, great weather and great people who come from all across Canada. It seems the federal government knows it is great there. They feel this is one part of the country they really do not have to bother too much about because it is so well off. However, the people of my province are frustrated by some of the federal programs. This is obvious by the number of people they have returned to this House. Some Liberals feel there has been an increase. I am certainly happy to see these Liberals here, because my philosophy is opposed to socialism. Any time eight Liberals beat eight NDP members, it makes me happy. However, those eight federal Liberals may not have come here had it not been for the fact the NDP are doing so well in British Columbia.

I want to talk a little about the British Columbia penitentiary. This is an area in which I have been quite interested since I became involved in politics. I visited that penitentiary some two weeks ago. We caused quite a stir by saying that we thought 20 pounds of heroin was missing. I would like to explain why we said we thought it was missing. In March of last year I put a question on the order paper of this House asking why a gentleman in British Columbia had charges against him dropped after he had been arrested with 20 pounds of heroin in his car. Where had that 20 pounds of heroin gone?

From March of last year until two weeks ago I could not get an answer from this government, even with repeated phone calls and questions on the order paper. On a regular visit to the penitentiary I talked to some heroin traffickers who had been on the street at the time of the arrest. They are now spending their days confined to the B.C. pen. They told me that quite often some of this evidence worked its way back out of the hold-up or was missing, and it was common practice for the drug squad to use heroin to get information from addicts. I indicated to reporters that possibly this was the reason the charges were stayed but I would not know until I got an answer. The commissioner of the RCMP could not get an answer that evening. The next morning he said, "Yes, we have the heroin." It seemed that the question was answered.

I still want to ask this government why the gentleman arrested was not charged, or the charges against him were dropped, and why they could not answer my question in all that time. Heroin creates a very serious problem in British Columbia. The majority of the inmates of the British Columbia penitentiary are there on drug or drug related charges. During the election I attended a seminar at the British Columbia penitentiary. I was the only member of parliament from British Columbia who took the time to attend. The police, heroin addicts, their friends and many others were there.

The police estimate that in the lower mainland alone there are 6,500 addicts and their habit costs them $325,000 a day. The addicts in the pen tell us that it is more like 15,000 addicts, at a cost of $1 million a day. The police do not deny this figure. They say their figures are accurate. The police know there are 6,500, but they do not deny there are as many as 15,000 addicts in the province of British Columbia.

My purpose in visiting the penitentiary was to gain information and to try to point out two things to this government and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). First, we must declare an all-out war on heroin traffickers because it is becoming an extremely serious problem in this country. People in the eastern part of the country do not realize this as much as we do in British Columbia, because the fact is that well in excess of 50 per cent of all heroin addicts are in the province of British Columbia and they are growing in number.

In our province 13 and 14-year old girls are prostituting themselves. Mr. Speaker, that is not an exaggeration; it is happening in our province. It is becoming a serious problem. We must declare war on this problem. We used the War Measures Act in the province of Quebec to quell the FLQ. The heroin problem in British Columbia is more serious than that was. It is undermining our whole system and society in that area. I ask that the Solicitor General consider setting up a board of inquiry to ascertain from the RCMP drug squad what weapons they need in their hands, how much money they need in order to stop heroin traffickers operating in this country and filling our jails.

During my trip to the B.C. pen I said that some RCMP officers are dealing in drugs. That is a fact. I was in no way trying to attack the RCMP. That is the fact and we have to live with it. The RCMP is so understaffed in respect of drug squad investigation that some members have become involved with the criminals and have been arrested and charged. They have their own system of security, and we are catching them. We shall not solve this problem until we increase the staff of the RCMP, improve their financial position and make a concerted effort to arrest the heroin traffickers.

Another purpose of the visit to the B.C. penitentiary was to discuss security both inside and outside the institution, since we had heard rumours from people working at the penitentiary, and from inmates out on weekend passes, that things were in bad shape. We found that the security staff of the penitentiary is set at a maximum of 147 men. The Department of the Solicitor General has approved in principle an increase to 170. This number, the warden told us, would be sufficient to ensure good security not only for the inmates but for the public. I then asked the warden how many men were on duty at that moment. He replied that a maximum number of 115 were available for duty at any one time. What is the sense, then, of increasing the maximum number of staff to 170 if you can only get 115 people to work at any one time?

About a year ago, the Solicitor General told the House that he would make sure there were guards in the four towers of the British Columbia penitentiary 24 hours a day to see that people were protected from escapees and to prevent the underworld sneaking up at night, and, among other things, throwing tennis balls over the walls as a means of delivering drugs, as has happened on a number of occasions. What did I find, Mr. Speaker? I found that between midnight and 8 a.m. there were only 12 men on duty for security purposes, in an institution which is overcrowded, with 500 people. I also found that there are no guards in the towers. The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) was chastising me the other day for giving out that kind of information, suggesting it could incite a riot. But the hon. lady must realize that the inmates already have information about these things. They know what is going on in every penitentiary every day of the week. They have a system which is better than our Post Office.

An hon. Member: That would not be difficult.

Mr. Reynolds: I was told that two weeks before my visit a caché of drugs had been left in the garden in front of the penitentiary. This is possible, because people can sneak up at night and leave things where inmates can recover them during the day. Along with this caché which, fortunately, was discovered by the guards was a note saying. "Sorry we did not have time to break this down into caps. Hope we shall do better next time." Not long ago another package was found buried in the garden. This time the drug had been broken down into caps and an accompanying note listed the names of the 12 men to whom it was to be delivered. That is certainly better service than I get from the Post Office.

This is a serious matter. People will ask, "What can we do about it?" One thing we could do would be to increase the salaries paid to guards in the penitentiary service. I ask any hon. member who has the time to do so to check these salaries. The starting salary of a guard in the British Columbia penitentiary is $7,522.89 a year. This represents a take-home pay of $205 every two weeks. In the province of British Columbia, in New Westminster where this prison is situated, a 2-bedroom apartment costs $285 a month to rent. How can we expect proper security inside our institutions if we fail to pay these people properly? It is a very tough job. I do not know anyone in this chamber who would want to do such a job. How can one expect morale to be high when the government is prepared to give grainworkers an increase of 61 per cent but will not give the prison guards 6 or 7 per cent?

The Solicitor General should be taking steps now to increase the salary level of these guards. I will give him credit in some areas but in others the bureaucracy in his department does not realize what it is doing. For example, it was decided to increase recreational facilities for the benefit of the inmates and provide better qualified people to instruct them. Four experts were hired for the B.C. penitentiary, each of them holding a degree in physical education. They are paid between $13,000 and $16,000 a year. These instructors took over from guards who were previously called recreation officers, guards who were making a maximum of $10,000, because that is the maximum salary payable after five years. To be more precise, after five years a guard can be making $10,269.

One can imagine the effect on the morale of these men when I say that the new employees had to keep one of the old guards back on the job because the experts did not know how to treat the inmates or how to get along with them. The thinking of the department was: We cannot increase the salary level of the officers, but we can set up a new classification and bring in new people. Perhaps this explains why, out of a total of 118 people available for duty at one time, 70 per cent have less than one year's service. What kind of help are we giving the men we are supposed to be trying to rehabilitate? I say, none whatsoever.

I know the Solicitor General is a hard working man. He does his best. I have always tried to tell him in advance when I have questions for him, and he has always tried to answer those questions squarely and truthfully. I hope that in the next four years he will do something to improve the standard of pay and conditions for penitentiary staff so that an attempt can truly be made to rehabilitate inmates. I do not think anyone in a job of that type should be expected to live on take-home pay amounting to $205 every two weeks, particularly since staff working in the provincial jails and in the newly-created sheriff's department are paid more than that.

I should also like to say a word about the fishing industry. My riding includes two of the finest fishing areas in British Columbia. The Steveston harbour development has been before the government, and the cabinet has committed itself to go ahead. Then there is the Ladner harbour development. The latter proposal has been put in final form, but it has not yet been approved. I do have an assurance from the minister, however, that the project will go ahead. I wrote to the new minister congratulating him on his appointment, because ever since I came to this House I have been pressing for a separate minister responsible for fisheries. I asked him to visit my riding and tour both the harbours I have mentioned on a totally non-partisan basis, since it is my feeling that though there are Liberals on that side, and Conservatives or New Democrats or Creditistes on this side, we should nevertheless be able to work together for the benefit of our constituents. I hope the minister will accept the invitation to visit the fisheries in our part of Canada, together with myself and representatives of the fisheries unions.

I turn, now, to the subject of air routes. Situated in my riding is Canada's third largest airport, in addition to the headquarters for the second and third largest airlines in Canada—Canadian Pacific and Pacific Western airlines. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the government announced its intention to allocate new routes before parliament dissolved. During the period of dissolution a number of new routes were allocated and certain drastic changes were made. It had always been understood that Air Canada was allocated 80 per cent of the routes and Canadian Pacific 20 per cent. We shall not argue with that. The eastern and western United States are split between Air Canada, which has the east, and CP Air, which has the west. Air Canada serves most of Europe, while CP Air serves Hong Kong, Hawaii, and other routes in South America.

● (1450)

Under the allocation there were 17 routes; Air Canada was allocated 14, CP Air one, Nordair one, and Pacific Western Airlines one. I want to point out to the government what this means to my riding and to western Canada, but before I do so let me say that no member of this House has anything against Air Canada as a body. We support the fact that it is Canada's number one airline. I support it every Friday by going home to Vancouver on it, and I come back on Monday morning via CP Air. They are both fine airlines; both with excellent personnel.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

However, in the move the government has made, CP Air is being undercut to quite an extent. I should like to explain why this is the case. Until this allocation, business in the United States went approximately 80 per cent to Air Canada and 20 per cent to CP Air; that is, business in terms of dollar volume. Under the new allocation, by allowing Air Canada to operate routes from Calgary and Edmonton to San Francisco and Los Angeles, in ten years CP Air will be down to 10 per cent of United States business while Air Canada will increase its share to 90 per cent. I think that is unfair to the people of western Canada, the travelling public, and unfair to CP Air.

If CP Air had been allowed to have those routes from Alberta, they would have been able to operate a triangular route. CP Air would fly from Calgary to San Francisco, then to Vancouver and back to Calgary, which is a very economical route. This would not lose Pacific Western Airlines much business because they already fly from Calgary and Edmonton to British Columbia. But instead, this route has been given to Air Canada. CP Air also fly to Los Angeles. Air Canada has always served Los Angeles from Toronto. Yet they still did not get an extension of that route. They can go to Calgary and Edmonton from Los Angeles, but they cannot go to Vancouver.

I suggest to the Minister of Transport that he should very seriously consider allowing Air Canada to fly from Los Angeles to Vancouver so they can fly a circular route from Toronto to the west. He should also give the other routes back to CP Air so they can fly a triangular route from Alberta. This would mean 1,200 jobs to western Canada which Air Canada cannot offer at the moment, and we could use those jobs in British Columbia. This problem concerns the people of my riding as well as all people in western Canada, so I ask the Minister of Transport to consider the matter very seriously.

Has my time expired yet, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may proceed.

Mr. Reynolds: I have one more issue I should like to raise, Mr. Speaker. It is one we talked about a great deal in the last session and involves the residents of Sea Island. I understand that some of the members of the Liberal Party from British Columbia had a meeting with the residents of Sea Island, in the municipality of Richmond, a few weeks ago when they held their B.C. caucus. The newspapers published an account of how they were going to solve the problem, that these residents had been badly done by, but they now had eight men and women in B.C. who were going to solve their problem.

The issue is a very simple one to solve. In Pickering there have been 2,000 individual expropriations. In Ste. Scholastique there have been 3,180 individual expropriations. In Sea Island there have been only 53. The people of that area are asking for $1.5 million more than the government has offered them, a figure that most private appraisers think fair. The government has already increased expenditure in Ste. Scholastique by $16 million, and have increased their expenditure in Pickering by $7 million. As I say, there are only 53 expropriations on Sea Island, and according to any private appraiser I have talked to, these people are not asking too much. I ask the government to give them this $1.5 million, which will allow them to buy homes of comparable value to the ones expropriated. That is all that is needed to solve this problem, Mr. Speaker, not all the talk we have had for the last eight years. I hope Liberal members will live up to their commitment to solve this problem for the people of Sea Island.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to congratulate you on your elevation to the respected position that you hold. I am sure you will carry out your duties uprightly and impartially, with a sense of justice, equity and fair play.

As the only duly elected independent member of this session of parliament, I stand in a very unique position from other members of this House. As an independent member of parliament, elected as an independent, I will always have a free vote, not bound by party ties or party policies but bound by my conscience and the conscience of the public I represent, namely, my constituents in particular and the country generally.

I represent one of the most diversified constituencies in the nation. It is made up of the city of Moncton, humbly called the city at the centre, with a population of approximately 60,000 people; the town of Riverview, with a population of about 12,000 or 13,000 people; the town of Dieppe, with a population of about 6,500 people; the villages of Salisbury and Petitcodiac, and a vast rural area.

Moncton city itself is really the city at the centre. It is a centre in itself. For example, Moncton is a geographically and strategically located centre of the maritime provinces, a distribution centre, a transportation centre, a communications and telecommunications centre, an education centre, an industrial and economic centre, a financial centre and a tourist and convention centre. It is the hospitality centre of the maritime provinces, the home of the magnetic hill, of hard working, conscientious, energetic and industrious people, of fine schools and churches and of friendly and hospitable people.

Growth in the Moncton constituency is phenomenal. Traffic between my constituency and that of the city of Saint John is increasing steadily. I trust that the indication in the throne speech regarding transportation will mean, in co-operation with the province of New Brunswick, construction of a four-lane highway between these two growth centres, as well as improvement of urban transportation and other forms of transportation, so that national and regional transportation policies can and will be defined and implemented. Airline schedules and services in and out of my constituency are deplorable and must be improved.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion recently assisted municipalities in the Moncton area in the preparation of the greater Moncton metropolitan plan, which affects every phase of the life of greater Monctonians. Among other things, this plan provides for additional roadways, sewers, water, schools, rail line relocation, and so on. I trust that the appropriate departments of the federal government will continue to render and make available the necessary financial assistance required to implement this plan.

DREE assistance by way of infrastructure and incentive grants to industry has provided thousands of jobs in the greater Moncton area and is one program that should be increased substantially in that area. The Department of Urban Affairs has already approved a study for the development of a downtown area in the city. It is hoped that this study will be completed soon and that all the appropriate departments of government will co-operate in every way, including offering financial assistance, in order to bring this and other plans to fruition as Moncton continues to grow and expand. There is need in the Moncton area for greater input of financial assistance for the acquisition of homes, whether they be new or old, whether they be for young or old, adults or senior citizens.

The rules, regulations and policies change so quickly that citizens have difficulty in making a decision in between changes. The policies and housing programs of CMHC must be limited to urban areas. Rural and suburban areas must be given the same opportunity.

Moncton is truly a growth centre and has proved itself beyond all doubt. In an endeavour to combat and beat inflation there is, inter alia, a need to increase production of goods and services including food, housing and other necessities. In doing so, however, there must be an effort to increase production of all human resources as well as natural resources. These include farming, fishing, forestry, mining and so on.

Incentives and encouragement should be given to young people to remain in or shift to farming, fishing and other primary resources. We need these young people in the primary as well as the secondary industries. I also suggest the government should make an effort to purchase goods made in Canada. It should encourage good quality production and good quality goods. A second look should be taken at the reduction of tariffs if this should result in unemployment for Canadians.

The history of the Moncton constituency points to ethnic backgrounds of French, German, Welsh, English, Scottish and so on. We cannot claim any distinct racial or so-called cultural origin. We should have become Monctonians, and in any event, Canadians. Many citizens in the Moncton constituency are concerned about the present method of implementing bilingualism. It has created a fear among them concerning their future welfare and that of their families. I have noticed the same situation here in Ottawa.

Public servants are just waiting for doomsday, the date of their retirement in the knowledge that their chances of promotion are practically nil. The merit system in fact is no longer in effect. Adult language educational programs in the government services and in Crown corporations just are not effective for the amount of money spent thereon. This is a perfect example of government waste and of an unjust society.

Problems of this kind usually are solved by educational means, not at the adult level but in the public schools throughout the country. It is time we took an example from other countries where barriers have arisen because of segregation. Presently there is a form of segregation or language bias in educational systems across the land. Because of this segregation a barrier automatically is set up.

It is my sincere belief that if Canada and Canadians are to be truly bilingual and if we believe in equal rights and opportunities for all, then all youngsters in this country must be educated together. If this country is to be truly bilingual, it is time both English and French were taught in our public schools on an integrated basis. This is not the first time I have said that.

Let all our children be educated together. Let them learn together, play together and work together. Then they will get along together. Then and only then will our children become true Canadians. If the consent of the provincial premiers is required, or if it should be necessary to amend the BNA Act in order to bring this into effect, then a serious attempt to do so must be started forthwith.

I am sometimes confused when people bring up the word culture when referring to language. The word culture is a misnomer in this regard. I think when I was at college we called it a red herring. What is culture? I do not think we can honestly look for a French-Canadian culture, an English-Canadian culture, a Scottish-Canadian culture, a Ukrainian-Canadian culture, a German-Canadian culture, a Welsh-Canadian culture, an Italian-Canadian culture, a Japanese-Canadian culture, a Chinese-Canadian culture, an Indian-Canadian culture or any other kind of hyphenated Canadian culture other than a true Canadian culture. If we think otherwise, we build a false culture, not a truly Canadian culture. Culture is what a person or one's family or friends want to make it.

We should face the facts. Barriers are a problem in Canada. So often I have found young people unable to obtain employment in their chosen field for which they are duly qualified, both in government circles and in private business, because they are not bilingual. The ground rules are being changed and altered. Many of our young people have not been given the opportunity to comply with the rules.

The barriers are set up at a young age. I do not believe this is a proper and honourable manner for a government of any kind to face this problem. This is a case of government leading the way but putting the cart before the horse. This would seem to be a habit of this government. Sure; change the ground rules if need be, but make a proper and fair preparation for such changes.

Bill 22, recently enacted by the legislature of Quebec, will not promote unity or harmony. It is unconstitutional and will result in injustices and inequities for Quebeckers and other Canadians. The onus then is on the federal government to put a halt immediately to this matter by disallowance and/or referral to the Supreme Court of Canada immediately for an order restraining implementation of the act. Bill 22 conflicts with Canada's Official Languages Act and the New Brunswick Official Languages Act because it provides for only one official language in the province of Quebec.

I trust that this Parliament will not be a crisis Parliament but one which will take steps to remedy situations long before they become crises. This country desperately needs economic stability. This country desperately needs moral stability and political stability. Many problems from which we suffer as a nation and as a world, today are the result of an affluent, permissive, socialistic, political environment not really disciplined but poorly managed and operated in a carefree, nonchalant, reckless and negligent manner. It is true that as a nation and a people we must put our house in order. It is true the government and this House must address themselves to the very serious and difficult situations facing individual Canadians and families.

As a veteran I urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) to review immediately the requirements for entitlement to VLA benefits with a view to elimination of the present lot size requirement and the substitution of duly approved municipal lots. This must be done forthwith to enable our veterans who have not been able to benefit from the existing plan to obtain the advantage of the provisions before termination in 1975.

I would also suggest that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) take immediate steps to review the Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations to reduce the effect which the present system is having on business. Likewise there should be more consideration between Canada Manpower offices and unemployment insurance offices in helping people obtain positions when unemployment strikes. It might be revealing to know what percentage of persons actually are employed through Canada Manpower and what percentage of employers use this service.

I trust that the government will take a hard look at all forms of social security such as old age pensions, workmen's compensation, Canada Pension, welfare, social assistance, disability pensions, pensions for the blind, and so on, so that a comprehensive and co-ordinated policy is followed, a sensible and reasonable policy, not a complex sea of confusion.

As a new member of this House I listened intently to the Speech from the Throne in the hope that the government would finally give us an indication that immediate steps will be taken to alleviate our number one enemy, namely, inflation, and all the chaotic problems that arise from it. Quite frankly, there are some items in the throne speech which may be received well and may find acceptance among the people, but this will depend on the legislation, the regulations, and the method of their implementation.

The throne speech is a monstrosity of verbosity, honeyed up with beautiful phrases but with no details as to the quality and quantity of honey. The purpose of government is to provide service efficiently and to avoid waste and duplication. Programs devised by governments and by this House must be devised with this aim in mind. This House and the government must foster traditions of industry, initiative, loyalty, patriotism, enthusiasm, unity not separatism, industry, and so on.

Inflation can be beaten but it will take the wholehearted support and determination of this House, the federal government, the provincial and municipal governments, along with management and labour and all the sectors of our society to battle this disease. It has reached epidemic proportions—maybe some of us do not realize this as yet—and we cannot delay. Some of you may not be feeling the effects of it, but I suggest to you that the standard of living of many Canadians is poor. Regional disparity, transportation problems, housing, unemployment, interest rates and inter-governmental relations, as well as several other such matters, should be dealt with by the government. Red tape itself is inflated. It causes inflation as well as financial and mental stress. The Income Tax Act is a deterrent to growth and expansion.

I was surprised and disturbed at the fact that no mention was made in the throne speech of the plight of the Indian population in our country. A group of Indians came to Ottawa on Monday, September 30, for a pow-wow. They wanted to talk. The proper authorities should at least have listened to their difficulties so that action could be taken to help resolve them.

In closing I would like to say that it should be made known to all hon. members that as an independent member I will support what I think is good legislation and certainly oppose poor legislation.

Mr. Reynolds: We all say that.

Mr. Jones: But I will attempt to be constructive. Like many of you, I will become impatient with government inaction, particularly in times of crises. It is not only the confusion, the conflicts and the verbosity in the throne speech that bother me but the fact that it does not deal at all with so many serious and chaotic situations in which this country and its citizens find themselves.

It is my sincere hope that in this session we will see all members in all parties work conscientiously and earnestly in the best interests and for the welfare of all Canadians.

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Sainte-Marie): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the previous speakers who have asked you to convey to His Excellency our best wishes for a quick recovery. I should also like to join the other members in congratulating you on your appointment as Speaker of this House and to wish you well in your difficult task.

Moreover, I should like to congratulate the movers of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Their important contribution to this debate reflects the continuous concern of the Liberal party to renew itself by allowing young Canadians to take an active part in the government of our country. I believe it is essential for the government party to represent, as much as circumstances allow, all the groups which make up our Canadian society. I am especially happy to note that young members were elected in the government party.

I am happy to take part in this debate, mainly because of the importance of the subjects mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It deals with matters which particularly affect the constituents of Sainte-Marie whom I have the privilege of representing in this House. The problems of a constituency represent a great challenge for a member of Parliament. There is much that needs to be done in Sainte-Marie and I begin this session with determination knowing that government measures listed in the Speech from the Throne will benefit the citizens who have shown confidence in me.

During the last election, Canadians had to decide what type of leader is needed in Canada and what the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can do to solve the problems facing Canada. This matter has now been settled. The Prime Minister and his team, to which I am proud to belong, have received a very clear mandate from the Canadian people. In the second phase, the government now makes its intentions known to the House. And I am convinced that Canadians will agree that the contents of the Speech from the Throne is in line with the confidence expressed by them on July 8 last.

The Speech from the Throne contains no magic formula that would have only fooled Canadians on the nature of current problems and solutions to be considered. I think indeed that its contents reflect the climate of confidence that exists between the government and the people. For that climate to continue to exist it is important that the government party spell everything outright and introduce legislation to deal with those problems, rather than concentrating its efforts on increasing its popularity. I feel at ease in a team which can be so concerned about the fairness and the effectiveness of its program.

Mr. Speaker, we have before us a serious program indeed. The Speech from the Throne recognizes the difficulties upsetting our economy. Those difficulties were expressed by all political parties during the last election campaign. Furthermore, the many contacts I had with residents in my riding proved to me how urgent the problem is. In the riding of Sainte-Marie the economy is not a philosophical issue but a matter of survival. When I try to explain the economic situation to my fellow citizens, as I see it, I always refer to the trade position of our country. We are affected by the backlash of price increases on international markets to the extent that inflation remains a world experience, and particularly to the extent that we have very active external trade. However, note should be made of the foresight of the present Minister of Industry and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and his predecessor in his efforts to diversify our sources of supply and the export markets for our Canadian products. Those efforts make Canada much more independent from certain countries, particularly our southern neighbours, as regard the higher price of our imports and the fair pricing of our exports. This factor has too often been overlooked and I am pleased to take this opportunity to point it out.

I am also pleased to learn that the Canadian government is firmly committed through international conferences to work together with various countries to lessen the detrimental effects of inflation.

Canadian policies generally in that respect have surely been quite successful since our economic performance is one of the best in the western world.

● (1520)

However, the matter of concern to me is much more concrete and affects my fellow-citizens much more directly. I leave to the economists the task of enlarging on the causes and nature of the phenomenon of price increases. I am, however, seriously concerned about the social effect of that economic phenomenon.

Indeed, inflation might have no social implications if it would hit everybody equally. The purchasing power of each citizen would not be altered, but on the contrary, inflation is discriminatory. It does not concern all citizens to the same extent. This fact alone jeopardizes the very structures of our society. The social balance that up to now had been maintained and fostered social progress becomes increasingly precarious. This phenomenon is directly derived from the price rise which favours some people to the detriment of others, and that in a context where there are already disparities that the government is desperately trying to remove.

This social impact was first perceived in the case of persons on fixed income. The government has been aware of the difficulties derived from inflation and suffered by older people. They failed to get their share of rising incomes but like everyone else felt the burden of price increases. By this very fact, the balance was upset.

Improvement in our social security system was defeated by spiralling prices that absorbed any additional assistance by the government in that sector. The rate of inflation was higher than that of pension adjustments. As a consequence, social measures lost their meaning, not reaching their objective: to remove economic disparities.

The government acted immediately. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) eagerly introduced a bill to index the pensions to the cost of living. That measure neutralized the increasing gap separating the active population from that which had withdrawn from economic life. In addition to that measure, the government raised those pensions to a much more realistic level. I find it indeed most gratifying to read in the present Speech from the Throne that the government intends to amend the Canada Pension Plan to enable more Canadians to benefit from it.

Still, the inflation spiral now produces another effect, creates another problem which until recently was nonexistent. Union workers who, in good faith, had signed collective agreements now find themselves in a squeeze to respect their contractual commitments. Collective agreements covering 12, 24 and even 36 months very explicitly stipulate salary increases. Those agreements aim, once again, at narrowing the gap between the various social strata in Canada. That is one of the objectives of trade-unionism as we know it in Canada. That phenomenon fits perfectly within the dynamics of our society.

Every one agrees that union action has been a blessing ever since the workers' movement became somewhat better organized. Even employers have gained from it. Because of the organized workers phenomenon, and because of the positive action of the government in this area, there are fewer and fewer strikes and employer-employee relations have become more stable.

The various industrial relations acts confirmed the principle of collective bargaining by forcing employers to negotiate the working conditions of their employees. These acts put an end to all the strikes for recognition which were destroying our economy and our society before the advent of unions.

Moreover, employers today admit that, thanks to unions, their relations with their employees have improved. The union is the spokesman for all the employees concerned, so that employers found it a lot easier to deal with their employees to learn of their aspirations, and to compensate for their frustrations and the inequalities which may occur.

[Mr. Dupont.]

In short, the collective agreement as we know it had become for those concerned a guarantee of stability in preventing conflicts and setting procedures for the settlement of disputes. The golden rule was stability of agreement. Whatever the costs for the employer, he could foresee them and, more important, plan the development of his business with this period of rest in industrial relations provided by the agreement.

This is the way things were, Mr. Speaker, before inflation came, but everything has changed since. Papers abound with reports where unions demand the reopening of collective agreement, where employers, in these new circumstances, take a rigid position. Disputes, strikes termed as illegal, breach of agreement result from this, and everyone holds everybody else responsible for all evils. There is no more social balance. This is the situation I would like to consider.

I come from a province that is just painfully coming out of such a conflict and that will no doubt have to face more of the same. When witnessing such incidents, it is too easy to blame workers. It is too easily said that labour unions should simply adhere to their commitments. The real dimensions of the problem are too easily forgotten.

I mentioned the situation of the aged when inflation sneaked in. Workers are in a similar position. The context may be somewhat different, in that many workers are unionized and have spokesmen to cry aloud what they themselves feel. But isn't their plight identical? Don't we have in both cases groups of citizens for which disparity eliminating features no longer function properly? What use is a collective agreement when it no longer reduces the gap between classes?

I firmly believe that in both cases, we have one and a same problem—indexation to the cost of living. What is the significance, in real terms, of 10, 20 or 30 per cent increase when one does not know the rate of inflation that will endure throughout the term of the agreement? Is that acceptable? Nobody knows. Some will nonetheless be outraged with the rate of increase provided for in these negotiations. With inflation there is no longer any standard against which to measure the real worth of pay raises in existing agreements. Workers want that parties negotiate on firm ground, not on the basis of continually changing data. What shame is there in unions bargaining for indexation of their members' salaries? I am convinced that if employers recognized the value of this reasoning, there would ensue a greater measure of economic and social stability.

In the early years of trade unionism, as much as employers then considered as outrageous to have to negotiate with an certified union, as much do they stiffen nowadays at the mere thought of their union calling for the indexation of all wages. Therefore I believe that past employers have been favoured for a long time by the collective bargaining system and that those of today will gain by allowing that indexation.

In order to cope with present circumstances, it is urgent that we should restore the social balance and enable workers to adjust to the effects of inflation in the same way the entrepreneurs can do it by raising their prices. The same flexibility should apply to everyone. That is my idea of social justice and of the industrial peace flowing from it. Who nowadays can afford to enter into a two or three year business contract without protecting himself against rising prices? Clever businessmen do not make such deals. Why should we ask workers to do so?

Mr. Speaker, I was saying at the outset of my remarks that inflation is endangering the structures of our social order. We have here a perfect example of that. I dare say that the traditional ways of thinking have no value today. That is the great challenge of inflation. Ever rising prices forces our society, which is based on relatively static structures, into motion. We must learn to move, to change our concepts, to adjust, and at a faster rate, otherwise this thrust will get the better of our resistance.

I believe that principle should apply even in cases where a collective agreement is already in force. I am not pleading in favour of those who decide to disregard the commitments they have accepted through a collective agreement. But I will not cast a stone at them either. What does an agreement mean when the terms that led to it are changed? In a strictly legal sense, it is understood that the collective agreement remains valid. But how can one expect the workers, who feel that they were the victims of circumstances, to still be motivated to meet those obligations? Existing contracts that do not include any indexation clauses are a framework within which workers feel more and more cramped.

I believe employers should realize how urgent it is to change those agreements so as to provide for automatic indexation to price movements and that they should allow their employees the same flexibility they enjoy in setting prices for their products. Inflation has gone beyond the rate of wage increments provided for in collective agreements. There can be nothing but chaos and troubles if the situation is not corrected. It is therefore quite relevant that the throne speech dealt with labour strife and the cancellation of contracts as a result of inflation. I am pleased that the government considered those factors in outlining its program to counteract inflation.

In conclusion, may I refer to a development which concerns me greatly because it affects a large number of people in the riding I represent. Mr. Speaker, when a labour dispute breaks out, some are quick to blame organized labour for the results of the work stoppage. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to dispute the validity of such an attitude.

The situation we live in impels me to conclude that, quite to the contrary, some employers jeopardize the social order that prevails in the country by taking an unbelievably provocative and intolerant attitude. Let me refer for instance to the current dispute at the United Aircraft of Canada Limited, of which we were made acutely aware on the government side by the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier). Mr. Speaker, that industry is doing business in Canada and for ten months now it has categorically refused to bow to Canadian traditions with regard to industrial relations.

Following this unfortunate incident of violence, we were informed by newspapers that one of the matters preventing the settlement of the conflict was that the employer refused to adhere to the union security system, the so-called "Rand formula". That formula, Mr. Speaker, is part of our Canadian customs. It has been developed by a distinguished law officer who gave it his name. It is part of the Canadian reality too, so much so that the federal government thought it wise to make it compulsory for all the undertakings affected by Canada Labour Code.

Now, this firm, under provincial jurisdiction, systematically refuses to admit this reality. And yet we are surprised to see workers getting impatient after striking for ten months. I would like to convey my fullest sympathy to those workers who fight in order to obtain an advantage which is generally recognized throughout Canada. I think that the employer's position not only is unexplainable but that it gets fraught with consequences.

As I conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me mention the case of the grain handlers' strike. Here is another situation that can develop into social chaos due to the mere fact that the employers are refusing to acknowledge the merits of the report of the commissioner-conciliator, Dr. Neil Perry. The employer sticks to his position, although he knows that the government will not be able to indefinitely tolerate this work stoppage and that its legislative intervention will reflect the contents of the Perry Report. The Speech from the Throne did mention that this matter will be brought before the House because of the employers' obstinacy in failing to approve the solution suggested by Dr. Perry.

Earlier in my remarks I said that the present government must face great challenges. I look to the future with great confidence and enthusiasm. However, I am aware of the necessity for Canadian employers to become more flexible in their approach to the social and economic reality. It is in their interest. Our society can afford to develop, while enabling its citizens to progress and have their place under the sun. I am convinced that the steps taken by this government, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, will contribute to such an achievement, by minimizing the effect of the rise in prices and by making sure that the economic burden laid upon us will be borne by all in Canada. I am proud to belong to a team that is going in that direction.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss the direction of Canada's foreign policy. As most members of the House know, Mr. Ivan Head, the Prime Minister's special adviser on foreign affairs, is reported to have spoken of a new activist role for Canada on the left wing of international affairs, and of Canada's intention to take a more moralistic approach to international problems, an approach similar, although not necessarily identical, to that of Sweden. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has repudiated this account of his views. I have no difficult whatsoever in accepting Mr. Head's statement that he was misinterpreted.

● (1540)

However, I wish to say that I earnestly hope the Prime Minister and the government, particularly the new Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), will in fact take an active, humanitarian and enlightened attitude toward international affairs. I do not care whether you call it left wing or what label you attach, it is the substance and specifics that are important. I want to discuss some of them.

May I first say that I detect in the Prime Minister's statement to the Canadian Jewish Congress in Toronto On June 16 of this year, and in his address at Duke University on May 12, a substantial and, in my view, very welcome shift in Canadian foreign policy.

In the Toronto address the Prime Minister emphasized that Canada is not an island. He spoke of our dependence on others and their dependence on us. He stated he hopes Canada's presence in the world will be judged by its humanism and pursuit of social justice. He stated that Canada's foreign policy would be meaningless if this were not carried out as it would not reflect the character of Canadians.

The Prime Minister went on to quote John Donne, the Elizabethan poet, who wrote "Every man's death diminishes me". The Prime Minister added that this quotation should guide our foreign policy as it guides our domestic policy. Compassion, the Prime Minister stated, must have no geographic focus nor must our geographic efforts have geographic limitations. With these words I entirely agree. What we need is to put them into practice.

In the Duke University address the Prime Minister spoke of a fairness in the political and economic relations between developed and developing nations. He said fairness must be a reality and not a theoretical concept. He spoke of the developed nations having the knowledge and means to alter the course of human destiny. We have, indeed, a responsibility universal in concept and planetary in scope. Such responsibility, he went on, requires an exhibition of maturity and such maturity requires new values. Once again, I could not agree more. Once again I repeat it remains to put this excellent rhetoric into practice.

It seems the government is prepared to discard the priorities revealed in the white paper on foreign policy a few years ago. However, it may not be willing to admit it is doing so. In the white paper priority is clearly assigned to economic growth. Indeed, this priority was practised.

May I give as an example Canadian trade policy in respect to South Africa where we continue the Commonwealth preference although South Africa, by reason of apartheid, long ago left the Commonwealth. We helped to build up the illegal regime in Namibia and from time to time we gave effective economic help to the then Portuguese colonial regimes. I am glad to note from his speech to the Canadian Jewish Congress that the Prime Minister repeating the various objectives governing Canadian foreign policy, puts economic growth at the end of the list. He said that from time to time pursuit of one or the other of these objectives must be given preference over all others.

We must now have, in practice as well as in theory, priority on peace, on security and on social justice, on the pursuit of humanism and compassion. Economic growth is all very well but it cannot be the guide to foreign policies of Canada at this time. A change in priorities will also require a shift in policies.

The statement attributed to Mr. Head, even if misquoted, represents what is essential if the shift in priorities is to take place. I quarrel in no way with the Prime Minister's rhetoric. I only ask that it be demonstrated in practice.

A great opportunity for demonstrating the type of leadership which Canada can give lies ahead in the U.N. World Food Conference which is to take place in Rome in November. For generations many people throughout the world have suffered from malnutrition and, indeed, starvation. What are described as conservative estimates, prepared for the Rome Conference by officials of the United Nations, state that 460 million people, one-eighth of the world's population, suffer from chronic hunger and malnutrition. Recently the true proportions of the disaster facing the world have become clear.

Dr. Norman Borlaug, Director of the International Wheat, Maize Improvement Centre and a Nobel Peace Prize winner, said that as late as the spring of 1972 the world felt very complacement about agriculture. There appeared then to be adequate food reserves. But drought and poor monsoons resulted in the disappearance of surplus stocks of grain and in the very substantial increase in food prices throughout the world. With the disappearance of food grain reserves the whole world food situation, he said, has become precarious. If a major drought occurs in the world now or a crop failure in any of the large grain producing areas of the world, tens of millions could die in an international disaster and little could be done to prevent it.

Distinguished scientists recently presented a declaration to the U.N. Secretary General. In reply Mr. Waldheim said, and I quote:

> The Declaration addresses itself primarily to the dramatic depletion of available food reserves and the shortfall in world food production. There is no more immediate task than that of rescuing the world from a situation which for many has always been precarious and is now even more hazardous. Short term measures, while essential, must not be allowed to become palliatives, for the coming years will increase our vulnerability... Virtually in no other area is it more pressing than in the one to which your Declaration addresses itself, the need to assure that the men, women and children of Africa, Asia, Europe and the Americas, whatever their origin, their religion, their political philosophy, their age, their social condition, have the basic food which is the one essential, undebatable precondition of a life of dignity and decency. Without an assured supply, all our aspirations for peace, for social justice, for growth and creativity, both as individuals and as nations, lose their meaning and take on a hollow ring.

In my view in those words the Secretary General has put his finger on the major problem facing the world today, the simple problem of finding enough food to feed the people of the world.

What then must be done? There are two choices, either to increase the land area under cultivation or increase the yield of production per acre of land already under cultivation, particularly in the so-called developing world. What is needed is research, much of which must be done locally. What is needed above all is an increased production of chemical fertilizers which are in dangerously short supply.

The difficult task of increasing food production has been immensely enlarged through the present energy crisis, resulting in higher prices for petroleum products and chemical fertilizers.

We sometimes tend to claim that some of the developing countries are responsible for their own misfortunes. This does not do justice to the facts. Take the case of India, for example. In 1971 India spent $560 million on the importation of crude oil, fertilizer and food grains. If she were to buy the same amount of these products today, which she cannot afford to do, she would find that the price of crude oil and the price of fertilizer had gone up about four or five fold, and the price of food grains had tripled.

● (1550)

Freight rates have increased. In order to obtain the same amount of these products which were purchased in 1971, India would have had to pay approximately $3.1 billion, more than five times as much as in 1971. This is completely impossible as India's foreign exchange earnings from all sources are about $2.4 billion. There is no way in which India can secure adequate fertilizer and adequate crude oil except by importing, and thus India cannot afford to import what is needed. The so-called green revolution which promised so much has gone down the drain and India is forced into increasing dependence upon the rest of the world.

It is necessary not only to increase food production but to stabilize world population. However, stabilization of the world population is not an end to be sought in itself, as the recent conference in Bucharest on world population made abundantly clear. It is a by-product of development.

The sad fact is that the poorer countries have insufficient capital to improve their production. If what we say is true, that mankind is one human family, it is the duty of the richer one-third to help the poorer two-thirds. An attitude of charity is not enough. What is called for is a system which is free of exploitation and injustice.

What are some of the measures which can be taken? There is an urgent need for the creation of an internationally-managed feed reserve system which would provide a measure of price stability in a world food economy. A crash effort is needed to increase world fertilizer production. Aid can, of course, play a positive role, but it is only secondary.

I could never understand why we have not lived up to the U.N. target proposed originally, as I recall it, by the former prime minister, Mr. Lester Pearson, of .7 per cent of the gross national product for development assistance. We should do so. We should take the lead in meeting this target which has long been proclaimed but which has never been accepted in practice.

Aid can only be viable as a complement to trade and economic policies which enhance self-reliant development in the Third World. It is true that in the immediate future we shall probably be called upon to deal with disaster areas and take special emergency steps to prevent starvation, but in the long run it is only by policies of development, and by aid and trade which will assist this development, that world problems can be solved.

Sales of food to less developed countries must be made on concessionary terms. The basic problem, however, is the growing gap between the affluence of the north and the poverty of the Third World. What is required is a restructuring of the world economic system with the interests of the Third World the centre of debate. Too often the voting power in memberships of international organizations such as the IMF, the World Bank and GATT have reflected the views of the developed world and have not reflected equitably the interests of the majority of the world's population.

Canada is in a unique position to assume leadership, and the World Food Conference in Rome is a good place to start. I was glad to hear the other day that the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself expects to lead the Canadian delegation. May I once again urge that provision be made for the attendance at the conference of other Members of Parliament from the different parties, as well as representatives of non-governmental organizations.

So far, Mr. Speaker, I have been speaking of the tragic possibilities inherent in the world food situation. I want now to turn to the tragic realities in one part of the world and suggest that if Canada's policy is to be based, as the Prime Minister says, on humanism, a new attitude is required. I refer to the situation in Viet Nam.

As is now well-known, the Paris Peace Agreement, although it brought about the withdrawal of most American military personnel from Viet Nam, has not brought peace to that country. Indeed, the hideous and tragic war has continued and U.S. military aid involvement in South Viet Nam is continuing.

According to an article in the New York Times by David K. Shippler the United States, far from phasing out its military involvement in South Viet Nam has descended from a peak of warfare to a high plateau of substantial support, dispatching not only huge quantities of weapons and ammunition but also large numbers of American citizens who have become integral parts of the South Vietnamese supply, transport and intelligence systems. Indeed, an article in the Globe and Mail by Charles Taylor, a responsible journalist, suggests that Canada has been indirectly involved in the supply of weapons and ammunition to South Viet Nam for the continuation of the war.

It is true that the American people and the American Congress are becoming restive. Recently the Senate, despite the urging of President Ford in the honeymoon era of his administration, voted by a majority of only one to meet a request for increased aid to Saigon. The basic reason for this is that more and more Americans are becoming aware of the situation in regard to political prisoners.

The existence of political prisoners in South Viet Nam is beyond any reasonable dispute. Substantial accounts of mistreatment and torture of such political prisoners have been authoritatively reported by responsible people from different countries. Evidence has been given before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the U.S. House of Representatives and before the U.S. Senate Sub-Committee on Refugees.

I myself have had an opportunity to interview many witnesses of unquestionable credibility who have seen the evidence of continued terror and torture. The scale is tremendous even if the numbers are sometimes in dispute. The conclusion of Amnesty International, a respected international organization, was that there were 70,000 to 100,000 political prisoners being held. The U.S. Senate Foreign Aid Appropriations Sub-Committee set the figure at between 40,000 and 60,000.

Various other sources estimate the number of political prisoners at 200,000 or more. The Saigon government has denied the existence of any political prisoners or fixed their number at various times, as between 5,000 and 40,000. But the Saigon government has a simple way of dealing with this subject. It changes the records in respect to the political prisoners in its dossiers, designating them as common criminals. Thus, it is able to say there are no political prisoners.

Who are these prisoners? They are a varied group of students, including Buddhists, labour leaders, lawyers, peasants and opposition politicians. Few of them are communists or supporters of the National Liberation Front. The offence of many of them has been to seek a neutral solution, and pacification and reconciliation in Viet Nam. They constitute the element most able to carry out this pacification in accordance with the solemn terms of the Paris Peace Agreement. We have ourselves seen films from a respected British television company, Granada, showing interviews being conducted with prisoners, the victims of torture, and demonstrating the pitiable condition they were in.

Among the witnesses were a number of Canadians, and I refer in particular to Bishop Belanger of Valleyfield, Quebec; to Mr. Label, a law professor at the University of Quebec; to Mrs. Thelma Baker, a highly-respected member of the United Church, and, indeed, to my former colleague, Mr. Doug Rowland, the former member for Selkirk, whose loss to this House, I must add in parenthesis, I deeply deplore.

The reality of this picture of repression, torture, terror and death cannot be seriously contraverted. It may be overlooked, it may be minimized, but it exists. It seems to me that the words of John Donne, quoted by the Prime Minister as a guide to our foreign policy—"every man's death diminishes me"—are appropriate.

But what has the Canadian government done? I do not doubt for a moment the deep and real humanitarian concern of the Canadian government and its representatives. But I think they have failed to take the necessary steps that might improve the situation.

I must admit that the Canadian government, through the former secretary of state for external affairs, made diplomatic and private representations to the Saigon government, but it does not seem that these representations did any good. What he also did was to decline to accept representations made by a group of members of this House from almost all parties, many of them members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs, urging Canada to take a more active role in seeking a reference of the matter to the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations, or pressing for more effective inspection by the International Red Cross or other international agencies.

We had full discussions with the former minister but he decided that no action should be taken toward an international handling of the problem, and that no overt protest should be made. His basic ground for taking this view he said was that such action would not have effective results or be productive. He even went so far as to say that it might be counter productive.

I for one cannot accept, and I think hon. members of the House will not accept, this particular conclusion. To do so would undermine the international machinery for the protection of human rights set up through the United Nations. The treatment of political prisoners in Viet Nam disregards principles of international law, the universal declaration of human rights, the spirit of the United Nations charter, the Geneva convention and the Paris agreement.

It is not correct to say that treatment of its own nationals by any particular country is never a matter of international concern. When such treatment amounts to a gross violation of fundamental human rights, it does become an international issue. Apartheid in South Africa is clearly an illustration of this. To bypass the machinery of the United Nations is to ensure its futility. This is in face of the fact that one of the most promising international developments since the end of the last war has been the growth of international humanitarian law. The bypassing of this machinery is a poor service to the international community, to the United Nations, and to the development of the rule of law.

How can it be said that such a reference would be unproductive? This is a question that no one can answer with certainty. The fact remains that the regime in South Viet Nam is absolutely dependent on outside aid to maintain itself in existence, let alone achieve any degree of stability. The United States administration has continued to support the Thieu regime and to ignore its record of terror and torture. But more and more public opinion in the United States and in Congress, both in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, is seeking to limit this aid. The finding of an international tribunal on this matter, I suggest, would be bound to have a substantial effect.

We urge the government to reconsider its views on this matter and to consult again with other sympathetic governments, such as Sweden, The Netherlands and Austria. I have no doubt there are many others, and I can assure the government that there are a great number of people in Canada who are deeply concerned that Canada demonstrate its humanitarian concern for more active steps to rouse world opinion. Abuse of fundamental human rights is all too common in the world today, but by far the largest scale example of this abuse is what is happening to political prisoners in South Viet Nam.

There are other aspects of our attitude toward Viet Nam that require re-examination. I was glad to hear that the government is extending reconstruction aid to North Viet Nam through a non-governmental agency which, if I heard alright, is the World Council of Churches. I hope this policy of treating all parts of Viet Nam, regardless of political philosophy, equally in matters of aid will be continued.

There is another development that requires to be watched. A determined effort is being made to use international organizations such as the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the International Development Agency, the International Monetary Fund, and internationally subscribed funds, including Canadian funds, to bolster the regime in South Viet Nam. This attempt has been going on for some time now but has not yet succeeded.

According to an article in Le Monde of September 21, a highly secret meeting under the aegis of the World Bank is to take place in Paris on October 17. It is proposed to request the World Bank organization to extend, through the International Development Agency, a loan of $50 million to the Saigon regime. The proposed Canadian contribution would be of the order of $5 million.

I urge that, before Canada consents to this, conditions be imposed, namely that real progress must be made in the freeing of political prisoners and that adequate international inspection of places of detention by the International Red Cross or some other international body be permitted. Such loans should be made to all areas of war ravaged Viet Nam, not to one area alone, in accordance with the spirit of the Paris peace agreement. It is said that these international organizations like the World Bank do not operate on political considerations, but is it not a political act, while a conflict is going on, to extend aid to one side and not the other?

I should like to hear from the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Canada is to be represented at this meeting and, if so, what attitude we are going to take. Much the same could be said of the situation in Chile, but I presume my time is coming to an end so I shall not enlarge on that matter. Here again is a regime that has demonstrated a record of terror and suppression of human rights, one that should not be bolstered through economic aid in the form of loans from international consortia or otherwise.

If we are to have a peaceful and stable world in which humanism is to be the touchstone of policy, then we need to give more effective support to the United Nations. I do not blame people for being disillusioned and frustrated over the futility which inevitably flows from a body that is not in itself a sovereign power but can only act after a measure of consensus between its individual members, who are sovereign states, has been reached. However, the importance of the United Nations to world peace cannot be denied.

It is no accident that three most important international gatherings have taken place recently under the aegis of the United Nations. I refer to the Stockholm conference on the environment, the Bucharest conference on world population, and the coming world food conference in Rome. All of these were convened by and through the United Nations, which is helping to build an international order that is absolutely essential for the peaceful development of humanity.

I think I should also say a word about peacekeeping operations. They do not always succeed. Although the political results are not what they might be, I think every Canadian has a right to be proud of the fact that in Cyprus the Canadian Armed Forces played a tremendously vital role in the saving of human life and the development of what is at least a truce that has some chance of becoming a stable settlement in that unhappy island. Nor should we forget the role of the United Nations in the conflict in the Middle East. Suffice it to say that, whether Mr. Head was misquoted or not, the time has come for Canada to heighten its world influence—and I am using his words—by taking a more moralistic approach to international problems and a more active role on a humanist basis in foreign affairs, a basis that puts its emphasis on human problems that affect people wherever they live.

We wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs the very best in his onerous task, and if the government's policies are directed to the ends that I have described, he can count on our support.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): It gives me great pleasure, through you, Madam Speaker, to congratulate the Speaker of the House on his appointment to that high position, as well as to you for filling the role so well through some of these sittings. Those who know me will know that I have long advocated a more important role for women in the politics of this country, and one thing that pleases me about this parliament is the number of ladies who are here as members from a variety of constituencies.

● (1610)

I also congratulate the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) for their able moving and seconding of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I appreciate the honour to my province that was extended when the hon. member for Vancouver East was asked to undertake that particular task.

It is good to be back. I sat in this House as the member for Okanagan-Revelstoke some six years ago. It gives me great pleasure now to return as the member for Okanagan-Kootenay, a much larger constituency than that which I represented previously.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: While I was in Ottawa earlier for one of our party's caucuses I happened to run into the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as he was leaving the building. He spoke to me in his usual kind, and affable way. He said I was one of the recidivists. I was rather pleased he had not referred to it as returning to the scene of the crime.

At the time I was thinking of it more in the nature of a reincarnation, but I realized because of the background of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that for me to have replied to him using that word would have lead to some theological problems. It seemed to me that he and the members of his party had enough political problems at the present time, and that therefore I should not add to them.

It has given me a great deal of pleasure to meet a number of parliamentary colleagues who were here when I was previously here. I refer to colleagues in all the parties represented in the House. I see that many cabinet ministers are still here from those previous years. They are very much to be remembered, as well as those other people who administer to us in the Parliament of Canada, all those people who conduct small duties. I refer to the waitresses, the messengers and others. It has moved me very deeply to be remembered by so many of them.

I represent, in Okanagan-Kootenay, a very diversified constituency. In some ways for two-thirds of the constituency this is a maiden speech because I am representing those people for the first time.

It is a marvellously beautiful constituency, one that was visited by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) during the campaign. He was able to see its beauty at firsthand. I am sure he would remember the morning when we crossed the flooding St. Mary's River to attend a great rally at Cranbrook. At that time things seemed to be looking very bright for this party. I suppose we should have perceived that the water in the river was muddy and that it was a Liberal tide that was swelling, but that observation did not come to us until somewhat later.

This is a constituency which reaches from south of Vernon all the way around through Rogers Pass, that beautiful highway, then south through the Kootenay Valley, on to the United States border, and then back over almost to Creston and on to the Crowsnest.

One delight in campaigning through that constituency is its great physical beauty. I found that no matter how exhausted I might be on reaching the town of Golden and proceeding south, the beauties and wonders of the Kootenay River Valley always provided an amazing lift that buoyed me up through the various campaigns.

Yet, in spite of all that beauty there are problems that are with us still in spite of the election. One gathers that they will be with us for a long time. I think principally of the problem of inflation which is at the root of many of the other things that trouble this constituency and this country. There is industrial strife in the constituency. There are people out on strike at the present time. They are on strike because they feel wage settlements have not been keeping up with inflation, and they have not been, Mr. Speaker. This is a severe problem.

There are cities which would like to go ahead with development but find the cost excessive. There are farmers who are very concerned about the falling price of beef and the rising price of everything they must buy for their operations. They know the significance of inflation in this land.

There are mills throughout the constituency and in the province that are closed down or are laying off workers in great numbers because of the falling prices of lumber. Lumber prices are falling because inflation has not allowed the Canadian people to build the houses they would like to build.

There is a crisis in municipal affairs throughout the land. Various spokesmen have urged that the municipalities be given a greater share of the tax resources which, in a sense, would make them a little more independent of the whims of federal or provincial governments. I sympathize entirely with this view. It has been presented most recently by Mayor Fleming of Vernon, who himself was a member of this parliament some years ago.

There are urgent problems such as flood control, for example, which is enormously expensive. Anyone during the campaign who watched part of the town of Golden going under water would realize how close to the hearts of the people is the question of flood control. Yet, projects are delayed and postponed because of the expense. I realize there is not a great federal role in that area until disaster strikes, but it does seem to me it would be significantly important to have intervention prior to a disaster when we know, through studies and reports, what is essential to prevent that sort of flooding.

[Mr. Johnston.]

In the beautiful Okanagan Valley we will have a problem with weed control in the lakes throughout the south central area of British Columbia. In some ways this is a very local affair, important to the regional district. It is also a provincial affair, but I submit that anything as beautiful as that valley is also a national asset. One would feel again that there is, and must be, a role for the federal government in tackling a problem of that kind.

The constituency I represent also contains a variety of national parks. I wish the minister responsible for national parks were here this afternoon. I shall be making representations to him as the weeks go along. One would believe of anything as beautiful as a national park in British Columbia that living there, or nearby, would reflect some of the qualities of living in paradise. But one finds, travelling through those regions, that there are particular problems for the people who are living in or near national parks.

I urge that the federal government, which establishes and controls those parks, should have an open and generous policy to remedy the anomalous situation of people living among marvellous scenery and natural beauty, and who find themselves frustrated and almost in despair because of the slowness of action taken on a variety of problems within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

The question of redistribution was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. This is a subject which concerns my constituency very much. The name of the constituency derives from different languages. The Okanagan part is interior Salish, a part of the great Salish language group of British Columbia. The Kootenay part comes from the extrusion of the plains people across the Rocky Mountains of British Columbia. The constituency itself today still bears some of that remarkable diversity suggested by its very name.

At the time I appeared before the redistribution committee in respect of its proposal to set up this constituency I referred to this matter, and the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) rose then to ask whether I would explain. At that point I did not take the time to explain, but this was what I meant. It is a difficult constituency to serve and I should like to pay tribute to the previous member, Mr. Douglas Stewart, its representative for six years, who retired.

We have lost, and we continue to lose too many people from British Columbia who have struggled with the problems of representing such vast areas, particularly considering the remuneration they receive compared with what they could receive in other professions or occupations in British Columbia. They struggle with the problem of travelling in winter throughout a very extended constituency. I sympathize with anybody from that province who has a young family and who endeavours to serve in this House, because the problems are very great. One of the things that redistribution could do, and I trust will do, is give to the province of British Columbia a more equitable representation than it has at present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: The constituencies are vast. So far as I can see, any new proposals for redistribution do not appear to go to the root of the problem for us, the representatives from British Columbia. I agree with Mr. Stewart who gave as his reason for retiring the strain of the task. The experience of six years should not be abandoned because of those difficulties. However, I sympathize with him wholeheartedly. I trust that redistribution will proceed and that it will accomplish something.

One of the other interesting proposals that have been put forward in the Speech from the Throne is that the debates in this chamber be televised. I find this proposal interesting and amusing because, as long as six years ago, when I was here previously this matter was being raised as something that simply had to be done and that would somehow contribute to democracy in this land. I was interested to hear the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) make some reference to it a week or two ago suggesting that he would recommend the televising of this chamber's proceedings. I would like to warn him against that course which I opposed six years ago, and will continue to oppose now.

I have always been an admirer of the colour of the hair of that hon. member for Eglinton, but I do not think that he will be any match for Betty Kennedy when he appears on "Front Bench Challenge", nor do I believe that the ratings for such a program would surpass the ratings for the existing program of which Canadians have grown so fond through the years. Even if we called such a program "Talky Night in Canada" I do not think that its ratings would be anywhere near those of the programs broadcast by that great Canadian institution which has allowed us to follow the Team Canada series in the past few weeks.

I happen to believe in the representative system of parliamentary democracy. I think it is the best guarantee of freedom that any country in this world can have, and I believe it should stand on its own as something good and worthwhile. I think that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his 1968 campaign in particular, did an enormous amount of harm to democracy in Canada by talking about participatory democracy, which led many people to believe that somehow the television set could link people more closely and provide something in the nature of a direct democracy such as was known in ancient Greece where democracy was born.

I do not believe that, Madam Speaker. I believe that the people of this country elect their representatives to get on with the business of government. Although they may watch the process, they want to get on with the business of living their lives at the same time. I find any suggestion that television will improve the nature of the deliberations of this House strange indeed. Television, as Professor McLuhan says, is entertainment, but our purpose here is to legislate.

The right hon. Prime Minister in his speech on leader's day said that the important task of this House is the debating of legislation. This is our aim, not to entertain. That is not why we are assembled here. I will have more to say on the subject later, particularly on any attempt to change basically the nature of our parliamentary system, because that is what television does to everything that it touches; it changes it. I do not think we should allow that change to be undertaken lightly, nor do I think we need to allow it to be understaken at all.

I am particularly disappointed that the speech which we heard from the right hon. Prime Minister contained hardly any mention of the problem of inflation. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), who preceded me, quoted poetry to the House. I also would like to quote a line of poetry. It comes from Kenneth McRobbie. The poem is very aptly called "Changing the Constitution" and it can be found in the August 1974 issue of the Canadian Forum. The line should answer the question of anybody who listened to the right hon. Prime Minister and asked after the speech: what did he say about inflation? It reads "nothing you could give a name to or glimpse in plain daylight". I would recommend the reading of the poem to the right hon. Prime Minister and indeed to any member of the House.

One of the things that I noted with particular pleasure in the Speech from the Throne was the suggestion that "O Canada" would be made our national anthem in the full legal sense, and it pleases me that the first reading of that bill was given in the House.

I worked on the committee considering the national anthem six years ago. That committee worked long and hard. At one of its earlier sessions I suggested that all we really had to do was to accept the French language version of the anthem and slightly amend the English version. I am afraid the committee was a bit carried away and we ended up having another contest in which Canadians were asked to write another national anthem. We waded through some 600 suggestions that were forwarded to us. In the end, however, we accepted the French language version as it was, and slightly amended the English. I feel that this bill should receive a speedy passage through the House, and I trust that all members of all parties will agree to it.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity of again addressing the House of Commons and serving my country. I am proud and pleased that my constituents have chosen to send me here. I have spoken before on behalf of my constituency and province, and it gives me great joy, Madam Speaker, to have returned to this great institution.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it is an honour to rise and address this House for the first time, and particularly to do so on behalf of the people of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe. I am sure each and every one of them would join with me in congratulating the Speaker and his very able assistants on their appointments. I know all three will have the support of members on all sides of the House.

Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe is a very unique constituency. It contains, I suppose, one of the fastest growing urban areas in all North America in the Brampton-Bramalea area. I think Bramalea is a model for some of the new cities that will be built across Canada.

The riding as well has a very rich agricultural industry and the towns of Alliston and Orangeville are dependent upon it. In addition, my riding has a large military base at Camp Borden. So, Madam Speaker, it is a real privilege and honour to have been elected by people with such diverse interests and such diverse endeavours. Through you, I want to thank all those who supported me and elected me. I want to say to the people of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe that I will represent them as fairly and as energetically as I possibly can.

Perhaps of all the attributes the riding of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe has, the greatest is its people. I am honoured to have a group of young people in the gallery today who have shown a marked interest in the political process. I hope they will maintain that interest, and my fondest hope is that one of them will have the privilege which I enjoy today of entering this chamber and addressing it for the first time.

I think I was a little bit younger than any of them when I first became interested in politics and made the decision that I would pursue a political career if I had the opportunity. A great influence in my life was a relative of my father's who became the first woman ever to sit in this chamber, Agnes MacPhail. If I can even achieve a percentage of the effect on the social and economic reforms in this country that she did, then my time here will be well spent. I share the feeling she expressed that perhaps the most awesome moment in her life was when she rose to address this chamber for the first time.

I should like to congratulate the cabinet, and particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on the Speech from the Throne. I think it addresses the key issues as they are seen by the people of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe.

A good deal of the emphasis was on the economy and the inflationary factors within it. I was particularly glad to see that the Prime Minister indicated an intention to bring forth a budget at the earliest possible time. It is my view that most of the things that can be done about inflation can be done through the budget. I agree with the government's basic approach to inflation, that of applying every means possible to increasing the supply of goods and services to meet demand, and taking steps to lessen the impact of inflation upon those who can least afford it. I hope this parliament will very soon introduce legislation which will allow the government to take steps to stop profiteering.

I am very pleased that in the Speech from the Throne there was no indication of a move that would stall the economy. If we have to suffer anything I think it is better to suffer inflation than to stall the economy and end up with both unemployment and inflation, as has happened in so many other countries.

I was also glad to see in the Speech from the Throne two things that are very important to the people of my riding; the intention to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the intention to give continued attention to effective government spending. People are concerned about the Unemployment Insurance Act, particularly those provisions which allow payment of benefits to people who voluntarily leave their employment or leave because of bad conduct. As many people know, I have been critical of the Unemployment Insurance Act and I am glad to see that amendments are proposed.

In the time at my disposal this afternoon, Madam Speaker, I want to speak about two of the key items in the Speech from the Throne, matters that will face Canada over the next 25 to 30 years. These are the questions of energy and food production. In my view any country that is not essentially self-sufficient in food and self-sufficient in energy does not have a very rosy future.

Any country that is essentially self-sufficient in energy and in food must have a lower level of inflation and a lower level of unemployment than others. It will have very strong industrial base and most certainly will show leadership in the world in the future. If you question that, Madam Speaker, I ask you to compare our economy and its inflation and unemployment with some other countries that are short of either energy or food, and you will find that some of them have inflation far beyond 30 per cent. I think we are very fortunate because there are probably less than half a dozen countries as self-sufficient in food and energy as is Canada.

We heard a lot about the energy situation, last year. It was a common topic in the newspapers and media, and I suppose even in this chamber was spoken of more than any other subject. This great debate on energy is far from over, Madam Speaker. We must remember that by the turn of the century our need for energy will be 2½ times as great as it is today. Let us pause and reflect on that.

I should like to congratulate the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) on his capable handling of the crisis last year and to wish him well for the future. Many of the decisions that he and the government and this House must take will be more important to the future of the country than any other issues I can visualise.

Only 5½ years from now, in 1980, the United States will import as much oil as they will produce domestically. In terms of today's dollars it will cost them $25 billion to $30 billion, that is, if they can get it. Just think what that will do to their balance of payments position. In terms of the energy crisis I think one of the greatest threats to Canada is the possibility of importing countries becoming protectionist in order to guard their balance of payments. Ontario exports two-thirds of its energy to the United States, so that is a good market.

Something else that concerns me, Madam Speaker, is the ownership of our uranium resources. I was glad to see the government express an intention in the Speech from the Throne to do something about this problem. I was equally delighted to hear the government announce that there will be guidelines and policy introduced regarding the amount of uranium we should allow to be exported from Canada. The policy will take into account our long term needs. I think all Canadians can stand a little taller because of the tremendous success of CANDU. I think all in this House are proud of its success.

Generally, our use of energy is increasing. Petroleum use has grown by 4 per cent, and the use of electrical energy by 7 per cent. This shows that we are shifting away from the use of petroleum and placing more reliance on electricity. Ontario, which now produces much electrical energy, will use more in the future. It is quite conceivable that by about 1990 half the electrical energy used in Ontario will be derived from uranium. Uranium energy will supply between 20 and 25 per cent of total provincial needs.

Clearly, we should do everything in our power to make sure that the uranium industry remains under Canadian ownership and protection. In any event I am pleased to see the shift away from petroleum to uranium as a source of energy. The use of such clean energy surely will meet most of the objections of the environmentalists and conservationists. More important, energy generated this way is practically inflation proof.

Speaking as a Canadian, I would not be comfortable in thinking that our uranium industry might pass into foreign hands. I know that there is a large element of foreign investment in our uranium industry. I would not willingly accept our uranium industry passing into the hands of multi-national petroleum companies. Such control would challenge the economic independence of Canada. We simply cannot allow it. It seems to me that if those holding an interest in the uranium industry wish to sell their interest, the government should be the buyer. We should buy those facilities. So important is uranium, that it ought to be considered as a public utility. I would be prepared to go even further and have some agency of government, perhaps the Canadian Development Corporation or some similar agency, granted terms of reference which would allow it to engage actively in uranium exploration. The government ought to be involved in that area.

I was pleased to see the government's intention to establish Petro-Canada expressed in the Speech from the Throne. I want the government to proceed with this immediately. It should give this Crown corporation a mandate which will allow it to operate effectively as a significant factor in the energy field. I want the corporation to be involved in the exploration for petroleum, in the proving up, in basic refining, and perhaps involved in the manufacture and selling of petroleum derivitives, although that role may not have been envisaged for Petro-Canada.

When we talk of inflation we naturally talk of items which have increased very greatly in price. I am thinking of fertilizer, clothing and so on. There is always one factor that is common to all such items: they are all petroleum based, or made from petroleum derivitives. It seems to me that if we are concerned about profiteering, we might look at the marketing practices of petroleum companies. Here I am thinking of the marketing of petroleum derivitives. That might be the logical area for Petro-Canada to be involved in. Contrary to what many suggest, I do not see Petro-Canada being involved in the retail end of the business.

The people now retailing petroleum products are among the most efficient operators in our economy and I do not think the government should compete with them. Surely we could give Petro-Canada, or an agency like it, a mandate strong enough to enable it to make its presence felt in the petroleum business, particularly in the Canadian far north where the federal government has jurisdiction under the constitution.

I should like to see Petro-Canada being given another role as well. We should consider allowing Petro-Canada to be involved in marketing. If it is necessary for us, for the sake of eastern Canada, to enter into long term commitments with, say, Venezuela or any of the multinational petroleum producers, I think Petro-Canada would be the logical agency of government to do so on behalf of all Canadians.

May I introduce another thought about energy, a thought which has not been given as wide a presentation as it deserves. I am talking about the efficient utilization of energy. It seems to me, when we talk of energy use in Canada, that we are talking about a three part equation; the availability of energy, the price of energy and the distribution of energy. I think Canada probably has available more energy per capita than any other country in the world. We are not concerned so much about energy shortages as about using up very low priced energy currently available to us. Traditionally, our energy has been cheap. Probably less than 3 per cent of the cost of production is tied up in energy, and about 5 per cent of disposable income is spent on it. We have never thought very much about how we can use energy most efficiently.

Let me put forward this thesis. Every percentage point by which we increase the efficiency of our use of energy will mean that that much more energy will remain available to us at a lower price. I am not saying that we need to run out of energy. Increasing its efficient use will make available more energy at a lower price for home and industry. Consider all the energy now being used in Canada for transportation and other purposes. At present we are converting to energy only about 40 per cent of the resource we take from the ground. Surely we can use our engineering and design expertise to create equipment which will do a better job than existing equipment. I like to think that we can create equipment which will do the same job but use 25 per cent less energy.

Certain parts of the world, including the United States, have become concerned about energy shortages. Governments have tried to instil what I call a conservation ethic into their people. Governments want people to adopt a fundamentally changed lifestyle and use less energy. So far most of these programs have failed. It seems to me we need, through better engineering and design, to create better equipment. With superior engineering we can still retain our present standard of living, protect the environment, and retain the current productivity of industry, even though we use less energy.

I suggest that there is a definite role for the federal government in this field. The minister, whom I observed last night on television, said that something must be done to conserve petroleum. I submit that the efficiency with which we use it is equally important. It is not so much that industry does not respond to a conservation program; mainly it is a case of good equipment which will save energy not being available.

As I say, we can save a great deal with improved design. Has anyone stopped to think of the tremendous amount of energy which goes through a ventilation system and is expended, and of the energy which is lost through waste water? This heat, which is a form of energy, could be reclaimed.

I think the government should provide leadership and encourage good design. The tax structure should encourage the installation of more efficient equipment. This should be made more attractive.

After all, we have done this for the environmentalists. During the past few years there has been concern in Canada about the quality of the environment, and we have directed industry to clean up and, in some cases, to use higher quality fuel. We have made it possible through the tax structure for improved equipment to be installed. Now the argument has swung the other way and we are concerned about energy conservation. I suggest that concern about energy perhaps is equally important, or even more important. Perhaps we could use some of the tax incentives that were used to promote the aims of the environmentalists to promote conservation of energy.

● (1650)

I like to think that the government, through its research activities and programs, will be substantially involved in trying to improve the efficiency by which electricity is generated. Possibly by the year 1990, and definitely by the year 2000, 25 to 30 per cent of all energy used in Canada will be used solely to generate electricity. Just think what a boon a 5 per cent improvement in how we generate electricity would be and how we use our resources.

When we talk about heat efficiency it is really the relationship of the amount of energy we use to generate it versus the amount of electrical energy that is generated. There is a lot of room for improvement. Most of this relates to the metallurgical process in terms of the degree of heat that available metals today will stand. I think this is a very useful area in which the government should be involved.

When we talk about concern where there is a large national interest, it may be that some of the leverage the government has should be used. The government should take a very serious look at the Canadian building code. We build acres and acres of large industrial buildings, and we call for very little or minimum insulation in any of them. We do not have a concerned attitude about making buildings energy efficient in terms of the amount of insulation. To do so would really only increase the cost by a very small percentage. In terms of improving the thermal capabilities of the building, we are talking about a small amount of money.

While the building code must apply with a very broad application and to many concerns, there is still room for improvement.

I would like to see the government go further in terms of publishing comparative data on equipment that is often used by major users of energy. I think, for example, of air conditioners. My information is that some air conditioners are as much as 30 per cent more efficient in terms of energy utilization than others. Surely this should be a concern of the manufacturing and producing sectors. The government can perhaps play a role in that area.

I wish to make one or two other points in speaking of energy. In terms of the broad problem we are dealing with and the importance of it, I have often wondered about giving some thought to our export contracts. Canada and Canadians have a great vested interest in terms of energy export contracts. There are those who say these should be phased out, there should be higher prices, and so on. There is some validity in that. There is also concern that we may seriously damage the United States economy by so doing. We have a very great vested interest in that. We must also consider that we import a considerable amount of energy from the United States in the form of coal for Ontario.

The United States are in a very critical position at this time in relation to energy. They have vast reserves of petroleum on the North Slope. We might explore with our American friends some means of allowing them to use more of our resources at this time, if those resources are replaced by others as they are developed on the North Slope. We would pay the same price as that at which we are now exporting to the United States. This would be of some help to their critical problem. It would preserve one of the great advantages our industrial base should have, namely, medium or low priced energy for its use. If we could negotiate some type of arrangement like that it would be in the best interests of both countries.

There is one other point about which I feel very strongly. It concerns government allotments in the budget for research. Every Canadian can, and should stand just a little bit taller because of the tremendous success of CANDU. However, we should not stop here, pause, and say we have done a good job. There is much more to do. We need to move quickly into the area of breeder reactors. I would like to think that Canada could be one of the world leaders in terms of research, and prototype engineering the establishment of fusion. Whichever gets to the threshold first will be the country with a future that will be envied by all nations. It is the type of country I want Canada to become.

I notice my time is almost up. I wanted to put forth some very strong views about the MacKenzie Valley pipeline. I had hoped I would have time to talk about the food problem I raised earlier. I wanted to comment on what I think are some of the problems facing that industry, and what I think is the relationship that marketing boards should have to producers and consumers. However I hope I will have the opportunity to rise again in this House to put forward these points of view.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I notice, Madam Speaker, it is five o'clock. I wonder if we might call it five o'clock and move the adjournment of the House until Monday.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It being five o'clock, pursuant to an order made by the House earlier today, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CORRECTION IN ORDER PAPER AND NOTICES

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the special order passed last Friday, the Chair feels that the orders of the day, as published on page 7 of the order paper, should be modified and read as follows:

1. Questions on Order Paper.
2. Oral Questions.
3. Government Orders.
4. Address Debate.
5. Private members' business (From 5 to 6 p.m.)

In addition, at ten o'clock this evening, debate could be held on the motion for adjournment.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) presented the second report of the special committee appointed to prepare and report lists of members to compose the standing committees of the House, in both official languages, as follows:

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Messrs.

Bussières	Lapointe	O'Sullivan
Condon	MacDonald (Egmont)	Pinard
Daudlin	MacKay	Reid
De Bané	Maine	Roche
Fortin	Mitges	Symes
Jelinek	Nicholson (Miss)	Tessier
Lachance		Wenman
Lambert (Edmonton West)

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Messrs.

Allard	Forrestall	Patterson
Andres (Lincoln)	Francis	Pelletier (Sherbrooke)
Appolloni (Mrs.)	Grafftey	Pinard

Daudlin	Loiselle (Chambly)	Reid
Ellis	Maine	Reynolds
Epp	Marshall	Rodriguez
	Parent	Symes

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

Messrs.

Balfour	Hnatyshyn	Marceau
Béchard	Laprise	McCleave
Brewin	Lawrence	Poulin
Fox	MacGuigan	Robinson

Your Committee also recommends that the Members to serve on the Joint Committee on the direction of the Parliamentary Restaurant be as follows:

Messrs.

Allard	Isabelle	Roberts
Bégin (Miss)	Langlois	Roy (Laval)
Crouse	Lumley	Schumacher
Gauthier (Ottawa Vanier)	McKinley	Skoreyko
Gilbert	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)	Stewart (Cochrane)
Guay (St. Boniface)	Neil	Stollery
	Paproski

And your Committee also recommends that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House in the formation of the Joint Committees on Printing, the Library of Parliament, Regulations and other Statutory Instruments and the direction of the Parliamentary Restaurant and that the Members to serve on each of the said Committees on the part of this House will be as contained in this report.

[Later:]

Mr. Sharp moved that the report be concurred in.

SUGGESTED BILINGUAL REQUIREMENT FOR SEAWAY PILOTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask permission of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) that:

In view of English being the language of international marine communication, the House instructs the government, and in particular the Department of Transport, to take all necessary action toward preventing the Crown corporation known as the Laurentian Pilotage Authority, from making any attempts to institute a bilingual requirement for pilots on ships in the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Speaker: The House heard the motion presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to receive the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED NEED FOR IMPROVED TRACK MAINTENANCE BY RAILWAYS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter is the disclosure in the third report of the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission that derailments on the CNR and CPR in 1972 were triple the 1959 derailments and double the 1969 derailments; and that deaths and injuries from these derailments can only accelerate. The Transport Board proposes to reduce load weights and load heights, thus so further decreasing the performance record of these railways, "unless improved programs and standards of track maintenance are immediately undertaken to eliminate the causes of such derailments." I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House, under its powers in the Railway Act, urges the government to order the CNR and the CPR forthwith to institute improved programs and standards of track maintenance so that these railways will fulfil their subsidized function of serving the Canadian public in a safe and efficient manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH LEGISLATION RELATING TO GRAIN HANDLERS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That, during the debate on the motion for second reading of the bill intituled 'An Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada', no member except for the first representative of each party shall speak for more than 20 minutes.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

And that the House shall not adjourn this day until the second reading stage of the said bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is this agreed?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there have been discussions about the first part of the motion, namely, that speeches after the first round shall be limited to 20 minutes each. We have indicated our readiness to agree to that proposal, but I know of no conclusive discussions on the proposal that we sit without time limit beyond ten o'clock.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't you want to end the strike?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, of course, and we are prepared to take a vote at ten o'clock or even as late as eleven o'clock. I suggest that the motion be revised, and that the part limiting speeches to 20 minutes after the first round be agreed to now, but that the question of whether we shall sit beyond ten o'clock be left for further consultation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We must be perfectly clear. The motion cannot be put without unanimous consent. This does not involve any question of coming to an agreement. The motion cannot be put in its present form without the unanimous agreement of the House. Is it agreed that the motion be put now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker. We think this should be the subject of further consultation.

Mr. Speaker: Then, if there is not unanimous consent, the motion in its present form cannot be put. Perhaps at the end of the question period I may inquire whether the latter part of the motion could be deleted. It might then be put.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps while members of the NDP are making up their minds about how long they want to talk in this debate, we could agree now on limiting speeches to 20 minutes. Could there not be an order of the House limiting speeches, after the first speakers on behalf of the government and the main opposition party have spoken, to 20 minutes. That would give the other parties a chance to consider this issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the members of the Social Credit party are in total agreement with the first part of the motion. But, in view of the fact that similar situations were not settled to the advantage of the parliamentarians, I feel the last part of the motion should be set aside and discussed more fully before being passed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: To be quite clear, does the House agree to the following motion:

That, during the debate on the motion for second reading of the bill intituled 'An Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada', no Member except for the first representative of each party shall speak for more than 20 minutes.

WEST COAST GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS ACT, 1974

MEASURE TO SECURE THE RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-12, to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time, later today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING LEASES, LICENCES AND ROYALTIES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved to introduce Bill C-15, intituled "An Act respecting oil and gas in Indian lands".

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I notice that the bill to be introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has been approved for second reading. After having made some inquiries as to whether it is possible that the bill be distributed at this time, I wonder whether in fact this could be expedited for the benefit of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: We were concerned about that. I understand steps have been taken to distribute copies of the bill forthwith.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PARTICIPATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE IN CONSULTATIONS WITH INTERESTED GROUPS ON PROPOSALS TO FIGHT INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is participating in the series of consultations with the principal groups in our society with regard to defeating inflation, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. Is the minister participating in those consultations?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

● (1420)

FORM AND PURPOSE OF CONSULTATIONS WITH INTERESTED GROUPS ON PROPOSALS TO FIGHT INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what is the structure of the consultations in which he is participating and whether he is putting forward specific proposals, for example to strike a fair balance between wages, prices and profits in the economy. What is the structure, what is the form of the consultations, and what does the minister intend to propose?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman was good enough to quote from the speech I made in Vancouver. I can tell him that at the moment the structure of the consultations is informal. When they reach a more concrete form, either I or the Prime Minister will define it on a future occasion.

Mr. Stanfield: In the light of the speech the minister made in Vancouver to which he has referred—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To which you referred!

Mr. Stanfield: Well, we both referred to it. I should like to ask the minister whether the purpose of his consultations is to achieve an agreement which would constitute some kind of guidelines. Is that the purpose of the consultations? Or is it all a deep secret—merely a move to cover up confusion and ignorance on the part of the government and to buy time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The government's policy has been clear enough to ensure it a new mandate before this parliament. As to the nature of the consultations, that policy has been laid forth taking into account the new aspects of inflation which, as the hon. gentleman will recognize, have become more severe. I refer to adverse crop conditions in this country and elsewhere and the prolonged resistance of commodity prices in reflecting the downturn in the economy of some of the major countries in the world, added to the quadrupling of oil prices. All this means that inflation is more embedded and its solution will mean a more protracted effort on the part of this country, as well as other countries, than any country had anticipated six months ago.

In this context I am putting the facts forward—as are the Prime Minister and others of my colleagues—to the various components of the economy to see whether we can, on the basis of the policy we are advancing, reach a consensus as to the best way of dealing with the situation.

INDUSTRY

UNITED AIRCRAFT—SUGGESTED NATIONALIZATION OF COMPANY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the right hon. gentleman's agreement last week to consider the proposal put forward on behalf of the New Democratic Party by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, namely, to nationalize the United Aircraft Company whose workers have been on strike for about nine months now, is the Prime Minister in a position today to inform the House what the government intends to do about this important question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not today, but I should like to point out that as a matter of principle I shall consider all suggestions put to me seriously by members of the other parties; it is in that spirit I said I would consider the proposition put forward by a member of the hon. gentleman's own party. It would obviously be a mistake to assume that every time I consider a suggestion it will be carried out in practice.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Prime Minister that I am under no illusions about the latter point. Given the government's own activities in the aircraft field, specifically referring to de Havilland in Toronto, given the fact that the conditions provided the workers in that industry in Toronto will remain even better than those at United Aircraft if the workers on strike there have their demands met, and also given the government's development of, and plans for, the STOL industry, which has obvious implications for integrating these two companies, would the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that, whether or not he takes what I regard as the right course of action, by the end of this week he will tell us what the government plans to do one way or the other?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if I followed the intent of the question correctly, the answer is that I will not accept that particular suggestion. It is not the policy or the practice of the government to attempt to solve labour disputes within provincial jurisdictions by taking over companies.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby may ask a final supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: Just a final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To clarify the situation for the Prime Minister, I was not suggesting that he solve labour disputes by taking over the industry. I was raising the economic question of integrating two firms, one by the government of Canada and the other by a firm in the United States, in order to fulfil certain economic objectives that the government itself has stated it wants to fulfil.

The question that I am asking the Prime Minister is an economic one. To facilitate that objective of the government, would the government consider taking this course of action so as to carry out its own program?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is repeating very much the substance of the question that I answered the other day. I want to make clear that it should not be inferred from that answer that we will settle labour problems by any form of nationalization.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GRANTING OF PENSIONS TO WIDOWS AT AGE 60—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

A bill will shortly be introduced to grant old age pensions to wives who are 60 years old. I receive many letters from female senior citizens who want to know if those who are widows will be included in the bill granting a pension to all women aged 60 and over.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible for the status of women, I should like to point out to the hon. member that this bill does not apply only to the wives, but to any spouse aged between 60 and 65 who needs assistance. The purpose of the bill is clearly stated. This legislation will apply only to the spouse and will obviously not apply in cases where one of the spouses is not yet 65 years old.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

If one of the spouses is dead, would this mean that the surviving spouse who is 60 years old will not be entitled to the benefit of this new social legislation? If the spouse will not be entitled to this pension, how will she be treated and how can she be respected as a human being?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, if the spouse over 65 years old is dead, the survivor is called a widower or a widow and not a spouse and will not be covered by this legislation. In this case, the answer would lie in the guaranteed income plan about which we are agreed and a supplementary income plan for those who can earn a living.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): A last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

When the minister talks about a guaranteed annual income does he mean that he will copy the Social Crediters' program?

Mr. Lalonde: Heaven forbid, Mr. Speaker.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MONITORING RETAIL STORES TO ENSURE CONSUMERS BENEFIT FROM REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON CLOTHING AND FOOTWEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the Prime Minister's statement after the election that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had been instructed to monitor retail stores to ensure that the reduction in the federal sales tax on clothing and footwear is passed on to consumers, I wonder whether the minister would briefly inform the House what action in this regard has been taken to date.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Officials of my department have already met with representatives of private industry. Within a few days I shall send a letter to the presidents of all companies involved. I wish to assure the House that some work is being done in that regard. I announced that a complete report on that matter will be submitted to the Minister of Finance before the end of the year.

● (1430)

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, am I to understand then that so far there has been no monitoring by the department itself in this respect?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: There has been some already, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that posed by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. Are officers of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs actually monitoring the retail trade in Canada to ensure that the tax decreases on clothing and footwear are in fact being passed on to the consumer?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: The answer is yes. Such work, the matter of more than a single day, has begun and will extend over a period of weeks. Interested companies were asked to supply information and figures, in order to check that this decrease is indeed passed on. As soon as the work is completed, a report will be submitted to the Minister of Finance. I expect this will take place at the end of the year.

SUGGESTED REMOVAL FROM REGULATORY BODY RESPONSIBILITY FOR INVESTIGATING ACCIDENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very serious difficulties in conducting the coroner's inquest at Frobisher Bay into a tragic accident a couple of years ago, would the Minister of Transport give some indication as to whether he will now, at the earliest possible opportunity, introduce legislation separating from the regulatory body the responsibility for investigation in respect of transportation accidents in Canada and other related safety procedures and matters?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope we can do this during this present session.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION REGULATING COMPETITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement by the previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that stage two of the governments so-called competition legislation would likely be introduced by the end of this year, could the minister indicate to the House if that is still the schedule, and when does he plan to introduce the legislation?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, evidently when my predecessor spoke about that schedule, he was not taking into consideration a general election this summer. I have already announced that before proceeding with stage two of that legislation, there would be some intensive consultations with the parties concerned. With my parliamentary secretary and some officials of my department I will be meeting those concerned before the second stage which will surely not be completed before the end of this year.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. With unemployment being projected for this time next year at 7.8 per cent, and with prices along with interest rates continuing to soar, will the minister indicate whether he plans to introduce legislation which will lessen rather than add to the regulatory harassment of business, especially of small businessmen in Canada, in order that businessmen in general can get on with creating jobs and productivity in the hope that prices will come down as a consequence?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I do not see any relation between the premises of the hon. member's comments and his conclusions. It is essential, Mr. Speaker, to have a bill granting Canada a really fair and efficient competition. It is extremely important to have such a legislation on competition which will really protect small companies.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT PRIOR TO BUDGET OF PROPOSALS TO CURB UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance, and I should like to welcome him back in order that he may answer some domestic questions. In view of the fact that economists now predict an unemployment rate of nearly 8 per cent for early 1975, which will result in the loss of billions of dollars in productivity in Canada, is it his intention before his budget to announce new proposals which will turn around the anticipated increase in unemployment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the import of the preamble to the hon. gentleman's question, what I have to say will be said on budget night. I would caution the hon. gentleman if he thinks that domestic problems in this country can be solved outside the international context.

FINANCE

REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of layoffs in the lumber industry, particularly in British Columbia and Quebec, along with recent declines in housing starts, does the minister now intend to instruct banks and financial institutions to lower their mortgage rates in respect of new residential housing in this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered that question on several occasions, particularly in response to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, who now enjoys the position of leader of his party.

RESEARCH

NEED FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS IN MEDICAL FIELD—NUMBER OF SCIENTISTS LEAVING CANADA BECAUSE OF LACK OF FUNDS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, in light of the commitment of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the committee on April 4 of this year to do everything he could to provide the medical research council with additional funding in the order of $2.5 million this year, can he now advise the House whether he has yet found the funding required or, failing that, what progress he has made to date to locate this very necessary amount of money?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have to answer the hon. member that I have not yet found the funds she mentioned but, as I did in April, I will continue to do my best to locate them somewhere.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise the House whether there has been a tabulation of the number of Canadian medical scientists who have been forced to leave Canada this year to carry on their research elsewhere because of the lack of funds available through the medical research council?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, at least to my knowledge, no such study has been made. There are difficulties in assessing the causes why, in specific cases, scientists choose to move. I will inquire whether such a study has been made and try to get that information.

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY IN RESPECT OF GREEN SPACES IN CITIES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement yesterday by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs about trade-offs in respect of green spaces in Canadian cities, will he inform the House how this trade-off principle will affect specifically the experimental farm in the city of Ottawa and the greenbelt surrounding it, and indicate whether the government is now actively planning to intrude development into these areas?

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was just speaking about the general picture in Canada, trying to make people aware of the necessary considerations we have in attempting to deal with growth in our cities. Certainly, the city of Ottawa in particular has to be treated with special sensitivity. There will be further discussions on this subject before the special joint committee of the House and Senate announced in the Speech from the Throne, and in respect of other reports which are forthcoming. This will give us ample opportunity to deal with the member's concerns, which I share.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the matter, as recognized by the minister, would he be prepared to make a statement on motions at the earliest opportunity to clarify what he and the government mean in respect of the diminution of the very precious green spaces in the urban areas of this country?

Mr. Danson: First of all, Mr. Speaker, this government means business. There will be ample opportunity to discuss the area of the national capital before the committee. I do not think it necessary to make a statement on motions. This is an ongoing discussion with provincial and municipal officials as well as other people in Canada. Certainly, we have to treat this with great sensitivity, and I put as high a priority on parks and recreation as on any other element in the housing field.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister who has just taken his seat. I am sure he is very anxious to get on with his job of providing more housing, and I will co-operate with him in that regard. I should like to ask him to please keep his hot little hands off any open spaces that exist in the city of Halifax.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, but first may I say that on Sunday a new television star was born.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask the minister what special program he has in mind to either lower or subsidize interest rates for builders on conventional mortgages—and I hope he heard the phrase "conventional mortgages"—in an effort to increase housing construction. On television he admitted there was a housing problem. When I posed this question on October 2 he mixed that up with the Assisted Home Ownership Program. I hope he will now answer my question directly regarding conventional mortgages to developers.

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The interest rates are not a phenomenon created by this government or in existence only in this country. Governments do not set interest rates in a vacuum; they respond responsibly. We certainly have and intend to take care of those most in need to the best of our abilities. The AHOP Program has been extremely successful. We cannot manufacture artificial interest rates for special groups but we can when we recognize a subsidy as a subsidy, and we provide it where it is most needed to get the most value for the taxpayers' money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

URBAN AFFAIRS

LAND DEVELOPMENT—CONTROL BY GENSTAR LIMITED, CALGARY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In the light of those facts, and in the light of the fact that we are trying to get the cost of housing down for the average Canadian, may I ask now whether the minister discussed with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs the matter of Genstar Limited, a company which now controls more than 60 firms in Canada and is developing major centres, and particularly in reference to the city of Calgary regarding which there is now a confidential report showing that the firm controls the major development of that city and owns the land surrounding it. Has the minister discussed with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs reporting the matter to the combines investigation branch?

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I have not discussed it specifically with the minister. I have asked for a report from my own officials after I read the report in this morning's paper, but I am sure that if the hon. member will have his colleagues co-operate in the passage of the Combines Investigation Act, we will have more opportunity to deal with these situations.

DAIRY POLICY—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN SUBSIDY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

In view of a considerable increase in production costs in the dairy industry, particularly in recent months, will the minister tell the House whether the government's dairy policy will be revised soon and whether subsidies will be raised to reflect higher production costs?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the National Dairy Commission, the dairy industry and dairy producers are working on the development of a national dairy policy in this country. With regard to what the hon. member has stated about input costs, we are aware of the input costs to which dairy farmers are being subjected, but I am not prepared to state what, if any, extra subsidy to dairy farmers will be granted at this time.

MEASURES TO ENCOURAGE HOME OWNERSHIP—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Finance was in Washington attending a most important conferences last week, it was reported here in Canada that housing starts were down drastically, so I wish to put the following question to the minister. Is he seriously considering giving incentives to encourage home ownership in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): We encouraged those in the last budget which the hon. gentleman's party succeeded in defeating but which the people of Canada reinstated.

An hon. Member: Not yet.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There were further commitments from the Prime Minister during the election campaign, and I am in constant touch with my new colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, as to how to achieve the results which I am sure the hon. gentleman wants to have achieved.

TRANSPORT

NEED FOR SAFETY MEASURES ON RAILWAYS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Elmer MacKay (Central Nova): I have a brief question for the Minister of Transport. Keeping in mind that railway accidents are continuing to increase in this country and in every year since 1969 at least 1,200 railway employees have been injured and approximately 20 killed in the performance of their duties, what steps does the minister propose to take as the responsible minister to bring an end to these conditions and to force the railways to improve safety programs? I hope that in his answer the minister will not bring in the old chestnut and refer to the CTC.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that the CTC—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as you know we are conducting an inquiry each time there is an accident. I know that many members of this House have complained about the efficiency of the system within the department, not only with regard to train accidents but with regard to other accidents as well. I hope we will have a more efficient set up. I do not know whether it will decrease the number of accidents, because of course no country has succeeded in doing that in the past, but I hope we can improve our record.

SUGAR BEETS—DELAY IN HARVESTING CAUSED BY STRIKE AT SAINT-HYACINTHE PLANT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Following the labour dispute at the Saint-Hilaire sugar refinery, the management has sent to the sugar beet producers of the region a letter advising them to stop harvesting for the time being, and consequently some 25 million pounds of sugar may be lost. What step does the minister intend to take and how does he intend to proceed with the help of his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture so as to protect the interests of both producers and consumers?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take notice of this question. I will hasten to give it consideration and reply soon to the hon. member.

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL SUGAR POLICY

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): I would like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker.

Following the numerous requests already received in this connection, can the minister assure the House of the government's intention to draft a national sugar policy in Canada, a policy based upon adequate tariff protection and upon a production quota provided to sugar beet producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I answered that question last week at which time I said I would be submitting a paper to my colleagues very shortly.

POST OFFICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE SERVICE

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Postmaster General on his new appointment. My question to him is as follows. In view of the shambles existing in the Post Office, and in particular the recent mail test conducted by the Calgary Herald which showed that 86 per cent of letters and parcels mailed from Calgary to points across Canada arrived late or not at all, will the minister tell the House what steps he has taken to provide a proper mail service which Canadians and especially Canadian businesses badly need?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): I accept the hon. gentleman's kind words but not his allegation. The postal code is in extensive existence in only two locations, one is Calgary and the other Ottawa. It is an admitted fact that there have been some problems in the city of Calgary which I think will straighten themselves out. However, I must warn the House that the introduction of any form of automation in an organization as large as the Post Office is bound to have some disruptive effects, and that is what we are trying to straighten out.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISING BY POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the shockingly bad mail service being provided to the consumers of Canada, would the minister tell the House whether he will take steps to prevent further misleading advertising by the Post Office which advises Canadians that assured mail service will provide next day delivery to designated locations in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure all Canadian consumers that, in spite of the hon. member's remarks, the Canadian postal service, when compared with those of other countries, ranks among the best.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENTS IN SERVICE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Transport. Recently the minister indicated that the government soon intends to introduce far reaching reforms to greatly improve passenger service on our railways. Those reforms will cost a great deal of money. Would the minister undertake to get them started now at no cost to anybody by asking the President of the CNR to ensure that air conditioning in railway cars works regularly instead of spasmodically as it does now when people arrive at their destination exhausted after travelling in 85 degree temperatures? Would he also ask him to provide meals to the point where they have some slight resemblance to the excellent meals that used to be served on railway dining cars?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am going to forward the hon. member's personal request to the president of the CNR.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for advising me of his question. I have looked into the matter and discovered that the answer will require a considerable amount of research in the archives. I expect to have the information later this week and will make it available then.

ENERGY

EXTENSION OF PIPELINE FROM SARNIA TO MONTREAL—DATE OF COMPLETION—CONTINGENCY PLANS IN EVENT OF OIL SHORTAGE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since last year at this time it was thought extremely urgent that Canada should build an extension of the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal can the minister, in spite of the predictions at that time, now advise the House when tenders are going to be called? Can he also advise the new projected date of completion and give the House any other factual information he has at this time?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may not be aware that the construction of pipelines in Canada is covered by the National Energy Board Act. An application has been submitted to the board by Interprovincial Pipe Lines but with the intervention of the province of Quebec the hearing was adjourned until a new right of way could be worked out. This has been done and the hearing will recommence on October 9. It is expected that if the decision of the board in that case is favourable, construction may commence either in the balance of this fall or the early spring, to be completed in early 1976 or mid-1976.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, was the date 1976 or 1977?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the original date was the fall of 1975 but because of the intervention of Quebec it is now mid-1976.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the event of certain conditions being applied this winter as they may have applied last winter, does the government have any contingency plan ready so that if there is an interruption in the delivery of offshore oil the people of eastern Canada will not suffer a shortage?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, last year the House created the Energy Supplies Allocation Board which is in the process of developing a contingency plan in case there is a fresh embargo by some or all of the oil producing nations.

BEEF CATTLE—SUGGESTED MEASURES TO STABILIZE INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of recent statements by the four western premiers calling for help to stabilize the beef industry in western Canada and Canada as a whole, how is the minister responding to the suggestion that a 50 per cent sharing of aid may be implemented by the federal government in conjunction with the provincial governments or that a $100 per head advance payment be made to farmers engaged in cow-calf operations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first and foremost we feel that the beef industry is a national problem and will be dealt with on a national basis. We feel that the request has certain merits and consultations are taking place with provincial authorities of every province, I believe, at our headquarters at the Sir John Carling Building and it is hoped that a workable program will be found to salvage the beef industry.

BEEF CATTLE—PROPOSED IMPOSITION OF IMPORT QUOTA BY UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the fact that Canada's calf crop will not find space in feed lots throughout the nation, and in light of the fact that the Americans have said they would impose an import tax on beef from Canada, how is the minister responding to that and what action does he propose in order to protect Canadian farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the action we have taken to protect Canadian farmers is the reason the American authorities are suggesting that they will take the action reported in the press. We have heard nothing more officially from the United States than you have seen in the press. We have been in contact with them as late as Friday and the United States government had made no decision at that time. I do not know if we have been in contact with them today.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICE AND ASSURANCE GOVERNMENT WILL NOT INTERFERE WITH WHEAT BOARD SALES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Due to the fact that the initial price of grain sold to the Canadian Wheat Board is far below the price being quoted for domestic feed grains, when will the minister or the Canadian Wheat Board be making an announcement that the initial price of grain sold to the Wheat Board will be substantially increased?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we are giving consideration to the question of revising the initial price, even though the normal policy would be to set prices for the whole year. I should like to say that I hope members will help in the cause by pointing out to farmers that it is the full value of the grain that counts and not the initial price. Even if we raise the initial price, that should not be the only relevant consideration in judging whether to sell to the Wheat Board or to the off-board grain market.

Mr. Towers: A supplementary question. Will the minister give his assurance that after Canada's domestic requirements are met, this government will not interfere with the Wheat Board sales policy in a manner similar to the action taken by the United States in its recent sales of grain to Russia?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I can assure hon. members that because of the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board in the export of wheat and barley there is never any danger in this country of sales being made which have to be cancelled.

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF DR. HALL CONCERNING RAILWAY PENSIONS—DATE OF REPORT—SUGGESTION CANADIAN PACIFIC SHOULD MATCH ACTION OF CANADIAN NATIONAL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Do the terms of reference given by the minister to Dr. Noel Hall include all aspects of railway pensions, both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, and can the minister say whether there is any indication as to how long it will be before Dr. Hall makes his report?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if my recollection is correct, the terms of reference given to Dr. Noel Hall were very wide indeed. As to the second part of the hon. member's question, I believe the report will take another two or three months. It is going to require some considerable time yet to complete it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Pending receipt of the report from Dr. Hall, may I ask whether the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Transport will be making representations to the Canadian Pacific Railway that it should at least match the provisions made by the Canadian National for its retired employees?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take that matter into consideration and talk to my colleague.

As the report of the Canadian Transport Commission on railway safety was a damning indictment of our record of railway safety, has the minister taken action on that report and, as a minimum, met with the railway companies to discuss the implications of that safety report?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the House that we were trying to reduce expenditures to stay within the budget. We have not yet arrived at any set figures for operations but we are going to reduce capital expenditures. We will be cutting back on the number of personnel.

REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENTS IMMEDIATELY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. As many young farmers on the prairies face substantial payments on their land and equipment, as these liabilities bear a heavy rate of interest and as many other farmers are short of cash and finding it difficult to meet their commitments, would the minister consider instructing the Wheat Board to issue final payments for the 1973-74 crop year immediately and permit those farmers in need of money to meet their commitments and those farmers who have no immediate need for cash to defer their income until 1975?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that action is hardly possible at present. The Wheat Board has not yet closed the accounts which are involved, and the closing of accounts and accounting is a requirement which must be met before payments can be made. The payments will be made immediately after January 1. In the meantime, cash advances are available. There is a bill now before Parliament for increasing the limit on cash advances so that cash may be available to farmers, in advance of delivery of grain, interest free.

URBAN AFFAIRS

LAND ASSEMBLY—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST MUNICIPALITIES RETAIN GREEN SPACES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Can the minister advise the House whether there is at present any government program whereby the federal government can assist municipalities to retain existing green space, presently privately owned, before it is lost to development?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are programs of land assembly which are part of the plan. The inclusion of green space in an integrated plan would be a desirable part of any such program.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. In view of Liberal campaign promises to fight for federal aid for the retention of green space in Vancouver, I am referring specifically to the Langara lands, can the minister advise whether he has had any requests for assistance, in this case from members of the Liberal party in Vancouver?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the specific case. I speak for Liberals as well as non Liberals and do not differentiate on those grounds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: I do not know of a special case, but I speak with people, Liberal or non-Liberal; I do not differentiate on that basis. I have been in Vancouver and have spoken to the mayor. We are, as was my predecessor, very much concerned about and interested in the development of the Greater Vancouver Regional Development Plan. My ministry is working on that plan very closely with officials of the city, so that the specific case referred to will come within the over-all plan. In this case we see almost a classic example of co-operation between different levels of government in one of the most beautiful cities in Canada, if not North America.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

MEASURE TO SECURE THE RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-12, to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as members of this House are aware, the bill now before us represents the government's legislative proposals respecting the west coast grain handling dispute. Before examining these proposals it would be appropriate for me to refer to the chronology of events in this dispute. Firstly, however, I must refer to the parties directly involved: these are the Alberta Wheat Pool, Pacific Elevators Limited, Burrard Terminals Limited, United Grain Growers Limited, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and the Grain Workers Union local No. 333. The five existing collective agreements, which cover approximately 500 grain elevator employees, expired on November 30 of last year. Members will note that the employees have thus been without any improvement in their terms of employment for some ten months.

Initial attempts at reaching a new collective agreement proved fruitless, despite the lengthy assistance of two conciliation officers. As a result, on February 15 of this year I appointed Dr. Neil Perry of the University of Victoria, British Columbia, as a conciliation commissioner and I received Dr. Perry's impartial report on April 29.

The recommendations contained in the report were accepted by the union membership on May 5 but were rejected by the companies on May 13. Every effort was then made to develop a method of producing a negotiated settlement. But as far as the parties were concerned, the end of the road had been reached. The union's firm position was the Perry report and nothing less than the Perry report. The employers' position, although never precisely specified at that time, was that only something much less than the Perry report would be acceptable. We were faced with a complete impasse in which there was no possibility of achieving a negotiated settlement.

The fact that there was no possibility of further negotiations was underlined most forcibly to me and to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), when we met with representatives of the companies a few days later. Indeed, they indicated to us that the alternative, as they saw it, could well be a work stoppage. The only responsible view for the government to take was that a work stoppage was not only unnecessary, in view of the existence of a reasonable and viable alternative in the form of Dr. Perry's report, but would certainly adversely affect the national interest.

As a result of this view, and because at that time parliament was in dissolution for the general election, the governor in council, having decided that any work stoppage would adversely affect the national interest, made an order pursuant to section 181 of the Canada Labour Code, part V, Industrial Relations, to suspend any work stoppage until the election was over. This initiative in May was taken to avoid the prospect of a work stoppage which for all practical purposes could have lasted three months before parliament could be reassembled to take action.

Both the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and myself later received telegrams from the presidents of the companies involved in which they expressed concern over what they termed the inflationary consequences of Dr. Perry's report. This called for pay increases of 87 cents an hour in the first year and 65 cents an hour in the second year of a two-year agreement, with cost of living adjustments, a new pension plan and other benefits. The base rate now is $4.96 an hour. The Prime Minister replied to the company presidents to the effect that the recommendations took into account the parity issue between the grain handlers and Vancouver longshoremen and that it should not set a precedent for other wage settlements in other sectors of the economy.

On August 20, my colleague the Minister of Justice and myself, together with senior officials of my department, personally met with the four company presidents in Saskatoon. Three days later I was advised that the grain elevator companies, with the exception of Burrard Terminals Limited, had posted lay-off notices affecting some 50 per cent of their work force, effective August 23 and 26. In view of this action, the companies were advised that there appeared no point in holding the further meeting scheduled for August 26.

As a direct result of the lay-off notices, the unions saw fit to withdraw services and mount picket operations. Subsequently, between September 13 and 30 a number of private discussions were held among the parties and departmental officials in both Ottawa and Vancouver. Following these discussions, I was satisfied that only two items were separating the parties, the pension issue and the cost of living allowance formula. As a result, on September 30 I made a proposal for settlement of these two items, a settlement that would have cost considerably less than the 61 per cent figure that has been widely referred to. The union accepted my proposal but the grain elevator companies rejected it. This brief summary is, I think, a sufficient chronological backdrop to a situation that can no longer be allowed to run its harmful and protracted course unchecked.

Before I refer to the proposed legislation I would like, with hon. members' permission, to further clarify the government's position with regard to this dispute and to rebut certain statements that have been made in connection with the government's position. First, I take issue with those parties who consider that, by endorsing the commissioner's recommendations, the government has not acted impartially and is, in effect, encouraging so-called "inflationary" settlements.

I would like to make these factual points. In this instance, the companies and union had ample time to engage in genuine good-faith bargaining during the months that followed the expiry of their old contract in October, 1973. It was not until they reached a deadlock that my department became involved, offering our experienced mediation and conciliation services. It was only after all other efforts had failed that I appointed Dr. Perry as a conciliation commissioner.

Dr. Perry is a skilled, respected, impartial expert who in fact served the same parties in 1965 as an industrial inquiry commissioner. His wide experience in labour relations also includes chairmanship of federal conciliation boards and an industrial inquiry commissioner for the B.C. government. It is neither surprising nor unusual that the government accepted his report, for the presumption behind the appointment of an outside adjudicator in any labour dispute is that the government will give credence and weight to his findings. To do so is certainly not to undermine either of the parties or to sabotage negotiations; to suggest this is both unreasonable and unrealistic. To do otherwise would, indeed, undermine the parties.

When it becomes necessary to resort to conciliation, it does not rule out further bargaining but it does mean that subsequent discussions have to take place within the new parameters of the conciliator's report. Now, no union in this day and age is likely to accept less than a conciliation report recommends, and no democratic government prevailed upon to enforce a settlement would think of imposing terms lower than those advocated by a neutral expert. In this case there was no real bargaining between the grain companies and the union since the Perry report was released; not because the government accepted the report on a basis of settlement, but because the union accepted it and the companies did not. Attitudes hardened on both sides and the many strenuous efforts to get the parties back to the bargaining table met with no success.

The government has by no means "sided with the union", as has been claimed in some quarters. It has simply recognized that the eventual settlement, however reached, has to be based on the conciliation commissioner's recommendations. I believe it is obvious that the companies would know this.

As hon. members may be aware, the Perry report calls for a two-year total wage increase of $1.52 an hour on a base hourly rate of $4.96. This constitutes an over-all increase of slightly more than 30 per cent. The companies, by incorporating estimates of the additional cost of a proposed cost of living adjustment and a pension plan, have claimed that a package settlement based on the Perry report would raise their labour costs by a total of 61 per cent, a figure that I might indicate is not accurate. I hope more will be said about this figure during the course of this debate.

This figure is approximately 7 per cent higher than that reached by departmental experts. That is based on the lowest wage rate paid to a worker in a grain elevator. Be that as it may, we do know that the wage component of the Perry proposals averages fractionally above 15 per cent per year, exclusive of the cost of living adjustment. This comparative data is always used when comparing settlements one with another. In this case, it is slightly above 15 per cent per year. For purposes of comparison we can note the preliminary figure for the second quarter of this year that shows an annual average increase, in British Columbia, of 15.7 per cent on average rates; so the Perry proposals are certainly not out of line with prevailing levels on the west coast.

The introduction of a pension plan fills a long-standing gap in the grain handlers' employment benefits, and the protection of a cost of living allowance is by no means an unreasonable or unique objective among Canadian workers today. I do not argue that the total cost of a settlement based on the Perry report will be trivial. It will, indeed, be substantial. But much of it will represent catch-up on wages and pensions by comparison with longshoremen working beside them on the same waterfront.

The wage boost recommended by Dr. Perry for 1974 would raise the grain handlers' basic hourly rate to $5.83, leaving them still 25 cents behind the $6.08 an hour which the stevedores have been receiving for the past 18 months. And by the time the grain handlers receive their proposed 1975 increase of another 65 cents, the longshoremen will, presumably, have negotiated a new contract themselves. In any event, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how it is inflationary to bring 500 grain handlers to the level of remuneration that 3,600 longshoremen had been receiving previously.

The Perry findings may not be perfect; I do not know. Neither I nor any member of this House can know. We were not the independent third party injected into this dispute. We were not there to study the briefs which were submitted. We were not there to hear the rationale presented. Dr. Perry was. His is the expertise; his is the first-hand knowledge. Hence, his report must be viewed as the most reasoned and reasonable basis for a final settlement.

[Mr. Munro (Minister of Labour).]

I would also reply to those who question the government's action in the dispute. I can state categorically that throughout the dispute my department and the government acted scrupulously within the framework and confines of the Canada Labour Code and of our concept of the public interest. We have exhausted every means of bringing about a peaceful settlement. If we had to do it all over again, I honestly do not see how we could take any different measures which would be more effective and more democratic.

To have recalled parliament for a special emergency session in order to deal with the dispute would simply have turned the House of Commons into a scapegoat; into something too closely resembling a labour court. Such action, in these particular circumstances, would have been irreconcilable with the government's stated position of supporting the free collective bargaining process by giving it every opportunity, every encouragement and assistance to the end of making it work. In this case, as we know, the process did not work, despite our most strenuous efforts.

To say this dispute is disturbing would be to understate the case. It marks yet another labour relations fiasco in an industry which for years has been characterized by confrontation and even hostility. It is a long and tedious history and includes frequent rejection by management of third party conciliation reports as a basis for settlement of disputes—although I do not intend to infer that the union has always been blameless. Perhaps just one illustration of how long governments have had to contend with crises inspired in this industry will be of interest to newer members of this House, and will refresh the memories of its distinguished veterans. In April of 1953, after a work stoppage had closed the elevators for two months, the prime minister of the day, the late Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, hinted strongly in this House that the government would, if such action were deemed necessary, seize the elevators. He was, understandably, aroused by the refusal of the company presidents to come to Ottawa, sending instead their lawyers. Twenty-one years and six months later, the attitudes and the situation remain much the same.

Hon. members will agree, I know, that good will and reasonable attitudes cannot be legislated. At the same time, there has to be an improvement in this poisonous labour relations situation. The government and the country cannot, and must not, endure the continuing disruptive and damaging consequences. I strongly suspect that it is the whole concept, the whole structure which militates against any meaningful, straightforward negotiations taking place in this industry. Therefore, it is my intention to appoint an industrial inquiry commission. The commission will have broad terms of reference and will, among other things, conduct a thorough examination of the history of this industry's labour relations and their impact upon efficiency and productivity. Hopefully, this commission will bring forth recommendations which will lead to a reasonable, acceptable industrial relationship.

I turn, now, to the proposed legislation. First, all grain handling operations will be resumed; all employees will return to work. The return to work is not to be impeded or prevented in any way, and no disciplinary action is to be taken against any employee by reason of his having been locked out or on strike. Second, the term of each collective agreement is extended to include the period beginning December 1, 1973, ending when a new agreement come into effect, or on November 30, 1975, whichever is earlier. Third, the terms and conditions of each existing agreement are amended by increasing the hourly basic rate of wages by 87 cents an hour, effective December 1, 1973, and by incorporating the other recommendations contained in the report of the conciliation commissioner.

Fourth, strikes and lock-outs are prohibited during the term of the extended agreements. Fifth, companies and unions shall resume negotiations and make every reasonable effort to agree on the manner in which the conciliation commissioner's recommendations are to be incorporated as amendments to the extended agreements. In the event that the parties cannot agree on the interpretation of the commissioner's recommendations, a referee may be appointed, whose decisions would be final and binding.

Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to answer any questions that hon. members may wish to ask.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to take part in what I consider to be an extremely important debate. Before doing so, I should like to express, on behalf of my leader and others in this party, our extreme sympathy to His Excellency. We wish him well and look for a speedy recovery. I think this man has the wisdom, the ability and the background to enable him to make a most significant contribution to the development of this great land of ours.

As a member of the class of '68, I stand here with some pride, Mr. Speaker, in congratulating you upon your appointment to greater heights. You have now left the realm of the backbencher. You are now making more money. You are now involved with power the like of which I have not seen. But having known you, sir, over the past 6½ years, I am confident you will discharge your duties admirably. As a matter of fact, I had the opportunity of testing you the other day to see how you would turn out, and I must confess that I came out of it second best.

I should also like to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) who has also been elevated to new heights. I know we will all look for a great input from him, as well as from the Assistant Deputy Chairman. This is a choice that meets my approval without any question.

I should like to adopt the sentiments expressed by my colleagues on both sides of the House with regard to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both did an admirable job. It seems to me that their input will be significant, one to which I think all of us will be able to point with pride. They are not going to find their job easy; it can be a frustrating task. Yet I think all of us who have had the opportunity of being elected to this House realize that we are in the big league here. In this place we formulate policy and direction that will move this country into the eighties and nineties, in keeping with the needs and aspirations of the Canadian people. We are continually kept aware of the legitimate aspirations and hopes of all our people—and I leave out no one.

We have, of course, seen some evidence of the denial, or perhaps I should say unawareness, of certain of our brothers, our native people, for whom I have a lot of sympathy. You are in one heck of a position when you are left out of the mainstream of Canadian life, your forefathers having been responsible for the birth of this country. But as the years went on, with our set ideas, our prejudices and our dislike of certain people because of race, colour or creed, we found these people getting further and further behind.

I hope that what happened here last week registered concern in all of us. If we do not indicate that we are aware of the problem, and if we do not bring about solutions, then your guess, Mr. Speaker, as to what is going to happen in the long run is as good as mine. We may have to revert to the confrontation of the sixties that occurred in the United States and which all of us deplored. But I think we in this House will not allow that to happen. We on this side will see to it that the government is kept aware of the situation and that it brings about solutions to the tremendous problems facing these people.

Because of the very real concern of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) over the situation, I had the privilege of being chosen as one of nine to journey to Vancouver and Calgary to obtain the facts concerning the dispute with which we are dealing today. I must commend these hon. members, because as a result of their very real concern many of us had an opportunity of discussing this dispute not only with the union but with terminal managers and, indeed, the presidents of the wheat pools. In consequence, we on this side of the House are better informed, perhaps better informed than the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), the Minister of Justice in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang), and last but not least, the proponent of the just society. I think we are all better informed as a result of our trip.

Not only should I like publicly to thank my colleagues, but also the members of local 333 of the union involved, the terminal managers and the presidents for their open, frank, serious and meaningful discussions, which in the long run have meant that we on this side are better able to understand the situation. We understand now, as the minister has so indicated, that the grain handling industry is in a mess.

Having listened to the Minister of Labour's sob story, I can only say that the approach of the government to this entire matter can only be described as over reaction, bungling, irresponsibility and inept and heavy-handed approach. The Minister of Labour comes from the great city of Hamilton. I have listened to him extolling the virtues of the collective bargaining process. Yet I watched him unwarrantably interrupting the collective bargaining process by blessing the Perry report, which meant that all meaningful negotiations were destroyed. The collective bargaining process as we know it was also destroyed.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) was asked a question about the inspectors, and although I was aware of it before, the double standard used by the government became apparent to me. No matter whether the minister says the increase being offered is 61 per cent, 54 per cent, 48 per cent or 41 per cent under the terms of the Perry report, we find the same government offering the inspectors increases of 6 per cent and 5 per cent over a two-year period. What kind of nonsense is this? Where is the credibility and responsibility of this government?

What was not urgent has now become urgent. Hon. members opposite have had a great holiday. Ministers opposite were not preparing bills, because they have just introduced all those that were dropped in the last parliament. They were having a holiday and gloating over their victory. What they should have done was recalled parliament. In the absence of their recalling parliament the only rational conclusion one can come to is that they are unconcerned about the loss of millions of dollars, about the deterioration of our international reputation, about the economic wealth and well-being of this country.

I hear the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon) commenting, but he knows what I say is the truth. He is a labour man himself and understands the situation. He knows that the government destroyed any meaningful negotiations between the parties when they endorsed the Perry report. I shall have more to say about that report because it was not really a final report; it only made suggestions. Why did the minister not mention that?

Mr. MacKay: He did not read it.

Mr. Alexander: We understand that. My colleague from Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) says that he did not read it, and according to the information we on the committee received, you are doggone right that he did not read it at the time the government blessed the Perry report. They had no idea what severe implications there were. In an over reactive, heavy-handed sort of way the government said, "Okay, let's go; this is it". I do not think I am disclosing any confidentiality when I say that the government said to the companies that if they did not accept the Perry report they were under threat of sanctions. As a matter of fact, I will be very pleased when the minister comes before the standing committee—I think that is the proper course to take—and we can find out what the heck went on here. We want to question the Minister of Labour, that great proponent of the collective bargaining process who subsequently destroyed it. I should also like to speak to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board about this question, because he is supposed to see that grain is not only grown in this country but is moved. His input into this matter was disastrous.

● (1540)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): What about the company line?

Mr. Alexander: Now we hear the minister asking about the company line. I suggest the speech he made was not along company lines or union lines, and was not even made on behalf of the Canadian people. The minister has abdicated his responsibility as Minister of Labour and he should resign because of the mess in which this country finds itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Alexander.]

An hon. Member: Give us back Mackasey.

Mr. Alexander: He was a good man. I can say nothing about the former minister of labour except that he was, and still is, my friend. Mr. Speaker, you thought I was going to say something else, but I would just like to stand on that.

Let me review the grain situation as we find it in Canada today. When the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Justice cancelled their planned meeting with grain company officials on August 22, it was on the basis that it would appear unproductive to pursue discussions. At that time, both ministers dismissed the necessity of recalling parliament by claiming that the situation was not serious enough to warrant such drastic action. The minister, according to a news comment made in Vancouver on September 4, said that while the dispute was serious to the farmers in terms of economic repercussions, he did not think parliament should settle disputes which did not have national consequences.

What is the matter with the thinking of the Minister of Labour? This dispute has not only national consequences but international consequences; and this has been the fact for some time. Notwithstanding what the minister has said, a telex from the Canadian Wheat Board to the Minister of Justice, and other information from government sources, makes it clear that the federal government's representatives were virtually unaware of the complexities of the situation. According to Canadian Wheat Board figures, the situation was far more serious and potentially damaging than government officials cared to admit. In the telex to which I have referred, the Canadian Wheat Board illustrated with dates, figures and amounts the gravity of the situation both in national and international perspective.

The Wheat Board claimed that the port of Vancouver is capable of a sustained export volume of a minimum of 25 million bushels of cereals per month. At full operational efficiency, 30 million bushels per month can easily be accomplished. The record for grain exported through the port of Vancouver was achieved in May, 1973, when 36.7 million bushels of wheat were processed in one month. However, due to the circumstances brought about by various labour disputes during the past few years—and other matters, I might add—the Canadian Wheat Board claims that the port of Vancouver has been in a continuous demurrage situation since the August, 1973, national railway strike. The demurrage costs which are expected to be incurred from the present work stoppage could easily reach $10 million. These debts would be paid from the 1973-74 pool accounts, payable by the producers. I recall the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), questioning the propriety of this, but their concern met with a negative response from the government.

Foreign grain contract commitments require a daily unloading capacity of 700 cars, five days per week until the end of December, 1974. The Wheat Board has calculated that under a work stoppage situation of six weeks duration, it would take until mid-May, 1975, to fulfil foreign commitments at an unloading rate of 700 boxcars per day. As a result of this, the Wheat Board felt that its foreign contractees may be forced to look elsewhere for grain and wheat supplies, and this prophesy became a reality when one considers the action of Japan in buying United States wheat. Consequently, estimates of the cost of the strike in real terms indicate that $10 million in demurrage charges will be incurred, with up to $250 million lost in potential sales.

The instability of the labour situation at the port of Vancouver is well known internationally. When the contract with China for 76.4 million bushels of wheat valued at $350 million was undertaken, it was stipulated that only 60 per cent of the total volume be shipped through the port of Vancouver, I suggest for this reason.

The Minister of Labour says we have new problems, and on October 7 he speaks about the appointment of an industrial commission, about which I will have more to say a little later. For three consecutive years, a period during which the prairie farmer could sell virtually every bushel of wheat delivered to the port, Canada has had trouble keeping its foreign contract commitments, let alone making extra sales. In the first year, delays were attributed to the unusually heavy snowfall in the Rockies. This was followed by a shortage of boxcars, and now the grain handlers' strike.

Although no official figures are available, government spokesmen have intimated that Canada is falling behind its export schedule at the rate of 15 million bushels per month. It is expected that by the time the grain handlers' dispute is settled, this figure will have reached 50 million bushels. However, statistics confirm that backlogs are never caught up, especially when grain shipments are dependent upon the Canadian transportation system which has been publicly denounced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) as being in a mess. Those are the facts which this government, for some reason, has callously disregarded. The consequences of this dispute affect us nationally and internationally, yet the minister said he did not want to recall parliament because he did not want to turn this body into a labour court. What are we doing right now? I will have more to say about that as well, Mr. Speaker.

It is now admitted that the situation is urgent. Was it not urgent four weeks ago, or five weeks ago? Did it suddenly become urgent because this government decided it was going to adopt the Perry report, notwithstanding any contrary opinions?

Mr. Sharp: What is your opinion?

Mr. Alexander: Now we hear that voice in the wilderness bleating. I have a great deal of respect for the hon. gentleman who is now government House leader, but I suggest the best thing he can do now is to talk some sense to his colleague and other members to his left in order that we might reach agreement as to the determination of this bill, not only in terms of the length of the debate but the hours of sitting. I suggest in that way he will be making a magnificent contribution.

Mr. Broadbent: Let's finish it all today.

Mr. Alexander: Now we hear that other voice in the wilderness to my left, a man who is also from the class of '68. I suggest he is allowing his position to go to his head. I say, with all due respect, that we sit here today as the highest court in the land, in effect suspending the democratic freedoms of labour and management and thereby overriding the collective bargaining process—something that could have been avoided, in my view, and something that is distasteful to all hon. members.

What is most unusual and extremely questionable is not the fact that the government is asking hon. members to declare grain handling, in all its aspects, an essential service; rather, it is the forced imposition by the government of the role of arbiter on hon. members, with power to settle and to set the terms of an agreement. This is what is extremely unusual. In these circumstances, one readily recalls the dispute involving the railway workers during which parliament ordered the resumption of operations, asking that compulsory arbitration be imposed, and setting a minimum wage hike from which deliberations would start. But that process is not to come about this time. That which is usual and acceptable is being flagrantly disregarded and replaced by a procedure which is totally unacceptable.

Notwithstanding all that I have said, I would now point out some concern about the fact that much has been said about union and management in this dispute, but it seems to me that in the absence of leadership from this government in the fight against inflation, and because of its complete lack of anti-inflationary policies which has resulted in a free for all, dog eat dog society, one cannot really blame workers, unionized or not, who pursue with determination and vigour cost of living protection. Workers are retaliating against the loss of purchasing power, which has increased steadily since June of 1973.

Accordingly, the Perry suggestions, to the union's way of thinking, were most acceptable in the absence of any government initiative to wrestle inflation to the ground. What other choice did the union have, under the circumstances? To reject the suggestions would have been called insanity, particularly when the government indicated its approval beforehand. I would also say that it is not easy to point the finger of blame at management because, after all, their stubbornness is related to a genuine, sincere and probably true assessment of the situation, namely, that the government-approved settlement which they will impose is highly inflationary and damaging to the economy. That is a position which this opposition party accepts.

Who, then, should be blamed and condemned? None other than the Trudeau Liberals. I point the finger of condemnation at the government for its failure to tackle inflation, for creating a climate of economic instability and uncertainty, for creating lack of confidence in the economy, for creating confrontation collective bargaining, and for the attitude that nothing can be done about inflation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Who is the author?

Mr. Alexander: I thought I heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), but perhaps I am wrong. In this regard, the president of the Canadian Labour Congress said in a recent speech:

Economic instability will drive workers into a position where they will have no choice but to disregard their contractual obligations and to strike regardless of the consequences.

He also said this could result in breakdown of the collective bargaining system. We all know he is right. Workers are now disregarding existing contractual obligations, ignoring back to work orders, ignoring court injunctions and government legislation to end legal strikes. In these circumstances, one could not fault the minister when he screamed for the formation of a body to resolve this question, or his intention to invite business, labour and government officials to form a continuing body to study labour relations and to intensify the examination of the collective bargaining process.

I want to know what happened to the Woods task force report, the Freedman report regarding the public service and all their recommendations. Are they to gather dust, in the usual manner, at the expense of the taxpayer? In any event, I thank the minister for adopting in a very devious way part of our policy which calls for a public interest disputes commission such as recommended in the Woods report. I refer the minister to our policy which is found on pages 4 and 5 of "The World of Work" prepared for the last election, under the heading "making the collective bargaining process work and safeguarding public interest". I assure the minister that he will find it most rewarding and informative.

We were very concerned about deterioration of the collective bargaining process, we were concerned about protection of the public interest, and we were very concerned about the movement of essential services. In that regard we adopted the principle indicated in the Woods report, which I understand the minister is now trying to steal bit by bit. Instead, he should be saying that the government will bring forward legislation to appoint a commission independent of government, particularly of this government, composed of representatives of the consumer, labour and management, in order that we can determine what are essential services, to assist the parties and thereby bring about solutions and remedies to improve the collective bargaining process.

I thank the minister, also, for his initiative in calling a meeting of labour, management and government, but I believe he is very naive if he plans to meet the other parties without having any anti-inflationary policy and expects a meaningful discussion to result. That is the crux of the matter. In that regard, it is my view that neither labour nor management will budge one inch. The meeting will be doomed from the start; surely the minister is aware of this. Surely the minister and his front bench colleagues are aware that this country is crying out in desperation for any kind of step—at this point I am looking at the Minister of Finance—which would show that they are aware of the damaging effect of our 11 per cent runaway inflation.

These groups are looking for leadership in their fight against inflation, for some bold initiative, not the same old reply that inflation is licked, or inflation is a world phenomenon, which I heard the Minister of Finance say today and which only means that little can be done. We need some reassessment on that side. Make no bones about it, the government is in one awful mess.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Alexander: The sooner the government approaches this matter with some credibility and honesty, the sooner our country will return to some stability and order. The current legislation holds many unpleasant ramifications. For instance, there is little doubt that it ignores completely great concerns of labour and management with regard to the need for increased productivity, greater efficiency, worker incentives and communication.

The present circumstances surrounding grain handling, with all its ramifications—the minister mentioned this—including worker unrest and dissatisfaction, demand that those concerned come up with long-term solutions which will bring some stability and order to the collection, movement and loading of grain. This legislation ignores these problems and, therefore, by implication condones and perpetuates conditions as they exist, notwithstanding the announcement of the minister this afternoon regarding an industrial commission. Why could he not have incorporated that in this bill? Is that an impossibility? They have all the brains over there—so they say, Mr. Speaker. Why did the minister not incorporate that in this bill? It would have given this whole exercise some meaning. Or am I wrong in terms of procedure? All they are doing is using their powers to coerce the workers back into an unworkable, dispute-ridden system until they obtain the legal right to walk out again. We should be just as concerned about the long-term approach to grain handling.

In light of this and in keeping with what the minister has indicated today, I demand that an industrial administrator be appointed immediately to inquire into every aspect of grain handling, with terms of reference related at least to the matters I have mentioned. As a matter of fact, you could add to that the government's mishandling of this entire situation.

The current dispute between the grain workers and the Canadian grain elevator companies, the names of which have been disclosed by the minister, has many other unpleasant ramifications. For instance, there is very little doubt in my mind that the settlement proposed by the Perry report will be inflationary, despite the calculation made by any party involved, whether it be 61 per cent, 54 per cent, 47 per cent or 40 per cent. Any settlement in this matter will have far reaching and severe effects on the economy of this country.

The government, however, does not appear to recognize the serious inflationary consequences inherent in such a settlement. In fact, the Minister of Labour is quoted as saying that this particular settlement would not be excessive in the context of labour contracts negotiated in British Columbia over the past few months, and he reiterated this today. But the British Columbia Employers' Council has another opinion. In a recent telegram to the Minister of Labour and the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the council said that the settlement would indeed be "excessively inflationary in the context of the inflationary spiral and the ripple effects of such a settlement".

The grain companies contend that this settlement will equal a 61 per cent increase over a two-year period if all costs are calculated. The British Columbia Employers'

Council, using figures submitted by the union, calculates the increase at 47 per cent over the same period. But, by using their own figures, the B.C. Employers' Union has discovered that the actual increase will be in the order of 54 per cent.

It is very difficult to determine what the calculations are, Mr. Speaker, and what the end result will be with respect to any calculation except the 61 per cent. I would refer hon. members to a lead editorial in the Toronto Star of Monday, September 9, 1974, entitled "Up, Up and Away" which reads in part:

The federal government which is pressing western grain companies to accept the terms of a conciliation report as a settlement with grain handlers says it doesn't know how the companies figure the contract would cost an inflationary 61 per cent over two years.

Here's how. The calculation assumes—what else can one assume—that the consumer price index continues to rise by 1 per cent a month. The present basic wage is $4.96 an hour. Add: 87 cents wage increase, December, 1973; 19 cents cost of living allowance, November, 1974; 65 cents wage increase, December, 1974; 50 cents cost of living allowance, April, 1975; 21 cents cost of living allowance, November, 1975; 40 cents pension plan; 21 cents other fringe benefits.

Total: $3.03 an hour. Which is a 61 per cent increase, extreme by any standard. Does Ottawa really mean to put its seal of approval on that kind of package, thus establishing it as a target for other unions.

There is some question here because the union figures do not jibe. I find it strange, because of the complexities and implications of the COLA clause, that the government was in such a hurry to embrace it. I say "embrace" because they accepted it without knowing what it really meant. Now they want to give us a referee to assist the parties in determining what Dr. Perry meant. The minister shakes his head. However, I have read the bill, and it provides that any amendments or suggestions that cannot be understood by the parties involved are to be referred to the referee, who will tell them what they are all about. That shows that the minister does not know what this problem is all about.

The government has not released anything to indicate what they expect the figure to be on a percentage basis. All I can recall seeing from the minister is his press release of September 30, which indicated that there were only two unresolved issues remaining in the Vancouver terminal grain elevators' dispute and that they would produce a total settlement package costing considerably less than the 61 per cent widely reported in the media. What is this word "considerably", Mr. Speaker: what does it mean in terms of actual figures?

In connection with the press release, I tell the minister that he has been challenged by a responsible person, the solicitor acting on behalf of the wheat pool, who said, that "Munro told half story", according to a headline in the Ottawa Citizen of October 3. He is quoted as saying:

The minister hasn't told the whole story and why he chose to do this is a mystery to me.

Later he said:

Munro seems to be playing games.

The minister's statement in his press release, namely, that there are only two unresolved issues in the Vancouver terminal grain elevators' dispute, was also questioned by Ira K. Mumford, general manager of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, in an article in the Globe and Mail of October 2. In the same article, E. K. Turner, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool quoted part of a telex sent the minister as follows:

In fact, there is no agreement on approximately 40 items, including those referred to in your telex.

Is the minister playing games? Is he being less than honest? I do not know, but that is Mr. Mumford's impression—and he ought to know because he is involved. Mr. Turner says there are 40 issues, including the two issues of pensions and benefits, whereas the minister says there are only two issues. What conclusions can we on this side reach except that the minister is playing games, is playing hanky-panky? Despite any discrepancies over the actual cost, Mr. Speaker, it is probable that a settlement of this size will constitute a precedent for future contract negotiations, as did the 1966 St. Lawrence Seaway settlement. The Prime Minister has either forgotten, or refuses—contrary to all respected opinion—to accept that fact when he indicates that this dispute is unique and that the settlement being imposed will not set off another round of inflationary demands, a proposition to which my party cannot lend any support.

Let us review for a moment the St. Lawrence Seaway settlement. In this case, 1,260 Seaway employees were awarded a two-year contract calling for an increase of 20 per cent immediately and a further 10 per cent following in January, 1967—or, in all, 30 per cent—when the inflation rate was stabilized at 3.6 per cent per year. At that time the Liberal government displayed its well known ineptitude, incompetence and complete disregard for the collective bargaining process by jumping in and promoting a proposal which gave the union 5 per cent less than its original demand of 35 per cent. And this was after the conciliation board's majority report had recommended a total package increase of 14 per cent over two years. Now, is that responsibility? Is that what you call leadership? They are aware of the circumstances, and they make these awards in keeping with the exigencies of the situation.

Let me continue. The Economic Council of Canada dealt with this settlement in 1966 in its third annual review, assessing all the relevant facts. At this time I believe it is not only advisable but very necessary to refer to the council's assessment, which was as follows:

Normally, bargaining in Canada is not characterized by strong national pattern setting. For example, settlements in the steel and automobile industries in Ontario do not usually exert any great effect on collective bargaining in British Columbia which tends to have a life of its own. But large, highly publicized settlements to which governments are parties inevitably have somewhat more impact on the climate of collective bargaining across the country.

That is the crux of the problem. From the moment the government embraces any figures or intervenes, the benchmark is made. This is true whether you like it or not. The Economic Council of Canada considered this sort of situation in 1966 and I have referred to its conclusion. It is not my conclusion, Mr. Speaker. It is a conclusion to which all members, particularly government supporters, should pay attention.

The Globe and Mail of June 22, 1966, registered its concern when it said that a pattern had been set for resolving major labour disputes and wage scales, one that would prove much more difficult to break than it had been to establish. The tendency will be for the normal processes of negotiation to be regarded as little more than formal preliminaries to an appeal to the highest authority. No matter whether we consider the assessment of the Economic Council or the observations of the Globe and Mail, the message is clear. The government's attitude in this dispute has been totally irresponsible and should be condemned. The government has completely disregarded the conclusion of the Economic Council of Canada, to the detriment of this country's economic well-being.

In my view, the repercussions of the original Seaway settlement were most inflationary; and those repercussions have been felt ever since at the bargaining table in contract negotiations. Furthermore, it has become increasingly apparent that since the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that the suggestions contained in the Perry report would be implemented, a climate has been created which has become intolerable. The proposed settlement, in every way, is comparable to the Seaway settlement, if one considers the implications of repercussion, publicity, government involvement and spin-off. On the basis of past examples it is not difficult to prosphesy the effect of a 48 per cent or a 61 per cent award on our economy because our rate of inflation is now running at 11 per cent.

The spin-off will be staggering. It is felt that the spin-off from the proposed award will affect between 11,000 and 12,000 workers, including 1,500 grain handlers at Thunder Bay, 3,200 longshoremen in British Columbia—the minister will run into trouble on that settlement—3,500 managers of grain elevators throughout the west and 260 grain inspectors employed by the Canadian Grain Commission, a government agency. All these men will be able to claim that their jobs and responsibilities are just as important as those of the grain handlers and that they are entitled to an equal award. What will the Minister of Labour say to them?

Let me now turn to a speech the minister delivered to the western region of the International Woodworkers of America, in Vancouver, as reported in the Globe and Mail of September 28, 1974. Does the minister not remember that speech? If he does not, I will remind him of it. He spoke of catch-up. The minister's theory of catch-up is interesting. He said, as reported, that catching up has come to mean catching up with other unions as much as with the cost of living. Catch-up agreements must in no way be viewed as precedents for other groups with no legitimate catching up to be done.

You are not that naive, are you, Mr. Minister? Of course, Mr. Speaker, I say that through you. I am not complaining about the person who wrote the speech, but the minister should have read it before he delivered it. That statement was made after the minister and his cohorts blessed the Perry report, thereby attempting to cover up the awful mess the government had got itself into previously by setting a precedent.

I say here and now that the rationale of the minister's remarks will not be accepted. I say to the minister that his type of thinking is not acceptable. The fat is in the fire. The minister is destroying the collective bargaining process as we know it, and he is in trouble. His troubles are so large that they defy the imagination. He will find it very difficult, if not impossible, to extricate himself. Of course, I say all this in a friendly way. The minister is a friend of mine; he comes from the Hamilton area. We are trying to do our best. The minister has been misguided, and for that I extend him my sympathy. I remind the House that the Minister of Labour said that this is a hell of a time for anyone to be minister of labour. I agree. But the minister is the author of his own misfortunes and will have to suffer the consequences. What will those consequences be?

Let us talk about the Vancouver grain inspectors. When the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) was asked a question about these inspectors earlier, he gave the stock answer, "Oh, well, we are negotiating and it would be irresponsible to say something concrete at this time." That was the gist of his words. I do not think I am revealing confidences in making this further submission. I am talking about the Vancouver grain inspectors. I am informed by an authoritative source that the government has a double standard, in that it has endorsed the Perry report involving increases of about 65 per cent and accepted a settlement for officers and deck hands of 75 per cent, but has offered only about 11 per cent to the inspectors, over 27 months. Is my suggestion regarding officers and engineers not correct? Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that others will not seek the same sort of settlement?

Let me point out, while I am on the subject, that the Minister of Labour in the past has been quoted as saying that workers working side by side and doing the same job should earn the same money. What manner of hanky-panky are we witnessing. The government is offering one group of workers about 11 per cent over two years and offering others who work side by side with them between 48 and 61 per cent. Is that what you call equal pay for equal work? Is that what we mean by the just society? As I have said, the minister will run into trouble.

My second point is this. The Vancouver grain inspectors have endorsed the Perry report as a fair criterion for the settlement of their current dispute. The minister must know the effect of what he is saying. He must believe in what he says.

My third point is this. Withdrawal of the services of Canadian grain inspectors would shut off movement of grain through the port of Vancouver. How does that apply to the minister's catch-up theory? I agree, this is one hell of a time for one to be Minister of Labour, and things are just starting to pop. These things are happening in our country because of this government's incompetence.

My last point is this. Treasury Board's offer is completely unacceptable and completely irrational. Where do we go from here? My points have concerned the grain inspectors. The minister may think that catch-up does not apply to everybody. He is wrong: it does. So much for the minister's argument about catch-up. There can be little doubt about the eventual effect on the grain industry, in negotiations and settlements, of the government's intervention in this situation. How did the government get into this mess? It was easy.

An hon. Member: They have a talent for it.

Mr. Alexander: As my hon. friend says, they have a talent for it. Dr. Perry, when he submitted his report to the Minister of Labour, made clear that it was only a suggestion. But the minister has not said that. At no time since this affair began has the minister said that the Perry report was only a suggestion for action. Dr. Perry's covering note to the minister reads as follows:

● (1620)

As it has now become clear to me that the differences in expectations between the contracting parties—arising from a series of accumulated past issues as well as the special, inflationary circumstances of 1974—remain too wide to be resolved through further conciliatory efforts, I am, therefore, submitting for your consideration some suggestions—

That is the word the minister likes to hide because of the implications.

—which, hopefully, might form the basis upon which the two parties could ultimately enter into a two-year agreemment.

Consequently, the report was not intended to be adopted verbatim as the settlement proposal, primarily because it recommended granting the union more benefits than the union had requested. I understand the union did not ask for COLA. The union did not seek parity with the longshoremen. For some strange reason, and I do not question this, Dr. Perry recommended it. If the government did not know it, it should have, yet holus-bolus, in an overreaction it said, "Okay; that's for us. Let's grab it."

The government's adoption of the Perry report as a basis for settlement prevented any further consultation between the contracting parties. My information reveals there could have been a settlement, yet the minister, who is always projecting the virtue of the collective bargaining process, cut it off. This was told in no uncertain terms to those who had an opportunity to go to Vancouver and Calgary. There was some hope that these parties could have reached a voluntary settlement—but no, the minister, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister could not keep their mouths shut.

The government could have used some discretion in this matter. If it really had had concern about what it was doing, it could have sent them back to work: a new referee, conciliator, or whatever you want to call him, could have been appointed. Perry could have been told to look at this matter again because there is a great deal of complexity and misunderstanding with regard to application of the COLA clause in the benefit structure. We could have been all right in that regard. I see the minister shakes his head. The government, instead, chose to arbitrarily employ the Perry recommendations as a settlement tool and to publicly criticize the grain elevator companies for their refusal to accept the report's recommendations, further alienating the western agricultural community by forcing that community to take such a demeaning position.

In the whole of Canada, in the second quarter of 1974, the average annual base rate contract agreement increase was 12.6 per cent, in compounded terms, compared with a first quarter, 1974, figure of 11.4 per cent. The average increase in one-year agreements was 14.3 per cent; in two-year agreements, 16.4 per cent for the first year and 10.2 per cent for the second; and in three-year agreements, 13.2 per cent, 7.5 per cent and 6.4 per cent for the first, second and third years respectively. Is the Minister of Labour not aware of these figures?

In British Columbia in particular, in the second quarter of 1974 the average annual base rate increase was 15.7 per cent. Yet the Perry report recommends a settlement of 17 per cent in the base rate for the first year, plus additional increases for pension improvements and fringe benefits equalling 8 per cent and 4 per cent respectively, as well as cost of living adjustments. Yet the Minister of Labour claims that this settlement is not excessive in the labour context of British Columbia. Not only is it obvious that the minister is slightly out of touch with the intricacies of the labour situation on the west coast; but it is obvious that he is slightly out of touch with his own government's so-called anti-inflation policy as outlined only one week ago. The policy to which I refer is contained in the following excerpt from the throne speech:

For its part, the government will exercise restraint in its own expenditures ... while controlling expansion of new activities which, although desirable, would contribute to inflationary pressures.

Restraint is the only policy the government has managed to come up with to fight inflation. But restraint begins at home. While the government asks business to practice voluntary restraint in an effort to combat spiralling inflation, it allows its own spending to increase by 21.9 per cent and gives its own employees arbitration awards which do little but feed inflation. Between 1966 and 1973 the cost of living rose 26 per cent. Federal wages increased 50 per cent. In 1974 the government is expected to pay $4,010 million in wages to its employees, up from $3,638 million in the previous fiscal year.

Paramount in illustrating federal government excessiveness in previous contract negotiations is the recent arbitration award granted to 673 federal information officers. This group signed a 27-month contract which grants a 15 per cent increase within 12 months and only three months later grants another increase equal to the rise in the cost of living over the previous full year. This adds up to an increase of 30 per cent over a full 15-month period. I do not know where we are going.

Public Service Alliance president Claude Edwards says that other groups will begin to demand the same comfortable settlement as that awarded to the information officers. In other words, this is now regarded as a precedent for other groups within the jurisdiction of the Public Service Alliance. This is restraint? When you relate this whole matter to the Perry report and the minister's blessings of the same, you can readily understand the kind of problems which confront the minister.

We are being asked to approve a piece of legislation which will obliterate the word "restraint" from the context of the Canadian economy. We must keep in mind that in December of this year approximately 90,000 railway workers, 33,000 postal employees, east and west coast and St. Lawrence longshoremen, and Lakehead grain handlers will all come to the bargaining table. What will prevent their insisting that the Perry report recommendations be extended to their contracts, and what justification will there be for refusing them if the measures now before us become law? This is the ramification: this is the matter about which we are concerned.

We do not have an anti-inflation policy in this country. In the absence of such policy, the only people who can protect themselves adequately are organized workers. They are the only workers able to exert any kind of pressure. In Canada at the present time there are 2,556,000 unionized or organized workers, representing only 25 per cent of a total labour force of 10,152,000. Therefore, nearly 75 per cent of the total labour force is wholly unprotected against inflation, not only because they are not organized but because their government has not yet faced up to the reality of inflation.

What could illustrate this attitude more adequately than the fact that parliament is now being asked to vote into law legislation that will exert excessive inflationary pressure on the economy and will establish a benchmark precedent which will be used as a further basis for protecting those already cushioned from inflation? If the government insists on being excessive, then let their excessiveness be directed to the neglected 75 per cent of the labour force who desperately require an anti-inflation policy.

I have attempted in all sincerity to bring before the House the legitimate concerns that we on this side have faced and have wrestled with ever since we journeyed to Vancouver and Calgary. We knew that in the long run a position would have to be taken. I have indicated our concern about the proposed settlement being inflationary. Second, I have stated that the spin-off as a result of a benchmark being set would be damaging to the economic well-being of this country. Third, I have stated that there is no awareness of the need to come up with solutions which will bring stability and order to the grain handling industry.

Fourth, the Perry report was not final but, rather, offered suggestions which might have formed a basis upon which the two parties could ultimately reach agreement. Fifth, the bill obliterates the word "restraint" from the government's thinking and its approach to finding solutions to halt or to reduce the two figure, runaway inflation. It disregards 75 per cent of the labour force least able to protect their shrinking dollar. The imposition of the role of arbitrator upon the federal parliament, with power to determine an agreement, is wrong.

In the light of all these circumstances, we find the bill unacceptable, and accordingly we shall not vote for it on second reading.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, once again parliament has been called upon to legislate a settlement in a dispute between management and its employees at a stage of a lock-out or strike and, in the process, to order management to resume full operations and the employees to return to work.

Along with the other members of my party I have always believed the collective bargaining process must be allowed to proceed freely between the two parties concerned, with every encouragement from government and the public, as well as from those more directly concerned with the dispute. We must always do all we can to encourage free collective bargaining preferably with no interference from outside parties.

There is a role for government, at each level, to play in the process of encouraging free collective bargaining. This principle has long become part of our society after decades of struggle by working people in Canada. It is accepted even by those, some of whom sit in this House, who pay only lip service to the principle. They know it has become an essential part of relations between organized employees and their employers.

Before I go further I wish to say that over the years the overwhelming majority of labour-management disputes are settled through free collective bargaining without strikes or lock-outs, and that most of them are settled amicably. Relying on my own memory I believe that between 75 per cent and 90 per cent of contracts are renewed each year without resort to strikes or lock-outs. This speaks well for the success of the bargaining process.

For every strike or lock-out which occurs, there are nine or ten other disputes which are amicably settled by collective bargaining. But to judge from headlines or the opening news lines we hear over radio or t.v., one could easily be lead to believe that collective bargaining doesn't work although, in fact, the opposite is the case. It does work, and it works well in most instances. However, like all processes it is not perfect since so much depends on the good faith, good will and real desire to reach agreement on the part of the human beings involved on both sides of a dispute. This is why I say there is always a role for government to play, in the area of conciliation and even arbitration, on those few occasions when the bargaining process breaks down.

We in this party do not like to see parliament overriding the bargaining process. I am sure this is the feeling of most if not all hon. members in this chamber. However, we recognize, as we have on previous occasions, that when the bargaining process fails and there is a serious interference with the welfare of the nation or a significant section of the nation, there comes a point at which government should intervene to end a lock-out or strike, to resolve the dispute and, as a last resort, to order men back to work and require employers to resume operations, as is the case in the legislation before us.

Nonetheless, there is a commonsense way for government to intervene and I do not think this course has been followed. In fact, I am compelled to say that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), with the assistance of that walking disaster looking for a place to happen, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, (Mr. Lang), acted ineptly when they announced publicly that the government would legislate on the basis of the Perry report. What little experience I had on one side or the other of the bargaining table, when a third party appeared to assist, at no time did the third party make public statements which could be construed by either of the other parties, as taking sides.

Surely, there was a more commonsense way of indicating the important role which, once in a while, it is necessary for the government to play. The public statements made by the Minister of Labour and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board effectively prevented any resumption of collective bargaining in this instance; one side or the other needed only to sit back and wait for the inevitable legislation. The ministers should have been much less concerned with public posturing and more concerned with getting the dispute settled.

I have talked with the farmers and workers about this dispute over the past five or six weeks. The message I get, particularly from the farmers in my constituency, is this: get the dispute settled, get the men back to work, get the grain moving. They say this regardless of the merits or demerits of the case put forward by the companies or by the employees. That is the first priority in the minds of the farmers of western Canada. This is why we feel the bill should be dealt with expeditiously. It could be out of this chamber tomorrow, certainly on Wednesday, and it could be the law of the land by Friday at the latest. We still feel the measure should have gone to the Committee of the Whole, or, failing this, that the standing committee need call only the minister and his officials as witnesses in the interest of getting the legislation through quickly.

This is the fourth or fifth time, if my memory serves me correctly, that parliament has been put in this position as a result of an industrial dispute, and until one basic issue is solved it is a situation that will face us almost annually in one industry or another. The issue is basically one of parity. To secure industrial peace in any sector of our economy, parity, or to use a better word, fairness, is essential.

Farmers in my constituency, certainly in western Canada and I believe in all Canada, are fair people. They want to pay their employees fairly, and they are willing and want to provide good, clean working conditions. They want fair working relations and agreements with their employees. Both sides to this dispute, and all of the members of this House, must face up to and deal once and for all with the issue of parity in this industry.

So long as you have the situation where one group of workers receives substantially more pay than another group of workers, doing relatively the same work on the same work sites, you must face the problem of parity every year, indeed daily. I say this because it is intrinsically unfair to permit that sort of situation to continue.

This is not the first time, as I said earlier, that this issue has arisen. I recall when I was an employee on the railway in the forties and fifties that the issue of parity, of fair pay for the same kind of work, was always before us in our negotiations year in and year out. It was not until that issue was reasonably or satisfactorily settled that progress was made by both sides in railway wage negotiations. The same can be said of the auto workers.

I suppose the instance most spoken of—and my good friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) mentioned it—is that of the seaway workers. One can say what one likes about the 30 per cent settlement that Mr. Pearson's government awarded, but I would remind the House that ever since then we have had relative industrial peace on the St. Lawrence seaway. This is because the issue of parity was met head on and dealt with.

In that case you had a situation where men working 150 feet apart for the same employer and doing the same job had a wage differential of $1 to $1.50 an hour, and the higher paid workers were on the U.S. side of the border. Once that issue was met and dealt with, and the reality finally faced by parliament, relative industrial peace has been maintained on the St. Lawrence seaway.

The Perry report goes some way toward meeting this issue and facing this reality. Farmers I have talked to, almost all of whom are active members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, recognize that this problem has been in existence for years, and they have honestly and genuinely tried to grapple with it, as have their employees. As I say, the Perry report goes some distance toward this end.

I for one do not want to be faced with coming back here a year from now to deal with the same issue in the same industry all over again. After the end of the first year the Perry report award still leaves the grain handlers about 25 cents an hour, and another 25 cents an hour in pension contributions, behind the rate paid to the longshoremen. At the end of the second year they will be relatively even—not completely, but reasonably even.

However, some time this winter the longshoremen will be negotiating a new contract with their employers, and the odds are that they will be given some kind of increase. This means that the grain handlers, even with the increase awarded by the Perry report, will once again be some distance behind the longshoremen with whom they work side by side. I submit that in that event the same problem could be back in front of us once again.

In these kinds of circumstances it seems to me that it will take three or four years of progression before a reasonable semblance of parity is reached. I believe, I hope not naively, that the employees and employers will be prepared to take the time to reach a settlement of the issue of parity progressively. My information—I think all hon. members are aware of this—is that discussions are now going on concerning a merger between the grain handlers and longshoremen. In the long run I believe this will be in the best interests of both the employees and the grain companies. Although it may be painful at times it will go a long way toward ending, once and for all, the issue that men who do the same work should be paid fairly.

The other matter that has been bothering me, and which I know has been bothering people in my constituency, is the cost of the settlement compared with the cost of the dispute. On the figures contained in the Perry report, the estimate of the grain companies is that the cost of the settlement will amount to some $3.8 million over two years. I have had different figures from both sides to the dispute, and also from neutral sides, regarding what this means to the farmers' pocket. The employees say it will cost about half a cent a bushel. The companies feel it will cost one cent or 1.1 cent a bushel. But even if it costs 1.5 cents a bushel, the farmers say to me "Settle and get them back to work".

Mr. Vogel of the Canadian Wheat Board has presented figures showing there will be $10 million in demurrage charges this year alone, something in the order of almost three times the cost of implementing the Perry report recommendations. In light of that, and in order to face up to the basic issue of parity, I believe, as many farmers have said to me, that the cost of settling will be far less than, and far preferable to, the cost of the dispute. In other words the dispute is costing the farmer two or three times as much as the Perry report recommendations.

I want to say one other thing about demurrage charges. This question has been raised before. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board has been asked and pleaded with countless times, by members of parliament, farmers and farm organizations, to deal with this issue, one that also has to do with fairness. I am not just talking about fairness for the workers but fairness for the farmers. If through no fault of the farmers demurrage charges are assessed, on waiting vessels, surely it is intrinsically unfair to require the farmers to pay those charges? Surely this is a proper charge on the nation as a whole? If, through a breakdown in industrial relations, a failure in our transportation system, or on account of weather or for countless other reasons, the loading of boats is delayed, then surely the cost of that delay should be borne by the nation as a whole, and not levied solely against the farmer?

If the government wants at least to appear to be even-handed and fair in this whole matter, in addition to the legislation we are dealing with the minister will announce tomorrow that the people of Canada, through the government, will pay these demurrage charges.

There has been much said about how much these Perry recommendations will involve. Both sides have come up with figures. I think we can now rely on the figures put out on August 29 as reported in the Vancouver Sun. That article was based on a statement by Mr. A.M. Runciman, who heads the United Grain Growers, in which the grain companies came up with a new figure in respect of what the Perry award would cost. The new figure is somewhat less than they originally suggested. The workers in turn came up with a figure somewhat more than they had originally said.

This article states:

"This is the figure (48 per cent) we wished had been used all along," declared A.M. Runciman, President of the United Grain Growers, in an interview from Winnipeg.

Runciman said 61 per cent was "valid" on the basis it was used, but "48 per cent is a more balanced presentation."

"We were not kidding anybody with the 61 per cent on the basis of the $4.96 wage rate," said Runciman, although it had been widely quoted as the calculated increase on both wages and fringe benefits of the Perry report.

I hope that anyone else who may take part in this debate, for whatever purpose, either to magnify the amount of the award or, on the other side of the coin, to argue that it is not sufficient, will not bandy about the 61 per cent figure. From Mr. Runciman's statement, we should now rely on the 48 per cent figure.

I have spoken about farmers being fair. I suggest that they are and have no desire to treat their employees unfairly, but they must be in a position to treat them fairly. When economic conditions hurt them their ability to treat their employees fairly decreases. I am confident they are willing to accept the one-cent a bushel cost in order to get the grain moving again, although perhaps not with a smile, but they would more willingly accept it if something were done about the other costs which far outweigh the cost of this increase. The one cost to which I have referred is the demurrage charge. That should not be taken out of the farmers' pockets by the Canadian Wheat Board.

Let me give another illustration of what I mean, Mr. Speaker. A farmer, with whom I spent almost an hour speaking on the telephone the other night, told me about costs and gave me this illustration. A 64-inch plastic belt for his combine cost 79 cents in 1967, and cost 89 cents in 1968. Last week the same belt cost $4.88 and the farmer had to buy two the same day.

I suggest that if we want to prevent the possibility of this kind of dispute taking place in this industry and in others in the future, it is long overdue on the part of the government and parliament to act in respect of these kinds of costs to our farmers.

I have a stack of papers before me which includes reports, charts, statistics and figures on both sides to the dispute, and from our own research people in the government. I have listened carefully to both the minister and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I do not think this is the occasion for members of parliament to use up time going into all the details in order to present the arguments put forth by both sides.

The purpose of this legislation is to end the dispute, end the work stoppage and get grain moving. I am not sure how much a detailed debate would accomplish at this point of time, particularly in view of the fact that these arguments have been put forward by many people for almost a year, and I doubt that any airing we might give the facts here would shed any further light. What we want to do now is deal with the matter quickly. Therefore, my colleagues and I urge that we not only limit the length of speeches but also the number of speeches in order that we can implement this legislation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Housing—Consultation with provinces to expand programs; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Social security—Suggested increases in family allowances and old age pensions—Government position; the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes)—Agriculture—Request for progress report on re-establishment of sugar beet industry.

[Translation]

It is customary at this time for the House to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, but since the draw of private members' bills and motions will take place only tomorrow, no such business will be considered at this time.

In consequence of this, the House will return to the consideration of the grain handling operations bill.

[English]

As the draw in respect of private members' business will take place tomorrow, no business under this heading can be taken up at this time, as would normally be the case.

Therefore, the House will now revert to consideration of Bill C-12 dealing with grain handling operations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WEST COAST GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS ACT, 1974

MEASURE TO SECURE THE RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) that Bill C-12, to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, since this is the first time I have had the chance to speak since the session started, may I first of all heartily congratulate the Speaker who will chair this session's debates and, hopefully, several future debates as well.

I wish to assure him that he will enjoy our wholehearted co-operation. The experience which I have gleaned through a few years in the House has led me to understand that the Speaker, despite all his qualities, needs the co-operation of all hon. members in order to discharge his fairly onerous duty and chair the debates for the good not only of the members, but also of all Canadians, whose representatives we are here, so that the debates can be led to their anticipated results.

Mr. Speaker, we are today starting to study a bill providing for the settlement of a strike which has been going on for several weeks on the west coast. The examination of this bill does not occur in a traditional setting. We had to adjourn the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne to face a situation which has suddenly become serious. This strike has been going on for several weeks, as I stated earlier. Early in August, the Social Credit Party of Canada asked the government to resume parliamentary work in order to bring about an end to this trike, since we had foreseen that it would be a lengthy one. Our experience of previous conflicts led us to doubt that this strike could be settled without the government being forced to resort to legislation.

However, Mr. Speaker, the government turned a deaf ear to our claims and we were not alone in this. The other parties as well as farm and trade organizations throughout Canada called for government action.

The minister just told us a moment ago that the Governor-in-Council, at the outset of the election campaign, suspended the right to strike in this Pacific port until election day because it would apparently have been detrimental to the Canadian economy. But a few weeks too late, it is realized that the government did not fear as much for the Canadian economy as for the economy of the Liberal party, because if a strike could affect the Canadian economy during the election campaign, its effect would be the same after the election. Still, the government waited three months before acting to put an end to this strike.

Mr. Speaker, we are aware that this method of settling a labour conflict is not too popular either with trade unions or with employers.

Given the context, this procedure is becoming popular with Canadians. And we know that a strike of such magnitude has a high cost to the nation's economy and everyone loses. Grain handlers in western ports are the first victims of the strike, but employers also lose. Grain producers, especially those in the Prairies, stand to lose much from the strike. Canadian trade also loses a great deal. On this point, I do not expect our overseas clients to be happy with those ever repeating strikes.

On August 31, 1972, a special session was called to settle a strike in western ports, quite similar to the one before us today. On August 30, 1973, almost a year to the day, a special session was called to settle a Canadian railroad strike, following an earlier one. On October 7, 1974, a special bill was passed to settle a strike in western ports, and in October 1975 we will probably be debating a bill to settle a labour dispute in some federal area, probably a harbour strike, maybe an eastern one this time involving the Atlantic or the St. Lawrence. It may be a mail strike, or a railroad or an air transport strike.

The same situation will probably occur next year.

Mr. Speaker, what are the provisions in the bill before us to settle the strike? Upon passage of the bill, the workers will be forced to go back to work. The strikers will have to return to work, the companies that imposed the lockout will have to call workers back on the job. The employees are told: You will get 87 cents more an hour starting December 1, 1973. An arbitrator is appointed to help settle the dispute, to find points of agreement, to negotiate a labour contract for the next few months.

But then, Mr. Speaker, if it is possible to appoint an arbitrator today in an attempt to solve the dispute, why could it not be done two months ago for instance to end this conflict which has caused so many problems at all levels of the Canadian economy? We waited until today. Mr. Speaker, a question still remains; probably tomorrow morning, or as soon as the bill is passed, the worker will be forced back to work, with an offer of 87 cents an hour. But how much will he get out of that increase of 87 cents an hour?

Part of this 87 cents will go to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) who will hand it to the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I expect the government to take in taxes 30 to 40 per cent of that increase which the companies will be forced to pay their employees. The worker will come out of that strike a loser because management will have to raise its freight rates and profits to meet the higher wages they will have to pay. But the worker, the grain handler who will be forced back to work tomorrow morning will receive only part of that increase.

He will get only part of that increase, and come out a loser. Mr. Speaker, it is the same thing at all levels, whether it be in the public or the private sector in Canada. There is always a salary increase following a labour dispute. But every time the government takes its share of the increase, so the worker is always a loser. He always wants to boost his purchasing power but he is worse off than before.

Mr. Speaker, what the Canadian worker wants, be it in the field of production or public services, Pacific or Atlantic ports, transportation or private enterprise, is first and foremost a purchasing power high enough to allow him to meet his own needs and those of his family. That is what the worker is seeking, Mr. Speaker, and today that possibility is taken away from him on account of the price rise which is practically accepted and which seems to be encouraged because it suits the government. In the production field for instance, every wage increase means a price increase. Therefore, the government is taking not only a part of that increase through income tax, but it also increases its revenues indirectly through an increase in the federal tax and in the provincial sales tax. Therefore, the government wins on all counts.

That is why the worker is ever more deprived of the fruit of his work and is endeavouring by all means to strengthen his purchasing power. The only thing he can do at the present time, is to call for higher wages.

Mr. Speaker, such a situation cannot last any longer. If an effective way of putting an end to it is not found rapidly, there will never be any way out and we will get bogged down deep.

The bill before us will not solve anything. It will force workers, grain handlers in the Pacific ports to go back to work, but afterwards, we will have to start afresh.

We had a debate on August 31, 1972, during which the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), said the following, which I am quoting from page 3910 from the official report of the House of Commons Debates:

> Mr. Speaker, Bill C-231 is not the solution to the problem. We know we will have to begin all over again, for the same causes generally produce the same results.

The leader of the Social Credit Party said that two years ago. We now face exactly the same problem in the same area.

Mr. Speaker, we must find other means to solve this problem, to avoid Parliament—having to deal with such conflicts time and time again. The Social Credit Party of Canada has often asked that a labour court be established, not to settle labour disputes, but to prevent them. This is what the leader of our party asked once again that same day in the same speech. He said, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a Canadian labour court be created as soon as possible in order to prevent disputes and to maintain the best possible relations between labour and management.

Mr. Speaker, this suggestion should be accepted and recognized by the government. It is up to the government to decide whether to institute such a labour court, as I said, and as was said often before, not to settle labour conflicts, but mostly to prevent them.

Mr. Speaker, this will obviously not be sufficient if the government does not take the necessary means, not only to stop the present increase in the cost of living, but also to reduce it so that the Canadian dollar may regain its former value. In this way, the Canadian worker who lives on a pension or a fixed income, who has saved some money, will not lose the value of his dollar. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government has the duty to control inflation, and that this should be done even before the institution of a labour court.

Mr. Speaker, those are two important subjects with which the government should deal immediately. It must do so during this session if it wants to act seriously and be taken seriously by the Canadian voters. Everyone suffers from the situation, and there is no saying that our overseas clients may not tire at some point or other, whether it be in connection with grain or other goods we offer them, of seeing those delays occur at every turn and look to other producers, to other exporting countries. There again, we would suffer from not being able to export our surpluses.

Mr. Speaker, that is the message I wanted to contribute to the debate on this bill. As for me, I feel it should be passed as soon as possible, to put an end to a conflict which has lasted much too long; we should also take the necessary steps, during this session, to ensure that this situation does not constantly recur in the future as it has especially in the last few years.

● (1710)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is not without a considerable degree of trepidation that I, as a freshman member of this House, rise to make my first remarks in this chamber in the course of this crucial debate with respect to the west coast grain handlers' dispute.

As the representative of Assiniboia constituency—one of this nation's greatest agricultural and, particularly, grain producing regions—this dispute and its settlement are of paramount concern to me at the moment. It is essential that the interruption in Vancouver grain movement be brought now to a speedy conclusion by parliament because it is quite apparent that exhaustive efforts—they have been exhaustive on all sides—toward a negotiated solution have not been, and will not be, successful.

I regret—as I am sure most hon. members of this House regret—the fact that we are here today dealing with this problem in this manner. Surely the floor of this House must not become the commonplace location for major labour-management negotiations in this country to take place. The prime responsibility in this area, through the collective bargaining process, rests—and ought to rest—with employers and employees. Under our laws, and in the national interest in most cases, they are quite properly called upon to sit down together to resolve their differences, find common ground and reach contract settlements without damaging slowdowns or destructive work stoppages, and without possible mischief or violence and the eventual necessity of parliamentary intervention. But in the present circumstances, parliament has no alternative but to take this action, and I hope expeditiously, to conclude a contract so that our grain exports through Vancouver can resume.

I must say that I appreciate the view expressed by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party, that his party wants this legislation to move forward quickly so that grain can begin to move through Vancouver. I regret the attitude of the official opposition, which seems not to be very concerned about the situation at the moment.

I suppose somewhere in the annals of our industrial history we might find what could be described as examples of perfect negotiations or perfect industrial relations. But most surely these examples would be few and far between in our less than perfect world. The present situation in Vancouver falls far short of perfection when viewed from almost any perspective, and the difficulties of this past summer have taken place against a sorry background of sour relationships and discord extending back more than a decade. In view of this sad history, I particularly welcome the proposal today by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) that an industrial inquiry commission will soon be appointed to thoroughly investigate the history of labour relations in the grain handling industry at Vancouver.

Requests for such a move have come from such diverse sources as the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association and, I believe, the National Farmers' Union. I know we will all wish the commission well in its work toward achieving a better industrial relationship between the grain handling companies and their employees. I am sure prairie grain producers are looking forward to an era of more stability in this field so that they need not fear further costly disruptions in the movement of their grain into export position.

There are two general issues with which I shall deal briefly. First, some parties in this House and outside have tried to paint the government as the ogre in this sad situation. I ask members, before they make their judgment in this case, to look carefully at the chronology of events which stretch back for one year. Negotiations began for a new contract on October 19, 1973, almost a full year ago. The existing contract was due to expire on November 30. Direct negotiations between the parties continued for almost two months, without success.

The parties requested federal mediation assistance about the middle of December, 1973. That assistance was forthcoming immediately and two skilled mediators struggled to find reasonable common ground for agreement between the parties. They worked for another two months but were unable to show signs of progress. A clear impasse had been reached and the Minister of Labour moved to appoint as conciliation commissioner Dr. Perry, who began his duties on February 15, 1974, four full months after discussions had begun originally. So this was hardly a premature move.

The appointment apparently was well received. Dr. Perry is a skilled man, an expert who is widely respected and well known in the field and, as the minister pointed out earlier, he had worked with these same parties a few years previously. It is interesting to note that amid all the controversy surrounding the dispute nobody has attacked Dr. Perry's competence, ability or impartiality. There has been criticism from some sides of the recommendations he put forward, yet nobody has attacked his ability to deal with the situation or his competence in the field. Dr. Perry worked with both sides for 2½ months but was unable to draw them together. Finally, he produced a report recommending what he saw to be a fair and reasonable settlement.

Mr. Fraser: Surely it was a basis for settlement.

Mr. Goodale: Yes, it was a basis for settlement. Those words are important. This was the best advice available to the parties and to the government of Canada. Clearly, he had done a sound and thorough job in the circumstances. The Perry report in itself was the end product of this particular collective bargaining process. We must keep that point in mind. It was a process which the parties themselves over a period of 6½ months, with all the help in the world, had failed to make work.

What was the government to do with Dr. Perry's report? Could it reasonably, after all that had gone before, say, "No, we don't particularly care for this report. We will put it aside and appoint another conciliation commissioner who will work with the parties for another 2½ months and produce another report which we may or may not accept?" And on and on the process could go.

Clearly, once the parties directly involved in the negotiations, the employers and employees, had allowed their negotiations to deteriorate over more than half a year to the point where an expert, impartial third party had to investigate the situation and produce a thorough report, with recommendations, all the parties, the employers, employees as well as the government, had to be prepared to give that particular report some credence, authority and weight. The view adopted by the government was that the Perry report could not simply be tossed aside as unworthy of discussion.

The government urged this view on all sides, privately and eventually publicly. The workers agreed to it, the companies did not. To ensure continued grain movement during the period parliament was in dissolution, the government acted under section 181 of the Canada Labour Code to prevent a strike or lock-out, indeed to prevent a stoppage in grain exports, until August 8. All the while efforts continued at the official and ministerial level to have negotiations resume on the basis proposed by Dr. Perry. His report was clearly intended to be a basis for further negotiation, but this negotiation did not prove successful. Finally, in late August all work stopped. Exhaustive efforts to bring about a voluntary settlement failed. Further efforts would be pointless. And here we are today.

Allegations of blame are not helpful if we are to reach lasting solutions to difficult problems of this nature, but I believe two points should be put on record. First, once it was made clear to the representatives of the union that the government, if forced to do so, would legislate an end to the dispute on the basis of principles contained in Dr. Perry's report—again, these words were carefully chosen—there could be no excuse for continuing a work slowdown which hampered grain movement. That course of action was not responsible, and perhaps contributed to the further deterioration in relations. It certainly added to the harm done to western grain producers.

Second, once it was made clear to the companies that the government, if forced so to do, would legislate on the basis of Dr. Perry's principles—again, these are important words—it was illogical for them to persist in refusing to discuss the report and work out a settlement on the basis of the report. The final result, as we are witnessing today, was clearly inevitable. The companies said they were standing on principle in demanding parliamentary action. But it should be borne in mind that that standing on principle resulted in substantial losses being borne by prairie producers. They are losses which could have been avoided if the companies had accepted voluntarily, several weeks ago, the result which they then knew would be inevitable. If they had wanted to avoid responsibility, if they had wanted a scapegoat, they could have pointed the finger at the government. In the meantime they could have saved western farmers several million dollars.

It is interesting to consider the figures to which the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) referred.

Mr. Benjamin: The grain companies do not pay demurrage; the Wheat Board does.

Mr. Goodale: Demurrage charges totalling nearly $10 million have been incurred over the past several weeks, because grain has not been moving. As I said, it is interesting to note the figures mentioned by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. For instance, the total cost of the increases suggested by the Perry report might be $3.5 million, perhaps $4 million, over two years. The demurrage charges alone which the Wheat Board has had to pay would have paid 2½ times for the increases in the new contract.

Given this recent chronology of events, the long history of sour labour relations in this industry on the west coast and the difficult attitudes adopted at times by both sides, and given the work done by Dr. Perry in his 2½ months of effort, the government's action in the circumstances has been fair and reasonable. Let me point out—this is particularly important to grain producers—that if the government had pursued a course of action other than the one it did, we probably would have seen a full work stoppage, perhaps a violent one, not in late August but perhaps in May, in April or even earlier. The grain kept moving, albeit at a slower rate, until the last week of August. That, in itself, was a considerable contribution in view of what might have happened.

Let me say one final word about the figures. Percentages have been mentioned in this House, in the press and elsewhere. Anyone who wants to put forward a view can sharpen his pencil and come forward with calculations in its support. When you break it down, Dr. Perry in his recommendations makes three separate points. They must be separated, because if you try to add them together you are adding apples and oranges. He talks about wages, about a cost of living adjustment and about a pension plan. If you break down the wage figures, you will see clearly that the increases range from 31 per cent to 32 per cent over two years, which is 15 per cent of 16 per cent per year. In terms of the situation in Vancouver, perhaps even the national situation, that would not be out of line when you are talking about a wage package exclusive of a cost of living adjustment.

When considering the pension plan provisions, bear in mind there had not been, by and large, any effective plan in place for the past several years for these particular employees at Vancouver. Clearly, the pension plan figures cannot be simply lumped in with the wage figures. There is a qualitative difference between an increase and having a pension plan at all. They cannot simply be added together to come up with some grotesque figure which does not fairly reflect the situation.

I do not want to take up any further time of the House dealing with the arguments pro and con the particular politics of the situation. As we go about our difficult task today, the problems are serious enough. I hope there will be a speedy resolution. None of us like the job we are called upon to do today, but I urge the House to pass expeditiously the legislation before us so that the crucial product, the grain, can begin to move. As this serious dispute ends, as the employees go back to work and the grain moves into export position, I hope all members of this House and all Canadians will heighten our resolve to find in the long run a better way.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the issue we are discussing today is like a gramaphone record I have been hearing for 20 years; the more things seem to change on the west coast, the more they remain the same.

I wish to congratulate the new member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) for presenting the government case so logically. I congratulate him on his delivery. However, I must warn him that he will never succeed in being a lasting success in this House by becoming an apologist for those "two babes in blunderland" who wandered around on this issue this past spring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): There is a mess on the west coast and everyone knows it. These stoppages we have had since 1965 are going to continue this fall, next spring, and forever after. If it is not the grain handlers, it will be the longshoremen or some other group. All I can say is that the job to which we should be addressing ourselves is how we are going to eliminate these perennial stoppages. All parties agree that is our job. I wish to direct my attention to what are the issues.

First, there is a gulf or gap between labour men and management that is too wide to bridge by the absolute and sterile methods now being used in labour-management negotiations. The rigidity and barrenness of this approach are not only hitting Canadian producers of grain, but hitting the world in a way the continuation of which we cannot tolerate. I am referring to the fact that there is a hungry world out there.

These working men and farmers know as well as I that we have a job to do. We know what stands in our way is this barren, sterile labour-management type of procedure that is laid down. It is not for me to lay down a new labour-management procedure. I just want the House to know that the misinformation given to us by the hon. member for Assiniboia is very simple. He talked about two months and four months of exhaustive negotiations. I can assure this House that both management and labour agree on one thing. There were no real negotiations at any time. That is the first point.

I am not here to kick the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) around. I have more important things to do at this time. In passing over the events, I believe that management blundered badly. Because of its impatience it brought in this government machinery last fall and put itself on a slippery slope it could not get off.

I do not blame management for being annoyed when no negotiations took place. Suggestions for negotiations were put before them in the Perry report. The government stepped in and in effect said, "Even if there are no negotiations, we will legislate this proposal into being". By all the evidence on both sides, there was infringement of the legalistic type of labour-management negotiations which are set up under the government machinery. There is no debate on either side of the issue on that score.

All this talk and hammering at each other does not get at the question of stopping the grain stoppages. We must be aware, as we should have been aware for the past 25 or 30 years, that the food crisis is coming upon us in increasing crescendos. We have to do our part. The producers and working men both know this.

As pointed out by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), the farmers want to move grain. They know that for years we moved grain through terminals on the west coast for a reasonable amount. We kept it at six cents a bushel because increasing costs were met by growing productivity.

Some of us from the PC caucus went to the west as a group of people, not to negotiate or interfere, but to determine facts. We found that what the Perry report and what various government officers in the negotiations talked about are altogether different from what labour wanted to talk about. Labour wanted to talk about how they could increase efficiency, productivity and get incentives for this new type of work force people they have to deal with, the young men. They wanted better communications with their boss.

As everyone knows, the bulk of the grain going through the west coast is put through terminals owned by co-operatives which have their headquarters on the prairies. These democratically owned co-operatives delegate to local management the running of these terminals. When they deal with the 550 men in this local, they do not deal with them as human beings. They hire the best lawyer that money can buy; $500 a day. To earn that pay, he is going to grind down on every point that he can.

We hear about the dirty tricks division of the politicians. You should see the dirty tricks division in this type of negotiation. I do not blame the lawyer for doing the best job he can to make the best deal possible for management. That is his job. However, this is not a sterile, barren situation where you are dealing with automation.

The young men in the labour force in that part of the country are the same as your sons or mine. They are 25 or 30 years of age. To them dollars and cents are not the only issue. They want to know why they have to work in that dusty, dirty environment, why there is only one toilet for 130 men, and why there are no shower facilities in some of these places. They want to know why they have these working conditions that most of us do not have to endure. They will put up with this if they know why.

These are modern-day human problems. Since labour wish to talk about efficiency and incentives or, as they call it, better communications, I think if would be easy to formulate a program of action. The bill before us does nothing to settle the basic grievances which have arisen on both sides, between two sincere groups of people, over the last 20 years.

The minister tells us he will appoint an industrial inquiry commission. I do not care how many he appoints. Any farmer I know, with half the brains he was born with, could sit down with his opposite number in this labour union, also with half the brains he was born with, and come up with a solution within two or three days without fooling around with an inquiry or anything else.

I realize the whole labour-management situation in the industry is in a mess and needs inquiry. But in this particular job, faced as we are with the challenge to keep grain moving, the first step in any action program should be to see to it that the presidents of these co-operatives and privately-owned terminals out there meet face to face with their opposite numbers in this little labour union. Let one of the terms of reference relate to ways of increasing productivity and, believe me, if these men do as they have done before, they will give us this increased productivity, and there will be no inflation at all.

Any agreement which raises wages even by 5 per cent is inflationary if there is no corresponding increase in productivity. But if these men, as they have done before—and thank God for it—increase their productivity, there should be no unwillingness to pay them more automatically without the silly farce of a strike. Therefore, as part of this action program, we need those directly affected—the leaders of the farm organizations, the employers and the heads of the labour unions—to meet in an effort to produce this new type of contract which includes productivity formulae and the provision of incentives, and to agree that grain, a food absolutely necessary in the world today, should be taken out of the field of labour-management disputes.

There is enough of an Irishman in each of us that we like a fight now and then, but these disputes should not result in the stoppage of vital food exports. I believe the longshoremen would also agree. I submit that the Perry report does not meet the criteria I have outlined. I have read it a number of times but I found no mention of productivity, no mention of increased efficiency, no mention of incentives for these men so that they would want to work—

An hon. Member: Not in the terms of reference.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That is right. It was not in the terms of reference. That is what happens once one begins to think in legal terms and put these matters in the hands of lawyers. We should never forget that we are dealing here with human beings. My point is simple.

I do not care how fine the Perry report may be or how bad it may be. It does not meet the basic criteria which must be met in the interests of the farmers and the workers. It does not deal with the need for increased productivity or increased efficiency, possibly brought about by increased automation and so on. For this reason it does not deal with the root problem. And because it does not deal with these things it is inflationary. The employees do not want a settlement to be inflationary. They want to accept the principles of productivity, of efficiency, of incentives and, above all, of improved communications with management. If, by these means, they can move more bushels of grain through the port, there is no inflation involved.

In many industries it is hard to quantify gains in productivity or efficiency. But that is not true of the grain business. The number of bushels or carloads moved in a year, a month, a day or an hour can be precisely measured. If the men's ideas can lead to increased productivity I know the farmer will wish the workers get their reward for producing those ideas and putting them into practice. Similarly, if it is machinery or new technology which leads to increased productivity, management has the right to share in the gains as well.

I think it can be gathered I am speaking with some feeling on this subject because I had to endure some anxious times myself in 1961. After a decade in which the farmers had been completely up against it, we finally found a little market for 60 million bushels a year in China. And my experts in the department, in the Wheat Board, on the Board of Grain Commissioners, the Harbour Commission, and management out there, told me with great sincerity and conviction that it was impossible to move that amount of grain via the west coast. Well, Mr. Speaker, when one has fought so hard to achieve something it is awful to be told by the experts that you cannot do it.

I know nothing about moving grain, but I do know something about human beings. I asked the railway heads and the farm representatives and the labour representatives—17 different groups in all—to meet to consider this challenge. And, believe me, in five days those human beings doubled the productivity of those port facilities without a dollar being spent in new capital investment. Nearly all the ideas came from the labour side. The increased flow dramatically increased the gross income of the companies, and when I suggested that labour surely deserved some of it, management said, "Very well, 10 per cent will go to labour." This represented a 60 per cent increase, yet not one voice was raised in complaint, because productivity had been doubled. I am talking now about the basic wage.

When we added up the extra $1.5 million which went to them it meant an increase of 60 per cent in their basic rate. Workers came to me at that time and said, "We have worked for this company for 20 years but this is the first time we have met our boss, and he is not such a bad fellow after all". They gave their word that as long as the oral agreement then reached was in being there would never be a strike by grain handlers or longshoremen on the west coast.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

That was the situation until the companies made the mistake, in 1965, of hiring a lawyer who introduced a side issue of one kind or another. As a result, there was a breakdown. The companies, realizing their mistake, got rid of that lawyer and hired another. This brings me back to square one.

● (1750)

I think I should conclude, Mr. Speaker, by putting my arguments in point form. I should like to suggest that when the presidents of these grain companies sit down with their opposite numbers in the labour union they immediately agree, as they agreed in 1961, that we need a single grain allocation authority. Whether or not this be a transportation man, we need a grain allocation authority, someone who can direct the traffic and stop this silly sort of thing that is taking place in the name of competition.

Secondly, I suggest they accept the fact that we need a new grain handling system on the prairies to tie up with the modernization of the grain handling system on the coast. This has been held up for 25 years, for reasons that only people on the prairies understand.

Thirdly, I suggest they should discuss with the co-ops, and then recommend to the government, a new tax system that allows equality of tax treatment for private enterprise which is competing with the co-ops both on the prairies and in the terminals. That is the only way to protect the interests of both farmer and workers.

Fourthly, to get the grain moving and keep it moving, they should immediately accept the concept of a 24 hour a day operation in all the terminals, seven days a week, and put an end to the two shifts a day, five days a week pattern. They should work with the railways instead of against the railways.

I happen to know that there will be a volume of products coming through to the west coast greater than management knows about, certainly greater than even the labour fellows expect. These products that will be coming from the prairies in the next two decades are going to require tremendous efficiency in handling capacity on the west coast.

I should like to repeat that nothing is new, as I said in my opening remarks. But I felt keenly enough about this six years ago to propose a type of contract that now I hope labour and the company presidents will consider. These proposals were put forward in 1968, not in 1974, and are quite simple.

First, there should be a cost of living clause, and secondly, an agreed upon productivity gain rate, which gain would be shared on a formula mutually arrived at between management and labour. Thirdly, there should be constant negotiation to allow for external influences and new information. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, these words have meaning both to labour and to management. Fourthly, there should be provided built-in inducements to maximize productivity, and fifthly, participation of both sides in a program of labour supply, training, etc. Lastly, I would add a grievance procedure that could be activated continually and quickly. I suggest such a grievance procedure is obviously required. When men work under difficult and dirty conditions a fight soon develops, and it is better to settle it within 24 or 48 hours than let it turn into a great sore.

I have taken my full time, Mr. Speaker, but I plead with the House, as I have on many previous occasions. We know that the Perry report is going to go through, and you cannot blame labour for accepting it. On the other hand, you cannot blame management for screaming its head off at the way things were handled. Nevertheless the real issue is to get at the basic problems on the west coast. Perhaps when we get all straightened around, since the system is more efficient by far on the west coast than on the east coast, we can then start work on the system on the east coast and bring about the same efficiency there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Postmaster General rising to ask a question?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since the hon. member's time is limited, this can only be done with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: I thank the hon. member for his thoughtful speech, and I agree with much of his sentiment. However, I did not hear him so well over here, and I was wondering whether he said that in 1961, when there was a return to increased productivity, the men received a 6 per cent increase. Is that what he said?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): No, Mr. Speaker, I said 60 per cent.

Mr. Mackasey: I thank the hon. member.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might answer the question further by saying that wages in those days, if I remember correctly, were around $5,600 a year. The extra amount to each man was roughly $3,500, which is where I got the rough percentage of 60 per cent. It was also agreed at that time, and management actually put this into some of their contracts, that there be a productivity clause, which would be taken into account in the next contract two years later. I was no longer minister in 1964 and the clause was dropped. So, I have now made a new proposal. Knowing the fellows on both sides of this issue I am positive that this is a basis they will accept, and we will then get away from the whole question of labour-management disputes involving grain movement.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, may we call it six o'clock, and I will speak at eight this evening?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate you on your election and assure you of my full and entire co-operation in the carrying out of your duties which I hope will last for a long time. I also wish to offer you my services if necessary.

Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of the bill entitled: "An Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada" we have to deal with the basis of negotiations for collective agreements and to show more especially how a conflict can deteriorate at the social and humanitarian levels. That kind of conflict can give rise to a crisis which can sometimes be called a national crisis, because those individuals must work to ship abroad the grain necessary for the survival of people. Those workers have to earn reasonable wages for their work.

My hon. colleague from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain made quite relevant remarks on the negotiation. He pointed out the need for continued negotiation in collective agreements. I would agree with him because I participated for seven or eight years in negotiations coming up every two or three years. One could see that those negotiations kept coming back on the same technical details. They were negotiated, and there was indeed a considerable loss of time. On the other hand, to have on-going negotiation, those parties would indeed have to act in good faith, and show respect one for the other.

I think that in this conflict management showed no respect at all for its employees. On the contrary, they refused to play their economic role by refusing to discuss negotiable demands and saying that Dr. Perry's recommendations were similar to those made in 1970. I do not consider Dr. Perry's recommendations to be so extravagant because in the province of Quebec about 100,000 workers in the public or quasi-public service now have that. If the expected rise in the cost of living is set at about 4 per cent and actually turns out to be 7 per cent I do not see anything abnormal in saying that the difference between 4 and 7 per cent is 3 per cent. This is a fair increase that the government of Quebec gives all its employees.

I think the recommendations contained in the report are a decent minimum for those employees, a minimum that will merely allow them to catch up on the dock workers who work with them everyday. I think that should be considered as a minimum that is certainly not extravagant and will not contribute to fuel inflation. I, for one, do not think that inflation is the result of salary increases. Many other factors cause inflation. When there is talk of productivity, of yield, no mention is made of the high cost of money, of the rate some people charge: there is a marked preference for talking about the rate of production of the human being.

To my mind, claiming that granting an increase to those people will cause inflation is trying to evade the problem.

I should also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) for the way in which he dealt with the problem. First of all, I firmly believe that he gave the two parties a chance to come to an agreement before asking Parliament to intervene. Let us go back to the beginning of the conflict. It will be recalled that in September of 1973, more specifically on September 17, 1973, the unions advised the company of their wish to negotiate. Here we are in October 1974 and negotiations between the two parties have been a complete failure. Why? For several reasons, and I believe the preamble to Dr. Perry's report should be quoted to understand precisely what the merits of the claims and why it was impossible to reach an agreement based on compromise before being forced to pass an act of Parliament.

Dr. Perry said in part that the effects of the rising cost of living, especially in the second year of the old collective agreements, gave the workers a distinct feeling of being cheated and a sound conviction that the loss in purchasing power should be made up one way or another.

Widely spread uncertainties as to the future trend of consumer prices had stirred up fears with respect to the validity of a long term contract at this time.

There were other important considerations. For example, there was no pension plan for the whole industry on the west coast. A pension plan without contributions was being established; there were also frequent cases of higher wage scales in related industries, clear differences in the hopes of both parties regarding what could be achieved in that year through amendments. Furthermore, the negotiations were made difficult by previous negotiations.

In such circumstances, the subsequent recommendations could only indicate a series of provisional changes which both parties could accept while trying to reach an agreement in such a difficult year.

I think that in the previous conflict between the companies and the employees lies the explanation for the sad state of these negotiations.

There are probably some difficulties with the union, but most of all there is bad faith towards the western coast employers.

A quick look at the recommendations Dr. Perry made is enough to make one wonder why the parties did not agree.

First, as far as money is concerned, the people are asking for a 15 per cent increase that Dr. Perry supports. And we learned from the minister that the annual pay rise in British Columbia last year was 15.7 per cent. Therefore, I do not think that Dr. Perry was overly generous in making this recommendation.

Second, to contend, in 1974, that there must be a two year contract is to me quite normal. That was another rejected recommendation.

Third, he said there will be a further general increase of 65 cents as of December 1, 1974.

Fourth, he referred to cost of living adjustments to hike any increase of more than 4 per cent a year.

At the outset I explained that this practice is frequent, at least in Quebec, in the civil service and related bodies since 1970. I can't imagine why workers on the waterfront could not be granted similar benefits, whether they are employed by government or private enterprise. If private enterprise really wants to show leadership and demonstrate that it has a social part to play in Canada, it is in cases such as this one that it should do so. If they are not of good faith and force us to sit today, then these companies compel us once more to settle problems they brought on themselves. What employer today would dare refuse to grant a pension plan? It is indeed impossible to understand that such employers still exist. Most of the changes proposed by Dr. Perry are minor changes in the area of employer-employee relations. Indeed they are far from being major changes.

● (2010)

Mr. Speaker, I do not know where we could go if we had such firms everywhere in Canada. First of all, our time would be spent intervening between unions and employers, something I should greatly deplore. In my opinion, the settlement of a conflict ought to be left to the parties involved.

This is a very special situation. For the past year and a half, the government has been at least trying to appoint a special investigator to help settle the problem between the parties, and it is realized, after reading the report, that there was always one party which refused to accept Dr. Perry's recommendations.

The management knew that it just did not have to accept. To wash its hands of the matter, it knew that someday a responsible government like ours would take means to solve the problem, and that once we had passed this law, the company could tell its employees: "Well, I have to live with this, I give it to you because the government is forcing me to do so." This is not how we shall create some sort of harmony between the unions and management.

I call on the good will of these owners to review entirely their philosophy concerning the attitude of unions. They must realize that, in 1974, unions are here to stay. They have a role to play and they do so. Of course as a politician, I have to face up to the consequences of this, the same as everyone else. What the unions are asking is not always convenient for us, but they have contributed greatly to social evolution in Canada. In their own way, through the mandates they have received, they have contributed to improve the situation of a great majority of the population.

If we can accept this, if we can stop looking for lawyers to study continuously the legal aspect of issues, the situation will improve. My colleague from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out that whenever a lawyer is hired to look into a labour conflict issue, the problem remains unsolved for months. Mr. Speaker, the best example of this, I have witnessed in my constituency. The United Aircraft of Canada Limited hired the best lawyer, in other words the dirtiest they could find, to try to defend their cause. The workers have been on strike nine months and, according to the company, they will stay on strike for a long time. The company amuses itself by finding legal points to embarrass the union and not to solve the problem. The fact that they have 2,700 strikers on their hands, does not disturb them but let the strikers hire a good lawyer to represent them, that disturbs them. The company keeps on doing research work and spends millions of dollars in fees to security agencies and all that kind of thing.

I might say in passing that I disapprove of that kind of employer that may be found in western Canada just as I do in my constituency. I believe it is immoral in 1974 not to be able to accept that a negotiating agent, duly commissioned by its members, duly accredited, be not held in respect. Those employers will never be respected by others.

Whenever employees are being prevented through their agent to accept negotiated settlements, it is bad. And it is still worse in this case because a conciliator makes recommendations, the union accepts them and the employer says that he does not accept them. Then the employers will come and say that unions contribute to the disruption of social order, Mr. Speaker. That is what they will say very soon. And it is the comment we often hear. If the employers really want to be held in respect by unions, they must also begin by showing respect for their employees and in order to do that, let them show respect to their negotiating agents.

Mr. Speaker, that is one of the best examples of employers who cannot adjust to the 1970's, who cannot adjust to social changes. That reminds me of a group of conservative men having a little business of their own, who want to preserve it and are anxious to keep their rights. They will have to learn that there are employees who allow them to make profits. If this is so I do not see why these employees should not benefit also.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Perry's recommendations are minimum ones. In 1970 this was already being negotiated in Quebec. Now we have them in 1974.

I think it would be indecent to maintain here that we will contribute to inflation in Canada because we are giving a 15 per cent increase to some employees. There are bosses, Mr. Speaker, who will "screw" us for 60 per cent. And the bosses, the big consortiums, will "get" us even more by trying to "get" us with their income tax returns. You do not have to worry, that is where they make their money. And they are quite capable of doing this. After that, they tell us that because we are granting a 15 per cent raise we are contributing to inflation. They are really indecent.

We are quite lucky in Canada to have people who can respect the law and who are conscious of the fact that if they do not win there is a government who can support them. That is what is important.

I said before, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) really did good work in this case. I also said that I absolutely did not want government intervention between management and unions to become a normal procedure. I think that the Minister of Labour gave us an example of the patience one can have. All this started exactly on September 17, 1973 and we are now in October 1974. I think that the Minister of Labour has given both parties their chances and if management had really wanted to negotiate and accept Dr. Perry's recommendations we would not be in this position of being forced to vote a law to get respect for what is a vital minimum today.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I would like first of all to compliment the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) for rising to make his maiden speech on such a contentious issue. I listened to him carefully. At the beginning of his speech he outlined the problem and said he regretted very much that parliament has to be the final negotiator in the conciliation and the bargaining process when the two parties were unable to reach agreement. I am sure all members of the House regret this also. But he failed to tell the House why the two parties have failed to reach an agreement in this particular dispute.

● (2020)

Normally when you have a labour dispute the two parties meet from time to time, and meaningful negotiations take place eventually when each party realizes that the other is seriously concerned. I have yet to hear why negotiations broke off, but I think the reason is obvious. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) has stayed out of this debate so far because his head is hanging low. He is the culprit. He is the person who deliberately intervened. As early as the first part of May he told the companies to settle for the Perry recommendation or the government would force it on them. It was at that point that meaningful negotiations ceased.

If I had been head of the labour union I would not have sat down to negotiate either. I would have known I had the government on my side and that, if I hung on long enough, the companies would be forced to accept what Perry recommended. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board erred in intervening as rapidly as he did.

I might accuse the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) of playing politics in trying to keep this sticky wicket away from the last election. He used section 81 of the Labour Act and said that there should be no walkout or strike for a period of two months after the election. That was within his power, and he had to do it because already the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board had destroyed any chance for meaningful negotiations.

Members of the Liberal Party can rise in this House and call the grain companies anything they like but they should recognize when the negotiations stopped; they stopped when the government intervened. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), as I supposed he can do when he likes the minister who made the booboo, stepped in and supported the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. However, we have noticed a certain amount of demotion in the Liberal cabinet recently, and as suggested by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), there should be a few more.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) has done everything to destroy western Canada since he became a member of the cabinet. In the short time available this evening I want to point out that his actions during the time he has been a cabinet minister bear out his past actions. His first action was the well remembered LIFT program. Where did operation LIFT come from? It did not come from his brain; it is all outlined in the Canadian agricultural report submitted by the task force on agriculture in 1969. It was dreamed up before he became minister.

Mr. Lang: You yourself recommended it in 1968.

Mr. Horner: I am sorry; you cannot find that in any quotation anywhere.

Mr. Lang: Hansard. I will show you.

Mr. Horner: The minister picked that idea out of that book and attempted to sell it to western Canada.

The minister can correct me if I am wrong. Wheat production fell by 150 million bushels in the following year. I may be out a little, Mr. Speaker, but the minister is indicating general approval of that figure. Any schoolboy can figure out how much wheat is worth today. Before August 1 at the elevator on delivery it was worth $3.50 a bushel. I hope the farmer gets $1.50 a bushel on final payment. A bushel should be worth $4 on a ball-park figure, so $600 million is what this minister has cost western farmers.

What did he do next? He brought in the grain stabilization bill. Parliament defeated that bill and saved western Canada millions of dollars. What was the next thing he did? He had a fire sale of barley across the world, selling at least 20 cents to 50 cents a bushel below the price he should have been getting. The minister nods his head in approval. He sold barley and failed to adjust the price of barley for a two month period.

The next thing he did was to devise a feed grains policy. The evidence is in the Canadian livestock report of 1972-1973. That policy cost the western feeder $50 per head for every animal he fed last winter. In an effort to bail out the western feeder this spring the government spent $3½ million per week subsidizing or supporting beef prices. One can figure that over 26 weeks that cost about $90 million.

Now let us look at the grain strike. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt asked the people in that constituency to vote for him. He is a minister in the cabinet, but I wonder if the people in Saskatoon-Humboldt realize that his position there has cost them millions and millions of dollars. I have already accounted for something like $700 million.

Let us look at April 10, 1974 and what Mr. Vogel, chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, had to say about the rail strike. That strike was similar to what we had this summer. The minister failed to make his point in cabinet, and parliament should have acted long before he did. He failed to have any weight whatsoever in cabinet.

It is no wonder that many farm people believe the Wheat Board would fare better in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who has power in cabinet. The rail strike was brought before parliament, and what did it cost us? According to Mr. Vogel during the rail strike last year approximately 45,000 boxcars representing 95 million bushels were lost, and vessel demurrage charges cost producers of western Canada hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars. This year he said, "No, we are not going to pay any demurrage charges; the government is not going to intervene there."

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

This holdout is because the companies could have settled it any time, at the government's price, acceptance of the Perry report recommendations. According to Mr. Vogel, in this particular strike demurrage charges alone will come to $18 million. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board suggests they will only be $10 million. I will make a little deal with him. Will the minister pick up everything over $10 million? If it is not going to be a cent over $10 million what has he got to lose? He does not call me on that one, and that is too bad.

We have gone down a whole list, Mr. Speaker—operation LIFT, grain stabilization, barley sales, a feed grains policy, and a railway strike which cost Canada millions of bushels of lost sales and millions of bushels of potential sales. Now we have the grain handlers' strike. It all began quite innocently, as do most wage negotiations. The companies and unions sparred a bit and felt one another out. The companies asked for a conciliator and the Minister of Labour appointed one. The conciliator did not bring in a final sealed document, but brought in a list of suggestions which might be used in reaching a settlement.

● (2030)

The government has blundered. The minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt has blundered. Recently we witnessed firings from the cabinet. I suggest that that minister should be demoted. He is too involved with questions of justice and abortions to have time for anything else.

An hon. Member: Wait until he deals with marijuana.

Mr. Horner: An hon. member says, "Wait until he deals with marijuana." Somebody also suggested that he may already be dealing with it. In any case, whom are we to believe. Some say that these workers will gain 61 per cent, but the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) says they will get only 15 per cent. Witnesses should come before the committee to clear up whether the increase is of the magnitude of 15 per cent, 41 per cent or 61 per cent. How is the COLA clause to be negotiated? We don't know, but we are asked to pass this bill on second reading tonight.

The Toronto Star of October 2 says that we have inflation by the bushel in Ottawa, that giving the Vancouver grain handlers 60 per cent over two years is inflationary.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his telegram to Mr. Runciman, President of United Grain Growers, said that the present settlement should not be considered as a precedent for wage settlements in other sectors of the economy, because the men in this dispute are trying to catch up with the longshoremen. Once they catch up, the longshoremen will go on strike to get ahead of the grain handlers.

The true test as to whether the companies have been the culprit in this matter is this: did they have difficulty in obtaining grain handlers? That will show whether they were stingy with regard to wages and working conditions. The answer is no. Grain handlers are available to any grain company operating on the west coast. So, Mr. Speaker, their pay has not been as bad as suggested by some speakers this afternoon.

Certainly the Prime Minister is wrong in suggesting this settlement will not set a precedent. It certainly will. The government knows it will set a precedent. Grain inspectors at Vancouver who work for the same elevator companies the grain handlers work for, and who do much the same work as the grain handlers, will come out on strike next and demand a similar pay increase.

The government has offered them a niggardly 6 per cent. The Minister of Labour and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) know that 6 per cent more will not satisfy the grain inspectors. The Minister of Labour already knows, after the settlement affecting terminal workers at Thunder Bay and personnel working on ships in the St. Lawrence, that the 61 per cent figure has already become a guideline in Canadian wage settlements. He agreed to the settlement of those two disputes at 65 per cent and 69 per cent.

This evening we heard that the grain handlers will get only 15 per cent extra, not 65 per cent, as happened at the Lakehead. Of course the figure will vary, depending on whether it is applied to the top, bottom or middle of the wage scale. The grain companies have taken the average. Without doubt the reference of this matter to parliament has set a precedent for future parliaments. It is all very well to intervene and say there shall be no strike or walk out, but the point is this: meaningful negotiations cannot go on. There should be no intervention which prevents meaningful negotiation.

But the government intervened, and its intervention will cost the Canadian economy vast sums because the proposed settlement is inflationary. Further, this wage settlement will inspire similar wage settlements in future. They, too, will be inflationary. Frankly, I regret that parliament has been made the final arbitrator in this dispute. I think Dr. Perry should come before the committee and say how he interprets the COLA clause in the contract, or how he arrived at the COLA clause which will affect the grain handlers.

Years ago the grain handlers decided to do away with their own pension plan. They voluntarily did away with it in wage negotiations because the Canada Pension Plan had been introduced. Now they want their pension plan reinstated, with the companies to pay all the costs and the workers to pay none. Surely Dr. Perry could come before the committee so that it can determine how large is the increase that is being granted. Is the Toronto Star correct in alleging that in Ottawa there is inflation by the bushel, and that this is an increase of better than 60 per cent?

Like it or not, what the government does will set a precedent in wage settlements. It will affect inflationary pressures in this country. If the increase is to be only 15 per cent, it behooves members of the House to seek the proof of that; otherwise we shall merely be encouraging inflation. I shall be interested in hearing government supporters on this point. Are they prepared to have the matter clarified before the committee? We, as legislators, should know whether the increase is to be 61 per cent or 15 per cent. The matter should be cleared up. I hope this bill is sent to committee so that witnesses may be called to answer these questions fully.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I intervene in this debate to say that I support this bill and support my colleagues in this matter which is of great importance to grain handling in the port of Vancouver, part of which I represent in this House, and important also to the prairie and national economy.

I was disappointed with the position taken by spokesmen for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. As spokesmen for all other parties said this afternoon, we regret the necessity for parliamentary intervention in this labour-management dispute. We regret that parliament must be the final arbitrator. Obviously if this work stoppage had been settled by the free collective bargaining process, if the settlement had been freely arrived at, in an atmosphere of healthy labour-management relations, all parties in this House would be happier than they are this evening.

Obviously at some point in any dispute involving the public interest, the rights of the public outweigh the private rights of the parties involved. That point has been reached in this work stoppage involving grain handlers in the port of Vancouver.

● (2040)

This afternoon we listened to a full and lucid explanation of the circumstances giving rise to this legislation by my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). We also listened to the official spokesman of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), who made a great speech. It was generous, genteel, witty and cleverly put together. It was one of his better speeches in the House of Commons. I compliment him on his official statement this afternoon on behalf of his party.

Mr. Alexander: You can stop there.

Mr. Basford: In the course of his speech the hon. member roundly attacked the bill. He attacked the formula used in the bill. He attacked the Perry report, the Minister of Labour, and the minister responsible for the wheat board.

An hon. Member: And the government.

Mr. Basford: Yes. He attacked everyone it was possible to attack. However, nowhere in the course of his remarks on behalf of the official opposition did he propose what parliament should do to get wheat moving to and out of the port of Vancouver.

Nowhere did the hon. member suggest how we as a parliament, the highest court in the land, which today and tomorrow will be attempting to get the companies and the men moving wheat through Vancouver this week, should approach this problem. Instead, to my very considerable dismay he, and the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) engaged in narrow partisanship.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Hamilton West told us how he had gone to Vancouver and Calgary and saw what was happening. I would have thought that on this occasion the hon. member and his party would have risen above partisanship and, on the floor of this House, sought a solution to the problem that now exists in Vancouver. However, I do not think members opposite are really interested in a solution.

Grain Handlers' Strike

I wish to quote from an article that appeared in the August 27 edition of the Vancouver Sun. British Columbia members of parliament were interviewed about whether parliament should be summoned to deal with this situation. I quote:

And Tory Ron Huntington—

He is the new Conservative member for Capilano.

—said Parliament should be called, but only to embarrass the Liberal government and not to resolve the grain strike situation—

"What's the point of having Parliament get involved now that the bargaining system has already been destroyed? But it would be tremendously embarrassing to the present government to have to call Parliament.

"On that basis, I would say, 'yes, call Parliament.' But I wouldn't want to see the government or the minister taking any discretionary action."

Asked if he was recommending that the government go to the effort of expense of calling the House in order to do nothing, Huntington said: "Yes, it would be very embarrassing to them. That's the only point of it all."

It is tragic that the hon. member for Hamilton West and his party should regard this situation not as one to seek a solution to a very serious work stoppage in Vancouver but to seek a partisan advantage. They seek to embarrass the government rather than to relieve the situation affecting the prairie wheat farmer and the Vancouver cargo handling facilities. I would have thought that in this new parliament we could have looked to Her Majesty's official opposition for a somewhat higher contribution to the debate and the resolution of these issues.

What the official spokesman of the Conservative party and the hon. member for Crowfoot have proposed today will not move one grain of wheat. It will not get one ship weighing anchor from English Bay. It is unfortunate that we have such a lack of leadership from the official opposition. This evening I appeal to them to forget that position, to be statesmanlike, to support this legislation, to get it to committee as quickly as possible, to get the work stoppage in the port of Vancouver over, and get the grain and ships moving again.

Here is a group that for a month has been saying "call parliament". They have been blaming the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for not calling parliament. We have now convened. We now have legislation. But they have adopted a policy which would make parliament impotent to deal with this particular situation. It is a truly deplorable situation and I hope the hon. member for Hamilton West will mend his ways during the course of the debate.

The bill before us is the usual type of bill for these unfortunate circumstances. My colleague explained it this afternoon. The bill contains five provisions, namely, that grain handling will be resumed, the collective agreement will be extended, the term of conciliation commissioner will be incorporated into the collective agreement, all strikes and walkouts are prohibited, and negotiations will resume on how the terms of the conciliation commissioner will be incorporated. Failing agreement on that, a referee will deal with the question. What the bill does can be examined in detail in committee, I hope tomorrow or the next day, when my colleague will appear before the committee.

One other point the hon. member for Hamilton West raised is that the bill did not set out that there would be an industrial inquiry. He criticized the Minister of Labour for making that announcement today. The establishment of an industrial inquiry is set out in Sections 196 and 197 of the Canada Labour Code and need not be incorporated into this special legislation, Bill C-12. Therefore, in making his announcement this afternoon the Minister of Labour was acting in accordance with legislation already passed by parliament and which is already the law of the land. It was put forward by my colleague, the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey).

There is a need for this industrial inquiry into the whole history of labour management and grain handlers in Vancouver. The need is great. As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said this afternoon, we do not want to come back next year, or the year after, and again have to pass legislation. As the minister said, we have seen a long and tedious history of labour management difficulties in the grain handler's situation at Vancouver.

We must seek a means of permanently establishing labour management stability in grain handling and cargo movement to and through the port of Vancouver. My colleague mentioned returning to the days of the dispute at the time of the St. Laurent government. For 21 years we have seen a history of mediators, conciliators, inquiry commissions of one sort or another, strikes, walkouts and labour management disturbances. In the interests of both parties and, more important, the interest of the national economy, the cause of the difficulty must be removed. We must resolve the underlying labour management difficulties.

It seems to me that an industrial inquiry as proposed by my colleague is a suitable instrument for initiating that kind of process. It would hear from all the parties concerned and, undoubtedly, it would take into account some of the constructive comments made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) this afternoon. It is essential that the underlying causes of unrest be removed.

The Port of Vancouver is the nation's busiest port. It is the second busiest in North America and the twelfth busiest in the world. Over the next five years we shall have to spend, depending upon what analysis one reads, anywhere between $500 million and $1 billion on upgrading marine facilities and access to the port. We cannot legitimately expect the public and the private sector to invest capital of this magnitude without taking steps to improve the labour-management climate in the port. It seems to me this is the whole purpose of the two-pronged approach proposed by the government through the Minister of Labour.

First, the bill before us ought to be passed as quickly as possible so that operations in the port can be resumed. Secondly, from a longer term point of view, there should be an inquiry into the whole history of labour-management in the hope of producing permanent solutions and creating healthy industrial relations. I hope the commissioner will be imaginative in the way he looks at his terms of reference, and that he will suggest to all the parties involved long term solutions to the problems which have vexed wheat shippers and all others engaged in port operations. I hope the official opposition and its spokesmen will recognize that it is essential to pass this legislation quickly and that they will forego what is an obvious delight to them, that is, an attempt to derive some partisan advantage at the expense of the Minister of Labour, or of the Wheat Board, or of the government.

Mr. Stanfield: Humbug!

Mr. Basford: Again, I appeal to the statesmanship of hon. members opposite. Let them show the country that parliament, when it is called upon to be the final arbiter, can act decisively in the national interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Listening to the unctuous tones of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) I looked across the aisle expecting to see a halo above his shiny visage. I heard him attack Her Majesty's loyal opposition for showing partisanship, and call upon us for statesmanship, in fact demand from us all the things which he and his colleagues have failed to produce. It seems to me he wants us to endorse the clumsy solution which is being foisted upon the country by the government and, in the process, somehow, to accept responsibility for it. I say to the minister: This is your baby; don't expect us to look after it.

As one of the members chosen to go to the beautiful city of Vancouver to look into the background of the situation, I did so with a certain advantage. Like the government, I did not know very much about the subject. And as I looked into the various ramifications of the matter, and spoke to the parties involved, I quickly learned that this was an extremely complex human issue. We were able to speak with union members and their negotiating team led by Mr. Henry Kancs who, I may say, personally impressed me a great deal.

We found that, unlike some other less progressive unions, this one was anxious to come to grips with the challenge of moving grain more quickly through the Port of Vancouver. We found that the union was interested in discussing working conditions, new methods of processing grain and cleaning it on the prairies, and the introduction of equipment which will speed the unloading of cars at the terminals. In other words, there was a great willingness to participate in a team approach, using what one could call, I suppose, an approach by way of industrial democracy, leading to all kinds of long term solutions, adopted in a constructive way in co-ordination with the management of the companies and prairie agricultural interests.

Also, we found that management were most concerned about certain questions which were fundamental in their eyes, which meant they had to take account of past history, and of what had happened to the farmers on the prairies in the bad years when some of those who grew the grain received less by way of remuneration than those who handled it at the elevators and expedited its passage to world markets.

It is said there is nothing altogether new and that if one examines the background of any situation one will find in the past a parallel to what is occurring in the present. So I took the opportunity to do some research. I go back to the Liberal administration led by Alexander Mackenzie in 1877. The Governor-General, Lord Dufferin, said at that time in a speech at the City Hall in Winnipeg, on September 29:

> You have been blessed with an abundant harvest, and soon I trust will a railway come to carry to those who need it the surplus of your produce, now—as my own eyes have witnesses—imprisoned in your storehouses for want of the means of transport.

Well, today we find that a vast amount of Canada's grain reserves are still imprisoned in a storehouse, or, more precisely, in the great grain terminals on the west coast and there is no way because of a strike or lock-out, in which we can transport them to our customers and to the hungry people of the world. This is a deplorable situation and it seems to me that implicit in this situation is the government's failure to demonstrate any degree of statesmanship. For if statesmanship had been shown, the present situation would never have developed.

I suggest there is a natural alliance between the prairie farmers, who do such a fine job of growing our wheat, and the people on the west coast, who do such a fine job handling it, and that there is a great deal of room for the benefits of productivity to be brought into effect as was stated by my hon. friend, the Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the minister of agriculture in the regime of my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), in his excellent speech this afternoon. It is unfortunate that in recent years no one on the government side has made any attempt to bring these two groups of people together for the benefit of themselves and of the nation.

The transportation system necessary to the movement of these vast quantities of wheat has become obsolescent; the collection system on the prairies has become obsolescent. Now we see that labour-management relations between the two groups have also become absolescent. It is clear that in this country, one of the greatest wheat and grain producers in the world, we can no longer deliver our harvest to customers abroad because the government cannot give leadership or devise a formula for setting up a proper climate for industrial relations.

That sincere people like the grain handlers in Vancouver, management and the owners—presidents, if you will—of the terminals, who reside on the prairies, cannot come together for the common good of all is one of the biggest tragedies of the whole affair, at least to me as a member who has not been too close to the situation but who has the benefit of looking at the situation without any preconceived ideas.

I should like to say something about the transportation aspects of the matter. Only a few months ago eastern Canadian agriculture was jeopardized by the lack of transportation facilities to move feed grains to this particular part of the country. The mismanagement of the transportation system of the country has had the end result of placing an increased burden on consumers in the form of higher prices. For example, let me look at the feed grain supplies in eastern Canada.

We forget, perhaps within the confines of this debate, that there was an equally serious labour dispute involving the Great Lakes terminals, which in turn had a direct effect not only in that particular region of the country but in the extreme eastern region of Canada as well. Roger Perrault, chairman of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, expects difficulties. This is what he said in a recent news release:

> The system will have to operate smoothly from now to the end of the Great Lakes navigation season to get enough domestic feed grain into position for normal movement during the winter months. Otherwise, eastern Canadian farmers may have to pay the extra cost for moving more grain than usual by rail and there could be shortages of some grains in certain areas if there are further delays and interruptions in the movement... Since feed grains are a major component in the production of milk, poultry, eggs and meat, consumers should not expect lower price tags on these food items in the year ahead.

Difficulties in labour-management relations not only had serious repercussions on our international sales—and these difficulties were very adequately dealt with by the members who have spoken here today. Our country not only lost credibility as a reputable supplier of this vitally needed commodity, grain; our internal economy has also been seriously affected. This makes it all the more important that something be done by the government along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, and hinted at by the Minister of National Revenue. What we need is something constructive, statesmanlike if you will, that finally will allow labour and management to participate jointly in finding what I refer to as some sort of industrial democratic solution.

It is obvious that not all industries offer the same opportunities for productivity that will lower the cost of settlements relative to inflation, as is the case with the present grain handlers' strike. Some industries have a greater labour content and are more marginal. But surely here in grain handling there is the type of situation where there is a real and obvious gain to be made by invoking productivity, perhaps marrying to some extent COLA and productivity, in an attempt to come to some sort of innovative solution. Surely there must be some greater initiative to be shown than is shown by this bill we are discussing tonight.

This bill, while necessary in the present context to break the logjam, or perhaps I should say the wheat jam, and get this commodity flowing again, does nothing else. It illustrates by its content that there is nothing, shall I say, contemplated of an imaginative nature to settle any future difficulties. The provision in clause 7 for appointing a referee is, as far as I am concerned, a sort of built-in admission of the fact that there will undoubtedly be difficulties in interpreting this clause, which as I recall embodies the fringe benefits that are set out in the Perry report, a report that was treated, or mistreated as if he were cast as an arbitrator.

If this bill offered any sort of innovative approach or promised some particular solution to this unfortunate situation, then I would have no trouble supporting it. But all it is in fact is some sort of self-destruct mechanism. What is going to happen is that these kinds of large settlements will inevitably be reflected in the economy.

The Canadian Manufacturers Association, for example, are this evening registering great concern about what is going to happen to negotiations in the private sector as a result of this legislation. The very magnitude of some of these settlements that parties are driven to, because of the government's failure to bring forward some sort of general inflation policy, will only help increase the inflationary spiral and thus erode the very gains workers have achieved, leaving everyone worse off, particularly those who are not unionized and who have not been able to protect themselves by getting similar types of large settlements. So what we have is nothing more nor less than a vicious circle, and the situation is exacerbated by the difficulties that a country our size is having with its transportation system.

Pretty soon, both on the Great Lakes and on the west coast, longshoremen will be out on strike unless there is some greater ingenuity shown than has been shown in the dealings with the grain handlers. Then it will be the turn of the railway workers. Although I sincerly hope this will not be the case, there could be difficulties with the postal workers. Indeed, there could be difficulties with the whole broad spectrum of the Canadian work force. Yet all we can do tonight in parliament is to bring in a bill which to a certain extent is dictatorial and coercive. It does not even have the virtue of giving the parties at least something of what they wanted leaving the rest to be decided by continuing negotiations.

It has been suggested that if the wage demands were split, and the union given $1.30 or $1.40 increase, which is something in the vicinity of what its members were asking originally, and another arbitrator were appointed to negotiate some of the fringe benefits, then we as parliamentarians at least would not be acting dictatorially and telling these people what is fair. Certainly I do not know what is fair, and I suggest that many of my colleagues in this House do not know what is fair either.

We are sitting here as the highest court in the land purporting to deal with something that is vital to the lives and livelihoods of workers, something that is going to affect the industrial management-labour complex of this country. Yet we do not have the necessary expertise collectively to make this judgment. This is a task for people with greater background experience than many of us in this House have, though perhaps there are some who do have this experience. That is why I object to this particular procedure used by the government, and why I cannot support this particular bill.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time during my short experience in this House that parliament has been called upon to legislate men back to work. I find that a disagreeable duty, as do my colleagues in this House. It is also disagreeable to see the kind of political manoeuvring that is taking place here in order to gain points, to gain advantage over the plight of the working people of this country.

When this House legislated workers in our railway system back to work the members of the Conservative party were quite eager, as were the members of the Liberal party, to offer a wage settlement that was far below what a conciliation officer recommended. Today we find a variation on that theme. Today we find a conciliator who has recommended a wage settlement still below what the workers wanted, but to which the companies have violently objected.

● (2110)

We heard the Conservative member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), and others, come out very strongly on the side of the companies, using the argument that the whole system is inflationary and that the workers were not bargaining in good faith. It is very disturbing to me to see that kind of politicking going on rather than an examination of the issue on its merits.

Let me review for the consideration of this House why we find ourselves in this situation today. This cannot be expressed better than it was by Mr. Perry in his letter to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) on April 22, 1974 as follows:

> As it has now become clear to me that the differences in expectations between the contracting parties—arising from a series of accumulated past issues as well as the special, inflationary circumstances of 1974—remain too wide to be resolved through further conciliatory efforts, I am, therefore, submitting for your consideration some suggestions which, hopefully, might form a basis upon which the two parties could, ultimately, enter into a two-year agreement.

If we stop playing political games and are honest with ourselves in wanting to get the wheat moving again, and to do something just for the workers in the elevators in Vancouver, we should start by asking ourselves why these negotiations broke down. I submit that the blame for the breakdown in these negotiations lies primarily with the companies, and I should like to outline why I say that.

For collective bargaining to work there must be an understanding and a willingness on both sides that there be a settlement at some point in time. Each side is going to argue very vigorously for its cause, but there has to be that fundamental willingness to settle. I do not see that willingness when I look at the history of these negotiations. What I see is the grain handlers' union being frustrated, not only by the circumstances under which the men work but by the attitude of the companies, to the point that they have been forced finally to take strike action.

First of all, what are the components of this frustration? If we examine the working conditions in those elevators in Vancouver we discover low morale among the working men. There is a problem with excessive dust. The companies have installed machinery to extract the dust, but it is not working properly. Much of the dust remains in the elevators, with the result that the men work under very unhealthy conditions.

We also find a shortage of the facilities one would take for granted in any enlightened area of employment, such as a shortage of showers, toilets and lunchroom facilities. The companies are using damping chemicals which have proven to be a hazard to health because of their nature and the lack of exhaust venting facilities. We also find many documented examples of unsafe working conditions in these elevators. In addition, there is evidence of inefficient management and inefficient operation in the companies' attempt to automate the elevators.

We have here a group of workers who are cognizant of the responsibility to move grain, working under conditions which have continuously deteriorated, but which they have brought to the attention of management. They have seen their suggested improvements continuously rejected. When we consider the companies' attitude toward working conditions we see a lack of care and understanding. More important, when we look at the attitude of the companies toward negotiations it becomes evident that they have been using obstructionist tactics.

There have been four occasions during the last 14 years when negotiations between the elevator workers and the companies have gone the route of conciliation. On four occasions the conciliation reports have been accepted by the union but rejected by the companies. This must be borne in mind before we place the blame on one side or the other too quickly.

Let us look at the history of negotiation and decide who have been the obstructionists. I maintain it has been the companies. During the present dispute the companies terminated welfare and other benefits which had already been established and included in past contracts. Obviously there is not just a dispute in respect of wages, because the welfare and fringe benefits that had been established under previous contracts were suspended. That can only be interpreted by the working person to be harassment and obstruction.

There have been constructive attempts by the negotiators for the unions to put their position to the ultimate owners of the co-operatives, namely, the farmers. This includes the suggestion to management that there should be a farmer representative, as an observer only, at the negotiating table. These suggestions have been rejected out of hand by the companies.

The employers on this occasion asked for conciliation when the report was brought in. Once again the companies rejected this. The companies have refused to accept Mr. Perry's report even though they knew full well, as a result of statements by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), that parliament would eventually legislate the report into law. What kind of an attitude is that? I suggest it is an attitude of obstruction and nothing else.

I wonder whether the companies would have been so willing to continue this delay by not accepting the conciliation report if they had been shipping flax and rapeseed through these elevators rather than wheat, particularly in view of the fact that the companies have to pay demurrage charges in respect of flax and rapeseed whereas the Canadian Wheat Board has to pay the demurrage charge on wheat?

When one looks at the attitude of these grain companies it becomes very evident who is responsible for the breakdown in the collective bargaining in this situation. I have on my desk some very glossy publications by the grain companies regarding the cost of this wage settlement. I might say that there has been a great campaign carried on in the newspapers, as well as on television and radio. Let us examine the situation to see whether the cost of this settlement is as inflationary as the companies maintain.

First of all, the companies have claimed that the cost will be $3.03 an hour above the present base rate of $4.96 an hour, inclusive of pensions, cost of living and wage benefits. They have claimed that the increase would be 61 per cent. That was their original claim, and this resulted in headlines to the effect that the settlement would be extraordinarily inflationary. We now know that the same companies, having done some further calculations suggested to them by their officials, have revised this increase from 61 per cent to 48 per cent. The unions have also bandied some figures around. They claimed that the total cost would be $2.20 an hour, or an increase of 44 per cent.

Even if you take the company figure, or the union figure, and work out the actual cost of this wage settlement per bushel of wheat, the range is somewhere between three quarters of one cent and one cent per bushel. Is that supposed to be inflationary?

If we look at the Perry report and the whole problem that was exposed in it of the inefficiency of handling grain in those elevators, it would seem to me that that one cent per bushel could easily be made up by the union and management sitting down together and working out a more efficient way of handling the grain. They have tried some automation but it has worked very badly because of poor installation and management. If the two sides, in the interests of the Canadian public, got together and worked out a more efficient handling of that grain, this increase could be absorbed in increased sales and exports; it would not be inflationary.

If we consider the Perry report, the wage factor alone amounts to a 15 per cent increase a year. What do you expect the working man in Canada in whatever area or whatever union to settle for when the cost of living alone in this past year has risen by 11 per cent? Is a 15 per cent wage increase in those circumstances inflationary? He is running just to stand still.

What is so galling to these men working in the elevators and on the docks is the fact that they are working side by side with longshoremen who, in many cases, are doing similar work and being paid more. If that is not a frustrating experience, I do not know what is. How many of us here in this House would be willing to accept a differential in pay because of our kind of job or the number of hours we are working? It should be similar pay for similar work.

Let us look at the difference between the longshoremen and the grainhandlers. The basic wage rate for the grain workers is now $4.96 an hour. Under the Perry report, in the first year that would rise to $5.83 an hour. What are the longshoremen getting who are working beside these grain handlers? They are getting $6.08 an hour. May I remind this House that at the end of November the longshoremen's contract comes up for renegotiation, and again they will be seeking a higher settlement. So here you have grain workers today getting paid $4.96 an hour while longshoremen working beside them receive $6.08 an hour. That is obviously unjust and discriminatory.

The pension plan is also, for those who care to look at it, very different between the two groups. The recommendation in the Perry report is that the employer contribute 25 cents an hour for the pension of the grain handler. Already the longshoremen receive a contribution from their employer of 53 cents an hour. If you look at the overtime rate between the two groups, again you see vast discrimination and vast differences between double time and time and a half.

What these men are asking seems to me very fair—comparable pay for comparable work. It seems to me then that these men have a just case. Their arguments make sense and it is the duty of the House to pass this legislation quickly, not only so that they can at least get a just settlement but so that the grain can begin to move in this country and the economy get back on the right track. I cannot for the life of me understand the attitude of my colleagues in the Conservative party who will vote against the bill and at the same time want a prolonged debate all night on it. They want the standing committee to call various witnesses before it to prolong the situation, the settlement of which they demanded all summer.

These men are playing politics, and the government is playing politics in delaying the settlement of this issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Symes: They are not serious about settling the problem and giving justice to the workers of this country. Instead they want to win political points. It is time this bill was sent to committee and passed as soon as possible so that the workers can begin to catch up and get a just settlement, and the grain can start moving.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of regret that I rise to speak in this debate. I think that most members of the House were hoping that the whole situation would have been solved some time ago. Then it was indicated this afternoon, and also this evening, that if it had not been for the government, mainly the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) but also the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang), we would have had a settlement by now and we would not have to spend time dealing with this matter in the House.

We have spoken much this afternoon and this evening about the various aspects of the strike, but as yet we have not really referred to the cost of that strike to the people whom it will affect. The first ones whom it will affect are the western Canadian farmers, although it goes without saying that this strike will have repercussions right across our whole economy.

Mention has been made about the kind of demurrage charge that the Wheat Board will have to pay. Ultimately, if the Canadian Wheat Board has to pay, it comes out of the final payment alloted to farmers. Let me quote from an editorial in the Vancouver Sun of August 19 in which it is stated that, according to reliable reports from the Canadian Wheat Board, the cost could range anywhere from $10 million to $15 million, a record demurrage charge this year.

It goes on to say:

> The largest demurrage in the past amounted to $2.4 million for the crop year 1972-73.

The article goes on to say that we have agents for various boat companies that were chartered to haul Canadian grain. One ship is called Aquafaith. The article says:

> Agents for the Aquafaith, which arrived in port on July 5—and was on demurrage for 36 days before she was fully loaded for China, say demurrage will come to $240,000. Demurrage on the Aquaglory, which arrived July 9, amounts to $200,000, they say.

The Kinko Maru waited 24 days and cost the Wheat Board $144,000 before she finally departed on Friday.

This money will come directly out of the farmers' pockets in the end, and anybody who says that this strike will not be costly first and foremost to the Canadian farmers is not telling the whole truth.

A second important consideration is the loss of world reputation which Canada will suffer. This has certainly been noted before by various people. I think there is no doubt that we are talking of a situation in which, at present, there are four countries out of 151 that export grain to the rest of the world. Canada is one of those four countries, the others being Argentina, Australia and the United States. Along with the loss in world reputation we have a moral obligation to move grain to feed the world at a time in which famine and starvation are becoming widespread.

The previous speaker alluded to the fact that the only crop that was moved out of Vancouver on which we certainly lost was wheat. That is not true. We have loss of other sales—not necessarily deferred sales, but actual loss of sales.

● (2130)

I have before me a copy of the "Rapeseed Digest" dated October, 1974 which is published by the Rapeseed Association of Canada every month. In it appears the statement:

Canada's new parliament met on September 30, but even if the labour problems are given a high priority on the calendar of the House of Commons, it appears doubtful that work will be resumed before mid-October. In the meantime, European suppliers of rapeseed have cut deeply into the market in Japan, with sales reported to total 175,000 metric tons, the equivalent of 7.7 million bushels, all for shipment before the end of 1974.

This loss of market will not be recovered by Canada in the 1974-75 crop year.

These are just some of the ramifications of the situation, in addition to what has been said earlier this evening, Mr. Speaker.

Personally I feel that the interference of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) in this situation is unforgiveable. When we were in Vancouver we were told that if the government had not stepped in there might have been a chance to settle the strike if the two parties could have got down to meaningful bargaining.

The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) also has to bear some of the blame. On the one hand he is acting in the interests of the farmers, although on this particular issue I think he sold western Canadian farmers down the drain by condoning what was done by the Minister of Labour. It seems apparent he only works for the farmers when it is politically advantageous to do so. That situation cannot continue, Mr. Speaker.

This strike is unique in that it raises the question of parity with longshoremen. I have here a copy of a telegram sent by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the President of the United Grain Growers on August 14. The telegram says in part:

Without accepting your figures, we would agree that the settlement is costly. However, your representations and those made previously on your behalf by your senior management, fail to take into account the unique aspects of this situation. You must have been informed by your labour relations advisers of the issue of parity with longshoremen performing similar tasks to members of local 333 on the same waterfront. This factor must have been one which influenced the content of the conciliation commissioner's report. Moreover, this factor, which is unique to this particular dispute, means that the settlement proposed by Dr. Perry should not set a precedent for other wage settlements in other sectors of the economy.

In the area of parity a valid question would be why the companies should be forced, by a report which was admitted to be inconclusive, to accept parity for two such separate groups as grain handlers and longshoremen? It is commonly accepted all over the world that they do different work and have different working conditions. Longshoremen really do not have an assurance of steady employment.

It is remarkable that the government only saw fit to offer the Vancouver grain inspectors of the Canadian Grain Commission, who work side by side with grain handlers, a 6 per cent wage increase over 18 months and a 5.5 per cent increase over the following 12 months. No wonder Mr. C. W. Lewis, chairman of the bargaining committee of Local 60, asked Mr. Trudeau on August 22 that the basic wage of grain inspectors be "at least parity with all Vancouver grain workers". This justifies the stand that the Perry report is just a springboard for increased inflation across the country. It certainly shoots down the argument that this is a unique and special kind of settlement. I believe the Minister of Labour has said that publicly before.

The Perry report is being resisted for one real reason. As I understand it, the companies wanted to have the Perry report discussed in parliament because they wanted the government to put its money where its mouth is.

The government admits that inflation is the number one problem, and approves of a settlement which will award an additional $3.03 an hour to 550 grain handlers. You can call it a 61 per cent increase over two years if you are comparing it with the basic wage of $4.96, or you can call it a 52 per cent increase if you are comparing the $3.03 increase in wages, cost of living, pensions and fringe benefits, with the former package.

Regardless of the percentages, a 50 per cent increase, with no increase in productivity in terms of goods and services, if applied to everyone in this country, simply drops our dollar value by one third in two years. I believe this settlement will be an inflationary signal to all labour, organized and unorganized—every one. Any time you discuss an inflationary settlement in a fishbowl as this one has certainly been, it becomes a very real target to everyone else. It is not surprising in view of the publicity that has been given to the settlement because of the intervention by the government, that an emotional impact is felt all across the country when discussing the Perry report and its ramifications. In the long run this may have great impetus and fuel the fires of inflation in the next year, or year and a half.

We have a precedent that has been cited already. Only eight years ago Prime Minister Pearson sanctioned that famous 30 per cent seaway employees' award. At that time it was not considered inflationary but it did serve as a goal for everyone else, and inflation took off.

We have talked a lot tonight about the effects on different people in this country. I think first and foremost it is the farmers who feel the effects. It would be interesting to hear what three or four of them have said about the strike, the grain companies' demands and the government's response to holding the line in the strike. I have a letter here from a farmer in Fincastle, Alberta who says:

> We are inflating our money so rapidly that it is threatening the stability of our money. If we have any part to play in setting a base of inflation of 61 per cent over two years, it will mean we helped to destroy all confidence in our money and we all know what that means to all of our society.

I received other letters over the past few weeks. A farmer from Kelvington-Nut Mountain, Saskatchewan writes:

> If the grain handlers get this increase the farmers will be paying it in the final end. Along with all other labour forces increases. Is Mr. Trudeau then going to give us a 61 per cent subsidy on grain? It is high time that the government faced this inflation issue and did something constructive about it, instead of by fuelling it.

There are many more letters to the same effect and I suppose all members of the House are getting them. These farmers are very very concerned, as are all segments of society, over what is happening to the economy and the way inflation is going.

It may well be asked why grain farmers feel this way when they are earning the highest income in their history. Without being disrespectful to those in other occupations, I think farmers are probably more sensitive than others to inflation, because they have tightened their belts many times during the past 25 or 30 years. Grain farmers are sensitive to the costs of those items they must buy in order to grow a bushel of grain. Land is less of a factor in costs today.

● (2140)

Did you ever think how the farmer is hit by inflation? He has to buy his fertilizer, other chemicals and machinery. When the prices of those go up, his grain becomes more expensive to grow; yet grain prices do not necessarily go up by an amount equal to his increased cost, because he is competing on the world market. Actually there is some indication that grain prices will come down in the next year or 18 months. Costs of production are a most important factor for farmers today, because they face what may be the severest cost-price squeeze in history.

What will happen after the strike is settled at Vancouver? I hope it is settled as quickly as possible. We want to see grain moving from the port again. As I say, what will happen after the strike is settled?

Mr. Benjamin: That shouldn't be too hard to figure out. Look into your crystal ball.

Mr. Murta: My crystal ball tells me that productivity in the port of Vancouver will be low. I say that because labour-management relations, poor as they were previously, had degenerated even more this past summer.

When the Conservative caucus committee went to Vancouver it was impressed with the attitude of the union which talked of modernizing rail traffic to the port and of modernizing port operations. The union wanted to be involved in the work being done. Unless the two sides can come together after the strike is settled and improve relationships, the future looks bleak. If the two sides do not come together, if labour-management strife in Vancouver continues, our exports of wheat which have been steadily dropping during the past few years will decline even more. Our percentage of sales on the world market will be even smaller that it is now. For the good of the entire economy, productivity at Vancouver must be raised. This is a must.

We must also encourage the heads of the grain companies and of the unions to get together and find meaningful ground for discussion of common problems, because there are common problems. Unless we do that, the future looks bleak. If we do that then there will be a future for the continuing movement of grain through the port of Vancouver.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I hoped that we could refer this bill to committee this evening, but it seems that that is not possible. I regret that. The Wheat Board has tried to plan on the basis that parliament will move quickly. It wanted to act, but now it will face some awkwardness in its planning. The board hoped that parliament would be able to deal with the matter today, and calculated accordingly.

Some of my colleagues are puzzled by the opposition of the Conservatives to this bill. They want to know the explanation for their opposition. I have been puzzled by it myself. Then it occurred to me that it is perfectly natural, because in the grain companies which do not like the settlement and which they presumably support, they have found another set of allies who have decided to campaign against inflation on the backs of the workers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The minister is really grovelling.

Mr. Lang: I do not begrudge members opposite their last twinge. I just wish that this bill could go to committee and be returned to the House so that grain could move again.

Earlier today I was interested to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), who made some nasty comments about me.

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. Lang: Let me say that I am happy to note that a few members who said nasty things about me in the previous parliament and who came from Saskatchewan are not here to join their colleague. I was interested to listen to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, because he was speaking in his last term as Member of Parliament. We have a short list and he is at the top.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Hon. members have talked about the problem we faced in this country as we watched the process of labour negotiations come down to the wire, so to speak. We took note of the final phases of negotiation and of the conciliation report.

That report was made after the parties had failed to reach agreement. It was issued in a case in which, as even the most unbiased observer would agree, there had been a bad history of labour-management relations. If I may say so, as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) was too diplomatic to say himself, the history of bad labour-management relations has arisen largely because of the way in which the companies had negotiated over many years in the past.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) said that when he was in Vancouver somebody told him if we had stayed away from the matter a little longer it would soon have been settled. I ask, who told him that? No doubt a representative of a company told him. In view of the bad history of labour-management relations, we saw the possibility of a strike. Of course, the conciliation report, drawn up in those circumstances, is bound to be an important factor in any future settlement.

We took action under the Canada Labour Code, action which was provided for only three or four years ago. This allowed us, because we were in the middle of an election campaign and therefore in no position to deal with the strike, to postpone the period in which a strike or walk out might occur legally until one month after the writs for return were in.

The interesting thing to note is this: although one can go through the process of postponing the legal time in which a walk out or strike can occur, one cannot with that process make workmen work, or make employers maintain them on the job. Even when there was no talk of a walk out or strike, the port of Vancouver, in May, and for three or four months previously, had been working at about half speed. While some may blame the present situation on the dissatisfaction of the men because of their relationship with the companies, or on the attitude of the companies, the fact is that unless you maintain an atmosphere of goodwill you will not keep a business working. You will not keep it going simply by declaring that something is illegal and not to be done.

It is the goodwill of the situation that is important. We saw this situation and we saw that the port would likely be closed even if we had, as we did, exercised the power under the Canada Labour Code to postpone the date for a legal strike or shutdown. We thought it was important to indicate to the men and the companies, whom we believed would be interested in maintaining the port open, that if in the end they did not reach a settlement, which we hoped they would continue to reach for, we saw the inevitability of what Dr. Perry had recommended in his report as the basis for final settlement.

That led us to think we should have the port working all out full time. As the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) stated, we regret that that did not happen. Even in the period before August 23 the port was partly idle and demurrage charges totalling $3 million piled up during that time.

What amazed me is that in these circumstances the companies refused to sit down and negotiate with the Perry report as the basis. They chose to go about the country, at least the farming community, taking from the Perry report every possible ambiguity, or even less than ambiguity, and twisting it to the extreme possible against their interest in order to come up with this figure of 61 per cent. I repeat they had to twist it against their interest.

I said earlier they seemed to be trying in that way to coast in on some of the talk about inflation that was going on in the country at that time. Everyone recognizes now that that figure is ridiculous in relation to the Perry report. The figure is in fact significantly below that.

We talk about percentages. We, especially those in this place, should appreciate that without examining the base and the circumstances, as Dr. Perry has done, percentages are meaningless. If the farmers have had a rapid increase in percentage terms in the amount they get for wheat or barley, until they get to the point where they are finally getting what they deserve, is there any point in talking about a 100 per cent increase from $1.70 to $3.40? Of course not. You have to look at the realistic situation around you in order to judge. That is where we stand today. We stand here with a good deal of talk about the losses that have been suffered in this strike.

There have been significant losses to the farmer. We have said this from the beginning. I mentioned the $3 million in demurrage charges. This is probably related to the months of slowdown. Let me say at once that relating demurrage to a specific cost is very complicated. Therefore, it will never be satisfactorily or finally settled.

I am simply relying on the best estimates the wheat board can give me. It still concludes today that another $7 million, in addition to that $3 million, may be associated with the actual close-down of the port. That means a total loss to the farmers, mainly through the Canadian Wheat Board but also in connection with the other grains, of $10 million.

There have been some rather broad and sweeping statements about the losses. There have been statements about losses of goodwill. I regret the difficulty we cause our good customers by not being able to deliver when they expect grain from us. However, let me say that this year we happen to be extremely fortunate in that we have such a sellers' market. We may have time to build the goodwill. It may be very difficult to put a specific figure on losses.

We are also told about lost sales. As we sit here at this point in time, I think that can be discounted. We have seen the example of the demand, unfulfilled, from the Soviet Union. We can see the kind of demand there is throughout the world. It will allow us to move as great an amount of grain as we can, notwithstanding the close-down. That was not necessarily foreseen. No one could have predicted that in April or May. However, we can now say that that is how it will be.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) put another figure down for this lost sale, although it seems to be for the same grain we did not sell when we had the railway strike, or when we had the snow and ice a few years previously. He keeps managing to recycle that unsold grain. I intend to put a little pile in front of him some day and say, "There is the grain you talk about that we did not sell all this time." It is our good fortune that that is probably not a real cost. But we are left with the $10 million, still a significant figure any way you look at it.

Once the government had taken the position it did, why did the companies allow this strike to happen? I can understand them waiting before July 8 because they may have hoped something different would happen and they would be faced with a new ballgame. However, in the month following that, they really had no reason at all.

I would like to observe that among the losers in this strike are the men who have lost their time and wages, and the farmers who have lost through the significant demurrage charges. However, the losers do not necessarily include the grain companies. This year they will likely move every bushel they would have moved in terms of throughput with or without this strike. They will likely store more grain because it will be there a little longer than it would have been without the strike. They will not be the losers.

My hope in urging them to settle was based on the fact that the most significant among them are in fact farmer-owned. I thought they should have been sujected to the fact that the losses to the farmers would be significant and should be counted in their calculations. That was not to be. Therefore, we are here this evening with this legislation, legislation in practical terms, inevitable in its terms once the independent conciliator had brought down his report. I therefore say to hon. members at this late hour, one minute before 10 o'clock, let this bill have second reading now, go to committee, and let's get on with the work without further partisanship.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek rising to begin to speak?

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you understand it is the intention to proceed with this debate tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: On that same point, I might inform hon. members that with the continuation of this business before the House, the House will meet at two o'clock in the afternoon.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES TO EXPAND PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to bring the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) back into the House at this late hour.

Mr. Danson: I haven't left yet.

Mr. Marshall: I especially regret it because I know how hard he is working to bring more housing to Newfoundland. On October 1 I asked the minister about the progress being made to implement various programs under the National Housing Act, particularly insofar as they refer to the Neighbourhood Improvement Program, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program and the rural and native housing program. While I appreciate the reply he gave, the urgency of the situation dictates further clarification.

● (2200)

The situation is not only urgent, it is desperate. I requested an adjournment debate, Mr. Speaker, because it is impossible to elaborate on a question in the House in the time allotted to us. Incidentally this should be the subject of consideration when we are talking about reforms in the House of Commons, to which reference was made in the Speech from the Throne.

Since the announcement of the aforementioned programs I have been a strong advocate of them but was naive enough to think they would come into effect within a reasonable period of time. However, all I have experienced is frustration in dealing with the various elements which fall within the minister's responsibility, and I continue to receive answers which do nothing more than emphasize the need for rethinking our priorities.

The RRAP program, for example, provides loans for citizens in the low income brackets. Those whose income is $6,000 or below can qualify for a loan of up to $5,000 with 50 per cent being forgiven. This is fine. It is exemplary, it is wonderful, and I give the government full marks for its introduction. But after 15 months virtually nothing has been produced.

I am sure the minister will tell us once again that the consultative process is going on to speed up its implementation. Nevertheless, here we are, some 15 months after the amendments to the National Housing Act were introduced, and little or nothing has been accomplished. A member who troubles to make inquiries receives only the usual excuses in letters such as the following which I received from the President of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In a letter dated September 17, 1974, Mr. William Teron stated:

> Thank you for your letter of August 23 concerning Neighbourhood Improvement and Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Programs.
> As you are no doubt aware, RRAP is to be delivered in two separate approaches; one in the urban context linked with NIP and the other as an element of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's Rural and Native Housing Program. Under the 1974 NIP agreement between the federal government and the Province of Newfoundland, $1.34 million is provided for activity under this program. Of this total, $639,000 was approved last June for Corner Brook and we anticipate the remainder will be allocated very shortly for St. John's. In both instances, the funds will be used to complete projects financed under the old urban renewal provisions of the National Housing Act. In all likelihood, the delays to which you referred were engendered by the necessity of identifying and recasting older proposals so that they could meet NIP and RRAP objectives.

He went on to say that he shared my concern. That is what we hear all the time. They share your concern, but nothing happens. I shall not go into details of further complaints. All I wish to do is help the minister by placing before him a number of suggestions.

Since we are in a period of oil crisis I maintain that a great contribution could be directed toward helping those living on low and fixed incomes in many thousands of homes across Canada by immediately implementing standards across Canada to include, as a priority, the immediate insulation of homes which are substandard in quality, thereby reducing the wastage of home heating fuels.

Similarly, in the Province of Newfoundland it is necessary that the province increase the fuel allowance during the colder months of the year due to the fact that it is impossible for those receiving social assistance to cope with fuel costs. The federal government has to pay 50 per cent of this cost.

Home-owners living on welfare cannot possibly maintain their homes properly at a time when the cost of building materials is so high. I can only say that not only would both levels of government save millions of dollars in housing repairs; they would also save millions of gallons of heating fuel now being wasted.

The answer is not only to treat this RRAP program on a priority basis but to direct meaningful action, initiated by the minister, and demand that the $10 million now allocated be increased to a realistic figure. In addition, the necessary steps must be taken to expand this very worthwhile program as an emergency measure and thereby contribute toward relieving a critical area of shortage in Canada. Lastly, we should specifically provide a stop gap to the need for new housing, a need that is difficult to cope with under present circumstances.

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the interesting suggestions put forward by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). He suggested there have been undue delays in implementing both NIP and RRAP. We have made tremendous headway in bringing these new programs into operation. First of all, in the case of NIP, the neighbourhood improvement program, we have signed the necessary agreements with nine of the ten provinces so far and expect to sign the tenth agreement very soon. Under these agreements we are allocating more than $40 million to the provinces for this program.

The provinces have since selected the municipalities, and a total of 64 municipalities are proceeding with neighbourhood improvement programs. Altogether these municipalities have now selected 33 neighbourhoods, and the people who reside in these neighbourhoods are actively engaged in determining the needs of the neighbourhoods for assistance under the legislation. I think we can be proud of these achievements, and I am delighted with the support that we have had from the provinces and municipalities. Indeed, the hon. member himself supported my predecessor in many of these programs. As we move into 1975 I am sure this program will begin to show very positive results.

We must not overlook that it was this House that passed the legislation that required municipalities to adopt bylaws of minimum maintenance and occupancy standards. All the municipalities participating in the program have enacted these bylaws and this in itself is a most important achievement. I think the hon. member would agree, since I know he expressed concern about this when the legislation went through the House.

Turning next to implementation, the legislation prescribes that grants and loans for the rehabilitation of substandard property can be made available in NIP areas. Now that we have 33 areas designated under the NIP program it is possible for CMHC to apply the benefits of RRAP—the residential rehabilitation assistance program—and I am very happy to be able to inform the House that rehabilitation loans and grants have been made in 15 municipalities, and that many more municipalities will shortly benefit from this program.

I am the new Minister of Urban Affairs, as all hon. members know, and it would be inappropriate for me to take any credit that more properly belongs to my predecessor, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford), as well as to the provinces and municipalities which have so wholeheartedly co-operated with us in these programs. It is a co-operative effort right down the line.

It has been suggested that the rural and native housing program announced earlier this year by the federal government has been slow in getting started.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

SOCIAL SECURITY—SUGGESTED INCREASES IN FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND OLD AGE PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, October 2, as recorded in Hansard at page 34, I put this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde):

In view of the recommendation made to the government a few days ago by the Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board to the effect that because of drastic increases in the cost of food there should be immediate increases in family allowances and in old age security, is the government giving consideration to this recommendation?

The reply of the minister was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is surely aware that old age security pensions will be raised during October and that family allowances will also be increased as of next January 1, so as to compensate for the rise in the cost of living.

● (2210)

I came back with a supplementary question which was in fact an attempt on my part to say to the minister that he should have known better than to try to get away with that answer. What I was drawing to the attention of the government was the need for something more than quarterly escalation so far as old age security is concerned, and the need for something more than annual escalation so far as family allowances are concerned.

Indeed, had I time I could use a number of quotations to cite as my chief witness the Minister of National Health and Welfare himself. I shall limit myself to two or three things he said when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on Tuesday, March 13, 1973.

At page 1:12 of the report for that day there is an indication of a discussion about the escalation of old age security. The request was being made by Liberal members that the then annual escalation be put on a quarterly basis, and this was the reply of the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

> Of course it would be possible to have it twice a year. Theoretically it would even be possible to have it every three months. But every time you do that you increase your cost of administration; we have calculated that it would add about $2 million to the cost. And the money that you add to the cost of administration would not go to the senior citizens. So my inclination at the present time is to try to increase more often the total amount of benefits, including escalation, rather than load the system with more frequent escalation—

Over at page 1:22 of the same day's record the minister is reported as having said:

> My point is that one way for Parliament to compensate for this unavoidable lag is to change the basic amount, every once in a while, as has been done at different times, and people catch up then—more than catch up—on what they might have lost in terms of the delays in the escalation. That is what I meant.

That was the point I was trying to make to the Minister of National Health and Welfare the other day. Escalation on the basis of the consumer price index, in which there is always a lag, never enables pensioners or recipients of family allowances to catch up with the cost of living, let alone with any rise in the standard of living.

The minister has enunciated the proposition that every once in a while there has to be an increase in the basic amount. I believe that is what Mrs. Plumptre was calling for, and that is what I am calling for now. I insist that the time has come for the government to quit relying on the quarterly escalation answer every time the plight of pensioners is raised. The time has come for an increase in the basic amount. On this first occasion of a late show in this session I want to establish this point and make it clear that this is a point I shall keep pressing until we win it.

I appreciate the fact that the minister is not able to be here tonight to answer my question, but he is well represented by a new member in the person of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), who comes into this House as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and will shortly be making her maiden speech. For once that phrase seems to apply, does it not?

I welcome the hon. lady particularly because she comes as the representative of a constituency that includes the area of Barrington Township, into which my ancestors moved over 200 years ago. I still regard that area as my ancestral home. I am very partial to that part of Nova Scotia and I know the kind of people the hon. lady represents.

I hope that in her initial statement tonight she will recognize the point that I am trying to make and that she will speak for her pensioners as others of us are trying to speak for the pensioners across Canada when we say that although we have welcomed quarterly escalation, if that is all we get we might as well not have secured it. What is necessary now is an increase in the basic amount of old age security and an increase in the basic amount of family allowances, and I hope that the hon. lady will be able to tell us tonight that this basic problem is under consideration.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): May I first congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment and wish you success in the future. I must confess that I feel a certain honour that, not only as a new parliamentary secretary but also a new member of parliament, I have the pleasure of replying for the first time to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), a member whose skill as a great parliamentarian is well known.

However, to get down to the specifics of the hon. member's question, since he is referring to the recommendation of the Food Prices Review Board I would draw his attention to the following quotation from page 2 of the report of the board, which reads as follows:

> In the first half of 1974, after tax income in Canada rose rapidly over the corresponding level in 1973. With the exception of farm income, the main components of personal income have displayed more rapid rates of increase this year than in either of the two previous years. Transfer payments from government, reflecting particularly the substantial boost in family allowances, have played an important role in the increases in personal income this year although gains in labour income and in unincorporated business income have been building up as well.

Although I need not remind the hon. member of certain facts, I would point out to other new members like myself that family allowances were increased effective last January 1974 from an average of approximately $7 to an average of $20 per child. This amount will again be increased in January 1975 by an amount proportionate to the change in the consumer price index. I would also point out that the old age pension is being increased every three months to take into account increases in the cost of living. At present, a Canadian citizen of 65 and over is in effect guaranteed an income of not less than $199 a month.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And ten cents.

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): All this talk of personal income and after tax income may lead the hon. member to think that I am too buried in statistics to be aware of the poverty in which many of our families and senior citizens in my own area and elsewhere in Canada find themselves today. Quite the contrary. In my experience as a legal aid lawyer I have seen firsthand many of the problems they face daily. But I disagree with the hon. member when he says that a blanket increase in family allowances and old age pensions is the way to really help them at this time.

This government is presently engaged in a review of the entire social security system. As an interim step in this review the government has committed itself in the Speech from the Throne to providing allowances on an income tested basis to spouses aged 60 to 65 of old age security recipients. The speech also stated that:

> The federal-provincial social security review is continuing on an urgent basis. Studies on alternative approaches to the reform of the income security system are expected to be sufficiently advanced to enable federal and provincial ministers to agree upon a preferred approach at an early date. Similarly, it is anticipated that proposals for the reform of social services will have been agreed upon shortly.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but her time has expired.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I asked to take part in the adjournment debate this evening because the matter of the sugar beet industry in western Ontario relates like a fairy tale, with the author being the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

● (2220)

On October 4 I asked the minister first if he would present his long awaited national sugar policy and, second, if he would indicate what progress he has made toward fulfilling his commitment to re-establish the sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario. The minister's response can be found on page 124 of Hansard for that date. Suffice it to say we still await a national sugar policy, and the question of re-establishing the sugar beet industry was evaded.

I believe it is relevant to review the drama of the sugar beet story which has created uncertainty and frustration among a large segment of the farm community. I find it inexcusable that a large number of farmers genuinely concerned in revitalizing the sugar beet industry are but pawns in a game of politics.

Let me briefly review the story. In 1968, after an intensive investigation of the technical, social and economic aspects of the sugar beet industry, the government embarked on a program of lower trade barriers to cane sugar and the maintenance of low sugar beet production in Canada.

Let me remind you that the government of that day was the Liberal party and the policy of that day was supported by the Minister of Agriculture. As a result of that decision the last time beets were grown for the C. & D. sugar refinery in Chatham was in 1968.

The dust had barely settled when the Liberal Party had incorporated, as part of a local agricultural policy, the re-establishment of the sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario. In the election of 1972 we had the unique situation of a sugar policy in Ottawa calling for a reduction in sugar beet production and a policy in southwestern Ontario calling for an increase in sugar beet production and a refinery.

What has happened since the election of 1972? During the last parliament the minister spoke in Chatham in January, 1973, and again in Tilbury during the month of February. On both occasions he pressed the point about establishing a sugar beet industry. Let me quote here from the London Free Press of February 24, 1973, when the minister said:

"I want a solid brief from those farmers to show that there is genuine interest in setting up a sugar beet industry here in Ontario. The next step will be to convince interested companies to set up a plant to handle the crop. If it can be shown farmers are willing to produce a large enough crop to allow for economic operation year in, year out, I think they will put up the refinery."

"That's what I mean when I say that I want a national sugar policy. There's a heck of a lot of work still to do, but I think we can do it, and I think we can get a new industry for our farmers."

Mr. Speaker, let me remind you that during that same period of time, the two policy era, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) had introduced a budget in which he proposed a tariff reduction of 30 cents per 100 pounds of imported raw sugar, clearly supporting the position of 1968.

Again on December 17, 1973, as recorded at page 8795 of Hansard the following exchange took place:

MR. JAMES A. MCGRATH (ST. JOHN'S EAST): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Agriculture, by way of a supplementary question, whether, in view of the very serious situation regarding the sugar market and the effect this will have on the cost of living in Canada, he is now prepared, after two years, to bring in his sugar policy?

HON. E. F. WHELAN (MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE): Mr. Speaker, my sugar policy is not two years delayed; and by the time the two years are up you can be sure we will have a new sugar beet industry and a new sugar refining industry in western Ontario and a policy for all of Canada.

I specifically asked my question last Friday because this matter was shelved during the recent election campaign and frankly, sir, the minister's response has not been reassuring.

I should like to quote from the "Lambton Farmer" of February 14, 1973. There is an article entitled "Can Beets Come Back? Some Say It's Wrong," which reports an interview with Professor Donald Thain of the School of Business, University of Western Ontario. He was a member of the federal task force which produced the book "Canadian Agriculture in the Seventies". The article quotes Professor Thain as follows:

"I'm certain this is happening now because the Liberals are in a vulnerable position," said the western professor. "They need votes. This couldn't have happened two or three years ago because they didn't have to be concerned then about buying votes with sugar beets."

I am not going to accuse the minister of such tactics. I am a reasonable man and I am prepared to accept his promises as genuine and sincere. However, I believe that time is running out. I believe the minister is responsible for presenting a national sugar policy to parliament. Sir, he made a commitment to establish a sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario, an industry which he said earlier would be in operation by the end of 1974. In conclusion I simply ask the minister either for honesty or for action.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in congratulating you on the position you have been called to hold.

The hon. member asked two questions: 1—Whether the Minister of Agriculture could advise the House of his national policy on sugar, and 2—What progress has been made with regard to his commitment to restore the beet industry in south western Ontario.

In his reply, the minister mentioned some of the problems that will have to be studied, adding that his department is working on them and that he will submit a report to his colleagues as soon as possible.

Amongst the problems mentioned by the Food Prices Review Board is that of production, total demand and the increase in the cost of production.

Some of these problems are the competition of other crops in sugar beet and sugar cane producing countries, a change in the membership of the European Economic Community, amendments to the international agreement on sugar and the challenge in the United States Congress of the American agreement on sugar.

The government has already made changes to the sugar rate structure, but when considering new changes, we must give our approval to some countries like Australia.

The Minister of Agriculture still believes that sugar beets can be grown in Ontario, and as in other parts of the world there is strong competition, on a cost-benefit basis, from other products such as wheat and soybeans.

All these crops vie for available lands. Even in western Canada, there exists sugar beet refineries.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the hon. member that it is an important issue and as the minister said in his answer, he hopes to produce a report once his colleagues have considered his suggestions.

ANACONDA ELECTRONICS PLANT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—SUGGESTED ACQUISITION OF COMPANY BY GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43, order, namely, the imminent closure of the Anaconda Electronics Plant in British Columbia, preceded by the closure of the same corporation's copper mine at Britannia, British Columbia.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That this House directs the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to take immediate and substantial steps to save the 470 jobs involved and to promote the Canadian purchase of this company's assets in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Since it is proposed under Standing Order 43, it cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous agreement, the motion cannot be put.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENT CONTAINING NAMES OF LIBERAL MEMBERS—UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I seek the consent of the House to move a motion. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the House requests the Minister of Labour who is responsible for Information Canada to investigate whether or not there has been any political abuse of the name or facilities of Information Canada as a result of the printing and distribution of a political information document containing names and phone numbers of Liberal members along with certain Liberal party executives and bearing on the bottom right hand corner the words 'Information Canada; telephone number 996-7001.'

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Since it is presented pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous agreement to proceed with the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

POSSIBLE MEASURES TO AID "SATURDAY NIGHT"—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the cessation of publication of Canada's oldest magazine, Saturday Night, resulting in unemployment and the loss of a genuine and independent Canadian viewpoint, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That this House instruct the Secretary of State to undertake special financial measures to permit the republication of Saturday Night and to end forthwith the special tax advantages to Time and Reader's Digest which have caused such hardship for the Canadian magazine industry.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be presented without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be pursued.

STATUTE LAW (STATUS OF WOMEN) AMENDMENT ACT, 1974

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH EQUALITY OF STATUS FOR MALE AND FEMALE PERSONS UNDER CERTAIN STATUTES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill-16, to amend certain statutes to provide equality of status thereunder for male and female persons.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECT OF DISC PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the worsening unemployment situation in Canada, what is the government's current assessment on the effects of the United States DISC program on unemployment in Canada? The minister will recall his government has been conducting a survey on the effect of this program on Canada. What is the current assessment on this? Is this program now hurting employment in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition realizes, one of the antidotes was the competitive tax rates for manufacturers and processors and the capital cost allowances. On the basis of information I have received to date, those responses within the Canadian tax system have offset whatever results might have been achieved for United States exporters under that program.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EFFECT OF FAST WRITE-OFFS AND TAX CONCESSIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance promised a further report on the effect of this. Will an up-to-date report on the effects of these fast write-offs and tax concessions be presented in the immediate future or in association with the budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that an interim report was presented to the last parliament. I found it inappropriate to send out further questionnaires for the final report during the election period. I waited until that period was over. Further questionnaires have now been sent out to a wide range of companies, both large and small. I hope the results will be in a form I will be able to present to the House in either January or February of the new year.

SUGGESTED SEEKING OF ASSURANCES UNITED STATES WILL NOT EXTEND DISC PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have one final supplementary arising out of the minister stressing the need to avoid a beggar-thy-neighbour policy, particularly between neighbours. Did the minister seek any assurance from Mr. Simon, the Secretary of the Treasury, that the government of the United States would not adopt any new or extended Disc-type program, at least without consultation with Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Simon, and I did discuss trade restraints, either by way of hidden export subsidies or otherwise, on a multilateral global basis and it is within this context we shall be interested in hearing the President's speech to Congress at four o'clock this afternoon.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT FORECAST OF LEVEL—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR WINTER PROJECTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that unemployment has risen to a level of 563,000 and that experts have forecast a much larger increase for the months ahead, can the Prime Minister tell us whether the government has made its own forecast of unemployment this winter, and, if so, what levels of unemployment are expected?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On a quarterly basis, and then publicly at the time of the budget, the government does look at the state of the economy, studies the current situation and considers the factors which might affect the future. No attempt is made to make any precise forecast.

Mr. Broadbent: Recognizing the need to take some kind of specific action in advance of the budget, for which we may have to wait some four weeks by which time it will be too late to do anything effective about winter unemployment, can the Minister of Finance inform the House whether or not the government will consider increasing the capital allotted to the winter projects fund? At present this is fixed at some $350 million. Would the minister consider substantially increasing this sum and making an early announcement to this effect in order that the provinces and the cities can get projects of a serious nature under way, hopefully by the latter part of the winter at least. This could have a beneficial effect on the unemployment situation.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The government is watching these figures from month to month to determine whether they constitute a trend. The winter employment projects are constantly under review, of course. I hope to address myself to the state of the economy at the earliest opportunity. Hopefully, if the House has disposed of the measure now before it, we shall return to the Throne Speech debate tomorrow.

HOUSING

REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary addressed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Given the fact that there is significant and growing unemployment in the lumber industry in British Columbia, Quebec and New Brunswick, would the minister consider taking immediate steps to lower mortgage rates, even if this involves subsidies, so as to stimulate the housing market and thus provide not only more houses but more jobs?

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): We are looking at all possible options in an effort to keep the housing market moving at high levels. The question of subsidies has been considered and we have already taken action by way of AHOP, which has been tremendously successful.

FINANCE

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM OF UNITED STATES—CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister related to a question which was asked a few moments ago. In view of the inter-relationship of the North American economies, would the Prime Minister, without revealing anything of a confidential nature, tell us whether his government has been consulted, or at least informed, with respect to the contents of President Ford's anti-inflation program to be announced at 4 p.m.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the Minister of Finance indicated in his reply earlier, a delegation led by Ambassador Eberle is coming to brief Canadians on the contents of that message.

POSSIBLE SETTING OF INTERNATIONAL TARGETS TO RESTRICT INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the House whether during his discussions with international monetary leaders any targets were set in an effort to restrict national rates of unemployment and inflation in 1975?

● (1420)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult to give guidelines that would apply to the various economic factors in all the countries of the world, particularly the third world, the developing nations. However, there were some matters discussed with which I can deal in some detail within the rules at the earliest opportunity in my speech in the throne speech debate.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED CLOSING OF ANACONDA ELECTRONICS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SAVE JOBS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but since he is not here I will ask it of the Prime Minister as I am sure he is aware of this problem in British Columbia. In view of the fact that the Anaconda Mining Corporation of New York has closed down its mining operation at Britannia, and in view of the fact that we learned today of the imminent closure of its electronics plant in British Columbia, what action is the Prime Minister's government taking to make sure that this electronics plant stays in British Columbia and saves the jobs of 120 people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of this question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Perhaps the hon. member will also tell this to the electorate of British Columbia.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, due to the urgency of this problem and the fact that there are in the gallery of the House of Commons today people who will be unemployed, if he will assure me that he will answer tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: The same old Trudeau.

AGRICULTURE

SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the grain elevators in Eastern Quebec are now practically empty, which bodes ill for the farmers in that area as concerns feed supplies for the winter of 1974-75, can he tell the House what action his government intends to take to correct the situation and reassure the farmers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall be pleased, Mr. Speaker, to take up the matter with the Minister of Agriculture upon his return.

Oral Questions

PUBLISHING

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX EXEMPTIONS FROM "TIME" AND "READERS' DIGEST"

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State. In view of the financial difficulties of Saturday Night and several other Canadian publications, when does the government intend to keep its promises and remove tax exemptions from Time and Reader's Digest?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there has been no commitment of that kind. The government is, in fact, now reviewing the exemptions, and I would be interested in knowing what is the position of the official opposition on this.

BROADCASTING

ADVERTISING OVER STATIONS OUTSIDE CANADA—SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF EXPENSE AS ALLOWANCE UNDER INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications following the question to the Secretary of State about exemptions given Reader's Digest and Time and the Income Tax Act provisions. As the minister responsible for the CRTC and broadcasting policy, and to be consistent with the Income Tax Act as it applies to publishing, is the minister considering extending section 19 of the Income Tax Act to broadcasting, so that advertising over broadcasting stations in other jurisdictions cannot be computed as an expense?

MARINA ON SAANICHTON BAY—REASON FOR SUSPENSION OF DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Piscatorial Affairs. I do not know how to call him. Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, I asked him a question about the development of a marina on Saanichton Bay in my constituency. I should like to know whether the minister had the opportunity to look into my question and is now ready to inform me more specifically about the postponement of the marina development and the reasons for this delay.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot match the polished language of my honourable friend. I should like to tell him, however, that the marina project has actually been suspended for a six-month period at the request of the Indians in the area or to answer their objections. Apparently, the Indians are afraid that the proposed dredging would affect the flow of the water. That is why we are now looking into this problem.

MANPOWER

DEVELOPMENT OF NEW COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. I understand that yesterday the Minister of Manpower and Immigration announced a new round of talks with the provinces leading to the development of new community employment strategy three years from now. May I ask what is to be done in the meantime by the 31,000 persons unemployed in Newfoundland, the 22,000 unemployed in Nova Scotia, the 23,000 unemployed in New Brunswick or the 563,000 unemployed across the country?

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of that now, Mr. Speaker, but I will look into the matter.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, to date we have spent over $2 billion on manpower training programs only to find ourselves in the situation where—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hogan: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I tried to allow the hon. member a little bit of leeway on his first question, but perhaps it would be better if he stayed on the path for his second one.

Mr. Hogan: What measures if any does the Minister of Manpower and Immigration intend to adopt concerning a workable manpower policy in this country, or does he plan to allow the Minister of Finance to continue fighting inflation on the backs of the working people of this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

REPORT ON PLANE CRASH NEAR FROBISHER BAY—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport relating to questions asked last Friday by the Leader of the Opposition regarding the coroner's inquest into an accident at Frobisher Bay. At that time the minister indicated to the Leader of the Opposition that he would take a very close look at the reasons for the delay in publishing the accident investigation report. Can he now tell the House whether he has done that and, if so, what are the technical matters which still have to be included in the report before it is released?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is true that last week the report had not been completed. Like any accident report, whether a plane or a railway accident, it must be submitted to a general review committee in the department before it is published. This report should now be before the committee. As be soon as I get it, I shall be pleased to make it available to my honourable friends.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, since there is a tremendous amount of confusion surrounding this matter, and I welcome the minister's enlargement on his previous answer, would the minister indicate whether the report is completed from a technical standpoint or being held up simply for the purpose of translation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is referring to a statement I made in the House last week in response to a question by the Leader of the Opposition. At that time I said the report was not completed. What I am saying now is that even when it is completed it has to be referred to a general review board of the department concerned with accidents, and it is only after that that it can be released.

ENERGY

FUNDY TIDAL PROJECT—REPORT OF REVIEW BOARD—SUBMISSION TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicate to the House whether the re-examination of the programming board report on the Fundy Bay tidal project is available and at the same time indicate if he has as yet received any reply from the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick regarding a third report which I understand is one of the recommendations in this pre-examination report?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the review board report has now been received and copies have been transmitted to the two premiers involved. It would be my intention to table the report in the House as soon as the agreement of each premier to that is obtained. We have had preliminary discussions with one at least and I hope to be able to canvas the situation fully as to the next step we would take after we have had an opportunity to review it fully.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEWFOUNDLAND—DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING OFF-SHORE RESOURCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In light of recent discoveries of natural gas off Labrador, has the Prime Minister initiated meetings with the Newfoundland Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs with a view to discussing off-shore resources?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no recent precise development on that. Some months ago I indicated to Premier Moores that since this would not be a negotiated settlement perhaps he would agree to have the matter referred jointly to the Supreme Court. I do not know whether he has answered positively. My memory is not too clear on that. Perhaps I should repeat the background which is that we have been negotiating with the five eastern provinces for five years now, and it is latterly that the Newfoundland government decided to go it alone, which means at a different speed with reference to the settlement of that particular problem.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF DISCOVERY NEAR NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is there any arrangement to exploit these resources in the absence of agreement between the province and the federal government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No. Mr. Speaker, not at the present time. The Eastcan discovery off Labrador was covered by a federal permit, and it is anticipated it would be some years before the discovery could be proved up and before there would be any exploitation of it.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. It relates to the financial statement in the recently issued annual report of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. In view of the fact revenues were $300,000 and expenditures were $244,398, leaving an operational surplus of $55,602, would the Prime Minister take this example of fiscal responsibility as an inducement to appoint more women to the economics portfolios, particularly the Ministry of Finance.

REQUEST FOR MORE FUNDS TO BE ALLOCATED TO CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

In view of the fact that, for the past month or so, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has refused to grant mortgage loans to new housing contractors, thereby causing severe problems to the labour force, could the hon. minister advise us whether he will introduce new legislation shortly in this area, or whether he will allocate new credits to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

[English]

Hon. Barnett J. Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know the specific area where operations are closed down. The AHOP program has been so successful that in some areas the funds which have been allocated have been used up. These are special situations. I am watching all areas of the country to make certain that we maintain the very high standards which are producing a lot of housing for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Is the hon. minister aware that, in the Sherbrooke area, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation no longer grants mortgage loans to new housing contractors? Will he change the policy shortly, in order that contractors may continue building new houses?

[English]

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am aware that the program has been particularly successful in the Sherbrooke area. I am looking at new options there so that we can keep on with the program at a very high rate.

INFORMATION CANADA

PRINTING OF DOCUMENT LISTING LIBERAL MEMBERS AND PARTY EXECUTIVES

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Information Canada and concerns the information document being circulated by the Liberal Party of Canada listing names of Liberal members, certain Liberal Party executives and fund raisers. Did information Canada print, circulate, design or have knowledge of the document and specifically why does the name of Information Canada and its telephone number appear on the bottom right-hand corner of the document?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I asked a question of the Minister of Labour who apparently was talking to his colleague and did not hear it. I feel I should have the privilege of repeating the question.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member should know that I am in no position to grant a supplementary to a question which has not been answered.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I think when the question of a member has not been answered he should have every right to ask the question again. I know they are arrogant, but they should answer the question.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have a general idea of what the hon. member's question was, but frankly I am not aware of this particular situation. I will look into it and endeavour to reply to the hon. member shortly.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

EXPIRATION OF VETERANS LAND ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It arises out of a statement he made in Halifax on September 1 or thereabouts that the Veterans Land Act would not continue and would be phased out. Would the minister indicate if he was stating government policy particularly in view of the fact that there was agreement in this House that the act would be reviewed six months prior to phasing out?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not stating government policy. I told the people in Halifax part of what had happened in this House.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that the minister was not stating government policy, would he indicate to the House if he has considered taking action to extend the Veterans Land Act beyond March, 1975.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of government policy and when the information is available it will be conveyed to the House.

NUMBER OF ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS—POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister give any information concerning whether the government is presently conducting an inquiry or investigation into the number of illegal immigrants coming to Canada in view of the fact that last year the program "Make our country your country" was at that time supposed to clear up this problem once and for all.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I imagine the Department of Manpower and Immigration has this matter under constant review.

REPRESENTATION OF PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION AT GENEVA CONFERENCE—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to my hon. and learned highland friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering that Canada, as a member of the peacekeeping force and seeker of world peace has a major interest in the Middle East situation, can the minister advise if it is the view of the Canadian government that representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization should be supported at the Geneva Middle East conference? Has this view been indicated to other interested governments and with what response?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his comments which I appreciate as coming from a separate but very distinguished clan. With respect to the question, it has been stated by my predecessor that the view of the Canadian government is that the Palestinian people should be represented at negotiations affecting a settlement in the Middle East. The Canadian government, however, has not prejudged the form of the representation by advocating the attendance of the PLO itself.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. Was the Minister of Agriculture stating government policy when he said that Canadian eggs would be prohibited from export to the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I missed the first part of the question but I will be pleased to refer that to the minister.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, my question could hardly be referred to the Minister of Agriculture. As leader of the government, can the Prime Minister state whether the Minister of Agriculture was stating a government policy when he said Canadian eggs would be prohibited from export to the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the statement but I will look into the matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPOINTMENT OF MICHAEL PITFIELD—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CRITERIA FOR MAKING APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister make a statement on motions outlining the principles now to be followed in appointments to the senior public service, and in particular show whether the elevation of Mr. Michael Pitfield indicates a replacement of the merit system by the buddy system?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite improper for a member of parliament to cast such aspersions on a member of the public service.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. Might I ask the Prime Minister to reply to the first portion of my question and indicate whether he will make a statement on motions which will remove the doubt and concern that exists throughout the country, and certainly in the public service, about the principles that are being followed in appointing people to the senior levels of that service?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member probably knows that appointments at this level and deputy minister level are made by order in council. They are therefore at the decision of the government. The kind of suspicion that the hon. member says exists probably exists in his own mind more than in anyone else's.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—VIEW OF UNION GAS ON AVAILABILITY OF SUPPLIES FOR ONTARIO USERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and refers to the letter circulated by Union Gas Ltd. in which they indicate that they will not be able to meet the demands of gas users in Ontario in the next couple of years. Has the minister seen the letter from Union Gas Ltd., has he checked into the availability of supply and can he assure the gas users of Ontario that there will not be any shortage?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, while I may not have seen the actual letter, I am aware of the viewpoint expressed by Union Gas Ltd. which of course is a matter involving this national debate as to the availability of natural gas supplies. It was because it was concerned not so much about the short run, but the long run availability of natural gas in Canada that the government arranged the hearings now being held by the National Energy Board with regard to natural gas supply.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the House that gas will be available in Canada for Canadians in the future even if it is necessary to cut off some of our export customers?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that is one question, but the factual question is the one which is now being canvassed by the board. It seems to me the appropriate course of action is to receive the board's report and in due course make a decision with regard to export contracts, and the development of additional facilities, or otherwise, that may be indicated by it.

HEAVY OIL—EFFECT OF SURTAX ON PRODUCTION BY MURPHY OIL COMPANY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources since we are dealing with the subject of energy and the question of supply. In view of the fact that companies are unable to produce heavy crude in the Lloydminster area, particularly the Murphy Oil Company, because of the fixed price set on heavy crude which they blame on the high surtax being collected by the federal government, can the minister tell the House if the government has had discussions along these lines, and if it has any remedies to suggest to ensure the continued production of heavy crude in that oil field?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have sought the judgment of the National Energy Board on this question and am advised that the Murphy Refinery of Superior, Wisconsin, is in a turnaround position at the present time which may explain the shutdown in production. With regard to the question of the future of heavy oil production, the board is seeking further information from the company. I might add that a possible element in this is the forthcoming United States policy with regard to the reallocation of old oil within the United States which, of course, could have an important effect on the Murphy Refinery and others in the northern tier.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, as the minister, probably unintentionally, left out a part of my question. It was reported in the business sections of several newspapers that the officers and executives of Murphy Oil blame the situation on the high surtax on heavy crude being collected by the federal government. They claim this makes them non-competitive and they have to produce at a loss.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it remains a matter of judgment to be taken by the National Energy Board with regard to the appropriate tax level. The position of the government is that we should seek the maximum just and reasonable return to Canadians from Canadian products.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFINEMENT OF VALENTYN MOROZ BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES—ACTION BY CANADA TO ASCERTAIN STATE OF HEALTH

Mr. Peter Elzinger (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is further to one raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on October 1. In view of the information regarding the state of health of Valentyn Moroz as revealed by the Soviet foreign minister in talks with our minister, does the Canadian government feel that it has done all it can to ascertain the state of health of Mr. Moroz or to mitigate the circumstances of his confinement?

● (1450)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the state of health of Mr. Moroz, I believe the Canadian government did the proper thing in seeking assurances from the Soviet foreign minister. These were provided in these terms: that Mr. Moroz was in normal health, took exercise regularly and was under normal medical observation. There is no way by which the Canadian government can verify independently the assurances which have been given by the Soviet foreign minister.

Mr. Elzinger: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Canadian government committed to using all diplomatic efforts to secure the release of Valentyn Moroz on humanitarian grounds, or does the Canadian government not feel that his release is an important issue, both in our relations with the U.S.S.R. and in Canadian society?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will agree that the person named is a citizen of the Soviet Union. There is a limit to the representations that will be effective, even when made by the government of Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you visit him in the concentration camp?

ENERGY

HEAVY OIL—REASON FOR REMISSION OF FIFTY CENTS PER BARREL TO COMPANIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising from his answer to the hon. member for Calgary North, to the effect that the Canadian government feels it should get all the money it can from the export tax on oil. May I ask, in light of that statement, why the National Energy Board announced that it will rebate 50 cents per barrel of the export tax to the oil companies for the month of November, at a time when the importing companies are raising the price of oil and the OPEC nations are indicating that they will be increasing their prices?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the price remission procedure applies to heavy oil only and the decision with regard to the 50 cent remission represents the judgment of the National Energy Board that the price of heavy oil has been set 50 cents per barrel too high, and this would bring it closer to the competitive market level.

GRAIN

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER CONCERNING NATIONALIZATION OF GRAIN HANDLING INDUSTRY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It arises from the statement he made concerning the grain handling industry. He implied that the government may be considering the nationalization of the grain handling industry, 80 per cent of which is owned by Canadian farmers. Is the government considering seriously this preposterous proposal?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did not make any such comment.

ENERGY

OIL—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF IMPERIAL OIL CONCERNING SHORT-FALL IN PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the President of Imperial Oil said last week that by 1983 Canadian oil production probably will supply only areas west of the Ottawa valley formerly served by Canadian production which means a short-fall in production, as against consumption, of between 1 million and 1.5 million barrels a day, equal to 30 or 40 per cent of our oil consumption, will the minister say if he accepts those figures. If he does not, what are the government's figures? If he does accept them, will the minister say what the government intends to do about this frightening prospect?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may not know that the National Energy Board held a full public hearing into the future availability of Canadian oil. The report is now being completed by the board and should be available within one month.

Mr. Bawden: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As it is such a serious question which is of critical interest to all Canadians, can the minister say if he agrees with the figures given by the President of Imperial Oil?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as this is such a serious question it seems to me that the considered report of the board should be received before there is comment.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF WORDS "OLD AGE" FROM PENSION CHEQUES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the cultural pressure to resist aging, could consideration be given to changing the name of the Old Age Pension Act and the removal from old age pension cheques of the words "Old Age", in order to show more respect to our senior citizens?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will give much consideration to the hon. member's suggestion, but I wish to point out that to my knowledge, not a single cheque has been returned to date because of the plan's name.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WEST COAST GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS ACT, 1974

MEASURE TO SECURE THE RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS

The House resumed, from Monday, October 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) that Bill C-12, to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because the area of Saskatchewan which I represent sends grain to the Pacific coast for export. We are, therefore, very interested in this matter. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has said that only two parties are involved in the Vancouver grain situation. I submit that there is a third party, the government of Canada—which has both feet in it. The minister also referred to a letter which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sent to the grain companies. That letter said this situation is unique and will not affect other union negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if hon. members would give the hon. member who is speaking the courtesy of a quiet hearing.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Labour mentioned the Prime Minister's letter to the grain companies, which said that this situation is unique, will not affect other union negotiations and is not inflationary. That is patent nonsense. I read part of a letter addressed to the Prime Minister from the chairman of the bargaining committee of local 60 in Vancouver; it is dated August 22:

You, the Prime Minister of Canada, have ensured that legislative action will be taken to enforce the Dr. Neil Perry report which ensures Vancouver grain workers of a basic rate of pay amounting to $6.44 per hour.

This is $2.11 an hour more than grain inspectors are paid. I continue reading the letter:

Government inspectors who control and supervise all grain received and exported at the port of Vancouver have to receive, at least, parity with all of the Vancouver grain workers.

If we do not receive parity with all these grain workers in Vancouver, our inspectors will take the necessary action to protect our interests.

Signed: C. Lewis, Chairman, Bargaining Committee, Local 60.

It goes without saying that if the grain inspectors do not work, grain will not leave the port. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) said yesterday that management and the union had been deadlocked for over half a year and the government was forced to act. Let us examine that contention. The first meeting between management and the union was held on October 19, 1973. The fifth and final meeting was held on December 11, 1973. There were only five direct meetings during a seven-week period. Surely the minister could have exercised the options open to him and ordered that serious negotiations be undertaken. Section 164(1) one of the Canada Labour Code outlines the options available to the minister. He can notify the parties of his intention not to appoint a conciliation officer or conciliation commissioner, or he can establish a conciliation board.

Section 43 of the Canada Grain Act declares elevators to be works for the general advantage of Canada. Our railways fall under that category as well. Surely these are not idle words in the statute. The government is responsible for seeing that such works are used for the advantage of our country. We are dealing with a national problem which has become a national disgrace.

I now wish to refer to a European magazine, Point International. The edition of September 21, 1974, says the following about the Vancouver grain pile-up:

Federal politicians are behaving indecisively. Had private companies been involved, parliament would have been recalled and the proposal enforced. But farm co-operatives cannot be handled in this fashion: grain growers have long memories on polling day. Meanwhile the country, which needs massive grain exports to keep its economy healthy, is severely threatened.

● (1500)

In a situation such as the Vancouver grain tie-up, I feel great unease at the government's reliance upon advisers who operate in the theoretical rather than the practical field and whose advice appears to be adding to the mounting mess rather than alleviating it. I hope the Minister of Labour will consider this when he appoints an industrial inquiry commission, because so far in this situation we have suffered from a classic case of legal overkill.

On October 19, 1972, the former agreement was ratified. Its duration was December 1, 1971 to November 30, 1973. The increase granted was approximately 40 cents an hour, or 9 per cent across the board. In the current disagreement, the first meeting was held on October 19, 1973. The fifth and final meeting between management and union was held on December 11. That was the end of our so-called collective bargaining. On February 15, 1974, the Minister of Labour appointed Dr. G. N. Perry as a conciliation commissioner, and I quote——to assist the parties to the dispute in revising the collective agreement.

His terms of reference were all wrong. However, the government took his report as a settlement without knowing what it was all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I quote as follows from the preamble to Dr. Perry's report:

—the recommendations which follow can hardly be expected to do more than indicate a series of intermediate changes with which both parties may be able to associate themselves as they try to conclude a settlement in a difficult year.

The Perry report does not discuss the basic issues at all. They are productivity, efficiency and incentives. The real issue is not to do something that will add to the inflationary pressure in the country, but to do something that will move more grain through export positions at the lowest possible cost per bushel. With trains and ships operating around the clock, seven days a week, steps must be taken to put grain terminals on the same basis. It is obvious, too, that we must move toward a system whereby clean, ready to export grain is moved to export positions.

I am certain of one thing: we will not get increased productivity by parliament legislating this settlement. On May 23, 1974, the government took action under section 181 to make a strike or lock-out illegal until after the election. There is doubt about the legality of the government's action, and the sloppy staff work showed up when they omitted from the order the terminal owned by James Richardson. The title of Bill C-12 is "An act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada". I would like the House to understand that two terminals one operated by the Alberta Wheat Pool in Victoria and a terminal in Prince Rupert have operated throughout the Vancouver shut-down.

Ministers of the Crown made it clear that unless the parties in the meantime reached agreement, a settlement would be legislated in accordance with the commissioner's recommendations. Any chance of effective and meaningful bargaining ended absolutely when the Minister of Labour said during the election campaign that the government would, if re-elected, legislate implementation of the report. This promise was reiterated later by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. There remained a great-deal of ground for negotiation.

On August 1, 1974, the government of Canada made two rather dramatic moves in the grain business. They granted the companies an unprecedented increase in the tariff for both country elevator operation and for terminal operation. This increase was granted by order in council P.C. 1974-1702, dated July 30, 1974, to be effective August 1, 1974. At the same time, the government reduced the payment for number one bread wheat to the western farmer from $3.75 to $2.25 a bushel, a reduction of some 40 per cent. On August 8, the no strike, no lock-out order expired. On August 23, 1974, strikes plus lock-outs, completely shut down the Vancouver grain terminals. The greatest grain exporting port in a hungry world sat idle. Works for the general advantage indeed!

Instead of reminding the grain companies of their responsibilities, I suggest this government should have looked to their own responsibilities in this matter. It must be obvious even to this government that third party intervention is necessary in labour disputes right from the start, and I do not necessarily mean government intervention. In the case before us, I suggest three or four farmers sitting in as observers would have tended to keep both parties on the track.

History tells us that almost every time the government interferes with agriculture, they spoil the market; and if the marketing is wrong, we might as well plow under all the other effort. The expansion of our grain exports and competitive strength depend more on our own efforts than on our reliance on negotiating with other countries. There are a number of actions and policies we can initiate unilaterally which will contribute to our goals of increased trade.

Our greatest need is to have a consistently dependable supply of major grain items, at competitive world prices, at seaboard. Instead, heavy-handed interference by ministers of the Crown has resulted in the present impasse. If the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board wants to nationalize the grain industry, and this is a first step, he should be honest enough to say so. I quote as follows from the Alberta Wheat Pool publication "Budget" of October 4, 1974:

> G. L. Harrold, president, Alberta Wheat Pool, said in Calgary recently that a statement by labour minister, John Munro threatening nationalization of the grain handling industry is out of order and ill-timed. Public coercion of any industry by a minister of the Crown constitutes bad government. A threat to nationalize the grain handling industry, 80 per cent of which is owned by farmers, is preposterous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The manner of government support for the inland terminal concept, and the method by which they have supported this concept with taxpayers' money, is another example of the sort of pressure they have been putting on western grain companies. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is guilty of treating the grain companies like political parties. He made one very bad mistake when he tried publicly to pressure the companies. If he wanted to give them hell, he should have done it in a private office.

It was common knowledge at the meetings of the minister and company presidents that the minister had no idea what was contained in the Perry report. This explains why the government is now backing away from settlement based on that report and why they have to appoint an all-powerful referee under section 7 of the legislation. How can we, in good conscience, support this bill when we do not know what it will mean to either party?

One question that could be asked is, why did the Minister of Labour take the conciliation officer route rather than appoint a board of arbitration? I would also like to know why the Richardson terminal at Vancouver was exempt from the order in council which barred a lock-out or strike. One of the most disgraceful aspects of this whole situation was the effort of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board to try to drive a wedge between members and management of the western grain companies. Fortunately, he failed. He then, obviously, misadvised the Prime Minister by suggesting that grain producers would apply pressure to their companies to settle. This did not happen.

The government has done nothing to create goodwill between the parties—and goodwill is needed desperately. The responsibility for supporting inflationary pressures rests upon the shoulders of the Trudeau government. They created the mess in the grain industry at Vancouver and they should pick up the tab for demurrage, now at least $10 million. In the mind of the public, this government has created the myth that bread wheat has been bringing the producer $6 or more a bushel. However, we shall find out in January upon receipt of the final payment, which I judge will bring a total return to our farmers of some $4 a bushel.

The government is all in favour of acting on the basis of the Perry Report, a settlement amounting to an increase of some 60 per cent, because the farmers will pay the full shot and increase the government's take via taxes. At the same time, the federal government, through the Treasury Board, is offering its grain employees in Vancouver, highly-trained inspectors and weighmen, only 6 per cent, although, as I have said, these people are on a lower pay scale than the grain handlers by some $2 an hour.

So, Mr. Speaker, there we have it. Make the grain growers pay the full shot for an expensive labour settlement, while the government increases the tariff for handling the grain and reduces the initial price to farmers by 40 per cent: is this the way to serve the national interest and the interest of Canadian citizens? The Prime Minister speaks of the grain companies doing a disservice to farmers. The disservice to farmers is strictly the responsibility of the government in this situation. The present government, which gave the western farmers the LIFT program and then asked the taxpayers of Canada for $200 million for hopper cars to move the grain, lets these same hopper cars sit idle. Over 200 miles of loaded boxcars are in the western division right now; over 40 million bushels of grain are stored in railroad cars. To use the government's own words, it is a mess. Mr. Speaker, it is a mounting mess. We not only need the grain moving for the next two months, but for the next 20 years.

Surely it is a reflection of an unjust society when a government will permit so much economic power to rest in the hands of so few people. It is the broader question that the government should be addressing, the problem of pockets of economic power. This is only the first labour problem with which this House will have to deal. Some mechanism must be found to take these issues out of parliament.

It may be reasonable to let the grain handlers catch up with other unions, but when does the primary producer get a chance to catch up? In Canadian agriculture we want a situation in which our farmers have confidence in maintaining planned expansion, while consumers can obtain food at fair prices. What we have from the present government is a situation in which high market prices are combined with lack of confidence in the industry. We have the worst of both worlds for the consumer and the producer.

Since January last the government has watched the west coast grain industry going down the drain. Having let the situation slide for three months after the election, they now base legislation on a disputed, one-man report, with no assurance of increased productivity. In the minds of a good many of my constituents, the government's handling of the west coast grain situation has been a worse risk than hail, rust or grasshoppers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has always been extremely reluctant to impose a settlement in labour disputes by arbitrary legislation. Ever since Abraham Lincoln freed the slaves, it has been held on this continent that no one has the right to set the price at which a person shall be compelled to work in our society. For this reason, it has been a tradition in Canada that the matter of determining the price of an individual's labour should be settled by negotiation and by the process of free collective bargaining.

This process works in 99 per cent of the cases which are negotiated each year, and we hear very little about it. But there are times when the two parties in a dispute are not able to reach a mutually acceptable settlement with respect to wages, hours of work and conditions of labour. When this happens, a stoppage of work ensues and in some cases the stoppage goes on for a considerable length of time. The main victims are usually the employers, who lose business, and the employees who lose wages.

There are times when a work stoppage affects not only employers and employees, but the entire economy. We are now considering a labour dispute of this description. We face a strike which has been going on for some six weeks, a strike which is having an adverse effect on the economy and, in particular, on the well-being of the wheat producers of western Canada. We in the NDP are supporting this bill because we believe it is necessary to intervene in the interest of those who produce wheat in western Canada.

It is now more than ten months since the old agreement between the grain handlers' union and the grain handling companies expired. The work stoppage has gone on for some six weeks. The main losers in this industrial conflict have been the western farmers. In a letter dated August 23 to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the chairman of the Wheat Board summed up his conclusions as follows:

> In summary it can be fairly stated:
> (a) Each day that the strike goes on will cost Canada $5 million in lost sales. A seven-week strike will cost approximately $200 million.
> (b) Demurrage charges will total approximately $10 million
>
> (c) Canada's reputation as a dependable source of food supplies has already been damaged. A strike now may well destroy that reputation.
> (d) There will be a loss of ability by Canada to meet world emergency for food needs.

We need not take all of that statement at its face value. Normally, we would lose sales. However, the shortage of grain in the world is such that we shall probably recoup the losses in sales. I believe that if the strike is satisfactorily settled, the chances are that we shall also recoup our reputation as a dependable supplier. On the other hand, turning to points (b) and (d), there can be no doubt, first of all, that the farmers of the prairie provinces have already lost $10 million in demurrage payments which will have to be made by the Wheat Board and which will come out of their final payment; and, second, there can be no doubt that we are not at the present time making a responsible contribution toward meeting the food needs of the world.

The latest report of the World Food and Agricultural Organization indicates that right now the world is short of about six million tons of grain. Hungry people go to bed night after night without having had enough to eat. Canada has always prided itself on having made a major contribution to feeding the hungry world. Therefore, it seems to those of us in this party that the time has come to bring this matter to a conclusion. As a matter of fact, it is difficult for me to understand why the government did not move sooner than it has. Those two Dead End Kids, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), announced that unless this matter could be settled quickly, the government would call parliament into session and pass legislation implementing the Perry report. But when the companies refused to accept the Perry report, nothing happened and the matter has dragged on.

The Minister of Labour then began to say in his press statements that parliament should not really be enforcing decisions of this kind. The government should either have kept out of the matter or called parliament together and ended it, saving the farmers of western Canada the millions of dollars they have already lost in demurrage charges, and also enabling us to meet our commitments to our customers and get grain into the markets of the world.

My good friend, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), said yesterday that this bill does nothing to deal with the basic grievances. I admit there will still be many grievances left, but the fact is that this bill will do two things which are of vital importance to this country. The first is that it will get the grain moving and save the farmers of western Canada large sums of money since charges to date now amount to three times what it would have cost to settle on the basis of the Perry report. The second thing the bill will do is to offer some measure of justice to the grain handlers on the Pacific coast. Not only do we want to see this strike ended so as to stop the very serious losses being incurred by farmers in the prairie provinces; we want to see the work stoppage ended on a basis that is just, fair and equitable to the grain handlers.

It should be remembered that it was the grain companies that asked for conciliation under the Canada Labour Code. When the Perry report was brought down, the grain companies rejected it. The union indicated its willingness to accept it. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) said yesterday that the report simply was made up of suggestions. Doctor Perry was not appointed as an arbitrator, he was appointed as a conciliator and all he could make were suggestions. Since the companies were not prepared to negotiate on the basis of those suggestions, I do not think this House has any alternative but to end the strike on the basis of the recommendations of the Perry report.

For my friends in the Progressive Conservative Party to say that this settlement is inflationary is, in my opinion, hypocritical humbug. I have not heard them complaining about the rising profits of the food wholesaling and retailing industry, the skyrocketing profits of the oil companies, or the increase in the price of oil to farmers. I have not heard them complaining about the drastic increase in the price of farm machinery. With the increase in the price of a combine this year alone, the average farmer will pay many times what he will be called upon to pay under this settlement—approximately one cent a bushel. Nor have I heard the official opposition talking about the increase in the price of anti-freeze and other items. The fact is, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said yesterday in the debate, that an increase of even 5 per cent would be inflationary. It is true that any increase is inflationary.

Are my friends in the Progressive Conservative Party suggesting that no increases at all should be granted? This year the cost of living has increased 11.5 per cent. We must remember that these workers will be signing a two-year agreement, which means they are guessing what the increase in the cost of living will be next year. Nobody but workers contract to sell their labour at a price, not knowing what will happen to the cost of living. I have not heard these hon. gentlemen protesting the fact that over the past year the income, in real dollar terms, of a worker in Canada has declined by $5.50 per week, or protesting the fact that the share of total national income that has gone to wage and salary earners has declined, while the share that has gone to corporations has increased. Is it now being suggested that 553 men who handle grain for five companies are to carry the burden of stopping inflation, while oil companies, banks, insurance companies and food distributing agencies continue to pile up profits? Surely this is the height of absurdity.

The farmers themselves have had very substantial increases in their prices; and they needed them, because for decades in this country farmers have been producing food at the cost of production and in some years at less than the cost of production. We have said that instead of freezing prices and wages we should try to iron-out inequities. If any group has suffered from inequities, it is the farming population, particularly the grain producers of western Canada. They received an increase and were entitled to an increase, and no one is objecting to their getting that increase. But surely we cannot say that everybody must mark time even though the cost of living is increasing.

The real argument here is not whether this is going to cost, as the grain handling companies say, an additional 61 per cent, though now they are talking about 48 per cent and the minister says the increase in wages is about 15 per cent. You can have endless arguments about statistics, but that is not the point at issue at all. The real point at issue is whether these 553 men should be discriminated against, whether they should be working for $1.25 an hour less than the dock workers beside whom they work. May I say that they work under much more hazardous conditions, much less healthy conditions, than do the dock workers; and they work beside men who have a pension plan while they have none.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was quite correct when he spoke of frustration and lack of communication between workers and employers in the grain handling industry on the Pacific coast. What are these men asking for? They are not asking for the moon. They are asking to be brought, step by step, up to parity with the longshoremen beside whom they work. This agreement will not give them parity with the longshoremen; they will still be getting 25 cents an hour less in wages and they will still be getting 25 cents an hour less in their contributions to the pension plan. But at least it will bring them close to the longshoremen, and I say they are entitled to that.

● (1530)

In my constituency there are many hundred longshoremen and I know many of them. I can tell this House that they do not live the life of Riley. They are not living in affluence. I suggest to the grain handling companies that if the wages they are paying are so low that will it take a 48 per cent, a 68 per cent or any other increase to bring them up to parity with the longshoremen, that is not something of which to be proud. These men are entitled to a comparable wage and to parity with the men alongside whom they work. They are entitled to a pension plan for the first time. Any employer, in this day and age, who does not have a pension plan for his employees has nothing to boast about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Any company that allows the type of working conditions which have obtained in the elevators at Vancouver ought to be taking a very serious look at its public and employee relations.

There is no doubt that what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said yesterday is correct: implementing the Perry report will not settle all the problems. Of course, there will be many other problems. But if this legislation gets grain moving, removes the sense of legitimate grievance which these men have, convinces them they are going to be allowed to move toward parity and makes it possible to establish better relations, then I say we will have taken the first worth-while step. It goes without saying that the secret of successful management-labour relations is to remove any sense of injustice and to help the men feel they are being treated fairly and equitably as compared with their fellow workers.

I am glad the government is going to set up a public inquiry to look into grain handling facilities. Let me make one suggestion to the government. It should not only look into grain handling facilities but into grain transportation facilities in this country. Our farmers are probably the most modernized and efficient producers of grain in the world, but they are serviced by one of the most inefficient and obsolete grain transportation and handling systems in the world. If the government considers the coal handling and transportation facilities on the Pacific coast, comparing them with how we handle grain, it will understand why we have faced these difficulties in the last few years.

Let me refer again to the letter dated August 23 which the chairman of the Wheat Board sent to the minister, in which he pointed out that the Wheat Board has firm commitments which will require 700 cars per day. He said they were now getting 140 to 180 cars. I can recall flying over Vancouver harbour time and again and seeing 19 or 20 ships waiting, not because there was a strike but because grain supplies were not coming through on the railroad. If the government is going to look into grain handling facilities—and it should in order that they will become more efficient and more effective in handling grain—it will be of little value unless the government is prepared at the same time to look into the transportation system which in this country is obsolete and is still using outmoded methods for both the transportation and distribution of grain.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest for a moment that the passing of this bill will solve all the problems in respect of handling grain, but we in this party support it. We support it because we think that by ending the strike we will be assisting the farmers of the prairie provinces. I would point out that on the basis of what this strike has already cost the farmers, they have paid the total cost of this agreement at least three times over. We are supporting this bill because we think that in justice and equity the very least we can do is take the first timid step toward putting the grain handlers on the Pacific coast on a par with their fellow workers on the docks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in following the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), a gentleman whom I hold in great esteem, I am sorry to say that he seemed to fall into the error which other members of his party fell into during this debate, the same error which the lead speaker for his party—the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin)—condemned the government for falling into. He seemed to start off by taking sides in this dispute. That is exactly what this House is not called upon to do, and it is exactly what the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, in the debate yesterday, accused the government of doing. Of course, he was right. It is essential that all hon. members realize that we in this House are not called upon to determine whether the Perry report is right or wrong. We are called upon to pass a bill which will implement the Perry report whether it be right or wrong. The whole point, Mr. Speaker, is that the collective bargaining process has been interfered with because the government took sides, as the hon. member said yesterday.

I think it is important to commend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and his officials for the fact that the minister will appoint an industrial inquiry commission. If there is one thing on which all hon. members agree in this debate, it is that this kind of labour-management dispute affects the national interest. In his speech yesterday, the Minister of Labour admitted unequivocally that the work stoppage which has halted the shipment of Canadian grain adversely affects the Canadian interest.

Along with other members of this party, I had the privilege of meeting representatives of the grain handlers, the managers of terminals in Vancouver and, in Calgary, several of the presidents of the co-operatives. Our discussions were frank and useful and I express my appreciation and, I believe, the appreciation of my colleagues for the co-operation we received from both management and labour.

There is no question that relations between the two sides to this dispute can be improved. On this I agree with other spokesmen in this debate. It is clear to us that neither side believed that the other was prepared to negotiate in good faith. In that atmosphere, it is difficult to come to any agreement. Perhaps an industrial inquiry commission will make recommendations which will prove helpful. It is at least a positive step, and for that I commend the minister. However, in respect of the government's handling of the situation to date there is no room for commendation, and no reason the government should expect our party to endorse its conduct by voting for this bill.

From the moment the Minister of Labour endorsed the Perry report, any hope ended of the parties reaching a settlement. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), who made his first speech in this House yesterday, said some thoughtful things. He said some other things as well. In defence of the government, he said that the Perry report was the end product of the collective bargaining process. That, clearly, is not correct. It is not correct because Dr. Perry, clearly, did not intend his report to be the end product of collective bargaining. Let us consider what Dr. Perry said in his report. I quote from a letter to the Minister of Labour, dated April 22:

> —I am, therefore, submitting for your consideration some suggestions which, hopefully, might form a basis upon which the two parties could, ultimately, enter into a two-year agreement.

● (1540)

Dr. Perry wrote that report, in a spirit of meditation, as the basis upon which the parties could ultimately enter into an agreement. What would the report have been had he been functioning as an arbitrator? As my hon. friend said a few moments ago, we do not know and apparently never will. Apparently neither the Minister of Labour nor the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board read Dr. Perry's letter, or if they did they ignored it. Either way, they took sides in the dispute by endorsing the report and made matters worse by saying the report would be legislated by parliament if the parties could not agree. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, speaking on behalf of his party, accused the government of ineptness in publicly taking sides. He is right: it was the taking of sides which ended all hope of settlement.

It should be apparent to all hon. members that it is not the government's responsibility to take sides. Nor, I might add, is it the responsibility of hon. members to take sides. It is regrettable that the position on this matter, put so sensibly by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, was not heeded by other members of his party and members of the government. The government's action, in addition to making a farce of collective bargaining, amounted to an absolute abdication of responsibility for the national interest—which was, and is, to keep grain moving to Canada's customers abroad.

The Minister of Labour invoked the Canada Labour Code to prevent a strike taking place during the election. Why? Because of the national interest. This was admitted in the speech yesterday. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) repeatedly has stated his concern that Canada must maintain its image as a responsible supplier. The evidence is overwhelming that this work stoppage involved the national interest. The conflicting statements made by government spokesmen, however, are quite extraordinary. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board, in mid-summer said:

> We have successfully sold a tremendous amount of grain at top prices and need an all-out effort to deliver it. Not only is it in the interests of the western farmers to whom it is particularly crucial that we deliver, but in the national interest as well.

In March, 1974, Mr. G. N. Vogel, chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, said:

> Canada's grain transportation system has fallen down so badly that the country's reputation as a dependable supplier of grain to the world market is threatened.

On August 23, Mr. Vogel wrote to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board as follows:

> Our board urges every effort be made to effect a quick settlement of the impasse, including, if necessary, the immediate recalling of parliament.

Incredibly, in September the Minister of Labour was saying that parliament should not be recalled because the dispute was not truly national; and this after he had threatened to recall parliament and had accepted the Perry report as being the end of the matter. He said that parliament should not be recalled because the dispute was not truly national. I ask, is it any wonder that a columnist in the Financial Post called such a contention absurd? At the commencement of the complete tie-up of all grain movement in August, the Minister of Labour said:

> —the farmers aren't hurting.

He went on to say:

> Everybody is concerned about delays in delivery, but it's a seller's market. Besides, those who have negotiated grain contracts with Canada are aware of the Canadian way of handling labour disputes and that we have no control over port movement—those countries know that.

The stance of the government became even more incredible when the Minister of Labour flew to Vancouver in the first week of September. He did not speak to management or to labour. He held a press conference, and as suddenly as he appeared he disappeared. He said:

> I am, quite frankly, trying through you and the public to make a plea to inject some rationality into this dispute—

The public was confused about whether there was any national interest in the strike. It was confused about the government's position, and was so sure there was no rationality in the government's position that the government truly looked ridiculous. As one columnist said—

> As a result, labour minister John Munro stands undressed. His colleague, Wheat Board minister Otto Lang, is almost as naked.

It is quite clear that the strange antics of the Minister of Labour and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board had created an impasse, having—at least by insinuation—threatened the recall of parliament to legislate the Perry report. Neither side could budge. Why should they? All this time the Minister of Labour was asking the parties to somehow continue negotiations. Negotiations toward what end? Why should the union negotiate? Why should the co-ops negotiate? The government's clumsy and ill-considered statements guaranteed no settlement short of parliamentary action.

Yesterday the hon. member for Assiniboia said that the official opposition was not very concerned about restorting the movement of grain. Apart from the fact that such a statement is nonsense, the hon. member seems to have a very selective memory of what has happened. The government, despite all the conflicting statements, did believe the grain stoppage affected the national interest. The government, quite properly, invoked the Canada Labour Code and prevented a strike before the election.

I say that the government was wrong in endorsing one side's position. Having done so, and at the same time having threatened to recall parliament to end the dispute, the government had a clear duty to maintain consistency and do exactly what it threatened to do. Having bungled the collective bargaining process, parliament should have been recalled by the government.

Once the government stopped a strike in May because of the national interest, it is ludicrous to attempt later to say that it was not a matter of national interest. From the time the election was over, the responsibility for slow-downs and then complete cessation of all grain shipment rests solely with the government. This government had a duty to act in the national interest, and it has failed utterly to do so.

I have no doubt the Minister of Labour was sincere when he threatened to recall parliament. I have no doubt he was overruled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). But it is fair to ask what other government members were doing to persuade the Prime Minister to meet the government's obligation to the national interest. And, especially, what were the Liberal members from the Vancouver area doing? They knew that the grain stoppage was affecting the national interest. They knew the grain stoppage should have been ended, no matter with which side they sympathized, and they knew—or should have known—that only parliament could get the grain moving again. As I said earlier, the hon. member for Assiniboia said some thoughtful things. He concluded his speech by saying: "We must heighten our resolve to find a better way".

It is true that this dispute is the result of a breakdown in communication and understanding between the parties. The union has stated its desire to meet with management to discuss a better way to move grain, and I believe management is prepared to do that. The union expressed, I believe, a sincere desire to solve the problems of productivity, incentive, efficiency and communication. Some of these matters may be resolved by the industrial inquiry commission. But underlying all this is a serious defect in our approach to negotiations in cases involving the national interest or, for that matter, essential services.

Collective bargaining proceeds on the assumption that each side has two traditional weapons, lock-out and strike. But in cases of national interest, overriding public interest or essential services—all such terms are used—both parties are asked to negotiate knowing that these economic weapons are not really available, or at least are available for only a very short time. I have said before that the right to strike or the right to lock-out in such cases is largely illusory. As a consequence, one side or the other can use the inevitable fact of parliamentary intervention to what they perceive to be their own advantage. The Woods report tried to deal with this problem by recommending an industrial disputes commission. Recently, the Minister of Labour has been talking about a series of discussions with labour, industry and other groups to find a solution.

The traditional view that these disputes are settled in free bargaining and are determined by the relative strengths of the parties was put by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) last August 31 in the debate concerning the railworkers. He said:

> How is the level of wages established? Is it according to a certain rule of justice, as I heard yesterday? No. It is according to the strength of each party. I have been in that trade all my life. I was involved in certain strikes where the justice of cause was very clear, and we lost. I was involved in others where it was less evident, and we won. Why? Because we were weak in the first case and strong in the second. This is the way disputes are settled. They are not settled according to certain criteria or principles known or accepted by everybody. It is free bargaining.

● (1550)

That has been the traditional view, Mr. Speaker, but in my submission it is old fashioned and outdated. Mr. R. C. Smith, chairman of the non-operators negotiating committee, on June 19, 1973, said the following to the conciliation board:

> It may be said that the last two collective agreements have resulted from collective bargaining without the intrusion of parliament. Nothing is further from the truth. We are never removed from the shadow of parliament which hovers over us and which, by its very presence, successfully protects the interests of management.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a lesson to be learned from this impasse. It is clear that the system of collective bargaining involving management and labour in those parts of the economy which affect the public interest or essential services, is not working.

The fact is that where the national interest is vital, the traditional weapons are not effective but we continue to negotiate as if they were. We are operating under a myth and, until we face this fact, we will be unlikely to reach a solution satisfactory to the parties or the public interest.

Yesterday, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) said in reference to this dispute that if he had to do it all over again he could not see how he could do it differently. I am sorry to hear that, Mr. Speaker, because there was a different way to do it and there still is a better way to do it.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Minister of Labour that he consult with the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) and, to use his words, "heighten his resolve to find a better way".

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate you on your appointment to your high office. Mr. Deputy Speaker, may I also congratulate you.

My colleagues, and particularly the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), have put forward very constructive and positive suggestions about the eventual solution of this labour-management dispute that is so central to the problems that exist in Canada today. I am not going to take up your time by repeating the things that have been said. I will take time, however, to express another viewpoint that I think is paramount, and that is to ask how we in Canada are going to solve the labour-management problems facing us.

It is a fact that higher prices cause higher wages and higher wages push up prices. From my sphere of business, one cent of direct cost on a consumer item at the manufacturing level that is not absorbed through productivity, becomes five cents at the consumer level. Higher prices cause higher wages. Higher wages do push up prices and the ferris wheel goes round and round. Where it stop, history knows only too well.

Bargaining normally comes to a halt in a major recession and breaks either the corporation or the union or both. An exception is the case of the strike lock-out with the grain workers in Vancouver. Bargaining came to a halt when two ministers of the government autocratically ordered the settlement on the basis of a report that in my opinion was never intended to be legislation. That report also contains clauses and costs to management that were not asked for by the union at the bargaining table. The autocratic action of these two ministers in ordering settlement on the terms of the Perry report finished meaningful negotiations in the dispute and made further collective bargaining under federal jurisdiction a farce and meaningless.

Was there room for ongoing negotiations in the Perry report? I say there was. Management took an exaggerated calculation and said it was going to cost them $3.03 additional on their base net figure of $4.96. The union's calculations showed $2.14. Half a cent a bushel difference in cost, and there was no further talk. This is utter madness and a disregard of the best interests of Canada.

To legislate this report sets an official government benchmark that leaves more and more people in the Canadian work force, and those on fixed incomes, further and further behind in purchasing power. This government serves well the organized monopolies which have high leverage. The fruits of this land are truly for the pockets of power under the Liberal government. Sooner or later—and I hope my effort makes it sooner—we will have to update the purchasing power of the unorganized workers in this country who make up two-thirds of the work force and who are not enjoying the fruits of collective bargaining. I am not so sure that those who are organized want them, however, because they would have to share too much of their gain.

I am from the nice, clean, straightforward world of business, Mr. Speaker. During this dispute I have spent time with management, their negotiating committee, union negotiators, the picket line and the company presidents. In all honesty, I must say that I was not impressed with the sincerity of management or the quality of the negotiations. The management negotiating unit did not indicate to me that they had a comprehension or a unit of measure for the human quotient of the present-day need of a modern work force. Management and the companies, understandably, still carry the fears and values that are rooted in the thirties. They did not show me an awareness that in Canada new values, new social concerns and new life styles now make up a significant part of this country's work force.

Since 1967 we have seen the conflict that has existed in many Canadian homes and the testing of parental authority. We have watched youth testing the values of our established systems on our campuses and our school grounds. We have watched the establishment in our society being tested in recent years. These people are now part of the work force of Canada. They resist the old autocracy and parentalism of the establishment. Surely we know this by now. They feel they have a right to ask, why? They are intolerant of wasteful methods and tired egos. They respond to being asked to take part in the planning of new production methods, and there is proof of this in England and in West Germany. They respond to meaningful communication and to a sense of belonging in their daily work. They also want some meaning from that daily work. They are entitled to clean toilets and pleasant eating conditions and, surely, to a proper lunch period, as are others in the province of British Columbia.

Nowhere did I see, or sense, on the part of management, an appreciation of these job enrichment factors that are so important to the productivity and peace of a modern economic enterprise. You might think I am far left, speaking from a free enterprise platform, Mr. Speaker, but I want to protect this free enterprise system. I believe sincerely, from the bottom of my heart, that management today has to understand that in this era of social change, their economic unit or franchise must serve man and serve him well.

● (1600)

Management must serve its customers, its employees and its suppliers. If my peers in management fail in their job enrichment, comprehension, fail in their leadership and encouragement in areas of productivity, if they continually blame, not serve, their labour force, this country is surely going to be delivered to a system of state capitalism. I do not believe that state capitalism can serve man's needs and freedoms as well as enlightened leadership in a free enterprise society.

Why are not human considerations and productivity considerations part of this legislation? The government has had enough time to instil them into the bill. Let us use this senseless circumstance as the starting point for a new era in labour-management relations. Let us return to the dream that built this country. May labour and management heal their wounds and come together in meaningful dialogue after the passage of this bill. Let them be wise enough to remove the stigma of forced legislation from their dialogue. May they remember that increased wages without corresponding productivity shove up prices. Higher prices pull up wages. High interest rates further push up prices. Increased government spending increases demand. Demand increases prices. Higher prices pull up wages. Higher wages push up prices. The end of this mad, insane spiral is collapse.

The roots of inflation are political. Is the leadership we are seeing in this area deliberate? I ask members of the government to remember that their mandate in 1974 came from Upper and Lower Canada. I ask them to stop imposing their traditional, and what I call imperialistic attitudes and mistakes on Canadians of the west. We in the west are trying to build trading corridors to the Pacific. We need the government's help, and not its ill conceived interference.

[Mr. Huntington.]

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time within two years that parliament has been asked to pass legislation forcing men back to work. It is a disagreeable task which members of parliament do not relish. If this legislation had simply provided for resumption of work and for the parties to resume collective bargaining in the best interests of the nation, it would be acceptable. Yet we, as legislators, are being asked to decide on increases in wages and other benefits without being given the full facts or the opportunity to examine witnesses from both sides. We are asked to legislate benefits arbitrarily decided by the government, without being given the facts. I respectfully submit that no member of this House is qualified to make such decisions.

I represent a constituency in Saskatchewan which depends primarily upon grain production. This year, 1974, has been a tragic one for prairie grain producers who have been plagued with spring flooding, late seeding, drought, severe grasshopper infestation, early frost and, now, snow. On top of all this we have the grain handlers' strike. The present strike will cost prairie farmers at least $10 million in demurrage charges, an unknown amount in penalties under our contracts with importing countries, and we will suffer loss of prestige and will lose our reputation for reliability as an exporter of grain. These factors will affect our grain sales for many years to come.

The Globe and Mail "Report on Business" of Friday, October 4, 1974, says the following about the grain handling situation:

> Japan has been forced to buy spot cargoes of wheat at a premium from the United States because of the six-week old grain handlers' strike in Vancouver, according to the Canadian Wheat Board.
>
> The board said yesterday that the amounts of wheat Japan was forced to buy amounted to 'hundreds of thousands of tons.'
>
> The grain handlers' strike would have caused even more damage to Canada's reputation as a reliable exporter but for the fact there is so little available grain in the world that importers have had to stick with this country.
> It will take, even under the best of circumstances, more than the balance of the year for the board to catch up with its shipping program once the strike is settled.

We cannot blame the government for the vagaries of the weather or of mother nature, but we can blame it for having brought on the strike and for failure to bring it to a quick end. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) and compliment him on his capability and confidence. He has been well trained, possibly because he once worked for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. He suggested that the official opposition is not concerned about settlement of the strike and said that we are using delaying tactics. He reminded me of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who in the last session, during third reading debate on the crop insurance bill, said the opposition had deliberately delayed passage of the bill. Actually, we had asked the government often to bring it forward and said we would pass it and put up only one speaker.

Here the government is dragging red herrings across our path. When it is backed into a corner and is embarrassed, such are the tactics it uses. Sometimes they work, but not all the time. I am sure that on this occasion the farmers of western Canada will not be fooled.

I will not waste time examining the facts and the sequence of events leading up to the strike, because other spokesmen have covered them. It is sufficient to say that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) supported the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), who had told the grain companies to settle or the government would legislate on the basis of the Perry report, the collective bargaining process ceased and the strike became inevitable. I was interested in listening to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) who is as skilful as other members of his party in wriggling out of embarrassing situations by making accusations.

Mr. Baldwin: He is slippery.

Mr. Neil: Right. He quoted from the Vancouver Sun the remarks of an opposition member in Vancouver which he felt would embarrass the opposition. When called upon by members on this side to quote the balance of the news report, he ignored them. He was quick to give the impression that the opposition was in no rush to see the strike settled. I wonder whether he consulted his cohorts, the Minister of Labour and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, and saw the correspondence they had received from opposition members and members of the public.

● (1610)

On August 29 I wrote to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. I insisted upon the immediate calling of parliament in order that the matter could be fully debated and resolved. I did not state that I would support the legislation. With the government having stated its policy and being in a majority position, I was fully aware that any legislation presented would be passed. However, I do want the matter fully debated and resolved.

Had parliament been recalled at that time, the matter would have been resolved quickly. Millions of dollars would have been saved. It was some five weeks ago that I and other members asked that parliament be recalled. Apparently, the matter was not urgent at that time. Parliament has now been convened. After ten days of sitting, the bill has been presented. The opposition should have the opportunity of debating it for a day and a half. However, the matter has now become urgent. We are being accused of irresponsibility because we want more than one speaker to take part in this debate. Surely the opposition has some responsibility to the public to bring forth the facts and debate the matter so that the public can know what is taking place in this country.

I understand that the steering committee met yesterday. Because of the majority of government members, it was agreed that no one other than the minister and members of the Department of Labour would be called as witnesses before this standing committee. Surely members of the committee are entitled to an opportunity to have witnesses called from labour and from the government. Only in that way can the facts in dispute be brought before the public.

I have examined the Perry report. It is interesting to note the following statement in the preamble:

> Given the circumstances, the recommendations which follow can hardly be expected to do more than indicate a series of intermediate changes with which both parties may be able to associate themselves as they try to conclude a settlement in a difficult year.

I read that paragraph to mean that the report was simply a basis upon which the parties should further negotiate. This is what was intended. I understand the report recommends a higher settlement than that asked for by the union. It includes many side benefits that were not even asked for. Yet the government seized on the report and made it the basis upon which they are legislating an end to this strike. It appears the government is not too clear on what is meant by the Perry report. There is a provision in clause 7 of the bill for the appointment of a referee to interpret the provisions of the Perry report if there is any dispute. Let us hope the referee appointed will be more skilful and fair than the referee who officiated in the U.S.S.R.-Canada hockey game last Sunday.

With regard to the wage increases recommended in the Perry report, there are many conflicting arguments as to the percentage increase. In his remarks last evening, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board denied that the increase was 61 per cent. He was asked several times by members on this side to give the correct figure, and he refused to answer. I should say, he parried the question with the skill of a good politician who does not know the answer or is not prepared to give it because it might embarrass him. Surely the Canadian people are entitled to know that figure.

In my view, the minister's attitude can only mean that the figure of 61 per cent is close to being correct. If this is so, in my opinion a settlement of 61 per cent will become the basis for settling future labour disputes. Certainly, other unions will be justified in asking for a settlement of this magnitude. The Prime Minister suggested this settlement really will not provide a base line. He said the present situation is unique. I disagree. If settlements of this magnitude become common, it will mean acceleration of the present rate of inflation and will lead to economic disaster in Canada.

It is interesting to note that employees of government elevators in Moose Jaw, Prince George and other areas have been for some time negotiating a settlement with the federal government. These people carry out duties similar to those of the grain handlers in Vancouver. Their base wage is lower than the Vancouver grain handlers at the present time, yet the government has seen fit to offer the employees of these government elevators an increase of only 6 per cent. Is that treating these employees fairly?

With the majority the government has in this House, and with the support of the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit Party, there is no question that this legislation will pass. However, for the reasons I have outlined, I cannot support it. The minister said an industrial commissioner will be appointed with dispatch. In addition to that, I hope he will arrange to bring together representatives of management, labour and government to discuss ways and means of solving labour disputes without resorting to strikes. Until we have a spirit of co-operation between these two groups, labour unrest will continue at tremendous cost not only to productivity but wages to employees. If this situation continues without solution, parliament will be called upon time and again to carry out a function for which it was not intended.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate ever so briefly in this debate, not necessarily to criticize, but to make a few suggestions that this unfortunate conflict might be settled as soon as possible, and that, in the future, the government might take steps to prevent similar conflicts as much as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the government introduced the bill under study as a result of the prolonged interruption in grain handling operations.

This problem resulted in considerable losses for the Canadian economy. I shall not enumerate them; quite a few have already been discussed.

It is thus in the interest of the Canadian people and our country that operations resume at the earliest possible date.

No one, Mr. Speaker, denies the fact that the work stoppage of the grain handlers caused distress in our society. Some of its short term effects are truly disastrous. It will also have harmful effects in the long run, the brunt of which the country will have to bear.

Far be it from me to blame the workers concerned in this conflict. On the contrary, I sincerely believe that they are the victims of a seriously affected economic system. When someone is ill, we try to give him the necessary care in order that he may get well again as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, to be convinced we only have to look around and see what is happening in the country; strikes are increasing at a frightful rate and this will not help lessen the causes of inflation from which the entire population is suffering.

The bill now under consideration is aimed at the resumption of grain handling operation on the west coast of Canada; first, through the extension of the collective agreement up to November 30, 1975 if necessary and, second, through the increase of the hourly rate up to 87 cents. In my opinion, it would perhaps be possible to study the matter more closely and to improve the hourly rate.

Thirdly, there is mention of prohibiting strikes and lockouts. It is unfortunate that we had to resort to such radical means, but I believe that the moment has come to establish some authority in this country so as to maintain law and order, for the whole country is in turmoil at the present time. We had to start somewhere.

Fourthly, I agree with the bill compelling the companies and the union to negotiate. If they wish to sit down together and consider their common problems, then this bill is of no consequence. They will have to abide by it, or else, an arbitrator will have to be designated. This is another radical situation and future legislation will have to provide for cases like this one, so that it be unnecessary to recall Parliament to settle these conflicts.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will put an end to one conflict, but it will not help prevent others.

I know that this problem is exceedingly difficult. It has to conciliate money-capital with labour-capital. I know that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) may be blamed for having failed to act sooner or still to intervene too soon. On the contrary, I personally believe that he is the victim of an obsolete system.

We are living under a capitalist regime. It is a good formula by itself, but it has become corrupted; it is sick, as I said previously. Improvements must therefore be brought in. Either such a system will be reformed by well organized men or it will be destroyed by the others. There is no middle course! This is why I find it very important for Parliament to settle not only the present dispute in the west but also to pass legislation designed to avoid others.

Conflicts between proponents of capital and labour have been going on for many years, but it clearly strikes me that they are multiplying and that they are becoming more and more serious.

We are confronted with a vicious circle, in which the increase in the cost of living forces workers to ask for higher wages; if they do not get them, workers resort to strike action. However, wage increases partly explain the increase in production costs. They might not be the only reason for this increase, but as I have already stated, they partly explain it. The increase of production costs brings about an increase in prices. These same prices decrease the workers' purchasing power, and the whole process starts over again. Mr. Speaker, this brings to mind the picture of a dog running after its tail without ever being able to catch it. It might keep on running for a long while, but its efforts will be to no avail.

● (1630)

Faced with the impossibility of money-capital and labour-capital to agree through negotiation, it is the government's duty to intervene, since it must act as an arbiter in encouraging, through fair legislation, the acknowledgement of the rights both of money-capital and of labour-capital. Legislative power's right to regulate working conditions has seemed in the past to be useless, ill-timed and dangerous. One need only refer to history in order to understand in what frame of mind certain of our contemporaries have shown a measure of timorousness by legislating on these matters. However, it is on behalf of the common welfare that the state has both the right and the duty to adopt protective work legislation. This care for common welfare must be both the inspiration and the measure of intervention by the state. If this concern is ignored, we will surely go wrong.

Faced with the profound transformations which have been the lot of several of our economic sectors, and with the improved state of communications, the man in the street is better informed and is becoming ever more aware of his rights. We must rejoice in that fact. Workers in particular demand that labour-capital get a larger share of the national income. Statistics show beyond a doubt that workers have not yet obtained their part of the national income, to allow them to meet their obligations as well as the steady increase in the cost of living.

The escalator formula everybody is talking about these days may be right for certain categories of people on fixed incomes. I think this formula cannot be considered as a solution, nor will it make it possible to reach the goals sought in all cases.

When salaries increase, producers boost their prices because of higher production costs. Then, workers ask again that their salaries be geared to the increase in the cost of living. Where does it stop? This is like a pyramid but nobody knows what is at the top.

I remember that a few years ago economists who wanted to disprove the economic theories of Major Douglas, the founder of Social Credit as we know it, were saying that if that economic doctrine were implemented, it would be inflation, that the pyramid of prices and salaries would be horrible, that it would be economic chaos and that the dollar would lose a great deal of its value.

Mr. Speaker, Social Credit policies have not yet been implemented, yet we have that economic chaos foreseen by those learned economists.

I think the time has come to look for other solutions so there will be a closer cooperation between money-capital and labour-capital.

My colleague the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) in taking part in this debate on this bill, made certain suggestions to prevent further conflicts which generally speaking never benefit the workers. I have never seen workers come out of a conflict better off than before.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and this government that could promote better understanding between employers and employees. I am talking about the participation of workers in businesses. Whether we like it or not, that will be the ultimate solution if we want to get the maximum out of our human and material resources for the greatest benefit of all Canadians.

Participation of workers in the company, this is how we could call this new policy. However, the formula of worker participation in company profits must not overshadow the fact that there must also be participation of the workers in the development of Canadian companies. Not only do we have rights in our society, but we also have duties that we must accept if there is to be some order. And I insist on the fact that there must be development, not only through the investment of labour-capital, which in my opinion, is the most important aspect, but also through the investment of money-capital when profits allow it, or by any other means.

Mr. Speaker, the international congress of participation in profits which was held in France in 1889 defined participation in profits as follows: a voluntary agreement under which the employee receives a predetermined part of the profits.

Another method has also been suggested according to which an employer makes available to his regular employees, in addition to their ordinary wages, immediate or deferred payments based on company profits.

Another method could also be advanced to increase production and reduce costs. This involves the human cooperation brought about by the direct participation of employees who, in addition to their regular wages, benefit from company results measured in profits, which means that the more effective the company is, the more significant its results. But the worker could share in this effectiveness in some financial capacity.

This system of worker participation in the company was suggested in France around 1850, and the company that had the good idea of allowing its employees to participate in its profits never had any conflicts in its plants. This company still operates and has more than 1,000 employees. This has not stopped its development. On the contrary, it has developed even more.

Participation is now a human right. Every man must be co-author, co-responsible and co-beneficiary as far as the work of the company is concerned. Everybody has a right and a duty to participate. In this sense, the problem of participation must be set in terms of the rights of those concerned rather than in terms of the duties of management. Participation must go as far as the transformation of the business structures. These new structures must allow a continuing dialogue, not one that takes place every 18 or 24 months.

But these new structures must not encompass a sharing of authority. On the contrary, the managers must always retain the responsibilities of direction. We might discuss endlessly whether such a participation is a right of the workers but in any case, most business managers have always been more concerned with their interests than their responsibilities. It is high time they should be reminded of their duties.

Nowadays, there is no more room for mistakes in assessing workers mentality. The systematic denial of participation in a certain management of the business is the main reason which I think makes unions and workers tend to socialism and its extreme form, communism. Their social responsibilities are extremely important, but if they are not carried, we are heading for a period of violence and restlessness.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I think it was relevant to ponder over this problem and make the suggestions I have presented and which I will repeat to conclude my remarks.

In order to reach that goal, the government will necessarily have to bring amendments to the fiscal legislation so as to ensure tax benefits to workers who will participate financially in the company besides participating through their work. It does not behove me to find the formula that would be suitable. I am making that suggestion and I am convinced that whenever there are benefits there are inevitably people who are interested. Such changes would entail certain tax benefits for companies and that goes for employers as well as workers.

We must also be convinced that the government should make it its duty to ensure all members of our society a reasonable participation in the production of wealth so they may all secure a sufficient living income.

That is why I am saying again today that work is an instrument given by the Creator to process in a detailed form what he put in bulk on this earth and that work will always remain an extremely valuable instrument. We must strive all together to bring the notion of work into currency again in the mind of our people who are going through difficult times.

Finally, the formula of the annual minimum guaranteed income advocated by the Social Credit party of Canada would greatly contribute to the solution of those problems, as it would enable workers to get a larger income without that part of the income affecting prices. That way, we would avoid runaway inflation.

I am more convinced than ever, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come for this government to listen attentively to Major Douglas' suggestions and ideas instead of rejecting them outright as unpractical.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that really valuable suggestions were made during this debate and that the government, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and his advisers should read over again the speeches made during this debate in order to lay down such policies that we may hope in the future that the Canadian people will not have to put up with disputes of that kind but on the contrary, that there would be an agreement between labour-capital and money-capital and that it would be beneficial to everyone.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. Before recognizing the next hon. member I wish to inform the House of the proceedings for the adjournment debate this evening. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Request for federal government sharing cost of nursing homes and home care—Government position; the hon. member for Central North (Mr. MacKay)— Transport—Alleged action of Laurentian Pilotage Authority changing basis for pilot's certificate—Government position; the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald)—Research—Need for additional funds in medical field—Number of scientists leaving Canada because of lack of funds.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WEST COAST GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS ACT, 1974

MEASURE TO SECURE THE RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) that Bill C-12, to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being allowed to make a few comments during this debate since I too represent a constituency in which farming plays a very vital role, namely, the northwestern portion of the Peace River country. Before getting to my general remarks I should like to respond to a few comments by some of my colleagues earlier, particularly those of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang). From what he said last night he seems to think the Conservatives have found a new ally in their attempt to place the burden of inflation on the backs of the workers, and that it would be our attempt to blame the government for this.

The minister comes from a farming community, and I dare say that he has at one time worked on a farm. I wonder if he does not consider the farmers of this country to be working people. The farmers are the people who will ultimately have to pay the cost and suffer the consequences of the imposition of this bill on the grain handling companies in Vancouver.

Last night the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford) concentrated on embarrassing a few of my newer colleagues. He was challenged by members in Vancouver to comment on this strike when it became apparent. Certainly we said that parliament should be recalled after the government intervened and told grain companies that parliament would settle the strike.

It was quite obvious to any thinking person in Canada that there would be no settlement of this strike until parliament intervened. Why should the grain companies in Vancouver take the responsibility for this settlement and its consequences? The minister said that the bargaining process had broken down so the government had to intervene. I suggest the bargaining process broke down because of the suggested intervention by parliament.

The minister also said, and I hope I misunderstood or am misinterpreting him, that this bill is similar to bills dealing with other disputes in the past. This bill is not the same, because last year when we settled the railway workers' strike we left a position for bargaining in the provisions of the bill. We established a floor position from which to bargain. This bill does not provide any such thing but rather imposes a settlement, and appoints a referee to see that it is implemented.

The minister said that in 1973, because of a minority position, we had to establish a position from which to bargain, but that this is not necessary today. That statement worries me no end. I wonder if we are now all alone like a voice in the wilderness, with the government assuming its power of the July 8 mandate. I hope that is not the case.

A former leader of the NDP, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), said he felt it his responsibility to intervene on behalf of the prairie farmers. Everyone knows that the prairie farmers are against this settlement since it is they who will have to pay the bill. I suggest he is not intervening on behalf of the farmers but is intervening on behalf of a principle we will all have to live with, not just in respect of the grain industry but in respect of any other labour settlement in which we become involved in the future.

My comments will be of a general nature as I have no intention to attempt to take sides in this dispute between the grain companies and the union. I would be reluctant to intervene at all were it not for the fact that there are three parties to this unfortunate situation, the third party being the government.

It is the government that cites this bill as something to settle all the problems relating to grain handling on the west coast, totally ignoring the fact that there are grain handling facilities in Victoria and in Prince Rupert. The difference between the grain handling facilities in Vancouver and those in Prince Rupert is that those in Prince Rupert are owned and operated by the federal government.

This government wants to impose this settlement on the grain handling companies in Vancouver, and this is the government that neglected shipping potential of 30 millions bushels this summer out of the port of Prince Rupert. We have a new member in the House from Prince Rupert representing the fine constituency of Skeena. I note that she is in the House. Knowing that she is very concerned about this serious problem I hope she will listen to what I have to say.

In June 1974, the elevators in Prince Rupert were plugged. There were 300 rail cars destined for Prince Rupert that could not be unloaded because there were no ships. All the ships were in Vancouver Harbour incurring $5,000 to $7,000 per day in demurrage.

Some 2,000 cars were processed in April and May of 1973 through the port of Prince Rupert. In September of the same year there was no movement in that port. This resulted in the layoff of all the trained people who normally handled grain. In December we decided that Prince Rupert port should play an important part in the movement of grain in western Canada, and two ships were put on to handle grain out of Prince Rupert. A large training program was launched, involving a number of people who, incidentally, are federal employees and for that reason are likely classified as second-class citizens. At least no one talks about them. The whole program was scrapped and these people were laid off in January, presumably because we did not want to get into competition with private enterprise in Vancouver. I do not know what the reason was, but that was the situation.

The responsible minister is not in the House and I am sure the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) is not aware of the potential role people might play in other areas on the west coast. I hope the new hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnola) will study the situation, and use her influence and charm to persuade some of her colleagues in the front benches that the port of Prince Rupert can play a much greater role in the future, with the result that some of these problems might be avoided.

● (1650)

I wish to make some comments about Canada's labour situation in general and the involvement of government in labour problems. Normally I divide Canada's labour force into three categories. The first is what I call an elite group. The number in this group is quite small. I would estimate it represents about 15 per cent of Canada's labour force. It does not necessarily involve the highest wages and fringe benefits in Canada, nor do members of this group pride themselves on having the best working conditions. On the contrary.

Even though these people compose the elite group, they are often at the bottom of the scale in respect of all categories. I call this the elite group because the services of these people are indispensable not only to the employers but also to our country. These are the people who perform essential public services in Canada. They are key people. By virtue of their trades they enjoy prestige. Their disputes, relations, pensions and conditions of work can be and often are settled by Parliament.

Now, one would assume that that category should be far ahead of all others having this access to the highest tribunal in the country. The reason this is not so, however, must be attributed to the fact that our government really has not been able adequately to solve any problem in which it interfered in recent times. I do not have the time to comment at length on some of the settlements in which we have been involved in recent times.

The second group consists of about 25 per cent of Canada's labour force. These people, like their colleagues from the elite group, are organized by a variety of unions through which they compete for and have achieved the country's highest wages, fringe benefits, and most advantageous working conditions. They are mainly employed by the private sector of industry. The reason for the prosperity of this group is twofold. First, these people enjoy a status called "citizens plus", which means that while they have all the protection of Parliament through the Canada Labour Act, they are responsible to no one, and Parliament will not rule them back to work.

Second, they are bargaining with a sector of our corporate system which, by virtue of conglomerate, and monopolistic business practices can of course afford better than any other sector of our business community to respond positively to the demands placed upon them by their work force.

The third group is comprised of 60 per cent of our work force. It does not enjoy the benefit nor the protection of Parliament or union and its members' standard of living reflects the horrible situation in which these people find themselves. Sure, Mr. Speaker, we have introduced a minimum wage act. But, even with that protection, in most cases they earn less than the poor who are already on the welfare rolls. Most provinces have also passed legislation designed to protect all of our work force, such as workmen's compensation, statutory holidays and so on.

However, Mr. Speaker, when it really comes down to bare facts, we know that there are only a privileged few who divide among themselves the country's prosperity. The situation in which we end up is such that one third of our work force enjoys two thirds of the benefits and income. Why this is so is not hard to understand. Unions, often controlled from outside our country, have become more conscious of building large and monstrous pension funds and competing with the large corporations for efficiency in operation. No attempt is made to enlarge their membership to include all of Canada's work force in their mandate.

Unions have, in fact, admitted that they are reluctant to extend their activities into so-called unproductive areas, or areas where the economy is unable to absorb or fill demands placed on it by the unions. Meanwhile there is really no question that Parliament and legislators have submitted to pressures from these unions, and have established them with powers over their membership which are in serious conflict with the Canadian Bill of Rights, and which restrict the freedom of the individual.

The most obvious example of that is, of course, the fact that we are making it a condition of employment in unionized industries to show proof of membership in a union. Thus, if a man falls out with his union, he does not work. This is particularly unrealistic since governments have ruled out competition among various unions through certification. A perfect example of that, of course, is the Public Service Alliance, and the problem we had with the firefighters last year who were not in difficulty with their employer since the employer wanted to resolve the difficulty, but whose real legal strike was with the union with which they were in conflict and not the employer.

Once a union has achieved certification in any one business or industry, it rules supremely over its membership. For that reason, it is more often the rule than the exception that decisions taken by the unions do not reflect the wishes of the membership at large. Even if we disregard this obvious discrepancy in our democratic process, it still remains a fact that our economy does not have sufficient resources to equalize the opportunity, or even to narrow the gap between the organized and the unorganized worker.

The double standard which therefore exists for Canadians has established two categories of poor as well, namely, the working poor and the unemployed poor. To compound the situation, we only measure the workmans' life standard by his disposable income. I suppose we accept that if a person's disposable income is already below the poverty line he also cannot be expected to place any demands on fringe benefits such as working conditions, holidays and overtime pay. The fact is that unless any one of the unorganized two-thirds majority can rely on the charity of his employer, he is a second class citizen.

The employer of this segment of our labour force is the small businessman or secondary industry, whose contribution to our prosperity is never recognized. The irony is that the corporate sector of our system, backed by conglomerate and monopolistic positions, is setting a pace and a standard which are impossible to achieve by the business community which still subscribes and subjects itself to the rules of free enterprise and individual freedom and initiative. The irony also is that the corporate sector has joined forces with unions, thus protecting its own interests as well.

I am beginning to question whether it is not high time for us to follow the lead of other industrialized countries, with a lot less problems in this area, in insisting that our country's opportunities and achievements are adequately distributed. Is it not time, Mr. Speaker, to insist that at least the fringe benefits for a day's work in our country are the same, regardless of the field of endeavour in which a working person might be, and of whether he or she is protected by the political muscle of an union? There is, of course, and there always will be the need for labour unions, but let them collectively bargain with the government for a greater share of the country's wealth not just for their own members but for all Canadians.

It has never been fair to say that excessive labour demands are solely responsible for the high rate of inflation in Canada but if we establish a precedent, as we seem about to be doing in the grain handlers' dispute in Vancouver, whereby legislation might impose a settlement on this very vital sector of our community which is even in excess of union demands, we are setting a very dangerous precedent, particularly at a time when the prime producers of grain and other agricultural commodities should concentrate their efforts and resources on expansion and improved efficiency of their operations.

● (1700)

Mr. Speaker, the companies involved in the dispute have never refused to bargain, but they have refused to negotiate under conditions imposed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). They have taken a position against the dictatorial attitude of the government, for which I cannot blame them. The minister, after all, has openly blackmailed the companies. He said, "You settle, or parliament will legislate your settlement". The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) confirmed later in a telegram to the companies that the two ministers indeed spoke for the government. I have a copy of the telegram, Mr. Speaker, and this is what the Prime Minister said:

> When Mr. Munro and Mr. Lang advised that the Perry recommendations would be legislated if no settlement was reached prior to reassembly of parliament, I can assure you they were speaking for the government.

These are indeed strange circumstances for the process of collective bargaining, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion, this does not create a climate for responsible and intelligent industrial relations proceedings. The companies will make the government carry out its threat and the government will of course have no alternative to living up to its commitment to the union, using their comfortable majority position in the House of Commons to impose a settlement. There will not be, of course, any defiance of the law as a result of this settlement once it is passed. This is normally the case when parliament or a legislature imposes settlement on a union. But, Mr. Speaker, I for one place responsibility for the consequences, not only of this settlement but the impact it will have on future negotiations, squarely on the shoulders of this government.

Let us leave to the unions only the bargaining for wages and salaries which must obviously differ in various professions and trades. But, as in the case of countries where the industrial relations process has advanced with the times, it should be the union's prime concern to assure for its members a greater degree of job security and to demand from its membership a much higher level of professional conduct and work ethics, as well as a more responsible attitude toward the economic welfare of the country as a whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him in this debate has now expired.

I interrupt these proceedings to inform the House that whereas the balloting in respect of private members' business will be held today, no business under that heading can be taken up at this hour. Accordingly, the House will resume consideration of the bill dealing with grain handling operations. I recognize the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would not go so far as to say it is a pleasure to take part in the debate on this legislation, but it seems that we must debate it because of the bumbling of three senior cabinet ministers. Last night the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) pleaded with us in an effort to get himself and other ministers off the hook. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the official opposition has no intention of letting them off the hook. They were bleeding yesterday, and they need to bleed a bit more because of the unforgivable sin they have committed by their actions in this regard. They should not have participated at all. In order to protect their own interests and to get past the election, they used the Canada Labour Code, and yesterday had the audacity to tell us that we must put this legislation through quickly, although the election is three months past. Madam Speaker, this case will be known as the big bungle of 1974 created by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, backed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

We are not just dealing with 550 people, but with the economy of the whole country. I am sure every Canadian recognizes that the economic pie is only so large and can only be cut into so many pieces. If any one segment of the economy takes too much of the pie, it is taking something that belongs to others. This is exactly what we are dealing with in this legislation. One segment of the economy is seizing an opportunity that was handed to them on a platter prior to an election. This is very significant and I think it should be pointed out. The Canadian public is entitled to ask if there was a sell-out.

Last night the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, replying to comments of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), said:

> Let me say that I am happy to note that a few members who said nasty things about me in the previous parliament and who came from Saskatchewan are not here to join their colleague. I was interested to listen to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, because he was speaking in his last term as member of parliament. We have a short list and he is at the top.

Did the government have a list prior to the election, Madam Speaker? Do they expect Canadian grain producers to pay their bill for the support they got in defeating 15 members of the New Democratic Party? Why would the minister make a statement like that if it has no basis in fact? Does this mean that in the next election 15 more NDP members will disappear?

An hon. Member: There are not that many left.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am still here.

Mr. Towers: We recognize that they are waffling. In fact, they are waffling so much that they will not know what to do with all their waffles. If they lose 15 members at the next election, there will be only one left to waffle, or a waffle of one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us how you fared on July 8.

Mr. Paproski: We won all the seats in Alberta.

Mr. Towers: In answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), may I say that I increased my majority by 2,000 votes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You did not win any more seats in Alberta.

An hon. Member: What happened to your leader, Stanley?

Mr. Towers: The question we have to ask is, what will this decision do to the economy of Canada? I suppose if any one of us was a member of the union involved, and had the opportunity of taking advantage of the presumptuous comment made by the minister, we would all jump on the bandwagon. Yet, what about the rest of the economy? What about the 1,500 grain handlers on the Great Lakes? Are they to get 61 per cent also?

● (1710)

Perhaps we should clarify the figures. There is some discrepancy as to the percentages used. Some say the grain handlers will get 48 per cent, some say 61 per cent. Why has this discrepancy arisen? The reason is that no one really knows what the consumer price index will be in future, and the 61 per cent is based on a 1 per cent rise in inflation per month. Let me point out that the grain companies are owned 80 per cent by the grain producers of western Canada. I hope the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) remembers this: he was elected by grain producers and sent here to look after their well-being, not to preserve the big, red Liberal machine.

We have to consider what can happen to the economy. What about the grain inspectors? If they do not work, they could stop grain shipments just as effectively as the grain handlers—and they are getting less. What about elevator operators? The 3,500 elevator operators across the country are getting 40 cents an hour less than the grain handlers, at the present rates. What will the government do with its own employees? I am not merely talking about grain inspectors. For instance, in my constituency it is interesting to consider wages paid by the provincial and federal governments for similar work. Plumbers employed provincially receive $1,262 per month; those employed federally receive $916. The yearly spread is over $4,000.

Provincial electricians are paid $1,263 a month; federal electricians, $964, which comes to a difference of about $4,000 per annum. Provincially employed carpenters receive $1,123; if federally employed, $778. Again, the difference is $4,000. Painters, if employed provincially, are paid $1,018; if employed federally, $722. Trade help is paid $792 provincially, and $573 federally. Labourers are paid $724 by the province, and $509 by the federal government. Some of these people are paid about $6,000 a year, on which the federal government says they must subsist. Grain handlers are not paid $6,000. Today they are paid salaries ranging from $16,000 to $18,000 a year. These are wages that grain producers must pay.

When commenting during the throne speech debate on his intention to reform parliamentary rules and procedures, the Prime Minister said this was necessary to expedite House of Commons business. He also said it is time for Canada to move beyond the kindergarten stage. Surely those comments apply to the situation now facing parliament. Today we are spending time in settling an issue resulting from irresponsible action by two cabinet ministers. They will suffer more when this bill goes to committee because we shall ask them embarrassing questions and they will have to answer for their actions.

In my opinion, before we in this House are urged to amend the rules and enable the government to rush its legislation through following four months of inactivity, top priority should be given to having the ministers concerned act with maturity instead of like kindergarten pupils. I might add that if all cabinet members faced up to their responsibilities and obeyed parliamentary rules, our time would not be wasted.

If this government had not interfered in the negotiations between the grain handlers and the grain companies, if it had not done so through the bumbling, inept actions of the two ministers previously mentioned, negotiations could have continued and I feel sure a settlement would have been reached weeks ago. Immediately those ministers came out in support of the recommendations of the Perry report, further collective bargaining became futile and the dispute ground to a standstill. We are all aware now, if we were not before, what a few words uttered without forethought by irresponsible persons in authority can cost this country, our economy and our relations with our foreign customers for grain. This episode, as it unfolded, resembled a Grimm's fairy tale which is suitable for performance on a stage. Unfortunately, it really happened, with the result that every Canadian has suffered.

Last November, when the collective agreement between the grain handlers and the terminal operators at Vancouver expired, management offered an increase of 80 cents per hour for a one-year agreement. Conciliation efforts failed, and in February the Minister of Labour appointed Dr. Perry as commissioner. On May 24, during the election campaign, the Minister of Labour announced that the government had taken action by order in council, under section 181 of the Canada Labour Code, to make a strike or lock-out illegal until August 8, one month following election day. On May 24 he also said at a Vancouver news conference:

> The government will introduce legislation to approve contract recommendations by conciliator Dr. Perry as a binding collective agreement on the two parties.

On what advice or consideration was such a cowardly step based? I hope hon. members opposite recognize the importance of the situation with which we are dealing. On July 18 the Minister of Labour reaffirmed the government's decision to force settlement terms upon the grain companies. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board urged producers to exert pressure on their own organizations in order that the inflationary conciliation recommendation would be accepted. What right did he have to do that? A telegram sent by the two ministers to the grain companies on August 23 reads in part:

> We have made it quite clear, as has the Prime Minister, that the government will legislate the recommendations of Dr. Perry if necessary.

Of course, that position met resistance. Why? Because the grain companies are owned by the producers and they backed the companies up to the hilt. Ninety per cent of them supported the companies. What else could they do? What else could the companies do, if they were to discharge their responsibility to those they served? Clearly, the three members of the government previously referred to have put the government into an intolerable position. Let me put on record letters which the companies have received from farmers. I quote a letter from Cupar, Saskatchewan:

> Do I, as a grain farmer, also get a 61 per cent increase in the price of my products? In two years time can I negotiate as a body for another 60 per cent increase? . . . I agree that when the cost of living increases 10 per cent, so should everything else—not 60 per cent. I, as a farmer, am finally able to get my head a little above water. If price and wages increase at the same rate, that water is going to get . . . deep again. Keep up the good work.

From Pipestone, Manitoba, came this letter:

> Let the government force the issue, so as to let the people of Canada see more clearly what is happening to inflation and the cause of it. Thanks.

Next is a letter from Brandon, Manitoba:

> The Perry report recommendations are excessive to the extreme. Congratulations on your stand re this issue. The membership of UGG are solidly behind you.

Next comes a letter from Myrtle, Manitoba:

> Request government to take immediate action. If the government is as concerned about western agriculture as they say they are, they will move . . . fast.

Next is a letter from Boissevain, Manitoba:

> If governments continue to allow . . . high increases to unions, private enterprise will have to follow. If they feel food is at a high price now, it will have to increase with the wages. Somebody must take a stand some time.

Next I quote part of a letter sent from Yorkton, Saskatchewan:

> Aside from the reaction of other labour sectors, there could be a repercussion in our own company, particularly among elevator managers.

These employees, as I said previously, are receiving 40 cents an hour less than grain handlers. I want to impress on this House that grain producers, on average, are getting 50 per cent less than this agreement will provide for grain handlers. We are dealing with a very touchy situation. We must recognize that the price of machinery for grain producers increased between 25 and 30 per cent the last year. The cost of repairs increased 30 per cent. Fertilizer went from $106 to $168 a ton, an increase of 59 per cent. Increases of this magnitude are apparent throughout the system. There is no way in which producers can stay in business if they continually have to face this type of inflation from every direction. They will lose their incentive, and if that happens we will be in a very sorry state indeed. We will have done a great disservice to the economy of this country.

● (1720)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, this bill has been debated exhaustively and there are very few things that can still be said. We are debating a settlement forced upon the grain co-operatives by the government. It is the end of a long period in which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) have bungled the situation. That is what necessitated this action.

There are many matters to be considered. First, when does a conciliation report by a labour relations officer, as opposed to an arbitration report, become absolutely necessary? It should be pointed out that a conciliation report is a basis upon which to negotiate further. The conciliator does not expect all his suggestions to be accepted. There is still room for negotiation. However, the ministers have made it plain that they regard the conciliation report as an arbitration report to be forced on the grain co-operatives.

This piece of legislation will deal with the problem of approximately 550 grain handlers, against the four major grain companies, the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Pacific Elevator Company, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, United Grain Growers Limited, and a very small private company, Burrard Terminals. These companies represent 175,000 permit holders. Almost all permit holders in western Canada have a share in one of these co-operatives. They represent one million people who live on the farm. These people have a direct interest in this problem and how much a settlement will cost. It is the farmers who will have to pay the cost of the settlement. It is their grain co-operatives, not private grain companies, who are negotiating on their behalf.

We have heard a great deal about demurrage charges. Some thought these would be paid by the federal treasury. They will come out of the final amount the farmer will receive. The cost of the settlement will lessen the amount of money that will eventually be returned to the producer. Therefore, the million people on the farms have a right to have their companies put forward their case so that the cost of settling will be as low as possible. The settlement should not be exorbitant. It is sometimes forgotten that these grain companies are owned by upward of one million people on the prairies.

Prairie grain growers live in a land-locked area. To the west, he must traverse the Rocky Mountains to the seaport; to the east, the Laurentians and the Great Lakes to reach the port of Montreal and ocean vessels. In all this transportation, the railways and shipping companies have a monopoly. Dozens of groups are involved in the transportation of grain. It is highly vulnerable. There is a widespread effect of stoppage by any one relatively small group of employees. This makes the efficient movement of grain a very hazardous operation. The prairie farmer sells on the world market. What he receives is that price, minus the difference between what the various groups charge for handling and transportation of the grain. With the upcoming problems, this will not be the last grain stoppage. As soon as this settlement is reached, another will take its place.

It is particularly bad that the government decided on a settlement of 60 per cent, considerably in excess of that asked by the union. That makes the whole exercise very disturbing. The action of the Minister of Labour and the minister in charge of the wheat board ruled out any settlement that was not enforced by parliament. The Minister of Labour did not seek the approval of the grain companies and co-operatives in the appointment of Dr. Perry to write a conciliation report. In this way he was inviting trouble. It is not evident that Dr. Perry had any special knowledge of the grain handling business. He looked upon this as a labour problem to be settled. The eventual buyer of the grain would pay for it. Not only did he give more than that asked by the union, but he threw in two or three doubtful settlements that have been written into the legislation.

Dr. Perry recommended a wage increase of $1.52 over two years. I think that was reasonable. I know the grain co-operatives, the Alberta pool, the Saskatchewan pool, the United Grain Growers and the farmers they represent expected and were prepared to pay an increase. The government could well have requested the grain workers to go back to work, and management to again open the terminals at the wage increase of $1.52 an hour. Other aspects of this settlement could have been dealt with at a later date. In fact, the Minister of Labour said he had proposed to the grain co-operatives changes in the cost of living clause and of the pension plan. This, he says, would have considerably reduced the cost. However, he has never made public these changes, and they are disputed by the companies.

I think Dr. Perry's recommendation, that a cost of living clause be built into this plan, is highly dangerous. Surely the recommended $1.52 an hour takes into account the projected cost of living for the next two years. All wage increases, demands and agreements take into account the cost of living increase. In pensions, this is done by indexing. Family allowances, welfare payments and old age pensions are protected by a cost of living index. I think that is good for those who are unable to bargain. However, must there be a cost of living clause in every wage agreement? This implies that there should be a cost of living adjustment for the farmer in the production of his milk or cream, as well as for the automobile manufacturer and others. If we write this cost of living clause into all wage agreements, we will be inviting trouble. It may be all right for those who cannot fend for themselves, but for other parts of the economy it is a very bad practice.

It has been well said that much of the prosperity of the last 25 years has been based on the erosion of savings, but with the value of money being eroded, those responsible for making savings eventually found that they did not receive the value of what they had saved. Also, the importance of private pension plans seems to be declining and their future is extremely doubtful.

I notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is in his place. He introduced amendments to the Canada Pension Plan which did not pass. I should like to ask him when is he bringing another bill forward, and whether he expects it to contain a clause dealing with the question of religious sects?

I think we are reaching the stage at which the old age pension and the Canada pension are so basic that private pension plans will become redundant. I do not believe they should be encouraged. This, of course, is a debatable proposition and I do not intend to expand on it now. Nevertheless, I think we ought to look charily at new private pension programs. Incidentally, I am informed that the grain handlers did have a private pension plan some years ago but that they threw it out, for reasons with which I am not familiar. Eventually all private pension plans will need to be dovetailed into the Canada Pension Plan.

This settlement is highly inflationary and it is bound to be followed by further costly settlements throughout the industry. We can expect prolonged stoppages in the movement of grain. It should be realized that the more money it costs to move and transport our grain, the less the farmer eventually receives, and this, in turn, discourages production. Nor is it generally realized how much farm costs have been increasing. A pail of Avidex which only this spring cost $59 is now $83.

During this dispute it has been suggested by many that the Vancouver terminals are poorly managed and inefficiently operated. The union leader, to his credit, has spoken convincingly about his intense desire to improve productivity and management at the Vancouver terminal. He wishes to see this done, in his own words, "far beyond previous levels in the interest of the western grain farmer". What are the facts?

In May, June and July of last year unloadings at Vancouver averaged 609 cars a day. The corresponding figure for this year is 393 cars a day with a plentiful supply of cars on hand. What happened to the desire to unload cars rapidly? No matter how much renovation is carried out, if the workers are unwilling to work, or if management is unwilling to manage, one cannot expect much efficiency. How does reduction of productivity by more than one-third of demonstrated ability tie in with Mr. Kancs' dedication to attaining high standards of efficiency?

Dr. Perry, the Minister of Labour, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) among others, have stressed the need for parity of income with that of longshoremen performing similar tasks to members of local 333 on the same waterfront. This is put forward as justification for the costly settlement recommended. However, as has been pointed out in this debate, the argument loses impact in the light of the offer made by the negotiating committee of the Treasury Board to Vancouver grain inspectors working for the Canadian Grain Commission.

The inspectors found the offer of a 6 per cent wage increase over 18 months, with a further 5½ per cent over the following 12 months, entirely unacceptable, and in a letter to the Prime Minister they drew attention to his statement that parity ought to exist between the pay of grain handlers and longshoremen.

Under the Perry report, Vancouver grain handlers would get a basic rate of $6.44. The basic rate for grain inspectors is only $4.33. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that inspector status is achieved only after years of study and the passing of rigorous examinations. After all, the inspectors are the men upon whose judgment the reputation of the Canadian grain grading system depends. It is in on their authority that the export certificate is issued. In these circumstances we must accept it as a fact that the grain inspectors are almost certain to go off the job once this strike is settled.

Moreover, I believe we must get the relationship between grain handlers and longshore workers into a more reasonable perspective. A grain handler, at least if he belongs to what I understand is called the first shift, is assured of steady work. A longshoreman may go to his union hiring hall in the morning, but he is not sure of finding work that day. So the longshoreman is paid on the basis that on many days of the year there will be no work available for him. To compare longshoremen with grain handlers is like comparing longshoremen with miners or Members of Parliament.

It has been suggested that this dispute should be settled at any cost without much discussion. This view is put forward partly on the ground that Canada's reputation as a reliably consistent supplier is being damaged. I understand that at one time Japan used to buy all her wheat from Canada, but after supplies had been interrupted due to a strike by longshoremen at Vancouver, orders from then on had to be shared with the United States and Australia. Thus, to say the present stoppage is particularly damaging does not sound to me like a really good argument.

Last year we had a six weeks railway strike. Last winter the prairies experienced the most severe snowfall that most of us can remember. Many of the rail lines were closed. Yet if hon. members look at the statistics they will find that despite these adversities we got out all the grain we had to sell—there was very little left over. The world, of course, is very short of grain, perhaps for the first time in 25 years. News that the United States has cancelled a contract to sell wheat to Russia underlines this state of affairs. So it is likely there will be a good market for Canadian grain this year even though surpluses may arise in the years to come.

● (1740)

The storage of substantial quantities of Canadian grain abroad should be examined. This would help to supply our customers when our own transportation system is not functioning. Another possibility would be the movement of grain into the U.S. mid-west in modest amounts, and no doubt the American railways would be happy to transport grain, our grain, to the markets of the world. If western Canadian farmers are left at the mercy of stoppages of many different kinds, it is wise to have as many options open to us as possible.

We live in a free country and most of us want to keep it that way. The strike weapon is a legitimate means for a worker to use to ensure he gets a reasonable wage. I must say that, in my opinion, the government's handling of this whole case has not improved the possibility of good relations between unions, the farmers on the prairies, the people who own the co-operatives and the grain handling companies.

I hope that in the committee the minister will be able to tell us what offer he made to the grain companies which would lessen the cost of this settlement, and what specific cost to the companies he has worked out. There are many unanswered questions in this whole sorry affair, and perhaps our committee system will prove of value in ferreting them out.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take the opportunity to rise in the House, though I regret I am rising in a debate of this nature rather than on the throne speech debate, as was my first intention.

It had been thought by some people that if the government felt there was urgency to this matter it would have had a certain presence about it and brought in a settlement, or the means of arriving at a settlement, at the time it dictated the solution. However, the government has procrastinated and delayed and we now find it interrupting the throne speech debate. Once again we find parliament has been pulled into the unfortunate situation of settling a strike of great importance to this country through legislation.

The present strike is of grave importance, and it is detrimental to Canada for three reasons. One reason is that the strike affects our international relations. We cannot keep faith with countries that made commitments with us. We cannot perform in accordance with our international contracts. We cannot deliver what we have promised. Quite frankly, this is bad for Canada. It gives Canada a bad reputation in the international community, and I suggest could even jeopardize future contracts.

Secondly, this strike has disrupted, and threatens to do future damage to the grain economy upon which so much of the economy of western Canada is dependent. It has affected not only our shipments but has caused a backlog of grain deliveries, with last year's grain being held in elevators instead of being shipped to ports, leaving no room to store this year's grain in the elevators. This in turn will put the farmers and the people of western Canada to extra expense in arranging for storage upon their own lands until some room can be found at the elevators.

Thirdly, it is an unfortunate and detrimental strike because demurrage charges for ships waiting in western ports are costing farmers and others a large amount of money. Farmers are being forced to spend money on storing wheat instead of injecting it into the economy. This means that a much wider group of Canadians than simply those who are the employees of the elevator operators or grain handling companies are hurt. They are playing with dollars that they do not rightfully own. It is not their money.

For these three reasons, and for others that have been amply discussed in the debate today, this strike has hurt us and hurt our economy. Our grain industry and grain exports are both essential to Canada's economy, especially in the western provinces.

The people of my constituency, Madam Speaker, and I believe the people of Canada as a whole, are sick and tired of strikes in important essential services.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: The general public are tired of being used as a pawn. Strikes in essential services should be outlawed. Perhaps we should be moving in the direction of Australia and other countries and have compulsory arbitration.

Mr. Lalonde: Is that your position?

Mr. Dick: I am speaking for myself and as the representative for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) happens to be in the House at the present time, and it is nice to see him here although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was crying the other day that ministers did not even have time to attend the question period. However, I see him chuckling and I guess he now has nothing else to do.

It seems to me that every year or so workers in one of our public utilities or essential services go on strike. In most cases these public utilities or essential services are monopolies, and there is a very limited choice of alternative service from a like source. These public utilities or essential services include such operations as Bell Canada, Ontario Hydro in this part of Canada, Air Canada, our post offices, ocean port facilities, grain handling facilities, our railways and suchlike.

Each time a strike or lockout takes place and one of these essential services closes, or its function is impaired, we, the public, suffer. To be sure, the companies and workers who are out of work suffer, but they have brought it upon themselves and that is their business. It becomes our business when we, the general public, are affected by the shutdown and become the pawns in a labour-management dispute. Each time one of our essential services closes down or its operation is impaired, thousands of innocent people, not involved in the dispute but working in related and dependent industries, are also put out of work. In many cases businesses suffer to the extent that they may be permanently closed down.

When the post office workers were on strike illegally last year, Dunn and Bradstreet reported numerous businesses were forced to close permanently because of a lack of cash flow. When our port facilities are shut down, our railwaymen go on strike, or our grain handlers go on strike, the whole economy suffers and the innocent public have to shoulder the burden of the comparatively few who have closed down the essential service in question. This should not be so. The political parties of this country ought to move to protect the public from the direct effects of strikes in essential services.

The party to which I belong, the Progressive Conservative party, has for some time now advocated a two-fold policy in this field. Firstly, in essential services under federal jurisdiction we would encourage collective bargaining throughout the term of a contract, not just at the end. But we would clearly indicate that we would withdraw the right to strike, and that binding arbitration would be the final step in resolving differences.

Secondly, the Progressive Conservative Party has endorsed the recommendations presented to the government in December, 1968, contained in the Woods Commission Report for the establishment of a public interest disputes commission. Such a public interest disputes commission would define which services are essential and would set up a procedure for binding arbitration.

● (1750)

Our country and our economy cannot afford national disruptions of our essential services which stop functioning because of a selfish view, all of which penalizes the public at large.

Unfortunately parliament today is again being used as a court of final resort. We are put in the position of the final arbiter, and this should not be the case. In this way we are derogating the responsibilities of parliament which should be to pass impartially laws for all Canadians to follow.

When parliament is drawn into a dispute involving strikes it ends up taking sides. By becoming involved, parliament encourages other parties not to negotiate in good faith. We may be encouraging other parties who are at this time at the bargaining table to break off negotiations, to protract negotiations, or to cause such a disruption that their case will finally be forced before parliament. If this were to become the norm, parliament could ultimately end up carrying on labour negotiations for the whole session.

Another unfortunate aspect of these matters coming before parliament is that politicians usually give in to politically expedient decisions. Frequently, if not always, when parliament becomes involved a settlement is inflationary. The best example of this, and the one which has been frequently cited as the cornerstone from which our economic difficulties have stemmed, especially in management-union relations, is the dispute and strike of the Montreal port workers in 1966, when a settlement was reached by the government of Mr. Pearson. The government was then under the gun because unless there was a settlement Expo '67 could not take place. Since that time we have not had evidence of negotiations taking place honestly in good faith. We have not had evidence that the demand for intervention has lessened, but we have seen a general trend toward inflationary settlements.

Today we are talking about a settlement referred to as being in the nature of 48 per cent to 61 per cent. The government brought on this unfortunate situation by its intervention. It did not let the bargaining process complete its normal course, and it did not use the legislation it had on hand under the labour code. Perhaps through coercion it would have persuaded the parties to get together, but instead it blandly came out and endorsed the Perry report.

As a result there was no need to negotiate further. The unions already felt they had what they wanted. What sense was there for the pools to negotiate? The case had already been settled. In effect the government had settled this strike, but it forgot one main ingredient. It forgot in August to bring forward a means of implementing the settlement it had dictated.

Why did the government waste time once it had confirmed the Perry report? Why did it wait an additional six weeks before bringing this matter before the House of Commons? The government had already indicated its intention to place the matter before parliament for legislative action. I suggest it should have called the House together immediately rather than creating additional problems in our economy by this delay.

Experience has shown that the government procrastinated last year during the railway strike, causing untold hardship to the economy in the very same way.

We should stop using parliament as a tool in labour-management disputes. We must put the interest of the public at large ahead of the narrow interests of two parties to a dispute. We must act to protect the public at large rather than one side or the other to a labour dispute. We must stop legislating the settlement of inflationary and politically expedient demands.

This parliament and its politicians should follow the advice given to the government in 1968 by implementing the recommendations of the Woods Commission. Unfortunately the government has failed to give leadership in any long-term sense, and has followed again the politically expedient course. It has added to inflationary expectations, and for that reason it would be impossible for me to support the inept handling of the situation suggested in the bill introduced by the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock. I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, while I hope to make a contribution at another time in another debate, since we have interrupted the debate on the Speech from the Throne I shall not take the time of the House, which is rather limited, to extend congratulatory messages to you and other hon. gentlemen who have already participated in that debate, because I want to keep basically to the issue, Bill C-12, designed to put the grain handlers in Vancouver back to work.

Without any ado, I wish to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues in this House that this is a sad night in Canada when we begin to legislate Bill C-12 which, for the first time in Canadian parliamentary history, asks the parliament of Canada to decide to dot the i's and cross the t's in a labour contract.

This is a precedent which will come back to haunt this chamber, be it in the thirtieth parliament or in ensuing parliaments, because it is a wrong precedent. In the past we had proper precedents and necessary actions in a legislative way to get essential industries back to work. We convened parliament and parliament went to work without going into the issues under dispute between labour and management. What was done, and done reluctantly initially, was in a broad general way to appoint an arbitrator. Then the legislation in effect said that the people concerned should go back to work and that the arbitrator would rule on the issues in a just way, and adjudicate on merit, with fair play to both sides.

But here we have a government that was given a mandate on July 8. With all the momentum its majority mandate gives it, what does this government do? It makes Rip Van Winkle look like a piker with its dozing and snoozing.

Here we have the benevolent House leader, the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), straight from the world of diplomacy. He comes to the floor of the House to help iron out some of the difficulties here. Mr. Speaker, if this is any indication of how this parliament will look as we continue our deliberations in the ensuing months, then all the minister's diplomatic prowess will be challenged because although we in this party intend to co-operate in respect of legislation, we will not be used as a rubber stamp to make respectable something which is not respectable simply because this government slumbered for three months following the election.

I left my little home in the valley in Nova Scotia at 6.30 this morning and boarded a plane. I do not see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) here so I cannot congratulate him for Air Canada running on time. Finally I got here to this beautiful city. While the sun was lighting up the St. Lawrence and the beautiful country in that area I thought of several things. I thought with almost sadness: good gracious, why am I coming back to the city of Ottawa to become involved in an issue involving the west coast which has been considered by Dr. Perry and other people for months, people who understand the situation very well?

Is it not a sad commentary that the first item of legislation with which the government deals should be this blasphemous piece of legislation which parliament for the first time decides in its omnipotent wisdom to write into a contract?

I see my friend, a former minister, who used to practice a little labour law in the province of Manitoba, present in the House. I also see an authority on parliamentary procedure in this House who, even though he is along in chronological years, is young in heart and never abused the rules. He and his colleagues stand up in this House today and try to pick at Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for opposing this bill. An hon. member I respect, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), said that because Dr. Perry thought the union should get most things, they will agree with the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Not "oh, oh". If you want to say something, get up off your derrière. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) wishes to use some of his forensic talents, let him stand in his place.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I was just congratulating the hon. gentleman on his bilingualism.

Mr. Nowlan: We should stay with the issue and not follow the red herrings because, if we do so, some of the bones will prick and hurt. Think of the hypocrisy of the NDP in saying that because Dr. Perry gave this and this and this to the union, then this will be legislation in the public interest. I can hear those gentlemen deny the echoes of their former leader who upheld his own philosophical conviction on the rights of all groups if Dr. Perry had said that the elevator companies, and the pool companies, should get this and this and this. In that case the conduct of these gentlemen would be very unparliamentary.

● (2010)

I say this bill is not a blessing, Mr. Speaker, because of the precedent it sets. If this parliament is to write the detail of a contract it will be the first time for that to occur.

The things that give me more cause for concern are the contracts that have yet to go to collective bargaining and those that are already in the collective bargaining process. Because of the precedent we are setting it is very likely they will end up on the floor of this chamber. I think that the new members of this House, who come here thinking they will be going to the core of issues before the country, helping to look after the economy, and who find themselves concerned with this bill as their piece of legislative business, will be disappointed.

Among the labour contracts coming up for renegotiation are those with the Cape Breton Development Corporation, Norando Mines Ltd., United Aircraft of Canada Ltd., Air Canada, the Maritime Employers' Association and the railways. Some, if not all of these are to be renegotiated by December 31.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to my hon. friends opposite that it is ridiculous for us to be setting this precedent tonight and having this bill as the first item of business in the thirtieth parliament. This government was given a majority by the Canadian people, and we have to accept that. That is the way the ball game is played and my leader will play fair. I will match him against any leader in this House. However, having set this precedent I predict that we will be known as "the parliament in labour" and no abortion bill is going to help this parliament. We are going to become befuddled, confused and over involved in the details of labour disputes that affect the national interest.

I am glad to see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) here tonight, Mr. Speaker. I think it was the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who dubbed him and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) the Bobsey Twins, the Stardust Twins or something like that. There is no doubt that the intervention of the Minister of Labour is a serious matter, and we saw the power play of the minister when he told unions and management that they had better negotiate on the basis of the Perry report or parliament would be called back to pass legislation.

An hon. Member: They said that before the election.

Mr. Nowlan: Because of the election nothing happened, and here we are tonight debating this legislation. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that because of the unsatisfactory labour situation in this country, because of the galloping inflation in this country and because of the inactivity of this government, we are going to find ourselves involved in more labour disputes in this thirtieth parliament than in all of the parliamentary history of Canada. I say again we are going to be called "the parliament in labour," and the people of Canada are going to be disgusted with us.

Before the last election this party proposed a mechanism for resolving disputes affecting the public interest on an ongoing basis instead of this stop-start confrontation.

An hon. Member: Let us hear it.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know who that was, Mr. Speaker, but I think he was a new member because he did not have the timbre of voice of the practised heckler.

We were to have the Public Interest Disputes Commission, which is supposed to follow serious issues affecting labour-management relations in areas of public interest, on an ongoing basis. It would lance the boil that so often rises in labour management disputes and sincere men, honestly differing, could have drawn the fester. I am not casting blame on the Vancouver grain handlers or on the elevator operators, Mr. Speaker.

The Perry report is not clear and it needs to be interpreted. Ad hoc, stop-start resolutions of disputes in the public service are just an insult to the parties involved, and indeed to all Canadians. I gather that the Minister of Labour is now expressing interest in a public disputes commission. Apparently he is going to call labour and management and other interested parties together to discuss the merits of collective bargaining procedures in an impasse.

The Liberal Party has been in power since 1963, Mr. Speaker,—and we still have the Minister of Labour, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) and the other ministers who have been reshuffled. I point out to them that there are two basic tenets that must be part of any public interest disputes commission or any resolution of a contract. One is productivity and the other is participation.

I have full sympathy for all working men. We lag far behind other jurisdictions where the working man participates in the boardrooms and in management decisions. If students can picket universities and get a spokesman on the senate of universities, why cannot men, who have to earn their bread and butter through their work, have a voice in the boardrooms from time to time?

I think my friends opposite have said that we are the party of the establishment, but just look at the front benches over there, Mr. Speaker. They have either transplanted deputy ministers or some rogues from the St. James Street or Bay Street interests. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) can smile that smile that charmed the Arabs and the Jews. It did not produce any oil, however. He was deputy minister of finance and also of trade and commerce, and he dealt poker hands with the hoi polloi and nabods. That is why there is no concern for the working man.

The Postmaster General can scribble notes and give one of his speeches but it does not matter.

I say seriously, Mr. Speaker, that in labour-management discussions you have to have some type of measurement of productivity, and you also have to allow the working man some participation in management decisions. I go even further and say allow him some participation in the profits.

We have talked about the west coast but there is also a serious problem on the east coast. What has escaped the attention of this House and the country is that Thunder Bay and the Lakehead were closed by a strike on August 8. All movement of grain eastward from Thunder Bay was stopped until a few days ago when a new contract granting 65 per cent to 75 per cent over two years was signed with the Merchant Service Guild.

Where is the direction and leadership from this government to show whether labour contracts become inflationary or not? I suggest that if we set a precedent and agree to a settlement of between 65 and 75 per cent in an essential industry we will make the St. Lawrence Seaway settlement of 1966 look both like a pygmy and a piker compared with the wage scale being approved under this contract. If we approve of inflationary settlements like this, what does it mean? The Speech from the Throne is meaningless if this type of contract is passed without comment. We hear talk about an excess profits tax. We should also talk about an excess wage settlement tax, which should be imposed on wage increases not linked to productivity increases.

On the east coast, because of the strike at the Lakehead, we have only about 20,000 or 30,000 bushels of grain. If during this winter the railways are beset by labour or weather problems, what will happen to our supplies in Atlantic Canada? The Grain Council in Atlantic Canada says we need 250,000 tons of grain, so that we will not have to kill our hens, our cattle and hogs because we cannot feed them. Unless we get grain our situation will be desperate.

That brings me to another point. We have fantastic elevator space in Atlantic Canada, yet speaker after speaker has said that we, in Atlantic Canada, need additional elevator capacity. Actually talks are going on right now about closing down our existing elevators, which have been used only to about 30 per cent of their capacity. What is wrong with the grain distribution system in Canada? We in the east need grain for domestic consumption and export, yet grain elevators we built have operated only at about 30 per cent of capacity during the last few years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: My friends opposite can smile and smirk and beat their desks, but they remind me of seals which you can see in Stanley Park zoo. You know, all this reminds me of a book written by Dr. George Grant entitled, "Lament for a Nation". It is sad, Mr. Speaker. Here we are, in the thirtieth parliament of Canada, and the first piece of legislation we are asked to pass is an ad hoc measure to plug a hole because something has broken down on the west coast. All sorts of things will break down on the east and west coasts before the end of this year, and parliament will be debating labour problems until they come out of our ears. Unless and until we see some leadership from the treasury benches opposite, the pathetic prophecy of George Grant, made years ago, will be realized. That is why some people are getting pretty disgusted with this institution.

An hon. Member: How relevant is this?

Mr. Nowlan: My friends to the left are wondering about the relevance of parliament. Let me say that parliament will not be considered with respect if we say the things that need to be said using parliamentary niceties which lose their punch, when the government does not deal with problems which it must see looming on the horizon and reacts in this ad hoc way.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, although I was reluctant to participate in the debate, the remarks of my old friend from Vancouver, now the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), convinced me to participate. If there is one thing all of us in my party wish to do, it is to expedite passage of this bill, passage which is being delayed by the parliamentary manoeuvering of the party to my right.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member, for whom I have the greatest respect and admiration, ought to amend his last statement. He should recall that his party refused the offer which I made on behalf of my party, to sit all through Monday night and pass this bill.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, if I may deal with the point of order, I tell my learned and respected colleague that we are willing to continue with this bill and pass it through all stages in 24 hours. There is no way that we are going to delay passage of this bill.

If I may return to the point I made concerning my old friend, Pat Nowlan, from Annapolis Valley—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Leggatt: As he is from Vancouver, I would have thought he would have retained some west coast sanity. Obviously having moved to the Maritimes, he has failed to perceive the problems of the west coast. He is hemmed into his valley and does not see things in their national perspective.

Speaking of hypocrisy, let me say this: if you examine the record over the last 10 years of conciliation reports you find that the Conservative party has never supported a conciliation report except when it favoured the employer. The Liberal party has done exactly the same thing. Let me remind you of the rail strike, and of how long it took to recall parliament once the conciliation report was handed down. That report favoured the rail companies, and the Conservative and Liberal parties joined hands in supporting that particular conciliation report.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? I know the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). He and I used to exchange remarks years ago when we served on school boards in British Columbia. Since my honourable friend brought the subject up, can he say when in the last 10 years parliament has enshrined in legislation provisions contained in a conciliation report?

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the bill which was passed in the case of the rail strike contained provisions almost indentical to those contained in the report. That report had been rejected by the unions. If you look at the history of labour relations in this country, you find that parliament has been called into session immediately a rail strike occurs, and the legislation passed is legislation embodying suggestions which have previously been rejected by the trade unions. In the case I am talking about, a little over half of the unions' demands were dealt with by the report. Parliament was recalled within six weeks of the strike, as I recall.

Why are we dealing with this legislation now? Every day we spend debating this bill is costing the workers on the coast and farmers on the prairies thousands of dollars. I submit that this is a futile exercise. We should end this debate as soon as possible.

I took exception to some remarks made yesterday by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) regarding this party and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who comes from Saskatchewan. The minister said that that hon. member is on top of his list for elimination. Yes, the old arrogance is back. The minister's attitude can best be described this way, "Today Saskatchewan; tomorrow the world". The power has gone to the minister's head. But the political world is very unsafe and I would not count chickens in Saskatchewan until all the eggs hatch.

There is an old axiom of trade unionism—no contract, no work. These grain handlers on the coast have been without a contract since November 30, 1973. They have really bent over backwards to accomodate this country in terms of service. To agree to what obviously is a settlement that is not acceptable to either party does no service to farmers on the prairies or workers on the coast. I must say that the directors of those elevator companies and co-ops have done no service to their farmers on the prairies by misrepresenting the facts in this case.

I refer particularly to United Grain Growers Limited which sent out wonderful material showing that the farmers overwhelmingly supported the position of United Grain Growers. If you examine that particular piece of guff, and that is the best description I can give it, it does not say anything about demurrage charges. It does not compare the cost of demurrage with the cost of settlement. The farmers were not given the full story. Those who work with their hands on the farm should have been invited to participate directly in those negotiations.

The negotiations have been poisoned for a very long time. A good example of that poison in the whole atmosphere was the decision of the grain firms to stop benefit payments following that strike. That is an almost unheard of act. It is an act of cruelty and vindictiveness. There is just no way you can expect a settlement in that atmosphere.

I do not agree with those who suggest that the decision by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to say that the Perry report was supported by the government exacerbated this situation. There is no doubt that the grain workers were going to drop their tools and leave their employment at that time. That did not contribute to the problem.

The problem is that the Minister of Labour did not ask that parliament be called into session. I can understand why. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had a very trying election campaign. There is no doubt that he was tired and had to take it easy for about six weeks. We know what a great job he did in that campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: However, the Prime Minister should have thought about the interests of the country. There is no doubt about the excuse given by the Minister of Labour for not calling parliament. He said that to have recalled parliament for a special emergency session to deal with the dispute would have turned the House of Commons into a scapegoat. Surely the minister is still not saying tonight that we are a scapegoat. That is the argument he used for not calling parliament back. The argument that parliament did not need to be called back really will not wash.

I can understand the minister's problem. I understand the pressures of cabinet and the summer vacation. I hope we will all be a little more diligent in terms of the next labour dispute which we are bound to have. I will not delay this any longer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), it must be understood that if he speaks at this time, he will close the debate. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the debate yesterday and today—

An hon. Member: You learned something.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, I did learn something. I learned that some do not have much to contribute. Some so-called experts have been disseminating nonsense. I can't learn from them.

There have been two outstanding areas of criticism. The first is that this is an inflationary settlement for which the government will have to take responsibility. The other is that the government, by identifying itself with the Perry recommendations, undermined the possibility of a settlement. I think these arguments are fallacious.

In closing I want to reiterate some of the principal points. First, dealing with the inflationary argument, there has been a propaganda effort put forward by some. This is certainly being done on the part of the companies involved. To a degree it is being mimicked and endorsed, I think ill-advisedly, by some members of the opposition. I am referring to this matter of an alleged 61 per cent settlement.

If there is a desire to try and establish a benchmark, it is to reiterate something like this. On any type of impartial examination, that is entirely false. It is not a 61 per cent settlement. Anyone who has had experience comparing various wage rates in various classifications, from data put out by the Department of Labour, Statistics Canada and others will know the comparisons. They compare all that unions with 500 or more employees have recently received in a collective bargaining session. They talk about wages. They do not include pensions, fringe benefits or other things won at the bargaining table, such as COLA.

This 61 percent figure includes all these. It is not accurate. It is excessive. If you want to compare it in terms of wage settlements won elsewhere, you must look at statistics. All you have to do is examine the record. It will show that this is marginally above an average of 15 per cent per year over a period of two years. That compares favourably with wage settlements on the west coast.

When you compare this wage settlement with all those other settlements, it stands up. Some of those other settlements of 17 per cent a year, or 10 per cent a year, do not show all the fringe benefits that were won. In most cases some fringe benefits were won. They do not show pension concessions or COLA. Opposition members talk about wages. If you want to compare this wage settlement with others, you must be objective and fair. You must compare it on the basis as the comparisons are established. That does not include fringe benefits such as COLA or pensions. There we are talking in terms of a 15 per cent average per year.

I wish to emphasize one other point. If you wish to add all these other benefits, you should look at the companies' own figures. Presumably there will be an opportunity tomorrow in committee.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) talked about information sent out by United Grain Growers. It is quite true that they did not tell the farmers a lot of things. What they did tell them was inaccurate. They tried to get a response on what they did tell them. They talked about 61 per cent. It can be easily seen that they double counted the COLA clause. Would someone please tell me why it would be in the interests of the company to exaggerate a figure that even the union is not claiming? The union is prepared to sit down and say it is not 61 per cent. The union says there is double counting and it will accept a much lower figure. It is ridiculous to say it is still claiming a 61 per cent settlement.

I think this indicates to hon. members that the companies are not interested in settling this dispute. They want to make political marks if they can. They wish to embarrass the government. If they can get several allies in the official opposition to reiterate the falsification and the errors, they are going to do it. However, this is one of the matters to be examined by the committee tomorrow. We can point out the gross errors where the companies have intentionally, ill-advisedly, or unintentionally misinformed the farmers. This will be done on the basis of what they did tell them, let alone what they did not tell them.

The other reason given is that it seems inflationary. I ask hon. members opposite how it can be inflationary for Dr. Perry to have recommended for 550 grain handlers something less than 3,600 longshoremen have been receiving for the past year and a half, working side by side, and in many cases, doing the same work?

I have heard some members argue that grain handlers have a worse job than the longshoremen—it is dirty, it is dusty, it is harmful to the respiratory system, and so on. Yet these men have been paid comparatively less than longshoremen for a year and a half. And people call this settlement inflationary!

Do members opposite want to talk about percentages? I think it is idiotic to do so, because one ought to consider the equity involved in determining each particular case, and I have already given reasons for thinking there is a great deal of equity in this report of Dr. Perry. But when members opposite talk about the inflationary effect of a solution along those lines, I hear very little from them about the excess profits which are being made, the exorbitant returns being gathered by some people, and about what some people outside the unions are making.

We don't hear anything about the professions, for example. We do not hear about what some of the executives are making. Why not? If members opposite are concerned about equity, why do they limit their concern about inflation to the effects of a settlement with 550 grain handlers? If they want to talk about combatting inflation, let them include everybody else. Let them include the professions and excess profits being made by certain corporate bodies.

If they want to talk that way, I am prepared to listen. But if they are only prepared to ensure grain handlers get less than those working beside them, all I can say is that I consider it to be a very anti-labour posture, and certainly an unjust posture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Many members have viewed inflation in terms of how much it will increase prices. Well, the price of a bushel of wheat now is about five dollars—the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) could tell the House more about that than I can.

An hon. Member: Two dollars fifty.

Mr. Lang: Five dollars and seventy cents.

Mr. Baldwin: Where?

Mr. Lang: At Thunder Bay.

Mr. Baldwin: Farmers are not getting that.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Does the hon. member know what this settlement will do to the cost per bushel? The effect will be marginal. About one cent per bushel. Do hon. members wish to call that inflationary?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Baldwin: It is the well-known domino effect.

Mr. Nowlan: What about the domino multiplier effect?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As I see it, we should do what is just in each particular case. Maybe we should apply the reasoning of the Official Opposition to ourselves. We gave ourselves a 50 per cent increase as Members of Parliament. Perhaps when we talk about raises for ourselves next time we shall all start talking about equity.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Give us Dr. Perry.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Can I assume that when it comes to raises for members, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) will accept the recommendations of Dr. Perry?

Mr. Nowlan: You give me Dr. Perry.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I turn, now, to another aspect in terms of inflationary pressure. Many members of the opposition have sought to debunk the catch-up theory, and most unjustly, I think. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and others talked about the Lake Carriers' Association—the pilots and engineers. They spoke of a settlement involving 60 per cent or 65 per cent. Let them talk to many of the enlightened employers who voluntarily agreed to that settlement. I will tell them precisely what these employers will say, because my officials and I were involved for many days in the events surrounding that settlement. The employers agreed to that settlement on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Baldwin: You foisted it on them.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The outstanding reason was this: they were encountering manpower problems. They could not get second, third and fourth class engineers who had been trained for five or six years before getting their tickets, to be jacks of all trades and work for the same rates of pay as carpenters, electricians and so on. It is within this framework that, even in the absence of the unions, the employers would have found it necessary to concede significant increases to enable these men to catch up. Some of the members on the other side—I have in mind particularly, the hon. member for Hamilton West—were obviously not aware of this. To keep the industry viable, to keep the grain and the ore moving, they had to reach a settlement of that kind.

Today, when we are talking about grain handlers, the situation is the same. Unless the rates paid to these grain handlers, working under conditions deplorable as they are, are brought more into line with those paid to the longshoremen, I believe the companies will experience a great deal of difficulty in getting the manpower needed to man the operation.

An hon. Member: Give it a try.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am talking about paying realistic wage rates so as to get sufficient manpower to run the operation.

Now I should like to turn to another matter, and that is the whole question of whether we have, somehow, undermined the collective bargaining process by identifying with the Perry report. But first I wish to clear up one or two misconceptions.

The hon. member for Hamilton West asked why the union did not accept the Perry report after the government had identified itself with it. If he will check the facts he will find that the union did accept the Perry recommendations, and that the companies rejected them before the government became identified with the report.

Let me deal with yet another misconception advanced by the hon. member for Hamilton West. He sought to give the impression that the Perry report contained, not recommendations but suggestions—and that an attempt was being made to "put something over", or that some hanky-panky was involved here. If the hon. member would study the Labour Code he would realize that Dr. Perry had no other task but to bring in recommendations.

When a single commissioner brings in what he feels is a reasonable basis for a settlement, he is bringing in recommendations. That is what the statute calls for. And, once they are published, everyone knows exactly what they are. It is extremely naïve for the hon. member or anyone else to believe they could be interpreted as anything other than recommendations. Does one really expect a union leader to go to his membership and tell them not to pay any attention to them? How ludicrous, Mr. Speaker! These are recommendations. Dr. Perry was asked to bring in recommendations and, in fact, did bring in recommendations.

Let me come back to the charge that the government has undermined the collective bargaining process. When the companies came to Ottawa in May, before the government ever identified with the Perry recommendations, and we indicated that Dr. Perry had made certain recommendations, what did the companies and the union think about those recommendations?

We wondered whether they could arrive at some kind of settlement. It seemed that having made those recommendations they had to be taken seriously. But the companies said: "We are not going to accept the Perry recommendations as any type of basis for settlement. In fact, if we have no other alternative, there is going to be a work stoppage right away on that basis. There will have to be a work stoppage; we will have to have a strike or a lock-out".

Is that not indicative to hon. members that negotiation, bargaining, had completely broken down, and that an impasse had been reached? Of course that was the situation. What did the government do? When it had no alternative it had to implement section 188 of the Canada Labour Code and deny these workers the right to strike for up to three months. And not only that, it required them to work at the wage rate under the old collective bargaining agreement which expired in the previous November. It was already five months out of date and this added another three months to that.

Can any member of this House tell me that it would be fair and reasonable to expect those union leaders to require their workers to work under conditions like that without indicating to them what might be at the end of the road for them, especially when an independent report made by a third party was already made known? Would it be fair and reasonable, in anybody's estimation, to think that those workers could work under those conditions and would be prepared to do so? I ask each member to ask himself that question, and he will have to admit that the workers must be given some assurance. But this step avoided a breakdown of operations for three months.

This brings me to the point where the exercise of power under section 188 came to an end, which was roughly eight days after the return of the writs. I and my officials made every effort to try to reach a collective agreement. We tried, between the time when the power under section 188 expired and the time when the strike occurred on August 26, to reach agreement. Then after the lock-out or strike occurred we again tried right up until a week before the House came into session.

I ask hon. members; is that not what a Minister of Labour and his officials are supposed to do in a free collective bargaining system? Are they not supposed to make every effort possible to try to arrive at a settlement before using parliament to deny the rights of these workers? Some hon. members, the hon. member for Hamilton

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

West for one, and others, said that we should have called parliament into session very shortly after the strike occurred. Would we not then have been accused of acting arbitrarily and unnecessarily without making every effort to reach a settlement? Would we not have been accused of depriving these workers of their rights?

Did hon. members hear the union leaders and membership screaming for parliament to be called right after the strike occurred? They did not want parliamentary intervention; what they wanted was the collective bargaining system to be given a chance to work. They wanted to meet with the employers all through September and arrive at an agreement, and that is what should have happened. Those of us who believed in free collective bargaining made every possible effort to try to make it work before calling parliament.

All I am saying is that hon. members, such as the hon. member for Hamilton West and others, cannot complain on the one hand that we did not call parliament, which would have deprived these workers of their fundamental rights, and on the other hand say that we should not take away their bargaining rights but let the free collective bargaining system work. You cannot suck and whistle at the same time, but this is exactly what some members of the official opposition are trying to do on this particular issue.

During the course of this debate I have heard more reactionary, anti-labour speeches than I have heard in quite a long time. I was very surprised at how reactionary and anti-labour some hon. members can be in this situation when they hear the reasons why this particular report is justified. I suspect some members were quoting from company proposals and were urging them upon the House. I should like to read one viewpoint, if I may, expressed by one of the companies, the Palliser Wheat Growers. I am quoting their newsletter No. 33 for September, 1974:

> As has happened too often in the past, the evertrusting grain grower, watching from the sidelines, will be the big loser. Those providing a service in the grains industry are playing loosely with the producers' livelihood as they endeavour to promote their own vested interest. We are painfully aware that the major costs of any settlement will be borne by the primary producer.

Then listen to this, Mr. Speaker:

> We often cite wage settlements and rising prices as the main culprits in inflation; I suggest, however, that a contributing factor is the criminal waste that results from the non-productive use of capital equipment and manpower during the shutdown of an industry. It is unthinkable that responsible leaders in a so-called enlightened society will permit huge investments in ships, railway equipment, buildings, ports, and manpower as well, to stand idle while differences are settled.

I also refer to a report in the Regina Leader-Post headed "Saskatchewan groups want action in grain dispute". It quotes Mr. Nelson in the following terms:

> Terming the present labour dispute—

That is a reference to the dispute with the grain companies.

> —which has shut down grain exports from Vancouver the "farmer's own little Watergate," Mr. Nelson said grain company officials are guilty of "gross mismanagement and an irresponsible attitude."

There you have what one group thinks about this situation, Mr. Speaker. Also during this debate I have not heard very many members quote what the union has had to say.

Since I have heard what others have had to say, namely, the companies, perhaps it would not be out of order to put on the record what Mr. Kancs and the union have had to say, if for no other purpose than simply fundamental fairness. I am quoting from the brief that I believe was sent by local 333 to all members of parliament. Talking about the employers' campaign to discredit the Perry report, they say:

> They have completely ignored the issue of parity of wages with the longshoring industry.

The brief goes on:

> The grain workers are mindful of inflation as everybody is. But if the employers' argument had any validity the grain workers should not be awarded any increase whatsoever. Even a one-cent an hour increase would be inflationary.
> We submit that the employers are raising a red herring, and grasping for public sympathy, when they talk about inflation. A settlement based on the Perry report will be inflationary only if the industry fails to take the necessary steps to increase productivity in grain handling.

The rest of the union's submission sets out in detailed fashion how it is prepared to co-operate in increasing productivity. After all we have heard about this inefficient industry, if the union is prepared to go on record as supporting increased productivity, and it gets co-operation from management in doing so, then this settlement may not be inflationary at all. I suggest we would then see a great increase in productivity.

● (2100)

One has only to trace the history of the negotiations that have taken place between the grain companies and the grain handlers over the past decade to realize why we are faced with this present situation. A history of the 1960's will show that three majority conciliation reports, signed by the chairmen, were rejected by the companies. In 1952 the late Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent in frustration wanted to take over the companies, and I quoted him in that reference. Again at that time it was the chairman's report which was rejected by the companies. We have witnessed an almost uninterrupted series of rejections. There have been settlements in intervening years, but when there has been a rejection of a report made by a third independent party, be it the report of a commissioner or the board chairman, it has been a rejection by the companies.

Is it any wonder that when members ask why we do not have a settlement in this particular situation, the more enlightened ones suggest that we go to the root of the causes of the disasters in management-labour relations in this industry? It is for this reason I have suggested the appointment of an industrial commission.

I have already given some indication of the history of what has happened, and of the efforts that have been expended to get to a settlement. When one goes a step further one must ask himself what other reason there can be for the situation other than the fact that ill will has been festering for years and years in terms of management-labour relations in this industry?

I strongly suspect that if any member of this House put himself into the role of a mediator trying to get a settlement he would like to think there was economic pressure on both sides to settle. When there is such pressure the likelihood of reaching a settlement is much greater.

Do we have that kind of economic pressure on both sides to this dispute? Certainly the workers were on strike and were not drawing unemployment insurance benefits for five and a half or six weeks, so they were under pressure. What was the situation so far as the companies are concerned? Are they now under pressure? Perhaps if we look at that aspect of the matter we will find the key to why there has been no settlement here.

My friend and colleague, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, indicated that the losses involved, even the demurrage charges, are not losses to the companies. These costs are passed on ultimately to the farmers. The companies are not paying any of the costs of this particular industrial relations fiasco. What is the pressure on the companies then to settle? I suggest this is a consideration we must take into account.

The companies do not have to pay the costs of this dispute. We now have a sellers' market. It has already been indicated that the companies are not terribly concerned about the employees. Keeping this in mind it is apparent that there is little motivation for the companies to settle. The companies are convinced that sooner or later they will sell the grain they now have on hand. In addition they know they will not have to pay the demurrage, so where is the pressure to settle? Why should they not turn down the report and use the whole thing politically to embarrass the government?

Every time a settlement is suggested the companies are tempted to embarrass the government and ridicule it across the country, even in the face of inflationary circumstances. The companies do not have to accept their responsibilities in arriving at a settlement. They do not even have to justify their actions to a membership, let alone the government. They use the government as an excuse for not accepting their own responsibilities. In addition to that the companies are able to get what I consider to be fairly enlightened members of the official opposition to buy their argument, hook line and sinker, and reiterate it, as they have done for the past two days.

If there is one question that should be asked during this debate it is whether some of these companies know what would be the entire cost of this settlement. I am referring to the cost of the settlement that could have been accepted at any time by the companies knowing full well, as every member of this House knows, that if parliament were recalled to settle the issue it must settle on the basis of other known precedents, and could not require the men to go back to work for anything less than the wage package recommended by the Perry report. I suggest everyone knows that. Everyone knows that there would not have been a settlement based on anything less than what was recommended in that report.

No one with any familiarity with the labour situation on the west coast would expect a settlement based on anything less than what was recommended by the independent third party, with any hope of ratification. Surely members of this House are not so naïve as to think otherwise. In full awareness of some of these hypocrisies how can hon. members reiterate the nonsensical and idiotic things that have been said here for the last two days?

I suggested earlier that these companies should be asked whether they know what the cost of this settlement would have been. The entire cost of the settlement over the next two-year period would have been $2.5 million. If that is the case, how can these companies justify allowing these demurrage charges, which they will not have to pay, but which the farmers will have to pay, to reach $10 million? Is that an indication of responsibility on the part of the companies? Is it a sign of responsibility on the part of the companies to allow these deplorable employee-employer relationships to develop in this industry? I suggest to hon. members of the official opposition—

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am just about to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we have been very patient. The minister is subject to the same time limitation imposed on other speakers, that is 20 minutes. While we do not mind listening to the hon. minister, when we have to listen to more than 20 minutes of inaccuracies it becomes a bit tedious.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of time had occurred to me during the course of the minister's remarks, but I was faced with two problems. When the minister gets to his feet members expect that he is closing the debate and there is some question as to whether he is in fact subject to the order. In any event, the order specifically excepts the first speaker for each party, and that includes the minister, so I had some doubt as to whether I should interrupt the minister on the basis of the time limitation, or on the basis of 40 minutes under Standing Order 31. In any event I understand the minister was about to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to conclude with these comments. We have heard the arguments of members on both sides. We have listened to innumerable speeches. This is a controversial issue and we certainly have had ample opportunity to express our views. We know the strike is damaging, particularly as it has gone on as long as it has. All I can do is urge all hon. members to send this matter to the committee, where undoubtedly it will be thoroughly considered, it is to be hoped with dispatch, as there is a duty on the part of all of us to end this strike as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Munro) (Hamilton East) which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SHARING COST OF NURSING HOMES AND HOME CARE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the minister whether the federal government was considering cost sharing in respect of beds in chronic nursing homes as it does in the case of active treatment hospitals. It is my belief that the federal government is substantially adding to health costs by not accepting this proposal.

It must be remembered that the federal government brought in the so-called Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act in 1957 whereby the federal government shared the cost of the program with the provinces. Each paid roughly about 50 per cent of the cost. At that time one could enter and leave hospital when the doctor felt that treatment so required. There were few if any chronic cases. The only exceptions were mental cases.

● (2210)

Extended health care did not come in until much later, when galloping health costs were swallowing up money faster than it could be budgeted. Hospital costs under the national health plan have risen from $20 per bed per day to $100 per bed per day in a period of about 15 years. In other words, the cost has risen five times in less than 15 years.

Health care costs are increasing at twice the rate of the gross national product. Surely no loopholes should be left unguarded. The cost now in Ontario has reached the astronomical figure of $2 billion. It is estimated, at the present rate, that in ten years it will be over $11 billion.

This could be a serious factor because health care may be cut in a very sensitive area which, in the long run, would cost much more. A patient who goes into an active treatment hospital today may be ready for discharge in two or three weeks. He may be able to return to his home if there is anyone there to care for him, or arrangements may be made for a homemaker to go to his home. The unfortunate thing is that the homemaker remains in the home for eight hours or less a day, which means that the patient is alone for a period of 16 hours unless he has relatives or friends to look after him. This type of home care service is completely inadequate.

What is required is that someone live in the patient's home until the patient has improved sufficiently to look after himself. This is not adequately funded. If a patient at the end of that treatment must go to an after-care facility, or extended care facility, there is a roadblock. In many cases a period of days or weeks expires before such a patient can get accommodation in an extended care bed.

There are not sufficient beds. We must have more facilities of this type. Such facilities could look after chronic cases exceptionally well. The nurses and associated workers become adept at looking after such patients.

Now we hear talk about cutting costs. Here is an ideal place to do it. An active treatment bed costs perhaps as high as $100 per day, while an extended care bed costs $17 per day. A patient could stay for a period of five days in an extended care facility for what it would cost to stay one day in an active treatment bed. In Canada there are nearly 1300 hospitals with 146,000 beds. If a patient could be sent to a health care nursing home, there would be a saving of two days in hospital per patient. This would lower costs and not interfere with the efficiency of care. The proportion of the cost in respect of building homes of this type will become greater and these homes will become more and more crowded as more and more people enter the older age group.

The age group from 65 up is the fastest growing in the country. It is the group that incurs shortened and less acute illness, and more and more chronic vascular disease and degenerative disease. It is to care for those people with adequate facilities that we must prevent cut-backs. To cut back would be a retrograde step in the health field.

The minister has accepted responsibilities in respect of some extended care facilities, and I now ask him to accept his responsibilities in providing health care not only for the acutely ill but for the chronically ill, that is, all those requiring extended care. Then he will have accepted the principle that surely is fundamental: that the most serious thing of all to any person is a long drawn out illness, often without hope of rehabilitation. It is for those people that I make this plea tonight.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) that the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) is well known in this House when it comes to matters of health. It is a pleasure for me to reply to such a notable health critic.

The government is well aware of the matter of rising health costs. It is aware of the way in which the present cost sharing programs encourage the continued use of high cost services, such as active treatment beds, when services like nursing homes or home care programs might well suffice. It is for this reason that the federal government proposed at the federal-provincial conference of ministers of health in May, 1973, a health cost financing formula.

The formula recognized the need to afford to provinces a greater flexibility in the determination of their priorities, as well as recognizing the importance of creating the incentive and the means to rationalize the health care system as a whole. At that time the provinces did not commit themselves to this formula, pending further study. It now appears that the provinces do not accept the proposed formula. The federal government is awaiting new proposals on the alternative solutions they would suggest.

The hon. member is aware that sharing in the cost of nursing home care is available under the Canada Assistance Plan where care is provided to persons in need. The department announced in February, 1974, that the government would be prepared to continue sharing where provinces choose to introduce programs based on the universal availability of the benefit. A measure to this effect is expected to be introduced this session to authorize such sharing in respect to the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta, which have, to date, introduced universal nursing home care programs.

TRANSPORT—ALLEGED ACTION OF LAURENTIAN PILOTAGE AUTHORITY CHANGING BASIS FOR PILOT'S CERTIFICATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, on October 2, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand)—who has been good enough to remain here this evening and I want to thank him for that—in answer to my question on when the Desjardins report commissioned by him pursuant to section 14(5) of the Pilotage Act would be made public, replied "—as soon as we complete its study".

That is fair enough, Madam Speaker, but while this study is proceeding there are a few more questions that I hope will be taken under advisement and answered by the minister.

[Mr. Rynard.]

First and foremost, why has the government in its wisdom given the pilotage authorities the complete and total power to regulate the issuance of pilotage certificates? If you stop to examine the logic here, it makes as much sense as designing a parachute which will open on impact.

Without in any way blaming the Laurentian Pilotage Authority, which after all will naturally do its best to extend its influence, it must be remembered that the pilotage authorities in this country set examination standards, conduct examinations, and have complete and total control over whether a certificate is issued. It is obvious and elementary that it is not in the interests of a pilotage authority to issue great numbers of pilotage certificates. The issuance of each certificate reduces the income of the pilots in the area in question. I would ask the minister to change this rather extraordinary situation by making the necessary statutory amendments.

● (2220)

The next question I ask is: why did the Laurentian Pilotage Authority take the step it did in changing the basis for issuing pilotage certificates? Was this a quid pro quo, or an inducement, or one of the reasons for their settling the labour dispute last spring? I hope not, because such a suggestion would have cynical overtones.

Further to this line of reasoning, which I hope is not correct, can it be that the unusual conditions implicit in the Desjardin inquiry are designed to expedite the acceptance of the amendment? I say this because two of the conditions are somewhat unusual. For instance, condition No. 2 says:

> The investigation shall not be subject to the customary rules of evidence nor need evidence be taken under oath.

As a lawyer I find that strange. Condition No. 3 specifies that:

> The investigation shall not be conducted by means of public hearings but, on the contrary, through the investigation and examinations of those persons whom the said investigator deems possessed of evidence relevant to the subject matter and whose evidence should be examined in the public interest.

Another important issue concerns the opinion written by Professor W. R. Lederman, Professor of Law at Queen's University. Professor Lederman is a nationally recognized constitutional expert. In his opinion what is being proposed is unconstitutional.

Let me also ask this question. Does the proposed amendment help in any meaningful way to improve the safety, efficiency or economy of marine transportation. I believe the sooner these and other questions are answered, the better it will be for all concerned.

I want to see the Laurentian Pilotage Authority do well. I was one of those who supported their bid for parity with their west coast brethren in the Pacific coast pilotage authority when they encountered difficulty last spring in labour negotiations. There is an important issue at stake. The rights of others are involved, as well as the efficiency of our transportation system. The determination of those rights may depend on the contents of the Desjardin report.

I urge the minister, because of the importance of this matter, to begin this new session of parliament on a constructive note. Let him bring this report forward quickly and deal with it.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is rather unfortunate, but not as much as I wish to indicate, since we will undoubtedly have the opportunity of discussing further this important matter regarding language use in navigation of the Laurentian section of the St. Lawrence. To my mind, the question asked is important.

[English]

This is an important question and I do not intend to minimize it. I think it is a pity that I must discuss it in the few minutes available to me. I hope to have another opportunity to undertake a deep discussion of the matter.

I think the main problem here concerns security. We are not discussing the problem of language. Security is the main thing. That is what Mr. Desjardins deals with extensively in his report, which we should read as well as study.

Of course many languages are spoken on earth, Chinese, Russian, English, French, Spanish—

Mr. Paproski: And Ukranian.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, and Ukranian. We are discussing navigation. We are not opening up discussion on the Official Languages Act in Canada. I would not like to distort this discussion by suggesting that my hon. friend is trying to put this subject on the table again.

Mr. MacKay: I never mentioned it.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, I am sure the hon. member did not. I just want to be sure that that is not the case. Really, security is important. That is what Mr. Desjardins said.

I do not personally know Mr. Desjardins. I do know that he wrote his report in English. I am told he is much more fluent in English than in French. I do not blame him for that because many people in North America are more fluent in English than in French. This is nothing new. The reason I underlined that is because I am sure Mr. Desjardins is not a fanatic of some kind who wants to impose French on everybody. That is not so.

We will have to find an opportunity to discuss his point of view very objectively after the witnesses have been heard. He does not think that security is completely at stake. That is what we must look into.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think I have stated the problem.

[Translation]

I would hope that we will be able to discuss the matter. I think it was worth raising the problem tonight. It was not done meanly, but rather because it matters greatly to the pilots on the St. Lawrence as well as to the other pilots. I wish we will have the opportunity of considering whether it is really the best solution for the Canadian people.

RESEARCH—NEED FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS IN MEDICAL FIELD—NUMBER OF SCIENTISTS LEAVING CANADA BECAUSE OF LACK OF FUNDS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the matter I bring to the adjournment debate this evening is one of mounting urgency and importance. I thank the minister for the tone of his reply when I asked him yesterday if he had been able to find the additional $2.5 million for the Medical Research Council since his undertaking to try to do so earlier this year. However, I also want to say how profoundly disappointed I was with the content of his response, that he had not been successful in his efforts.

The amount we are talking about, $2.5 million, is not large when one considers that the departments' overall budget is almost $5 billion. However, it is an extremely critical amount, not only to our scientific community but in determining the future standard of health care for all Canadians.

Earlier this year there was considerable discussion in committee and testimony provided by expert witnesses to substantiate the crying need for additional funding in medical research. At that time it was stated, and I quote:

> Since a nation's health is basic to its economy, biomedical science policies should be the concern of every Canadian. The presence of a crisis in a small area of government concern which may have a very large effect on our nation should be recognized now before matters go beyond a state of repair.

The plea was made to abandon the on-again, off-again style of nourishing research in Canada. Economists are agreed that any viable industry spends about 4.5 per cent on basic and marketing research. The biomedical sciences are not even asking for 2 per cent of its industry's budget. They are pleading against further erosion.

The government's decision to grant only a small increase in last year's budget to MRC and subsequently to hold the line on this year's figure has not only deprived medical research of a realistic increase in funds, but as well subjected existing funds to serious erosion by two-digit inflation. The situation was deemed critical by many concerned Canadians last spring, and the intervening months have seen a continuing deterioration.

In June a joint statement was issued by the Canadian Society for Clinical Investigation, the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies and the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges which pointed out, and I quote:

● (2230)

> In some medical schools, research programs in clinical departments are shrinking or closing down entirely because, in the absence of council support, they have no source of funds. Potential researchers are discouraged from entering upon a research career and the continuance of research activities by existing medical scientists is threatened.

Since then numerous representations have been made to me pointing out that certain projects are grinding to a halt because mounting inflation makes it impossible to absorb increased costs from funds made available even earlier this year.

Recently the Medical Research Council announced that it does not have adequate funds to support the project of a computerized pancreas, a project which has potential benefit for thousands of Canadian diabetics.

The greatest potential for disaster in the government's niggardly commitment to medical research is its impact on young graduates contemplating research careers. Last year only one per cent of the graduating class in one of our leading medical schools planned to enter a career in biomedical research and teaching, as compared with 10 per cent as recently as 1969. The appalling attrition in recruitment for medical research is understandable, given the vulnerability of the future of medical research, but it can have disastrous consequences for future generations of Canadians.

I plead with the minister and his colleagues to remove the constraints which were placed on medical research earlier this year, and to ensure that future budgets will include a constant dollar application and a realistic and guaranteed percentage of total health costs for research.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on October 7, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) undertook to determine whether such a study had been carried out.

Inquiries were made and, as far as can be determined, no study has been undertaken or is under way to attempt to tabulate the number of medical scientists who have left Canada to pursue their research in another country.

Even if this number were to be known, the reasons which led these individuals to decide to leave would, of course, be difficult to determine. Further, in order to balance the books one would have to determine the numbers who have come to Canada and their reasons for doing so. Personally I do not think that the number of medical scientists who have left Canada because they felt their research would receive better support in another country, and for whom this was a major reason for their decision to emigrate, has been significant. However, as I have said, no serious attempts appear to have been made to determine this number, nor do I think there is any practical way of determining the motives of those who may have left.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I should like to repeat the minister's undertaking to seek out any funds which may be surplus to existing programs in his department so that he may transfer them to the Medical Research Council before the end of the fiscal year.

EGGS—NEED FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON CONTROL OF EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of recent statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that Canada is planning to impose export controls on eggs to the United States if the Canadian market is short-circuited, a statement made without what appears to be prior consultation and furthermore has not been ratified by cabinet decision and is an invitation to economic retaliation by the U.S., I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House urges the Minister of Agriculture to make a statement on motions forthwith clarifying this ad-hoc political decision announced on non-Canadian soil.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. It being presented pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be received without unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous agreement, the motion cannot be put.

UNITED AIRCRAFT—TRANSFERRENCE OF PRODUCTION TO UNITED STATES—CLARIFICATION OF LEGAL OBLIGATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity is the revelation that the United Aircraft Corporation, the recipient of approximately $71 million in federal assistance in recent years, has recently transferred 40 per cent of the production originally scheduled for Canada to the United States and plans a further 35 per cent shift in the coming year. There being a clear possibility that such action violates that company's agreements made with the federal government. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

● (1410)

That this House instructs the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to make a comprehensive statement in the House at the earliest possible date outlining the legal obligations of United Aircraft on this matter and providing details on its future operations in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Since it is put forward under Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of unanimous consent the motion cannot be received.

CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF REASONS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent question.

It deals with the reduction of jobs and increase in unemployment in Canada. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That a special committee of this House be set up to analyze the main causes contributing to a reduction of jobs in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order under the terms of Standing Order 28.

I am always amazed to see how touchy we are about the observance of certains standing orders and yet ignore others. Standing Order 28 reads as follows:

Every member desiring to speak is to rise in his place, uncovered, and address himself to Mr. Speaker.

In light of this, if I understand it well, it seems to me this standing order applies, as it does in other circumstances, when an hon. member asks unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion under Standing Order 43. If an hon. member is against the motion he should rise in his place and address himself to the Chair designating him by name.

I am convinced that all hon. members would be happy to know, when there is not unanimous consent, which hon. members are against the motion. I therefore respectfully ask the Chair to see to it that Standing Order 28 is respected in the future, when indicated, even when a motion is moved under Standing Order 43.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Bellechasse for having brought up that interesting question, but for a long time now it has been customary for the House to decide that there is not unanimous consent even when there is only one dissenting voice amongst hon. members. But the question is very interesting and I shall study it in the future.

CAPABILITY OF RAILWAYS TO MOVE EMERGENCY OIL SUPPLIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because of the obsolescence of much of the roadbed used by Canadian railways and the disclosure in the third report of the Railway Transport Commission of the CTC of a possible reduction in load weights and heights, and keeping in mind that Bill C-236, the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, empowers the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to direct the CTC to order railway cars to move oil on an emergency basis, I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova:

That the Minister of Transport make a statement on motions at the first opportunity, outlining the specific capabilities of Canada's railways to respond to the type of emergency situation contemplated in Bill C-236 and telling the House and the country what measures his government, in co-operation with the railways, is presently undertaking to remedy the obsolescence of our railway system in this country.

When you call the vote on this matter, Mr. Speaker, I will not insist on strict compliance with Standing Order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion presented pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that it requests the minister to make a statement on motions at the first opportunity, I have grave reservations whether in fact that, in itself, indicates a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. For the moment, however, I am prepared to give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt and to ask at this time whether unanimous consent is given, since the motion is put pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent that the motion be adopted at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. Speaker: Without there being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION AND REDUCE COST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of the very alarming decline in housing starts, September being down to about 35 per cent in terms of urban starts. I address the question to the Prime Minister in view of its direct importance to the people in terms of the cost of housing as well as its effect on unemployment. Does the government propose to take any effective measures to offset this decline in housing starts, to increase the number of housing starts in the country and avoid the very painful consequences of the present slowdown?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has commented on the programs which are in place now. The government is giving serious attention to this important matter, and if any announcements are to be made they will be made in the traditional way.

● (1420)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Minister of State for Urban Affairs speaks of new initiatives taken by the government which have obviously had a marginal effect upon housing construction, as is indicated by the rather appalling decline in the number of starts, I would ask the Prime Minister whether his government has in fact any policy to reduce the rate of inflation and the cost of housing, and whether it really has any strategy to increase the number of starts?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that in his comments the minister responsible indicated what the government's strategy is. There are some aspects of the decline in which we can only have an indirect role. The increase in the cost of land and the lack of supply of serviced land are problems we touched on in the Speech from the Throne, and however we go about it, of course, this calls for action and co-operation at every level of government.

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to take it then that the government is prepared to stand on its present position, taking the attitude that this is about all that can be done, and if housing starts continue to decline that is too bad, but that is the way it is?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

PROMISE OF $500 TO BUYERS OF NEW HOMES—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that during the election the Prime Minister and many people in his party promised $500 to those buying new houses, I should like to know when that will be implemented and whether it will be made retroactive to the date of the promise, as there are many young people struggling today to buy new homes, some of whom may have been encouraged to give the support the Prime Minister received?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no intention to act retroactively on any measures which have not already been announced. The fact that some measures were not implemented at the time is more the responsibility of the opposition which defeated the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The government proposes to implement its election promises, as I believe I indicated on the first day in the House, over the period of this parliamentary term.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, as I understood the Prime Minister, he is laying the blame for the fact that this $500 promise made during the election has not been implemented on the opposition. If this was not election puffery and there is a sincere program promised by the Prime Minister and members of his party, which has nothing to do with us, surely he will tell the House in a clear-cut manner when it will be implemented. If it is not to be implemented, then this is election puffery of which he is guilty.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have said previously in a previous answer, that the various programs which were announced either before or during the election campaign will be implemented during the course of this parliament.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious housing shortage, if the moneys for the Assistance to Home Ownership Program and for public housing have been exhausted, will the government increase the capital amounts for these programs to meet the housing crisis?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is a matter which is being considered, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious housing crisis and the rate of unemployment in the lumber and forest products industries, particularly in Quebec and British Columbia, will the government increase the capital budget for housing in order to meet this crisis and to help solve the unemployment problem?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will of course realize that the main cause of this crisis in the lumber industry is the weakening of the economies of those markets to which we sell lumber products. About two-thirds of our product is sold abroad and the weakening markets there have made it more difficult to export to those countries. As to the one-third which is sold in Canada, only one-third of that is used for housing.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

ALLEGED DESIGNATION OF PAUL MARTIN AS AMBASSADOR TO LONDON—POSSIBLE DISCONTINUANCE OF DESIGNATION "HIGH COMMISSIONER"

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether there is any foundation for the statement made this morning to the effect that the Hon. Paul Martin, a very famous member of this chamber and a respected member for years—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —is to go to London with the title ambassador rather than high commissioner?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have there been any discussions among members of the Commonwealth to the effect that there should be an alteration of the designation of high commissioner and ambassador substituted therefor.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there have been no such discussions. The hon. member might have the assurance that, as a member in good standing of the Royal Society of Canada I would never contemplate such.

REMOVAL OF WORD "ROYAL" FROM MAIL TRUCKS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, as a fellow member of the Royal Society may I ask how it came about that the "Royal" got knocked out of "Royal Mail" under his administration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would only want to point out in this private exchange that I am a member in my own right and that he is only an ex-officio member of the Royal Society. I still want to answer courteously the right hon. gentleman even if he is only an honorary member and remind him that it was his administration which started taking off the sign "Elizabeth II" from the mail boxes. This was a decision taken by his administration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: This is a very interesting exchange, but there are others who wish to ask questions. However, I shall permit the right hon. gentleman one more supplementary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the self-satisfaction of the Prime Minister in being a member of the Royal Society of Canada and my being an honorary member, all I can say is that I shared that honour with Mr. Pearson and Mr. King. Insofar as the statement is concerned, and the manner in which he has eroded the royal relationship with Canada, I say to him that his statement that any such change was made under my administration is completely false and he knows it.

UNITED AIRCRAFT—TIME WHEN GOVERNMENT BECAME AWARE OF TRANSFERRENCE OF PRODUCTION TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice concerning the activities of the United Aircraft Corporation in Montreal whose dealings with the federal government I understand have been investigated by the minister's department. Considering the fact that more than $70 million of federal funds have gone into that corporation in recent years, could the minister inform the House when either officials of his department or of that of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce became aware of the fact that that company had transferred some 40 per cent of its production in the Montreal area to the United States? Could he inform the House when the government became aware of that fact and what has been done about it by the government?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that question would be better directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There was a discussion about involvement on the part of my department but the main thrust for handling the problem is in that department.

UNITED AIRCRAFT—SUGGESTED ENFORCEMENT OF LEGAL OBLIGATIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister who dealt with this matter the other day. Can he assure the House that the legal commitment, including the provision of employment in the Montreal area entered into by United Aircraft Corporation, one of the conditions to get all the money from the federal government, will be lived up to? Not only does one anticipate an affirmative answer from the Prime Minister but would he undertake on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to make a statement on this serious subject to the House later this week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The minister is in Toronto where he is attending the arrival, on behalf of the government of Canada, of Team Canada which showed such excellent spirit in the games abroad. He is concerned with the matter that has been discussed previously in connection with this subject, and he is looking into it. If he has any statement to make, I am sure he will be making it to the House.

UNITED AIRCRAFT—SUGGESTED TAKE-OVER BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have one final supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister now in a position, after several days of meditation, to inform the House whether or not his government has decided to take this firm within public ownership?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe the Leader of the NDP must have heard my answer on this subject a couple of days ago.

Mr. Broadbent: That is why I repeated the question.

FOOD PRICES

SUGAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD TO LOWER PRICE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but in his absence I will address it to the Minister of Finance. As the price of sugar has increased by more than 200 per cent in the last 12 months, causing many Canadian food products to rise in price very sharply indeed, has the government followed through on the proposals made by the Food Prices Review Board last July that sugar prices should immediately be reduced by opening negotiations to lower tariffs on sugar imported from non-Commonwealth countries, lifting the British preferential tariff on sugar, negotiating for lower sugar tariffs from countries with most favoured nation status, and finally, to allow Canada to import raw sugar from other sources such as Brazil and Cuba? If these proposals have not been carried through, when will they be?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): There is also a Tariff Board report on this question, and both subjects will be considered together.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION TO QUEBEC IN LIEU OF USE OF FORCE—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN CHARGES TO OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

He probably knows about the letters sent by the Quebec Minister of Justice to the federal government concerning the refusal to use the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for provincial security purposes, because Quebec has its own police force. When the Quebec Minister of Justice asked for compensation, the federal government refused. Is it now considering compensating the province of Quebec for its refusal to allow Quebec to use the RCMP in Quebec, and in this way contributing to the security of Quebec or the use of Quebec police officers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I must remind the hon. member that the federal police force is used in the province of Quebec for numerous very useful purposes. The only difference, Mr. Speaker, is that both Quebec and Ontario have established a provincial police force. The federal government has considered the request of the province of Quebec and studies it in detail. The Solicitor General has in fact replied to the letter sent by the Quebec Minister of Justice. I believe that the contents of this letter have been made public. If not, I shall see to it that the hon. member is made aware of the arguments it contains, which will, I am sure, convince him that the federal government made the only possible decision on this matter.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

Is the cabinet considering setting higher charges for the provinces which use the RCMP instead of compensating Quebec and Ontario because they do not? The Prime Minister says that we use the RCMP, but we do not use it as much as Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba and eastern Canada, where the provincial police force even acts as a municipal police force in some cases. These provinces should pay the costs for the use of the RCMP. That is why the governments of Quebec and Ontario are asking some compensation from the federal government for the non-use of the RCMP at the provincial level. Does the federal government intend to compensate these provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: As to the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I feel I have already replied to it. As to the first part, these contracts with provincial governments are renewed periodically. Each time they are renewed, the amount of compensation, the amount a province must pay for using the RCMP, and that which the federal government has to pay are negotiable matters. All provinces, Quebec included, wishing to take part in these discussions are free to do so. But I do not think that a province which refuses to sign such a contract with the federal government should suggest that the said government is charging too much or too little.

HARBOURS

PROPOSED SITE OF DEEP SEA PORT AT GROS-CACOUNA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Transport.

Since his government has shown much interest for quite some time in building a deep sea port and since the population of Gros-Cacouna and of Quebec in general await impatiently the findings of studies undertaken in this regard, I would like to know if the minister is able to tell us what are the possibilities of seeing this project through, or if another site has been chosen by the government?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am as anxious as the hon. member to receive the report under way on new harbour structures in Canada. Undoubtedly, I will then be able to answer this request more precisely.

Mr. La Salle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In precise terms, would the minister say that the construction of a port at Gros-Cacouna is still a possibility?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Locations at Gros-Cacouna are still considered as well as those of Sept-Îles, Port-Cartier, Quebec City and a few others also.

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR SENIOR CITIZENS HOUSING TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT IN LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Would the government as an act of compassion, in the light of the fact that there are now 12,000 men unemployed in the lumber industry in British Columbia, direct some moneys to housing in the senior citizens program and thereby help the unemployment program as well as provide much needed housing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will consider the proposal of the hon. member.

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER CONCERNING REASSESSMENT OF ELECTION PROMISES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Following the exchange between the hon. member for Calgary North and the Prime Minister at which time the Prime Minister indicated, if I heard him correctly, that all the promises made during the election would be implemented, and keeping in mind the speech that the Minister of Finance made in Vancouver in which he registered some concern and stated that a reassessment of those promises should be made, can we now assume that the Minister of Finance has been shot down with respect to this attitude?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a recent conversation with the Prime Minister on that, but I do not think so. I want to say through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has said that the commitments made during the election which will be kept will be implemented within the life of this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I said exactly the same thing in different words, namely, that the commitments made by the party now holding governmental office in this country ought to be orchestrated within the ability of the economy to digest them.

Mr. Alexander: Is the minister now stating that he is forgoing any reassessment in terms of the promises that were made during the election? Does he not feel that that is still important, or was that just puffery and the glamour attitude he is adopting in looking forward to the leadership?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is no puffery at all. With the proper reconciliation of priorities, including those commitments made by this party during the election, they can all be digested within the ability of this country in its growth to digest and implement without undue effect on the economy.

MILK—RECOMMENDATION OF FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD ON RETENTION OF SUBSIDY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Given the latest CPI increase of 2 per cent in dairy products, is the minister prepared now to follow the recommendations of the Food Prices Review Board and extend the subsidy on milk, in view of its importance as a staple item of nutrition which should not be forgone because of rising prices.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the government has not changed its mind on the subsidy. It is a consumer subsidy.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is not prepared to follow the recommendations of the board, can he say why the government is extending the mandate of the board for another year at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, you must remember that when the government took up the question of the five cents a quart consumer subsidy, it did so without recommendations from that board. We said at that time that it would be in effect for one year, until other programs could be initiated. If you want to talk about other products, you could talk about sugar which has gone up by 17.6 per cent this last month.

Some hon. Members: Order.

FOOD PRICES

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE INCREASED PRICES NOT INFLATIONARY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister and is prompted by the further, unusual increase in the food component of the Consumer Price Index and the increase in the wholesale price index. Was the Minister of Agriculture enunciating government policy in the United States yesterday when he said that increased food prices are not inflationary?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not see the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture. I will look at it. I am sure it makes good sense.

MONTREAL OLYMPICS, 1976—FAILURE OF CERTAIN BANKS TO RECOGNIZE OLYMPIC COINS AS LEGAL TENDER

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the hon. Postmaster General, who is responsible for the marketing program of the Olympic coins in Canada and abroad?

Since sections 3(1) and 4(1) of the Olympic (1976) Act, being chapter 31 of the 1973 Statutes of Canada, provide that these coins are legal tender in Canada for a payment not exceeding $20, can the minister explain why some banks, with specific guidelines of the Bank of Canada, refuse to honor them?

If there are any guidelines of this nature, does the minister intend to give instructions to the Bank of Canada in order to redress an irregularity that could cause mistrust amongst numismatists throughout the world and Canadian taxpayers generally?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the question was so detailed that it might be better put on the order paper. I will take up the matter privately with the hon. gentleman after the question period, to see if there is any substance to his charge.

MAPLE SUGAR INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

Since maple bush owners are hard put to get reasonable returns for last spring's maple products, would the minister tell if financial assistance was requested by producers or associations, and if so what course of action he is contemplating to help this group of producers.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, an agreement has been reached with them which will provide them with initial payments.

PUBLICIZING OF AGREEMENT WITH GOVERNMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): I have a supplementary for the minister, Mr. Speaker. Given the minister's answer that agreement was reached, would he state if the House will soon be made aware of the features of the agreement, in order that we may inform producers in time.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary and officials negotiated most of the agreement with the maple sugar producers. I did not think there was anything secret about it. If it has not been published so far you can be sure that it will be.

COW-CALF OPERATION—REQUEST FOR AID

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Although he has been pretty busy recently answering questions about eggs, would he inform the House whether there is any thought, concern or program regarding the cow and calf operators in Canada who are now facing the lowest returns for calves in the last 20 years?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I told the House on Monday, a meeting was taking place then between provincial officials and the federal people. So far they have not made a full report. I understand that many suggestions were put forward. I received a preliminary report, but nothing that was really firm as to what should be done. All agreed that something should be done.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON PLANS TO TRANSPORT ALASKAN OIL ACROSS CANADA

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of remarks made yesterday by United States Ambassador Eberle relating to the possibility of oil being transported from Alaska over Canadian territory, can the minister advise the House whether the government is presently discussing, or plans to discuss, such an eventuality with United States officials?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the comments to which my hon. friend refers were not made in the conversation which Canadian ministers had with the ambassador. The matter was not raised in those terms.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House whether he has any knowledge of United States' policy regarding Alaskan oil which involves the transportation of Alaskan oil across Canada to the United States?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have no precise knowledge, except to this extent: it was agreed, following the conversation yesterday, that in order to clarify certain general comments made in what was a relatively brief meeting, detailed discussions would be held later between officials of Canada and the United States and this is one point which could be explored at that time.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STIMULATE LUMBER INDUSTRY—POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the wholesale price of lumber has been decreasing at approximately $1 per thousand board feet per day since midsummer and as this situation, coupled with the sharp decline in housing starts, has resulted in drastic lay-offs of thousands of workmen now with a potential lay-off of 100,000 people in British Columbia alone, has the minister given any consideration to this serious problem and, if so, does he intend to make a statement on it?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues, particularly the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and others are watching the situation which has come about primarily as a result of softening in the American, Japanese and British markets for British Columbia lumber. I doubt whether I will be making an immediate statement. The question is under active review.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister considering a departure from a previous policy he announced, to the effect that he will not consider removal of the 11 per cent sales tax to stimulate housing construction in Canada, a removal which would help the lumber industry immensely.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the removal of that tax would help with the immediate problem, which has resulted from the softening of our export markets for lumber.

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION IN VIEW OF UNITED STATES POLICY TO FIGHT INFLATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Minister of Finance has heard the President of the United States give his views on curing inflation, is the minister able to tell the House when he will bring down a budget, or will he wait for the American universe to unfold a little longer?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the opportunity of listening to the President of the United States address the Congress, but we had a full Telex report of what he said immediately as he said it. We also had, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, a verbatim background of the American proposals given to us by Ambassador Eberle and Ambassador Porter at about 6.15, only two hours after the President spoke. One of the things which struck me was that a good deal of the consensus of American economists, some of which has been accepted by the President of the United States, includes policies we have had in place in this country for the last 24 months.

● (1450)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I assume the Minister of Finance did not hear my question. May I ask when he is going to bring in the budget. I know he wanted to make a good speech.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to deal with the hon. member's question as fully as I could. I hope to be speaking on the same subject a little later today. However, the budget will be brought forth some time before November 15, subject to further conversations with my colleague, the House leader.

PROPOSED UNITED STATES INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT— POSSIBLE STUDY OF EFFECT BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In view of President Ford's announcement yesterday of an investment tax credit in the United States and the danger it imposes to us in the outflow of Canadian capital to the United States, will the minister within the next day or two be announcing foreign exchange controls?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is the sort of question I will answer in this form. The hon. member knows I do not comment on futures, interest rates, commodities or foreign exchange. I might say that an immediate preliminary review of the president's proposal does not indicate that it will have any appreciable effect on the Canadian market.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the lively interest in foreign ownership in this country, and the danger of funds flowing back to the United States because of this type of credit, can the minister state whether his department is doing a definitive study of the problem. If so, will he table that information for all members to see once it is completed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are conducting studies on a number of problems. I try to take the House into my confidence as often as I can, whenever the rules allow. However, as for the information being made public, this is of course given to me on a confidential and frank basis by the public service of Canada.

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—MANNING OF TOWERS ON TWENTY-FOUR HOUR BASIS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Solicitor General. I have given his office notice. In view of the fact that last year the minister stated that the four towers of the British Columbia penitentiary would be manned on a 24 hour basis to add to the security of the penitentiary and in view of the fact those towers are not manned at all between the hours of midnight and eight a.m. and have not been so for some months, when will the towers again be manned on a 24 hour basis?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, those towers were manned on a 24 hour basis during a period of time when we had some difficulties with security. I forget the exact date, but for some time they have not been manned after the lock-up at midnight. However, there have been perimeter patrols outside the walls and dogs on guard within the walls. We do not have any plans to reintroduce manning the towers at this time.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—NUMBER OF GUARDS CHARGED WITH DRUG OFFENCES

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Can the Solicitor General advise this House how many employees in the penitentiary service in British Columbia have either resigned or are on leave of absence because of their arrest or conviction on drug charges?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will have to get exact information for the hon. member. I will be pleased to do that. I might say that since we introduced the new measures last year, escapes in the penitentiary service have been reduced by 50 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

METHOD ADOPTED BY UNITED STATES TO ACHIEVE INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION IN FIGHTING INFLATION—CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In their discussions yesterday, did Ambassador Eberle disclose whether President Ford means that international co-operation to fight inflation will be to display some new initiatives in a formalized way? Is there to be a new structure, or will this be on a bilateral basis, or again will this be within the framework of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank or any other frameworks that now exist, including the committee of which the minister has now been, shall I say, put on the hot seat by being elected its chairman?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the hon. member and the hon. member for Don Valley by their attending Ambassador Eberle's press conference before he left. What the ambassador made clear to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and myself is that the United States envisage consultation and co-operation in the inter-relationship of budgetary policies as they might have contagious follow-up effects on other economies around the world. His purpose in coming here was to explain on behalf of the president the fact that in setting the budgetary and other fiscal and monetary policies of the United States, including the conservation policies they had in mind, they also had in view the effect those actions would have on Canada and other countries within the economic world.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Was there any indication there would be prior consultation rather than simultaneous disclosure as the statement was being made and the policy was being unveiled in Washington while the ambassador was explaining to the ministers here? How can that be reconciled with the word "consultation"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the disclosure and explanation to Canada was as close to being simultaneous as could be. The ambassador spoke to us at 6:15. The president spoke to the United States Congress at four o'clock. The United States, through Ambassador Eberle and Secretary of the Treasury Mr. Simon, contemplate increasing the structural force and structural power of the international monetary fund, giving it surveillance power to review budgetary policies of various member nations as they have contagious effects around the world. In that sense, I agree with the hon. member's question.

FISHERIES

MERCURY LEVEL IN SWORDFISH—EFFORTS TO HAVE UNITED STATES LIFT GUIDELINES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that some 20 swordfishing boats are today operating out of the port of New Bedford, Massachusetts, when does the minister intend to take steps to re-open talks with his counterpart in Washington in an effort to have the United States government lift its mercury guidelines on swordfish? Exports from Nova Scotia alone prior to the FDA ban in 1969 were worth between $4 million and $5 million.

Hon. Romeo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, we are looking into this matter. I remind the hon. member that the mercury level of swordfish is still very much a problem for both the Canadian and United States authorities. I am very hopeful that some day our swordfish fishermen may return to what was once a very important resource business.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY OF UNITED STATES REGULATIONS ON GASOLINE CONSUMPTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister or any appropriate minister. With regard to the statement of President Ford that he intends to have discussions with the United States automobile industry concerning very substantial changes in gasoline consumption and presumably very substantial changes in re-tooling the structure of the whole industry, were there any consultations on the part of the United States with the government of Canada before this announcement was made or has there been any indication since then that the United States government will consult with the government of Canada about the very serious implications this might have for Canada in view of the U.S.-Canada automobile pact?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Eberle described some of the conservation measures in terms of the consumption of oil which will require a re-scheduling of tooling of the American industry in order to increase the mileage to about 40 or 50 miles per gallon. That would require some response in engineering terms from the North American automobile industry. My understanding is that there was no prior consultation because President Ford was, in effect, presenting a budgetary measure. But Ambassador Eberle did assure us that there would be very close consultation with the automobile industry in North America as to phasing in all these measures.

OTTAWA RIVER—DANGER TO SMALL BOATS FROM FLOATING LOGS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Since the movement of logs on the Ottawa River actually represents a public danger for pleasure boats, for instance, right from the source of the river downstream to Hawkesbury, and since the government already asked those companies involved to stop any movement of logs on that river, does the minister intend to take steps to force the Canadian International Paper Company and the E. B. Eddy Company to cease their operations on the Ottawa River?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, that the Ottawa River would be part of what are called navigable waters under the federal act. In any case, I can inquire but the co-operation of the province involved and the Department of Environment would certainly be required to make it possible.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Did the minister discuss this with the Minister of the Environment and Quebec authorities?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There have not been any such discussions to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I might point out to the hon. member that there might be means of protecting the propellers on pleasure boats by having protection devices installed under the boats.

MONTREAL OFFICE—RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGED IRREGULAR ISSUANCE OF WORK PERMITS

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can he advise the House of the results of the investigation into the charges laid by Mr. René Riel and his lawyer, Mr. Robert Dolman, alleging that certain employees at the Montreal Manpower Centre have committed irregularities regarding the issuance of work permits?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this investigation was carried out by Mr. Joseph Nuss, counsel for the commission of inquiry relating to the Department of Manpower and Immigration in Montreal. In brief, the investigation by Mr. Nuss completely exonerated the department of any wrongdoing and makes it very clear that Mr. Riel himself was guilty of numerous questionable and perhaps illegal acts. Mr. Nuss' report labels the accusations as unsubstantiated, unverified and false and it is my hope that irresponsible allegations such as this will not be permitted to reflect on the character and integrity of the people working in the department.

NUCLEAR REACTORS—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN EXPORT POLICY AS RELATED TO THIRD WORLD POWERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. First, though, I should like to congratulate him on his elevation to that post. I believe he will do a very good job for Canada. Following his speech at the United Nations, has the hon. gentleman been able to convince the government of which he is part to cease giving away and selling nuclear reactors to Third World powers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. member for his words of congratulation and good wishes. In reply to his question, I have not been able to convince my colleagues because I have not attempted to change the export policy which has been followed by the government up to the present time.

Mr. Horner: In the minister's capacity as our spokesman for external affairs, does he not feel his words would carry more weight if we were to do what we say should be done? Does he not feel that Canada will be judged by her actions rather than by her words?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that the policies which have been put forward by Canada speak quite loudly and that the assurances which Canada seeks from those nations receiving its nuclear equipment are in line with international safeguards and, in some cases, even more rigid.

POST OFFICE

REMOVAL OF WORD "ROYAL" FROM TRUCKS AND "ER II" FROM MAIL BOXES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the indulgence of the House in order to clarify a matter which was the subject of an exchange between myself and the right hon. member for Prince Albert a few moments ago.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If you give me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Speaker: I think we should hear the clarification first, and then see what happens.

Mr. Trudeau: I can assure the right hon. gentleman that he does not need my permission to reply. He always seems to take that authority on himself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Freedom is finally restored to the House!

Mr. Trudeau: The information I have is that one must look at two areas; first, the trucks serving the Post Office and, second, the postal boxes. As far as the trucks are concerned, the policy of the government is to ensure that the words "Canada Post—Poste Canada", the words "Royal Mail—Poste Royale" and the coat of arms appear on all the trucks. So it is not a question of the government taking off "Royal Mail". On the contrary, the policy is that all trucks should bear these words.

Insofar as the postal boxes are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the government has never taken the words "Royal Mail" off them for the simple reason that those words were never on the boxes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am told that the administration has looked mightily into this question and has found no trace of the words "Royal Mail" on the boxes, under either Liberal or Conservative administrations. However, the insignia "ER II" which did appear on many boxes in the 'fifties were ordered removed in the early 'sixties by the government of the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: And now for the clarification of the clarification.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the Prime Minister secured that ex parte statement I simply repeat what I said a while ago that in the statement he made earlier the truth could not have been more truthfully stated in the reverse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Explain!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would simply add this. All across this country he said the same thing when I mentioned the removal of "Royal Canadian" or the "RCM" because he wanted to get rid of the "Royal". I also point out that in nineteen hundred—

An hon. Member: And two.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In 1967, at the Liberal meeting in Montreal a resolution was brought before that meeting to abolish the Queen. It was passed with two members of the present cabinet voting for it, the hon. gentleman opposite, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). When the Prime Minister was asked whether he was going to vote, or why he did not vote, he said: "I didn't vote because it was of no consequence to me; I regard the Queen as of less importance than skiing or even snowshoeing".

● (1510)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I make a further appeal before life becomes more complicated. Before we go to orders of the day, the President of the Treasury Board has been seeking the floor to answer a question that was asked of him yesterday, and it might be better to transport ourselves into orders of the day on a less controversial note.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FINKELMAN REPORT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER CONCERNING REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley asked a question in my absence. I should like to inform him now that the Finkelman report will be considered by a special committee of the House. The President of the Privy Council has introduced a motion to form such a committee to deal with this matter. After due consideration by the committee, a bill will be introduced during this session as it has been announced in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Friday, October 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 42).

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. In recognizing the minister I had overlooked the fact that at the conclusion of the debate last Friday the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton had the floor.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for recognizing me and to say that I, too, look forward to hearing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) fill in the holes in the Speech from the Throne which we are now considering. I think the Speech from the Throne and the contribution to this debate made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were empty of matters that are of importance to Canadians of all ages and in all parts of the country.

Before embarking on my speech I want to join my colleagues on all sides of this House in congratulating Your Honour on attaining your high office. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) yesterday mentioned some of the advantages of that office. I hope none of us forgets that there are some singular disadvantages to that office, and in our deliberations in the days ahead in this House all of us join in wishing Your Honour every success.

I should also like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply. This is a great honour given to new parliamentarians, and I suggest to you, sir, that they carried out their task with dignity, in a manner that was a credit to them and to the constituencies and people they represent in this House. For those two young members it was an auspicious beginning to their parliamentary careers.

I mentioned that the Speech from the Throne was noticeably deficient in terms of the great issues facing this country, the priorities that ought to face the government, and answers to questions that are being asked by the people of Canada. The Prime Minister in his speech—I say this with respect—adopted as his theme those issues that do not in any way meet the economic priorities of Canada.

Today we received the cost-price index figures for the country, and although those figures show a slower monthly rate of increase than the rate of increase in August, this deceleration in price must be taken in context with the fact that over the past 15 years 60 per cent of the September figures compared with August have, either, shown declines in the cost-price index, or no movement at all. So this slightly reduced monthly increase in the cost-price index cannot be any real comfort to Canadians who are looking for some reversal of the trend.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, these figures cannot be taken as any indication at all of the lessening of price pressures; but only as an unexpected seasonal factor. In looking at all these figures it is important to note that the goods classification in the index continues to increase at a greater rate than services. With anticipated stronger demand for wages we ought to expect greater impact on service areas than on goods, so that over the next little while we can look forward to a wave of inflationary pressure in Canada which we can expect to come from a different source within the index.

It is those matters to which the leader of the government did not address himself. On reading his speech, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, with respect, that his priorities are mixed and badly out of line with the basic needs of this country. Perhaps the Minister of Finance will do something this afternoon to bring those plans into line. I await the speech of the Minister of Finance with some anticipation, hoping that the dialogue that was referred to in the Speech from the Throne is going to have some reality, rather than being a mere word used as a substitute for action that is long overdue.

The Prime Minister dealt with reform of the rules of the House of Commons. I think the first priority is with respect to the reform of the attitude of the Prime Minister to the House of Commons. He dealt with the reform of the Senate, and suggested as one of those reforms that he was going to appoint Senators for seven years, their appointment being subject to renewal. Can you imagine any proposal, Mr. Speaker, that would make that body more servile than it is now?

The Prime Minister talked about the repatriation of the constitution. Aside from the fact that the word he uses is wrong, surely to heaven there are many more important things in the country at the present time than a consideration of that matter?

The people of this country are looking for some answers, Mr. Speaker. The public service of Canada, through the process of arbitration with one of 52 public service groups, has embarked upon the matter of indexing salaries. This may be good or bad; I do not know, and I do not have the information at hand to make a judgment. But I am appalled that the Minister of Finance, in a speech made outside this House, should indicate that there had been no study of the process of indexing of salaries and wages. That is one matter to which the government must address itself in view of the demands that are being made by people in the public service, as well as the private sector, who are hard pressed. Yet those answers are not forthcoming from the government, despite the fact that they were asked for during the 29th parliament. Instead, the Speech from the Throne dealt with things that in economic terms are not of immediate impact.

● (1520)

The Speech from the Throne, and particularly the Prime Minister's speech during this debate, dealt with the public service of this country in a way that it has not been dealt with before. I have spoken in this House, as has the Minister of Finance, and the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), in another parliament, about the difficulties of the public service in addressing itself to the problems that have been created by the implementation of the Official Languages Act. I am not going to repeat these things because they are on the records of this House, but this is the first time, in the Prime Minister's speech, and I want you to mark that, I have ever read or heard of the introduction of a quota system into the employment practices of the public service. I think that is a departure which will cause difficulty in the public service.

If there have been difficulties, and there have been some real ones, in the implementation of the policy in respect of official languages which resulted in misunderstandings, then it is my belief that these misunderstandings and these difficulties will be multiplied by what I regard as a change in the direction of the public service of Canada.

I would not say for one moment that the public service ought not to be a place where all Canadians can find a worth-while career and the opportunities for advancement; far from it. I have never said that before, and I would not say it today. However, I do not believe that this change in direction is healthy in any way, either in terms of the public service of Canada or in terms of the country as a whole.

As I looked over the annual report of the Public Service Commission, which has been delivered to members of parliament, I searched from end to end to see whether the merit principle is mentioned in respect of the public service and I could find nothing there. The merit principle as it has been understood in this country is a tattered remnant now, and I believe the public service and the people of the country will be poorer served as a result of this matter.

Other members during this debate have dealt with one other matter which I do not believe can be ignored in the context of our Canadian federalism, and that is the action of the province of Quebec in passing a bill known as Bill 22. I do not know of any statute or of any act that has been adopted by the government of Canada, or by any province, which has built within it a greater capability for creating division in the country. I do not say that with any joy; I say that as a matter of some considerable regret.

Many groups have commented on this bill. Perhaps the best comment made in respect of it was made by the Canadian Teachers' Federation, a group of concerned Canadians representing the educators of this country in all of its provinces and territories. That federation said:

> In either case, there are two sets of rights to be respected. The linguistic minority—French or English—has a right to protection against repressive acts. The linguistic majority—English or French—has a right to be protected against domination by the minority. To violate these rights is offensive to common fairness and the idea of democracy.
> One test of democracy, and of fairness, is whether parents have freedom to choose, for their children's schooling, the official language that they judge to be the more advantageous.

The statement went on to set forth the policy of that national organization and ended by saying the Canadian Teachers' Federation:

> —condemn oppressive measures, such as those sections of Quebec's Bill 22 which take the right of choice away from parents and put it in the hands of the bureaucrats of the French Language Board and the Quebec Civil Service.

I will not comment in this place on the way that was done in the provincial legislature, but I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the way it was done was a defeat for democracy in this country, and the denial of parental choice sets a deplorable and dangerous precedent for Canada.

The Prime Minister has defended his refusal to refer the Official Language Act of Quebec to the Supreme Court of Canada to test its constitutionality, and he has justified his refusal with an allegation that Quebec has treated its language minority better than other provinces have treated their language minorities in the past.

Even if that allegation were true, I would ask whether this is the answer that ought to be given by a political leader who assured parliament, the Canadian public and the governments of all provinces, that in accepting and implementing the Official Languages Act of Canada they had assured the unity of Canada so far as the French Canadians in provinces other than Quebec are concerned? Surely if the governments of those provinces have committed sins of language discrimination in the past, they are now absolved.

I should like to ask whether the Prime Minister's statement is historically correct. Have the other provinces not treated their minorities as well as Quebec has in the past? Can the Prime Minister, reputed to be a constitutional authority, point to breaches by each and every one of the provinces, other than Quebec, of their constitutional duties under the British North America Act?

Putting these constitutional duties aside, and looking at the equity of the problem, can the Prime Minister name any province, other than Quebec and New Brunswick, in which 10 per cent or more of the population is French-speaking? The 10 per cent, I would remind him, is the definition of a French or English minority as contained in Canada's Official Languages Act. According to the 1971 census, other than New Brunswick and Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba have the highest percentage of persons whose mother tongue was French. Here the percentages are only 6 per cent and not 10 per cent. In the other provinces and the territories the percentage drops drastically. What is the formula of discrimination that the Prime Minister applies retroactively to these provinces in his broad and sweeping statement?

Considering these very low percentages, is the Prime Minister aware of certain other hard facts that have borne upon the actions of provincial governments other than Quebec in an effort to forge a nation out of colonies and a vast unsettled land, a greater land mass than all but one or two other nations of the world?

Is he aware that during this century of building, the immigration policy of the federal government attracted English-speaking and non-French-speaking immigrants to Canada? Is he aware that during confederation the bulk of Canada's trade, and Canada has grown great upon its trade, has been with the United Kingdom and with the United States of America, and that these are two English-speaking nations?

Is the Prime Minister aware that until very recent times only a small percentage of Canadians were able to enjoy an education that continued beyond grade school; but today, for some, education extends into university, professional schools, Harvard, the London School of Economics and the Sorbonne? Since the early 30's people were fortunate, in the world in which we live, in enjoying opportunities to learn that other people never had previously.

● (1530)

Is the Prime Minister aware that throughout the past years of confederation there have not been sufficient competent teachers of French to meet the requirements of the provinces, and that today there are not sufficient, including those imported at high salaries, despite the advantages of modern aids to language education?

Does the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not share the knowledge of his Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) that many provinces, including Quebec, could not afford to institute proper bilingual language instruction without massive federal aid? Is not this financial aid an admission by the Prime Minister's government that the language defects in the educational systems of the provinces are not deliberate discrimination against those who speak the French language? Surely these things must be obvious.

Does the Prime Minister, in steering Canada's foreign policy in a moralistic leftist direction, intend to castigate France for suppressing the language of the Basques and Alsatians, and to castigate England which only recently recognized the Welsh language in the courts after banning Welsh as a barbarous language by statute many centuries ago?

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

What disturbs me about the situation, aside from the things he mentioned, is that the Prime Minister as a keeper of the constitution, such as it is, should wish to perpetuate the myth that there is something in the other provinces of this country which will not bear scrutiny. That myth ought to be exploded. It is in fact a myth, and ought to be called a myth before its repetition becomes a fact in this country.

I represent a constituency that is composed of an area called the national capital. It is a great creation. The people of this area are grateful to the people of the country at large for the contribution they have made to tax revenues here in respect of the development of this beautiful city. This city, as a result of what has happened, has a growing meaning to all Canadians, certainly to Canadians who live here and to Canadians who visit here.

I think as we embark, as the Speech from the Throne said, on a consideration of the "future of the national capital"—that is a pretty broad phrase—we ought not to forget there are two considerations—the creation of the national symbol which this city is supposed to be, and the continuation of the effort to make this city not only a satisfactory place in which to live, work or raise children, but also a satisfactory place for the residents of the area to participate in the government of this area.

I hope that when the committee is formed it will not be forgotten that certain instruments of local government are precious; that certain structures such as the municipal governments are those instruments which are closest to the people of this area. Now when we embark on a consideration of what our national capital is to be, and what the structure is to be, we should bear in mind the precious qualities of those instruments.

I wish to serve notice that in the consideration of the Fullerton Report which will shortly come before the House I, as a member representing part of this national capital area—and I hope I will be joined by other members representing it—intend to ensure that there will be no step taken that will make the governments of this region more remote than they are now from the people who live here.

I think it is important that we consider the operation of this national capital area in the future. But we must begin, I respectfully say, with a consideration of its past. There has been no review of the function of the National Capital Commission since, if I recall correctly, 1956. This Commission was established by the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

During that period the Commission has become a major life force in this area. It is unfortunate but true that its relations with the local municipalities have not always been the best, or not always carried out with the most understanding. I think we must review this body to ensure that whatever errors were made from time to time they are not carried into any future form of government which may, or may not, come out of the considerations of the committee which is to be established.

We must listen to the provincial governments. I think they must be asked point blank what are their views. I refer not only to the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario, which have a direct interest, but to all provinces of the country whose people contribute to this capital.

I believe we must pay attention in this area to the community associations which are active in it. We must consider their views. I believe we must consider not just the Fullerton Report, which is a narrow issue, but also the whole series of studies that are being conducted now.

We must consider the matter of rapid transit and the position of the federal government with regard to it. We must consider the matter of open and green space. We must consider the preservation of our heritage, not just as an area but as a national capital. We must consider local needs in order to see how they mesh with others, and then provide, if we can, the machinery for the meshing. But at all times in this consideration we ought not to allow ourselves the luxury of believing that only a federally oriented and only a federally dominated agency can properly chart the course of the area.

There are plans now with regard to land use in the national capital area which are to be released. The regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton just submitted its official plan to Queens Park, and there is a plan for downtown parking. I understand that plan is to be released later in the fall. We must study these things. We must also consider the study just instituted by the government of Ontario with regard to the changing functions of the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. We must study as well the plans and consider the aspirations of the Outaouais region in the province of Quebec. We must consider all these matters to ensure that no stone is left unturned in respect of matters with which this committee will deal.

I do not know whether all the recommendations of the committee will ever be implemented. I really do not know that, but I know that whether they are implemented in whole or in part they will have a profound effect on the future of the national capital area. I suggest to the government, through you, Sir, that this is a matter which ought not to be proceeded with hastily, and that we ought not take second-hand opinions with regard to other national capital areas, but that there should be the fullest right and privilege to travel, to listen, to delegate, to see for ourselves so that we will not have to accept the reports of others, with the biases of those who will bring forward those reports.

As I say, I admit that the people of Canada make a great contribution to this area, but there must also be considered the wishes of the people who live here. It is important that those wishes not be lost in the rush to create a model national capital.

● (1540)

There is one other matter which I hope this committee will consider, and that is the whole matter of federal financing for local municipalities. I do not know of any subject that has caused greater difficulty in this country, and particularly in this area, than the dominant federal presence in the national capital area and in the municipalities that form part of this area. I think we should be prepared to look at new machinery to ensure that, in an area such as this, or in any other area where the federal government's institutions play an important part in local assessment, there is machinery to allow grants in lieu of taxes to be dealt with openly rather than behind closed doors, subject always to the provisions of the British North America Act.

Some time ago the mayor of the city of Ottawa went to see the Minister of Finance and came away from that meeting with $700,000. I do not know why that happened; I am sure it happened for the proper reasons. But I believe there should be machinery to ensure that all the local government parties, and all the municipalities, can fully and fairly examine in an open way the problems that they have with the large federal presence in this as any other area.

I look forward to this committee, not because it will bring change but because it will bring examination. I hope that this committee, when it deals with this matter, will balance the national interest with the great private and local interests that there are in this area as a place in which to live, so that perhaps out of it will come a proposal for something new with a strong mixture of the old but, most important, that whatever is proposed will be accepted not only to the country as a whole but to the people who live in the national capital.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Matane wishes to direct a question to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, but it cannot be done without the unanimous consent of the House. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. De Bané: According to the figures of the Public Service Commission the percentage of French speaking members in the public service has increased by over 1 per cent in the last six years. Does the hon. member think that this is a fast pace of increase and, if not, what would he suggest as a means of increasing the number of Francophones in the public service, provided of course that the merit system is preserved? Does the hon. member think that this increase of 1 per cent in six years is a very fast increase, and how can Francophones get a better deal in the public service?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I certainly would not consider the 1 per cent increase to which the hon. member referred as fast, to answer the question quite seriously, but I do not believe that the merit system will be preserved in any respect by the establishment of a quota, and that was the clear signal given by the Prime Minister in the course of his speech.

As I said in the course of my speech, I would like the public service of Canada to be a satisfying place of work for all Canadians, but I do not believe it will be that satisfying if the merit system is cast aside. I think it is important that we and those in authority understand that in this country we cannot remake 107 years of history in five or ten years. I think that once we get that into our heads there will be a greater understanding with respect to the problem to which the hon. member referred.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) just said about the Official Languages Act, the structure of the national capital, and the relationship between the federal government and the city of Ottawa. I will deal with these matters on another occasion because I am constrained by the nature of my current speech touching on national economic issues. On another occasion I will deal with the hon. member's interpretation of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) speech in the throne debate.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to transmit to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome), now Speaker of the House, my own personal congratulations. I was present in Sudbury the first time he stood for election, unsuccessfully as it turned out, in the by-election of 1967, and those of us who were close friends of his on both sides of the House watched him with great affection as he matured in his parliamentary skills. He has a very happy blend of energy and sensitivity; he has an innate sense of the mood of the House, and I want to congratulate him and extend to him my hopes for his success as the First Commoner in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want also to say to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply that I thought they maintained the high standard set in recent years for those two traditional speeches, and that they launched this new parliament in high style.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What I want to do today is bring the House into my confidence at this stage. Of course I will be presenting a budget for the current fiscal year before mid November subject, as I said earlier, to consultations which I will have with the Prime Minister and the House leader, so that to a certain extent this will be an interim report on the economy, and a summary of my impressions as they now stand.

In the budget I intend to provide a broad, comprehensive review of the state of the Canadian economy and of our future prospects as Canadians, to the extent that those prospects can be determined in a very uncertain world. I believe that never before, certainly in the post war period, has it been so essential to take account of the very real difficulties and dangers confronting the international community in formulating our own economic policies here in Canada.

Events of the past years underline the extent to which the economies of all nations, strong and weak, developed and developing, have become intertwined and interlocked, and this situation has particularly critical implications for Canada which, as a world trader, exports 50 per cent of everything we produce. We import nearly one third of everything we consume, and we have capital flows constantly across our border running each year into billions of dollars. Given this high degree of interdependence, there is just no way in which we in this country can magically isolate ourselves from developments abroad.

● (1550)

[Translation]

In terms of the performance of the Canadian economy, I must first say, to maintain a certain balance and to put it in perspective, that in spite of its vulnerability to events taking place outside the country, the Canadian economy has fared, up to now, relatively better than the economy of other countries.

I see the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is smiling slightly, but he has admitted, somewhat too late, but still, to this fact in his remarks during this debate.

Our real growth in 1973 has been surpassed only by that of Japan and, this year, chances are that it will be much better than that of any other industrialized country.

In the second quarter, real gross national product had increased by 4.8 per cent compared with that of a year ago and a decrease of more than 1 per cent in the U.S.A. over the same period.

The rate of increase in employment has been strictly the same: 420,000 new jobs were created in addition to those of the previous year, representing a 4.8 per cent increase. The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment has risen considerably reaching 5.8 per cent. As indicated by Statistics Canada, this rate will probably be reduced after study, when all the figures for the year are available and conclusions can be drawn on what changes have occurred in the seasonal labour market in the last few years.

The real disposable income per capita, that is personal income after direct taxes, including social security benefits but excluding the effects of inflation, has gone up by 6.3 per cent in Canada in the first six months of 1974, as compared with the same period in 1973 and a 2.1 per cent drop in the U.S.A.

We have generally noted that the economy rests on considerable underlying forces despite the weaknesses in some sectors. Many enterprises have reached the limits of their production capacity while others have been held back by the lack of labour, materials and components. Consumer spending has kept on being of considerable support. The expansion has been fueled by the rapid climb of capital investments.

An investigation made during the middle of the year, in the month of July, on public and private investments in Canada, has recently allowed the initial forecast of the total amount of capital to be spent to be increased from 16 to 21 per cent and that of business investments from 19 to 25 per cent. Even if part of this increase was caused by an increase in costs, the sums involved are certainly still showing that capital investments are rapidly increasing.

[English]

Having said this, I must say frankly to the House that there is no room for complacency or smug satisfaction over the relatively strong performance of the Canadian economy. I have never tried to disguise, either from the Canadian people or the House, the fact that we face an era of real and potential difficulties. My point is this: these difficulties should not be minimized, but neither should they be exaggerated. Global inflation remains the most critical human and economic problem confronting us, raising social and political tensions in many countries, and jeopardizing the stability of the international economic and financial system.

Inflation strains every family budget in Canada. Some families are suffering what I believe to be undue hardship. It is small comfort that the increase in Canadian consumer prices has been lower than that in most other industrial nations; small comfort that the interest rate has risen moderately less in Canada than abroad as a result of international inflation and uncertainty.

I ought to recite to the House that the August increase in Canadian prices over those of one year ago of 10.8 per cent compares with an increase of 11.2 per cent in the United States for the same period, and with an average increase in all OECE countries of 13.4 per cent. The August over August last year cost increase in Canada of 10.8 per cent now becomes the 10.9 September over September increase, as announced today.

Personally I confess to the House that I am immensely disturbed by double-digit inflation in this country. This remains the first priority of the department I represent and of the government to which I belong. We must face the fact that the prospect foreseen earlier by many countries, by this country and by OECE countries, for bringing world inflation under some degree of control this year has been set back for a number of reasons which have become apparent over the past few months.

First, there is the outlook for reduced crops in Canada and the United States. We were talking yesterday about a reduction of between 25 and 30 per cent in the U.S. corn crop. The United States soybean crop has been slashed. The sugar crop is down. The potential for crops in Canada is reduced, and there will be less than bumper crops in the Soviet Union. These factors have clouded earlier hopes that abundant harvests would lead to a levelling out in food prices.

Second, the prices of industrial raw materials, or so-called commodity prices, have declined less than generally expected in response to a flattening out in world economic growth. Thus they have provided less of a brake on inflation than any country anticipated.

Third, rapidly accelerating wage and salary increases in Canada and most other countries threaten to bring about substantial cost increases over the next two or three years. I recognize this. These are the result of the understandable efforts of working men and women, in this country and other countries, to catch up with the rising cost of living. None the less, some of the increases based on an anticipated continuation of the present rate of inflation will provide some inflationary pressures of their own. As I said in Vancouver, there is something to be said for cost of living indicators, because they respond to conditions which, hopefully, will subside.

Certain sectors of our economy undoubtedly are being adversely affected by developments abroad. Over the first eight months of this year the value of Canadian exports was up by 23 per cent over the level one year ago, but volume was down by 5 per cent over that of one year ago, resulting in weakness in some export industries because of slow or declining growth in some of our major markets abroad. The high level of interest rates has unquestionably been an important factor, although only one of many, leading to a decline recently in the previous very high rate of new housing starts.

The lumber industry has been adversely affected by the recent slowdown in Canadian house construction, but mainly by the reduction in the very large U.S. market as a result of the very sharp decline, even flattening out, in housing construction in that country. This has been compounded by the falling off in our other important markets for lumber in the U.K. and Japan. The economies of both these countries have been in a negative posture for the first half of 1974.

There is no question that the economy has been seriously affected in recent months, particularly by widespread industrial strife between labour and management over new collective agreements. The result has been the record of 6.3 million man days of lost production in the first seven months of this year. This, inevitably, is retarding the growth of production, employment and incomes. The construction industry in many parts of the country was particularly hard hit.

Another factor to be considered is the fourfold increase in world oil prices. This continues to be immense concern here and elsewhere. It remains a major source of inflationary pressure as this cost increase works its way through the economic system of various countries. Is this demand-pull, cost-push, or a structural change not responsive to ordinary economic forces? This is something we will need to deal with, perhaps in a deliberate micro-economic rather than macro-economic fashion.

● (1600)

The resulting increase in current account deficit of both developed and developing nations, together with cumulative debt charges, creates massive balance of payments problems that jeopardize the international monetary system and international financial institutions unless fair and efficient means can be worked out to recycle funds from oil producers to oil consumers on terms they can afford to bear.

That is a problem for the industrial world, but it is an even more serious problem for the developing world where we potentially have a catastrophic situation, because of the price of food, fertilizer, oil and manufactured goods. This is now out of reach for two thirds of the world's population, and will remain that way unless we and other nations do something about it.

Finally, we face the potential danger of over-kill, of excessively restrictive action being taken by individual nations in an effort to curb inflation and/or to deal with their balance of payment problems. If this restrictive action were being taken by a number of nations, particularly the larger ones, it could have a cumulative effect that could snowball into a world-wide recession. I take some encouragement from President Ford's statement yesterday to the United States Congress in the sense that it is clear the United States will not engineer a deliberate deflationary demand policy.

[Translation]

It is becoming more and more clear that in a world of interdependent nations caught up in a series of serious and highly related problems whose origins and consequences are basically universal, the best line of defence still lies in co-operation by, and the banding together of, all peoples. The government of Canada wants to play its role to the fullest by participating in the implementation of the type of international consultation and understanding that are essential to solve these problems.

We have talked about private discussions held in September between Ministers of Finance from the United States, Great Britain, France and Germany. We took part in a meeting of Commonwealth Ministers of Finance in Ottawa about two weeks ago. We took part in the annual meeting of the IMF and the World Bank held last week in Washington, which gave us the opportunity to have some more private discussions.

I would like to tell the House that I had private discussions in Washington with the Ministers of Finance of Japan, Sweden, Australia, Belgium, Holland and Italy.

Mr. Stanfield: That is a lot of talk.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a lot of talk, says the Leader of the Opposition. I must reply that without any consultation, without continuous dialogue, I would fear for the future of the world. Consultation and dialogue are important.

These discussions and meetings provided these countries with the opportunity to explain their views about world problems. Second, this allowed us to obtain a first hand account of their economic policy. Third, and most important perhaps, we were able to express the views of Canada on the international situation.

What views did I express on behalf of our country? First of all, I said that very close and continuous international consultation and cooperation are essential, and that Canada would rather have consultations than confrontations between countries.

Today, the ills of national economies are contageous. Second, I emphasized the fact on behalf of Canada that Canadians believe that the best way to fight inflation is to implement measures to increase production and offer. Third, I underlined our concern about the measures implemented by various countries and which have provoked an excessive economic slowdown, since they tend to prevent the increase in offer which is required to stop inflation.

The high costs in terms of production and employment losses run the risk of producing few lasting advantages as concerns price slowdown, while increasing the danger of a cumulative slowdown in the economic growth of all countries.

Fourth, I have pointed out the necessity of stricter control over the movements of international capital and the eventual need of a new international mechanism to facilitate the reinvestment of oil capital, especially in order to settle special difficulties met by under-developed countries.

Fifth, I underlined the importance of carrying out within GATT, the negotiations for a further liberalization of world trade. And we were encouraged last night, Mr. Speaker, by the assurances of His Excellency the Ambassador Mr. Eberle who stated that the American authorities greatly hoped that the Trade Reform Bill now under consideration in the U.S. Senate would finally be passed after much delay.

Sixth, I referred to the necessity of finding means to stabilize the price of essential products intended for underdeveloped countries and to increase progressively the transfer of real resources to those countries.

[English]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Canada took the position that we ought to use the international institutions already in place, the strengthening of which all nations had laboured assiduously for over the past two years. We ought to use international institutions such as GATT, the World Bank, regional development banks and, particularly in the financial and monetary field, the International Monetary Fund.

It is for this reason the Group of 20 adopted a resolution, which was accepted by the board of governors of the International Monetary Fund, comprising about 150 countries in the world, to set up an interim committee of 20 ministers representing all the constituencies for which we vote, all countries in the free world, members of the International Monetary Fund. Parenthetically, I see no reason why invitations ought not to be extended into the eastern bloc, and beyond, in order that we have an all-embracing monetary situation.

In any event the new interim committee of 20 ministers will be an advisory committee to the fund. When the articles of amendment are changed, it will become the new executive board to the International Monetary Fund.

I think I should illustrate for the House the terms of reference of this committee. This committee is charged to keep under review, first, the way in which countries deal with surpluses and deficits in their balance of payments because of the effect it could have on other nations.

Second, we are charged with keeping under review the developments, that take place, or ought to take place in international liquidity in its various forms. No doubt as a result of the Viet Nam war and the Great Society being financed by borrowing instead of taxes, the international liquidity under American terms around the world held in various reserves, the Euro-market of another $150 billion and the over-liquidity of certain other nations, this has set in motion certain international inflationary effects which no individual nation alone can either regulate or combat.

Third, the committee should keep under review the over-all or global aspect of the transfer of real resources to developing countries, real resources in terms of their own standard of living.

● (1610)

The committee, under its terms of reference, will be available to deal with sudden disturbances which might threaten the world financial or economic system. It will also consider, as necessary, proposals by the excutive directors to amend the articles.

I should like to ask the House to bear with me while I describe to hon. members the way in which I envisage this committee functioning. I believe my views are shared by the vast majority, if not by all, of the members of the Fund. First, we consider it to be a very important organ of the Fund. We believe it provides an opportunity to lend political support and decision to the work of the Fund. In other words, the Fund will no longer just be a group of economists or technocrats which each of the 20 constituencies, the countries of the world, send to regulate economic affairs.

We recognize that the difficulties facing the world are not purely economic—that political decisions have to be made which require the exercise of the political will of the world community as a whole, and of the nations which make up that community. So we are trying to give some political direction to the Fund through people who presumably can carry the governments they represent. I believe this committee will enable the Fund to play an even more significant role in world monetary and economic affairs.

I have approached this work with a sense of urgency. I believe the problems facing us are grave. I was very pleased with the discussion of the work program, and the laying of plans for two early meetings reveals that members of the committee share my feeling, and are determined to bring the necessary political will to bear on the issues. I hope the committee will not become bogged down in work which properly belongs to the economists, the technocrats or the executive directors. I hope the political committee will stick to the big issues which require discussion and decision.

At its first meeting last week, the committee recognized that the first problem to be tackled was that of recycling funds from countries in surplus to countries in deficit, to meet the balance of payments deficits which affect a good many of the European countries as well as other countries. Along with this, there is the even more serious problem of the deficit balances facing the countries of the Third World.

These matters will be taken up by the interim committee at its first and subsequent meetings. As a matter of fact, I tried to arrange a meeting before Christmas but because of various circumstances—the budgets to be prepared by finance ministers of European Common Market countries, and their annual meeting in mid-December—the meeting could only be arranged for mid-January.

Mr. Stanfield: May I be permitted to ask a question? What will be the agenda at this first meeting? What does the minister think will be accomplished? What progress is expected to be made?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With regard to the recycling question, the staff of the Fund and the executive directors have been asked to review the availability of existing official and private institutions to recycle, in accordance with ordinary market forces, funds from surplus to deficit countries, and also to examine what other avenues, either by intervention at an international level through international institutions, or by governments on a bilateral level or within the economic community of Europe itself, should be explored. We expect propositions and options to be available for decision by January 15.

I do not under-estimate the difficulties, particularly in view of the attitude taken officially by the United States, and to some extent by Germany, toward the question of recycling. But I hope we shall be able to hold discussions which will lead to some conclusion.

Mr. Stanfield: We shall be watching these things.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman is entitled to watch. I can assure him I will do my best on behalf of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The second question concerns the quotas in the Fund—when they will be taken up and what those quotas are to be. A general review of the question of adjusting payments and balances, including the appropriateness of fiscal, monetary, trade and exchange policies on the basis of the IMF world economic review which will become public in December, is also to be carried out, also including developments in international liquidity and an examination of problems arising from the proposed amendments of the articles, and including the question of gold and the link between developmental assistance and the allocation of SDRS which will be the new primary reserve currency in the world.

I am sure all members followed with considerable interest, as I did, the course of discussions between representatives of all sectors of the United States at the series of conferences on outstanding economic problems held last month on the initiative of President Ford. Underlying most of these pre-summit, or mini-summit, and summit conferences south of the border was a widespread recognition that, although many of the difficulties confronting us are international in origin and impact, the state of the United States economy and the policies pursued by the United States government exert a dominant influence on the economies of the rest of the world.

This will come as no surprise to most Canadians who have been aware for generations that our own economy tends to move closely in step with that of our giant neighbour because of the many links between the two. What is surprising, perhaps, is that on balance our economy has significantly out-performed that of our neighbour over the past four or five years in terms of increased output and new jobs. Because the economies of Canada and the United States continue to be very closely linked in a multitude of ways it should be obvious to every Canadian that there still exist very real and practical limits to the extent to which we can expect to do better than the United States in terms of growth and inflation.

With respect to inflation this limitation was recently recognized in articles written for the Toronto Star by two of the world's foremost economists, Paul Samuelson of MIT, and John Kenneth Galbraith of Harvard, one of the best-known Canadian expatriates. Here is what Dr. Samuelson said:

> No jury of economic experts knows how to achieve full employment with stable prices. For Canada, solutions without the United States would be difficult, if not impossible.

Dr. Galbraith expressed the following view:

> The United States is the key factor in the control of inflation. Without American inflation under control, Canada can do almost nothing. You import so much from us, our high prices become yours.

Personally I believe there is more scope for better price performance in Canada than these two economists suggest, but their views do underline the fact that there are limits on how much better we can reasonably expect to do. On the other hand, we might remember that we could do considerably worse than the United States if we fail to follow sound policies in this country.

I do not want to give anyone the opportunity in this House to say of the Minister of Finance, "Turner is just throwing up his hands; he says it all depends on the United States." That is not what I am saying. I am saying we must recognize the limits within which we are working—that with the right policies we can do better, but that with the wrong policies we could do worse. What I am doing is this: I am recommitting the government and myself to combatting inflation as the number one issue before this parliament on the basis of the mandate given to us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. gentleman's speech but the time allotted to him in this debate has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): He may, of course, continue with unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I wish to thank the House for its courtesy and express regret that I was not able to participate in this debate last week as I had originally planned. As hon. members know, I was down in Washington. During his remarks at the opening of this debate, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) castigated the government for failure, in his terms, to provide economic leadership. I found that charge difficult to reconcile with his own recognition in that very same speech that the Canadian economy has enjoyed relatively stronger real growth and less inflation than most other countries around the world.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No thanks to you!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I note the Leader of the Opposition did not seek to explain why it was that Canada had experienced such success. Perhaps he attributed it all to good fortune.

Mr. Gilbert: It was God's will.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I agree we have enjoyed a measure of good fortune in this country but I believe we in the government may also claim some measure of credit for good management and good leadership and, indeed, apparently this is what the Canadian people thought, on July 8.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You didn't win. We lost.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am glad I am getting to this part only after my time had expired! The fact is that over a long period of time we have introduced a broader, more comprehensive series of policies and programs aimed at moderating inflation and alleviating its effects on those least able to defend themselves than virtually any other country, and we have done it in such a way as to maintain strong growth in national output, employment and real incomes.

• (1620)

Undoubtedly the most important conclusion to be drawn from the series of economic conferences called by President Ford is that despite the yearnings of some people, even some editorialists, to have it so, there is no simple, quick, easy way of wiping out the inflation that has become entrenched so deeply in countries all over the world. There is no simple answer. If there were an easy answer, the Leader of the Opposition might have thought of it, I might have thought of it; someone in this country might have thought of it: somebody in the United States might have thought of it. They had the greatest array of economists ever assembled under the klieg lights in the history of the American republic, but they did not come to any simple conclusion. No one in Japan has thought of it, and neither has anyone in Germany.

All I can say is that it is not surprising that these discussions south of the border produced many sharply conflicting views as to the best means of attacking the multiple problems confronting the United States and the rest of the world. The fact is that many of these problems are different in their nature and in their dimension than we or anybody else have faced before. But to the extent that a consensus did emerge it provided a considerable measure of support for the basic approach that we in this government have been following in this country for the last 24 months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would ask hon. members to get the transcripts of these conferences and read what the panorama of economic opinion from left to right was able to produce. I ask hon. members to try to work out a common denominator and to arrive at a consensus from what those economists were trying to say.

Let me just go through this consensus of opinion, Mr. Speaker. For example, there was broad agreement that every effort should be made to expand output and productivity, in part by encouraging greater capital investment, in order to get at the root of the inflation problem by increasing supply. That is what we did in the last Speech from the Throne for agriculture, and it is what we did two and a half years ago to increase the manufacturing component by means of tax incentives and reductions.

From what one can distill out of this economic opinion that was given to the President of the United States, there was a feeling that excessively restrictive fiscal and monetary policies should be avoided because they would retard the necessary expansion in the supply of goods and services. This would be very costly in terms of lost output, employment and incomes, and it would provide little lasting benefit in reducing inflationary pressures.

There was widespread agreement that the goal should be to bring about a gradual reduction in inflation through moderate policies, rather than to seek to bring it to a jarring halt by extreme measures. That is the policy that we have been adopting. As Walter Heller, a former chairman of the President's council of economic advisers, put it, the trick is to bring inflation to its knees without putting the economy flat on its back. That is exactly what we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker.

The third consensus that I was able to distill—and, as I say, I invite hon. members to go through the transcripts in the way that I have—was that measures should be adopted to lessen the burden of inflation on those of moderate income who are least able to protect themselves. Surely that is what we have done. Two successive budgets proposed tax reductions of $1.8 billion, compared to the tax reduction proposed by President Ford of $1.4 billion. If you take the component as 12 to one, that is the equivalent of a $150 million tax reduction in our terms.

What about the increase in old age pensions, the tripling of family allowances, as well as the indexing of family allowances? These we have done.

There was also a consensus that, price and wage controls having been tried and found wanting, an effort should be mounted to mobilize support from all sectors of the economy for a fair and reasonable sharing of national income in an effort both to prevent a spiralling of costs and prices and widespread industrial strife.

The budget that I put before the House last May, which was rejected by the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —but reinstated by the Canadian people—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Only in some parts of the country.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —proposed a number of new measures to reinforce and complement those already put into effect. The Speech from the Throne delivered a week ago outlined a number of additional steps the government proposes to deal with the economic problems confronting us, steps that will be further developed in the new budget that I hope to put before the House before the middle of November, or earlier if that can be arranged. This budget will seek to chart the soundest course for the Canadian economy for the months ahead, based on the best possible assessment we can make of all the relevant factors from the widespread discussions that I have had with my counterparts in many of the provinces across Canada and in many countries around the world.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to the throne speech and to the consensus that was referred to therein. The throne speech does refer to discussions which other members of the government and I have been undertaking with representatives of other groups across the country. Their aim is to explore the possibility of developing a broad consensus among them on the sharing of national income that would provide a fair and reasonable balance between wages, prices and profits, while also permitting us to move toward greater price stability. Reaching such a consensus is, I believe, important to reinforce other policies which I have described on other occasions in this House and summarized today—fiscal, monetary and taxation—aimed at promoting continued economic growth while also gradually reducing inflationary pressures.

I have been accused, because of my travels abroad, of trying to get an assessment of what other countries are trying to do. Because I have travelled across the country to get provincial views on the same subject I have been accused of fishing for a policy. We have a fiscal policy which is known. We have a monetary policy which has been described on many occasions before the House. We have an exchange policy known to the members of the House; we have a trade policy known to members of the House. We have a supply policy, and a policy for increasing productive capacity in this country, which are known to the House and have been discussed on many occasions. We have a redistribution of incomes policy to protect those most hurt by inflation and least able to protect themselves.

What we are seeking here is a consensus as to what the reasonable balance ought to be in a free society between the various groups in the country and the division given to profits, wages, salaries, rents and so on. We have rejected a draconian squeeze in terms of a deliberately deflationary demand policy. In current circumstances the Canadian people have implicitly rejected price and wage controls.

I suggest to the House that a similar effort to reach a national consensus has also been launched in the United States, and in a different form in the United Kingdom, both of which have concluded, on the basis of hard experience, that compulsory price and income controls are not an answer in the circumstances that confront us at the present time. We have not entered into these discussions armed with firm and fast proposals. We are not seeking to impose a consensus; we are seeking to develop one. Our position on this aspect of our policy remains flexible and open to new ideas. I am sure that most members in this House and most of the Canadian people share my hope that those in other sectors of the economy will adopt a similar approach.

The problems confronting us, I believe, are too critical to allow us the luxury of grinding our own axe regardless of the cost to others, or of clinging unthinkingly to old shibboleths that have become irrelevant in today's very different world. I do not for a moment under-estimate the difficulties that we face in trying to arrive at some kind of co-operative effort to deal with inflation.

I appreciate the concern of working Canadians, who have fallen behind the rise in the cost of living, to catch up and maintain their standard of living, and their desire to obtain further improvements in living standards made possible by continued real growth of the Canadian economy. I appreciate the need for Canadian business to earn sufficient profits to provide a fair return to its shareholders, and to undertake the massive capital investment required in the interests of all Canadians to increase productive capacity so as to reduce inflationary pressures at their source, as well as to seize the great opportunities that I believe are open to us as a nation over the next couple of decades, to expand employment and further increase the real incomes of every Canadian.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is a proper balance to be struck in the case of profits, just as there is in the case of wages and salaries. I think we should also remember that healthy profits are essential to fuel the expansion in productive capacity that is of such importance to our present and future economic welfare, particularly at a time when the disruption of security markets has substantially reduced funds from other sources to finance the heavy investment programs now under way.

We all know that it is difficult for any business to get money on the equity and bond markets in this country. We all know that business has been forced into the banking system, straining it. If it were not for retained earnings, particularly in the manufacturing and processing industries, the impetus now enjoyed by the Canadian economy, propelling it toward business expansion, would not be as strong as it is now.

One way or another a balance is going to be struck between such elements as wages, prices and profits. The question is whether the balance is going to be struck through a process of consensus and co-operation, or whether it will be worked out through the process of prolonged and bitter industrial strife and more inflationary pressures, developments which would clearly be contrary to the interests of the country.

There are some Canadians who still believe there is somehow a choice between high inflation and low unemployment or low inflation and high unemployment. Make no mistake about it, there is no such choice, no such trade-off. The ultimate consequences of inflation are poor economic performance. The real choice is between reasonable price stability with a high level of output and employment on the one hand, and on the other accelerating inflation, slow growth of output and employment, and extreme risk to the very fabric of our society.

Before concluding let me say that I agree completely with the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are, as he put it, and I use his own words, "in a period of some sobering problems and we are in for more difficult days ahead". Where I disagree with him is in his implication that on that subject I have not been frank with the Canadian people. I said in my budget last May that "it is my conviction that the Canadian people want to know the facts, pleasant or unpleasant, and they ask only for a man's best judgment in meeting them."

Both in my last budget and on many other occasions I spelled out the facts as I saw them, whether they were pleasant or unpleasant. In a number of speeches recently I have been most candid in outlining the facts of the current economic situation, as I see it, to the point where some commentators have characterized my remarks as somber, gloomy and pessimistic.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

I am none of those things. I believe we should face our problems realistically, neither minimizing them nor exaggerating them. I do not believe the world is inevitably heading for a depression. I believe that we can meet and overcome our problems. It is going to take a good deal of time, patience and a lot of persistence, and it will take some political courage.

As I said in a speech to the Canadian conference on banking in Montreal a few weeks ago, we have potent factors working in our favour. The very realization by virtually every country, expressed both personally and publicly down in Washington, that the world economy is in a fragile state and must be handled with considerable care, is a good starting point. I can tell you from the meetings of the Commonwealth finance ministers here in Ottawa, and meetings of the International Monetary Fund, that there is an acute awareness everywhere of the need for consultation and for collective action.

I think this awareness was reflected in the decision by President Ford to send Ambassador Eberle, his special representative for trade negotiations, to Ottawa yesterday as his first stop on a visit to a number of capitals to outline and explain domestic economic policy measures which the president submitted to Congress in an address that very afternoon.

We in the government very much appreciated the opportunity to discuss these measures, many of which parallel policies we have already introduced, with Mr. Eberle. Both the measures themselves, and the ambassador's round of discussions with other countries to explain them, indicate that the United States administration is sensitive about the potential impact of its policies on the rest of the world. It indicates that the United States is well aware of the need for consultation and co-operation, and that it is conscious of the necessity to avoid restrictive, beggar-thy-neighbour actions.

The approach adopted by the United States administration serves to strengthen my confidence that if this trend persists, and if we can achieve the same co-operation from the European Common Market and Japan to make the necessary commitments to the developing world in the name of humanity, we will be able to muster the essential element required to deal with the problems confronting us. This does not refer just to the economic ability, which is sometimes difficult to assess, but also to the political will of this country and many other nations to solve the problems that are essential and that are subject to human decision.

Let me say, as chairman of the new interim committee of ministers of the Fund, I hope I can play some part on behalf of this House and this country in mobilizing the necessary political will around the world, and I assure the House that I will do everything humanly possible to advance that cause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I first take this opportunity to congratulate you on your appointment as Speaker of the House, and I also congratulate the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chairman of the committees of the whole. I also seize this opportunity to congratulate the movers of the Address in reply whose speeches were a beautiful kick-off for the 30th Parliament.

Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that throughout the sessions of this 30th Parliament you may rely on the help and cooperation of the member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Inflation is obviously our top priority economic problem, and in my opinion the government has to recognize its responsibilities and play an unequivocal part in this respect.

The President of the United States publicly put forward yesterday a definite and positive policy aimed at coping with inflation. But I, with several other hon. members, openly and simply ask: What are we Canadians doing?

[English]

This is about the 15th time I have heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) give us a classic economic lesson, telling us about the interdependence between international economies, about procedural structures of meetings, how difficult it is to combat inflation, and about all the economists meeting under the klieg lights. I agree that it is not an easy problem, but the government has been voted in to govern the country and not to make excuses.

It is all very well for ministers of finance to go to these international meetings and to tell us that this is an international problem, but let me draw an analogy. When we used to write exams the professor or the teacher, as the case may be, would often say that the problems were difficult, and we should solve the easy ones first—put your own house in order, then go on to the difficult ones and you might pass. If this government would only put its own house in order and assume its own responsibilities, vis-à-vis the leadership role in directing the fight against inflation, we might get somewhere.

The minister said it is becoming increasingly difficult for the private sector to finance industry. A superficial analysis of the situation underlines the fact that the difficulty rests squarely on the shoulders of the government because of bad policy in this regard. After a long summer holiday, after many cabinet meetings, and after the President of the United States takes a leadership role and tells the people of the United States what is going to be done to fight inflation in a relatively precise way, what do we get from the Minister of Finance today? I suggest we have heard a sort of grade one economic lecture telling us how difficult it is, a lecture that was probably written by some out of touch bureaucrat who does not know what is the situation.

I realize that perhaps because of tradition—and it might be an outmoded tradition—we will have to wait for the budget, but I tell the Minister of Finance that the Canadian people expected much more than the motherhood speech he gave us this afternoon.

In my brief remarks this afternoon I wish to underline some of the leadership roles I feel government should play. Rather than tell us what an impossible problem we have, or tell us about the international complexities involved, the government should tell us what we can do right here at home in Canada to fight inflation. What are some of the historical facts, and indeed not so long ago that we cannot remember them? In my view the rise in government spending involves not only the waste and duplication we see in respect of government programs. This is only one factor in inflation which is diminishing the economic freedom of Canadians.

Orthodox economists historically have held that a country which takes more than 35 per cent or 36 per cent of its gross national product for government is in trouble. I submit to this House that by these measurements Canada today is in deep trouble. Totalling up the expenditures of our three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal, we see that now well over 40 per cent of our gross national product in Canada is directed toward public or government spending. It is my view that it is the spending example of the federal government, not labour dispute settlements, which has been the prime reason for domestic inflation.

What is the record? Since the government took power under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1968 the federal government especially has shown absolutely no restraint. Federal government spending has increased 140 per cent in a little over six years. In 1968 the federal government cost every man, woman and child in Canada $590 a year. Today the federal government costs every man, woman and child over $1,300 a year.

This staggering increase has been from $12 billion in 1968 to $29 billion in 1974. What is worse is that this staggering increase of 140 per cent has not included one major new social or economic program thrust into the Canadian economy or society. The Minister of Finance alluded to the reason I voted against the budget last spring. The budget of last spring, without including one new major social or economic program to benefit Canadians, represented an increase of 20 per cent in expenditures, not because of any new imaginative program but because of the waste, duplication and inefficiency of the government.

I have always liked to consider myself an activist but I find today that government duplication of spending is a major waste in this country. I believe the time has come for the government to set a sound example. The minister made his 40 minute speech. We gave him 20 extra minutes because we thought that he would get to the basic substance of matters, but all we received from him was a second economic lecture.

I believe the government should set a sound example by cutting expenditures, freezing the expansion of the bureaucracy, and eliminating waste and duplication in many areas. It is also my view that monetary policy must ease interest rates, and that the advantages from such a move should at times be directed to specific areas like the housing field. Also, increased production must be considered as a prime target for controlling current inflation. The minister spoke about the desirability of this so far as the government is concerned, but we need many more measures before the House if this is to become a fact in the future.

In my view Canada is one of the overtaxed and overgoverned countries in the free world. As a believer in free enterprise and in the ownership rights of individuals, I believe Ottawa and the provinces must immediately enact a series of tax incentives to encourage private ownership of homes, businesses, equities and family farms. Only in this way can each of us have economic as well as political freedom.

An hon. Member: Beautiful.

Mr. Grafftey: I am glad the hon. member said "beautiful". I hope it also means he will prompt his government to take action. Let us get down to some basic points. What about government waste and duplication? I have already put some figures on the record this afternoon. I remember in my high school years being most impressed with the initiatives of the New Deal. Our economy and the economy of the western world at that time were faced with collapse.

Direct government intervention was required, whether by Canada or the United States, to save the system. However, too many of our politicians and senior bureaucrats have their hands on the levers of power today, and as a result we have what I call the old fashioned new deal mentality which has just come before Parliament, that so long as your hand is in the right place the problem will be solved automatically I tell the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of Finance that that is not how things work these days.

To be precise about it let us analyze in Canada exactly what is going on. If I should criticize any good program let no member say I am not for it in principle. I am for it in principle but I am in favour of it being well and efficiently run. We might take the case of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, every year, as do several other hon. members in this House, I fully support the major guidelines concerning unemployment insurance in Canada but what I want to criticize is the current mismanagement of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

As long as we do not have a link in the true sense of the word between unemployment offices and those of the Unemployment Insurance Commission there will be a conflict. How can the unemployment insurance offices know whether somebody is actually available for work? This is not a political issue because that is the way it is in my riding, and I suppose also in several other ridings throughout Canada. Several unemployed who are perfectly entitled to unemployment insurance benefits must wait one, two, three or even four months before getting them.

Mr. Speaker, I support the principle of unemployment insurance as such but because of mismanagement I see a waste of about $1 billion a year at the expense of Canadian taxpayers.

What about the administration of medicare? Again I am for the principle, but what do we have in Canada? Do not think for one minute that we have state medicine in the truest sense of the word. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) can talk until he is blue in the face about bringing down the galloping inflation in medical care services, but until the fundamental principles are changed it is useless to talk about it with the provinces.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

The only thing we are doing with medicare today is voting income supplements to go into people's pockets because services and personnel are very often not available. Let us suppose we were all in a town council and we passed a decree that everybody should receive free bread. However, no one in the town hall picked up the telephone to call the baker and tell him there would be a push for more bread, and that he should produce more. This is just what we did with medicare.

By forcing the provinces into a system that consists of income supplementation payments from a government which refuses to change and update the personnel and rationalize the services of medicare, we are wasting $2 billion a year on the bad administration of this program in conjunction with the provinces.

What about food programs? I am not an economist, but four or five years ago the government spent millions and millions of dollars, on milk quotas, or convincing farmers to stop producing wheat. Following this kind of ill timed intervention which has created artificial shortages or artificial surpluses, as the case may be, the government is spending $1 billion a year on agricultural programs. Because of the government's past intervention it is now forced to provide incentives for production in agriculture at another cost of millions and millions of dollars to the taxpayer.

The problem is that the waste and duplication in the present programs are denying money for the government to enter into needed new programs in the months and years ahead. I refer to programs in the area of housing, environment, transportation, urban planning, medical and health care services, to name a few. I know that it is often erroneous to make a comparison with Sweden, but Sweden, a country that is supposed to be the jewel of the socialist world, spends only 36 per cent of its gross national product on government, while we, who say we have a free enterprise system, spend close to 44 per cent.

The programs run by the state in Sweden are well run. The reason for the waste and duplication in so many of our welfare programs is that they are neither fish nor fowl because our government is always compromising, sometimes with the NDP, and our programs are half free enterprise and half socialist. So, we end up getting the worst of both worlds with a phenomenal waste of good money to the Canadian taxpayer.

Unless the minister puts incentives into his next budget that will give the private sector a viable enough base, whether in industry or in individual property rights, he will not succeed in getting the private sector to generate enough tax dollars even to finance the solution of problems which we face at present. So I hope that the next time the Minister of Finance comes before this House we will not get the same freshman's economics or history lecture. I hope he will get down to some facts and precise measures whereby the government will accept its responsibilities and provide an example of how we can control domestic inflation, instead of always saying that because everybody else is flunking we are also flunking.

On the assumption that I have about two minutes left, Mr. Speaker, I should like to end by simply saying I have a friend in Ottawa who works in the Post Office Department. I do not want anyone to interpret what I am saying as an attack on my part on the bureaucracy. We have many good civil servants in this country. But my friend tells me that there are 60 people in his department, 40 of whom do nothing day in and day out, absolutely nothing.

Many people in private life who have come up to this capital city on various projects have come to me and said: "Heward, the bureaucracy has become so big and so insensitive, we don't think any government can change its direction". If in effect there are doctrinal differences between us and the party across the floor of the House, if we differ regarding many principles and regarding the way society should be directed or not directed, as the case may be, let us at least stand united in this House on one thing.

I do not think it necessarily takes a Watergate to unite us in the way in which the U.S. Congress finally found its new supremacy, but I think we will all be serving Canada well, the Liberals, the Social Creditors, the Progressive Conservatives and the NDP'ers, if, during this parliament, and starting right now, we assert in a constructive and positive way the traditional rights of this House in terms of leading and directing the country.

It is not good enough for the Minister of Finance to appear before us and to give us a speech which was probably hastily written by someone way down in the bureaucracy. If we are going to earn our keep in this House we will have to deal with the broad issues and re-assert our prerogatives. By doing that, we will be serving Canada well. I thank Members of the House for the attention they have accorded my remarks this afternoon.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by extending to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and to his assistants, including yourself, my sincere best wishes.

This is also a good opportunity for me to express my thanks to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and his party for their help on two occasions. The first was during the election when they helped me obtain the largest voting turnaround in the country. The second was last Wednesday when the Leader of the Opposition mentioned science policy and his concern about the lack of one. It was my concern, as well as that of my fellow scientists, for an effective science policy that was very instrumental in my decision to seek election to this House.

My major objective is to take whatever steps I am able to give the scientific community in Canada a more effective voice. As a scientist I am one of a rare breed in parliament. Scientists are often characterized as being heartless, unemotional and unappreciative of human values. I should like to state emphatically that I do not consider myself to be in this category. Perhaps my views on the subject of women's rights are best illustrated by my support of measures to extend the benefits of the Canada Pension Plan to housewives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maine: We are entering an era of uncertainty and scarcity. Although we are still enjoying prosperous times, there can be no doubt that there is great concern among most people for the immediate future. While the prophets of doom have rarely had a more receptive audience, I for one remain optimistic concerning Canada's potential for future economic growth.

● (1700)

It is important, though, that our course of development be carefully charted so as to keep it orderly and working in the best interests of Canadians. I propose to consider the situation from the area in which I, as a scientist, have the most competence, and that is the technical aspect.

Canada's future depends on the harnessing of its technology and the control of that technology by Canadians. We must take stock of our resources and channel our energies into making those resources work to the fullest advantage of Canadians.

We have still not, and cannot in the foreseeable future, become free of our role as wood cutters and water boys, but we can take steps to encourage the processing of a larger percentage of our natural resources within our borders. Obvious problems arise with respect to providing financial aid and direction, and although government may not be fond of assuming responsibility for either of these roles, especially during a period of fiscal restraint, there is little doubt that it must. An intelligent utilization of our resources will be advantageous to all Canadians, and the long term economic and social benefits will justify the initial expenditures involved.

Clearly more than an input of public money is necessary if we are to tackle the problem successfully. Mere incentive programs are not the answer. We must choose those industries in which we can be particularly competitive on the world market, and direct our efforts towards expanding their productivity. Please bear in mind that I am advocating a more intensive use of present resources and not the wholesale exploitation of our natural wealth. To accomplish this, rather drastic, or, at least, ambitious measures must be taken.

We in Canada have never become totally free of the National Policy which encouraged our earliest manufacturing industries through tariffs which, in effect, made Canada a captive market. It is essential that we now look increasingly at the whole world as our market. If we are to be competitive with other countries producing similar products, we must take full advantage of the economies of production which are possible through world scale sized plants. Instead of exporting crude oil, we should be concentrating on increased petroleum refinement and the production of such commodities as high technology content plastics and other petroleum derivatives. A program such as this would make jobs available for Canadians, and I would stress that delay in instituting this type of development could have unhappy consequences in the near future.

As we are committed to slowing down inflation there is always the danger that some jobs will have to be sacrificed. As the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) mentioned last week, it is not too soon to begin taking steps against future unemployment. We must beware of ad hoc solutions to inflation. Immediate results are our primary concern at this time, but I feel that we should remain cognizant of the long term problems we are facing.

I am proposing that we take out a type of national insurance policy which would entail diverting our petroleum supplies from energy uses to manufacturing industries, and thus safeguard the raw materials we will be needing in the future. This approach depends on our finding a substitute energy source for fossil fuels which, I am confident, will be done in the near future. Our oil and natural gas could then be directed towards the production of plastics. The term plastic has become a dirty word among environmentalists, but for Canada I am certain that plastics hold the key to our continuing prosperity.

Plastics have been attacked primarily because they are not generally thought to be bio-degradable. Canadian scientists have shown this not to be so. It has been proven that it is now commercially feasible to produce photosensitive plastic containers which will break down when exposed to sunlight for a controllable period of time. The environmental objection to plastics no longer applies.

Of more importance to Canada is the savings of energy which we would realize if glass and metal products could be largely replaced by plastic. There has been a singular reluctance on the part of the citizens of this country to realize that Canada has entered the age of synthetic polymers. By continually supporting the use of returnable glass beverage containers, conservationists are promoting a largely self-defeating policy. It requires 20 to 30 times the amount of energy to produce glass or aluminum containers as it does to manufacture a comparable plastic product. Therefore we may safely dismiss the complaints of those who would cut back on plastic production as a means of conserving our petroleum supplies.

Plastics are included in the group of polymeric materials which are rapidly changing our way of life. In the past five years the production of synthetic polymers such as plastics, fibres and elastomers has increased by 92 per cent, while steel and nonferrous metal production has grown by only 33 per cent, resulting in the present situation where the volume, measured in cubic feet, of synthetic polymers produced is greater than that of steel and other metals. I repeat, the volume of synthetic polymers produced is greater now than that of steel plus other metals.

Canada and the Soviet Union are the only countries in the world which are self-sufficient in their oil requirements. However, we must realize that this self-sufficiency does not constitute an oil surplus in Canada. If we discount the Alberta tar-sands, our petroleum reserves amount to less than 2 per cent of the world total. This can be dramatically illustrated when one considers that in 1973 the non-Communist world consumed 20 billion barrels of oil. That is approximately twice as much as all the discoveries made to date in Alberta. In other words, the world consumes an "Alberta of oil" every six months.

The demand for oil is growing at an enormous rate. The world has used more energy in the last 30 years than in all its previous history and, according to predictions, will use the same amount again in the next 15 years, that is, in half the time. We are now turning the bend in an exponential curve.

Ninety per cent of the world's energy growth in the past ten years has been supplied by petroleum and natural gas. Presently they supply 70 per cent of the world's energy requirements, and will continue to provide the bulk of the energy demanded in the foreseeable future. With this rapidly escalating use of oil for energy, we must take steps to ensure that Canada has sufficient supplies of petroleum to permit a massive expansion in the synthetic polymer manufacturing industries.

We presently supply only 6 per cent of the United States oil requirements, and can never expect to be a major oil exporting nation. That is why I would like to see a change of attitude in this country, away from exporting petroleum for energy production and toward using it as perhaps our most abundant raw material for production of export products with a high value added factor.

● (1710)

This is the reason I oppose the application to export 10 billion pounds of ethylene to the United States in the next 10 years. I feel strongly that this ethylene should be upgraded to such products as ethylene oxide, ethylene glycol and polyethylene manufactured in world-scale sized plants in Canada and then exported.

Canada must become more self-sufficient in meeting its technology requirements. I feel that a more innovative research and development policy is in order. This fact is well known, and I mention it only to add one more voice in support of proposals to this effect by both the Senate Committee on Science Policy and the Science Council of Canada.

Senator Lamontagne has asserted that Canada's research and development expenditures amount to only 1.4 per cent of total sales, while in the United States they amount to 4 per cent of total sales. If we are to bring about a gradual end to our branch-plant economy and assure a greater independence for Canadian industry, this is an area in which changes must be made. This is the primary responsibility of industry and should not involve expenditures of public money. The innovative process, which covers the spectrum from research, through development to commercial implementation, is notably weak in the marketing area. The best research and development in the world is of no economic value if it does not result in commercial exploitation.

The recent visit by Premier Tanaka of Japan to this country served to underscore the importance and urgency of the point I have been making in this address. I also found Mr. Tanaka's visit interesting for more personal reasons. In 1971 I spent six weeks in Japan studying many aspects of that country's economy and culture. I came home deeply impressed by what I saw, and since then have repeatedly urged Canadians not just to gaze in awe at the accomplishments of the Japanese, but to attempt to apply solutions which have worked in Japan to Canadian problems.

Until now, with minor exceptions, Canada's economy has been the antithesis of Japan's. The increasing Japanese interest in Canada can work to our advantage, but not if we merely sit idly by. Certainly, we need foreign investment. However, we must ensure that any new investors become responsible partners in developing Canada's industrial potential.

I was pleased to learn of Mr. Tanaka's statement that Japan is looking forward to importing products of our advanced technology. Perhaps this announcement will serve as the necessary catalyst which will encourage an increase in our output in highly technical fields. It is essential that potential market areas be satisfied as quickly as possible, and I hope that Canadian businessmen will move to fulfill Japan's requirements before our competitors do so.

To those who are familiar with my riding of Wellington, it might appear strange that I have spoken to such an extent on industrial strategy. My constituency is a sort of agrarian oasis in Ontario's industrial heartland. Guelph, its only major urban centre, is fortunate in having many secondary and manufacturing industries which provide jobs without threatening the environment to any great extent. Consequently Guelph has remained a prosperous and growing city, with one of the lowest rates of unemployment in Canada. Increasingly we are welcoming people from the Toronto-Hamilton region who wish to escape the undesirable aspects of urban living while retaining access to the amenities of city life.

This year the Ontario Agricultural College of the University of Guelph is celebrating its one hundredth anniversary. Despite the multitude of benefits to mankind which has come from research at this college during its existence, it appears that the next century will tax our agricultural scientistists' abilities to their limits. Just as I am hoping that science and techology can help us make the best use of our non-renewable resources, I see these areas as the answer to our future agricultural problems.

The world food shortage remains critical and there is little reason for optimism as we advance further into the seventies. The Ontario Agricultural College, which enjoys an international reputation, is in the forefront of this research into and development of new strains and varieties of plants and animals which will provide solutions to the future demands for food. A good example of agricultural research and development that will benefit Canadians in the future is the experimentation with hydroponics being carried out in Aberfoyle, just south of Guelph.

Hydroponics, honourable members may know, is a method of growing plants without using soil. Stones are used to support the plants in a climate controlled greenhouse, and these plants are fed with nutrient-containing water several times daily. While I can vouch for the excellent flavour of the produce, my real hope is that this system will help alleviate the serious food scarcity we now face. The economics are not the most attractive at present primarily due to heating fuel costs, but I see solutions to this problem in the future.

One such solution is the use of natural gas already existing underground on a farm. There are several farmers in south-western Ontario who have this potential advantage. Another benefit of growing food by hydroponics is that any land will suffice, and prime agricultural land is not needed. In this day of urban sprawl where prime land is being put under concrete, an alternate solution for food production is offered.

As I mentioned earlier, the next few years are going to be difficult times for all people. Although we in Canada can regard ourselves as being among the most fortunate inhabitants of this world, this is no time for smugness or feelings of self-satisfaction. The motto for the remainder of the seventies should be "co-operation on every level". There must be increased co-operation internationally, among our provinces, and between management and labour. It is time that self-interest gave way to genuine concern for one's fellowman. Let us endeavour to make Canada an example of this spirit for the rest of mankind to follow.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, as I take my place in the House of Commons, my first words are of appreciation to my constituents who had the faith and confidence to have me represent them in this great House. May I also express words of appreciation to my mother, my father and the rest of my family, without whose support I would not be here.

As a newcomer to the House of Commons I came with enthusiasm, idealism and energy. As I anticipated the Speech from the Throne, I looked forward to a dynamic and visionary statement of Canada's direction and goals for the future. Unfortunately, I was disappointed.

For a moment this afternoon, I thought there was a ray of hope. I thought that some of the visionary world problems were being looked at by a minister of the Crown. I saw some hope as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) began to speak. I listened attentively, but my new hope was dashed. It was dashed because the great white knight, the seeming new leader of the Liberal party, began to speak of his personal, international consultative exploits and his own self-inflated aggrandizement, as he told us that but for his great expeditions the world would collapse in economic confusion. I must say I began to have my doubts at that moment.

● (1720)

I hope the minister will soon learn that along with the great position of responsibility in which he has been placed should go some degree of humility. I was further disappointed with his speech because, as it continued on, what we heard represented little more than an itemization of shop-worn Liberal election promises, tedious rhetoric about the worsening economic situation internationally, and an admission by the government that it does not know what to do.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You wrote that speech before you heard mine.

Mr. Wenman: What is he going to do? He is going to seek some kind of consensus. He is going to seek answers. I suggest the Canadian people have waited long enough. We are not waiting for the minister to seek answers. We are waiting for him to bring them to us, and bring them to us now.

We have heard talk from the government about new initiatives in foreign policy. Unfortunately we have not heard precisely what the nature of these new initiatives is likely to be. There have been announcements concerning expanded and aggressive participation in international affairs, particularly in the areas of world food aid and the non-proliferation of nuclear technology. No doubt, this is a commendable objective. However, one wonders whether such a thrust might not thin out even further an already inadequate voice in international affairs.

It is obvious, given the current international climate, especially in light of the situation facing our neighbour to the south, that Canada will have to put forth immediately a firm resource policy. A policy of drift—and this is all the government has produced—will simply not do in this time of crisis. It would seem to me that the full force and effort of the Department of External Affairs will be required to prepare us for dealing with our greatest friend and best customer, the United States.

Not only will there be tremendous pressure for extended export and participation in the Athabasca tarsands and other non-renewable resource areas, Canada must also be prepared to take a strong stand regarding the export of Canadian water—a stand which has not been heard in this chamber since it was initiated by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: In the immediate future the tough, unbending negotiating stance of the OPEC countries will intensify the drive by the United States toward greater and greater self-sufficiency. In the final analysis, self-sufficieny in the United States in the area of energy resources will undoubtedly depend upon massive developments in the gasification of coal and the production of coal from desert shale. Thus the need for vast quantities of water. And it is in the direction of Canada that the United States government is looking for this water.

The government stand on the export of water needs to be rationalized and clarified forthwith. The more I have dug into this subject the more fearful I have become that secret negotiations are going on between the Liberal administration and the United States government for the export of Canadian water. Statements by high officials, U.S. and Canadian alike, lead to the conclusion that something is afoot.

The cabinet's apparent suppression of recent anti-water export statements by the former minister of the environment, the Hon. Jack Davis, as late as last spring, further heightens the suspicion that the government is likely moving in the disastrous direction of massive export and development of Canadian water. I have in my hand a document the contents of which were to have been delivered to the House of Commons by the former minister of the environment, Mr. Davis—a document which, curiously enough, was not delivered in this chamber. Since it strongly opposed the export of water we can only surmise it was not delivered because it advocated a position at odds with that being adopted by the government. I will read a few quotations from it.

I am going to read to hon. members opposite a few quotations from their friends, and they will be frightened by them. Who stopped this statement being made with regard to Canadian water resources, and why was it stopped? Why was it not issued in the House of Commons? Was it because of the stated position of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who once said in a television interview: "I don't want to be a dog in the manger about this, but if people aren't going to use it, can't we sell it for good, hard cash?" Or was it the new President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) who said, accordingly to Time Magazine: "Within 25 years we shall be exporting water to the United States." Or was it done by the minister, Mr. Davis himself, who was trying to jump back on the fence in time for political survival by repudiating a statement he had made earlier when he said:

> I want you to think of water schemes which are not only basin-wide, but possibly even continental in scope—the Rocky Mountains need no longer contain our thoughts—we can vault over them or tunnel through them and see what lies beyond; so we will be turning whole rivers around.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What is your evidence?

Mr. Wenman: I shall be pleased to send over a copy of the speech.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What evidence do you have of secret negotiations?

Mr. Wenman: I can see I have hit a sensitive nerve. The minister knows this is going on and he is concerned about it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is not the case.

Mr. Wenman: Well, was it the great ghost of Arthur Laing who said in an interview: "Diversion of Canadian water to the United States is not negotiable"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was in 1964.

Mr. Wenman: "There is no such thing as a continental resource". And then, turning aside, Mr. Laing finished the interview in a supposedly confidential aside by saying:

> You should know for your own information that something like the North American water and power line, a major water diversion, is not only feasible but inevitable. We are establishing a bargaining position and the best bargaining position is, no.

Thus, the position of the Canadian government on the export of water becomes clearer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What is the date of that statement? Is it not 1964?

Mr. Wenman: If the ministers object so strongly are they going to stand up when I have finished and deny that water will be exported? I certainly hope they intend to do so. But if they say there is to be no export of water, are they just establishing a bargaining position? Will it really mean no? I see the minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I might remind hon. members that pursuant to Standing Order 38(4) all questions to decide the amendment have to be put at 5.30, which is only a minute or so away.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to interrupt an hon. member during his maiden speech but the rules dictate that if he reads from a document he should table it, and some of us in this House would like to know the date of that particular document.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is an unwritten rule, followed at all times, that during a maiden speech there are no interruptions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: I am getting to them! I am getting to members on the other side and I love getting to them. Will the new Minister of the Environment (Madam Sauvé) stand up and say that no water is to be exported? And, if so, is that to be taken as a real no, or is that no simply a further bargaining stance related to what has become an inevitable policy of exporting massive amounts of Canadian water to the United States, a policy which involves the flooding of millions of acres of Western Canada, the destruction of our precious environment and, worst of all, the establishment of an irreversible trend toward economic and political union with the United States? What has happened to the poetic but perhaps hypocritical words of the Prime Minister who said—

● (1730)

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 5.30, pursuant to Standing Order 38(4) I must put the question necessary to dispose of any outstanding amendment at this time.

I might just say two things to the hon. member. First of all, his speech today being on the amendment, it may be he would wish to speak afresh tomorrow in that he would be speaking on the main motion if the amendment were disposed of this evening. In addition, I would also ask the hon. member to give some thought overnight to the point that was raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), that having referred to a document it is customary to table the document. He might want to give consideration to that matter.

In any event, it being 5.30 it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38(4), to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any amendment now before the House.

The question is on the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Stanfield), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment defeated.

Is the President of the Privy Council rising to indicate that the business for tomorrow would be the continuation of the Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention to proceed with the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne tomorrow. Depending upon progress in the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration I will then make an announcement about the following day.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock the House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 6.00 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

LABOUR, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration has the honour to present its first report pursuant to its order of reference of Tuesday, October 8, 1974. Your Committee has considered Bill C-12, an Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada, and has agreed to report it without amendment. I respectfully suggest that it be read today. A copy of the report and minutes of evidence Nos. 1 and 2 is tabled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Since the hon. member has already read the report in the course of his introduction, it will not be necessary to read it again.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH BILL C-12 TO SETTLE GRAIN HANDLERS' DISPUTE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been some informal discussions going on about the bill dealing with the grain handlers' strike and I understand there is agreement in the House to make an order as follows: first, that Bill C-12, the grain handlers' bill, be considered at the report stage and third reading today when orders of the day are called; second, that any time taken up today for debate or division on the bill be added at the end of the debate on the Address, and, third, that today be regarded as the fifth appointed day of the debate on the Address but that if any further amendment is proposed during the debate on the Address the division on it shall be taken at 9.30 p.m. on Tuesday.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): With reference to Bill C-12, that which has been said by the House leader is certainly true, notwithstanding the appearance of the minister as acting as both judge and jury in the standing committee. Now the government has shown its course we want to co-operate and see to it that the bill is expeditiously passed. Therefore, we agree to waive any required notice in this regard to bring on third reading.

● (1110)

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I might add that the other elements of the proposed motion are acceptable to this party.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion presented by the government House leader does represent the result of discussions which have taken place. We are prepared to give it our unanimous support.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, we also took part in this agreement and we still hold to it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the order. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

WORLD FOOD CONFERENCE AT ROME—SUGGESTED DEBATE ON CANADIAN POSITION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to put under Standing Order 43. Yesterday the Canadian Council for International Co-operation concluded a special conference in Ottawa on the world food crisis. This conference brought together representatives of 60 major non-governmental organizations to prepare recommendations for the Canadian government position at the United Nations World Food Conference at Rome starting November 5.

Because of the critical role that Canada, a bread basket of the world, will play at the Rome conference, and because of the great need for non-partisan involvement by parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That a special one day debate be held in the Commons prior to November 5 to examine the recommendations of the council for a strong Canadian position on a world food security system; ways to increase food production in the developing countries; and more equitable distribution of world food supplies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion. Since it is presented pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, yesterday the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) raised an interesting question following the refusal of his motion by the House. Your Honour undertook to examine the point raised yesterday by the hon. member for Bellechasse, namely that members of the opposition who move motions under Standing Order 43 should not be rebuffed by a voice in the wilderness but by somebody who will stand up and be recognized by the Speaker when he says no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Both the provisions of Standing Order 43 and the other practices of the House require that there be unanimous consent. It has been a matter of long standing practice and has been clearly understood that unanimous consent, when asked for, is negatived by any single member who raises his voice against it. That has been the long standing practice of the House, and I am unable to see anything in the precedents or practices of the House to argue otherwise. If there is to be any change to that practice, I submit it would have to come from some sort of understanding and agreement among members of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I want to go on with what I just said in a very appropriate way to my Progressive Conservative colleague and take up the remarks the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) made yesterday and those you are reported to have made on page 244 of Hansard: The question is very interesting and I shall study it in the future. I do not want us to leave unsettled the important question of upgrading Standing Order 43. I therefore ask what your intentions are as to the upgrading or outright suppression of Standing Order 43.

Mr. Speaker: I said yesterday that it is an interesting question, and it is. I also said I would examine it in the future, and I will.

[English]

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Yewchuk: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Athabasca is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, but my point of order is a continuation of the two points of order concerning Standing Order 43. I think it would be useful to point out that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is making a mockery of parliamentary procedure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, he happens to be sitting directly across from me and I am sure he does not pay the slightest attention to the motions, what they mean or their content, he just simply shouts very glibly every time an hon. member—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 43 presumably are clearly understood by all hon. members. This does not simply involve a question about the subject matter of the motion, but in addition the possibility that the business of the day may very well be set aside to debate the subject matter, which is a totally different matter. The point of order in respect of the manner in which unanimous consent may be expressed or negatived may be valid, but aspersions in respect of a member for his reasons for not wanting to set aside the day's business for debate on a Standing Order 43 motion is a totally different thing, and I must rule that this is not a point of order.

SUGGESTED TERMINATION OF TAX PRIVILEGES FOR "TIME" AND "READER'S DIGEST"—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I will try a third time to obtain unanimous consent to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House request the government to act immediately to terminate the special tax privileges currently enjoyed by Time and Reader's Digest.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion which was very short. Perhaps I should repeat it:

That this House request the government to act immediately to terminate the special tax privileges currently enjoyed by Time and Reader's Digest.

This motion requires unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF SUGAR MONOPOLY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That a special committee of the House be set up to study the relationship between the international sugar monopoly and the fact that the conflict without solution between the workers' union of the Saint-Hilaire refinery and their employer will cause a minimum loss of 25 million pounds of sugar, when sugar now sells for 50 cents a pound to the consumer.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER RECOMMENDATIONS IN FINKELMAN REPORT

On the order: Government Notices of Motion

October 8, 1974—The President of the Privy Council:

Oral Questions

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to consider and make recommendations upon Parts I, II and III of the paper entitled "Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service of Canada", prepared by the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board;

That 14 Members of the House of Commons to be designated by the House at a later date be the members on the part of this House of the Special Joint Committee;

That the said Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to sit during periods when the House stands adjourned; to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable; and to delegate to sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

And that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

ENERGY

SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—REQUEST OF COMPANY FOR GUARANTEES ON THROUGHPUT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of indications that officials of the Interprovincial Pipeline Company have been holding discussions with his officials during the past month concerning security of throughput for the proposed line from Sarnia to Montreal, I should like to ask the minister whether his officials have not kept him informed regarding these discussions which go to the heart of the project which the government has considered as being of great importance. I ask this question particularly in view of the fact that the minister made no reference to any such difficulty in an answer he made in the House on Monday.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I did indeed meet with officials of the interprovincial pipeline company to discuss this as well as other matters relating to the pipeline extension. They indicated at that time their concern on the basis of, perhaps one could say, general comment in the industry rather than on the basis of the National Energy Board report about the availability of oil supplies in the late 1970's and early 1980's. They indicated that their concern principally was related to the financing because of the consequence of any deficiency in the throughput financing. I suggested to them it would be possible to cover such a contingency in the rate structure that would apply. They in turn talked in terms of the possibility of the government securing their position against such a contingency and I suggested to them they should come back with specific proposals if they had them in that regard.

I should say as a matter of interest that I have been advised by the National Energy Board that it has now completed the taking of the evidence in the Montreal pipeline application case, particularly with regard to the changed route, and has adjourned it sine die so that the company can come back to state its position in this regard, as the board said, as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Some of us might wonder why the minister did not see fit to give some indication of some such difficulty when he gave a very reassuring answer in the House on Monday that the matter in his judgment would proceed and be finished early in 1976. May I ask the minister whether the government is prepared to give the pipeline a guarantee of throughput or minimal financial assurance each year or is the government prepared simply to leave this matter stand until the National Energy Board makes its report later on this year as the company has indicated it would either wait for such an assurance or wait until the National Energy Board makes its report.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I think was indicated in the press reports which inspired the hon. gentleman's question, we will be meeting with the company in the course of the coming week to have more precision with regard to its concern about through-put. As I indicated, our feeling is that any financial exposure in this regard should be achieved within the rate structure, but we will want to define more clearly with the company the extent to which it feels financially exposed. Then, of course, at that point the government would have to take a decision concerning what its financial involvement might have to be.

The general principle remains, however. We feel that for the security of the Montreal market the extension should be carried from Sarnia to Montreal.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister refers to me being inspired by a press report. It is fortunate that there is still a free press in this country and that we do not have to depend for information on that minister or any of them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether it is a fair assumption that despite the very reassuring response he gave to the hon. member for Edmonton West on Monday, the whole project is still way up in the air.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the hearing has been completed in relation to the route. As to the question of financing, it has been raised just recently by the company and it is one that obviously will have to be defined. But otherwise my understanding is that the company is proceeding with the application and the board will be in a position to report on all points except for that one when they render a decision.

OIL—ALLEGED POSSIBLE SHORTAGE—SUGGESTED CURTAILMENT OF EXPORTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. In view of the fact that the Interprovincial Pipeline Company has asked for this postponement on the grounds that their application was based on misinformation and the oil industry has now reached a conclusion which I have advanced to the minister for the last six months, namely, that by 1980 or sooner Canada will be in a deficit position with reference to oil, and in the light of the reluctance of the Interprovincial Pipeline Company to proceed, is the government considering phasing out our exports of western crude oil to the United States in order to make sure that we have sufficient through-put for eastern Canada, particularly in light of the fact that President Ford has announced that the United States intends to curtail its imports of oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It was because of our concern about conflicting opinions on the supply situation that earlier in the year the government asked for an advisory opinion from the National Energy Board with regard to the petroleum supply in Canada. My anticipation is that the government will be receiving a report within a month, and I hope then to have a more definitive indication of the actual supply availability. I have said in general terms, both inside and outside the House, that we anticipate that over the next decade there will be a reduction in Canadian exports of crude oil to the United States. The National Energy Board report when received will provide us with a basis upon which the exports can then be phased down. In sum then, we expect that exports will be going down. The exact timetable, of course, would be better dictated after we have the board's recommendations.

OIL—POSSIBLE SAVING BY USING WESTERN OIL TO SUPPLY MONTREAL MARKET RATHER THAN IMPORTED OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister if officials in his department have made any estimates as to what saving would be involved if we could ensure a market in the Montreal area for western crude rather than having to make compensation payments to the oil companies for oil imported. Would such a saving warrant the government in giving an assurance to the Interprovincial Pipeline of a guaranteed through-put?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): My recollection is that 250,000 barrels a day going into Montreal, while reducing the compensation liability, would also reduce the export charge income in the west, and I think that rather than an actual saving there might be a slight net deficit as a result of that kind of change in our supply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED UNITED STATES ACTION AGAINST AGRICULTURAL TRADE QUOTAS—DISCUSSIONS WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises out of the statement made public last night that the United States will move against agricultural trade quotas in Canada or put on import controls. In view of the potential seriousness of such a situation, and in the light of the fact that Canadian officials have known of these developments for approximately one month, I should like to ask the minister what discussions Canada has had, other than the discussion which the Minister of Agriculture was supposed to have had when he was in Boise, Idaho?

● (1130)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, following the Canadian government announcement of the quota system, it was indicated to the trading partners affected that Canada was ready to consult with them. Very intensive consultations have already been held with the Americans on the necessity of our establishing these quotas to protect the Canadian market. Subsequent to those discussions at the official level, I raised the matter with Mr. Kissinger when I met him in New York and advised of the serious view that would be taken by the Canadian government of any retaliatory action to the quotas justifiably established by us.

PROPOSED UNITED STATES ACTION AGAINST AGRICULTURAL TRADE QUOTAS—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, as I do not believe the minister really gave me an answer. If a small trade war should develop between Canada and the United States on agricultural products, what will the Canadian government do to alleviate its effects, especially in view of the contradictory statements made in Canada and the United States by the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to clarify Canada's response to the abnormal situation which prevailed in the market in 1973, and to justify our actions. We have attempted to convey that to the Americans, which will undoubtedly appeal to my hon. friend. At the moment the Americans have filed notice that they propose to take retaliatory action, and we have asked for public presentations of the extent of that action. We do not know the form or magnitude of the action they propose and until this is known it will not be possible for the Canadian government to assess its position and consider what action would be justified.

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING TRANSPORTATION OF ALASKAN OIL ACROSS CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When the minister advised the House yesterday that he had no precise knowledge of United States policy regarding the transport of Alaskan oil across Canada, did he know then that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had already discussed this matter with United States officials in Washington last week?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was replying to my hon. friend in the context of conversations that had taken place with the U.S. Ambassador-at-large, William Eberle. Naturally, I will be updating my information and knowledge with my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I do not pretend to know every aspect of every conversation that takes place between my colleague and his counterpart in the United States.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the minister could have said no and saved a little time. A supplementary question. Can the minister advise the House whether the government is prepared to use this new proposal, which clearly means an oil pipeline across Canada to carry Alaskan oil, as a bargaining lever to force the United States to keep all oil tankers out of the Straits of Juan de Fuca on the west coast of British Columbia?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows well the attitude that has consistently been taken by the Canadian government with respect to west coast oil tanker. I would advise my hon. friend that discussions are continuing on this very point between Canadian and American officials.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. All members from British Columbia know how little has been done in the last few years. My question to the government is very straightforward. Are they or are they not telling the United States that they cannot have their oil pipeline unless they get their tankers off our coasts?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to emulate my hon. friend by making the bargaining approach public.

Mr. Hees: Why don't you wrestle them to the ground?

Oral Questions

HOUSING

REFERENCE TO ELECTION PROMISES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a volume made up of Liberal promises made prior to the July 8 election.

An hon. Member: That is only the first volume.

Mr. Braodbent: It has some 287 pages—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been ample opportunity for debate during the beginning days of the session, but there is limited opportunity for questions. I would appreciate it if the hon. member would come to his question.

Mr. Broadbent: The volume is some 287 pages long.

An hon. Member: Read it all.

Mr. Broadbent: I think it should be entitled "Great Expectations". If I could have the attention of the cabinet, Mr. Speaker, I would put the question to the Prime Minister. On the occasion of an address on the problem of housing for this year the Prime Minister said in Vancouver on June 5:

> Down payments are too high, interest rates are too high, monthly payments are too big.

He went on to say that action had to be taken immediately.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, the hon. member really ought to pose a question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am giving the necessary background. In reply to a question in the House yesterday, the Prime Minister implied that solution of the housing crisis he was talking about in June could be postponed for a two to four year period. In all seriousness, I ask the Prime Minister if the government plans to do something this year about the housing crisis he referred to in June, or if they intend to wait a year or two or three?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people are well enough informed to realize that no government can do everything everywhere at the same time. That is why they gave us a four year mandate.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Also in June the Minister of State who was then responsible for housing promised that for this year $200 million would be added to the AHOP program. This has not been done so far. I would ask the Prime Minister if he intends to keep that election promise?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will send me a copy of that big book I will look up the quote and see if it is a real quote.

[Mr. Hees.]

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF IMPOSITION OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement contained in his speech yesterday, as reported at page 260 of Hansard that he has recommended and pointed out the necessity for stricter controls over the movement of international capital, can he tell the House if the government of Canada is proposing some sort of foreign exchange control?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. gentleman may have read that statement a little out of context. I will look at it myself to see if there is any ambiguity.

Mr. Gillies: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the position of the Minister of Finance that it is possible to have control over international movement of capital without domestic foreign exchange controls?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if one were to accept the hon. gentleman's premise, within the context of the speech the answer would be no.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED INSTRUCTIONS TO PERSONNEL NOT TO WRITE TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence. Was the Chief of the Defence Staff, General Dextraze acting on the minister's instructions when he sent out a general newsletter to the armed services instructing personnel not to write to their members of parliament with respect to any personal problems they might have?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: They should write to Information Canada!

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the letter to which the hon. member refers.

An hon. Member: You didn't get one?

● (1140)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised the minister has not seen this publication as it was generally circulated to the armed forces. It comes from the chief of defence staff. The minister should also be concerned because it advises armed forces personnel not to write members of parliament or to the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Since the minister has not been informed of this action by the chief of his defence staff, will he assure the House he will immediately instruct the chief of defence staff to send out an amending memo to all armed services personnel correcting what is a most serious abuse of the rights and privileges of all members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I have to date found no difficulty in supporting the chief of the defence staff in all that he has done. I will certainly want to look at this in detail, read it and report back at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully point out that owing to the avalanche of supplementaries this morning, we have not yet had the opportunity to ask a first question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. While I am happy that the minister regards this as a serious matter, I am concerned that this whole issue will be sloughed off. I believe it constitutes a very serious violation of the rights and privileges of all members of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows well that if it were his intention to raise this as a question of privilege, he ought to have done so at the first opportunity. He has addressed the question to the minister. Having dealt with it in one way, he obviously should not deal with it as a question of privilege at this time. He asked a question of the minister. The minister said he will come back with an answer. Until the minister appears to be dilatory in carrying out that promise, I can scarcely regard it as being sloughed off. If that does happen, and the minister fails to come back with an early reply, the hon. member will have the opportunity tomorrow. I would not accuse the minister of being dilatory at this moment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I accept the words of Your Honour. However, since it is a question of privilege, I hope the minister will give the undertaking that in the next session of this House tomorrow he will provide us with the information because it is a serious matter.

Mr. Richardson: I will undertake to do that, Mr. Speaker.

SUGAR—CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC GOVERNMENT TO SETTLE DISPUTE AT SAINT-HILAIRE REFINERY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully point out that owing to the abusive use of questions of privilege in the House this morning, we have not yet had the opportunity to ask the first question. I would therefore ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider and analyze the supplementaries asked this morning to take a decision in that connection.

I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has he communicated with his Quebec counterpart to find a solution to the conflict between the employees of the Saint-Hilaire refinery and theirs employer?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The matter was raised earlier by the member for Saint-Hyacinthe. Following his question, I inquired about the situation. I can say to the House that the refinery belongs to the provincial government and I really believe that the latter will find a solution to the strike now under way. I must remind the hon. member that the production of Saint-Hyacinthe represents less than 1 per cent of the Canadian sugar consumption. Obviously, I am concerned about the losses incurred, but I do not want this problem to be unduly exaggerated.

Mr. Rondeau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the hon. minister assure the House that he will order an investigation to ascertain whether or not the disturbance is being fostered by the international sugar monopoly at the expense of Canadian consumers and the sugar-beet production which accounts for several millions of dollars in the Richelieu Valley area.

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member should know that legal proceedings have been instituted in the Montreal Superior Court against four refineries. The law will have its way, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR AID TO QUEBEC SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question could be a supplementary. It is directed to the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

If the worst comes to the worst and the Quebec-based sugar refinery should consider closing its Saint-Hilaire plant, which would entail laying-off some 50 workers and wasting the complete crop of 350-odd sugar-beet producers, could the hon. minister undertake to explore, together with the Quebec authorities and within the scope of the Ottawa-Quebec agreement, all possible avenues to help this unique Quebec industry which is essential to the future of an agro-food industry?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, insofar as co-operation is concerned, the answer is, of course, yes. To the best of my knowledge, no formal application for such assistance has been received to the present moment. However, I will be glad to look into this and advise the hon. member.

ENERGY

NECESSITY FOR CONSERVATION MEASURES—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON CONVERSION TO NUCLEAR OR COAL FUELED ELECTRICAL PLANTS

Mr. Elmer MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Bearing in mind President Ford's statements regarding measures to conserve energy resources and in light of the recently concluded draft agreement on energy sharing in Brussels, does the minister intend to inform the House of similar conservation measures for Canada or are we to assume that as a result of our immediate surpluses there is no necessity at this time for conservation of energy resources?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have the same direction as the United States. Indeed, all western countries are working toward more effective conservation programs. The office of energy conservation has been directed more toward long-range measures than short-range measures as set out by the president.

Mr. MacKay: In light of President Ford's commitments for the quick conversion of existing oil-fired electrical plants to nuclear and coal fueled plants, has the minister consulted with provincial officials to pursue a similar course which would ensure a dramatic cut-back in the use of petroleum resources in the country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we announced yesterday we would be financing the first nuclear plant in New Brunswick for the use of that province, Prince Edward Island and hopefully the hon. member's province as well.

DUMPING OF MILK IN NOVA SCOTIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the fact dairy farmers in Nova Scotia are being forced to dump milk as a result of inadequate storage space and lack of transportation caused by a strike in Nova Scotia's largest dairy, will the minister advise whether immediate assistance is being considered by the government to prevent further such wastage and to avoid another fiasco similar to the egg tragedy does not occur?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is strictly a provincial labour problem. It is a provincial marketing board which looks after whole fluid milk.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

EFFECT OF QUEBEC OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT ON FEDERAL EMPLOYEES IN HULL, QUEBEC

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Francis: Has the government considered issuing a statement clarifying the position of employees of the government of Canada working in the city of Hull with regard to Bill 22, the Official Languages Act of the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no institution of the federal government will be affected by Bill 22. Bill 22 is couched in terms that it can only apply to areas within provincial jurisdiction. It, of course, cannot be applied to any area of federal jurisdiction.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

IMPACT OF UNITED STATES ANTI-INFLATIONARY POLICY—CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that three cabinet ministers and a special United States envoy have admitted that the anti-inflation measures announced two days ago by President Ford will have a massive impact on Canada, is the Prime Minister satisfied that the effect of these measures will not be disruptive or damaging to this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I must advise the hon. member that, as to the premise of his question, he has been misinformed. Such a statement has not been made by three ministers, two ministers or even by one minister.

Mr. Darling: Since both the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Finance have stated there was no consultation between Canadian and United States officials prior to President Ford's announcement, can the Prime Minister tell the House on what basis he seems satisfied that the impact of these U.S. measures will not be disruptive or damaging to Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I was a party to these conversations and perhaps the House will allow me to reply. There was no consultation prior to the President's statement because it had budgetary consequences. Nor would we, in similar circumstances consult with the United States prior to our budget. I did say that Ambassador Eberle gave an undertaking to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself, that there would be close consultation as to the phasing in of all the aspects of the President's statement which affect Canada.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MEASURES TO PROTECT PENSIONERS IN PRIVATE PLANS—DISCUSSIONS WITH CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance? Is the government giving consideration to the introduction this session of legislation regarding private pension plans, to provide greater protection for pensioners under those plans and to require such plans to comply with modern-day standards including the escalation of the pensions of those already retired?

Mr. Nowlan: Order paper!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): One aspect of the question relates to future legislation but there are also, perhaps, budgetary aspects which would prevent my replying fully to the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of assurances the minister has given in former sessions, would he make a beginning on this subject by having further discussions with the chartered banks about their inadequate pension plans?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the hon. member will recall our earlier exchange, I did bring the matter up with the banks. But I thank the hon. member for reminding me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What did they say?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATIONARY POLICY OF UNITED STATES—CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT—FAILURE TO SEND REPRESENTATIVE TO WASHINGTON ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that most of President Ford's statement dealt with non-budgetary matters, would the Prime Minister tell us, now that the need for confidentiality is past, whether he or any member of the government requested consultation prior to President Ford's statement and, if so, what was the reply. If such a request was not made, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the question relates to consultation with the President, the answer is no. If the hon. member has in mind consultation between the two governments, may I say there have been several meetings between members of the United States government and our government. And, of course, the Minister of Finance has been to Washington a few times recently.

Mr. Stevens: Since the greater part of President Ford's statement was based on what took place at the Washington summit economic conference, could the Prime Minister explain why no member of his government was in attendance at that conference—in fact, no member of this House other than myself?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—NEED FOR SUPPLIES IN ATLANTIC REGION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture or to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. It is a delightful question, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that it falls strictly within the confines of the jurisdiction of either the minister responsible for the Wheat Board or the Minister of Agriculture—no outside forces or weather storms could affect it. Has either of the two ministers, whichever is responsible, had an opportunity to consider the request from the grains group in Atlantic Canada urging that feed grains be put in position in elevators in Atlantic Canada without delay bearing in mind the onset of winter, unsettled labour conditions, and the fact that no feed grain whatsoever is stored there at the present time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I can assure the hon. member that the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Livestock Feed Board have been paying close attention to this question. With the movement of grain renewed, there should be every opportunity to put the grain in place. Domestic needs will be served first.

Mr. Nowlan: A further question to the minister. I appreciate that there has been some activity among the officials, but could the minister give us a commitment that the movement of the 250,000 tons of grain needed by Atlantic Canada will be given priority in view of the fact that though grain is now moving there are other labour problems which might well affect railroad operation and, thus, the movement of grain to the east. Could we have an assurance along these lines before there is any shutdown of supply?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we are giving priority to domestic needs. A lot of grain will be moving; we shall be putting it there, and, of course, what is needed domestically will take priority over the export of grain.

SUGAR BEETS—REQUEST FOR POLICIES TO AID INDUSTRY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question supplementary to the one asked by my colleague from Shefford. Since Canada could readily produce all the sugar needed in this country, which would save us from the international monopolies in this field, could the minister advise this House whether he has taken special steps to promote sugar production in Canada and, if not, can he explain why it has not been planned previously?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I answered that question in the House the other day, but to repeat, I am sure the hon. member realizes that one of the most important factors is the international sugar agreement which was destroyed, I guess the word would be—the countries refused to join it. The world pattern of sugar supply changed and the need for production in Canada is probably more obvious now than it has been in the past. I said the other day I was submitting a paper to my colleagues for consideration. Whether we can provide all the sugar we need in Canada is questionable. Even the most optimistic forecast I have been given is that only 25 per cent of our domestic needs could be produced in Canada.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF FEASIBILITY OF ARCTIC RAILWAY—REASON FOR DELAY IN PUBLISHING

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the study of the feasibility of an Arctic railway carried out by CN-CP some time ago. In view of the fact that this important study has been in the hands of the minister's department since last March and the bearing this information could have on current National Energy Board and right-of-way pipeline hearings, will the minister now undertake to honour his commitment to make this study public? If not, what justification is there for further withholding it?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The hon. lady says this is an important report. It is one we are studying very intently within the department—

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): For six months?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —jointly with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

An hon. Member: That is the trouble.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As soon as this study has been completed—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. MacKay: On a point, of order, Mr. Speaker. A high percentage of all the questions addressed to the Minister of Transport are answered in the same way. Matters are either under study or under review or being looked into. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could save a great deal of time if he could tell us which matters in his department are not under review at this time.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On that point of order, may I say that everything is under review.

An hon. Member: What about Benson?

Mr. Hees: Bring back Benson!

AGRICULTURE

BEEF CATTLE—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT SERIOUS SITUATION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister really fully aware of the extremely serious situation in the cow-calf and grass yearling side of the total Canadian cattle picture, and in particular, is he aware of the present disastrous price levels of heifer calves and yearling heifers? If so, has the minister any statement of policy to announce that might help restore some faith and confidence in the total Canadian cattle picture?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think this very question was asked in the first instance by the hon. member for Lisgar, which illustrated that we do have some concern. Even the United States of America has some concern about some of the things that we are doing to assist the beef industry. We have also received many suggestions from beef organizations and from the hon. member which differ greatly about what we should be doing for the beef industry. We consulted the provincial people on Monday, and I have already told the House that they were not unanimous about what should be done, although they thought something should be done. As far as I am concerned, something will be done because I realize that the situation is urgent. I hope the hon. member can impress on all his colleagues, including the hon. member for St. John's East, that the matter is important, too.

AIR CANADA

NEGOTIATIONS WITH PILOTS—POSSIBLE INTERVENTION BY MINISTER

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister report on the Air Canada pilots negotiations?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that the parties are meeting in direct negotiations today, I understand this afternoon.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister considering personal intervention?

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Hees: Give them a chance, John.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It may be a relief to the hon. member to know that I am not, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WORLD FOOD CONFERENCE IN ROME—CANADIAN POSITION ON A SECURE WORLD FOOD SYSTEM

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister state now that the Canadian position at the World Food Conference in Rome will advance structural solutions to the food crisis and not just emergency aid, so that measures to obviate famines will be situated within a total strategy for development?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would advise my hon. friend that the government still has under consideration the position that will be taken at the World Food Conference; but I think I can assure him that the position will not be confined to emergency action but to structural changes, or proposed structural changes, particularly in the economies of the developing countries.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Bearing in mind that the conference opens in November, something less than one month, can the minister state what Canada, as a major agricultural and producing nation, is prepared to do to establish a world food security system?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, all of the aspects of the conference are now under review. When a final position is determined it then will be possible to tell my hon. friend exactly what the position is.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES—REASON FOR FAILURE TO ADJUST INTEREST RATES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister intend to adjust the interest rates on government annuities in light of the fact that the interest rates on which the benefits and premiums of government annuities and older bonds are based remain constant during the term of the contract, despite accelerating inflation and higher interest rates for other government bonds?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. I have already had correspondence with a good many members on this subject.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain the rationale as to why concessions are being given in regard to some government bonds while annuities are completely ignored?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will write and give the hon. gentleman a full explanation, as I have several hon. members on both sides of the House.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY OF UNITED STATES REGULATIONS CONCERNING GASOLINE CONSUMPTION—CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that President Ford announced in his recent economic statement that he will be discussing with the automobile manufacturers changes to increase automobile gasoline mileage by about 40 per cent, and in view of the statement yesterday by the Minister of Finance that there should be prior consultation on economic matters, can the Minister advise whether there was prior consultation with him or his departmental officials regarding possible changes in automotive production, in view of the fact that the auto pact is a bilateral agreement?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague the Minister of Finance has already indicated that, as a result of consultations with Ambassador Eberle, there will be further consultations at the official level respecting the steps announced by President Ford. That consultation will undoubtedly involve discussion of the kinds of model changes that may occur. Consultation will be had both at the official level and, I expect, at the inter-corporate level.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—EFFECT OF UNITED STATES REGULATIONS CONCERNING GASOLINE CONSUMPTION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that our total deficit in automotive trade between Canada and the U.S.A. and Canada and Britain, Germany, Japan, Italy and France is now greater by several million dollars than our total automotive deficit in 1965, will the minister at the earliest possible moment make a statement on motions setting forth in the clearest possible terms where we presently stand with regard to the auto pact and his assessment of the impact of President Ford's statement on the Canadian automobile industry and Canadian automotive parts manufacturers? This matter is very important.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put into context the deficit to which the hon. member referred. When the auto pact was signed the deficit was probably equivalent to 60 per cent or more of the total trade in automotive products. Today it is less than 10 per cent. The second point, which is very important in understanding the effectiveness of the auto pact, how it works to benefit Canada, is that production and employment in the Canadian automobile industry is up. It has not been up in the United States this past year.

Oral Questions

CANADA-UNITES STATES AUTO PACT—REASON FOR LOWER PRICE OF CHEVROLET MONZA IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question on that subject. Would the minister explain to the House how it is possible that an automobile produced in Ste. Therese, Quebec, for the total North American market—I refer to the Chevrolet Monza—is being sold in Washington for $400 lower than it is sold anywhere in Canada? That is a common difference in both countries before tax is taken into consideration. This automobile is produced exclusively in Canada for the whole North American market, yet Canadians are paying a minimum of $400 more than Americans. Why is this?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to make inquiries on behalf of the hon. member. I should like to make it clear, of course, that in comparing prices of Canadian and American automobiles there is a different tax system. There is no sales tax in the United States.

HEALTH

INABILITY OF DOCTORS TO COPE WITH INCREASE IN TROPICAL DISEASES—MEASURES TO ENSURE TRAVELLERS RECEIVE PROPER MEDICAL CHECK

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the galloping increase in tropical and parasitic diseases which has now gone beyond the ability of doctors to cope with properly, particularly in the city of Toronto and surrounding areas, I should like to ask the minister what steps are being taken to increase the number of doctors trained in this particular field so that they at least will be able to diagnose and to recognize cases when they see them; and what precautions are being taken to make sure that travellers abroad get their proper shots before they go abroad and are properly checked on their return?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that my answer to the question of the hon. member will be long. I will only say at this time that the officials of my department subject new immigrants to appropriate exams.

However, since we have tens of millions of visitors and tourists each year, it would be impossible to submit all these people to a medical examination on their arrival in Canada. I am now revising the regulations and the legislation governing this and I may be able later on in this session to propose some amendments that would improve the situation.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to statements the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been making, and I should like to quote a part of one as follows:

—I don't think you're going to get (better returns and new incentives for farmers) with controls on exports.

With that and his latest statement of intention to impose export controls on eggs to the United States, would the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I see he has left the House, instruct what appears to be a slightly mixed up Minister of Agriculture to clarify some of these points in order that we might know what we are talking about and what we are doing?

Mr. Whelan: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member get the tape that was made. He has also insinuated today that I did not speak with the Under Secretary of Agriculture for the United States in Boise, Idaho. I did talk with him; also I got the full facts on what was said about imports and exports, so before he makes accusations he should check on what I said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader whether he will put on the record what the government proposes to ask parliament to consider for the next week.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, It is our intention to continue the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne until its conclusion, and then to proceed on a number of bills that should receive the urgent consideration of the House, beginning with Bill C-14, in the name of my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), to incorporate the Federal Business Development Bank. If that is disposed of before the end of next week we will then proceed to another bill standing in that minister's name, Bill C-9. At the beginning of the following week it would be my hope to proceed with a matter which is very urgent, namely consideration of the Canada Pension Plan bill.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, in relation to the business of the House, I wonder whether the government House leader could indicate when the parliamentary committee to look into the destruction of 28 million eggs will be struck, whether it will be a standing or special committee, what will be its terms of reference, and what will be the numerical composition of that committee?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to propose a motion probably next Tuesday or Wednesday.

WEST COAST GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS ACT, 1974

MEASURE TO SECURE THE RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-12, to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada, as reported from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Stanfield: On division.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order in that regard, I should just like to say that the report from that standing committee came to Your Honour on division and not as a result of any unanimous decision. I do not know where they ever got the idea it was unanimous, as it was on division.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that the only unanimity involved is in respect of the consideration of the report going ahead today. The report simply indicates that the bill was reported without amendment. I do not think there is provision in the report to make comment as to whether it was unanimous or otherwise.

Mr. Alexander: I just wanted to make that clear.

Mr. Speaker: I think the point is well taken.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons I came to Ottawa relates to one of my main areas of concern, namely a concern in respect of water policies, including policies of study and research for the development of a firm resource policy. At this stage I would refer to the only policy we have as a policy of drift. This general state of affairs sems to be further complicated by conflicting comments on the part of a number of Government ministers. There should be active consideration in respect of this whole area of water resources and the export of Canadian water. The concern I express relates to statements expressed once again by ministers in establishing the Liberal position on this subject.

It is my concern that the government is currently negotiating and considering the export of Canadian water. I am led to this conclusion by the statements of various ministers. The former Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Jack Davis, prepared a policy statement for this House which he did not deliver. I am wondering why he did not do so and who stopped him. I have a copy of that proposed statement in which the minister opposed the export of Canadian water. In wondering why it was not delivered I have asked myself if it was because the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) once said in a television interview:

> I don't want to be a dog in the manger about this—but if people aren't going to use it, can't we sell it for good hard cash?

Perhaps it was never delivered because of what the Hon. Jean Chrétien said, as reported in Time magazine:

> —within 25 years we'll be exporting water to the United States—

Was it not delivered because of what Hon. Jack Davis said before the last election when he was trying to jump back on the fence in time for survival, in repudiation of his earlier statements:

> I want you to think of water schemes that are not only basin wide but possibly even continental in scope—the Rocky Mountains need no longer contain our thoughts—we can vault over them or tunnel through them and see what lies beyond; so we will be turning whole rivers around.

Was it because of the ghost of the Hon. Arthur Laing who, having just completed an interview, said:

> —diversion of Canadian water to the United States is not negotiable—there is no such thing as a continental resource—we own it—

Then, turning aside as he finished his interview, in a supposedly confidential manner he said:

> —you should know for your own information that something like North American Water Power Alliance; major water diversion, is not only feasible—it's inevitable. We are establishing a bargaining position and the best position is to say no.

That position is unacceptable to Canadians. As we look at these statements the position of the Liberal government becomes more clear.

Is the new Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) going to stand up in this House and say the position of the government of Canada is that there will be no export of water? Perhaps the minister would just nod her head at this point. I should like to hear that statement in the next few days, because the pressure is increasing. Demands in the United States for energy will require as much of Canada's water as they can get, particularly when they are following a policy of extraction from shale coal, and the excavation of that coal.

With this kind of pressure we will certainly need all the energy of the minister of energy in preparation for these negotiations, and the non-policy resource statements we have had are completely inadequate.

Only last night in an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen we find the following statement:

Prodded by angry voters back home a month before United States congressional elections, a group of Great Lakes congressmen came out Tuesday for a plan to siphon water out of Lake Michigan—with Canada's agreement if possible, but over Canadian objections if necessary.

● (1220)

Is that to be the position of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and our Prime Minister? Canadians need to know now. As we anticipate the possible destruction of our precious environment and the establishment of an irreversible trend toward economic and political union with the United States, I am disappointed about what happened in respect of the Prime Minister's previous poetic or perhaps hypocritical statement in which he said:

... if part of our heritage is wilderness and if the measure of Canada is the quality of life that is available to Canadians, then we must act should there be a threat to either—we must act to protect the freshness of our air and we must act to protect the purity of our water; to conserve our living resources. If necessary, we must offer leadership to the world in these respects and withstand the cries of complaining interests.

I ask, where is the leadership today? Where are these statements today? What has happened to the Prime Minister who perhaps spoke for myself and other Canadians when he spoke in this manner? I do not want to be a dog in the manger, but I might ask how hollow these words ring now as the Liberal government is preparing to go forward with the export of water.

Before the Secretary of States for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), or is it Mr. Head, tilts at more new windmills, we need to develop a firm policy against water export. We need strong statements from the Prime Minister and from his chief ministers responsible for energy, resources and environment. Can any true friend and neighbour of another nation expect Canadians to "Judas" their heritage?

Certainly, I do not blame our great cultural friend and economic neighbour to the south for trying to gain and covet our greatest and most precious natural resource. If I were a citizen of the United States, or a politician there, I would probably also be calling for plans and conferences for the velvet glove seduction of Canada. I too, would be saying what Senator Frank Moss said:

—in the United States, increasingly, the control of water becomes the key to prosperity, growth and economic power in the United States—

[Mr. Wenman.]

Or perhaps I would even be putting forth veiled threats such as:

—we want to continue to live together on this continent in constructive peace for a long time.

Or, as President of the United States, I too would be instructing the State Department to work out a continental energy deal with Canada. When the United States Ambassador to Canada, Mr. Porter makes threats to Canada regarding oil and other non-renewable resources, I do not blame him for making those threats but at the same time I would say that I have great respect for the intelligence of American politicians and am certain that they would not be foolish enough to cut off their nose to spite their face in retaliation. That would, in the short term, damage Canada severely but in the long term the great loser would be the United States.

United States officials are only too aware that the only real hope of maintaining a high standard of living with consumption and production at anywhere near current levels is to maintain solid relationships with Canada and to establish negotiated resource supply treaties. But if the retaliation is a prelude to serious, tough resource negotiations to be carried on in an attempt to gain Canada's resources for a pittance, then I want assurance that these negotiations will not end up with Canada losing its life blood in the form of export of its water.

Major diversion and export of water from Canada is totally unacceptable now and will continue to be so in the future. When the minister stands up and makes such a statement, as I am sure he will after any amount of research, I want him to add to that statement, not negotiable now or in the future. He should state that this is not a bargaining condition. He should make clear that this is the intent of the government of Canada.

Just briefly, in relation to the appointment of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to a high position on the International Monetary Fund, I must say that on occasion I wonder whether Canada had been placed in the role of a puppet in international financial circles rather than as a nation assuming its rightful place as one of the world's most respected exporting nations. I hope the latter proves to be the case and that the minister will not indeed be the puppet of the big five but rather will be successful in elevating Canada's national stature as a fair but strong arbiter and counsel.

Mr. Speaker, I could not make my first speech in this House without bringing forward the matter of western alienation because it is a topic of real concern to the people of western Canada. It is a matter of concern for all Canadians. The eastern oriented government must make a renewed effort to understand, investigate and resolve the underlying causes of this alienation. Even after the poor showing of the Liberal Party in the west, the message apparently has not gotten through. The problem lies much deeper than just the inequitable freight rates, western subsidization of eastern Canada through equalization grants or the excessive expenditure of government revenue in eastern Canada. It lies much deeper. It lies in the matter of the heart and the eye. The frontbenchers of the government of Canada will have to learn to see with the eyes of a westerner.

We have this great French-Canadian culture which is talked about as having heart. I think we do have this feeling and give credit to the French Canadians for making a contribution to Canada in this regard. I hope that that feeling of heart which the ministers have for Quebec will be expanded to western Canada so that, as the Prime Minister speaks in terms of what he thinks about the linguistic demands of Quebec and their relationship to the unity of Canada, he will also think in the same way about the feelings of the people of western Canada. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) will have to remember that he should think of the traffic jams in Vancouver as well as those in Montreal about which he so effectively spoke the other day.

While it is true that Canadian cabinet ministers visiting British Columbia perhaps do not receive the warmest welcome, this may be an indication that they should go there more often to find out what is happening. It would be interesting to study the itineraries of all members of the cabinet over the past couple of years, and then perhaps we would realize the reason many cabinet ministers seem oblivious to the problems of western Canada. Member after member has spoken to empty cabinet benches in this House. It is unfortunate that these ministers cannot even find the time to sit in the House to hear the western members on their own side of the House, let alone members of the opposition. It is unfortunate that as transportation improves in Canada the prairies seem to stretch further and further away, and the Rocky Mountains seem to grow higher and higher so far as this government is concerned.

Speaking in those terms, and having been critical slightly of one or two ministers, I should like to say that the western culture is of extreme importance. That culture should be explained here and should be known here. This is significant as well. As a consequence, I have brought with me samples of this culture. I would ask the attendant to distribute these samples to the Speaker and to the leaders of the various parties. I hope members will enjoy these samples and perhaps comment on them to me later.

It is my hope that as the government considers the forthcoming budget, not only will it consider western Canada specifically but also pensioners generally across Canada. I hope the budget will include measures to reduce the pensionable age from 65 to 60, and that there will be a substantial increase in pensions, which will be not just a cost of living increase but an increase in the basic allowance. As this new parliament presses onward, I hope that measures will be brought forward to eradicate the excesses and abuses of unemployment insurance and welfare, and that consideration will be given to the effects of excessive and rapid immigration into Canada.

Any announcements that have been made regarding the alleviation of the housing problem in Canada, let alone in the greater Vancouver area, have been woefully inadequate. I can only assume that major announcements are being saved for the Budget speech. I look forward to these announcements and to commenting upon them at that time.

I should like to conclude with a short comment concerning one of the most serious problems involving my constituency. Simply put, we are threatened every year by the possibility of devastating floods. The time to talk about the flood protection program is not next May or June, but now. The record of past governments is anything but encouraging. It look 20 years, from 1948, to agree upon a 10 year program of diking and drainage of the lower mainland. In addition to the millions spent on studies and commission reports, the federal and provincial governments have committed some $60 million—certainly a goodly sum which one would think could produce some results.

Let us look at the results. I am sure hon. members on this side know what I am going to say. It took four years, from 1968 to 1972, to complete one of the 44 flood projects. With this track record, can we expect it will take another 172 years to complete the other 43? Is the government on the other side of the House saying to the people of the Fraser valley: "You may sleep safely in your beds in the year 2074? Is that the kind of promise or the kind of action that we are getting? That is what we are thinking and feeling in my area. This kind of progress is hardly acceptable when a flood of 1948 proportions, which experts agree could occur in any year—not four or five years hence but possibly next year, almost this year—would wipe out a good deal of the province's and nation's prime crop land, cause endless economic and social dislocation for the people who reside in the valley, and cost an estimated five times what the 1948 flood cost, that is approximately $100 million. If you allow that flood to occur, you spend $100 million, and on top of that you still have to spend $60 million on the project that will be required to protect the valley.

Let us look at the record. We had nature's fury in 1948. There were pictures of the flood and great concern over the damage and devastation to the Fraser valley. There was a signal to action by the press and the public expressed in such words as "let us get going; let us not have it happen again". We had a report with the program in 1948. Then, we had an interim report in 1949, and then we had that funny report called "The final report". What do you think is the year of the final report? Do you think it is 1972, 1973 or 1974? No, it is 1950. In 1950, we had the final report on what to do on the Fraser River. I have just started with the first three. We can look at reports year after year. The first one was in 1948; then one in 1951, another in 1952, another one in 1956, another one in 1957, 1958, and so on. Year after year promises have been made but nothing has happened. People of the Fraser valley in British Columbia are tired of waiting. We have shown tolerance in waiting for assistance with the ferries, as the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) suggested earlier. We can build them on our own, but the safety of the people of Fraser valley cannot wait. We must have action in that regard forthwith, and I look forward to hearing the report of the minister on that.

My constituency stretches from the United States border 80 miles to the north border of Garibaldi Park. Fraser Valley West encompasses over 76,000 voters, the majority of whom reside in the southern portion in or around the cities of Port Moodie, Port Coquitlam, Pitt Meadows, Coquitlam, Maple Ridge, Langley, Matsqui and Surrey. All these came to light in the 1974 election. I am very proud and pleased to be here as a federal member of parliament from the province of British Columbia.

Because the riding bisects the only available corridor to the greater Vancouver area, every transportation access to the nation's third largest city must pass through the constituency. I am, therefore, only too aware of the transportation mess referred to by the minister. A major transportation policy featuring a central corridor and relocation of existing rail beds is of utmost concern to my constituents. In any over-all transportation policy, two local objectives should be satisfied: first, the relocation of the railway tracks from White Rock-Surrey beaches, and second, the relocation of the north-south railway line from the Abbotsford city core. Both objectives, vital to my constituents, can be accomplished through the establishment of a single north-south line through the Sumas area, a line which would tie directly into a major east-west line through the valley, which would serve all major railroads. This objective is not only feasible, but it is certainly sensible from the standpoint of cost, efficiency, and a highly desirable over-all transportation policy for the lower mainland of British Columbia.

In conclusion, I should like to read a letter that I have received from a 16 year old high school student, president of a British Columbia high school, who wrote as follows regarding his impressions of the session so far:

> We are following the political scene as best we can. I heard the Throne Speech the other day and I was angered. I wish someone would tell the Liberals that they should give first priority to the problem of providing the basic necessities of life (adequate housing, food and gasoline) at a reasonable cost, and settling once and for all a positive way of solving labour-management wage settlements without strikes which paralyze the economy.

Those are pretty intelligent thoughts. In conclusion, I want to say that it is not 60, 50 or 40 year olds, it is all Canadians who have this concern which I share, and it is on their behalf that I speak.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my speech, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) for having proposed the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. He spoke with the ease and eloquence which characterize all members in his area. His speech has shown that he really belongs to this proud line of Quebec members who, by their eloquence and the services they have rendered our country, have contributed to the success of our democratic and bilingual country.

[English]

I should like to express my congratulations as well to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) who, in a speech which I think all hon. members must have found eloquent and moving, expressed his support for the Speech from the Throne. At the same time we witnessed in his person the achievement of his own people, a people who have contributed so much to the development of our country. He is undoubtedly a distinguished representative of the Chinese Canadians, and through him that group, and indeed all immigrants to Canada as well as my own people, can take pride in the fact that we have a country where, whatever their racial or ethnic origin, young men of this kind can come forward and attain the very highest positions.

[Mr. Wenman.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a very personal and constituency note, I should like to express my congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, in the recognition of your talents as Mr. Speaker in this chamber. I think it is fair to say that there is no other region in Canada which contributes such a strong delegation of members of parliament to this chamber as the region of Northern Ontario which you have represented with distinction in the last several parliaments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1240)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am convinced from our association over the years and from the days—one might perhaps say the nights—of deep discussion on important questions of church and state, that you will surely discharge your functions with great tact.

On behalf of those of my constituents who knew Mr. Speaker at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Separate School and St. Michael's College High School, I should like to say that their predictions of an outstanding career are being fulfilled. As one constituent has said to me, "The kid from Rosedale Heights Drive is doing all right". That is a proposition that I can second.

[Translation]

... and also the members from Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) and Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) for their respective nominations.

[English]

—and also to my colleague the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) who once again is indicating the strength and quality of the representation from Northern Ontario in this House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now, tell us about your cabinet colleagues. Where are they?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Unfortunately, my time is limited to 30 minutes and the qualities of my colleagues are such that not 30 minutes, perhaps, not even 30 days, would suffice to elaborate on all their talents and abilities and what they can do for Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But where are they? Not one of them is here.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That shows the great confidence they have in me, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to underline some of the major principles and accomplishments of the energy policies that my department and this government have developed and followed. I should like to refer to all five major sources of energy: oil, natural gas, hydro, coal and uranium—especially uranium as applied for nuclear purposes. Especially, however, I want to speak of oil which because of its availability, its mobility and its versatility is the major energy commodity. It is the standard not only in Canada but throughout the world by which all other energy commodities are managed. Hence, a start on energy policy must commence with oil, and particularly the measures taken in the past 12 months to deal with an unprecedented change in the world oil economy.

Two events in the past 12 months have brought about change in oil policies and, in a very substantial degree, in all energy policies during the same period. The two events are the Arab oil embargo of just a year ago attendant upon the so-called Yom Kippur war, and the two-step increase by which the exporting country tax on oil increased by 410 per cent. As a result, for all importers of oil—North America, Western Europe and indeed throughout the world—the price of oil imported went up by the same percentage.

Canada was in a far better position than most of her OECD partners to sustain the shock during this period. Due to effective co-operative action by the government of Canada and industry, while citizens of other nations in the world suffered fuel shortages this past winter and spring, while our neighbours across the border had to endure frustrating lineups to get gasoline, we in Canada suffered no such problems.

This parliament created the Energy Supplies Allocation Board with the specific responsibility to develop contingency plans against the repetition of that event. At the same time, Canada participated in the development by the Energy Co-ordinating Group at Brussels, of the International Energy Plan. Under this proposal, at the international level the consuming nations may cushion themselves and each other against any future production cutback.

The price of oil for Canadian users was frozen through last winter and then following the meeting of first ministers in March, was restrained at a single price level across Canada—subject to transportation differences—giving Canadians the lowest average crude oil price of any nation in the western industrialized world. The national accord on price which has been accepted by all regions, producing and consuming, was enshrined in the Petroleum Administration Act, Bill C-18 of the last parliament, which will be reintroduced in this parliament.

Let me underscore the tenets of our petroleum policy. First, we have decided that the price of Canadian oil should be set at a level high enough to bring on additional supplies for Canadians without going to the high levels now set by the OPEC group. Second, we decided that there should be a single price of oil for all Canadians subject only to differences for transportation costs. And, third, we decided that in supply we should direct policy toward self-reliance by Canadians on our own oil supplies and that the Canadian pipeline network should be extended accordingly. The price until the end of June will be held at $6.70 per barrel at Edmonton. There is in prospect in the coming months further federal-provincial consultations of the kind that took place last winter to determine where the single oil price for Canadians should go.

In international sales, the National Energy Board determines every month that Canadian crude is being sold for a fair and reasonable return abroad. The difference between that export price and the domestic price is then collected as an export charge. The revenues from this charge are and have been used as a cushion for consumers in eastern Canada, primarily the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, for the purpose of attaining the one price policy for all Canadians.

Let me underline an essential point in this regard. Even if the revenues from this charge were not directed toward this cushion, Canadian crude would still be selling at the same international price in the export market. That is a point I have been stressing to our American customers. I should like to repeat the words that are used in a speech in Washington last week. I said:

> The price to U.S. consumers did not go up because of the export tax; rather the Canadian price followed international prices—the prices that we have to pay for oil in eastern Canada. The export tax was a purely domestic impost—the means of determining among different Canadian interests, consuming and producing, who would get the benefit of the economic rents. To fulfil our aim of easing the burden of our eastern consumers of higher offshore prices, we used instead these new returns from export sales as a cushion. We believed then, and still do today, that this is purely domestic matter.

Those were my words, Mr. Speaker, and that is my belief. At the same time, I want to make it clear that Canada is as interested as any other consuming nation in seeing the international price of crude oil reduced by one, two or three dollars. As I told my American audience last week:

> We in Canada, as consumers of imported oil, are as unhappy as anybody else about the dramatic nature of the price increase and would be as happy as anyone else to see a reduction in the costs of imported oil.

Further than that, Mr. Speaker, we are in full support of any attempt to negotiate a reduction in the international price for oil, and stand prepared to offer any aid we can to bring the oil producing nations and the oil consuming nations to the negotiating table.

There are two other features of our future planning of oil policy that I want to bring to the attention of honourable members. First is the study of crude oil supply and demand that the National Energy Board has completed after holding extensive hearings where all parties had the opportunity to put forth their views. I expect to receive from the board that report along with its recommendations toward the end of this month. The findings will give the government a sound foundation to continue to tailor federal energy policies to the future requirements of Canadians.

[Translation]

The second point I would like to stress and which concerns future plans in the field of oil is the following: our government will not renege on its promise to build a pipeline to Montreal.

I believe there is almost unanimous agreement in our country to improve the security of our supplies, support our policy and ensure that a greater number of Canadians may, in the future, count on safe Canadian sources for their oil needs. That is what I meant today when I said during the oral question period that we intended to continue with this project and negotiate if necessary with the companies to materialize this project which is so important for the security of Canadians.

[English]

Now I would like for a minute to turn to natural gas where again my department and this government have formed and are following a consistent and, above all, realistic policy.

Our policy is to bring the price of natural gas in line with the market values of competitive fuels, both to conserve a valuable non-renewable resource and to stimulate development. We intend to do so in a staged fashion to cushion the impact on both United States and Canadian consumers. As I have announced, the border price of a thousand cubic feet of gas will be set, with the exception of one contract in British Columbia, at $1 on January 1. The B.C. contract will be effective from November 1.

This announcement did not come as a bolt out of the blue to our American neighbours. More than a year ago in a speech delivered in Arizona on my behalf, we asserted and I quote:

> It is important to note, as many of you are aware, that natural gas pricing is currently very inflexible in both Canada and the United States and it will require alteration of current export contracts and a flexible system of price redetermination if Canada is to receive full market value for its exports of natural gas to the United States.

It is not without interest to note that in the president's statement to congress the day before yesterday, he adopted the same approach with regard to the deregulation of natural gas in the United States. The decision to seek from congress authority to deregulate the gas price is so that the price of gas passing in interstate commerce in the United States can be subject to the same competitive developments of the kind we are trying to introduce in Canada. I assume they will follow the same policy we are following. They will stage increases to consumers over a period of years to make certain the impact is cushioned as far as that may be possible and so that the economic effects will not be disruptive.

This might be a good point to remark on one other important aspect of our policy on oil and gas, and that relates to transit. Some months ago this government initiated a proposal for a treaty between Canada and the United States covering the security of oil and natural gas pipelines. Canada has an abiding interest in this regard, since crude oil from the Canadian West moves by pipeline through the U.S. midwest to reach central Canada, while our refineries in the Montreal area are supplied with offshore oil by a pipeline from Portland, Maine. Some of the natural gas from the Canadian west also moves by pipeline through the U.S. to western Ontario.

We of course have never before felt the need for a treaty to cover the security of these pipelines on such friendly foreign territory, but since the United States has shown an interest in ensuring that the security of any pipeline along the Mackenzie River Valley is covered by treaty, the time would appear propitious to reach an official undertaking that would bestow mutual benefit.

Negotiations toward this treaty are advancing steadily and their success will have an added beneficial effect on the relations between our two countries. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are some voices in the U.S. who for their own corporate self-interests are questioning the security of a pipeline along the Mackenzie to move Alaskan gas by pipeline and then by tanker to the U.S. west coast.

A treaty will hopefully still these voices that attempt to aggravate the relations between our two countries that have long stood firmly on a tradition of trust. With these unfounded criticisms laid to rest, our two countries should be better able to judge if there are economic benefits for both in moving Alaskan gas to the lower 48 states and Mackenzie Delta gas to Canadian markets through a pipeline along the Mackenzie Valley.

I would like to turn next to coal. It is readily apparent that the domestic demand for coal of some 27 million tons last year will increase greatly in the years ahead. The study published by my department a year ago last June entitled "An Energy Policy for Canada" set the minimum target for Canadian coal production at 37 million tons per year by the end of this decade. Last year we produced 22.5 million tons, but about half of this production was exported from Alberta and British Columbia, principally to Japan. Meanwhile we imported more than 17 million tons from the United States, mainly into Ontario for both thermal and metallurgical purposes.

Moreover, in the current climate of coal supply in the United States, there is little chance of negotiating new long-term contracts because of the fluid price situation. As of April 1, the U.S. suppliers to Ontario Hydro, with long-term contracts amounting to nine million tons per year, have increased the f.o.b. mine price by 50 per cent. This, added to an increase in U.S. railway freight rates, has made western Canadian coal reserves not only important from a self-sufficiency standpoint, but also of interest in an economic context. Ontario Hydro has therefore focused its attention on locating coal reserves in western Canada as similar as possible to the U.S. high volatile bituminous coal currently being consumed in thermal stations.

The federal government has been following closely the development of arrangements through the national railways, particularly directed to a terminal at the Lakehead for the purpose of developing better coal shipments from western Canada. We have been concentrating attention as well on research and development in technical and economic problems of supplying markets in central Canada with western coal. I wonder if this might be an appropriate time to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

Mr. Whitelaw: Mr. Speaker, I wondered whether the minister would permit a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have called it one o'clock. The minister can be asked a question when we resume.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before the House recessed for lunch I was setting out a conspectus of the energy scene in Canada, with particular reference to petroleum, natural gas and coal. With respect to coal I had referred to the fact that while the primary development of this resource, and indeed its use, has rested with the provincial governments, the federal government has been active from the standpoint of carrying out research and development on the technical and economic aspects of supplying western Canadian coal to eastern Canada, and in particular in improving the rail shipment and lakehead transfer of coal so that it will be available for users in the eastern part of the country.

Moving from the subject of coal to electric power, one of the principles set out at the first ministers' conference in January and agreed upon at that time, I think by all the participants, was the desirability, particularly in power-short parts of the country such as my own province and some of the Atlantic provinces, of shifting the generation of electricity from fossil fuels to a secure and economical source such as uranium. Federal policy in this regard has been to provide, as has already been done in the case of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, financing for one half of the cost of the first nuclear plant in each province. It was pursuant to this policy that Canada's third nuclear province was inaugurated yesterday with the announcement that the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission would proceed with the construction of a 600-megawatt equivalent nuclear plant at Point Lepreau in the Bay of Fundy. At the same time, as further federal policy we have provided an outstanding offer to carry half the cost of regional electrical interconnection studies, as well as half the cost of financing approved projects which result from those studies.

At the moment there is an extensive examination, with the province of Newfoundland, of the possibility of harnessing Churchill River Power, bringing it across the mainland and under the Strait of Belle Isle, to the island. As well, there has been extensive discussion with the other Atlantic provinces concerning inter connections in that area. One of the benefits to be achieved by the establishment of a nuclear plant in New Brunswick is the provision of a secure supply of power not only for New Brunswick but for the province of Prince Edward Island which, under present federal arrangements, will soon be receiving the benefits of an interconnection under the Northumberland Strait to that island.

On the question of uranium, early last month I announced new guidelines for the sale of uranium by Canada. In the next decade there will be a four-fold to six-fold increase in the annual demand for uranium, both within and outside Canada. Existing and potential production facilities will be strained to meet that demand. In order to provide orderly growth of the industry, while at the same time protecting the needs of our domestic nuclear program, we have concluded that protection of Canadian uranium consumers should be two-fold. First, we should ensure a long-term reserve of nuclear fuel for existing and committed reactors as well as for reactors which are planned for operation in Canada over a future period of ten years. Second, we must ensure that sufficient uranium productive capacity is available for the Canadian domestic nuclear power program to reach its potential.

Not only are we seeking to make certain, by reserve formulas and by our export policy, that there will be uranium available for Canada from existing sources, but through the Crown-owned nuclear corporation, Eldorado Nuclear, we have provided substantial additional budgetary funds to permit that corporation to undertake extensive exploration for uranium. This program is now under way. As part of the program of putting Eldorado Nuclear once again out into the prospecting field, we are pleased to have attracted to the service of this country Mr. Nicholas Ediger whose experience and success is well recognized in the private resource industry. He is undertaking the role of president and chief executive officer of Eldorado Nuclear.

Time does not permit me to review all the prospects for Canadian CANDU reactors. I merely say that with the increase in the cost of fossil fuels, the CANDU system—as evidenced by the outstanding performance of the Ontario Hydro plant at Pickering—has become very much in demand and inquiries are being received from many countries about the possibility of acquiring these reactors. And such sales would, of course, be subject to further safeguards, not only to ensure that nuclear material was not used for military purposes but to provide restrictions against its use for nuclear explosions whether deemed peaceful or not.

I have tried to put forward some of the major elements of our energy policy. In the coming weeks and months additional measures will be placed before the House. While it is true that Canada is well endowed with the five major source of energy, our policies must be tailored to ensure that Canadians continue to have access to these sources at reasonable cost both environmentally and in terms of dollars and cents. Threats to the environment, and the dramatic increase in the monetary cost of energy experienced in recent months, show the need for policies based on a firm federal overview of Canada's resources.

Before closing I would refer to a question raised by a previous speaker on the export of water from Canada. Since 1968, when I first became a member of cabinet, no proposition has been put to the cabinet proposing such export from Canada, and there is no grand scheme, as the hon. member intimated, for the export of this nation's water resources. Indeed, I am glad to repeat that since I have been in this House I have been unable to see any basis at all for Canada's ever agreeing to export so fundamental a product and commodity as water, particularly in the great plains area where water is so essential and valuable to Canada's ambitions in that area, both industrially and agriculturally.

● (1410)

With regard to the Chicago water diversion, the hon. member might want to refer to the record. Indeed, the Chicago water diversion at the start of this century was one of the reasons for establishing the boundaries water treaty. As a resident of the Great Lakes area, he may be assured—as all hon. members may—that as a member of this government I will make every effort to prevent any further diversion of water out of the Great Lakes' system into Lake Michigan, whether for industrial reasons or otherwise.

In the months to come we will be considering, as part of the government's program, the petroleum administration act. We will be considering, as well, the establishing of Petro-Canada, the national petroleum corporation. In particular, later in the year we will be dealing with guidelines regarding the ownership of Canadian uranium and Canadian uranium resources. We are looking forward to continued active discussion of those questions in the House and in committee, and I will be glad in private and in public to have exchanges on this important area with members from all sides of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Malone: No, Mr. Speaker; I have a question for the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question can be asked only if it is accepted by the minister.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malone: I should like to ask the minister a question through you, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as the minister talked about the equal price of gas and oil across Canada, and that it would be government policy to differentiate petroleum products from, say, textiles, automobiles and farm machinery, I ask the minister how petroleum products reach that particular status.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Basically, Mr. Speaker, most products in Canada are sold at the same basic price subject only to transportation charge differences. In this respect petroleum is treated no differently from any other product. The different aspect of the policy—one which, as I have said, has been agreed to by all ten premiers and the first minister of this government—is that, given the peculiar nature of petroleum, the essential character of petroleum not only in this but in all other industrial societies, the government views it in the interest of Canadians to ensure that the high price of international oil that has been set by the OPEC countries should not dictate petroleum prices in this country. For this reason we have set as a national policy a single price for petroleum, subject to transportation charge differences, maintaining that price at a level below that of the international commodity.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I realize hon. members want to participate in this debate, but may I put one question to the minister?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certainly.

Mr. Woolliams: My question concerns a Mackenzie delta pipeline for natural gas, not for oil. I am taking into consideration the fact that a regulatory body would have control over the pipeline, as the minister has pointed out. Has the government given serious consideration to a pipeline through which to transport natural gas, and has it worked out an equitable and reasonable agreement with the United States, in view of the high cost of building such a pipeline? Has the minister had discussion with the United States with a view to bringing natural gas down the Mackenzie delta in order to supply a product that is important not only to western and eastern Canada but, indeed, to the United States itself?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there has indeed been discussion of a Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline with the American authorities. As the hon. member knows, under a law of this parliament, parliament has entrusted, in the first instance, the National Energy Board with responsibility for scrutinizing this kind of pipeline application and making a decision thereon. What I say will be subject, of course, to the information that will come from the gas availability studies which the National Energy Board is now carrying out, and will be carrying out at hearings in Calgary and Vancouver, to determine the time-frame in which Canadian users will need so-called Arctic gas. But it is clear that within the same time-frame the availability of natural gas in Canada will depend upon delivery of gas from the frontier, whether the high Arctic, Labrador or the Mackenzie delta. In this sense, the question is not whether there will be a pipeline; ultimately there will have to be one if we are to have natural gas in this country. The only question, is, when. The government's conclusion in this regard is subject to the prior obligation of the National Energy Board to scrutinize proposals.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask a question which might clarify a brief reference the minister made?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister made a brief reference to safeguards with respect to nuclear power plants so as to ensure that nuclear power will be used solely for peaceful purposes. In view of the fact that these safeguards have so far proven ineffective, as demonstrated by the actions of India in producing the capacity for making a nuclear bomb, may I ask the minister what additional safeguards the government has in mind to ensure that safeguards will be much more effective than they have been up till now?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I must correct the hon. gentleman when he says the safeguards have been ineffective. It is clear from the nuclear explosion in India that they used the benefits of the research reactor supplied to them in the fifties by the United States and Canada at a time when safeguards were not established at the international level and before the present system of safeguards had evolved.

The subsequent Canadian nuclear reactor and technology supplied for power purposes are covered by safeguards, as indeed are further supplies of technology. In this sense one cannot blame the current system of safeguards for the action India may have taken, using a research reactor not covered by the safeguard system. The government of Canada over the years sought to include that research reactor under the safeguard system. For reasons now obvious, India refused to co-operate and I think we all regret that she took the action she did.

Since May 18, the date of the explosion in India, the policy of the government regarding the transfer of nuclear technology and, indeed, the sale of uranium itself has been not only to stipulate the international level of safeguards but to stipulate a higher level of safeguards by bilateral agreement in order to ensure that uranium or technology in connection therewith will not be used for nuclear explosions whether described as peaceful or not.

The legal argument raised by the government of India was that the international system permits the development of an explosive for peaceful purposes. Canada does not accept that. Once you have this technology, it cannot be misapplied in other directions, and we have put this further requirement upon nuclear sales by this country.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Does that include the spent fuel, too?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, the safeguards include the spent fuel. I think one of the questions Canada should involve itself in over time is not only safeguard requirements and inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency but whether we should stipulate in all sales that the spent fuel, plutonium, be returned to this country so that it would not be available for other applications.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, perhaps what has just occurred shows that the question period will come to an end of its own volition even if we do not have a time limit. I should like to begin by congratulating the new Speaker upon the elevation to his high position in the House of Commons. I am sure all hon. members wish him success in the execution of the exacting duties that his office entails.

I wish to reflect briefly upon the recent election and devote the major part of my speech to the subject of national defence. Canada seems to have had two elections this summer, one in western Canada and the other in the rest of the country. The only similarity was in their both being on July 8. In the west, the Progressive Conservative Party gained seats—in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia—and they were denied doing so in Alberta only because they already held 100 per cent of the seats there. In my province of British Columbia, the Progressive Conservatives, who held no seats two years ago, now hold a majority of seats. During the recent election, the Conservative received approximately 42 per cent of the vote, the Liberals 33 per cent and the NDP 23 per cent. I have introduced this point to serve as a backdrop for a question that concerns me greatly, that is, the continuing and growing alienation of western Canada from the rest of the country. The conduct of the campaign and the result of the federal election have contributed to this alienation. Despite the fact that westerners are demonstrably on a three-party system, the four western provinces have for the second election in a row voted overwhelmingly Conservative. In the last election, 72 per cent of the western members returned to this House are of that party, yet the west is now faced with a government which does not understand their problems and has been manifestly incapable of solving them.

● (1420)

The election is over and the Liberals won. However, I do not think that those occupying the government benches are entirely pleased with the manner in which the election was conducted by their party. I believe there are men and women of high principle in the Liberal party, and it is this group which must surely feel some disquiet or remorse over the methods employed during the campaign. The different approaches to the election seem to be typified in two quotations, one by the leader of the Conservative Party who at a very difficult time in the campaign said:

There are some things in life more important than winning an election.

On the other hand, a well-known Liberal said:

Whatever is necessary to do to win the election, that I will do.

The second quotation typifies that which I found most objectionable about the election. Any party which subscribes to the motto, "Whatever is necessary to do to win the election, that I will do" is subscribing to a philosophy that many Canadians find abhorrent. Indeed, to honour such an expediency by giving it the status of a philosophy is little more than effrontery. This Liberal ethos may explain their lowering themselves to playing upon ethnic prejudices. How else is one to explain Liberal advertising in Quebec urging the Quebecois to vote against "Mr. Stanfield" and to vote for "Monsieur Trudeau"? The leader of the Progressive Conservatives is surely the last Canadian politician who deserves to be the object of such bigotry. Those who plead for votes for the Liberal Party as the party of unity should be deeply shamed by such racist attacks upon our leader during the last election campaign.

Let us consider, now, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), that man of integrity who can look into the colour TV cameras with his china-blue eyes and say, "I believe in levelling and being honest with the Canadian people". Why did this man remain silent when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was making promises that the Minister of Finance knew could not be kept? I can only conclude that his principles are not as lofty as he would wish us to believe and that he, too, would do whatever is necessary to win an election. In remaining mute on the mendacity implicit in the Prime Minister's promises, his expediency was that of silence and omission. Perhaps the minister feels there is moral superiority in committing sins of omission rather than sins of commission. I should like to remind him of the well-known quotation, "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem".

Another nefarious tactic of the Liberal Party was the blatant use of the Senate of Canada as a campaign headquarters. The national campaign chairman was a senator; the campaign chairman in British Columbia was also a senator. These people are appointed to office to serve their regions and all Canadians in their regions, not just to serve the Liberal Party. However, it is quite clear that not only does the Prime Minister expect them to serve the Liberal party during election campaigns but he rewards them for doing so. The Prime Minister speaks of reform of the Senate. The first reform should be to ensure that he does not use senators in the manner in which he used them last summer, when in fact a large part of the Liberal campaign committee was paid for, unwittingly, by the taxpayers. The government had four western ministers before the election. One was defeated, one was demoted and two were returned with reduced majorities. I would like to compliment the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) for narrowly avoiding the fate of the minister of fisheries or the fate of the former minister of urban affairs.

It has become apparent over the last few years that the only opportunity one has to speak on defence in this House arises during either the throne speech or the budget speech. Despite the fact that defence is crucial to our national and international stature, it has served the purposes of the government to give the Department of National Defence the lowest possible profile among government departments. I would not like to imply that the Minister of National Defence and the government intentionally misled the Canadian people about Canada's defence position before the election, but there is a rather remarkable difference between the statements the minister made a year ago and those he has made recently.

What has changed most is that a year ago the government was in a minority position, faced with an election, and now it is in a majority position and will not have an election for some four years. This change in circumstances may account for the startling reversal of the minister. About a year ago, the minister put out a document explaining the wonderful things he was going to do for Canada's armed forces. Now, in the revealing light of post-election reality, he has changed that position drastically. I would be pleased to see the minister stand in the House and speak on defence. The hollowness of the minister's promises of last October, when he said he would be able to increase the capital budget of the armed forces substantially, to enable it to purchase additional and new equipment by virtue of this 7 per cent increase, I suggest is sheer mockery. Any housewife in Canada realizes that with a 7 per cent increase in your budget over that of 1973 one cannot do anything but cut losses and reduce purchases.

Inflation did not start on July 8; it started several years ago and was running at a much higher rate than 7 per cent at the time the minister made his statement. Now that the election is over, the minister said, after being questioned in the House, "Cuts will have to be considered in all areas—operating, personnel and capital expenditure." Our troops have been operating on a very skimpy budget over the past six years. They have been forced to reduce their numbers, to cut back on their equipment and to defer plans for modernization. Now a program is to be brought in which will make the past six years look like days of roses and wine to the troops. Whenever Liberal governments want to restrict expenditures, they always seem to look at defence. This is hardly surprising, I suppose, for one should remember these words of the Prime Minister:

I would like to have generals looking at our whole military machine and saying, "You know this is not really important today".

Something will have to give; the government cannot continue loading role on top of role upon the armed forces while simultaneously throttling their budgetery purchasing power. Let us consider the armed forces in somewhat greater detail. I shall, perhaps, be excused for referring to the navy, army and air force—terms meaningful to most Canadians. In their unification, the various "elements" share one dominant characteristic: they are all short of equipment. The navy, perhaps, has had slightly higher capital budgets relative to the other two forces. This seems to have been due to a concept popular in the late 1940s when it was decreed that Canada would specialize in anti-submarine warfare. The military situation in the world has changed a great deal over the last 25 years. I believe that in the current situation this overly narrow specialization in the submarine detection role has been harmful to the general operating capability of the force. The central task required of Canadian marine forces in the near future is not likely to be submarine detection but, rather, the preservation of sovereignty over the waters adjacent to our coasts.

At the same time as Canada is extending claims of sovereignty over these areas and is hence demanding more of the navy, a cut-back in personnel has required our navy to lay up ship after ship. The minister has been, unsuccessfully, trotting around the countries of the world in an attempt to lease out these ships presumably on some sort of a "U-Drive" basis. What a sorry spectacle! However, in comparison with other services the navy is fortunate in that it has something in the way of new equipment: it has four DDH-280 destroyers which are probably among the world's finest anti-submarine vessels. They are doubtless among the world's most expensive. Their cost has never been fully divulged, and I hope that during this session the minister will see fit to answer questions which will appear on the order paper concerning the cost of the DDH-280s. Now that the last of the four has become operational with the fleet, there no longer exists the minister's faint excuse for not divulging the cost to the previous parliament.

No doubt these ships and their men are extremely efficient and well suited to a submarine detection role. But is this the role for which we should be preparing our navy, or shall we find ourselves in the unsatisfactory position of having the equipment determine the role? As I said a few moments ago, the role which I see for our navy in the foreseeable future will not be solely anti-submarine but protection of the sovereignty of our coastal waters. A more unlikely vessel than the 4,500-ton DDH-280 to accomplish this task is hard to conceive, particularly when one considers that the surface-to-surface capability of these $75 million destroyers is almost non-existent. We live in a world where surface-to-surface missiles with an over the horizon capability are being mounted on gunboats, and a match between a gunboat which costs around $6 million and our new destroyers would surely find the smart money being bet on the gunboat.

Let us now consider the air force. Here the capital equipment problem is most acute. The CF-104 located in Germany recently has gone through an expensive conversion to enable it to fire cannon instead of being armed with atomic weapons. Our allies in Europe are looking toward the next generation of fighters. They have developed the MRCA multiple-role combat aircraft. We have not yet been told why Canada was not involved in the research and development of this aircraft. In Canada we have two squadrons of CF-5s. The kindest thing I have heard said of the CF-5 is that every emerging nation should have one. The big and expensive concern in this area is, of course, the longrange patrol aircraft which is to replace the four maritime patrol squadrons of aging Argus aircraft which are with the maritime element. The cost of this replacement is edging close to the billion dollar mark, and as our modernization program apparently is to be geared to the availability of money and not the need for the aircraft, I wonder if this government is really likely to replace the Argus in the near future.

The interceptor squadrons of air defence command fly the F-101C aircraft, which probably is the only plane in our forces which is appropriate for the role it has been given. I am not at all convinced this role is right and proper for Canada. However, I will deal with that matter a little later. To sum up the situation in respect of the air element, we are looking at the replacement of two aircraft for an extremely large sum of money, something like $2 billion. For long-range patrol aircraft replacement the government has considered the Orion and a Lougheed redesigned 707. We have spent $11 million this year and have asked the aircraft company to submit further studies. In either case we are considering buying ten-year old foreign aircraft and will be replacing aged aircraft with middle-aged aircraft. We seem always to be hoping to get the last of the production run from an American factory.

Finally, let us consider our ground force, the army. It is a strange experience to visit army camps in Canada. Half of the army personnel appear to be living or training in an uncertain future, while the other half are living or training in the distant past. There are helicopters in use, on the one hand, and 25-year old guns on the other. Although this applies to many other pieces of equipment, I would mention as an example the handling by the Canadian government of the purchase of tanks for our army. One could quote Hansard chapter and verse over the last few years to illustrate that the army was to be given tanks almost immediately. Such statements go back to the days of Edgar Benson.

The government has procrastinated and equivocated on this matter and now Canada's finest armoured troops are equipped with 30 Centurion medium tanks of 1946 vintage. It might be of interest to the House to put this matter in perspective. The International Institute for Strategic Studies, military balance for 1973-74, at page 95 sets out the main battle tanks held in central Europe. NATO formations hold 6,755, Warsaw Pact nations 13,800, and Canada 30.

The minister, before the dissolution of the last parliament, announced that he did not intend to replace the Centurion tank at that time. I understand he will participate in this debate. I ask him to make a statement on the future of the Royal Canadian Armoured Corps so that the men of that force will know whether they will be given a replacement for the tank, whether it be an armoured car or another tank, or whether they are to be transferred willy-nilly into other corps. This is the lifetime occupation of these men, and I believe they have a right to know.

Having considered the equipment of the three components of our forces, it should be abundantly clear that, as General Simonds—one of the truly great military figures of our country—once said cynically, indeed Canada has a military policy: the forces will recruit troops in times of high unemployment and will buy equipment when the government desperately needs to keep an industry alive. The fact that the government has given the forces roles which demand modern equipment should carry with it a commitment that it will provide the necessary equipment.

I should like to say a few words about NORAD. The committee on external affairs and national defence tabled a report a year ago last April recommending that the NORAD agreement not be signed for another five years but for two years only, and that in the ensuing two years an extensive and in-depth examination of the value of our role in NORAD should be undertaken. That resulted in Canada signing a two-year agreement to extend NORAD, I believe on May 12, 1973. This agreement expires on May 12, 1975. Some 18 months have gone by, and not one meeting of the defence committee has been held with that subject on the agenda. Again the time is becoming short before the treaty must be renewed or cancelled. In a very few months from now we will be forced to make another hasty decision on one of our most important international agreements.

I do not wish to make a definitive statement about the value of NORAD because I realize, if the government does not, that there is need for such a study before members make up their minds on this important matter. NORAD is not an ordinary alliance between two countries; it is an intermeshing of the components of our forces which are engaged in the air defence of our continent. We should know what we are doing before we try to upgrade NORAD. Let us study the matter to see whether the role Canada is playing is the one that Canadians want to play. We must think of the cost to Canada of being involved in NORAD.

● (1440)

A cost that we must consider is that in the attempt to counteract 7 per cent of the atomic threat to this country we agreed to accept, and still accept, atomic warheads on Canadian soil. That was some 15 years ago, so it is time we took another look at that program. I do not praise it or condemn it, but I want members of parliament to study the matter and know what they are voting for when the next vote takes place. I hope we will find it a satisfactory arrangement and will be able to offer advice to improve intercountry co-ordination and possibly diminish the enmeshment of our troops so that we will have a little more independence than at present. As an aside on the parliamentary level, let me point out that when the Prime Minister considers reforming parliament he should take into account the fact that the combination of defence and external affairs in one standing committee serves only to hinder the operation of both departments. We should have two committees to deal with matters concerning two departments. Both major parties in the House have for some time two-platooned that committee. I believe this has been to the detriment of both external affairs and national defence. A good example of this is at hand. Last Monday, the external affairs and national defence committee elected its chairman, who was immediately sent to New York. He will be coming back next Monday or Tuesday and we will hold a meeting of the steering committee, at which I expect we will set aside some time to discuss the estimates of the Department of National Defence. However, those estimates must be back in the House by the following Monday, so we shall have only two or three days to consider them in committee. This is a less than cursory examination of a $2 billion budget.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there are very few bright spots in the Canadian defence picture. The only one—and it never ceases to impress me—is the dedication, professionalism and expertise of the troops in our armed forces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: They are able to take on roles that would try the patience of saints, and they do this under political direction which seems implacably opposed to treating them as the valuable members of our society that they are. As a member of NATO, Canada should find it embarrassing that in our defence expenditure, expressed as a percentage of the gross national product, we are second to last among the 13 nations listed. If we look at the percentage of people serving in our armed forces, out of men of military age in North America—that is, Canada and the United States—as well as the 19 European nations of NATO and the Warsaw Pact, it shows us to be last on the list.

Worse than that, small as is the budget that we allot to national defence, a more critical statistic demonstrates how the budget is allotted. The International Institute for Strategic Studies points out that in the category "Pay and allowances plus maintenance" Canada spends 89.8 per cent of her military budget. Of the other five nations listed, namely, Britain, France, Germany, Japan and the U.S.A., none spends within 20 per cent of Canada's figure. To understand this one should consider this matter in another way. The percentage of each budget which goes for research and development, equipment and capital costs, shows Canada at 10.2 per cent while the other five nations are listed at over 30 per cent. This is the true test of whether or not a nation is keeping a modern force, properly equipped. It seems to me that in the world situation today one can say there are possibilities for only two types of war—nuclear and non-nuclear. There is no third type. There cannot be a partly nuclear or a limited nuclear war. I do not think the present minister or the government have ever clearly understood that these two types of war are completely dissimilar. Therefore, we find ourselves between two stools: part of our forces are training and planning for a possible nuclear war or a partly nuclear war, and other parts are training to participate in a conventional war. The lack of clear definition from their political masters is the main reason for this uncertainty.

The minister's replies to questions on October 4 and 7 indicate that the budgetary situation of the forces is critical. The minister has been forcing them to subsist on a barebones budget for years, always with the promise that he would use the money saved to buy equipment. His predecessor did the same thing, as did the minister before him. There are always two promises which the Liberals make— I am repeating what I said last November 15 as recorded in Hansard—and one is that they will reduce the forces while the other is that they will use the money saved to buy equipment. They always keep the first promise and break the second.

The minister is now speaking of a 50,000-man force that is well equipped. I do not think the forces can be forever deceived in this manner. They have been told too often that if they will take cuts in personnel, they will get equipment. The minister has tried this tactic once too often. I spoke to a financial man today, asking if the cuts referred to could possibly be put into effect. He left me with the impression that the Department of National Defence might be the first government department ever to be declared bankrupt. His final words were, "Mr. McKinnon, tell the minister to put the department in his wife's name".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Our defence situation is serious. Funds seem to be low, but no lower than morale in the services. The result of years of neglect is beginning to show. The minister cannot further reduce the stringent budget of the forces without doing them serious harm. It is the responsibility of the minister to ensure that this does not happen. Above all, let us have no more pre-election type press releases promising the moon to the forces and cutting them down as soon as the voting is over.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, please accept greetings directed at yourself and all honourable members of this House from the constituents of the Northwest Territories. I represent the largest constituency in the world. I believe we are in the Guiness Book of Records. But it is a record of which no one can be very proud. We in the Northwest Territories would gladly give up that honour in the interest of having more representation in this House. In the Northwest Territories there are 1,350,000 square miles, with 40,000 people scattered in some 80 communities, separated not only by large distances, made more difficult by the harsh climate, but also by cultural differences and by language. All this makes the job of representation more difficult than that of any other member of the House. The Northwest Territories comprise a very large land which is very thinly populated. But in fact it has not the smallest population in the country; a number of other ridings have smaller populations. One of these, of course, is the Yukon. Although they have a more compact constituency, at least they have a few more roads than the Northwest Territories.

Of the four ridings in Prince Edward Island, three have smaller populations than the Northwest Territories. In the case of P.E.I. it has been recognized that the principle of strict representation by population cannot always be followed and safeguards have traditionally been applied to ensure that the representation of P.E.I. does not fall below a certain number. This is all to the good; it should be this way. But it should be clear to anyone who has looked carefully at the case that the same principle must apply to the Northwest Territories. It is not possible for one man effectively to represent the whole of the Northwest Territories. To give honourable members some idea of the problems that a member from the Northwest Territories must face, I would mention that the size of my riding is literally the distance from one of our oceans to the other. Simply to visit each community and to spend two days in each would take up eight months of each year. A good deal of this is travelling time alone, and that can change depending on the weather. The weather up there changes very rapidly, especially along the Arctic coast. Some communities cannot even be reached for part of the year, and some can only be reached by charter aircraft. It is impos-

It is also impossible to get to many of my people through the mails or the newspapers, because many of them cannot read. And in addition to French and English, the people of the Northwest Territories speak at least six separate native dialects. They are separated not only by distance and by climate but by huge cultural differences and equally huge language problems. Travel is made much more difficult, also, by the poorly developed facilities in the north. All our supplies have to be brought in either by boat, in the summer, or by airplane, In most parts of the Northwest Territories the airplane is the only way to get around and air travel costs much more than in the southern parts of Canada. Here are a few examples, Mr. Speaker. The return fare from Montreal to Toronto is $74, while the return fare from Cambridge Bay to Spence Bay—which is about 40 miles less, in a straight line—is $230. That is a big difference. The return fare from Montreal to Winnipeg is $178, while the return fare from Edmonton to Inuvik, an equal distance, is $312.

There are no government offices for most of my constituents. They cannot walk down the street to a Canada Manpower centre or jump on a bus and go to a government office. It is for these reasons, among others, that I will reintroduce my private member's bill calling for at least two members to represent the Northwest Territories. This will be the third time I have introduced such a bill, and I urge every member of this hon. House to seriously consider it when it comes before them. It is particularly appropriate and important that we look at this issue now, for in the next few weeks we will be considering the question of redistributing seats in the House of Commons. If this issue is not dealt with now, it will be several years before we can look at it again.

While we are on the subject of representation in the Northwest Territories, I would like to mention another important issue. The Northwest Territories do not yet have responsible government. The history books tell us that Joseph Howe, in the first half of the nineteenth century, was called the father of responsible government. I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that in the last half of the twentieth century the Northwest Territories are still not part of that family.

Provincial status for the Northwest Territories has been talked about for years, but it has never been taken seriously. In the next few years this question will become more and more important as the population of the Northwest Territories grows and as vast economic developments take place—developments over which the people of the Northwest Territories have little or no control—and in most cases, no control. It is time to talk about bringing responsible government to the Northwest Territories as the first step to this area being made a province some time in the future. I do not say the Northwest Territories should become a province next week, or even next year. The people of the Northwest Territories must first have some experience in governing themselves. But this will not happen unless we are allowed to elect our own government and unless that government has some control over funds, over resources and over the economic and social development of the territory.

This lack of control can be seen not only in government but also in administration. There are very few native employees in the territorial government, and very few of these are in positions of responsibility. Out of a total of over 1,600 Northwest Territories employees working in the Northwest Territories in 1972, only 305 were native people. Of the 182 of these classified as scientific and professional, none was native. Neither of the two executives was native. Our governors are imported from the south, and the administrators who carry out their orders for the most part are imported along with them.

Mr. Speaker, the Northwest Territories remains as it was before it was ceded by the Hudson's Bay Company over a hundred years ago, a territory run by and for an absentee governor—a kind of government by remote control. We desperately need programs and services that are taken for granted in other parts of the country, this great land of ours known as Canada. Health services are not just poor; they do not exist for most people in the Northwest Territories for most of the year. The health of my constituents is surely the worst in Canada. In all of the Northwest Territories there are only 16 doctors and 15 dentists. Dental care does not exist in most parts of the Northwest Territories.

I should like now to quote briefly from a newscast on CFFB Frobisher Bay on September 3, 1974, and I would ask hon. members to listen very carefully. Here it is in part:

> The lowest nutrition standards and the highest infant mortality rate in North America. That is the grim statistic and according to a Frobisher Bay doctor, the situation is getting worse.
> In a random series of tests conducted by Dr. Alex Williams of the Frobisher General Hospital, over 75 per cent of the pregnant Inuit women and young Inuit children examined, showed critically low nutrition levels. In a number of cases, said the former chief of medical staff, vitamin A and vitamin C necessary for the prevention of infection and skin disease, simply were not present. The results, he said, were children, if they survived, who at as little as eight days old, had perforated ear drums, systematic infections, skin sores and almost no resistance to disease. Not only that, the IQ level of children born with these vitamin deficiencies was 20 per cent to 40 per cent lower than average.

Much of this could be improved with training programs for northerners. We can handle many of our own problems if we are given a chance to do it. A government training program that would turn out only ten pilots a year over the next five years would be wonders for this situation. But this would be only a beginning. We need pilots and mechanics, doctors, dentists and nurses. We need airstrips, and we need airplanes to use the airstrips. We need many more navigational aids to facilitate the aviation industry up there. Because of the great distances involved, it is one of the most important industries. Railways in the southern part of this country have been subsidized for generations to the tune of several hundred million dollars. The federal government subsidy for the short takeoff and landing commuter plane between Ottawa and Montreal was over $25 million, by its own figures. In the north, where transportation problems are much more serious, we need the same kind of subsidization. The result of high transportation costs is a cost of living higher than anywhere else in Canada.

For example, Yellowknife food prices are 20.13 per cent higher than those in Edmonton. Here are a few price comparisons for hon. members to think about: chicken in Edmonton is about 87 cents per pound; in Yellowknife, $1.19; medium eggs are 90 cents a dozen in Edmonton, while the Yellowknife price is $1.09. Orange juice is 61 cents in Edmonton; 85 cents in Yellowknife. These prices are low compared with prices along the Arctic coast or the Mackenzie River. In the villages along the river a dozen eggs cost $1.98 or $2, if they are available.

We need funds, not hand-outs, for economic development. We would like funds that we can put to use where we see need, whether it be training programs, setting up small businesses or whatever is necessary. The government of the Northwest Territories develops programs that look good on paper, but when people come to apply for a loan to set up a small business somewhere, or a restaurant or a shipping company, they run into a lot of red tape. All hon. members know what I am talking about when I say we have to cut red tape. Down here you can at least cut it. We have more serious problems. Up there we have to cut the tape lengthwise.

● (1500)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: I would like to talk briefly about another group that I think I can call my people—native people all over Canada. They suffer the same problems as my constituents, neglect and paternalism. When Statistics Canada does its surveys on income distribution, it does not include my people. When it does its surveys on unemployment, it does not include my people. Statistics Canada says that its "sample frame" does not yet extend to the Northwest Territories or the Yukon. It does not extend to Indians on reservations. Is it because they would make the figures look worse than they are, or is it because they have just forgotten to include these people?

The amount of space devoted to northern problems and to native problems in the throne speech suggests that we have just been forgotten, or overlooked. Having seen what the government has been able to come up with for the rest of Canada in its throne speech, I am tempted to say that it is not really so bad to be overlooked.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Firth: If the unemployment rate goes up in the next few months, as it probably will, it will make little real difference. The people of the north, and native people all over Canada, are in a permanent depression that makes the 1929 crash look tame by comparison. The Metis people of northern Saskatchewan, for instance, have an unemployment rate that is easily ten times the national average. The Senate report on poverty discovered that nearly half the status Indians in Canada at the time were unemployed. There are few jobs to be lost because so few of the people whom I represent have been unable to get worthwhile jobs either from the government or from the resource corporations that have lately become so interested in the north.

Restraints on government spending are nothing new for the north or for native people in general. It has never been any other way. I would like to know just how much of the Indian Affairs program budget of some $366 million this year will actually reach native people in a form which is useful to them. I have a feeling it will not be very much. It is time this government stopped overlooking these people. It is time the government stopped looking at native land claims as a nuisance and starting looking at them as an opportunity to provide the original inhabitants of this country with a decent standard of life, with dignity. It is time for imaginative and bold measures to give the north some measure of self-government. It is time for the government to provide the funds and the training so that northern poeple can become full members of this country, of this just society.

This country will face huge problems in the years ahead. The problem with the resource corporations which want to take all the wealth out of the north without putting anything back is one that all Canadians have had and will continue to have, as I and other members of my party have pointed out many times. The task of providing everyone in the country with a decent standard of life, with dignity, has not yet been carried out. The problem of northerners and of native people in general is only the most extreme example of a problem that all ordinary Canadians have when they confront a system that values profits more highly than people. In solving it for these people, we may learn how to solve it for all Canadians.

The people of whom I have just spoken need assurance that they will share equally in the nation's progress in the years to come. I am disappointed that the government did not see fit to give such assurance in its throne speech. The problems of which I have spoken may not be the only problems the government will face in the coming months and years, but they are among the most serious. There are three important areas of concern for the north. I hope hon. members will bear them in mind, study them and try to find ways of solving our problems. I refer to providing more responsible government for the Northwest Territories, more representation in terms of two members from the Northwest Territories and, of prime importance, the problems of native people all across Canada.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by congratulating you and your deputies upon your appointments. I am confident you will carry out your responsibilities with skill and distinction in the great tradition of your predecessor. I also wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder on their remarks, remarks which demonstrated their ability and indicated the promise of future achievement.

I am understandably pleased that the Speech from the Throne carries forward much of my work as minister of consumer and corporate affairs. The speech proposes the reintroduction of the first stage combines bill amendments, the Canada Business Corporations Act and its Canadian director provisions, and the anti-profiteering legislation, all of which I presented to the House during the last parliament. The speech also mentions a comprehensive overhaul of consumer credit legislation, total revision of our bankruptcy law, improved safety of consumer electrical products, and the establishment of more consumer storefront offices. All these are measures involve initiatives which I took, work which I did and which I announced prior to July 8. These measures are important to the well-being of all Canadians as consumers. I believe these were among the measures Canadian voters had in mind when they gave the government such a strong vote of confidence on election day.

The government, in the throne speech, identifies inflation as Canada's most serious problem and says "it is necessary to both deal with its causes and mitigate its effects". There is as yet no clearcut final consensus among economists today as to the causes of inflation, nor of the best way to achieve its cure. But increasingly economists are saying that it is wrong to rely solely on macro-economic policies, broad brush policies involving monetary and fiscal measures affecting the entire economy in a general way. Instead, they say that more attention must be paid to micro-economic matters, to particular situations in the economy as well as to its general operation. In other words, they say there are structural problems in the Canadian and world economy lying behind many of the upward pressures on prices that we have seen in our country.

They argue that concentrations of economic power may well be able to achieve higher prices for their products and pass these prices on to the rest of the economy, free from the total pressures of the marketplace. These prices would then, in turn, help bring about price increases in other goods and services, and on and on in the inflationary spiral. While monetary and fiscal policies may ultimately be able to deal with these effects of concentrations of economic power, this could well be a lengthy process and in the meantime the impact of these general policies could bring about a disastrous slowdown to the economy as a whole.

If it is the case, as I think it is, that structural rigidities are among the important causes of today's inflation, then the government must have available to it the means to strike at them directly instead of relying solely on monetary and fiscal policies. Certainly, with the evidence we have of economic stagnation in Canada today, we should not take the risk of relying solely on these policies whose impact against inflation is primarily to slow down the entire economy. This is why I believe the government must have the stage one competition policy bill and the anti-profiteering bill among its primary weapons in its fight against inflation. They must be given very high legislative priority to ensure that their benefits will be available to Canadians as soon as possible.

I recognized that the time available to the House before Christmas for the consideration of legislation is limited. This is because of the time required for the debate on the Speech from the Throne and on the budget and for dealing with estimates. I understand that the government, therefore, intends to present only a small number of rather technical bills which are necessary to increase lending limits under certain programs such as that of the Export Development Corporation. Unless these bills are passed, the programs would cease to function. There is also the bill to increase veterans' benefits. But none of these measures is highly controversial. Surely it should, and must, be possible for the House leaders to negotiate limits to debate on them so that all these bills could go through the House in a very few days.

The result would be that the House could move immediately thereafter—and before Christmas—to the first stage competition bill and the anti-profiteering legislation. The first stage bill received second reading, that is, approval in principle, from the House and was well into consideration by the finance committee when the election came. At that time I had already submitted to the finance committee a series of amendments aimed at dealing with many of the valid points raised in public and parliamentary debate on the bill up to that point. I would, therefore, urge that the House agree to give the first stage competition bill second reading without another full second reading debate and refer it immediately to the finance committee so that its consideration could continue from the point at which the committee left off before election day.

If it is important to the fight against inflation that the first stage competition bill should become law as soon as possible, I believe it is equally important for the government to make the necessary policy decisions and present to the House, also as soon as possible, a bill to implement the second stage of the new competition policy. The first stage bill, which was given first reading last week, is identical to the one I presented before the election. That bill proposed strengthening the law against misleading advertising and giving new consumer protection in the field of warranties and guarantees as well as against certain undesirable selling practices. Also, it would give the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission new civil jurisdiction to make orders against practices such as refusal to deal which could have adverse effects on competition.

The bill would make it easier for the courts to find, on the facts, that there had been unlawful combinations in restraint of trade. It would extend the Combines Investigation Act generally to apply to the field of services. It would authorize higher penalties by the courts, both in terms of fines and imprisonment, for those convicted of offences against the act. In addition, for the first time it would give those injured by breaches of the act the right to sue for civil damages. These are all important and necessary steps in improving our competition law so that it would do more to help competitive pressures work more actively against rising prices in the economy.

The government decided during the last parliament that other possible changes in the anti-trust law pertaining to mergers, monopolies and specialization agreements would be dealt with in the second stage of legislative consideration. But these aspects, also, are highly relevant to dealing with the structural causes of inflation. I believe it is essential, therefore, that the second stage bill be produced without delay.

In my view, it should not be necessary for a further round of formal consultations with business and other groups to take place before the government makes up its mind as to the contents of the bill. After all, the process of review of competition policy has been going on since 1966 when the government referred the matter to the Economic Council for study and recommendation. The council issued its report in 1969. There was much public debate on the contents of the report, as there was was after the first competition bill was presented in 1971.

A series of seminars was held by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in 1972 as a means of further consultation with business and other groups on all aspects of competition policy. Then there was the public and parliamentary debate when I presented the stage one bill to parliament in the fall of 1973. During all this period, briefs and recommendations were submitted to the government by interested groups. I believe, therefore, that the government is now in a position to make decisions as to the contents of the second stage bill. I believe that now is the time for decision and action on the bills covering both stages of legislative reform. There would still be ample opportunity for the views of all interested groups and individuals on the proposals in the second stage bill to be considered as it proceeded through the parliamentary process, especially during the committee stage.

I think the Speech from the Throne should also have made reference to plans by the government to present the second stage competition bill. The Speech from the Throne which we are considering announces the welcome decision by the government to extend the life of the Food Prices Review Board to the end of 1975. By this expression of confidence, the government confirms the credibility and degree of achievement I forecast the board would develop when I was speaking out in support of, and in defence of, the board here in the House and before the media during its first months of activity. However, in announcing the decision to extend the board's life to December, 1975, the Speech from the Throne is marked by what I consider to be a serious omission. If this omission represents the government's intentions, it means the board will lose much of its hard-won credibility and usefulness.

The Speech from the Throne says the board's mandate will be renewed "so that it may continue to report regularly on trends in food prices and analyse the reasons for price changes in specific areas." But these are only two of the three important terms of reference under which the board is presently operating. The third is that in reporting its findings it can make recommendations for action by the government and by the private sector. It was by virtue of this authority that it was able to make recommendations for the subsidy programs which have been helping to restrain increases in the prices of bread and milk. I shall have more to say about the milk subsidy in a few moments. This authority also helped make it possible for the board to recommend that action be taken in respect of what it found to be unwarranted increases in bread prices late last February.

As the House will recall, on the basis of these findings I personally intervened and was able to get the bakery industry to roll back bread prices to levels which the board found acceptable, levels which generally prevailed until the recently announced increases. These are increases about which, I might say, no one in government has so far had anything to say. I would call attention, also, to the board's recommendations for action with respect to egg marketing, recommendations which helped the government decide to begin dealing with that deteriorating situation.

[Mr. Gray.]

To continue its present and growing usefulness, the board must be able to go on making recommendations for action and to report its findings of fact and its recommendations directly to the public as it does at the present time. To take away this authority would make the renewal of the board's mandate largely meaningless. The government should indicate without delay its commitment to letting the board continue to exercise this authority to make recommendations for government and private action.

The government has rightly said in the Speech from the Throne that it does not intend "to deliberately generate slack in the economy in order to combat inflation." I think this means that parliament, and Canadians generally, must be vigilant to ensure that the government does not bring about such a result unintentionally rather than deliberately as an inadvertent side effect of measures whose ostensible purposes are quite different. Along with inflation there are disturbing signs of slowdown, of recession in the economy. Great care must be taken by the government not to do things which would precipitate the economy into deeper recession, or worse, in view of what this would obviously mean in terms of high unemployment and harm, particularly for the less fortunate groups in our economy.

There must be an equitable sharing of the burdens of dealing with inflation. These burdens must not be thrown disproportionately on the shoulders of the working people and small business people of our country. Of course, the government has said in the throne speech no one group should shoulder an unfair burden. This statement is one which we all welcome. However, the test of the government's effectiveness in reaching this objective lies in what is actually happening now and what will be happening over the coming months.

The government has said it will "exercise restraint in its own expenditures with particular emphasis on improving effectiveness and efficiency in existing operations." But frankly, when it comes to restraining government expenditures, I do not believe that the subsidy on fluid milk was the place to start. And yet we had an announcement last August that this subsidy to help restrain increases in the price of milk would be phased out over the next few months. I do not think that this step is consistent with a fair sharing of the burdens of inflation. It is one which will inevitably bring about a sizeable increase in the price of milk, a basic food so important to Canadian children. And the burden of this increase will fall primarily on lower income families, who pay a higher proportion of their incomes for food than other Canadian families.

The Food Prices Review Board has urged that this decision be changed. As the board said in its September 24 statement, "to withdraw the five-cent subsidy in the present circumstances and to do so over a scant four-month period appears to the board to impose an undesirably heavy burden on the Canadian consumer—In these circumstances, the board calls on government to take measures to moderate the rapid fluid milk price increases facing Canadians." The Food Prices Review Board made that statement on September 24, but no one in the government has as yet spoken out in support of this sensible and humane recommendation of the board.

It has been argued that increases in family allowances and other social benefits, and their indexing, will make up for the ending of this subsidy. But the government did not cancel the subsidy when it put into effect the increased family allowances and indexing schemes early in 1974. I believe the government should reverse its decision to eliminate the milk subsidy and, as the Food Prices Review Board said, "allow it to continue in the absence of discernible progress in the development of a long-term national dairy policy in view of the other food price increases which consumers currently face." So I hope there will soon be an announcement, in the interests of Canadian children and Canadian families, that the milk subsidy will not be cancelled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: In the throne speech the government has said, as it has said many times in the past, that higher production will be the way we will achieve, if not lower prices or stable prices, at least, as the speech puts it, "the slowing down of price advances." But this can be so only if an increased supply of goods is allowed by the government to exert downward pressures on prices. Increasing the supply of goods and services will do little, if anything, to lower prices if suppliers, because of their economic power, can keep their prices at the same level or even increase them. Increasing supply will not bring about lower prices if government policy itself serves to maintain prices, even when supply increases, or if government policy ratchets them even higher with each increase in the level of supply.

The American economist, Henrik Houthaker, has proposed an urgent examination of all his federal government's regulations and programs to see if they are in fact helping keep prices up. He presented a list of 45 such programs that may be having this effect in the United States. I am sure we could easily develop a similar list in Canada. We should carry out this kind of review in our country and the government should take action, in light of it, on an urgent basis.

Speaking about this kind of approach, another American economist, Gardner Ackley, has said that "this means a concerted attack on structural rigidities in our economy and an energetic effort to dismantle the many institutional, largely governmental, arrangements which raise particular costs and prices." As I said earlier in my remarks, we must make efforts to remove structural rigidities that contribute to inflation. The increasing of flexibility and of competitive pressures in our economy is a key micro-economic way of dealing with our inflation problems. I have already referred to the need in this context to move speedily to implement a reformed and tougher competition policy as well as the anti-profiteering legislation.

Another area which also requires urgent attention is our evolving national farm products marketing system. The will of parliament, as expressed in section 22 of the Farm Products Marketing Act, is that agencies set up under it are "to have due regard to the interests of producers and consumers." However, the recent reports of the Food Prices Review Board on egg marketing indicate that this direction from parliament is not being followed by at least the first of the farm product marketing agencies set up under that act, since CEMA appears up to now to have been geared to operate primarily in the producers' interest, to increase returns to them and to inhibit the benefits of increased production from being passed on to consumers in the form of lower prices.

Last week the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced the government would be appointing additional members to the Farm Products Marketing Council. These members, he said, would not represent the producer interest but instead would be linked with consumers, business and labour. This announcement is welcome. In fact, it is long overdue. This is action I have long advocated and pressed for. The political atmosphere created in very recent weeks by the disclosure of the tragic and wasteful destruction of 28 million eggs finally gave the cabinet the will to take this kind of decision. But welcome as this step is, its true value for consumers should be kept in perspective. Producers will still make up the majority of members on the Farm Products Marketing Council and, in fact, this is required by the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. The role of the council itself is very limited; it is to make recommendations to the Minister of Agriculture on whether national marketing agencies should be set up by the federal government. Also it reports to the Minister of Agriculture on their operation once they are created. But the real decisions on the supply and price of a commodity covered by a national marketing agency are made by the members of that agency. This is where the real power lies at present.

Nothing whatsoever has as yet been said by the government about any formal government decision to appoint consumer representatives to national marketing agencies as distinct from the Farm Products Marketing Council. With respect to provincial marketing agencies, I recognize it would be a lengthy and difficult task for the federal government to convince provincial governments to appoint consumer representatives to all provincial marketing boards. But this is an effort the government must also begin.

However, it is quite a different matter when it comes to the national agencies or boards set up by the federal governor in council by proclamation under the Farm Products Marketing Act. The act provides that the governor in council can designate the members of these agencies by proclamation. The act does provide that a majority of members of these agencies must be producers. But, in any event, I believe the government should proceed as quickly as possible to appoint consumer representatives to existing national marketing agencies. It should also state its commitment to appoint consumer representatives to any national agencies that may be created in future. All these appointments should be in sufficient numbers so that they can have a real impact on the decision-making by these agencies, and this means a commitment to amending the act, where necessary, to achieve this purpose.

If all this is not done, the gesture announced by the Minister of Agriculture last week will be largely without meaning. The Windsor Star of September 24, reported that Gordon Hill, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said that "he felt it would only be fair to let a consumer spokesman sit on the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board and on the federal government's National Farm Products Marketing Council. One vote on the regulatory boards would not swing much weight, he added, but it might give consumers a better insight into what goes on in the marketing of products." However, what is required is not simply a means of giving consumers a better insight into farm products marketing. Instead, they must in fact swing sufficient weight for them to play a meaningful role in decision-making. This can only come from proper representation of consumer and other non-producer interests on the farm products marketing agencies themselves, and not just on the Farm Products Marketing Council.

The appointment of consumers to these agencies is not an unwarranted intrusion into the private business of farming. Many farmers may not be willing to admit it, but marketing boards and agencies are a form of monopoly or a form of combination in restraint of trade. They fix prices, they regulate supply and they allocate markets. The members of these boards and the farmers dealing with them would, therefore, be subject to investigation and possible prosecution under the combines law if it were not for the clause in the Farm Products Marketing Act specifically excluding such national agencies from the impact of the combines act, our anti-trust law.

In other words, farmers could not lawfully organize their production through national marketing schemes without the authorization of the people of Canada generally, as given through parliament when it passed the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. When parliament did this, the Canadian people in effect authorized the government to set up bodies which are forms of monopolies or combines in restraint of trade. It follows, therefore, that the Canadian people must have an adequate means of ensuring that such bodies operate in the interests not just of one group but of all groups in Canada through the right kind of public supervision and regulation.

I believe that supply-management programs, if properly run and if constructed to operate in a way that balances the interests of farmers and consumers, can be essential in dealing with and stabilizing the food price situation in Canada. The recent disclosures about CEMA have shown what can go wrong with national marketing schemes. Fortunately, this knowledge has come early in the creation of national marketing agencies. Now is the time to appoint consumer representatives in sufficient number to ensure that both consumer and producer interests are taken into account in the decisions of these agencies. Now is also the time to review and amend the National Farm Products Marketing Act and other legislation where necessary to ensure that, in the words of the throne speech of last February, "guarantees against unduly low prices to producers must be coupled with guarantees against unduly high prices to consumers". These words, which I have quoted verbatim from the throne speech, unfortunately did not appear again in the present speech. I believe, therefore, that there should be a renewed public commitment by the government to this objective before this debate ends.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the Canadian people, in giving the government a majority mandate on July 8, did so in the expectation of meaningful action on inflation and other problems that confront us. They expect that the words of the throne speech will be translated into that kind of action as quickly as possible. In voting, they said they wanted a government that was Liberal not only in name but also liberal when it came to both policy orientation and action in terms of concern for people, of ongoing economic and social reform and of strengthening Canadian economic and cultural independence. When Canadian voters gave the government a majority on July 8, they were not simply challenging the government to show what it could do; they were saying, instead, that they expected a definite commitment from the government—a commitment to action, not acting, and a commitment to results, not rhetoric.

It is up to all members of this House of Commons, but especially to those on the government side, to see that the carrying out of this commitment in this positive way is in fact what happens, particularly during this first session and also throughout the entire life of this thirtieth parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, may I have the pleasure of joining those who spoke before me to offer my congratulations to the movers of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne who acquitted themselves magnificently.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. leader of the House who was named to preside over our deliberations, a difficult task that he kindly accepted to see that parliamentary impartiality is respected both at the level of political parties and official languages.

It is with pride and joy that we can express ourselves in French and in English in a Parliament which always respects the established customs.

We hope that this freedom of expression in the two official languages will be respected from coast to coast so that each Canadian may feel at home everywhere in his country.

We also hope that this fair play will be felt more and more, not only in the official languages area, but also in the distribution of those goods which are essential to life, the natural goods which do not come to us from France or England, but directly from our national production so that all the most elementary needs of each citizen might be satisfied.

The first aim of the Parliament of Canada is to ensure the reign of distributory justice for all citizens of all classes. It is on this essential point that I would like to draw the attention of all the ministers and members of Parliament who were elected or re-elected during the last general election.

Mr. Speaker, I am very optimistic when confronted with life's obligations and I have always managed to face the economic problems of my family. However, I cannot help but see how my fellow Canadians in the riding of Rimouski and the rest of Canada lack the money or the purchasing power which would allow them to adequately participate in the riches of our country and the production of all working Canadians.

I am saddened by this and I am still seeking means to alleviate this tragic situation. To this end, I dared become a member of the Parliament of Canada, with the belief that there lied the supreme authority of the country, where it would be possible to proceed to an adequate and just distribution of this country's wealth and production. I want my right to speak to be recognized and I insist on being taken seriously, especially when I speak of national product and of a better distribution among Canadians.

● (1540)

I see that this Parliament is composed of 57 new members and that 207 members or ministers belonged to the last Parliament. I also note that the former minority Liberal government has been returned to power with a majority sufficient to take its responsibilities without blaming its numerical weakness for its shortcomings. If it cannot settle the problems of Canada, it will only be because of the weakness of its aptitudes or of its character, or because it does not know its obligations and duties.

I am afraid the 57 new members will be as surprised as I was in the last few years at the uselessness of their presence, or their efforts here in Parliament.

Already in the Speech from the Throne and the speech of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I see to what extent the international or world-wise character of inflation is being used as an excuse not to introduce decent reforms towards a fairer redistribution of the national product among all Canadians.

Instead of continuing to talk about inflation, unemployment and poverty, three of the main consequences of the poor distribution of income, work or purchasing power, why could we not, together, look at the magnificent results of the Canadian production in 1974, which reached $137 billion, that is $6,000 per citizen. If that is so, why do we not all live in affluence or at least in relative comfort?

Why is it that 22.5 million Canadian citizens, with an average per capita income of $6,000, are not satisfied with this production and that the people mainly responsible for the economy are always talking about the need to further increase this production? Have not the members of Parliament themselves asked this same question to the present ministers? It is not enough to produce what we need. We must also ensure a better distribution of this production and this is the responsibility of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, even though our economy is very dependent upon our relations with foreign countries, far and near, our whole income and tax policy is the business of members of Parliament alone. No citizen of another country, whether from Rome, Paris, London or Washington, has the right to come and solve our problems in matters of family allowances, old age pensions or guaranteed personal incomes, in other words to interfere in business which concerns Canadians only from the moment of their birth to the day of their death. It is therefore in this House, on behalf of all the voters in each constituency, on behalf of all Canadian citizens, that we can best organize the distribution of income and taxes so that we may restore the economic balance between all Canadian citizens and eliminate inflation, unemployment and poverty, thanks to our great national product of $137 billion.

This, Mr. Speaker, is our most important work and responsibility, in other words, it is our only problem. We can consider our impressive national product—without thinking about inflation, unemployment, poverty. We must be careful not to let ourselves be conditioned by our old habits of considering the economic problems of distribution instead of considering the situation with a new approach, as the 57 new members will probably do. We shall perhaps then be able to find a solution to inflation, poverty and unemployment. If all Canadians enjoy an adequate purchasing power, if all production sells better and more, and the needs of each and everyone are met, then certainly in all areas, towns or parishes, all businesses will be more flourishing, all goods will find buyers, and all production of all goods and services will bring back all available unemployed everywhere.

Let us not blame anyone for the past. There is no use in it. Let us take a good look at the present. Let us know better our present situation and let us look at it as it is without letting ourselves be intimidated by past patters, and I am convinced we will have good surprises.

The right hon. Prime Minister seems to have lofty views about bringing home the constitution of Canada, about drafting a new constitution. Let us wish him every success in this endeavour which may be called for; but what is most important is not changes in the constitution but changes in the distribution of our production for the well being of all Canadians. Let us deal with the first, and then it will be easier, or perhaps unnecessary, to amend the constitution.

One thing remains certain, we can better distribute what we currently produce, and nothing in the constitution steps us from making a proper and fair distribution of incomes and taxes. Everything is there. Let us look at all the powers the government has under the present constitution.

Let us go over section 91 of the BNA Act and take good note of the following subsections stating that the federal government has all powers concerning trade and exchanges, the raising of public money through all modes of taxation, currency, monetary exchanges and coinage, banks and issue of paper money, and interest rates. I am referring to subsections (2), (3), (14), (15) and (19) of section 91 of the BNA Act.

Even if the earth and all the universe have existed for billions of years, even if manking has lived here for several thousand years it was only a few centuries ago that banks, monetary systems, forms of money, capital and credit as means of exchange were created. And money is continually taking new forms.

The monetary, credit, capital, banking and exchange systems, the national and multinational companies are all man-made institutions which must facilitate the lives of men within society, the exchange of goods, products and services which all are based on natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, it is not our debates—for we debate much too much—but our laws which must be blessed by the Almighty, Who may be talking to us through the mouths and pens of our greatest businessmen who are personally concerned about inflation.

The illness has reached its culminating point. Now, the big guns are thundering. It is no longer economists or university professors who are talking, but two of the highest administrators of our million-rich banks and companies who are dealing with their shareholders as chairmen of the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal respectively, at the end of the financial year on October 31, 1973. The reference is exact and the documents in question are available at any branch of both these banks.

Let us be glad that these men are finally impressed by this everlasting situation of inflation, unemployment and poverty and that they sould request from the government the political rectifications necessary to restore national economic balance between all regions of our prosperous Canada. Everybody can find there most valuable advice.

Here are a few passages from the speech delivered by Mr. G. Arnold Hart, chairman of the Bank of Montreal, but the whole speech should be studied, it is as if it were directed to us, in this House. I quote:

There is no doubt that our economy is still corroded by inflation and it is increasingly urgent to heal it as times goes by.

All of us are collectively responsible in some way or other. But this question overrides the interests of all groups in our society; and neither capital, nor labour nor any single interest group, good as its organization may be, has the capacity and the responsibility for taking an overall view of the situation.

Only the state can do this and it alone has the responsibility for doing so.

Canadians generally want all members in the community to benefit from a higher living standard and quality of life made possible by economic achievements of this great country of ours.

I know Canadians will be ready to take up the challenge if the problem is put forward to them frankly.

The time has come for fundamental alteratives.

Will our elected representatives become aware of it?

This is talking frankly and sincerely!

Here now a few excerpts from the speech of Royal Bank of Canada Chairman Earle McLaughlin, administrator almighty.

We tried to outline the vital links between the bank and the society it serves.

Not only do economic disparities have an economic impact, they also frequently have painful human repercussions.

Those are real problems as people live them in their bodies and their souls. Thus, the rate of unemployment and the average per capita income are empty abstractions which do not bear witness to the ordeal of the jobless father trying to find the means to provide for his family.

We are one of the wealthiest countries in the world nowadays, and we enjoy an envied rate of living and prosperity.

Our national economic prosperity seems to dig ever wider the gap between "have" and "have not" areas.

The problem of economic disparities however conceals human situations that are too outrageous to be born simply with resignation.

National economic development is more than a simple matter of statistics and national gross product. It urgently calls for an orderly redistribution of the fruit of prosperity throughout the country.

How indeed could we take pride in our general economic growth if many of our fellow citizens do not get a fair share of that prosperity?

It seems that the most advantageous approach to regional disparities would be to consider the problem in a national context and not at the regional level.

This is speaking frankly and sincerely!

As we can see, the appeal comes from high authority, and it is the government of Canada that is called on to take action having full authority to plan our economy.

[Mr. Allard.]

Mr. Speaker, the chairmen of the two largest banks in Canada who are also serving as directors of the largest multimillionaire companies, must know a few things about the administration of our country. They are calling on the government to take decisive and efficient action in reestablishing the national economic balance between all Canadian citizens, thus removing at the same time inflation, unemployment and poverty.

Those are the major principles on which is based a total policy dictated to us by the most influential Canadians, a policy desired by all Canadians. The government is called upon to take action and we, in the opposition, are prepared to support it along this line.

[English]

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, this is a great day in my life. For 15 years I have wanted to serve as a member of the House of Commons. I grant you that my reasons over the 15 years have changed, but my enthusiasm certainly has not. I consider that being a member of this House is an honourable profession. As a matter of fact, the member who has brought to this House the most honour, certainly in my lifetime, has been the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). So today I pay him tribute. It would be remiss of me not to mention another hon. member who for the past four years represented the riding of Selkirk, namely, Doug Rowland. Although he is not in the same political party as I am, he is an honest man and one of whom we were proud when he was a member of parliament.

Today I will deal with two basic areas. First, I wish to address some remarks on a more philosophical basis regarding the direction in which I think this government should be going. Second, I will tell you a story of a great naval battle which took place on the prairies. No doubt this will be of particular interest to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Finally, I will be much more parochial and will speak about Selkirk in particular.

Every member of parliament works from a basically philosophical principle—a pivotal point. My pivot centres around Biblical principles. I believe there are certain basic principles that are morally right, and certain that are morally wrong. I think that this government, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in particular, would be well advised to give some heed to those Biblical principles which are as applicable today to modern man as they have ever been. In particular, sir, I think it would be well for this government to realize that in Canada it is not the government that is sovereign, nor is the Queen or the Crown. In fact, we must go back to the sovereignty of God.

I point out to this government that it should give some measure of tribute, however small and insignificant it may be, to those basic scriptural principles on which our civilization was built. Furthermore, I think that this government would do well to understand that the government should rule from a principle of justice, not from a principle of power. I feel that the Prime Minister and his cabinet have not yet come to grips with this principle and have not made the choice between government by power and government by justice, even though they have used that hollow phrase "the just society" since 1968. I think that this government would be well advised to agree that we should be the world leaders in establishing a massive development program, because if we are to consider justice for Canadians we cannot really apply justice in Canada unless we are prepared to do it in an honest way.

We should all agree that justice extends beyond our national boundaries to every man on the face of the earth. In terms of both our reserves and our natural resources, we probably can be considered one of the richest nations in the world. For us to think always in terms of nationalistic policy is both naive and provincial. I do not think the government can be commended for its infantile approach to this matter, as demonstrated by the fact that the CIDA program amounts to a commitment to world development of only 1 per cent of our gross national product. I wish also to warn the government and caution them against adopting an attitude of economic assimilation of other countries, believing that somehow these other countries should mould themselves to our viewpoint with regard to their economic development. I do not think the government would be well advised to take an ethnocentric development perspective. Rather, we should understand that perhaps other countries, although not developed to the same degree as we are, nevertheless on occasion may have stumbled upon some element of truth.

I should like to speak more on these basic philosophical principles but I want to leave myself enough time to refer to matters which pertain to the Selkirk riding. Therefore, I will now go into story time. I remember very well a morning early in May. I arose and the sun was shining as it usually does in Manitoba. A warm, gentle wind was blowing. As I walked out of my apartment on to the sidewalk, I found some alarm among the people there. The cry I heard was "The Liberals are coming, the Liberals are coming". You know, Mr. Speaker, Manitoba is very flat and that is why we have a great perspective; we can see a long way out.

I remember looking to the east into the distance and seeing this great Liberal armada making its way through the prairies. As it came closer, I noticed a great flagship and on the ship was Admiral Trudeau. On his right I saw a most impressive battleship on which was Rear-Admiral Richardson, or maybe I should say Rear-Rear-Rear-Rear-Admiral Richardson. On the left side of the ship was an aircraft carrier laden with 707 airplanes bound for the port of Winnipeg. There was some suggestion that perhaps there were some Air Canada planes on that ship as well. In total, there were some 45 most impressive ships in the fleet, with banners waving in the western wind.

I want to be honest in relating this story, so I must tell you that to meet this great fleet was but a small task force of loyal westerners, two Manitobans. That in itself would not have been bad, were we not facing a war on two fronts, because it seemed that over the previous 18 months the Liberals had allies and were coming from the rear with land forces. Now I want to dispose of the third party in the war, Mr. Speaker. As I remember, as the battle progressed this third element was somewhat confused and in disarray, not knowing whether they were fighting us or the oncoming Liberal fleet. What happened to that third force is well known on the prairies.

● (1600)

As I led my very small task force in Selkirk to meet this great fleet, I remembered the legend of a battleship which was tied up at the port of Prince Albert and allegedly was due to join the mothball fleet. With all the reserves I could muster, I called upon this great battleship of Prince Albert, and it was ready. Mr. Speaker, when a volley of shots came from this mighty Prince Albert battleship it hit that Liberal fleet with deadly accuracy and it hit Prime Minister with the sting of a thousand hornets.

In the early stages of this great battle it became very apparent to Rear-Admiral Richardson that he was losing, so he decided to call out the reserves from Halifax. It would seem that there were ships ready to go, but no crews to man them. Mr. Speaker, if the civil service were sailors, there would not be enough ships in the entire Dominion of Canada to accommodate them. Those ships were without a crew and could not come to the aid of the minister. This battle waged fiercely. It was an awesome battle for some eight weeks. When the smoke cleared late in the evening of July 8, the Liberal fleet had been sunk on the prairies and Rear-Admiral Richardson's ship was listing heavily to the left. There were only five survivors. Lieutenant-Colonel Lang was directing survival operations, encouraging the five men who were desperately clinging to a life-raft. Sir, that is a true story.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, that great fleet from the east was an impressive sight. I want to make another point before I leave that great battle. Many members might wonder what happened to the flagship. Before the battle reached its height, the flagship had left to sail the waters of the St. Lawrence under more favourable conditions. This great fleet was only dwarfed in size by a fleet of Liberal pirate ships seen going from west to east with the plunder and booty they had stolen from western Canada. It is now believed, on the corner of Portage and Main in Winnipeg, that the aircraft carrier lost in battle did not have a cargo 707s bound for Winnipeg at all, but had some 28 million eggs.

An hon. Member: All rotten.

Mr. Whiteway: Their condition probably would not have been conducive of consumption, Mr. Speaker. For the next few minutes I should like to speak about the riding of Selkirk. The great philosopher, Mr. John Locke, once said that a man could not be converted by a one-time brilliant argument. Even if I were capable of delivering a brilliant argument, Mr. Speaker, I am certain I could not convert the Prime Minister—mainly because, I suppose, he is not even in the House to convert. I should be surprised if I, a novice, could bring the Prime Minister to his knees, in tears, in repentance, promising to bring forward better policies for this nation.

My role is not to convert the Prime Minister, but to be a depth-sounder. Anyone from the maritimes or who has travelled the oceans will know what a depth-sounder is. It is an instrument that sends an electronic wave to the bottom of the sea; the wave then bounces back and is measured, and from that they can tell how deep the water is. Depth of water is usually measured in fathoms, which is about the span of an average man's arms, about six feet. I believe my role is to be a depth-sounder for the government of this country, to measure the depth of water for the ship of state in western Canada. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, if some government policies were a popsicle stick they would go aground in western Canada.

As a mere deckhand, I would not in my wildest moments of imagination even remotely consider advising the captain, the Prime Minister, as to the course his great ship of state should take in the west. But one thing I can do: I can watch diligently for the west and I can point out the reefs and the rocks, and I can tell the captain when the ship is nearing the shore. I want to be a depth-sounder in a few areas, particularly for the riding of Selkirk.

I may mention some towns that the Prime Minister and the government have never heard of, but I will take that chance. I might even have the honour of having the Prime Minister's eyes, even for a fleeting moment, look at the words that I speak today as they will appear in Hansard. There is in the Selkirk riding a town by the name of Gimli. Former ministers of defence know Gimli well, because they took from it an air force base that was vital to its survival. Only through the intestinal fortitude of the Vikings of Gimli, the town survived in spite of the federal government.

In Gimli there is a firm called Saunders Aircraft. I will not comment on whether it is a particularly viable industry at the present time. I am not one of those trigger-happy politicians who is willing to take a shot at Saunders Aircraft for any reason, but I will say that this Liberal government should extend the same kind of aid to it as is being given to eastern aircraft companies. The government should show us the formula they used in deciding the kind of subsidies and grants given to aircraft companies, so that we can understand their reasoning with respect to Saunders. They have recently paid token appreciation to the company's attempts to establish a viable industry in the town.

Some 15 years ago, the federal government—I must say it was not a Liberal government—built a great breakwater in Gimli but made no provision for its maintenance. Fifteen years later that breakwater is shifting. It is certainly inadequate in its present condition. I know that to some degree the government of Manitoba must assume responsibility because they raised the level of the lake two feet more than its level when the breakwater was built. However, we will not solve the problem by simply passing the buck and saying it is not the fault of the federal government that the water is rising. The fact is that the water has risen by two feet, the breakwater is inadequate and the town is in trouble. That is not the only deep water there is in Manitoba for this government.

● (1610)

Moving southerly down the lake from Gimli, we come to Sandy Hook. Counting all the dogs, cats and other living matter, I suppose the population of Sandy Hook is not in excess of 85 or 90 people. However, they have a problem. That problem is the post office. I know I should not take the time of the House to bring to the attention of this government a problem concerning only 80 people. Nevertheless, I hope this government will be responsive, no matter how small the group. The problem is that the post office in Sandy Hook closes at noon. No one can get their mail, because when the post office is open, everyone works. Let me say that everyone in western Canada works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: Perhaps I ought not to use the word "work" in this House. I do not mean to use foul language or to be offensive toward the government. However, this is a word that we in western Canada understand. We not only preach it, we practice it. I have a few comments to make about that. I do not want to let the government off the hook so easily. I want to bring to the attention of this government that if I have to, I will pitch a tent on the doorstep of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) until this problem in Sandy Hook is solved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: Moving down the coastline of Lake Winnipeg, we come to Selkirk, a most historic town. When you walk the streets of Selkirk, you can smell the history in the air. This town is probably of some importance to the Minister of State responsible for the fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc). Some years ago a study was undertaken to determine whether a fish processing plant should be built somewhere in Manitoba, under the auspices of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board. I am sure hon. members from the maritimes and from British Columbia will appreciate this. Where is the most logical place to build a fish processing plant? It should be along the lake where the fish are caught. However, in the wisdom of this government the fish processing plant was built in the middle of a wheat field in Transcona.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whiteway: You cannot see it because it is always in the shadow of the grain elevators. I would not suggest that the fact Transcona is in the constituency of the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) had any rationale; however, it seems to have more rationale than any other reason for building the plant in Transcona.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: This fish processing plant has capital assets of approximately $6 million. Last year they had a net loss of $1.5 million. The government does not understand that because this plant is 20 miles from the lake it had an inventory loss.

I am only a deckhand. I do not understand the matters of the great ship of state. In my naïveté, I suggested very simply that it would make sense to move the fish processing plant from Transcona to Selkirk. But oh no, they could not do that. There are $6 million worth of fixed assets in Transcona; whatever will they do with those? My point is that in three years they will lose more money through keeping the plant in Transcona than the fixed assets ever will be worth. However, that simple attitude, that schoolboy arithmetic, certainly did not hold any water with this government. The people of Selkirk are sick and tired of these fish stories coming from the ranks of those on the government benches. The government can keep the plant in Transcona until they or the people of Canada go broke, but for the sake of reason I ask them to build a small, token fish processing plant in Selkirk otherwise the ship of state will be on the rocks.

I have been watching the clock, Mr. Speaker, and I see my time is running out. Nevertheless, I will take the liberty of mentioning another problem. All along the eastern and western shores of Lake Winnipeg there has been tremendous erosion due to the abnormally high level of the lake because of the abnormal run-off levels this year and the fact that the provincial government has allowed the basic level to increase from 713 to 715 feet. Once again, the problem is provincial. It was never a problem before. The old cliché that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure holds true in this case. However, to solve this problem we need several hundred thousand tons of prevention in order to stop further shoreline erosion. This government would be well advised to consider rip-rap, pilings and provide an adequate breakwater system all along the shoreline.

I could continue and speak about the city of Winnipeg, a large portion of which lies within Selkirk constituency. The basic problems of Winnipeg are not very different from those of any other city—urban transportation, housing, railroad relocation, and a hundred other things. However, my time is running out and I want to bring to light a matter which I mentioned very briefly. It concerns work. I believe that in western Canada there are jobs for most Canadians who really want to work. We in western Canada believe in the work ethic. This country was moulded by people who knew what it was to put in a hard day's work. They did not rely on winter works programs, unemployment insurance, LIP or LEAP grants or a hundred other make-work programs which this government has devised as a substitute for work.

I do not want to be accused of suggesting overly simplistic solutions. In fact, I am only discussing the problems, not suggesting in-depth solutions. However, I want this government to be aware that the water is very shallow. In western Canada we hear it said that Canadians are being paid $2.2 billion not to work. This government would be well advised to accept the idea that it is better for a man to work at any job than to not work at all. The pendulum has swung far enough to the left. I do not accept the idea that Canadians have a right to the natural resources of this country, if they are not prepared to put any work into them.

● (1620)

I believe in the basic Biblical principle and the basic practical principle that unless a man is prepared by the sweat of his brow or the labour of his mind to put some effort forward, he has not earned the right to any of the rewards which this country can offer. I am not referring to those who through no fault of their own cannot earn their own way. I will not mention Bill 22 and the Official Languages Act. I shall save that story for another time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

The Address—Mr. Gillespie

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I should like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker and his deputies, upon your election to the service of this House. I speak for many when I say we know you will be effective members and, indeed, elegant servants of the House. I should also like to congratulate the two new members who moved and seconded the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I think they left a deep impression and served notice of their promise as parliamentarians. I should like, also, to congratulate the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) who has just concluded his maiden speech. It was an entertaining, witty and memorable speech. I should like to commend him, too, on his highly developed nautical sense of metaphor.

In the time at my disposal this afternoon it is my intention to deal with two subjects. I wish to deal briefly with the current trade situation and our prospects for the future, and then with the question of foreign investment, as fully as I can in the time available to me. The trade situation in the first eight months of this year clearly demonstrates that Canada has enjoyed a very good trade year to date and the near-term prospects are, I think, equally good. Exports are up 26 per cent. The estimate for the year is pretty close to $31 billion; that is what our sales abroad will amount to. This compares with close to $25 billion in the past year.

The increase has been noticeable in some important markets where we have been aiming to expand. Our exports to the EEC are up 42 per cent, and to the Commonwealth, not including the United Kingdom, by 34 per cent. Exports to Latin America are up by 58 per cent, to the United States and the United Kingdom by 22 per cent, and to Japan by 39 per cent. I regret the fact that our exports to the United States and the United Kingdom have not increased by as much as our total average. But there are some soft spots. Two products in particular are feeling the pinch very severely. First, the automobile industry, in the sense that it has not been able to export what it might have been able to export had the United States market been stronger. The United States automobile market this past year declined by 25 per cent, whereas the Canadian market improved.

Another industry adversely affected is the lumber industry, and part of the story is the housing record in the United States. Hon. members are concerned, as I am concerned, about the effect on the lumber industry of a very significant slowdown in the United States housing market. One-third of the lumber produced in Canada is consumed by Canadians in meeting the demands of housing and other business and commercial needs. Two-thirds of the production is exported, and by far the larger part of these exports go to the United States—very close to 80 per cent. Indeed, the United States market is about double the size of the Canadian market and the current situation as far as lumber is concerned is a reminder to Canadians that when we rely so heavily on a particular market and that market is disturbed, for example, by the high price of oil, by high interest rates and their effect on mortgages, as well as by high lumber prices themselves, consumer resistance is inevitable sooner or later.

The strength of our export effort will always depend on the strength of the economies of our major customers. The other side is that the strength of our imports will always depend, very largely if not entirely, on the strength of the Canadian economy. That is really the story of Canadian exports and imports. Our exports are up by something like 26 per cent but our imports are up by some 34 per cent, reflecting the relatively better performance of the Canadian economy at the present time. Thus, our commodity trade surplus has narrowed to $460 million this year compared with over $1 billion for the same period last year. However, I expect there will be some further additions to our commodity trade surplus. To date, seasonally adjusted data suggests a surplus for the year in the neighbourhood of $1 billion. Well, where do we go from here? What are our prospects for the future? I wish to emphasize that a major trading country such as Canada cannot hope to pass unscathed through the current difficult international economic situation. Economic growth in our principal markets will be subdued during the coming year. At the same time, I believe that in terms of value, Canada's exports will continue to rise.

I wish to turn, now, to the foreign investment question to which I referred in my opening remarks. I introduce this subject by saying that mention of foreign investment or foreign control or foreign ownership evokes strong feelings in certain quarters. Too often in the past, debate on the subject has been confused and emotional. For example, distinctions are often not made between foreign control and foreign ownership. Nor are distinctions made between foreign direct investment and foreign portfolio investment, though in terms of their economic impact they are almost as different as day from night. All too often, even within the category of foreign direct investment no distinction is made between equity and debt investment. This confusion has bedevilled any intelligent discussion of this important area in the past and it recurs from time to time, though, I believe, less frequently. It is my impression that in Canada today there is a very much more rational climate for examining these important issues.

I believe the work done by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), who spoke so eloquently earlier this afternoon, and the work of the former member for St. Paul's, Mr. Ian Wahn, former chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, has played an important part in establishing this more rational climate and contributing to public understanding. I also believe that the first bill, the bill of my predecessor, Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, which provided for the screening of takeovers contributed to that understanding. I believe parliament's consideration of Bill C-132, which I introduced, also contributed remarkably to that understanding. This was the bill that extended the screening process to include the establishment of new businesses by non-eligible persons outside of Canada, and the establishment of new businesses by non-eligible persons already in Canada, into unrelated areas. It became law, as hon. members will remember, with the proclamation of the first part last April. Since then, the foreign investment review agency has received certifiable applications for approximately 70 screenable transactions.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

There is not time this afternoon to go into a lengthy analysis of the significant benefits to Canada that were negotiated with the applicants, but I want to emphasize three particular points. I think it is fair to say that the takeovers which have been allowed will mean healthier Canadian enterprises. They will mean more competitive enterprises. They will means more jobs for Canadians now and in the future. The second point I wish to make is that it is apparent that some foreign takeovers have not gone forward which would have taken place in the absence of the act. It is not possible to quantify such a statement, but information that comes to my attention from time to time indicates that some foreign investors who had been thinking of takeovers which clearly would not have satisfied the significant benefit test sensibly chose not to go to the trouble of making an application.

My third point is that it has not been possible to complete many reviews of proposed acquisitions within 60 days. If the minister is not satisfied with the initial undertakings given by an applicant, he must—this is an obligation imposed upon him by the act—before disallowing such an application give the applicant a second chance to clarify or to increase the undertakings in order to meet the test of significant benefit to Canada. As the Canadian corporate sector and their advisors—their lawyers and accountants—gain more experience with the operation of the agency, I expect that the length of time required to process an application will diminish. I suspect that initially these groups, or some of them, may have wanted to feel out the agency. Perhaps some of them were also a litte naive, not believing that we would indeed insist upon the test of significant benefit to Canada.

In this connection, I must emphasize that the results being obtained would not have been possible if the arguments of some hon. members opposite, and some Senators, had prevailed, namely that we adopt a no detriment test instead of the test that was adopted, that of significant benefit. When asked during the hearings by the standing committee when I would expect the proclamation of the second stage of the act, that is, the stage which would screen the establishment of a new business by a non-eligible person not then in the country as well as the establishment of a new business by a non-eligible person in the country into unrelated areas of activity, I said that two things had to happen first. First, the agency needed to gain experience in screening takeovers. Second, I wanted to consult with the provinces on the mechanism of consultation itself.

From a standing start early this year, the agency has made, I believe, very considerable progress in administering the first part of the act. In this regard, I am able to report to the House that co-operation between provincial governments and the agency in relation to current takeover cases has thus far been encouraging. The consultations with the provinces are well along and will be completed in the relatively near future. I would expect, therefore, that phase two should be proclaimed before the end of the year.

I should now like to draw attention to a new and important aspect of foreign investment policy. Members will be aware of the election promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the Sault. The Prime Minister said that the Liberal Party of Canada sets as its objective that new, major projects in the natural resources field should have at least 50 per cent, and preferably 60 per cent, Canadian equity ownership. As there are overlapping responsibilities for the development of Canada's natural resources shared by both the federal government and the provinces, he said we would hope to pursue this objective jointly with the provinces.

Such an objective, it seems to me, should have the support of the vast majority of Canadians. Public attitudes all across Canada have been moving toward more government initiatives in this area. By way of example, earlier this year a national Gallup poll asked this question. I want to emphasize that the question was asked after royal assent had been given to Bill C-132. The question was: "Would you favour, or oppose, legislation that would significantly restrict and control further foreign investment in Canada?" It is significant that a large majority of Canadians answered in the affirmative. And I believe it is just as significant that this support was strong in regions all across Canada. This was a view that was by no means shared, as is sometimes alleged, by a few people in Toronto; it is a view and a sense that is felt by Canadians from coast to coast. Such a policy, Madam Speaker, with respect to the resources industry—equity ownership and Canadian participation—it seems to me should be underlined in these terms.

The objective places particular emphasis on the natural resources of Canada which have been of such central importance to the Canadian economy. It is not too much to say that the strength and vitality of our economy in the past has been based on the successful exploitation of our resources. It seems to me just as important to make the point that the exploitation of these natural resources continues to be the underpinning of our economy today and will be, albeit in greater upgraded form such as the further processing of resources in Canada, in the future. More than that, those who direct and control the large resource companies also have a very significant influence on secondary manufacturing in Canada, such as the location of plants in Canada or outside or the kind of upgrading that takes place in Canada. The process of vertical integration from the raw material through to the semi-fabricated product, and in some cases the fully manufactured product, extends the influence of those who control our resource companies right through the manufacturing sector.

Such a policy objective recognizes that the natural resources of Canada are part of the patrimony, the birthright, of Canadians. It recognizes that many of the natural resources of Canada are non-renewable and are being depleted. It recognizes that ownership and control of many of the companies engaged in the development of these resources is held outside Canada. But the policy objective is not retroactive; instead it looks to the future. It recognizes that by insisting upon 50 per cent, and preferably 60 per cent, equity ownership in major new projects over a period of time we can achieve a repatriation of majority ownership and control of the resource companies in Canada. Quite clearly, if each new, major project in a non-renewable resource development requires 50 per cent, and preferably 60 per cent, equity ownership by Canadians, and the existing properties continue to deplete, sooner or later there will be significantly greater Canadian participation.

Such a shift in ownership could also bring with it shifts in control to Canadians. And with shifts in control, the direction of a firm would be more and more sensitive to Canadian opportunities in Canada and opportunities for Canadian companies abroad. Let us not delude ourselves, because if Canada is to play its full role in international development, Canadian-based multinational companies should be major contributors. Too often now, Canadians are not enjoying the same opportunities in developing markets because the Canadian companies which have expertise in a particular area are subsidiaries of multinational firms. Too often the head office of the multinational firm decides who goes where, and the chances are that it will not be the Canadian subsidiary that gets the assignment.

I have heard it argued that there could be difficulties with such a policy because there will not be enough Canadian money to finance such a policy. At the moment there is a real problem in financing long-term projects wherever they may be. The capital markets of the world have been severely disrupted by inflationary forces and balance of payments considerations. Both equity and long-term debt financing have been affected. But those who assume that there will not be enough Canadian money around are not usually referring to the present condition of the capital markets. Indeed, they are not distinguishing between debt and equity investment.

It is true that originally many of our resource projects were financed by both debt and equity from abroad. But in the past decade a major source of funds for the development of Canadian natural resources has been developed internally, within Canada—within the company or corporation—in the form of debt financing raised on the Canadian capital markets. Relatively small amounts of equity capital have continued to come from outside. To illustrate this, a report prepared by my department on foreign-owned subsidiaries in Canada between 1965 and 1972 shows that of total funds available to companies of about $7 billion, more than $6 billion—or 90 per cent—came from funds either generated within the company in Canada or borrowed on the Canadian capital markets, and debt capital raised in Canada amounted to more than $500 million. This compares with equity capital from abroad of about $700 million and a decline of about $100 million in debt owing abroad. For those who are still worried about the sums of money involved, I can reassure them by saying that the typical new project in a natural resource industry involves about four times as much debt as equity. That is a ratio of close to four to one in the new project.

Clearly, it seems to me, we should concentrate much more in the future on raising equity in Canada rather than abroad, and to the extent necessary we should be raising the larger amounts of debt capital, that is, the part that is four times as great—the four to one ratio to which I referred—from abroad. In considering this policy objective, I think it is clear that a lot of consultation needs to be undertaken with the provinces and with those in the industry itself if we are to realize this as a national objective. This is not a project which can be put into place overnight. We need to define a number of important criteria. What industries? For starters I would suggest the fishing industry, the forest industry, the petroleum industry, that is oil and gas, the mining industry, and pipelines.

As I have already noted, we hope to have the co-operation of the provinces in working out the mechanics of attaining such an objective. In that connection I can report that I have already started the process; I have already raised the question in a preliminary way with some provincial premiers and provincial ministers of industry. I hope to continue these discussions across Canada both at the ministerial and official levels. I believe this policy initiative will in the long term be one of the most important measures taken in a series of measures aimed at providing for Canadians greater control over their domestic economy, of providing greater participation for Canadians in working out the priorities and objectives of their economic development, and greater participation for Canadians in the benefits of that economic development.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I feel very privileged in having the opportunity to rise in this chamber and make my maiden address. It will not be, perhaps, as flowery as the one earlier today and might even be considered morre like a cauliflower, but I look forward to my experiences in this distinguished place among the kind of people who have contributed so much to the traditions of this House. I look forward to serving the constituents of the Battle River area, situated in the province of Alberta. This area was served by the late Harry Kuntz, who passed away last November. There is one thing I can say as a tribute to Mr. Kuntz: if there was anything that stood out in his character, it was that he was a humble man. During my very short experience as a member of this House, I have realized that this is at least one tribute that I hope to retain in serving the people of Battle River.

There are a number of things one might speak about in a maiden speech. I should like to spend some of my time referring to specific problems in my constituency, but I should like to take up most of my allotted time speaking about a subject I consider of tremendous importance not only to the people of my area but to mankind as a whole. I refer to the lack of status as far as agriculture is concerned. I will deal first with a specific problem, whichh is not a small problem to those who are faced with it. In the east end of my constituency, television reception is very inferior to that received elsewhere in the mainstream of Canadian life. If television were only a source of entertainment, or an entertaining media, one might be inclined to ask, "So what?" The fact is that television provides far more than just entertainment. It is a means by which children develop language and a way in which people learn to conceptualize ideas and learn about the country in which they live.

While the area of which I speak does not have the density of population of many other areas—and I concede that there are no major centres there from which stations spring—the fact is that there is a void in the development of language and culture among the young. We, as Canadians as a whole, cannot allow such a void to exist anywhere in this country. A few days ago reference was made in the House to our senior citizens being a class or group of people who do not receive the status they should receive in Canada. I asked the minister responsible for the sending out of old age pension cheques whether any consideration was being given to removing the term "old age". His response was that never had any cheques returned because they were called old age pension cheques. I am sure no one in this House will return our cheques because they carry the words "Government of Canada".

[Mr. Gillespie.]

● (1650)

Madam Speaker, I think it is very important that we reflect upon this class and realize it has earned its status through years of dedication to this country. I believe this country ought to thank them with a language which denotes a higher degree of respect than the words "old age". I cannot think of anything more insulting than the expression "old age", lest it be having to live in the glowing embers wing of Sunset's Glow old folks' home. These citizens command our respect. For a few moments, before getting to the major thesis of my maiden speech, I should like to share some of the feelings I have about LIP grants and some of the disparities which exist in respect of those grants. If we look at the situation, we see that the province of Quebec receives from such grants an amount of $34,601,000, compared to the province of Manitoba, the province of Saskatchewan, the province of Alberta, the province of British Columbia and the Northwest Territories which receive only $13,695,000 collectively.

I am well aware that this is based on unemployment. Obviously, unemployment in Quebec is larger than in these other areas. I have chosen these two areas because they have populations which are almost equal. However, there is a factor which is not being observed. In essence, the prairies export their unemployment. The need for jobs on the prairies is just as great as anywhere in Canada. If we look at the statistics concerning what has happened between 1961 and 1971, we find that in the rural population of Alberta we have lost 57,113 people. In Saskatchewan, in the same decade, we lost 91,000 people. In Manitoba there was a loss of 31,000. While there was an increase in population in rural British Columbia, there was a net loss of farm population in that province.

Anyone who has had the experience of driving through the small, dying towns of the prairies must realize that because there is no unemployment is no reason to believe there is no need for the creation of employment. I say it is an unjustifiable situation to find $34 million being applied to one province while another area of equal population, but much larger in size, receives $13 million.

I should now like to turn to what I call the thesis of my maiden address. Agriculture at the producer level is not treated as an industry. There are many reasons for this. It is not treated as an industry because it is a soil resource. It is not treated as an industry because of the market situation. I should like to deal with some of these points in depth, in order to show what the situation is and its implications. The Niagara peninsula in Canada essentially has been wiped out by other industries. The Okanagan Valley has been exploited in order to encourage development other than agriculture.

I think one myth which exists in this country is that Canada has a large amount of good soil. The fact is that there are only 24 million acres of agricultural land in Canada. Only about 2 million of those acres fall into the category of first-class soil, while about 10 million acres fall in the second class. We might ask ourselves, what seems to be the problem? The problem is that when industry develops, it does so right in the heart of agricultural land. This should not come as a surprise. In the historical context we find that very often cities are built right in the midst of prime soil. Our great cities on the prairies, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Regina, Lethbridge, Red Deer and Edmonton—which essentially, with the exception of Calgary, include every major city—were built right in the middle of old geological lakebeds, on silted-out soil; some of the finest soil we have. While all of that takes place, about 12,000 people a day die of starvation or malnutrition. In this situation, I think we can simply say this: neither this country nor any other country can afford to give up a single square inch of agricultural land for non-agricultural use without first making the important decision as to whether or not there is an alternative.

Because it might seem that there are other alternatives, we might ask whether cities should be allowed to expand over a space if under that space there are known to be tar sands, copper ore, iron ore or any other kind of resource. The fact is that because the cities do extend across agricultural land, farming is viewed as a life style rather than an industry, because no other industry would allow its resource to be simply taken away, especially when the need for them is so great.

There is another myth, that is, that in Canada there is a great deal of good land. The fact is that if this country doubled its population by the year 1995, we would have tremendous difficulty feeding ourselves at the level of nutrition we now enjoy. The situation is extremely serious. While we see acres and acres of prime land being used as backfill for factories and for places on which to build houses, we find elsewhere a situation such as was described to me by a friend who worked for CUSO. He worked in a leper colony. While there, he sent a sample of soil to be tested. When it was returned he found that it contained no nitrogen, no phosphorous and no potassium.

At the same time, we in Canada have no ethical value for what is the most important of our resources. It is so important, in fact, that in the 50,000 years man has inhabited this earth he has had, in each and every day, food or has been in search of food. It is only in the last 100 or 200 years that resources such as oil and iron ore have been popularly used. In no way would we put in roadbeds, or develop cities in areas where there are only mines, without any thought for protecting the areas in which they exist.

Another thing I can say about the agricultural industry which shows it has not had the protection it should, is that in 1964 the farmer's portion of the food dollar was 42 per cent. In 1967 it was only 40 per cent. In 1971 it was 36 per cent of what we spent on food. In order to bring to the attention of the House and to those who think that the farmer is getting a good return for his grain, I would point out that only 3½ cents of the price of a 25-cent loaf of bread is received by the farmer. That means that on what is normally a 25-cent loaf of bread we would still have to pay 21.5 cents if the farmer gave his wheat away. I think it behooves us to recognize on that point that the prices of agricultural products have not been as high as we assume them to be. Also of importance is to know that the output per man on our farms has increased threefold in the last 20 years. By comparison, other industries have increased by only 1.7 fold. This is a piece of information which again points out the necessity of giving our agricultural producers a higher status than they presently enjoy.

Lately we have heard references to putting consumers on marketing boards such as CEMA. I do not oppose that in principle, but I think we should ask ourselves the following question about the agricultural situation: Why is it that when it comes to the consumption of food we give a different status to agriculture? To be sure, when we look at situations such as exist in the automobile industry and the farm machinery industry, the consumer certainly has no say with regard to what the price of those products ought to be. If we treated farming as we treat other industries, we would pay it the same respect as all other industries. If we believe that the consumer has the right to speak out, we should grant the same right to everyone throughout industry.

I also think we discriminate against agriculture by the establishment of unfair freight rates such as those which exist in a large portion of the farm producing area, namely, the prairie provinces. When you consider that it costs twice as much to ship processed rapeseed-meal from Toronto to Lethbridge as it does to ship the raw rapeseed from Lethbridge to Toronto on the same rolling stock, you realize that obviously something is wrong, to the extent that we should ask ourselves where the whole agricultural processing industry is bound to be, because we have to compete against an unfair freight system. When we consider that it is possible to ship products from Toronto to Vancouver and back to Calgary cheaper than sending them directly to Calgary, we realize that the prairie provinces are in jeopardy because they simply cannot compete. That is partly what is stifling the area. While the rationale for cheaper rates to the west coast is based on competition with the water route, the fact is that competition does not really exist in the landlocked provinces. Trucks simply cannot compete with water transportation.

With regard to the status of agriculture, I should like to say that the need for food is so great that the world has not yet really measured the crisis in which it finds itself. We must realize that an additional 77 million people are born in India every year. That is almost four times the present population of Canada. There is no way in which we can neglect the importance of giving agriculture a very high status and the importance of pouring an increasing amount of money into the development of agricultural research, for undoubtedly in that area we find the most important problems facing us today.

The government must abondon its placid attitude while going amidst the haste and noise, because the fact is this universe is not unfolding as it should. Although 12,000 people a day are dying of starvation, those who are studying the problem say that this number is insignificant in the perspective of what will happen. It is even more insignificant in light of the fact that we are experiencing throughout the world a tremendous decrease in this year's agricultural production. We cannot wish for a miracle which will allow us to feed the multitudes with five little fishes and three loaves of bread. Do not think that I am trying to paint a picture of doom whereby the world will end at 10 a.m. tomorrow, which would be 10.30 in Newfoundland, but the situation is critical. It is of such importance and needs so much attention that every effort should be made to increase the status of agricultural production and of agricultural research; for the issue is mankind.

Food comes from two sources only, from the soil and from the water. If we were to distribute food evenly amongst the people of the world today, there would be barely enough carbohydrate to go around, and certainly not enough protein. That, coupled with the fact that on the South American and African continents 45 per cent of the population is under the age of 15, an age at which nearly two times the amount of protein intake of adults is required, should make us realize that the world is heading into a crisis unlike it has ever experienced before. It cannot be too late to concentrate our efforts on the improvement of our agriculture, for indeed if we do not the result will be mass starvation and we will go down in history as people who have not paid attention to what we have known the facts to be.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—House of Commons—Suggested reform of procedures—Guidelines on access to information—Request for public discussion; the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau)—Consumers—Possible solution to conflict between employees and employer at the Saint-Hilaire refinery; the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise)—Finance—Alleged denial of loans by chartered banks under Small Businesses and Farm Improvement Loans Acts.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Duclos for an Address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

[Mr. Malone.]

[Translation]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you, as well as the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome), for his appointment as Speaker of the House. I have known the hon. member for Sudbury for over six years. I met him at the language school at CFB Saint-Jean, Quebec, where members were taking French courses. He benefited a lot from the French immersion course given there. He speaks both official languages of this country with ease.

I would also like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I believe I have something of a unique record in this House. I have contested six federal elections and won every second one. I have a batting average of 500. Nevertheless, as I say to my friends, I do not look forward to the next one one with any great enthusiasm at this point. In the constituency of Ottawa West nearly 85 per cent of the polls were taken from a historic riding known as Carleton. In the 97 years from Confederation until 1963, that riding was represented by the Conservative Party in an unbroken record. I had the honour to be the first Liberal ever to be elected to that seat.

[Translation]

● (1710)

Mr. Speaker, the ridings in the Ottawa area, even in Ontario, are not the same. In my riding, for example, only 11.2 per cent of my voters are French-speaking.

[English]

Ottawa West is not like many of the other Ottawa area ridings. The socio-economic characteristics of the majority of its residents are much closer to those of the ridings represented by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), and in some respects the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). I have to admit that the voters have not entirely seen the error of their ways and have not been generally sympathetic to the Liberal Party.

An ex-member of parliament, now a member of the press gallery, devoted his column one day to Ottawa area MPs. He said that they were a strange breed with a strange local disease—that was an excessive and partisan support of the public service, a subject of much less concern to MPs from other parts of the country. Indeed, the majority of members of parliament who take an interest in the public service are not on the whole sympathetic to it. Their view is, I regret to say, to regard it as a large organization somewhat parasitic on the taxpayers. I admit that I am concerned and sympathetic to the public service in which I served for some nine years as an economist. If an Ottawa area MP does not show concern and sympathy, I do not know who will. In Ottawa West I tend to hear a different side of the problem from that known to many other members, even many of those from the Ottawa region.

I have to report that in my opinion a serious problem exists in the public service today. It is reflected in part in the degree to which the staff associations are chosing the strike route rather than the arbitration route in the legislation available to them. Unless the government acts, I fear we will face a series of increasingly militant staff associations and strikes. Some measures can be taken right away by the government. It is now seven years since the basic legislation establishing collective bargaining was enacted, and changes in the law are overdue. In this connection, I was pleased to read in the Speech from the Throne that the government proposes to enact changes to the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Some four years ago, the government appointed the Bryden committee to deal with the whole question of changes to be made to existing legislation, but its report was apparently unsatisfactory. In April of this year we received the Finkelman report, some of whose recommendations will no doubt be reflected in the legislation to be placed before parliament. In the near future I hope that a parliamentary committee will have referred to it not only the proposed amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act but also the Finkelman report itself, with opportunities for staff associations and individuals to appear and present briefs. I sincerely hope that these hearings will not be prolonged and that a report generally acceptable to all parties in the House of Commons can be adopted. We could then expect legislation to be drafted and passed in the second or third session of this parliament.

The second subject I want to raise today is the development of bilingualism in the public service. This was referred to by the mover in this debate (Mr. Duclos) and by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his statement. With the adoption of the 1973 guidelines, with the designation of positions by specific language requirements and the protection of those employees with long service under the grandfather clause, many of the sharp edges of the policy have been blunted. There still remains a great deal of fear, misunderstanding and concern on the part of many public servants, however, and it would be folly to deny that this situation exists. Many unilingual public servants genuinely believe that their careers have been prejudiced by the policy. I have found that a number refuse to take their cases to the language commissioner because of some unfortunate remarks that he was quoted as making in the press.

A special situation exists in government departments that have been moved or are about to be moved to Hull. A recently reported resolution of Hull city council, objecting to the presence of federal departments which dilute the francophone character of Hull, has been severely criticized by some people in Ottawa, including Mayor Pierre Benoit. If the unanimous resolution of the federal-provincial conference in February, 1969 is to be adopted, to the effect that the national capital include parts of Quebec as well as of Ontario, then I do not understand how federal language policies for public servants can be different in Hull from what they are in Ottawa. The enactment of Bill 22 in Quebec cannot change the matter, since it is a principle of constitutional law, as I understand it, that a province cannot legislate with regard to the federal government any more than a municipality can in respect of a province. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased with the reply of the Prime Minister to the question I put to him today concerning the effect of Bill 22 on the public service in Hull.

Perhaps I could cite a few case histories of complaints brought to me. It is always dangerous to cite case histories because one is perhaps hearing one side and no doubt cases can be offered on the other side. One family in the west end of my riding has lived, on both the mother's and the father's side, in the Ottawa Valley for four generations. She is of French-speaking origin, he is English, and no better examples of religious and cultural tolerance could be cited anywhere. After over 30 years in the public service, he is now employed as a supervisor of maintenance in the government printing bureau in Hull. Men and women with whom he has worked for years will no longer speak English to him. Some of them say that Bill 22 in Quebec makes it illegal for them to speak English at work. At the age of 59, this man is taking early retirement. Fortunately, he will not be penalized unduly in his pension, but he did not plan to retire at this point.

In the same family, a teenage daughter has been employed as a casual clerk, first for a period of six months, then a second period of six months. She is called in and complimented on her work and told she will be made permanent. Shortly afterwards she is laid off and replaced by a bilingual clerk. I know that the process of replacement of anglophone public servants in ensuring a more substantial presence of francophones in the public service is endorsed by all parties in this House. I accept that, but I have to report that a constituency such as mine has to bear the brunt of the changes. I also respect the fact that the changes will probably be accelerated. I am simply calling attention to certain situations because these people are in the constituency I represent.

Another employee of the printing bureau was engaged in the reproduction of background papers on Danish achievements in Greenland, to be offered to the public on the occasion of a special display in the national gallery at Ottawa. The original display had been presented in New York. At the last minute, someone realized that no French translation of the background papers was available although they had been reproduced in English. The display was held mainly with visual materials, and none of the special background papers which were available only in English were distributed.

To the credit of the person who spoke to me, when I asked what would have happened if the display had originated in French and distributed without any form of French background material, he replied that of course these should have been distributed. We have to be mature enough to realize that someone loses in displays like this if the material is not made available. I know this is a small matter, but I should like to call the attention of the House to a situation where the work is done, papers are printed, material is produced and then it is not used. It appears to the people who work in such situations that the procedure is wasteful.

A woman supervisor is offered a French language course, after which it is indicated that she might receive a promotion. She is only three years away from retirement age, however, and fears that she might not do well. Furthermore, she believes it is a waste of public funds to give her priority to attend a language school ahead of a younger woman who might do better. She declines the language training and the possible promotion which would have made a substantial difference to her pension.

● (1720)

I could go on. I cite these case examples of the kind of things I hear about, the kind of things we will have to do our best to work out in terms of fair rules. As I said, there are no doubt injustices on the francophone side. I do not know how we can rewrite history. In many ways, I wish we could. I wish there were ways of compensating for the injustices that have occurred in the past. The fact is, we cannot do it in that kind of order.

I believe we have an obligation to make rules work. That is what I will attempt to do as a member of this House. It should be possible for a unilingual person to enter the public service and plan a career with confidence in the knowledge of which positions will be open to him or her. I find too many young people under the mistaken impression that all positions and all careers will require knowledge of two languages. Hopefully, the completion of the process of designation of positions by language requirements will clarify the choices available. At the same time, competence in the two official languages will always be desirable, and essential for some positions.

As far as language training is concerned, it may be that our language schools will have to become more efficient. I must say, I have the highest regard for those who gave me instruction in St. Jean, Quebec. I do not think we could have had better instruction. I have the highest confidence in the way the staff went about their job. In making these schools more efficient, this may best be achieved by selecting younger candidates and those with higher aptitudes for language training. Those now in language schools who are not making progress may find that training will not continue to be available to them.

Over the longer view, I believe the government of Canada will have to consider how the public service is handled in cabinet. The recent British experience may or may not be helpful in this regard. Great Britain created a ministry of the public service, under the direction of a junior minister who reports to the prime minister in cabinet. The independent public service commission which had previously selected and placed new applicants was abolished and its functions combined with the new ministry.

One of the unforeseen consequences of collective bargaining in the Canadian public service has been the expansion of the power and responsibilities of Treasury Board. Treasury Board is the employer voice. It bargains for the employer in negotiations with the staff associations. In this regard, I congratulate the new President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) for the spirit in which he has undertaken his duties. I know he is examining the structure in an effort to see what he can possibly do to make the system work.

I believe there is no need to create a new department of government in Canada, but I have not closed my mind on the subject. Certainly, those functions of the government related to the public service which are not now exercised by Treasury Board will have to be more closely co-ordinated. I offer the following examples. First, take the question of who will deal with the Finkelman report. The Bryden committee was named by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) when he was solicitor general. Disposition of the report became the responsibility of the House leader, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). Presumably the new House leader will be responsible for the Finkelman report.

Second, the public service commission normally reports to parliament through the Secretary of State. A former member of the commission claimed that the Secretary of State's department was merely the mailbox through which the commission's report was transmitted to parliament. The public service commission claims that it reports directly to parliament. That was the testimony given before the miscellaneous estimates committee two years ago. I was told by a senior minister of the Crown that if I, as a member of parliament, wanted to say anything to or about the commission, I should appear at the hearings of the miscellaneous estimates committee. Once per year the commission presents its estimates to that committee, sometimes for as brief a period as half an hour, and not always every year.

I ask those present in this chamber if anyone believes that this procedure can give effective direction or guidance to the commission. A member of parliament has to be alert indeed to catch the appearance before the miscellaneous estimate committee. Meanwhile, members of the public service commission, at least prior to 1973, felt free at any time to make speeches and announce policies that had a substantial political impact. The chairman actually argued in a letter to me that while he was free to speak, I as a member of parliament could only reply to him when he appeared, usually once per year, before the miscellaneous estimates committee. I do not accept those ground rules.

Third, a similar situation exists with regard to the Commissioner of Official Languages who reports to parliament. Surely a position as important as this should receive more specific guidance and direction from the executive branch of government. I believe the commissioner also once per year presents his estimates to the miscellaneous estimates committee, presumably to receive his direction from parliament on the conduct of his office. I am a member of that committee. I made a request in writing to its chairman that the Commissioner of Official Languages be one of the witnesses called. I am not on the striking committee. If the striking committee approves this, he will be called. However, there is no assurance he will be called even once per year. How can this possibly be a satisfactory arrangement? The commissioner, who is a missionary in his work, attempts also to be a language ombudsman. In my opinion, he has impaired his role as a language ombudsman. He would profit from more direct supervision by a cabinet minister.

Fourth, we hear a good deal these days about underrepresentation of women in the public service. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) supervises the women's bureau and is also responsible for implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That has been changed: it is the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Francis: I stand corrected. That illustrates my problem more clearly in terms of who I have to deal with to work out this matter. The public service commission has special advisers on the recruitment of women, and Treasury Board also has a special assignment regarding women's problems. Fifth, the whole question of the extension of collective bargaining to sectors of the public service where it does now exist, also has to be examined. Presumably, Treasury Board must take the initiative before anything will happen. To take one example, I am sure many Canadians were as concerned as I to learn of the steps to create an association in the RCMP. In this case the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is the responsible minister. I believe he is a very competent, sincere and conscientious minister and I do not wish this to be a reflection on him. I do not feel confident, however, that the matter has been resolved to date.

The list could go on and on. The British created a separate ministry to co-ordinate these functions and bring them together under one roof. In the British case, those members of Treasury Board were dealing with staff associations in an employer capacity appear to be the nucleus of the new ministry. I have some doubt about the wisdom of such a step for Canada. I have suggested that a minister of the Crown, who could be presumed to be sympathetic to organized employees, co-ordinate all those functions not presently exercised by Treasury Board. The Minister of Labour comes to mind. This is the day of sympathetic ministers. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is sympathetic to the farmers, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and Mrs. Plumptre to the consumers, the Minister of State responsible for the fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), to the fishermen, and so on. Why not one minister sympathetic to public servants who could counterbalance the strong employer voice of Treasury Board in cabinet?

● (1730)

The last subject with which I should like to deal today is the subject of parliamentary reform, to which reference was made by the Prime Minister. I see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a motion down to abolish the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is the best kind of reform!

Mr. Francis: It may be that in its wisdom this House will endorse such a measure. I know there were some very useful suggestions made by the Prime Minister, many of which I shall be pleased to support. But there is one aspect of them which causes me concern. It relates to Senate appointments. The Prime Minister is reported on page 44 of Hansard for October 2 as saying:

> First, we should limit the duration of Senatorial appointments to a certain number of years, seven, for instance, with the option of reappointing Senators when they have well served their country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When they have been good.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, who is to determine when Senators have well served their country? What objective tests are there for determining this? Would members of the Senate decide among themselves? I do not know how they would do it. If the suggestion implies that the executive branch of government should make the decision, I ask hon. members to think it through very carefully because it would apply not only to government supporters in the Senate but also to members of the opposition in the Senate, a small and dwindling group.

I am not talking in terms of any individual prime minister. I pose the question generally: what would be the chance of reappointment of a Senator who had taken sharp issue with the government of the day on a fundamental matter of policy? I know it is usual in many quarters to picture Senators as wealthy business directors, former party bagmen, and so on. But there are many distinguished members of the other place who do not have private resources available to them, and they are full-time Senators. As they neared the end of a seven-year term, how many could resist looking over their shoulders to make sure that the cabinet, especially the prime minister, was not offended by anything they said or did? What would be the effect on their independence, the very quality which is supposed to be the essence of the Senate?

I believe the greatest weakness in the Senate is the lack of a strong parliamentary opposition. Any proposal which would make reappointment subject to the discretion of the executive branch should be thought through very carefully indeed.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) raised a whole series of points concerning the functioning of the National Capital Commission and its relationship to the federal government structure in this area. I understand that a special committee will be dealing with this matter and, as one member of this House, I certainly intend to take a conscientious interest in the work of that committee. The report of the former chairman of the Commission, Mr. Douglas Fullerton, will, no doubt, be the basis of the examination which is to be carried out.

I wish to pay tribute to Mr. Fullerton for his imaginative and innovative use of public funds and public lands. However, I wish to take issue with him on one score and express quiet but firm disagreement with him. He may have been right in a number of things, but I do not think he was right when he proposed that part of the Experimental Farm should be used for housing. Despite the fact that there is a serious housing shortage in this area I do not think my constituents would choose to sacrifice an open space which is such a precious thing for the community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech just made by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and, because he complained publicly that his defeat in 1972 was due to the language policy of the federal government, I would simply like to ask him if he can say whether his voters finally understood the language policy of the federal government having reelected him in 1974, or whether he gave the necessary explanations! In any case, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate him on his reelection.

[English]

Mr. Francis: I listened to the hon. member in French and had a little difficulty with the question. I propose to answer the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) at the appropriate time and in an appropriate place. When I was a member of a previous parliament he attacked me on a number of occasions in the press. I did not choose to reply then. I am simply speaking for my constituents. I am sure there will be an appropriate time at which to reply to the hon. member.

Mr. Isabelle: On this question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Isabelle: The fight is not over.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, October 10, 1974

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Administrator of the Government of Canada, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 10th day of October, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne for the purpose of making my first remarks to this House as Member of Parliament for Saskatoon-Biggar. I should like to express, with great sincerity my appreciation to my wife and my family for the wonderful assistance they rendered in my election bid to win a seat in the House of Commons. On rising on this occasion I am reminded of the fact that my father had the great honour of serving in the other place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and, in particular, to his remarks about Senate reform. Speaking from some experience I think the matter raised by the reference in the Speech from the Throne will get a lot of attention in due course.

At the outset I would like to extend to you, Mr. Speaker, congratulations on your election to your very onerous responsibility, that of presiding over the affairs of the House of Commons. Your initial days in this position have demonstrated your desire to exercise this responsibility with fairness.

It seems to me the position of Speaker may in fact be more difficult when one presides over a House in which there is a majority government in the sense that, after all is said and done, the rights of the minority opposition must be guarded and preserved in order that a valid and constructive scrutiny of government legislation, expenditures and actions can be undertaken in the interests of the people of Canada and of democracy. In this pursuit I know you will be constant and dispense even handed justice.

● (1740)

I extend my congratulations as well to the Deputy Speaker, the Deputy Chairman of the committee of the whole, and also to the Assistant Deputy Chairman of the committee of the whole.

I would like at this point to pay a special tribute as well to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who has, as far as I personally am concerned, been a very great influence in my political life, a gentleman who has exercised great influence over the affairs of this country to the benefit of all Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We in western Canada are particularly proud of the right hon. member, who continues to serve a record number of terms, and to serve them with diligence and excellence. It is my privilege to serve with him in the House of Commons as he continues his magnificence in debate, just as in the past.

I would be remiss at this point, Mr. Speaker, if I did not also recognize my friend, the Clerk of the House of Commons, Alistair Fraser, Esq., with whom I was previously associated in the other place. I am a newcomer to the House of Commons, as you will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, and, contrary to the normal sequence of events, I had my previous experience in parliament in the Senate. I came from there to the House of Commons and am now a member here, but I spent three years as an executive assistant to the government leader in the Senate, at which time I had the privilege of meeting the Clerk for the first time. I am glad to say that our friendship has subsisted since those days, and he has been most helpful to me as I have assumed my duties as a member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I seem to have the honour of speaking today at a time when I propose to give some food for thought, although food for the stomach is on everyone's minds, and at a time when I think we are also waiting for a visitor. I will therefore commence my remarks and continue after the dinner hour. I should also like to follow the tradition of congratulating the mover of the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos), and the seconder, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee). I follow this tradition of congratulations, but I must be quick to add that these congratulations are in fact sincere, since their speeches were most worthy endeavours in support of the Speech from the Throne, though I must take fundamental issue with what was not said as opposed to what was said in the speech itself.

I have the very great honour to represent the constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar in this thirtieth parliament. It is a constituency encompassing half of the city of Saskatoon and a substantial area west of the South Saskatchewan River which bisects the city of Saskatoon. This constituency is one that encompasses within its boundaries urban and rural areas. The urban area includes the downtown core of the city of Saskatoon, the warehouse and manufacturing areas of the city, and a substantial, growing residential area. In the rural areas there is an important agricultural industry in grain and livestock production, and a potash mining industry.

The population of my constituency is, in a sense, a microcosm of Canada as a whole inasmuch as it includes the city dweller, the farmer, the small town resident, the various ethnic groups represented in our country, and the various vocations, professions and other interest groups of Canada. It is with this background that I approach my duties as member of parliament for the constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar and as I consider the contents of the Speech from the Throne.

The election campaign which took place prior to this session of parliament was not only an opportunity for me to discuss with the electorate my concepts of the issues facing our country today, but, equally important, it was an opportunity for me to receive the benefit of the viewpoints of many of my constituents during my extensive travels throughout the riding.

Both before the election, and since, there has been no question in my mind that the issue preoccupying the average citizen is that of the ever-rising cost of living and spiralling inflation. In hearing and reviewing the Speech from the Throne I was therefore naturally chagrined that the matter most concerning the citizens of our country was given only perfunctory attention. One does not have to be reminded by Statistics Canada of the scope and extent of the rise in the cost of living, as most people in our country face this increase on a day to day basis in the purchase of groceries, clothing, household supplies, agricultural equipment and materials, building supplies, and in the cost of business expenses and other necessities.

Following the election, and in view of the fact that a majority government had been elected to office, it was my hope that the government would take measures to deal with this most pressing problem. The Speech from the Throne can only be described in this context as a document which is measured in volume rather than in context.

I waited in vain for some indication from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that his government was in fact prepared to deal with the spiralling inflation which threatens the very fabric of our society in Canada today. Unfortunately, in my view, the Prime Minister avoided any discussion of this area and dealt rather with matters which are of secondary importance in our time of national crisis.

I would urge upon the Prime Minister and the government that they come forward immediately with constructive programs of a priority nature to deal with what I consider to be a crisis. I suggest to the government that there is a general feeling of foreboding among the people of Canada in respect of our economic future; that the average citizen is looking toward this newly elected government to take steps within its constitutional ability to deal realistically with the inflationary threat, and further to take the initiative on the international front and obtain co-operation to overcome the western world's problems of stagflation and international monetary instability.

I was encouraged to learn that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is engaged in international discussion of the inflation question. I think it is incumbent upon the government of this country to take the initiative, in the interest of its own population, in encouraging international co-operation for the purpose of combatting the plague of inflation. It is of the greatest importance that the national economy provide a correct mix of economic policies that will curb inefficient government spending while protecting the real incomes of those hardest hit by inflation.

During the remarks of the Prime Minister I detected a slip of the tongue when he referred to the creation of a new department involved in interdepartmental relations, which he later corrected to intergovernmental or interprovincial relations.

I hear a knock at the door, Mr. Speaker. I presume I will be able to resume my remarks later.

Mr. Speaker: It will be understood that the hon. member will resume his remarks after the adjournment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bill:

Bill C-12, an Act to provide for the resumption of grain handling operations on the west coast of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, in my first address to this House I was interrupted by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. We have since supped, and now welcome your presence. I am sure it means something not only to the chamber but to myself to have you preside during my speech.

When I was interrupted by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod I was referring to a speech delivered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the debate on the Address in Reply when his turn came on leaders' day. I referred to the fact that I detected a slip of the tongue when the Prime Minister, referring to things the government proposed to do during the course of this parliament, mentioned the establishment of an interdepartmental agency under the direction of his office. Later, however, in correcting himself he immediately said that he was referring to an interprovincial agency within his own office. I suggest this may have been a Freudian slip on his part.

It is hoped the government will as a high priority in fact set up an office to deal with and review all government departmental spending in order to place some sort of significant restraint on government expenditures generally. On the basis of my own observation, after an absence of some years from Ottawa and parliament, I could not avoid being amazed at some of the considerable changes which have taken place with regard to the proliferation of government in the sense that there is a very high increase, for example, in the number of public servants.

The complexity is most baffling to a novice member of parliament. It is baffling to me even though I had an opportunity to observe parliament for some three years. On my return I found that there were so many new departments, agencies of departments, and Crown corporations that it was rather difficult to sort out the particular facets of government. Members of Parliament now have increased assistance but this, in my estimation, is absolutely necessary simply in order to aid them when looking into the complexities of government as it now stands, a government which, of course, is the largest business in our country.

I suggest to the government it is absolutely essential that it bring forward some plans to make an exhaustive assessment of government spending and, at the same time, bring forward some sort of legislation to ameliorate the social consequences of inflation. The position has now become more than an economic or fiscal problem. Inflation has risen and continues to increase, and must be dealt with as a political problem on political terms, that is to say, in the form of legislation.

Government action must be taken to deal with the effects of inflation on those people unable to protect themselves against the ravages caused by the increased cost of living. I ask the Prime Minister, what of the plight of the elderly, the disabled and the unemployed? These people on fixed incomes, on pensions, in effect are receiving an economic and social scorching, and it is the responsibility of the government to take immediate steps to put out the fire.

When one considers the incredible increase in government budgets, over the past ten years, and the very considerable increase in tax moneys being received by our federal government, one cannot but be astounded at the failure of the government to place the interests of the disadvantaged at the very top of the list of priorities, especially in view of the inflationary problem. The government has been in receipt of considerably increased income through taxation, including the relatively new source of tax on capital gains. In fact it can be said that the government has, in terms of tax income, benefitted from inflation.

The Prime Minister and the government must set an example for the country. Economic and other observers suggest that there is an inflationary psychology which affects the rate of inflation in a national economy. If the government will undertake immediately a realistic appraisal of government expenditures combined with the equally important assessment of assistance to the disadvantaged in our society, the people of Canada will receive this course of action with approbation and will, in fact, join with the government, voluntarily and co-operatively, to meet our most pressing problem head on.

I would like to deal with other aspects of the Speech from the Throne of interest to my constituents but, if I may be permitted to say, also of interest to people generally in Canada. The constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar is primarily reliant on the agricultural industry. I note the general references made in the Speech from the Throne to incentives to farmers and fishermen, including the stabilization of incomes and markets geared to the increase in food production.

● (2010)

The constituents of Saskatoon-Biggar understand the moral responsibility which we have in Canada to maximize agricultural production and to maintain a strong and vibrant industry. This responsibility will weigh heavily upon us as long as we are surrounded by a starving world. I look forward to the introduction of specific legislation to be brought in by the government in the area of stabilization of farm incomes and markets.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, I remind the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) that he was quoted in the Biggar Independent of June 12, 1974, and the Rosthern Saskatchewan Valley News of June 13, 1974, as pledging that a western grain stabilization plan bill would be introduced in parliament within seven days after the new parliament opened. I quote from the Saskatchewan Valley News of June 13, 1974, as follows:

If the Liberal party is elected to form the next federal government, Wheat Board minister Otto Lang will introduce a Western Grain Stabilization Plan within seven days after the new parliament opens.

Mr. Lang made that pledge at a meeting here June 11. He promised Saskatchewan producers if he and the Liberals are re-elected, he will personally introduce such a bill for first reading within the first week of parliament.

The plan, said Mr. Lang, will protect the incomes of prairie grain farmers from being squeezed between rising production costs and low grain prices, should grain prices drop from their current high levels. The farmer's income will be protected whether the squeeze develops from lower revenues or higher costs. This is the only effective and fair way to protect grain producers against inflation.

Knowing the minister represents the other Saskatoon constituency in this House, and knowing that in Saskatoon and surrounding area a man's word is his bond, I call on him now to bring forward the legislation in question for the scrutiny of the western farmers and members of parliament.

We are all aware of the pressures being experienced today by municipalities in connection with their costs, which are escalating at a phenomenal rate and which are being passed on to the taxpayer. Heretofore, many municipalities were granted exemption from sales tax on materials purchased for their own use in a number of areas, such as materials for storm and sanitary sewers and water pollution control plants, equipment with a unit value in excess of $500 used in fire-fighting and road making,—and the material element in buildings to be used as libraries, hospitals and the like.

The budget of last May indicated that the federal sales tax would be removed from articles and materials purchased by local governments for use in the construction of water distribution systems, and from buses and other public transportation equipment purchased by local governments.

I am aware of representations made by the mayor of the City of Saskatoon to the government that, in the forthcoming budget, the list of items used by the municipalities which would be exempt from sales tax should be extended and that it should include materials used in the construction of all municipal buildings, especially buildings housing or fire fighting and police facilities. I urge the government to endorse this suggestion which, if implemented, would in the final analysis lessen the burden on the municipal taxpayer.

The pressure on municipalities due to economic conditions today has resulted in rising prices and costs preventing the construction of much needed hospitals and related facilities, such as senior citizens' homes. At present the ceiling on allowances set by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is $10,000 per bed. Having regard to the escalation in the cost of materials and labour, the allowance ceiling on nursing homes should now be raised to a more realistic level. Municipalities simply are not able to finance the construction of these facilities in view of this limitation on the amount of loans available through the CMHC as the burden falls, with a direct and an immediate thrust, on the municipal taxpayer and he is unable to meet it.

I hope and trust that the government will give immediate attention to increasing the ceiling on loans for such worthwhile projects. In my opinion such an increase would not involve, government expenditures to any significant degree, but would have the effect of softening the burden of expenditures placed on municipalities in the creation of much needed social and medical facilities.

Within and immediately adjacent to the boundaries of my constituency lie the historically important areas of Batoche, Duck Lake, Fort Carlton and Fish Creek. These areas are rich in historic sites, dating back to the Northwest Rebellion of 1885 and beyond that time. An initiative has been taken, Madam Speaker, by residents of this area to develop and maintain the sites for posterity, and they are to be commended for their unceasing endeavours in this connection. There is in the area, at the present time, federal, provincial and local involvement, and representations have been made by the residents of the area for increased federal participation in the development of this complex.

In this regard the assistance of the federal government through its national museums program would be of great assistance and value in preserving artifacts to ensure that they are not lost but are retained for the benefit of the general public. I would urge the government to give favourable consideration to the representations being made by the citizens of these areas, and I hope that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) will take a personal interest in the development of national historic parks relating to this area which has been the scene of developments which have significantly affected our history.

The increasing influx of tourists from all parts of our country, notwithstanding the many deficiencies in facilities and access roads to these sites should, I trust, be a significant inducement to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to give his immediate consideration to the representations I have mentioned.

I have another suggestion with respect to our senior citizens, that group of people who, in my estimation at least, have not received the attention and priority that they so richly deserve. It seems to me that there are a number of ways in which governments, aside from the giving of moneys and raising of pensions, can recognize the contribution made by our senior citizens.

Sometimes we can learn an occasional lesson from our neighbour to the south, the U.S.A. I have been impressed with a policy which has been adopted in the United States with respect to senior citizens, and I should like to bring it to the attention of our government, and of the minister responsible for our national parks, with a view to seeing whether something in a similar vein could not be carried out in Canada. I refer to what is termed in the United States "a golden age passport."

Such a passport is issued without charge to any person 62 years of age or over, and entitles the bearer, and any person accompanying him or her in a single, private, non-commercial vehicle, to enter any designated entrance fee area of the national parks system administered by the responsible department.

● (2020)

The bearer is also entitled to use any designated special recreation facility provided at any federal outdoor recreation area, excluding those provided by a concessionaire, at 50 per cent of the established daily special recreation use fee.

It seems to me that if the government has its priorities in the right order it should be looking at the introduction of some change in the regulations which would be of benefit to this group. It would not involve a very substantial outlay of funds to allow our senior citizens the same right of access as is enjoyed by United States citizens in their country to those parts of our country under federal jurisdiction. I urge this suggestion on the government and hope it will do something about it very soon.

I think I have come close to using all my time or even a little more, Madam Speaker. I appreciate your indulgence, and I look forward to making some contribution in this parliament.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be able to congratulate the Speaker on his election. I am especially pleased to do so because we in Northern Ontario are very proud to have the Speaker come from our area. As we are aware, Northern Ontario is the very centre of this country, and of course while the Speaker does not come from the exact centre, since the exact centre is Thunder Bay, he does come from that satellite of Thunder Bay, the city of Sudbury, which is about 700 miles away. I think he has already demonstrated the kind of flexibility, the keen grasp of difficult situations, and sense of humour that bode very well for his work in the future.

I should also like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Duclos) and seconder (Mr. Lee) of the Address in Reply, as well as the other members who have been elected to the very important positions of Deputy Speaker, Deputy Chairman of Committees, and the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees, the latter being yourself, Madam Speaker.

To form a government in these times is a most difficult task. It has often been said that it would be much easier to be sitting in opposition at this time.

An hon. Member: Do you want to trade?

Mr. McRae: I do not say that is what I want to do, but I say it is much easier to be there. I think we have to look upon these times as being totally unique.

A great deal has been said about inflation, but we have always had some inflation. We have had rapid inflation in places like China and parts of Europe, and an endemic sort of inflation in South America which has lasted through generations.

Since World War II there has been about 2 per cent or 3 per cent inflation annually. There has been inflation associated with unemployment, which is a peculiarity, and we ascribe to administered pricing. I do not however think there has been any period in history, except for very short periods, when inflation reached the present level and was sustained at that level. This is inflation which tends to be caused by excessive demand.

I am just using inflation to show how our times are unique, Madam Speaker, but I do not wish to deal with this topic at this time. Since we have not had comparable problems in the past, the traditional attempts to cure them have not worked. I should like to discuss the matter of demand, and study some solution for inflation in terms of doing something about demand, rather than constantly looking at the supply side of the situation.

I agree that we must continue to increase supply, but we must be careful not to create more tense and inflationary situations than we can cure. I should like to examine the demand side in the areas of energy and foods as I think these are extremely important areas and becoming more so all the time.

Before doing that, however, I should like to look at a couple of reasons why demands in energy and food have become almost intolerable. The first reason, I believe, is the relative affluence of the developed countries like Canada and the United States, which has put tremendous pressure on the demand side. This means that supply situations are very difficult to fulfil, and I should like to illustrate that when I speak later about energy.

Certainly the affluent people are consuming a far greater proportion of the world's goods than they did 20 or 30 years ago. I understand that consumption of beef in Canada has increased by about 20 pounds per capita in 12 years. These things create real demand problems.

Another factor is the growing world population. It is increasing by about 2.1 per cent annually; that is 75 million more mouths to feed each year. By the turn of the century the world's population will have doubled. It was something like 3.8 billion in 1970 and will be close to 8 billion by the year 2000 given the present trends, which seem difficult to reverse.

The third factor that contributes to the problem is the fact that more countries are becoming developed, although I do not think this is as large a factor as the two previously mentioned, particularly in the area of food.

I should like to deal with the question of energy now because I think this is one area where we can take action to lessen demand. An article in Oilweek magazine of September 16, 1974, at page 10 quotes Mr. A. E. Pallister, Vice Chairman of the Science Council of Canada, as saying that we must do something about levelling out the demand curve for energy, particularly oil.

He points out that supply curves tend to level off and even decrease under given circumstances. He says that even with the western reserves, the islands and the far north and so on, the supply curves tend to fall short of the demand curves, and even decrease. On the other hand, the demand curve rises steadily and tends to increase its slope through these periods, so that when we get to the mid 1980s where the supply and demand curves cross we will not be able to continue meeting demand.

I think this situation in oil and natural gas applies not only in Canada but throughout the rest of the world. In the case of hydro power we have long passed the stage where supply can be increased substantially. The areas where this can be done are rather limited.

This over emphasis in attempting to meet demand by increasing supply in the energy field is creating some tremendous distortions in our economy and in our environment, as well as tremendous social distortions.

● (2030)

I wish to name one or two of these areas where the distortions are particularly evident. The James Bay project is most disturbing. Parts of the project make sense and may be carried out very easily. However, when we talk about the James Bay project in terms of $10 billion or $12 billion, along with the South Indian Lake project, the proposed Mackenzie Valley Pipeline, and the tar sands investment when we speak about $100 billion of energy investment in the next 10 years, $100 billion, we are talking about creating tremendous problems and a very serious dislocation of our economy. We must ask ourselves whether these projects are worth it? Are there better ways of doing this?

I mentioned the environmental situation. When costing these projects, we must start internalizing some of the external costs. We must internalize the environmental and social costs to the native population.

The South Indian Lake project is not as costly in terms of investment. However, it is very costly in terms of the environment and what it will do to our native people.

There are many things to be taken into consideration. For example, if the James Bay project and several others were being undertaken at the same time with the use of foreign funds, this would distort the picture through increased value of the Canadian dollar. What happens when the Canadian dollar rises to $1.10, $1.15 or $1.20 in terms of an important industry like pulp and paper so sensitive to dollar fluctuation? This is a very important industry in Quebec, northern Ontario, British Columbia and other parts of the country. Industries such as this will suffer with this kind of dislocation.

We must begin rationalizing our efforts to increase supply. Although it is necessary to increase supply naturally, we must look at it very carefully.

I now wish to deal with the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. It appears that perhaps the bottom has fallen out due to the proposition of EL PASSO to run the gas across the Valdez cut. However, it looks as though the oil pipeline will go ahead. The United States government has again mentioned it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Does the hon. member wish to put a question?

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): The hon. member has just spoken of the James Bay development, now in progress in my riding; before he changes the subject, I wonder if he would be willing to answer a question.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Does the hon. member for Fort William wish to answer this question?

Mr. McRae: Yes, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: The hon. member is concerned about the effects of the development of the James Bay energy resources. Would he have anything to suggest other than the hydroelectric development in that area to meet the needs of the province of Quebec in terms of energy?

[English]

Mr. McRae: I do not want to get into a long debate on this topic, but I do agree that part of the James Bay project may have some merit as a hydro scheme. However, I also suggest the CANDU reactor type of program has a great deal of merit. I have an interest in this program. It is the kind of thing we should be examining. However, it is a matter of opinion. I feel we should look at alternate ways of doing this.

The Mackenzie Valley oil pipeline is another very large project. It will be a good deal more expensive than the gas project, and much more difficult to engineer by reason of the fact that the oil must be heated to 180 degrees in order to flow through the pipeline. There is also the problem of going through the tundra. There is the very special problem of going through the semi-tundra. Some areas have perma frost, others do not. This will create many problems.

I am very concerned about the Mackenzie Valley situation. A group of members of this House talked to members of the United States congress about a year ago. They indicated they would like this Mackenzie Valley oil pipeline in 1982. I think there is some honesty there.

We have another problem and it is becoming a very dangerous situation. It has to do with the Cherry Point situation. When we talked to the Americans last summer we were assured beyond any doubt that the super tankers that would be plying the waters around the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Cherry Point would be double skinned. There was no question about their being double bottomed. We now find this is not to be the case. These are single skin ships.

On August 29 a Canadian delegation met with the Americans. It is my understanding that this matter was not even raised. We had a commitment that these ships would have double bottoms and there would be other precautions. These precautions are not being taken. It is almost a certainty that a collision will occur, and the whole area around Cherry Point and the islands around Vancouver will be polluted by oil. They will be virtually destroyed environmentally. Situations of this kind must be carefully studied.

I am concerned about ways and means of reducing our demand for all types of energy. This must be done in the most intelligent way possible. For example, we have an office of energy conservation. That office must be given all help possible. We must be prepared to spend money in order to reduce this demand for energy. Money spent in this way would be far more productive than the vast sums of money that will have to be spent if we continue on the path of increasing supply to meet demand.

I wish to spend a moment on the world food situation. Here, increasing supply is all we can do. I well remember sitting in an auditorium in Thunder Bay in the mid sixties when the headmasters of the province of Ontario were being addressed by Dr. Brock Chisholm, a very famous Canadian, and executive director of the World Health Organization. He drew a vivid picture of food problems that would develop in the world in the next 10 to 15 years. He talked about what would happen in the early seventies. His predictions have proven very accurate.

Throughout the sixties there was an increase in food production, not only in the developed world but also the underdeveloped world. However, in 1972, due to a combination of bad weather conditions in various parts of the world and a series of other events, cereal crops were reduced by 33 million tons from a total production of 1200 million tons. In the meantime, while this was going on, 75 million more mouths had to be fed, using 25 additional tons of cereals. So there was a net loss of 58 million tons in 1972. The year 1973 was more favourable but there was still a net loss.

In 1974 the situation may be very grave. There was an extremely wet spring in parts of Canada and the United States, a very dry summer, and an early frost in the fall—the worst possible combination of events. I understand that the crop situation in the U.S.S.R. is also not measuring up to expectations. We find the Sahara desert spreading annually and there is a major famine there.

According to the Canadian Conference on the World Food problem held this week, the world has about 26 days' supply of cereal grains in storage. In other words, if there was a serious stoppage of production of cereal grain, the world could survive 26 days before stocks ran out. A few people are becoming very concerned about the world food situation.

An hon. Member: You are doing all right!

Mr. McRae: I admit I am one who should, perhaps, be more concerned personally. Earlier I mentioned the causes which led to the present situation, and they certainly have to do with the relative affluence of a few people like myself and a few others around here.

I think the FAO Conference in Rome in November must be regarded as of extreme importance. Something will have to be done. The papers I have seen for use as a basis for the Rome meeting indicate there will be strong pressure in this direction. Here we find a situation in which we must increase the food supply. One way of doing this is to put more land into production. Another is to prevent our cities eating up rich agricultural land. Another is to increase the production of fertilizer, especially of synthetic fertilizer.

We ought to convert more fuel energy into fertilizer. I believe that today 7.9 per cent of our gasoline and 17 per cent of our diesel fuel is used on farms. Vast amounts of natural gas, particularly, are required in fertilizer production today. It is important that natural gas be used for fertilizer in an effort to increase the world food supply rather than being used in directions which are less important.

We should also show more concern about constructing adequate facilities for food storage. We cannot rest easy with 26 days' supply on hand.

Mr. Horner: Or throwing away 42 million eggs.

Mr. McRae: We must increase supply in order to meet increased demand and, in another area, we must do more than we have yet done to discourage population growth. I was not happy with the results which came out of the recent conference on world population. A great deal of thinking needs to go into this. While the world population continues to double every 33 years there is bound to be a continuing shortage of food.

We must increase the food supply, but at the same time we ought to take a careful look at whether increasing demand should be encouraged. I should like to quote from an address given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to the Canadian Conference on Banking in Ottawa on September 16:

> I propose to press our view that the best and most effective way to overcome the problem of inflation is through policies aimed at encouraging an increase in output and supply. It is important to moderate demand so as to ensure that output does not press too hard against the physical limits of capacity, which would itself serve to generate inflationary pressures.

That is particularly true in the fuel area.

In the few minutes which are left to me I should like to deal, as is customary on this occasion, with a situation in my own riding, particularly with the transportation facilities at Thunder Bay the part they play in the economic and social life of the country.

If we can picture transportation routes in Canada west of Thunder Bay as being two super highways running almost to Thunder Bay, and Canada east of Thunder Bay as being two village roads running east of Thunder Bay, that is more or less the situation. I will explain it a little further. There is the Trans-Canada Highway. We have two of them with paved shoulders and four lanes in many places running right from Vancouver to the Ontario border, and then we have a country road at the Ontario border, an absolute disgrace, a winding highway with unpaved shoulders. While, this is not what I really wanted to spend time on today, I must say we must do something to improve the Trans-Canada Highway. It is a disgrace. It is time the federal government and the province got together and did something about it.

It is the rail connections I want to talk about because I do not think we all realize the kind of situation we have in this country. We have virtually four lines of rail traffic going into Thunder Bay. We have double trackage on the northern line of the CN, or at least we have two lines running along there. We have a lot of double trackage on the CP west of Thunder Bay coming from the Rockies. We have a line from Sioux Look-out, we have the main line of the CP, and a CN line from Winnipeg through Rainy River. These are all, relatively speaking, good lines, lines built for heavy traffic. I know they are not maintained the way they should be maintained, but that is another story.

East of Thunder Bay you find only two tracks, which form second and third rate roads, railroad tracks which cannot take the kind of heavy loading which occurs west of Thunder Bay. Therein lies the importance of the harbour of Thunder Bay. All of the traffic comes from the west and very little flows east by rail. Most of it goes by ship.

● (2050)

An hon. Member: Not in the last few months.

Mr. McRae: That is right. It has also worried me a great deal that Thunder Bay, through which passes more than twice as much grain as passes through the port of Vancouver, hardly rated in terms of newspaper discussion about the strike.

An hon. Member: What about the percentage increase?

Mr. McRae: Well, you can talk about percentages if you like. What I am saying is that the port of Thunder Bay, now taking about 20 million tons of all cargo a year, about half the volume of the port of Vancouver, but handling about twice as much coarse grain as Vancouver, is now being asked to take another 10 to 20 million tons per year of coal shipped from the west to the east. We are going to have a growth problem in our harbour, situated in the centre of this country, which must be dealt with soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The Chair has been listening to the hon. member and must tell him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): I wish to congratulate Mr. Speaker on his election to what I consider to be the most important position of impartiality and justice in this venerable and vital institution, and without being facetious, Madam Speaker, I must say that you are the most attractive Speaker to grace this chair. I hold too in special esteem the Clerks at the table, the backbone of this House, and whose unseen hands in so many ways guide the destiny of the House.

The throne speech pays considerable attention to inflation, a situation in this country that is fast becoming a crisis. Nevertheless the Trudeau government, elected to office with a clear majority on July 8, apparently did not feel the situation sufficiently serious to call parliament into session before September 30. There is something reminiscent of Alice in Wonderland in this attitude of indifference to reality.

It could be said in truth that there is a world wide inflationary situation that affects our economy; but it is less than accurate to say that we can do nothing about it. All of the world's trading nations must do something about world inflation, and soon; each must start by putting its own house in order as far as it can, financially and economically. Regardless of our respective points of view, the problem is squarely before us, and its solution is imperative.

While I have great respect for every committee of this House that deals with the estimates and expenditures of government, and for ministers involved in the preparation of budget estimates, I believe the time has come to take a giant step forward in examining the total impact of government expenditures, and studying new systems and methods that can streamline our operation and lighten the burden on the Canadian taxpayers. As a corollary to this I believe we should examine the impact of government spending on the Canadian economy and its relationship to the inflationary spiral.

Since the royal commission on government organization, commonly called the Glassco Commission, reported in 1962, the $6.5 billion expenditure of that year has tripled in the 12 year interval to some $22 billion, shown in the main estimates before the 29th parliament, and those before this parliament are substantially the same.

In the 12 years since the Glassco Commission reported some outstanding social legislation has been enacted, and federal government assistance to disabled and disadvantaged Canadians has improved immeasurably, both in its quality and amount. Indeed in respect to disabled people, particularly the blind, and in respect to our senior citizens I find it easy to support the proposals of my colleagues in this House for even more generous treatment. I personally hope the day will come when the old age pension will no longer be regarded as income for tax purposes.

At the same time I believe we can make some real progress in identifying areas within each department of government which can, and should, provide a service for other departments of government, thus avoiding costly duplication and the tremendous expense of hiring outside professional and other services, and of consulting with experts outside the departments of government.

In department after department of government, estimated expenditures climb. The estimates I referred to earlier show that justice and the administration of our courts had an allocation of $23 million, more than double the previous year's budget. Correctional services were increased by $34 million to $172 million. The RCMP budget increased by $20 million to $125 million. The Food Prices Review Board rose to $1.9 million, up 90 per cent over the previous year. The CBC increased its budgeted expenditures by 25 per cent to $298.8 million. The Post Office went up 17 per cent to $689.7 million. The Commission on Official Languages was up 36 per cent to $1.9 million.

It is imperative that every expenditure receive the closest possible scrutiny, but the time allocated to our House committees to perform this function, and the research facilities needed to dig into it are not sufficient to do the best possible job for the Canadian people. I am sure the ministers of the Crown have done their utmost to cut the fat, and I am confident the opposition will demand every economy; but I feel too that the very essence of our administrative system should also be examined so that, through the combined efforts of all of us, we give the Canadian taxpayer the best break possible.

Our system, despite all its shortcomings, is good, but I think it can be improved. I feel that, considering the tremendous increase in the complexity of government organization since the Glassco Commission of 12 years ago, we need to examine our administrative process in the light of the vast improvements and changes that have taken place in business, accounting, policy auditing, and computerization, and thus ensure that the total delivery system of government best serves the challenge the Canadian people have given us. We need another Glassco type commission now.

Socially and economically rural Canada faces a crisis. The social problems are caused by increased and disastrous depopulation; the economic problems by vulnerable markets and the cost-price squeeze. In my province of New Brunswick, since 1900 approximately 25,000 acres of farmland per year have been lost to agriculture for the purposes of forestry, housing, industrial and commercial development. In 1951 there were 26,431 census farms; in 1971 there were 5,485 census farms in New Brunswick. Rural non-farming inhabitants represent 39 per cent of the population of New Brunswick, a much larger percentage than elsewhere in Canada.

As a major step in revitalizing the agricultural industry I suggest we consider a program to expand the scope and volume of research programs designed to assist agriculture; undertake a comprehensive and sustained program of research into prospective domestic and world market demands for agricultural products, develop and expand secure markets for Canadian agricultural products, and help translate Canada's tremendous agricultural potential into reasonably priced food on the table for Canadians and, indeed, for hungry people throughout the world.

We should also undertake a comprehensive review of transportation requirements to find ways to improve the transport of agricultural products between the regions of Canada and into export position, and to reduce transportation costs to the farmer. We must mount an aggressive campaign to lower world tariffs on farm products, and to overcome other impediments to agricultural exports. We must also design a program to assist farmers to finance the purchase or modernizing of machinery, and to assist in developing a structure of service and community facilities in rural areas.

Each of the Atlantic provinces has developed a very significant livestock and poultry industry, which in New Brunswick alone during 1973 resulted in a farm cash income in excess of $46 million and represented nearly 50 per cent of the total cash income from all farming operations. The farm cash income from poultry, meat and eggs represented nearly 32 per cent of the cash income from all livestock and livestock products, including poultry.

The national policy on feed freight assistance was instituted to assist eastern Canada in producing more food during World War II, and was most successful in achieving this goal. This assistance is of major importance to the poultry and livestock industries in the Atlantic provinces, particularly in view of increasing freight rates and rising costs associated with this area of food production.

● (2100)

Poultry feed must have wheat or corn as the major basic ingredient. Neither of these grains has been grown very successfully in these provinces as yet, and we should be very sure that local grain can and will be grown before freight assistance is reduced. Without freight assistance our livestock and poultry industry, especially hogs and poultry, would be at a great disadvantage in competing even for our own markets against provinces or areas with a shorter rail haul. Without feed freight assistance in New Brunswick we would be in an impossible position.

[Mr. Howie.]

Recently we have been hearing about becoming self-sufficient in home grown grains. Experience over the years has shown this to be very difficult to achieve. Statistics show that we are subject to three to five crop failures for every good one we enjoy. It is evident that a great deal of work needs to be done to develop new varieties and new techniques before we can even hope to come near being self-sufficient.

At present we produce 30 per cent to 40 per cent of our feed grains and must rely on western Canada for the balance. We have a long way to go before we are nearly self-sufficient enough in feed grains, especially in high energy feed that we must have for poultry feed. Any deterioration in these types of production will result in the loss of many thousands of jobs.

I suggest that realistic assistance to Maritime farmers should include: (1), the expansion of the feed freight assistance program to include all grain, corn, livestock feed protein and phosphates, and that the assistance be indexed to reflect, at all times, the actual and increasing cost of movement; (2) the development of an Atlantic grain program that would include comprehensive handling, drying, storage, marketing and transportation assistance provisions; (3), a crash program to support more extensively research to be conducted in the Maritimes to assist in the development of a hardy species of grain indigenous to Maritime growing conditions and that can be integrated with the potato growing and harvest season; and (4), the development of a system of grain elevators near our ports to purchase and store early in the season a year's supply of needed western grain, to be sold at a constant price throughout the season to Maritime farmers.

I should now like to say a word about our woodlots. In the long run society will derive greater benefits from privately owned woodlots if they are operated by owners who have an interest in their continuing value and yield, rather than be persons who purchase woodlots for cutting rights for the purpose of liquidating the merchantable standing timber in the near future, and who have little or no interest in their other potential value.

Under the rules which currently govern the application of the Income Tax Act, the net returns to an owner-operator of a woodlot are classed and taxed as income. The stumpage value of the trees cut is included. But if a woodlot owner sells cutting rights, called stumpage, to an operator, the proceeds of the sale are classed as the disposal of capital, and only one-half of the increase in value since "V day" is taxable as capital gain. If a woodlot owner has a taxable income, the advantage to him of selling cutting rights, rather than operating the woodlot himself, is obvious.

The operator who purchases cutting rights can claim the cost of the stumpage as an operating cost against the returns from the operation, and the stumpage value is not taxable in his hands. It is true that if an operator-owner can establish a cost base for a woodlot he can claim a capital cost or depletion allowance. However, if the woodlot was purchased several decades ago, or acquired in a way that makes it difficult to establish a cost base, the depletion allowance is likely to be only a small fraction of the stumpage value. There is also the risk that if excessive depletion is claimed, "recaptured depletion" will be taxed as income if and when the property is sold. This provision is less attractive to a woodlot owner than the sale of cutting rights which, as I say, we call stumpage.

The forest resources study in New Brunswick recommends a substantial expansion of the forest extension service, and investment of public funds to encourage more effective operations by woodlot owners. Assessment rolls indicate that there are about 37,000 woodlot owners in New Brunswick, and collectively they own about 25 per cent of the forest land in the province. The percentage of forest land in woodlots is even higher in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

The discrimination against the woodlot owner-operator should be removed by ruling that the stumpage value of the timber he cuts be regarded as the disposal of capital, and subject to capital gains rules instead of being taxed as income. This would do much to increase production while reducing costs and stabilizing the market.

Let me say a word about tidal power, which has long been advocated by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). We have a great and immediate problem in this country regarding a most vital situation, a matter which will drastically affect our whole social and economic structure; the energy situation.

Unless the government takes early and appropriate action the Atlantic provinces, which are now starting to narrow the gap of their economic disparity with the rest of the country, will be the section of the country which will particularly receive a severe blow if some long-range and constructive national energy policy is not implemented soon. This is because of the dependence on imported foreign oil for a high percentage of our energy needs at the present time. Yet the Atlantic provinces' region of Canada has within its area some of the greatest energy potentials in the world.

At the head of the Bay of Fundy, between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, the tides rise and fall some 50 feet twice a day, day in and day out, and this phenomenon will go on forever into the future. The magnitude of this tidal range is higher than anywhere else in the world. The volume of water, which regularly and predictably rushes into this unique funnel-shaped topography between our two provinces, amounts to many times the flow of water in the St. Lawrence River. The energy which this volume of water could generate when passing through turbines, amounts to billions of kilowatt hours when converted into electric energy, and in turn represents millions of barrels of oil available every year, and year after year.

The feasibility of tidal power development in the Bay of Fundy was studied and reported upon in 1969 by a board having representation from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and the federal government. I learned from that report that the three sites which were studied in some detail could produce over 87 billion kilowatt hours of electrical energy every year. Some 125 million barrels of oil would be required to generate that amount of electrical energy.

Another analysis contained in the 1969 Tidal Board's Report states that under a double effect scheme of development, 8.7 million kilowatts of installed capacity would generate 17 billion kilowatt hours of energy. The total capital cost of this scheme was estimated to be some $2 billion, and the estimated energy cost of one site was 5.5 mills per kilowatt hour. The estimate was based upon 7 per cent cost of money, but was compared with oil-fired thermal generation when oil was costing in the vicinity of $1 per barrel.

It is time that the tidal potential of the Atlantic region be actively reviewed and all avenues of innovation implemented. I have discussed the energy potential of the Bay of Fundy tides with engineers who feel that other sites are available which were not studied, even in a preliminary way, by the 1969 board because of the magnitude of the power potential and the corresponding large capital cost. Conditions have changed drastically since 1969 when it was considered prudent not to proceed further with the tidal power concept because of the magnitude of the project, and because at that time oil would produce electrical energy at a slightly cheaper cost.

What a gold mine the Atlantic region and Canada would have today if governments of that day had been less cautious and had proceeded with the construction of this renewable resource and brought it into production!

There must be more positive action taken by government now in meeting the energy problems of our Atlantic region and of the country as a whole. We must not only be concerned about the supply and the use of our non-renewable energy resources such as oil, gas and coal, but more thought must be given to our renewable energy resources such as tidal and conventional hydro power. As long as the moon is in the sky we will have our tides, and as long as the rains come we will have falling water, all of which can produce energy and can be converted into equivalent barrels of oil, which can be used or sold independently of the whims of the Arabs or any other foreign influence.

The sooner these great sources of renewable wealth can be developed for the benefit of the citizens of Canada, the better. I would suggest that it is time for a policy to be implemented whereby we in this country start to recognize the great and unique potentials which we have in renewable energy resources, and put them to use, rather than letting them go to waste while we use up our non-renewable resources or import fossil fuels from others at blackmail prices.

As I see our need in the Atlantic region, we should be developing our tremendously large tidal potential as rapidly as possible. Newfoundland in particular has undeveloped hydro potential equal to or greater than Churchill Falls. The extension of very heavy electric transmission grid systems should be part of this program. Our initial surplus of energy should be sold to our neighbours, first to neighbouring provinces and then to the United States on a recallable basis. The price for such energy to the United States should be based upon its alternate cost of generation. We would then be amortizing our capital investment at an accelerated rate during the period of supply surplus to our requirements, and we would be building our plants at lower costs than would be indicated in the future because of our ever persistent inflationary trends.

The profits which would be accumulated from sale of surplus energy could be used to develop still more of our renewable energy resources.

Through this kind of policy, which would require massive capital expenditure and could only be undertaken by the federal government financing the projects for the provinces, some of the advantages would be: (1), we could make ourselves independent regarding our energy requirements; (2), we could improve our balance of payments position through selling energy which would be initially surplus to our requirements into a receptive market area; (3), we would have for our own use more economic energy, with less risk from ever increasing fuel costs, over a long period of time; (4), we would accelerate the write-off of our investment and have a valuable asset to pass on to future generations; (5), energy would be produced not only on a renewable basis, but also without degradation to the environment; (6), problem of regional disparity of the Atlantic region would be solved. In fact, by development of these resources the Atlantic region could be contributing to the well being of the rest of the country.

A very strong national power transmission system, with inter-connection and ties into a North American continental transmission grid, is greatly needed. Surplus energy from one region would be put into the grid, and areas with deficiencies would buy from the gird. With gas and oil pipelines, which would extend across Canada from coast to coast and allow the flexible interchange of fuels, plus a super electrical transmission grid, this country would lead the world in social and economic development, and our bargaining power, especially with the United States would be greatly improved.

To make use of the advantages which our country has, second to none in the world, we must have more courage in taking our place as world leaders. We must better co-ordinate and stimulate the efforts of industry, government, labour and universities, so that not only may the vast energy potentials of the tides of the Bay of Fundy be developed for the benefit of Canada, but so that we might become less complacent and more innovative.

There must be more research and development in many new technological fields, especially in those fields where we have such tremendous wealth of resources, particularly in the renewable resource areas. Many others will wish to exploit our great potentials. We must be ahead of the pack in technology, in courage, and in management skills in order to protect our environment, to assure that we are not exploited, to assure we assume the kind of leadership that will have great benefit for Canada, and to assure that we use our advantages to give world leadership.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join other hon. members in congratulating our newly elected Speaker, yourself and your associates. I should also like to extend good wishes to our Governor General for his speedy recovery.

I feel I would be remiss if I did not thank the people of Cardigan once again for the honour they bestowed on me, by electing me for the second time to be their representative in Ottawa. The carrying out of my responsibility to the people of Cardigan is indeed a continuing challenge which I look forward to meeting with renewed vigour in this new Parliament.

Hon. members will recall that a comprehensive development plan for Prince Edward Island was signed in March 1969. During Phase I of the plan many of the programs which have been successful on the Island—are being considered nationally. Phase II, which is now being negotiated, will, I am certain, produce many more programs which can be used by all Canadians. Co-operation between the federal and provincial governements has helped make this plan a success, and the basic plan is being used as a model for agreements with other provinces.

Testimony to the fact that the plan is working is that the number of people leaving the Island has declined substantially, to the point where we now have a real population growth on the Island. This means that a whole new generation of young people can find interesting and challenging opportunities on Prince Edward Island instead of having to move to other parts of Canada or to the United States.

Being from a small geographic area which has an abundance of peaceful charm, we realized that those from large urban areas envy us. We wish to try to avoid some of the mistakes made in those areas by balancing our development and continuing to offer our younger generation better opportunities for work. I want to assure you that we are not prepared to have development simply for the sake of development. What we are looking for are certain kinds of development which will allow us a reasonable standard of living and, at the same time, let us retain and further develop those environmental qualities which have become so precious today.

The basis of Prince Edward Island's economy has long been and will continue to be the agricultural and fishing industries. I am sure that all Islanders applaud the stated objective in the throne speech to increase food production by providing incentives to our farmers and fishermen, including the stabilization of incomes and markets. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has demonstrated great leadership in this direction already.

Island fishermen are extremely pleased with the government's action to ensure Canada's right to manage its coastal resources and environment. Meetings will be held shortly to discuss further measures to conserve our declining fish stocks, as well as the need to regulate licensing of the existing fishery.

Fishermen on the Island are in agreement with the continuing program of up-grading small craft harbours. Results of the last two years are quite evident following federal government expenditures of approximately $1 million on these facilities.

In the government's fight against unemployment, approximately $4 million has been allocated to Prince Edward Island in the Local Initiative Program's budgets of the last three years. Many hundreds of jobs were created during the winters, and the program has been most beneficial to the economy of the area. In the same vein, the Opportunities for Youth program with a budget of $1,300,000 in Prince Edward Island over the last four years, has funded more than 300 projects and made a major contribution toward student employment.

All hon. members must heartily approve the government's projected plans in the housing field to assist those hardest hit by inflation. In line with this, already in this calendar year senior citizens on the Island have learned of CMHC loans to the PEI Housing Authority totalling $2,500,000 for construction of senior citizens' complexes across the Island. The construction of four two-storey apartment buildings in Charlottetown containing 96 one-bedroom apartments, as well as of 38 row housing units in six communities, has been approved for this very extensive program.

This assistance to senior citizens was only one of the measures carried out and planned. Government plans, in this session, regarding increases in maximum pensionable earnings and payments of allowances to spouses of old age security recipients will be very welcome indeed to our elderly.

I also welcome this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to speak to hon. members about the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The senior members of the House are aware that my portfolio includes four other very important agencies which are autonomous but which report to parliament through me. If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to describe briefly the agencies and their functions for the benefit of new hon. members who are sitting in this House for the first time. These four agencies are the Canadian Pension Commission, the War Veterans Allowance Board, the Pension Review Board and the Bureau of Pensions Advocates.

The Canadian Pension Commission operates under the legislation contained in the Pension Act. It is concerned with the adjudication of applications for pension entitlement and with the administration of pensions which are granted. I am referring to disability pensions which are awarded as a direct result of injuries, or illness incurred during wartime service. It also awards and administers the pensions paid to the eligible widows and children of those who were killed or died as a result of their war service.

● (2120)

The War Veterans Allowance Board's activities are concerned with the administration of the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. These acts contain the legislation which permits the payment of allowances to qualified veterans and their spouses, or widows and children, who are suffering from economic distress.

They are not to be confused with disability pensions although we do have some cases of veterans who are receiving disability pensions from the Canadian Pension Commission and are also recipients of the War Veterans Allowances.

The Bureau of Pensions Advocates is a publicly financed body whose members prepare and present the cases of veterans, or their dependants who wish to make application to the Pension Commission. It also handles the appeals of applicants who are dissatisfied with the decision of the Pension Commission's entitlement boards.

These appeals are adjudicated by the other autonomous agency in the Veterans Affairs portfolio, the Pension Review Board. It hears appeals against the Pension Commission's decisions, both for entitlement and amounts awarded. It also hands down rulings on matters of interpretation of the pension legislation.

These then, Mr. Speaker, are the other members of the Veterans Affairs family, and I would like to thank the senior members of the House for their patience in listening to the explanation of something that was already familiar to them.

The responsibility imposed upon my ministry by the legislation which has been enacted by previous parliaments of behalf of our veterans and their dependants continues to grow both in complexity and amount. It is not a reducing responsibility, as some might believe, and this fact is borne out by the results of the 1971 census which were released earlier this year.

The 1971 census indicated that there are still nearly a million veterans living in Canada. More than 80 per cent of these are married and many of them still have dependent children. Accordingly, we estimate that there are probably nearly 2 million Canadian citizens who are potentially entitled to one or more benefits under the various pieces of veterans legislation.

To get back to actual figures, there were more than 30,000 veterans and dependants who were active clients of the Department of Veterans Affairs as of March 31 last. These included disability pensioners, war veterans allowance recipients, patients in our hospitals across the country, widows, orphans, children receiving educational assistance and those holding contracts under the Veterans Land Act.

It is not my intention today to describe in detail the many programs and achievements which have had an impact on our veteran population since I became Minister of Veterans Affairs in 1972. I am confident that the record speaks for itself, and I am very proud of that record.

However, I do not want to leave you with the impression that we are a static organization. We are continually trying to improve the legislation covering our veterans and their families to keep pace with the changing social and economic conditions.

I think evidence of this good faith was displayed just last Wednesday when I tabled a bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance and Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. The increases in rates and ceilings, and the other additional benefits included in this bill, were planned many months ago.

I had hoped that this very special group of veterans would be receiving these benefits by now. Unfortunately, the timetable was delayed, as honourable members are well aware. However, I certainly hope that the passage of this bill can be accelerated now so that the thousands of men and women who served our country so honourably and well can soon be enjoying a more rewarding standard of living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I will continue to consider other legislation and regulations which affect our veterans and their families with a view to making fair and reasonable changes whenever necessary. I would like to tell honourable members that the National Council of Veterans Associations and the Royal Canadian Legion are always most helpful both to me and my senior officials whenever we sit down to discuss matters such as benefits and hospital care for veterans. They are reasonable in their requests and sincere in their motives. They have the interests and welfare of our million veterans at heart, and they have made many significant contributions to what I firmly believe is the best veterans legislation program that exists anywhere in the world.

One of the pieces of legislation in our veterans charter which has been frequently discussed in the past year or so is the Veterans Land Act. I think all members are aware that, last spring, the deadline for those holding qualification certificates to exercise their rights under VLA was extended to March 31, 1975.

The Veterans Land Act was established as a rehabilitation project for those returning to peacetime activities after the end of World War II. It was one of several options available to the discharged servicemen, and it proved very successful for many thousands of our veterans in establishing themselves as farmers or commercial fishermen, or on small holdings. That is what it was designed for and it worked.

Today there are some who are urging that its provisions be extended and increased so as to provide assistance for purchasing retirement homes. It has concerned me that a certain number of people who are advocating these changes in VLA are claiming that my reluctance to change this legislation now is a denial of veterans' rights.

I reject those suggestions completely, Mr. Speaker. The record of this government in the field of veterans legislation has been outstanding. The actions of this administration towards our veterans reminds me of the motto of that famous western regiment, the Fort Garry Horse. It is "non facta verba"—deeds, not words. The government is giving careful consideration to the whole matter of the Veterans Land Act, and an announcement on this subject will be made at a very early date.

There is another aspect to the operation of my portfolio which I would like to mention today. This is our responsibility to those who fell in the defence of our country, and it is our duty to remember and revere their sacrifice.

On November 7 next, with the co-operation of my colleague, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), there will be an exhibition of photography on display at the Canadian War Museum. This series of coloured photos will show war cemeteries in more than 70 countries of the world where Canadians, who fought and died in the two World Wars and Korea, are buried. It also has pictures of the principal memorials commemorating those who have no known graves.

At the same time we will be introducing a magnificently illustrated edition of a new publication entitled "Silent Witnesses". This book also honours the 116,000 Canadians who died for the freedom you and I know today but which some accept so casually. We must never forget that it was their sacrifice that made it possible.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the privilege of speaking today. I trust I have demonstrated to hon. members that my department is well aware of the obligations it has to those who so gallantly offered their services to our country in time of war. We will continue to honour those obligations.

• (2130)

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by congratulating the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and his assistants on their appointments. It is with high expectations that I look forward to working with him and the other members of this House. I wish His Excellency the Governor General a speedy recovery.

I also wish to pay tribute to individuals who have had an effect on my seeking public office, individuals such as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and the former members for the Pembina riding, Mr. Jack Bigg and Mr. Dan Hollands.

I thank the electorate of Pembina. I am conscious of the trust placed in me by them. I pledge co-operation in the House, co-operation between all members of all parties, and although my first concern is the constituency of Pembina, my interests will include all Canadians.

We have had the honour of having both the hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in our constituency. I am sure they will agree when I say that the Pembina constituency is a cross section of people and environments. In it we have a highly industrialized area, a large agricultural area, and densely populated urban areas.

This constituency is a good place in which to live. In some areas it lacks in natural wealth, but an area in which it does not lack wealth is the area of enduring common sense. In these people lie a deep rooted human feeling to do what is best for Canada. They have some old fashioned notions of good manners, honour, and duty towards God and their country. We can learn from them, those of us who run around with our vulnerable egos; we who are more interested in power than in governing.

The purpose of politics is not to justify our own existence but to do something for our country. Our problems will not be solved by legal manoeuvers—they will be solved on the basis of trust. We have a moral responsibility to get our foodstuff to the people who need it, at a reasonable price. We have a moral responsibility to see that our producer receives a fair return on his product.

Canada is failing in her role as a major world food supplier, and as a leader in the agricultural field generally, because of a lack of leadership from this administration. I suppose the greatest issues in agricultural marketing are the so-called cheap food policies, the evolution of consumerism and the apparent fear that politicians have of the consumer. Events of the past well illustrate this fear; the Nixonomics that affect the beef industry, the U.S. export embargoes, and Canada's export permit system.

It will probably take many more months before order is restored in the marketplace following the chaos that resulted from these decisions. However, I feel that something has happened through all of this that may never be restored at any future date. That something is the faith of the farmer in the systems; his faith in the marketplace and its cycles.

As market forecasters are only too well aware, it is becoming increasingly difficult to predict prices. This fact presents a very large problem to the farmer. We are caught in a real quandary; that of quickly rising production costs and the obvious efforts of governments to protect the consumer from these natural cost increases. These efforts distort normal price cycles as illustrated by the federal government's latest scheme with respect to the beef industry. I fail to see how any politician can be naive enough to think he can increase the producer's returns and still keep down the price at the retail level with a program such as this.

Right now stabilization is, I understand, a big deal in government circles. Of course we all know that it is designed to level out the income of the farmer, but I am not so sure that that means any profitability. From what I can gather from people working in this area, there are a few problems. If production controls are not to be implemented then the profit margin must be minimal in order to prevent overproduction. I must admit that I find the fear of overproduction humourous, because every time one turns around lately it appears as if the government has come back from some great trade mission with news of great market potentials. So what is the worry?

I have not met a thinking farmer yet who really wanted anybody stabilizing his income. Most farmers are entirely competent to look after this themselves. Also, as pointed out previously, when the risk is removed so is profitability, and in this day and age, considering risk, volume of money involved, etc., why should a farmer work for nothing? One of the few drawing cards to farming is potential profit, and to remove that at this time would only guarantee an even greater movement of young people out of farming.

What is rapidly becoming necessary, however, is some form of protection from man made catastrophes in the marketplace, which result in certain segments of the industry losing great amounts of money. An example of what I mean is the U.S. price freeze on beef and its subsequent effects on the beef industry. The interim feed grain policy would also fit into this category, although only in its method of establishing price and not so much the price of grain itself.

I am sure we will see more of these predicaments as food prices continue to rise and governments continue to react. The consumers and governments are only kidding themselves because farm price increases are necessary to keep abreast of cost increases and inflation and, more important, to attract young people into farming.

In 1970 grain was a glut on the market and pig prices were going down. Pigs, however, appeared to be the most practical enterprise in our circumstances. Converting grain to animal products seemed like a logical thing to do because more people wanted pork than barley. Even the government agreed.

Everything worked great until last year when the world ran out of grain. As you know, grain prices soared, beef and pig prices dropped, and the grain industry quickly forgot the market it had sacrificed so much to establish. I certainly do not begrudge the grain producer his present prices; they are long overdue, but by the same token he should not forget either that the steer or the pig was his only market not too long ago and could easily be again in the not too distant future.

Contracts that bind the buyer and seller into a pricing arrangement will probably become increasingly important to the producer, especially the young producer, who must protect himself from loss situations. A fine example of this sort of contract that I am a bit familiar with is the hog export program. There is reasonable profit built in, as well as the guarantee of supply, which the buyer is coming to realize as being almost as important as prices.

I hope that if domestic price rises above the export price by a large amount the government will not place an embargo on the export of hogs in an attempt to lower the domestic price. I raise this point because I feel it is a real fear, given the past track record of the federal government. In the Throne Speech the Prime Minister pledged to keep food costs down at almost any cost, and I am sure the farmers' wellbeing will be the first sacrifice in any attempt to achieve this goal.

One observation I have made is that at any given time some segment of the industry is suffering; that is, if the grain producer is making money, the livestock producer is not, or vice versa. There was a brief exception to this recently and during that short period all segments were doing well. The harmony between farmers was great and each appreciated the effort of the other.

● (2140)

If one dare draw analogies, I would like to compare the agricultural industry with the automotive industry. Each separate industry—tire, spark plug, glass manufacturer and so on, supplying something towards the final product, the car—prospers. Why, in food production, must one segment generally be suffering financially?

Personally, I feel agriculture is our most important industry. It is renewable and there is no substitute for food. I feel that the real issue in marketing from now on will be to keep all segments prospering, and I think this should be the challenge.

Occasionally consumers will complain that food costs are too high, but they do not realize that in the cost of a loaf of bread the cost of the cellophane wrapping has risen from 9 per cent of the total cost to 39 per cent. Half of what we purchase at supermarkets is not food but soaps, deodorants, tissues, magazines and other non-food products. It is my hope and belief that Canada, as a whole, will gain substantial social and economic benefits with the revitalization of rural Canada. I hope that those of us here in political office will do justice to this office by thinking beyond today and by stating our fundamental choices for tomorrow.

It is my hope also that we, the politicians, particularly those in leadership positions, will have the courage to spell out the real challenges facing Canada at home and abroad. Inflation is a serious problem, especially for the poor among us. No government can command inflation to go away, but what it can do is give us the leadership required to control it, and that has not been forthcoming from this administration. The growth-rate of Canada's economy is zero, and inflation is over 10 per cent.

Today it is almost a crime for an individual to be a success. It is not right to be thrifty and astute. There are those who would relieve the successful of their life's rewards to give to those who, often through their own irresponsibility, have not reached the same level. Of course, the ones who should be helped are those who have remained at the bottom of the scale through no fault of their own. There is nothing that will squelch human initiative more than a guarantee that the government will look after you. Just remember, all the promises made by politicians will be paid for with public money and not theirs.

It is saddening to think that Canadians take handouts and guarantees of government aid as something honourable. I can remember the day when it was considered something of a shame by those who were proud of their ability to make it on their own. As I have said before, any government which taxes away the rewards of responsible behaviour and effort so that it can remove the penalties for irresponsible behaviour is not something we need or want in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: It is my position that our market can be well supplied by private enterprise if the climate set by government is conducive to investment.

The Speech from the Throne was a great statement of generalities dealing with motherhood and brotherhood, but when are we going to deal with the moral obligations that affect our national welfare? We need a responsible government that is going to give us this leadership, not a government that destroys the initiative of the individual. How can we admire an administration that will allow 30 million eggs to rot when humans are suffering and dying of starvation?

It is my hope that we can do a job for Canadians. I realize the job is going to be tough, but it is vital and it is a challenge that cannot be refused. The majority of Canadians are looking to us to come to grips with the nation's problems. Now it is up to us to live up to our pledge.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I join other members in extending my congratulations. I particularly want to congratulate Mr. Speaker. On the day he was holding his reception I wandered into this chamber. The security must have been less tight than normal. I saw two fine young blond lads. They felt it was important to sit in their father's seat. I thought this indicated the kind of Speaker we have. In fact they clearly indicated which arm he would lean on and how he would hold his chin next. I also wish to congratulate the others who will be assisting the Speaker.

[Translation]

I also want to congratulate the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) because he talks about his riding as if it were a very dignified lady. He loves his riding very much.

[Mr. Elzinga.]

[English]

Also, I am extremely proud to be associated with a person like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) who, in seconding the Address in Reply, was an example of the youth we have always known are with us.

It is an honour for me to be in this House. The first time I sat here in the galleries. That was February 8, 1932. Mackenzie King and R.B. Bennett were debating the Speech from the Throne. I am very fortunate in that I had a mother who was an organizer in the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: My father was an organizer in the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: We were a family of five living together during the depression. Our roomer was a man called Coldwell of the C.C.F. who joined the House in 1935.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: I remember him very well. In those days he was a poor member of parliament. He did something that offended a young person very strongly. In those days we used to eat shredded wheat; sometimes as a snack at night, sometimes toasted in the morning and sometimes with jam at noon. It was a good staple. I used to save the box tops for a Buck Rogers badge. I wanted to become space commander. Mr. Coldwell had holes in his shoes. He used to cut off the boxtops and put them in the bottoms of his shoes to stop the rain coming through to his socks. I have not trusted the socialists since. Actually I considered knowing him an honour. I say this in all sincerity.

I am in this House because I have admired many people who were here, and many who still are. There is no doubt that one man who had great influence on me is the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), a man whom I admire and think of very highly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: I have to say that I also think very highly of un petit gars de Verdun who lost his way, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). He now sits on the other side of the House.

There has of course been great influence on this side of the House. I would be remiss if I did not advise that the Verdun mafia, the Postmaster General (Mr. MacKasey), had great influence on me in the early years. I also feel very strongly about the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). He is a very close friend of myself, and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Alexander: Oh, I don't know about that, Gus.

Mr. MacFarlane: Over-riding all of these, as a person who left university to come to the House of Commons, I was most influenced by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: More than anyone else, he made me think I could work with other members and do an honourable job. That is exactly what I hope we can do.

As the voice for Hamilton Mountain I think I should say something about what Hamilton Mountain feels. Hamilton Mountain people are the kind of people who expect a great deal from parliament. They are very concerned about our present situation. They would certainly help the halt, the lame, the aged and the unfortunate, but at the same time they would make strong demand that Canadians must help themselves, work hard, and maintain the wonderful work ethic which dignifies all of us. Like myself, many of them had fathers—

● (2150)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I hope so!

Mr. MacFarlane: —who were in the services. They grew up in the great depression era and they are not willing to see it return. They are looking to us to deal with that problem but, in doing so, to remember the halt and the lame. This is what the people of Hamilton Mountain have sent me here to say.

However, I do believe I must have some talent myself, something that I would wish to say. And this would be strong words concerning our present relationship with our youth. I would ask hon. members to look around them and realize that grandfathers and grandmothers are much closer to young people than anyone in the age bracket of 32 to 49 years. This House will never be able to consider euthanasia because of its youth.

Young people have a high regard for older people and older people have a high regard for them. They seem to have time for each other, but some of our generation had better realize that they have not had much time for youth. I am one who has spent a good portion of my life living in university residences and working with young people. I really believe they are important people. In fact they are a resource, and I believe they should be listed as a national resource. I think we should realize that whatever we spend on them comes back to us. If you really want to know what the morality of the next generation is going to be, ask them, and you will be surprised. They will tell you. It is going to be a damned fine generation.

They really take their ships and send them across the seas of life; they choose the winds of passion for their sails, and they choose the rudder of reason to steer with. If there is no passion, it becomes an academic, dying argument, so there has to be that mixture. I always used to think when I was at Mount Allison University in the maritimes, when we went out to the lily pond and saw everything quiet and soft on a windless day, "God rests in reason". Then, the wind would come to Sackville, with thunder and lightening, and we would say "God moves in passion". That is what these young people are like. A wonderful mixture. Their sails are set to the winds of passion and their rudders are governed by reason.

The future of this country will be theirs and I should like to think we should run in front of them. It is our responsibility, as my mother and father did for me, to improve the generation. We should shout over our shoulder of the bright prospect of the future, and of the dangers on the way, so that they may know what our generation has experienced, so that they may have the benefit of our improvement as well as bringing along their own thoughts and ideas.

I often think of the story of the old man who was approaching a chasm as he was nearing the end of his days. When he reached the edge of the chasm he began to build a bridge. A young man came to him and said, "Old man, why are you building a bridge? You will never come this way again." The old man replied, "That is so. I am building the bridge for you." This they expect of us. This they demand of us, and this we have failed to do many times. We have a responsibility to leave them something, as my mother left me her music, as my father left me his mathematics, as my minister left me my church. These are important things which will not be dismissed or wiped away.

There is one other theme about which I feel very strongly. Most of my life has been involved in athletics and I will never forget it. I believe that sport might just be the replacement for war and conflict in the world. I am one who believes that maybe we shall go to international trade fairs, maybe to international drama festivals and international sporting events—and it will be political, and it should be—but it will be one step for mankind in the direction of ultimately removing the resort to the resolution of conflict by killing one another.

So, sport is important. I am one of those who would like to see it given the status of a separate ministry. I believe it is important enough, for the young people who take part and the old people who watch, that it should stand on its own. I often ask: when Handel wrote The Messiah, did he write about the omnipotence of God, or did God's omnipotence show itself through The Messiah? When Van Gogh painted those olive trees, was he expressing nature or did nature express itself through him? When I coach a football team and I give them a formation, do they express themselves through the formation and therefore find a vehicle for their own expression? I feel that way about athletics, and I think it should be expressed strongly.

The next thought I have in mind arises from my having spent approximately 14 years in the maritimes. I wonder whether it would not be of consequence if someone from Hamilton Mountain, or central Ontario, were to stand up and say how important the maritimes are, and support the people of the maritimes when they are pressing for what they require.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: My experience of the west is not nearly as great, but I certainly do understand it when people talk about alienation, largely because of my experience in those beautiful maritime provinces.

I notice it is almost ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and with your permission I would prefer not to go on to my next point until we resume tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—SUGGESTED REFORM OF PROCEDURES—GUIDELINES ON ACCESS TO INFORMATION—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC DISCUSSION.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, some might suggest we are moving from the sublime to the commonplace, after that sparkling display of oratory on the part of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), but there is a relationship between the excellent words of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat and what I have to say, because my topic, too, relates to the institution of parliament itself.

● (2200)

I want to be fairly specific because I have a very short period of time this evening to discuss three items which I very much hope will be before the total House and the committee on procedure when we consider in what ways we can make this institution more vital and responsible in the exercise of its duties.

Sometimes when we talk about traditions and history I think we spend too little time reflecting on the long sweep of change that has occurred in this country and that affects this institution. Hon. members will recall that in the early years of the Canadian nation the budget of this country was something like $20 million. The budget of the country today is something over $20 billion, an increase of some 1,000 times. It indicates to me that the very ability for parliament to be responsible in the exercise and expenditure of public money must of its very nature be exceedingly difficult.

This traditional responsibility of parliament to exercise the power of the purse is one of the basic responsibilities of parliament which I think is not only severely jeopardized but has almost vanished.

Within my time as a member of this place we have abolished the committee of supply, I believe in the year 1969. The committee of supply was abolished for a number of reasons—because it took a lot of time, because the debates related to estimates and expenditures often proved to be rambling, if not meaningless. I believe it was abolished even more so because there were times when the discussion of estimates in the committee of supply was not only embarrassing to the government, but occasionally could prove most difficult when supply was in fact not passed, and the government was on the verge of having to face a very difficult crisis situation where it did not have the money made available by parliament to pay its bills.

What we have in its place over the last five years are 25 allotted days and six votes. This means quite simply that under present conditions the government of the day can ride out the storm on whatever particular issue is brought before it on these allotted days. An indication of how much we have lost, in the sense of controlling the power of the purse, is the almost total disinterest of the press in those debates. We now have these 25 allotted days and we end up on some occasion, as we will later this month, with a kind of spending orgy that goes on for two or three hours; a whole rash of meaningless votes are taken, and we have the final passage of estimates.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is not being responsible with respect to the way in which we give an account of the expenditure of public moneys. If the power of the purse is vital to an effective working of a realistic parliament, then we will have to look very seriously at how we are going to deal with estimates in the future. I do not have any instant answers, but I do think that this is one of the questions that the committee and all members will have to face.

The second question is access to information. In the last parliament the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who was then House leader, put before us the consolidation of what has become government practice with respect to the production of papers and the presenting of information. Quite frankly, I think the frustration that has developed in recent years, not only with the oral question period but with written questions and production of papers, relates to the fact that there is this growing amount of information through reports, studies and reviews of one kind and another which the government feels compelled to hide under a great umbrella of confidentiality. We did have, and we have had, a rash of leaks from time to time. Sometimes the leaks are correct; at other times they are incorrect. Again this is an indication of the fact that we have somehow reversed something that is essential to a free and democratic society.

The onus should be on the government of the day—and I do not care which government it is—to prove that a document must be kept confidential because there is some threat or jeopardy to the security of the state itself. I think we have to establish some means whereby that will become established practice, whether it be some kind of independent tribunal which, in effect, will review a decision of government not to put before the public items which it believes are confidential.

The third matter that I raised in my previous question to the Prime Minister and House leader was whether or not in our study of the reform of parliamentary procedures we could not involve a good deal of informed public opinion. There is an awful danger—and I believe all members, if they reflect on this for a moment, will agree—that when you become a member of this institution for longer than a few days—and some of us have been here a good while longer than a few days—it is very easy to rationalize and justify all the intricate and complex workings of this institution.

Of course I know there are many traditions that are worthy of keeping, and some worthy of extending, but we who are in this institution should not feel it is our institution only, or primarily. It is fundamentally an institution of the Canadian people. If they find it confusing, if they find it misdirected and wasting on occasion large amounts of time, if they want to see it sustained and perhaps, from some points of view, resuscitated and restored to an essential area of vitality, then we must have their views.

Quite frankly I think if we get early exposure through the media of radio and television this will allow for a good deal more intelligent and interesting comment. I believe that unless we allow others, beyond the members of this place, to comment on reform of parliament itself we will do a great disservice to this institution primarily, and a great disservice to the Canadian people. This is, after all, the House of the common people and a House for the people of this country, and I would urge the government to move very speedily in respect of ultimate reforms for this institution.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a very brief reply to the three points that have been raised by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). The first is that in his description of supply proceedings he only provided about half the description of what actually takes place.

For example, while it is true that opposition parties do have 25 days in the House, there are at least three months in which these estimates are referred to standing committees, committees which have extensive powers to call witnesses, ministers and other people before them to discuss the items in the estimates that committee members wish to have discussed. Whether these opportunities are used is a responsibility that members of the House of Commons must take upon themselves.

One of the reasons for the extension of time, and for moving the work of the committee of supply back into committees, was to provide more opportunity and more time for the House of Commons to cope with the growing volume of legislation that governments have been putting before it.

One of the problems that we face is that the House of Commons is again in danger of being constricted. If one looks at the throne speech one will have to say that in the last two years of minority government, we have discussed in the House of Commons and passed only what was necessary for all of us to get some form of collective record about us. We all must share the responsibility. In the last year and a half of the parliament elected in 1968 the legislative process again slowed down, so we are dealing in the throne speech now with leftovers, tidbits, from the three previous parliaments.

Secondly, I want to comment on the guidelines the government produced last year. They were referred to a joint committee of the House and the Senate. To my knowledge they were never discussed by that committee. I felt that was unfortunate and unnecessary, and I have a commitment from the House leader that at an early date the guidelines will again be referred to the committee. Hopefully that committee will be sufficiently well organized to carry out a discussion, and make a report to the House and to the Senate on the situation.

The last point I want to make is about the meetings of the procedure committee. I quite agree with the point that the public should be invited to participate. I think it unfortunate that during the last two or three years that committee has held so many of its meetings on procedure in camera, a very undesirable practice that I hope will be eliminated in this parliament.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—SUGAR—CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC GOVERNMENT TO SETTLE DISPUTE AT SAINT-HILAIRE REFINERY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question this morning about the loss of the sugar-beet crop in the province of Quebec did not seem to alarm the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) since he replied that such a loss for the province did not represent 1 per cent of the Canadian sugar consumption.

Mr. Speaker, sugar is one of the main food commodities. Here are some statistics I have in that respect: In 1971 Canada has consumed 1,200,000 tons of sugar, a little more in 1972 and still more in 1973. Thus, the Saint-Hilaire crop represents 2 per cent instead of less than 1 per cent mentioned by the minister this morning.

While Canada is the second largest importer of sugar in the world, the minister finds it normal to learn about the total loss of the sugar-beet crop in the Saint-Hilaire area.

How can Canada ever export sugar if the government does not want to protect that new-born industry which could, in less than ten years, start exporting sugar instead of importing 92 per cent of its consumption?

How can we ever produce our own consumption when it is estimated that Canadian annual needs for sugar will reach 2,500,000 tons within the next 20 years, if we cannot even save a crop that represent only 2 per cent of the Canadian consumption?

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has left this industry to the hands of pirates here in Canada, who are members of the international sugar cartel, the seat of which is located in England and which is headed by Tate & Lyle Ltd.

Mr. Speaker, I have here an issue dated July 23, 1972 of the London Sunday Times, one of the most important small newspapers in Europe. It carries the following article under the heading, and I quote:

● (2210)

[English]

It is interesting to note that this important disclosure of the activities of an illegal cartel involving twenty-two major European sugar companies with an annual market of 600 million Pounds Sterling per annum, should have been totally ignored by every Canadian newspaper,—which resulted in keeping the Canadian public in ignorance of the fact that Tate & Lyle Ltd. was named as a leading participant in the conspiracy, through control of 'SAY' one of France's largest sugar conglomerates.

The Common Market Anti-Trust officials have pointed out, that:—

1. The refiners pay out large sums of money every year to ensure that there is a unified market.

2. That 'the refiners maintain high prices and illegal division of market, contrary to public interest'.

3. That 'this is a Text Book Case of how a cartel and a lobby operate'.

4. That 'the activities of the sugar refiners involved are the most serious restriction of competition (they) have yet met in the price fixing field'.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these discoveries were made by an English committee commissioned on behalf of the Common Market to make an inquiry into the international sugar trust; the conclusions of this inquiry were published in the London Sunday Times.

In a brief presented to the right hon. Prime Minister on February 27, 1973 by the Austin Sugar Refineries Limited of Montreal, which wanted to compete with other companies and offer the Canadian people better prices for sugar, we can read this:

[English]

It is a curious fact that in the face of all the representations made by the Consumers Association of Canada, the Industrial Sugar Users Association of Canada, and other public and private groups to Government,—that despite the issuance of the indepth report issued by the Tariff Board Report on Sugar, November 1971, nothing has been done to date by the Combines Department to remove this restriction of trade by Court Action or recommendations to Government concerning the introduction of a National Sugar Policy for Canada.

[Translation]

And, Mr. Speaker, this same company made recommendations, in their brief presented to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Among other things, it is interesting to see what the committee of the House already recommended, which is in publication No. 146 of November 1971, on page 6:

[English]

The 362 page report on sugar by the Tarriff Board of Canada recommended the introduction of competition in the sugar industry, stating in part, that—

(a) The price of refined sugar in Canada does not appear to be related to domestic forces of supply and demand;

(b) That the domestic price is related to the London daily price for "Free Market Sugar";

(c) That this situation has the further characteristic that one company is the price leader and the others follow;

(d) Because of a lack of competition, the Canadian industry has been able to increase its capacity without raising production;

(e) The structure and behavior of the industry allow the preservation of existing market shares without substantial risk and without the beneficial spur of competitive factors usually prevailing in ordinary markets.

[Translation]

Well, Mr. Speaker, we could continue on and on this discussion to establish that there certainly exists an international sugar monopoly which completely controls from England the South African and Rhodesian sugar markets and which has been granted by our country's special tariff concessions.

Canada could be a sugar exporting country. We have surpluses of maple syrup. Our soil is clearly favourable to the easy growing of sugar-beet. Moreover, we have surplus apples every year. Mr. Speaker, the price of sugar was 1 cent a pound a few years ago and its price has now reached $50 a hundredweight. Yet, the government is doing nothing, as it is under the thumb of international companies and monopolies.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to my colleague if my notes tonight are written in English only. I am afraid I do not speak French as well as my colleague speaks English, and I congratulate him for this.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

[English]

The hon. member has wandered somewhat far afield from his original question today about the situation as it existed at St. Hilaire, the refinery in Quebec. In response to the hon. member let me point out first of all that the federal government deplores the existence of the conflict in that place in Quebec, but I think I should reiterate what the minister said this morning, namely, that this is a refinery that is owned and operated by the Quebec government. The conflict at St. Hilaire is a labour problem over which the province of Quebec has complete jurisdiction, and I might say that provinces, appropriately enough, jealously guard their jurisdiction under the BNA Act.

The hon. member states that he is concerned about the effect of this conflict on the Canadian consumer, and that is appropriate enough. I think, however, that it should be put into perspective and noted that there is no shortage of sugar for Canadian consumers. The conflict at the refinery does not affect the price of sugar to Canadian consumers, nor the volume of sugar consumed in Canada, which would otherwise involve the federal government on a Canada-wide economic scale. However, the government appreciates that there does exist a problem for the farmers of the region who are trying to sell their produce.

The hon. member referred to the sugar beet industry. Being myself from southwestern Ontario I can assure him that I have sympathy for those producers knowing the plight faced by them. It is to be hoped that the Quebec government will be able to resolve this dispute at an early date.

FINANCE—ALLEGED DENIAL OF LOANS BY CHARTERED BANKS UNDER SMALL BUSINESS AND FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in the adjournment debate, and I want to say how pleased I am to see my colleague, the honourable member from southwestern Ontario, in his place to respond. I want to congratulate the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) on his appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, and to tell him that I wish him well.

On October 8 I directed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) with respect to certain chartered banks in this country denying loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This is a very unfortunate situation and it is one that warrants immediate and effective attention from the Minister of Finance and the government. I well recall the concern with respect to this matter expressed by many of my colleagues on this side of the House in the Official Opposition during the debate on Bill C-14 last spring. The main thrust or purpose of Bill C-14 was to raise the ceiling on the amount of 8¼ per cent money that chartered banks can loan to these two important, but seldom recognized, segments of our economy. When one observes the past statistics, one continues to wonder, however, just how useful these programs really are.

● (2220)

Referring to the 1972 bank report, we note that under the Small Businesses Loans Act less than 2,900 loans were granted in all of Canada. One major chartered bank granted a sparse 134 loans.

It is not unusual or difficult for many honourable members to cite examples from constituents which clearly indicate that banks are less than interested in these two government programs, and indeed a similar scheme, the Fisheries Improvement Act, could be included as receiving this same type of cold shoulder reception.

Chartered banks often react in general terms with responses like, "We've never heard of the program before", or "It's not our policy to loan money under these programs" or "Our allotment of funds for such purposes has been fully allocated".

With attitudes and responses like these, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Minister of Finance that these programs cannot be fully utilized, so the amendments in Bill C-14 become actually useless.

I suggest that, because of this situation, the Minister of Finance should make either strong and effective representation to the banks to correct this matter, or provisions ought to be introduced and incorporated into Bill C-14 to assure that banks and lending institutions be required to make available sums of money to their clients under these programs.

Another real problem is the lack of information regarding the number of applications and inquiries made to banks, and the number refused. I would be willing to expect and admit that some were rejected for good reason, but this information should be available if we are to develop fully the kinds of programs and policies that best meet the needs and financial requirements of these industries.

Let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that these segments of our society form the backbone of our economy. They provide strength and stability to our Canadian commerce. They create over half of our Gross National Product and employ over half of the working people of Canada. They are entitled to better treatment than they have received and are receiving.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my thanks to the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) for his kind comments on my appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. I should also like to compliment him for bringing this matter up in the House, and not being satisfied the answer, again bringing it up on what has been called "the late show." I think the matter warrants airing and public scrutiny.

The Farm Improvement Loans Act and Small Businesses Loans Act have been in effect for many years, and I am sure that members are reasonably familiar with them. They will recall that last spring the acts were amended following a full review by the government in order to expand their scope and increase their effectiveness and usefulness to borrowers.

These acts have played a useful role in meeting the credit requirements of a large number of Canadians. The Farm Improvement Loans Act has been particularly important as a source of intermediate credit to farmers. Up to the end of June this year, loans extended under FILA totalled over $3 billion, so I think that contradicts what my hon. friend has said. In fact it has been found useful. Such loans reached a record of $230 million in 1973.

Since inception of the Small Businesses Loans program over $300 million was lent to June, 1974. This is another indicator that it is being used. Lending under this program has been rising sharply in recent years, and was over $30 million in 1973.

In the first six months of this year lending under these programs declined. I think that is what my hon. friend is endeavouring to highlight. This may well have been due to a reluctance by lenders to participate in the programs because of a growing differential between the rates they were permitted to charge at that time and commercial rates of interest. In this respect, hon. members may be aware that the permissible rates are determined twice a year, on April 1 and October 1, on the basis of a formula contained in regulations. The formula rate is the average yield on government of Canada bonds during the six months preceding the rate change, plus 1 per cent.

It will be noted that, due to the averaging period, the formula rate will lag behind current commercial rates when the latter are changing rapidly. This lag became significant in the first part of 1974 when the bank prime rate moved from 9½ per cent in January to 11½ per cent in July. During this period the rate for the vast majority of these guaranteed loans, all except those for the purchase of land under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, was 8¼ per cent until March, and dropped to 8 per cent on April 1. Thus the formula rate became increasingly out of line with rates charged by lenders on regular loans, and by July the negative differential had become quite significant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn this House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:28 p.m.

SUGGESTED MAINTENANCE OF MILK SUBSIDY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I move under the provisions of Standing Order 43 a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). In view of the fact that the provincial premiers have opposed the government's proposed removal of the subsidy on milk, in view of the opposition by the Food Prices Review Board to the removal of the subsidy, in view of the criticism levelled against the cabinet by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with regard to the removal of the subsidy, and in view of the consequences to the consumer as a result of a five cent to six cent increase per quart of milk should the subsidy be removed, I move under the provisions of Standing Order 43:

That this House instruct the government to maintain its present subsidy on milk.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion. Being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be presented.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED DIRECTION TO BROADCAST CANADIAN FOOTBALL GAMES RATHER THAN BASEBALL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has interrupted the originally scheduled football game in the Canadian Football League to bring Canadians a United States baseball game tomorrow—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Jelinek: —an action inconsistent with the official government policy of fostering Canadian football—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: —I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Secretary of State be instructed to take all necessary steps to remedy this situation and make these important CFL games leading to the Grey Cup available to the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion. Being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY AND EXPORT OF OIL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Interprovincial Pipeline Limited has expressed reluctance to proceeding with the proposed Montreal oil pipeline because of a projected shortfall in crude oil supplies from western Canada, in view of the fact that recent reports have suggested that the fund for compensation to importers of petroleum and petroleum products may go into deficit early in the new year, and in view of the fact that the oil industry and the National Energy Board have recently expressed concern about the availability of sufficient supplies of oil to meet Canada's future requirement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the issue of availability of crude oil, and the advisability of continuing both imports and exports of crude oil and products at their present levels, be referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works for immediate consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion. Being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION INTO SALE AND OPERATION OF NUCLEAR REACTORS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the leakage problem which has occurred at the Pickering CANDU nuclear reactor, and in view of the projected sale of this reactor to Argentina and South Korea, neither of which has signed the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That this House instruct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to stop the sale of all Canadian nuclear reactors until a committee of this House has had the opportunity of having a full inquiry into the risk of further proliferation of nuclear weapons through the sale of this reactor abroad and a proper determination is made of the environmental hazard through the use of this reactor at home.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT POLICY WITH REGARD TO THE MONEY SUPPLY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Dr. Raynauld, the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, has stated:

In the last three months monetary policy has been reduced by 12 per cent at annual rates—

Dr. Raynauld was referring to M1 figures. Does the minister agree with Dr. Raynauld that this policy is "extremely restrictive"?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to read the whole transcript, but this is, of course, a matter of judgment. If the implication of the hon. member's question is that it has been too restrictive, he ought to reconcile his view with that of his colleague, the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Stevens: In answering my supplementary question I should like the minister to bear in mind that when the 12 per cent reduction, referred to by Dr. Raynauld, is linked to today's inflation of over 10 per cent you have a 22 per cent brake on the economy compared to the Economic Council of Canada's recommended monetary increase stance of 10 per cent to 15 per cent per year. Would the minister indicate whether in fact it is government policy to have a more restrictive money supply increase in Canada.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the monetary supply set by the Governor of the Bank of Canada and approved by the government is to allow expansion in the money supply sufficient to meet the expansion in the economy but no more. As a result the money supply has been expanding at somewhat less than the total expansion in nominal terms of the economy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Simcoe on a supplementary.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is again addressed to the same minister. I am wondering whether the minister could explain to the House why in the four months previous to May the money system was allowed to increase by $900 million while in the four months subsequent to May there has been a contraction of $500 million. In short, is the House right in assuming that the election played an important part in the minister's direction of the money system in this country?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, sir.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REDUCTION OF INFLATION BY INCREASING PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. As the minister has often said in this House that the only effective way to reduce inflation is increased production would he take the first opportunity on motions to outline what specific methods he intends to introduce in the very near future to materially increase production in view of the zero real growth in the second quarter and the fact that the index of industrial production has been falling sharply.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is already aware both in the agricultural and industrial field what the government policies have been. He was speaking particularly of industrial production. As a result of the manufacturing and processing tax reduction and the capital cost allowances, the investment intentions of business have been revised upward again even for the year 1974 from 19 per cent to 25 per cent. Despite the slackening economies in most of the industrial countries of the world we still anticipate growth, and have had for the first six months of 1974, real growth of 4.8 per cent over the same period last year.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as zero growth is zero growth no matter what way you slice it, would the minister consider stopping the excusing, promising and puffering and instead start to do some of the things he assured the country in his last three budgets that he would do.

FOOD PRICES

MILK—REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF SUBSIDY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since in the throne speech the government said it intended to take certain steps to ease the burden of inflation on those most seriously affected, given the news today that the price of milk in the province of Ontario is about to go up six cents a quart and given the recent urging by the Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board, the former minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, plus a number of provincial premiers that the federal government maintain or re-introduce the five cent subsidy per quart of milk, would the Prime Minister inform the House whether or not the cabinet is reconsidering its decision on this important matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

MILK—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE PRICE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister inform the House if his department is taking any steps now or intends to take such steps in the early future which would have the effect of bringing down the price of milk, the high price of which adversely affects particularly low income families?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that where we have jurisdiction in respect of industrial milk production we have increased the subsidy on milk powder 4 cents a pound over what it was before. I am sure the hon. member is also aware that even with the agreement we had for the 5 cents a quart consumer subsidy in one instance a province raised the price of milk at least six times within the time of contract.

● (1120)

MILK—CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES TO ENSURE SUPPLY AT REASONABLE PRICES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In the absence of complete jurisdiction in this area, will the minister, in the interest of ensuring that the milk supply will go to low income Canadians and children, immediately meet with his provincial counterparts to come up with emergency measures to continue the subsidy and ensure that the price of milk does not in fact rise to a level which would make it prohibitive to most Canadians?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): There is nothing to stop the provinces, if they so desire, from subsidizing fluid milk to the consumers of the nation if they want to work out a plan. But I would point out that when we put on the 5 cents a quart milk subsidy, the food index was rising nearly twice as fast as anything else. At present it is rising only half as fast as the cost of living index. The food index has decreased instead of increased. That should be made pretty clear. Also, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is the one who has the responsibility of working with those people in the provinces. Some provinces have said that they want to see this matter handled by the social services. We must make sure that we know what every province wants.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister prepared to enter into immediate discussions with his provincial counterparts to ensure that milk will be available to low income Canadians, especially the children of people on fixed incomes?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my colleague will certainly agree that what really matters is to ensure to small earners sufficient income to meet all their requirements, and not only buy milk.

In this connection, the government as a whole and the Prime Minister in particular have suggested that the provinces adjust their social assistance payments so that needy people may have enough money to meet their needs. This is the very policy which the government has always advocated. We have put large sums of money at the provinces' disposal for their public assistance programs. We have distributed some ourselves through our own welfare programs.

MANPOWER

MODIFICATION TO REGULATIONS TO ENCOURAGE MOBILITY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Does the minister intend to amend the manpower mobility regulations to make them more easily applicable so that people moving to a distant locality to take up a job can receive the benefits available before April 1974?

[Mr. Whelan.]

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the whole manpower policy area is constantly under review. The AOIA is under review, and if and when we make any fundamental changes in the policy or programs, we will announce it in this House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF CONFINEMENT OF VALENTYN MOROZ BY RUSSIANS TO UNITED NATIONS—POSSIBILITY OF EXAMINATION BY CANADIAN PHYSICIAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with the cruelties being perpetrated on Valentyn Moroz and hundreds of thousands of others in the Soviet Union, actions that are a denial of the principles in the United Nations charter. Will the government of Canada bring this question before the United Nations by way of a resolution in order that not only Canadians and Americans but people in all parts of the world will realize that the conduct of the Soviet Union toward the Ukrainian people and the Baltic peoples is totally inconsistent with the principles of the United Nations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the comments made by the right hon. gentleman have served, in a sense, the purpose which he had intended in connection with Mr. Moroz. As my hon. friend realizes, or may realize, just recently Mr. Moroz's case was brought before the Soviet foreign minister with a view to determining under what conditions Mr. Moroz lived because of reports that he had been on a hunger strike and his health was precarious. In that particular case, the foreign minister assured us that Mr. Moroz was in normal health and at that time was not on a hunger strike but in a normal condition. With respect to the other aspects of the right hon. gentleman's question which have very broad implications, I should like to have an opportunity to consider them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I realized of course that the foreign minister of the U.S.S.R. said that Moroz was receiving decent treatment and was in good health whereas Andrei Sakharov, the famed Russian scientist, says that such is not the case and that Moroz is in complete isolation. If what the foreign minister said concerning Moroz is true, then there is no reason why this government should not ask the Soviets to permit a visit to Moroz by a Canadian physician or by a representative of the Canadian Ukranian Committee to ascertain his physical condition and the circumstances now surrounding his tyrannical incarceration. Would the minister, with the same suavity that he has always used in this House with such effect, bring this matter to the attention of the foreign minister of the U.S.S.R.? If they have nothing to hide, why hide it?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give my hon. friend any assurance that I will take the course of action which he, a bit irresponsibly, proposes.

PUBLISHING

"SATURDAY NIGHT"—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT SUPPORT TO CONTINUE PUBLICATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who has received an open letter with regard to Saturday Night signed by a large number of very distinguished Canadians asking him to assure the continued life of the magazine. I should like to ask the minister what response he is making to them.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with Mr. Cowan either this week or next.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Recognizing that the government is somewhat divided with regard to policy toward Canadian periodicals and their support, I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he can assure the House that he will take the necessary steps to keep Saturday Night alive at least until the government has made a decision with regard to its policy toward support of Canadian periodicals?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, on the first point, there is no division that I am aware of among members of the government. On the substance of the question regarding Saturday Night, I would remind the hon. member that last year in response to a request from the principals of Saturday Night and in conjunction with the government of Ontario, this government provided a grant of $100,000. That grant was in response to a project they had to increase their list of subscribers. My argument was that we could not, as a government, get into the refinancing of it but I recognize this is an important magazine that had what appeared to us and to the Ontario government a viable plan for increasing its list of subscribers and to that end we made a contribution. That was less than a year ago and they are back again with an even more attractive package in terms of grants for essentially the same purpose. I ask the hon. member, how long does the federal government stay in this sort of operation?

INDUSTRY

ANACONDA ELECTRONICS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE COMPANY REMAINS IN CANADA OR REFUNDS ADVANCES

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is regarding the Anaconda Corporation of New York which has closed its operation in the mining industry in British Columbia. In view of the fact that Anaconda Electronics is concerned that the parent corporation is going to withdraw that company from Canada, can the minister advise the House what action his department has taken to make sure that the electronics firm remains in Canada and keeps those 120 people employed?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my department has been in touch with the officers of the parent corporation in the United States to determine what the situation is in respect of this plant near Vancouver. We have been told that the firm is considering the rationalization of some of its activities because of poor performance, but it has not yet taken any decision. The company has further stated that before it takes such decision to phase out, it will consult with us. I am hopeful that we will find ways to maintain this particular operation in Vancouver.

• (1130)

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. As the company is making all its profits in Canada, and as the government assisted this corporation with funds provided earlier to develop the product with which it is making profits, will the minister make sure that if the company pulls out of Canada it will refund these funds to the Canadian people and pay the deferred taxes it owes the Canadian people?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, this question is under consideration at present but I can give the hon. member no such assurances.

PROPOSED RESTRICTIONS BY UNITED STATES ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the announcement made yesterday by the American authorities that they intend to impose restrictions on beef and other products being exported to the United States. Has the minister obtained more specific information on the American moves and does he intend to modify our own position on the export of cattle, beef and other products to the United States?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have received a copy of the material published in the United States and it does not show much more than we already knew. It is not specific about products. Our officials and interdépartmental committees are meeting at present to decide what procedure we should adopt, whether we should make representations at the hearing, how this should be done, and that type of thing. We have had preliminary work done on this but at present we do not intend to change our position.

Oral Questions

TRADE

PROPOSED RESTRICTIONS BY UNITED STATES ON IMPORTS—POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF GATT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he considered the American moves, to determine whether there might be a violation of GATT provisions? Also, has he been able to ascertain whether the American moves are restricted to those products mentioned or will they be extended to include not only the food industry but other industries in this country as well?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the first part of the hon. member's question which referred to GATT. Perhaps he might clarify his question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my question was about the American announcement of yesterday regarding the restriction on the importation of Canadian beef. Has the minister checked this announcement, to see whether it violates the GATT agreement, and also to see if these restrictions may proliferate to areas other than those already announced by the Americans.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, as to the first point, GATT was set up to provide an international forum for the discussion and settlement of disputes. We are not yet sure that the United States will take action. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs said yesterday, hearings have yet to take place in the United States on the beef question. On the second part of the question dealing with other products, I frankly do not think it is relevant in the circumstances.

GRAIN

GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS TO IMPROVE HANDLING SYSTEM—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and arises out of references in the Speech from the Throne to grain handling. Can he tell the House specifically what steps the government intends to take to improve grain handling this coming winter?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, any specific steps to be taken will be announced in due course.

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister makes his announcement, will he assure the House, the country and, particularly, farmers of western Canada that the Crowsnest freight rates will not be tampered with? At the same time, will he clarify statements made by some ministers of the Crown about attempts to nationalize the grain handling industry, which is a presposterous proposal?

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we shall face many difficult questions during the coming winter. They are of a long term nature and have to do with the branch line system and improvements in grain handling. These will involve many different decisions. As these things are done there will be an opportunity to discuss them, as there will be for statements made on motions which will detail the various aspects of what we intend to do.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Will measures be introduced in conformity with the commitment made in the Speech from the Throne which says specifically that steps will be taken to facilitate grain handling this winter? I ask this because snow will soon be falling.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, some measures contemplated will involve legislation, but that does not apply to all steps that will be taken this winter; some will require specific action rather than legislation.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO MOVEMENT AND HANDLING OF GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Now that Bill C-12 is history, it is necessary to move with despatch on the establishment of an industrial inquiry commission on the movement and handling of grain. Can the minister say what he has done to date about this very good idea?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to the impression the hon. member conveyed in his speech to this House, the Labour Code authorizes me to appoint an industrial commissioner and set the terms of reference. This has been done. Within the next day or two I will name the commissioner, so that we can get this matter under way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday the hon. member for Egmont put a question to the Minister of National Defence. I have been advised that the minister, as he said he would, wishes to answer.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED INSTRUCTIONS TO PERSONNEL NOT TO WRITE TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I agreed to reply to a question which was directed to me by the hon. member for Egmont concerning a letter written by the Chief of Defence Staff, General Dextraze, to the Canadian forces. I have now had an opportunity to talk with the Chief of Defence Staff and wish to assure the House—

Mr. Nowlan: The minister's statement should be made on motions.

Mr. Richardson: I wish to assure the House—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; really, I think the minister is not answering the question so much as making a statement on motions. That being the case, I think the hon. member for Egmont should have the right to respond. I wonder if the House would agree to reverting to motions?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could better observe technicalities if the hon. member for Egmont were recognized for the question he asked yesterday. I will be glad to recognize him.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to yield the floor to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the unusual circumstances surrounding this matter, I think there should be sufficient opportunity for a reply to his answer.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, in reply, I have had an opportunity to talk fully with the Chief of Defence Staff. I assure the House that he did not intend, and I am using the words of the hon. member for Egmont, to violate the rights or privileges of members of parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, but that is exactly what he did.

Mr. Richardson: In the letter which has been referred to, General Dextraze pointed out that within the Canadian armed forces there is a well established grievance procedure. The purpose of his letter was to emphasize that this grievance procedure is fair and he was urging the armed forces to make use of it. Further, I believe that General Dextraze is right in having—

An hon. Member: Oh!

Mr. Richardson: Wait—he is right in having confidence in the grievance procedure of the Canadian armed forces.

Mr. Nowlan: Has he ever used it? Ho, ho, ho!

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I also wish to confirm in unqualified terms that any member of the armed forces is able to write to a member of parliament on any subject with exactly the same freedom as any other citizen of Canada.

• (1140)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: As long as it does not come to the notice of the military.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I think the minister has stated clearly in his answer that there has been, unfortunately, conveyed to the armed forces a certain form of improper suggestion.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The minister has said the Chief of the Defence Staff did not intend to convey this impression, but regardless of that, the effect is that a certain aspect of the privileges of the members of this House have been violated. I am sorry the minister did not see fit to table the document because I think it would be useful for hon. members to see the totality of what was communicated. I would ask the minister, because of the seriousness of this matter and the extent of the circulation of the document to circulate, to the same extent, the assurance given in the latter part of his answer so as to make clear to the 80,000 people in our armed forces that they have the same rights as are enjoyed by all other citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: I have stated my policy and the policy of the department in unequivocal terms.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But not the General's policy.

Mr. Richardson: If there continues to be any misunderstanding or misinterpretation of the letter, I am certain that General Dextraze himself will wish to clarify that misunderstanding.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Since there is, ultimately, civilian control over the Armed Forces, I think it is important that this be circulated—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been rather fully gone into. Would the hon. member be good enough to get to his question?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I simply want to obtain a clear answer from the minister to the effect that he will communicate with the armed forces directly in the same way as thousands of these documents have been circulated during the month of September.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any better way of communicating with the armed forces and with the Canadian public than by speaking in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am not clear whether the minister is assuring us that 80,000 copies of Hansard will be sent to members of the Armed Forces—

An hon. Member: That would be cruelty.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —or whether, since the members of the Armed Forces are communicated with directly through their publications, the minister would be prepared to have the Chief of the Defence Staff appear before the appropriate standing committee—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —so that this could be clarified once and for all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: I hardly expect you will want me to continue this discussion, Mr. Speaker. I have already said the Chief of the Defence Staff will personally wish to clarify any misunderstanding in his letter, and he communicates regularly with the Armed Forces.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is an accepted practice of the House that when a minister refers to a public document, he has to table it. The document to which the minister referred is clearly a public document in that it is a letter from the Chief of the Defence Staff. I believe that under Standing Order 41(2) the minister is obliged to lay it on the table of the House so that all members can judge for themselves.

Mr. Richardson: I am very proud of the personal messages which the Chief of the Defence Staff sends out and it would be helpful if all members of the House could read what he says. I would be pleased to table this one, and earlier messages as well, and hope this will create a better understanding of the dedicated service provided to Canada by the Canadian armed forces.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Speaker: I rather felt I had extended to the hon. member a good deal of latitude in order that this subject might be explored.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am grateful for Your Honour's generosity, but I do think it would help clarify the situation for the men of the armed forces—and this is our principal concern—if the minister would give us an assurance—

Some hon. Members: Speech!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —that we would follow up by sending out a communication which would clarify this particular message.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot see how a request to the minister for further assurances, over and above the request already made, could be classified as anything except further questioning on the subject. I have come to the conclusion that the subject has been fully aired. The minister has been pressed for an assurance and has given some kind of assurance in response.

Mr. McGrath: To return to the point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister offered to table the document after I rose on a point of order to suggest he had an obligation to do so. I think it is now incumbent on the Chair to ask whether there is unanimous consent to revert to motions so that the minister can, in fact, table this document.

Mr. Speaker: I know of no interpretation of the rules which would require, or even suggest, that this be done forthwith. The hon. member raised the question whether or not the minister is compelled to table the document. I am not sure of the validity of the point. In any case, the minister relieved the Chair of the obligation of deciding it by indicating he is willing to table the document. That, it seems to me, is where the matter rests.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED ADVANCE TO SAIGON BY INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last Tuesday I put a question to the minister about a meeting of the World Bank and associated organizations to be held in Paris on October 17 at which a proposal for an advance of $50 million to the regime in South Viet Nam is to be discussed. The minister told the House he hoped to answer the question the following day. I now ask him whether he will do so, and, in particular, will he state whether Canada is to subscribe $5 million to this proposed loan?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret I did not answer the hon. member earlier, even though I did glean the information shortly after I had been asked the question. It is true that the International Bank for Reconstruction and the Asian Development Bank have jointly invited officials from a number of countries, including Canada, to a meeting in Paris on October 17 to discuss aid to Indo China. While Canada has agreed to attend this meeting, we are not aware of the specific proposal to which my hon. friend refers. We have no information that such a proposal will be forthcoming.

● (1150)

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, or perhaps the Minister of Finance who I think is interested in these matters, report to this House the result of this meeting so we may know what attitude Canada has taken to this proposal?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, when proposals are made we will determine our attitude in light of the nature of the proposals, and will be happy to advise the House what has transpired.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

REQUEST FOR TRANSLATION IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State. Does the minister have available an English translation of the French version, and a French translation of the English version, of the proposed anthem as set out in the schedule to Bill C-11, an act respecting the national anthem? If so, and in any event, will the minister forward copies of same to each member of this House, and if there are any differences in the meaning and wording of the proposed national anthem or national anthems, would the minister please point out each difference and explain the reason or reasons for each such difference?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Acting Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State had to meet some of his provincial counterparts who were waiting for him; I will bring the hon. member's question to his attention so he may answer it next week.

IMMIGRATION

CHILEAN REFUGEES—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN MEMBERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ANY CHANGE IN POLICY

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I understand that this week the minister met with a group with respect to the possible immigration of some 10,000 Chilean refugees. In view of the present changes that are taking place within the immigration department making immigration restrictions more stringent, I should like to ask the minister whether he could clarify statements attributed to him that these 10,000 Chilean refugees will in fact be coming to Canada, and would he inform the House what effect this will have on the immigration of any other groups to Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I met with a delegation, in company with my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I believe on Wednesday morning. We were then presented with a rather detailed brief which I had not had the opportunity of reading before meeting with them. Under those circumstances we were inhibited from giving any detailed responses, and I made only the commitment that in the absense of that opportunity of knowing what their recommendations were we would analyse the brief in the light of current circumstances and information and reply to them. In that sense, I said I would consider their brief.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give assurances that before any major change in policy respecting Chilean refugees is made, policies outlined in this House by the minister in a statement on motions last Spring, the minister will first relay in the form of a motion to the House any change that might be contemplated or will take place?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I would, of course, wish to keep the House informed. The fact of the matter is that we still maintain and will continue to maintain immigration facilities in Santiago. Our people there will still listen compassionately to applications from Chilean refugees or oppressed minorities or normal individual applications from immigrants. This will be a continuing program, although quite frankly the volume of applications has certainly diminished very markedly in the last several months. In addition to that, we have noted that while approximately 1,400 to 1,500 visas under the special program were authorized, fully enabling Chilean refugees or oppressed minorities to come to Canada, roughly half of them have chosen not to exercise their rights under those visas.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION OF REGIONAL WAGE DISPARITIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the head of the Treasury Board, and while asking it I want to congratulate him sincerely on assuming this important portfolio. Does the minister intend to implement the policies advocated by many of us on this side of the House, and in the last election campaign by all candidates for the Liberals from the Atlantic region, and work toward phasing out regional wage disparities for those people employed in the public service?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, policies in this field are negotiated with the unions and often the latter's demands vary according to their problems. We have had the firemen and the airport strikes. The airport employees did not want to abide by a national policy and in Vancouver they were asking for special conditions because of the particular situation there. So we are negotiating with each union. As to regional rates, it does not necessarily follow that under certain circumstances it is not a good policy.

POST OFFICE

MAIL DELIVERY—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN CONTRACT PAYMENTS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

According to the Post Office Act, the minister can raise mail delivery contract payments, provided these contracts have been in effect for two years. As this increase helps compensate higher operation costs and since these costs have been abnormally high in recent years, does the minister consider introducing a bill during this session so that Parliament can give him the authority to raise contract payments after a period of one year instead of two?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has stated that contracts can be readjusted after a period of two years. This is firmly stated in the legislation. Apart from that, what he suggests would require new legislation, which is not contemplated. However, there may be other ways in which we can take into consideration the effect of inflation on this particular group of contractors.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

UNITED AIRCRAFT—SUGGESTED GUARANTEE OF REPATRIATION OF WORK TRANSFERRED TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the United Aircraft Corporation in the Montreal area. Would the minister inform the House as to the discussions that have been reported to have taken place between his officials and that corporation concerning obtaining a guarantee from that company that it will place in Canada the amount of work to which it is committed by virtue of getting some $70 million worth of assistance from the federal government? I refer to replacing in Canada work that has been transferred to the United States in recent months.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I and my officials have met with senior officials of UACL and the United States parent corporation to determine and to clarify the long-term plans of the firm respecting both the repatriation of work that has been transferred from the Longueuil plant to East Hartford and the expansion plans of the Canadian company in Canada. I hope to have more to say on this point by next week.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PIPELINE TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES—POSSIBLE DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the promise in print made by all Liberal candidates in Atlantic Canada prior to the July 8 election that the government would develop an across Canada oil pipeline extending beyond Montreal to the Atlantic provinces, when can we anticipate a statement from the minister indicating a start on this project, or at least a study of this important matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have had an analysis made of the possibilities of extending some deep water port facilities in eastern Canada to serve a pipeline into Montreal. At the moment there has been no further progress in this matter, but it does remain one of active interest. I think that what is clear is that in the long run it still remains desirable to bring imported oil ashore through a Canadian superport, with the pipeline running through our own territory.

SUGGESTED NEED FOR EQUAL TREATMENT BY GOVERNMENT IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF OIL SANDS AND ARCTIC OIL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the minister. My immediate interpretation of what he has just said and what he said yesterday seems to be the same. I take it that the minister's aim and policy is to make Canada totally self-sufficient in respect of crude petroleum, and I am not talking about natural gas, and that the government now seems to favour building a pipeline to bring down proven Arctic reserves rather than given the same kind of encouragement and incentive in respect of the oil sands development. Is that a correct statement?

[Mr. Mackasey.]

• (1200)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are in fact not giving an incentive in the terms the hon. gentleman uses. However, we have indicated to the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan that substantial federal funds would be available to assist in oil sands development, not so much in the current stages of the process, but to develop a secondary level of technology. I would have to say that if there were a successful scientific breakthrough with regard to harnessing the oil sands at less cost both environmentally and in dollar and cent terms this would be very much in the interest of Canada, and the federal offer in respect of an active program in this area remains outstanding.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I just follow that up. In view of the fact that about $1 billion, mainly from Alberta's own resources, is going toward the bonusing of consumers in the eastern part of Canada, does the minister not now consider it is so important to become self-sufficient in respect of Canadian petroleum that both projects should receive the same encouragement, incentive and motivation from this policy? In other words, in view of the high cost of producing oil from the oil sands will some concession be made taxwise in respect of that project, giving it an equal opportunity to that provided Arctic oil development, the equity of one being owned by the federal government and the equity of the other by provincial governments?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the constraint with regard to the oil sands is not in location but in respect of the difficulty of harnessing the project. At the same time I do not underrate the difficulty of bringing frontier oil to market. In terms of fiscal incentives, that would have to be a decision of the government as enunciated by my colleague, the Minister of Finance. The basic policy of the government is, while not setting the national oil price at a high international level, to set it at a level high enough to encourage further development. We are confident that at the current level there is ample encouragement for the industry to be encouraged both in the oil sands and in the frontier oil for that purpose.

AIR CANADA

OVERHAUL AND REPAIR BASE AT WINNIPEG—DATE OF START ON CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on May 23 of this year the Prime Minister made a special trip to Winnipeg where, at a press conference, he announced that Air Canada would be establishing an overhaul and maintenance base there, and that a $15 million dollar hangar would be built. This work was to start immediately. Could he explain the reason for the delay, and indicate when Air Canada will be starting work on this project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this project will be carried forward. I will discuss this with the Minister of Transport to find out the date of the first sod turning, and I will inform the House.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has a firm commitment from Air Canada that it will start that project in the near future?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this policy was arrived at after discussion with all parties concerned, including Air Canada.

POST OFFICE

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS— PARITY OF WAGES OF CODERS AND SORTERS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, following the decertification of the Council of Postal Unions, will the Postmaster General assure the House that new contract negotiations will not be unduly delayed inasmuch as an acceptable contract is essential to the restoration of a sagging morale among postal employees and the beginning of the long road back to the former efficiency of the department?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would not be honest if I were to assure the hon. gentleman that I know when bargaining will take place. In the first place, under the law I am not the employer. The employer is the President of the Treasury Board. The Public Service Act stands in the name of the President of the Privy Council. I am just the administrator of the Post Office under the Public Service Act. I can only hope that the matter will resolve itself soon. In the interval, I am sure the present collective agreement will continue until eventually a new one is arrived at.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, now that the Postmaster General has publicly accepted the principle that men are more important than machines, and I congratulate him in this regard as this is a principle that has long been advocated by opposition spokesmen, will he now add action to those words by speaking to his seat mate, the President of the Treasury Board, asking him to bring into parity immediately the wages of coders and sorters, as this is one the great issues in respect of mechanization?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to say that the President of the Treasury Board is known within the caucus, and I know from personal experience, as a humanitarian who shares my view about people. Having said that, the question of parity as between sorters using the new equipment and hand sorting is a matter presently being discussed at regular weekly meetings under the aegis of a representative of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, and I think we have succeeded in narrowing the monetary gap which was quite prevalent some weeks ago. I am hopeful that when the new round of collective bargaining begins that disparity will disappear.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker I rise on a question of privilege. In a news release of yesterday it was suggested that I refused to speak to reporters following the question period, but that is not true. I did speak to them afterwards.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Louis Duclos for an address to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last evening I had referred to the influence which several hon. members had upon my coming to the House of Commons. Since arriving here I have found that quite a few hon. members whom I did not know before have been helping new members and influencing them to some degree. I look forward to committee meetings when I shall have the opportunity of taking part in discussions with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I am sure I speak for all new members when I say that we appreciate the help that hon. member has given us in respect of House procedures. His assistance will be of great help to me in the future.

I should also like to thank the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), who I am sure will add to the spirit of fellowship in this House. Let me also refer to the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), chairman of the veterans affairs committee. When thinking of him I am reminded that in the east, if you want a newborn child to be a very famous singer you kiss it full on the lips at birth. If you want the child to grow up to be a very famous dancer, you kiss it on the toes. I do not know where the hon. gentleman was kissed when he was born, but he makes a wonderful chairman.

I have alluded to the interest that the constituency of Hamilton Mountain has had in youth and the development of sports. The people of my constituency are also interested in the desire by women to be the masters of their own destiny. In this regard, I should like to say something about the status of women bills which will come before the House. Perhaps, rather than trying to express my feelings in my own words, I should use those of a poet who spoke of the beauty of women. He was suggesting that in this regard it might be worth while if we listened to what women have to say. Let me read this poem as follows:

—Speak to us of Beauty.
And he answered:
Where shall you seek beauty, and how shall you find her unless she herself be your way and your guide?
And how shall you speak of her except she be the weaver of your speech?

● (1210)

The aggrieved and the injured say,
'Beauty is kind and gentle.
Like a young mother half-shy of her own glory she walks among us.'
And the passionate say, 'Nay, beauty is a thing of might and dread.
Like the tempest she shakes the earth beneath us and the sky above us'.

The tired and the weary say, 'Beauty if of soft whisperings. She speaks in our spirit.
Her voice yields to our silences like a faint light that quivers in fear of the shadow'.
But the restless say, 'We have heard her shouting among the mountains,
And with her cries came the sound of hoofs, and the beating of wings and the roaring of lions'.

At night the watchmen of the city say, 'Beauty shall rise with the dawn from the east.'
And at noontide the toilers and the wayfarers say,
'We have seen her leaning over the earth from the windows of the sunset.'

In winter say the snow-bound, 'She shall come with the spring leaping upon the hills.'
And in the summer heat the reapers say, 'We have seen her dancing with the autumn leaves, and we saw a drift of snow in her hair.'

All these things you have said of beauty,
Yet in truth you spoke not of her but of needs unsatisfied,
And beauty is not a need but an ecstasy.
It is not a mouth thirsting nor an empty hand stretched forth,
But rather a heart enflamed and a soul enchanted.
It is not the image you would see nor the song you would hear,
But rather an image you see though you close your eyes and a song you hear though you shut your ears.
It is not the sap within the furrowed bark, nor a wing attached to a claw,
But rather a garden for ever in bloom and a flock of angels for ever in flight.

. . . beauty is life when life unveils her holy face.
But you are life and you are the veil.
Beauty is eternity gazing at itself in a mirror.
But you are eternity and you are the mirror.

So if indeed we would go in quest of assisting women in search of their own destiny, we must view them through themselves and be certain that they themselves present what they require of life and what they desire of this life. I know my constituents would want me to say that. I should like to say that in Hamilton Mountain and on Hamilton Mountain where Hamilton is the suburb of Hamilton Mountain, we have something unique to bring you. We have people who love their youth; we have people who love their life; we have people who love Canada. Indeed, we could easily fit into that bracket which says that lives of great men all remind us that we, too, can make our lives sublime in passing and leave footprints in the sands of time. Hamilton Mountain will be heard from. Hamilton Mountain people will indeed say something for the west, for the maritimes, for Newfoundland, for Quebec and, indeed, for Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have all listened with great interest to the speech of the new member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), part of which he made just now and the remainder of which he made just now. Perhaps I might depart from the usual niceties with which members commence speeches in this debate and say, instead, that as a member who has been around here for a while, I am happy to welcome the new member for Hamilton Mountain and all the new members who have joined us in this thirtieth parliament.

[Mr. MacFarlane.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I trust that among us, despite the differences of opinion that we have, we will do a good job for the people of Canada. I liked, in particular, the statement the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain made last evening to the effect that there is more understanding between young people and old people than is the case between those in the middle age group and those either younger or older. The hon. member drew an interesting couple of limits: he classified all those below 32 as young, and all those over 49 as old. Well, I am over 49!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Say it isn't so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), belongs to that in between group that does not understand younger or older people. I shall return to him in a moment. The statement of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat is borne out by a recent Gallup poll on my favourite subject, that of pensions.

In this poll, those approached were asked what they thought should be done for old age pensioners, and in particular whether their pensions should be increased. Those who voted for the highest possible increase were in the younger group, below age 29. As a matter of fact, 40 per cent of those between 18 and 29 who were asked what the monthly pension should be for persons now retired said that it should be $400 or more. That makes me a piker, Mr. Speaker, as one who has tried to get the basic old age security pension raised to $200 a month.

Nevertheless, I am happy to endorse the sentiment expressed last night by my friend across the way, and may I add to the figure I have just given the interesting result in that poll, which is that only 5 per cent of those questioned in all ages were satisfied to leave the basic old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement where they are, and that 95 per cent of the people questioned on this subject felt there should be an increase in old age pensions. In contrast with that, some of our distinguished colleagues who are in the middle age group, like the Minister of Finance, tell us we should not be complacent about the economic conditions we face at the present time. Yet, when it comes to old age pensions we get day after day from members on the government side a sense of satisfaction and complacency over the fact that pensions are now being escalated by an amount based on the rise in the cost of living.

It was a good move when pensions were indexed so that they increase as the cost of living goes up. The plain fact of the matter, however, is that even on a quarterly basis escalation is always seven or eight months behind. It is also a fact that it is based on the whole broad range of goods and services looked at by Statistics Canada and does not deal specifically with the things old age pensioners must buy. The result is that the $2 or $3 increase which has been coming in every three months leaves the pensioner behind still more every three months than was the case a quarter earlier.

I say, therefore, that this is no time for complacency on the part of middle-aged persons like the Minister of Finance. This is no time for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to tell us about the quarterly escalations which are taking place. Rather, it is a time for increasing the basic old age pension. Although I feel like a piker in light of what the younger people want for the old age pensioner, at least I am realistic. I say that in this session the basic old age pension should be increased to not less than $200 a month, and that any supplement should be on top of that amount.

● (1220)

May I say at the same time that in this session of parliament we should lower the pensionable age to 60 for all those who are out of, or never were in the labour market. Some Liberal member is surely going to say to me, "Are you not aware of the bill that is coming in to pay pensions to spouses between the age of 60 and 65 when the other spouse is already in receipt of the pension?" Every time this proposal has been made, I have made the comment that I will make now, that doing it this way is terribly discriminatory.

I suspect that just about every member of this House is receiving letters from spinsters and widows, as well as from bachelors and widowers, who are between 60 and 65, asking, "What about us?" The minute you are prepared to take care of the spouse who is in that bracket, you raise these other problems. I suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was right when in the course of the election campaign he said that this would have to be a temporary measure because it would raise the very problems that I have identified, and there is also the unfairness of the proposed means test. I urge, therefore, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, instead of bringing in the bill that has been proposed in the Speech from the Throne to bring in a bill to lower the pensionable age to 60 for all those persons who are out of the labour market.
