

Canada

Debates of the Senate

OFFICIAL REPORT
(HANSARD)

THE HONOURABLE MAURICE BOURGET, SPEAKER

1964-65

SECOND SESSION, TWENTY-SIXTH PARLIAMENT
13-14 ELIZABETH II

The Session was opened on February 18, 1964 and was prorogued on April 3, 1965

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1965

20224—A

The Speaker

THE HONOURABLE MAURICE BOURGET

The Leader of the Government

THE HONOURABLE JOHN J. CONNOLLY, P.C.

The Leader of the Opposition

THE HONOURABLE ALFRED JOHNSON BROOKS, P.C.

THE MINISTRY

According to Precedence

April 3, 1965

The Right Honourable Lester Bowles Pearson, M.P.	Prime Minister
The Honourable Paul Joseph James Martin, M.P.	Secretary of State for External Affairs
The Honourable John Whitney Pickersgill, M.P.	Minister of Transport
The Honourable Paul Theodore Hellyer, M.P.	Minister of National Defence
The Honourable Walter Lockhart Gordon, M.P.	Minister of Finance and Receiver General
The Honourable Mitchell Sharp, M.P.	Minister of Trade and Commerce
The Honourable George James McIlraith, M.P.	President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada
The Honourable William Moore Benidickson, M.P.	Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys
The Honourable Arthur Laing, M.P.	Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources
The Honourable Maurice Lamontagne, M.P.	Secretary of State of Canada
The Honourable Lucien Cardin, M.P.	Minister of Public Works
The Honourable Allan Joseph MacEachen, M.P.	Minister of Labour
The Honourable Hedard Robichaud, M.P.	Minister of Fisheries
The Honourable J. Watson MacNaught, M.P.	Solicitor General
The Honourable Roger Teillet, M.P.	Minister of Veterans Affairs
The Honourable Judy LaMarsh, M.P.	Minister of National Health and Welfare
The Honourable Charles Mills Drury, M.P.	Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production
The Honourable Guy Favreau, M.P.	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
The Honourable John Robert Nicholson, M.P.	Minister of Citizenship and Immigration
The Honourable Harry Hays, M.P.	Minister of Agriculture
The Honourable Rene Tremblay, M.P.	Postmaster General
The Honourable John Joseph Connolly	Member of the Administration
The Honourable Maurice Sauve, M.P.	Minister of Forestry
The Honourable Edgar John Benson, M.P.	Minister of National Revenue
The Honourable Leo Alphonse Joseph Cadieux, M.P.	Associate Minister of National Defence

20224—B

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

To the Prime Minister	JACK DAVIS, M.P.
To the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration	HUBERT BADANAI, M.P.
To the Minister of Agriculture To the Minister of Forestry	BRUCE S. BEER, M.P.
To the Minister of Finance	LAWRENCE T. PENNELL, M.P.
To the Minister of Labour	JAMES A. BYRNE, M.P.
To the Minister of Transport	JEAN-CHARLES CANTIN, M.P.
To the Postmaster General	ALEXIS CARON, M.P.
To the Minister of Veterans Affairs	CHESLEY W. CARTER, M.P.
To the Secretary of State for External Affairs	STANLEY HAIDASZ, M.P.
To the Minister of Justice	DONALD S. MACDONALD, M.P.
To the Minister of Public Works	G. ROY MCWILLIAM, M.P.
To the Minister of National Health and Welfare	JOHN C. MUNRO, M.P.
To the Minister of Trade and Commerce	JEAN-LUC PEPIN, M.P.
To the Secretary of State of Canada	JOHN B. STEWART, M.P.
To the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources	JOHN N. TURNER, M.P.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet	R. G. ROBERTSON
Assistant Clerk of the Privy Council and Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet	O. G. STONER

SENATORS OF CANADA

ACCORDING TO SENIORITY

April 3, 1965

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
WALTER MORLEY ASELTINE, P.C.	Rosetown	Rosetown, Sask.
JOHN WALLACE DE B. FARRIS	Vancouver South	Vancouver, B.C.
ADRIAN K. HUGESSEN	Inkerman	Montreal, Que.
NORMAN P. LAMBERT	Ottawa	Ottawa, Ont.
ARTHUR LUCIEN BEAUBIEN	Provencher	St. Jean Baptiste, Man.
SALTER ADRIAN HAYDEN	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
NORMAN MCLEOD PATERSON	Thunder Bay	Fort William, Ont.
LÉON MERCIER GOUIN	De Salaberry	Montreal, Que.
THOMAS VIEN, P.C.	De Lorimier	Outremont, Que.
WILLIAM RUPERT DAVIES	Kingston	Toronto, Ont.
WISHART MCLEA ROBERTSON, P.C.	Shelburne	Truro, N.S.
CYRILLE VAILLANCOURT	Kennebec	Lévis, Que.
THOMAS ALEXANDER CRERAR, P.C.	Churchill	Winnipeg, Man.
WILLIAM HORACE TAYLOR	Norfolk	R.R. 3, Brantford, Ont.
FRED WILLIAM GERSHAW	Medicine Hat	Medicine Hat, Alta.
VINCENT DUPUIS	Rigaud	Montreal, Que.
CHARLES L. BISHOP	Ottawa	Ottawa, Ont.
JOHN JAMES KINLEY	Queens-Lunenburg	Lunenburg, N.S.
CLARENCE JOSEPH VENIOT	Gloucester	Bathurst, N.B.

20224—B½

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
ARTHUR WENTWORTH ROEBUCK	Toronto-Trinity	Toronto, Ont.
ALEXANDER NEIL MCLEAN	Southern New Brunswick	Saint John, N.B.
GEORGE PERCIVAL BURCHILL	Northumberland-Miramichi	South Nelson, N.B.
JEAN-MARIE DESSUREAULT	Stadacona	Quebec, Que.
PAUL HENRI BOUFFARD	Grandville	Quebec, Que.
STANLEY STEWART MCKEEN	Vancouver	Vancouver, B.C.
JAMES WILLIE COMEAU	Clare	Comeauville, N.S.
THOMAS H. WOOD	Regina	Regina, Sask.
THOMAS VINCENT GRANT	Montague	Montague, P.E.I.
ALEXANDER BOYD BAIRD	St. John's	St. John's, Nfld.
THOMAS REID	New Westminster	New Westminster, B.C.
J. WESLEY STAMBAUGH	Bruce	Bruce, Alta.
GORDON B. ISNOR	Halifax-Dartmouth	Halifax, N.S.
MICHAEL G. BASHA	West Coast	Curling, Nfld.
MARIANA BEAUCHAMP JODOIN	Sorel	Montreal, Que.
MURIEL MCQUEEN FERGUSSON	Fredericton	Fredericton, N.B.
ALLAN L. WOODROW	Toronto Centre	Toronto, Ont.
FREDERICK GORDON BRADLEY, P.C.	Bonavista-Twillingate	Bonavista, Nfld.
WILLIAM ROSS MACDONALD, P.C.	Brantford	Brantford, Ont.
LEONARD DAVID SWEEZEY TREMBLAY	Lauzon	St. Malachie, Que.
SARTO FOURNIER	De Lanaudière	Montreal, Que.
JOHN J. CONNOLLY, P.C.	Ottawa West	Ottawa, Ont.
NANCY HODGES	Victoria	Victoria, B.C.
DONALD CAMERON	Banff	Edmonton, Alta.
DAVID A. CROLL	Toronto-Spadina	Toronto, Ont.
THOMAS D'ARCY LEONARD	Toronto-Rosedale	Toronto, Ont.
FRED A. MCGRAND	Sunbury	Fredericton Junction, N.B.
CALIXTE F. SAVOIE	L'Acadie	Moncton, N.B.
DONALD SMITH	Queens-Shelburne	Liverpool, N.S.
HAROLD CONNOLLY	Halifax North	Halifax, N.S.
FLORENCE ELSIE INMAN	Murray Harbour	Montague, P.E.I.
HARTLAND DE MONTARVILLE MOLSON	Alma	Montreal, Que.
CHARLES GAVAN POWER, P.C.	Gulf	St. Pacôme, Que.

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT	De la Durantaye	Rivière du Loup, Que.
SYDNEY JOHN SMITH	Kamloops	Kamloops, B.C.
WILLIAM ALBERT BOUCHER	Prince Albert	Prince Albert, Sask.
J. EUGÈNE LEFRANÇOIS	Repentigny	Montreal, Que.
GEORGE STANLEY WHITE, P.C.	Hastings-Frontenac	Madoc, Ont.
JOSEPH A. SULLIVAN	North York	Toronto, Ont.
ARTHUR M. PEARSON	Lumsden	Lumsden, Sask.
LÉON MÉTHOT	Shawinigan	Trois Rivières, Que.
GUSTAVE MONETTE	Mille Isles	Montreal, Que.
JOHN JOSEPH MACDONALD	Queens	R.R. 9, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
GUNNAR S. THORVALDSON	Winnipeg South	Winnipeg, Man.
JAMES GLADSTONE	Lethbridge	Cardston, Alta.
LIONEL CHOQUETTE	Ottawa East	Ottawa, Ont.
JOHN ALEXANDER BUCHANAN	Edmonton	Edmonton, Alta.
JOHN HNATYSHYN	Saskatoon	Saskatoon, Sask.
FREDERICK MURRAY BLOIS	Colchester-Hants	Truro, N.S.
OLIVE LILLIAN IRVINE	Lisgar	Winnipeg, Man.
JOHN MICHAEL MACDONALD	Cape Breton	North Sydney, N.S.
ALFRED JOHNSON BROOKS, P.C.	Royal	Sussex, N.B.
JOSIE ALICE DINAN QUART	Victoria	Quebec, Que.
LOUIS PHILIPPE BEAUBIEN	Bedford	Montreal, Que.
MALCOLM HOLLETT	Burin	St. John's, Nfld.
HARRY ALBERT WILLIS	Peel	Toronto, Ont.
J. CAMPBELL HAIG	River Heights	Winnipeg, Man.
M. WALLACE MCCUTCHEON, P.C.	Gormley	Toronto, Ont.
M. GRATTAN O'LEARY	Carleton	Ottawa, Ont.
ALLISTER GROSART	Pickering	Ottawa, Ont.
EDGAR FOURNIER	Madawaska-Restigouche	Iroquois, N.B.
CLEMENT AUGUSTINE O'LEARY	Antigonish-Guysborough	Antigonish, N.S.
FRANK C. WELCH	Kings	Wolfville, N.S.
JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.	Rougemont	Quebec, Que.
DAVID JAMES WALKER, P.C.	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
RHEAL BELISLE	Sudbury	Sudbury, Ont.
PAUL YUZYK	Fort Garry	Winnipeg, Man.
ORVILLE HOWARD PHILLIPS	Prince	Alberton, P.E.I.
MAURICE BOURGET (Speaker)	The Laurentides	Lévis, Que.
LOUIS P. GÉLINAS	Montarville	Montreal, Que.
ROMUALD BOURQUE	De la Vallière	Outremont, Que.
AZELLUS DENIS, P.C.	La Salle	Montreal, Que.
ERIC COOK	St. John's East	St. John's, Nfld.
DANIEL AIKEN LANG	South York	Toronto, Ont.
NELSON RATTENBURY	Saint John	Saint John, N.B.
JOHN B. AIRD	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.

See Index for Senators deceased during Session

SENATORS OF CANADA

ALPHABETICAL LIST

April 3, 1965

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
AIRD, JOHN B.	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
ASELTINE, WALTER M., P.C.	Rosetown	Rosetown, Sask.
BAIRD, A. B.	St. John's	St. John's, Nfld.
BASHA, MICHAEL G.	West Coast	Curling, Nfld.
BEAUBIEN, ARTHUR L.	Provencher	St. Jean Baptiste, Man.
BEAUBIEN, L. P.	Bedford	Montreal, Que.
BELISLE, RHEAL	Sudbury	Sudbury, Ont.
BISHOP, CHARLES L.	Ottawa	Ottawa, Ont.
BLOIS, FRED. M.	Colchester-Hants	Truro, N.S.
BOUCHER, WILLIAM A.	Prince Albert	Prince Albert, Sask.
BOUFFARD, PAUL H.	Grandville	Quebec, Que.
BOURGET, MAURICE (Speaker)	The Laurentides	Lévis, Que.
BOURQUE, ROMUALD	De la Vallière	Outremont, Que.
BRADLEY, F. GORDON, P.C.	Bonavista-Twillingate	Bonavista, Nfld.
BROOKS, A. J., P.C.	Royal	Sussex, N.B.
BUCHANAN, JOHN A.	Edmonton	Edmonton, Alta.
BURCHILL, G. PERCIVAL	Northumberland-Miramichi	South Nelson, N.B.
CAMERON, DONALD	Banff	Edmonton, Alta.
CHOQUETTE, LIONEL	Ottawa East	Ottawa, Ont.
COMEAU, J. W.	Clare	Comeauville, N.S.
CONNOLLY, HAROLD	Halifax North	Halifax, N.S.
CONNOLLY, JOHN J., P.C.	Ottawa West	Ottawa, Ont.
COOK, ERIC	St. John's East	St. John's, Nfld.
CRERAR, T. A., P.C.	Churchill	Winnipeg, Man.
CROLL, DAVID A.	Toronto-Spadina	Toronto, Ont.
DAVIES, W. RUPERT	Kingston	Toronto, Ont.
DENIS, AZELLUS, P.C.	La Salle	Montreal, Que.
DESSUREAULT, J.-M.	Stadacona	Quebec, Que.

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
DUPUIS, VINCENT	Rigaud	Montreal, Que.
FARRIS, J. W. DE B.	Vancouver South	Vancouver, B.C.
FERGUSSON, MURIEL McQ.	Fredericton	Fredericton, N.B.
FLYNN, JACQUES, P.C.	Rougemont	Quebec, Que.
FOURNIER, EDGAR	Madawaska-Restigouche	Iroquois, N.B.
FOURNIER, SARTO	De Lanaudière	Montreal, Que.
GÉLINAS, LOUIS P.	Montarville	Montreal, Que.
GERSHAW, F. W.	Medicine Hat	Medicine Hat, Alta.
GLADSTONE, JAMES	Lethbridge	Cardston, Alta.
GOUIN, L. M.	De Salaberry	Montreal, Que.
GRANT, THOMAS V.	Montague	Montague, P.E.I.
GROSART, ALLISTER	Pickering	Ottawa, Ont.
HAIG, J. CAMPBELL	River Heights	Winnipeg, Man.
HAYDEN, SALTER A.	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
HNATYSHYN, JOHN	Saskatoon	Saskatoon, Sask.
HODGES, NANCY	Victoria	Victoria, B.C.
HOLLETT, MALCOLM	Burin	St. John's, Nfld.
HUGESSEN, A. K.	Inkerman	Montreal, Que.
INMAN, F. ELSIE	Murray Harbour	Montague, P.E.I.
IRVINE, OLIVE L.	Lisgar	Winnipeg, Man.
ISNOR, Gordon B.	Halifax-Dartmouth	Halifax, N.S.
JODOIN, MARIANA B.	Sorel	Montreal, Que.
KINLEY, JOHN J.	Queens-Lunenburg	Lunenburg, N.S.
LAMBERT, NORMAN P.	Ottawa	Ottawa, Ont.
LANG, DANIEL A.	South York	Toronto, Ont.
LEFRANÇOIS, J. EUGÈNE	Repentigny	Montreal, Que.
LEONARD, T. D'ARCY	Toronto-Rosedale	Toronto, Ont.
MACDONALD, JOHN J.	Queens	R.R. 9, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
MACDONALD, JOHN M.	Cape Breton	North Sydney, N.S.
MACDONALD, W. ROSS, P.C.	Brantford	Brantford, Ont.
MCCUTCHEON, M. WALLACE, P.C.	Gormley	Toronto, Ont.
MCGRAND, FRED A.	Sunbury	Fredericton Junction, N.B
MCKEEN, STANLEY S.	Vancouver	Vancouver, B.C.

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
McLEAN, A. NEIL	Southern New Brunswick	Saint John, N.B.
MÉTHOT, LÉON	Shawinigan	Trois Rivières, Que.
MOLSON, HARTLAND DE M.	Alma	Montreal, Que.
MONETTE, GUSTAVE	Mille Isles	Montreal, Que.
O'LEARY, CLEMENT A.	Antigonish-Guysborough	Antigonish, N.S.
O'LEARY, M. GRATTAN	Carleton	Ottawa, Ont.
PATERSON, NORMAN McL.	Thunder Bay	Fort William, Ont.
PEARSON, ARTHUR M.	Lumsden	Lumsden, Sask.
PHILLIPS, ORVILLE H.	Prince	Alberton, P.E.I.
POULIOT, JEAN-FRANÇOIS	De la Durantaye	Rivière du Loup, Que.
POWER, C. G., P.C.	Gulf	St. Pacôme, Que.
QUART, JOSIE D.	Victoria	Quebec, Que.
RATTENBURY, NELSON	Saint John	Saint John, N.B.
REID, THOMAS	New Westminster	New Westminster, B.C.
ROBERTSON, WISHART McL., P.C.	Shelburne	Truro, N.S.
ROEBUCK, ARTHUR W.	Toronto-Trinity	Toronto, Ont.
SAVOIE, CALIXTE F.	L'Acadie	Moncton, N.B.
SMITH, DONALD	Queens-Shelburne	Liverpool, N.S.
SMITH, SYDNEY J.	Kamloops	Kamloops, B.C.
STAMBAUGH, J. WESLEY	Bruce	Bruce, Alta.
SULLIVAN, JOSEPH A.	North York	Toronto, Ont.
TAYLOR, WILLIAM H.	Norfolk	R.R. 3, Brantford, Ont.
THORVALDSON, GUNNAR S.	Winnipeg South	Winnipeg, Man.
TREMBLAY, LEONARD D. S.	Lauzon	St. Malachie, Que.
VAILLANCOURT, CYRILLE	Kennebec	Lévis, Que.
VENIOT, CLARENCE J.	Gloucester	Bathurst, N.B.
VIEN, THOMAS, P.C.	De Lorimier	Outremont, Que.
WALKER, DAVID, P.C.	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
WELCH, FRANK C.	Kings	Wolfville, N.S.
WHITE, GEORGE S., P.C.	Hastings-Frontenac	Madoc, Ont.
WILLIS, HARRY A.	Peel	Toronto, Ont.
WOOD, THOMAS H.	Regina	Regina, Sask.
WOODROW, ALLAN L.	Toronto Centre	Toronto, Ont.
YUZYK, PAUL	Fort Garry	Winnipeg, Man.

SENATORS OF CANADA

BY PROVINCES

April 3, 1965

ONTARIO—24

	SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
	THE HONOURABLE
1	NORMAN P. LAMBERT	Ottawa	Ottawa.
2	SALTER ADRIAN HAYDEN	Toronto	Toronto.
3	NORMAN MCLEOD PATERSON	Thunder Bay	Fort William.
4	WILLIAM RUPERT DAVIES	Kingston	Toronto.
5	WILLIAM HORACE TAYLOR	Norfolk	R.R. 3, Brantford.
6	CHARLES L. BISHOP	Ottawa	Ottawa.
7	ARTHUR WENTWORTH ROEBUCK	Toronto-Trinity	Toronto.
8	ALLAN L. WOODROW	Toronto Centre	Toronto.
9	WILLIAM ROSS MACDONALD, P.C.	Brantford	Brantford.
10	JOHN J. CONNOLLY, P.C.	Ottawa West	Ottawa.
11	DAVID A. CROLL	Toronto-Spadina	Toronto.
12	THOMAS D'ARCY LEONARD	Toronto-Rosedale	Toronto.
13	GEORGE STANLEY WHITE, P.C.	Hastings-Frontenac	Madoc.
14	JOSEPH A. SULLIVAN	North York	Toronto.
15	LIONEL CHOQUETTE	Ottawa East	Ottawa.
16	HARRY A. WILLIS	Peel	Toronto.
17	M. WALLACE MCCUTCHEON, P.C.	Gormley	Toronto.
18	M. GRATTAN O'LEARY	Carleton	Ottawa.
19	ALLISTER GROSART	Pickering	Ottawa.
20	DAVID JAMES WALKER, P.C.	Toronto	Toronto.
21	RHEAL BELISLE	Sudbury	Sudbury.
22	DANIEL AIKEN LANG	South York	Toronto.
23	JOHN BLACK AIRD	Toronto	Toronto.
24

QUEBEC—24

	SENATORS	ELECTORAL DIVISION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
	THE HONOURABLE
1	ADRIAN K. HUGESSEN	Inkerman	Montreal.
2	LÉON MERCIER GOUIN	De Salaberry	Montreal.
3	THOMAS VIEN, P.C.	De Lorimier	Outremont.
4	CYRILLE VAILLANCOURT	Kennebec	Lévis.
5	VINCENT DUPUIS	Rigaud	Montreal.
6	JEAN-MARIE DESSUREAULT	Stadacona	Quebec.
7	PAUL HENRI BOUFFARD	Grandville	Quebec.
8	MARIANA BEAUCHAMP JODOIN	Sorel	Montreal.
9	LEONARD DAVID SWEEZEY TREMBLAY	Lauzon	St. Malachie.
10	SARTO FOURNIER	De Lanaudière	Montreal.
11	HARTLAND DE MONTARVILLE MOLSON	Alma	Montreal.
12	CHARLES GAVAN POWER, P.C.	Gulf	St. Pacôme.
13	JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT	De la Durantaye	Rivière du Loup.
14	J. EUGÈNE LEFRANÇOIS	Repentigny	Montreal.
15	LÉON MÉTHOT	Shawinigan	Trois Rivières.
16	GUSTAVE MONETTE	Mille Isles	Montreal.
17	JOSIE ALICE DINAN QUART	Victoria	Quebec.
18	LOUIS PHILIPPE BEAUBIEN	Bedford	Montreal.
19	JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.	Rougemont	Quebec.
20	MAURICE BOURGET (Speaker)	The Laurentides	Lévis.
21	LOUIS P. GÉLINAS	Montarville	Montreal.
22	ROMUALD BOURQUE	De la Vallière	Outremont.
23	AZELLUS DENIS, P.C.	La Salle	Montreal.
24

NOVA SCOTIA—10

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
1 WISHART MCLEA ROBERTSON, P.C.	Shelburne	Truro.
2 JOHN JAMES KINLEY	Queens-Lunenburg	Lunenburg.
3 JOSEPH WILLIE COMEAU	Clare	Comeauville.
4 GORDON B. ISNOR	Halifax-Dartmouth	Halifax.
5 DONALD SMITH	Queens-Shelburne	Liverpool.
6 HAROLD CONNOLLY	Halifax North	Halifax.
7 FREDERICK MURRAY BLOIS	Colchester-Hants	Truro.
8 JOHN MICHAEL MACDONALD	Cape Breton	North Sydney.
9 CLEMENT AUGUSTINE O'LEARY	Antigonish-Guysborough	Antigonish.
10 FRANK C. WELCH	Kings	Wolfville.

NEW BRUNSWICK—10

THE HONOURABLE
1 CLARENCE JOSEPH VENIOT	Gloucester	Bathurst.
2 ALEXANDER NEIL MCLEAN	Southern New Brunswick	Saint John.
3 GEORGE PERCIVAL BURCHILL	Northumberland-Miramichi	South Nelson.
4 MURIEL MCQUEEN FERGUSSON	Fredericton	Fredericton.
5 FRED A. MCGRAND	Sunbury	Fredericton Junction.
6 CALIXTE F. SAVOIE	L'Acadie	Moncton.
7 ALFRED JOHNSON BROOKS, P.C.	Royal	Sussex.
8 EDGAR FOURNIER	Madawaska-Restigouche	Iroquois.
9 NELSON RATTENBURY	Saint John	Saint John.
10

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—4

THE HONOURABLE
1 THOMAS VINCENT GRANT	Montague	Montague.
2 FLORENCE ELSIE INMAN	Murray Harbour	Montague.
3 JOHN JOSEPH MACDONALD	Queens	R.R. 9, Charlottetown.
4 ORVILLE HOWARD PHILLIPS	Prince	Alberton.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—6

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
1 JOHN WALLACE DE B. FARRIS	Vancouver South	Vancouver.
2 STANLEY STEWART MCKEEN	Vancouver	Vancouver.
3 THOMAS REID	New Westminster	New Westminster.
4 NANCY HODGES	Victoria	Victoria.
5 SYDNEY JOHN SMITH	Kamloops	Kamloops.
6

MANITOBA—6

THE HONOURABLE
1 ARTHUR L. BEAUBIEN	Provencher	St. Jean Baptiste.
2 THOMAS ALEXANDER CRERAR, P.C.	Churchill	Winnipeg.
3 GUNNAR S. THORVALDSON	Winnipeg South	Winnipeg.
4 OLIVE LILLIAN IRVINE	Lisgar	Winnipeg.
5 J. CAMPBELL HAIG	River Heights	Winnipeg.
6 PAUL YUZYK	Fort Garry	Winnipeg.

SASKATCHEWAN—6

THE HONOURABLE
1 WALTER M. ASELTINE, P.C.	Rosetown	Rosetown.
2 THOMAS H. WOOD	Regina	Regina.
3 WILLIAM ALBERT BOUCHER	Prince Albert	Prince Albert.
4 ARTHUR M. PEARSON	Lumsden	Lumsden.
5 JOHN HNATYSHYN	Saskatoon	Saskatoon.
6

ALBERTA—6

THE HONOURABLE
1 FRED WILLIAM GERSHAW	Medicine Hat	Medicine Hat.
2 J. WESLEY STAMBAUGH	Bruce	Bruce.
3 DONALD CAMERON	Banff	Edmonton.
4 JAMES GLADSTONE	Lethbridge	Cardston.
5 JOHN ALEXANDER BUCHANAN	Edmonton	Edmonton.
6

NEWFOUNDLAND—6

SENATORS	DESIGNATION	POST OFFICE ADDRESS
THE HONOURABLE
1 ALEXANDER BOYD BAIRD	St. John's	St. John's.
2 MICHAEL G. BASHA	West Coast	Curling.
3 FREDERICK GORDON BRADLEY, P.C.	Bonavista-Twillingate	Bonavista.
4 MALCOLM HOLLETT	Burin	St. John's.
5 ERIC COOK	St. John's East	St. John's.
6

THE SENATE

Officers and Chiefs of Principal Branches

Clerk of the Senate and Clerk of the Parliaments	JOHN F. MACNEILL, Q.C.,B.A.,LL.B.
Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel	E. RUSSELL HOPKINS, B.A., LL.B.
First Clerk Assistant	ALCIDE PAQUETTE, B.A.
Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod	C. R. LAMOUREUX, D.S.O.
Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod	ALFRED FORTIER, E.D., C.D.
Chief Treasury Officer	J. W. DEAN
Editor of Debates and Chief of Reporting Branch	GRAYDON HAGEN
Chief of Minutes and Journals (English)	MRS. J. F. SUTHERLAND
Chief of Minutes and Journals (French)	MISS M. T. BILODEAU
Postmaster	HENRI AUBRY
Supervisor of Stenographic Service (English)	MISS M. EDITH WRAY
Chief of Stationery Branch and Furniture Control Officer	HUGH E. MCCULLOCH
Chief of Joint Distribution Office	W. R. GRAY
Chief of Protective Service	JOHN C. PHIMISTER
Manager of Parliamentary Restaurant	W. PENTECOST

Parliamentary Reporters

(English) T. S. Hubbard, Jr. (Assistant Chief of Reporting Branch), F. C. K. Crockett, G. R. Baker, H. D. Griffith, Lorcan OhUiginn, W. J. Culleton.

(French) J. R. Langlois, Aurèle Chenier

Assistant Parliamentary Reporters

G. K. Hubbard, Mrs. Lillian Bolduc

TRANSLATORS

Bureau for Translations

Department of Secretary of State

Chief of Debates Division	DENYS GOULET

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Parliamentary Librarian	ERIK J. SPICER, C.D., B.A., B.L.S., M.A.L.S.
Associate Parliamentary Librarian	GUY SYLVESTRE, M.A., F.R.S.C.

CANADA

Debates of the Senate

OFFICIAL REPORT

Tuesday, February 18, 1964

OPENING OF SECOND SESSION TWENTY-SIXTH PARLIAMENT

Parliament having been summoned by Proclamation to meet this day for the dispatch of business:

The Senate met at 11.30 a.m.

Prayers.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa
3rd February 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will arrive at the main entrance of the Parliament Buildings at 3.00 p.m. on Tuesday the 18th February, 1964, and when it has been signified that all is in readiness, will proceed to the Chamber of the Senate to open formally the Second Session of the Twenty-sixth Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that:

Hon. Azellus Denis, P.C.
Daniel Aiken Lang, Esquire
Nelson Rattenbury, Esquire, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate.

NEW SENATORS INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senators were severally introduced; presented Her Majesty's writs of summons, which were read by the Clerk Assistant; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and were seated:

Hon. Azellus Denis, P.C., of Montreal, Quebec, (Electoral Division, La Salle), introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Dupuis.

Hon. Daniel Aiken Lang, of Toronto, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford).

Hon. Nelson Rattenbury, of Saint John, New Brunswick, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Burchill.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), the Senate adjourned until 2.45 p.m.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 2.45 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

At three o'clock His Excellency the Governor General proceeded to the Senate Chamber and took his seat upon the Throne. His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and, that House being come, with their Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to open the Second Session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I welcome you to the Second Session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament of Canada.

This is a time when it is possible, despite our many problems, to deliberate on Canadian and world affairs in a spirit of reasoned hopefulness.

My Government will attempt to make its full contribution to the maintenance of peace and the improvement of international relations; to the strengthening of our national unity through a co-operative federalism; to fostering the full employment of our people and the efficient growth of our economy; and to broadening the opportunities for a good life which should be open to all Canadians.

We are looking forward to the visit this autumn of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth. The presence of the Queen of Canada will mark for our country the historic occasion of the interprovincial conferences on confederation; it will also re-emphasise the importance we attach to the Commonwealth, through which so much can be done to advance understanding and co-operation in this increasingly interdependent world.

We recently had great pleasure in welcoming to Ottawa the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom, with whom many matters of mutual concern were fruitfully discussed.

Since the close of the last session of Parliament, my Prime Minister has visited France and the United States. His friendly discussions with the President of the Republic of France will help to encourage an increasingly intimate relationship between France and Canada.

The unique partnership of Canada and the United States was symbolized in the signing by the President and the Prime Minister of an agreement by which the two countries become, for the first time, joint owners of property in what is to be the Roosevelt-Campobello International Park. You will be asked to approve legislation implementing this agreement.

A protocol signed during the Prime Minister's visit to Washington will make the Columbia River Treaty a basis for developments of great advantage to both countries. This was made possible by successful negotiations between my ministers and the Government of British Columbia. You will be asked to examine and approve the Columbia River Treaty and the protocol.

Canada will this year be taking part in important trade and tariff negotiations. My ministers will negotiate for the expansion of markets for Canadian exports through the liberalization of world trade.

In the conduct of external affairs, my Government will continue to work for the conciliation of international differences and for practical steps toward adequately controlled disarmament. Such steps depend on keeping the defences of the free world strong. My Government will submit for your approval a statement of a new defence policy designed to maintain an effective Canadian contribution to keeping the peace in co-operation with our allies.

At home there has been a heartening expansion of the economy. Employment has increased at an accelerated rate and the number of Canadians seeking work has fallen. More progress is, however, required. My ministers will propose a variety of measures which will further increase employment and raise the standard of living by strengthening and expanding the primary and secondary industries of Canada.

Comprehensive proposals to reform public regulation of the railways, and to facilitate the adaptation of the railway system to present and future needs, will be submitted for your consideration.

A measure will be placed before you to establish minimum wages, maximum working hours, statutory holidays and other labour standards for work under federal jurisdiction.

A measure will be placed before you to establish a comprehensive system of contributory pensions.

You will be asked to authorize, after consultation with the provinces, arrangements whereby university students requiring such assistance will be able to secure loans without payment of interest during the years of study.

Major amendments to the National Housing Act will be proposed.

You will be asked to approve the changes in fiscal arrangements with the provinces, decided upon at the Federal-Provincial Conference last November, which implement the principle of equalization in provincial revenues from the shared tax fields. It is my ministers' policy to continue the series of federal-provincial conferences which last year achieved considerable progress in improving federal-provincial co-operation.

A measure will be placed before you to provide for a minister responsible for Rural Development, in order that my Government may carry further its policy of giving increased attention to the needs of agriculture in both eastern and western Canada. You will be asked to consider other measures to assist in the improvement of farms and of farm income.

A measure will be placed before you to establish a twelve-mile limit for the use of Canadian fisheries. In co-operation with the provinces, my Government will undertake a national fisheries development program reflecting the outcome of the Federal-Provincial Conference on Fisheries held last month.

You will be asked to consider measures to strengthen the position of periodicals published in Canada.

A measure to provide for the redistribution of electoral districts will be placed before you.

My Government intends to institute an inquiry to advise on the best practicable way to set enforceable limits to expenditures in election campaigns.

A measure to establish an age of retirement from the Senate will be placed before you.

You will be asked to consider amendments to the Citizenship Act which will ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born.

You will be asked to consider measures to facilitate the reorganization of government in the interests of more effective and more efficient administration. In particular, a measure will be proposed to establish the Treasury Board under the presidency of a separate minister, who will devote his full attention to the increasingly urgent problems of the management of the public service and government expenditures. The President of the Treasury Board will be responsible for implementing other recommendations of the Royal Commission on Government Organization.

You will be asked to consider other legislative proposals.

Members of the House of Commons,

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required for the services and payments authorized by Parliament.

You will be asked to agree to the re-establishment of committees on defence and on the procedures and organization of Parliament, and to establish other special committees.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons,

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

The House of Commons withdrew.

His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

RAILWAYS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt presented Bill S-1, relating to railways.

Bill read first time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONSIDERATION ON FEBRUARY 25

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency has caused to be placed in my hands a copy of his speech delivered this day from the Throne to the two houses of Parliament.

Honourable senators, when shall the speech be taken into consideration?

(Translation):

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Leonard:

> That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General be taken into consideration on Tuesday, February 25, 1964.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 19, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE SENATORS CAMPBELL AND TURGEON

TRIBUTES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I regret to have to announce officially to the Senate that since we last met here before Christmas we have lost two of our colleagues by death, Senator Peter Campbell and Senator Gray Turgeon.

Senator Peter Campbell of Toronto was not vouchsafed the Biblical three score years and ten. He died at the age of 65. Yet in his time he accomplished much. Indeed, he accomplished much more than many men who have lived longer. And because of this he will be long remembered and greatly missed in the life of his home community and of his country.

For some twenty years he was a senator. Here, as in every other facet of his career, his integrity was luminous. In committee he was precise and realistic; in the house he was direct and effectively brief. Favour he never sought; fear he did not understand; and the gallantry of his last few years here, when he knew he was afflicted with a relentless cancer, was inspiring.

Peter Campbell was a brilliant colleague, and his monument in Parliament is his significant contribution to the recast Income Tax Act. The industrial development of Canada could not have pushed on steadily during and since the late war if that legislation had not come into being.

Even before he became a senator, he influenced the review of the Canada Shipping Act, and he appeared here before committees as counsel for parts of that industry. For twenty years prior to his coming to the Senate, and, of course, thereafter, he practised the profession of law in the City of Toronto. In those earlier twenty years he schooled himself for this later contribution to the financial, the insurance, the industrial, and the shipping enterprises in which he was later to engage. In all of his business undertakings he was a leader. His advice was sound and his influence was sought. As a result he had a prominent and direct part in our national economic development which, in his day, was so great. He used that experience to help shape and direct the nation's economic policies, particularly in his work here in the chamber. Peter Campbell was a living example of the mutual help that business and government can be to each other.

During his first twenty years while he was a student at school he did well, and it is interesting to observe that his participation in athletics then—in track and field, baseball and winter sports—found its counterpart in his later life in sailing, skiing and golf. Much of the credit for the development of the Collingwood area as a ski center belongs to him.

The charities of Toronto knew him, especially the Salvation Army and St. Michaels Hospital, and, as so many on both sides of this house can testify, so did the political life of his country.

Peter Campbell was an informed and staunch Liberal. He enjoyed the confidence of all the contemporary leaders of his party although, perhaps, he was closest to the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe. But his integrity and capacity were such that he enjoyed at all times the respect and affection of his political opponents as well.

Senator Campbell's passing leaves a great void in this house, but that void is greatest in his nome and for his beloved wife and his affectionate children and grandchildren.

Honourable senators, in the course of a lifetime—and perhaps especially so in public life—one meets people who can best be described as beloved. Gray Turgeon was such a man. Every one of his Senate colleagues was his friend, and his quiet demonstration of friendship, never overdone but always warm and sincere, was a joy to all of us here. His mother was a Baldwin, and this mixture of the Gallic and the Gaelic in the blood of his heart gave him a head start over most other mortals.

The Turgeon family was of New Brunswick, though the late senator's father was born in Levis and educated in Quebec. It was a family which was to contribute much to the service of Canada. Onesiphore Turgeon, our late colleague's father, represented Gloucester, New Brunswick, in the House of Commons for the first 23 years of this century. For 21 years thereafter he was a respected member of this chamber. And when he died in 1944, in his 95th year, Senator King, then Government leader in the Senate, referred to the high public estate to which Senator Onesiphore Turgeon had succeeded by coupling his name with some of his great contemporaries, Sir George Foster, A. G. Blair, H. R. Emmerson, L. P. Farris, Sir Douglas Hazen and Senator King's own father. "Not all of these men", said Senator King on that occasion, "were of the same political stripe—but they held one another in very high respect."

Our late colleague's brother, Honourable Alphonse Turgeon, now in retirement from the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan, has been distinguished on the bench, in the diplomatic service and as chairman of important royal commissions.

Senator Gray Turgeon made his career in western Canada. He sat in the Legislature of Alberta for eight years after 1913. Between 1935 and 1945 he represented the people of the riding of Cariboo, British Columbia, in in the House of Commons. His designation here for his 17 years with us was "Cariboo". And, although he lived latterly in Vancouver, his heart and his interests were always with the people to the north. He spoke here often of those earlier days, praising the men and women who spent their lives opening up its vast resources. It never seemed to occur to him that he too had played a worthy part in that development.

During his parliamentary time in both houses, the work of the United Nations Organization on behalf of refugees, displaced persons, and underdeveloped countries became Gray Turgeon's avocation. And his special qualities of mind and heart became focused upon the urgent problems of underprivileged people.

He was a strong party man, a strong Liberal, and he gave generously of himself to the party's work. He was grateful, too, for the opportunities his party afforded him for public service.

A son of New Brunswick, a son of Alberta, a son of British Columbia, he was truly Canadian throughout his career. And more, he was, in his own way, a symbol of the emerging status of our country in the councils of the nations. Without him, we are poorer here; but because of him, we are richer. Our sense of loss, as well as our pride in his accomplishments, we share with his beloved wife and family.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) who has so eloquently paid tribute to our late colleagues, Senator Gordon Peter Campbell and Senator James Gray Turgeon. I am sure it is most regrettable to all of us that we should have to start this new session on such a sad note, although unfortunately this is not a new experience.

The late Senator Campbell was a most valuable member of this house, having served his country with distinction in Parliament for 21 years. He had an outstanding career as a lawyer and as a businessman, and as such was well known not only in the City of Toronto, but throughout Canada and in the United States. Senator Campbell took a very active part in the deliberations of this house. The contributions he made have been well catalogued, and I do not need to mention them again. He had been ill for some time before his decease; indeed, he was ill when he attended the last session of the Senate. In spite of that, he continued to take an active part in the proceedings right up to the very end. To me, as I am sure to all other members of the Senate, that was an indication of the courage of this great man.

Honourable senators, may I add that I had not the good fortune of knowing Senator Campbell very well, for I only met him shortly after I first came to the Senate a few years ago, although, of course, I knew of his outstanding career. I know that other members of this chamber who were associated with him in business in the City of Toronto would like to join in paying tribute to his memory.

We mourn the passing of Senator Campbell. I join with the Leader of the Government in extending heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Campbell and her three children.

Senator James Gray Turgeon passed away a few days ago. He also was greatly dedicated to public service. The Leader of the Government referred to the late senator's distinguished career, and also mentioned that he had been a member of the legislature of Alberta and that his parliamentary career had a span of over fifty years—truly a wonderful career in this country.

I met Senator Turgeon first in 1935, when he and I came to the House of Commons together, each from different parts of the country, he from British Columbia and I from New Brunswick. We became close personal friends, and that friendship continued until the end of last session.

Senator Turgeon was respected and admired by all his colleagues in both chambers. All of us in the Senate were particularly interested in his extensive and outstanding service to Canada in the capacity of representative on various special committees of the United Nations and of the International Labour Organizations. In this connection his speeches in this chamber and elsewhere showed a wide knowledge and understanding of international affairs, and we often hear him quoted.

On behalf of my colleagues and myself, I extend our sincere sympathy to his widow and to the members of the family.

May I say that coming as I do from the Province of New Brunswick I was pleased to hear the Leader of the Government mention the fact that we in that province are very proud indeed of the Turgeon family, French-speaking Canadians who took root in and contributed greatly to the life of New Brunswick, the father having been for many years one of the outstanding men of the province in that list of prominent men mentioned by the Leader of the Government. The sons went to other parts of Canada and took their high place, on the bench, in the Senate, and in diplomatic circles. I repeat, we were indeed proud of the Turgeon name and the Turgeon family in the Province of New Brunswick.

May I say to the honourable Leader of the Government, who mentioned the fact that these two distinguished senators belonged to his party, that we extend our sympathy to that party. Its members have suffered a great loss, as indeed has Canada, in the passing of these men.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, may I add a few words to what has been said in expressing our sense of loss in the death of Senator Campbell and Senator Turgeon.

Senator Campbell was appointed to the Senate in 1943. I have known him for all the years I have been in professional life. He was at law school when I was there, although not in the same year; and over the years afterwards, in politics, in professional life, in business, we were almost daily in communication. A great sense of camaraderie existed between us, and that, of course, increased substantially when he came to the Senate. Thus, when Senator Campbell passed away, as you will appreciate, my feeling of loss was very strong. I had been talking to him some seven or eight days before he died, and in the course of the discussion we talked about the plans for the next session of Parliament, although I believe he knew, as I knew, that time for him was running out quickly, that he might not be able to attend another session. Therefore, I have a real sense of personal loss.

There is also the loss which we feel as senators: his presence, his judgment, his ability are no longer available to us. Then there is the great loss suffered by his family, his widow and his children.

The other day I went back and read again the Hansard report of the committee meetings in December of last year on the income tax amendments. The statements made and the questions asked by Senator Campbell in the course of that study stand out for their clarity of thought and expression and forcefulness, and nowhere in them do you find even a whisper of surrender to this fatal illness which he had and which I am sure he knew he had. He knew even then there was not much longer to go, yet he carried on.

I remember the late senator expressing his philosophy to me—I think it was only in December of last year—when he said, "You know, if you waited until you felt 100 per cent well all the time before undertaking things you would never get them done. So I just carry on to the fullest extent that I can, as though there was no ailment of any kind bothering me, and that is the way I hope I can continue until the final bell rings." That was typical of Peter Campbell.

Reference has been made to the income tax study which took a period of about two years after the close of the last war. Senator Campbell was the one who introduced that resolution in the Senate; he was a most active, alert and conscientious member of that committee, and contributed much to its success. As you know, its report produced a complete revision of the approach to the whole question of income tax in this country, which was much needed after the war.

I should like also to refer for a moment to the fact that following the war, when many regulations and orders in council were being passed into legislation, Senator Campbell was one of the many senators who took a very strong position with respect to the carrying into statute law the restraints on the economic freedom and the operation of business such as had been found necessary to give full play to during the war years. So every piece of legislation that came before us during the several years following the end of the war was closely scrutinized, and Senator Campbell was devoted in his attention to these measures, to see to it that only a minimum of restraint was perpetuated in the legislation that was introduced in those days to give statutory effect to what had formerly been orders in council and regulations.

I believe I can say of Senator Campbell that his concern in all legislation was for the national interest. His thinking in support or in opposition to proposed legislation was dictated by an independence of judgment; his political affiliations did not colour or abridge his judgment and its application to legislation that came before us. In the practice of his profession he achieved a high standing; in business his judgment was much sought after; yet, he found time for public service in many directions.

I close my reference to the late Senator Campbell by saying that many of us have lost a very dear friend, the Senate has lost a most able member, and the country is poorer because of his passing.

May I say a few words about Senator Gray Turgeon. He was appointed to the Senate in 1947, and senators who were appointed subsequently did not see the Gray Turgeon we saw in the early years that he was in the Senate. This was before he suffered impairment of health. He took part in the debates, he was active in committee work, he attended United Nations meetings.

The late senator spoke on many occasions in the Senate, and I went back recently to read some of what he had said. Throughout it all one could see that he was an excellent speaker, forceful and, at times, oratorical. Indeed, I understand that across the country he had a reputation for being an excellent public speaker. We saw that in the first few years he was in the Senate, when he was an active member, and this is apparent from a reading of Senate Hansard reports of those years. Later, his health became impaired and he could not take a vigorous part in the debates, yet you will recall his faithful attendance in the Senate and at meetings of its committees. Our leader described him very well when he used the word "beloved". There are several other words one could use in the same connotation: wholesome, kindly, a real friend who was deeply interested in all those about him.

It is sad that time marches on, that our humanity has to give way, and that ultimately impediment of faculties develops which leads to the passing of people who in their time made great contributions to the welfare of our country. But we can remember them for the greatness which existed in them; we can remember them for their warm personal charm, thoughtfulness and hopefulness; and we can wish them well now they are at rest.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it is said that there are certain advantages in growing old. One's judgment is supposed to increase or improve. I do not know whether or not that is true. However, there are also disadvantages in growing old, one of those being that your friends of long ago have disappeared one after the other. They drop off like leaves in winter weather. That is the situation with me today, and with so many of my colleagues here.

I knew Peter Campbell a very long time ago when we as young lawyers were both practising law in the City of Toronto. In the debates during the last session, when we were considering the Maritime Unions Trustee bill, I recalled our coming in contact in the first maritime strike on the Great Lakes. I was representing the union we were discussing last session, long before the communists took over, and he was the solicitor for some of the shipping companies, and between the two of us we devised a system which resulted in an agreement that we were both able to accept. I sold it to the men and he sold it to the companies, and we settled the strike in a very few days.

That of course brought me close to Peter Campbell and gave me some appreciation of his great ability, and his persuasiveness that flowed not so much from words as from character. He was a lovely person. Later on I had still closer contact with him when he and I managed the Liberal campaign in the Province of Ontario for the federal election of 1945. Mention has been made of his integrity. I can tell my political opponents across the aisle that his integrity was never questioned even by his opponents. Absolutely honest, always kind, always displaying good common sense, he played a most effective part not only in his party but in his country's affairs.

I was present when Senator Campbell introduced his amendments to the Income Tax Act some years ago. It is true that by doing so he played a part that will not soon be forgotten in this chamber or outside, because he brought common sense and loyalty into the legislation of Canada.

I also know the late senator's family, and have for them a deep sympathy. I extend to them my condolences in the loss of a good, a distinguished, and a generous husband and father.

I have known Gray Turgeon for a long time; indeed I knew his father before him. I met his father in political struggles back in the early part of this century.

Gray Turgeon was a likeable man, a very charming person, and one whom I was proud to call my friend. He did not come from my own city, as did Senator Campbell, but nevertheless he was very close to me and I regret most sincerely his passing.

Hon. W. Rupert Davies: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few brief words to what has already been said in respect to our two colleagues who have passed away, and to endorse all that has been said about them.

When Senator Turgeon first came to the Senate he was, as has been said, a very able and forceful speaker. In later years he was less forceful, but he always had sound ideas. I got to know him very well because for the past two or three years we were deskmates. I had the opportunity of making several visits to his office where we had long talks about his career and I learned how he had started in a humble way. He was quite a force in this house, and now that he has gone he will be greatly missed.

Senator Peter Campbell came into the Senate a few months after I did. He was born in Kent County, where I had spent ten years of my life running a weekly newspaper in a small community about ten miles from the town where the father of Peter Campbell ran a large and prosperous hotel. Senator Campbell started his law career in that county, entering the law office then operated by one Mr. Warner Murphy who later practised in Sarnia and represented Sarnia as a member of Parliament. Senator Campbell entered his office as a young man and got considerable rural experience because, among other things, he had to visit several small villages each week, spending a day here and a day there doing business for his firm. After he came to the Senate we became warm friends. We used to discuss many things about Kent County, and then I learned what a prominent part he had taken in athletics in his native county.

Senator Campbell was a man of courage. He knew he was a sick man. Although undergoing treatment in hospital during the Christmas holidays of 1963, he came out on Christmas Day to spend that day with his family. Then, too, on New Year's Day he came out again, although still a patient in hospital and still receiving treatment, to attend the Lieutenant Governor's reception. He moved around there chatting with this person and that person, enjoying himself and making himself pleasant to others, and no one knew he was seriously ill. He showed his courage in trying to do so much to make the Lieutenant Governor's reception a success.

I should like to express my regret that both these senators have passed away, to extend my sincere sympathy and condolences to their families, and to endorse what has been said about them by previous speakers.

Hon. Harry A. Willis: Honourable senators, I should like to reiterate and re-emphasize what Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), Senator Brooks and other senators have said with respect to the late Peter Campbell.

As has been said, he had a rural background, as have most of us. He came to Toronto and became a great corporation lawyer. His wise counsel and advice were sought by many corporations. In his obituary there were mentioned some 25 or 30 companies of which he was a director. Many others sought his services as a director, but he did not have the time for all of them. He and I were co-directors of the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair, although one might think that a man of his capacity and ability in business would not have time for services to a non-profit organization such as that. But the fact is he did, and he made valuable contributions to it.

Furthermore, as Senator Hayden has said, Senator Campbell was an adviser to the Government on much legislation concerning shipping, and also respecting financial matters such as revisions to the Income Tax Act.

Those of us who knew him well were aware that for several years it was occasionally necessary for him to take one or two days off to attend hospital for treatment. Despite this, he never divulged that he was a sick man. I have reason to believe that he knew precisely when his time was coming.

The Leader of the Government has said that Peter Campbell was interested in the Collingwood skiing area. I might say he was the founder of that skiing development. He made it his business years ago, and invested his own money in it to make it the success it is today. It is my view that had it not been for Senator Peter Campbell, skiing would not now be as popular a sport as it is in the Province of Ontario.

Had Senator Campbell lived until this month he would have been a member of the Senate for 21 years. He was appointed at the age of 44, the same age as our new colleague, Senator Lang. I trust that Senator Lang will make the contribution to this chamber that Senator Campbell did.

He was a wise counsellor. He was a friend of everyone. I have often said that if there was one Liberal senator that I would like to see move over to this side of the chamber it would be Senator Campbell. It may be that there are others I would like to include in that category, but Senator Campbell was non-partisan to the fullest degree.

I was interested in Senator Roebuck's remarks to the effect that he and Senator Campbell together managed a Liberal campaign in Ontario. I chaired the Conservative campaign alone, and if I had realized that I was up against so formidable an opposition as that I think I would have stopped right there.

I do not want to digress in my tributes to the memory of Senator Campbell, but I should mention that those of us who attended his funeral knew that he was an eminent churchman. He had been a member of all the committees of his church, which is located at King and Simcoe streets in Toronto. I mentioned to Senator Croll as we came away that I had never seen a church so filled with people from all walks of life who came to pay tribute to one man. It has been said of such a man that when our Maker made him He must have thrown away the mould. We may never again see such a man.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, it is with a sense of deep sorrow that I add my voice to those of my colleagues who have paid their tributes to our deceased colleagues, and expressed their sympathy to their families. They have spoken so feelingly, eloquently and comprehensively that my remarks can be brief; they are, nevertheless, very sincere.

Peter Campbell will long be remembered by all who knew him. He was not only an able lawyer, not only a man of wise and sound judgment in the affairs of business and of state, not only a conscientious public servant in the discharge of his duties as a member of the Senate, but he was more. He was a very human person. He was kind, courteous, generous and thoughtful of others. Consequently, he endeared himself to a host of friends. It is significant that it was those who knew him best who loved him most.

During the last several years, as has been said here, he lived under the shadow of death but he carried on with tremendous courage, with a smile, with never a word of complaint, and with never an admission of his impending fate.

Senator Davies has referred to his seeing the late Senator Campbell on New Year's Day. I too saw him just a few days before he died, at a gathering in down-town Toronto. He was gay, bright and cheery, and at that time he never indicated for a moment that that morning he had taken a blood transfusion in order to give himself enough strength to meet and greet his friends. So, in Peter Campbell's passing we have lost a very brave and good man.

I would like also to express the sorrow that I share with all other members of the Senate in the death of Gray Turgeon. Senator Turgeon was a gentle man. He was a quiet and unassuming man, but underneath the modesty of his outward manner there was a very keen and perceptive mind and great strength of character.

As has been mentioned, first by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) and then by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and others, Gray Turgeon belonged to a distinguished Canadian family. He, with his brother the former Chief Justice of Saskatchewan, and their father who was a member of the Senate, made the name of Turgeon widely known, greatly respected and highly honoured throughout Canada from sea to sea—from his birthplace in New Brunswick to where he died in British Columbia.

Peter Campbell and Gray Turgeon have gone, but they have left behind very precious memories. We in this chamber will treasure those memories for many years to come.

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: Honourable senators, I find it most difficult to add to what has already been said about our two late colleagues. As a comparatively junior senator I did not have the privilege of becoming as closely acquainted with Senator Campbell as I would have liked, and as many honourable senators were. He was entering the first stages of his affliction when I came here so I did not have the opportunity of knowing him well. However, as a colleague of the late Senator Turgeon I want to speak briefly of him, as one senator of another from my own province, and as an old and close friend of many years standing.

When the sad news of the passing of Senator Turgeon became known it was tempered for me by an awareness of the release that came to him—a release from a serious illness, a release from restricted activities for some time past.

From the first time I met Gray Turgeon, which was about 30 years ago when he was a member of the House of Commons for Cariboo in my province, we became very close and understanding friends. When I came into this honourable house he automatically became my sponsor, adviser and guide. I always felt that Senator Gray Turgeon was a beneficiary rather than a victim of circumstances of life that would have been discouraging to most men. He accepted his problems as challenges, and in his efforts to meet and beat them he developed the characteristics for which he was well known. I always thought that if these problems had not been so acute in his case we probably would have missed a great deal of what we gained from our friendship and acquaintanceship with him.

I have always compared the many fine characteristics of the man who was Gray Turgeon with a profusion of exquisite threads of gold and silver woven into a tapestry with a relatively drab background that served to bring out their beauty and brilliance.

I know I speak for a multitude of friends of the Turgeon family—and I know his immediate family very well—when I say that the sorrow of saying farewell at this time is assuaged by a profound faith and understanding of the spiritual values of life. I hope that that understanding and faith will strengthen and aid them in meeting the challenge they are facing today.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, over the years I have had a close personal association with our two deceased colleagues, and I should like to add a word to the so-well-deserved and eloquent tributes that have been paid to their memories this afternoon.

It seemed to me that some of the glamour and gaiety of the colourful ceremony of the opening of Parliament was somewhat dimmed yesterday by the thought which was present in our minds from time to time that Senator and Mrs. Campbell, who were known to many of us with affection and admiration, were not with us. They had missed few openings of Parliament since Senator Campbell's elevation to the Upper House, and their friendly greeting added much to the pleasure of these opening ceremonies over the years.

As has been said, Senator Campbell's passing was not unexpected. I will not repeat and emphasize how he had resisted this illness and had kept going, in spite of what he knew he was facing. One thing always struck me: never did he bring up the subject of sickness, never did he discuss his own illness, unless someone pressed him and asked him about his condition.

As has so well been said, in the Senate he took an active part, both in the chamber and in committees. He spoke from a wealth of experience and with a clarity which is equalled by few. Everyone listened intently to what he said and his views were not passed over lightly, because we knew that he knew what he was talking about.

Honourable senators, I rise today to refer, as I said, to my personal association with Senator Campbell. Since coming into this house, and as leader from time to time over the years, on one side or the other, I have had problems to face and frequently I turned to Senator Campbell for advice. Although he was busy and, as has been mentioned, corporations were calling for his advice, he never failed to discuss my problems with me. In fact, at times, I can tell you that when he could not be in Ottawa I consulted him by telephone. On one occasion I recall, he left his summer home and had to travel a considerable number of miles to get to a telephone to discuss a problem with which we were faced at that time.

We did not always agree on the solution but we always parted as friends. I shall never forget his personal loyalty to me. He was indeed a dear friend.

To Mrs. Campbell and to their son and daughter and to the grandchildren, I join with all who have spoken in expressing deep sympathy.

Senator Gray Turgeon was also a close personal friend of mine. Along with the Leader of the Opposition, I too entered the Commons with him in 1935. He had come to Ottawa a few days before I had arrived. I remember that he greeted me in the chamber of the House of Commons.

Last year, when Senator Turgeon was in hospital, I visited him one night—it was the night before he was to return to British Columbia—and I, along with Senator Sydney Smith, were probably the last two senators to see him. I was quite sure he would not return to Ottawa, and the thought came to me at that time, that Gray had greeted me when I entered the chamber of the House of Commons, and here I was saying goodbye to him at the hospital.

Gray Turgeon was indeed a true friend to us all. He was considerate. I remember the days in the House of Commons when he spoke convincingly and with force. His views were highly respected. I visited him in New York when he was on our delegation to the United Nations.

He did indeed come from a distinguished family and he, along with the members of his family, have rendered a great service to Canada.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, listening to our fellow members pay tribute to our two colleagues who have recently passed away reminded me of my own career.

It was pointed out a few moments ago that if Senator Campbell had lived one month more he would have been a senator for 21 years. Looking back, I find that in a month's time I shall have been a member of this chamber for 20 years. All this makes us realize that some day our turn will come. Some comfort is to be found in the thought that the members of our family will then be able to hear words of praise such as have been expressed about our two late colleagues.

I met Senator Campbell here in the Senate and even though I was not one of his close friends, I always listened carefully whenever he spoke, because I appreciated his clear mind and his sound judgment. That is why I took him as a model.

I grieve more at the death of Senator Turgeon because every year since his appointment to the Senate we used to get together one evening for dinner and to talk of old times. His forebears came from Levis and, in addition, his grandfather had received his education at the College de Lévis, as well as his brother, the former ambassador.

Consequently, it was quite natural for me to meet with Senator Turgeon and to discuss with him not only things of the past but also current events because, like his brother, he was associated with several major international organizations, especially since the war when he visited practically every country in the world as a representative of Canada.

On several instances I had the opportunity of meeting prominent persons from Europe and other countries who had worked with Senator Turgeon and who told me that his dynamic speeches certainly helped in promoting justice, considering that there always were divisions after a war. Senator Turgeon was always bent not on destroying but on building in the best interests of present and future generations so that everyone could live in peace.

We have just been told that Senator Turgeon was a great speaker. Not only was he a great speaker uttering words or sentences, but he was a dynamic speaker saying important things.

To our two colleagues, the country, yes the country, owes a debt of gratitude because both served it with much devotion and loyalty, and I am sure that divine Providence will now grant them the rest they have so well earned.

(Text):

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present to the Senate the report of the Parliamentary Librarian to the Second Session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament, 1964.

Ordered: That the report do lie on the Table.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have for tabling a list of thirteen documents, which are required to be tabled under various statutes, and I would ask consent to allow the list to be tabled and printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of today.

If I have consent, I would like to draw to the attention of honourable senators one or two of the documents that are to be included. One is certain amendments to the rules of the Supreme Court of Canada; another is a statement required by the Bank Act showing the operating earnings and expenses of the chartered banks for the year 1963; a third one deals with the abridged report of the Public Accounts of Canada; a fourth is a report of the Auditor General for the year ending March 31, 1963.

With consent, I now table the documents without reading the list.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The following documents were tabled:

Reports of the Department of Veterans Affairs and of the Canadian Pension Commission for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, chapter 80, and section 4(2) of the Pension Act, chapter 207, R.S.C. 1952, including the Report of the War Veterans Allowance Board for the same period. (French text).

Report of Operations under the Export and Import Permits Act for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 26 of the said act, chapter 27, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Order in Council P.C. 1963-1875, dated December 20, 1963, authorizing, under section 21 of the Export Credits Insurance Act, a contract of insurance by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation for shipment of 3.7 million pounds of unmanufactured Ontario flue-cured tobacco to Bulgaria, pursuant to section 21B of the said act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1960-61. (English text).

Capital Budget of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-146, dated January 30, 1964, approving same.

Statement concerning Refunds under The Refunds (Natural Resources) Act for the period May 17, 1963, to February 18, 1964, pursuant to section 3 of the said act, chapter 35, Statutes of Canada, 1932. Nil Statement.

Report of the Operations under the International River Improvements Act for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 11 of the said act, chapter 47, Statutes of Canada, 1955. (English and French texts).

Estimates of Expenditures and Capital Budget (Revised) of the Northern Canada Power Commission for the year ending March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-43, dated January 14, 1964, approving same. (English text).

General Order of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, dated December 12, 1963, amending the Rules of the Supreme Court of Canada, pursuant to section 103(4) of the Supreme Court Act, chapter 259, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of a Loan made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, pursuant to section 26(4) of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, chapter 242, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Statement, prepared in the form of Schedule Q to the Bank Act, showing Composite Current Operating Earnings and Expenses of the Chartered Banks of Canada for the financial years ended in 1963, pursuant to section 119(1) of the said act, chapter 48, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English text).

Public Accounts of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 64(1) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952 (English and French texts), in three volumes, as follows:

Volume I—Summary Report and Financial Statements;

Volume II—Details of Expenditures and Revenues; and Volume III—Financial Statements of Crown Corporations and Auditors' Reports thereon.

Public Accounts of Canada (Abridged Report) for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963. (English and French texts).

Report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) presented Bill S-2, respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ORDERS AND CUSTOMS

APPOINTMENT

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt:

That all the senators present during this session be appointed a committee to consider the Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament, and that the said committee have leave to meet in the Senate Chamber when and as often as they please.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

APPOINTMENT

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt:

That pursuant to Rule 77, the following senators, to wit: the Honourable Senators Beaubien (Provencher), Brooks, Choquette, Connolly (Ottawa West), Fergusson, Lefrançois, Macdonald (Cape Breton), Monette, Smith (Kamloops), Taylor (Norfolk) and Thorvaldson be appointed a Committee of Selection to nominate senators to serve on the several Standing Committees during the present session; and to report with all convenient speed the names of the senators so nominated.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

MOTION TO APPOINT COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT STUDY

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, may I preface what I have to say about the next motion with a few remarks.

The Special Committee of the Senate on Aging sat during the last session of Parliament, and its staff was at work during the recess. At the same time as it was preparing material for the use of the committee it was also arranging for hearings of the committee to begin early in this session, and a number of such hearings have already been scheduled. It has therefore been thought desirable to have this committee set up with the same personnel as constituted the committee during the last session. I have already spoken to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) about this matter.

I would therefore move, seconded by the honourable Senator Brooks, with leave of the Senate:

"That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the problem involved in the promotion of the welfare of the aged and aging persons, in order to ensure that in addition to the provision of a sufficient income, there are also developed adequate services and facilities of a positive and preventive kind so that older persons may continue to live healthy and useful lives as members of the Canadian community and the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government in the promotion thereof;

That the said committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Blois, Brooks, Croll, Dessureault, Fergusson, Gershaw, Grosart, Haig, Hollett, Inman, Jodoin, Lefrançois, Macdonald (Brantford), McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck, Smith (Kamloops), Smith (Queens-Shelburne) and Sullivan.

That the committee have power to engage the services of technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the committee; and

That the committee be instructed to report to the house from time to time its findings, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, may I also preface the motion I am about to make in respect of the Divorce Committee with a few remarks. There are some urgent matters that this committee must attend to at this time, and it is desirable to re-establish the Divorce Committee today. With leave, it is proposed that personnel of that committee for this session be the same personnel which served on the committee during the last session.

Therefore, with leave, seconded by the honourable Senator Roebuck, I move:

That the Honourable Senators Aseltine, Baird, Blois, Bradley, *Brooks, Burchill, Cameron, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Croll, Farris, Gershaw, Gladstone, Haig, Hnatyshyn, Hollett, Horner, Inman, Irvine, Isnor, Kinley, Lambert, Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River), Roebuck, Smith (Kamloops), Smith (Queens-Shelburne), and Taylor (Westmorland) be appointed to constitute the Standing Committee on Divorce, to inquire into and report upon such matters as may be referred to them from time to time.

Ex officio members.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have not the least objection to the appointment of members to the Divorce Committee, and I have already praised their work, but last session, at the eleventh hour, a bill passed three readings, in three lines in the House of Commons Hansard, to be smuggled into the Senate. On that occasion the then Leader of the Senate (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) objected to that kind of procedure and said that with only twenty-one senators in attendance, in the last hours of the last day of the session, we should not adopt that legislation at once.

At the present time the divorce commissioner is in a false position, and the bill that was brought before us was to give him the salary and the compensations of a judge of the Exchequer Court. I have no objection to the commissioner, whom I do not know but to whom I give the benefit of the doubt, being appointed a judge—a full judge, a judge who is independent from the Divorce Committee, and who has to report not to the committee, but to the Senate. One should not be called a judge when he is only the messenger boy of a committee. This is not at all a reflection on the members of the Divorce Committee, because it could act on appeal from the decisions of the commissioner if he has all the powers of a judge. But I do not agree that a judge of the Exchequer Court, or any other court, should have to report to any committee of the Senate, except in this case the judge should report to the Senate itself, and then the Senate might decide what it deems reasonable to do.

We had some complaint from three members of the House of Commons who said that the Senate was unfair in not passing that legislation. You will remember, honourable senators, that there was no number to the bill when it was presented to us, and that we only received the text of the bill two or three days after it was presented to us on the last day of the session. Is it reasonable? Then the leader of one of the groups in the House of Commons and two of the members of his group declared that the Senate was unfair because it had not swallowed that legislation.

Honourable senators, we are not children; we are not here to be tricked in that manner. We have the right to see the legislation that is presented to us, and to debate it before we adopt it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I remember when such an important piece of legislation as that was to be introduced in the House of Commons years ago concerning both railways. It was a long time ago. It was in the Bennett regime, and Mr. Manion was the Minister of Railways and Canals. Because there was not a French translation of the railway bill the debate was adjourned. The House of Commons waited until both the English and French texts of the legislation were before the chamber. Now, in this instance, the House of Commons passed this bill at the last minute of the last day, without any explanation and without any debate. If you look at the House of Commons Hansard for the last day of last session, December 21, you will see that the three readings are reported in three lines. And we were supposed to close our eyes, open our mouths and swallow that. I thought that the manner in which that legislation was passed in the House of Commons—and I say this for all parties and groups in that house—was unreasonable. That kind of legislation should never come before Parliament.

The judges should be independent. I mean that they should not be the messenger boys of any man, of any committee, or any group. To be respected, a judge should have his complete independence; yet, with the kind of legislation that was brought before the House of Commons at the last moment last session, the one who would have been called a judge would have been just a messenger with all the privileges of a judge but without what is needed to fulfil his duty.

I am very sorry to have to say this at the beginning of the session. I have profound respect and loyalty for my present leader, as I had for his predecessor. If the commissioner is made an independent judge, it will be for the good of Parliament, for the good of the commissioner himself, and for the good of all those who will have to appear before him.

Before closing, I must remind you of the provisions of the Exchequer Court Act, which is chapter 98 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

I hope I have made myself clear, and I shall not insist any more about it until the position of the Divorce Commissioner is rectified. However, there is another matter I should like to refer to before closing.

I have tried to be as fair as possible to the members of the committee and I have said I appreciate their work, but we must not forget that there are men who called themselves divorce investigators who are now in jail because they perjured themselves. A very useful thing that the Divorce Commissioner could have done would have been to take into consideration the cases in which these culprits who have perjured themselves gave evidence, and see what divorces have been granted upon that perjured evidence by these men who are now in jail. It would have been an illustration of what could happen, and how the good faith of some gentlemen who are of the utmost integrity can be played upon and how they can be deceived by so-called investigators who have exploited the public to the limit.

Furthermore, if you look at the regulations concerning the Divorce Committee you will see nothing with regard to costs, as appears in the regulations of all other courts. You can examine the regulations concerning the Supreme Court of Canada or any other tribunal and see what is said with respect to costs; but here there is nothing, and the lawyers who appear before the Divorce Committee can charge anything to their clients. They can, in fact, exploit them.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I do not agree with Senator Pouliot. According to the British North America Act, divorce is the responsibility of the Divorce Committee of the Senate, a responsibility of Parliament. In both Quebec and Newfoundland a divorce court has been refused. If we nominate a judge we are constituting a divorce court. We agreed last session that the commissioner would examine the witnesses and so on, and make his recommendation to the Senate Committee on Divorce. That is my argument, because in Quebec and Newfoundland a divorce court has been refused under the provisions of the British North America Act.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 25, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 25, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 25, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the Clerk had received a certificate from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that Eric Cook, Esquire, Q.C., had been summoned to the Senate.

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons, which was read by the Clerk Assistant; took and subscribed the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk, and was seated:

Hon. Eric Cook, of the City of St. John's, in the Province of Newfoundland, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Baird.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have in my hand a list of twelve documents to be tabled. They are documents required to be tabled by various statutes, and again I ask permission of the house to dispense with reading the list.

I draw the attention of honourable senators to the report made by the Tariff Board relative to an investigation ordered by the Minister of Finance respecting machinery and equipment used in the mining industry and in the oil and gas industries. I think the other documents constitute rather routine tablings, and of list of them will appear in the Minutes of the Proceedings of today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed to dispense with the reading of the list?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[The following documents were tabled:]

List of Apportionments and Adjustments of Seed Grain, Fodder for Animals and Other Relief Indebtedness, for the period from May 17, 1963 to February 18, 1964, pursuant to section 2 of An Act respecting Certain Debts due the Crown, chapter 51, Statutes of Canada, 1926-27. (English text).

Capital Budget of The Seaway International Bridge Corporation, Ltd., for the calendar year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80 of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-101, dated January 23, 1964, approving same (English text).

Capital Budget of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority for the year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1963-1840, dated December 12, 1963, approving same (English text).

Capital Budget of the National Harbours Board, for the year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1963-1897, dated December 21, 1963, approving same. (English text).

Report of the Department of Forestry for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 12 of the Department of Forestry Act, chapter 41, Statutes of Canada, 1960. (English and French texts).

Annual Report of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 14 of the Penitentiary Act, chapter 206, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of External Affairs, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of External Affairs Act, chapter 68, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Capital Budget of Polymer Corporation Limited for the calendar year 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-255, dated February 13, 1964, approving same (English text).

Report, dated December 16, 1963, of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, under the Combines Investigation Act, concerning an Alleged Combine in the Matter of a Call for Tenders by the Town of Duvernay for the Construction of Sewers and Water Mains. (English and French texts).

Report on the Operations of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 11 of the said act, chapter 183, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Order in Council P.C. 1964-282, dated February 20, 1964, authorizing under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act, long-term financing by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, for the purchase of capital equipment from Canadian suppliers and procurement services from Aluminum Company of Canada, Limited, Montreal, Quebec, in an amount of up to $900,000 by the President of India, pursuant to section 21B of the said act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1960-61. (English text).

Report by the Tariff Board, relative to the investigation ordered by the Minister of Finance respecting machinery and equipment used in the mining industry and in the oil and gas industries, Volume II, Mining Equipment-Reference No. 130 (English and French texts), together with copy of the transcript of the evidence presented at public hearings (English text), pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act, chapter 261, R.S.C., 1952.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll presented Bill S-3, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is that something new?

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is not new, but it is back again.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Croll moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. David A. Croll, Chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, presented the following report:

The Special Committee of the Senate on Aging make their first report, as follows:

Your committee recommends:

1. That their quorum be reduced to seven (7) members.

2. That they be authorized to print 1,000 copies in English and 400 copies in French of their day to day proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Eric Cook moved, seconded by Hon. Azellus Denis:

That the following Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada to offer the humble thanks of this house to His Excellency for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament, namely:

To His Excellency, General the Right Honourable Georges P. Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, upon whom has been conferred the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

He said: Honourable senators, as you are aware, I have not been a member of the Senate for any prolonged period of time, so I trust you will not think me too presumptuous in addressing you so shortly after the event.

You will forgive me, I hope, if I begin by making a few personal references.

First, I wish to thank most sincerely the Right Honourable the Prime Minister for the great honour he has done me by recommending my appointment to the Senate of Canada. For my part, I can only pledge that I will do all things that lie within my ability, to discharge as best I can my duties as one of your colleagues.

To succeed Senator Calvert C. Pratt will indeed be a difficult task. Senator Pratt was outstanding in the business life of Newfoundland. In addition, he was a most far-thinking leader who promoted many advances in the educational and welfare systems of Newfoundland. Very many good works were started and carried on in several instances, solely due to his ever-ready and generous support. It will not be easy to fill his place.

The other Newfoundland senator who is greatly mourned is, of course, Senator John G. Higgins, Q.C. Senator Higgins was a brilliant and distinguished lawyer, and a most delightful individual. He, too, will be sorely missed.

I would like also to thank the Honourable the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), for the confidence he has placed in me by entrusting this important motion to me.

Before making any reference to the Speech from the Throne itself, I would like to make a few remarks about my native province. During the past 40 years, Newfoundland has survived a number of forms of government. Up until the year 1934, we had full responsible government. In that year, the constitution was suspended, and the system known as Government by Commission was introduced. The members of the Commission of Government were appointed by the Dominions Office in London, and "party politics" ceased for a period.

Then in 1949 we joined Canada and now, like the Eskimos and the majority of other Canadians, we enjoy the dual blessings of not one but two governments, one federal and one provincial.

However, in the great depression of the 1930's it is unfortunately only too true that Newfoundlanders suffered more severely than probably any other group of people in North America. Up to the onslaught of the depression the economy of Newfoundland was largely based on the catching and sale of salt codfish. With the disastrous fall in the value of all natural resources, and particularly the price decline in fish, the people of Newfoundland, who had never enjoyed a high standard of living, were reduced to terrible poverty.

When the depression was still only half over the Government found it lacked the revenue to function. Therefore, the Constitution was suspended, and the Commission of Government system was introduced.

Under some 15 years of Government by Commission, Newfoundland was given sound and good but not very active or inspired government.

However, during the war years Newfoundland again prospered, and when in 1949 Commission of Government was replaced it left behind it in the island's treasury a surplus of some $40 million.

The real achievement of Commission of Government was that it bequeathed to Newfoundland a well trained, dedicated and capable civil service. The province is indeed fortunate that many of our senior civil servants who served under the Commission of Government are still serving, and that they have in turn trained other capable and able young men to carry on.

Nevertheless, partly because of the fact that during the war years so much of all planning and of all effort was devoted to the war effort, little was accomplished in the way of improving public services or in establishing any system of social welfare or social security. Indeed, beyond the fact that Newfoundlanders had some eight or ten years of being gainfully employed, we practically "stood still" between 1929 and 1949.

I have related all these facts, even at the risk of tiring you, so that you might be better able to understand that in 1949 Newfoundland was a tiny country whose people, despite a few short years of comparative prosperity, had endured very great hardships and faced the future with virtually no social capital whatsoever, and where, generally speaking, public services were on a level other countries had enjoyed at the turn of the century.

How far we could have gone on our own, in the light of possible new developments and with a surplus of $40 million—which used to be a lot of money—no one can tell. There was one Newfoundlander in particular who felt Newfoundland could not do it alone. I refer, of course, to the present Premier, the Honourable Joseph R. Smallwood. In the teeth of the fiercest opposition, almost on his own he convinced Newfoundland that her future was with Canada.

And now, after being part of Canada for nearly 15 years, what is the result? I believe if the question had to be decided again today the answer would read like a Russian election—99 per cent would be in favour of Union with Canada.

Having said this, I do hope no one will think that Newfoundlanders are merely sitting back and enjoying the various social benefits and payments which all Canadians now receive. Far from it! The Government of the province, spurred on by the ceaseless drive of the Premier, has accomplished much. But it would not all have been possible nor could Newfoundland have gone so far and so fast except as a part of Canada. And I can assure you that Newfoundlanders are deeply grateful and very happy to be Canadians.

I would like to stress the fact that every effort is being made to develop the natural resources of the province. It is the earnest hope of all Newfoundlanders that the province will, in the not too distant future, become one of Canada's "have provinces," and be in a position to contribute to the great future that is Canada's.

However, having indicated Newfoundland's satisfaction with the union and her hopes for the future, I must caution that in the meantime when the Premier of Newfoundland meets with the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of Canada he will probably greet him by using the classic line of Oliver Twist, "Please, Sir, I want some more."

I regret I cannot speak to you with authority on any subject. I am merely an ordinary "general practitioner" in the ranks of the legal profession.

While, therefore, I welcome the proposal to introduce a national fisheries policy, I will not now attempt to make any extended comment on this suggestion. Every second Newfoundlander is an expert on some aspect of the fisheries, and being a highly vocal people, no doubt much more will be heard on this subject.

Among the many other important matters mentioned in the Speech, the one which I think will be the most beneficial, and which will promote the greatest happiness of the greatest number, is the Canada Pension Plan. In my opinion, the pension plan will be a major step forward in Canada's welfare legislation, and will guarantee to many more Canadians some share at least of the "good life".

It is a very big undertaking, and like all big undertakings will, of course, require careful study and consideration. It is difficult, however, to appreciate anyone having any serious objections to the plan in principle. Many of those who have expressed concern have done so because they fear it will adversely affect private plans now in force. Surely they do not seriously think the Government hopes to do some measure of justice to the 70 per cent now without any protection by creating injustice for the 30 per cent who now enjoy some protection.

I feel confident it is not beyond the ability of men of good will to work out a formula to meet each particular case without imposing unnecessary hardship on any group.

It would, however, be unfortunate if those who now make available this type of protection, and those who now have this type of protection, which in a very limited way the legislation seeks to provide for all, should object to the enactment of this legislation.

I understand that some people oppose the Canada Pension Plan because of its costs, and because of the burden it will impose on the economy. This makes me think of the objections raised against the Earl of Shaftesbury's efforts to achieve some reforms. For 14 years Shaftesbury led the fight in Parliament against child slavery in factories, and he was as responsible as any man for the passing of the Ten Hours Act of 1847, in the face of bitter opposition from such mill owners as the Quaker stalwart John Bright, who argued that it was in the last two hours of the working day— nay, in the last half-hour of the last two hours—that they made their profits.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your patience in listening to me. I have already been overlong, and will not therefore weary you by making any further references to the contents of the Speech from the Throne, particularly as an opportunity will be given us to debate each proposal in due time.

(Translation):

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, my first words will be to thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. John J. Connolly) for the privilege he bestowed upon me in asking me to second the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I also want to extend to him my best wishes in the discharge of his new and important duties, which his predecessor, Senator Ross Macdonald, fulfilled so competently.

It is with a great deal of attention and interest that we listened to the magnificent speech of our new colleague, Senator Cook, and I wish to offer him my most sincere congratulations.

Being new in this chamber myself, I want to take this opportunity to extend my special thanks to the Right Honourable Prime Minister, who is mainly responsible for my appointment.

By bestowing this honour on me, he intended no doubt to acknowledge the undying loyalty of the electors of St. Denis riding to the Liberal party and its leaders. To the people of St. Denis who are thus being honoured, I wish to convey my deepest gratitude.

It is a great pleasure for me to meet once more my good and still youthful friend, the honourable senator who presides with such dignity and efficiency over the proceedings of the Senate. We sat together in the other place for over twenty years. I hope he will continue to fill his important office for a long time, and I extend to him my congratulations and my best wishes.

As I look around me, I recognize familiar faces from the years 1960, 1955, 1950, 1945, 1940 and even 1935, and among others, the genial Leader of the Opposition, Senator Brooks. I feel younger when I look back over the wonderful years I spent in the House of Commons with the former colleagues I am happy to find here. It proves that the Senate does not kill anyone.

Honourable senators, I want to say how proud I am to be among you. I am grateful for the warm welcome you gave me and I intend to show myself always worthy of such a distinguished company. I will try to emulate my predecessor from the electoral division of LaSalle, the lamented Senator Mark Drouin, a real gentleman whose charm was well known.

Honourable senators, the text of the Speech from the Throne which is before us is the logical result of the efforts made by the present Government since last April to give the Canadian economy a dynamic expansion, to bring a solution to the important problems of today, such as unemployment, trade, federal-provincial relations, social security and national unity.

During the last general election, the Government had made pledges to the Canadian people, as stated in the program which is now being implemented.

I have here a copy of this program and I should like to quote a few items to show you that those commitments are included in the Speech from the Throne or are already incorporated in legislative measures passed last session. I quote, for instance, page 7 of this program:

> Equal partners in confederation. To ensure in Canada the equality of French and English languages and cultures.

You all know that a fact-finding commission has already been appointed and that it is now at work, that its presidents are visiting the various provinces of the country in order to reach a conclusion which should normally result in a better understanding of national unity.

A little further on, I read:

> Complete elimination of disparity between the provinces in the yield of direct taxes.

This item appears almost word for word in the Speech from the Throne:

> You will be asked to approve the changes in fiscal arrangements decided upon at the Federal-Provincial conference last November.

On the following page, I read:

> Setting up of a federal department of Industry.
>
> The Department will consider the necessary steps to take in order to promote economical manufacturing of new products in Canada.

You know that this department has been set up and that the Speech from the Throne contains a measure aimed at expanding primary and secondary industries.

On the following page I read:

> Loans for municipal services.

A commission has been established for that purpose and already more than $4.5 million has been lent to municipalities to enable them to improve municipal services. This had the salutary effect of giving work in wintertime and also of decreasing the unemployment rate.

In the next page, we read the following:

> Improvements to the National Housing Act.

It is not necessary to tell you what are the measures that will be considered in this connection.

Allow me simply to draw your attention to a measure taken last year which had the effect of granting a bonus to anyone wishing to become a homeowner this winter. You know that some 32,000 applications were accepted and granted. That is another measure which is bound to help check unemployment.

A little further, I read:

> Setting up of a national economic council—designed to create new industries and provide for regional and community development—in order to provide the 250,000 new jobs needed by the country every year...

Statistics show that by mid-January 275,000 new jobs had been created. The same statistics show that unemployment declined by 75,000. Of course, we are not yet satisfied as regards the elimination of that plague affecting the country, but every effort is being made to achieve full employment.

On the following page, I read this:

> Creation of a loan fund for students.

That item is almost textually announced in the Speech from the Throne.

A little further on, we find the following:

> Federal contributory retirement fund.

There again we will have to consider legislation in view of establishing that federal contributory retirement fund.

On the next page, we also read this:

> A minimum pension of $75 a month to help those who have already retired . . .

That legislation has been applied since last October.

On the next page, I read:

> Old age assistance increased to $75 a month. Old age assistance of $75 to widows and single women at 60 years of age. Allowance of $75 a month to blind and disabled persons.

Everybody knows that these measures have already been passed and that, by April next, all these persons will be in receipt of the promised increase.

On page 17, I read that a federal labour code will be proposed; that it will apply to industries coming under federal jurisdiction as well as works undertaken by virtue of federal contracts. A minimum wage, a maximum work week of 40 hours, two weeks of holiday with pay and seven statutory holidays will be put into effect.

That was, almost verbatim, the wording of the Speech from the Throne.

I skip some of it and I come to page 21 from which I quote:

> Extension of the fishing zone to twelve miles from the coast.

Other items of the Liberal program are also included in the Speech from the Throne, for instance, Canada's defence policy, that is one that will enable us to fulfil our commitments to our allies and the securing of defence nuclear arms, as well as the establishment of a parliamentary committee on defence.

Those are numerous items which are already in effect. Moreover, this year the Speech from the Throne points out that the parliamentary committee on defence will be reconvened.

In short, honourable senators, a very large part of this program will be carried out before the end of the present session. Indeed, that program was to be implemented over the full duration of a Parliament.

I will not mention the other important measures contained in the Speech from the Throne and which we will study as they are presented to us.

Honourable senators, I did not refer to that program as a member of the Liberal party but only to point out that any political party which makes workable commitments and carries them out will always have the confidence of the electorate in Canada and will thus contribute to the maintenance of a sound democracy.

As long as those who hold the reins of power take such an attitude we have nothing to fear from extremists or utopic movements which, for the most part, base their action on opportunism or demagogy and which play on the most sacred feelings of the various groups which make up a country. That being the case, they will never gain the support of the majority in Canada, because our people are moderate and sound-minded.

The results of the last by-election in the ridings of St. Denis and Laurier bear witness to that fact; the separatist party and the Caouette group combined did not even get the support of 7 per cent of registered voters.

I speak of votes cast for both the separatists and the Caouette group because the former did not enter any candidate in the race and the latter stated during the campaign that they would become separatists.

Therefore, that 7 per cent of the vote represents both the Caouettistes and the separatists.

St. Denis and Laurier proved to the rest of the country that Quebec is and always will be part of Canada. Quebec believes that the constitutional adjustments which are essential to a co-operative federalism can only be brought about by men without prejudice, serious and responsible men, and not by a bunch of radicals, be they of English or French origin.

Honourable senators, unfortunately, certain newspapers give a big spread as well as their headlines to those movements. In that way, they propagate and create resentments and rancour by giving to those movements an importance they do not have. I have just proved it.

Unfortunately also, certain influential persons, through their ambiguous attitudes and statements, condone or encourage those extreme ideologies.

Honourable senators, the Prime Minister of Canada has just made another appeal to reason, level-headedness and understanding for a united and prosperous Canada. May he find in every province of our country many Canadians who will respond to that appeal and thus contribute to maintain national unity within Canada.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I have the honour to second the motion of my colleague, honourable Senator Cook, for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I ask for your approval.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 26, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

COLUMBIA TO FRASER RIVER DIVERSION PROJECT REPORT, 1956—STATEMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have thought that on occasion when important Government statements of general interest are being made in the other place it might be a service to the members of this honourable house to have those statements made at the same time here. So far as it is possible to do so—it will not always be possible or perhaps appropriate—I would like to follow this practice, and I have a statement of that character today.

From time to time there have been requests for the tabling of a report that was commissioned in 1955 on a possible diversion of water from the Columbia River to the Fraser River. As the report was related to the negotiations which had been undertaken with the United States relating to the Columbia River Treaty, it was the policy of the previous Government not to make the report public. The present Government has also felt that the report should not be released before negotiations by the Government were completed relative to co-operative development of the Columbia River in Canada.

Now that these negotiations have reached successful completion with the signing of the agreements on January 22, 1964, I desire to table one copy of the report which bears the title "Report on an Investigation of Columbia to Fraser River Diversion Project, 1956," which was prepared by the B.C. Engineering Company Limited. I also table a copy of a paper which summarizes the findings contained in the report.

Shortly put, the report is not optimistic with regard to the cost at which power could be produced on the Thompson and lower Fraser Rivers—either with or without a diversion from the Columbia. Without such a diversion the production cost is estimated at 9.7 mills per kilowatt hour for firm energy, and 6.75 mills for firm plus secondary energy. With the Columbia diversion the cost is estimated at 8 mills for firm energy and 6.95 mills for firm plus secondary energy. The increment of energy actually provided by the diversion is estimated to cost 7.1 mills per kilowatt hour when delivered to loads in Vancouver. In arriving at this cost the report does not charge the diversion proposal for any portion of the cost of dams on the Columbia River which are required for the regulation and diversion of the water. The report does not go into the fishery problem, which is a major one, although it does deal with the cost of fish passages at the proposed dams.

As the report is a very bulky one, I regret that it is not possible to provide copies of it to individual members. However, they will be able to have access to it among the papers of the House.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I wonder if the honourable leader could give us some idea of the comparision between those costs per kilowatt hours and those of the St. Lawrence River project?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I regret I cannot answer that; but I will try to get the information for the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The honourable leader referred to a summary in the statement he made. I understand that summary is being made available to members of the other house, and I am wondering if it—not the report—could be made available to the members of this house.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The answer, of course, is yes. I am looking at it now to see if there is something which might be added to the report of our proceedings today. I notice that it contains several maps which might make reproduction of the summary difficult. However, I will make inquiries, and I am sure that a copy of the summary and the maps can be made available to all honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Will a copy of the summary and the maps appear in the Commons Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am unable to answer that question. I am in doubt about it because I do not think there is any provision for reproducing a map, even as an appendix to our Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The reason I ask is that the Commons Hansard is available, of course, to all members and senators, and to reproduce this in our Hansard would duplicate what may be available in the Commons Hansard. I think that is a point that should be considered.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Could the honourable Leader of the Government tell us whether there is any provision in the agreement which would provide energy to private companies, other than the two mentioned, such as the grid line in other parts of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): At the moment I cannot answer that question. If after the summary and report are made available to honourable senators there are further questions to which I can provide answers, I would be happy to do so.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) presented Bill S-4, respecting the International Bridge over the St. Clair River known as the Blue Water Bridge.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE CANADIAN BRANCH OF THE ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Kinley presented Bill S-5, respecting The General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Kinley moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's first report:

Your committee recommend:

1. That they be granted leave to sit during adjournments of the Senate, and also during sittings of the Senate.

2. That they be granted authority to appoint as many subcommittees as deemed necessary for the purpose of considering such divorce matters as may be referred to them by the committee and to set the quorum thereof, the subcommittee in each case to report their findings to the committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

VISIT TO OTTAWA OF BLOOD TRIBE DELEGATION

Hon. James Gladstone: Honourable senators, I would like to inform the Senate that the Chief of my own Reserve and three of his councillors have been visiting Ottawa for the past three days as delegates at a meeting to consider various problems. I would have liked to have them present in the gallery this afternoon, but they are leaving on the afternoon train for home to attend to urgent business of their own. They have received kind consideration from the former and present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, whose department deals with Indian Affairs. I believe the delegates are going home very happy with the meetings they have had, not only with the minister but with the officials of the Indian Affairs Branch.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I am sure we were all pleased to have the report from Senator Gladstone concerning the distinguished group who have been attending Parliament and visiting the officials of the Government. We regret very much that they are not now in the gallery so that we could welcome them. In saying this I know I am speaking also for the honourable Leader of the Senate.

Honourable senators, we have now entered on another session of Parliament, one which I am sure we all hope will be more fruitful and productive than the past two sessions have been. The last session of Parliament was a long one but, unfortunately, like the previous session, it closed leaving long lists of unfinished but necessary legislation. I am sure all honourable senators will agree with me that government business cannot be satisfactorily carried on unless the party in power has a working majority. As happened in a certain sporting event last night, it is also possible for a government, particularly a minority government, to be defeated at any time. Such a situation is certainly not for the country's benefit, nor is it good for Parliament.

Honourable senators, I feel, and I know you will agree with me, that the sooner we get back to the two-party system in this country, doing away with the splinter parties we have today, the better it will be for Parliament and for the country.

We are sometimes told that these Throne Speeches, of which I have heard a great number, together with many speeches in reply, are not always enlightening. This is I think, quite an understatement. In fact, they are seldom enlightening. And the one we have now before us is certainly no exception. Such speeches are considered to be a rough guide to legislation which is to come. From past experience we know that some of the legislation forecast will never reach the statute books. We also know, or at least we hope, that some most important matters not mentioned in the Throne Speech will be brought forward and put into legislation as the session progresses.

Before going further, honourable senators, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply. I liked the easy manner in which the mover of the address spoke. He had a very short time in which to become acquainted with this chamber, having been introduced here only a very few minutes previous, but he acquitted himself well and I am sure we were all pleased with his remarks.

I was particularly pleased with Senator Cook's statement to the effect he was certain that today 99 per cent of the people of the Province of Newfoundland are in favour of Confederation. I was a member of the House of Commons 15 years ago when the admission of Newfoundland to the Confederation was before Parliament. One hundred per cent of the members of the House of Commons at that time were in favour of Newfoundland's admission, and I am quite satisfied that had a plebiscite been taken across the country it would have been found that nearly all people were pleased to have Newfoundland as a sister province.

I listened also with considerable pleasure to my good friend, the seconder of the motion (Hon. Mr. Denis). He and I have much in common. We entered the House of Commons the same year, 1935, and we have been friends ever since. He made a good speech, as we would expect from him. If I had any criticism to make of it I would say that it sounded a little political, but perhaps we should not be surprised at that because I am sure he took a very prominent part in the election campaign in the constituency of St. Denis, and I have no doubt that he gathered much material for his speech of yesterday from the stump speeches he made there.

I was particularly pleased with the latter part of his speech in which he condemned some of our newspapers for obtaining their material from what he called radicals and trouble makers, and not always publishing the remarks or statements of more serious and responsible people. He said that that was one reason for our having so much misunderstanding in this country at the present time. I agree entirely with what the honourable senator said in that connection.

As I said a moment ago, there is considerable legislation to be presented to Parliament during this session. When it appears before us in concrete form we will then have an opportunity of examining it and of expressing our opinions on it. That, of course, is the best time at which to discuss legislation. However, in this debate an opportunity is provided to participate in extending our thanks to His Excellency for his Speech. It gives us an opportunity also of reviewing conditions in the country and of offering some criticism of the manner in which the Government is meeting its obligations, and of stating what improvements might be made. This applies more particularly to the House of Commons, of course, but I am sure honourable senators will say what they have to say about these matters.

I do not intend, except very briefly, to go into the different items mentioned in the Speech from the Throne because I know that there are very able colleagues of mine on both sides of the house who are going to speak, and I am sure they will go into these matters very thoroughly.

As I look across the floor of the chamber, honourable senators, I see that there has been a change. I miss the face of my very good friend of many years, the Honourable Ross Macdonald. He also entered the House of Commons at the same time as I did, back in 1935. From his first entrance into Parliament he showed his leadership. I remember at that time that we had a veterans' organization to which some very distinguished members of Parliament belonged. Its membership included half a dozen or more cabinet ministers, and men like Sir Eugene Fiset. Later on I think Lord Tweedsmuir and also Lord Alexander were members. When that organization decided to select a chairman the man they chose was my good friend, Senator Ross Macdonald from Brantford, Ontario.

Senator Macdonald has received many honours. I suppose there are few men in Parliament at the present time who have had as many. He has been a minister of the Crown. He was Speaker of the House of Commons for many years. He was Leader of the Government in the Senate for a number of years. He was for a time Leader of the Opposition. I know that all senators share with me a deep feeling of regret that it was necessary for Senator Macdonald to relinquish his position as Leader of the Government in the Senate. We congratulate him again on the honours that have been accorded him, but we also congratulate him on the great ability and success with which he filled these difficult positions. I want to thank him personally for the kind assistance he gave me on different occasions when I was for a short time Leader of the Government in this chamber and afterwards when I became Leader of the Opposition.

While I am congratulating the former Leader of the Government, and while we are regretting that it was necessary for him to give up that position, we realize that in Parliament, as in life, there are many compensating features. One of the great compensating features today is the fact that the Prime Minister saw fit to appoint in Senator Macdonald's place Senator John J. Connolly, the present Leader of the Government in the Senate. I predict he will have great success. He has had considerable experience in the Senate. We all know that he is an eminent lawyer and an able debater, but, best of all, he has much common sense and he is a worker. I advise him, though, not to plan on staying in his present position too long because the winds of change are already blowing quite strongly through the country. We are told, and I believe it is a fact, that the writing is on the wall. But he need not worry, because while he will make a good Leader of the Government in the Senate he will make an equally good Leader of the Opposition when the time comes for him to take over that office.

Honourable senators, I wish to offer other congratulations. During the recess just before Christmas the former Speaker of this house became one of Her Majesty's Privy Councillors. I am sure that that gave great pleasure to all honourable senators on both sides of this chamber. It is an honour that is given to former Speakers of this house. I must say that since I have been a senator we have been most fortunate in the men who have held the high office of Speaker. There have been three of them, and all have been excellent appointments. I want to say to my good friend, Senator White, that it is a great honour to be one of Her Majesty's advisers. It is not probable, perhaps, that Her Majesty will be asking him for any advice, but if she does have need of it I am sure the advice he will give will be of the very wisest.

We have four new senators. With the exception of Senator Denis, of whom I have already spoken, they are more or less strangers to me, except by reputation. I knew of Senator Lang from Toronto because of his being a very outstanding businessman and lawyer in that city.

As to Senator Rattenbury from Saint John, while we live in the same province, our paths have not often crossed. He seemed to be travelling in an entirely different direction—what I always thought was the wrong direction. However, I am pleased to see him here; I am satisfied that he will enjoy the Senate and will make a great contribution to it.

We listened yesterday to Senator Cook. He comes to the Senate with a very high recommendation as a lawyer and businessman in his own province.

Statements were made in the newspapers regarding the three senators of whom I speak. In the case of Senator Lang, it was stated that he was organizer in the Liberal party in the last two general election campaigns. It was stated of Senator Rattenbury that he was president of the Saint John Liberal Association and an active organizer for the Liberal party. Of Senator Cook, it was stated that he was president of the Newfoundland Liberal Federation and an active campaigner for the party in that province. The road to senatorship seems to be through the gateway of being an organizer for the Liberal party.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That applies to other parties.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Not so noticeably.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not now.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I say a little now about the new members of the cabinet, although they are in the other place. When I was speaking last year, I mentioned that there were more cabinet ministers than ever before in the history of this country. Now we find that their number has been added to again. We have all heard the criticism made that we have quantity but not quality.

I know that people in many parts of this country were disappointed when the new cabinet was announced. It was expected that some of those whose weaknesses had appeared would have been moved to other portfolios, or other changes would have been made. Nothing was done in this connection.

We have 26 ministers and 16 parliamentary assistants. That represents almost 50 per cent of the number of Liberal members in the other house. The thought does occur to us: is this what the Liberal party means, what this Government means, by implementing the Glassco Report?

Honourable senators, in reading over the Speech from the Throne one of the first paragraphs to catch my eye referred to the signing of an agreement with Washington on the joint ownership of the Roosevelt-Campobello International Park. The Speech stated that legislation would be brought before the house soon to implement the agreement.

This is not a world-startling bit of news. However, to the people in the Province of New Brunswick, and I am sure to the people in the rest of Canada, it is very interesting news.

Honourable senators may not know that Campobello Island is one of the little group of islands off the southern coast of New Brunswick, in the Bay of Fundy. Here in Campobello, President Roosevelt for years made his summer home. He became extremely fond of that part of New Brunswick and he made many friends. I think my honourable friend Senator McLean was one of them. I have heard many people from that section speak of knowing the late President Roosevelt, of having gone swimming and boating with him, and so on. We are pleased indeed that this development is taking place.

I have perhaps a little claim to assisting in making it possible for this island to be made a great national park. In 1960 a delegation from Campobello Island came to my Town of Sussex in New Brunswick. They heard that the Minister of Public Works, the Honourable Mr. Howard Green, was going to be there, and I with the delegates persuaded Mr. Green to build a bridge from Campobello Island to Eastport. I think it is about 100 yards or less—one could throw a stone across it—and the island was connected up with the mainland of the United States. If that had not been done I doubt very much that there would have been a park there today.

This part of New Brunswick is near the great Passamaquoddy Bay. I do not intend to start a controversy now with my good friend Senator McLean from New Brunswick. However, there are people, not only in the United States but in the Province of New Brunswick, who believe that there is a terrific power potential in the harnessing of the tides of the Passamaquoddy Bay. The United States is greatly interested in this. Despite what my friend from Charlotte County many say, I believe that the people of New Brunswick are anxious indeed to see this power developed. It would be paid for mostly by American funds. I understand the money for this work can be borrowed by the Americans very cheaply, at 3 per cent, while we would have to pay 5 or 6 per cent. Speaking personally, I hope that this power will be developed. If there is one thing that we in the Maritime provinces desire more than another, it is cheap electric power in order to encourage industry in that part of the world.

There was at one time, and there still is, I believe, some doubt about the fisheries. However, as to whether it would affect the fisheries in that part of the Bay of Fundy, this has been investigated a number of times and I think it is generally understood now that no damage would be done.

Honourable senators, I heard on the radio the other day mention of something of which I had heard rumors earlier, that there has been discovered now in this part of New Brunswick, very near the Passamaquoddy development, the one and only tin mine anywhere in North America. English industrialists and financiers have stated that they believe a smelter could be constructed there and that a valuable industry could be established in that part of our province.

Reference was made in the Speech from the Throne to the signing of the protocol with the United States on the Columbia River Treaty, following the agreement with the Government of British Columbia. For two years I was on the Columbia River Committee of the House of Commons; for two years I carried in loads of books about two feet high; for two years we heard more at every meeting about the development of the Columbia River, and I would come away from the meetings—and I hope I was no exception—knowing less about the subject than when I started. However, I am glad that this has been settled now.

There has been a great change in policy. One of the strong objections was to the large export of electric power to the United States. The Canadian policy under Premier R. B. Bennett consisted of an objection to the export of power. We all remember that the Honourable C. D. Howe objected very strongly. I have heard him speak about it. He was not usually a passionate speaker, but I have heard him grow quite passionate in his objection to the export of power, saying that once you allowed power to be exported, it built up industries and towns in the United States, and if you wanted to withdraw it you could never do so; he also said that we ourselves needed more power.

I do not think that needs to worry our people so much today, because Canada has enormous potential power. I understand that the sale of power to the United States from the Columbia River will be in the neighbourhood of $300 million or $400 million a year in American currency. We have also the Peace River in British Columbia, the international Nelson River in Manitoba, as well as the great Hamilton River in Newfoundland; and I am sure, as the honourable Senator Cook said yesterday, in the not-too-distant future Newfoundland will become one of Canada's "have" provinces, bearing in mind the development of its potential power and its use for the development of the great iron mines and other minerals of that province. I am pleased, therefore, honourable senators, that the Columbia River Treaty is apparently in the process of being settled.

The Speech from the Throne dealt with the very important matter of trade and tariff negotiations. On this subject alone, honourable senators, I could devote an hour or more. Trade, of course, is most important to Canada, as indeed it is to every other country. Probably it is more important to Canada than to many other countries. These negotiations, generally known as the "Kennedy round of talks", are aimed at what the speech referred to as the liberation of world trade. We are told that negotiations will be conducted under the terms of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—bearing the short name GATT. This is very important indeed to Canada, coming at a time when the general trading picture here is bright. It is recognized, and I do not deny it, that we are now producing more at home and selling more abroad than at any other time in our history. Our economy is indeed going ahead. We must hold our markets, and if possible open new ones.

In making the foregoing statement I am proud to say that this general improvement in the trade picture is largely the result of policies instituted by the previous Government. Pegging the Canadian dollar resulted in a boost of our exports and in a restraining influence on imports, which made Canada more competitive in world markets. That is a fact which is well borne out by statistics, and I do not think it can be successfully contradicted.

A second factor influencing the improved trading picture has been the accelerated and extensive sales campaign embarked upon by the Government in co-operation with manufacturers and producers. Honourable senators will recall the extensive sales campaign which was inaugurated a few years ago, when trade commissioners from all parts of the world were brought to Ottawa, and the trade situation was studied. On other occasions the Government sent merchants and manufacturers to other countries to see what trade could be obtained. I am happy to say that this campaign has been continued by the present Government.

Part of the improvement in the over-all pattern has arisen through sales of wheat to eastern Europe and China. That was also started by the previous Government, and the present Government has very wisely continued the policy. However, substantial as the wheat deals have been, they have accounted for only a fraction of the entire improvement in the trading picture; although, of course, we would not like to be without the resultant sales.

I would review shortly a few figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Export sales of manufactured goods and commodities more than doubled in the last three years. Fabricated materials increased 52 per cent. Exports of raw materials or crude materials increased by 63 per cent. Exports of end products increased 94 per cent over what they stood at in 1953. It is interesting to note that some of these substantial increases have resulted in increased sales of industrial equipment and machinery; electronic equipment, farm machinery, motor vehicles, and so on. Today Canada is becoming a manufacturer of a great deal of very heavy equipment which she did not manufacture a few years ago. One of the most beneficial results of improvement in export trade is an increase in foreign exchange reserves—a general improvement in our balance of payment situation. This has been a great relief and satisfaction to our economy.

As we approach these important trade and tariff negotiations which will be coming up soon, it is well to remember that in order to sell we must be prepared to buy. This applies particularly to our trade with Great Britain and other Commonwealth countries.

It may be of interest if I read from an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of January 13 last:

> In the first 11 months of 1963, the Canadian deficit in trade with the United States was $500,900,000 but this was almost entirely covered by a surplus of $485,700,000 in trade with Britain.

A little further on the editorial continues:

> The point is being reached when Britain can talk to Canada as forcefully as Canada talks to the United States about trade being a two-way street.

While the general economic situation has improved very substantially, we are still faced with that old enemy of ours—unemployment, in various parts of the country.

In the Ottawa Journal of February 20 last appears the following headline:

> Government now views unemployment as a regional problem and not a national problem.

This approach is unrealistic. If our economy is to remain strong we must be able to maintain a high level of employment all year round in all parts of Canada. It is not enough to say that more Canadians are working today than at any other time in our history. Certainly that is true, because more Canadians are coming into the labour market, both from the ranks of our younger people and also through immigration. Jobs must be provided for this increased number of people. I repeat, it is not enough just to say that more persons are employed than at any other time in our history. The fact remains that large numbers of Canadians from various parts of Canada are still unemployed. The latest reports show that in the Atlantic provinces 12.6 per cent of the work force is unemployed; in Quebec 9.1; in Ontario and the Prairie Provinces, the average is under 5 per cent.

Honourable senators, this brings me to a report which was submitted at the last Parliament, and should be before Parliament this session. It is known as the Gill Report. I think there was general disappointment that the Gill Report was not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. We know what the state of the unemployment insurance fund has been. People were looking for some action and hoping for some implementation of the recommendations made by that report. Some of the members of the present Government had a great deal to say about this report when the previous Government was in office. There is no objection to that; that is their right and privilege; and criticism has gone the other way, as we know. However, now they are strangely silent, but we do hope that the situation will be corrected.

I would like to read a few reported remarks of one of the commissioners:

> According to C. A. L. Murchison, commissioner of the unemployment commission, the unemployment insurance fund would benefit to the tune of about $125 million a year if six major Gill committee recommendations were implemented.

The question we ask ourselves is why the Government is not taking this under consideration and implementing these recommendations. They may or may not be practical; I do not know.

Another report which I understand is going to receive consideration is the MacPherson Report. I will have more to say about this when it comes before us. I know there will be legislation implementing it. I am not speaking for the Maritime provinces particularly, but in those provinces we are possibly more concerned about transportation than any other part of Canada. Transportation is the lifeblood of the Atlantic provinces, and if we are not given what we think is fair treatment regarding transportation it is practically impossible for us to introduce new industries or maintain those we are already operating.

Speaking of another report—and we seem to have many important reports and commissions to deal with—I wish to refer to the O'Leary Report. Its distinguished author is now a member of this house. I will say nothing about it now but, like all honourable senators, will wait until the legislation is before the house. I know it will be a treat for us to hear from our distinguished colleague at that time.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The Speech from the Throne dealt quite extensively with the fisheries situation. We were happy to note the Throne Speech made mention of the Government's intention to undertake a national fisheries development program in conjunction with the various provinces. This arose out of the conference which was held with the ten provinces in Ottawa on January 24 of this year. Included in this was the Government's intention to proceed with the extension of Canada's territorial waters from three to twelve miles for the purpose of fishing, using the principle of straight base line from headland to headland. The honourable Senator Cook from Newfoundland mentioned this yesterday. It is not a new subject; it has been discussed a good many times. In 1960 the former Government was almost successful in having it effectively considered at the Geneva Conference in Europe.

The fishing situation is becoming more serious. Russian trawlers are robbing our fishermen of their rights, not only in Newfoundland but in other provinces, including, I assume, British Columbia.

We were interested in a statement released by the Minister of Fisheries on January 24 following the fisheries conference referred to in the Speech from the Throne. Since new fisheries development policy is to be based on the conference, indications of what the Government has in mind are to be found on page 2 of the report. I quote:

> Such a program will include measures to expand the available resource, measures to improve techniques of catching and processing and facilitate their adoption, measures to diversify products and improve quality, measures to expand markets and reduce price uncertainty—in short, measures to bring about greater productivity and efficiency in all phases of the fishing industry. The program must also take account of the increasingly important sport fishery.

I believe it is found that Canada is lagging behind many other countries in her fisheries development. When we read of these great floating factories which countries like Russia and Japan have, where they process the fish from the time they take it out of the water until they put it in tin cans and sell it in different parts of the world, we realize just how far we have to go to catch up to them.

Honourable senators, I was going to say something about federal-provincial relations, but I will leave that for another time.

We are glad to see that the Canada Pension Plan is still around, and that the Government has signified its intention to proceed with it shortly, this in spite of the doubts that have been raised by the Government of Ontario. We believe the Canada Pension Plan was conceived with great haste. It first appeared on form of a resolution in July, 1963, just a few months after the present Government took office. Since then Quebec has indicated that it is going ahead with its own plan and will not be participating, as it feels the federal plan is an intrusion into provincial rights.

The Government of Ontario has expressed misgivings. The Premier of Ontario, in a letter to Prime Minister Pearson, as reported in the Globe and Mail of February 15 last, said:

> While appreciating the willingness of the Government of Canada to entertain changes, the Government of Ontario regrets that they fall short of what we had hoped. While changes have been made they are little in accord with the representations that we have made.

Ontario has its own scheme, which is based on existing private plans. The Government of Ontario is concerned that the federal plan will upset existing pension plans in Ontario and, of course, in the rest of Canada. The Government of Ontario is also concerned with the magnitude of the reserve fund to be built up, estimated to be $2.5 billion. Since Quebec would not be participating, most of this fund would come from the people of Ontario. Premier Robarts maintains that the provinces should have 90 per cent of the reserve fund available for their own investment purposes, leaving 10 per cent for the federal Government. Of course, this is a very small amount.

It now seems that the plan will have to undergo still further changes if it is to be acceptable to the Government of Ontario. Such a plan is not possible without Ontario's participation. May I say that we in the other provinces outside Ontario and Quebec are anxious that a satisfactory plan be implemented as soon as possible.

I would like now to say just a few words on foreign affairs. We were interested in the recent visit of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and his Foreign Secretary to this country. Sir Alec Douglas-Home, on his first official visit to Canada, came at a time when his Government had been called upon to try to keep the peace in Cyprus and East Africa, not to mention Malaysia. It is apparent that Canada is being thought of to participate in a peace-keeping force for Cyprus—that is, if any agreement can be reached, and President Makarios of Cyprus seems to be a very hard man with whom to negotiate and from whom to obtain agreement.

Conditions for the dispatching of such a force from Canada were outlined by the Prime Minister a few days ago. He made it clear that any Canadian force would only serve under the United Nations, and for a limited period. Canada has been called upon by the United Nations on other occasions, and each time, as we all know, has met such requests in an able manner. We have sent our troops to the Congo, the Gaza Strip, the Far East and other parts of the world.

Speaking of the general situation, I do not think there is the same worry in the world today over nuclear war that there was perhaps a year ago. The United States and Russia seem to be getting closer together as far as the reduction of arms is concerned. They both claim to have a sufficient deterrent in the case of nuclear war to blow the other off the face of the earth, indeed to destroy the entire earth, so there is not much point in worrying too much over that situation. But the small bush wars in the African countries and in other parts of the world are the ones which are claiming most of our attention.

At this time when we hear so much talk of separatism we are pleased to know that Her Gracious Majesty the Queen, on the invitation of the Government of Canada, will visit us during the coming year. She will be visiting Charlottetown and Quebec City to participate in ceremonies marking the 100th anniversary of the historic conferences held in these cities and which led to Confederation.

As a Maritimer I am proud of the part the Maritime provinces played in Confederation. I am sure Her Majesty will receive a tremendous reception in Charlottetown, just as I am sure she will also receive a wonderful welcome in the old City of Quebec.

We should be particularly happy that Her Majesty should visit us at this time for, whatever our differences may be, the bonds that unite all Canadians are, in my opinion, much greater than any differences we may have. These bonds are symbolized and embodied in the Crown, the Crown not as a symbol of a foreign state, but symbolizing, as it does, the sovereignty of our country.

I should like to read a quotation from Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In 1908, speaking along these lines, he said:

> As I advance in years I appreciate more the wisdom of that British Constitution under which I was born and brought up, and under which I have grown old, which has given to the various portions of the Empire their separate free governments. It is our proud boast that Canada is the freest country in the world. It is our boast that in this country liberty of all kinds, civil and religious liberty, flourishes to the highest degree. To those who look only on the surface of things this may not be apparent. The inferiority which may be implied in the word "colony" no longer exists. We acknowledge the authority of the British Crown, but no other authority.

I might say that there is, in fact, no empire, but a commonwealth of free and independent states. Sir Robert Borden made clear the status of Canada many years ago.

To my mind, one of the highlights of the last session of Parliament was the debate which took place in the Senate on Bill C-107, "An Act to amend the National Centennial Act," which can be found in Senate Hansard of December 18, 1963. The purpose of the bill was not in itself important, in that it dealt merely in semantics, but the underlying reasons behind the bill were of tremendous importance. To honourable senators who were not here at that time I would commend all of the speeches made in that debate, but particularly those of Senator Blois, Senator Grattan O'Leary, Senator Vaillancourt, and my good friend Senator Gouin. These were speeches made in the best traditions of Macdonald, Cartier and Laurier. To many it is regrettable that this debate was not more widely reported by the press. These men spoke of their pride of heritage, of their faith in Canada and its future, of the things that unite us and make us what we are.

Not long ago I was reading Senate Hansard of 1926, and I came across the speech of the great Leader of the Senate for many years, Senator Dandurand. Speaking of the difficulties and misunderstandings existing at that time, he had this to say:

> I think we are right in never losing our courage, or giving way to pessimism. Canada is a big country, rich in resources, with a hard-working population, as shown by its production in the field, the mines, the forests, the fisheries and in industry. I believe we have the admiration of the outside world, and yet we pass our time criticising each other and asking ourselves if there will be brighter days for Canada. I would point out that we have succeeded much faster than most countries of the world in re-establishing confidence in Canada, and with the help of Providence, good crops continuing, and the strong will of our people to go forward, our future is assured.

That was in 1926. We realize there will still be difficulties, and apropos of this I read a very apt statement some days ago which said no matter what we try to do, we cannot make an Englishman of a Frenchman, and we cannot make a Frenchman of an Englishman, but we can make good Canadians of both, and there are millions of them in Canada today. It also said that so far as the other ethnic groups are concerned, we cannot change their ethnic group except to make good Canadians of them.

I am satisfied that by all working together, Canada will be a great and prosperous country when we hold our Centennial celebrations in 1967, and if we continue working together Canada will be great and prosperous for many years to come.

(Translation):

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure that I speak for all of you when I say how happy we were to see Her Majesty's distinguished representative in Canada, the gallant General Vanier, preside once more with such dignity at the opening of Parliament.

We all deplored the absence of his gracious wife, Her Excellency Mrs. Vanier, who is recovering from a recent operation. We wish her a complete and early recovery.

(Text):

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I should like to welcome all honourable senators to this new session of Parliament, and to say to each of them how much the good wishes and good will shown by them has fortified their untried leader as he assumes his new duties, and I ask you all to continue to help me in my onerous task with your advice and your co-operation.

I too join with the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in welcoming the new additions to our assembly.

(Translation):

Senator Denis has been a member of the Canadian Parliament for almost 30 years. He comes from the great city of Montreal. He speaks the language of our first discoverers and pioneers. He comes to us with a vast experience and we will know how to put it to good use.

(Text):

Two of our new colleagues already have had distinguished careers in the great profession of the law. The practice which Senator Cook conducted in St. John's has given him a deep understanding of the commercial and social problems of Newfoundland.

Senator Lang, like his distinguished father, is a member of the Upper Canada Law Society, and his firm and partners are well known in Parliament and are highly regarded in many parts of this country. He is, indeed, richly endowed to enhance that fine tradition here.

Senator Rattenbury comes to us from the dynamic Province of New Brunswick. There he has combined in close association the experience of business and the public life of his own community. Here he will join and fortify the distinguished group of New Brunswick senators who contribute so much to the work of this chamber. I thank Senator Cook and Senator Denis for their fine contributions to this debate. Their speeches are an indication of the effective parts they can play in our work here.

I am sure that honourable senators will allow me the privilege of saying that I am deeply conscious of the honour the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable L. B. Pearson, has paid me in appointing me to be the Leader of the Government in this honourable house. We have had a good number of years of close association in important aspects of the public life of Canada. It is gratifying to be asked to continue that valued association in the cabinet of Canada.

As the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, the vicissitudes of politics are a mirror of life itself, and this change to which I have alluded has bleak aspects, because in this case the Senate, Parliament and the country are to lose the distinguished services, as leader, of a great Canadian, through the resignation of the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald. His career at the bar of Ontario, his outstanding military record, his long years in Parliament, his speakership in the House of Commons, his leadership in the Senate, both in Government and in Opposition, and his work in other fields of public endeavour —and they have been many—have put Canadians everywhere in his debt. Senator Macdonald's opportunities for public service have been matched only by the excellence and the devotion of his performance. Throughout his career he was encouraged and supported by a great lady whose memory we here shall always revere. Senator Macdonald will always enjoy the affection and esteem of all senators, and the Senate hopes it will long have the benefit of his advice.

If I am permitted another personal reference, I should like to thank him deeply for the opportunities he gave me to share in the work of the Senate, and for the patience he showed as he trained me for it. It has been one of the rewarding experiences in my membership in this honourable house.

Honourable senators, the satisfaction in the country which greeted the addition of the name of the Honourable George White to the rostrum of the Privy Council of Canada, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, is shared by every member of this house. We remember with gratitude his work as Speaker, and with affection all that he and Mrs. White meant to us in those days. Her Majesty has a fine new adviser and the Senate looks forward to many years of solid counselling from him.

But, of course, we are generously endowed with experience in the leadership of this chamber. In addition to Senator Macdonald we have the senator from Shelburne, the Honourable Wishart Robertson, the senator from Rosetown, the Honourable Walter Aseltine, and the senator from Royal, the Leader of the Opposition. This is a formidable array of successful leaders, and I pay my sincere tribute to what they have meant and will continue to mean to this institution. The Leader of the Opposition always has a most constructive approach to our common problems. This has grown out of a distinguished parliamentary and ministerial career, as well as gallant service in the nation's armed forces. He is a commanding figure in this house. We all feel safer and surer because he is here.

I endorse, of course, as we all do, what he said this afternoon about the importance of stable government, and of stable government responsibly undertaken in this country. His mentioning that perhaps the winds of change are blowing prompts me to say to him that I have not noticed the draught particularly. Perhaps I am living in a very sheltered kind of atmosphere. I will say to him that I thought I used to notice it when I was on the other side, but I could never be sure whether the wish was father to the thought or not.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is a little more noticeable over here.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is what we found.

I think it appropriate, honourable senators, as I embark upon my new duties, to say a few things about the Senate. The constitution and functions of a second chamber within free assemblies have engaged the attention of political scientists and of practising politicians since the dawn of democracy. Of this John Morley said:

> There is no branch of political industry that men approach with hearts so light and yet that leaves them in the end so dubious and melancholic as the concoction of a second chamber.

In varying forms, second chambers are provided in the constitutions of the great democracies of the west. They are found in the United Kingdom, the United States, France, Italy, Belgium, Ireland and other countries. With the exception of New Zealand, they are found in the larger Commonwealth countries, and New Zealand is considering the re-establishment of a second chamber. There are some unitary states like Israel, Luxembourg and Turkey which dispense with them.

When our federal establishment was founded nearly a century ago the British pattern was followed with modifications suitable to the Canadian requirement. I would think too, from a reading of the Confederation Debates, that what John Stuart Mill once said was in the minds of our political forefathers. Mill said:

> Bicameralism has been regarded as a sort of touchstone which distinguishes the partisans of limited democracy from those of uncontrolled democracy.

Although it is largely unaltered in its constitution since 1867, the Senate, I think it fair to say, has performed most of the functions intended for it. Certainly it has been a chamber to devise and improve legislation. The Criminal Code, the Income Tax Act, the Bankruptcy Act and other such measures are outstanding examples of accomplishments in this field. The Senate committees have reworked legislation with a thoroughness not always possible in the other place. The Senate has provided a forum for the study of important public questions—a forum not otherwise available in Parliament, and, perhaps, not otherwise available in the country. It has conducted studies on manpower and employment, on drug addiction and on land use. It is now studying the problem of aging. These and many similar undertakings have proved to be a credit to its committees and a value to the country.

In addition, our Senate house procedures have allowed for debates on important national and international problems, and over the years there have been many fruitful debates inaugurated in this way. As one reads the Hansards of this house it seems clear that the Senate's best work has been done in an atmosphere devoid of partisan considerations. The Leader of the Opposition has pointed out that a very small percentage of our work has significant political overtones. I think it is useful to recall what the late Senator Haig, the father of the present Senator Haig, once said in a speech at London, Ontario:

> My experience has taught me that at first, when a new member comes into the Senate, his political leanings are very marked. But as time goes on he realizes that his duty as a senator is so important that he should forget his politics and put his country first.

In 1922 when Senator Dandurand became Leader of the Government here he put the issue on a higher plane still. He said this:

> For my part, from the moment I entered this Chamber, I felt reluctant to call the leader who sat opposite the Government representative the "Leader of the Opposition". That term was somewhat repugnant to me because it implied a systematic official Opposition, and I did not see the role of the Senate in that light. It seemed, according to the dictum of the founders of Confederation, that the function of the Upper House was to tender sympathetic advice to the Government, and to postpone or oppose or modify the measures of the Government according to its own good judgment without any party bias.... In assuming the direction of the legislation in this Chamber, I disliked the idea of crossing the floor, having been last Session at your left, Mr. Speaker, and now coming to sit at your right.

Senator Dandurand's whole speech on that occasion deserves the careful study of every honourable senator. The objectives he sets are noble, and even though at times the Senate may fall a little short of realizing them, we must try again and again to do so.

The fact, of course, is that the parliamentary system works best when there is a government party to propose, and an opposition to criticize. On the walls of the chamber of the Speaker of this house there is enshrined a maxim from Horace reading Sapere aude—"Dare to be prudent". I would venture the view that at this time in this country an impressive display of reasonable restraint in debate here would find a warm response in Canadian public opinion.

It is not my purpose to labour this issue, but it is useful, I think, to refer often to what is generally considered the classic statement on the role of second chambers. This statement was done in England in 1918 by a royal commission presided over by Viscount Bryce. The four main functions of second chambers as described by Viscount Bryce can be summarized in this way:

1. The revision of bills passed by the Commons;

2. The initiation and examination of non-contentious legislation;

3. The interposition of such delay as may be needed to secure an adequate expression of popular opinion on contentious bills;

4. Full and free discussion at any time on matters of public policy.

I have taken much time upon matters of special concern to this honourable house because here we are faced with a new set of circumstances. For years many of our colleagues have been engaged in the increasingly onerous work of the Divorce Committee under the leadership of the learned senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). With the appointment of a Commissioner to hear the evidence in divorce, the exhaustive burden of that work has been lifted from the shoulders of honourable senators. In passing, may I again praise the devotion which the chairman and committee members have brought to their task in the interests of the country and to the credit of the Senate through the years.

As a result of all this, we now have the opportunity to review and reactivate the work of many of our Standing Committees. If I may say so, we might with profit, and making adaptions appropriate to Canadian conditions, consider the procedure and some of the work done by committees of the Senate of the United States.

Our Committee on Banking and Commerce, under the distinguished chairmanship of the learned senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), and our Committee on Transport and Communications, sitting under his equally learned and distinguished colleague from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), have been great committees. They have brought lustre to the Senate and to Parliament. Our Committee on Finance, under several outstanding chairmen, and perhaps especially under the venerated senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), have performed with great distinction on many occasions. The demands of time and availability of honourable senators have made it difficult for other committees to do all they would have liked.

Let me illustrate. There is an ever-increasing capacity among our colleagues here in the field of international affairs. Honourable senators have been serving at the United Nations, on delegations to meetings of NATO Parliamentarians, Commonwealth Parliamentarians and other international parliamentary groups. Their reports to the Senate on this work are both informative and impressive. I believe our Standing Committee on External Relations can provide a useful forum to pursue this vital work. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has informed me he would be delighted to assist this purpose by addressing the committee on occasion. I would like to think that distinguished Canadian experts from outside Parliament in the field of foreign affairs could be invited to appear before the committee and to provide information which would be of value to Parliament and the country.

In the Public Service of Canada, and in the Crown companies, there are men and women who have reputations both national and international. There are distinguished Canadians in many other walks of life who could make a public contribution to projects which I feel certain our Senate committees could initiate. We have 19 standing committees. The Public Health and Welfare Committee can initiate studies in that field. There is always a great interest in the field of trade relations. With the advent of the centenary of Confederation and with the prospect of a World's Fair opening in Canada shortly, it seems to me that our committee on the tourist industry might perform a most useful function by a study in respect of these events. The Natural Resources Committee, with the co-operation of the appropriate department, could engage in productive study. I hope we can mobilize to exploit our opportunities in these various fields. I would encourage committee chairmen when they are appointed to consider initiatives along these lines.

Now if I point to the work of the committees of the Senate of the United States as possible guides in one direction, may I say also we can help ourselves in the work of the chamber itself by looking in another direction. We would do well to know much about the doings and methods of the House of Lords. That body may be low in the scale of power since the Parliament Acts of 1918 and 1948, but it is high in prestige. Indeed, one may be the result of the other. I believe, however, it approaches closely the important role described for second chambers by Viscount Bryce. We have done as well here at times. We can continue along these lines and with profit learn from them.

In his speech in 1922, Senator Dandurand questioned the wisdom of the Leader of the Government party in the Senate, and indeed of any senator, being a member of the cabinet. There is something to be said for that view; and at times it has been said in this chamber. In the meantime, however, we must recognize that conditions in Parliament have changed since 1922. The industrialization of the country, the advent of the age of automation, indeed, too, the development of the welfare state, have been powerful forces to influence the lives of our people. Modern legislation dealing with these problems reaches more and more into areas which were thought to be sacrosanct from such influences. But it is important to remember that Canada is a new country.

It is only a few generations removed from the frontier. It is a land where enterprise and initiative should be encouraged. The phrase "the free enterprise system" may mean too much, but the encouragement of initiative consistent with the public welfare must be an important goal for Government and for Parliament. It is important, I think, for both legislative branches of Parliament to contain people who are in touch with Government policy and trends in legislation in these important aspects of our national life to which I have just alluded.

In the Senate we have had leaders of the Government who were of the ministry. We have also had leaders of the Government who were not. We have had periods in which there was no member of the Government in this chamber. In the House of Lords there is a much wider contact with the Government through ministers of state, under-secretaries, and, indeed, ministers with portfolios at times. I think it is to the advantage of that chamber that this is so; but it may be too much to claim that as much Government representation even proportionately is required here. I think, however, it is helpful for the Senate to have at least one minister.

But there is also another aspect. A senator who is sworn of the Privy Council is bound by the principle of cabinet solidarity. As such, he shares responsibility for Government decisions and Government policy, and he must defend both as required; but he is also a senator with all the attributes and all the independence which his status implies. To reconcile the two, to strike a reasonable balance without impaling himself on either horn of the dilemma, if there is one, requires the exercise of judgment. I ask for the help of all honourable senators as I undertake this exercise.

Of special concern to this honourable house, of course, is the proposal in the Speech from the Throne to provide for a retiring age for members of the Senate. This is not the time to discuss details of substance or of procedure. Perhaps it would be helpful, however, if I were to indicate some aspects of the plan. It is thought that newly-appointed senators should retire, as judges do, upon attaining their seventy-fifth birthday, and that upon retirement they should receive a pension to which they would contribute. This pension will probably be comparable in amount to the pension available to a retired member of the House of Commons. For senators appointed for life, there will be an option to retire on or after their seventy-fifth birthday, with an appropriate pension.

It is not my intention to discuss in detail now the work of the session forecast in the Speech from the Throne. Honourable senators who participate in this debate will, no doubt, as the Leader of the Opposition indicated, cover much of that ground. I hope the debate will move along steadily to a conclusion within the next few weeks. I hope also that many honourable senators will take part in it.

In addition, as each bill reaches us, we will have a general discussion on second reading. Again, at the committee stage I know that each bill will be subjected to the close scrutiny of both principle and of draftsmanship, for which our committees are noted. As I have already stated, the forum we provide here is unique. It is the safety valve of the Parliamentary system—and the work is performed at its best in an objective and detached way.

I should tell the house that as of the opening day of this session, nearly a dozen private bills were ready for presentation. With a view to the efficient use of parliamentary time, the Senate will also initiate a considerable number of public bills. Those with financial implications cannot, of course, start here, and there are other measures without financial implications but which are more appropriate for introduction in the other place. The public bills we introduce and those which will come to us from the House of Commons will provide a very full program for the session.

In addition, some of our committees I hope will be engaged upon the special study to which I have already alluded. All in all, this session should be an interesting and a busy one. But when our work is up to date, I think, following the traditional practice of the Senate, we should adjourn if the schedule in the other branch of Parliament falls behind; but the emphasis will be upon the efficient dispatch of the business before us, and not upon adjournments.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The Speech from the Throne is traditionally an instrument to outline the general policy of the Government and to set up an immediate work plan for a new session of Parliament. This Speech contemplates in the international field a Canadian policy to promote peace through the most effective agencies organized by the nations of the world for that purpose. We will continue to do our utmost to assist the prevention of the outbreak of war and to provide personnel and facilities to strengthen the deterrents.

The Speech reaffirms the proposition that the defence policy of Canada should be geared to the strategic requirements of the NATO alliance. NATO has been the shield of the West. It assured the integrity of the West when its survival was imperilled. NATO continues to play that vital role. And peace and its preservation is its purpose—not imperial ambition, not the fomenting of political and social unrest. The strength of the West—its capacity for good in the world—is overwhelming, if the western nations act in concert; but divided, it is weak and its parts become pawns in the hands of the doctrinaire revolutionary. That is why Canada is ready to take her place with her western allies and devote so much of her substance to this great purpose. The West, however, must also be strong economically. For this reason, as the Leader of the Opposition well said, the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations to be held in Geneva this year is of very great importance.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The late great President of our southern neighbour saw this clearly. He had before him, as we have, the example of the transformation of Europe in an economic way from weakness to strength. This was accomplished mainly through the operation of the principles of the Treaty of Rome, and the basis for this instrument originated in the leadership which came from the Marshall Plan. We hope these negotiations will succeed. We hope the barriers to freer trade will be weakened. We hope that the newer, underprivileged countries will have a practical and progressive share in this development. We hope that good will and a determination to succeed will prevail in these difficult negotiations. We hope that Canada can give support and leadership to this great purpose. Canadians believe in these objectives, and Canadians are aware, too, as the leader opposite has said, that their own economic strength and growth are direct factors of the volume of their international trade. Canada's economy becomes stronger, the economies of the West become stronger, as the trading lanes become freer.

Honourable senators, if I may venture another Latin quotation—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Translate it, though.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I will. I did before, but perhaps you did not understand the translation. This one I am sure my honourable friend will understand and recognize, because he heard it from the lips of the same professor of philosophy as I had:

Video Meliora, proboque; deteriora sequor—I see the heights ahead but my feet are in the mire.

This aphorism is so tragically true. Our idealism for co-operation in world affairs often gets bogged down—often for reasons which are only excuses. But we must with patience, with infinite patience, pick ourselves up again and again and go on. And the mote in our own eye should not distort our assessment of our own position. At home, all is not sweetness and light. Like so many other countries, new and old, we too have our share of social, political and economic unrest. Sometimes our democratic institutions—free speech, free assembly, and a free press—allow an extreme position to be over-emphasized. That is part of democracy. But so, too, is the good sense of so many of our people who dare to be as prudent as senators have been enjoined to be.

Our political forefathers dared as much almost a century ago, and under great stress they fashioned for us not a unitary state but a confederation. They gave us a federal establishment, now with ten members. Each has social, political, economic and cultural conditions peculiar to itself. The common bond of unity under the Crown still prevails. A stronger Canadianism has been forged through years of war and peace, through years of depression and prosperity. A mutual interdependence has emerged and this has added to the strength and the character of the national fabric.

But conditions now are not what they were in 1867. Today the fiscal responsibilities of provincial governments for education, for roads, for social services and for many other matters are enormous. In the federal field almost a quarter of our spending is to safeguard Canada's vital position in a contracting, interdependent world. Federal expenditures on social services are great and growing, and the new demands continue.

I believe the problems affecting provincial jurisdiction and responsibility can be solved without weakening the vital authority of the federal Government. I believe that in the face of these problems reason, good judgment and co-operation will prevail. Call it what you will—call it co-operative federalism, call it provincial-federal or federal-provincial amity—but, honourable senators, let us do it in the interests of national unity, and not only for the survival of the parts but for the progressive well-being of the whole.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I abhor cliches, so do we all, but we must occasionally remind ourselves that with the kind of people we have and with the great resources with which Providence has endowed us, we in Canada are singularly fortunate on our part of this tremendous continent.

How wealthy, too, are we in our cultural heritage. The tongues of the Saxon and of the Norman are officially recognized—and, what is more important, freely used. They influence our institutions profoundly. They affect the developing genius of our people, especially our young people. And each element shall continue to develop its own ideals and achieve its own aspirations alongside the other. To this original establishment has been added, from Europe especially but in increasing numbers from many other countries of the world, other peoples with other tongues, with other national and ethnic traditions, all of them born of centuries of sophisticated cultural development.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, I sincerely believe that the cultural heritage of the citizens of Canada is of great value. Allow me to add that my own experience as a lawyer strengthens that conclusion.

I have been a member of the Bar of the province of Ontario for 30 years. Nevertheless, in the first place, I am a member of the Bar of the province of Quebec. I will always be proud of the fact that I read civil law in French at the University of Montreal. Consequently, I have a deeper appreciation of Quebec, its people, its institutions and its aspirations. I have many friends among the French Canadians.

When I became a member of the Bar in Ontario, I found that the intellectual wealth of civil law and common law was one of our wonderful national resources. I would like to believe that a great number of our young compatriots—of our students—French and English, could benefit throughout their lives from such a training, not only in the study of law but also of science and the humanities.

(Text):

Honourable senators, in McGee's time our people spoke the language of Shakespeare and Bossuet. Now in our cities, as a commonplace, we hear the tongues of Goethe, Dante, Shevchenko, Patoki, Bialik, van der Vondel, Ibsen, Stiernhielm, Halberg, Sturluson and many others. What a boon to a new country these are! What an earnest they can be for our future stability! People we have always needed and we shall continue to need. Space and resources and opportunity we have. Let us together, then, dare to be prudent as we plan and manage a promising present for a beckoning future.

On motion of Honourable Mr. Willis, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 27, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Capital Budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

HON. ARTHUR W. ROEBUCK

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I desire to draw the attention of the Senate to a special anniversary. We should not do this on every occasion, and perhaps for some of us it might be embarrassing, but on this occasion I think it is well worth doing.

I would like to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that tomorrow one of our esteemed members, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), will observe his 86th birthday.

I am sure I express the good wishes of all senators present for the success of this memorable anniversary, and perhaps I can even say that a good many of us look upon him with a green eye as he approaches this very significant day.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, although the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) has spoken for all of us, I would like to add my own personal congratulations. Of course, 86 years is a long time, and few of us really expect to reach that age.

Senator Roebuck neither looks nor acts 86. While he is not given to boasting, a year ago I asked him how his golf game was and he said that he played his age for 18 holes. So, if at 85 years he played his age for 18 holes, he is a wonder. I am happy indeed to offer to him my congratulations.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: I feel I should address you as friends, rather than as honourable senators. Your words have touched me very deeply. One of the happy circumstances we enjoy here is the friendship, the comradeship and the mutual sympathy that we senators have for one another. I am delighted with the kind remarks that you have made. I thank you, and I am hoping to be with you for a good many more years to come.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If I may, I should like to say that the other day, as I was being measured for a suit of clothes, I told the tailor to make it loose in case I might expand. He looked at my measurements of six years ago and said there was nothing in that argument at all, that the measurements were just the same. However, I said to him, "Don't forget this—I am a young fellow and I may grow."

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard presented Bill S-6, to incorporate Bank of Western Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien presented the first report of the Committee of Selection.

He said: Honourable senators, the Committee of Selection appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several standing committees for the present session have the honour to report herewith the following list of senators selected by them to serve on each of the following standing committees. It is a lengthy report, and it will be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings.

The Clerk Assistant (reading):

The Committee of Selection, appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several standing committees—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

For text of report see Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 43-44.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): Honourable senators, I move that the report be considered on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 3, 1964, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Leave having been given to proceed with Order No. 2:

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Committee on Divorce.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I understand my granddaughters have been to the five and ten cent store in preparation for tomorrow, and so I am going to have to leave fairly early for an important engagement.

I move, seconded by Senator Hollett, that this report be adopted.

Report adopted.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Harry A. Willis: Honourable senators, if I may I would ask permission to take some parts of my speech out of context. The 4.40 train for Toronto senators leaves at 4.40, and since I have a special reference to make to at least two of them I should like to do so now. I may say that the Government Leader of the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) and the Opposition Leader (Hon. Mr. Brooks) have stolen some of my thunder, because I wanted to speak about Senator Roebuck first.

Honourable senators, Arthur Wentworth Roebuck was born on February 28, 1878, and I have figured out that if he had been born on February 29 of that year he would have his nineteenth birthday tomorrow, and I must say that he looks 19 years old.

My first encounter with Senator Roebuck was when I was a student of law at City Hall in Toronto, and he was defending an eminent physician on a charge of abortion. I had never heard such an eloquent and learned plea as he made at that time. I was impressed by him then as I always have been since, although we differed in politics. He was born in Hamilton and lived for a time in Arthur, which is not far from my own home in Belfountain. I followed his career with the utmost interest and, quite apart from politics or anything else, he was the best attorney-general Ontario ever had. Furthermore he was a man of principle; he resigned from a Liberal cabinet in Ontario because of principle, and I give him credit for that.

Senator Roebuck then went on to fight in a federal riding for the Liberal party, and eventually he was called to this house where, as Chairman of the Divorce Committee, he has done tremendous service to Canada, and I, being also from the Toronto area, want to pay tribute to him today. I am glad to hear that his grandchildren are going to meet him tonight for his birthday tomorrow.

The other senator I want to mention is Senator William Taylor. In looking through the Speech from the Throne I could not find anything about tobacco because having regard to our present Minister of National Health and Welfare and her ideas about smoking, I really feel sorry for him. I note that Senator Taylor is the senator from Norfolk County. In the next redistribution there is not going to be a Norfolk, because that is the tobacco-growing area of Ontario, and if the present Minister of National Health and Welfare has her way that industry will disappear. Senator Taylor, you will have to adopt a new constituency. I feel sorry for you, but, on the other hand, I feel more sorry for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Now, honourable senators, I come to my original text. I want to pay tribute to you, Mr. Speaker, and say how glad and how fortunate we are to be back under your guidance and direction in this new session. You and your charming wife, as exemplified last evening, are a charming host and hostess of the Senate. We pay tribute to you, sir.

My next reference is to the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac, the Honourable George S. White, P.C. I was very pleased to read during the recess that the Prime Minister had named Senator White a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council. During the speeches of yesterday I wondered what was going to be said about Senator White's counselling Her Majesty. I knew, of course, that he was not an obstetrician. I am glad he is a member of the Privy Council. When I was introduced to the Senate almost two years ago no one could have been more generous and kinder to me than the then Speaker, the honourable Senator White. I pay tribute to him and his charming wife for the duties they performed for so short a time. However, honourable senators, he may be back there again in the not-too-distant future. Eight votes is all that is needed. It is encouraging.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is still draughty!

Hon. Mr. Willis: I have more hair than has the honourable Leader of the Government.

I wish to refer now to the mover and seconder of the motion. I was not present on Tuesday evening because I had to attend a funeral in Toronto. When Senator Denis first came into the chamber I looked for that blue book containing the Post Office patronage list under his arm, but I did not see him carrying it. I wonder what he did with it. In any event, he made a very good political speech in seconding the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I met Senator Cook for the first time last night. I understand he is a well-known barrister in St. John's, Newfoundland. I congratulate him upon his appointment to the Senate, and upon his being chosen to move the motion before the house.

I want to mention also Senator Rattenbury. He comes from New Brunswick, the province from which my leader comes, and I understand he has had an outstanding business career.

I should make a special reference to the new senator from Toronto, Senator Daniel Lang. He is only 44 years of age. I congratulate my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government, on the appointment of so young a man. I wish I had been appointed when I was that age. Dan Lang comes from a well-known legal family, and his father was a well-known worker in the Liberal organization in Ontario. I must also point out that the firm to which Dan Lang belongs is Lang, Michener and Cranston, of which the Honourable Roland Michener, the Speaker of the House of Commons for five years, is a member. I trust that Dan Lang's approach to this house has been leavened by the influence of Roland Michener. In any event, I welcome him wholeheartedly. He will be a great credit to the house, and we from Toronto know that he will do his best in the interests of Canada.

I see that my honourable friend, Senator Ross Macdonald, has just left the chamber. If he thought I was going to refer to him next, he was right. Ross Macdonald was the Leader of the house when I was appointed. I have known him for many years. He was an able barrister in Brantford, Ontario. He is a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada, and was a co-governor with me of McMaster University. It was Senator Ross Macdonald who schooled me in the ways of the Senate. Up until a year and a half ago, when he was bereft of his wife, he was greatly helped by her. She was an able partner to him.

Honourable senators, I wish now to say something about Senator Brooks, my leader on this side of the house, and to refer to the erudite speeches which were made yesterday. They put my effort today somewhat to shame. I was asked by my Whip if I could go on today, and I said I could but I was not prepared. The erudite speech which the honourable Senator Brooks made is a great tribute to him, and I am sure it was a pleasure to both sides of the house to hear such a speech. It was non-partisan; it was a speech you would expect from a Leader of the Opposition in this house.

I do not need to emphasize the record of honourable Senator Brooks. He became a member of the House of Commons in 1935; he was a distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs; and then he came to this house and is now our distinguished leader. I pay the highest tribute to him.

I come now to my friend Senator John J. Connolly, whom I have known for many years. When he spoke in Latin, English and French yesterday I wondered if he was about to break into Italian or German. I wondered if perchance his facility in French was picked up a year and a half ago in Paris when he visited a certain night club.

Senator Connolly is an eminent member of the Ontario Bar, and a distinguished member of this house. He was a guiding figure in the Liberal party in the elections in 1962 and 1963—for which I do not give him credit. Nevertheless, he is the distinguished leader of this house, and I know that all on this side as well as all on the other side are very pleased that he now occupies that position.

Honourable senators, I received a letter from Senator Connolly, as I guess other senators did, prior to the session, telling us the hours and the days on which we would meet. We appreciate that, and from a businessman like you, Sir, I know that we can expect great things to come.

I also congratulate Senator Connolly upon being made a member of the cabinet without portfolio—which I understand includes everything; you are boss of the whole works. We are very proud of you and happy to sit under you as Government Leader in this house. I do not say that that situation is going to continue forever, because a margin of eight votes is something, and it may be that in the future the sides may be reversed. Then we will welcome you as Leader of the Opposition just the same as we welcome you today as Leader of the Government.

The Speech from the Throne is full of platitudes—there is really nothing else in it.

As was said by the Honourable Judy LaMarsh, there is nothing in it whatsoever about smoking or cancer or anything like that. When the smoke is cleared away and we are left the mere skeleton, there is nothing much.

Honourable senators, when I hear about the Minister of Defence of the present Government sending a corps, or an army platoon, or whatever they call it, to search Ashbury College for rifles, I wonder what we are coming to. It sounds like Alice in Wonderland.

I was in the House of Commons yesterday when the Minister of National Defence, the Honourable Mr. Hellyer, in reply to a question, explained that the military platoon or corps arrived at Ashbury College at the late hour of 12.30 a.m. because of a breakdown of the vehicle involved. But what in heaven's name is the Department of Defence doing sending out a military party like that to inspect places like Ashbury College and Woodstock Collegiate in Oxford? I understand that they went to the collegiate in Oxford County, took some of the ammunition and left the rifles. Apparently they did not know what they were doing at all.

I say that the Department of National Defence in Canada should be doing more than spying on colleges and collegiates or any such institutions. If they want to do something, they should go to the armouries and protect them, but for heaven's sake, let them keep away from the collegiates and colleges of this country.

This may never have happened before but I understand that at times some officials take more power than they should. But here we have the spectacle of their going to Ashbury College at 12.30 in the morning and commandeering all the ammunition, rifles and pistols, or whatever there was, and doing the same to Woodstock Collegiate.

It reminded me of a cartoon that appeared in the paper the other day of two Oxford students duelling over a woman. That is how the Department of National Defence appears to me when they do what they have been doing.

Honourable senators, in regard to the subject of redistribution, those proposals were introduced by the former Government and a committee was set up to look after that matter. I understand, according to the Speech from the Throne, that that is also the intention of the present Government. Whatever it is, redistribution must be done on a non-partisan scale and it must be a fair proposal for everybody. I have hopes that that will be done.

On the question of election expenses, there are other senators who will speak with more authority than I can, although I have had something to do with that in the past. Senator Grosart and others will probably speak on this point, and I do not propose to enlarge upon it.

Honourable senators, to me the Speech from the Throne was really only platitudes; it did not have any meat in it; it deals only with something we are proposing to do and leaves everything hanging in the air. I think the Speech from the Throne should be more than that—it should tell us what legislation we are to have.

Honourable senators, as to Senate reform, it is said that proposals will be introduced for Senate reform which will be satisfactory to everyone. No one knows what the proposals are or what the terms are. I think they should be explicit.

There have been changes in the cabinet. As I have said, from this side of the house we certainly welcome Senator Connolly to the cabinet. He is a sound and sensible lawyer and businessman, and I think he will add lustre to the cabinet just as his predecessor Senator Ross Macdonald did.

I wish to add—and I am quoting now from the Leader of the Opposition in the other house—that during the recess the Minister of Labour announced a plan whereby each Canadian would carry an identification card. I think the proposal exempts clergymen and farmers; that includes me, so I am absolved from the proposal that each person carry such a card.

As the Leader of the Opposition in the other house said, in the future our newspaper social columns will report that Miss 925340 was married to Mr. 83457, and that the only name appearing in the column would be that of the officiating clergyman. I wonder whether the marriage would be recorded as 00000. I do not think that is a system we want in Canada, to be regimented by numbers. That is not a proper course to pursue. There may be other ways to get around it. Once you have regimentation by numbers you are not far from dictatorship and that is something we do not want here.

I am wholeheartedly in support of what my leader, Senator Brooks, said yesterday, that we should get back to the two-party system in Canada. After all, that is the only safe way to protect democracy. We want the two-party system.

Honourable senators, my speech has been short. I blame it on the Speech from the Throne, that my remarks are non-productive.

I wish to repeat how pleased I am to welcome Senator Connolly to the Government leadership here and to support my leader, the Honourable Senator Brooks, in what he said yesterday.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, may I first of all congratulate the mover (Hon. Mr. Cook) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Denis) of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, on their eloquence. I wish also, in a humble way, to express my welcome to the new senators, as well as to congratulate the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly) on the high position to which he has attained. Senator Willis has delivered one of his usual good speeches. I hope he will pardon me if I depart from the theme of his speech to another subject in which I am interested.

Honourable senators, as the result of medical research great blessings have come to people generally, and if research can be continued, even greater blessings will come in the future. I mention one disease that in the past was feared and dreaded, namely, poliomyelitis, which was the cause of many deaths, permanent paralysis, and was largely uncontrollable. Yet since 1955, when the Salk vaccine was discovered, the disease has largely come under control; its incidence has sharply reduced and fatalities are now very rare. Of course, it comes in waves. In 1955 there were 58,000 cases in the United States, and in 1962 only 450 cases. In fact, one-fifth of the cases and half of the fatalities are now among persons over 15 years of age. It is quite clear that if a person takes some Salk vaccine now, and another injection in a month's time, and still another in seven month's time, he or she will be almost free of polio.

Another great accomplishment in Canada was in 1921, when the late doctor Sir Fredrick Banting discovered insulin. In spite of setbacks and discouragements, he persisted, and with the help of Dr. Best and Dr. Collup, he succeeded. Thousands of people are now able to live a normal life who would not have been able to live at all had it not been for insulin.

During the past 40 years more curative measures have been standardized than in all previous history. With sulfa, penicillin, other antibiotic drugs, and treatment of goitre, blood transfusions, blood banks, bone banks and so on, the whole medical subject has been changed quite definitely. How dreadful it used to be when cases of scarlet fever and diphtheria afflicted a family or a community and caused many deaths and much sadness. That is almost wiped out now, with the result that the average length of life, which was about 50 years at the beginning of the century, now stands at about 68 years for men and about 73 years for women.

There is much need for medical research. We in Canada spend about $12 million per annum, of which approximately $3 million or $4 million is by voluntary contribution, and the remainder is contributed by the Government. According to my information, the United States spends about ten times that amount per capita. I am sorry that they are going to withdraw some of the contributions to Canada, because it is very necessary to keep up our medical research. It should be maintained under the guidance of universities. There is not a university in Canada which is not short of money, and there is not a medical faculty in Canada but wants to carry on medical research. On account of their teaching of scientific medicine they must keep in touch with developments. If they are only able to teach the medicine of yesterday, then the graduates who go out to practice will, of course, only practise the medicine of yesterday.

In Canada we have a great many research specialists who are equipped to carry on very well. Many of them go to the United States. How can we prevent that exodus? We can do it simply by encouraging different branches of research. In addition to the universities, there are other branches. For instance, there are located in Toronto the head offices of such bodies as the Canadian Heart Foundation, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society, the Canadian Mental Health Association, and many others.

Honourable senators, I am not going to advocate the conferring of hereditary titles on Canadians, but I think the man, or woman, or the company, which contributes to this research work should get some recognition. It is true that these things bring their own reward in many cases, but at the same time some recognition of the man or woman who is willing to contribute in this very important field is long overdue.

Tuberculosis has been with the human race since days of antiquity; it was once called the great white plague. The different provinces now arrange to have X-rays taken on a universal scale to detect tuberculosis. They have isolated cases, rehabilitated many, and treated others, and have obtained remarkable results. The great white plague is almost under control at the present time; each fatality or new case is the result of neglect.

Much has been done with regard to cardiovascular diseases, but it is still a field for research. What about diet? What about the effect of a high percentage of cholesterol in the blood stream? Is animal fat guilty of increasing atherosclerosis, or hardening of the blood vessels? These are problems we should work with because they are of such vital importance.

Often we see men, and sometimes women, on the street, carrying a white cane. If in their schooldays their eyes had been carefully tested some of these cases would have been avoided.

As regard hearing, there is a brighter outlook for those who are suffering from deficiency in hearing. A few years ago I had the pleasure of attending a meeting of the Commonwealth Medical Association in Edinburgh, Scotland. It was held in a large theatre, and of course I was away up in the "gods", but I was able to look down on the platform, and there I could see one of our genial senators who is in this chamber now. He was explaining his complicated fenestration operation to those specialists who were present. Since that day he has travelled to many parts of this continent and to other continents to explain his methods. As a result, many people are able to hear who otherwise would not have been able to enjoy hearing. I wish to pay a personal tribute to Dr. Sullivan.

I would mention one other subject. There are 75,000 hospital beds in Canada, nearly half of which are occupied by mental patients. Until recently there was disgrace and a stigma attached to the person who was so afflicted, and even to his relatives. Mental cases were harshly treated. Such persons were held in chains and in stocks. They were kept in poorly equipped asylums, and their condition was not at all understood. Since the newer drugs have been discovered, all that has changed. There is not now the need of restraint, the noisy aggressive patient can be kept under control, and almost all such cases can be treated in a special department of a general hospital, where much more research can be carried on concerning them. The disease of the mind is one of the sad diseases. We should get away from such words as "imbecility" and "lunatic asylum," and even "insanity," because there is a psychology of mental diseases, just as there is of any other disease to which the flesh is heir.

There are many grades of disease, and it is very hard to assess the efficiency of the human brain. In fact, the boundary line between the twilight and the darkness is extremely hard to define, and those who have been witnesses in the courts of law find that there is a lot of doubt and confusion regarding cases where insanity is pleaded. There is no uniformity in instructions given to juries. In fact, the law in Canada, stated roughly in this regard, is that the person who is accused can be declared not responsible for his act if it is established that at the time the crime was committed or the omission was made he was not capable of telling the nature and quality of the act, that he did not know it was wrong.

That is pretty close to the old M'Naghten rules which were handed down in 1843, more than a hundred years ago. This man M'Naghten was afflicted with delusions of persecution. He thought Sir Robert Peel was one of his enemies and was causing some of his confusion. So he placed himself in a certain position, and when the door opened Sir Robert Peel's secretary, Edward Drummond, came out and was shot to death. Of course, M'Naghten was accused of deliberately shooting the man, and was brought to trial. The jury found that he was partially insane and therefore, he was sent to a mental hospital.

The present medical beliefs are not in harmony with those M'Naghten rules. For instance, the M'Naghten rules say you must be clearly insane. Thus it is the severity of the disease that is the dividing line between responsibility and non-responsibility. That is not as it should be, because the existence of the disease itself should be the chief consideration. Another point is it was assumed that M'Naghten was only partially insane. Now it is not believed that the brain is acting in different compartments: it is believed that it acts as a whole; even the emotions may overcome reason, and there could be no such thing as partial insanity.

The M'Naghten rules take no account of what is called irresistible or uncontrollable impulse. Some psychiatrists were asked about this, and 90 per cent of them said it did exist and should be added to the rules of the court. However, recently Chief Justice McRuer, the chairman of a royal commission on the subject, did not accept that view because there was some doubt as to the existence of the irresistible impulse and it would be very confusing to administer. If it were accepted, before a man could be declared irresponsible he would have to establish that he did not know the nature or quality of the act, did not know whether it was right or wrong, and was incapable of preventing himself from doing it.

Honourable senators, I will not continue because there are so many things that could be taken up to show the need for voluntary contributions to medical research. For instance, in Alberta alone they have made great progress with tissue transplantation and even transplantations of living organs, and they are turning the searchlight on prostate and kidney troubles.

In closing I thank you for your attention. I have tried to leave the impression that donating money to medical research is a wonderfully good investment because it will enhance the welfare, health and happiness of present and future generations.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Yuzyk, debate adjourned.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-3, intituled: "An Act to make Provision for the Disclosure of Information in respect of Finance Charges".

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I move that this order stand until March 17 next.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 3, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(see p. 36)

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

The Committee of Selection, appointed to nominate Senators to serve on the several Standing Committees for the present session, have the honour to report herewith the following list of Senators selected by them to serve on each of the following Standing Committees, namely:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY

The Honourable the Speaker, the Honourable Senators Belisle, Cameron, Davies, Ferguson, Fournier (De Lanaudiere), Gladstone, Gouin, Haig, Irvine, Lambert, MacDonald (Queens), O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), Pouliot, Reid, Vien, White and Yuzyk. (17)

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

The Honourable Senators Blais, Bouffard, Bradley, Comeau, Davies, Dupuis, Flynn, Isnor, McGrand, O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), Pearson, Phillips, Reid, Savoie, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh, Sullivan, Welch, Willis and Wood. (20)

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE RESTAURANT

The Honourable the Speaker, the Honourable Senators Beaubien (Provencher), Fergusson, Inman, Macdonald (Cape Breton), McLean and Reid. (6)

STANDING ORDERS

The Honourable Senators Aseltine, Beaubien (Provencher), *Brooks, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Flynn, Fournier (De Lanaudiere), Grosart, Hayden, Hollett, Inman, Kinley, McLean, Méthot, O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), Tremblay, Vien and Wood. (15)

Ex officio* member

BANKING AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Senators Aseltine, Baird, Beaubien (Bedford), Beaubien (Provencher), Blois, Bouffard, *Brooks, Burchill, Choquette, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Crerar, Croll, Davies, Dessureault, Farris, Fergusson, Flynn, Gelinas, Gershaw, Gouin, Hayden, Hugessen, Irvine, Isnor, Kinley, Lambert, Lang, Leonard, Macdonald (Brantford), McCutcheon, McKeen, McLean, Molson, Monette, O'Leary (Carleton), Paterson, Pearson, Pouliot, Power, Reid, Robertson (Shelburne), Roebuck, Smith (Kamloops), Taylor (Norfolk), Thorvaldson, Vaillancourt, Vien, Walker, White, Willis and Woodrow. (50)

Ex officio* member

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

The Honourable Senators Baird, Beaubien (Provencher), Bouffard, Bradley, *Brooks, Buchanan, Connolly (Halifax North), *Connolly (Ottawa West), Croll, Dessureault, Dupuis, Farris, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Gelinas, Gershaw, Gouin, Haig, Hayden, Hollett, Horner, Hugessen, Isnor, Jodoin, Kinley, Lambert, Lang, Lefrançois, Macdonald (Brantford), McCutcheon, McGrand, McKeen, McLean, Méthot, Molson, Monette, Paterson, Pearson, Phillips, Power, Quart, Reid, Robertson (Shelburne), Roebuck, Smith (Kamloops), Smith (Queens-Shelburne), Stambaugh, Taylor (Westmorland), Thorvaldson, Veniot, Vien, Welch and Woodrow. (50)

Ex officio* member

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

The Honourable Senators Aseltine, Baird, Beaubien (Bedford), Beaubien (Provencher), Belisle, Bouffard, Bourque, *Brooks, Choquette, Connolly (Halifax North), *Connolly (Ottawa West), Croll, Dupuis, Farris, Gouin, Hayden, Hnatyshyn, Hollett, Horner, Hugessen, Lambert, Macdonald (Cape Breton), Macdonald (Brantford), Méthot, Monette, Pouliot, Quart, Reid, Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River), Roebuck, Stambaugh, Sullivan, Taylor (Westmorland), Thorvaldson, Tremblay, Walker and Willis. (35)

Ex officio* member

INTERNAL ECONOMY AND CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS

The Honourable Senators Basha, Beaubien (Bedford), Beaubien (Provencher), Bouffard, Bourget (Speaker), *Brooks, Choquette, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Dessureault, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Gouin, Grosart, Hayden, Hodges, Howard, Irvine, Isnor, Lang, Macdonald (Cape Breton), Macdonald (Brantford), McLean, Molson, Paterson, Robertson (Shelburne), Smith (Kamloops), Vaillancourt and Vien. (25)

Ex officio* member

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

The Honourable Senators Aseltine, Beaubien (Provencher), Blois, Boucher, Bradley, *Brooks, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Crerar, Croll, Farris, Fergusson, Flynn, Fournier (De Lanaudiere), Gouin, Haig, Hayden, Hnatyshyn, Howard, Hugessen, Inman, Jodoin, Lambert, MacDonald (Queens), Macdonald (Brantford), McLean, Monette, O'Leary (Carleton), Pouliot, Rattenbury, Robertson (Shelburne), Savoie, Taylor (Norfolk), Thorvaldson, Vaillancourt, Veniot, Vien and Yuzyk. (35)

Ex officio* member

FINANCE

The Honourable Senators Baird, Beaubien (Bedford), Beaubien (Provencher), Belisle, Bouffard, *Brooks, Buchanan, Burchill, Choquette, Connolly (Halifax North), *Connolly (Ottawa West), Crerar, Croll, Denis, Dupuis, Farris, Flynn, Gershaw, Grant, Grosart, Haig, Hayden, Hnatyshyn, Horner, Isnor, Lambert, Leonard, Macdonald (Brantford), McCutcheon, McKeen, Méthot, Molson, O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), Paterson, Pearson, Pouliot, Power, Quart, Rattenbury, Reid, Robertson (Shelburne), Roebuck, Savoie, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), Stambaugh, Taylor (Norfolk), Thorvaldson, Vaillancourt, Vien, Welch, Woodrow and Yuzyk. (50)

Ex officio* member

TOURIST TRAFFIC

The Honourable Senators Baird, Basha, Beaubien (Provencher), Belisle, Bouffard, *Brooks, Cameron, Connolly (Halifax North), *Connolly (Ottawa West), Crerar, Croll, Davies, Dupuis, Fergusson, Gershaw, Grosart, Hollett, Inman, Isnor, Jodoin, Méthot, McLean, Molson, Roebuck, Smith (Kamloops), Tremblay and Willis. (25)

Ex officio member*

DEBATES AND REPORTING

The Honourable Senators Beaubien (Bedford), Bishop, *Brooks, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Davies, Grant, McGrand, Monette, Savoie, Sullivan and Tremblay. (9)

Ex officio member*

NATURAL RESOURCES

The Honourable Senators Aseltine, Basha, Beaubien (Provencher), Belisle, Boucher, Bouffard, Bourque, *Brooks, Buchanan, Burchill, Cameron, Comeau, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Crerar, Dessureault, Dupuis, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Gladstone, Hayden, Horner, Kinley, Macdonald (Brantford), McKeen, McLean, Méthot, Monette, O'Leary (Carleton), Paterson, Pearson, Phillips, Power, Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River), Stambaugh, Taylor (Norfolk), Taylor (Westmorland), Vaillancourt, Vien, Walker, Welch, Wood and Yuzyk. (39)

Ex officio member*

IMMIGRATION AND LABOUR

The Honourable Senators Beaubien (Provencher), Blais, Boucher, *Brooks, Buchanan, Burchill, Cameron, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Crerar, Croll, Dupuis, Fergusson, Flynn, Fournier (DeLanaudiere), Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Gershaw, Gladstone, Grosart, Hnatyshyn, Hodges, Horner, Hugessen, Lefrançois, Macdonald (Cape Breton), Monette, Paterson, Pearson, Rattenbury, Reid, Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River), Roebuck, Taylor (Norfolk), Vaillancourt, Veniot, Willis and Yuzyk. (35)

Ex officio* member

CANADIAN TRADE RELATIONS

The Honourable Senators Baird, Beaubien (Bedford), Bishop, Blais, Blois, *Brooks, Buchanan, Burchill, Cameron, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Crerar, Davies, Dessureault, Gouin, Howard, Kinley, Lambert, Leonard, MacDonald (Queens), Macdonald (Brantford), McCutcheon, McKeen, McLean, Méthot, Molson, O'Leary (Carleton), Paterson, Pearson, Phillips, Pouliot, Robertson (Shelburne), Smith (Kamloops), Vaillancourt, Walker, Welch and Woodrow. (35)

Ex officio* member

PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE

The Honourable Senators Beaubien (Bedford), Blais, *Brooks, Burchill, Choquette, Comeau, Connolly (Halifax North), *Connolly (Ottawa West), Denis, Dupuis, Farris, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Gershaw, Gladstone, Gouin, Grant, Haig, Inman, Irvine, Jodoin, Kinley, MacDonald (Queens), Macdonald (Brantford), McGrand, Monette, O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), Phillips, Quart, Roebuck, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), Stambaugh, Sullivan, Thorvaldson, Veniot, Welch and Woodrow. (35)

Ex officio* member

CIVIL SERVICE ADMINISTRATION

The Honourable Senators Aseltine, Belisle, Bishop, Blois, Bourque, *Brooks, Cameron, Choquette, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Davies, Dessureault, Dupuis, Fergusson, Grosart, Gouin, Irvine, Kinley, Lambert, Macdonald (Brantford), O'Leary (Carleton), Quart, Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River), Roebuck, Taylor (Norfolk), and White. (23)

Ex officio* member

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

The Honourable Senators Aseltine *Brooks, Buchanan, Choquette, *Connolly (Ottawa West), Dessureault, Irvine, Lambert, Macdonald (Brantford), MacDonald (Queens), McGrand, Paterson, Pouliot, Thorvaldson and Walker. (13)

Ex officio* member

All which is respectfully submitted.

A. L. Beaubien, Chairman.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 3, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

TRADE RELATIONS

CANADA-U.K. TRADE TALKS—STATEMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, in accordance with the procedure that I suggested might be adopted with respect to government statements on matters of general interest, I propose now to make a short statement that was made by the Government in an other place. My purpose in doing so is simply to keep the Senate record more or less in pace with the records in the other place with reference to Government announcements. I now present a brief report on the talks held by the Minister of Trade and Commerce which concluded on Friday last.

The main purposes of the minister's visit to London were two-fold: first, to discuss with his counterpart in the British Government, Mr. Heath, certain complaints made by the British Government about the valuation of British exports entering Canada, and to discuss these complaints directly with British exporters; and, second, to speak to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in London about Anglo-Canadian trade.

The discussions with Mr. Heath and with British exporters were useful. They gave the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Government a clearer understanding of the nature of the complaints against our valuation procedures. The minister informed Mr. Heath and the British exporters that these complaints are under careful investigation by an interdepartmental committee and that, if the review should show that the complaints are well-founded, the Government would consider the kind of legislation required to remove any technical obstacle found to exist. The minister added that the evidence so far before the Government did not indicate that our valuation and anti-dumping laws were central to the problem of British sales in Canada. The minister also discussed with Mr. Heath the forthcoming Kennedy Round of Trade negotiations and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

The minister also took advantage of the occasion to discuss with the British Government certain of the trade barriers still facing Canadian goods entering the British market.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I wish to table a number of documents, and with your permission I will dispense with reading the list in detail, but will draw your attention to two or three that appear to be of particular interest.

One is the Capital Budget of Trans-Canada Air Lines. Another is the return of Unclaimed Balances in the Chartered Banks of Canada, as at December 31, 1963. There is a similar return under the Quebec Savings Banks Act as at December 31, 1963. The list includes copies of "The Columbia River Treaty, Protocol and Related Documents", issued by the Departments of External Affairs, and Northern Affairs and National Resources, dated February 1964. Finally, the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965.

In connection with the latter document, perhaps it would be of help to honourable senators if I put on the record the following statement.

In the main estimates for 1964-65 the budgetary expenditures provided for the new fiscal year commencing April 1, 1964, including amounts already authorized by continuing statutes as well as moneys Parliament is being requested to appropriate, amount to $6,703,513,508.

Parliament is also being asked to authorize the disbursement of moneys for loans, investments and advances, which add to the Government's active assets, in a total amount of $108,897,000.

Not included in these totals, but set out in the estimates for information, is the forecast amount for Old Age Security Pension payments amounting to $882 million. These pension payments are separated from the budget figures and are payable out of the old age security fund to which are credited the taxes levied for this particular purpose.

To compare the main estimates for 1964-65, totalling $6,703,500,000, with expenditures authorized by Parliament to date for 1963-64, and which amount to $6,619,100,000, would be misleading. The latter figure does not include the final supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, and the former figure takes no account of the supplementary estimates for the new fiscal year. It is for this reason that a reasonably accurate comparison of total expenditures for the year commencing April 1, 1964, with those for the current and previous fiscal years, must await the budget presentations.

Finally, I would draw the attention of this honourable house to an important change in the form of the estimates for 1964-65. This change relates to the form of the items to be voted. In former years the estimates contained some 500 or more separate votes, and the main estimates for 1964-65 contain only 230 such items. This reduction has been accomplished by consolidating a large number of items formerly in the vote section of the estimates, while at the same time preserving the same amount of information as in the past in the detailed section. This change is in keeping with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Government Organization. The change will do much not only to facilitate discussion of the estimates, but also to improve the quality of financial management in the public service.

With the permission of the house, I propose now to place on Hansard three tables relating to the 1964-65 estimates. Table I compares the 1964-65 estimates with the total budgetary estimates for several preceding years. Table II compares the statutory expenditures for 1964-65 with those for 1963-64. Table III indicates the changes in the Main Estimates between 1963-64 and 1964-65 by an examination of operating, capital and other costs.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I want to say just a word about this matter. First of all, I thank the honourable Leader of the Government for his courtesy in speaking to me about the placing on the record of remarks made yesterday, not by the Minister of Trade and Commerce but by his parliamentary secretary.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, that is right.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is very difficult for me to decide on the spur of the moment whether or not this is a precedent that should be accepted by the Senate. So far as this particular statement is concerned, I see no objection to it, but the placing upon the record of a statement by a parliamentary secretary to a minister would seem to establish a precedent so far as the Senate is concerned.

In the other place this proposal was objected to by two of the Opposition parties. It was felt that the minister's statement should be made by the minister himself; that it should be made at a time when he was present.

I am not objecting to this procedure this evening, but I do think that very careful consideration should be given to it. Are we going to accept the statements, for instance, of all ministers made in London, or Paris, or at the United Nations, or in other parts of the world on the different matters that they happen to be discussing at the time? If we are, I think we will soon find the Senate Hansard cluttered with remarks that we could very well read in the Hansard of the other place. It does seem to me that we would be getting second-hand notice of these important matters.

I raise this particular point, honourable senators, and I want it understood that we are not accepting this as a precedent for all future time.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government whether the schedule that he referred to a few minutes ago includes the supplementary figures for 1963?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, it does not.

(Tables I, II and III follow)

TABLE I

TOTAL BUDGETARY ESTIMATES

(in millions of dollars)

	Main estimates	Supplementary estimates	Final supplementary estimates	Total
1964–65	6,703.5
1963–64	6,307.2	311.9	—	6,619.1
1962–63	6,048.2[1]	181.0	281.9[2]	6,466.0[3]
1961–62	6,123.8	355.9	122.8	6,602.5
1960–61	5,732.2	169.9	178.2	6,080.3
1959–60	5,595.9	86.1	116.8	5,798.8
1958–59	5,178.8	144.8	282.8	5,606.4
1957–58	4,827.6	145.3	187.6	5,088.8[4]
1956–57	4,526.1	153.5	89.8	4,769.4
1955–56	4,360.2	114.1	22.3	4,496.6

[1] Revised estimates; original Main Estimates were greater by $228.0 million.

[2] This is the amount appropriated by Governor General's Warrants and included in the Report on Supply for 1962–63 which would have been tabled as final Supplementary Estimates for 1962–63 had Parliament been sitting.

[3] This total is the amount appropriated for 1962–63 and is $45.0 million less than the sum of the tabled Estimates and the final Supplementary Estimates for 1962–63.

[4] This total is the amount appropriated for 1957–58. It is $71.7 million less than the amount of the tabled Estimates due to year-end financing by Governor General's Warrants.

TABLE II

BUDGETARY ESTIMATES OF STATUTORY EXPENDITURES FOR 1964–65 AS COMPARED WITH THOSE FOR 1963–64

(in millions of dollars)

	Submitted 1964–65	Approved 1963–64	Change
Civil Departments—
Public Debt Charges	1,037.9	881.0	156.9
Subsidies and Special Compensation to Provinces	231.0	239.9	−8.9
Family Allowances Payments	546.0	542.9	3.1
Payments to Provinces under Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act	420.0	385.0	35.0
Old Age Assistance	45.0	38.7	6.3
Allowances for the Blind and Disabled	28.5	24.1	4.4
Major Pensions, Superannuation and Other Benefits	71.4	65.9	5.5
Contribution to Unemployment Insurance Fund	60.5	58.0	2.5
Unemployment Assistance	115.0	110.0	5.0
Trans-Canada Highway Contributions	60.0	50.0	10.0
Subsidy to C.N.R. for railway to Great Slave Lake	25.0	20.5	4.5
Payment of (1) carrying costs of storing Temporary Wheat Reserves (2) administering the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Program	46.7	42.4	4.3
University Grants	27.2	26.8	0.4
Payment to the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition	17.9	—	17.9
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance	16.6	12.1	4.5
East West Railway Bridge Subsidy	7.0	7.0	—
Railway Grade Crossing Fund (statutory portion only)	5.0	5.0	—
Forgiveness of indebtedness—Municipal Development and Loan Board	5.0	—	5.0
Payments under Fitness and Amateur Sport Act	5.0	5.0	—
Sundry Items	22.6	20.1	2.5
Defence Departments—
Major Pensions, Superannuation and Other Benefits	67.5	66.0	1.5
	2,860.8	2,600.4	260.4

TABLE III

MAIN ESTIMATES FOR 1964-65 COMPARED WITH MAIN ESTIMATES FOR 1963-64

(in millions of dollars)

—	Aministration and operation		Buildings, works, and equipment		Grants, subsidies and other items		Total estimates
	1964-65	1963-64*	1964-65	1963-64*	1964-65	1963-64*	1964-65	1963-64*
Agriculture	70.0	64.5	25.9	27.4	44.3	37.4	140.1	129.4
Atomic energy	35.0	31.6	10.3	13.5	1.2	0.9	46.6	46.0
Auditor General's Office	1.4	1.3	—	—	—	—	1.4	1.3
Board of Broadcast Governors	0.4	0.4	—	—	—	—	0.4	0.4
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	2.1	1.9	—	—	85.9	85.8	88.0	87.6
Chief Electoral Officer	0.1	0.1	—	—	—	—	0.1	0.1
Citizenship and Immigration	64.6	58.2	12.4	9.3	—	—	77.0	67.5
Civil Service Commission	5.5	5.0	—	—	—	—	5.5	5.0
External Affairs—
Department	26.1	22.4	1.8	2.5	96.2	65.9	124.0	90.8
International Joint Commission	0.2	0.2	—	—	—	—	0.2	0.2
Finance	137.7	146.7	0.2	0.2	1,311.7	1,156.1	1,449.7	1,303.0
Fisheries	20.0	18.9	3.4	3.4	1.2	1.2	24.6	23.5
Forestry	8.7	7.6	2.9	1.1	7.9	7.9	19.5	16.7
Governor General	0.7	0.5	—	—	—	—	0.7	0.5
Industry	24.2	14.2	—	—	—	—	24.2	14.2
Insurance	0.9	0.8	—	—	—	—	0.9	0.8
Justice	35.4	30.9	16.1	10.0	—	—	51.6	40.9
Labour—
Department	8.9	7.9	—	—	105.3	109.5	114.2	117.4
Unemployment Insurance Commission	53.4	45.4	—	—	60.5	58.0	113.8	103.4
Legislation	12.5	8.9	—	—	—	—	12.5	8.9
Mines and Technical Surveys—
Department	32.1	29.1	5.5	4.8	16.6	12.1	54.2	46.0
Dominion Coal Board	0.2	0.1	—	—	16.0	16.6	16.2	16.7
National Film Board	5.8	5.3	0.3	0.2	—	—	6.1	5.5
National Gallery	1.3	1.1	—	—	—	—	1.3	1.1
National Health and Welfare	48.2	44.2	3.7	2.3	1,211.7	1.157.5	1,263.7	1,204.0
National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council	26.1	23.1	5.7	3.2	26.1	19.6	57.9	45.9
National Revenue	87.4	78.6	—	—	—	—	87.4	78.6
Northern Affairs and National Resources	39.2	33.0	27.6	28.8	22.8	22.1	89.6	83.9
Post Office	208.9	191.5	—	—	—	—	208.9	191.5
Privy Council—
Privy Council Office	4.5	2.5	2.5	2.5	4.0	2.0	11.0	7.0
Economic Council of Canada	0.8	0.2	—	—	—	—	0.8	0.2
Public Archives and National Library—
Public Archives	0.8	0.7	—	—	—	—	0.8	0.7
National Library	0.5	0.4	—	—	—	—	0.5	0.4
Public Printing and Stationery	2.9	2.2	—	—	—	—	2.9	2.2

Public Works—
Department	85.5	67.0	56.4	53.0	60.0	40.0	201.9	160.0
National Capital Commission	5.4	4.8	—	—	4.5	7.5	9.9	12.3
Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition	17.9	—	4.0	—	—	—	21.9	—
R.C.M.P.	67.6	60.4	3.8	3.1	—	—	71.4	63.4
Secretary of State—
Department	5.4	4.9	—	—	—	—	5.4	4.9
Atlantic Development Board	0.5	—	—	—	—	—	0.5	—
Office of the Representation Comm.	0.2	—	—	—	—	—	0.2	—
Trade and Commerce—
Department	36.3	30.9	0.1	0.1	46.7	42.4	83.0	73.4
National Energy Board	0.7	0.6	—	—	—	—	0.7	0.6
Transport—
Department	132.1	124.5	79.9	76.9	54.7	50.2	266.7	251.6
Air Transport Board	0.7	0.6	—	—	—	—	0.7	0.6
Board of Transport Commissioners	1.4	1.3	—	—	12.1	12.1	13.5	13.4
Canadian Maritime Commission	0.3	0.3	—	—	37.0	26.4	37.3	26.7
National Harbours Board	—	—	2.1	3.1	—	—	2.1	3.1
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority	2.8	2.8	—	—	—	—	2.8	2.8
Veterans Affairs	63.5	63.6	3.3	2.3	264.0	268.9	330.8	334.9
Total—Civil Departments	1,386.9	1,241.1	267.9	247.7	3,490.5	3,200.1	5,145.3	4,668.9
Defence Production—
Department	16.4	9.9	1.4	1.6	—	—	17.8	11.5
Emergency Measures Organization	2.6	2.3	2.1	2.5	5.6	5.3	10.3	10.1
Crown Companies	4.8	6.3	0.3	0.4	—	—	5.1	6.7
National Defence	1,236.5	1,227.5	253.9	328.4	34.6	34.1	1,525.0	1,590.0
Total—Defence Departments	1,260.3	1,246.0	257.7	332.9	40.2	39.4	1,558.2	1,618.3
Total—Budgetary Estimates	2,647.2	2,487.1	525.6	580.6	3,530.7	3,239.5	6,703.5	6,307.2

(Details do not necessarily add to totals, due to rounding.)

*These figures differ from those shown in the 1963–64 column of the 1964–65 Blue Book in that

(1) the amounts of the Supplementary Estimates (A), (B), (C) and (D), 1963–64 are not included, and

(2) provision for salary revisions is included under Finance whereas it is distributed among all departments in the 1964–65 Blue Book.

Estimates for Public Debt Charges are not comparable between years due to a change in the manner of estimating interest and amortization costs.

[List of documents tabled:]

Capital Budget of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1963-1898, dated December 21, 1963, approving same. (English text).

Return of Unclaimed Balances in the Chartered Banks of Canada, as at December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 119(1) of the Bank Act, chapter 48, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Return of Unclaimed Balances in the Banks incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act, as at December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 93(1) of the said act, chapter 41, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Report on the Administration of the Public Service Superannuation Act, Parts I and II, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 34, chapter 47, Statutes of Canada, 1952-53, and section 49, chapter 64, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Copies of "The Columbia River Treaty, Protocol and Related Documents" issued by the Departments of External Affairs and Northern Affairs and National Resources, February 1964. (English and French texts).

Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965. (English and French texts).

Consolidated Index and Table of Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, for the period January 1, 1955, to December 31, 1963. (English and French texts).

Copies of Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, December 11 and 25, 1963, and January 8 and 22, and February 12 and 26, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 27, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, as I rise to deliver my maiden speech, which in reality is a virgin speech since this is the first time that I have ever spoken in Parliament, it is with humility as well as with pride that I stand before so august a body as the Canadian Senate. I had planned to make my debut at the last session, but I was away in New York serving my country in the Canadian delegation to the Eighteenth General Assembly of the United Nations.

The warm welcome that I had received at the last session from His Honour the Speaker, the honourable former Leader of the Government, the honourable Leader of the Opposition and many other honourable senators, made me immediately feel at home in the Senate, and for this I am immeasurably grateful. Since there has been so much expressed concern for my happiness, I would like to assure the honourable senators that certainly they have launched me in that direction. My one year's experience here has convinced me that the Senate is paramountly nonpartisan in character and, therefore, my happiness is assured, as I had become accustomed to such a nonpolitical and nonpartisan institution as the university. Consequently, I do not regret the transfer and am looking forward to an increasingly useful life, with the objective of making some small contribution through the Senate to the welfare of the people of Canada.

I gladly join all those who have congratulated His Honour the Speaker, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly), and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks). Their positions are indeed responsible. I wish them well in the performance of their duties. A special and warm word of thanks I would like to convey to Senator Connolly, who was chairman of the Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts Committee, and to other members of the committee, for their support of my request for a stenographer who could type and correspond in Ukrainian. A trilingual stenographer, who could handle Ukrainian, English and French was found, making it possible for me and for other senators to expedite correspondence readily in three languages. My congratulations go to Senator White for the great honour that he received by his appointment to the Privy Council; I shall always fondly remember him as the Speaker of the Senate when I was sworn in to this chamber.

I have also learned to appreciate the role of the Whips and wish them success and satisfaction in the fulfilment of what is not always a grateful function. It is a pleasure to welcome the newest senators who have joined us recently.

At the outset I would like to pay tribute to the Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker, whom history will record, I am sure, as one of the great Canadian Prime Ministers. His championing the cause of the liberty of nations against Russian communist colonialism at NATO and the United Nations, his efforts to strengthen the Commonwealth, based upon the principles of freedom, justice and democracy, his advocacy for many years of the Canadian Bill of Rights, and his defence of Canadian sovereignty, have brought great prestige to Canada throughout the world. His roots go deep in Canadian history, for on his mother's side he is a distinguished descendant of George Bannerman and his wife, who arrived with the courageous band of Selkirk settlers 150 years ago to establish the Red River Colony, the precursor of Winnipeg, the "Gateway to the West". To this great Canadian, who has always had the interests of all segments of our diverse population at heart, I owe an everlasting debt of gratitude, for it was he who first interested me in political life during the election of 1935—although I did not actively participate for a long time—and who finally involved me permanently in political affairs by nominating me to the Senate last year.

I also would like to offer my congratulations to the mover, Senator Cook, and the seconder, Senator Denis, of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Their contributions to the debate, despite brevity, were interesting, worthwhile and stimulating.

Honourable senators, there are certain references in the Speech from the Throne that are of particular interest to me and that part of the Canadian population into which I was born; I take it upon myself to voice their feelings. These are the references dealing with Canadian unity and citizenship, "which will ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born". I hope that this will eliminate second-class citizenship.

Canada has undergone tremendous changes in all walks of national life since the proclamation of the British North America Act in 1867. The original four provinces have increased to ten, while the population has increased from 3½ million to over 19 million, the complexion having changed from paramountly British-French, with a substratum of Indian and Eskimo cultures, to multicultural, with the immigration of many European and some Asiatic peoples.

During that time, Canada has developed from a colony to an independent democratic state, from a relatively unknown country to a leader of the middle nations of the world, from an exploited territory to a leading trading nation and a champion of the freedom of nations of the world. Few countries in the world have paralleled the peaceful progress of our country. Canada today is a vastly different country and our approach to her problems must be in keeping with the new situation and the new times.

It is regrettable that Canadian historians have consistently neglected to take into account population statistics, and have thus failed to bring into perspective the variety of the contributions of the many ethnic groups to the building of Canada. Even a casual examination of the figures of the past seven Canadian censuses reveals significant trends in our population. I will read briefly the percentage distribution of the three elements—British, French, and the third element consisting of all other ethnic groups—of the population, taken from catalogue 92-545 of the 1961 census, Dominion Bureau of Statistics:

	1901	1911	1921	1931	1941	1951	1961
British	57	56	55	52	50	48	44
French	31	29	28	28	30	31	30
Third Element	12	15	17	20	20	21	26

From these percentages it will readily be noted that the British element—English, Scots, Irish and Welsh—during the past 60 years has steadily decreased, not in number but in proportion, from 57 per cent to 44 per cent; today it is a minority group. The French element has constantly held its own proportion, about 30 per cent. On the other hand, the third element has steadily increased from 12 per cent to 26 per cent, more than doubling itself, and is quickly approaching the numerical and proportional position of the French Canadians. Present-day Canada is a country of minorities, and this fact should not be ignored.

			Canadian-born	Canadian Citizenship
German	1,049,599	(5.8%)	73%	87%
Ukrainian	473,377	(2.6)	77	97
Italian	450,351	(2.5)	41	61
Netherlander	429,679	(2.4)	64	81
Scandinavian	386,534	(2.1)	73	93
Polish	323,517	(1.8)	60	90
Indian	208,286	(1.1)	100
Jewish	173,344	(1.0)	62	93

For purpose of information, the following are the eight largest ethnic groups of the third element, according to the 1961 census:

I should add that there are 254,368 of Judaic faith.

It is interesting and revealing to examine the present composition of the population of the provinces according to the three elements. The British element predominates in Newfoundland with 94 per cent; Prince Edward Island, 80 per cent; Nova Scotia, 71 per cent; British Columbia, 61 per cent; Ontario, 60 per cent; and New Brunswick, 55 per cent. The French element predominates only in Quebec with 81 per cent; the largest minority is in New Brunswick, 40 per cent. The third element predominates in Saskatchewan with 53 per cent, exceeding the British, 40 per cent, and French, 7 per cent. It forms the largest element in Alberta, 49 per cent, followed by the British, 45 per cent, and the French, 6 per cent. In Manitoba it forms 48 per cent, followed by the British, 43 per cent, and the French, 9 per cent. It has the considerable proportion in British Columbia of 35 per cent; Ontario, 30 per cent; and Nova Scotia, 17 per cent. In general, the third element, composed overwhelmingly of Canadian-born, forms about 50 per cent of the population of the three prairie provinces.

By what right did the non-British, non-French peoples come to Canada? First of all, the Indians and the Eskimos are indigenous peoples, being natives of this land long before the coming of the French and the British. The other European peoples were invited to this country by the Canadian Government to settle the vast wilderness. The settling of the West began shortly after Confederation, and brought into being the province of Manitoba, and later Saskatchewan and Alberta. Large-scale government-sponsored and government-directed immigration was initiated by Sir Clifford Sifton of Manitoba, Minister of the Interior, in 1896 under the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In less than two decades before World War I, most of the arable land in the prairie provinces was settled by a considerable number of several European peoples, a very large proportion of whom were neither of British nor French origin. They fully accepted the laws of Canada, brought civilization to vast areas hitherto uninhabited, greatly aided the expansion of Canadian economy and prosperity, loyally and fully participated in the Canadian armed forces of the two world wars, and conscientiously performed their duties as citizens in every respect, even though there was some discrimination against them for quite a long time. The third element, ethnic groups, now numbering approximately five million persons, are co-builders of the West and other parts of Canada, along with the British and French Canadians, and are just as permanent a part of the Canadian scene.

Allow me, in a very brief summary, to present an example of the contribution to Canada of one of the non-British, non-French groups, namely, the Ukrainian Canadians, from whom I spring and about whom I have some knowledge as a result of my researches, which have been published in a book and several articles. In response to the appeals, the propaganda, and agents of the Canadian Government, the Ukrainians began coming to this country in large numbers commencing in 1896, from the Austrian provinces of Galicia and Bukovina, now designated as Western Ukraine. Mostly of peasant origin, they took up homesteads and farms throughout the prairies and brought under cultivation millions of acres of land, thus establishing civilization in large areas, many of which bear witness in over 130 Ukrainian place names. Consequently, their greatest contribution to Canada has been in agriculture. Ukrainian Canadians have been frequent winners of world and Canadian championships of wheat, oats and vegetables. The best varieties of grains are either of Ukrainian origin or hybrids of Ukrainian grains. This should not be surprising, for Ukraine has always been known as the "black earth region" and "the granary of Europe". Railroad construction, large building and housing construction, mining, various kinds of manufacturing, etc., have benefited from the labour, inventiveness and management of Ukrainians. They are found in large numbers in the teaching profession, including the universities, and play a fairly significant role in many other professions.

Perhaps the most important criterion of the integration of any group into Canadian society and life is its participation in public affairs. The Ukrainians have produced hundreds of reeves of municipalities, many aldermen of towns and cities, several mayors of large cities: Winnipeg, Edmonton, Windsor, Kenora; many members of provincial legislatures: Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Ontario; several provincial cabinet ministers: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Alberta; several federal members of Parliament of all parties, one federal cabinet minister and three senators—altogether at least 74 parliamentarians. About 10,000 Ukrainians were in the Canadian armed forces during the First World War, one of whom, Philip Konowal, received the Victoria Cross, the highest award for bravery in the British Commonwealth; and about 40,000 voluntarily served in the Canadian military forces of the Second World War, many as officers, and many of whom paid the supreme sacrifice for this country. Ukrainians cherish Canadian freedom and democracy, as they are conscious of Ukraine's subjugation and bondage.

Their cultural contribution is known in most parts of Canada. Ukrainian folk dancing in colourful costumes, choirs, embroidery and woodwork have been winning the enthusiastic applause and praise of audiences, leaders, and monarchs, at local and national celebrations, since the Diamond Jubilee of Canada in 1927 and will be featured in greater magnitude at the Centennial celebrations in 1967. The Ukrainian language and literature is taught at the Universities of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta, Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa, and as an elective subject in the high schools of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta. These general cultural activities are directed by the Ukrainian Canadian Committee, with headquarters in Winnipeg, which co-ordinates the work of 27 dominion-wide Ukrainian organizations, exclusive of the small communist associations.

At the last session of Parliament the committee sponsored a bill, which was passed in both houses, to establish the Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko, to promote Ukrainian culture in Canada. This year Ukrainians throughout the world are celebrating the 150th anniversary of the birth of Taras Shevchenko, the great poet of Ukrainian and universal freedom, justice, truth and brotherhood. Prime Minister Diefenbaker unveiled a large monument of Shevchenko on the grounds of the Legislative buildings of Manitoba in 1961, on which occasion he spoke some Ukrainian, as did Premier Duff Roblin. A monument of the great poet will be unveiled this June on the grounds of the federal Capitol of the United States, in Washington, D.C. To commemorate this great anniversary, I have selected brief excerpts from Shevchenko's poetry, inspired with the divine spirit of liberty, which I would like to read for your appreciation in Ukrainian, followed by an English translation.

From "The Caucasus"—the poet's indictment of Russian Tsarist oppression and a mighty protest against the brutal subjugation of the peoples of the Caucasus, translated by Professors Watson Kirkconnell of Acadia University, and C. H. Andrusyshen of the University of Saskatchewan. Their poetic translation of the complete works of Shevchenko is due to be published shortly by the University of Toronto Press.

Ne vmyraye dusha nasha,
Ne vmyraye volya,
I nesyty ne vyore
Na dni morya polya.
Ne skuye dushi zhyvoyi
I slova zhyvoho.
Boritesya—poboryte!
Vam Boh pomahaye!
Za vas pravda, za vas slava
I volya svyataya.

Translated:

So likewise shall our spirit never die
Nor our dear freedom wholly vanquished lie.
Sooner may foemen hope to plough with glee
A meadow at the bottom of the sea
As chain the living soul with force uncouth
Or choke to death the vital word of Truth.
Struggle and ye shall overcome the foe:
For God shall succour you in battle's throe;
His strength is on your side, and freedom stands
With justice on the threshold of your lands.

The poet, who himself had been a serf, fought for the abolition of the abominable system of serfdom in Russia and for the emancipation of these exploited human beings, as well as peoples. Here are his stirring and noble words:

Vozvelychu
Malykh otykh rabiv nimykh!

Ya na storozhi kolo yikh
Postavlyu slovo.
I shall make great
These insignificant mute slaves!
On their behalf in their defence
Shall speak the word.

The word is the living human spirit of truth, justice and liberty, which ultimately must prevail for Ukraine and all oppressed peoples who are still struggling for their freedom against Russian communist imperialism. The free countries of the world, including Canada, must mobilize world opinion against the largest existing totalitarian empire, the Soviet Union, to compel it to grant self-determination and freedom to the many nations under Russian domination, in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the principles of the United Nations.

The contributions and place of the third element ethnic groups are very little known to the Canadian public and to the leaders of our country. To my knowledge, only the province of Manitoba has made an effort to learn objectively about the prominent groups in that province. The Manitoba Government has been subsidizing these studies through the Manitoba Historical Society since 1946, which to date has received manuscripts on the Mennonites, Ukrainians, Icelanders, Poles, Jews, early French, and Hutterites, of which the social histories of the Ukrainians, Mennonites and Jews have been published. We sorely lack authentic studies of these groups on a Canada-wide basis. Certainly, on the eve of the centennial celebrations an effort should be made to fill in this gap in Canadian history. With adequate financial support from the Canada Council, such a project should be sponsored immediately under the guidance of prominent Canadian historians, who should subsequently incorporate the important material in Canadian histories.

In the light of the above figures and information it will be easily understood why I am viewing critically the Royal Commission on Biculturalism and Bilingualism. First of all, the word "bicultural," which I could not find in any dictionary, is a misnomer. In reality Canada never was bicultural; the Indians and Eskimos have been with us throughout our history; the British group is multicultural—English, Scots, Irish, Welsh; and with the settling of other ethnic groups, which now make up almost one-third of the population, Canada has become multicultural in fact. Furthermore, the projecting of the idea that Canada is bicultural not only excludes the non-British and non-French groups, but denies the multicultural character of the British group, which can only lead to disunity. What we need is a firm basis of our nationhood which will unite all elements in our society. It is found in the paragraph quoted in the Speech from the Throne of May 16, 1963:

> The character and strength of our nation are drawn from the diverse cultures of people who came from many lands to create the Canada that is ours today. The greater Canada that is in our power to make will be built not on uniformity but on continuing diversity.

If biculturalism were carried to its logical conclusion—a virtual two-nation co-existence —then all Canadians would be required to become either English or French. This is an impossibility, and I believe that is not the desired objective of our people. It would not be consistent with full democracy and equality of all citizens. I was glad to note in the debate on the reply to the Speech from the Throne the other day, the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) stated:

> ...no matter what we try to do, we cannot make an Englishman of a Frenchman, and we cannot make a Frenchman of an Englishman, but we can make good Canadians of both... so far as the other ethnic groups are concerned, we cannot change their ethnic group except to make good Canadians of them.

In his remarks in the debate on the reply to the Throne Speech, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), expressed a similar view when he appraised the cultural contributions of various peoples from many countries of the world "as a boon to a new country" and made the exhortation, "each element shall continue to develop its own ideals and achieve its own aspirations alongside the other". It is my belief that our citizens desire an all-embracing Canadian identity which will include all the elements of our population and emphasize unity.

Let us first evaluate briefly the general distinctive contributions of each of the three elements of our population and then assess their place in the establishment of the Canadian identity which should meet with the approval of the vast majority of our citizens.

The great permanent British gift to the Canadian way of life is the establishment of the parliamentary system of government, an evolutionary democracy under the Crown, which has continually adjusted itself to the new situations, while upholding the authority of and equality before the law, liberty, justice, fair play, equal opportunity for all and the dignity of the individual. Under the British Crown through the Quebec Act, the Constitutional Act, the British North America Act, and the Statute of Westminster, Canada has evolved from colonial status to an independent state and a leader among the middle nations of the world. In this process, Canada has become an equal partner in the Commonwealth of Nations, the great bulwark of freedom and democratic evolution. The British system of democracy has become firmly rooted in Canada and has been accepted by all Canadians as fundamental in our society.

The great French contribution to the Canadian way of life is of a conservative character, the preservation and perpetuation of the culture of a people. Their love of Canada, their pride in their language and their traditions, and their devotion to their religion give depth to the meaning of life. These qualities of the French-Canadian character have built up their resistance to the pressure of the United States and have made possible the development of Canada to independence and greatness.

(Translation):

To all my French Canadian colleagues in the Senate, I want to extend my warmest greetings in French. I learned to read French in Saskatoon but, unfortunately, I did not learn to speak it.

The other ethnic groups who helped to build Canada admire the French Canadians for the love they have for their country and for their desire to preserve its independence and their fine culture. Let us keep on working together with mutual respect for each other in order to build a strong and united Canada for the glory of God, the well-being of our fellow citizens and the peace and progress of mankind.

(Text):

The joint contribution of the various ethnic groups of the third element to the Canadian way of life is like that of the French, in the cultural sphere with political and constitutional implications. By their perpetuation of the best of their cultural heritages, these groups have made Canadians more conscious of cultural values, out of which there has emerged the principle of "unity in diversity," or, stated in another way, "unity with variety," as a rule of governance. This principle, in keeping with the democratic way, encourages citizens of all ethnic origins to make their best contributions to the development of a general Canadian culture as essential ingredients in the nation-building process.

The contributions of the three elements side by side in our society provides the sound materials for the building of a strong Canadian nation. They provide us with the Canadian identity, a pattern which has been developing in a different way from that of our neighbour to the south. This is brought out clearly in the address delivered last year to the sixth conference of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews in Winnipeg by Dr. Charles Hobart, of California, now sociology professor at the University of Alberta. Here are some of his statements:

> Search of identity? You are almost THE multicultural society of the world and this is your identity. It is the contribution you as Canadians have to make to the world. This system of multiculturalism has now worked for almost 100 years and you should be missionaries in this type of a cause.

In his opinion the Canadian system of multiculturalism has obvious advantages over the American melting-pot concept which produces,

> A mixture in which there is loss of identity and peculiar genius. In the long run multiculturalism beats the melting-pot idea all to hell.

A more emphatic statement could not be made by any American.

Canadian leaders have also expressed the same idea. Here is a statement of the late Dr. Sidney Smith, former president of the University of Manitoba and the University of Toronto, when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs:

> The present population of Canada is roughly, one-third of Anglo-Saxon stock, one-third of French stock and one-third of many other racial groups. There is no Canadian race. We have never had a melting-pot policy toward newcomers. We have never tried to fashion them into one, and only one, mould. Rather we have rejoiced in and we have been strengthened by their special contributions.

There were also leaders in the past who could foresee the shape of things to come. A great architect of Canada, Prime Minister Sir Wilfrid Laurier, under whose administration the Prairies were peopled by various groups of the third element, left, some 60 years ago, the following message for future generations:

> I have visited in England one of those models of Gothic architecture which the hand of genius, guided by an unerring faith, has moulded into a harmonious whole. This cathedral is made of marble, oak and granite. It is the image of the nation I would like to see Canada become. For here, I want the marble to remain the marble; the granite to remain the granite; the oak to remain the oak; and out of all these elements I would build a nation great among the nations of the world.

At this stage, I would like to state it is gratifying to learn that the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism has recognized the potentiality and vitality of multiculturalism. I would like to quote from its working paper, for the use of those preparing briefs:

> The mainspring (l'idée-force) of the terms of reference is the question of bilingualism and biculturalism (i.e. English and French) adding immediately that this mainspring is working in a situation where there is the fact of multiculturalism—multiculturalism that must not be suppressed as quickly as possible (the proverbial melting-pot) but on the contrary, respected and safeguarded, despite not being given official recognition.

It should be borne in mind that a form of official recognition has been given to this principle, since the languages and cultures of some of the non-British, non-French ethnic groups are taught in the public high schools of the three Prairie provinces and in many of the universities. This could easily be extended to the other provinces. I think that the time has arrived for the third element ethnic groups to send their representatives to a national conference in Ottawa and make their common views known to the federal and provincial governments and not only to the Royal Commission.

The recognition of the multicultural character of our population has evolved the unique principle of unity in continuing diversity, which Prince Philip at the Commonwealth Study Conference in Vancouver two years ago identified as the Canadian way. This, of course, is the principle of Confederation which originally had been applied in the political sphere, and now has been extended to the cultural sphere of Canada. To achieve the integration of the rich cultures in our midst into a harmonious entity, Canadian leaders have invoked such sensory symbols as the beauty of the mosaic, the flower garden, the rainbow, the symphony orchestra and the choir, each of which expresses harmonious variety.

In keeping with the ideals of democracy and the spirit of Confederation, Canada should accept and guarantee the principle of the partnership of all peoples who have contributed to her development and progress. As the founding peoples of our country, the British and the French should be regarded as the senior partners whose special rights include the recognition of English and French as the official languages in accordance with the British North America Act; Canadians would have the choice, but not compulsion, of one or the other language as the means of instruction in our schools. The third element ethnic or cultural groups should receive the status of co-partners, who would be guaranteed the right to perpetuate their mother tongues and cultures, which should be offered as optional subjects in the public and high school systems and the separate schools of the provinces, and the universities, wherever there would be a sufficient number of students to warrant the maintenance of such classes, as is practised in England. The teaching of languages should commence at the grade one level, when children learn without much effort. This I know from my own teaching experience of many years in the public schools of Saskatchewan.

For the evolution of a multicultural Canadian nation, a firm basis has been established by Canadian governments since the last war. The Canadian Citizenship Act of 1947 recognizes the equality of all Canadian citizens and the Canadian Bill of Rights of 1960 elaborates the specific rights of all citizens and condemns discrimination.

Honourable senators, I would like to convey to both Houses of Parliament and to all Canadians how deeply shocked I was when I read in the House of Commons Debates of February 27, 1964, the following two paragraphs of the speech of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration:

> There is a tradition of long standing in this Parliament, that the Speaker's function in the House of Commons and in the other place is entrusted in turn to representatives of the two most important ethnic groups in this country.
>
> According to another tradition, the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne are chosen among representatives of the two most important racial groups in Canada.

The minister stated that he respected this tradition, which can be interpreted that he recognizes these rights only for the French and the English. He has gone so far as to make all the "English-speaking" one ethnic group, thus denying the existence of the Scots, Irish and Welsh, and soon after he calls them a racial group. Such confusion in the thinking of a minister of citizenship is not pardonable. What is worse is the policy, which he calls tradition, that he upholds. In his opinion, the speaker of each house and the movers and the seconders of addresses in reply to the Speech from the Throne must alternate between the English and the French. This would deny the right for Senators Thorvaldson, Croll, Hnatyshyn, Gladstone, Basha, just to mention a few, to become the speaker or the mover or seconder of the Throne Speech addresses in the Senate. This would deny many members of Parliament in the other house such rights also.

Obviously, this is a discriminatory attitude against which I protest most emphatically, as will many Canadians, I am sure. If this is adhered to, it will be a mockery of the Canadian Bill of Rights, the existing Citizenship Act, and the prospective—and I quote from the Speech from the Throne—"amendments to the Citizenship Act which will ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born."

Notwithstanding this, however, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has been doing a wonderful job not only of aiding immigrants in their happy adjustment to Canadian life but also of promoting good Canadian citizenship through citizenship conferences, publications and publicity, et cetera. The essence of Canadianism is most appropriately expressed in the message of a Citizenship Court Judge on the occasion of the granting of citizenship to new citizens:

> This nation has been enriched by the loyalty and sacrifice of persons who have come from many lands and traditions. To each this nation has given a chance to live and grow and share in the common wealth. From each Canada has accepted the gifts of different cultures and made them into an enduring heritage. From sea to sea, this rich heritage is yours, as it is mine, because we are Canadian.

Other departments of federal and provincial governments, public bodies and our schools, are slow in following the lead of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. School textbooks should contain the story of the contributions of all elements of our society to the development of Canada, in order to break down the barriers of prejudice and stimulate positive citizenship. Equality of citizenship should mean that appointments to high offices, commissions, the Canada Council, et cetera, should also be made from the third element, as has already been partially put into practice.

For example, I believe that the time has come for someone of the third element to grace the office of Governor General and of Lieutenant Governors in some of the provinces. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the worst offender, should have representatives from the third element on the Board of Broadcast Governors and should promote the harmony and unity of all segments of our multicultural society by sponsoring regular weekly programs of the music, songs, dances, dramas, handicrafts and literature of the ethnic groups of the third element on television and radio systems.

The issuance last year of a stamp commemorating Sir Casimir Gzowski, a great Canadian of Polish origin, an outstanding engineer, soldier and educator, should be the beginning of others to follow in the same vein. The multicultural image of Canada should be conveyed in external affairs throughout the multicultural world; exhibits of Canada, embassies, consulates and delegations should have illustrations of the cultural contributions of some of the leading third element groups. I believe it would greatly enhance Canada's prestige in the world if a native Indian, educated in a Canadian university, became a member of a Canadian diplomatic mission. Cultural exchanges between the various groups should be promoted. These are only a few suggestions.

Canada's future and greatness will depend not so much upon the exploitation of her natural resources as upon the proper development of her human resources, both of which we have in variety. If we succeed, and we are well on the road to succeeding, to evolve the pattern of unity in continuing diversity through the application of the principle of Confederation and compromise, this will serve as precedent for other states in the world having similar population and cultural problems. It will be Canada's contribution to the world. I shall venture to go farther. In Canada we have the world in miniature. World peace and order could be achieved if the principles of unity in continuing diversity, brotherhood, compromise and the recognition of the freedom and dignity of individuals and nations are honestly applied.

So, on the eve of the celebration of the centennial of the Confederation of Canada, let us honour the memory and the deed of the Founding Fathers of our nation. The bronze tablet in the Confederation Chamber of the Legislative building in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, most appropriately assesses their immortal work of one hundred years ago in the following words:

> Providence being their guide
> They builded better than they knew.

In these days when our nation is subjected to various stresses and strains, when some express doubts and fears about Canada's future, let us strengthen the moral fibre of our nation by rededicating ourselves to the principles of the Canadian Bill of Rights. Let us always bear in mind the pledge appended to this bill, which was read by Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker, in the House of Commons, on July 1, 1960:

> I am a Canadian, a free Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my own way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I believe wrong, free to choose those who shall govern my country. This heritage of freedom I pledge to uphold for myself and all mankind.

Fundamentally, we are a Christian and democratic nation. Let us therefore not forget that all men are born in the image of God. Believing in the Fatherhood of God, we also believe in the brotherhood of man and the brotherhood of peoples and nations. Our faith in freedom, equality, justice, co-operation, truth and love as the antidote to tyranny, hate, fear, bigotry, prejudice and discrimination has been the strength that has brought about and maintained Canadian unity, which has produced peace, progress, prosperity and happiness for Canadian citizens. This faith and work has built a great and dynamic Canada. With continuing mutual understanding and goodwill and adherence to these high principles we will build a greater and more dynamic country. Let us look to Canada's future with the faith of our Founding Fathers, of our pioneers of various origins, and of our great leaders.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, after hearing the magnificent speech of Senator Yuzyk, given in three different languages, I hesitate to follow him with my broken English and my bad French. I understand that another senator is to follow me in the debate tonight, so I will dispense with the traditional opening remarks and say that I endorse all the good words which have been said about you, Mr. Speaker, and about Senator White, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), Senator Macdonald (Brantford), and Senator Brooks—all of the nice things that have been said about everybody.

However, I would like to express a word of congratulation and of welcome to the newly-appointed senators, especially to the new senator from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Rattenbury). I am sure that those in this new group will find the same friendship, regard and understanding that was offered to the group in which I was introduced to the Senate two years ago.

I congratulate the mover and the seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator Cook and Senator Denis, on their speeches. They performed their duties with high dignity. A special mention should go to Senator Cook who was sworn in only a few minutes before he was called upon to speak. We were all impressed by the ease and sincerity with which he spoke. We know that Senator Cook will make a very great contribution to the Senate, and so will Senator Denis.

(Translation):

I consider as a personal friend the seconder of the Address, honourable Senator Denis of St. Denis, whom I met in the other place three years ago. True, I have not always shared his opinions, but anyone who has given 30 years of his life to the public service, in the field of politics, deserves congratulations, and I am pleased to do so tonight.

I am happy to see him here and I wish both Mrs. Denis and the senator many years of health and happiness.

Senator Denis carried out his task as seconder with dignity but especially with great experience. Realizing that the Speech from the Throne had practically nothing to offer, he chose to by-pass it and read extracts of a Liberal epistle inspired by the prophets of that group. I am sure it was not inspired by St. Denis. Being a good Catholic, I have great faith in all the saints, even St. Denis. However, honourable senators, if I were to learn that it is St. Denis who inspired the speech of Senator Denis, I would immediately take him off the list of the saints I prefer.

(Text):

Honourable senators, with regard to the speech by honourable Senator Denis, I have made a few notes which I will go over very briefly. The honourable senator mentioned that 32,000 applications had been granted for building homes this winter. With that possibly I could agree, but he omitted to mention that there is an 11 per cent sales tax on the construction materials going into those homes, which represents $1,100 on a $10,000 home.

He also mentioned that 275,000 new jobs had been created and that unemployment had declined by 75,000. Then he added, "Of course, we are not yet satisfied." We, too, are not satisfied, because that leaves a gap between 275,000 and 75,000 indicating a difference of 200,000 missing somewhere.

The honourable Senator Denis also mentioned the federal contributory retirement fund. However, he forgot to mention that this is not all rosy and is not yet accepted by all the people, by any means.

He also mentioned the $75 a month pension plan, with which we agree; but I do not remember having heard that we would have to be taxed to pay this $75 a month pension.

The honourable senator got jumpy then. He was referring to page 17 of the last Liberal election program and then he skipped to page 21. I wonder if his reason for skipping those lines had anything to do with some of the omissions. I would refer to the House of Commons Hansard of February 24, at page 116, reporting a speech made by a very bright young man, Mr. Erik Nielsen. Mr. Nielsen had this to say, and I quote:

> I went through some election pamphlets and material published by the Liberal party in the last election campaign, and I am going to go through some of the promises which were made.

Then Mr. Nielsen listed 34 promises which had never been fulfilled. This was a possible cause for omissions being made.

Honourable senators, the Speech from the Throne is normally a measuring device by which the nation can rate its administration. I feel that the Throne Speech we heard last week does not give the Government of this day a brilliant rating. One finds difficulties in trying to praise the Speech, as it is such a departure from the promises made during the last federal election.

The Speech can be most noted for its many omissions; besides being one of the shortest ever presented to the Canadian people, it is the most "speechless". One radio commentator said that it had a lot of material but very little cloth.

I am sure everyone will agree with me that it was molded after the so-called "sixty days of decision" which turned out to be sixty days of frustration. It reminded me of an abstract painting. No matter how you look at it, it is deceiving, it is always the same, it means nothing definite, and it leaves much to your imagination.

Honourable senators, what can we expect from a minority government which cannot stand on its own feet without support of minority groups, whose members are today more interested in their salaries than in the affairs of the nation?

However, the Speech from the Throne includes some good announcements. The greatest of all these was the announcement of the visit to Canada by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth. I am sure all Canadians are rejoicing that our Queen, Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth, will visit Canada on the historic occasion of the Interprovincial Conference on Confederation. I am sure we all wish to present to our beloved Queen, as usual, our best and most cordial reception.

Other good news contained in the Speech from the Throne was the announcement of the agreement signed between the American and Canadian Governments relative to the development of the Columbia River. This is a step forward and in the right direction. However, I regret that the Speech omitted completely any reference to the Passamaquoddy tidal power development, which at this date is a subject of major interest at the eastern coast of the United States and in the Maritimes. I am prepared to accept this as an omission and not a lack of interest on the part of the Government.

I would like to compliment the Government in their undertaking to promote a memorial international park at the Roosevelt summer home at Campobello. I am glad to say thanks for that to the previous Conservative Government, under the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, with the recommendation of the Honourable Hugh John Flemming. The Island of Campobello is now privileged to have a fine bridge, which makes an easy access to the island where this memorial home now stands. I am sure the proposed park will be a great attraction not only for Canadians but for thousands of American citizens.

Honourable senators, I would like to say some words of compliment to the organizers and promoters of the World Fair, especially to Mayor Drapeau; the first commissionary, Mr. Dupuy; and Mr. Shaw, the chief engineer. These men have shown integrity and leadership. They have not feared to face obstruction, and the Canadian people may have the assurance that the exposition of 1967 will be a success. We are not to forget our own honourable Senator Sarto Fournier, who plowed the soil and planted the seed which is now growing into a gigantic enterprise.

The Speech from the Throne mentions a reform of public regulation of railway facilities to meet present and future needs. However, there is no mention of what regulations will be introduced. I beg the Government to study the railway train passenger service in my region, that is, between the City of Quebec and the City of Moncton, via Edmundston. I am not asking the Canadian National Railways to add more trains, but to change the route of some trains in order to give transportation service to Canadian citizens who are entitled to railway transportation but who are not getting it now.

The Throne Speech has completely bypassed the question of a national flag. Again, what a change of attitude, when not so long ago the Prime Minister of the day said at a political rally: "Why not two flags?" It sounded so easy, it seemed to please so few, but surely now he should think not of two but at least one flag.

The Speech from the Throne mentioned a new Minister of Rural Development. Here, again, what a departure from the last federal election Liberal platform promises, whereby two Ministers of Agriculture were to be appointed, one for the east and one for the west! Those were childish and irresponsible promises, I admit; nevertheless, they were promises repeated many times by the present Prime Minister and his colleagues. Now there is an increase in the confusion which already exists. I quote from the Speech from the Throne itself:

> A measure will be placed before you to provide for a minister responsible for Rural Development, in order that my Government may carry further its policy of giving increased attention to the needs of agriculture in both eastern and western Canada.

Now we find that the promise made in regard to a Minister of Agriculture has been given a different dressing. The eastern agricultural minister's uniform has been shelved for good, and a new suit has been cut to include the west as well as the east. To say the least about this, it will be just another unfilled promise, not to be forgotten by the farmers of the east.

Another departure in the Speech from the Throne was in the matter of scholarships. Where are those 10,000 scholarships which we heard so much about in the platform promises during the last federal election? Those vote-getting promises have shrunk now to a mere loan, likely to be administered by the provinces, whereby the student, after completing successfully the application form, submits to an interview with the local member of the legislative assembly, so that he may pledge himself to Liberal support before the application is finally approved. Honourable senators, this is what is taking place today in New Brunswick under the Robichaud administration.

In the Throne Speech, one point of major interest to the Canadian people is the reform of the Senate. While it may be premature to discuss this reform, as we do not know what form it will take, we are led to believe that it will be a compulsory retiring age. I am sure that when the time comes we will have an opportunity to study fully this matter. One must not forget that the value of the Senate—and I emphasize the word "value"—is the immense knowledge and irreplaceable experience in all phases of life that we find here in this chamber. It is that experience and knowledge which form the wisdom of those who have the duties of guiding the destiny of our Canada and maintaining the true democratic path. I exclude myself from the application of the word "wisdom". Therefore, if this experience and knowledge is to be replaced by physical fitness, the retiring age is not 75, not 70, but 65, in line with the Canadian working force.

Honourable senators, in regard to unemployment, during the last few months, the Government of the day has displayed many figures relating to unemployment. I would like to extend to the Government my appreciation for what they have done and are trying to do to relieve unemployment. I am prepared to agree that they have done something about it, but I disagree with the method which the Government employs to render their figures public. You will note that as a rule the figures given indicate the number of people receiving prestations or benefits, which shows a decline. To be fair to the nation, these figures should be accompanied by the number of unemployed today not receiving such prestations, due to the lack of employment in previous months, which resulted in a shortage of stamps to qualify for prestations. The total of the two figures would give the Canadian people a true picture of the number of unemployed people today. The hundreds of thousands who are receiving prestations are no problem to anyone, but those who do not receive any are the persons who are now being overlooked and need more attention.

The Speech mentioned the establishment of a new minister to preside over the Treasury Board. If I were in the other chamber, I would have much to say about this, and so would the taxpayers of the nation.

The Speech, among its many omissions, has not a word giving any indication of further interest by the Government in the Canadian Development Corporation. It avoided any comments on biculturalism and bilingualism, which the same Government praised so highly last year.

The Speech mentioned a continuation of federal-provincial conferences, which have brought about considerable progress in the improving of federal-provincial relations.

Honourable senators, at this point I wish to congratulate the federal Government of the day in making it possible for the Atlantic Development Board to make a contribution of $20 million toward the construction of the Mactaquac hydro electric power dams on the Saint John River. While we appreciate this donation, we should not lose sight of the fact that the board was established in 1961 by a Conservative government.

We must not lose sight of the fact that if the provincial government of New Brunswick is today in a position to build this $100 million power dam, it is due to the good government that the Honourable Hugh John Flemming gave to the Province of New Brunswick between 1952 and 1960, which made it possible for the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission to become self-financing. A bill to that effect was introduced in the New Brunswick Legislature in 1958. Without it the dam would be just a dream.

We must also not lose sight of the fact that if this large power dam is now possible, it is again due to the good government of the Honourable Hugh John Flemming, who made it possible to build the Beechwood dam and carry out the expropriation of the Gatineau power plant on the Saint John River, which today provides the river flow control required at the new dam.

While we rejoice in the grant of $20 million by the Liberal Government, we should remember that it was the same Liberal Government which refused the Honourable Hugh John Flemming and the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission federal assistance—not even a simple little loan. I well remember the many trips I made to Ottawa to see the former Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent, the honourable Ministers Abbott and Harris, and the Honourable Mr. Lesage, then Minister of National Resources and Northern Affairs. Yes, honourable senators, there were many trips I made with my premier, the Honourable Mr. Flemming, but the answer was always "No". It took another good Tory administration under the leadership of the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, to grant us, by special legislation in 1958, a loan of $29 million to build Beechwood, and further assistance up to $4 million to build an interprovincial high-line power grid between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I am sure that when Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick and the new Liberal Government of Ottawa realized what the construction of the Beechwood power dam did to stimulate the economy of New Brunswick they felt they had sinned—and a major sin at that. However, they say it is never too late to repent—and they did just that.

Honourable senators I wish to add a few words about the bicultural and bilingual movements. These relate to some of our problems in New Brunswick. Tonight, for the first time in the history of New Brunswick, you are going to hear the voice of the French Canadian of New Brunswick. In the past you have, by means of radio, television and the press, often heard the voice of New Brunswick Acadians who have taken the liberty to speak for all French Canadians—not all Acadians, since in New Brunswick we are not all Acadians. We can say quite frankly that in New Brunswick we found three different groups of the French element, the Acadians, the semi-Acadians and the French Canadians. We speak the same language, we share the same church, but we have somewhat different cultures and different views and opinions. It is not for me to expose the views of the first group, the Acadian group—and I want to repeat, not all the Acadians. You have heard them and you know their aims and ambitions. However, may I be permitted to speak for the other two groups, whose views I share and agree with.

We French people are widely known for using nicknames; that is part of our culture. In the region from which I come, we are called the "French Brayon". The name comes from our ancestors who grew lin. There was a market for the seed, known as linseed, and cloth was made from the straw. The process of pulverizing the straw was called "brayer". We are also known as "the Pancakes". We are to be found mostly along the Saint John River Valley, and are composed of a mixture of Acadians and Canadians.

The other groups with which we are associated are the French Canadians, coming mostly from the north, and from the province of Quebec. They are called "the Canayen," or "the Blueberries". The words "pancakes" and "blueberries" are home synonyms for friendship and are often used to tease one another, but always in a spirit of good French harmony. Incidentally, those nicknames are tempting as foods, especially with the addition of the good maple syrup of Senator Vaillancourt. The last two groups have, on several occasions, been in strong disagreement with the first group of divided Acadians.

Honourable senators, biculturalism and bilingualism are two words which seem to create much confusion these days, yet they must be recognized as symbols of liberty of race, of religion, and of speech. Biculturalism and bilingualism should be a pledge of equality for Canadians living under a system of Confederation established over 95 years ago, devised purposely to legalize such equality. Equality will never be achieved as long as the shadow of racial and religious differences exist. Here, it is not a question of leaning on the past, even if at times the past has left behind unpleasant moments, but rather a question of looking into the future with firm determination, filled with friendly feeling and respect for one another. Then, with a little goodwill from one another, biculturalism and bilingualism will become a synonym of good understanding and goodwill. However, if biculturalism and bilingualism lean rather on the side of separatism, these two words will become synonyms of humiliation, which will lead us to dishonour and finally to disaster. We French Canadians do not wish this to happen, and we have the duty to resist such movements and to fight them at their source.

My province of New Brunswick takes a great interest in the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, because our province is composed almost entirely on terms of equality by two groups who have lived together for over 200 years. We always work together in harmony; but, unfortunately, from day to day during the last 20 years we have not been spared from small separatist movements. Those movements all originated from the same region and always under the same influence.

From time to time we gave our support to this minority group, which always avoided the mention of separatism but directed its efforts under a different pretext. However, on several occasions we criticized this group severely for embarking on questions on which we feel they had no authority to speak, nor had they the support of our French Canadian population. At other times we condemn them very severely for their irresponsible actions. In general, we French Canadians of New Brunswick have been rather easy going and tolerant toward that group because they were small and were causing little harm and drawing little attention.

Today, however, this same group, under the influence of a group which I would prefer not to mention at this moment, has at its disposal its own newspaper which cannot survive by its own merit. That newspaper today publishes news and views to our French population of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and right across Canada, which do not always express the feeling or the wish of all French Canadians of my province.

Today we are often told that in the Maritimes there are approximately 300,000 Acadians. In my estimation this is one of the first errors which that group has placed before the public. It is possible that there are 300,000 French people in the Maritimes, some of direct Acadian descent, semi-Acadians and French Canadians. That to me presents a different picture altogether. I can assure honourable senators that 270,000 French Canadians do not share the views of the other 25,000 who take the attitude of leaning toward the separatist movement, an organization which takes it upon itself to be the voice of all French people in the Maritimes. We have asked and are still asking ourselves, where did they get authority to talk this way?

Honourable senators, I know that after my declaration of today this group will shout "scandal!" However, I am not ashamed of my statement. Rather I am proud, as I make it with knowledge, faith and sincerity. It is not my future which is important in the matter; it is the future of my children, the future of the generation of tomorrow. It is our children who will suffer from the consequences of the revolutionary movements sponsored by this association.

Honourable senators, my position as an anti-separatist has been well established in my province and in my local region. The records of the provincial legislature are there to show that I, on several occasions on the floor of that chamber, took a strong hand against the separatist movement.

On October 3, 1963, two days after I was given the honour of a seat in this house, in seconding the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I said this—and I quote from Hansard of 1962-63, page 24:

> Now in a more serious vein, I must point out that New Brunswick has been endowed with great cultural and natural wealth. Nowadays our population is almost equally divided between the French and the English and we, of both ethnic groups, live and work according to the same convictions, the same principles, and we admit that we are first and foremost Canadians. However, we are not immune to separatist movements which seem to spout once in a while in our province. We try to fight them before they spread so as to protect our freedoms and strengthen our ties within the Canadian Confederation.

Honourable senators, in my home city of Edmundston we are privileged in not having Separate Schools. If my memory is right, in 1948 there was a movement to organize Separate School classrooms. Being a teacher at the time, I fought the movement very strongly. I was threatened with expulsion, but this was not the intention of the school board. I fought the movement as a parent, a father of four children attending school at the time, and my arguments were simple, easy to understand and logical. I could never accept, nor could I visualize my children being educated on one side of the street and the English-speaking children being educated on the other side of the same street, under two different atmospheres, and expect that after graduation those students would be released upon the world and be able to work and live together for a lifetime, successfully, in harmony and in understanding. It just will not work, because the foundation of understanding is not there. As a teacher, whose obligation it was to prepare our children to become first-class Canadian citizens, I was obliged to fight separatism, and today I have not changed my attitude.

Honourable senators, may I read extracts from a speech I made at a public meeting at home on August 30, 1961, at which over 3,000 French- and English-speaking Canadians were in attendance. Here I was referring to a society called the Société Nationale des Acadiens, that had given me an awfully hard time in my effort to bring bilingual television broadcasting to my local people. I said this:

The Société Nationale des Acadiens cannot dictate and enforce their policy over the whole French population of the Maritimes, especially New Brunswick. We, the French Canadians, do not share their attitude. We French Canadians do not share any separatism policy. We French Canadians cannot tolerate any longer such agitation, as we French Canadians strongly recognize that the events of 1755 are now over 300 years past and should be shelved once for all. But rather we French Canadians are looking forward to the future instead of back at the past. We French Canadians believe in unity, friendship, freedom, freedom and respect to all classes of society, freedom of church, freedom of languages, freedom of schools, freedom of the press, but not exactly the type of freedom we have received lately from the French press headed by the editors of the newspaper l'Evangeline.

We, the French of Madawaska, have since Confederation set an example to the rest of Canada, as we are living two races in harmony and friendship, with freedom of languages and religions. This we want to continue, and we want the English population to cherish this same freedom without limitation.

Ladies and gentlemen—

I was referring to the audience.

—is there anything wrong in having our children learn the English language? Is there anything wrong in having the English boys and girls learn the French language? Is there anything wrong in being bilingual? No, my friends, let us work together as we have in the past, to keep and protect this friendly atmosphere which exists here, to live and let live.

On February 2, 1964—three weeks ago—I made another speech, by request, on the separatist movement, and I will read just one paragraph from it, because I want to give the floor to someone else.

Are we much longer to stand idle without saying anything? Are we going to stand idle and let a few people who claim to be the voice of the French people build a Berlin wall between the French and English of this province, without giving any thinking and consideration for those who will suffer the most from such revolutionary action?

In closing, I would say that my opinion on bilingualism and biculturalism is that it should not be imposed on anyone, but that it should be voluntary. If we had been given another 10 or 15 years, I am convinced, honestly and sincerely, that many of the present difficulties would have disappeared.

My father and mother are 79 and 80 years of age, respectively. They do not understand a word of English. I come of a second generation. I can put a few words of English together, enough to get by—and I hope you have at least understood what I have tried to say—which is a step forward from the situation of my father and mother. My children are not completely bilingual, but they are much better than I am. However, my grandchildren, three or four years of age, are perfectly bilingual. So this problem is completely disappearing in my family; and there are thousands of families like mine amongst French-speaking people, and I am convinced there are just as many English-speaking families in the same position. Probably in another 10 years all young people will be bilingual, and in your family your children will speak both English and French. In this way the problems will iron themselves out.

As far as my culture is concerned, I am free to do anything I want. I can play the mouth organ and square dance, and there is nobody to stop me. The English-speaking people can do the same things. It all depends on what you put into it—this is the freedom we want to champion. Now, I conclude with these words: we cannot stop the birds from flying over our heads but, surely, we can stop them making a nest in our hair.

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, may I take the liberty of tendering to you, Mr. Speaker, my very best wishes, and also of congratulating our new Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) on his appointment, and of wishing him well. I should also like to join with other honourable senators in welcoming the new senators to this chamber.

I did not intend saying anything about my home district, because its importance speaks for itself, but I want to mention in passing that it is still one of the great grain-shipping ports of the world. In the 1963 season it loaded in ships some 350 million bushels of grain, some going in foreign ships but the great bulk of it in Canadian ships to eastern Canadian ports for loading in foreign ships and for domestic use. However, that is not what I rose to say at this time.

For 24 years I have been in this chamber, and during that time I have sat on both sides of the house. All that time I have wondered where these paintings came from that cover what otherwise would be bare walls of the Senate chamber. They are very well painted and, for two reasons which I will mention later, I consider them extremely valuable. At last, through the efforts of our clerk, Mr. MacNeill, we have been able to solve the problem. He has received a letter from Mr. R. F. Wodehouse, Curator of War Collections, telling the story; and I am going to ask my colleague Senator Roebuck to give you that information.

However, I want to say that to me these pictures are particularly valuable. Firstly, because they remind us of the flower of Canada who went to war in 1914 and who never came back, having given their lives for our freedom. Secondly, they depict the destruction that occurs through war, and they remind us that we must never allow another one to occur. The 1914-18 war was child's play compared to what would happen now. For all time they should remind us that war must be avoided.

May I take the liberty, honourable senators, of asking Senator Roebuck to give you that information?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Thank you, honourable senators.

The letter is from R. F. Wodehouse, Curator of War Collections, and it is addressed to J. F. MacNeill, Esq., Clerk of the Senate, Parliament Buildings, Ottawa, under date of January 3, 1964. It is written on the notepaper of The National Gallery of Canada, and reads:

> Dear Sir:
>
> I am writing to confirm and amplify certain information given verbally to Mrs. Sutherland of your staff regarding the origins of the Canadian Memorials Collection of which certain pictures are now hanging in the Senate Chamber.
>
> The origins of this collection which is now in the care of the National Gallery are complex. Essentially the acquisition of these works was a private venture on the part of Lord Beaverbrook and some associates at the time when Lord Beaverbrook was in charge of the Canadian War Records Office in London. The clearest statement of its origin I can find is in a letter dated 15 January 1918 from the Canadian War Records Office, 14 Clifford Street, Bond Street, London, W.1. This was addressed to the Secretary, Department of Militia, Oxford Circus House, 245 Oxford St., W. 1 and confirms statements made at an earlier conference.
>
> It reads:
>
> "Dear Major Bristol,
>
> Confirming my call upon you this morning, I submit the following outline of the Canadian War Memorials Fund Scheme for your information.
>
> The Committee of Canadian War Memorials Fund consists of Lord Rothermere (chairman), Lord Beaverbrook and Captain B. L. Lima of the Canadian War Records office. Its funds are obtained from the sale of official photographs, exhibitions of official photographs, and official and semi-official publications such as 'Canada in Flanders', 'Canadian War Pictorial' and 'Canada in Khaki'.
>
> The purpose of the scheme is to purchase on behalf of Canada, pictures by the most capable and distinguished artists, which shall depict in the finest way Canada's share in the Great War. The record value of these pictures is inestimable."

In this connection, Lord Rothermere and Captain Sir Bertram Lima at this time controlled the newspaper the Daily Mirror and other publications and these connections facilitated publicity, etc., which greatly assisted the fund. In addition there were private donations made and some artists donated works or accepted very low fees. Arrangements were made by the Canadian Government to second certain artists serving in the forces and to grant honorary commissions to other artists to facilitate sketching with the forces on the continent.

In a report of the Executive Committee dated 31 August 1919, the members of the Committee of the Canadian War Memorials Fund are listed as:

> The Rt. Hon. Viscount Rothermere, P.C. (Chairman)
> Lady Perley
> Sir Edmund Walker, G.C.V.O.
> The Rt. Hon. Lord Beaverbrook, P.C.
> Secretary, Major J. H. Watkins, M.B.E.

The Executive Committee consisted of Viscount Rothermere and Lord Beaverbrook. Sir Bertram Lima had died in the interim.

The Art Adviser was Mr. Paul Konody, a distinguished art critic of the day. He is the author of the book "Art and War" which contains many coloured illustrations of the Memorials Collection and is probably available in the Parliamentary Library.

Some pertinent sentences of the report may be quoted:

> It has been the desire of the Committee that no charge for the collection of pictures should fall on the people of Canada. While therefore, we have been glad to avail ourselves of the assistance of the Canadian Government given in the form of the loan of photographic material or of the occasional services of officers and men, no Government grant has been expended on it.

The collection was exhibited in the Royal Academy in London during January and February 1919. During the early summer it was shown in New York and at the time of the writing of the report was being shown in Toronto. In 1920 the Canadian War Memorials collection was transferred to Ottawa and came into the keeping of the National Gallery.

On 12 February 1921, Col. Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, signed a receipt for eight paintings to be hung in the Senate Chamber. These were to be in place in time for the opening of the new Houses of Parliament and most of these seem to have remained in the Senate Chamber ever since.

During the two years preceding this time there was much correspondence between the War Memorials Committee and the Government of Canada as to who owned the pictures and who was responsible for outstanding bills. This appears to have been finalized in April 1921 for on 12 April the Minister of Public Works, the Hon. F. B. McCurdy wrote the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the National Gallery that 'you may consider that the Canadian War Memorials Committee has handed over the collection unconditionally to the Government of Canada'.

I trust the foregoing may be of some value to you in answering any queries regarding the status of these paintings. Please let me know if I can be of any further assistance.

Yours sincerely,

R. F. Wodehouse,
Curator of War Collections

J. F. MacNeill, Esq.,
Clerk of the Senate,
Parliament Buildings, Ottawa.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Davies, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE CANADIAN BRANCH OF THE ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION—SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Kinley moved the second reading of Bill S-5, respecting The General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association. He said: Honourable senators, the bill which now comes before us for discussion is classified as a private bill, but I suggest it is of tremendous public importance. It comes before us in the form of a petition from the Most Venerable Order of St. John of Jerusalem, and brings to us a message from that organization which I am sure makes it a worthy applicant for the legislation sought therein.

The Order of St. John consists of a trained and dedicated body of people in the Commonwealth of Nations and in Canada which serves a philanthropic purpose. They have served in this country for over 50 years and have a fine record of service and achievement. Many, many people have been trained and have dedicated themselves to work in the Order in the interests of the people of this country. Many people also receive benefit from the Order, proving its work to be of great human interest. Consequently, there are many people who follow closely the work of this Order and who look forward to the enactment of the legislation sought at this time.

Honourable senators, this bill has great importance. It comes to us because of change and growth, and because of the success and progress of the Order of St. John.

In this world there are forces of good and forces of evil, and I think we can say that the Order of St. John is one of the great forces of good. It is a long established and active Order; it has a great history. It was a militant order during the Crusades, but it has always been beneficent.

It brings to my mind the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, which dates back to early times. I think it was in 1882 that the society obtained the privilege of rebuilding that hospital, and it has been a place of valuable service during the conflicts in the Middle East. When the disease trachoma, an eye infection, was so prevalent in that country that it caused disaster, the hospital was turned into an ophthalmic hospital. That ophthalmic hospital is operating now in the City of Jerusalem, and it is one of the foundations of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem.

The St. John Ambulance Association has been working in every province of Canada for over 50 years without reward of any kind. That represents to me a fine expression of Christian chivalry.

The principal purpose of this bill is to provide the corporation with objects and powers appropriate to the only function it has in fact been fulfilling since 1946, namely, that of a bare trustee for the Priory, holding title to property beneficially owned by the Priory, as more particularly set out in the recitals in the preamble of the bill, and in connection therewith to define the trusts upon which the corporation holds such property.

The legislation which the bill amends is chapter 145 of the Statutes of Canada of 1914, by which the General Council of the Canadian branch of the St. John Ambulance Association was first created. The personnel of the first General Council are named in that statute, and they are distinguished citizens from all provinces of Canada. They have all, I am told, since been gathered to their fathers. They did great work. Theirs was a fine conception which in 50 years has borne fruit one hundredfold. With the permission of the Senate I shall personally record their names in Hansard in remembrance of them and as an example to others. I ask, honourable senators, to be allowed to place this list on Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The list is as follows:

The Hon. Mr. Justice Sir Louis Davies, K.C.M.G., Ottawa; Col. the Hon. James Mason, Senator, Toronto; Major F. C. McTavish, M.D., Vancouver, B.C.; A. M. Nanton, Esq., Winnipeg; Major H. B. Yates, M.D., Montreal; George Burn, Esq., Ottawa; Frederic Cook, Esq., Ottawa; Col. Sir H. M. Pellatt, C.V.O., Toronto; W. F. Angus, Esq., Montreal; the Hon. Hewitt Bostock, Senator, Monte Creek, B.C.; Lt.-Col. J. H. Burland, Montreal; Michael Clark, Esq., M.D., M.P., Red Deer, Alberta; J. L. Chabot, Esq., M.D., M.P., Ottawa; J. A. Chisholm, Esq., Halifax; C. J. Copp, Esq., M.D., Toronto; J. M. Courtney, Esq., C.M.G., I.S.O., Ottawa; Major David Donald, M.D., Victoria, B.C.; George E. Drummond, Esq., Montreal; Sanford Evans, Esq., Winnipeg; Lt.-Col. J. T. Fotheringham, M.D., Toronto; W. K. George, Esq., Toronto; Lt.-Col. W. A. Grant, Montreal; F. P. Gutelius, Esq., Moncton, N.B.; D. B. Hanna, Esq., Toronto; Lt.-Col. C. A. Hodgetts, M.D., Ottawa; J. Alexander Hutchison, Esq., M.D., Montreal; Col. D. T. Irwin, C.M.G., Ottawa; W. D. Brydone-Jack, Esq., M.D., Vancouver; Lt.-Col. Lacey R. Johnson, Montreal; Col. G. Carleton Jones, M.D., Ottawa; James Manuel, Esq., Ottawa; Rev. E. G. Miller, Victoria, B.C.; F. Montizambert, Esq., I.S.O., M.D., Ottawa; D. McNichol, Esq., Montreal; The Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., Toronto; Col. J. L. H. Neilson, M.D., Quebec; J. F. Orde, Esq., K.C., Ottawa; J. D. Pagé, Esq., M.D., Quebec; H. L. Pavey, Esq., M.D., Montreal; C. G. Pennock, Esq., Vancouver; D. Pottinger, Esq., I.S.O., Ottawa; Col. G. S. Ryerson, M.D., Toronto; Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, K.C.V.O., Montreal; John Stanfield, Esq., M.P., Truro, N.S.; Alfred Thompson, Esq., M.D., M.P., Dawson, Yukon Territory; William Trant, Esq., Regina, Sask.; J. W. Ward, Esq., Edmonton, Alta.; and Ira Yeo, Esq., M.D., Charlottetown, P.E.I.

The preamble to the bill is very informative. It recites that:

> —on or about 16th day of September, 1946, the Order created an Establishment of the Order in and throughout Canada now called The Priory of Canada of the Most Venerable Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, designated for brevity "The Priory of Canada of the Order of St. John", and hereinafter called "the Priory".

The preamble also recites that the Corporation of the Priory of Canada and the General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association prays that the provisions of a bill be enacted as herein set forth.

Chapter 145 of the Statutes of Canada, 1914, assented to on June 12 of that year, incorporated the General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association—called the corporation—and our consideration now is of the proposed amendments and changes to the legislation of that date. The detail is as follows.

Clause 1 reads:

> In this Act,
>
> (a) "Foundations" means institutions or organized bodies constituted by the Priory for the furtherance of the objects of the Order, or any of them, and includes the St. John Ambulance Association and the St. John Ambulance Brigade in Canada;
>
> (b) "branches" means subordinate parts of the Priory and its Foundations and includes its Provincial Councils and Special Centres ...

I might say that the organization as it is found in the provinces of Canada is called the Council. There are organizations that work largely within themselves, but they are under the control of the Priory. There are special centres such as the Canadian Pacific Railway centre, the Canadian National Railway centre, the Civil Service Ottawa centre, the Northern Electric centre, the R.C.M.P. centre, the Bell Telephone Company centre, and the Department of National Defence centre.

> (c) "Regulations of the Priory" means the regulations of the Priory and its Foundations in force from time to time under the government of the Order in so far as it relates to Canada.

By clause 2 of the bill the name of the corporation is changed to St. John Priory of Canada Properties. This name is considered more appropriate at the present time, but such change of name shall not in any way impair, alter or affect the rights or liabilities of the corporation.

It will be noted that by clause 3 of the bill sections 2 to 7 both inclusive of the statute of 1914 are repealed and new sections substituted. This constitutes quite a change, made necessary because of the changing conditions and the growth of the Order. The repealed sections remove any foreign control from the activities of the St. John Ambulance Association and the Brigade, and the Priory of Canada is responsible for the administration and control of the work of St. John in this country.

The new section 2 deals with the right to hold property, and the new section 3 deals with trusts of property and the priory control.

The proposed section 4 names the place of the head office, which is Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, and also provides that notice must be given in writing to the Secretary of State of any change in the location of the head office, which change shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

Section 5 provides that members of the corporation shall be the Priory Executive Officers from time to time. Section 6 gives the corporation power to make by-laws.

The new section 7(1) gives, subject to the provisions of section 3 and the terms of any trust relating thereto, the power to hold and dispose of property, and subsection 2 retroactively removes the limitation on the value of real estate held by the corporation, which was $50,000 in the original act.

Section 8 deals with borrowing powers, and subsection 2 restricts the corporation from entering into the businesses of banking and insurance.

The bill directs that the act shall be deemed to have come into force on June 24, 1964, which is St. John's Day, a day of significance to the Order.

The decorations of the Order are for merit, and carry with them no title.

I remember that in 1931 I was a representative for Canada at the centenary celebration of the revival of the Order in Britain, and at the meeting of the Chapter General the Sub-Prior read a message from the Prime Minister of Canada announcing that the Canadian Government had decided to exempt the Order specially from the scope of the resolution of the Canadian House of Commons, in conformity with which the King had refrained from bestowing any titles or honours on his Canadian subjects. The Queen is now the sovereign head of the Order. His Excellency, General the Right Honourable Georges Philias Vanier, D.S.O., M.C., K. St. J., C.D. is the Prior of the Order in Canada.

In 1958 the American Society of the Most Venerable Order was established in New York. I was present at an investiture in the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine in New York on January 6, 1963 by the Lord Prior of St. John. It was an inspiring ceremony, and as a Canadian I was glad to be there to take part in the service.

At that investiture, men who are probably the charter members of the society in the United States, were invested in the Order by the Grand Prior. The emblem of the Order, as you know, is the Maltese Cross. It is an eight pointed cross, the arms of which symbolize the Christian virtues of prudence, justice, temperance and fortitude. Its points represent eight beatitudes which spring from the practice of those virtues. The whiteness of the cross is the emblem of purity.

The motto of the order, Pro Fide, for the Christian faith, came before Pro Utilitate Hominum, for the welfare of men. It was the central and constraining memory of the Christian faith that, more than any other influence, could inspire service with the spirit of chivalry and kindled charity into a fire. We are glad to see that this flame is burning brightly at the present time in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, we are all indebted to the honourable senator from Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley), first, for agreeing to sponsor this bill and, secondly, for telling us so much about it.

I do not intend to detain honourable senators more than a few minutes. However, this is a rather unusual bill and in my private capacity as a member of the Senate I would like to comment upon it, for it stirs my imagination, as I am sure it has stirred others on both sides of the house.

Honourable senators, I have before me the annual report of the St. John Ambulance, which is perhaps the name by which this organization is best known in Canada.

This is an example of an organization which has reverted to type, because its original purpose was to provide corporal works of mercy to people who needed them. The original establishment, according to the annual report, was set up in Jerusalem in the eleventh century, as a hospital for Christian pilgrims in Jerusalem, by a group of Benedictine monks who became known as the Brothers of the Hospital of St. John.

During the Crusades, when the forces of Europe went down to the Holy Land to try and free those holy places from the grip of the Saracen, this institution, this hospital, was the place where their wounded were cared for.

The Order grew in power, and ultimately, as the senator from Lunenburg has said, it became a militant order. After the defeat of the Christians at Acre in 1291, when the last Christian stronghold in the Holy Land was lost, the surviving knights of St. John went to Cyprus and later to Rhodes. Apparently, early in the sixteenth century they established a fleet which was very powerful in the Mediterranean, and which I suppose was contemporary with the fleet of Don John of Austria, who was the commandant in chief at the battle of Lepanto, about which Mr. Chesterton has written so beautifully and so stirringly in his poem "Lepanto".

Apparently for well over two centuries the Order was strongly established in Malta and had much to do with trying to put down the pirate trade in the Mediterranean.

In the eighteenth century, Napoleon captured Malta and from then on the military power of the Order ceased; but it continued the work that it is doing now in this country and principally, I think, in England.

It may be interesting for senators to know that in Canada in 1962 over 195,000 certificates and awards were issued by the Order for work in the fields of practical assistance to the public, which the Order gives. Those fields are first aid, home nursing, child care, and instruction in the administration of artificial respiration. They conduct first aid competitions, and 157 teams in various provinces competed for trophies and prizes in this field in 1962.

Honourable senators may also be interested in learning in 1962 there were 9,724 members actively engaged in the work of the Order in Canada. These people worked in the ambulance division, the nursing division, the crusader divisions, the cadet ambulance divisions, and the cadet nursing divisions.

We are all familiar of course with the work the Order does, because almost every time we are at a large gathering, a football or hockey game, memorial day ceremonies, or a circus performance, we see the officials of the St. John Ambulance Society prepared to look after people who need the ministrations of experts in the field of first aid.

I should of course have mentioned skiing. All senators who participate in this sport know that the society performs a very useful work in skiing areas.

This is an unusual kind of bill, and I thought it might be of interest to all honourable senators to have the information I have given. It comes from the last annual report, which is available from the society.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, coming from the Province of New Brunswick, I wish to support what the honourable Leader of the Government has said about the St. John Ambulance. I take this opportunity of paying tribute to the work which that society has been doing in New Brunswick. Its members do an amazing amount of work all over the province, especially in small communities. In the community in which I live, the training that these dedicated men and women have been doing is marvellous. They have accomplished a tremendous amount of good.

As the honourable Leader of the Government has indicated, they attend and are prepared to render assistance at every form of entertainment; and at every place where crowds congregate. All this work is done voluntarily and gratuitously.

I hope that the bill, which has been so well explained by the honourable Senator Kinley, will receive the generous support of the Senate.

Hon. W. Rupert Davies: Honourable senators, I would like to commend this bill strongly. As a commandant of the Order, I know something about it. I am a commandant of the Order of the Priory of Wales.

In Wales the St. John Ambulance Association is divided by counties, and I happen to be chairman of the Council for the county in which I spend some of my time in the summer. I know a great deal about the wonderful work they do, particularly in the way of rendering first aid and in training nursing cadets. I have been impressed very much by the self-sacrifices which are made by men and women in this work. Therefore, I very heartily commend this bill to the house.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Kinley, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 4, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ACT

BILL TO CHANGE NAME—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-2, respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have a list of some ten documents to be tabled. I may say that seven of them deal with reports that are required to be made by the Canadian National Railways in respect of certain portions of their undertaking. The others consist of the report of the Canadian Wheat Board for the crop year ending July 31, 1963, and a report of the Administrative Committee to Programming Board on the Nelson River investigations, dated February 6, 1964.

[The following documents were tabled:]

Report of The Canadian Wheat Board for the Crop Year ended July 31, 1963, certified by the Auditors, pursuant to section 7(2) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, chapter 44, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

Report of Administrative Committee to Programming Board on Nelson River Investigations, dated February 6, 1964. (English text).

Interim Report from the Nelson River Programming Board to the Government of Canada and to the Government of Manitoba, dated February 28, 1964. (English text).

Statement of work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1963, together with estimated expenditures for 1964, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the City of Toronto, pursuant to section 10 of the Canadian National Toronto Terminals Act, chapter 26, Statutes of Canada, 1960. (English and French).

Statement of work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1963, together with estimated expenditures for 1964, under authority of chapter 7, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of a railway line from mile 72.6 Kiask Falls Subdivision, to Mattagami Lake Mines, Township of Galinee, in the Province of Quebec, pursuant to section 8 of the said act. (English and French).

Report of work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1963, together with estimated expenditures for 1964, under authority of chapter 56, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company, of a line of railway from a point near Grimshaw, in the Province of Alberta, in a northerly direction to Great Slave Lake in the Northwest Territories, pursuant to section 9 of the said act. (English and French).

Report of work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1963, together with estimated expenditures for 1964, under authority of chapter 9, Statutes of Canada, 1962, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the Province of Alberta by the Canadian National Railway Company from Whitecourt to the property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation, pursuant to section 8 of the said act. (English and French).

Report of work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1963, under authority of chapter 13, Statutes of Canada, 1962, respecting the construction and operation on behalf of Her Majesty of a line of railway in the Province of Quebec between Matane and Ste Anne des Monts, pursuant to section 6 of the said act. (English and French).

Report of work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1963, together with estimated expenditures for 1964, under authority of chapter 13, Statutes of Canada, 1957-58, as amended, respecting the construction of a line of railway by Canadian National Railway Company from Optic Lake to Chisel Lake, and from Chisel Lake to Stall Lake, and the purchase by Canadian National Railway Company from The International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, of a line of railway from Sipiwesk to a point on Burntwood River near Mystery Lake, all in the Province of Manitoba, pursuant to section 11 of the said act. (English and French).

Report of work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1963, together with estimated expenditures for 1964, under authority of chapter 11, Statutes of Canada, 1962, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the Province of New Brunswick by Canadian National Railway Company from Nepisiguit Junction on the Bathurst Subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in southerly and westerly direction for a distance of approximately 15 miles to the property of Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited, pursuant to section 8 of the said act. (English and French).

PRIVATE BILLS

THE GENERAL ACCIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard presented Bill S-8, respecting The General Accident Assurance Company of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

SCOTTISH CANADIAN ASSURANCE CORPORATION—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Leonard presented Bill S-9, respecting Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

HON. W. ROSS MACDONALD, P.C.

FORMER LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT—EXPRESSION OF THANKS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I crave your indulgence in order to thank you for the very complimentary references that have been made to my tenure of office as one of the leaders of this house. It will be noted that I have not referred to them as "flattering references," because I know you have all been most sincere. However, you must agree with me that your remarks have been overly generous, and I think you must further agree with me when I say that all that could be said has been said. May I take it, therefore, that those who have spoken have spoken on behalf of all honourable senators, and in thanking you at this time may I assume I am closing the debate on this subject.

During the last ten years it has been my privilege to be one of the leaders of this house on one side or the other. That has been a great honour, but it carried with it also a grave responsibility. That responsibility, I am sure, I could not have carried over the years had it not been for the feeling of good fellowship and goodwill that has always prevailed in this house. Of course, we have had our differences, and they have been strong differences. We have had heated arguments, and speeches have been made with vehemence. Honourable senators have expressed themselves freely and strongly on the issues which they espoused. But, through it all I think we always maintained a proper sense of decorum and, in spite of our differences, the dignity of this house has at all times been maintained.

When I entered the Senate ten years ago Senator John T. Haig was the Leader of the Opposition. He was a man of wide experience. He had been a member of the Manitoba Legislature, he had been in municipal politics in Winnipeg, and he had been a member of this house for a long time. He was a doughty fighter for those causes in which he believed. Later, he was succeeded by a very dear friend, Senator Aseltine, who led this house during a time of great difficulty. I know that his task was not an easy one, but he led the house in a brilliant manner. He had at all times the respect and esteem of honourable senators, which he still enjoys today as a member on the other side.

Senator Aseltine was followed by another dear friend of mine, Senator Brooks, the present Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. Senator Brooks and I entered the House of Commons at the same time. There really was not much difference between us; the main difference was that for most of the time he was on the wrong side of the tracks and I was on the right side. He now leads the Opposition in this house in a good natured but firm manner.

Honourable senators, during all the years of my leadership, I had the co-operation of the leaders of the other side, and our friendship was always cordial. We usually agreed on the procedure which was to be followed in the Senate and at no time did any leader of the other party break his word with me. I had full confidence in them and I feel that they had full confidence in me. I believe that is one reason why the work of the Senate went along so smoothly. The co-operation which I received from them was typical of the co-operation which I received from all honourable senators. I am grateful to you for that co-operation and wish to assure you that by your actions and your words you made my task, which might have been a very difficult one, comparatively easy over the years.

Honourable senators, I am sure we are happy now to have as our Leader of the Government the Honourable John J. Connolly. He is a man of wide experience as a member of this house, as a barrister, and as a leader of his party throughout the country. Senator Connolly believes in the Senate, he understands the Senate and the proper place which it should have in the functioning of Parliament. He made a masterful address the other day. The Senate is fortunate indeed to have him as leader at this time. I am very pleased about his appointment, and I wish to assure him that I—and I am sure I speak for all honourable senators—will be happy to co-operate with him so that his days as Leader of the Government in the Senate will be happy and fruitful.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. W. Rupert Davies: Honourable senators, I listened to the Speech from the Throne on February 18 when it was read by His Excellency the Governor General. I have read it over several times since then. On the whole, it is a very reasonable document. It promises to bring before Parliament a number of matters which, if accepted, will be beneficial to the nation. All these measures will eventually come before the Senate, and we shall be able to give the legislation our serious consideration.

I have enjoyed the excellent speeches so far delivered in this chamber in the debate on an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to pay particular tribute to both the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) and the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) for their splendid presentations.

I should like also to add my congratulations to the new members appointed to the Senate, and to express the hope that they will find the business of this chamber interesting and of value to the development of Canada.

Now, since you have had some words in French from English-speaking senators, and have also heard some Ukrainian spoken, I suppose you would expect me to say a few words in Welsh. However, I think it would be a mistake to do so, because Welsh is a frightening language, and unless one sticks one's tongue in his cheek and speaks through the corner of his mouth he cannot really pronounce it properly. I do not understand Welsh too well. However, when I have been down in the Smithfield, on market days some of my Welsh friends, being very hospitable, have treated me to a drink and I have had to thank them in Welsh, and I think I have done it fairly well. But please do not expect me to speak in Welsh before the Senate, because I just cannot speak in another language as well as do some of you. I am just not as smart as some other members of the Senate.

Towards the end of the Speech from the Throne a paragraph tells us that Parliament will be asked to approve certain changes in fiscal arrangements with the provinces in the shared tax fields. There is also reference to a proposed measure to establish the Treasury Board under the presidency of a separate minister. This board will be responsible for the supervision of Government expenditures. I hope this new arrangement will prove beneficial to the country.

I have been wondering whether this important board will find time, in addition to discussing expenditures, to give any thought and consideration to the matter of the heavy taxation under which business in this country is labouring today. I know quite well that it takes a great deal of money to run this country at the present time. The announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance is startling. We are, however, establishing ourselves as a welfare state. To this I have no objection. In fact I think it is wonderful that we are able to do what we are doing for the elderly and the needy; and I hope the new pension plan will be successful, even if amended to some extent after discussion. I am not yet quite clear how the pension schemes which some of us now have operating in our businesses will be affected. Of course, they are not compulsory. I understand that the Government pension scheme will be compulsory. I expect, however, that all the questions that have arisen in our minds will be answered when the pension bill comes before this honourable body and is discussed in the house and in committee.

There is one form of taxation which I think might be examined, and possibly changed a little. I refer to the federal corporation tax. This tax is very severe as it applies to small companies in Ontario. I have no doubt that with large companies, making profits up in the millions, it is not so serious a matter, but the tax is very hard on companies which do not make large profits.

In this province, the combined dominion and provincial tax on incorporated companies is 25 per cent on the first $35,000, and 52 per cent on the balance of profits. Therefore, a company keeps only 48 per cent of the bulk of its profits. This makes the combined governments the senior partner in most companies.

I think it is about time some concessions were made to help smaller companies. It does not seem reasonable to me that large and small companies should be treated exactly the same. I should like to see the Government take some action to benefit those companies whose profits are never in the higher brackets.

I would suggest that it would be much fairer to all concerned if the tax were levied on a graduated scale, as is done in the case of the income tax. If a company makes a profit of, let us say, $100,000 to $150,000 a year, it is very hard, after paying what dividends are necessary, to set aside any substantial reserve for expansion out of only 48 per cent of the profits, which the company is allowed to keep. I feel that my suggestion is a reasonable one, and one that would help the expansion of many smaller companies. Let us not forget that when a company expands it usually means the employment of more help and the cutting down of unemployment figures.

Now, I offer a few words on a less controversial subject. I was particularly interested in the statement in the Speech from the Throne that Canada and the United States are to become joint owners of Roosevelt-Campobello International Park, which has already been referred to by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks). I have been to Campobello and know what a beautiful island it is. Campobello Island has a peculiar interest for me. The capital of the island is Welshpool, named after the town in Wales in which I was born.

The reason for the capital of the island being named Welshpool is that in 1770 Captain William Owen, who later became an admiral, was given a portion of the island by the British Government in return for the heroic and victorious action he had directed in a naval battle. He settled down on the island and raised a family. It later became the permanent home of his son William. Admiral William Owen was a member of a distinguished Welsh family whose ancestral home was a few miles outside the town of Welshpool in Montgomeryshire. It was, and still is, a beautiful estate, called "Glansevern"—or, if you do not understand the Welsh, "On the banks of the Severn".

As I have said, this family was a very distinguished one and was of immense service to Wales. When I was a boy, a descendent of Admiral William Owen was not only chairman of the County Council of Montgomery, but was also member of Parliament for the same county. Incidentally, Montgomery was named after Roger de Montgomery, a Norman contemporary of William the Conqueror. This Montgomeryshire member of Parliament and descendent of the hero who lived at Campobello was responsible for the bill introduced in the British Parliament which completely revolutionized the high school system in Wales and made higher education more easily available to the mass of the people. Later on, the son of the member of Parliament referred to was appointed aide-de-camp to the British Ambassador at Washington.

I was very interested in the reference in the Speech from the Throne to the fact that Parliament will be asked to consider measures to strengthen the position of magazines published in Canada. I am glad some action in that respect is being taken.

I am in the newspaper business, and we publish a syndicated magazine supplement with our papers each weekend. On one occasion I foolishly entered the magazine business: I started a high-class monthly magazine, but after a few issues I was very relieved when a large magazine publishing house in Toronto offered to buy it from me. I discovered, as they did later, that it is not easy to make a high-class magazine pay in Canada.

I expect we shall hear from Senator O'Leary (Carleton) when this matter comes before us. Senator O'Leary, as we all know, was chairman of the commission which studied this matter for the Government, and I am sure he knows a great deal about the problem. The senator, like myself, is in the newspaper publishing business and is head of that excellent paper, the Ottawa Journal.

We are told in the Speech from the Throne that there has been a heartening expansion of the economy, and that employment has increased at an accelerated rate. This is good news. I must say that I have always felt our unemployment situation has been, in some peculiar way, exaggerated. I think we would have a better idea of the actual situation if the unemployables were sorted out from the unemployed.

One thing is quite evident in this prosperous and rapidly developing country; that is, an important factor in gaining employment in Canada is education and technical training. We see in our metropolitan papers every day columns of advertisements seeking competent help. Last Friday the Toronto Globe and Mail carried 88 columns of advertisements under the heading "Teachers Wanted". We all know there is a great shortage of teachers. In the same issue of that paper there were ten columns of "Male Help Wanted", one whole column of "Skilled Help Wanted," three columns of "Female Help Wanted," and half a column of "Farm Help Wanted". On the same day the Toronto Star carried 15 columns of "Male Help Wanted" and seven columns of "Female Help Wanted".

I think these figures indicate that there are many jobs available, but, unfortunately, too many of our unemployed Canadians have not the knowledge or ability to fill them. I understand that more and more effort is being made to train our young people in technical schools and institutes. This will take time, but it will, I am sure, eventually do much to help the unemployment situation.

In conclusion, I should like to say a few words about the Senate and to reiterate what I have said on several occasions, that a lot of the criticism of the Senate which we read too often in some of our newspapers is very unfair. I have been in the Senate for more than 20 years, and I am proud of the careful way important measures are debated and analyzed by senators, not only in this chamber but in committees. It is quite wrong for any paper to say that the Senate has in its membership a number of "political hacks". I am certain in my own mind that I am not a political hack. I think I am a fairly intelligent man, and perhaps equally as capable as any man elected to the House of Commons of forming opinions on the important matters which come before Parliament. Furthermore, I say that all senators are quite as intelligent as I am, and most are more intelligent and much better speakers than I ever assumed to be.

These references to "political hacks" always annoy me. I have honour and respect for men who take an active part in politics and try to elect to Parliament men who support their party and the policies which that party advocates and which they believe will benefit the country. These men are not "political hacks": they are patriotic citizens. The men for whom I have little respect are those who tell you, with an assumed air of superiority, that they take no interest in politics. Some even have the gall to call it a "dirty game". Well, in my opinion politics is the basis of good government, and if the men who are appointed to the Senate by both the leading political parties in this country are those who have taken an active part in politics, then I say they are the ones most likely to deal intelligently with the subjects which come before it.

It is unfortunate that criticism of the Senate too often comes from newspapers which know little about the every day working of this honourable body. Being a newspaperman myself, I know that it costs money to maintain competent reporters in the press galleries at all times. I know the newspaper business, and I realize many editors think that what is said and done by the elected representatives of the people in the House of Commons is more important than what is said and done in the Senate. That is the reason I suspect we see so few reporters in the Senate press gallery day by day.

I say emphatically, however, that I am sure no newspaper wishes to be unfair. It is simply that too few of them have an intimate knowledge of this honourable body and the work that is done here. I wish it were possible for some editors to spend a week observing the working of the Senate, both in this chamber and in committees.

We are told in the Speech from the Throne that a measure will be introduced to reform the Senate. I do not know all the details it will contain, but I hope it contains nothing that will force out of the Senate some of the very able senators who are now over 75 years of age, and who still speak with knowledge and ability—and I do not include myself. We all get older, and it may be that as we get older our ability is somewhat weakened; but that is not always the case. I remember that Sir Charles Tupper was Prime Minister of Canada at 75, and a brilliant man he was. I speak with authority, because I once heard him address a crowded armoury in the City of Brantford. After he was Prime Minister, he was Leader of the Opposition for some years, and did not retire from that position until 1900, when he was 79. Also we must not forget that William Ewart Gladstone was Prime Minister of Great Britain at 84. Furthermore, I have heard senators who are over 75 make speeches on important subjects in this chamber of which any cabinet minister in the other place might well be proud.

I am thinking particularly of a speech delivered before Christmas in this house by Senator Crerar, of Churchill, in which he defended the investment of American capital in Canada.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your kind attention to my rambling remarks, and I hope that many senators on both sides of the house will give us their views on the Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, having listened to the excellent speech just given by the honourable Senator Rupert Davies, I first want to congratulate him upon its excellence and the way in which he always addresses this house. He referred to what he termed his own deficiencies. I should like to say to Senator Davies that he is entirely too modest; and that no one in this house could agree with him in those particular remarks. Had my wife been listening to the honourable senator I know she would tell me I should take a lesson from him in modesty.

Furthermore, in my opening remarks I wish to take this opportunity of joining with the other members of this honourable house in expressing words of congratulation to the new senators who have come here during the last few days: Senator Denis from Montreal, Senator Rattenbury from Saint John, New Brunswick, Senator Lang from Toronto, and Senator Eric Cook from St. John's, Newfoundland. We all know these gentlemen are distinguished in their own communities and in their own provinces, and we have no doubt that they will make a splendid contribution to this body, as have so many other senators in the past.

My congratulations also go to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, both of whom acquitted themselves ably and well.

I also want to extend my congratulations to my colleague, Senator George White, upon the distinguished honour conferred on him some time ago in his appointment to the Privy Council.

To the new Leader of the Government in the house, Senator John J. Connolly, I also extend my congratulations. He follows a succession of distinguished leaders of both the Government and of the Opposition who have held these posts over the years since Confederation. I would add that not the least of those distinguished leaders is the honourable gentleman whom he has succeeded and who spoke to us this afternoon, the honourable Ross Macdonald. Perhaps the highest compliment I can pay to Senator Connolly is to say that he has the good will and good wishes of every member on both sides of this house in the work he has to perform in the future.

In referring to the Speech from the Throne, I would repeat the words of the previous speaker when he said that by and large the Speech is a reasonable document; I have no seriously critical references to make to it. But I do wish to discuss a few of the matters referred to in it.

The first subject I would like to refer to is the visit to Canada this year of Her Majesty the Queen. I particularly liked the wording of the paragraph in the references to the events to be celebrated on this particular occasion. May I repeat them?

> We are looking forward to the visit this autumn of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth. The presence of the Queen of Canada will mark for our country the historic occasion of the interprovincial conferences on confederation; it will also reemphasize the importance we attach to the Commonwealth, through which so much can be done to advance understanding and co-operation in this increasingly interdependent world.

Those remarks are indeed true—they are as true and accurate as anything can be. The visit of Her Majesty will indeed commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the beginning of Confederation which occurred in Charlottetown in 1864, and will also emphasize our association with the Commonwealth, which is of such tremendous importance to this entire country.

I sometimes feel we do not think as deeply or as clearly on this question of the Commonwealth, and our association with it, as we should. I feel that once in a while it is good for us to reflect on the tremendous importance to Canada of the influence of the Crown, including the importance of the empire, as we knew it formerly, and the importance of our present Commonwealth relationships. These have been of extraordinary value in the national development of this country. In my view—and I think I can speak as objectively as anyone in this house on the matter because I am of a line which is neither English nor French—there could have been no such thing as the Canada of today were it not for that association in the past. The Crown was the essential element which provided unity in the early days of this country and, in fact, it was the only element which made possible the union of the diverse and far-flung areas that are now Canada. There is no question in my mind that had it not been for our relationship in the Commonwealth, the American doctrine of manifest destiny would have come true and the Stars and Stripes would have floated over the length and breadth of this country.

Let me refer to two or three items in the history of Canada which to my mind are of tremendous significance in regard to these Commonwealth relationships. I begin with the Quebec Act of 1774. What did it do?

The Quebec Act was, as all of us know, an Imperial statute, and it laid the foundation for the fact that it was possible for Canada to grow up as a multicultural nation. It made it possible for English and French to live side by side in the early days of this country. It made a country possible in which they were able to work out their problems co-operatively and harmoniously, as they have done so well over the years. As a result of all that, peoples such as those referred to by Senator Yuzyk last night, and my own people and many others, were able to come to Canada and make their homes here.

Secondly, something that we very seldom think of as an important element in making possible the Canada of today was the settlement of the Oregon boundary dispute in 1846. Does any one believe it was the influence of Ontario or Quebec, or of Upper and Lower Canada, that settled the boundary of this country in the west at the forty-ninth parallel? Of course it was not. It was the influence of the British Crown, and the influence of the British navy and British military might that prevented the southern boundary of this country from being located at 54 degrees 40 minutes north instead of 49 degrees north.

If the boundary had not been fixed at the forty-ninth parallel, who in eastern Canada would have been interested in gathering together the pieces of the west and making them part of this country? What, indeed, would have been left of western Canada if the boundary had been set where our friends to the south wanted it in those years?

I refer to this matter because it is one of the distinguishing marks of British influence in this country, and of how British influence made possible the Canada of today.

Then, may I come forward some years and refer to Confederation itself? It was not only Macdonald and Cartier, Howe and Brown, who were the architects of Confederation. They needed, and they received, the complete co-operation and assistance of the Colonial Office in London and, indeed, the subtle influence of the Crown, in fashioning the Canada that was created in 1867. I refer to these facts to bring to mind again the importance of the Crown, and the importance of Canada's association in the group of nations which is known today as the British Commonwealth.

Let me add one further thing in discussing the Crown and the Commonwealth. As we all know, the functions of the Crown in this country are now performed by the Governor General, who is a Canadian and who is appointed by us.

I refer to another very fundamental fact of which we are all aware, namely, that the only badge of inferiority, and the only cloud on the complete sovereignty of our country today, is the fact that we ourselves have failed to discover a method by which we can amend our own Constitution rather than having it done for us in London. That is not the fault of the Crown, honourable senators. It is not the fault of the British Government. It is the fault of ourselves, and surely we have reached the stage when we should devote more time, effort and thought to a method by which we can amend our own Constitution within Canada.

The honourable gentleman who preceded me mentioned the reference to the Canadian economy in the Speech from the Throne. The exact words are:

> At home there has been a heartening expansion of the economy.

The Speech from the Throne then makes reference to some proposals of the Government to further improve the economy of this country.

I agree that the economy of this country is in excellent condition, but I want to say that to my mind the economy is in excellent condition because when the present Government came into power about ten months ago it found that the economy had been built upon very firm foundations. Let me contrast that situation with what the previous Government found on its doorstep when it took office in 1957. As a legacy, that Government inherited a deficit in our trade balances of $1 billion. That was a difficult situation to face, and I know that all honourable senators recognize that well. But, during the years which the previous Government was in office that bad situation was cured, and now, instead of a deficit, we find for the first time in 12 or 13 years that the deficit has disappeared completely and there is now a slight surplus in our trade relationships in goods with other countries. That condition is essential to a completely healthy economy in a country such as ours which is compelled to borrow money for its development.

In 1957 when the previous Government took office it found that there was an incipient inflation in the country. I recall that after I came here in 1958 one of the first actions taken by the Senate was to appoint a committee to study the problem of inflation. That committee did excellent work. I thought at the time that its main purpose was to present evidence to the public of Canada of what was happening, and thus give knowledge to the people in regard to the dangers of inflation. That committee, if it did nothing else, served that purpose to a high degree. It did a very valuable job for the country.

It was also found in 1957 that there was a problem with respect to unemployment which was not very different, I must admit, from the problem we face in that respect today. I was most interested in the remarks Senator Davies made about that to the effect that it would be very good if we could segregate the problem of true unemployment from the problem of unemployables. If we could do this perhaps we could make a better effort and be somewhat more successful in solving the general problem which seems to be continuously with us.

But, the most difficult problem faced by the Government which came into power in 1957—and this problem is, unfortunately, still with us—was the tremendous unfulfilled social security needs of the country. It will be recalled that the then Government had enacted into law a hospitalization scheme whereby Canada became committed to pay huge amounts of money to the provinces in order to assist in hospitalization throughout Canada. The bill for the first year to the federal Government was approximately $180 million, and I believe that amount has now risen to approximately $400 million. That is for the hospitalization scheme alone. As I say, that was a problem which presented itself to the previous administration in 1957.

I am not criticizing anybody for these things. That was a proper social security measure which was enacted at that time. Perhaps Canada was ready for it; in any event, those are the facts. It made the budgetary situation at that time very difficult indeed.

Honourable senators, another problem which was faced at that time, and indeed is being faced now by the present Government, was the insatiable regional demands of various parts of Canada wanting financial assistance, and also what I refer to as the insatiable demands of the provinces for either additional fields of taxation or direct subsidies from the Government of Canada.

Although our economy today is in an excellent state, there are weaknesses which must be faced during the next few years. I propose to refer to some of these weaknesses.

Senator Davies referred to the tremendously high taxation that we have. Now, it may be difficult to compare the impact of taxes here with the impact of taxes in the United States, but I believe that the impact in Canada even now is higher than it is there. Although our economy in Canada is in a splendid condition, nevertheless the income per capita of people in the United States is nearly one-third greater than it is here. Consequently, there is a one-third greater ability to pay taxes in that country than in Canada.

As far as I can see, the rates of taxation in the United States, by and large, are not very much different from the rates here. That is why I say that the revenue from taxes here, now and in the future, is one of our serious problems; and perhaps in the Senate we should talk more about this problem. It is important because we live in a competitive world, and if we tax our people more than our neighbours are taxed, this will diminish our opportunity to compete with our neighbour and with other countries in the markets of the world, and thus prevent us from continuing and improving our present high standard of living.

The second problem which is associated with that of high taxes is our budgetary deficit. Senator Davies said he was shocked by the report given in the other place yesterday in regard to the tremendous increase in expenditures which is taking place right now. Of course, that increase must be made up either by taxation or by increased budgetary deficits.

Budgetary deficits may not be as important or as serious in the minds of some people as they are in the minds of others. We have had such deficits for several years, and certainly will continue to have them for some time unless some effort is made to reduce the cost of government.

Another very serious problem is the unceasing appetite of the provinces for more money. Recently, we had a federal-provincial conference, at which the federal authority found it necessary to pay over about $180 million to the provinces. I understand we are to have another federal-provincial conference in April, the result of which may be similar or even worse in so far as the national exchequer is concerned.

Honourable senators, these are some of the things which led to the budget fiasco that occurred here on June 13; and these are some of the problems which will cause great difficulty for government in the months and years ahead.

I should like to say a few words as to why we are spending all this money, and why we are facing these taxation and budgetary problems. There are many reasons, but an obvious one comes to mind immediately. There is the question of our social services or social security commitments which have been made and are being made.

As is well known, in 1956-57 our expenditures on social services amounted to about $900 million. For the fiscal year 1962-63, these increased to $1,900 million, being an increase of approximately $1 billion. For the 1964-65 fiscal year I do not know what they will be but, even without the cost of the proposed Canada Pension Plan, they will certainly be $2 billion, or even more.

Honourable senators, sometimes I think that in our present situation, and considering our need to retain a sound economy if we are to compete with other countries, we should take a bit of a holiday from indulging in additional social security commitments involving large expenditures. I think it would be good for everybody if we could declare a holiday for some time in that respect. I recall seeing reports of speeches made by the present Prime Minister during the last election campaign, indicating this point of view, namely, that in his judgment there should not be any additional expenditures on such services until there was such an expansion in our economy that we could afford additional expenditures.

I come now to the proposed Canada Pension Plan. Without going into its details I question whether it is in the best interests of the country to proceed with it as is being done today. Let me give you some figures on comparisons of current social security expenditures by three countries. The expenditures in Canada represent 12 per cent of our national income, in the United Kingdom the comparable figure is 12.5 per cent, and in the United States it is 7.6 per cent. Honourable senators, that is so despite the fact that our income is one-third less than that of the United States; in other words, a real comparison would be more like 12 per cent for us and perhaps 6 per cent for the United States, considering the higher standard of living they have.

The Speech from the Throne says:

> A measure will be placed before you to establish a comprehensive system of contributory pensions.

These may be called contributory pensions or anything else, but the fact remains that the money for this plan must come from the people in the form of taxes or an equivalent of taxes. These moneys will come right out of the pockets of the people, and the proceeds of such collections are essentially in the form of transfer payments.

Later, the Prime Minister is reported to have said that perhaps the most important of all items in the legislation which the Government will submit this session is a contributory pension scheme. I want to say at the outset that the way the scheme is being foisted on the Canadian people is a complete break in procedure and the methods employed in the past. In the past—referring particularly to the social security system, that is, the flat rate old age pension system—this was determined after long months of study by a joint parliamentary committee of the House of Commons and the Senate, a study which was made before any bill was presented to Parliament. After that the necessary constitutional amendment was sought and obtained, also before a bill was presented to Parliament.

May I review what has been the procedure in the past in regard to the development of our system of social security? It was essentially a careful system where real study was given to these problems. For the purposes of the record, let me review briefly the foundations of the system that we have in regard to pensions. I will read from the report prepared by Professor Robert M. Clark, entitled "Economic Security for the Aged in the United States and Canada". He summarizes the historical background of old age security, stating first that in 1908 the Annuities Act was passed. That was the first act dealing with old age security, and which enabled people to buy Dominion Government Annuities for their old age.

The next step was the passage of the Old Age Pensions Act in 1927, after very careful consideration by the Parliament of that day.

You will recall that that was an old age system which was paid for, one-half by the federal Government, and the other half by the provinces. Only those provinces which desired to go into the scheme did so. That system lasted until 1952, when it was replaced by the flat rate system we have today. I wish to stress that very careful consideration was given to the whole subject matter of old age security before a bill was brought into Parliament.

The next step occurred in 1950 when a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons was appointed to review old age security in Canada, and to study—I will quote directly from Dr. Clark's report:

> ...alternatives to the means test program then in effect.

In its unanimous report, the committee recommended the adoption of the universal flat rate system of old age security that we have today. The necessary steps were then taken to secure a constitutional amendment, and that was done.

I would like to put on record, honourable senators, the text of section 94A, which was the amendment to the act that was made at that time:

> It is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the Parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law, present or future, of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

I merely wish to cite this section to indicate that under the section there is joint jurisdiction between the federal authority and the provinces in regard to old age pensions, but only in regard to the type of old age pension system that we have now, namely, the flat rate system where a pension is paid to all persons of 70 years of age and over. The present constitutional impasse consists of the fact that in order to include widows and dependent children and disabled persons in any social security system that is financed by the Government of Canada, it is necessary to get a new amendment to the B.N.A. Act to cover that point.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator permit me to ask a question, for the purposes of clarification only? Is he saying in effect that there can be no Canada contributory pension plan without a further amendment to the British North America Act?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No. I say, if you want to have the complete plan, which I am sure is envisaged by both parties in the House of Commons, namely, if there is ever to be a truly contributory plan—

Hon. Mr. Croll: Survivorship is the only thing that is necessary.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: You should have in it survivorship benefits, and you cannot have those survivorship benefits without an amendment to the Constitution to provide for them. In regard to that, I think it is generally conceded that perhaps the greatest vacuum present today in our social security system is that there is no power to include this kind of benefit in a federal system.

May I say a word or two in regard to what is happening today? As all honourable senators know, of course, the flat rate pension started in 1952 at $40 a month to persons of 70 years of age or over who had residence qualifications of 20 years. The rates have since increased to $75 and the residence qualifications have been decreased to 10 years. Those are the main changes that have taken place in this system over the period since it was inaugurated in 1952.

The next step taken in regard to these matters was the appointment of Professor Clark to study the whole system of pensions both in the United States and in Canada. I have before me the two volumes of the report that was made by Professor Clark. I commend it to anyone who wishes to become well informed on these matters. The report was presented to the House of Commons in, I believe, February 1959 in mimeograph form, and the printed report came along in July 1960. Subsequently, I believe in January of 1962, the former Prime Minister wrote to the premiers of all the provinces asking for consent of all provinces for an amendment to the Constitution in order to be able to pave the way for a contributory system that would have the provisions to which I have referred, namely, in respect of survivorship, and so on. However, as all senators will recall, the political situation was unstable in those years and, of course, nothing has happened in regard to amending the Constitution. In other words, the attempt to amend the Constitution in 1962 failed.

I now wish to make a few references to the present plan, which is called the Canada Pension Plan. This was first proposed in the election literature of the present Government in 1963. That literature contained a huge "carrot" at the end of a big "stick". It was proposed that there be enacted a contributory pension scheme; but tied to that there was to be a $10 increase in the flat old age pension as part of that program. I say, honourable senators, what a "carrot" and what a "stick" that turned out to be.

As you know, the next step occurred on July 18, 1963, when the honourable Minister of National Health and Welfare introduced her plan to Parliament. You all know what happened to that. Certainly as far as the Opposition in the other house was concerned, it was deemed an impossible situation, to tie to the contributory pension plan the "carrot" of a $10 increase in the flat old age pension which, presumably, was to be financed out of the funds obtained by that plan. In the result the two plans were separated and the $10 increase in the flat old age pension was taken out of the plan and enacted into law and made part of the flat rate scheme. In the result we now have the flat rate pension of $75. That is approximately the history of the situation until today.

What is the position at the present time? We understand this plan is to be introduced in the other house in the form of a bill. We are led to believe also that a committee, presumably a select committee of the House of Commons, is to be appointed to deal with this matter and, presumably, to hear evidence.

I say, honourable senators, in the light of what has been done in the past, this is a complete break with the traditional way of doing these things. I say that, instead of the bill being presented in the house and thus becoming what it must become, a political football to be kicked around in a political arena both in the other place and here, this whole scheme should be presented either to a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate or, alternatively, to a special committee of the Senate, or, if neither of these two, then to a public commission of inquiry. What I personally deem to be of the utmost importance in regard to this whole matter is that this inquiry should take place before any bill is presented in the House of Commons; I feel that one of the worst things that could happen in this country would be to have such a bill presented in the other house and be kicked around there like a political football.

As everyone knows, there is tremendous controversy among the people of Canada in regard to this so-called Canada Pension Plan. The newspapers are nearly unanimous in demanding that there be this kind of inquiry that I suggest, and not a political inquiry, into this whole problem. I have here scores of newspaper editorials from which I could read excerpts showing that they look upon this whole situation with a great amount of fear, and they demand that a non-political hearing be held in regard to this whole question. Every newspaper says: Why is the Government in such haste? Why cannot we take steps in this enormous project similar to the ones that were taken in regard to the old age pension system which was adopted in 1952?

Also, as is well known, Quebec has opted out of this plan and, consequently, it cannot be called a national or Canada Pension Plan. How can you call this the Canada Pension Plan when a province consisting of well over five million people has declared it is not going to be a party to it?

Honourable senators, I see a colossal division occurring in this country if we have a pension plan of the magnitude of this one and a province such as Quebec deciding to remain out of it. This, therefore, is not a national plan at all, and I urge you to anticipate the problems that are going to be created in this country if you have a social security system of one kind for a large province such as Quebec and a different system for the rest of Canada.

Honourable senators, as you are all aware, the groundwork is obviously being laid to blame Mr. Robarts, the Premier of Ontario, for sabotaging the plan, if it is not passed; and yet, at the same time, no one in the Government has presumed to make any adverse public comment over the fact Quebec has decided to stay out. I say this is not good enough for the unity of this country and, in my judgment, if Mr. Robarts does not stay out of the plan as presently submitted, he and his advisers would be fit subjects for a lunatic asylum.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): Oh my!

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): It is not that bad, surely?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Then, honourable senators, what about a constitutional amendment? Are we going to have this bill come to the house and then into the Senate and made law, and then try to get a constitutional amendment later on? That seemingly is the intention of the Government, for I believe anyone would admit that a great vacuum in our social security system today has been caused by the fact I referred to a moment ago—namely, the failure under the present constitutional arrangements to be able to cover widows and their dependants and disabled persons in any plan such as the one presently under consideration.

Let us also face the fact, as I said, that Quebec has opted out of the plan and that Ontario also has already legislated quite effectively in regard to providing a pension plan including the portability of pension schemes. Legislation in this field is also being considered by the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

On November 15 last a headline appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune which read, "Duff queries pension plan priority". This is part of a report of what Mr. Roblin said on that occasion:

> Before Canada launches a costly, compulsory pension plan, Ottawa and the provinces must determine if other, more important national programs should be given higher priority, says Premier Duff Roblin.
>
> And before Manitoba would agree to participating in such a national pension plan, Mr. Roblin wants to know what special arrangements Ottawa is conceding to Quebec and Ontario to win their favour. And he wants the answers to many more basic questions.

I cite that to indicate there is tremendous opposition everywhere to this plan as presently constituted and also to the method being adopted to put it through.

Another serious problem in this connection, which nearly everybody who is knowledgeable on the subject agrees must be considered with the utmost care, is the question of what is going to happen to private and public pension plans in this country. It has been stated by the Government that it will not yield on this point, namely, that the so-called Canada Pension Plan must be integrated with private and public plans in this country. If you talk to some of the members of the civil service in this city and throughout the country, people who are in what they consider the finest pension plan in the world—that of the federal civil service—you will find they are seriously disturbed about the thought that their plan is not going to be left outside of this suggested plan but must be integrated with it. The same can be said of people in other pension plans, and there are thousands of such plans in this country involving an investment of many billions of dollars.

As we understand it, all private and public pension plans must be integrated with the proposed Canada Pension Plan and none is to be allowed to remain outside. I say, honourable senators, that is compulsory socialism at its very worst.

Furthermore, nothing has been said about the huge bureaucracy that will be built up to administer the proposed plan. The cost of the administration of the Old Age Security Act is about two-fifths of one per cent of receipts and benefits. It is estimated that the cost of administering this plan will be at least two per cent of the intake. That is based on the costs in the United States of their contributory plan. There will be required hundreds, if not thousands, of additional civil servants, with tremendous establishments, and according to my estimate the annual cost would begin at between $15 million and $25 million per year.

Honourable senators, for these and other reasons it is my view that before a bill in regard to this subject matter is presented in the House of Commons, the whole matter should be thoroughly studied in one of the ways I have suggested. Any other course will, in my opinion, project this Government into a controversy, constitutional, financial and budgetary, the result of which no one can foresee today.

The former "60 days of decision" surely brought enough humiliation to the Government of the day. I would like to give it this mild warning of more trouble to come and on a much vaster scale if it now proceeds to make this misnamed Canada Pension Plan a political football, instead of following precedent and allowing a thorough, nonpolitical and expert approach to be addressed to this vast and important problem.

Hon. Mr. Croll: May I ask the honourable gentleman one question? In the course of his speech he indicated that the first step was taken when the Government Annuities Act was passed in 1908, and the second was in 1927 when we passed the pension plan. Is the honourable gentleman aware that Quebec opted out of that pension plan and only joined it in 1936?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, but the pension plan was not nearly of the magnitude of this scheme.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-6, to incorporate Bank of Western Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I am sure you are all interested in the subject matter of Bill S-6, namely the incorporation of a new bank in Canada. This is the first application for a bank charter since 1953, when a charter was granted to The Mercantile Bank of Canada. At that time, including The Mercantile Bank of Canada, there were 11 chartered banks. Now there are eight such banks, so that even with the granting of this charter there will be two fewer banks than there were in 1954.

Of course the bill is of special interest to those senators from west of the Great Lakes, because the title of the bank is to be "Bank of Western Canada", and its head office will be in Winnipeg.

On second reading of a bill, it is the principle of the bill with which the Senate is concerned. This is a private bill, and Parliament has already prescribed the principle or principles governing the incorporation of a new bank. It has done so in the Bank Act, the citation of which is chapter 48 of the Statutes of Canada 1953-54. That act sets out what is required in order to start a new bank.

The petitioners here must comply with those requirements, and if they have done so, then I suggest we can approve the bill in principle, and send it on to committee where witnesses can be heard and the proposed operations of the bank can be studied in detail.

While the bill before us is comparatively short and simple, it must be read in conjunction with the Bank Act because it is in that act that we find Parliament has set up the code, the rules, as it were, for the incorporation of a bank.

Honourable senators do not have the Bank Act before them, but I have it here and I shall endeavour to quote to you the relevant sections of that act.

First of all I call your attention to the fact that Schedule B of the Bank Act sets out the form for an act of incorporation of a bank. This is a very short and simple form. It has five sections only, and in those sections the following information only is required: first, the names of the petitioners; second, the names of the provisional directors; third, the amount of capital stock; fourth, the place of the head office, and fifth, a section adding the name of the new bank to the list of banks in Schedule A of the Bank Act. That is the form of act prescribed by the Bank Act for the incorporation of a new bank.

Honourable senators will notice that clauses 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6 of this bill follow the prescribed form and comply with the terms of the model act. The bill before us has two other clauses, being 5 and 7, which I shall deal with a little later in my remarks.

The reason an act to incorporate a bank can be so simple is that the real charter of a bank is the Bank Act itself. In effect, Parliament has said: You may incorporate in this comparatively simple fashion, but once you have incorporated you come under all the conditions, restrictions and limitations imposed by the Bank Act, and you acquire the powers and privileges conferred by that act.

Section 5 of the Bank Act provides:

> Each bank enumerated in Schedule A is a body politic and corporate and this Act is its charter.

In other words, it makes it perfectly clear that the Bank Act is the charter of the bank.

Section 9 of the Bank Act is as follows:

> Except as provided in this Act, an Act of incorporation of a bank in the form set forth in Schedule B shall be construed to confer upon the bank thereby incorporated all the powers, privileges and immunities, and to subject it to all the liabilities and provisions set forth in this Act.

Then, I might call your attention, honourable senators, to clause 7 of the bill, which is complementary to section 9 of the Bank Act. It repeats the words that make the new bank subject to the Bank Act.

That is the first point I wish to make, namely, that Parliament already has established the principles for incorporating a bank; the principles by which the applicants for incorporation are to be governed. This bill which is now before us complies with the principles laid down by Parliament in the Bank Act.

Let me deal more particularly with the clauses of the bill, one by one. Clause 1, you will have noted, contains the names of approximately 100 petitioners. Many of these names are familiar ones on the national scene. They will be known to senators from all parts of Canada, and I think senators from western Canada especially will know most of them. I believe the petitioners form a representative cross-section of the west.

Clause 2 complies with the Bank Act by setting out the names of the provisional directors. Mr. James E. Coyne is known to all of us as the former Governor of the Bank of Canada. He is now chairman of the board of York Trust and Savings Corporation, which is one of a group of financial companies that is interested in supporting this application. Mr. Sinclair Stevens, a solicitor in Toronto, is president of the York Trust and Savings Corporation and also of the Wellington Financial Corporation Ltd. Maxwell Bruce, Esq., Q.C., is personally known to me as a lawyer of standing and repute in Ontario, and is a son of Dr. H. A. Bruce, a former Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. Mr. Nesbitt is experienced and well known in the mortgage and real estate business in Winnipeg. Mr. J. L. Bodie of Edmonton, I am informed, has had extensive business experience throughout western Canada, and is now vice-president of British-American Construction and Materials Ltd. and president of Alberta Fidelity Trust Company. Those are the provisional directors.

Clause 3 of the bill provides that the capital stock shall be $10 million. This amount is 10 times the minimum required by the Bank Act. In committee evidence can be given as to the actual amount expected to be subscribed. I am informed that present indications are that the total of the bank's paid-up capital and reserve will be of the order of $12,750,000 before it commences business. In that case I believe that it will have a larger amount of capital and reserve than any other Canadian bank ever had at the time of the commencement of business.

Clause 4 provides that the head office will be in Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. Haig: There is nothing wrong with that, sir.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I might add, that at the present time no Canadian bank has a head office west of Toronto.

The name "Bank of Western Canada" indicates a regional character, but so do also names such as Bank of Nova Scotia, Bank of Montreal, and Bank of Toronto, as the Toronto-Dominion Bank once was, and yet these are great national banks doing business throughout Canada. I understand it is not intended to restrict this bank's operations to western Canada.

Clause 5(1) provides that all directors—I emphasize "all"—shall be subjects of Her Majesty, ordinarily resident in Canada. This goes further than the Bank Act which requires only a majority of the directors to be ordinarily resident in Canada.

That brings me to the other provisions of clause 5, and these relate to the residence of shareholders. These provisions are not required by the Bank Act, and have not been in the act of incorporation of any bank previously. The promoters of this bank and the petitioners for its incorporation desire this to be a Canadian bank in every sense of that description. They are aware that there has been public comment and discussion as to the matter of foreign ownership of Canadian institutions. Their intention is to have this bank under Canadian ownership and control, and they have therefore put in this bill the provisions of clause 5. Subclause 3 of clause 5 limits the ownership by non-residents to 10 per cent of the outstanding shares. The other subclauses are strictly and tightly drawn to make sure that this limitation is effectively carried out.

By subclause 9 of clause 5, the clause ceases to have effect on July 1, 1965, but I should call the attention of all honourable senators to the fact that the provisions of all charters of all banks expire, under the law as it is at present, on July 1, 1964, and that it is proposed to extend that date—I believe the Minister of Finance has given notice of this—to July 1, 1965 in order to allow time for the decennial revision of the Bank Act after the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance has reported. Subclause 9, therefore, brings clause 5 into line with all the other provisions of the Bank Act, and of the charters of all the banks.

Clause 7 of the bill is added for the reason only that although this bill has departed from the form set out in schedule

B of the Bank Act, by adding clause 5, it has nevertheless the same effect as if it were in the precise form prescribed by the schedule.

I do not think it is necessary for me to go into the details of the financing of the bank in this motion for second reading of the bill. I think it may be sufficient to say that the group of corporate backers include the York Trust and Savings Corporation, the Wellington Financial Corporation Ltd., with head offices in Toronto, Canadian Finance and Investment Limited of Winnipeg, and Alberta Fidelity Trust Company of Alberta.

The Wellington Financial Corporation Ltd. recently issued and sold subscription certificates to the amount of a total subscription price of $3,750,000 for the purpose of ultimate investment in the shares of the Bank of Western Canada after it has been incorporated. I am informed that Canadian Finance and Investments Limited has signed an underwriting agreement for the sale of $3 million of its shares through investment dealers in the four western provinces, and part of the proceeds of the sale, namely $2,250,000, is proposed to be invested in shares of the Bank of Western Canada.

I understand that the Great-West Life Assurance Company, The Monarch Life Assurance Company and The Sovereign Life Assurance Co. of Canada, all having their head offices in Winnipeg, and The Empire Life Insurance Company, have indicated their intention to invest in the bank. Further information on such and other subscriptions can be obtained in committee.

I believe that Mr. Coyne and Mr. Stevens are both ready to appear before the Banking and Commerce Committee to give all the necessary information and to substantiate the statement I have made, that it is expected to have $12,750,000 of paid-up capital and reserve when it commences business.

Honourable senators, I have said all that probably needs to be said as to the principle of the bill, that is, the principle governing the incorporation of such a bank as this; but I think honourable senators would be interested in hearing some of the other safeguards the Bank Act sets up after the act of incorporation has been passed but before the bank can commence business.

Section 13 of the Bank Act requires that $500,000 of the original capital subscribed must be paid to the Minister of Finance, to be held by him until the bank is authorized to do business.

Other sections govern the sale of shares of the new bank, the calling of meetings of shareholders, and the election of directors to replace the provisional directors.

Finally, by section 14 of the Bank Act, a bank shall not commence business until it has obtained a certificate permitting it to do so from the Treasury Board. By section 16 of the Bank Act, the Treasury Board has one year within which to issue its certificate; and by section 17, if it does not do so, all the powers given by this bill cease and determine and are of no force and effect. Of course, once the bank does get a certificate to commence business, it comes under quite strict provisions of the Bank Act as to its operations, such as the maintenance of a cash reserve with the Bank of Canada, and inspections by the Inspector-General of Banks.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, may I say that we are proud of our Canadian banking system. Our present banks are strong and, in my view, they are performing ably and efficiently their important functions in our Canadian economic system. However, I do not think we have reached the stage where we should build a wall around the existing banks. Canada's growing and expanding economy would seem to make such a wall undesirable, and certainly the Bank Act does not contemplate such a wall. On the other hand, it does contemplate the incorporation of new banks.

Therefore, within the framework of the Bank Act and under its terms, and subject to its safeguards, to me there seems ample justification for approving second reading of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is it something new to introduce an amendment to the Bank Act in a private bill? It seems to me, as a layman, that by section 6 we are amending the Bank Act. That is what it says.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, there may be other questions, but may I answer honourable Senator Reid right now.

Senator Reid is perfectly right as to the general rule but, as I said in my remarks, this is a provision of the schedule in the Bank Act, namely, that there be a section setting out the name of the new bank. In other words, the Bank Act itself says that we must amend the Bank Act by inserting in the schedule thereto the name of the new bank, and that insertion therefore brings it in under the Bank Act.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, I would like to endorse completely what honourable Senator Leonard has said in regard to the desire for a new bank in western Canada. I know many of those who have signed the application for incorporation. They are all very well known in Winnipeg, and I would heartily endorse what he said as to the need for a bank in western Canada.

I hope this bill will receive second reading and be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I am sorry I have to disagree with other senators from western Canada. I must say I am very much opposed to the second reading of this bill. I am opposed to the establishment of additional banks. We are sufficiently served at present.

Honourable senators will remember that in 1953, when we gave a charter to the Mercantile Bank, I moved a six-months' hoist, as I was very much opposed to it.

Could someone explain to me, when those people got the charter for the Mercantile Bank, what they received for the mere charter? My point is this: the mere charter to do banking business in this country is worth millions, under our present system of banking.

Honourable senators, in Canada, and particularly in western Canada, largely because of the absolute failure of banks to supply capital when it was needed, we have had some additional problems. Capital was only available if you were wealthy; it was strictly on the basis of lending you an umbrella while the weather was fine and snatching it back immediately the rain commenced. There was too much of that kind of thing.

Now we have the credit unions. They originated their business and now are all over western Canada, though I believe their operations are larger in the eastern portion.

I look back at the many people who were left in dire circumstances, who had a mortgage or who owed a bank some money, where the head of the family died and the widow with her children was left destitute with a debt to pay, and she had to sell her home and we were taxed to help her and others like her.

I repeat, we now have credit unions. I do not know why the banks have not done business in the same way. The credit unions lend money, but the person borrowing the money is insured to the extent of the loan, and if that person dies and the debt matures, it is paid up and there is no obligation left for the widow and children to meet. Those credit unions are doing business and are growing and becoming very useful.

In addition there are trust companies springing up one after another, which are doing banking business. Some are paying as much as 6 per cent on deposits left with them for five years; others pay 4 per cent, with ordinary banking privileges. They are operating in every town.

Somebody has to pay for these flashy, theatre-like spreads that the banks are constructing. I do not understand why the lending of some money to a man in need, with interest added to his payments, requires such large showplaces with huge rotundas. To my mind, they should have nothing to do with the business of lending money.

Honourable senators, if I had invested my first few dollars in a bank I would be a millionaire today. It would have started me on my way to becoming a millionaire.

In addition to this proposal today, there are two more seeking banking charters. It is quite a game. Surely there is no just claim for more banks, because under the branch system banks are established at present all over the country. You cannot start an oil well, a mine or any other project anywhere, but immediately there is a bank there. Wheresoever the carcass is, thither will eagles foregather. Wherever there is a dollar today, the banks are to be found.

I think we should have something more useful to do than grant charters to people to make money, when we have no guarantee that they will not sell out to somebody else coming in. These charters are worth an immense amount of money. I am from western Canada, but I am opposed to this venture. I think I know something about business in western Canada, and I am familiar with the service we can get there without chartering an additional bank.

Hon. Thomas Vien: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all extremely grateful to the honourable Senator Leonard for his very able, comprehensive and clear presentation of the bill which is now before us. There is, however, a question arising at this juncture with regard to incorporations of new banks.

As was so aptly pointed out by the honourable senator, there are precedents and, since the creation of the Mercantile Bank, there might be additional reasons for the creation of other banks under the Bank Act. Nevertheless, several financial problems have arisen in Canada and important factors have to be considered with a view to stabilizing our national economy. This prompted the Government to appoint a Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, and the report of that commission is expected soon; in fact, it is overdue.

The decennial revision of the Bank Act is supposed to take place in 1964. It is likely that it will have to be postponed until the report of the royal commission shall have been received and considered by all concerned.

Whether or not at this juncture it is expedient to create a new bank is a question on which I have an open mind. I should like to have a little more time to consider it. If we were in the dying days of a session I would not ask for that privilege; but, at the opening of a session we should, in my humble opinion, take a little more time before granting a charter to a new bank.

I am greatly impressed by the outstanding names of the promoters, as given in the preamble of the bill. They are men of great ability, experience and substance. No doubt can exist as to their ability to make a success of a new bank. I have the utmost respect and confidence in them in that regard. With a little more time I shall be able to express a more considered opinion on the question of expediency: should we or should we not wait until the report of the royal commission is received and the Bank Act is submitted to us for decennial revision? I think it is wise for us to consider that aspect before creating a precedent which might prove embarrassing when other applications are received.

Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Senator Croll, the adjournment of this debate until Wednesday next, March 11.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vien, debate adjourned.

STANDING COMMITTEES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Committee of Selection which was presented on February 27.

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien moved the adoption of the report.

Report adopted.

APPOINTMENT

Leave having been given to revert to notices of motions:

Hon. John J. Connolly with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That the senators mentioned in the first report of the Committee of Selection, as having been chosen to serve on the several standing committees during the present session, be and they are hereby appointed to form part of and constitute the several committees with which their respective names appear in said report, to inquire into and report upon such matters as may be referred to them from time to time, and that the Committee on Standing Orders be authorized to send for persons, papers and records whenever required; and also that the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts have power, without special reference by the Senate, to consider any matter affecting the internal economy of the Senate, and such committee shall report the result of such consideration to the Senate for action.

He said: May I say that this is the usual motion made at this time in the session; I believe it is almost pro forma. There are three other motions to follow.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I presume that the motion now before us for consideration does not give any more authority to the Internal Economy Committee than it had before?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think not—which perhaps is not enough.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

MESSAGE TO COMMONS—SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table to inform that house that the Honourable Senators Belisle, Cameron, Davies, Fergusson, Fournier (De Lanaudiere), Gladstone, Gouin, Haig, Irvine, Lambert, MacDonald (Queens), O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), Pouliot, Reid, Vien, White and Yuzyk have been appointed a committee to assist the Honourable the Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a Joint Committee of both houses on the said Library.

Motion agreed to.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

MESSAGE TO COMMONS—SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table, to inform that House that the Honourable Senators Blais, Bouffard, Bradley, Comeau, Davies, Dupuis, Flynn, Isnor, McGrand, O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), Pearson, Phillips, Reid, Savoie, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh, Sullivan, Welch, Willis and Wood have been appointed a committee to superintend the printing of the Senate during the present session and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a Joint Committee of both houses on the subject of the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

MESSAGE TO COMMONS—SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) with leave of the Senate, moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table, to inform that house that the Honourable the Speaker, the Honourable Senators Beaubien (Provencher), Fergusson, Inman, Macdonald (Cape Breton), McLean and Reid have been appointed a committee to direct the management of the Restaurant of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a Joint Committee of both houses on the said Restaurant.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 5, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-10, to provide for the establishment of harbour commissions.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 2 to 24, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

He said: Honourable senators, may I take this opportunity of making some comments with respect to these reports? They are the first reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce made under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act passed at the last session.

Last year I reported that there were 1,111 divorce cases before the committee. Of that number, approximately 500 divorce bills received the royal assent, leaving us, at the opening of this session, 611 cases to be considered. There have been 260 petitions filed so far this session, making a total of 871 cases to be dealt with. Of that number of cases, 220 have been heard by the Commissioner.

Perhaps at this point you will permit me to comment with regard to our new Commissioner, Mr. Allison Walsh, Q.C. Personally, I am very well satisfied with the work that he is doing. He is industrious, he is a capable solicitor, and he has very quickly acquired the knowledge that is necessary for the handling of his responsibility.

The reports that are coming to me now, as Chairman of the Divorce Committee, are admirable. They are very well done indeed. So far as I can judge, his hearings are all that we would desire them to be, in judicial calm, in wisdom, in knowledge and in effectiveness.

Honourable senators, as I have told you, Mr. Walsh commenced hearings on January 8 and he has heard now 220 cases. Of these 220 cases, 171 have been passed by the Senate Committee on Divorce. You will remember that the rules require that the reports of the Commissioner be referred to the Standing Committee on Divorce, and that they shall be examined by the committee and that the committee shall report to this house. Those 171 cases have been examined by and approved by the committee, and will in due season be laid on the Table of the house.

At the present moment I am presenting only 23 reports because there is a good deal of work to be done by our officials after approval has been given by the committee, before the reports are prepared and ready to be laid on the Table.

It may be enlightening for honourable senators to look at one or two of the reports, just to be familiar with the routine through which we go in handling these cases. Taking the top one, for instance, you will note that the committee concurs in the report of the Commissioner. Secondly, you will see a draft resolution such as I will move later on. You will also see the report of the Commissioner, and the minutes of the proceedings before the Commissioner.

You will see by the report of the Chief Clerk of Committees that the rules and orders of the Senate have been complied with in all material respects, the chief one being, of course, that the applicants have paid the fees; but there are other requirements as well. You will find there the notice of hearings which the Commissioner sends out prior to his hearing of cases; the affidavit of service of the petition, and the affidavit of the petitioner verifying the petition; the information which the respondent and the co-respondent are required to receive from the petitioner according to the rules; the advertisements in the Canada Gazette, and an affidavit of publication. You will find also a transcript of the evidence in some, but not all, of the cases; the marriage certificate and the licence, and a photograph of the respondent.

So, honourable senators, you will see that there is a good deal included in these reports, and that a considerable amount of labour is done by our officials in preparing them and putting them in shape to lay on the Table.

A further 86 cases will likely be heard before Easter—that is the prospect. Another 50 are ready to be heard immediately following Easter.

Perhaps I should give some estimate of how long it should take to catch up on this backlog of cases. They are being heard just as rapidly as the Commissioner can hear them. He hears about eight cases a day, which is a pretty good day's work. He sits four days in the week: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Friday is reserved for interlocutory motions and office work, and that sort of thing. That order of procedure, which has been going on without interruption since January 8 last, will be continued up until the Easter recess, and will no doubt continue indefinitely. I think it will take roughly six months to handle the reserve of cases to be heard. After that time I believe we should be in a position to take the cases as they come.

Honourable senators, my general summary is that I am very well satisfied with the speed and the manner with which we are progressing, and with the effectiveness of the new rules and regulations.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I should like to ask the honourable senator how the Divorce Committee actually deals with the recommendations of the Commissioner. Surely the committee does not read all the evidence. Does the committee read or discuss it when the recommendation of the Commissioner is in question? I should like to know just how the committee works.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is a good question, and I can assure you that it calls attention to a problem. Of course, every member of the committee should not and could not be called upon to read every one of these reports. So far, I have done the whole job myself, because I have thought that it was a one-man job. At the present moment I have a number of reports, and three members of the committee each has a number of reports which they will read.

Attached to each report is a list of the rules which the Commissioner must observe in the course of a hearing. For instance, the marriage must be proved. The domicile of the parties must be established. He must hear the evidence, and that evidence, according to his summary, must be sufficient to justify, on the grounds to which we are limited, the granting of the petition, that is, the passing of a resolution dissolving the marriage. In addition, he must cover the question of connivance, collusion, etc. He must see that the children of the marriage are provided for, as far as it is possible for us to go in that regard.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They are all routine matters, are they not?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: All routine, yes. The reports that I have received up to the present time are, I think, models of completeness and conciseness, and are good literary productions by our present Commissioner. Those will be gone over by one of our committee members, and he will take the responsibility of moving them before the committee and reporting anything he thinks unusual that we should consider. Where a question arises, that matter comes from the Commissioner to me and is specified as such. I have a pile of cases, I suppose a foot high, at the present moment, in which the evidence and the proposed report have been sent to me with a question seeking my advice. I will go over those as quickly as I can, and give what assistance I can. That is the best answer I can give. I do not know how else we could do it. Certainly, we cannot have every member of the committee read each one of these reports; that is unnecessary. If one does it and takes the responsibility of moving their adoption, I think that is sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I was more concerned with the actual working of the committee. So far as I can see, it is a one-man committee. What I would like to know is this: if there was a doubtful recommendation, or a recommendation that appeared to you doubtful, what then would be the procedure? Would you call the committee together to act as a tribunal or court of appeal, to reverse a decision or make further recommendations? That is the question in my mind.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Practically speaking, what now happens and what will happen in the future is this: when a question arises in the mind of the Commissioner or in our minds, there is a discussion between the Commissioner and the Chairman, and the problem will in all likelihood be resolved. If there is a conflict between the Chairman and the Commissioner, I assure you it will be referred to the committee and the committee will decide. The rules require the Commissioner to send his report to the committee, and that the report be examined by the committee before it is presented to the house. Every one of these routine cases does not need to be examined by every member of the committee, but each will be passed by the committee. As you know, 30 days must elapse between the time we pass a resolution and the time it becomes effective, and in that period, if one of the parties objects to the resolution and files a petition for a bill of divorce, the resolution stands until that petition or the bill has been disposed of. Does that answer your question?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, thank you.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: There is one question I would like to ask. Does the committee specify to the Commissioner the ground on which the committee recommends that a divorce may be granted?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No there is a little more than one ground. The act says that the Commissioner is limited in the grounds upon which he may act to the state of the law in 1870, as it appeared in England at that time. Now, it is quite a problem to determine precisely what the law was at that time, but that is up to the Commissioner. There is a little more to it than adultery. Bestiality was one of the grounds covered by the ecclesiastical law that was adopted by the common law of England in 1870; but, practically speaking, the only ground that we deal with is adultery. In addition to that, the act permits the Commissioner to hear cases and to decide them on the basis of the act which established the courts in the Province of Ontario. That permission does not go farther than the English law of 1870, but, generally speaking, honourable senators, the only ground on which the Commissioner has made his decisions so far is on the question of adultery.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Or nullity of marriage.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Nullity, yes—that, too, was included in the law of England of 1870.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: If the Commissioner took it upon himself some day to consider grounds other than adultery, I suppose the committee would quickly take some action.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, because he would not have the legislative authority to do so. If he recommended a divorce on grounds other than those contained in the law of England of 1870, he would be acting beyond his legislative capacity. Of course the committee, if it did anything, would report to the Senate opposing the application.

Motion agreed to.

PENAL REFORM

IMPLEMENTATION OF ARCHAMBAULT AND FAUTEUX REPORTS—NOTICE OF INQUIRIES

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I have two long inquiries, one as to the implementation of certain recommendations contained in the Archambault Report, and the other dealing similarly with the Fauteux Report. I would ask your consent to dispense with reading of the questions now, and ask that I be allowed to place them on the record of the house.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I now give notice that on Tuesday next, March 10, I will inquire of the Government:

Inquiry No. 1

What specific action, if any, has been taken in implementation of each of the following principal recommendations contained in the Report of the Royal Commission on the Penal System (Archambault Report) presented on April 4th, 1938, namely:

1. The Canadian penal system should be centralized under the control of the Government of Canada, with the federal authorities taking charge of all the prisons in Canada, the provinces retaining only a sufficient number to provide for offenders against provincial statutes, prisoners on remand, and those serving short sentences.

2. An immediate conference between the federal and provincial authorities should be held with a view to obtaining the full co-operation of the provincial authorities in putting the recommendations of the Commission into effect.

3. There should be a complete reorganization of the headquarters administration of Canadian penitentiaries to include giving effect to the recomendations in this report as to the retirement of certain officers.

4. A Prison Commission, composed of three members removable only for cause, should be appointed with full authority over the management of penitentiaries, empowered to appoint staff, and to act as a central parole board. The Commission should be responsible directly to the Minister of Justice and to Parliament.

5. Wardens should be reinvested with the authority of executive management of the penitentiaries in conformity with the provisions of the Penitentiary Act.

6. A planned reconstruction of the personnel of the penitentiary staffs throughout Canada should be effected in order that officers who have special training will be enlisted in the service.

7. There should be co-operation with the universities of Canada in establishing suitable courses for the training of those who wish to become officers, probation officers, or parole officers.

8. A training school for penitentiary officers should be established on the lines of the courses at Wakefield, England.

9. An outstanding prison authority from England, preferably Mr. Alexander Paterson, M.C., one of His Majesty's Prison Commissioners of England, should be invited to come to Canada to counsel and advise the Prison Commission on the reorganization of the prison system in order to give practical effect to the recommendations contained in this report.

10. After careful study of the penitentiary staffs by the Prison Commission, all hopelessly incapable officers should be retired.

11. New officers to fill vacancies in the penitentiary service should be selected on a merit basis only and no consideration should be given to political influence.

12. The pay of officers should be brought up to a reasonable standard, having regard to the type of service performed.

13. Rules respecting the dismissal of officers similar to those in force in England should be adopted in Canada to make provision that an officer should have an opportunity of being heard before dismissal, and that in all cases he should be advised of the reasons for his dismissal.

14. There should be a thorough and complete revision of the penitentiary rules and regulations based on the principles contained in this report, with special regard to:

(a) the protection of society;
(b) the safe custody of inmates;
(c) strict but humane discipline;
(d) reformation and rehabilitation of prisoners.

15. An official Board of Visitors should be appointed in connection with each penitentiary. This board should be composed of a county court judge (in Quebec, a judge of the Court of Sessions), a representative of an officially recognized social welfare association, and a medical doctor. It should be under the control of the Prison Commission, and its duties should be similar to those of the boards of visitors appointed in connection with the convict prisons in England.

16. A complete revision of the methods of classification of prisoners should be made, with provision for a thorough medical and psychiatric examination of prisoners.

17. The necessary legislation should be enacted to provide for sentencing habitual offenders to preventive detention in a separate institution to be provided for that purpose.

18. All incorrigible and intractable prisoners in the penitentiaries should be segregated in one institution.

19. Separate institutions, based on the principles of the English Borstal system, should be established to permit of special treatment being given to young offenders between sixteen and twenty-one years of age. There should also be a classification centre and three grades in each unit, each grade to be separately located and not contiguous to another. Two units should be established at once, one in the province of Ontario, and one in the province of Quebec, with a further development of the scheme in the Prairie Provinces, the Maritime Provinces, and, in a modified manner having regard to the population, in British Columbia.

20. All insane prisoners should be entirely removed from the prison population and treated in hospitals for the insane.

21. The mentally deficient should be segregated in the ordinary institutions under the direction of a trained psychiatrist.

22. Intractable and recidivist drug addicts should be removed on the order of the Prison Commission to the prison for habitual offenders.

23. A scheme of classification should be established in each prison, having regard to the previous record, social habits, physical condition, educational attainments aptitudes, and suitable training for future employment, of individual prisoners.

24. A grades and merit system for reformable prisoners, modelled on the system in use in England, should be established.

25. Prison offences should be tried before a prison court composed of three officers and there should be a right of appeal to the Board of Visitors. The rules governing prison offences should be simplified.

26. Corporal punishment should be abolished except for the offences of assaulting an officer, mutiny, and incitement to mutiny.

27. The several recommendations contained in chapter V of this report, in regard to prison discipline should be made effective.

28. Concessions should not be granted to prisoners because of riotous and mutinous behaviour. Necessary amelioration of prison conditions should be anticipated by the prison authorities and conceded only on their merits.

29. The principle contained in the International Standard Minimum Rules in regard to the use of firearms should be strictly adhered to, namely,—"Officials should never use their firearms nor force against a prisoner except in self-defence, or in cases of attempted escape when this cannot be prevented in any other way. The use of force should always be restricted to what is necessary."

30. Officers should be thoroughly trained in the use of firearms in order to eliminate inefficiency and danger in their necessary use.

31. The reckless use, or wilful misuse, of firearms or any unnecessary force, should be dealt with in respect to prison officers in the same manner as the commission of any other crime.

32. Gun cages in the shops and chapels should be abolished from all institutions except those for incorrigible or habitual offenders.

33. Provision should be made for more outdoor physical exercise, on the principles suggested in chapter VIII of this report, with recreational games permitted according to the age and classification of prisoners. Further provision should be made on the same principles for more indoor recreation.

34. Conversation periods in cells should be abolished and provision should be made for conversation during recreation and exercise periods.

35. Visiting and writing privileges should be extended in accordance with the recommendations contained in this report.

36. Provision should be made in proper cases for the distribution of a weekly newspaper in each penitentiary.

37. A complete reorganization of the educational system should be made in accordance with the recommendations contained in chapter VIII of this report, with special consideration for the young offenders, more frequent library privileges, and a simplified system of book distribution.

38. The medical service should be reorganized to eliminate the sources of criticism indicated in this report.

39. After a careful survey of their respective requirements by the Prison Commission, provision should be made for psychiatric services at all penitentiaries.

40. Chaplains should be selected with a special regard to individual adaptability for prison service.

41. Chaplains should be permitted greater freedom in meeting the prisoners and be permitted to communicate with their relatives and to render further assistance than strictly spiritual services.

42. A complete reorganization of prison industries should be made in all Canadian penal institutions.

43. A thorough survey should be made to discover the requirements of the various government departments and institutions that can be supplied by properly equipped prison industries.

44. The prison work shops should be equipped with the necessary machinery for efficient production and employment of a maximum number of prisoners at productive labour.

45. Trade instructors should be relieved of all custodial duties in order that they may devote their entire time to their instructional duties. Only such trade instructors should be engaged as are equipped by training and experience to teach trades.

46. No goods produced in the prison shops should be sold in the open market in competition with private enterprise.

47. A complete reorganization of the prison farms should be made to bring them up to maximum efficiency and production.

48. A thorough survey of each farm should be made to ensure proper drainage and the reclamation of areas now regarded as waste land.

49. Farm instructors should be agricultural college graduates and have sufficient practical experience to qualify them for these positions.

50. Canning factories should be established at one or more penitentiaries to supply the requirements of the penitentiaries and other government institutions.

51. Dairy herds should be established to supply, where possible, the dairy requirements of the respective penitentiaries.

52. All vegetables required in the penitentiary service should be produced on the penitentiary farms.

53. It should be permissible to supply surplus production to government institutions, and sell the balance in the open market.

54. Pay for prisoners now provided in Canadian penitentiaries should form the basis of further experiments, and, having regard to the experience of other countries, it should be directed to give reward for industry, measured rather by application and diligence than by volume of production.

55. Arrangements should be made with the provincial authorities for the confinement of women prisoners, such as are now incarcerated in the Women's Prison at Kingston, in provincial jails and reformatories for women, and, when such arrangements have been made, the use of the Women's Prison at Kingston Penitentiary should be devoted to other penitentiary purposes.

56. Canadian prisons should, at a minimum, conform in all respects to the standards of the International Standard Minimum Rules.

57. A complete revision of the Criminal Code should be undertaken at once.

58. Necessary amendments to the Criminal Code should be made to give effect to the recommendations contained in this report.

59. Amendments should also be made to provide for:

(a) Revision of the definition of "vagancy";

(b) The embodiment of the principles of the English statutes in regard to allowing time for the payment of fines and imprisonment for the non-payment of fines.

(c) Further restriction of the sale of offensive weapons.

(d) Application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal in forma pauperis in criminal cases.

(e) Giving power to trial judges to order photographs and finger prints destroyed in cases where the accused is found not guilty and the trial judge believes that this course ought to be taken.

(f) A uniform instrument to be used in carrying out sentence of the court to whipping.

(g) A central place of execution in each province.

60. The appointment and discharge of police officers, whether federal, provincial, or municipal, and the administration of police departments should be entirely removed from the suspicion of political influence.

61. A definite system of training police officers along the lines now followed in Great Britain should be adopted in all provinces of Canada.

62. The interest of the public should be enlisted in an organized manner, having regard to the vital importance of the prevention of crime by reducing juvenile delinquency, and the assistance of social service agencies and churches and schools in co-operation with the home should be organized to this end.

63. The responsibility of the state for the financial support of community clubs, boys' and girls' clubs, and leisure time programs should be recognized. They are a means of preventing or, at least reducing, juvenile and adolescent delinquency.

64. The Prison Commission, in co-operation with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, should plan a complete revision of the method of preparing statistical information. This revision should be designed to provide statistics that will show the success or failure of prison management and the cost of arresting, prosecuting, maintaining, and supervising prisoners.

65. Provision should be made for uniformity of statistical information in regard to all phases of the administration of the criminal law, including juvenile delinquency, probation, recidivism, etc.

66. Criminal statistics should be extended to show the number of indictable offences reported to the police, as well as the number of charges laid and the number of convictions.

67. The juvenile courts should be reorganized and the Juvenile Delinquents Act be amended in conformity with the policies expressed in chapter XVI of this report.

68. An auxiliary committee of citizens should be organized in connection with each training school for juvenile delinquents to assist in the rehabilitation of the boys and girls who leave such institutions.

69. The principle of family courts, on the lines suggested in chapter XVI of this report, should be adopted.

70. A probation system, modelled upon the system now in force in England, should be adopted throughout Canada, both for adults and young offenders.

71. Probation officers recruited from the ranks of trained social service workers should be appointed by the courts.

72. The services of such officers should be made available for the preparation of case histories of convicted prisoners and to furnish reports to the presiding judge or magistrate before the accused is sentenced.

73. Probation officers should be given supervision of prisoners who are released on ticket-of-leave and should make the necessary investigations of persons with whom prisoners wish to communicate.

74. The pay and duties of probation officers should be the subject of an agreement between the provincial and federal authorities.

75. Judges and magistrates should cause reports to be made on prisoners, after conviction and before sentence, in order to determine the nature of the punishment that should be imposed or whether probation would be more effective.

76. All judges and magistrates required to try criminal cases should make periodic visits to the prisons to which they sentence prisoners.

77. The Ticket-of-Leave Act should be amended to give effect to the recommendations contained in this report.

78. The Remission Branch should be abolished, and the services now performed by it should be transferred to the Prison Commission, which will act as a central parole board.

79. A parole officer should be appointed by the Prison Commission in each province or group of provinces, according to population, to investigate applications for parole and make recommendations to the Prison Commission.

80. The administration of the Ticket-of-Leave Act should be definitely and completely removed from any suggestion of political interference.

81. There should be a definite rule that a prisoner who has already violated the conditions of a previous ticket-of-leave should not be permitted further benefit from the Act.

82. When provision is made for a more efficient system of adult probation in Ontario and the administration of the Ticket-of-Leave Act as herein recommended, the provisions of the Reformatories Act providing for indeterminate sentences and parole in Ontario should be repealed.

83. The rules governing remission of sentence for good conduct should be simplified in accordance with the recommendations contained in chapter XVIII of this report.

84. The efforts of the prisoners' aid societies should be co-ordinated in accordance with the principles applied in England and Wales under the authority of the Prison Commission and with a measure of financial assistance from the state.

85. A definite effort should be made to enlist the co-operation of the public in assisting discharged prisoners to find employment and become re-established.

86. Associations similar to the Borstal Association in England should be organized to assist in the rehabilitation of youthful offenders.

87. Certain experiments should be undertaken in selected Canadian institutions, patterned after the English system of voluntary visitors and under strict supervision.

88. The Prison Commission should effect the necessary changes to make the discipline and routine in Canadian penitentiaries conform to the recommendations contained in this report, and should take steps to put into effect as soon as possible the detailed recommendations contained in Part III of this report to correct the conditions in the respective penitentiaries.

Inquiry No. 2

What specific action, if any, has been taken in implementation of the following recommendations contained in the Report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the principles and procedures in the Remission Service of the Department of Justice of Canada ("Fauteux Report") presented on April 30, 1956, namely:

1. A serious effort should be made by all governments concerned, whether federal, provincial or municipal, to acquaint the public with the purpose of a sound system of corrections and the benefits to be derived from it.

2. Some means should be found whereby the courts, at all levels may be made more conscious that the true purpose of punishment is the correction of the offender and not mere retribution by society.

3. Each of the provinces should establish full-scale systems of adult probation.

4. The Parliament of Canada should give serious consideration to

(a) the abolition of a number of the restrictions on the power of courts to suspend the passing of sentence; and

(b) the enactment of legislation to authorize probation without conviction.

5. The provisions of the criminal law that authorize imprisonment in default of payment of fines by persons who are unable to pay them should be repealed.

6. No distinction should be made in the law, as far as time for payment of fines is concerned, between indictable offences and summary conviction offences.

7. In passing sentences the courts should rely, to a much greater extent than they now do, upon pre-sentence reports.

8. Appropriate arrangements should be made for visits by judges and magistrates to the penal institutions to which they sentence offenders who appear before them.

9. The respective Attorneys-General of the provinces should co-operate with each other to the full in implementing the provisions of section 421 (3) of the Criminal Code, whereby an inmate who is in custody under sentence in one province may plead guilty, in that province, to charges that are outstanding against him in another province.

10. The law should be amended to provide that a person who is convicted of an offence has, at that time, the right to have taken into consideration, for the purpose of sentence, all outstanding charges against him to which he is prepared to plead guilty. The practice of holding warrants until an inmate has been discharged from a penal institution should, as far as possible, be avoided.

11. Appropriate arrangements should be made between the Attorneys-General of the respective provinces for the uniform enforcement, in all provinces, of the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to habitual criminals and criminal sexual psychopaths.

12. The provisions of the Prisons and Reformatories Act that authorize the imposition of determinate plus indeterminate sentences should be repealed and the parole boards of Ontario and British Columbia should be abolished.

13. In any case where a convicted person is between the ages of 16 and 21 or where a maximum term of imprisonment of two years or more may be imposed, no offender should be sentenced to any term of imprisonment without consideration by the court, of a pre-sentence report.

14. No sentence involving corporal punishment should be imposed upon any offender without prior consideration of a pre-sentence report concerning the physical and mental condition of the offender.

15. No sentence of corporal punishment should be executed until full inquiry has been made by the Remission Service and the responsible authority has ordered that there will be no interference with it.

16. Appropriate legislative amendments should be made immediately to provide that no person under the age of sixteen years shall be committed to penal institutions where adult prisoners are confined.

17. Consideration should be given to the establishment of a procedure for the granting of pardons, with or without condition, on a much more liberal scale than is now the case. In the granting of pardons, resort should be had to the Criminal Code provisions that authorize the Governor General in Council to grant them rather than to grant them under the royal prerogative of mercy.

18. Some means should be devised by which unjustified inequalities in the length of sentences of imprisonment, especially in the cases of co-offenders, can be remedied.

19. In all cases where the innocence of a convicted person is established, a free pardon should be granted, whether or not a free pardon is sought.

20. The federal and the provincial governments should give serious consideration, in expanding their systems of penal institutions, to the establishment, on a medium security basis, of such additional institutions as may be required.

21. In the Women's Prison at Kingston, Ontario, a more intensified system of varied forms of treatment should be instituted.

22. The federal and provincial governments should proceed, as quickly as possible, with the establishment and maintenance of more specialized types of institutions for the treatment of various types of offenders.

23. In relation to the operation of all penal institutions in Canada, more reception centres should be established to which inmates may be initially committed for classification and ultimate committal to the particular institution that provides the most useful form of treatment in their particular cases.

24. Classification staffs should be provided for all penal institutions in Canada and, where they already exist, they should be increased to an appropriate size.

25. No penal institution in Canada, of whatever type, should contain more than 600 inmates.

26. Special types of institutions, with specialized treatment, should be provided for alcoholics, drug addicts, sex offenders and psychopaths.

27. The present arrangements between the Government of Canada and the provincial governments should be reviewed in order to enable speedy transfer of insane prisoners from federal penitentiaries to provincial institutions that have suitable facilities for their care and treatment.

28. Every penal institution in Canada should institute an appropriate pre-release program for the benefit of inmates.

29. The responsible authorities should examine the entire legislative framework of the Canadian correctional system for the purpose of providing a well co-ordinated statutory basis for the Canadian system of corrections.

30. Until recommendation 31 can be implemented, any person who is sentenced to imprisonment for a total term of two years or more, by whatever combination of sentences this total arrived at, should be confined in a penitentiary and not in a provincial institution.

31. The provincial governments should be responsible for the care and treatment in penal institutions of persons sentenced to imprisonment for maximum terms of six months or less, and persons sentenced to imprisonment for periods longer than six months should be confined in penal institutions operated by the federal government.

32. If it is not possible to implement these recommendations, or most of them, within the next two or three years, amendments should be made immediately to the Ticket of Leave Act as suggested in Chapter VII of this Report.

33. The Ticket of Leave Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and certain portions of the Penitentiary Act should be repealed and be replaced by one statute that deals in a comprehensive manner with all the matters now dealt with in those Acts and incorporates the recommendations in this Report.

34. The duty and responsibility of arranging for the transfers of inmates from penal institutions to hospitals for the purpose of medical attention should be removed from the Remission Service and left to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries in the case of federal penal institutions and to the responsible deputy head in the case of provincial institutions.

35. As soon as possible, a system of automatic parole review should be instituted for Canada, thereby dispensing with the present system which requires an application for parole.

36. The practice of seeking the views of the trial judge or magistrate, in the case of parole, should be abandoned, except in special cases.

37. Provision should be made for the official termination, at an appropriate time, of long term parolees and those in special cases where the adjustment of the former inmate is obviously excellent and it is unlikely that he will resort again to crime.

38. Some means should be found to provide specialized after-care for particular types of parolees, such as sex offenders, drug addicts, alcoholics and psychopaths.

39. The federal and provincial governments should increase their financial grants to voluntary after-care agencies in order to enable them to work more effectively in the correctional field.

40. Voluntary after-care agencies should be subject to minimum standards and to evaluation and some workable system of agency certification should be established.

41. The annual conference of after-care agencies and government services should be continued in the future.

42. A national parole board should be established as recommended in Chapter XI of the Report.

43. The administration of federal correctional services should be organized as suggested in Chapter XII of the Report.

44. The Department of Justice should organize and sponsor a national conference of representatives of Canadian universities to formulate university programs for the training of workers in the correctional field.

DIVORCE

MOTION FOR AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES AND ORDERS—STANDS AS NOTICE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, perhaps this motion should have been made under Reports of Committees. It is a motion in my name, which has been approved by the Senate Committee on Divorce, for the amendment of the Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate.

Rule 23 of the Senate, with respect to the time between a motion being moved and being considered, reads as follows:

> Two days notice must be given of a motion for any of the following purposes—

And (f) says:

> for the second reading of a bill.

The motion I have before me provides:

> 1. Immediately after paragraph (f) of Rule 23 insert the following:
>
> "(ff) For the adoption of a resolution of the Senate dissolving or annulling a marriage pursuant to the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act;"

The reason for the amendment is that our officials feel they require more than just one day between the making of a motion and its consideration. I see no possible objection to granting this request.

The second part of the motion reads:

> 2. Immediately after Rule 193 add the following:
>
> "194. A certified copy of a resolution of the Senate dissolving or annulling a marriage shall be obtainable on payment of the sum of two dollars into the hands of the Clerk of the Parliaments.

I suppose in drawing up a comprehensive set of rules such as we adopted last year we should not expect to be able to cover everything, and one of the points not covered was the fee which the Clerk may charge when one of the parties applies for a certificate of the passing of a resolution. The sum of $2 seems very small, but there are two things I might say in that regard. First, the certificate usually is required by the petitioner, who has already paid $210. For this reason I think we might very well give it to him for nothing, but that is not the usual practice. Then, too, if you go to a court for a certificate of the filing of a document, or something of that nature, the fee is usually $2. So I considered it reasonable, and in this I have the concurrence of our officials, that the fee should be $2.

The motion further provides for the addition of Rule 195 as follows:

"195. Resolutions for the dissolution or annulment of marriages adopted by the Senate of Canada during each session of Parliament shall be printed as Part II of the Journals of the Senate for such session."

Honourable senators will appreciate that in the past we have adopted acts of Parliament, not resolutions, and they have been placed in the Statutes. A separate volume covering the divorce bills has been prepared in later years, but since these are no longer divorce bills our officials feel that they should have the authority of a rule for publishing resolutions in the Journals. We will have a separate volume of the Journals for these resolutions.

That is my motion, honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Section 39 of the act provides that the Commissioner must make his report to the Senate. Is this tabling of the report considered compliance with section 39?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes. If you look at the files you will see the reports of the Commissioner. When I table a report of the Commissioner I will make the following motion:

The Standing Committee on Divorce make their second report as follows:

1. The committee refers to the Senate herewith the report of the Commissioner relating to the petition of (so-and-so of such-and-such a place) for a resolution of the Senate dissolving (her) marriage to (so-an-so).

2. The committee concurs in the recommendation of the Commissioner.

3. The committee recommends adoption by the Senate of a resolution dissolving the said marriage.

All which is respectfully submitted.

I think that covers completely the requirements of the rules in that regard.

It is pointed out to me that that report goes into the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of Canada, and then there will appear in the Journals of the Senate the action of the Senate taken in the matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate, it is moved by the honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by honourable Senator Croll, that the rules be amended as follows—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On second thought, honourable senators, I would prefer to have this proposal taken as a Notice of Motion, to be considered on Tuesday next. I so move.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 10, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, my first words are for the Queen of Canada. Long live the Queen and may her reign be a happy one! I said before and I repeat that as Queen of the Commonwealth, as Queen of Canada and as Queen of all our homes, our sovereign is a model. She is also a model for all the mothers in the world.

Each year, at Christmas time, the Queen broadcasts and telecasts a message addressed to her realm and to all the members of the Commonwealth. A few years ago, she concluded her message by an appeal for harmony in every home throughout the world. In large families, she said, arguments occur sometimes, for all members do not always share the same ideas; but when evening comes and the family gathers around the table, everybody is happy once more; brothers fraternize as members of the same family, instead of quarrelling.

In our country, as the Queen said, the family is really united. May this wish, made by our Queen some years ago, be realized fully in each of our homes.

When, in a few months, our Queen comes to Canada, we in the province of Quebec shall receive her with happiness, dignity, pride and joy. If I am still around, I shall stand shoulder to shoulder with everybody in Canada and in the province of Quebec. I shall be there, to pay her my respects and to show her my gratitude and my admiration.

If so much blatant and false publicity is at present being given some irresponsible people, perhaps television and certain newspaper reporters are to blame. I find it extraordinary, not to say revolting, that so much importance is being given, especially on television, to such agitators, to those people who wish to divide and even destroy, whereas few words are ever said about those who wish to do good and who seek to build and unite.

May I mention, for instance, the publicity given on television a few evenings ago, to an alleged separatist leader, who uttered in Toronto absolutely absurd and irrational things. I was going to mention his name, but I will refrain from doing so. I find it terrible that such utterings are allowed on television for three or four minutes, and that such a person is allowed to thus vent his spleen at his own country. Be it through the C.B.C. or a private television network—the news was broadcast on both networks—there should be some way to put an end to this, so that television and radio employees be controlled and brought to their senses.

Therefore, I take off my hat and I say: "Long live our Queen! May she come and visit us, and we shall greet her as gentlemen!"

May I also address my most sincere wishes to the man who represents our Queen with such dignity in this house, His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, General Vanier, this great Canadian who for so long has been a credit to his country. I would ask him to convey to his dignified wife my best wishes for a full and prompt recovery.

And, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to pay my respects to you, and this for many reasons. First of all, in memory of the warm friendship which existed between your father and me, just as it now exists between us. Both of us came from the same section of the country, we have been brought up in humble but dignified homes. What I admire in you is that, in spite of the great honour bestowed upon you, you have remained the modest and dignified man that you were before. If you are honoured today, Mr. Speaker, it is because you have honoured us.

At the opening of the session, a few days ago, we noted certain changes in the leadership on this side of the house. The man whose assistant I was for a few years, the man I revered and whom I still admire, has placed his duties as leader into younger hands. I ask Senator Macdonald to kindly accept my sincere appreciation for all the help and co-operation he constantly gave me. In the other place, Senator Macdonald had been a private member, a minister and the Speaker. We welcomed him in the Senate because we knew he would discharge his duties as leader with the same dignity he had shown in his other functions.

Sometimes we say: The king is dead, long live the king! Happily the king is not dead because our former leader is alive and well. Yet I may add, as we say in French: "Long live his successor". He will be, no doubt, just as worthy as his predecessor. In fact, the fine speech he made last Wednesday proved it. I may say to our new leader: "You can depend on our complete co-operation".

I welcome, with an extreme pleasure, the leader on the other side of the house. I do not say "the Leader of the Opposition" because, in the Senate, there is no official opposition. In fact, if the government introduces a piece of legislation, we must not necessarily oppose it, because I do not imagine that any man is really bad, and there is always some good in him. I admire the way the leader on the other side of the house faces problems. The French translation for "brooks" is "ruisseaux" and we usually say that a brook is a clear and limpid stream. Listening to Senator Brooks, that is the picture that comes to my mind.

I also wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Senators Cook and Denis). Those two new members of the Senate have shown by their speeches that the debates of this house will benefit from their competence and their wide knowledge.

I also welcome the other new senators, valuable men who will add to the usefulness of the Senate.

And now, with your kind permission, let us look back a little—and look ahead also—because in 1967 we will celebrate the centennial of Confederation. Let us not forget, however, that this centennial is commemorating a pact which, in 1867, was entered into by two nations, two cultures. I point this out in order that we may not lose sight of the fact that the Confederation pact of 1867 was a pact between the French and the English cultures and between French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians. That takes nothing away from the Ukrainians, the Italians, the Danes, the Germans and others who came to Canada and contributed to the greatness and prosperity which now exist in the two nations. That is why a bicultural and not a multicultural commission was set up.

This being said, I quote the third paragraph from the Speech from the Throne which says:

> "My government will attempt to make its full contribution to the maintenance of peace and the improvement of international relations; to the strengthening of our national unity through a co-operative federalism".

The last two words I have just quoted have particularly struck me—co-operative federalism. For a long time I have been preaching co-operation and endeavouring to put it into practice, as I believe that it is our only sheet anchor against adverse ideas: communism, fascism, nazism or separatism as well as all other totalitarian doctrines; there is but one formula which we can use, it is the co-operative formula. This explains why I am not a separatist; on the contrary, I am all for co-operation.

While listening to our Winnipeg colleague, Senator Yuzyk, a couple of days ago, it came to my mind that the Ukrainians also practise co-operation. That is the reason why they do so well in western Canada.

Now I say that it is useless to ask here and there: "Come and help us", if we are not prepared to make every effort to help ourselves because in co-operation, everyone must make an effort. It is the only way to make a success of something.

Why am I not a separatist? Well, my argument is simple: the first thing I do when I am invited to join an organization is to ask myself whether this organization makes sense. What are its past achievements? I am also wondering whether the person who comes to see me has common sense, because he will perhaps tell me that I do not have any.

When I consider all those people who are now advocating a selfish and hateful separatism, I wonder what they did during their lifetime. I find that they did not do anything and, nevertheless, the press gives them so much importance. Look at them, one after another, and you will reach the same conclusion. One of them even spent some time in a mental institution.

It is easy to demolish, but it is more difficult to build, because it takes time and courage.

In my youth—and later on when I could discuss more easily with him—my father, who was then a member of the House of Commons, used to tell me when he came home: "It is no use complaining. One must act, do something, take one's defence into one's own hands." That principle impressed me and I never forgot it. Later, while I was in college and when I became one of the messengers of Mr. Desjardins, the founder of the caisses populaires, that principle kept on creeping back in my mind. I told myself that Mr. Desjardins had found the true formula. Our people, the humble people, were being exploited by usurers and it was certainly not the latter who were going to save them. Mr. Desjardins said: "Let us look after the little fellow, let us explain to him where his duty lies and teach him how to defend himself".

So he slowly launched his movement without tearing down anything but rather by convincing his people, people of small means with whom he could work. At the time of his death, in 1920, there were about 100 caisses populaires with assets of some $4 million. The caisses populaires went through a hard time then because their leader was gone. The head of the family was no more. There was no one to take the lead so we established small district groups. Then, in 1929, came the depression; that is when we realized how important it was to co-operate instead of competing with one another.

At that time, we established the basis for the Federation des Caisses Populaires. In 1932, it was legally organized. On January 1, 1933 there were 162 caisses populaires with assets of $9 million. Today, after 32 years of co-operation, we have nearly 1,300 of them with assets of $1 billion.

Moreover, we have built up and organized insurance companies to protect us and the farmers in rural areas because, formerly, insurance companies told them that they were unable to give them protection because, whenever there was a fire, a total loss would result. However, we said to ourselves: "We have now one and a half million members and there is a way of helping each other. We have our life insurance company, our trust company, and our managing company"; quite recently, we opened up an educational institution for adults. And we accomplished all this without destroying anything, without any other body or organization having to disappear, without anybody being adversely affected. The banks are more prosperous than ever, and the same can be said of the finance companies. Thus, our people are more prosperous than in the past. They realized that, in order to save themselves, it was necessary to help one another.

I shall always remember that when I was a small boy, we went down to the river to bathe, and when one of us went a bit too far out and was in danger, mother who was sitting on the shore cried out to him to pray to good St. Ann to save him, but father said: "Start swimming first my boy, and then pray to good St. Ann." In other words, make an effort to save yourself, and God will save you.

Now, the co-operative principle goes still further. The caisses populaires, which originated in the province of Quebec, also were founded in the nine other provinces of this country where they are called credit unions. Each of those organizations was set up under provincial legislation, which means that those organizations are autonomous. There are ten provincial acts to administer those organizations. However, the directors of those institutions meet every year. Yesterday, the meeting was in Vancouver; today, at this very moment, while I am talking to you, there is a meeting in Saskatoon; tomorrow, there will be one in Toronto, and the day after in Quebec city. Wherever we meet, we discuss our problems, and we do not talk any nonsense.

We discuss and everyone remains independent; every province operates its association or associations of "credit unions" or "caisses populaires". We do not destroy one another. This movement has been growing throughout the country because we meet and talk together. We always talk in a co-operative spirit. Co-operative spirit is charity. I would like to say and to repeat what I have already said perhaps a thousand times elsewhere: this is the great charity concept that Christ taught us almost 2,000 years ago when he came to this world to redeem mankind and said: "You will be saved if you love your neighbour, if you help your neighbour." In this field, co-operation will always succeed with goodwill. But it was not an expression of goodwill that I heard on television last Sunday and I was startled that such things should be allowed. On one side, one person was saying: "I am in favour of separatism". And when he was asked why, he answered: "I want to be separated". Then, he was asked: "But how will you be able to live?" And he answered: "It does not matter, that is what I want." He was told: "Well, if that is what you want, go ahead. It will be all right, then, everything will be all right." For one hour, that was how the discussion went on.

No, it is not in this way that we shall retain a united confederation and that Canada will be as strong tomorrow as it was yesterday and it is today. It is not by listening to such nonsense that we will accomplish that.

During the war, reference was made to the fifth column. I wonder whether there is not some kind of a fifth column at this time in several provinces of Canada. In a certain province, it is for the sake of pride, and in some others it is sheer nonsense. Then, people try to point those things out in order to spread trouble everywhere.

It seems to me there should be some way to act otherwise and to co-operate. As far as I am concerned, it was always my motto to co-operate, which means to act together with someone and not against someone. People could say: "Well, dear Vaillancourt, you blow your own horn", but I do not, because if I had been alone, I could not have co-operated with anybody and it is through co-operation with others that we have succeeded in our enterprise. That is what I would like all Canadians to realize so that they would co-operate better with one another.

Before I conclude, I should like to deal with another point which came to my mind last November when I had to stay home because of an accident and when I spent my time reading, discussing with friends or relatives, and watching TV. That was on November 25 when the TV carried the funeral of the lamented President of the United States, President Kennedy. In the evening, mulling over those tragic events, I realized that in a month's time it would be December 25 and we would be celebrating Christmas day, the day when God came down to earth and when the angels sang in heaven:

> Glory be to God in the highest and on earth peace and good will toward men.

But some nineteen hundred years later, how could such a tragedy happen in a country where civilization and culture are said to be at their highest point? It makes us wonder how things could come to such a pass! It seems to me that everyone of us has his share of responsibility in that.

I want to mention all those TV programs, all those sensational reports that we read in the papers and that are seen by young people. When I was in the hospital last fall, in the same day, I counted seven movies, dramas, etc. on television depicting scenes of murder, theft, rape and adultery. Young people who see those things say to themselves: This is life, let us do the same. Is it any wonder that juvenile delinquency is increasing today? Are we not all responsible to some extent? Why not put a stop to all those things?

Another example: you all saw last week two men thrown together to knock each other down. The papers were full of pictures of the boxing match I am speaking about. However, when a man, who worked all his life for the welfare of humanity, dies, there is no mention of it; I am referring to the death of Dr. Ramon, that scientist who discovered the vaccine against diphtheria. That man, thanks to his discoveries, saved millions of human lives, and he will keep saving hundreds of millions yet. Have you read anything in the newspapers concerning the extraordinary work of that physician? No, there was no mention of it, in spite of the fact that he gave his life for humanity, to do good.

If in some areas we have made great progress, from the moral standpoint, however, we are on the down-grade. Thus, it seems to me that each of us should try to reason with our children and grandchildren as well as the people responsible for that wild propaganda which demoralizes, destroys and kills. Let us hope that in the near future we will be able to shout throughout the world, what was heard almost two thousand years ago: "Peace on earth and good will toward men".

(Text):

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Inman, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday next, March 10, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 10, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

CONGRATULATIONS ON BIRTH OF A PRINCE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure I express the sentiments of all of us when I say how delighted we are to know that Her Majesty the Queen today gave birth to a prince.

As His Honour the Acting Speaker read the traditional and beautiful prayer for Her Majesty this evening, it seemed to me that honourable senators followed it with more than ordinary fervour.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, the honourable Leader of the Government has spoken for all of us in what he has just said. We are very happy indeed to learn of this most joyful event.

I understand that there may be an opportunity tomorrow to say more regarding this very happy event.

CONSUMER CREDIT

PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons requesting the Senate to unite with that house in the formation of a joint committee of both houses to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the message be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Supplementary Estimates (E) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964. (English and French texts).

Report of the Custodian of Enemy Property for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 3 of The Trading with the Enemy (Transitional Powers) Act, chapter 24, Statutes of Canada, 1947. (English and French texts).

Report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 29 of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, chapter 268, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report to Parliament of the Auditor on the Accounts of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 29 of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, chapter 268, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of Permits issued under the authority of section 8 of the Immigration Act for the calendar year 1963, pursuant to section 8(5) of the said act, chapter 325, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962. (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved:

That the Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate be amended as follows:

1. Immediately after paragraph (f) of Rule 23 insert the following:—

"(ff) For the adoption of a resolution of the Senate dissolving or annulling a marriage pursuant to the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act;"

2. Immediately after Rule 193 add the following:—

"194. A certified copy of a resolution of the Senate dissolving or annulling a marriage shall be obtainable on payment of the sum of two dollars into the hands of the Clerk of the Parliaments.

"195. Resolutions for the dissolution or annulment of marriages adopted by the Senate of Canada during each session of Parliament shall be printed as Part II of the Journals of the Senate for such session."

He said: Honourable senators, I explained the foregoing motion in this house on Thursday last and, if there are no questions, I have nothing to add.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE GENERAL ACCIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-8, respecting The General Accident Assurance Company of Canada.

He said: This is a simple bill, and honourable senators will recognize the language in it because it follows precedents that have been established and accepted by both houses of Parliament with regard to previous bills, whereby a company may transact business in either its English or French name.

Honourable senators, the company in this case desires to use the name The General Accident Assurance Company of Canada, and also the name La Compagnie d'Assurance Générale Accident du Canada.

This company was incorporated in 1906 by special act of the Parliament of Canada. It is licensed in each province of Canada, except New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. It writes fire, casualty and general insurance business. It is one of a group of insurance companies which includes the Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation, and the General Accident, Fire and Life Assurance Corporation of Perth, Scotland, which is the controlling company. This group maintains an office in Montreal, where it has some 60 employees; and, in addition it has 364 agents in the province of Quebec. Its contracts have been printed both in English and French, and it now desires to have a French version of its name as well as the English version that is now used.

If this bill receives second reading, I propose to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

SCOTTISH CANADIAN ASSURANCE CORPORATION—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-9, an act respecting Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation.

He said: Honourable senators, the remarks I have just made as to Bill S-8 apply also to Bill S-9. The Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation is another member of the same group. In this case, it also desires to use the French version of its name, La Compagnie d'Assurance Canadienne Ecossaise. This company, which is also controlled by the parent company of Perth, Scotland, was incorporated in 1920 by special act of the Parliament of Canada, and does business in all provinces except Newfoundland.

If this bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 2 to 24 inclusive, which were presented on Thursday, March 5.

On motion of Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted, on division.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot moved the second reading of Bill S-2, respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada.

He said: Honourable Senators when I was admitted to the bar some years ago I never thought that one day I would have the privilege of sponsoring a bill for the revision of the Statutes of Canada.

You all know what a statute is: It is the written will of a legislative body. To use an expression which was very familiar to one of my leaders, the Parliament of Canada has shown in that respect a great deal of good will.

The Revised Statutes of 1952, together with the supplement and the index, contain 6,690 pages, and since that time 14 sessions have passed and 14 new volumes of statutes have been published comprising a further 6,003 pages. In that figure I do not count private legislation, but only public acts.

You will readily understand the difficulties of members of the Canadian Bar and others who consult statute books when they have to refer to such a vast library to find information as to how the law stands on any particular matter at a particular time.

This is why there are occasions when the work of all those who are interested in law has to be simplified. The laws have to be condensed and put together in a smaller number of books in order to facilitate the work of those who want to know what the law is because, as you know, honourable senators, ignorance of the law is no excuse. Every time I look at one of the statute books of the Parliament of Canada or of the provincial legislatures I feel a very deep sympathy for all students at law who have to memorize the countless rules that govern society.

This is by no means the first time that the acts of the Parliament of Canada have been revised. They have been revised several times since Confederation, and many times before. If we look at the books which we can find in the library—and I must say that everyone in the library is most helpful; I convey my thanks to Mr. Tarte, one of the librarians, who shook the dust off so many folios and large books and gave me the opportunity of consulting all the Statutes of Canada from the year 1792 up to date—we see that the first revision or consolidation of the statutes took place in 1842 when the Statutes of Upper Canada were put together up to the time of the Union; that is, from 1792 to 1840. That consolidation comprises two volumes, one for public acts, and the other for local and private acts.

Three years later, in 1845, there were published the Revised Acts and Ordinances of Lower Canada. That was under the Union, and the great Lafontaine had much to do with that important work.

In 1859 there were published the Consolidated Statutes of Canada which contained —and I quote this from the front page—"Certain Imperial Enactments concerning the Boundaries and Constitution of Canada and" —mark these words, honourable colleagues— "the Political Rights of Her Majesty's Canadian subjects." It is quite interesting to note that approximately 105 years ago our ancestors were described as Canadian subjects of Her Majesty, which is a very good name indeed.

For the first time, the Imperial Acts concerning Canada, the Quebec Act of 1774, the Colonial Tax Repeal Act of 1778, the Constitutional Act of 1791, and the Union Act of 1840, were published as a preamble to the Consolidated Statutes of Canada of 1859. It was natural that those who were concerned with the statutes should have an opportunity to find what right the legislative bodies, the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Council at the time of United Canada, had to legislate. They legislated in virtue of the jurisdiction that was granted by those constitutional acts, a long time before Confederation.

That consolidation contained also an act concerning the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, which act was the ancestor of the bill I now sponsor. The language is practically the same because the thing to be done now is similar to what was done at that time and has been done at various intervals since.

That happened before Confederation. In 1860, and also at the time of the Union, the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Council authorized and approved the publication of the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada. We find there, in the first chapter, an act respecting the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada. As you can see for yourselves, my honourable colleagues, before Confederation, before the British North America Act of 1867, the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Council together decided that the laws then in force should be put together for the better use of those concerned.

Then Confederation took place. Those are all the consolidations or, if you want to use the expression, revisions that took place before Confederation. But, before I go further we must understand what is meant by "revision". Those who will form the commission for the so-called revision of the statutes will have a certain leeway, but they will not be free to change the law. They will have to respect the will and the intention of the lawmakers. They will not be permitted to make considerable changes in the law. They will have to take the law as it is. They may make minor corrections, and they will have to put all the statutes together in order, so that whenever you read a statute you will find together the whole legislation that concerns a particular point.

"Revision" is defined as the act of revising. That is not very informative. Then, we have to find the meaning of the verb "to revise". It means to look at it all over again in order to correct or improve, as to revise a printer's proof. That is one part of the work which will have to be done by the commission in charge of the revision. It will have to correct those minor errors which may be found in the text, but it will not have the right to change the meaning of a sentence. The word "revise" means also:

> To make a new, improved or up to date version of, as to revise the game laws; synonymous with correct.

The work of the commission will be mostly to put the law together by adding the text of the amendments to the main statute.

Honourable senators, there is another expression which comes to my mind. It is the word "compilation". It means:

> To compile, as to collect the materials into a volume; compilation, a book composed of materials gathered from other books or documents.

Honourable senators, the work of the commission is twofold. It will be to revise in the meaning of correcting, and to compile in the meaning of putting together, all the law that concerns a particular matter. It shall be divided into chapters, just as you see in the statute books.

No one will start to read the statute books from A to Z, from the first line to the last. It is impossible. As a book of reference, however, the statute book is indispensable to all the lawmakers, because when a bill comes up on any subject it is important for you to go to the source of the law. You find it there, and then you have all the light and information that one may require on any particular piece of legislation.

Now let us see about the revisions that have been made since Confederation. In the first part, I have mentioned the revisions or the consolidations that took place before Confederation. Now I come to the time of Confederation, but before coming to that I want to read to you, honourable colleagues, one of the most important sections of the B.N.A. Act, 1867—section 129.

Section 129 concerns the continuation of the law from the time of the Union until after Confederation, and until it was changed by the proper legislative body. You knew very well that before Confederation we had all the laws which have been mentioned in the first place. It was our system of laws, our corpus juris.

Section 129 mentions the "Continuance of existing Laws, Courts, Officers, etc.," and in its first part it is clear. However, the second part of that section has been so badly drafted, and in such haste, that it is ambiguous. You will easily realize it.

You know that in the B.N.A. Act the Fathers of Confederation wanted to convey the idea that the Parliament of Canada on the one hand, and the provinces on the other hand, should mind their own business. It was agreed that the Parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the provinces, respectively, had exclusive rights. You know the meaning of the word "exclusive"; it is not necessary for me to quote the dictionary for that. It meant that each one should mind its own business.

Now, here is section 129, and it is the only section of the B.N.A. Act that I will read in full, because I consider it most important. I take the liberty to suggest an amendment which may be made in due course by the Imperial Parliament.

Section 129, originally read:

> Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all Laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick at the Union, and all Courts of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction, and all legal Commissions, Powers, and Authorities, and all Officers, Judicial, Administrative, and Ministerial, existing therein at the Union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick respectively, as if the Union had not been made; . . .

This part is easy to understand. Now, here is the second part, which leaves a doubt in our minds:

> . . . subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,) to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada, or—> by the Legislature of the respective Province, according to the Authority of the Parliament or of that Legislature under this Act.

Here is the obscure point:

The difficulty was, can the amendment be made to any piece of legislation by the Parliament of Canada or by the provincial legislature?

Honourable senators, those last words should be amended so as to read:

> . . . or by the provincial Legislatures, according to their respectively exclusive authority under this Act.

The second part would read as follows:

> . . . subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,) to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada, or by the provincial Legislatures, according to their respectively exclusive authority under this Act.

This is the suggested amendment.

Naturally there were great difficulties on account of this obscurity, and even the leaders of the bench were quite embarrassed about it. It seems that those thoughts could be expressed with such clarity and lucidity that there would be no excuse for that kind of statutory language.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Has not the interpretation he has just placed upon section 129 been the interpretation in practice adopted by the courts of Canada ever since the act was passed?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If my honourable friend will read the judgment of Chief Justice Rinfret in the case of Jehovah's Witnesses, he will see that the Chief Justice expressed grave doubts about it. If you are interested in that, in a moment I will show you what was kept in the cupboard of 1887. The book I have here is a large one, but I will try to be as concise as possible. I am very glad that my honourable and distinguished colleague shares that opinion, but if it is the right interpretation of the law, there is no reason why it should not be more clearly expressed.

Now I come to the Revised Statutes of 1886, which were approved and came into force after Confederation. It is a most interesting publication and, honourable colleagues, there is life in the law. When we look at the statute and read it, naturally we think of those who discussed it and worried about finding the right expression to make these statutes as clear as possible, although they did not always succeed. There are most interesting things in the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886. We learn, for instance, that at the time there were 38 chartered banks in Canada. Now the number is much less, and the people seem to be more prosperous. Some of the banks have survived, and many have not.

I noticed also in the Northwest Territories Act (Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, c. 50) that the lawmakers at the time did much more for the married women of the Northwest Territories than any government has done since for the married women of any part of Canada.

There are two volumes of the statutes of 1886. In volume 2 there are three schedules: Schedule A, Acts and Parts of Acts repealed; Schedule B, Acts and Parts of Acts not consolidated; and Schedule C, Parts of Acts conditionally repealed. The volume contains:

> History and disposal of acts—
> Province of Canada, 1859-1867
> Nova Scotia, 1864-1867
> New Brunswick, 1854-1867
> British Columbia, 1871
> Prince Edward Island, 1773-1873
> Dominion of Canada, 1867-1886

And it is mentioned whether the acts had been recommended for repeal or superseded. Some others are described as "provincial".

In 1887, the following year, the acts of the provinces and of Canada which had not been repealed by the Revised Statutes were put in a book, which I called the "cupboard". The book is described as follows:

> Acts of the legislatures of the provinces now comprised in the dominion and of Canada which are of a public nature and are not repealed by the Revised Statutes of Canada for the reasons set forth in Schedule B of the said Revised Statutes.

Then, what was Schedule B of the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886, page 2299:

> Acts and parts of acts of a public general nature, which affect Canada, and have relation to matters not within the legislative authority of Parliament, or in respect to which the power of legislation is doubtful or has been doubted, and which have in consequence not been consolidated; and also, acts of a public general nature which, for other reasons, have not been considered proper acts to be consolidated.

Therefore, in this book there is nothing final. It contains acts which have been left in suspense because they were considered doubtful. It is unfortunate that the courts have not been called upon to decide whether those acts were of a federal or a provincial jurisdiction.

That being said, honourable senators, the bill will be easy to understand for anyone who will look at it. It contains just a few provisions, only 13 clauses, and it tells what will have to be done to revise or consolidate the Statutes of Canada from the year 1952 up to the time when the revision will have been completed. That may take three or four years, if the Commission is diligent enough. Just imagine, at the present time there are 6,000 pages of new laws from 1952 until now to be dealt with. There will probably be 1,500 or 2,000 more pages in four years from now, and all that will have to be put in order to be clarified and simplified. My earnest hope is that the commission will succeed in making the law as understandable as possible.

I also suggest that the commission should bring to the attention of the Department of Justice logical improvements they could suggest to that legislation. The members will be appointed by Order in Council, and the duties of the commission shall be to arrange, revise and consolidate all the statutes. The roll will have to be certified and deposited with the Clerk of the Parliaments, and the approval and signature of His Excellency the Governor General are required to give effect to that legislation.

The powers of the commission as to alterations are very limited, and the commission will have to prepare good tables and a complete index. That is most important. It must be done with the greatest care, because a well prepared index is a most valuable asset for any official publication. Then the proclamation will be issued to declare the statutes in force.

When those statutes come into force, the Revised Statutes of 1952, and the public acts which are in the subsequent statute books, will be useful only for reference purposes, because from then on the Revised Statutes of 1967 or 1968, the new Revised Statutes, shall be the law of the land.

I will not elaborate on that, but I have noticed in my research that there were very few encroachments by the Parliament of Canada on the rights of the provinces. I could make a very long speech about it, but I will abstain from doing so tonight; I will have other occasions to do so. The Parliament of Canada at all times has been most respectful of the jurisdiction of the provinces, and when the provinces complain that there have been encroachments on their jurisdiction it is just to distract the attention of the public from their own encroachments on the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. That is my experience, and those who are learned in the law know what I mean, without my insisting any further.

Speaking of the law, when the Revised Statutes are printed they will be the evidence before the courts. You could take a copy of the statute book and present it to the court, and you would not have to bring any witness to prove it. It becomes the law of the land when it is published by the Queen's Printer after the required formalities are fulfilled. The Revised Statutes which will come into force in three or four years' time, on the occasion of the centennial or a year later, will be the law of the land, and this is why it is so important and why I appreciate so much the opportunity of telling you about the importance of the matter. Then these Revised Statutes will be distributed in the same manner as the statutes you have already received.

Before concluding, I have an observation to make. The first session of this Parliament started early in the year, after the last general election. There was a long adjournment during the summer. The session was in two parts. We received only a few days ago the statute book containing all the legislation of that session, which means that after the adjournment for the summer we had to wait eight months to have the official text of that legislation.

The suggestion I have to make comes from the Province of Quebec. I hold in my hand a most useful publication, the supplement to the official Gazette of Quebec. The copy I have I will send to my honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) so that he may show it to his colleagues. His colleagues of the province of Quebec know about it, but those of the other provinces probably do not know what it is. All the laws that are passed in a session are published in the supplement to the Quebec official Gazette two weeks after the session is prorogued or takes a long adjournment. It is indispensable. I hope that my honourable Leader will be kind enough to convey that suggestion to his colleagues.

Now, honourable senators, I thank you for your kind attention. My speech was very dry; I could have spoken differently, but I abstained from doing so because I have such a great respect for the law of the land; I want the law to be clear, I want the law to be simple, and I want the law to be easy to understand, not only for the bench and bar but for all those who want to be guided by the law and who abide by it.

It is impossible to expect great clarification or simplification of the law from a revision or consolidation of the kind that will be effected, although it must be done by competent people under the direction, probably, of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, as has been done before. I do not know who will be appointed, but if it is the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada who will be the chairman of the commission, he could give good advice. He is a man of great experience, knows his law and is surely the best jurist to head such a commission. I hope that all of us will have the opportunity to appreciate the usefulness of the report of the commission when it is tabled. Let us hope also that it will be for the greatest benefit of all.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, before the debate is adjourned may I make one comment? I see by section 1 that the revision commission to be appointed is to consist of the Minister of Justice and five other members to be appointed by the Governor in Council. I presume that that commission is not yet appointed, but when it is it will probably consist mainly of civil servants, thoroughly informed in matters of this kind. However, I would suggest to the Government Leader that it should also include the Clerk of the Senate. I know I speak for every member here in saying that we would be pleased to see the Clerk of the Parliaments, who also happens to be our own Clerk, a member of that committee. While I dislike speaking in superlatives I must say that he is one of the best informed legal authorities available to the Parliament of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: For this reason I should like to see him nominated to that commission.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 11, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of the Final Report of the Fraser River Board on Flood Control and Hydro-Electric Power in the Fraser River Basin. (English text).

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, intituled: "Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1964—and Regional Estimates". (English and French texts).

Report of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 31 of the Railway Act, chapter 234, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

PRIVATE BILL

THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE CANADIAN BRANCH OF THE ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-5, respecting The General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Kinley moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 25 to 61, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 1, for the relief of Linda Ruth Kirsch Lach.

Resolution 2, for the relief of Evelyn Margaret Henderson McConnell.

Resolution 3, for the relief of Ingrida Elisabeth Prieditis Lorenzi.

Resolution 4, for the relief of Inge Moeller Weinhandl.

Resolution 5, for the relief of Paula Elaine Segal Kurland.

Resolution 6, for the relief of Pauline Georgette Mary Malo Corp.

Resolution 7, for the relief of Ann Nanasi Moskovits.

Resolution 8, for the relief of Ruth Gittleson Shapiro.

Resolution 9, for the relief of Florence Freda Tadei Dingman.

Resolution 10, for the relief of Constance LeBaron Dibblee Lank.

Resolution 11, for the relief of Millicent Eileen Goobie Davis.

Resolution 12, for the relief of Suzanne Mary Goodger Garrett.

Resolution 13, for the relief of Vanutelli Deschenes.

Resolution 14, for the relief of Margaret Elizabeth Taylor Hall.

Resolution 15, for the relief of Helen Sivwright Maxner Black.

Resolution 16, for the relief of Marion Irma Friefeld Dickman.

Resolution 17, for the relief of Ruth Greenberg Mire.

Resolution 18, for the relief of Bernice Ruth Serlin Mroz.

Resolution 19, for the relief of Marianne Renate Schimkatis Kramer.

Resolution 20, for the relief of Anna Hasapa Dionissatos.

Resolution 21, for the relief of Monique Nicole Theriault Ladouceur.

Resolution 22, for the relief of Marie Bernadette Guitar Guitard.

Resolution 23, for the relief of Kathleen Alice Priestley Morrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 4, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard for the second reading of Bill S-6, to incorporate Bank of Western Canada.

Hon. Thomas Vien: Honourable senators, I have very little to add to the remarks I made when the honourable senator who sponsored this bill (Hon. Mr. Leonard) moved its second reading. However, I have given some thought to a few questions which, in my humble opinion, arise at this juncture, when we talk of creating a new bank.

The first consideration I would like to bring to your attention is that we have in Canada, I think, one of the most remarkable systems of banking that exists anywhere in the world; it is admirably adapted to the requirements of trade and commerce and our banking requirements generally in Canada.

I recall that in 1923 and 1924 in the other place, the Honourable James Alexander Robb was acting Minister of Finance, due to the illness of Mr. Fielding, and I was chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee of that House. At that time there were about 53 Progressive members who clamoured for the establishment of a central bank and the fundamental revision of our Bank Act. We resisted some of their requests, but we yielded to them to the extent of calling as witnesses before the committee several high ranking officials of the Federal Reserve System. It had been suggested that we should have in this country a banking system similar to that created and inaugurated by President Wilson in 1913. These high ranking officials of the federal system took advantage of their presence in Ottawa to familiarize themselves with our banking system in Canada and how it functioned. When they appeared before the committee they were a great disappointment to the honourable members who had called them because they said a federal reserve system would not meet our requirements, and they explained why.

They said, at that time, that the Federal Reserve Bank of the Federal District of New York could not balance its budget unless it had a billion dollars outstanding. Therefore, they pointed out, if Canada had a federal reserve system similar to theirs it would be like establishing an Eaton's store, a Morgan's store, or a Simpson's store in a country village. The volume of trade and the population would not warrant such an expensive system. Furthermore, they pointed out that in Canada we had something much less expensive but just as efficient and adequate in our branch-bank system, which they did not have in the United States.

In the United States, when the federal reserve system was mooted, quite a few people requested that the branch-bank system be established. But the consensus of public opinion was against it because they feared it would centralize too much financial power in the hands of too few and it would not provide adequate banking facilities for outlying districts. But in Canada, they pointed out that branch banks spread all over the country could draw to the central bank, without additional cost, surplus deposits in one district to take care of surplus demands for accommodation in other more highly industrialized districts.

These experts also strongly advocated the creation of a central bank, like the Bank of Canada, but all Canadian bankers, at that time in 1924, resisted fiercely the creation of a Bank of Canada, or a national bank, contending that we had everything necessary, that existing Canadian banks adequately took care of the situation, that a national bank would be like a fifth wheel to a coach.

However, after the crisis of 1929 when difficulties arose, and after the United States called for a bank holiday, these same bankers were all in favour of the establishment of the Bank of Canada, and they swallowed what they had said in 1924 when they feared the loss of their right to issue bank notes. Mr. Bennett, the Prime Minister in 1934, introduced legislation creating the Bank of Canada. Today no sensible person would not fully approve of such an institution. It would be difficult for any bank to function without the Bank of Canada.

The Bank of Canada is not perfect, and especially so in one particular. The Bank of Canada demands a large deposit of money from each of the individual commercial banks, on which it pays no interest. So hundreds of millions of dollars, deposited by the commercial banks with the Bank of Canada, produce no interest. I discussed this with some bankers and asked them why they did not protest. They answered, "Well, it is a kind of taxation, and we would not have a leg to stand on, if we opposed it". That is the situation in that regard.

As regards the creation of a new bank, I think that the field of operation of the existing banks must be considered. Those banks are entitled to a profitable operation in certain districts, and too great a number of banks could impair their ability to function profitably, and, perhaps, entail a difficulty of supervision of banks springing up in numbers, a supervision which is necessary for the protection of depositors. Be that as it may, it is not easy to determine in a particular case whether certain areas are adequately served or not. For that reason no bank can be created except by special act of Parliament. It is our duty, therefore, when an application of this kind is presented, to study the situation. We shall be better able to judge that particular aspect of the problem when the bill is in committee, where the promoters can be heard.

As regards this application, I find that many of the promoters have experience in banking. Mr. Coyne, for instance, will be of great help. Other promoters are also men of substance; I have no doubt they are capable of making a success of that bank.

Nevertheless, honourable senators, there are other problems to be considered. Several other applications have been announced: three or four have been mentioned.

Is there not a question to be determined in each case as to whether the district where they are to be established is adequately served, or needs more banking facilities?

At the last revision of the Bank Act we had eleven banks. Mergers of large banks have taken place and, if I am not mistaken, the number is now reduced to eight. On the other hand, Canada has grown by leaps and bounds, new districts have been developed and, maybe, additional banking facilities are needed. That is a question for the committee to determine, after careful study.

As regards forthcoming applications, I have in mind, in particular, a bank to be created in British Columbia. In that territory it has been rumoured at least that the provincial government would hold a substantial number of shares of the capital stock of that bank. Does not a problem arise there? If a provincial government holds a substantial number of shares in the capital stock of a bank, and if a question arises between the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada, on one hand, and commercial banks on the other hand, with respect to credit curtailment or expansion, or to some other policies affecting the volume of our currency and otherwise, would the Bank of Canada and/or the Minister of Finance be just as free in case of such divergence of opinion? This, to my mind, is a bit disturbing.

There is no doubt that the credit of Canada, the stability of our currency in the international trade and otherwise, the value or the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar, at home and abroad, are questions on which the Minister of Finance and the Bank of Canada have great responsibility and must have, in the national interest, a free hand.

If a provincial government differs on questions of policy advocated by the federal Government, what then? Must we not try to avoid creating such possible causes of friction?

Moreover, if British Columbia enters that field, would not other provinces be tempted to do likewise?

These aspects and others suggest themselves to my mind, and I have brought them to your attention. I would suggest that we give second reading to this bill so as to allow it to go to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I will take but a few moments of your time, for reasons which will become apparent as I proceed. I would adopt without qualification the views that have been expressed by Senator Vien, the doubts and the problems that he has raised.

Senator Leonard, with his usual ability, left us with the impression, when he spoke on March 4, that this was a routine matter.

As he said on second reading, it is with the principle of the bill that senators are concerned. This is a private bill. Parliament has also prescribed the principles governing the incorporation of a bank.

Senator Vien settled that point when he said a few minutes ago that the banks are incorporated only by act of Parliament. If this were a pure formality, then the sponsors of the bank would make an application to the office of the Secretary of State and file the appropriate forms and receive a charter, just as most companies receive charters. After all, the charter of most companies is the Company's Act in the particular province or territory in Canada, or just as the Bank Act in Canada is the charter of the banks.

However, the fact of the matter is that it is not quite so simple, nor is it so inconsequential. Parliament has said in the Bank Act, the Insurance Act, and in other acts that I could mention had I carried out some more research, that this is the form in which one must apply for charter, that these are the conditions which will apply if a charter is obtained and that one must go to Parliament and that Parliament will decide. This is not a formality. It is not a case where you get three solicitors together and $500 and send an application to the Secretary of State or the Provincial Secretary.

Honourable senators, I want to make it clear that in anything I say I have nothing but respect and regard for the promoters of this bill, many of whom I know and count as friends of mine. However, I cannot accept the proposition Senator Leonard put forward that second reading was just a formality because, as he said, the principles had already been set forth in the legislation. Merely forms have been set forth in the legislation, and the principle has been left to this chamber and will ultimately be left to Parliament.

Had it not been for a conversation I had with the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Leonard) this morning, I probably would have spoken much longer this afternoon and taken a very different position. If I do not vote against second reading of this bill it will not be because I accept in principle the fact that a Bank of Western Canada should be incorporated, because I do not accept that at this stage. Anyone who cares to turn up the Canada Year Book for 1937 will find an interesting history of the banks which have been incorporated in this country and the way they have withered on the vine. I think it is probably because of that history that we have something more than a mere formal procedure for incorporating banks.

The sponsor of the bill will correct me if I do not state his position correctly. When I discussed this matter with him this morning he indicated, and I can quite understand why, that he would like the bill to go to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Of course it must go. I am willing that it should do so, reserving, as I have said, my position that its mere reference to the committee does not commit me to approval in principle.

The sponsor went further and said that he was prepared, as far as he could give such an undertaking, that the bill would not be reported out of committee until the members of the committee, and honourable senators in this chamber, had seen the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance and had had an opportunity to study it, and that the bill would be then considered in the light of that report. With that I agree. After all, banks, corporations, live a long time. We had a Royal Commission on Banking and Finance established a few years ago. We anticipate that we shall have its report in two or three months' time. It would seem foolhardy to proceed with an important matter like this, as Senator Vien has so ably pointed out, without having the benefit of the views of that commission, which are going to be available to us shortly.

This is a private bill; it is not a party matter. I told the sponsor of the bill that I wished to reserve my position to this extent. When the bill goes to the Banking and Commerce Committee next week, or the week after, the committee members will listen to everything the sponsors have to say; and officials of the Government, of the Bank of Canada, and perhaps other representatives will come and give explanations. Then we shall have the opportunity to consider the report of the royal commission. So far as I personally am concerned, I want to reserve my position to this extent: it may be that having read and considered the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, I shall take the view that we should not proceed with this bill or any other proposed applications for bank charters—and all I know about them is what I read in the press—until the Bank Act has been revised.

I speak for only myself in this matter, and that is the one caveat I add as a result of my discussion with the sponsor of the bill. I would think that it was altogether possible, following the receipt of the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance and consideration of its recommendations, that we might want to recall witnesses, and so on. Subject to that, honourable senators, I am not going to vote against the bill going to committee.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, my remarks will be very brief because Senator McCutcheon and Senator Vien have said practically everything I intended to say. I, too, think that the bill should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee. However, I wish to emphasize the fact that, in my judgment, it would be the part of wisdom for us to delay approval of the bill until at least we receive the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. I think that is very important.

Honourable senators, this occasion gives me the opportunity of paying tribute to our Canadian banking system. We as Canadians should be very proud of a system that has lent itself so well to the development of this great nation. This is an age of criticism. There is hardly a newspaper or a television show which does not contain some criticism of our national institutions, but our banking system has pretty well escaped such criticism, and therefore it must be accepted and approved by Canadians generally. There is not very much to complain about in our banking system, and it would be a sad day indeed if this chamber did anything to impair the stability of a banking system which should be the pride of all Canadians.

Honourable senators, I indeed hope that the bill will go to the Banking and Commerce Committee, and, as Senator McCutcheon has said, that it will stay there until we have had a chance to read the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I am not going to say anything detrimental to our banking system, nor shall I say anything in praise of it except that I am the owner of bank stocks, and that perhaps indicates my confidence in the banks and our banking system. On the other hand, I know that banking is a monopoly in this country, and I am opposed to monopolies. I believe in the free competitive system, I believe that competition is healthy, whether it be in trade or in commerce or in finance. That is one of the reasons I support the bill but it is not the only reason; I support this bill because it recognizes the totality of Canada, and I will explain that to you in a few minutes. I do know that there are some other applications in the wings although I shall not attempt to discuss them at the moment.

When I heard about this application, I sent for the petition and read it rather carefully. I tried to obtain the other petitions but they have not yet been filed. After reading this petition, and then the bill when it was presented here, I came to a conclusion. I shall give you my reason for coming to that conclusion. On May 25, 1961 in this chamber, on the third reading of the bill respecting The Canada Permanent Trust Company—and that was before the great "B. and B." dialogue even started in this country—I prepared, in the best tradition and advice of Senator O'Leary (Carleton) on public speaking, a speech which was moderate and reasonable. I gently but forcibly reminded this house that banks, insurance companies, mortgage companies and trust companies have neglected or failed to bring into their organizations any number of people other than Anglo-Saxons as directors or senior executives. I did not think anyone paid much attention to what I said. Of course, I do not think this bill has been introduced as a result of what I said, but it may be that people are listening and there are signs of a change in this country.

I looked at the petition very carefully, I read the bill, and I share the view of Senator McCutcheon that this is not a routine and formal matter. What I saw and read, I liked. The names in the petition were music to my ears, because they reflected the kind of Canada I have always wanted. For here is the first major breakthrough in the "dollar curtain" in this country. They do not just come here with $10 million, important as that is, but they come as people representing a broad cross-section of this country. What they are asking us for today is a charter for a people's bank. Senator McCutcheon said that money was not enough. I agree with him, as I am sure all members of this house do. It is important; it is essential. There is no use talking about money in Ottawa. Under some circumstances, you cannot even give away half a million dollars in this city.

The sponsors of this bill understand the meaning of Canada; they know the spirit of our times; they know the history of this country, as well as being aware of its shortcomings, and they have this proposed bank oriented in the right direction, where it is needed most.

They certainly know something of the history of this country. To a large extent the west was built up by the immigrants who came over here between 1908 and 1913 at the rate of a thousand a day for those four years.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: What about the immigrants who came earlier?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not think they came in such large numbers earlier.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: They did come in large numbers.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Some stayed in the east, but most of them went out west. And they were dumped—that is the term. There were no old age pensions, no relief office, no family allowances or other social welfare benefits waiting for them.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That is why they did so well.

Hon. Mr. Croll: They were told, "There it is. Get busy. Scratch!" And they did. I am not suggesting that the immigrants alone built up the west. There were others equally as important, but the immigrants certainly did their share. I feel I speak for this house when I say that I resent it when a minister of the Crown in the province of Quebec says that they created a second-class melting pot. What a way to win friends and influence people!

With the passing of time the doors of opportunity did open, but the doors of high finance and big business remained closed. In the main, these people and their sons and daughters were not permitted to participate in these enterprises, no matter how great their abilities and no matter what their merit. I know that during those times people referred to us in short, descriptive terms. We survived all that. After a while we became just immigrants, and in time we too joined the Canadian stream and no matter whether we or our people were immigrants we often refer to the new ones as "D.P.'s" and we think nothing of it at all. It merely indicates how fast we are getting on in the Canadian way of life. In the two World Wars, I need hardly remind you, we made common sacrifices. We became part of the soul of Canada. We tilled the soil, we broke the ground, and the dust of our forebears enriched its earth.

Looking around today, many of us sit in the seats of the mighty, the seats of power. It is our responsibility to speak out. In any event, this is no time for silence. We find some of the originals or some of their sons and daughters in Parliament, in provincial legislatures, in municipal government, in universities, the professions, commerce and industry, and we find some in clerical work and doing menial jobs, but all doing their utmost to become good Canadians and to be accepted as such. In my view, the promoters of this bill caught the Canadian dream. They are the first ones who are opening the door of opportunity for those who, without distinction, helped build the country.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Have we any guarantee that this new institution will carry on business of banking any differently from the way it has been carried on in the past; and are we dissatisfied with the banking system we presently have?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Senator Brooks, I am not the slightest bit dissatisfied with the banking system as it is at the present time. I have very high regard for the banking institutions. As a matter of fact, you may recall that I was chairman of the committee which revised the Bank Act in 1954. However, as I develop my arguments you will see what the banks and others have neglected to do up to the present time.

What I am saying is that some of those people who helped build this country are for the first time being invited to participate and share in its bounty. Here is an enterprise of responsibility and trust which, heretofore, has been reserved for others.

I note with approval the dialogue that is going on in the country, and when you finally understand what it is all about you come to the conclusion there are people in this country who say, "We want equality of opportunity." That is what they are saying. That is exactly what we are asking for, and I ask my colleagues in this house to help us get it. I make this observation to my colleagues from the Province of Quebec. They have permitted grievances to pile up year after year after year until we have now reached the point where a bold and imaginative step needs to be taken to meet the minimum of their aspirations.

One thing we are not going to do—at least if they take my advice they are not going to do it—and that is to become the collector of grievances. If they have merit, we are going to place our problems before the people of this country, and if they are without merit we are going to forget about them.

A charter by this Parliament is the most cherished and most valuable gift or licence, whichever you like to call it, at the disposal of Parliament. And my complaint, Senator Brooks, is that in so far as the banks, mortgage companies, insurance companies and trust companies are concerned, they have closed the doors at the higher levels to these people to whom I refer as immigrants. Now and then, so to speak, they throw a poultice on a festering sore, but they have always kept these people at arms length. They have never allowed them to participate to the full. This is the first time that this situation has changed. That is the point I am making. This is the first occasion where an institution says from the beginning "Come in, join us, participate, we will do this together." And this is something different. This is one of the reasons why I am sold on the idea that this bank should be chartered, because, as I have said, the people who come before us seeking this charter represent a cross-section of the people of this country.

I do not want to be in the position, if I am here ten years from now, of having to bring in a bill of complaint saying, "You didn't do this or you didn't do that—we want a new deal." Let us deal with it on a day to day basis. Furthermore, I don't want to be faced at that time by people who say, "Well, if you had asked for it we would have given it to you." I am asking for it now because I think that what I ask for is right and proper. And I do not think I am asking for too much.

This bill represents a forward step, and all we ask is for the right to participate in what is going on. We want the pride of participation; we want to share in these great undertakings and responsibilities; we want to be trusted and to respond to that trust. We don't recognize any elite or any establishment in this country whether self-proclaimed or measured by dollars.

My concept of the bill is that it opens new horizons and welcomes "grass roots" and it recognizes people for their ability and their own merits. What is more important in this bill is the recognition of the principle of participation as of right.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask a question? What does it do for those people you are speaking of who now hold shares in our existing banks?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Perhaps I bleed a little, cut my own throat but I intend no harm. This country is growing; the people who had investments in banks have made money hand over fist. Over the years, bank stocks have risen and there is room for everybody. I am not one of those who fear whether they will make money or not. I think bank shares are the best investment one can have at this time. But that is not important; the principle is far more important.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): What is the difference in principle between this bank and any other bank?

Hon. Mr. Croll: This bank, if you read the names of the petitioners, has in it people of every race and nationality.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): Look at the shareholders of any big bank.

Hon. Mr. Croll: At their inception they have never welcomed such people on their boards of directors.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): These people named in the bill are not on the board.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Some of them are bound to be. I don't know who they are.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I bet you they are all well off.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I don't know who they are but it seems from the names in the petition that they are people who are not too well off. They seem to be middle-class people.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Read paragraph 2 of the bill and you will find out who the promoters are.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I know at least one of the promoters of the bill by name.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: How are they different from the rest of us, these people whose names you have read?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I said these people represent a cross-section of Canada. I said, when I read the names it was like music to my ears.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Will you read the names in this chamber?

Hon. Mr. Croll: They are in the petition.

An Hon. Senator: Are there any Irish names?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Just enough to make it interesting.

This is an opportunity for these people, no matter how much or how little money they may have, to sink roots in this country. One thing that is disturbing in Canada is the constant fear we have that we will be taken over by Americans. I have said time and time again that one of the things we have not done is to allow our own people to participate in enterprises, and to become part and parcel of them. If we see to it that these people are given the opportunity, I don't think we will have to worry much about Rockefeller or Schlitz.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Don't you like the name Schlitz?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I like the beer, but I don't like what happened.

I repeat again what I have already said: I don't think money is enough. I have tried to make clear that it is people who count. I have indicated why I am supporting the bill. I have not seen the other petitions for charters and I do not know what they contain, but if in my view they don't contain a cross-section of Canada, I certainly will not support them.

I think this is a good bill for the reasons I have already indicated; I think the strength of the bill lies in the fact that it reaches out to various ethnic groups across this country and welcomes them. That is something new insofar as financial institutions are concerned. It is about time we broke the ice and this is a good opportunity for us to make a start.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, it was not my intention to say anything with respect to this bill, but I am really somewhat provoked to rise by the remarks of honourable Senator Croll.

Senator Croll loves to set up straw men. We all admire the vigour and energy he puts into his contributions to debates in this house, but he does, I am afraid, have the knack of setting up straw men and then, with great vigour, proceeding to demolish them. His performance this afternoon was quite an exercise in that delightful sport, and I rather strongly disagree with him on some points. He appears to think that most of the new Canadians who have come to our shores in the last 50 years have been ignored, deliberately pushed aside, and refused their place in the sun. That I certainly cannot agree with.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Moreover, our colleague is not very well informed. If he made a survey today of those who guide our financial institutions, our corporations and businesses, those who participate in the work of the press of Canada, or even those who write some of the books published in Canada, he would find very little support for the sort of arguments he advanced this afternoon. I dislike that. I dislike it because it tends to leave the impression in the minds of many people that they have been abused; that they have not had their opportunity. I entirely disagree with that point of view. There is no place in the world today where a man has a finer opportunity to demonstrate what he can do, and how far he can climb, than in Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, to speak and give a contrary impression is really trading a great deal on our incredulity, and doing a disservice to Canada.

So far as this bill is concerned, it is to charter a bank to be known as the Bank of Western Canada. Everyone knows—Senator McCutcheon referred to it, and so did Senator Leonard when he introduced the bill—that we have a Bank Act. The Bank Act, in a sense, is a charter for all the banks, and it prescribes the steps necessary to be taken in order to organize a new bank.

Senator Croll stated he would like to see a people's bank. I wish he had elaborated a bit on that theme. How would he define a people's bank? Are not the banks today more or less people's banks? It is a mistake, a gross mistake, to imagine that a bank like the Bank of Montreal or the Bank of Nova Scotia, or any of the other banks, are simply the sanctuaries of a few rich men. Look at the number of shareholders. I know that the same is said of many of the life insurance companies. The notion that there are only a few privileged people who can obtain admission to this charmed circle is, in my judgment, plain nonsense.

As I said a moment ago, the Bank Act provides the means whereby any group of people who can put the necessary capital together—because a minimum of capital is necessary—and who can conform to the provisions laid down in that act, can apply for a charter. I hold this view if the people behind the Bank of Western Canada conform with all the requirements of the law and apply here for a charter to set up business as a bank, that this house would be taking quite a serious responsibility if it refused that charter. That is why the provisions are in the Bank Act. I am old-fashioned enough—"old-fashioned" is the wrong term, honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: "Conservative" is better.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am enough of a Liberal—I will put it that way—to say that if people want to compete and conform with the law I, for one, do not want to deny them the right of their opportunity. That is all we shall have to do here. All we have to do is to see that this bank is properly organized in conformity with the law. That, I think, is the important consideration.

I am not much afraid of a monopoly in banking. I have had quite a long journey through this vale of tears that we call our life. I do not claim it as a distinction, but I think, perhaps, in point of years, I am senior in this chamber today.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: My experience goes back many years. I happened to have had a rather responsible job in business when I was quite a young man, and I remember having to go to banks to ask for a line of credit. One had the feeling upon entering the manager's office, and particularly upon entering the general manager's office or the president's office, if one ever reached that far, that the proper thing to do was to take off one's shoes before entering. Today that is gone. I know of no legitimate enterprise that is denied credit today if it is worthy of it.

Not only is there the financial factor involved in the conduct of the banking business, but also the other factor of—what shall I say—the character of the people behind it. It was J. P. Morgan who said on one occasion that he would rather lend a million dollars to a man whose character he knew was solid and sound than a thousand dollars to someone whose character he doubted. There is much truth in that.

The moral factor, the old virtues of honesty, thrift and character are the most important things in the conduct of these financial arrangements. I think it is one of the sorry signs of decline in society today that these virtues which our fathers recognized, practised and believed in have come under a very considerable shadow in the life we lead today. The old-fashioned courtesy, honour, honesty and frankness have been to some degree washed aside, and I do not like that. So far as I am concerned, honourable senators, I am supporting Senator Leonard's motion.

I have one other point to make. Senator McCutcheon thought it would be desirable to wait until we had the report of the royal commission that is examining into these affairs. I regret that Senator McCutcheon did not give the reason why he thought that was necessary. I do not see what bearing that has, of necessity, on the motion we are considering today.

It may be that when we get into committee something will be produced or outlined that would make that necessary, but at the moment I do not see it.

At any rate, honourable senators, as far as this old senator is concerned, he is behind Senator Leonard's motion.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, so far as this bill is concerned, if it does carry out, as Senator Crerar suggests, the principle that there is no restriction on admission to the charmed circle, I am all in favour of it. I am satisfied with this situation as it exists, but I wish to make a comment on the principles on which we should view this question.

I agree with Senator Crerar in his later remarks, but I disagree with his criticism of my deskmate (Hon. Mr. Croll). If this bill does as Senator Croll thinks it will do, that is, recognize in some way the ethnic groups that have not been recognized so much in the past, then that is a point in favour of the bill. I do not know whether it will do that or not, as I have not gone into that question. However, he thinks it does and, if it does, then it is a point in favour of the bill.

Honourable Senator Vien said that we must see that our banking system functions profitably. Well, the banking system has always been kind to me; I have admiration for the management of our banks; and I appreciate the courtesy of those managers who from time to time businessmen must interview. That has been perfectly satisfactory from my standpoint.

At the same time, I do not know that we are so particularly concerned with the profitable operation of the banks. If we go into any of our towns or cities we will see magnificent bank buildings on the most expensive corners in town; I do not think we need be too concerned about the profits the banks have been making.

Senator Croll has said that bank stocks are the best buy on the market. I agree with him to some extent in that regard. I am not a director of a bank, and if I own a very few shares I do not think it means anything at all. The banks have been very profitable.

But the point I want to make, and the only reason I rose to speak, is with respect to the statement made by Senator Vien, that it is our duty to observe whether the localities are adequately serviced by the present banks. That is a point for us to consider, but I do not think it is the final point, whether in our judgment the banks are sufficiently servicing the localities. The same might be asked in regard to any other institution, such as insurance companies or big stores or little stores.

My suggestion is that that is not what we should inquire into; rather, it is whether we should sustain a fence around the institution of banking, and whether there is now sufficient competition among the banks to produce the best results in banking service for the Canadian people. That is the prinicple upon which we should view this general situation and, in consequence, decide whether or not we incorporate this bank.

I am not in a position to say whether this bank should be incorporated; we have not yet gone into that question. I think the bill should be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, where that question can be studied. No doubt a common sense decision will be reached by the committee, and by this chamber when the committee's report is delivered to us.

Honourable senators, what I wish to make clear to you, as it is clear to me, is this: The question we must ask ourselves is not whether the banks are making too much money or too little money, or whether they are giving service in all localities, but rather whether there is enough competition among the eight banks only in the Dominion of Canada to ensure the cheapest and the most efficient service—it is, of course, an honest institution—to the people of Canada.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to my honourable friend Senator Croll, in the friendliest way. It is simple and short. Looking at all of you, honourable senators, I see ladies and gentlemen from all the corners of this country who belong to the two major parties. Until now I presume that you agree with me.

My question is obvious, very simple and very clear. With one single exception, that of Senator Gladstone, are we not all immigrants or descendants of immigrants?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, debate adjourned.

CONSUMER CREDIT

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly moved:

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament to enquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, more particularly, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing, to enquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto;

That twelve members of the Senate to be designated by the Senate at a later date be members of the Joint Committee;

That the minutes of proceedings and the evidence received and taken by the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit at the past session be referred to the said committee and made part of the records thereof;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; and to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House accordingly.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Will this committee have the same authority as the committee set up last session? There is no change?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It will have the same authority. This is the motion that was passed at the last session, and the joint committee was established and held some meetings. It is now proposed to re-establish that joint committee. We have from the House of Commons an invitation to join with them in establishing a joint committee, and this motion simply authorizes us to do so. We will very shortly designate certain members of the Senate, in compliance with the motion.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Has the Commons already named its members of the committee?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The members have not yet been named. This is just a motion to appoint a joint committee.

Motion agreed to.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot, for the second reading of Bill S-2, respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I have no wish to delay the passing of this bill. However, I would in the very least like to compliment Senator Pouliot on the clear and capable manner in which he moved second reading. As I listened to his remarks, which indicated the most careful kind of research, and which were couched in clear and concise language, I could not help but feel that he would have made a wonderful professor of jurisprudence. However, the universities' loss is the public's gain.

I must say also that I share his basic premise—and I quote his words:

> I want the law to be clear, I want the law to be simple, and I want the law to be easy to understand.

The honourable senator said yesterday, as reported at page 105 of the Debates, that it took eight months to bring out the annual statutes. I think he meant eight weeks.

While I am not opposing the present bill, I do have some suggestions to make as to how the system of law revision might be improved for the future, perhaps following the present contemplated consolidation.

My first observation must be that there is too long a time between revisions, and my understanding is that from time to time the Canadian Bar Association has made recommendations to this effect. It was at first contemplated that there would be a revision every 20 years: hence the revisions of 1886, 1906 and 1927. There was a delay of 25 years between the revisions of 1927 and 1952, no doubt owing to the intervention of the war years.

I would like to point out that I am in good company when I say that there is too long a time between revisions. May I be permitted to read from the report of the Glassco Commission, volume 2, at page 384. The report contains this recommendation:

> It is customary, at rather prolonged intervals, to prepare and publish consolidations of the Statutes of Canada. This is a relatively expensive matter; the consolidation of 1952—the only one since 1927—cost roughly $500,000. Despite the cost, the importance of this service to the public suggests the need for more frequent consolidations, possibly every fifteen years. Consolidations could be more economically and rapidly prepared if the staff of the Department of Justice (temporarily enlarged, if need be) were employed rather than a special revising commission.

My own thought in the matter is that there might well be established a continuing committee which would continuously, and from year to year, prepare consolidations of the statutes. This would be invaluable preparatory work and would enable any commission which might be established in the future to perform the work of revision more often and more quickly. Perhaps, indeed, as a result of this kind of experiment, we might reach the position, as I understand to be the case in England, where the statutes are revised continually rather than periodically, by a committee known as the Statute Law Revision Committee.

I would like to quote from Dr. Olivier's book, entitled, British North America Acts and Selected Statutes 1867-1962, in which we have evidence that our own constitution was amended by that very committee, the Statute Law Revision Committee. The footnote at page 117 reads as follows:

> "The story of the amendments is simple. Periodically the British Parliament passes a Statute Law Revision Act, the object of which is to clear the English statute law of enactments which have either ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary, but which have not been expressly repealed. The revision Act is prepared by the Statute Law Committee, set up in 1868 by Lord Cairns to superintend the publication of the revised edition of the statutes." F. R. Scott in The Canadian Bar Review, April 1942, p. 340.

The schedule on the following page enumerates some of the amendments to our constitution that were made by this committee, namely, the Statute Law Revision of 1893:

> The British North America Act, 1867
>
> In part: namely,—
>
> From "Be it therefore" to "same as follows."
>
> Section two.
>
> Section four to "provisions" where it last occurs.
>
> Section twenty-five.
>
> Sections forty-two and forty-three.
>
> Section fifty-one, from "of the census" to "seventy-one and" and the word "subsequent."
>
> Section eighty-one.

Section eighty-eight, from "and the House" to the end of the section.

Sections eighty-nine and one hundred and twenty-seven.

Section one hundred and forty-five.

Repealed as to all Her Majesty's Dominions.

Rupert's Land Act, 1868.

Further amendments were made in 1927 repealing in part the B.N.A. Act of 1915 and amendments to the B.N.A. Act of 1916.

We are all aware that there are some statutes which are substantially amended every year or so. I name a few: Criminal Code, Canada Shipping Act, Income Tax Act, Customs Tariff and taxation laws in general. The result in many cases is a "dog's breakfast," which situation is only partly relieved by the publication from time to time of so-called office consolidations.

My further suggestion is that the taxation statutes, which impose a financial burden on the public, might well be published together in a separate volume. I now read the suggestion which I have before me.

Whenever it may be found necessary for better understanding of the law and for bringing this law up to date, the act with all its amendments should be introduced either in the House of Commons or in the Senate and the procedure in relation to the adoption of this revised, or consolidated act should be as follows:

The minister in the house, or the minister that is the Leader of the Government in the Senate, in introducing a measure should on first reading make a declaration that the bill he is introducting is simply a consolidation of the law as it stands at present, that no changes in substance are being made and that he asks the house for those reasons, by consent, that the bill should receive first, second and third reading without discussion.

This could very well be done early in the session, more particularly in the case of taxation measures, and would have the advantage for instance when the budget bills are introduced in the house to make easy the understanding and effect of these measures, as the members would then have before them the consolidated bill adopted earlier.

In conclusion, honourable senators, my own feeling is that most careful consideration should be given to the improvement of our system of statute revision, in order to make it speedier and more effective.

So far as the present bill is concerned, we have no alternative but to support it. Nor do we see any need for it to go to committee. For our part, we are quite prepared to have it dealt with on the floor of the house.

(Translation):

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not intend to deal with the principle of this bill. I agree with what Senators Pouliot and Choquette said.

I should like, however, to put a question to the sponsor of this bill.

Under section 5, the commission is authorized to make such minor amendments as are necessary to bring out more clearly what it deems to be the intention of parliament, etc.

The first paragraph of section 9 reads as follows:

> The Revised Statutes shall not be held to operate as new laws, but shall be construed and have effect as a consolidation and as declaratory of the law as contained in the acts and parts of acts so repealed, and for which the Revised Statutes are substituted.

My question is as follows: Is the second paragraph of section 9 not at variance with the principles set forth in the first paragraph of section 9 and in section 5 since it reads as follows:

> If upon any point the provisions of the Revised Statutes are not in effect the same as those of the repealed acts for which they are substituted, then . . . the provisions contained in them prevail.

I do not have to quote the rest. The provisions contained in them prevail. It seems to me that this legislation empowers more or less the Commission to amend the act. Evidently, the Commission would not do so intentionally but if it does, this change would effectively be enacted.

I looked up the previous act, that of 1948, and found the same provision. I have not had time to check if the meaning of that text has previously been discussed in this house or in the House of Commons or been the subject of a legal decision, but it seems to me that this provision goes very far because, once again, in principle, it gives the commission the right to amend any act, and that change will come into force when the revised statutes are published. It seems to me that it would be better to take the view that the text, as contained in the revised statutes, is supposed to be the law until such time as it is proven to be different from the text that was meant to be consolidated.

That is the question I am asking the sponsor of the bill. Since Senator Choquette said that this act would not be referred to a committee, I think it would be useful to me and to the Senate if we were reassured about the scope of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, in reply to the question asked by my honourable colleague, we would of course have to agree to do, with regard to sections 5 to 9, the work that the commission will be supposed to do about all the revised statutes. I will even admit that there may be some contradictions, but the question asked by Senator Flynn is extremely interesting. It is to the point and deserves to be studied thoroughly.

(Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ACT

BILL TO CHANGE NAME—SECOND READING

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the second reading of Bill C-2, respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill proposes the substitution of the name "Air Canada" for the name "Trans-Canada Air Lines", and the French equivalent Lignes aériennes Trans-Canada, wherever those words appear, either in the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act or any other statute or regulation.

The proposal to make this substitution in name is not something new; it is not novel; it is not even the inspiration of the moment, because when the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act was amended in 1952-53, among the provisions in the bill of that year which passed into law was one section which conferred a number of additional authorities on Trans-Canada Air Lines. One of them, section 6(2)(k), reads as follows:

> to use the words "Air Canada" as a trade name for any purpose connected with the business of the Corporation.

From 1953 until the present time you will find, if you study the advertising and documentation of Trans-Canada Air Lines, that in an increasing way the name Air Canada has been superimposed, and in many instances you will see "Air Canada", and underneath it, "Trans-Canada Air Lines". So I point out first that this is not an idea that was suddenly thought of, as a good idea, and then was reached out for and fastened on to. This is something of which the step now being taken is a sort of logical and natural culmination, after a proving period of 10 years.

Secondly, I would point out that in the beginning, when we established the Trans-Canada Air Lines, such a name for a purely domestic operation may have been perfectly proper. But in these times, with the extent of international operation and contacts that we have in the outside services of Trans-Canada Air Lines, it is misdescriptive, in my opinion, to use the title "Trans-Canada Air Lines". "Air Canada" is a much better description, and is one the connotation of which would be more easily understood in various countries of the world where the air line carries on or extends its operations today.

We have Air France, Air India, Swissair, Alitalia—and these designations are easily understood. There could be no possibility of conflict.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Aer Lingus.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I leave it to my friend, the Government Leader, to bring in the Irish air lines, which I assume my friend was referring to. However, the interjection my friend has just made is a potent reason in support of making use of this wording.

In the United States there is the Trans-Continental Air Lines, and when you get down to the trade mark "T.C.A." in various parts of that country you have a conflict right away. They ask, "What is T.C.A.? Is that Trans-Continental Air Lines?" I say this is just a case of Trans-Canada growing up, and becoming international as well as national, and we should use the connotation which will best fit that role. It is very fortunate too that in French and in English you use exactly the same words; at least in my poor French I would say it as I say it in English.

I suggest that this bill receive second reading and that it go to committee. I do so because I feel there are some amendments which should be made. One would be to make provision for the preservation of the name Trans-Canada Air Lines as a trade name and of T.C.A. as a trade mark, so that no other organization could attempt to make use of those once we adopt the name Air Canada. The form which that amendment will take can be settled by the legal advisers and will be prepared by the time this gets to committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by honourable Senator Hayden, seconded by honourable Senator Bouffard, that Bill C-2 intituled an act respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act be now read a second time.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by honourable Senator

Welch, that the motion for second reading of Bill C-2, intituled, "an act respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act" be amended by striking out the word "now," and by adding the words "this day six months," at the end of the question.

I wish to make a few remarks and I hope they will be very much to the point. I was somewhat surprised when this bill passed the other place and was forwarded to the Senate.

As honourable senators know, many members in the other place have a habit of introducing bills they really do not expect to pass and become law. They are quite content with the publicity they receive from such bills. I point to a classic example of this in the situation after Mr. Knowles was defeated—as honourable senators know, he was a past master at introducing private bills on every subject—and the same bills appeared on the Order Paper under Mr. Fisher's name, and the same speeches were made on them. When Mr. Knowles returned he found it difficult to get repossession of private bills.

It is my understanding that one of the objections to the name Trans-Canada Air Lines is that there is difficulty in translating it into French. Unfortunately, my French is so poor that I cannot comment on this. In fact, when I left Prince of Wales College, Mr. Blanchard, my French teacher, asked me to promise him that I would never try to speak French to any person who understood the language. Therefore, I shall not go into the merits of trying to translate "Trans-Canada" into French. On the other hand I feel that the term Air Canada is meaningless. It could be a radio wave, or a radar wave, and at this time of the year it could simply be a cold blast of air from the North Pole. It does nothing to convey the idea of an air line. In fact, one of my French-speaking friends told me that in his opinion Air Canada was as flat in French as it is in English.

Now, I realize that France uses the name Air France—and other nations have similar names—but France is a unilingual nation, whereas Canada is a bilingual nation. At the present time we have a royal commission studying bilingualism and biculturalism, and many people of both races are making a sincere effort to become bilingual, and yet we are now considering a bill which provides simply for a unilingual designation. I would point to the fact that most English-speaking people have accepted the term Air Canada as being the official French name of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and I find that many of them feel that the English name has been removed from the Crown corporation.

No mention has been made of the cost of introducing the new name, which I would point out to honourable senators would be considerable. All aircraft would have to be repainted, and you cannot repaint a DC-8, for example, for a song. In addition, the initials T.C.A. and the name Air Canada would both have to be removed from terminals. All bilingual tickets would have to be changed, as would uniforms and literature, and I suggest the cost would run well into millions of dollars.

I understand, as Senator Hayden points out, that there is some objection to the prefix "trans" in Trans-Canada Air Lines, on the basis that T.C.A. operates in other countries as well as in Canada. The same can be said of Canadian Pacific Air Lines, and I do not think they have run into any difficulties in this regard. I am not aware they are going to become "Air Pacific". I would point out to honourable senators who object to the prefix "trans" that the Oxford dictionary defines trans as "across, beyond, over, to, or on the further side." I realize we think of "trans" in its more narrow Latin meaning, but it does have the English meaning "beyond."

Honourable senators, if the Government or anyone else objects to the prefix "trans" I would suggest that the Government bring in a bill to change the name to one that would be acceptable in both our official languages, and which would convey to the world that Canada is a bilingual country. I would be happy to support such a measure. By adopting such a measure the Government would have an opportunity to put forward a new and bilingual name for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

(Translation):

Hon. P. H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, I find somewhat regrettable the motion that was just proposed, asking to allow six months as regards the translation into French of Trans-Canada Air Lines. This is one time when the French-speaking people of Canada have asked a government service to translate a name or to take such measures as will provide this company with a name that will be both French and English.

It is the first time also, to my knowledge, that a member of the Senate asks that a bill be put off for a period of six months, when the intention of the bill is just to express in English and French a name that will be agreeable to both races.

That question is not altogether new. I understand that it was submitted to the Trans-Canada Air Lines board of directors three or four years ago. I understand also that three or four years ago, T.C.A. accepted a resolution of its board of directors for a project which had been proposed, namely, to make the name perfectly bilingual. Moreover, I understand that it was the cabinet of that time which was responsible for the fact that it was not passed before now.

Is there any objection on the part of T.C.A. to a name which would be at the same time French and English?

We have now a very good opportunity to give a public service in Canada a name which will be understood by all throughout the world, and which will be at the same time French and English. Do we realize, in the circumstances, what is going on today? Do we realize the complaints of the province of Quebec with respect to the treatment given to French Canadians? It seems to me that this is no time to postpone for six months something which should have been done four years ago.

A great number of people in my province will consider this action as anti-French-Canadian, but I am convinced that the senator who made this suggestion had no such intention. Who is behind this action, this request, this motion? I do not know. It is extremely painful at the present time. Someone gave the reason that Air Canada either in French or in English, means "air coming from Canada". When we speak of Air France, are we talking of air coming from France? And in the case of Air India, is it air coming from India?

The word "trans" can apply either in French or in English to a flight made outside Canada. Very well. "Trans-Canada" means across Canada, not in Europe or in the Western countries.

I am really sorry to see that such a motion has been moved, for it will surely be misunderstood in Quebec. I hope that members of the Senate will not hesitate to adopt a bill which will have no other effect except give satisfaction to those who insist that Canada be bilingual and, also, that the name of the company be bilingual, since it provides such a service in Canada and elsewhere in the world, especially when provided by the Government.

I hope the bill is passed by a huge majority.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I also want to object to the motion submitted by Senator Phillips. The only argument I will mention among those he advanced in support of his motion—because he did not seem to attach great importance to any other—is, for instance, the cost resulting from a change of name, which would be the same if some other designation were to be agreed upon later, as he suggests. I therefore say that the only serious argument is that the name Air Canada would not be acceptable in English. Yet, Senator Hayden and various other senators to whom I was able to submit the matter did not seem to agree with him, as they all told me that it was an acceptable name in English. It nevertheless remains that, if this is a problem of semantics, it would certainly, to my mind, not be solved by a motion to postpone the discussion for six months—which means killing the bill which is now before the house.

The proper place to discuss that facet of the bill would certainly be the committee.

I think that if Senator Phillips admits that this is his only argument, i.e., whether "Air Canada" is acceptable in English, he will admit that the matter would be best discussed in committee. Therefore, if he agrees with me, I would, under the circumstances, suggest to him to withdraw his motion. Otherwise, his motion might obviously be wrongly interpreted.

I agree with Senator Bouffard that this is hardly the time to add, even unwittingly, to the dissension which may exist at present between French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians.

At any rate, if Senator Phillips maintains his motion, I hope the Senate will reject it without hesitation.

However, in all sincerity, I know Senator Phillips and I am sure that his only objection is one of semantics. I suggest to him once again that he has a good reason to withdraw his motion since the problem can be discussed in committee.

(Text):

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I would like to join with Senator Flynn in suggesting to my colleague (Hon. Mr. Phillips) that he withdraw his amendment, my reason being that in my view this bill is about the only sensible thing that has come to us from the other place since last April.

Why call an air line something that it is not? My honourable friend Senator Phillips said that "Trans-Canada" means something more than some English people attach to it, that some people think that "Trans-Canada" implies a line across Canada. I am sure that Trans-Canada Air Lines today covers more miles outside of Canada in the Caribbean and over the Atlantic than it covers in Canada.

I have another reason for saying what I do. In naming our Crown companies we have a sort of affluence of volubility. We attach names and letters to them, and so on, and it is awfully difficult half the time to know what they are. As the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) said a moment ago, we have Aer Lingus, Air France, and all these other European air lines which are called what they are. We have Pan American Airways because Pan American Airways was the first air line to go from the United States to the Caribbean. There is an endeavour to make these names accurate descriptions of what the air lines are.

My honourable friend said that it is going to cost a great deal of money to repaint the name on the planes, but I would think, judging from the rate of obsolescence of commercial aircraft, that not too much painting will be necessary. Every year there seems to be a new type of plane. This, surely, is not a relevant argument at all.

I do believe, honourable senators, that Air Canada is a sensible name to give this air line. It can be said that the name contains "Air" in English and "Canada" in French. Both languages are used, but, for heaven's sake, let us not give racial overtones to this mere matter of doing something that will be more efficient. Surely, this has nothing to do with biculturalism or whatever else exists in the way of disagreement and disaffection in this country.

We may have to face up to certain things in this country in the days ahead, but as far as possible let us not aggravate this by trying to introduce racial overtones into a simple proposition like this, to make a change in the name of an air line to give it a better name.

I hope the senator will withdraw his amendment, but if he does not I must say that I shall vote against it.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I had no intention of speaking on this bill, but there is one point I would like to draw to the attention of honourable senators. This is a private bill which was introduced in the other place, and has come to us now. There are no party connotations. The only reason I am speaking is that honourable Senator Bouffard, in his very good remarks, said he would like to know what was behind honourable Senator Phillips' motion.

I am sure that there is sincerity behind it; Senator Phillips is behind it, but whether or not anyone else is behind it I do not know. I do know that this is a private bill, and anyone who has spoken here today, including Senator Phillips, has spoken entirely his own mind and on his own behalf. It is a private bill and comes to us today for our private decision.

Honourable senators, I am in favour of the bill. I agree entirely with my good friend Senator O'Leary (Carleton), and with the other senators who have spoken, and evidently with all the members of the House of Commons, that to change "Trans-Canada Air Lines" to "Air Canada" would be a good idea.

I have not the least doubt that there are probably many people in Canada who agree with Senator Phillips, that possibly the semantics might be studied a little more, but as far as the big majority of the people in Canada are concerned I believe they are behind this bill. I feel it is logical, and I am sure that Senator Phillips will feel that if it went to committee and were studied there, this would meet his desire as much as having second reading withheld now. I will leave that to the wishes of honourable senators.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I intend to speak only for a few moments.

In the first place, I wish to tell the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) that this is not a private bill in the strict sense of the word. This is a public bill that was sponsored by a private member: it is a private member's public bill, and in that sense it is a public bill. In the sense that it is not a party measure, Government legislation officially sponsored by the Government, that is quite true.

There is a motion before the house, and it has to be disposed of by the house. It can be withdrawn only by consent, and I would think that such consent must be unanimous.

Perhaps the proceedings would be furthered if His Honour the Speaker would call for the contents and non-contents and perhaps he could gauge the sense of the house by doing it in that way.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words on this bill, because I have just returned from western Canada where I spoke to many people about the proposal contained in it. Nowhere did I find any dissent from the wisdom of this change of name from T.C.A.

Personally, I feel that the legislation is overdue. Indeed, I recall that there were suggestions previously that the name should be changed. I recall hearing that the Trans-Canada Air Lines management was at one time opposed because they said it would cost them a lot of money to paint the new name on its aircraft, and so on. However, I think the time has come when we should change the name, as is being proposed here.

As I said, I did not find anyone amongst those to whom I spoke in western Canada who made any suggestion that there were any overtones of bilingualism or anything like that connected with this proposal. All to whom I spoke deemed it to be a logical development in face of the fact that Trans-Canada Air Lines now is an international airline, that our airplanes travel all over the world and, therefore, the name "Trans-Canada" is now in fact a misnomer.

Consequently, I hope that there will be no disagreement in the Senate in regard to this bill.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I would like to say just a few words.

I believe that the question in this bill is really a matter of national interest. It was a great satisfaction to see that the principle of bilingualism was consecrated in this way. If the words "Air Canada" are not bilingual, I am sure it will be absolutely impossible to find any other name which would satisfy everybody.

It is quite common for English-speaking people to hear about Swissair, Air India, Air Liban. Those words are almost international. There is no reason now why we should perpetuate the expression "Trans-Canada" when our air lines now cover practically the whole world. The expression Air Canada is already used on travelling bags and for publicity purposes in France and elsewhere in Europe. T.C.A. represents a name which is confusing; it is used also by other lines, such as Transcontinental Air Lines and Trans Caribbean Air Lines.

I think the best answer we can find to the remarks by Senator Phillips is the editorial which was published in the Financial Post of Toronto, and which was the object of an editorial also of La Presse of Montreal, by Mr. Ayotte, on October 12, 1963.

The editorial of the Toronto newspaper was entitled: "Be Brave, Ottawa". Among other things, it said:

> The Government and T.C.A. show a remarkable restraint in using the words "Air Canada" except in a limited way and in appropriate places. But why should the government not call this service "Air Canada" while maintaining a double wording which is unsatisfactory. quite confusing and unnecessary.

I believe very sincerely that "Air Canada" is a fine and prestigious designation throughout the world for our air line, of which we are very proud.

The change would be a gradual change. Mr. MacGregor does not object to it. He wants to preserve also the right to use "Trans-Canada" for certain purposes, and that is perfectly correct. But the situation is as I described it, and I am speaking with much emotion.

This gesture of the House of Commons, the adoption of the measure by unanimous consent of all the parties agreeing upon this point, gave us the hope that the same thing would take place in this chamber.

Since I became a senator in 1940, this is the first time that I am faced with a motion which can have only a very bad result. We are trying to preach national unity. We want Canada to be more bilingual and, under the present circumstances, if the Senate defeats this bill, it will be interpreted by French-speaking Canadians as being a gesture which would simply mean that the door is closed and that we cannot hope for any satisfactory and fair solution to our present problems.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT WITHDRAWN

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Honourable senators, I am somewhat surprised that various senators commenced to interpret my motion as being anti-French.

I assure you that was not the case. I had thought that in my remarks I had asked for a bilingual name, a name that could be bilingual, which therefore would have covered any objections of this nature. I regret very much that some senators interpreted it as being anti-French.

My objections were based purely on a dislike of the name Air Canada, which to me is meaningless and does nothing to convey the idea of an air line. With the consent of the Senate, I am quite prepared to withdraw my motion. I would ask that the committee give consideration to my suggestion, that we attempt to find a better name, a new name for the air line, that will be more meaningful in both languages. May I have the consent of the Senate to withdraw my motion?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, has the honourable senator permission to withdraw his motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion in amendment withdrawn.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by the honourable Senator Hayden, seconded by the honourable Senator Bouffard, that this bill be now read a second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-7, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act".

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, in asking that this item on the Order Paper stand, I should say that it was the intention of the honourable Senator Bouffard to explain this bill, this afternoon. For various reasons, including the need to get the bill to committee so that people who have asked to make representations should have ample opportunity to do so, I would appreciate it if by consent the bill could be placed on the Order Paper for second reading tomorrow immediately after second reading of Bill S-6, to incorporate Bank of Western Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 12, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

BIRTH OF A PRINCE—ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

> Resolved: That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:
>
> To Her Most Excellent Majesty Elizabeth the Second, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and her other Realms and Territories, Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:
>
> Most Gracious Sovereign:
>
> We, Your Majesty's...Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, respectfully desire to offer our loyal and warm congratulations to Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip on the birth of a son, and to assure Your Majesty that this happy event gives the Members of the ... House of Commons of Canada great joy and satisfaction.
>
> Ordered:—That the said Address be engrossed.
>
> Ordered:—That a message be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this House has passed an Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen, expressing congratulations on the occasion of the birth of a Prince, and requesting their Honours to unite with this House in the said Address.
>
> Attest.
>
> Léon J. Raymond
>
> Clerk of the House of Commons

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks):

> That the Senate do agree with the House of Commons in the said Address by filling up the blank spaces left therein with the words "Senate and".

Honourable senators, I may say at the outset there are four motions that are to be presented to the Senate in connection with the message which has reached us from the House of Commons. I think it now appropriate to comment upon the message. This message gives us an opportunity to express our deep pleasure that Her Majesty the Queen was delivered of a third Prince of the Realm, her fourth child, two days ago.

As I indicated last Tuesday evening, at this time our beautiful opening prayer was all the more fervent, I think, when Mr. Speaker asked Almighty God to behold our Most Gracious Sovereign lady, Queen Elizabeth.

This news is received with great satisfaction in every part of the Western world and, indeed, beyond the West. Her Majesty is the Queen of Canada. Her visits to this country and, indeed, her presence in this chamber at the opening of her Parliament of Canada in 1957, we remember with respectful affection. At a time like this, one thinks of such occasions that Her Majesty graced, and I am sure that all honourable senators have personal recollections of this kind.

I have often thought of the tremendous impression she made in Westminster Hall in 1959, when the Atlantic Congress was opened there and when delegates from all the NATO countries were present. The atmosphere created by the presence and the speech of Her Majesty on that occasion was one of those intangible factors which seemed not only to bind the delegates together in their pursuit of means to defend the West but, as well, it fortified their determination to preserve the peace of the world. The dignity and, indeed, the beauty of that occasion clarified resplendently the truth which lay behind the objectives of the NATO alliance.

Of the 18 nations of the Commonwealth, both developed and developing, Her Majesty is a symbol of good, of order and of peace. But there is more than this. Her family life, her personal deportment and the messages which she has given through modern means of communication to the Commonwealth and to the world have brought her personally to the hearths and into the hearts of the people she has addressed. There is great significance too in the fact that many of these messages have come at Christmas which is preeminently the feast of the home. In this she continues in the tradition created by her father and, indeed, by her grandfather. It is a tradition which has been shaped by a devotion to the interests of the people over whose destiny she has been called upon to preside.

To His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, whose interest in this country and its development has been so often demonstrated by his visits here with the Queen as well as on missions of his own, we express our pleasure at the birth of his third son.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, I wish to tell the Senate how much the people of Canada rejoice in the birth of a new prince, a son, to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, Queen of Canada.

It is a welcome addition to the royal family. It strengthens Her Majesty's devotion to her family and to the idea of the Christian home which she holds dear.

This is indeed a very happy event and we extend to Her Majesty our most loyal congratulations.

(Text):

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, it was good news indeed that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) gave us last Tuesday, when he told us that a prince had been born to the Royal Family. It was one of the few rays of sunshine that this world has received so far as news is concerned during the last few months.

I have the honour this afternoon of seconding the motion of the honourable the Leader of the Government. I consider it a great honour to express on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition the joy and happiness we feel. This is a most happy event, and one which, as the honourable the Leader of the Government has told us, is shared not only by the loyal subjects of Her Majesty in the Commonwealth but also by most people in the world. The birth of a child, whether it happens in a palace or in a cottage, is an event which touches the heart and which makes the whole world kin.

The honourable the Leader of the Government has spoken of the Royal Family as being a "home family". I think that is one of the many reasons why the Queen has held and holds the affection of her subjects in all parts of the world. The Royal Family sets an example of love and affection in their home.

In events of this kind the husband seems usually to be forgotten; thus, I was very pleased to hear the remarks of the honourable the Leader of the Government on this occasion with respect to His Royal Highness Prince Philip. Prince Philip is a great man. He would have been a great man quite apart from the honours he holds as the husband of the Queen. We are told that he would have been a great scientist, and I think he has shown every indication of that. He would have been a prominent businessman, and we all know that he is and has been a renowned sportsman.

One of the greatest attributes of Her Majesty the Queen is not so much her queenliness—there is no more that can be desired in that respect—but the wonderful example that she has set to the womanhood and motherhood of the world.

If I may be excused, honourable senators, for mentioning a personal experience, I may say that I had the honour as Minister of Veterans Affairs to accompany Her Majesty on four different occasions. On the first occasion I was very nervous, and I wondered what I would have to say to the Queen of the United Kingdom and Canada, but, through her graciousness, it was very easy to talk. I recall that the subject we discussed most was home life. She asked me about my family, and she spoke about her own family. At that time Prince Charles was going to school, and she spoke of how well he was getting along there, both in his studies and in athletics. She was a proud mother and, like any other mother, was very happy that she had a good, all-round son.

There is nothing further I can say, but I would like to read to you the remarks made a few days ago by a very distinguished senator. These are words that any loyal subject of Her Majesty in any part of the Commonwealth or the world would be very proud to utter.

The honourable Senator Cyrille Vaillancourt opened his speech on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, with these remarks in French:

> My first words are for the Queen of Canada. Long live the Queen and may her reign be a happy one! I said before and I repeat that as Queen of the Commonwealth, as Queen of Canada and as Queen of all our homes, our sovereign is a model. She is also a model for all the mothers in the world.

No finer thing could have been said by anyone. Later in his speech, Senator Vaillancourt said:

> Therefore, I take off my hat and I say: "Long live our Queen! May she come and visit us, and we shall greet her as gentlemen!"

I say, honourable senators, "God bless the Queen and God bless her family." Long may she reign.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I now move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks):

That the Honourable the Speaker do sign the said Address to Her Majesty the Queen on behalf of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered, That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that house that the Senate do agree to the Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations on the birth of a Prince, and have inserted in the blank spaces therein the words "Senate and".

ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks):

That the following Address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Governor General, namely:—

To His Excellency General the Right Honourable Georges P. Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, upon whom has been conferred the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-chief of Canada:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

The Senate ... of Canada, in Parliament assembled, have agreed to an Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations to Her Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip on the birth of a Prince, and respectfully request that Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit the said Address to Her Majesty the Queen.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks):

That the Honourable the Speaker do sign the said address to His Excellency the Governor General on behalf of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered, That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that the Senate have passed an Address to His Excellency the Governor General respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit the Joint Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations on the birth of a Prince, and requesting the House of Commons to unite with this House in the said Address.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) tabled:

Budget Papers, 1964-65, for the information of Parliament, as follows:

Part I—Economic Review of 1963.

Part II—A preliminary review of the Government Accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964. (English and French texts).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Have these papers been distributed?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I cannot answer as to that, but I shall look into the matter and let the honourable senator know.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ACT

BILL TO CHANGE NAME—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Harold Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-2, respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Strike out clause 2 and substitute therefor the following:—

2. All property, rights, obligations and liabilities that existed, and anything done by or to Trans-Canada Air Lines before the coming into force of this Act shall be deemed to be property, rights, obligations and liabilities, and to have been done by or to or acquired or incurred by Air Canada.

2. Immediately after clause 2, insert the following as clause 3:—

3. Paragraph (k) of subsection (1) of section 14 of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(k) to use the words "Air Canada" "Trans-Canada Air Lines", "Lignes aeriennes Trans-Canada", or any abbreviation thereof, as a trade name, mark or designation for any purpose connected with the business of the Corporation, and no other person shall hereafter use any such name, mark or designation for any purpose.

3. Renumber clause 3 as clause 4.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Now.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North) moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North), presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-2, respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

PRIVATE BILL

THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE CANADIAN BRANCH OF THE ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Kinley moved the third reading of Bill S-5, respecting The General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot moved the third reading of Bill S-2, respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish to thank my colleague, the honourable Senator Choquette, for his kind words and his practical suggestions. I must add that I had a conference with the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) with respect to the important question asked by the honourable Senator Flynn, and it was understood, after careful examination, that I should write to the Leader about it and he would submit my letter to the Minister of Justice, to be considered at the time the bill comes before the House of Commons. I hope that will be satisfactory.

I thank you all, honourable colleagues, for the interest that you have shown in such an important matter as the revision of the Statutes of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard for the second reading of Bill S-6, to incorporate Bank of Western Canada.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, in rising to speak on Bill S-6, I wish to state that I am opposed to the establishment of additional banks, because I feel the people of Canada are adequately served by the present chartered banks, and I shall endeavour, as briefly as possible, to outline my reasons for this belief. Perhaps if there were a request for only one chartered bank I would not hold the same view, but I believe we all know that a number of applications are now before the house for consideration, or in prospect, and there is no telling just how many more there may be in the near future.

Honourable senators, the Bank Act clearly outlines the conditions under which a new commercial bank may be established. No one can object, in principle, to a move in this direction by a responsible group of private Canadian residents who have adequate resources, financial backing, character, reputation, and a record of good general business performance to support such a move and give our Government the necessary assurances that such a bank would, in fact, operate successfully and not eventually fall into the hands of other banks, as occurred on a number of occasions years ago.

However, I think we should consider this point: Is there a need for another chartered bank, or for several new chartered banks? I believe we are all aware that applications will be presented for additional charters, possibly several, in the very near future.

Honourable senators probably noticed in the Montreal Gazette this morning an editorial headed, "Still Another Bank in the Making", and it goes on to refer to an application for one by the Province of Quebec. In fact, I was approached about a week ago to see if I would support and be interested in a new chartered bank for the Maritime provinces. It is safe to say that none of us knows whether there will be four, five or a thousand applications for charters; but there is certainly reason to think that there may be 50 or even 100 new banks asking for charters within the next few years. That fact backs up what I have to say, that in my opinion we have sufficient chartered banks at the present time. I am of the opinion that the present Canadian chartered banks, with their branches in every province, are quite capable of taking care of our financial requirements.

For the information of honourable senators, I have prepared a list of the branches in each province as of January 31 of this year, and I am going to quote these because I think it will help to back up the statement I am making, that the people of this country are adequately served by the present banks and their branches. These are the figures:

	Branches
Newfoundland	88
Prince Edward Island	26
New Brunswick	121
Nova Scotia	180
Quebec	1,517
Ontario	1,977
Manitoba	256
Saskatchewan	303
Alberta	433
British Columbia	547
Yukon	8
Northwest Territories	7

In 1936 the Canadian chartered banks had 3,448 branches. By 1961 these had grown to 5,225, and by January 31 of this year—the figures I have just quoted—there were 5,643 branches in Canada. In addition—and this, I think, is important when we are considering the banking service in this country—these same chartered banks have 180 branches outside of Canada.

A widely distributed and efficient network of banking offices has always been essential to any banking system, particularly in rendering services to its customers—and perhaps that was never more true than it is today. Branch banking, as it has developed in Canada has, I believe, shown it is capable of meeting this need admirably, from the earliest times up to the present day.

I believe the figures I have just quoted support my claim that Canada does not need more chartered banks. There is only a certain amount of business in Canada. True, it is growing year by year, and we all trust that this growth will continue; but for the present, in my opinion, any new chartered banks would have to take some of their business from the existing ones. Not only will a new bank take business from the existing chartered banks, but I believe they will have to recruit at least a portion of their staff from the present established banks.

I think we all agree the cost of doing business in every line—and this applies equally to the banks—is increasing all the time; and the addition of new chartered banks will make it more difficult for a new bank to recruit its staff. Further, should a number of new banks be chartered it will, in my opinion, make the situation that much harder and have a tendency to increase the cost of doing business to an even greater extent than at present.

There is another reason why I feel additional chartered banks are not necessary to our economic growth—that is, the relative rates of growth of the chartered banks and competing financial institutions. I believe it is generally agreed that the banks are not progressing as rapidly as other financial institutions. From 1955 to 1960 the Canadian dollar deposits of chartered banks increased by slightly over 19 per cent. By contrast, in the same period the shares and deposits of credit unions increased by 98 per cent, the deposits and certificates of 17 trust companies increased by 90 per cent, the deposits and debentures of seven mortgage companies increased by 60 per cent, and the notes and debentures of finance companies increased by 89 per cent.

The chartered banks' share of the savings deposit business is still large, but the significant point is that the rate of growth of other institutions in the field is substantially greater than that of the chartered banks, and the share of the community's total money deposits going into chartered banks is declining steadily on a long-term basis. A fundamental reason, in my opinion, for this trend is the ability of the competing institutions to pay more attractive rates on savings deposits. Another and, perhaps, a very important reason why credit unions are growing so fast is the easy manner in which deposits can be made and borrowings arranged. We must remember that very many members of the credit unions never had bank savings accounts, but it is amazing the number there are today who have savings accounts with the credit unions.

When a petition comes before this honourable Senate to grant a charter to a new bank several things must be considered: firstly, the need for an additional bank; secondly, whether the proposed bank can meet all the requirements of the Bank Act; and, lastly, the primary functions of a chartered bank, and how the Canadian chartered banks have fulfilled their obligations.

In introducing Bill S-6, the honourable Senator Leonard referred to various other financial institutions which have an interest in the incorporation of the new bank, and with which the provisional directors are prominently connected. Among these institutions are: York Trust and Savings Corporation, Wellington Financial Corporation Ltd., and Canadian Finance and Investments Limited.

In this connection I might also refer to an enterprise known as British International Finance (Canada) Limited, of which I believe Mr. Stevens, one of the provisional directors of the new bank, is president. According to various press reports, for example, in the Financial Post of August 24, 1963, British International Finance (Canada) Limited owns or has a substantial interest in a considerable array of mortgage, finance, trust and investment companies. In addition to the York

Trust and Savings Corporation and the Wellington Financial Corporation Ltd., some of the other financial institutions which are partly or wholly owned by British International Finance (Canada) Limited are, I believe, the Scarboro Finance Corporation, Simcoe Retail Acceptance Limited, Guardian Growth Fund Limited, Cardiff Investments Limited, and First Canadian Mortgage Corporation.

The point of referring to these various financial institutions which appear to be very closely associated with the backers of the proposed new bank, is to seek clarification as to exactly what role it is expected that the bank will play. Is the Bank of Western Canada to stand on its own feet as a chartered bank under the terms of the Bank Act, or is it to be in some sense an adjunct to this group of associated finance, trust and investment companies?

If there is any indication that the operations of the new bank are to be integrated in any way with the operations of this closely related group of other financial institutions, the question arises whether this is appropriate within the present terms of the Bank Act. For example, with respect to the rates which may be charged and the kind of security which may be taken, there are limitations on chartered bank operations which do not apply to other financial institutions. If the new bank were to be only a modest segment of a network of related financial institutions, with overlapping ownership and executive control, it might be rather difficult to establish whether the operations of the bank as such were separate from the other operations and were clearly within the present terms of the Bank Act.

If there is any suggestion that the promoters of the new bank are counting on changes in the Bank Act which would modify some of the distinctions between banks and other financial institutions, this would be an argument in favour of postponing consideration of the new charter until the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance has reported and until the conclusion of the Bank Act revision proceedings. However, any proposal to incorporate a new bank at the present time must be solely on the basis of the present Bank Act.

These references to the financial companies and other financial institutions with which Mr. Stevens and Mr. Coyne are associated are particularly significant in the light of some indications in the press as to the type of banking business in which the proposed bank would seek to specialize. I believe that the spokesmen for the new bank have referred to "aggressive merchandising in the field of retail banking." Some of you have, no doubt, read these articles, one in the Financial Post of December 21, 1963 and another in the Globe and Mail of February 11, 1964. Quite frankly, I am not sure what is meant by the phrase "retail banking," but it would seem to suggest emphasis on consumer credit, possibly through the medium of personal instalment loans. This is, of course, the area of financing associated prominently with finance companies, and it might be questioned whether it is appropriate to form a new chartered bank to engage mainly in this rather limited activity. A reasonable proportion of the funds acquired by a chartered bank might normally be invested in consumer credit, but there could perhaps be legitimate doubts as to whether a very large proportion of a bank's resources should be invested in this one category of asset. In Canada the deposits of a chartered bank, whatever their technical form, are in practice demand obligations. There might, therefore, be some question from the point of view of the depositors as to whether there ought not to be a better balance of assets from the point of view of ensuring adequate liquidity.

From time to time in Canada there have been periods of credit restriction imposed on the chartered banks by the operation of the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada. For example, the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada for the year 1956 outlined in some detail the efforts of the Bank of Canada during that year to bring about at least some moderation of the rate of increase of consumer credit, particularly in the form of instalment finance. I believe that the report indicates that there was a good deal of co-operation from the chartered banks to this end, but that agreement could not be reached with the major instalment finance companies.

In a speech given in Vancouver on June 29, 1960, the then Governor of the Bank of Canada remarked that, "rapid expansion of consumer credit can hardly be regarded as conducive to stable growth, and the use of bank credit for this purpose obviously cannot take priority over the requirements of normal commercial loans." The point of these references is to inquire what the situation might be for a bank which specialized heavily in consumer finance, if monetary policy should indicate the desirability of restraining or cutting back this form of financing in order, during a period of credit stringency, to make adequate provision from the limited resources available for the necessary financing of productive industrial and commercial activity.

Another aspect of the proposed operations of the new bank is its regional character. One of the great sources of strength of the Canadian chartered banks has been that they are nation-wide institutions, providing a full range of banking services to communities all across the country. This has contributed in an important way to the mobility of capital in Canada. Enterprises and communities with worthwhile projects, including many in western Canada, have been able to obtain access to financial resources far beyond the volume of local saving. The proposed new bank seems to represent a move in a different direction. One indication I have seen was to the effect that all loans and investments would be made "as far as possible in the same areas as deposits are received." It seems to me that if this approach were strictly applied it would lead to a very cumbersome and uneconomic, and perhaps inequitable, allocation of credit.

Perhaps some of you noticed in this week's Financial Post the editorial which said that there were "too many getting into the act." It says in the body of the article:

> . . . a plethora of small new banks raises a host of large new questions.
>
> How well protected is the ordinary depositor if the competition among many new banks gets too rough?
>
> What would happen to Canadian banking if, in a fiercely competitive situation, the smaller banks joined forces with U.S. banks to get the new financial backing that they suddenly found was necessary?
>
> Is it in the over-all public interest to have a commercial bank partly owned by a government, as under Premier Bennett's plans?
>
> What happens to the stability of the banking system if each province decides to open a bank and steer suppliers toward it and away from the established banks?

That is part of an editorial in the Financial Post for the current week.

All of these questions that I have asked lead up to a consideration of what is fundamentally involved in the granting of a charter to do banking business under the terms of the Bank Act. What, if any, are the obligations inherent in a charter under this act? Is it not fair to say that a bank which is chartered under the Act is expected to provide a comprehensive banking service? This includes providing short-term funds for working capital purposes to business and industry as well as what the sponsors of the bill have called "retail banking."

If the bank is intended to operate mainly as a special kind of finance company, or if it is intended mainly to attract savings deposits which may in practice be invested through the network of other associated finance companies, is it appropriate that an operation of this sort should be carried on with the benefit of a charter under the terms of the Bank Act? Would a banking institution operated on such narrow lines be in a sound position to meet its liabilities to depositors in a period of financial stringency or economic adversity?

I think an important aspect of the chartered banks' function is to gather funds from those who have surpluses and to make them available for use by others in the economy. One of the primary functions of a chartered bank, therefore, is to loan these funds to persons, companies, or governments, under careful supervision, so that they may pay interest to their depositors.

It may interest honourable senators to know that in 1945 interest on deposits in the Canadian chartered banks amounted to $34.8 million, and that by 1961 this figure had grown to $290.8 million. Interest paid on deposits is now the largest single item of expense of any bank.

Of Canadian dollar deposits in chartered banks in 1961, personal savings amounted to 53.7 per cent of the total. In 1935 the average size of individual savings accounts was $365, and by 1961 the average of these accounts was $711.

I think also of particular interest to banking circles is the fact that not since 1923 has there been a bank failure in Canada. Thus, for a generation no Canadian has lost a night's sleep worrying about the safety of his money in the bank. Indeed, the Canadian banking system enjoys a world-wide reputation for soundness and stability, and this in itself has been a factor of no small significance in the nation's economic development.

A little over a year ago, while I was a delegate to the United Nations in New York, I was invited to a luncheon given by the president and directors of one of the larger United States banks. I was pleased to hear the president say that the Canadian banking system was the envy of the world.

I know some people are going to say—I have heard it said within the last few days, but not in this chamber—that the chartered banks play a prominent part in our labour situation. I quite agree that they do. I went to the trouble of getting some information. According to a survey made as of October 31, 1961, the banks gave employment to a staff of 27,846 males and 36,511 females—a total of 64,357. In addition, of course, there were some 5,000 and more wage earners. The chartering of more banks will not necessarily increase this part that the banks are playing in the employment situation. In fact, as I mentioned earlier, where there is just a certain amount of money available it probably would not increase employment to any great extent.

When Senator Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-6, he mentioned the fact that it would be of special interest to those senators from west of the Great Lakes, because the name of the bank would be Bank of Western Canada and its head office would be in Winnipeg. He also mentioned that no Canadian bank had a head office west of Toronto. In this connection it is interesting to note that of the five provisional directors, three are from the City of Toronto, in the Province of Ontario, and there is one each from the provinces of Manitoba and Alberta. I am not sure whether the directors will all be from the west or not, but this is what the list of provisional directors shows.

According to the Financial Post of March 7, 1964, the Royal Bank of Canada is going to erect a 16- or 18-storey building in downtown Winnipeg to house the bank's Manitoba headquarters. This would lead one to believe that the Royal Bank of Canada, one of the chartered banks, is certainly preparing to be in a position to give good banking service to the western provinces. One should also consider the fact that the four western provinces are now served by 1,539 branches of the Canadian chartered banks, and this figure does not include all the provincial savings banks, the various credit unions and all the other savings associations that have grown up. As I mentioned earlier, other applications for bank charters are on record, and I know that another application will follow this one. It was only about a week ago that some of us from the Maritime provinces were approached as to whether we might be interested in supporting a bank in the east.

Hon. Mr. Baird: You have snowbanks instead.

Hon. Mr. Blois: We have snowbanks, but they are not, thank heaven, as large as those in Newfoundland.

In respect to a bank in the Maritime provinces, I gave it as my opinion that Canada was presently adequately served by the Canadian chartered banks.

Honourable senators, I would suggest that, as we are still awaiting the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, the Government and this honourable body can justifiably tell the sponsors of the Bank of Western Canada, and those sponsoring other banks, that their applications will be held in abeyance until the findings of the royal commission have been tabled and considered, and also that it may even be necessary to delay these new applications until the revision of the Bank Act, due in 1964, has been completed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must inform you that if the honourable Senator Leonard speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, in closing this debate I shall endeavour to make my remarks mercifully brief.

First, I must express my appreciation to those senators who have spoken in this debate. While I do not think it is incumbent upon the mover of the second reading of the bill to answer all of the arguments that are advanced, particularly where, as in this case, I have no special personal interest in the bill, nevertheless I am sure that the comments that have been made in this chamber, whether in support of the bill or against it, will receive the careful consideration of those who are applying for this charter. When the bill reaches committee, as I assume it will, honourable senators will be able to have their comments dealt with by those who are applying for this charter.

May I say to Senator McCutcheon that I am sorry if I left him with the impression that this was a routine matter, because such was not my intention. Indeed, the incorporation of a new bank in Canada is, in my view, a extremely important matter.

What I was endeavouring to do—and perhaps unskillfully—was to separate the various stages in the legislative progress of a bill to incorporate a new bank, and to point out that in so far as the second reading stage was concerned, the Bank Act, as I understood it, did set out a code for the incorporation of a bank, a code that must be complied with by those seeking the incorporation.

Having satisfied that code and established that it had complied with it, then the bill could move on to the more important stage, in my view, namely, the committee stage, where at that time those who are proposing the new charter could come before the committee—in this case our Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce—and the committee could collect all the relevant evidence as to the need and the desirability, the wisdom and the judgment, required in connection with establishing a new bank. It could examine those who are proposing it, find out who they are, what their qualifications are; it could ask Mr. Stevens, for instance, what his connections are, have him satisfy Senator Blois, as I hope he can, as to his associations, and give the necessary evidence as to the share capital, the intentions of those proponents of the new bank, and how and where it is to operate.

In addition to this special evidence from those who are asking for the incorporation of this bank, the committee could seek also general evidence as to the banking business. I myself would hope that, for example, we would have before the committee the Inspector-General of Banks, to give general evidence with respect to banking institutions in Canada. Possibly we might have the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, who, as we all recognize, is a very able Governor of the Bank of Canada. In this committee stage, all this very necessary and very relevant evidence would be obtained.

It was due to my feeling that this would be the more important stage, that I had the conversation with Senator McCutcheon to which he referred yesterday. I desire to confirm my understanding with him, namely, that I am prepared, as far as I can give this undertaking, that the bill would not be reported out of committee until the members of the committee had seen the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance and had had an opportunity to study it, and then to consider this bill in the light of that report.

There were two other observations which honourable Senator McCutcheon made on which I wish to comment, but neither my comments nor his observations derogate from that understanding. He suggested that the report of the royal commission might not be out for two or three months. Of course, none of us can make an accurate estimate on that. I am just expressing my hope that the report would be out next month. The other observation he made related to his reserving his position that after the report of the royal commission was out, he might wish then to say that in his view the application, and any other application for a charter, should not be proceeded with until the Bank Act had been revised. I quite respect and recognize his position in that regard. At the same time, other senators, including myself, are free to argue that there is no necessity to wait until the revision of the Bank Act.

I might put forward some comments on that at the present time, so that they may be considered by Senator McCutcheon, Senator Blois and others.

There are very different considerations applying to the question of the revision of the Bank Act from those applying to the report of the royal commission. One is that a good deal of time is required after an act of incorporation passes Parliament, before a bank can commence business. It has to take steps in order to get its shares issued and its directors elected. Also, it cannot start business until it receives a certificate from the Treasury Board. There is a period of one year within which that certificate may be issued by the board.

Then there is a further point, that this charter, if granted, like the charters of all chartered banks presently in existence, expires now on July 1, 1964, subject to the extension it is intended to make, namely, to July 1, 1965. The Bank Act, as revised, will then apply to this charter, if granted, and to all charters of other banks. Therefore, the revised Bank Act will have a retroactive effect, which means that the charter should, in my view, more properly be granted before rather than after the revision of the Bank Act. If the charter is granted after the revision of the Bank Act, it will not come again before Parliament for consideration, for a period of perhaps eight, nine or ten years.

I would point, as a precedent, to what happened when the last charter was granted. The Mercantile Bank of Canada was incorporated in 1953 and the revision of the Bank Act took place one year later, in 1954. So the Mercantile Bank's charter, like the charters of the other banks, became subject to whatever was put in the revised Bank Act as to its operations.

I have one last point, and that is to refer to those other applications for charters of which we have read in the newspapers and which Senator Blois mentioned today. If other such applications do reach the stage of a bill before this chamber, I am sure that all honourable senators will agree that each one should be considered on its own merits.

As to this particular bill now before us, I think it is only fair that it be entitled to the approval of Parliament on its own merits, regardless of whether it is the only application or whether there are other applications. It should neither be prejudiced nor suffer any impairment of its entitlement merely because of other applications, possible or actual, or because of the considerations that may apply to other applications.

The proponents of this bank are prepared to submit their case on its merits to the most careful scrutiny and examination of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce in order that the members of the committee may satisfy themselves as to whether or not it is right and proper to have the Bank of Western Canada added to the present banking system, strong and efficient as the present banking system is.

For that purpose, if the Senate now gives the bill second reading, I shall then move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Hon. the Speaker: It has been moved by the honourable Senator Leonard, seconded by the honourable Senator Inman, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Horner: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the second reading of Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I can assure you that a discussion of the Canada Shipping Act is not an easy task. Crossing the St. Lawrence river between Quebec City and Levis, and Riviere du Loup and Murray Bay, has not helped me at all to become better acquainted with the Canada Shipping Act.

The Canada Shipping Act has approximately 758 sections. Some of them are extremely difficult to understand. Probably that is because the act is always involved in one way or another with conventions concerning navigation which have been passed by several countries in the world, and which apply to the act.

For a long time I have wondered what is the best way to obtain a clear understanding of the 37 sections contained in this bill S-7, which proposes to amend the Canada Shipping Act, and I have come to the conclusion that the best way is to examine the conventions which have been amended during the past two or three years, and to find out which sections of the present bill apply to the amendments of the conventions, which I shall enumerate in a moment. Some of the amendments proposed have nothing to do with the conventions, but they are few in number and are more easily explained. I have examined the bill, therefore, and in order to explain it I propose to enumerate the conventions that have taken place, to which Canada has been a party concerning navigation and its rules and regulations.

The first convention we need to look at to consider the different sections of the bill is the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, which was first passed in 1929, was then considerably amended and revised in 1948, and again revised in 1960. In 1948 we passed a few amendments to the Canada Shipping Act to conform with the 1948 convention, and since Canada will be a party to the convention of 1960 it is proposed that a revision of the Canada Shipping Act be made to conform with the new articles or new amendments of the convention. The sections of the present bill which relate to the Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea are section 1 and sections 6 to 27 inclusive.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Who proposed the convention?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I understand the conventions are usually passed in London, between great numbers of maritime countries. As a matter of fact, the Convention for Safety of Life at Sea was discussed between at least 15 countries, of which seven must have one million tons of shipping per year, and of which at least eight have less tonnage but are also important in navigation. The 1960 convention has been discussed in London, but whether only in London, I do not know. As a matter of fact, of the countries having one million tons of shipping a year to make the convention applicable, only one country is missing, namely, the United Kingdom, which at the present time is considering the amendments necessary to continue to be part of the convention. I am given to understand that this convention is going to become applicable within a very short time, because the United Kingdom is going to pass the amendments to conform with the 1960 convention for safety at sea.

The second convention to which this bill relates is the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil. The only section of the bill which relates to that convention is section 28, which I will explain later.

The third convention is the International Convention Relating to the Limitation of Liability of Owners of Seagoing Ships. This convention was passed for the first time in 1957, and was amended in 1961, and all countries which became parties to the convention are at the present time passing the necessary legislation to conform with the new setup of the convention, which is the limitation of the responsibility not only of the owners of shipping but also of officers who may, directly or indirectly, be responsible for damages caused by accident.

The fourth convention is the British Commonwealth Shipping Agreement of 1931. The only section of the bill which applies to that convention is section 35. So at the present time we have article 1 and articles 6 to 27 which relate to the convention for safety at sea, and article 28 which relates to the convention for prevention of pollution of the sea by oil. The third is the convention for the limitation of liability, articles 31 to 34.

The fourth convention is the Merchant Shipping Agreement of 1961, a convention of which Canada is a party and which is related to the coastal trade.

I do not intend, of course, to give all the details of the articles, of each of the sections which are amended by this act, because it would be too cumbersome and would require a tremendously detailed explanation. The bill will be referred to a committee, if it passes second reading, and there will be present at the committee officers of the Department of Transport to give explanations and to answer any questions with reference to the articles. I may be able to answer questions put to me about these articles, but I must confess that I am not too well acquainted with the details of the Canada Shipping Act or with the different regulations which have been passed and discussed at these different conventions. However, it is quite in order to say that each one of these conventions has been accepted by the main maritime countries of the world, and the amendments which were made to the conventions were the result of experiences they had since the passing of the last previous convention. The amendments are not complicated for one who understands details of navigation, but they would be extremely complicated for a layman like myself, and I am confident this would apply also to many other members of the Senate.

I will commence my discussion of the bill with the sections to amend the convention for safety at sea, being article 1 and articles 6 to 27 inclusive.

Article 1 deals with definitions only, and these definitions have been changed by the convention to a certain extent. For instance, the new convention applied to a nuclear ship —the first time it was mentioned in any of these conventions, probably because such a vessel did not exist at the time of the last agreement of 1948. At the present time its existence is a fact, and consequently the convention contains certain rules concerning the nuclear ship, and it is in the definition also.

Some other definitions have been slightly changed. A change has been made according to the classification of "passenger ship" "nuclear ship", and "cargo vessel". Things like that have been differently defined than they were in the last convention. So if Canada is going to be a party to that convention it has also to change the definitions which apply under the present act, to conform with the definitions contained in the new convention. There is nothing very important in article 1.

If we now go to sections 6 to 27 you will find that in most cases these amendments relate to the classification of certificates. They have a much larger number of certificates than they used to have. Previously there was no certificate for nuclear ships. They will have one now. They have changed to a certain extent the classification of passenger boats and cargo vessels, according to their tonnage. Certificates have to be changed, and they have been changed in the convention. Consequently, if we want to be a party to the convention, these have also to be changed in our own act.

Some changes have also occurred with regard to the inspection of ships. They are no worse for the shipowners. In some cases a relief is involved, because inspections do not have to occur as often, but some inspections have to be made and have to apply to the nuclear ship, which was not the case in the past convention. So if you look at article 6, it refers to the convention instead of the 1948 convention. It also dispenses with the necessity of having the convention printed as an appendix to the act. The old convention of 1948 was an appendix to the act, in schedule 4, which disappears now because it is getting more and more lengthy. But at the committee hearing there will be enough copies of this convention, about 20 to 25, to be distributed to all members of the committee and those who wish to take cognizance of that convention. It is actually 191 pages long, and relates to all kinds of details. I must admit I have not read it, and if I had I do not think I would have the details which are contained in that convention. Anyhow, it will be available to members of the committee to study and to report on the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is a reference document.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes, it is a reference document.

Article 7 concerns a survey of hulls and machinery of cargo ships, and a survey of nuclear ships. It is the coming into existence of the nuclear ship that especially has to do with the amendment of article 7.

Article 8 deals with new certificates to apply to cargo ships and nuclear ships; and it also exempts government nuclear ships from being certified. It may be that this will apply pretty soon to a government ship which may be constructed as an icebreaker, but that has not been done yet.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Are you referring to the articles of the convention or the sections of the bill we are discussing?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It is the section of the bill, to conform with the convention. That is the reason why the amendment is made, to conform with the convention. All these articles, from 6 to 27, apply to changes made in the convention so that the act in Canada—and we want to continue to be a party to the convention—will be applicable to the convention as recently passed.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I thought we were discussing this bill and not the articles of the convention.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It is the bill.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: It is not the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The section I am referring to is section 8, and that is an amendment to article 393 of the act; but it is to conform to the new convention. Article 393 has to be amended if Canada is going to be a party to the new convention. It is a proposed amendment to the act.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Do I understand that the honourable senator—who admits he has not read article so-and-so—is discussing that now?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No. I said I have not read the convention, but I have read every article of the act which is being amended at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Every section.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Could I intervene for a moment? I think the confusion has arisen out of the use of the word "article" and the word "section". If I may say so, Senator Bouffard, being like myself a member of the Bar of the Province of Quebec, is accustomed to referring to "sections" of the Code of Quebec and, indeed, of statutes, as "articles" rather than as "sections," as is the normal usage in the common law provinces. In discussing this bill—and I think he is quite clear in his own mind about it—when he refers to "articles" he is referring to "sections" of this bill, which he calls "articles" and, I think, quite properly so. He is not referring to the articles of the convention.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: The reason I raised the point is that I have read the articles of the convention, and I was not quite sure whether the honourable senator was discussing the article or the section.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The word "article" and the word "section" are used interchangeably in the Province of Quebec; and very often I do so myself, subconsciously.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I am sorry if I have wrongly referred to articles. They are really sections of the act. In the Province of Quebec, and maybe in some other provinces also, we call them "articles" of the Civil Code instead of "sections." I am referring at the present time to sections of the act.

The purpose of clause 8 of this new act is to put section 393 in conformity with the new convention of safety at sea.

Section 9 concerns only inspection certificates, and the section which is amended is section 394, to make it conform to the convention of safety at sea. It only concerns certificates that may be issued at the time a ship is launched or afterwards, after inspection.

Article 10 is exactly the same thing; it amends section 395 of the act—

Some Hon. Senators: Section 394.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Article 10 makes provision for a cargo ship safety construction certificate, nuclear passenger ship safety certificate, and a nuclear cargo ship safety certificate.

They give other names to certificates to comply with the convention, because the convention also applies to nuclear cargo and nuclear passenger ships, and they have to issue new certificates. They give the certificate that exists today additional names, to classify the certificates the same way as they classify the ships. Section 11 is of the same order.

I am sure that if anyone wants to have an explanation as to the kinds of certificate or classification of boats, this explanation can be obtained in committee from witnesses who know these details by heart. It would be very difficult for me to give you a clear idea of the division of certificates, the division of inspection and the division of the equipment, and how often they have to be inspected; but, anyone who is interested can obtain these details in committee.

Clause 12 of the bill amends section 397 of the act. This is again concerned with the inspection certificates which carry new names compared to those that existed before the amendment of the safety convention.

Clause 13 of the new bill amends section 399 of the act, and it also affects the safety convention certificates for passenger ships. There is no change in intent.

Clause 14 of the bill which also concerns certificates, amends section 400 of the act, and here also there is no change in intent.

Clause 15, amending section 401 of the act, concerns only the changes in name of certificates of safety.

Clause 16 of the bill amends section 402 and is consequential upon the change of names on the safety convention certificates.

Clause 17 which amends section 403 includes nuclear ships, and cargo ships between 300 and 500 tons, whereas previously it affected only ships of 500 tons and over. It concerns the radio equipment that a ship of that kind must carry. This is also in conformity with the convention on safety at sea.

Clause 18, amending section 411, also concerns ships from 300 to 500 tons, and those from 500 to 1,600 tons. All cargo vessels between 300 and 1,600 gross tons must be fitted with a radiotelegraph station that complies with the requirements of this act, and the regulations of the safety convention.

Clauses 19, 20, 21 and 22 all relate either to inspection or radio equipment. There is no change in intent in any of these articles, but they are amended so that they conform with the new convention. This also applies to the clauses up to clause 27 of the bill, details of which can be given to members of the committee when the bill goes there. I might point out that clause 25, which amends section 454, will require the master of a ship to give information on gales and icing conditions encountered during a voyage. This is required in the interests of safety of others.

Clause 6 empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations giving effect to the requirements of the safety convention. Apparently the law cannot lay down all the regulations, so the Governor in Council may authorize whatever regulations are necessary to conform to the requirements of the convention.

Clause 27 amends section 484 of the act and authorizes the collector or other chief officer of customs to demand all necessary certificates without naming each one individually. Some of the certificates bear long names, and it is intended that he shall be able to demand all certificates necessary for that kind of ship without specifying them individually. This is all intended to comply with the regulations of the convention for safety at sea.

The second convention we have to consider is that dealing with the question of pollution of the sea by oil. This convention was amended in 1962, and section 28 of the present bill deals with it. It imposes the obligation of discharging waste oil by placing it in special tanks installed in the ship. Heretofore the discharge of such waste oil at sea was limited to an area at least 50 miles from the shore. Now such discharge cannot be made in any area less than 100 miles from the shore, in so far as Canada is concerned. In the case of larger vessels, oil cannot be discharged even at this distance but must be contained in a special tank in the vessel to be discharged or disposed of only when such vessel is anchored in a port where facilities are available for doing so. This change is the result of numerous complaints from people, particularly in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, that the discharge of tanks within 50 miles of the coast caused annoyance and concern to people living along the shore, and was also harmful to fish and animals in that area. Consequently, this amendment extends that limit from 50 to 100 miles.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Canada requested that?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes, and it was agreed to by the countries concerned. Now we are amending the act so that no Canadian vessel may discharge waste oil at a distance of less than 100 miles from shore, and no vessel of any country which is party to the convention may do so either. In making this amendment the fine to be imposed on a ship contravening this regulation has been increased quite considerably so as to constitute a deterrent and to ensure that no master of a vessel will choose to discharge waste oil and pay the fine. It has been increased to $5,000.

The other convention with which we are concerned relates to the limitation of liability of owners of sea-going vessels. This convention, first adopted in 1957, was amended in 1961. Article 31 relates to that convention and to the amendments made at that time.

Under the new convention the responsibility of shipowners will be calculated at a rate which amounts approximately to $220 a ton for the ship. It used to be calculated in pounds, but it is now going to be calculated in gold francs, and it works out to approximately $220 per ton. So, the shipowner will never be liable for more than an amount of $220 per ton in respect of any accident or any damage that he may cause to persons or property. That is the complete limitation.

Out of that limitation a preference is given in respect to personal liability. If a man dies or is injured he has a preference on the amount available for distribution. To give you an example, the total responsibility of a tugboat of under 300 tons would be approximately $66,400. If it is a cargo ship of 253 feet which is involved, the liability would amount to $365,500. If it is a ferry vessel like the Bluenose, for instance, the liability would be $1,195,000, and a bulk carrier of 730 feet would carry a total liability of $3,500,000.

That being the total liability, a preference up to two-thirds of the total amount is given to persons in respect of damages claimed by them. If the total liability is $3,500,000, then a little over $2 million will be used exclusively to settle damages caused to persons, whether killed or injured. Of the total liability such persons have a preference as to two-thirds of the total amount.

The balance of the amount of liability will be used to settle claims for property damage. In the case of liability totalling $3,500,000, this would amount to about $1,200,000. As I said, this amount would be used to settle claims for damage to other vessels, to cargo or to damages caused on the shore. If the amount of two-thirds that is set aside to settle claims for personal damages is not sufficient to pay all the damages at the rate of 100 per cent, then those claiming personal damages can share in the amount left to cover property damage. So, in my example, if the amount of $2,500,000 is not sufficient to cover all the personal liability, then those who have a claim against the ship can share on a proportionate basis with the owners of property that has been damaged in the amount that is set aside to cover property damage, or in the distribution of the balance of the money which is on deposit.

Another thing which the new convention settles is that the responsibility of the owners of the ship, or the limitation, if you wish, of responsibility, will extend also to those who may be responsible with them, such as the master, the mate, the pilot and any other officer. They are limited to the same responsibility as the owner.

Apparently that was the unanimous decision of the courts in years gone by, but it had never been expressed in any legislation or convention. It is now in black and white that the responsibility of the officers will be limited in the same way as is the responsibility of the owners.

Clauses 31, 32 and 33 and 34 of the bill also provide for the bail to be given by the owner of a ship who wants to leave when there is some liability that has not been paid or settled. Bail equivalent to the amount of the liability at the place may be allowed. These clauses also provide for the deposit of funds in the amount of the total liability in the Exchequer Court, which funds would then be distributed by the court.

They also provide for the possibility, if the ship is in Canada, of entertaining all the claims for liability whether they be incurred in another country or in Canada. So, Canada may be chosen to be the recipient of all the funds, and it will also make distribution of them. If the accident has occurred in another country, and the owner of the ship is depositing in Canada for all the claims from people living in Canada, or in respect of property existing in Canada, the court may set aside some amount of the funds so as to be able to settle damages that might have been caused in another country, or to property situate somewhere else. These clauses contain much detail with respect to the deposit of the money, and with respect to the court that has to decide as to the apportionment. All this is in conformity with the convention.

This has been, I might say, recommended in Canada by the Canadian Bar Association and also by the Association of Ship Owners, which is advised by lawyers who are acquainted with the legislation and the claims which may be made when an accident occurs. Those are all the details I can give you in respect of clauses 31, 32, 33 and 34 on the limitation of liability.

This limitation of liability has existed for a long time. It has been varied on numerous occasions. It was extensively studied, and the courts and lawyers have had experience with it in more than one way. This new limitation of liability, and the sections that concern its distribution, and the privileges granted to persons who are damaged, comprise the latest improvements in respect to limitation of liability which, apparently, has to exist when it concerns a ship. Nobody seems to object to it at all. It seems that the limitation is less important than it used to be, because there is more money being given at the present time to those who are damaged by seagoing vessels than there used to be. The limitation was not always as high as it is today. There has to be a limitation, of course, because otherwise it would be impossible to insure a ship. If it was unlimited it would be too costly to insure a ship.

Section 35 concerns the last convention to which I have referred, the British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement of 1931. That section provides that the coasting trades of the signatory countries should be open to the trade of other countries embodied in the agreement. That means that any ships of countries which had signed the agreement of 1931 could come to the coast and do the shipping business and the coasting trade.

The most important result of this for Canada has been that British shipping has participated widely in the coasting trade on the Atlantic coast. It has won an important place for itself there, and its continued participation there is highly necessary. No change in this is made by the present amendment.

The Great Lakes coasting trade was entirely under the Canadian flag until the opening of the seaway and until it became practicable for British and British West Indies vessels to engage in it. The chief disadvantages of this from the Canadian point of view include:

(1) The lower wage scales and repair costs for British registered ships would give them an advantage over Canadian lake shipping.

(2) British ships would be able to withdraw in winter and continue in business elsewhere while Canadian lake vessels must remain tied up.

(3) Repairs and refitting of such ships would not likely be done in Great Lakes yards.

(4) Transient nature of such competition would create fluctuation in shipping rates. Partial displacement of the Canadian fleet by this means might create shipping scarcity at future dates when more lucrative cargoes are available in ocean trades.

(5) Canadian shipping obtains no reciprocal advantages from the Commonwealth agreement since Canadian vessels would have too high costs to participate in U.K. coasting trade even if there were any vessels available to do so.

Those are the disadvantages of the agreement on merchant vessels, since applied to the coastal trade in Canada.

There were some advantages also. These include:

(1) Prompt action will prevent any vested interest in U.K. shipping from gaining a foothold in the Lakes Trades from which it would be more difficult to dislodge it later.

(2) No interference with U.K. shipping on the Atlantic Coast will result.

(3) There will be no restriction against U.K. or any foreign flag vessels engaging in foreign trade on the Great Lakes. Such vessels will still be able to carry grain direct from Fort William to overseas points.

(4) The competitive effect of such foreign shipping on rates will thus be retained.

What Canadians have done is this: they are restricting to Canadian ships the coasting trade on the lakes and on the St. Lawrence, and also from a point on the Gaspé Peninsula to Anticosti Island, and from a point situated about the middle of Anticosti Island to the north shore. Therefore, vessels of the United Kingdom or any other vessel will not be able to go through. To do that, they had to amend the agreement to which I referred a moment ago, which is the British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement. This agreement contains Part IV, concerning equal treatment, so that everybody may be treated the same way.

If the Canadians have taken away the coasting trade from any other ship than Canadian ships, it is because they have succeeded in coming to an agreement with all countries which were parties to the agreement. They agreed with the Canadians that Canada would do that, and it is only in that light that we can see the amendment to this agreement, which was a valid agreement and which still exists as to any other part of the agreement; but, with the unanimous consent of all countries concerned, Canada was allowed to protect its coasting trade shipping.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Does this section provide for a reciprocal basis with respect to Canadian ships?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I think it does, but I am not sure. At any rate, there is no coasting trade by Canadian ships around Australia, New Zealand or England.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I was thinking of the exclusive character of this clause as applied to incoming British ships through the seaway, up to the head of the lakes. This would make that impossible?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It would make that impossible.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, that is not quite right.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The coasting trade on the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes are closed to British ships, which used to have a pretty important coasting trade in that section.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Only for the coasts.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would you consider that a privileged class was created by the St. Lawrence Seaway development?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It might be so—

Hon. Mr. Isnor: In the Nova Scotia coasting trade—

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It does not close the coasting trade in Nova Scotia. It only closes the coasting trade in the St. Lawrence, the Great Lakes and this part of the St. Lawrence River going as far as the north limit of the Gaspé Peninsula, and north to about the middle of Anticosti Island. It does not affect any other coasting trade.

I should like to read section 35. It says:

> Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2), no goods or passengers shall be transported by water, in any ship other than a Canadian ship, from one place in Canada to another place in Canada each of which is on the Great Lakes or its connecting or tributary waters or on the River St. Lawrence or its connecting or tributary waters as far seaward as a straight line drawn
>
> (a) from Cap des Rosiers to West Point Anticosti Island...

Hon. Mr. Isnor: In other words, it applies only to the St. Lawrence?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: It does not apply to coasting trade in other provinces?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No. It is limited to the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes; and that is the arrangement which has been made and unanimously approved by all countries who were parties to the agreement.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: If a foreign vessel brought a cargo and unloaded it in an American port on the Great Lakes, and another foreign ship entered the port on the way back, could it pick up this cargo and take it farther up the lake and tranship it to a Canadian port?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No, I do not think so. There must be some other agreements concerning that, which are not touched by the present legislation. The only convention which is touched at the present time is the one in regard to Canada and the British Commonwealth. It does not affect any other convention at all.

I would not know whether there is another convention which would permit American ships to come into any coasting trade. I am not aware of that; I do not know. This convention is the only one affected by the present legislation. It relates to the Commonwealth of Nations, the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Canada.

Hon. Mr. White: I would like to ask a question. When the honourable senator was speaking on the limitation of liabilities, there was a comment on the limitation of liability in the last two disasters, the Andre Doria and the Greek ship that caught fire. If there had been a total loss of life aboard ship, what would be the level or limit of liability? Would it be exactly the same?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It depends on the tonnage of the ship. I would not be in a position to tell the honourable senator what the tonnage of the ship was. It would also depend on the total responsibility of the ship that was at fault. Whether it is enormous or small, the limitation is always there and would apply to any ship of countries which are part of the convention.

Hon. Mr. White: This means that all one could collect, in some cases, would be a relatively small sum?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes, it could happen. If there was much loss of life, the amount that could be collected by anyone affected might be small. It might be a small boat, whose responsibility is very small compared to a liner or a large vessel, where there are many passengers affected and who sustain personal injury. Otherwise, how can you ensure that a small vessel will be able to stand the expense which might run from $3 million to $5 million.

Hon. Mr. White: I wonder if the honourable senator could tell us if the amount of liability, so far as ships are concerned, is more or less comparable with air lines?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: There is a limitation on liability with regard to shipping, and also a limitation with regard to air lines. The air lines are governed by the International Convention by Air, to which I believe Canada is a party. I do not know how that limitation compares with that of shipping, except that the latter is higher today than it used to be. The limitation is $220 per ton. I understand that amount includes the engine rooms, but it does not include the quarters of the men. It is calculated on the basis of the amount of change that will be covered by the calculation of the limitation. For instance, a tug which is below 100 tons may hit a large ship and cause tremendous damage, and its responsibility may be limited to an amount not even reaching $75,000. However, the calculation must begin somewhere. Apparently no one objects too much about this limitation, because it has been acceptable to the main countries engaged in the business of shipping throughout the world. The limitation must be satisfactory, otherwise it would not be agreed upon and renewed.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Does this clause throw a different complexion on the seaway from that of when it was originally conceived and built, that is, that it should be an open waterway from the Atlantic Ocean to the head of the lakes?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I think that is covered by another agreement with the United States, which participated in the cost of the work. I do not think there was any agreement other than with the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth, in so far as St. Lawrence shipping is concerned. We must remember, of course, that in some places the St. Lawrence River forms the boundary between Canada and the United States, and I understand there have been several agreements between the two countries concerning navigation on the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: One has in mind particularly the shipment of iron ore to Cleveland by iron ore companies. Does that clause not interfere with that trade?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No. It only affects what is really coasting trade. I am inclined to believe that the transportation of iron ore from a port in Canada to a port in the United States is not what we call coasting trade, but is rather transport between Canada and a foreign country. Coasting trade as described in the bill is only that which is from one place in Canada to another place in Canada. That is what is affected. Transportation of grain, say, from one part of Canada to another country, is not affected; nor is the transportation of iron ore from Seven Islands to Cleveland, because that is transport from one port in Canada to a port in a foreign country.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: My honourable friend has clarified this clause pretty well, but I do think it should receive further attention in committee.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Oh, yes. As I said earlier, I am not an expert in the matter. I am doing my best as a layman.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I am not being critical.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I would certainly be glad if the bill were referred to committee for further information, at which stage I am inclined to believe that all questions would be answered.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I think my honourable colleague has done a wonderful job in his explanation of the bill. However, I would like him to clarify one point, if possible. Am I to understand from his explanation that a British steamer is denied the right to engage in coasting trade here in Canada, while a Norwegian steamer, or any other, may participate in coasting trade?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I do not believe a Norwegian ship could engage in coasting trade in Canada. The United Kingdom became a party to the Merchant Commonwealth Convention of 1931. That is the reason its vessels were able to come and trade from one port to another in Canada—which is coasting trade. A foreign ship which comes to Canada cannot engage in coasting trade unless it has an agreement with Canada. The agreement we have with England is modified so that even a commonwealth ship will not be able to engage in coasting trade from one part of Canada to another.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Could a Norwegian vessel sail up the St. Lawrence and go to the head of the lakes, take on a cargo of grain and return to Norway?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes. In that case it does not come to any other Canadian port.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That would not be coasting trade.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No, that would not be coasting trade.

Honourable senators, there are a few clauses to be dealt with that are not the result of a change in any agreement. Some of them are the most contentious sections of the bill. May I refer to clause 2, which must be studied in conjunction with clause 30. Clause 2 concerns the issue of licences to small vessels, crafts below 20 tons, and other vessels below 15 tons. It gives the Governor in Council the right to issue regulations concerning the licensing of such vessels; and that is all it does. Clause 2 has a connection with clause 30, and we shall see by clause 30 what the Government has in mind. I am sorry to delay the house so long, but this is a difficult bill to deal with.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is what we are here for.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: You are doing very well.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The present subsection 4 of section 645 of the Canada Shipping Act gives to the Governor in Council the authority to make orders or regulations for the Government and regulation of any part or parts of the inland, minor or other waters of Canada, and for the licensing of operators of vessels on such waters.

That means the regulation of small craft which may operate on lakes and rivers, in many cases where there are bathing facilities, and also where there are many summer hotels and cottages to which tourists would be attracted.

The purpose here is to enable the Governor in Council by order or regulation to prohibit or limit the navigation of vessels up to 15 tons gross tonnage on three general grounds, either in the interest of public safety or for promoting or ensuring the effective use of such waters in the public interest or for the protection or convenience of the public.

I believe it is not necessary to dwell at any length on the safety aspects of this proposal. What is intended here primarily is to supplement the provisions of section 226A of the Criminal Code, which deals generally with the dangerous operation of small vessels. This provision of the Code, which was directed particularly at operators of power boats, was enacted in 1961 because of the alarming number of boating accidents attributable to the dangerous operation of power boats and the necessity for providing effective deterrents to such operation.

The control of power-boat operations, particularly in the interests of public safety, has been the subject of consultations over the past several years by officials of the Department of Transport with the R.C.M.P., provincial governments and representatives of boating organizations, and also with people engaged in the boat-building and the tourist industry.

Just about a year ago a conference to deal with this subject was convened in Ottawa, at which all the provincial governments were represented. The delegates to this conference expressed a keen interest in the problem and indicated the willingness of their governments to co-operate so far as practicable in its solution. There was general agreement that the educational program undertaken by the Department of Transport was serving a most useful purpose and should be continued, and also that the amendments to the Criminal Code to which I have referred would facilitate more effective control. However, the view was expressed on behalf of most of the provinces that we should go further and secure the necessary legislative authority to prohibit or restrict the operation of power boats, particularly where this was required in the interests of public safety, but also in other cases where the public interest generally required it. Reference was made to the importance of such prohibition or restriction, in a relatively limited number of cases, in the interests of fish and game conservation; to protect wild life sanctuaries and to secure the greatest benefit to the greatest number in the recreational use, particularly of those of our inland lakes in which navigation serves no commercial or other economic end. Quite persuasive arguments were advanced in favour of providing the necessary authority to prohibit or restrict the use of noisy high-powered boats on small and secluded waters where their operation constitutes a nuisance to the local residents.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: That is the purpose. This does not affect the convention, but it is for the benefit of all people who are subjected to a lot of nuisance in that respect on very small lakes and rivers, where they have bathing beaches which are used by children and local people, and where a hotel might receive a lot of tourists, where they have an organized beach for bathing purposes but cannot use it because of the danger that might arise from the operation of these small craft. It is for the protection of these people that more authority is given, even to go as far as prohibition or restriction of navigation in these rivers and lakes.

In so far as clauses 3 and 5 are concerned, I understand these are the most contentious sections of the bill.

Clause 3 amends section 114 of the act, to the effect that large fishing vessels will be required to be in the charge of certificated personnel. Representatives of the fishing industry have been consulted over a period of years on this matter, and there is general agreement that this measure is a desirable one. There is still some difference of opinion, however, as to the standards which should be required of the persons in charge of such fishing vessels. Representatives of the fishing industry on the east coast feel that the department's suggestions do not go far enough, while those on the west coast wish the suggested standards to be lowered. For this reason it is requested that this clause of the bill shall come into effect on a date to be proclaimed by the Governor-in-Council. This will permit us, we hope, to reconcile the views expressed by the two parts of the industry.

Clause 5 provides an additional section 116A to permit the Governor-in-Council to make regulations respecting the certificates of competency and service to be held by masters and mates of fishing vessels.

I would point out that a certificate of service is a certificate which would be issued to those fishermen who have already served in the capacity named for a designated period of time, and such certificates would be issued on the basis of that service only without further examination. That is, they will not send away people who have had experience in fishing vessels, whether or not they have or could get a certificate. They will not be subject to any further examination and they will have a certificate of competency which will enable them to continue in their livelihood. I am given to understand that we may rest assured nothing in these clauses of the bill could have the effect of suddenly depriving a serving fisherman of his livelihood, as such.

The clause concerning the improved qualification of officers lowers the tonnage from 150 tons, which it used to be, to 25 tons. Some people on the east coast do not desire the same thing as those on the west coast. That is why the section is going to be put into force by proclamation, after the possibility of coming to an agreement has been further discussed. This may be the most contentious clause of the bill. It will go to committee, like the rest, and the reasons why the tonnage has been lowered that way will be given by the officers who for a long time have discussed these matters with the owners of fishing vessels. Honourable senators, I thank you very much for allowing me to take so much of your time. I have done my best to give you an explanation. It is not complete, but it will be completed before the committee to which the bill will be referred.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hollett, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, March 13, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Acting Speaker Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUDGET SPEECH

ACCOMMODATION FOR SENATORS IN COMMONS GALLERY

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, as previously announced, the Minister of Finance will deliver his Budget Speech in the other place on Monday next, March 16, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

May I be permitted to remind honourable senators that none but senators will be admitted to the Senate gallery of the House of Commons on that occasion. This arrangement is being made for the purpose of providing accommodation in the gallery for as many senators as possible. In this manner, senators will not be excluded from the gallery because of many of the spaces being occupied by relatives and friends of senators.

May I add that such instructions were first issued in 1931 by the then Speaker of the Senate, the Honourable P. E. Blondin, and this practice has been followed ever since by succeeding Speakers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copies of Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, March 11, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

HIGH COMMISSIONERS IN CANADA

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have two questions to ask. If the first one, which contains four different parts, cannot be answered completely, I should like to receive whatever answers can be given. However, I presume that all the questions can be answered. The first question is:

1. Are the High Commissioners to Canada for
   (a) the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland,
   (b) Australia,
   (c) Ceylon,
   (d) Ghana,
   (e) Malaya,
   (f) New Zealand, and
   (g) South Africa

qualified as electors in virtue of the Canada Elections Act, (R.S., c. 39, as amended), inasmuch as they comply with the provisions of section 14 of the said act?

2. Are the British subjects referred to in No. 1 enjoying in Canada the same public rights as Canadian citizens do, upon the same conditions?

3. Is the political status of a British subject the same in Canada as in any other part of the Commonwealth?

4. If not, are there any
   (a) degrees, or
   (b) differences in the British nationality and what are they in each country?

I could not answer No. 4 myself. I think, but I am not positively sure, that I could answer the first three questions. As I am not positively sure, I put them on the Order Paper.

PARLIAMENTARY RULES AND ORDERS

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: My second question is:

In 1963, were there any copies of The Rules of the Senate of Canada and of The Standing Orders of the House of Commons of Canada at the Ottawa libraries of the Department of Justice and of the Supreme Court?

This one is easy to answer.

EMERGENCY SITTINGS

AUTHORITY TO CONVENE SENATE DURING ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks):

That, for the duration of the present session of Parliament, should an emergency arise during any adjournment of the Senate, which would in the opinion of the Honourable the Speaker warrant that the Senate meet prior to the time set forth in the motion for such adjournment, the Honourable the Speaker be authorized to notify honourable senators at their addresses registered with the Clerk of the Senate, to meet at a time earlier than that set out in the motion for such adjournment, and non-receipt by any one or more honourable senators of such call shall not have any effect upon the sufficiency and validity thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a motion which is made in anticipation of adjournments for any period of time. It is also a motion which is available and useful for the Senate in the event that the Senate has to be called into emergency sitting during an adjournment, even if it is a short one.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we all recognize that the motion which the honourable Leader of the Government has made is a useful one.

While we are discussing adjournments, I wonder if he could give some idea as to when we might expect to adjourn for the Easter recess. I know that honourable senators are concerned about transportation and reservations.

Furthermore, when giving that information, could he say just what business we might expect between now and the recess?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I will try to answer as fully as I can. As honourable senators know, it is proposed that the other place will adjourn for the Easter recess on Thursday, March 26 and resume on Monday, April 6. The Senate of course will be adjourned during that period.

As honourable senators know, it is proposed that on Monday night next the Minister of Finance will bring down his budget in the other place and under normal circumstances, the budget debate would follow very shortly after. The debate on the budget will prevent any real progress being made in the House of Commons on its legislative program. I understand that there are two bills before that house for consideration today. One is an interim supply bill and the other is a bill regarding the last of the supplementary estimates.

I am hopeful that these bills will reach us next week. If these hopes are justified, I think we could arrange for royal assent some time next week or early the following week, well in advance of the time that we adjourn here for Easter. Therefore, we must provide time for those matters to be considered and for the royal assent to be given.

As all honourable senators know, we have on our Order Paper now substantially the following matters—I say "substantially" because there are some bills which are ready or nearly ready for third reading in addition to those which I will mention now. First, there is the Canada Shipping Act; secondly, the Harbour Commissions bill; thirdly, the Blue Water project bill; and fourthly, the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I would personally express the hope, which I think may be shared by all honourable senators, that we could conclude the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne before our Easter recess. It is proposed that the bill to provide for the establishment of Harbour Commissions will be explained at the earliest of sittings next week, and find its way to committee.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We have already dealt with that, have we not?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. I was about to say that last year the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications gave an extensive amount of consideration to this legislation, and therefore the bill should not necessarily take up too much time.

The Blue Water Bridge bill, which comes to Parliament as a result of certain negotiations between this country and the United States, concerns the bridge at or near the City of Sarnia, in Ontario, and Port Huron, in the State of Michigan. I would hope that this bill would be explained on second reading some time next week, and referred to a committee for further consideration. Without in any way suggesting to honourable senators that this must be done, I would think that these bills could reasonably be expected to get full consideration and passage by the Senate before the Easter recess.

I am hopeful that the same result will be possible with the Canada Shipping Act, but it may not. The bill itself has already been explained, and there will be speeches on it this afternoon. The proposal is that the debate on second reading be adjourned until early next week for further brief remarks, and then be referred to the committee. I am informed that there are many interested parties from various parts of the country who would like to make representations in respect of certain sections in the Canada Shipping Act. I know all honourable senators will feel that the forum we provide for legislation of this kind to interested parties is most valuable, and we want to give all these parties an opportunity to present their views. Whether or not this can be accomplished within the two weeks available between now and Easter, I am not in a position to say. Some of these representatives will come from far-distant places, but as soon as the bill has been given second reading in the house, instructions will be given to the Chief Clerk of the Committees to notify all interested parties, and the committee will then be assembled.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Has this bill been before the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No. These are all measures which have been introduced in the Senate. Perhaps I should add, and I am sure all honourable senators will be delighted to know this, that the distinguished chairman of our Transport and Communications Committee, Senator Hugessen, expects to be back with us next week.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Having said this, I am sure that all honourable senators will agree that the emphasis which we want to place upon this matter of work and adjournment should first be upon the reasonable dispatch of business, and secondly upon adjournment. I would feel that, in view of the situation in the House of Commons and the intervention of the budget debate, we probably will not have enough work before us when the time arrives for the Easter recess to expect the Senate to reassemble, unless an emergency arises, at the same time as the House of Commons. I would not like to be pressed as to how much longer we might adjourn than the House of Commons for the Easter recess, but it is likely to be for a longer period; but I emphasize that it will be because the Senate at that time will have completed the work on its Order Paper.

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

BIRTH OF A PRINCE—ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

> Resolved: That this house do concur in the Address of the Senate to His Excellency the Governor General, respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit the Joint Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations on the birth of a Prince; and
>
> That the words "and Commons" be inserted in the said Address from the Senate.
>
> Ordered: That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this house doth unite with the Senate in the said Address.
>
> Léon-J. Raymond
> Clerk of the House of Commons

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ACT

BILL TO CHANGE NAME—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill C-2, respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. John J. Connolly, on behalf of Hon. Salter A. Hayden, moved adoption of the report.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: With leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Bouffard for the second reading of Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, in rising to say a few words on the Canada Shipping Act, I do so in fear and trembling on this particular date—Friday the 13th. However, I should like first to take the opportunity of congratulating the six honourable senators who have been appointed to the Senate since last session, to whom I have not had the opportunity of publicly extending my congratulations. So far as I can ascertain, they all seem to be much younger men than the rest of us. I am quite sure, therefore, that they will be able to add considerably to the strength of this chamber, particularly in view of the fact they have all been active in public life and, I am told, most have been active in the political life of this country, which does not hurt them a bit, I think.

I certainly want to congratulate the honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) on the high position he has reached in the Senate. Judging by his actions since he was elevated to this position, and gauging his ability by the excellent speech he made in the debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I am convinced that he will do great credit to the high position he now holds and also to the Senate as a whole.

Honourable senators, the bill before us is an act to amend the Canada Shipping Act. As we all know, this act has been amended many times; it now contains between 700 and 800 sections. It is an act which reflects very much upon the economic welfare of this country. I have looked very carefully through the amendments which are set forth in the bill, and I feel quite sure that most of them will greatly tend to improve the Canada Shipping Act, and will give much wider protection to the seamen on our ships as well as to the companies who operate them.

However, there is one section to which I wish particularly to make brief reference at this time, and that is section 28. This section repeals paragraph (a) of subsection (2) of section 495A of the act. As you will remember, under that particular section the Governor in Council could make regulations to give effect to the provisions of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil.

In that particular section, which was passed in 1956, there was prescribed a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both fine and imprisonment, to be imposed upon summary conviction as a penalty for violation of a regulation made with regard to the oil pollution of our coastal waters.

We in Newfoundland, particularly, are very well aware of the extensive destruction in the past of sea birds of all kinds as a result of the contamination of the sea by oil discharged from ships passing around our coasts to the various ports on the Atlantic seaboard. It is a well-known fact that year after year reports have been made of the destruction of many thousands of sea ducks, terns and other wild birds which have to dive into the sea for their food. Once these birds alight on a patch of oil which has been thrown overboard from a ship they are, in nine cases out of ten, never able to take flight again. Nor, indeed, is such a bird able to dive beneath the surface of the sea for its food; the cold sea water penetrates through the feathers and down, and as a result the birds die from exposure. The destruction of these birds around the coasts of Newfoundland has been terrific and disgusting. If you go down on the beaches you see the wind driving in dead birds covered with oil. Mind you, I have to point out that in the past, but not so much now, many of our people on the seacoast had to use these birds for food.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator mind my asking a question? Can he tell us what it is that the oil does to the bird that causes this damage?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: The bird has a natural oil of its own which it puts on its feathers and on its down, but this dirty old oil from the ship destroys the effect of that and makes the feathers and the down leaky so the water gets into the flesh of the bird. That is my understanding.

On the 11th April, 1962 there was held at London a conference of the contracting governments to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil. Such a conference had previously taken place in 1954, but in 1962 it again met to consider and adopt certain amendments to this convention. It was made up of some 14 nations bordering on the Atlantic Ocean. Among the various other articles adopted, these nations agreed generally that all areas within 50 miles from the nearest land should be prohibited zones with regard to the dumping of waste oil from the many ships using the waters. The term "nearest land" means "the base line from which the territorial sea of the territory in question is established in accordance with the Geneva Convention of 1958."

I note that along the Canadian Atlantic seaboard, and this includes Newfoundland, the distance of prohibition now is 100 miles. This will make quite a difference if a ship should happen to dump oil accidentally or otherwise. If it should do so outside the 100 mile limit, it may not do quite as much damage.

Since April 1962 we have had need of a section such as the one about which I am speaking, section 28, subsections 1 and 2 of the amending act, and I am very happy indeed to see it now coming into force. Under the rules of the convention, it was left to the various countries bordering upon the Atlantic to make regulations which would tend to help enforce the observance of these prohibited areas by the various ships sailing in these waters. You will notice that the main purpose of this particular amendment is to increase to $5,000 the maximum penalty provided for the infringement of these regulations. In other words, the fine is increased from $500 to $5,000. This amendment is long overdue, and I am sure it will be welcomed by everybody who knows the wilful and terrible destruction caused to the bird life along the shores of this country in the past. All that now remains is the proper enforcement of this particular section.

Referring to article VIII of the convention, which is dealt with by clause 28 of the amending act, and about which there was some confusion yesterday, because in the original convention there were only 18 articles whereas in this particular amending act we have 35 sections, one of the amendments agreed upon by the governments of 14 countries bordering on the Atlantic reads as follows:

> 1. Each contracting Government shall take all appropriate steps to promote the provision of facilities as follows:
>
> (a) according to the needs of ships using them, ports shall be provided with facilities adequate for the reception, without causing undue delay to ships, of such residues and oily mixtures as would remain for disposal from ships other than tankers if the bulk of the water had been separated from the mixture;

(b) Oil loading terminals shall be provided with facilities adequate for the reception of such residues and oily mixtures as would similarly remain for disposal by tankers...

And indeed, by all ships entering for repairs.

I have a note here which says "See also section 2," and if you do not mind, honourable senators, I will refer to that. You will find it in the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil, 1954, as amended in 1962. It is also part of article VIII. Again I would remind you that this was agreed to by the Canadian Government, since it was signed in 1962 by three gentlemen from the Department of Transport. It reads:

(2) Each Contracting Government shall determine which are the ports and oil loading terminals in its territories suitable for the purposes of subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph (1) of this Article.

(3) As regards paragraph (1) of this Article, each Contracting Government shall report to the Organization, for transmission to the Contracting Government concerned, all cases where the facilities are alleged to be inadequate.

Where the article says "Organization" it means the organization for the international convention.

Now, that is a very important article of the convention. It was not my understanding that the requirements of the particular section which I have read to you, or of article VIII as a whole, have been carried out. I quoted this article merely to raise the question as to how many such ports along our Atlantic seaboard have such facilities, and where the facilities provided are inadequate. In other words, when a ship comes into port, be it a tanker or any kind of vessel which has residue oil in her bilge or somewhere in her hull, according to this international agreement the port of entry must have facilities to enable her to discharge the waste oil. It is my understanding and, indeed, it is the explanation given of clause 28, that the purpose of this amendment is to authorize the amendment of the oil pollution prevention regulations in conformity with certain amendments to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil, 1954, and adopted on April 11, 1962, by the conference I have mentioned.

I am wondering what adequate facilities there are in existence at either Halifax or Saint John, New Brunswick, or indeed at St. John's, Newfoundland, or at Holyrood, Newfoundland, for the reception of such residues and oily mixtures referred to in article VIII, and to which Canada has given her approval.

Off the cuff, I have been told that there are no facilities available, but this convention states, and it is agreed upon by 14 nations, that these facilities must be available. It says also that the contracting nations must report about any ports that do not have these facilities.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I ask a question? Who is responsible for determining this, the oil companies or the authorities of the ports providing the facilities?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: It is the government of the particular nation concerned. It says "The Contracting Government shall determine which are the ports and loading terminals in its territories suitable for" the various purposes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does it go on to say there that they shall provide facilities? I am asking for information only because I am not familiar with the article.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I shall read the article again.

1. Each Contracting Government shall take all appropriate steps to promote the provision of facilities, as follows:

So I take it that it is really up to the Government.

Now, honourable senators, there are many other amendments to the Canada Shipping Act proposed in this particular bill. I have given them careful study, and I commend the Government—and I do not often commend the Government—for having brought them in.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The breeze is soft.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: No interruptions, please.

Consequently, in supporting section 28 I support most of the other sections, which I have read very carefully and which I am sure will assist in carrying out the safety regulations. There are many safety regulations relative to mariners in this which I am not referring to at all because I think everybody will approve of them; the articles and regulations were agreed to not only by Canada but by all other Atlantic nations in 1962 when they met at London.

Incidentally, that was signed, as I said before, by three civil servants from the Department of Transport. The first signature I notice is that of Mr. Cumyn who is a very fine gentleman.

There are two or three reservations I wish to make in regard to these amendments, which seem important to me, and I am quite sure that my honourable friend from Nova Scotia (Hon. Mr. Kinley) is going to agree with me with respect to at least one of them. I refer expressly to section 3 of the amending bill which repeals section 114(1)(b) of the Canada Shipping Act, and substitutes another paragraph. Most honourable senators, I am sure, are familiar with section 114(1)(b) of the Canada Shipping Act. It states:

> Every British ship except . . .
>
> (b) ships solely employed in fishing, and other ships principally engaged in fishing not exceeding one hundred and fifty tons gross tonnage, . . . shall when going from any place in Canada be provided with masters and mates duly certificated according to . . .

a certain scale.

I am at the moment referring in particular to Newfoundland and to fishing vessels there of under 150 tons gross which do not at the moment require certificated masters and mates. However, section 3 of the amending bill provides that all fishing vessels of over 25 tons shall require such certificated masters and mates, and indeed from looking at section 4 it would appear that such ships, particularly motor-driven fishing vessels, would require also a chief engineer.

Honourable senators, what effect such an amendment as this will have on the fishing fleet in Newfoundland I am not yet in a position to fully estimate. I made certain inquiries relative to our registered ships in Newfoundland, and at this juncture I would like to pay tribute to the officials of the federal Department of Transport, the federal Department of Fisheries and of the Registry of Shipping here in Ottawa, as well as to the Assistant Registrar of Shipping in St. John's. I have been in contact with all of these people in regard to this bill in order to get certain facts that I needed. These officials have been most cooperative, and I would like to pay tribute to their efficiency and willingness to assist in giving any information which was within their power to give. All of them, and particularly those I have met, do credit to the Civil Service of Canada.

I gather from the information that I received that, as of January 1, 1964, the number of ships of all descriptions registered in Newfoundland total 810, with a total gross tonnage of 82,000 tons. Of this number, I believe there are 437 vessels of all descriptions, the gross tonnage of which exceeds 25 tons, and of these—these are the important ones so far as this amendment is concerned—there are some 164 ships of over 25 tons gross that are described as fishing vessels.

The records of the federal Department of Fisheries show that 79 licences have been issued to Newfoundland fishing vessels; that is, to the larger trawlers which trawl on the Grand Banks and elsewhere, most of which are over 150 tons. An additional 42 ships were operated last year as Labrador cod-trap floaters. For those honourable senators who do not know what a Labrador cod-trap floater is, I will say it is a small fishing vessel of from 30 tons to 100 tons. These vessels go to Labrador with their cod traps. They have a smaller crew. They set out their traps and live on the boat. That is why they are called floaters. There are 42 such ships, and each of these would be under 150 tons.

Of the 437 ships of over 25 tons, there were up to 200 laid up last year. That is to say, there were up to 200 ships that did no fishing; they were tied up. Another 75 vessels were probably engaged in non-fishing activities.

A reasonable figure, therefore, for the number of fishing vessels of over 25 tons gross that are actually operating in the Newfoundland fisheries would seem to be about 150. Of these 150 ships only five fishing vessels have certificated masters and only one fishing vessel has a certificated mate. If this particular amendment becomes law as it reads, then I would point out that there are early 150 ships in Newfoundland which will not be able to fish next year unless they are commanded by a certificated master and mate. That is what worried me when I first read this. If this amendment goes into effect as it reads, it could bring about a hardship to, if not the extinction of, a large number of fishing-boat owners in Newfoundland.

To what extent this enactment will affect them, I am not in a position at the moment to say, but if honourable senators will turn to section 5 of this bill they will see that it authorizes the Governor in Council to make regulations respecting the types of certificates to be held by masters and mates of fishing vessels, as well as the qualifications and examinations of applicants for such certificates. The end result, therefore, must depend on what the particular regulations are going to be.

It is rather strange to me that anyone would insert in a bill a provision which, if carried out, would do such damage, and then insert another section saying that regulations will be made to take care of that, without giving the regulations. However, I have made inquiries, as I told you, and I have been assured—but that does not mean that the Senate or the Government has been assured; and here again I pay tribute to the Department of Transport for the information they gave me—that the proposed regulations under section 5 will provide for the issue of certificates of service without any examination whatsoever to fishermen who are in command at the coming into force of such regulations. As I have said, I find it rather strange that this should be gone about in this way. However, it is the only salvation of the fishing fleet that I can see.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They can get in by the back door.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is an easy examination.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I am talking about the man who has been fishing for the past 10 or 20 years and who knows nothing about navigation except what is necessary to sail his ship. He has not a master's certificate. If that particular section were passed into law without the so-called regulations that are going to be made, then he is ruined because he cannot fish any more. However, the regulations will provide for the issue of certificates of service without any examination whatsoever to fishermen who are in command at the coming into force of such regulations.

I am also given to understand that these regulations will be enforced for a period of at least five years after the proclamation of this act. I would assume, therefore, that the department concerned will be keeping a close watch on the effect of such amendment as we have here. In other words, these regulations will protect these fishermen for five years, but after that we do not know what will happen.

As I pointed out, there are many fishermen today who have never studied navigation and who are not certificated masters or mates, but are sailing their own vessels which are over 25 tons. I sincerely trust that the regulations, when complete, will protect them and, indeed, any other fishermen who in the meantime take it upon themselves to sail their vessels to the Labrador and other areas to learn their livelihood.

I would like honourable senators to refer also to section 35. Incidentally, I take it this bill will go to committee and that certain information which we ask for will be forthcoming.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, indeed.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, it has been indicated to me that the honourable Leader of the Government wishes to make an announcement on an urgent matter. I therefore yield to the honourable Leader.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I appreciate the courtesy of honourable Senator Hollett in allowing me to interrupt his speech. With the unanimous consent of the house, I should like to make a statement at this time.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE-KEEPING FORCE

PROPOSAL FOR CANADIAN PARTICIPATION—CYPRUS SITUATION

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, a statement has been made in the other house which I think should be made in this chamber at this time. I would like to read it in the form I understand it was made there. It deals with the Cyprus situation and the constitution of a United Nations force, to which it is proposed Canada should make a contribution.

This is the statement.

The Government expects to hear very shortly that a United Nations force will have been constituted for peace-keeping duties in Cyprus, with at least two member states contributing forces, in addition to those of the three guarantor states—Britain, Greece and Turkey.

This comes when information we are receiving in the Government emphasizes the great importance of United Nations intervention at a time of deterioration in the situation in Cyprus.

Honourable senators, if the announcement is received from New York before 6 o'clock tonight, I shall ask the Senate to be available and convene for the purpose of giving consent to consider at that time, or at the earliest convenient time thereafter, a resolution in which we would join with the House of Commons, if they pass it, approving a Canadian participation in the United Nations peace-keeping force, in a manner described in the resolution which is to be proposed.

In any event, the resolution will be placed on the Order Paper, so that it can be discussed in the other place on Monday, if no word is received from the United Nations headquarters in New York this afternoon. If the resolution appears on the House of Commons Order Paper, it will reach us in due course, as all honourable senators understand.

It is also proposed that an R.C.A.F. plane should take off this afternoon for Cyprus with a small party of Canadian officers. They will report to General Gyani, the United Nations military representative at Cyprus, and will secure from him information about facilities and administration arrangements in Cyprus for the Canadian United Nations contingent, if and when one goes forward, as is now expected.

This will be a purely reconnaissance group and a fact-finding mission, to expedite and facilitate later moves that may have to be made.

I further suggest, honourable senators, that if necessary, when we conclude the business on our Order Paper this afternoon, it may be necessary to adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell around 6 o'clock.

I think this would serve the situation adequately at the moment.

Honourable senators, I thought you should know what the proposal would be. I may say that I was talking earlier today with the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) about this situation.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, I take it the understanding is that unless we hear something definite from New York before 6 o'clock, there will be no call, but if we do we will be called at 6 o'clock. Could the honourable Leader of the Government say whether we might expect to be called later this evening?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I should think that by 6 o'clock we would know whether any action is required today or tomorrow. If at that hour it seems perfectly clear that the other house will defer action until Monday; then, in view of this emergent situation we will have to adjourn, depending upon the news we receive, to Monday or some appropriate time.

I thank the honourable Senator Hollett again for his courtesy.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—DEBATE CONTINUED

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, the announcement which has just been made is so important that I am happy the honourable Leader of the Government asked me to suspend my remarks while he made the announcement. The end result of this situation, we cannot judge, but we are thankful to Almighty God that Canada is in a position today to help form a force for keeping the peace—a force, not for war, but for peace.

Honourable senators, I resume my remarks, and I shall not detain you much longer. I was referring to section 35, which amends section 671 of the Canada Shipping Act. As you know, that particular section prescribed that only British ships might carry goods and passengers from one place in Canada to another place in Canada, either directly or by way of a foreign port, each of which is on the Great Lakes or their connecting or tributary waters.

In the Canada Shipping Act, the term "British ships" included "Canadian ships." Not only did it include Canadian ships, but it included ships of the Commonwealth. However, this particular amendment makes no provision for other ships and, indeed, the purpose of the amendment is to provide that only Canadian ships may engage in the coasting trade of Canada between ports on the Great Lakes and the River St. Lawrence as far seaward as the present limits of the inland waters of Canada.

I am not sufficiently well versed to estimate what effect this new amendment will have, not only on our shipping on the Great Lakes but, also, with regard to our associations with other Commonwealth countries and, indeed, with the United States of America.

I merely mention it so that it might be brought properly to the attention of honourable senators. I do believe that under the Commonwealth Shipping Agreement all British and/or Commonwealth ships could engage in the coasting trade of Canada.

Similar legislation to section 35 was, I think, suggested by a former Minister of Transport in 1961. As it was 1961, I take it that would be under a Progressive Conservative Government. The intention then was to renegotiate a Commonwealth Shipping Agreement in order to exclude the Great Lakes from that agreement. I do not know if that has been done. Probably we will be told if it has been done. In any case, I think it will have to be done before this particular section can have the force of law.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I wish to stress three points.

First, oil pollution of our sea lanes and coasting water must be stopped and, if increasing the fine tenfold does not have the necessary effect, than I would implore the governments of the 14 nations of the Atlantic area to adopt sterner measures.

Secondly, the effect that section 35 of this bill will have on our trading relations with other countries.

Thirdly, let us do nothing to further impair our coastal and Labrador fisheries in the Atlantic provinces.

This we have to be careful about. Our Labrador fishing industry in Newfoundland was a thriving industry 30 years ago, but it is now reduced to about 50 ships. The Premier of Newfoundland, during the past two years at least, has been doing all he can to set up some kind of program to encourage our fishermen, and I understand that the Government is going to give attention to that program as quickly as possible. I have every confidence that in response to the appeal to the Government, it will act sensibly. An indication of its desire to do so is that last session, after the Harbours Commission bill had been before the Senate and was studied in committee, certain desirable amendments were recommended. I have seen the bill which was introduced in the Commons, and I was happy to note that the present amending bill is much more satisfactory to everybody.

I sincerely hope that any criticisms we may make on this bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act will receive the same second look—we have been told that this is what we are here for—and I have every confidence that that will be done, because this act is all important for the well-being of the greater part of Canada.

Honourable senators, anything having to do with shipping affects me personally, not in a business way but because I was born a fisherman. I fished on the Labrador coast when 13 years of age—I don't think anyone else here can make that claim—and my ancestors were fishing in Newfoundland as long ago as 300 years or more. So the question of the fishing industry is important to me. I hope that every consideration will be given to these amendments, most of which are excellent and do credit to those who drafted them. All I ask is that the two or three matters I have mentioned be reviewed and considered.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, this is a comprehensive bill. As one who is from the Maritime provinces, I can assure you it is of great interest in that part of Canada.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the honourable senator from Burin (Hon. Mr. Hollett), and I agree entirely with his statement about pollution of the sea by oil.

I was a member of the Transport and Communications Committee, along with several other senators from the Maritimes, when this matter was discussed. At that time we discussed what other countries were doing to protect their coasts against pollution. We could get them to accept only a 50-mile limit. I am glad that by the convention of 1962 a 100-mile limit has been arranged, although I feel the limit should be more extensive than that.

In the committee we learned that England had a 1,000-mile limit, because apparently the Gulf Stream is responsible for polluting their Atlantic coast even at that distance. The convention did not succeed in getting the United States to agree to a limit of protection of our coasts to a greater extent. Newfoundland suffers badly from pollution of its coasts by reason of the Gulf Stream. I recall speaking to Senator Bradley during the course of the meeting to which I have referred, and he pointed out that the oil floating near the coast and on the banks was disastrous to birds, because when their wings become saturated with oil they are unable to fly and become short of food.

With regard to the future, many of the ship repair firms are installing tanks in their plants to contain this oil. I know that in our part of the country they install tanks when a ship is repaired; we cannot put them in the harbour because the oil gets down around the wharves; they get saturated with oil, and become a fire hazard on the waterfront. Also, it is harmful to fish, and has a bad effect on communities generally. I agree with what Senator Hollett said with regard to pollution by oil. I hope that eventually we shall find a place to store it, or a means of forcing these vessels to stay farther out to sea when they discharge oil.

Like the honourable Senator Hollett, I am very much interested in section 3. In our province we also have hundreds of fishing skippers in vessels of 150 tons. In fact, most of the deep-sea fishing fleet is composed of vessels of 150 tons or more. However, a vessel, to fish in the wintertime, should be 90 feet long—and that is about 150 tons. We have the same problem as that of Newfoundland. We have many men who are eminently qualified, but who do not have certificates. That problem has been with us for some time. It is on the statute book that if a man, within 10 years of the date of his application, has been 12 months on a ship, he can apply for a certificate, and if he is proved to be a sober man on board ship and of good character he can apply for an examination, one which will be very easy for him to pass, because these fishing skippers are highly efficient and successful men. Many of them enjoy an income which I believe would compare well with some of our senators. But they have to work hard for it.

I was delighted to hear the speech by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) yesterday. He is a lawyer of distinction, and I am sure that what he said will be read in Senate Hansard with great interest by people in my part of the country. I am sure that it will prove to be a book of knowledge, which they will read carefully and remember. The Canada Shipping Act deals with complex problems, and we were fortunate in having a senator of the eminence of the honourable Senator Bouffard, who lives in Quebec, sponsor the bill and to place this information before the house.

Honourable Senator Hollett proceeded to discuss section 35, which I think is the important section of the bill. It is a new step forward in that it shows that for the first time we are giving some support and protection to our coastal service in Canada. The United States, as well as other countries, protect their coastal service. Canada, under the influence of Great Britain, has for many years been rather wide open in the operation of its coastal trade.

This is quite a long story. The statute book of 1932 contains the Statute of Westminster, dated December 11, 1931. The British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement is dated the day before the Statute of Westminster. While the Statute of Westminster was our emancipation, we were tied up with the British on our coastal trade the day before, and that has been the position ever since.

The honourable senator spoke about what this measure would do to Newfoundland. I have been concerned for quite a while about the difference between our problem and that of Newfoundland, because Newfoundland is on the way from England and Europe, and ships coming from Newfoundland—if we were protecting wholly our coastal trade—would be coasting between Newfoundland and the mainland of Nova Scotia. So you would have difficulty, because you would take away that service which comes from Europe and goes to Newfoundland, which you value highly. So we can see how it is going to be a benefit to Newfoundland to be excluded from that section of the bill.

The bill does not annul this statute. The Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement is still in existence, except that part of it which extends to the British the privilege of our coasting trade in the inland waters of Canada. In so far as it refers to the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes, the British cannot enjoy the privilege unless they register their ships in Canada. Mark you, a British ship can be registered in Canada, because in the Canada Shipping Act, section 7(2), called "Optional Registration in Canada," says:

> Every British ship that is owned wholly by persons qualified to be owners of British ships and is not registered out of Canada may be registered in Canada—

I do not know whether the British will register ships in Canada. It depends on whether they have to have Canadian crews, and whether they have to bear the expense that we have to bear in order to operate our ships, because, as you know, their wages and operating expenses are lower. So it seems to me that in so far as that area is concerned the Canadians may have it to themselves.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Can a ship be registerd in two countries?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: No. A ship would have to be registered in Canada if she wanted to go under that service. Until recently, it was always a British ship or a Canadian ship of British registry. Some time ago legislation was enacted which provided that only British ships built in Great Britain could qualify under this wording. They wanted their own ships built in Britain before they could gain this privilege over here. Now this act says only Canadian ships can ply betwen the limits set out in clause 35 of the bill. It says:

> (2a) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2), no goods or passengers shall be transported by water, in any ship other than a Canadian ship, from one place in Canada to another place in Canada each of which is on the Great Lakes or its connecting or tributary waters or on the River St. Lawrence or its connecting or tributary waters as far seaward as a straight line drawn
>
> (a) from Cap des Rosiers to West Point Anticosti Island, and
>
> (b) from Anticosti Island to the north shore of the River St. Lawrence along the meridian of longitude sixty-three degrees west.

This conforms with what is called the inland waters of Canada, in so far as the River St. Lawrence and the lakes are concerned. Inland in Canada now includes all lakes and rivers of Canada, as well as the St. Lawrence basin and the Great Lakes.

I think this will prove quite an advantage to the people along the St. Lawrence River. The Province of Quebec is most fortunate in having flowing through it the waters in the lower reaches of the St. Lawrence, as they come from the Great Lakes. We in the Maritimes know the value of trade of this kind, and I am sure that the citizens of the City of Quebec, where the honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) resides, will regard this with much interest. As you know, the City of Quebec is about 200 miles from the sea, but there they still experience the ebb and flow of the tide twice in 24 hours. It is remarkable that that far from the sea they still have the waters of the Atlantic pushing in the tides—I think it extends as far as Trois Rivieres.

I look upon the City of Quebec as one of the unique cities of Canada. Coming up from the Maritimes on the train at night, one can look out and see it there on the hill. It is a majestic sight; and when you think of its history and traditions, and the fact that it now has this advantage for traffic, which I believe will be of benefit to them, it is indeed a favoured city. I say that because I think the City of Quebec is the focal point of the area that will be affected by this legislation.

One honourable senator asked yesterday if a ship could load, say, at Seven Islands and carry that load through the lakes to Cleveland or one of the cities in the United States. The answer is yes, because that is an international voyage. All this section of the bill says is that you cannot carry goods or passengers from one port to another in that section of Canada except in a Canadian ship.

How does it affect the Maritimes? Well, I do not know, but I size it up rather this way. All they are doing is stopping the British coming over at the moment; but our ships can go up there and Canadian ships can come down to the Maritimes.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What do you mean by "our ships"?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The ships of the Maritimes. They can go up the river to the lakes and come down. We are Canadian ships. There is not much we lose because in Nova Scotia we have always liked free trade, and it may be that ships coming from Europe will come to Nova Scotia instead of going up the river. I am not sure what this will do to us. I think it will help Newfoundland splendidly, and it may help the Maritimes. However, I would like to see it given a try, because it is something new and affords some protection for the coastal trade. For that reason, I believe it will be good.

With regard to the section dealing with the masters, or "mates", as they call them—I have never heard them called "mates"; we usually call them "second hands" down our way—I remember a few years ago this same question came up before the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I was a member of that committee, as were many other honourable senators. The hearings were held in May 1956, and the following honourable senators were in attendance: Senators Hugessen, Aseltine, Beaubien, Bradley, Connolly (Halifax North), Connolly (Ottawa West), Euler, Gouin, Grant, Hardy, Isnor, Kinley, MacKinnon, McKeen, McLean, Molson, Paterson, Roebuck and Smith (Queens-Shelburne). We sat in committee for a few days and at the conclusion the minutes say this:

> Following discussion, and on motion of the Honourable Senator Kinley, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith, it was resolved that clause 6 of the bill be deleted.

That is the bill that was going to reduce the tonnage of the ship from 150 to 15 tons, which could be in charge of a skipper who did not have a certificate. After discussing it with the transport officials, and after giving it consideration and having received many telegrams from the field—and I might add there have been many telegrams from the field in this instance—they came to the conclusion that these men were qualified by service and experience, and issued certificates to all.

In the days of sailing ships the master's job was more difficult and hazardous. Now they have engines and instruments which make it somewhat easier, but still these masters are good seamen and expert fishermen.

We must also remember that nowadays these ships cost about a quarter of a million dollars each. Do you think the owner would put such a ship in the hands of an incompetent master? We do not have many casualties. Furthermore, they work on shares down there, and if a skipper is not efficient he could have difficulty getting a crew. As I say, they are on shares and there is keen competition. Furthermore, these men are trained in the school of experience. How would we like it if we were called upon to pass an examination based on school work when we are 40 years old? These men know their work. Naturally, they fear the book work and the school work necessary to pass an examination of that kind.

I was very happy, as I am sure Senator Hollett was too, to hear Senator Bouffard say in his remarks:

> I would point out that a certificate of service is a certificate which would be issued to those fishermen who have already served in the capacity named for a designated period of time, and such certificates would be issued on the basis of that service only without further examination.

I was going to ask for an oral examination—they did it for me before when it was suggested. They sent examiners down and discussed the matter with the men; they examined them and found they were all eminently qualified.

> That is they will not send away people who have had experience in fishing vessels, whether or not they have or could get a certificate. They will not be subject to any further examination and they will have a certificate of competency which will enable them to continue in their livelihood. I am given to understand that we may rest assured nothing in these clauses of the bill could have the effect of suddenly depriving a serving fisherman of his livelihood, as such.

That is good news. I think that is a splendid thing. It means that the department is willing to co-operate. You must remember that if we had 50 skippers unemployed, the situation would be serious.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why did they put it otherwise in the bill, if they are going to do it this way?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Well, since the bill came up it would appear we have been doing a little homework. We have got an assurance that this will be done. If I remember correctly, my honourable friend supported me the last time in my efforts to bring this about, and perhaps we will be able to do it this time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will support you again. But the point I do not understand is why the bill is drawn in this fashion when we are not going to comply with the provisions.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I am not against education as such, but you have to recognize that people who make their livelihood there, and who have money invested, cannot be put on the beach. That would not be fair.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Does the honourable senator think it is wise to bring in a bill containing a section which says so-and-so, and then to be told, off the record more or less, "Well, of course we are going to bring in regulations which will nullify that completely." Does the honourable senator think that is correct?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I do not like the section of the bill, but I see a little light and I am glad to see it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Do I understand the honourable senator to say that this certificate which is being discussed is a certificate of service? It is not a certificate of competency? Competence is implied, but it is not described as a certificate of competence.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It is competence, because they were 10 years in the service. In the 10 years they have shown themselves to be able to do the work. To get a certificate of course they may have an examination, but it may be an oral examination.

We must remember that these skippers are men who can do things at sea, and while we like people to know things, it is also important to be able to do things. One can read in a book about running an automobile, but to be able to do it well one has to actually drive it. That is the situation with these skippers.

I would point out to honourable senators that we have little unemployment down our way; we are at times short of people for the work we are doing. That has been the situation for years. The people in my county would not accept the dole when it was given years ago because they said it was "poor money" and they would not take it. That is the kind of people we have down there. We are in the forefront of the fishing industry in Canada. The town of Lunenburg is a model for other sections of the coast. They recognize that fact. It must also be remembered that these skippers are really the managers of the schooners; they must succeed, and we value them highly.

Premier Smallwood is starting a college in Newfoundland, and I hear there may be a college in Nova Scotia. I have been to such a college in Lisbon, Portugal, but there they send a man to sea for six months, and then he alternates with the teaching. There, too, it must be remembered that most of the fishing is done in one-man dories.

When it comes to the engineer, we are a little more particular. When you talk of an engine of 600 brake horsepower, you have a highly developed engine that probably weighs 25 tons.

Hon. Mr. Horner: The engineer would have to be a Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: He usually is.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It would help him—it always does.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: He always was when I was in the field anyway. I would prefer to have one good engineer than two poor ones, because when you are at sea and something goes wrong the engineer becomes very important. I should like to discuss the question of the engineer in committee because it is only across the table one can really discuss these things and get good results.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I wonder if I might ask the honourable senator a question at this point? I am interested in knowing if he can tell us approximately what size ship it would be that requires over 8 nominal horsepower and 600-brake horsepower? What kind of ship are we speaking of?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: That is a good engine for a ship of 150 tons.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Six horsepower?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: No, 600 horsepower. This is brake horsepower that we are talking about; not nominal horsepower.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Where do these engineers get their training?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I have been in the ship repair business for 50 years, and I must say that the ships sometimes take out men as engineers. We employ about 300 men, and I am sorry to say that we lose some of them because they go as engineers on ships. They are usually the younger men. However, we feel that a young man should improve himself when he has the chance. They get good training in the shops, and also good training on the ships. Mind you, honourable senators, they are important men.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Any farmer in Saskatchewan could run one of those engines.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Sure, but he is on the shore and he has always someone beside him to advise him. An engineer on a ship is on his own.

I come now to this matter of limited liability. I think the limit of liability was 1,000 francs per ton for loss of property, and 3,000 francs per ton for loss of life. The Government has taken the privilege of evaluating the amount of liability in francs. I think this bill would raise the limit of liability from $75 to about $200 for the same kind of ship. In this respect, whether a vessel is under 300 tons or not it is presumed to be 300 tons, so there will be a larger amount of liability available if a small vessel is involved.

The convention for the protection of life at sea is good, although it affects only vessels for 300 tons and over. We all subscribe to it. I think the only thing that has been added to it are provisions respecting nuclear ships, which have to be considered in these days. That is included in this bill, and it is a good thing it is there.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Have they any in Saskatchewan, do you know?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I do not know whether they have nuclear ships in Saskatchewan or not. However, a navy ship does not have to be a convention ship, and the convention does not include ships of under 300 tons. Of course, the regulations speak of cargo ships and passenger ships, but they are applied more particularly to passenger ships. I point out, however, that most cargo ships now have the privilege of carrying up to 12 passengers and, of course, they are taken care of.

The two main hazards at sea are fire and collision, and the convention is concerned with the protection of life at sea. We sometimes have trouble with the authorities in respect of life-saving boats. I once had a great deal of trouble with respect to the dory. I have had engineers tell me that when a boat is down in the water she is more stable; but in a high sea the waves will ride over a boat, whereas a dory will ride over the waves. The dory is the best kind of small life-saving boat, especially in the hands of a man who knows how to handle it.

I have been talking for too long already, honourable senators, but in closing I would just like to mention the coastal trade on the St. Lawrence. I agree with these measures in regard to it. The Americans protect their coastal fleet. They even see to it that they have their own nationals aboard. There is only one nation in the world with a higher standard of living than ours, and in connection with the St. Lawrence waterway I think we ought to have reciprocity with the Americans in respect to coastal shipping. If we had reciprocity with the Americans in respect to shipping we would get along more harmoniously on the seaway; it would be good for trade and good, I am sure, for the Maritime provinces.

I commend this bill to the house. We will have an interesting discussion on it in committee, where we will obtain much information. It is really an education to attend the sittings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications when men who have the departmental attitude and technical education are called before it. The committee can call on the experience of those who carry on the work, and I think we shall have this bill fully and completely explained to us there.

I might say, honourable senators, that this policy of closing the coastal trade is not new. It is the policy of this Government, but it was also the idea of the last Government. The Honourable Leon Balcer, a distinguished minister in the last government, discussed this policy and was going to introduce a bill, but dissolution of Parliament intervened. There is no political aspect to it. Both sides are in favour of it, and I think it will be passed into law without much trouble.

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, I hesitate to rise at this time and follow the voice of experience in matters of this kind. My honourable colleague from Queens-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley), who is my next door neighbour in Nova Scotia, is well qualified to speak on this subject.

I have received some information from various sources with respect to certain parts of this bill. I have also had some correspondence and telegrams in connection with it, so I consider that I am in a position now to make up my mind as to what I think of some of the sections. Perhaps I may be in a position to offer some clarification of the effect of the bill, and particularly of section 3 with which Senator Hollett concerned himself, as did Senator Kinley. I might begin by making a short reference to section 35. Indeed, it is my intention to make my contribution to the debate very brief.

The purpose of section 35 is to provide that only Canadian ships may engage in the coastal trade of Canada. There may be some confusion as to why it is appropriate that the Atlantic provinces be excluded from the provisions of this amendment. My honourable friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) has covered that point to some extent, but I have been informed that it is quite important to certain segments of industry in the Atlantic provinces to continue to be excluded from such an amendment.

In the first place, it is my impression that most of the coastal trade between various ports in the Atlantic provinces is carried on by rather small freighters, nearly all of which, if my memory serves me correctly, are rather heavily subsidized by the Canadian Government. Of course, only ships of Canadian registry can qualify for such a subsidy. A great deal of cargo is carried between the ports of the Atlantic provinces, and, as my friend Senator Hollett can endorse, much of the traffic in Newfoundland is carried in Canadian-owned bottoms. This change will have no effect on cargo rates in the Province of Newfoundland or in any other Atlantic province. However, there is another advantage which I would like to mention.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Can he give us an idea of the amount of British tonnage in this coastal trade that would be affected? Does it amount to very much?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Honourable senators, I am glad to have that question asked of me. I think the actual tonnage now carried in British ships is small indeed. Perhaps there is none at all. However, there are certain rather important exceptions which I was about to give when the question was asked.

The exception that makes it most important to continue this exemption from such provision applies to the newsprint industry. To my knowledge there is now, perhaps to the dismay of some of our friends in Quebec and Ontario, being built up in our Great Lakes ports a newsprint business. Some of our newsprint mills in the Atlantic provinces are just now edging into that market, and many ships have left Cornerbrook, Newfoundland for Toronto and other ports on the Great Lakes. In the future I think that that traffic will grow, because the publishers in the Great Lakes area are finding out, as the publishers in the United States found out many years ago, and as publishers in other parts of the world have known for some time, that the quality as well as the service makes this an attractive combination. We hope for the day when rather important shipments will be made from Atlantic provinces to inland ports. In order that ships can carry this kind of cargo economically, they must be specially built. Although it does not occur to a person without some knowledge of the matter, newsprint is in some ways a very perishable product. It must be handled carefully indeed. Therefore, specially constructed ships must be put into service. It has so happened that for relatively some years past, most of the ships which have carried newsprint from ports in this country to domestic and export market ports have been British ships. We did have some Canadian registered ships in the Port of Liverpool which carried on for many years and were able to carry newsprint at a relatively low freight rate. When the time came to replace those ships, it was considered by management to be uneconomic to replace them with Canadian ships manned by Canadian crews, as is required when a ship is registered in Canada. Therefore, for the last number of years the major export quantities of newsprint have been carried in British bottoms.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They would not be affected now under this act.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Under this exclusion, they will continue to be able to ship high quality newsprint from the Atlantic provinces, dropping cargo at Toronto and Hamilton or wherever they may have a market for the product.

There are likely to be other factors which may make it an important matter to consider. Perhaps in the future it may be a very important factor to retain the availability of British ships, which means a cheaper operated ship, in order that we may have better access to markets in other parts of the country.

Honourable senators, that is all I want to say with regard to that. When I had made my mind up to say a few words this afternoon, I intended to confine my remarks chiefly to clause 3 of the bill. Considerable attention has been paid to it. As has already been brought to our attention, the history was important in the legislation that is proposed. It was back in 1956, as Senator Kinley said, that a similar proposal was made. I recall that he and I felt that then was not the time to introduce it, because there had been practically no consultation with the industry and certainly none with the operators of those ships who would be chiefly concerned.

I understand that the reason why there was not consultation—I looked up the record to ascertain this—was a misunderstanding between the representatives of the industry, not only on the Atlantic coast but also on the Pacific coast, and the Department of Transport.

In 1956, when such a section was proposed to Parliament, Mr. J. R. Baldwin, the Deputy Minister of Transport—and he is still Deputy Minister—gave a clear understanding of the special skills that were acquired by fishermen. I looked up the record of the proceedings of the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to find what he said at the hearings in regard to the Canada Shipping Act amendment in 1956. He expressed his view in this way:

> The masters and mates of fishing vessels, through the hard lessons of experience, have become highly competent and in some cases are very brave and able seamen.

I think those are words with which Senator Hollett and all other senators will agree.

At that time it was the intention of the department to introduce proposals to certify masters and mates gradually over a period of years rather than to impose certification suddenly in a hard and arbitrary fashion. However, because of this lack of consultation with the industry—and indeed I do not believe the department gave any notice of its intentions to the fishermen themselves, we thought it necessary to have that section of the bill deleted.

Now, eight years later, a new amendment is being proposed, similar to the previous one, but this is under very different circumstances.

I think Senator Hollett has expressed doubts about the wisdom of proceeding with this at this time. At least, he has received some assurances as to how it will affect the industry, but there is some doubt lingering in his mind. I think Senator Kinley described his feeling about the matter as being one of nervousness. He is nervous about this. I have very little doubt, and I would not be nervous at all if there was written into the act some of the assurances given by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) and by various people in the Department of Transport.

From my correspondence with people in the industry, and from my conversations with people in the Department of Fisheries, I know that this time the introduction of the amendment under clause 3 has followed close consultation with the industry and the Department of Fisheries over a long period of time. I have been assured of this by the manager of the Fisheries Council of Canada, the industry's organization, with member organizations from coast to coast.

It might be interesting to remind my honourable friend from Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) that in Nova Scotia these organizations are the Nova Scotia Fish Packers' Association, the Canadian Atlantic Salt Fish Exporters' Association, and the Atlantic Fisheries Byproducts Association.

These three associations take in practically all the major schemes of the fishing industry in our province. I know that the organizations on the west coast similar to those are also members of the Fisheries Council of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: They work on shore.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Yes, and I may come to the other places that are in my friend's mind.

A spokesman for one of the member companies of the Nova Scotia Fish Packers' Association has written to me to say that they are in agreement with the proposal but would have preferred that even more stringent regulation of the certification be enforced at this time.

This confirms the statement made last evening by the sponsor of the bill, Senator Bouffard, that people on the east coast take the view, as he put it, that these proposals "do not go far enough." Other correspondence on this subject which I have had, however, confirms the view generally held now that the proposed regulations should apply only to the future.

One of my correspondents, who may be closer to the small boat fishing industry than others, and therefore closer to the fishermen most concerned, has advised me that any requirement to conform immediately to the act would create what he describes as a situation of "complete confusion in which wholesale disobedience would arise."

I think this would have been my opinion too, if it were proposed to make the change effective immediately and to require formal examination of applicants for certification.

I was very glad, therefore, to receive the assurance of Senator Bouffard, in the course of his remarks yesterday, that there will be no interference with present fishing operations.

Furthermore, I have been assured that as a result of close consultation with the industry and with the Department of Fisheries, all masters or mates presently engaged in the fishing industry will be given certificates simply upon submission of evidence of their experience. I have been informed that acceptable evidence can be provided by fish dealers or others with knowledge of the applicant's experience in the fishing industry.

It is also understood that regulations requiring examination of applicants, who are not now captains or mates engaged in fishing, will not be put into effect for at least a year. Even at that time they will only require satisfactory evidence of competency as captains or mates of longliners and draggers, and will have nothing to fear in the way of a formal written examination.

In order to make it quite clear to all concerned, and particularly to the fishermen themselves who have had no notice of what the intentions are, I suggest that an amendment to clause (2) of section 37 of the bill be considered when the bill is before the Transport and Communications Committee.

Clause 37 of the bill provides that section 3 of the act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation by the Governor in Council. To this section I suggest adding a provision that the date of proclamation be no earlier than one year following the publication of regulations made under section 5 of this act. This, I believe, would remove all doubts and concern which may be in the minds of those most affected by the legislation—the fishermen themselves, many of whom it has been impossible to consult.

The question may be asked: "Why is it necessary to provide for certification of fishing captains and mates, if those presently fishing in those capacities are to be certified without formal examination?"

One answer would be that recognition of competence by the granting of a certificate, carrying with it a well-earned title, should be considered as a status symbol which these men have earned and richly deserve. I believe that to many young men from fishing communities, now being educated at consolidated high schools, it would be a status symbol having more appeal and greater significance than a white collar and a briefcase.

Perhaps of even more importance, however, will be the fact that it will provide a future pool of better trained personnel for promotion to larger fishing vessels, people who for some years have been required to hold a master's certificate and so on.

If the industry is going to be developed in such a way as to ensure that Canadians acquire their share of the fish resources of the continental shelf, and be able to share in the expanding markets of the future, many additional large draggers with modern equipment, appropriate to this age of automation and productivity, will be required. It is obvious, I think, that a higher educational and technical standard will be equally needed if these objectives of the future are to be met.

Honourable senators, I believe the amendments proposed will be of assistance in raising that standard in the future.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), on behalf of Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY— ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cook, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C., for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to His Speech at the opening of the Session.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, Senator Inman, in whose name this debate was adjourned, proposes to stand this item on the Order Paper; but in view of the announcement I made earlier, and perhaps the need to adjust our program for next week, I would ask, with the consent of the house, that this item be placed on the Order Paper as Item No. 1 for the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The order stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, the situation in the other place at the moment is not clear. There is some possibility that the Commons will sit tomorrow, but there may be technical difficulties to prevent that happening. Also, there may not be word before six o'clock from the United Nations headquarters in New York. However, because the situation is as fluid as it is, I think it would be appropriate if we adjourned until six o'clock, or shortly thereafter, to resume at the call of the bell. We should know by then what we can do. I hope that will commend itself to all honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 6.12 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I am given to understand that at 6 o'clock this evening the Secretary-General of the United Nations announced that the peace-keeping force which is intended to operate in Cyprus has in fact been authorized and formed. According to this country's practice, Parliament must approve the dispatch of any members for that force from this country.

The House of Commons has just adjourned until 8 o'clock. Barring the development of procedural difficulties, it is proposed that the resolution to approve Canadian participation in this force be debated, beginning at 8 o'clock, in the other place. Of course, no one can say how long that debate will last.

In view of the importance of the matter, and also in view of the obvious uncertainty as to what might happen in the other branch of Parliament, I would suggest that this house do stand adjourned to the call of the bell at approximately 9.15 o'clock this evening. At that time we may be able to chart our course a little more accurately.

I ask honourable senators to be patient with me in connection with this problem, and I would even ask them to keep in mind the possibility that the Senate will have to sit tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: We acquit you of all responsibility.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I say that we all realize the seriousness of the situation and the importance to be attached to this matter. As far as those who are associated with me in the Opposition are concerned, we will give every support we can to whatever the Leader of the Government decides is necessary in this regard.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9.25 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE-KEEPING FORCE

PROPOSAL FOR CANADIAN PARTICIPATION—CYPRUS SITUATION

Hon. John J. Connolly: As honourable senators are aware there is a motion before the other branch of Parliament dealing with the proposed peace-keeping force that is to be established or has been established by the United Nations in Cyprus, and at the moment debate is continuing. I can, of course, give no assurance as to how long it will go on. Normally, the other house rises at 10 o'clock, but I am rather hopeful that before that hour the motion will have been passed and will have come to this house in the form of a message.

I can tell the Senate that the Leader of the Opposition in the other place has given full support to the Government's motion.

Pending the arrival of the message from the lower house, I think it appropriate for this house and for the information of honourable senators if I were to place upon the record at this time two statements made today by the Secretary-General of the United Nations before the Security Council, because they form the basis for the further developments that are taking place in the Parliament of Canada. May I read the words of the Secretary-General:

> It may be recalled that in my report to the Council of yesterday, March 12, I expressed my confidence that the U.N. peace-keeping force in Cyprus would be soon established, and indicated that I hoped shortly to be able to report some positive developments. It is with considerable gratification that I am able to inform the Council that the force now is actually being constituted.
>
> Since late yesterday, I have received firm and official assurances from three of the governments I have approached about providing contingents that those contingents will be available. These governments are: Canada, Ireland and Sweden. With regard to each of these governments, certain conditions and pre-requisites were defined, which either have been met or, in my view, can be coped with.
>
> I may add that there are other promising prospects for troops. In these circumstances, therefore, I am now able to state to the Council that the force will be established without further delay, and that elements of it will soon be deployed in Cyprus. Indeed, a small party of Canadian officers will be en route to Cyprus tonight.
>
> This morning I received a communication through the Permanent Representative of Turkey to the United Nations which has since been issued as a Security Council document. I immediately requested the Permanent Representative to convey to his government my serious concern and my urgent appeal to exercise the utmost restraint. A formal reply to this communication has also been sent.
>
> The Council is also aware of the pledges of voluntary financial contributions which I have already received from several governments, which assure the requisite financial support for the U.N. peace-keeping force in Cyprus. I am most grateful to all these governments for their ready and generous response.

That is the end of the first statement. There was a further statement made in the Security Council at 6 o'clock this evening by the Secretary-General, which reads as follows:

> Since late yesterday, I have had formal and official assurances from three of the governments I have approached about providing contingents that these contingents will be available. These governments are: Canada, Ireland and Sweden. With regard to each of these parties, certain conditions and prerequisites have been defined which either have been met or in my view can be coped with.
>
> In the light of these circumstances, therefore, I am able to state that the force will be established without further delay and that elements of it will soon be deployed in Cyprus. Indeed, an advance fact-finding party is leaving tonight from Canada for Cyprus.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understand from the honourable Leader of the Government that when the resolution comes from the other place he will move its adoption, and that at that time I will have the opportunity of saying a few words.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I am very grateful to the honourable Leader of the Opposition for the patience he has shown in this matter all day today. His kindness and co-operation have certainly been of great assistance to me. I felt that it would be helpful to honourable senators if they had these statements now. Anticipating what is to come a little later, I think some time will be saved by having them on record, and when the message comes from the other place we can debate it in the usual way.

If it meets with the convenience of all honourable senators, I would move that we rise now to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 10 o'clock.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 10 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, a message has been received from the House of Commons as follows:

> That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations International Force in Cyprus, and that this House do approve the same;
>
> Ordered: That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House has adopted a resolution approving of the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations International Force in Cyprus, and requesting Their Honours to unite with this House in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words "Senate and".
>
> Léon-J. Raymond
> Clerk of the House of Commons

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly: With leave, now.

Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by honourable Senator Brooks:

> That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations International Force in Cyprus;
>
> That this House do approve the same; and
>
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House that the Senate have adopted the said resolution and have filled up the blanks therein with the words: "Senate and".

Honourable senators, I propose now to make a statement which will paraphrase the statement made on behalf of the Government in the other place tonight by the Prime Minister; while it will not be identical, it will, I think, be couched in language that is appropriate for the requirements of this house.

I should begin by saying that on March 4 the Secretary-General of the United Nations made an official request to the Canadian Government to contribute a contingent for peacekeeping work in Cyprus. This came as a result of a Security Council resolution, which was passed the same day, and which recommended the creation of the force and also the appointment of a mediator.

The Security Council recommended that the function of the force should be in the interests of preserving international peace and security, to prevent a recurrence of fighting; and, as necessary, to contribute to the restoration and maintenance of law and order, and a return to normal conditions.

It was further recommended that the stationing of the force on Cyprus should be for a period of three months.

I think all honourable senators are conscious of the fact that Canadians are concerned about the danger of conflict between Greece and Turkey, two neighbouring nations, and allies of Canada within the NATO Alliance. I think, too, there is a general feeling among Canadians that assistance should be rendered to Cyprus in this emergency—Cyprus, like Canada, is a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. I think that Canadians generally have approved other peace-keeping operations in which Canada has been engaged since the conclusion of the last great war. Canadian troops have done this service in Korea, in the Congo, in the Middle East, in Kashmir, and in Indo-China.

Two days after the action to which I have referred, and which was taken by the Security Council, Canada's permanent representative at the United Nations, on March 6, raised certain questions about this issue with the Secretary-General. Those questions related to the size and composition of the force, the role that would be envisaged for it, and the powers that it would have. He put the basic conception of the composition of the force the way I believe Canadians generally would want it, that is, that it should be basically multi-national in character. That is precisely what has been done because, in addition to Canada, Swedish and Finnish contingents are now committed to work alongside the British, the Turkish and the Greek contingents, who are now on the island, and Ireland has conditionally agreed to contribute a contingent of approximately 500 men.

I think it will be clear, too, in the statements that I placed on the record of this house a little earlier, that there was obvious danger to peace generally, and certainly to peace in the Mediterranean area, as a result of developments to which the Secretary-General pointed in the statement he made this morning, developments that came about yesterday and today. It should be remembered, of course, that Greece and Turkey have treaty rights in Cyprus which allow them to intervene in certain circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Which side are we going to take?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The purpose of a peace-keeping operation is not to take sides.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Well, we have to take sides.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps the honourable senator will allow me to make a statement, which is rather difficult to do at a time like this.

I should tell honourable senators that about 83 per cent of the population of Cyprus is Greek, comprising approximately 400,000 persons. Seventeen per cent are Turkish, comprising approximately 100,000 persons. The problem within Cyprus basically concerns a dispute over the constitution that has been established there. Obviously, to resolve constitutional problems the importance of moderation and of co-operation cannot be over-emphasized. That is why the Security Council has emphasized the importance of a mediator, and why the establishment of an international peace force to keep the peace on the island while mediation goes on is of paramount importance.

The government of Canada is under no illusions about the difficulties involved in this operation, because peace-keeping operations in which Canada has been involved before, have not been easy. Usually they are expensive, and in most cases more expensive than was estimated when the work was undertaken. The duration of the work has never been very definite and, also, one can expect that there will be incidents which will be of a very serious character.

It should be remembered that the force will not act as an army of occupation. Its success will depend upon the degree of co-operation between the Greek and Turkish communities in the island, as well as that between the governments of Greece and Turkey, both of whom, as I have said, have treaty rights in the island.

It is proposed that the Canadian contingent will consist of a self-contained battalion group augmented by a reconnaissance squadron. There will be administrative and logistic support as well. Further, it is proposed that the Royal 22nd Regiment, now stationed at Val Cartier, and currently on standby duty for just this kind of United Nations service, and a reconnaissance squadron of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, now in Gagetown, New Brunswick, will proceed to Cyprus for this duty. I need not say here how high in the regard and the esteem of the Canadian people these two fine regiments are held.

It is proposed that the Canadian contingent will be moved by R.C.A.F. Transport Command to Nicosia, in Cyprus. As I said earlier today, a small fact-finding group is already en route to Cyprus.

I should further add that H.M.C.S. Bonaventure is in Halifax and will also participate in the transportation of materiel. The Canadian contingent is expected to approximate 1,050 officers and men from the army and, in addition, the R.C.A.F. element will probably be in the neighbourhood of 100 men.

The financing of the force is important. As honourable senators know, in the United Nations for years past the policy of successive Canadian governments has been to advocate as strongly as possible that the cost of these peace-keeping operations, when undertaken by the United Nations, should be a collective responsibility of all member nations. That has not been possible in this case. There have been two voluntary contributions offered: one from the United States, in the amount of $2 million; and another from the United Kingdom, in the amount of $1 million. But in this particular emergency, which is described as rapidly deteriorating, the Government has felt this was not the time to sit down and wait until the money was available, because the very presence of Canadians, the very movement of Canadians into the area, it is believed, will give an assurance that the situation in Cyprus will be dealt with in an even-handed way by people who are interested in even-handed justice.

For that reason the Government has decided to assume the cost of the Canadian contingent for a three-month period, and also to pay the cost of transporting the men and the materiel. It is estimated that the cost involved for this period will be approximately $2,600,000.

Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition in the other place said this evening, and I paraphrase his statement: There is no other country which has contributed more to the peace-keeping aims of the United Nations than has Canada. I think all Canadians are proud of this kind of practical, effective contribution to peace-keeping that this country under different governments has made.

I think we should remember, too, that the leadership which we can give in emergencies of this kind is objective, detached and effective, and is not suspect by any of the peoples who are engaged either in the dispute or in trying to solve the dispute, because Canada is known everywhere as a country without Imperial ambition.

Canada is fortunate too in that General Gyani of India is to be the commander of the force, because Canadians have already served under this gallant officer, both in the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East and in Yemen. I think also that Canada, and indeed all the nations of the Western world, are indebted to the work that has been done by the Secretary-General of the United Nations in his efforts to try to restore and maintain peace in Cyprus where the present situation could indeed threaten peace in many other parts of the world.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, as the seconder of this motion moved by the honourable Leader of the Government, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words.

I am not in the position that the Leader of the Government has been in, in that I have not been a member of the cabinet, where I know this matter has been studied very carefully during the day and where all members of the Government have had access to all material in connection therewith.

I have the same information, I think, that all other honourable senators have and, indeed, the information which the people of Canada have. We in Canada, as well as the people of the world, are facing what can be called a very serious and perhaps very dangerous situation.

We are not taking sides with anyone. That is abundantly clear. Our force will be part of the United Nations force, the purpose of which is to maintain peace in the world and to see that injustice is done to no party concerned in the Cyprus situation.

I am sure we would all like to have much more information, but I am satisfied that the Prime Minister, and the Leader of the Government here, have given Parliament, and through Parliament the people of Canada, all the information that has been possible for them to obtain. They have emphasized that the situation is such that it must be dealt with at once. If we decide to wait for a day or a week to obtain more information, then there is the possibility that the situation will have worsened to the extent that a United Nations force would not be able to preserve, as we hope it will, the peace of the world.

The United Nations has been asked to take on a thankless task. This is not the first time. I remember in 1960 the United Nations did all it could to preserve peace in the Congo. I remember also that another Secretary-General of the United Nations, Dag Hammarskjold, gave his life at that time for the cause of peace. Today, U Thant, another great world figure, is giving his all, I am sure, in trying to maintain peace, and we all hope he will be successful.

I am satisfied, honourable senators, that unless something is done immediately a very dangerous situation will result. This is the opinion of the House of Commons, as expressed while I listened to the debate there tonight. May I point out to honourable senators that a vote was taken in the House of Commons a short time ago in favour of this resolution. The result was not unanimous. There were two members who opposed it. But, from across this country all members of the House of Commons except two thought the course the Government was taking was the correct one.

The honourable Leader of the Government has said we should be proud of what Canada has done in the past in these peace-keeping operations. We should indeed be proud. The honourable Leader of the Government has enumerated them. We should also be very proud that all through our history, even before the United Nations was thought of, Canada was never an aggressor nation. In every conflict and in every peace-keeping undertaking she has always volunteered to do what she thought was best for the maintenance of the peace of mankind. She is doing the same thing at the present time.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Our troops have performed under the United Nations flag in Korea. There, perhaps, it might be said that sides were taken, but it is a long story with more to it than just that statement. Our troops have been under the United Nations flag in Indo-China and in the Middle East on the Gaza Strip, where they were in between the Arab countries and Israel, not taking sides but keeping them apart. Our troops have been in other places doing what we hope they, together with troops from other parts of the world, will be able to do in Cyprus.

Canadian troops will be in good company. And here may I pay tribute—something that is not often done—to the nation that has been sitting on this powder keg for a long period of time. Not only has she been sitting on the powder keg and keeping the peace in that part of the world—it is my belief that had she not been there, there would have been war between Turkey and Greece before this time —but she is also paying for that opportunity. I am speaking, of course, of Great Britain, our sister Commonwealth nation.

I was very proud to learn that the regiment that is spoken of as being sent from Canada is the Royal 22nd Regiment, the famous Van Doos.

I remember the First World War—which shows how old I am becoming—when I was in a New Brunswick battalion known as the 26th Battalion. We were brigaded with the 25th Battalion from Nova Scotia. There was the 26th Battalion from New Brunswick, the 24th from Montreal and the 22nd from the Province of Quebec. These battalions relieved each other. The 25th was relieved by the 24th and vice versa. Through months and months on end, the 26th Battalion from New Brunswick relieved the 22nd, and the 22nd relieved the 26th. We became very close indeed, as men will under circumstances of that kind.

We thought we were the best battalion in the brigade, the others thought they were; but I might say that I still think, for obvious reasons, that the 26th was the best, but the 22nd Battalion was a great battalion and we can certainly be very proud that it is the battalion which has been chosen to go to Cyprus.

Honourable senators, there is nothing more that I can add. I am sure the honourable Leader of the Government has given us all the information available. It is one of those unfortunate circumstances where men may be called upon to do a far greater task than we think. Still, it is one of those things which a country, a proud country like Canada, must do in the interests of peace.

I am glad that there is such unanimity, and I believe it extends all across Canada, for this effort which is being made and for the attitude which the Government is taking.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, I would be very thankful to my Leader, for whom I have great respect and loyalty, to inform us—if not today, at least early next week—if any request has been made by Archbishop Makarios or by the Turkish Vice President of Cyprus, for any military aid from the United Nations; or if the United Nations have taken upon themselves to restore order in Cyprus.

Honourable senators, I hope that my question is clear. It is to satisfy my mind; and I am not to oppose the resolution now before the Senate. It would be useless to do so, and it would be wrongly interpreted. Besides that, I am ready to give the benefit of the doubt, not only to my Leader in the Senate but to the Leader of the Liberal party.

However, it is not without apprehension that I do now register an objection to it. I remember that when the Korean question arose in 1950, I was nearly alone in the House of Commons in protest. At that time we were told that a Canadian destroyer was going to Korea, that it would take a few days to reach that country and that by the time it would get there the war would be over. But that war lasted much longer and cost many lives.

I never beat the drum on expeditions of the kind being started now. This is a most serious matter which deserves full consideration. I am not ready to say yes, but for the reasons that I have given I will not say no today. However, I reserve my right to say more about it in due course.

I hope that the honourable Leader of the Government will answer in due course the question I have put.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I have not the material to document the reply to the question that the honourable senator has put; but I can say that throughout the negotiations which have been conducted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, there has been, as I am informed, close consultation with Archbishop Makarios. I cannot answer the specific question whether the Archbishop had approached the United Nations in the first instance. Perhaps there is an answer to that specific question. However, I do know that throughout the negotiations that have gone on, the Archbishop and the Secretary-General have been in constant consultation, and it was to only a United Nations force that the Archbishop would agree for the purpose of the peace-keeping operation that is now contemplated.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: May I ask a question of the Leader of the Government? I do not rise to object to or oppose this motion. God forbid that I should do that, when the Irish and the Canadians are both in it. However, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a question.

Has the Government any information, other than he has given us here tonight, about whether any other members of the United Nations, any other member nations, propose sending forces to Cyprus? In other words, supposing the situation there should get beyond the capacity of the troops that are going there, from Ireland, from Canada, Britain, Sweden, and the situation developed to the point that these troops were not adequate for the peace-keeping job, has Mr. U

Thant any expectancy or hope that other nations, members of the United Nations, might also contribute forces and support our troops? Here we are committing troops to Cyprus where the situation may become extremely dangerous. What reason have we, what hope have we, for expecting that they will be supported there? Surely Mr. U Thant in his discussions with the Secretary of State for External Affairs must have indicated to him that he had expectations of other nations participating in this peace-keeping mission. Can the honourable leader say anything about that matter?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I would hope that the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) would not press me for too much detail tonight. However, I think there are two matters upon which I should comment.

First, from what I am led to believe, I understand that the very movement of Canadian troops in this role into this area will have a salutary effect upon the dispute between the two factions on the Island of Cyprus. I understand that the psychological value of Canadians in this role is going to be extremely salutary. This is a hope—I trust it is not simply a pious hope. It has been expressed by people who profess to know a great deal about the actual situation.

In the second place, I should say to the honourable senator, that the Canadians, the Swedes, the Finns and the Irish will not be the only troops on the island for the purpose of keeping the peace, because as the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) has said, there are several thousands of British troops there now, and they have been there for some time. In addition, there are Greek and Turkish troops trying to help quiet the continuing problem. But now, with a United Nations force officially under the flag of the United Nations, with the blue badge, blue helmet and all the insignia, it is believed there will be a new force for good in Cyprus.

Finally, may I say that as soon as practicable, I shall endeavour to obtain further information in reply to the question of the honourable senator from Carleton.

Hon. James Gladstone: Honourable senators, I cannot let this opportunity pass without speaking. We are in a very serious situation, and I thoroughly agree with all of you that we have to make a decision tonight on every aspect of it.

However, there are some aspects of it that I believe we should think about. Perhaps I should go back a number of years and remind honourable senators what Philip Snowden said, that we should not try to extinguish the British Empire by trying to keep the peace of the world. As we all know, my friends, the United Kingdom is voluntarily keeping a force in Cyprus today, and her men are giving their lives to help save this situation from deterioration.

In Canada today we have a lot of people from Greece, we have a lot of people from Turkey, and we have a lot of people from the Near East, who are very good Canadians. Let us invite them to take up this task. That is what I think they would gladly come forward and do, and be capable of doing, after the welcome they have received from Canadians and the opportunities they have had in this great country of ours. Maybe we would make them feel they were being left out of it if we did not invite them to be part of the forward movement of those who try to keep peace in Cyprus.

I know Major-General Burns did a wonderful job when he was given a United Nations command, and he is still tops with those people; no one can deny that. Why not get a man like him to lead, and invite those people in Canada who have come from those countries to make a little sacrifice for the freedom that they have been privileged to share in Canada? I make that suggestion because we do not want to extinguish our Anglo-Saxon race. If we keep on doing that, and voluntarily try to propagate peace and goodwill among all nations, after a while there will be no Anglo-Saxons.

Honourable senators, I just wanted to contribute what is in my mind.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Let me assure the honourable senator that I shall bring his remarks, for which I thank him, to the attention of the Government.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Ordered: That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house that the Senate has adopted the said resolution and has filled up the blanks therein with the words "Senate and".

Ordered: That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that house that this resolution has been adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 17, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 17, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 17, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report, dated February 7, 1964, of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, under the Combines Investigation Act, concerning the Sale of Plumbing and Heating Supplies and Related Products in the City of Montreal and Elsewhere in the Province of Quebec. (English and French texts).

Report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and Statement of Accounts certified by the auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 27(3) of the Bank of Canada Act, chapter 13, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Report of the Board of Trustees of the Maritime Transportation Unions for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 16 of the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act, chapter 17, Statutes of Canada, 1963. (English and French texts).

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I also desire to table, and with leave to have reproduced in Hansard, the answer to a point raised by Senator Hollett in his speech on the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act. I may say that the answer was sent direct to Senator Hollett, and he has very kindly asked me if I would put it on record. This I am very glad to do. It indicates the ports on both coasts of Canada which have facilities for the reception of oil discharged from ships.

Have I leave, honourable senators, to place this list on Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is as follows:

St. John's, Newfoundland	Drydock separating tank.
Holyrood, Newfoundland	Oil refinery separating tank.
Halifax, N.S.	Shipyard repair equipment.
	Two oil refinery separating plants.
Montreal, Que.	Shipyard repair equipment.
	Five oil refinery separating plants.
Quebec, Que.	Shipyard repair equipment.
Vancouver, B.C.	Four barges.
	Shipyard repair equipment.
	Four oil refinery separating plants.
Victoria, B.C.	Shipyard repair equipment.
Toronto, Ont.	Seventeen trucks owned by three companies.
	Four oil refinery separating plants.
Hamilton, Ont.	Three trucks.
Sarnia, Ont.	Seven oil refinery separating plants.
Port Arthur, Ont.	Shipyard repair equipment.
	One oil refinery separating plant.
Saint John, N.B.	Oil refinery separating tank.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 62 to 111, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN IN CHRIST CHURCH—FIRST READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert presented Bill S-11, to incorporate Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Lambert moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—ALLEGED SALE OF SHARES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to rise on a question of privilege. I think this is a matter which concerns all senators.

This question of privilege arises out of an article which appears in the Globe and Mail of today, Tuesday, March 17, under the heading: "Bank Shares Sell Quickly, Close Up $3."

This story refers to the fact that shares in the Bank of Western Canada are being sold on the stock market "over the counter," in spite of the fact that the bill to incorporate the company, standing in the name of the honourable Senator Leonard, is still before the Senate. I am referring to Bill S-6, an act to incorporate Bank of Western Canada.

My question of privilege is that this action on the part of the principals of the proposed bank, to be incorporated by Bill S-6, is clearly, in my opinion, in contempt of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I would like to read part of the article from the Globe and Mail, to which I referred. It says:

> Shares of the Bank of Western Canada, offered to the public at $15 a share for the first time yesterday, rose on the over-the-counter market throughout the day to close at $18 bid, $18.50 asked.
>
> The 200,000 shares made available were taken up within minutes. Another 230,000 shares are to be taken up by financial institutions in Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver.
>
> Last month, 435,000 shares were subscribed for by Wellington Financial Corp. Ltd. of Guelph, Canadian Finance and Investments Ltd. of Winnipeg, and York Trust and Savings Corp. of Toronto.

Honourable senators, I am sure there must be some misunderstanding in this connection; and I thought possibly the sponsor of the bill, Senator Leonard, could explain how it is that shares of a bank which has not yet been incorporated can be sold on the market, or even across the counter.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, naturally the same question arose in my mind when I first became aware of the fact that there were such reports in the press. The report, in so far as it indicates that shares are being offered, is not accurate.

Provisional directors, and those interested in the promotion of this bank, have been very much aware of the fact they could not presume that this bill would pass Parliament, and they have been anxious to avoid any suggestion that they were taking that for granted. As honourable senators are aware, I consented that this bill should stand until the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance had reported, and until the committee had a chance to consider that report.

What the applicants have done—and I think quite properly—is to arrange for some of the companies which are sponsoring this bank to raise money for the purpose of investing in the bank, if, as, and when the charter is issued. As I understand it, the issue to which reference is made in the newspapers today is an issue of what are called trust certificates. Those moneys are held in trust. There is no offering of shares of the bank. There cannot be any offering of shares of the bank until such time as the bank is incorporated. In the meantime, it is clearly set out in the prospectus that these moneys which are being subscribed for trust certificates are being held in trust, if, as, and when the bank is incorporated. The moneys can then only be used for the purpose of buying shares in the bank. If the bank is not incorporated, the moneys will return to those who have returned the trust certificates, with interest thereon. These terms are all spelled out very clearly in the prospectus. Naturally, an item may appear in the newspaper which would suggest that the offering was an offering of shares; but that is not the case.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Who pays the interest?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: The interest is paid by the trustee under the trust subscription offering. The prospectus is available to all honourable senators. I am quite satisfied in my own mind that not only is there no intention of presuming what might be done in Parliament; indeed, they have been most careful to avoid that.

I may say that when the Banking and Commerce Committee sits tomorrow it will have this bill before it. Mr. Stevens, Mr. Coyne and Mr. Maxwell Bruce will all be present at the committee hearing, together with Mr. Ross Tolmie, counsel for the petitioners; and they will, I am sure, be able to explain and satisfy all members of the committee as to the character of this offering of trust certificates.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, perhaps I might comment upon and supplement what has been said by Senator Brooks. It appears to me, no matter how legal this action may have been, the Parliament of Canada is placed in an awkward position, because if this bill does not become law some people are going to lose money.

It is quite true, as my honourable friend the sponsor of the bill has said, that what are being sold are not bank shares but trust certificates of the Wellington Financial Corporation; and if, as, and when this bank is incorporated, the holders of those trust certificates will then be entitled to a corresponding number of shares of the new bank. In the meantime, those certificates are being sold over the counter. I am told reliably that those certificates were sold in this city this afternoon at $19 as against a $15 subscription price. If this bill is not passed, then the individual who has paid $19 is going to look at Parliament and say, "What have you done to me? You have cost me $4."

There is speculation going on in the public markets as to what Parliament is going to do, and however careful the sponsors of the bill may have been, I suggest they might have been just a little more careful.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, I suppose all honourable senators realize this commemorates the greatest day in the history of civilization. I would like to thank the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for so kindly sending me a shamrock; but I reassured myself by bringing my own with me, just in case he did not send me one.

It may interest honourable senators to know a little about St. Patrick. St. Patrick was born in Great Britain, probably in the year 389. His father was a deacon named Calpurnius, and we learned from Muirchu that the name of Patrick's mother was Conchessa; he also tells us that she was of Frankish race and related to St. Martin. According to accurate historical data it seems that Patrick was born in Scotland on the estuary of the Clyde. However, just because a cow was born in a horse stable, that does not necessarily mean it is a horse. His father called him Patricius, which in Irish became Cothridge. The organiation of the Christian parts of Ireland and the evangelization of the pagan provinces were the result of St. Patrick's apostolic work.

St. Patrick was a humble man. Holy Scripture tells us that God exalteth the humble and giveth victory to the man who consents to be an instrument in His hands.

Man has forgotten his purpose; he has also been uprooted from tradition. The modern man is anti-traditional. This, in part, comes from the revolutionary tempo of our times. We are not very much concerned in basing ourselves upon the wisdom of our fathers. We feel that we must break with everything that has gone before us as antiquated and passé.

You and I certainly cannot think unless we go back into the storehouse of our memory, bring out from it the deposit of the past and use it as the foundation of future thinking. So, too, if any civilization is to progress, man must go back to the past, to the storehouse of his tradition and bring out from that granary all the fine ideas hidden there, and use them as the basis of constructive thinking for the future.

Man today has broken with all that. Not only has man become dehumanized by having lost his purpose, by divorcing himself from tradition, but finally his dehumanization has reached a point where he has broken with his fellowman.

The great unities of the world are lost. First of all, the natural unity, that we are all human beings endowed with an intellect and a will, with a common purpose—that unity which Christianity gives, that we have all been redeemed by the Son of God sent to this earth.

The tendency today is to break up into unities. A man who has once considered himself one with his fellowman has broken that up into the unity, first of all, of the political order, the national order.

Today what is the basic unity among men? Classes. The labouring class is set against capital and capital is set against labour, simply because any unity which is founded upon class is necessarily antagonistic. It is the enemy of the other class.

That, incidentally, is why patriotism is on the decline. Patriotism assumes a greater unity when we have the unity of a common culture with a multicultural language under a common flag; and because the great interest of man today is in the class to which he belongs, patriotism has suffered and has become almost a lost virtue.

In the excellent speech of Senator Yuzyk about two weeks ago this was most forcefully demonstrated, honourable senators, for that was in part the language of the late President Kennedy when he made this remark:

> The world must be made safe for a diversity of people. In other words, in diversity we can have unity.

We are all Canadians and, please God, we are going to keep it so.

St. Patrick, to put it bluntly, is known because he is Irish, and as Pope Pius XI once pointed out, "The Irish, like the Grace of God, are everywhere; and everywhere, the wild geese, as these expatriates are called in Ireland, have seen to it that the memory of St. Patrick stays a vivid and living green". Your Irishman, in this respect, though he may have a warm heart and possibly a hot head, is as cold as the Irish Sea in his logic. And yet the magic, the sweetness of this race is only too well exemplified in the loving kindness of the Irish hearth and heart.

From Andrew Cherry, one of the greatest song writers and actors of 17th century Ireland, we have "The Green Little Shamrock of Ireland"—

There's a dear little plant that grows in our isle,
'Twas Saint Patrick himself, sure that set it;
And the sun on his labour with pleasure did smile,
And the dew from his eye often wet it.
It thrives through the bog, through the brake, through the mireland;
And he called it the dear little shamrock of Ireland—
The sweet little shamrock, the dear little shamrock,
The sweet little, green little, shamrock of Ireland!

To all of you:

May your heart be as light as the breezes of Erin
And your day just as bright as the smile you'll be wearin'!

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, as I am, I think, the only member of the chamber who was born in Ireland, may I be allowed to add a few words on this great day of the patron saint of all Irishmen, by birth or descent, to complement what has been said so well by Senator Sullivan.

On this day the thoughts of Irishmen everywhere carry back to the old sod, with that nostalgia which Irishmen seem to have developed almost into a national characteristic.

The thoughts of Irishmen today return to the renowned boroughs of Ireland, Londonderry Town, Belfast, Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Limerick on the Shannon, and others. They also return to the lovely Irish countryside, the green glens of Antrim, the Mountains of Mourne, Dublin Bay, the Slieve Bloom Mountains, the Bog of Allen, the Wicklow Hills, the beautiful valley of the River Lee and Shandon, Killarney, the Sligo Mountains and Sligo Bay, Connemara, the Aran Islands, Galway Bay, and the old County Down.

Whether from the North or from the South, I am sure Irishmen everywhere think wistfully today of that regrettable triumph for separatism—the fault lies on both sides, as anyone who reads Irish history will, I think, attest. That separatism has divided the Emerald Isle into the southern republic of three million Irishmen, and the northern self-governing dominion of one million and a half. I am sure all of us wish for Ireland today, as indeed we wish for our own Canada, that there may lie ahead a happier future in which the ties that bind will prevail over those senseless differences and arguments that at times keep us apart.

And in Ireland itself today, North and South, the thoughts of Irishmen at home span the oceans, going out to their relatives, descendants and Irish friends in every country and clime. And I think, if I know Ireland, that a tear or two will fall for those of us who are not tonight at the old ancestral hearth; but there will also be raised a cheer in their hearts for what those to whom Senator Sullivan has given the name "the wild geese"—those of us born in Ireland or of Irish descent—have been able to do. They will cheer for the fact that we have been allowed to carry to the barbarians of the rest of the world something of the sweetness of the culture of Ireland, just as 1,500 years ago St. Patrick and his missionaries carried the great benefit of Christian civilization to the barbarians of the day, the Picts, the Scots, the Angles, the Saxons, the Normans and the Britons.

Had I the time, honourable senators, I would tell you something of what I think the Irish culture has meant to all provinces of Canada. If I may, I would make one brief reference to the part it has played in one province only, because I think in the short retelling of some of that history there is a lesson for all Canadians, a lesson we, perhaps more than any other, need to learn of how people of different racial stock and different cultures can live together. Because as I look back at the history of the Irish in Quebec, I could say that I am sure all Irishmen are thankful for the great kindness of our French Canadian compatriots in allowing us to mingle our blood to the very great degree to which it has been mingled with the glorious blood of French Canada.

We have in our Senate chamber today Senator Flynn and Senator Bourque—and sometimes as I note the charm of the smile and the wit of tongue of His Honour, I wonder if there is not perhaps a little Burke in Bourget.

Some may think I am exaggerating, but I should like to read a brief paragraph from some research done a few years ago called "Irish Families in Ancient Quebec Record:"

> It is not generally known, that long before Wolfe had scaled the Heights of Abraham, a large Irish element had settled down in Canada, intermarried with the French, and had become absorbed in the French population.
>
> A considerable portion of the French-speaking population of Canada is of Irish extraction, and such Franco-Irish element was still further increased, at the conquest, by the absorption of the shattered remnants of the Irish Brigade, then serving in Canada.

While I am speaking only of Quebec, I am conscious, of course, as I look around this chamber and see the extensive wearing of the green, that I am speaking in a chamber where there are two Connollys, two O'Learys, a Sullivan, a Power, a Hayden, a Dinan—if I may use the maiden name of the distinguished Senator Quart—and others who have Irish blood in their veins, including Senator Horner, Senator Brooks, Senator Crerar, Senator Hugessen, Senator Leonard, and perhaps Senator Inman.

An Hon. Senator: Senator McGrand.

An Hon. Senator: Senator White.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Any more? It becomes a glorious band.

Irishmen over the years have fought for France, for old France and for New France. This is rather an important element in the history I have to relate, for it was in the Irish Brigade that some 400,000 Irishmen fought for France for over a hundred years. The Irish Brigade distinguished itself at the great battle of Fontenoy, the last occasion on which the British armies were led by a reigning sovereign, George II. They distinguished themselves further in New France at the great battle of Ticonderoga when 3,000 men of the Irish Brigade and their French Canadian colleagues defeated 15,000 of the very best troops in the British army of that day.

Many members of the Irish Brigade settled in New France. That is why in Quebec today we have Irish names beautifully Gallicised, although they are often disguised. That should remind us that we Irish have made a contribution to French Canada. There are the Alaries who were O'Learys; the Aubrions who were O'Briens; the Delanés who were Delaneys; the De Gannes who were Duggans; the Denious who were O'Donovans; the Grefins who were Griffins; the Orions who were O'Ryans; the Mainguys who were Magees; the Echeners who were Shanahans; the Boilans who were Boylens; the Nolins who were Nolans; the Lehaits who were Leaheys; the Sylvains who were Sullivans; the Aubrys who were Brennans; the Herouins who were Kirwins; the Hallés who were Healeys.

Even that most colourful French Canadian name, Riel, reminds us that he was descended from a Jack Reilly, late of St. Peter's parish in the City of Limerick in Ireland.

So, honourable senators, as an Irishman in Canada I take pride today in the fact that the blood that runs in my veins from an Irish mother and an Irish father runs also in the veins of many a French Canadian family of la belle province de Québec, and that they can salute with me on this St. Patrick's Day their ancestors and mine, the men of the Irish Brigade who were immortalized by Kipling in his poem "The Irish Guards 1918", of which I shall read only a short portion:

We're not so old in the Army List,
But we're not so young at our trade,
For we had the honour at Fontenoy,
Of meeting the Guards' Brigade.
'Twas Lally, Dillon, Bulkeley, Clare,
And Lee that led us then,
And after a hundred and seventy years
We're fighting for France again!

We're not so old in the Army List,
But we're not so new in the ring,
For we carried our packs with Marshal Saxe
When Louis was our King.
But Douglas Haig's our Marshal now
And we're King George's men,
And after one hundred and seventy years
We're fighting for France again!
Ah, France! And did we stand by you,
When life was made splendid with gifts and rewards?
Ah, France! And will we deny you
In the hour of your agony, Mother of Swords?
Old Days! The wild geese are flighting,
Head to the storm as they faced it before
For where there are Irish there's loving and fighting,
And when we stop either, it's Ireland no more!
Ireland no more!

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, one of my colleagues on this side said that I should make these remarks without prejudice. I have no intention whatever of adding to the litany of saints and scholars that has been compiled by Senator Grosart, but I am sure that all of us are most indebted to him and to Senator Sullivan for what they have said here tonight. Perhaps the one most indebted is myself.

I was particularly delighted to hear Senator Sullivan quote a song that I learned when I was a very small boy, "The Dear Little Shamrock". I could not help but think of the first St. Patrick's Day I spent in the Senate, when Senator Felix Quinn not only rose and spoke about Ireland but—and Hansard will never reflect this—sang "A Little Bit of Heaven". It was a tremendous performance.

I do not think it is incumbent upon me tonight to say too much about the Irish because I am afraid I would not speak without prejudice. The Irish character is one of many facets. I think Chesterton put it most concisely in these four short lines:

For the great Gaels of Ireland
Are the men that God made mad,
For all their wars are merry
And all their songs are sad.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 5, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, Erin go Bragh! It is a great day for the Irish. We salute them and wish them luck.

It is a pleasure, honourable senators, to see His Honour the Speaker again in his chair directing our deliberations in his dignified and gracious manner. We extend our best wishes to him and to Madame Bourget.

I wish to extend my congratulations to the Honourable George S. White on the honour conferred on him in being named to Her Majesty's Privy Council. We are all happy about this particular appointment, and hope that he and Mrs. White will enjoy this honour for many years. They are very popular with all honourable senators.

I intended to obey the edict of Senator Ross Macdonald, which was implicit in his saying that he did not want any more compliments paid him, but then I did what every woman does once in her life—I changed my mind.

It was a surprise to me to learn that the Honourable Ross Macdonald had resigned from the Government leadership in this chamber. He was the Government Leader when I came to the Senate, and I must say that I found him a true friend, a patient and understanding adviser. He was always ready to give assistance, and one felt very welcome to go to him again and again for help and advice.

I offer my sincere congratulations to Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) on being chosen the Government Leader to succeed the Honourable Ross Macdonald. Senator Connolly brings to this position a wealth of knowledge and all the attributes of leadership. We know he is conscientious and upright in all things, and he will fulfill his duties with ability and foresight. He will always have "Canada first" as his watchword. It is a privilege and a pleasure to have such a man as the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mrs. Inman: We are happy to see Senator Brooks in his seat. I know, of course, that whatever the fortunes of war I will always be looking at him across the floor of the house.

I wish also to take this opportunity of congratulating the honourable senators who moved and seconded the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Senator Cook spoke in English and Senator Denis in French. Both official languages were used, and that is as it should be in this country. The subjects discussed were interesting and informative, and we shall look forward to many speeches from them in the future.

To all honourable senators recently summoned to this chamber I extend a warm and hearty welcome, and wish them many years of happiness and usefulness in the Senate of Canada. I have known Senator Rattenbury since he was a very small boy. In fact, I have been acquainted with four generations of the Rattenbury family in both business and politics. They have been among Prince Edward Island's outstanding citizens.

Honourable senators, it is with a feeling of great sadness that I pay tribute to the memory of those honourable senators who have recently answered the summons to a greater reward. To their bereaved loved ones I offer my deep and sincere sympathy. They will be missed by their colleagues who will remember them with affection.

In this chamber we feel great sorrow too at the untimely death of one of our outstanding cabinet ministers. We offer to his family our deep sympathy in their great bereavement.

Honourable senators, I would like now to say something about Confederation. The idea of Confederation was not a new one, even in 1864. In 1810 an enterprising colonist put forth a confederation scheme, but nothing came of it at that time. Then, in 1814, a chief justice of Quebec, Mr. Justice Sewell, submitted a plan of confederation to the Duke of Kent, Queen Victoria's father. In 1849 a group of people calling themselves the North American League met in Toronto, and discussed the question of confederation of the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. In 1854 the Legislature of Nova Scotia adopted resolutions recommending a closer union of the British North American colonies, although it was not for a federation of all the provinces but for a Maritime union under one government.

In 1967 Canada will celebrate Confederation. While the other nine provinces are making their plans, Prince Edward Island is this year celebrating her own centennial as the birthplace of Canada.

It would seem unnecessary to tell the story of Confederation, but I wish to speak of Prince Edward Island in connection with the Union. Every one knows that the meeting in the Provincial building, Charlottetown, in 1864 originated by Sir Charles Tupper's persuading the governments of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick to appoint delegates to meet at Charlottetown to consider the advisability of the three provinces uniting. While this meeting was going on, a ship arrived from Quebec with eight ministers of the Crown, led by Honourable George Brown, President of the Executive Council and by Honourable John A. Macdonald, Attorney General of Upper Canada, West. This group proposed that a wider union be discussed. And here the plans were made which three years later were consummated at Quebec and brought about Confederation, which was confirmed by the Imperial Government in the British North America Act of 1867.

However, all was not plain sailing. Neither Nova Scotia nor New Brunswick was satisfied with the terms first presented to them, and it took six years for Prince Edward Island to become Canadian. Perhaps it was the predominance at that time of Scottish blood in its people that made the Island so stubborn. Edward Whelan, the strongest advocate of Confederation, had passed away and the opposition was very determined. It was expressed in a resolution passed by the assembly. This is what Prince Edward Island said:

> This House cannot admit that a federal union of the North American provinces and colonies which would include Prince Edward Island could ever be accomplished on terms that would prove advantageous to the interests and well-being of the people of this Island, separated as it is and must ever remain, from the neighbouring provinces by an immovable barrier of ice for many months in the year; and this House deems it to be its sacred and imperative duty to declare that any federal union of the North American colonies that would embrace the Island would be as hostile to the feelings and wishes, as it would be opposed to the best and most vital interests of the people.

Great pressure was brought to bear on this stubborn little island. The Colonial Secretary urged the Island to join Canada and suggested that otherwise Prince Edward Island might have to pay the Governor's salary. Now, one would think that threat would have the desired effect, but Island people are canny. Then, the Canadian Government imposed a duty on Island exports. Three members of the cabinet came down from Ottawa to offer more generous terms, but all to no avail. The Island remained obdurate and would not be threatened or bribed.

In 1871 the Island realized it could not stand alone any longer. Progress must be acknowledged. The Pope Coalition Government passed an act in two days for the construction of a railway from Georgetown on the east coast to Cascumpec in the western area. This rail line was to cost not more than $5,000 a mile, but it was badly needed. The roads were impassable in the spring, autumn and winter. One travelled from Charlottetown to Summerside, the two largest towns, by ship. No journey of any length could be made by land at these seasons. Furthermore, a railway would help the economy of the Island; trade would increase, resources could more easily be developed and communication between points on the Island and also with the mainland would be improved. The cost of the railway was heavy for a population of between 80,000 and 90,000 people to bear. There was no contract for the job, so the line meandered around every little stream and hill in the country—and even in those days some graft crept in, I have been told. It was realized that it could not pay for itself; the people could not be taxed enough to pay for its building, let alone its operation, and there was no money in the treasury.

We are told that same story today, when it is convenient to say the treasury is empty. So the only recourse was to approach the Dominion.

After many trips to Ottawa and a lot of talk between governments, we were received into the Dominion on very generous terms. The federal Government was to advance about $8 million to buy the land, some of which was poor and swampy. The province was entitled to incur a debt equal to $50 per head of the Island's population as shown by the census of 1871. Also, in consideration of the transfer to the Parliament of Canada of the powers of taxation, $30,000 in subsidy was to be paid yearly by Canada to Prince Edward Island; and, in addition, an annual grant equal to 80 cents per head of its population as shown by the census returns of 1871 —the population being at that time 94,021. That grant of 80 cents per head was to be augmented in proportion to the increase in population of the Island until the population amounted to 400,000—they certainly were optimistic—and on reaching that figure, the grant would thereafter remain at 80 cents.

The central government was to take care of the cost of almost all of the public services. A continuous steam service with the mainland was to be established. I would draw particular attention to that condition. The island was to be represented by six members in the federal Parliament; the railway debt was to be assumed by Canada, who would then own the line.

The Islanders of that day drove a hard bargain. Evidently Ottawa was most eager that Prince Edward Island should join—but I wonder if the first men to go to the Dominion Parliament felt a bit embarrassed about their mercenary demands.

Charlottetown celebrated the event well and truly. Flags and bunting, brightly coloured streamers and ribbons, were in view everywhere; the ships in the harbour and rivers—and there were many in those faraway days—were decorated in honour of the occasion; the Dominion flag was run up on the Colonial Building, now the Provincial Building, on the post office, and at Fort Edward, from which 21 guns were fired. The people who had gathered at Queen's Square sang the national anthem with much gusto while the city and church bells rang loudly and long.

Then from the balcony of the Provincial Building the sheriff read in tones all could hear the Union Proclamation, telling the world that Prince Edward Island had become a province of the Dominion of Canada, and had a place in Canada's history.

In 1880 Professor Goldwin Smith wrote in the "Bystander" regarding Canada's seven provinces and Confederation:

> At present we have, for a population of four millions, eight kings, one central and seven provincial, as many parliaments and sixty-five Ministers of the Crown, while England is content with a single King, a single parliament (the Members of which are not paid), and a single Cabinet seldom containing so many members as the Cabinet at Ottawa. We have also judges and Chief Justices as the stars of heaven in number.

I have said before that undoubtedly Ottawa wanted Prince Edward Island in the Dominion of Canada. May I suggest that while we Islanders are modest about our province and our achievements, we have many things we could boast about. In 1852, long before Confederation, the first telegraph cable in America was laid between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. The first automobile to be run in America was built by the Rev. Father Belcourt at Rustico in 1886. In Prince Edward Island was built the first Canadian ship to sail to New Zealand. We have produced statesmen of first rank serving both in Canada and the United States, professors of universities from coast to coast in both countries, bank presidents, leaders in churches, in medicine, in law, in art, and in letters. Our oysters and potatoes are famous. In fact I could mention many more things, but as a native Islander I will just say this: there are ten provinces in Canada, and Prince Edward Island to me is one of the most important and it is the most beautiful.

Hon. Mr. Farris: And its ladies, also.

Hon. Mrs. Inman: The call of Prince Edward Island to its native sons and daughters is as the dream of Paradise and clear as the call of a bell. Every road that leads to "home" —be it the highroad, the sea, or the air—is a way of delight and anticipation. The "down East" of yesterday still exists in the lovely little Island set like a precious gem in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

I would like to mention some of the interesting things tourists can hear about, and some of the places they can see and visit when they come to our province.

Prince Edward Island is only 140 miles long; it is about 40 miles in width at the widest points, and about two and a half miles at the narrowest. Distances are short and it is easy to get from one place to another. Sightseeing can be done leisurely and pleasantly. Red soil, green fields, beautiful trees, and a profusion of colourful flower gardens, give the effect of fairyland to those who have an eye for natural beauty. The Island has a charm all its own, that lures the visitor back again and again to spend a vacation in this hospitable spot.

There are many campsites and picnic grounds; many excellent hotels, motels and tourist homes, but many more are needed to accommodate the thousands of people who come to us each summer to enjoy a vacation where the pace of life flows on peacefully and serenely, bringing rest to tired minds and to nerves that are frayed from living in the hustle and bustle of large cities.

Prince Edward Island has many historical places and points of interest, and the fact that this year we are celebrating our own centennial of Confederation will no doubt make our own Canadian people and our visitors more aware of the Island's history and traditions.

Honourable senators, I have on several occasions spoken of the many attractions of Prince Edward Island and ask your indulgence to mention a few of them again.

"Woodleigh," the estate of Lieutenant-Colonel Johnstone at Burlington, Prince Edward Island, is a "must" for visitors and tourists, for here the traditions and glamour of the British Isles has been recaptured in miniature creations of famous castles, churches, inns and cottages. I will not enumerate here all the various reproductions, the list is too long, but there is nothing to be seen quite like it anywhere in the world. It is one of the prime and favourite attractions for sightseers and is worth visiting over and over again, for each year there is always something new to see.

Horse racing, the king of sports and the sport of kings, will be on a larger scale than ever this year, and will again attract many thousands. Racing gets under way usually in May and carries through to October. Night racing is organized in a big way, and hundreds of horses will participate in the various classes. Old Home Week is, of course, the great climax. More than 20,000 people daily are admitted to the grandstands to watch the afternoon and evening harness races.

Another prime attraction is Green Gables, the homestead of "Anne" the heroine of Lucy Maud Montgomery's "Anne" books. It is a fascinating spot. Here, too, is one of the finest golf courses in Canada.

There is the Garden of the Gulf Museum at Montague—the first museum in the province. The collections of articles found here tell the story of life on Prince Edward Island as the pioneers knew and lived it.

The Moore bird sanctuary at Milltown Cross, four miles from Montague, is an interesting place to visit.

The lobster carnival at Summerside is one of the major summer events, and the parade is a spectacular affair with floats, bands, decorated cars, sailors, firemen, Indians, Scouts, Guides and many other colourful attractions. There are fish-cooking demonstrations, live fish and game exhibits, marine and fishing equipment displays, and lobster suppers for everyone—lobsters just out of the sea. In Summerside also is the biggest small town department store in the world.

The Micmac Indians, our first citizens, were a proud but peaceful people. They were of the Wakiniki tribes and spoke the Algonquin tongue. In early summer of each year they came over to the Island to fish and hunt, but they spent most of the winters on the mainland, where game was more plentiful. They called the Island "Abegweit Minigo," meaning "Island cradled in the waves."

At Rocky Point the authentic 16th century Micmac Village illustrates the story of this famous Indian tribe before the white man came to Prince Edward Island. It is well worth visiting this unique place.

At Lower Montague, near my home, is one of the oldest cemeteries in the province, being several hundred years old, and it is being steadily washed away by the sea. I have seen the human bones appear as the bank falls away into the sea. The restoration of this historic spot would be a worth while Confederation project to preserve history and also from a humane point of view.

Honourable senators, I wish now to speak for a while about transportation in Prince Edward Island. Transportation is our biggest problem at the present time. I will give you an example of transportation to our Island in winter. It is rather an extreme example, but not isolated by any means. These conditions do occur, but there is no excuse in this day and age for travellers to have to endure the inconveniences and hardships to which we were subjected when I, along with over 120 others, travelled from Moncton to Prince Edward Island recently.

Leaving Ottawa on December 18, I went by way of Saint John, and changed trains there for Charlottetown. After boarding the C.N.R. train I heard the conductor tell one of the passengers that everyone would have to change trains again at Moncton. When a trainman came along I asked him when that had become the practice, as we had always travelled in the same car right through from Saint John to Charlottetown. "Oh," he replied, "this car hasn't been going through for the last two years." I said, "Nonsense; I came this way a month ago and went right through without changing. In fact I often come this way in order not to have to change at Moncton." Then he told me the change was made when the time changed in November or early in December. Anyway, we had to get out of the car at Moncton and walk quite a distance in a snowstorm and a high wind to that monstrosity of a station which was recently completed and opened. About ten minutes after getting into the station it was announced that the Saint John car with Prince Edward Island passengers was going right through after the Ocean Limited came in; so we had to go back again through the storm to the car.

Here, I would like to make a few comments about the new station. It is too small, considering the traffic that must go through Moncton, the railway hub of the Maritimes. There is a very small lunch counter, about three or four yards long, with no stools, and not nearly enough seats in the concourse, and even those are most uncomfortable. I wish I had a tape recorder, so that the many adverse remarks about those responsible for this big mistake could hear them.

We finally got away, arriving at Tormentine at six o'clock—fairly well on time—only to be told that the ferry, Abegweit, had not been able to get into the pier on account of the extremely high wind of 110 miles an hour and a snowstorm of blizzard proportions. In fact, she could not get in past the breakwater. She had come over from the Island in the morning, but had to return without docking. By this time it was a raging blizzard and, though the cars were sheltered by the Tormentine station, they rocked back and forth on the track like a cradle.

About eight o'clock the passengers felt the pangs of hunger; so a few of us gave several of the men passengers some money, and they volunteered to try to get to a little store close by and see what they could procure in the food line. They bought crackers and cheese, some chocolate bars, etc. What milk they brought we gave to women who had with them babies and small children. About this time, too, the train was becoming very cold. When we inquired of the one trainman who had been left in charge, he told us the generator had broken down and there was no auxiliary at Tormentine to attach to the cars. About midnight we were told that the hotel up behind the station would serve dinner, paid for by the C.N.R., to everyone who wanted to go over. So far as I and many others were concerned, we might as well have been a thousand miles away. I could not possibly have walked any distance in such a storm. However, the trainman was very kind. He sent a sandwich and a cup of coffee to me—and never was food more welcome.

About two o'clock in the morning, they ran the cars down to the pier to see if they could attach a generator there, as the car by now was extremely cold and uncomfortable, but the high wind and snow had put all the electrical equipment out of order. So we sat huddled in our coats, suffering from the cold—it was 10 degrees below zero—until about four o'clock in the morning when we were told we would have to go over to the restroom on the pier if we did not wish to freeze to death in the car. I really did not know whether to stay where I was and be frozen, or to try to do the impossible and walk out in the cold and blizzard to the building. Two very courteous young men came to my rescue, and practically carried me over; but it was all I could do to make it. However, we did have heat, but no light except two small tin kerosene lamps. All the automatic machines were out, of course, on account of the electrical failure. The presence of 125 people made the place quite crowded, and a few others had come in, but it was better than being in the cold cars.

About 10 o'clock it was announced that breakfast was being served on the Confederation at the next pier. By the way, this boat is an icebreaker which cannot go through ice more than a few inches thick, and is usually tied up at her berth in winter. It was quite a walk from where we were, but a number braved the elements and had a breakfast of doughnuts and coffee, as guests of the C.N.R. Again, a couple whom I had befriended on the train brought me coffee.

About noon we were shepherded to the cars again and this time we did have some heat. At 2 p.m. word came that the Abegweit had docked, but that the railway ramp was frozen with five feet of ice under it, so we would have to walk into the boat. Again, my two courteous escorts took charge of me and managed to get me into the boat. After quite a walk, and climbing two flights of steep stairs, we finally reached the salon, only to learn that the train practically followed us into the boat. However, we were able to get a meal, we were warm, and the officers and crew were most helpful and did everything they could for our comfort. Thus we became encouraged that the worst was over; but, alas, that was not the case.

When we reached Borden after a fairly good crossing and we had all gone below to our train, it was announced that the railway ramp was again frozen, so they could not get the cars off. Then up the two long flights of stairs we went again. Nothing happened for some time, until finally it was decided to bring some cars down from the station at Borden and transfer the passengers to them. All these deliberations took quite a lot of time. Finally, arrangements were made, but we had to walk down the automobile ramp to reach the cars which were to take us to Summerside and Charlottetown. If any honourable senators have crossed in our ferries they will realize what an ordeal it was to walk down that auto ramp in a 100 mile an hour gale and a blizzard raging. If you are not familiar with it, let me say I doubt if anything in Antarctica could be worse.

The cars provided to take us to Summerside and Charlottetown were, I feel like saying, prehistoric. I will not try to describe them. Only Prince Edward Islanders, I am sure, have ever seen them. Going home at Christmas last year we had the same accommodation. It is a weird experience, and I can see no need for it. I just do not know why we in Prince Edward Island must put up with these conditions. At Easter two years ago I travelled to my home by rail with 3,000 one-day-old chickens for company, plus a few human beings. I will just say it was not a pleasure trip by any stretch of the imagination.

I realize we cannot control the weather, but one cannot get either at Saint John or Moncton any authentic information about Island conditions with regard to travel. We never should have left Moncton when the boat could not dock at Tormentine. At least at Sackville we should have had word about the boat and stayed there. The station at Tormentine could have been left open so we could have gone in and at least had some heat. There should be provision made for breakdowns in equipment, and I do think we Islanders should have the convenience of a Pullman from Montreal to Charlottetown. I only wish some of those people in the higher echelons of the C.N.R. could have been with us on this journey which I have just described, without the comfort of their private cars, or at least a Pullman. While I realize that the harrowing experiences I have described are not usual, they nevertheless do occur. They are frequent enough to warrant a study of better methods of communication and transportation.

Recently we were promised a causeway. There have been a number of engineering studies made, but I believe it is not unanimously agreed that a causeway is feasible for year-round use. I certainly would not like to be on a causeway in the middle of Northumberland Strait during the storm I was in last December.

Around the turn of the century, considerable interest arose in the construction of a tunnel. I remember seeing plans for it in my husband's office, as well as tunnel stamps. Observing the great advances that have been made in tunnel engineering in recent years, I would subscribe to the idea of a tunnel if it is found that a causeway is not practical in our weather conditions. I repeat, if a causeway is not practical, then, of course, I would like to see the boats kept on as an auxiliary; they are an attraction.

Honourable senators will have read that the proposed tunnel between England and France at last is to become a reality, and that tunnel would be at least three times the length of the one needed to the Island. I suggest that a tunnel to Prince Edward Island would perhaps be no more expensive and pose fewer problems. Certainly it could not pose more than are now faced in the building of a causeway. Considerable industry has recently been attracted to our province and we look forward to an upsurge in our economy as this field expands, but it will mean that transportation must be made more satisfactory than it is at the present time. I would, therefore, honourable senators, strongly urge that the Government give serious consideration to a tunnel in order to ensure year-round continuous transportation to and from Prince Edward Island.

I could tell honourable senators a lot more about Prince Edward Island, but I will leave that for another time.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, imagine my amazement and delighted surprise to find this beautiful pot of shamrocks gracing my desk tonight. I thought probably it was the little people of Ireland, the Leprechauns, who put it here; and then I saw this card peering out from this beautiful greenery, and this is what it reads:

To Josie.

John J. Connolly and the Irish in the Senate.

So you can imagine, honourable senators, that I felt like a combination of St. Brigid and Mother Machree—and particularly Mother Machree when she received the tributes from her favourite sons. So thank you, Mr. Leader of the Government, for your kind thought.

Honourable senators, although we of Irish descent cannot roll out a green carpet in this beautiful Senate Chamber, we now have the shamrocks but we lack the shillelaghs and the pretty colleens in the Irish jaunting cars to celebrate fittingly St. Patrick's Day. Nevertheless, we whose ancestors hailed from that Emerald Isle can at least say, with Irish eyes that are smiling, "Cead mile failte"—a thousand welcomes—and thanks to our colleagues of other races and origins who have joined with us to fittingly celebrate the feast of St. Patrick.

Honourable senators, in accordance with the traditional procedure of this chamber to exchange friendly good wishes and congratulations whenever a new session is convened, I wish to associate myself with the honourable senators who have preceded me, and to express my good wishes to the Hon. Ross Macdonald, despite his objections, and to convey to him my deepest respect for the ability and integrity which he showed at all times when he was Leader of the Government in this house. I hope the newspaper reports as to his future appointment will come true; and if so, no one could grace that high office with more charm, graciousness and savoir-faire.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mrs. Quart: The appointment of the Hon. John J. Connolly as Leader of the Government has been a popular one with his colleagues on both sides of this chamber, all of whom are convinced of his exceptional qualities which will enable him to perform his duties with ease and dignity, sparked by his Irish wit and repartee. May I wish him well, and further commend him for his perfect bilingualism. And on this 17th of March, and in gratitude for his very kind gesture, may I say to him in Gaelic, "Go n-eirigh an tadh leat"—I wish you good luck.

Turning to our little band of Conservative senators on this side of the house, what we lack in quantity we make up in quality. We are indeed fortunate to have as our Leader the Hon. A. J. Brooks, a gentleman whose personal success over the years serves him well in the performance of his role. His keen, enlightened mind, quiet diplomacy and spirit of devotion are well known not alone to his party, for he is dedicated to the interest of all Canadians of every political colour, race and culture. I wish him a short sojourn in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

My thanks to our present and former Speakers are prompted by a strong and sincere feeling of gratitude for the many kindnesses shown to me when I was appointed to the Senate, first by the late Senator Drouin, then on through the all-too-short term of our distinguished Senator White. I was delighted to learn of his well-deserved appointment to the Privy Council.

(Translation):

And now I should like to offer my congratulations and my thanks to Honorable Maurice Bourget who comes from Quebec, as I do, and who is our Speaker. He is especially well qualified to hold that position.

I might add that he fulfils his social duties very well also, for he has a most charming wife by his side.

(Text):

May I further extend my congratulations to the honourable Senator Cook and the honourable Senator Azellus Denis, as the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. They discharged their task both eloquently and creditably. They gave an excellent performance in endeavouring to stretch the Speech from the Throne, and to present, at least, a sizable case for the Government to the people of Canada.

As in real life, the Senate is gladdened by the arrival of its new senators and saddened by the passing on of two distinguished colleagues to their eternal reward. Congratulations are in order to our new senators upon receiving one of the highest honours which can be conferred upon a Canadian. May I wish them a long and happy membership in this honourable house.

At the opening of every session it is always a thrill to look around this chamber and see our distinguished colleagues seemingly as "fit as fiddles". It makes one realize that the source of eternal youth is not only the fountain of Ponce de Leon but the retention of a deep interest in current affairs and in the full joy of living useful lives.

As Canada's centennial approaches, we are all becoming more conscious of our duty to participate to the best of our ability to see that Canada's birthday is fittingly observed. Therefore, as a member of the Canadian Centenary Council—Le Conseil du Centenaire de la Confederation—simple justice compels me to ask the kind indulgence of honourable senators to permit me to place on the record of the Senate some facts as to the aims and importance of the Canadian Centenary Council and the unique contribution it is making. Too frequently voluntary efforts are glossed over, due to the lack of a voice in the inner circles of government.

The Canadian Centenary Council is a voluntary nongovernmental organization, which brings together the representatives of some 500 member-organizations to ensure effective and competent participation by voluntary organizations and corporations in activities related to the centenary of Canadian Confederation.

It is recognized by the Government as the focal point of private planning for 1967. The council was officially established in 1960 and operated with a part-time secretariat until October 1962 when a permanent office was opened at 268 First Avenue, Ottawa. It now employs seven full-time staff members who provide information in planning services to organizations, corporations and individuals, bodies created by Parliament under Bill C-127.

The centenary council does not implement centennial projects as such. It is merely a clearing house and information centre.

The council sponsors two regular public functions per year: an annual meeting in the spring and a symposium in the autumn, and it publishes a monthly bulletin for its members.

The council operates on a yearly budget of some $125,000, roughly one-third of which is made up of a federal Government subsidy channelled through the National Centennial Administration. The balance of the administrative funds is derived from donations by corporations and individuals from all parts of Canada, as well as from fees paid by affiliated associations.

When Bill C-127 was introduced in the House of Commons on September 18, 1961, to set up the National Centennial Administration and to provide for the establishment of a national conference on Canada's centennial, a few speakers referred to the Canadian Centenary Council. But in contrast to 1961, in 1963 when Bill C-107 was discussed, the name of the Canadian Centenary Council was not even mentioned, although as reported in Hansard of the other place, when Bill C-107 was presented, it sparked a wide range of speeches other than the amendments to the bill, straying all the way from the British North America Act to provincial rights, provincial autonomy, biculturalism, bilingualism, historical events, and many quotations and achievements of famous figures of Canadian history, dating back to Champlain, Dollard des Ormeaux, Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir George Étienne Cartier, and so on, right down the line. Even the names of Lili St-Cyr and Maurice Richard got into the act and did not escape Hansard. Yet the Canadian Centenary Council was conspicuous by its absence. It was not mentioned, nor was reference made to the valuable contribution of time, effort and expense entailed since 1956 by voluntary organizations and individuals towards the furtherance of centennial planning.

Voluntary associations are a national investment, and government at all levels should be very co-operative and dependent on volunteer groups. Any other attitude would be a tragedy, and might jeopardize the entire voluntary structure as regards centennial celebrations.

We do not need a yardstick to measure the length and depth that communities and governments are indebted to volunteers. Because there is no monetary transfer, or comparatively little in some cases, volunteer work is often ignored and underrated. And here I would like to make special mention of the Canadian Citizenship Council—Le Conseil canadien du Civisme—for, together with the Canadian Association for Adult Education—L'Association canadienne d'Éducation pour Adultes—they planned and administered as a joint project three conferences which led to the founding of the Canadian Centenary Council in May 1960. The Canadian Citizenship Council acted as administrative headquarters for the Canadian Centenary Council, using their staff and finances until the Canadian Centenary Council was launched officially. For it was during 1956 that the Canadian Citizenship Council and the Canadian Association for Adult Education sounded the alert that planning for the hundredth birthday of Canada's Confederation should be started without delay, and in various ways encouraged organizations, both governmental and voluntary, as well as individuals, to start thinking about ways and means to observe in a suitable manner Canada's 100th birthday. Three years later, believing that a more formal and positive approach was necessary, they convened on May 6, 1959, at the request of several national organizations, a one-day conference, at the University of Toronto, under the chairmanship of Mr. Walter Herbert, Director of the Canada Foundation. More than anything else, this was an "idea conference". It had elements of "brainstorming," for its aim was to collect ideas, and no attempt at that meeting was made to work out the practical problems of carrying through such ideas. The chairman urged the participants to let their imagination run riot, which they did, and the 43 suggestions were labelled "a sack full of ideas."

Thirty-two national organizations sent delegates, and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration was represented by the deputy minister, Colonel Laval Fortier. It was agreed that 1967 should be much more than a year of entertainment and celebration.

Then the second conference was held in Montreal on February 11 and 12, 1960, where it was decided that a national nongovernmental centenary body be set up. A small ad hoc committee was appointed to prepare for such a national group, a suggested structure which would be presented for consideration.

The late Mr. John P. Kidd was appointed secretary of the ad hoc committee, and was entrusted with the task of informing the national organizations and interested parties what had transpired, and it was decided that the third conference would be held in Ottawa with the object of setting up such a body and electing officers, and so on.

Therefore, the third conference was held in the City Hall in Ottawa on May 17, 1960, under the chairmanship of Colonel Hugh H. Wallis. Here the Hon. Roland Michener was invited to officially open the conference.

The ad hoc committee presented its report and submitted the proposed constitution in draft form for discusion. The suggested name was "The National Centenary Council"—Administration nationale du Centenaire. After considerable discussion the name "National Council for Canada's Centenary" was duly proposed and adopted, but for only two hours' duration, for during the luncheon period diverse opinions as to name and complications were brought forward. So, a subsequent motion during the afternoon session was moved and carried, and the name was changed to "Canadian Centenary Council" and "Le Conseil du Centenaire de la Confederation".

The first annual meeting of the Canadian Centenary Council was held in Ottawa on May 12, 1961, at which Brigadier C. M. Drury, C.B.E., Q.C., of Montreal, was elected president, and M. Marcel Faribault, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.C., also of Montreal, was elected associate president.

One of our colleagues, Senator C. F. Savoie, of Moncton, was also elected a director. Alan M. Clark, executive director, Canadian Citizenship Council, agreed to continue the arduous task of provisional secretary.

The Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, Prime Minister of Canada at that time, was guest of honour at the opening session. During his remarks, Mr. Diefenbaker congratulated the Canadian Centenary Council on its initiative and valuable work to date, and expressed pleasure that the council had decided to work in close co-operation with the Government. Mr. Diefenbaker promised serious and sympathetic consideration of all recommendations made by the council. He made a number of concrete suggestions for 1967, including a "freedom train" to give the young and old in Canada the opportunity to see some of the documents which show the greatness of our historic past.

Then, on March 9 and 10, 1962, the second annual meeting was held, once again in Ottawa. Brigadier C. M. Drury, the president, presided and expressed the council's pleasure to Prime Minister Diefenbaker on the passage by Parliament of, and I quote, "An Act respecting the observance of the Centennial of Confederation in Canada." This act passed by the House of Commons on September 19, 1961, provided for the establishment of two bodies:

1. The National Centennial Administration.
2. The National Conference on Canada's Centennial.

The third annual meeting of the Canadian Centenary Council was held in Montreal, for three days, April 18 to April 20, 1963, under the joint presidency of Dr. Norman A. MacKenzie and M. Marcel Faribault. It was announced by Dr. MacKenzie that M. Robert Prefontaine, of Montreal, had been recently appointed the executive director of the Canadian Centenary Council with headquarters in Ottawa.

The federal Government's approval of the Canadian Centenary Council was evidenced by the appointment of its president, Dr. MacKenzie, and the associate president M. Faribault, as directors of the official Government body, of which Mr. John Fisher is the commissioner, and Mr. Robert Choquette, of Montreal, associate commissioner.

Those attending that meeting included delegates from over 300 national organizations, as well as representatives from the federal and provincial governments, municipalities, and many individuals.

The theme of last year's meeting was "Biculturalism, the basis of Canadian society"; and one could add, "voluntary bilingualism." It was reported during the conference that many schools across Canada had already embarked on programs for teaching French to English-speaking pupils, or English to French-speaking Canadians. This is tangible proof that we are making progress in achieving voluntary bilingualism. It is conceded that an additional language acquired is additional culture.

A great part of the three-day conference was given over to the eleven workshops. The serious and patriotic attitude of the participants reflected the sincere desire to do honour to Canada's one hundred years of nationhood.

I admit there was an undercurrent of tension and anxiety concerning the so-called "quiet revolution" taking place in Quebec, and even the F.L.Q. got into the act to provide additional excitement, as a telephone call was received at the Queen Elizabeth hotel that a bomb had been placed in the Central Station under the hotel, and that rumour caused a little flurry of excitement. But, before the time set for the explosion, the police found a suitcase with an amateurish sort of bomb—so nothing happened.

Mr. John Fisher was guest speaker for the closing luncheon and he compared the Canadian Centenary Council as "The Voice of the People of Canada", whereas the Government body, the National Centenary administration, was the "Voice of the Federal Government." He stressed the point that adequate consultation and co-ordination are required between the official governmental body and the non-governmental organizations prior to launching any major centennial project, in order to avoid duplication and to prevent waste of time and money.

The eleven workshops provided ample opportunity for full-dress discussions of the theme "Biculturalism," and Mr. Dale Thomson, professor of Political Science at the University of Montreal, as chairman of the Rapporteurs, in summing up the findings of the eleven workshops, said: "A meeting of this kind is the best possible reply to unbelievers in the future of a united Canada in 1967."

It was suggested at one of the workshops that a report of the proceedings should be brought to the attention of the honourable senators, which I promised to do and, as you see, I am keeping my promise. Some one suggested extending an invitation to honourable senators and members of Parliament to attend the 1964 annual meeting in order to enlist their support towards stimulating interest in their particular areas, and influence them to lend their prestige to local centenary projects.

The next and fourth annual meeting will take place from May 27 to 29 in the new Fathers of Confederation Memorial Building in that friendly and historic City of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, that we have heard about in such eloquent terms tonight from Senator Inman. The theme of this meeting will be, "Canada-Wide Centennial Planning and the World's Fair." Having personally experienced the lavish hospitality of Charlottetown, the cradle of Confederation, I am looking forward, like the Fathers of Confederation, for that happy combination of business plus social activity so ably reported by Honourable George Brown after the 1864 conference:

Whether as the result of our eloquence or of the goodness of the champagne the ice became completely broken, and the tongues of the delegates wagged merrily.

As to the problems that existed at the time of Confederation, much has been said about the Charlottetown Conference in September 1864, and much has been said about the Quebec Conference in October the same year. Much has also been said about the frictions and heated discussions indulged in by our Fathers of Confederation at these preliminary meetings. Yet history proves that the dissident groups must have had a give-and-take attitude, a goodwill, and a sincere desire to find a common denominator for the problems before them in order to create a united Canada composed of the two founding races, the English and French peoples, and two cultures with equality and opportunity for both. This was the dream of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Georges Etienne Cartier. Despite their differences it was a co-operative approach, and Confederation was built by stages over the three intervening years until 1867. In justice to that Irishman, D'Arcy McGee, I must say that he had preached and pleaded for federation for many years prior to the British North America Act of 1867.

I ask you, honourable senators, is this generation less co-operative and understanding? If a united Canada is to be saved for future generations, and if we are to celebrate together Canada's birthday in 1967, all true Canadians must reject any dangerous degree of hate, misunderstanding and distrust, which can so easily be stirred up by extremists on both sides, and the subsequent consequences which could undermine Canadian unity and destroy the Canada we now have stretching from sea to sea.

Many accepted habits and things taken for granted in the past have shifted from their old moorings, and to meet this changing situation we must all develop a new set of values to solve our new problems. Unleashed passions and unjust or biased accusations from both sides must be tempered by reason in a sincere attempt to find a satisfactory settlement. Maybe the ultimate salvation of Confederation will depend more on the broadmindedness of the majority of our far-sighted Canadian people than on the letter of, or the proposed amendments to, the British North America Act.

There is a proposal for a cultural centre, a "Place des Arts" in Quebec City to mark the Quebec 1864 meeting which joined the original provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario in Confederation.

As to the Quebec Conference, the room in which the conference held its meeting was on the second floor of a building on St. Louis Street that had been used as the official residence of the Prince of Wales on his visit to Quebec in 1860, and since that time had been the temporary home of the Canadian Legislature, pending the completion of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa. It was destroyed by fire in 1883, having been used as a provincial legislative building until the fire.

The Fathers of Confederation met in the reading room where three tall windows provided an unobstructed view of the mighty St. Lawrence River. To quote the historian, W. Menzies Whitelaw, "the sight was one to stir the dullest imagination and warm the coldest heart." It could hardly have failed to have its effect on the thinking of the "Fathers." It was that St. Lawrence River that held Upper and Lower Canada together, no matter how men tried to keep them asunder. Oh, mighty river, please continue to wield your magic!

Suggestions for Canada's Centennial keep pouring in by the hundreds from all across Canada, so the federal administration is not lacking a wide variety of special events to choose from, in addition to permanent projects such as buildings, parks, etc. All seemingly have one thing in common: an evident desire to go all out to make 1967 a year to remember.

Government action is virtually certain upon two suggestions, such as a special centennial medal for all school children, and the suggestion to honour Canadians who have reached a hundred years of age. I am sure our Special Committee on Aging would endorse that proposal, would it not, Senator Croll? It may be apropos for the Senate to give its blessing to a "Golden Age Day," or week, for 1967, to enhance the contribution of Canada's senior citizens.

Apart from the permanent buildings, libraries, etc., an advance peek at some of the events slated for approval by the Centennial administration shows that top priority is given to the exchange of young people among the provinces, in an attempt to stimulate good will and better understanding throughout Canada.

An imaginative proposal by Alderman Jack Leslie of Calgary, Chairman of that city's centennial committee, was reported by the press, as a "Twin City—double-barrelled" suggestion, whereby Calgary and Quebec could arrange an exchange program of their citizens to a Calgary Stampede and a "Carnaval d'Hiver". The only cost to the participants in this exchange program would be the transportation. The visitors, on arrival in either Calgary or Quebec, would live in the home of a resident family, and that family would in turn be repaid by enjoying the privilege of spending an equal time in the home of the visitors.

Mayor Wilfrid Hamel of Quebec was reported as being well disposed to the plan. It was further suggested by a Quebec newspaper that such an excellent "program of exchange visits" might well be extended to other parts of the country. For example, Montreal might exchange visitors with Vancouver, Windsor with Regina, Saskatoon with Halifax, Verdun with Kitchener, Three Rivers with Dartmouth, Brandon with Galt, etc.

Another idea has intrigued many Canadians—that of Mr. Gene Rheaume, member of Parliament for the Northwest Territories, who suggested a canoe race of about 2,500 miles, from Edmonton to Montreal, the route that the fur traders and explorers paddled. His plan would give individual Canadians a stake in the canoe race, by selling $2 shares, on which substantial prizes would be paid. In other words, it would be a sweepstake or lottery; and, according to Mr. Rheaume's calculations, it would contribute perhaps $10 million to help defray Centennial costs. I read that the idea has intrigued Mr. John Fisher. Of course, that depends upon whether one is in favour of lotteries or opposed to them.

Last June or July a young man from Saskatoon, Mr. William S. Fair, came to lobby in Ottawa for his proposal to hold a Centenary Youth Parliament in the House of Commons in 1967. He discussed the details of his plan with the leaders of the various political parties who apparently pledged their support and promised to give it top priority.

Mr. Fair's plan consists of an essay and public-speaking competition open to all young people between the ages of 17 and 21 years, as a basis of selecting candidates from all federal constituencies across Canada, who would then replace the official members of Parliament in this youth Parliament. The contest would be carried out with the co-operation of the 10 provincial departments of education.

Mr. Fair further suggested that Prince Charles be invited to open officially this Youth Parliament. Furthermore, leaders of youth associations from all member states of the United Nations would be invited to Ottawa with a view to holding an international youth leaders' conference, following the conclusion of the Youth Parliament. Mr. Fair is confident that over two million young people would take part in the contest. It sounds fantastic, does it not?

It may be that honourable senators are also aware that last October 15, at the Cercle Universitaire in Ottawa, at a preliminary meeting on classroom-teacher exchanges, one of the suggestions was that "a Member of Parliament Committee" be set up in order that senators and members of Parliament, faced with arranging tours for people from their constituencies, would know whom to go to for guidance in setting up tours of places of historic significance in Ottawa and the surrounding district. All this goes to prove my point that the voluntary groups are most conscious of Canada's centenary, and governments might well take a page from their records and get the official government machinery moving at a faster speed.

A daughter of the late Senator MacIntyre, Mrs. Alfred MacNeill of Charlottetown, came to my office on Wednesday, December 11. She was most enthusiastic about a fashion show which she was organizing for the Ladies' Aid of the hospital in Charlottetown. Each model would represent one of Canada's 10 provinces, and would wear an authentic costume of the period when that province entered Confederation. She hopes to extend the idea into a pageant which could be used for the World's Fair.

Two weeks ago Mr. Fisher proposed that women undertake what he calls "An Operation Attic", gathering up old things that should be preserved. Old letters and pictures could be checked by a qualified historian, to see what is of public value. Then the local town hall or main hotel lobby could be used for these historical displays, depicting what the particular town was like at the time of Confederation.

I read an article recently in the magazine Performing Arts, to the editor of which Senator Donald Cameron is consultant. It says:

> The Century of Canadian Confederation will see, happily, across our land, the completion of many theatres, concert halls, and various types of arenas for the performing arts—all to help mark our achievement of this milestone in our nationhood.
>
> But the Ford Motor Company of Canada Ltd., which is observing its 60th Anniversary in 1964 has a further and vital idea about this way of marking an important occasion. Bricks and mortar are not the only things that are concerned in the furthering of the performing arts in our country. The people . . . the performers themselves . . . are essential to the undertaking, lest the splendid new buildings become merely ghost theatres in the years to follow.
>
> Therefore Ford of Canada, in collaboration with "Performing Arts in Canada" is announcing a Centennial Performing Arts Scholarship program in which a minimum of $100,000 will be awarded to individuals and groups across Canada during the next decade.

That amounts to $10,000 per year.

This scholarship program is to encourage greater participation in the performing arts by young Canadians between 16 and 26 years of age. Senator Donald Cameron is chairman of Ford of Canada's Canadian Centennial Scholarship Program.

Honourable senators, I conclude with an excerpt from a monthly letter of The Royal Bank of Canada:

> Besides all the material things that will be erected to mark the Centenary, we need some spiritual things like a rededication to the principle of the democratic way of life. As the procession of this century of years passes in review, each year lecked with its crown of laurel leaves for Canada's achievements, and its chaplet of rosemary for memories, we must remind ourselves that 1967 will take its place in the cavalcade. We must make it worthy of the company it keeps.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Rattenbury, debate adjourned.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

SUBJECT MATTER REFERRED TO JOINT COMMITTEE ON CONSUMER CREDIT

Hon. David A. Croll moved the second reading of Bill S-3, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not know how I got on this program tonight. I am not in a fighting mood, particularly at this hour. However, for five years I have been talking about this legislation. I have no straw man to knock down tonight, and for that reason I will spare you.

Therefore, honourable senators, I move seconded by the honourable Senator Roebuck, the second reading of Bill S-3, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges. I do so with the hope and expectation that this house will take the same action this session as it did last session, namely, that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit.

The Hon. the Speaker: It has been moved by the honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the honourable Senator Roebuck, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I would move in amendment, seconded by the honourable Senator Vaillancourt, that this bill be not now read the second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit.

Motion in amendment agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 25 to 61, both inclusive, which were presented on Wednesday, March 11.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted, on division.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Resolutions numbered 1 to 23, both inclusive, which were presented on Wednesday, March 11.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 1, for the relief of Linda Ruth Kirsch Lach.

Resolution 2, for the relief of Evelyn Margaret Henderson McConnell.

Resolution 3, for the relief of Ingrida Elisabeth Prieditis Lorenzi.

Resolution 4, for the relief of Inge Moeller Weinhandl.

Resolution 5, for the relief of Paula Elaine Segal Kurland.

Resolution 6, for the relief of Pauline Georgette Mary Malo Corp.

Resolution 7, for the relief of Ann Nanasi Moskovits.

Resolution 8, for the relief of Ruth Gittleson Shapiro.

Resolution 9, for the relief of Florence Freda Tadei Dingman.

Resolution 10, for the relief of Constance LeBaron Dibblee Lank.

Resolution 11, for the relief of Millicent Eileen Goobie Davis.

Resolution 12, for the relief of Suzanne Mary Goodger Garrett.

Resolution 13, for the relief of Vanutelli Deschenes.

Resolution 14, for the relief of Margaret Elizabeth Taylor Hall.

Resolution 15, for the relief of Helen Sivwright Maxner Black.

Resolution 16, for the relief of Marion Irma Friefeld Dickman.

Resolution 17, for the relief of Ruth Greenberg Mire.

Resolution 18, for the relief of Bernice Ruth Serlin Mroz.

Resolution 19, for the relief of Marianne Renate Schimkatis Kramer.

Resolution 20, for the relief of Anna Hasapa Dionissatos.

Resolution 21, for the relief of Monique Nicole Theriault Ladouceur.

Resolution 22, for the relief of Marie Bernadette Guitar Guitard.

Resolution 23, for the relief of Kathleen Alice Priestly Morrow.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 18, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 24, for the relief of Gita Joy Kaplan Davis.

Resolution 25, for the relief of Roger Laframboise.

Resolution 26, for the relief of Frances Margaret Allan Poirier.

Resolution 27, for the relief of Marie Celine Therese Courteau Vezina.

Resolution 28, for the relief of Andre Hourlier.

Resolution 29, for the relief of Marilyn Wexelman Dobrofsky.

Resolution 30, for the relief of Lillian Turowitz Ofter.

Resolution 31, for the relief of Patricia James Lang O'Connor.

Resolution 32, for the relief of William Gordon Allen.

Resolution 33, for the relief of Marie-Anne Landry Desjardins.

Resolution 34, for the relief of Graham Campbell Harris.

Resolution 35, for the relief of Mildred Niren Cubitz, otherwise known as Mildred Nirenberg Cubitz.

Resolution 36, for the relief of Joan Margaret Gooch Wise.

Resolution 37, for the relief of Eric Meace.

Resolution 38, for the relief of Helen Lycas Vipond.

Resolution 39, for the relief of Beverley Respitz Grundman.

Resolution 40, for the relief of Ahuva Lina Sussman Sandperl.

Resolution 41, for the relief of Ida Christina Amalia Helena Koel Arsenault.

Resolution 42, for the relief of Jeanette Dorothy Saysell Wright.

Resolution 43, for the relief of Jurgen Manfred Kluwe.

Resolution 44, for the relief of Sarah Jane Harbinson Scott.

Resolution 45, for the relief of Vytautas Peter Kazlauskas.

Resolution 46, for the relief of Lillian Cere Kulczycki.

Resolution 47, for the relief of Arnold Adie.

Resolution 48, for the relief of Elizabeth Cameron Foucar Kielmann.

Resolution 49, for the relief of Phyllis Wishnowski Kara.

Resolution 50, for the relief of Ruby Grace Christie Buckell.

Resolution 51, for the relief of Dean Roberts Bishop.

Resolution 52, for the relief of Frank (Franciszek) Kaim.

Resolution 53, for the relief of Robert Toupin.

Resolution 54, for the relief of Rhoda Prosterman Zoberman.

Resolution 55, for the relief of Helen Freda Benjamin Markowiecki, otherwise known as Helen Freda Benjamin Marks.

Resolution 56, for the relief of Elizabeth Yvonne Goldberger Buday Mactaggart.

Resolution 57, for the relief of Michel Weissberger.

Resolution 58, for the relief of Denyse St. Hilaire Marshall.

Resolution 59, for the relief of Madeleine Turgeon Caron.

Resolution 60, for the relief of Rita Emma Clara Gentmantel Sanderson.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE GENERAL ACCIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-8, respecting The General Accident Assurance Company of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendment:

> Lines 10 and 11: Strike out "La Compagnie d'Assurance Générale Accident du Canada" and substitute therefor "General Accident, Compagnie d'Assurance du Canada".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, before that is done we should have some explanation as to the urgency for its adoption today. There may be no objection to the adoption of this report today, but is there any advantage to be gained by setting the rules aside, to adopt a measure which involves merely a change of name? I would suggest that this be considered at the next sitting.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, I am quite in accord with Senator Roebuck's suggestion, that there should be an explanation, and I hope it will be satisfactory to the Senate.

Honourable senators will recall that Bill S-8, and Bill S-9 respecting Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation—which will be reported out of committee after Bill S-8 has been dealt with—concern two insurance companies of the same group. In each case the sole purpose of the bill is to permit the use of a name in French as well as a name in English.

The amendment to Bill S-8 made today by the committee was simply a transposition of the French words. The name of the company, as proposed in the bill, namely, "La Compagnie d'Assurance Générale Accident du Canada", will now read "General Accident, Compagnie d'Assurance du Canada". Since the amendment appears to be a minor one, and having in mind that Bill S-9 applies to another company in the same group, it seemed to be desirable to adopt the reports on both bills today.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Consideration next sitting.

SCOTTISH CANADIAN ASSURANCE CORPORATION— REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce reported that the committee had considered Bill S-9, respecting Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: With leave, I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-6, to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 1,000 copies in English and 400 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

CONSUMER CREDIT

APPOINTMENT OF SENATE MEMBERS TO JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave, I move, seconded by Senator Brooks, > that the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons to inquire into and report upon the problem of Consumer Credit, namely:

>
> The honourable Senators Bouffard, Croll, Gershaw, Hollett, Irvine, Lang, McGrand, Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River), Smith (Queens-Shelburne), Stambaugh, Thorvaldson and Vaillancourt; and
>
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House accordingly.

Honourable senators, this is a motion that follows two others which were made in connection with the setting up of the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit. There is only one change from the list of senators appointed to serve on the committee at the last session: Senator Hayden has been replaced by Senator Lang of Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

NOTICE OF MOTION STANDS

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. Isnor:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the Committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I would ask that Motion No. 2 stand until Wednesday, March 25.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Nelson Rattenbury: Honourable senators, the privilege of making my maiden speech in this chamber is one that I shall always look back on with great humility. It is an honour accorded to very few men and women in Canada, and I am not unmindful of that fact. But the privilege that I am experiencing at the moment cannot hide the feeling of utter and complete confusion which exists in my mind as I roam through these hallowed corridors. Do any of you remember how you felt? It really is devastating.

I am now afforded the opportunity of thanking previous speakers for the very nice words of welcome extended to me.

The office of His Honour the Speaker in this chamber is one which carries with it heavy responsibility; so much of our parliamentary history is embodied in its past. I have met our Speaker on only two or three occasions, and already I am well aware of his charm and quiet patience. He is conducting—and will continue to do so, I am sure—the affairs of his office with all the dignity and intimate knowledge that it demands.

I join with previous speakers in adding my congratulations to Senator John J. Connolly upon his appointment as Government Leader in the Senate. I can think of no one better qualified to carry out the onerous duties of that office. He is known as an outstanding member of his profession, and his political activity over the past number of years has given him an opportunity of obtaining an intimate knowledge of conditions from coast to coast. His speech in this chamber on Wednesday, February 26, was one that I consider myself fortunate to have heard. I can only say, in my own way, that I am happy to be here serving with him.

I appreciated the kind remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks). We both call New Brunswick home, but his reputation extends far and beyond his native province. His service to Canada has been outstanding, first as a soldier and then as a parliamentarian. All New Brunswickers are proud of him, and I personally welcome the opportunity of knowing him better. I disagree with him in his remarks about the different directions in which we are travelling, but on the other hand I agree most heartily with his observation that this country must return to the parties of Cartier and Macdonald—parties created by men of wisdom and nurtured with time and experience. This country cannot afford the luxury of splinter groups representing only sectional interests.

The Prime Minister paid me a great compliment when he recommended my appointment to the Senate, and I shall try very hard to justify the confidence he has placed in me. As I have intimated, it will take some time to find my feet and control the panic which exists.

I congratulate the mover and seconder of the motion on the address. Both are, like myself, new to this chamber, but Senator Denis has the backing of years of experience in the other place.

I would like to speak today about the province in which I have the honour to live. It is a great province, with an honourable past and a very bright future. For many years it was said that, "Down East, they export brains—that is their largest export."

Today, however, the pendulum seems to be swinging the other way; a situation is developing wherein jobs are becoming available for our own people, and men with international reputations, particularly in the mining, shipbuilding and engineering fields, are wending their way eastward. We need their experience to help us develop our resources. We need our new technical training schools to train our youth for the jobs that are becoming available, all brought about by the industrial development of which I speak.

Our geographic position, for the most part or at least during our lifetime, has worked to our disadvantage. Our country's growth, as that of the United States, has been directed to the centre of the continent. However, a number of factors are contributing to our emancipation. To mention a few, I would refer to the struggle for economic development in Africa and South America, the creation of rival industrial growth in Europe, and the great wave of activity that has come in the wake of the massive wheat sales overseas. All have played their part in bringing some business to the coast, but more is needed, and needed on a continuing basis.

The port of Saint John is busy, but our efforts to keep that activity going will demand the close attention of us all; manufacturers, exporters, labour—all must play their part.

Before leaving Saint John for an imaginary trip around my province, I would like to tell you about some of the industrial advancements that have happened there. I refer specifically to the huge 50,000-barrel oil refinery which went on stream a few years ago, and the new 100,000 kilowatt thermal power plant, just beginning construction and made necessary in order to supply the power requirements of the new Rothesay Paper Company mill which will house, I am told, the largest paper machine on the continent.

Then, of course, you have all heard of the resurgence of shipbuilding which is reminiscent of the days of wooden ships. I should refrain from saying "iron men" because this great shipbuilding complex is building steel ships. In fact, three of the largest ore carriers ever built in this country have been launched from this yard, which now employs between 1,500 and 2,000 men, and which at times has employed as many as 2,500.

It would be unfair to leave the great port of Saint John without some reference to the effect that the St. Lawrence Seaway and the impending year-round navigation on that river will have on Atlantic ports generally. I am of the opinion that most people realize the fact that progress as such cannot be impeded. However, all of us—and in that generalization I include the Government of the day—must also realize that if the St. Lawrence is to be opened to year-round navigation, it must not be at the expense of our Atlantic economy.

This great nation of ours cannot afford to have four poor cousins in the family of provinces. If the St. Lawrence is to be kept open twelve months of the year, at considerable expense to the people of this country, then remedial action must be taken with respect to the Atlantic ports. There are many ways to accomplish this but my time today will not allow me to go into the matter in detail. Perhaps at a future sitting I will be permitted to talk on this important matter.

Closely allied with this question is the subject of shipping, and on this subject one could dwell at length. I think it is tragic that Canada, with a seafaring tradition which is second to none in the world, should be reduced to fewer than three vessels—I think at the moment there is one—of deep water registry.

In 1878 we had over 7,000 ships. The shipbuilding subsidy has helped to reactivate our shipyards, particularly in the coastal and fishing industries. It has made it possible to build such vessels in Canadian shipyards employing skilled Canadian labour. However, the building subsidy in itself is not enough. Some method must be devised to provide needed capital to finance construction costs.

Perhaps this could be brought about by giving additional assistance for deep sea registry vessels only, using the subsidy already applicable, in addition to the provisions of the Canadian Vessels Construction Assistance Act, passed in 1952, which is not now allowable.

Another means would be a form of government-sponsored mortgage insurance. To illustrate the need of some such assistance, I could refer to one case of an owner who had, in order to build a ship, to borrow from the bank over a two-year period. Imagine trying to pay off a ship in such a period of time!

Honourable senators, I attach much importance to this subject. I repeat, we have a tradition to live up to. This country built some of the finest ships in the world during the last century, and in this century we gained invaluable experience in building a wartime fleet, and, more recently, upper lake vessels of the most modern design afloat.

It is quite true that we have a navy of which we are all very proud, but may I remind you that a naval service should have a dual responsibility—a responsibility to protect our coasts and to protect our shipping. Today, honourable senators, if a war came our Navy would be protecting the ships of other nations, not our own.

We cannot live by, or for, tradition alone. If we are to keep shop efficiently we must some day balance our ledgers, and I submit we can start by the establishment of a Canadian merchant fleet, but not one that is Government built and operated. Heaven forbid that such as that should happen! In this observation I speak from knowledge gained in the tough school of experience. I contend we should by legislation, as I mentioned before, make it possible to operate under private ownership a modern up-to-date fleet that will carry Canadian products across the oceans of the world.

There is a reason for all this; in fact, many reasons. But one big one that I can think of is the help it would bring to our imbalance of trade. To illustrate this, I would point out that the Maritime refineries pay out in foreign currency about $40 million annually. Add to that figure the amount paid by the oil refineries on the St. Lawrence River ports, and I am sure the dollars paid out, because we are using foreign ships, would amount to $100 million and more.

I realize even as you do that all this business would not be carried in Canadian ships if such were available, but if we had ships of modern design they could and would compete on even terms with flags of other nations. They would get their fair share of the business.

The biggest power development ever attempted in eastern Canada is in the engineering and planning stage, and construction will commence early in 1965 on the gigantic hydro electric project at Mactaquac on the Saint John River, a few miles above Fredericton. Those of you who are not familiar with New Brunswick might find the name Mactaquac a little odd, but it is one of the picturesque Indian names found so frequently in that province.

Low cost power from this plant was assured by the approval of a grant totalling $20 million by the Government of Canada and the Atlantic Development Board. When it is fully developed, this project will generate an estimated 500,000 kilowatts of low-cost electricity. Just what this will mean to my province can be illustrated when I tell you that it will be the equivalent of the total generating capacity in the province at the moment. Imagine if you will, the industrial expansion made possible by this huge development. It will surpass anything ever known in the history of eastern Canada.

Is it any wonder that people everywhere are commenting on the industrial awakening of New Brunswick? Is it any wonder that the editorial pages across the nation are so loud in their praises of our premier? It has taken one with his vision and courage to bring all this about.

The mining industry is a good example of his determination and courage. Most of you have read of our base metal deposits discovered in the Bathurst area in the early 1950's. The deposit owned by Brunswick Mining and Smelting Company is one of the largest. I believe it to be the largest such proven ore body in the world. It lay fallow for years. A lot of talk went on about the plans for its future. Promises were made and accepted but nothing happened. In fact, ten years ago this chamber was told in good faith that in the following year 6,000 tons of ore would be on the move. However, it took another ten years, and a Robichaud, to bring it all about.

In a few months shipments will commence from a multimillion dollar concentrator at the Brunswick mine, and work has already started on a smelter chemical plant to handle this output. I am told that this whole complex of concentrator, smelter and chemical plant will cost approximately $50 million.

I previously mentioned the new paper mill under construction at Saint John, which is, I am told, the first such mill to be built in Canada in the past 25 years. But I have yet to talk about the new multimillion dollar groundwood mill now nearing completion at South Nelson; also the only soft wood plywood mill east of the Rockies and owned, incidentally, by my good friend Senator Burchill. I think it is only a matter of time until the Miramichi area will have another mill, one that will help considerably the economy of our province.

Historically, it has been a pastime with us in the east to blame all our ills on all those who live to the west of us. I like to think that conditions are changing. I like to believe that the next generation of the Atlantic provinces will have reason to look with pride on their ever-expanding economy; that they will be able to say their income is approaching the national level; that their despair of the past will be replaced by an optimistic outlook, and that there will be good and sufficient reason for that change.

I have nearly completed my journey around the province, but the picture I have tried to present to you would not be complete if I failed to mention that once again we are taking our rightful place in the fishing industry. Steel trawlers are being built, and new fish-processing plants are in the planning stage. I am sure this industry has reason to look to the future with every feeling of confidence.

The beauty of our province must not be overlooked. Our tourist bureau is busily engaged 12 months a year convincing ever more people to enjoy the facilities we have to offer at such places as St. Andrews, the beaches of Baie de Chaleur and Shediac Bay, and sportsmen the world over will always wear an expression of delight when they think of the salmon running in the rivers of New Brunswick.

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, debate adjourned.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Friday, March 13, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. M. Bouffard for the second reading of Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, before Senator Hayden takes the floor, may I be permitted to put on the record a correction which I would like to appear at this point in today's Hansard. It deals with an error in print which occurred at the top of page 156, in the first paragraph of the left-hand column, in the second sentence. I am reported as saying:

> To this section I suggest adding a provision that the date of proclamation be made under section 5 of this act.

The important phrase of the sentence was omitted. I checked my notes, and this is what I had intended to say:

> To this section I propose adding a provision that the date of proclamation be no earlier than one year following the publication of regulations made under section 5 of this act.

Of course, the purpose of the suggested amendment was to provide an ample opportunity for both the fish dealers and the fishermen themselves to examine the proposed regulations before they became effective.

Thank you for your courtesy.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I intend to deal with only one clause in this bill, clause 35. You will note it adds a new subsection, designated subsection 2a to section 671 of the Canada Shipping Act as it now stands.

This new subsection 2a provides that only Canadian ships may engage in coasting trade on the Great Lakes and the River St. Lawrence; and the area on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River within which this restriction or limitation applies is provided in this clause 35.

I have read the very interesting discussion of this bill in the Senate. It related, however, to other aspects of the bill, dealing mainly with the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, entered into in 1960 and replacing the earlier convention of 1948, and also amendments covered by the International Convention Relating to the Limitation of Liability of Owners of Sea-going Ships, of 1957.

In connection with those items I have nothing to say. I assume that in committee there will be before us those persons who will point out the purposes and advantages of the changes. I think we could assume also that since the convention resulted from a meeting of minds of various countries of the Commonwealth, the changes are in the right direction.

Honourable senators, I should point out that the question of closing the coasting trade of Canada within the areas I have described is not a new thing. It is not something that has recently been thought about. I should like to take a moment to tell you what the background is.

The pressure for consideration of such a restriction started to build up particularly when various organizations interested in shipping began to look forward to the construction and completion of the seaway and the impact which it might have by reason of the vessels which would be attracted into the interior, one might say, of Canada via the St. Lawrence and the various seaway canals and through the Great Lakes.

Prior to 1955, in anticipation of the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway, representations were made to the Government by associations of shipbuilders, ship repairers and ship operators, asking that the coasting trade be restricted to vessels built and registered in Canada.

Prior to that time, while voices were raised asking for the same thing, there were certain natural protections which the Great Lakes shipping enjoyed. For instance, there was the limitation of the pre-seaway canal system, which kept out of the Great Lakes all seagoing vessels except very small, non-competitive ones.

The prospect of the removal of this natural limitation stirred the Dominion Marine Association, for instance, to include in its 1954 submission to the Government the statement that "Canadian shipowners would be driven from the inland waters of Canada, and the shipyards and ancillary services which sustain them would be without business."

The Great Lakes shipbuilding industry itself, until the actual Seaway became operating, enjoyed protection by reason of the natural barriers of the Great Lakes system, from builders of foreign ships. Even in 1950 we added a provision in the Canada Shipping Act, which provided that "a ship built outside of Canada shall not, without the consent of the minister, be registered in Canada." Therefore, there was this additional protection which was built up in protection of the shipping industry interested in this portion of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence.

Bearing in mind all this, on March 1, 1955, the Government appointed a Royal Commission on Coasting Trade. It made its report on December 9, 1957. I might mention the names of the members of that royal commission. The Honourable Mr. Justice W. F. Spence was chairman. At that time he was a member of the Trial Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario; he has since become one of the puisne judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. Other members were W. N. Wickwire, Q.C. and Marcel Belancer, C.A.

The terms of reference of the commission are very interesting and touch right on this particular subject. Senators who wish to see the full language of the terms of reference will find it in page 1 of the report. I have summarized the terms of reference in relation to the subject matter we are discussing now. That summary is as follows:

> That the commission, inter alia, was required to inquire into and report upon

(a) the effect upon Canadian shipping and shipbuilding of participation in the coasting trade by ships registered or built outside of Canada;

(b) the probable effects of the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway upon the Canadian coasting trade; and

(c) the necessity, if any, of establishing different policies and prescribing special conditions with respect to the Canadian coasting trade.

Before I tell you the conclusions of that royal commission, I should tell you what was the state of the law in relation to restrictions on shipping at the time this commission sat, and what is the state of the law substantially today.

This is a very brief summary. I hope you do not find it wearying.

The first provision is the British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement 1931, to which all Commonwealth members are parties, which provided and still provides for equal treatment of all British ships in the coasting trade of parties thereto.

Any member may withdraw from the agreement or any article thereof on 12 months' notice. The agreement could also be amended by common accord, on proposals made and circulated by any three members. It was to this particular provision that the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) referred as indicating that Canada had complied with the requirements of this British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement, as a preliminary to the introduction of clause 35 in the bill before you.

Then, Part XIII of the Canada Shipping Act itself provides that only British ships may engage in the coasting trade; and a British ship is defined in the interpretation section of the Canada Shipping Act as including a Canadian ship. A British ship is also defined in the same act as a ship that is owned by British subjects and/or corporations incorporated in the Commonwealth and that is registered in the Commonwealth.

Another feature of the law existing at the time the royal commission sat, at the time it made its report, and still today, is that foreign-built ships may be by order in council exempt from the prohibition in Part XIII of the Canada Shipping Act. That is by virtue of section 673, which is simply that the minister may grant an exemption from the prohibition that otherwise exists. The purpose of that was to permit exemption where reasonable service is not being furnished at reasonable rates; and I can tell you that according to reports the exemption is being used sparingly and to meet emergencies in shipping. The comment of the royal commission on this aspect of the law, as I have related it to you now, is in this language:

> The practical result of Part XIII of the Canada Shipping Act is to restrict the coasting trade of Canada to Commonwealth registered ships all of which are equally free to engage in it whether registered in Canada or not.... This equality of treatment is required by the.... Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement. To exclude British ships registered outside of this country from its coasting trade Canada would have to withdraw from Article XI of the agreement...

I assume that it is a procedure of that kind which Canada has followed.

As to what the rest of the provisions of the law are in relation to shipping, may I state briefly the relevant tariff and tax provisions, those, for instance, in relation to customs duties. Ships built in the Commonwealth may engage in the coasting trade free of duty. Ships built outside the Commonwealth may only coast upon payment of a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem and securing of a coasting licence. Duty may be imposed on repairs and alterations effected outside the Commonwealth.

Now, as to the application of this sort, you might be dealing with a ship that was built, say, in the United States, and by subsequent transactions it might be held by a British corporation, and there may be a leasing or a purchase of that ship by a Canadian interest. On payment of this 25 per cent duty ad valorem, the owners or lessees, as the case may be, are entitled as of right to a licence to operate in the coasting trade.

Then there is the question of federal sales tax. Ships licensed to coast and materials used in their construction are exempt from federal sales tax. The Canadian Vessel Assistance Act provides a three year write-off. Honourable senators know about that, for we have dealt with that legislation in this chamber.

Then with regard to regulation of coasting trade, and shipping tariffs—bulk cargoes: Under the Inland Water Freight Rates Act, the Board of Grain Commissioners regulates rates that may be charged for the carriage of grain from the lakehead to other ports in Canada and prescribes maximum rates.

General cargo and passengers: The Board of Transport Commissioners is empowered to regulate, grant licences, etc. in these fields.

At this stage, having indicated what is the state of law now, when the commission made its report, and at the time the commission was set up, I would like to refer to the findings of the royal commission which were published in December 1957. I am sorry that there is no advantage in my paraphrasing, so if honourable senators will permit me I will read them, but not any more than I think necessary.

At page 139 of the report of the Royal Commission on Coasting Trade appears the heading, "Conclusions Respecting Proposed Restriction of Canadian Coasting Trade to Vessels Registered in Canada." The subject matter reads as follows:

> Restriction of the coasting trade to vessels registered in Canada would be detrimental to the public interest, whether the restriction applied generally or only to a particular part of Canada.
>
> Applied to the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River—

And that is the particular aspect of it to which we are addressing ourselves at this time.

> —the restriction would mean moderately greater water transportation charges than would obtain otherwise in coasting trades. It would probably cause most Canadian export grain to be shipped directly overseas from the Lakehead, causing a substantial loss of coasting trade. This loss would impair the competitive position of Canadian operators in the transborder trade.

That is, trade as between the United States and Canada.

> It would not afford any substantial advantage in shipping service.

It was urged that this restriction of Canada's coasting trade to vessels registered in Canada would help in the next step, which was to be an agreement between the United States and Canada on transborder rates. The report of the royal commission, after careful study of that aspect, had this to say:

> The submission of the Dominion Marine Association advocated restriction of the coasting trade to Canadian registered vessels, firstly "as a necessary step in the preservation of our own trade," and secondly as an essential preliminary to the negotiation of a treaty with the United States reserving the trans-boundary trade in the inland waters of the two countries to vessels registered in either Canada or the United States. The two measures were advocated as a combined assurance that the trade of Canadian and United States shipowners would not be destroyed by competition from the United Kingdom and foreign countries. The Trades and Labour Council and the National Association of Marine Engineers also advocated such a treaty.
>
> The foregoing analysis has shown that restriction of the coasting trade to vessels registered in Canada would be detrimental to the public interest. The same can be said for restriction of the transborder trade to Canadian registered and United States registered vessels. The continued exclusion of outside competition in all the inland services would materially lessen the advantages to be derived from the Seaway.
>
> The very intent of the proposed treaty is contrary to the principle espoused by Canada of freeing the obstacles to international trade.

There was the question as to whether not only Commonwealth but also foreign vessels should be permitted to engage in Canada's coasting trade, since economy of service is appraised as the decisive consideration. Therefore, they went on to consider that, namely, a retention of the present restriction on coasting trade:

> The Commission does not regard the change as advisable at this time for the following reasons:
>
> (a) The competition from Commonwealth vessels alone is enough to bring world freight rates with it, by and large. The admission to the coasting trade of vessels on other registries could be expected to bring little or no additional economy to shippers.
>
> (b) It is assumed that the United Kingdom will be allied with Canada in any future war in which this country may become involved, and that its vessels will be available for Canadian needs in the common cause, whereas obviously the same cannot be said of all foreign countries.

So they dismissed the idea that the coasting trade should be exposed to any broader competition than presently exists, but they do say that the restrictions on coasting trade should not be extended so that there would be exclusion of all trade other than the carriage in Canadian ships.

There are one or two things I want to say arising out of these findings of the royal commission. I should point out that the commission, as will be seen from the report, made a very careful and exhaustive study of the matter. The report is well documented. The members had sufficient assistance in their study, and they made their projection on the basis of what it was anticipated the operation of the Seaway would produce in the way of trade, in the way of additional shipping and the nature of such, and then they reached these conclusions.

One very significant thing in the report which I should point out is that there are really two aspects involved. When we talk about coasting trade, that means between two Canadian points within this area on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence. However, there is also the other aspect of international trade which is not subject to this restriction at all, that is, that ships of any registry other than Canadian may come up the St. Lawrence bringing cargo from outside Canada, and may unload in any part of this area and again pick up cargo and carry it out beyond the limitations provided here, and they are not subject to the restrictions contained in the existing or proposed legislation should section 35 become law.

One thing that concerned the royal commission, as I read the report, is that the largest single item of freight carried by Canadian vessels on the Great Lakes, engaged in coasting trade, is made up of the carriage of grain from the Lakehead to some point of transfer, possibly Montreal, or elsewhere. It is pointed out that by restricting the coasting trade in Canada to ships of Canadian registry you automatically produce a situation where you are going to experience higher freight rates. Then that problem would endanger the continued ability or the opportunity for Canadian ships in the coasting trade to carry grain to transfer points. What it suggests might very likely occur is that these ships of other registers, which are bringing cargo to various points in Canada, may then take grain out to various points beyond Canada and in that way there will be a substantial loss to the Canadian shipping trade by the loss of carriage of this grain because of the increased cost of shipping.

Having said all that, I now say that I think the bill should go to committee. In committee it will require very careful study, because here we have a report of a royal commission that was set up by the Government of Canada following representations that were made by all the ship-building and ship-operating firms in Canada, envisaging the difficulties and the dangers that they would experience on the opening of the Seaway. That commission was asked to inquire into all these things. The very question of the restriction of the coasting trade of Canada to Canadian ships only was one of the very questions that this commission was asked to consider; and it was asked to consider it in the light of the Seaway in operation. They sat for some considerable time. It is a considered, well-documented and intelligent report.

It seems to me there are certain questions that should be answered in committee. Have these figures upon which these conclusions in the report are based developed in operation in accordance with those projections for the period since the Seaway opened? If they have, then the question is: Why do we now turn against the report of the commission? What are the reasons for not accepting the conclusions and recommendations of the commission? If the projections upon which the report is founded are not those which were realized, then of course we would have to have an explanation as to what are the differences, what are the real figures and how they influence you to reach a conclusion different from that which the commission reached. To me, these are very important questions. I do not see at this time any political considerations involved, although certainly it would appear to be more consistent with our views. Maybe I cannot speak for you all, but certainly the view that I have held for a long time is that Canada should be removing instead of adding obstacles to the flow of international trade because we are so dependent on international trade.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I summarize what I have said in these words: the presently proposed legislation can only be supported, in the light of the commission's recommendations, if the experience since the opening of the Seaway has shown that the commissioners' projections were substantially wrong, and that the position of the Canadian ship operator since the opening of the Seaway is substantially different from and worse than that which had been projected for him by the commission as the result of its inquiry. If that is not so, and if that cannot be demonstrated to be so, then we are simply being asked to accept a bill which does something exactly the opposite of what the commission recommended. In those circumstances, I think we should have very valid reasons for taking such a course of action.

I think that information should go so far as to give us an analysis of the experience in shipping in this area which is now sought to be closed, that is, the coasting trade of Canada. We should be given the experience in that area over the period since the Seaway opened, and have it set off against the basis upon which the commission proceeded. If on a thorough analysis of that we can then say, had the commissioners had this information before them, instead of the projections they made, they would not have come to the conclusions they did—if we are prepared to reach that conclusion, I think we should support the bill. But as I see it, in the circumstances we have a very responsible duty to perform. We cannot just fly lightly in the face of an examination that was made by a capable group of commissioners who made a real study of this whole situation, and simply ignore everything they have recommended and accept what is proposed in clause 35 of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: May I ask a question of the honourable senator? He bases his argument largely on the report of the commission. I did not hear him say anything about the fact that this is a government bill, and it is a bill that embodies the announcement made by the previous government. Two governments in Canada have been in favour of this bill. He says this is not political. I can assure him this bill is not political because both of the leading parties are in favour of it.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend has not asked the question yet. Could he tell me what the question is?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The question is: Why do you put your whole emphasis on the report of the commission, when two successive governments of Canada have expressed themselves in support of what the bill provides?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is very easy to answer. This is a report which was requested by the government of the day in 1955; and today a government of the same political persuasion is proposing this amendment. This commission made a very careful study of this particular question and made a report based on certain information. It appears to be an intelligent report, and I am not to be taken as opposing the enactment of clause 35. I have not said anything that goes that far. What I have said is that I want it to be shown why we should do something different from what the commission recommended. Has the situation changed? Are we just refusing to accept the report, or is there good ground for taking a different position from the one taken in the report?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask, where does one obtain the report?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You can get it from the Queen's Printer. That is where I got my copy. It is dated December 9, 1957.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I was not here when the bill was introduced. Were the reasons for overruling the report submitted in this house?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I do not think so—not until now.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: In the Senate, on the introduction of the bill—

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt, but is the honourable Senator Bouffard closing the debate or is he just answering a question?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I am answering a question.

The matter was pretty well discussed. I gave what would be the advantages and the disadvantages concerning the coasting trade, whether it is restricted to Canadian ships or not. At the same time I said that the matter had been studied and that the Government was not sure about its proclamation. As a matter of fact, the article we are talking about is not one that is going to take effect right away; it can be proclaimed any time the Governor in Council deems proper.

You have in the introduction of the bill four reasons which are advantages in keeping it the way it is today, and four reasons which would be disadvantages, if we adopt the new policy the Government is putting forward in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What is the date of your speech on the bill?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: March 12.

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bouffard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-10, to provide for the Establishment of Harbour Commissions.

He said: Honourable senators, the title of this bill will have a familiar sound to the ears of all honourable senators who recall Bill S-38 of last session. It could be described as the 1964 revised version of Bill S-38, which went through some vicissitudes at that time.

Honourable senators will recall that Senator Lambert gave an able, adequate and comprehensive explanation of Bill S-38 in October last, after which it went to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, which committee had four sittings over a period of about two months, heard quite a number of witnesses and made certain amendments to the bill. The committee then adjourned sine die, and the bill died when the session ended; it was never reported out of the committee.

Subsequently, in January the Department of Transport wrote to the ten harbour commissions still included in the bill after the amendments made by the committee, and also to the municipalities affected by the harbours administered by those harbour commissions, and notified them of the changes recommended, or made by the committee, and asked for their comments. As a result Bill S-10 is now introduced.

In explaining this bill I should start by outlining what is excluded from the bill, and then go on to say what it includes. Honourable senators will recall that the City of Toronto Harbour Commission was struck out of the earlier bill by the committee. This bill now strikes out two more, the Harbour Commission of Hamilton, and the Harbour Commission of Winnipeg and St. Boniface. The schedule of the bill covers now eight harbour commissions, whereas Bill S-38 started out with eleven. Toronto, Hamilton, and Winnipeg and St. Boniface are no longer included in the proposed legislation and are not affected by it. They still continue to operate under their own statutes. In addition to that, Bill S-10 contains all the amendments made by the committee, plus one additional minor amendment that simply carries out the same intention as the other amendments.

Therefore this Bill S-10 might be regarded as being Bill S-38 of the last session as it was when the committee adjourned, with the elimination of the harbours of Hamilton, and Winnipeg and St. Boniface.

Now, as a result of writing to the various commissions and municipalities, I am informed that generally speaking the changes are satisfactory. However, I understand the City of Oshawa might still have some objection, and therefore I suggest if this bill receives second reading that it be sent again to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and that notice of the hearings of that committee be sent to all eight harbour commissions now in the schedule to the bill, and to all the municipalities adjoining those harbours or connected with them.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask if a letter was sent to the harbour board of New Westminster, and, if so, what sort of reply was received from the city or the board?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: The only information I have is that they were all notified. The comment I have is that generally speaking other cities appear to be reasonably satisfied with the proposed bill. I think it would be better if we ascertained that information in committee. In other words, while I am informed that that appears to be the situation at the present time, it seems to me I should suggest that it go to committee and that notices again be sent out so that everybody who has a right to be heard would be heard, notwithstanding the sittings held last fall.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask, was Cobourg written to?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I would not think so, because Cobourg is not one of the harbours.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not in the schedule, but does not the bill go further than the schedule? It takes in everybody.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: My information leads me to believe that the notices of changes were not sent to the 300-odd harbours administered, as I understand it, by harbour masters. Again that is all the more reason why we should check this point in time to have any recommendations made at the committee stage.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The earlier bill provided that if there were any profits in the operation of a harbour, notwithstanding any former measure, bill or act of Parliament, such profits were to be paid to the Receiver General of Canada. Is that in this bill?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That particular section is section 15, and is, as I understand it, in the same form as when it was amended by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications; but I understand that a change has been made by inserting the word "funded" in line 38 of page 6 of the bill, the intention being to enable the commission to reserve a certain amount of money for its own capital purposes. Subject to that, as you will see from the end of the section, the revenues remaining at the end of each fiscal year of that commission shall be paid by the commission to the Receiver General. I think I am right in saying that section 15, as it now stands, is the same as it was when the previous bill was in committee at the time of the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I ask the honourable senator if notification of these proposed amendments, incorporated in the bill before us, was sent to any of the municipalities which made representations before the committee and, if so, when was such notice sent? I would emphasize the word "municipalities"; I am not referring to notices sent to harbour commissions.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: My information is that it was sent to the commissions set out in the schedule to the bill, and to the municipalities affected by those harbours.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Would the honourable senator answer the last part of my question, as to when such notice was sent?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: In January.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The reason I ask the question is that I have a letter from the city clerk of the City of Oshawa saying that no such notification had been received by that city up to two days ago.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The honourable gentleman raised this question with me about a week ago; I made inquiries of the department, and was informed that the letter in question had actually been dispatched last week. There has been a misunderstanding somewhere, and I shall inquire further on the point.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I accept the word of the Leader of the Government, because the letter I have is dated a few days ago.

With leave of the Senate I would adjourn the debate, for I shall have something to say on that matter later.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Perhaps I might be permitted to finish my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I beg the honourable senator's pardon.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I did sit down, so the honourable senator had reason for believing I was finished.

I want to say for the benefit of those senators who are not members of the committee, and who may not be familiar with the previous bill and this one, that this bill does not cover harbours which are under the National Harbours Board Act, which are the great harbours of Canada serving ocean-going traffic. They are not affected at all by this bill. The bill does apply to some 300 harbours which are now administered by a harbour master.

The main purpose of the bill is that hereafter, if it seems desirable to change the administration of a harbour under a harbour master to that of a harbour on which there will be local representation, it can be done under this act instead of having a special Act of Parliament. The purpose of the bill is to set up a standard and uniform procedure for the establishment of commissions.

As I said before, there are these eight harbour commissions that come under the provisions of the bill on what I might call a local option basis. That is, the commission itself must decide that it wants to come under the provisions of this bill. If it so decides, then it passes a by-law, and that by-law, if approved by the Governor General in Council, changes the status of the commission from its previous status of a commission under a special act to the status of a commission under this act. Notice of that by-law must, I understand, be sent to all the municipalities affected by the harbour 10 days before it is submitted to the Governor General in Council.

That is all I have to say, honourable senators, except that as and when the debate is concluded I shall move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I inquire as to what happens if no request comes from a municipality? Would the port of New Westminster, for instance, have to make such an approach before action is taken under this bill?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: As I understand the situation, if this bill is referred to the committee a date will be set for the hearing, and notice of that hearing will be sent to all the harbour commissions affected by it. Perhaps I had better say that notice will be sent to all the harbour commissions set out in the statute, because the other harbours are directly under the administration of the Department of Transport. Notice will also be sent to the municipalities adjoining those harbours.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Did I understand him to say that the Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Board does not come under this act, but that if it wanted to come under this act it would request that the Governor General in Council proclaim it a harbour commission under this act?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: The Winnipeg and St. Boniface harbour is not under this act in any way, shape or form. It is in the same position as are Toronto and Hamilton. It is not affected by this bill whatsoever.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: In answer to Senator Reid may I, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, assure him and this house that we will give ample notice to all these municipalities mentioned in the schedule before considering this bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What about the others which are in the statute?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: They are not affected.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, they are.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No. The harbours are affected, but this bill relates to the commissions and not to the harbours.

There is one point that I should like to mention in connection with the last remarks of Senator Leonard. A great deal of the discussion on the bill last year centred around this question of the way in which these existing harbours could be brought under the new act.

I am referring to the existing harbours mentioned in the schedule. One of the suggestions made to us was that some of the municipalities concerned in these harbours had property rights that were handed over to the harbour commissions, and that they should be consulted and their approval obtained before their harbours were brought under this act. I notice that in clause 30 of this bill no mention is made of the municipalities being consulted. I am referring to clause 30(2). It does require the harbour commission concerned to pass a by-law opting to come under this act, but it makes no reference to the municipalities.

I think in the case of the City of Oshawa, for instance, two of the commissioners are appointed by the Governor in Council, and one represents the City of Oshawa. In that instance the two harbour commissioners who form the majority could enact a by-law against the wishes of the City of Oshawa, if they wished to.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think the majority is appointed by the department.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes. That particular question was raised. I think it fair to say it was raised particularly in connection with the harbours of Toronto and Hamilton, which have now been excluded from the bill. But the point remains, that if there are some municipalities mentioned in the schedule that have an interest in a harbour because of having handed over property to the commission, or through having an interest in the profits, and so on, a question arises as to whether they ought not to be consulted and their approval obtained before their harbours are brought in under this act.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: May I be permitted to say it is my understanding that clause 13(2) is intended to cover that point. That clause reads:

> Every by-law shall, at least ten days before its submission to the Governor in Council for approval, be served upon the clerk of each municipality adjoining the harbour for which the commission is established.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is notice, not approval.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That is true. I think the department takes the definite stand that the municipalities should not have the right of veto which they would have to have if the other was the case. It is intended that they should have their day in court and an opportunity of knowing about it, but on the basis of the fact that the major interest in this is a national interest the consent of such a municipality should not be a condition precedent, because that would amount to giving it a right of veto in respect to the bringing of the commission under this act. The municipality will have the right, if the harbour commission and the Government agree, to put forward its case and to make whatever arguments it can.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I raised a series of objections to the previous bill. One of them was that the department was centralizing all authority in connection with harbours and harbour commissions, and was ruling out the local authorities and totally disregarding their contributions to the harbour as it now exists. I see no particular change from that in this bill.

I call attention to clause 3:

> (1) The Governor in Council may by proclamation establish a harbour Commission for any harbour in Canada that is not named in the National Harbours Board Act, or for any harbour for which a harbour Commission has not otherwise been established by Parliament.

That means that unless there is an act of Parliament, every harbour in Canada—the 300 or more of them—is made subject to this act.

Under the bill, and as it stood before, the department appointed two of the harbour commissioners, and in some instances the municipality may appoint the minority, so that at any time the department or its officials may call upon the commission to make the local harbour a national harbour and, therefore, come under the control of the department.

The worst feature of it is—and I speak with some knowledge—that not only the City of Toronto and the City of Hamilton, but nearly all of these harbours have received from the local municipality grants of land and contributions of actual money and various services from time to time. In addition to that the municipalities have a vested interest in the harbour, which is necessary to the carrying on of the business of that community.

I have in mind the harbour at Oshawa. Oshawa told us—I cannot remember the details—of the grants that it had made. I have in mind also the harbour at Cobourg where, if my memory is correct, the municipality granted, or is ready to grant, control and ownership of the bed of the harbour, to say nothing of other grants of that nature.

Naturally, at the moment I cannot give you the details, but I know that the municipality of Cobourg has made grants of considerable value and turned over to the harbour property of considerable value. In the light of that, I read this:

> . . . the revenues of a commission remaining at the end of each fiscal year of that commission shall be paid by the Commission to the Receiver General.

The answer I have heard to that is that they do not expect there will be any profits from those harbours, and if there are any profits the amount of money that has been supplied by the Dominion is so much greater than that of the municipality, it is all right to push the municipality aside and hog the entire returns. I do not see that logic.

It may be that now and in the future very considerable sums may be paid by the Dominion treasury for the dredging of harbours, the building of docks and so on, much more than the municipality provides. But surely in that case there should be some recognition of the money paid by the municipality. If it is two to one, then the revenues should be divided two to one; if it is 1,000 to one, the division of the profits should be on the same basis.

Moreover, looking at it from the standpoint of the Dominion Government, surely we want the co-operation of the municipalities in the future. I can fancy the answer that would be given to me in the future, were this bill as it stands to become law, and were I to suggest to a municipality that they transfer to a harbour of the future valuable property now owned by the municipality and from which the municipality is obtaining revenue, so that in future that revenue would go to the Dominion Government. Such an arrangement is not honest, it is not common sense. That kind of thing does not work.

Some provision should be made in this bill to recognize the investments made by the municipality, when the transfer takes place to Dominion control. Let it be a fair arrangement. Let the division of profits be in proportion to the investments made by one and the other.

Honourable senators, do not overlook the fact that the Constitution of Canada, the British North America Act, places navigation and shipping under the control of the dominion Government. That is not entirely a privilege: it is also an obligation. The burden and the duty of keeping open the avenues of water transportation has been placed by the Constitution upon the shoulders of the dominion Government, and as well such benefits as may properly come to the Government. No such obligation is placed upon the municipalities. The burden of developing and maintaining our harbours is that of the dominion Government, and it does not seem to me fair to ask the municipalities to contribute in a voluntary way dollar for dollar to the dominion whose duty it is to keep open the avenues of water transportation.

Aside from that, however, this seems to me clear and honest, that the value which is contributed by the municipality should not be disregarded. There should be a fair, decent, honest accounting as between the two with respect to the profits of the future. It is argued that there will be no profits. Well, perhaps not, if you charge to the harbours the cost of the dominion duty of keeping the avenues of water trade open. On the other hand, do not forget that our harbours are growing very rapidly. The harbours on the north shore of Lake Ontario are very important now and they are becoming more important day by day as trade increases. I know from personal knowledge what is happening in these harbours such as Oshawa, Cobourg and others on the north shore of Lake Ontario. They are exceedingly valuable and important and their traffic is growing rapidly.

There is an agreement of some kind—I do not know the details—between the town of Cobourg and the department. To my mind, it was brought about by very improper means. The dominion Government ceased dredging the harbour at Cobourg so that the larger ships which now come up the St. Lawrence and navigate the Great Lakes were not able to dock at that town. The ships were forced to go on to Oshawa, and the manufacturers at Cobourg—and there are several there of importance—were obliged to carry their materials from Oshawa by road to Cobourg, at very considerable expense. I know of one shipment which cost $15,000 to move from Oshawa to Cobourg—that is, $15,000 more than would have been the cost had the boats been able to dock in Cobourg.

Under those circumstances, and in order to induce the department to carry out their duty with regard to shipping and navigation, the Town of Cobourg entered into an agreement under, I think, undue and improper pressure. However, that is for them to say. I hope that when this bill comes before the committee, due notice will be given to that town and to many others that are affected by this bill. Perhaps they do not know that they are affected, but they will be in the future.

A gentleman who represented the department said, in the course of our discussion on the previous bill, that of course the department would not do anything unjust or drastic. I said, that is what it is doing right now. In my judgment, that is what is envisaged in this bill right now. We must constantly take care of the citizens of our country wherever they are and not allow centralization in the hands of officials to go too far.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I was glad to hear the sponsor of the bill say that it will go before a committee. He first pointed out that the schedule of places has been changed from eleven to eight, three being left off the previous bill and eight remaining. He gave no real reason as to why those three were taken off. I have my own views as to why more attention was paid to them than to the port of New Westminster.

A large delegation came down here from Toronto—and honourable senators know that nothing impresses a government, politically at least, like seeing a delegation of 40 or 50 in here fighting for a certain town or city. I hope that when the bill is in committee we will be told definitely why the three cities were taken off—Toronto, Winnipeg and Hamilton.

Honourable senators, clause 30(2) says:

> No proclamation shall be issued pursuant to subsection (1) unless the Governor in Council has received a by-law passed by the Commission requesting the Governor in Council to declare the Commission to be established pursuant to this Act.

There may be some further explanation that I have not so far obtained. It seems to me that if the harbour board does not make a move, just keeps its present status, no change will be made, as I read the clause. Of course, that may be explained more fully in the committee discussion.

It is not my intention to delay the bill unduly, but I think it should be stated at this time that New Westminster is unique in one respect. So far as I can learn, it was the only port which spent $500,000 of the people's money in the building of wharves for the government.

At the time that was done in 1910 to 1912, only the City of New Westminster was interested. There was a small population on the other side of the river in about 1910. Away back in 1905 there was little money available. It is no longer solely New Westminster Harbour Commission, and the name should be changed. It may surprise many to realize that there are 11 municipalities on the river contiguous to the City of New Westminster, all of which are paying water dues and royalties to the harbour board. How can the whole responsibility for things done long ago be now placed on the shoulders of the City of New Westminster? It would be a splendid act on the part of the Government to take over the wharves and to reimburse the City of Westminster for what was paid in 1905 or 1906. Then again, of course, more commissioners could be appointed. In any event honourable senators, I should like to see some consideration by the Government given to that suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You canont find any provision in the bill for doing that, can you?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No. I should like to see many other provisions in the bill, but my suggestion that the Government reimburse the city is not there.

Honourable senators, I believe that the name of the New Westminster Harbour Commission should be changed to that of the Fraser River Harbour Commission. As a matter of fact, friction has been caused with the other municipalities. One municipality opposite, Surrey, and one of the largest, having a population of 89,000, is complaining bitterly, and the people say that they are all contributing to the harbour commission by way of royalty from foreshore lands and rights. Even if the number on the commission is changed to five members, I am not at all sure that that will be a harmonious arrangement. Be that as it may, I take this opportunity today to plead for a changing of the name, and for the appointment of more commissioners. At the present time there are 11 or 12 municipalities interested in representation on the harbour commission.

There are many other questions I could raise when this bill goes to committee, but I may not be here to ask them. I expect to leave here on Friday, and shall probably be busily engaged in regard to a salmon commission meeting in New Westminster at the time the committee will be in session.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I would appreciate a delay, to give me an opportunity to obtain more facts and figures, and to discuss other matters that I have in mind.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, on reflection, I think I should take a few minutes to state some objections, and I will then withdraw my suggestion to adjourn the debate, so that the bill can be referred to the committee.

Briefly, speaking particularly from the point of view of the City of Oshawa, I have three objections. The first is that so far as I know there was no notification given that this bill would be coming up for discussion. This matter was discussed in committee, and I think it is a matter which should again be drawn to the attention of the civil servants responsible, that they have a duty to notify the people concerned. Mayors, city clerks and other members of municipalities cannot be expected, by reading the newspapers or by other means, to become aware that such things are happening.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I should tell the honourable senator that I will again make an inquiry. I was assured, as I told him earlier, that this had been done. However, I will let him know.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Of course, I accept the word of the honourable leader. The letter may have been received by now. However, my point is that so far as my information is concerned, it was not sent out before this bill was printed and placed on the Order Paper. In my view, that is the time when the municipality which made representations before the committee should have been notified.

My second point arises out of the first, that the two suggestions for the improvement of the bill have not been accepted, and they have been given no explanation. Again, this seems to me to be one of those departmental blind spots, attributable to what one might call the "bureaucratic mind." It would seem reasonable to me that someone from the department should say to the mayor or the city solicitor of Oshawa who made representations, that, "For various reasons, we are not able to meet your objections. Will you come up and let us tell you why?" I know that has not been done in this case; if it had been done, I might not be on my feet now. The mayor and the city solicitor are very reasonable people and they might have said, "Well, we are not going to get this, but we have had an explanation, and do not now feel that we are banging our heads against a brick wall." I do not think any elected official of any municipality should be put in that position, particularly when this matter was raised by Senator Roebuck, and also by the acting chairman of the committee, who is now the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly), who took great pains to deal with the subject. Is it the bureaucratic mind, or what is it, which makes people act in this way?

Honourable senators, I want to stress what I am saying, because if it is pressed hard enough, perhaps it will get through to certain people that there should be some degree of reciprocity even in the relationship between the great federal Government and a small municipality.

The third objection is substantive, but I do not suggest that it is of the greatest importance. Oshawa asks two things. The first is that they be given access to the books of the harbour commission. The City Council have the right under the act now, and in effect that is being taken away from them, and they do not know why. This bill says that the department only has access to the books. Some of the assets of the municipality are being administered by this harbour commission, and the department has not seen fit to meet their apparently reasonable request that they be allowed to look at the books and the record of the administration of their own assets. Again, it is inconceivable to me that an explanation of this has not been given. Perhaps there is a good explanation, but I know the officials of the City of Oshawa are not aware of it, if such exists.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does the honourable senator know whether the assets of the City of Oshawa, to which he refers, have in fact been transferred to the harbour commission, or whether they are leased to them?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: My recollection is that they have not been transferred to the commission. I am not positive on that point; I am trying to recall the evidence. I would say that the assets have not been transferred. At the moment, I believe the harbour commission is administering certain assets of the city. I do not say that those assets are of tremendous value, nor do I take the position that Oshawa should be excluded from the bill. Oshawa agrees that it is not in the same category as Toronto, Hamilton or Winnipeg, for many reasons, and it is not asking to be excluded; but it is asking for consideration to be given to its suggestions and, if they cannot be met, that at least it be told when the matter is going to come before Parliament and, if possible, it be given an explanation as to why apparently its position is wrong in this matter. Oshawa also asks that the agreement of the city council be obtained before its harbour is brought under this act.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask a question of the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Leonard). Would it be possible to give us an assurance that all of the 300 municipalities should be sent a copy of this bill, as well as notice of its consideration by the committee, and that a sufficient time be given for them to consider their position? Municipalities are not like an individual; they consist of a number of individuals, and a little time is required for them to decide what position they are going to take. If that were done, they could make their representations to the committee when it meets.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I make one further explanation?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I should like an answer to my question first.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps honourable Senator Roebuck would not mind if I replied to his question. Frankly, I do not know whether it is possible to send notices to each of the 300 municipalities. It may very well be, and perhaps it is desirable, and desirable immediately, before the committee sits. However, I give him the assurance that I will make this inquiry of the minister forthwith; I will pass it on to the minister and have him deal with the officials of the department on the point. I will tell him the views of the honourable senator who has raised the question, that these notices should in fact be sent and a copy of the bill as well.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Just to make sure I have properly stated the position in regard to Oshawa, I would add that a notice was sent to the harbour commission, but it was not the harbour commission that made representations.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: May I remind honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Leonard speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, I will take only a minute in closing the debate.

First of all, may I thank those who have spoken for their suggestions. As far as I am concerned, I propose to see that all these suggestions are taken up with the officials of the Department of Transport. I personally will see the departmental officials prior to the committee meeting, and in the light of what has been discussed here I will convey the suggestions as fully as possible to them, so that they will be prepared with any information that can be obtained.

I would also like to make it clear that it is my information that these notices were sent. I have the letter here; and I was particularly anxious to make sure the notices had been sent to the commissions and to the municipalities affected. The information I received in the form of a letter several days ago was that early in January the branch wrote each of the harbour commissions and each of the municipalities affected, outlining the proposed changes in the legislation. Apparently there has been a slip, but that was my information.

Honourable senators, I think that is all I need say at this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ACT

BILL TO CHANGE NAME—CONCURRENCE BY COMMONS IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they have agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-2, respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, without any amendment.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 19, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Park Steamship Company Limited, for the year ended December 31, 1963, certified by the Auditor General, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 24, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, first I pay my respects to His Honour the Speaker. I join with other honourable senators in extending a warm welcome to the new senators recently appointed. I am sure that during the years they will spend here they will make many warm friendships, and each in his own way will make a valuable contribution not only to the Senate but for the welfare of Canada.

I offer my congratulations to the mover (Hon. Mr. Cook) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Denis) of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. As was to be expected, both performed their duties in a most capable manner; their subject matter was good, and their delivery excellent.

While the former Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has expressed the wish that this debate would be closed so far as he was concerned, I could not let this opportunity pass without saying a few words about one of the oldest and best friends I have had in Parliament since first coming here in 1940. I wish to associate myself with all the gracious tributes that have been paid to Senator Ross Macdonald. I have always remembered how, during his five-year term as Speaker of the House of Commons, his friendly attitude, his dignity and his impartial manner endeared him to all members of Parliament. I do not need to recall to honourable senators his record in the Senate of Canada. The reference by Senator Brooks recalled to my mind with much pleasure the association of veterans in the House of Commons, of which Senator Macdonald was chairman. I am sure Senator Brooks and Senator Macdonald would remember with much pride and pleasure some of the old soldiers' dinners over which Senator Macdonald presided, and the good times we had before and after those gatherings. To my good friend, I wish you the very best of everything for the future.

To Senator Connolly, the Leader of the Government, my congratulations on your appointment to the Cabinet and as Government Leader. We all know your qualifications, and already you have demonstrated in various ways your capabilities. Like your predecessor, you are very friendly and good natured. I wish you the best for the future; and, in addition, I hope you will have the luck of the Irish.

To my Leader, I offer my congratulations on his splendid speech in this debate. We on this side of the house feel we are very fortunate in having as our Leader, the honourable Senator, Colonel Brooks, who is well trained and experienced in parliamentary ways.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. White: I wish to express my appreciation and thanks to the Prime Minister for my appointment to Her Majesty's Privy Council in Canada. I consider it a great honour and, coming as it did just before Christmas, I can assure you it was a very nice Christmas present.

Briefly this afternoon I wish to direct my remarks to the Estate Tax Act, and to make certain suggestions and recommendations which I hope will meet with your approval —suggestions that, at least in my opinion, will improve the operation of this act and make it more just in its application, principally as to widows and children.

Honourable senators will have noticed in reading the budget there are certain adjustments and amendments to be made in this act, and I commend the Government for these moves; but, in my opinion, I do not think they go nearly far enough.

The Estate Tax Act, passed in 1958, replaced the former Dominion Succession Duty Act, which was introduced as a war measure in 1941. When the new act was introduced it met with considerable opposition in this chamber, and when the measure was in committee many senators made valuable and proper suggestions, and proposed amendments, all of which were refused.

This act by its very name, the Estate Tax Act, imposes a tax on the estate and not on the individual successor. Under the old act, and under the act we have in the Province of Ontario the rate of duty depends on the degree of relationship of the beneficiary to the deceased. This provision, as far as I am concerned, always appeared very reasonable and just, but under the Estate Tax Act the estate is taxed at the same rate without regard to the degree of relationship.

It seems to me today, when we hear so much talk about our freedoms being preserved, we all pay great lip service to private enterprise, yet under this act and under the Income Tax Act, we who practise law realize how much the individual in Canada today is controlled by the state. Not only has the individual a heavy income tax to pay, but in many cases he must pay tax on gifts to his family. When he dies his estate is subject, at least in Ontario, to both provincial succession duty and federal estate tax.

I would point out an interesting matter regarding gifts made by a deceased. Under the Income Tax Act a man can give away any number of one thousand dollar gifts in the course of a year without paying gift tax, but if these have been given within three years of his death the amount of such gifts is added to the value of the estate and duty is paid on them. This is one more example of how the individual is controlled by the state in so far as his estate is concerned. It is true that an individual could give his entire fortune to charity and there would be no tax payable, but if he attempts to give part of his estate or fortune to those who are closest and dearest to him, he is penalized by gift tax and succession duty.

Succession duty has been described as a tax that "robs the dead" and as "legalized robbery." While this sort of taxation, at least in Ontario, has been in effect since before 1900, there is certainly no justification for it, and members of the legal profession who have considerable experience in administering estates know only too well and appreciate fully how heavy succession duties along with income tax can bear on an estate.

The press, during recent months, has carried particulars of many briefs presented to the Royal Commission on Taxation, in which reference has been made to the Estate Tax Act. The Toronto Globe and Mail some time ago carried a very interesting editorial called "Hounding the Grave," and I would like to read very briefly from it:

> Most taxes are levied on what is earned or consumed. Succession duties are levied simply because a person, having made his contribution in these other respects, dies. Ottawa collects about $85 million in this way each year, Ontario about $45 million. Aside from the consideration of principle, there is a real question whether, in the long run, more is being lost than is being gained.
>
> In some cases—few in number but outstanding—this kind of taxation has actually contributed to driving persons out of the country to less grasping lands. They have taken initiative and a measure of prosperity with them.
>
> Twelve years ago this newspaper dealt with the principle of succession duties in these words:
>
> "Hounding the grave is not taxation. It is simply grasping at the fruits of individual enterprise and thrift for the benefit of governing bodies which save nothing . . . Whether succession duties are collected to provide spending money or to reduce the finances of citizens nearer to a common level, they tend to destroy individual initiative and responsibility."
>
> The point still holds. It is doubtful if such taxes have produced revenue nearly sufficient to compensate for the initiative —and resulting other revenues—they have destroyed. The succession duty was never a soundly based tax. It has been a social tax. It may have satisfied the politicians' desire to show that they were not afraid to soak the rich. Now other taxes are preventing people from becoming rich. And when they die, it is often necessary to sell the businesses they have built in order to pay taxes on the estates.

Nearly all newspapers in Ontario have published editorials on the briefs submitted to the Royal Commission on Taxation. I do not wish to read the editorials, but I shall quote the various headings:

> Group urges Death Duty Tax Changes
> Want Estate Tax Exemption Increased
> Amazing Authority

That refers to authority under the Estate Tax Act.

> Wants Death Duty Reform
> It's Unfair to Widows
> Estate Tax Act Section Said Completely Unjust
> Taxation Commission Faces Woman's Ire
> Free Half Estate From Death Duties
> Ask 5 Years to Pay Death Duties

I am sure many honourable senators have read these and other editorials relating to this most important subject.

It seems to me that the interest displayed in the press indicates the many injustices and penalties in this act which should be carefully reviewed. When the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) spoke during the first few days of the session he paid a very fine tribute to the work that had been done in the past by the special committees set up by the Senate to investigate certain acts. I would ask the Leader of the Government to consider setting up a special committee of the Senate to review the Estate Tax Act and to make recommendations to the Government with respect to modifying and correcting many of the abuses and injustices that now exist under this act.

As I mentioned before, the Estate Tax Act changed the method of applying the tax. Under the old act, and in Ontario, the degree of relationship is recognized, and it is evidenced by the various degrees by which the tax is levied. In Ontario at the present time there is no tax up to $50,000 if the estate goes to preferred beneficiaries such as a wife, husband, child, etc. There is no tax on an estate up to $20,000 going to collaterals such as a brother, sister, nephew and niece. An estate up to $5,000 going to strangers is not taxed. But, under the Estate Tax Act every one is taxed at the same rate.

The point I wish to emphasize, honourable senators, is that under both the Ontario Act and the former Dominion Succession Duty Act there is a recognition of the degree of relationship in setting the rate of tax, and I, for one, could never quite understand the reasoning that the same percentage of taxation should apply to every degree of relationship and to total strangers.

Surely no one would attempt to argue that a wife, husband, child or parent does not have the right to expect a lower rate of taxation than a total stranger, yet a total stranger, nephew or niece, who is a beneficiary, is taxed at the same rate as is the wife or child of the deceased.

Since the act was passed an amendment has been provided for a gift to the wife once in a lifetime of an interest up to $10,000 in the dwelling house, the farm, and so on. This was certainly a start in the right direction, but when you consider the enormous increase in the value of realty, the dwelling house, the farm property or the summer cottage property, one realizes that a gift to the wife up to the value of $10,000 is certainly not large, and does not by any means approach half the value of the property. When one considers the greatly increased value of realty today, and the value of the contents of a home, a large part of the exemption of $60,000, which is given in the case where a deceased leaves a widow, is taken up. I reside in the country, and even in the smallest villages and at the most remote lakes, summer cottage prices are sky high where real estate is concerned. One may say at first glance that the exemption of $60,000 in an estate where the deceased leaves a widow is fair and reasonable; but as I have just pointed out, at least half or more of that amount could easily have been taken up by the value of the family dwelling house and its contents.

The practice of assessing all the furniture to the husband seems to be most unfair. I think everyone would agree that the furniture and furnishings of the family home should go to the widow tax free.

Practically every brief presented to the Royal Commission on Taxation had much to say regarding the taxation of pensions and annuities to widows. The pension to the widow is valued by a method of capitalizing the value. The age of the widow and her life expectancy determine the value of the pension for duty taxation purposes. The value of the pension as capitalized is brought into the estate as an asset, thereby greatly increasing the value of the estate and, if it is taxable, greatly increasing the amount of tax.

Not only has the widow to pay duty on the capitalized amount of the pension, but in respect to the yearly pension, such pension is also subject to income tax. Here we have the unique situation: there is capitalized in the value of the pension the element of tax that is charged against that in each year in which the widow survives and receives a pension. Certainly, if there are other assets in an estate, it does not take a very large pension, especially if the widow is young and has a reasonable life expectancy, to capitalize the pension into a very large sum of money.

Both federal and provincial governments have encouraged the setting up of pensions, so that even the individual who is self-employed can have a pension plan for himself. Once the pension is capitalized the widow is liable for the tax, and it makes no difference how long the widow may survive, the estate is liable for the duty on the capitalized value. This whole question of pensions and the method used to capitalize same would be a most interesting subject for any committee to study.

There is also the most important matter of small, family-owned businesses. One who practises law in the country, as I do, has much to do with such small family businesses. The desirability of encouraging small businesses and family-owned businesses is a favourite topic of all government officials, yet in many cases small family businesses are frequently forced by succession duties onto the auction block. Who buys them? Generally it is some big corporation, which sometimes is foreign owned and controlled. These family businesses are, in many Canadian communities, the backbone of the economy. The individual man who had the ambition, the incentive, to work and build up a business for himself and his family, is a real asset to the community. When he dies, why destroy or break up that family business? Why not simply allow a proper and sufficient time for payment of duty, without the estate being forced to liquidate the family business at a sacrifice price?

No allowance is made by way of exemption, in arriving at the value of the estate for taxation purposes, for executors' fees and legal fees. Court or probate fees and funeral expenses are the only allowances. Not only do the beneficiaries pay duty on the amount of executors' fees, legal fees and disbursements, they pay duty on moneys never received; but the executors and solicitors who receive these fees pay income tax on the amounts so received.

If the department recognizes funeral expenses and probate court fees, is it unreasonable to say that the department should also recognize executors' fees, legal fees and all other disbursements, before computing the value of the estate for duty purposes?

To summarize a few of the suggestions I have outlined, and which might be examined by a Senate committee to review the Estates Tax Act, I put forward the following points.

(1) That the federal Government vacate the field in favour of the provinces.

(2) That some relief be granted from the severe combined effect of income tax and estate tax on death benefits such as pensions, annuities and lump sum payments and on other forms of property passing to surviving dependents.

(3) That instalment payments of tax on assets received by instalment should be permitted.

(4) That some optional alternative valuation date be provided other than the date of death, and that fair market value of the amount received on sale be the sole criterion of value.

(5) That interest on overpayment be allowed at the same rate as charged by the department.

(6) That executors' fees, legal fees and disbursements and all other administration charges be allowed as debts against the estate before computing the value of the estate for tax purposes.

(7) That gifts made by the deceased within three years of his death, and as such not subject to income tax, be not added to value of the estate for taxation purposes.

(8) That a reasonable time, of several years, be allowed to pay the tax, with interest, on small family businesses.

(9) That the furniture in the family home be regarded as the property of the wife.

(10) That the present provision to give the wife a gift of $10,000 in the family home or farm be increased to at least $20,000.

(11) That basic exemption for preferred beneficiaries be $100,000.

(12) That there be a graduated scale of exemptions for other beneficiaries and strangers, the graduation being according to the degree of relationship.

(13) That there be an extension of time, from six months to 12 months, for the payment of duty.

Honourable senators, these are a few of the many points that could be considered in a review of this act. I hope the Leader of the Government will give consideration to my suggestion to set up such a committee.

Honourable senators, before sitting down I would like to take a few minutes to make reference to the eight large paintings hanging on the walls of this chamber. Recently, an honourable senator spoke of "these gloomy, dull paintings" and suggested they be removed. On at least one other occasion I have heard senators in this chamber refer to these paintings as dull and gloomy and suggest that they be removed.

I, for one, regret any reference to these paintings as dull or gloomy, or any request that they be removed. It may well be that they mean and convey nothing to some honourable senators.

The first painting on the right, as you enter this chamber, records the landing of the First Canadian Division at St. Nazaire, France, in February 1915. In the left front foreground of that painting you can see the famous kiltie band of the Royal Canadian Highlanders playing the troops ashore. I would remind any honourable senators who wish these "dull, gloomy" pictures removed, that if it had not been for the part played by the Canadian boys depicted in this painting, and the part played by hundreds of thousands of other young Canadian soldiers in World Wars I and II and in Korea, honourable senators might not be sitting in this gracious and safe Senate chamber and enjoying the right to speak freely.

The second painting refers to the famous Cloth Hall at Ypres. Around the ruins of these ancient buildings you see the debris of war. One realizes the utter senselessness of war which destroys such historic buildings.

In the third painting you see a record of the sad return of peasants to their ruined and wrecked homes. Every soldier who served in France has witnessed this scene many times. Looking at this painting you realize the tragedy of war as it affects the old and the very young—old men and women; very young mothers with innocent children—all driven from their homes, now struggling back, and hauling by hand over war-wrecked roads a few of their most precious and cherished home possessions. One has to see what a wrecked home, farm or countryside looks like to realize and appreciate the almost hopeless task in returning to rebuild same. In this painting one sees the wrecked buildings, the naked and twisted trees, the sign on the post giving the name of the village, which reads "This is Albion, Saint Nazaire." It illustrates, to me, how totally complete war destruction can be.

The fourth painting is one recognized by every soldier who served overseas—a Y.M.C.A. canteen at a London station. I am told that it is Waterloo station. The scene is one just before dawn. Canadians welcomed the hospitality of the Y.M.C.A. In this painting you see soldiers with leave before them—others ready to return to the Front. A Canadian Black Watch private is giving his sergeant a light. This painting recalls to any soldier who served in France the great work rendered by the Y.M.C.A., the Salvation Army, and the various church organizations. Every soldier has retained a warm feeling of thanks and gratitude in his heart to these organizations for the comforts they supplied, such as hot coffee, cigarettes, biscuits, etc.

The first painting on the west wall is The Watch on the Rhine. This is in the final phase of the war. A single British howitzer pokes its nose across the Rhine, while one solitary British sentry stands with his back to the view.

The next painting is a bombed-out church at Arras; but it could be one of dozens remembered by all soldiers; it could be the famous church in the town of Albert on the Somme in 1916. The church was almost destroyed by German gunfire. On the shattered steeple of this church was erected a large statue of the Virgin Mary. As a result of gunfire, this statue hung at a right angle over the main road. This church with the leaning statue was a landmark on the Somme. The painting of Cloth Hall shows that there is nothing sacred in war—churches, historic buildings, monuments, priceless works of art, tapestries, treasures that can never be replaced, all are sacrificed and ruthlessly destroyed.

The next painting illustrates a mobile veterinary unit in France. You are reminded that cavalry was actually used in World War I. This scene is from the Cambrai Front.

The last painting relates to the Canadian Railway Construction Unit in France. It would be difficult for a civilian engineer to realize the problems that beset the army railwaymen—the difficulty of building a railway through a sea of mud and water.

Honourable senators, this is a short sketch of the eight paintings. All refer in some way to the part Canadian boys played in World War I. These paintings can be a constant reminder of what the people of Canada owe to the Canadian soldiers of World Wars I and II and the Korean war.

These paintings can ever remind us of the terrible price of war—the price being the lives of young Canadians, and those who came home and paid with tortured, twisted and wrecked bodies for the rest of their lives. The paintings ever remind us of the need to strive for peace. They remind old soldiers of the bonds that exist between them, bonds forged in the midst of death and disaster.

It is impossible to put into words how soldiers feel towards each other. You only knew that nothing mattered except that your comrades were beside you when the going was tough. No consideration or thought was given to the colour of your skin, to your race, your creed, occupation, political faith, what school you attended, or whether you attended any school. None of these trivial matters, which divide us in peacetime, mattered in the slightest degree. You knew that each could depend on the other. Each knew that when the whistle blew his friends would be beside him.

Honourable senators, the boys of whom I am speaking were all Canadians. They were not French-Canadians, Irish-Canadians, Polish-Canadians or any other hyphenated Canadian; they were Canadian boys. They were not fighting in France to protect French Canada or English Canada, but simply Canada. If the Allies did not win the war it would not have made such difference whether or not you were bilingual, or whether you had ever heard or understood the word "biculturalism;" for, if the Allies had not won the war we would all have had to learn a new language, and it would have been neither French nor English.

How unfortunate it is that in 1964 we cannot have in this Canada of ours more of the faith, the comradeship, the trust, the understanding, and something of the invisible bonds of steel that bind soldiers together. If only we had, and exercised, some of these soldierly qualities, what a different country Canada would be.

Honourable senators, I ask your pardon for speaking so long, but I did want to say something about these paintings before some movement is under way to have them removed. I, for one, hope these paintings will remain in their present position until such time as the galleries are constructed.

Hon. Romuald Bourque: Honourable senators, as I am to speak on bilingualism and biculturalism, I will speak to you for three minutes in French, and then I will continue my speech in English.

(Translation):

This is my first speech in this house. At the outset I wish to say that I fully and entirely endorse the recent remarks which Senator Vaillancourt made in this house with regard to Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. I have the greatest admiration for our Queen, and I hope that her visit to Canada in the near future will not only be pleasant but highly and entirely successful.

To His Excellency General Vanier and his charming wife, I express my best wishes. May they be happy and remain in good health.

To you, Mr. Speaker, I offer my congratulations for the well-deserved honour conferred upon you when you were appointed Speaker of this distinguished house.

To the Right Honourable Prime Minister, I wish to express my sincere appreciation for having appointed me a member of this distinguished assembly.

As to Senator Macdonald (Brantford), I want to tell him how sorry I was when he found that he had to resign his position as government leader in the Senate, because of ill-health.

To Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), my sincere congratulations on his elevation to the important position of Leader of the Senate, which he will certainly enhance.

To Senator Brooks, Leader of the Opposition, I tender my congratulations for the dignified and competent manner in which he fulfils his duties.

As to Senator George White, I congratulate him for the honour recently conferred upon him by his appointment to the Privy Council of Canada.

I wish also to congratulate the mover (Hon. Mr. Cook) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Denis) of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne who discharged so well the responsibilities that had been entrusted to them.

Honourable senators, I am convinced that we were all happy to learn that Her Majesty the Queen gave birth to another son. We wish Her Majesty and her son a successful, happy and long life.

Having said that, honourable senators, I intend now to speak to you about bilingualism and biculturalism; and in order to do justice to this matter, I will continue this speech in English.

(Text):

Honourable senators, among the matters which will come before this chamber for discussion, and upon which we will be expected to give leadership to Canada, none is likely to be more important to the future of our country than the question of the relations between our two founding ethnic groups, English and French Canadians. Unfortunately, this important subject which offers so much of positive value to our country, has become over the years a topic of recrimination. We have erected a barrier instead of a bridge between our two founding groups, and have caused a situation whereby the entire future of our country is imperilled.

In the past, I am sure, there have been many Canadians who have dismissed this question of language and culture as a minor one, as being of no importance to the task of nation-building. They were far too busy creating new homes in the wilderness, founding new industries, constructing new cities and opening up an entirely new world to civilization; too busy to be bothered about such subjects as the teaching of French in village schools or even the use of the French language in the Canadian civil service.

It is understandable that such problems were of little or no interest to the professional engineers, businessmen, town planners and the working people in those provinces where the great majority were English-speaking. At the same time, there were a great many Canadians to whom these problems were of supreme importance—more important, perhaps, than the building of a new city on the fringe of the Arctic or the discovery of a new oil field in the Province of Alberta. New cities and oil fields may be important, but in the future of a country the individual and personal relations between its people, the understanding of one group for another, and even more the eagerness to promote understanding between groups, may be more important than all the oil wells and all the cities put together. For, after all, a country's greatest resource is its people, and anything which takes away from that resource creates national weakness and hinders national development.

The problem we face in Canada today is not a new one. It goes back to the earliest days of our country, and is one which has been artificially stimulated off and on at various periods in our history. If the modern science of communications had not compelled us to draw closer together, perhaps we could have gone on without ever needing to understand each other or become true friends; we could have lived with our prejudices because we would never have come in serious contact.

But modern communications have changed all that. Radio, television, the metropolitan press, even the spread of the arts, drama, music and literature, all served to draw us closer together, and then our misunderstandings pushed us farther apart. Finally, we reached a point where we could no longer delay taking a stand on this whole question of French-English relations, and the positions each of our major groups would occupy in our growing country. It was no longer possible for us to push into the background the basic fact of Canadian life—our unique, puzzling and potentially vital duality.

I am not concerned today, and I do not think we in this chamber should be concerned, with the long series of historical errors or misunderstandings which have combined to create the problem as it now exists. This is not a time for foolish recriminations; this is not a time for assessing the blame. Rather it is a time for looking at the situation and then capitalizing on it, turning to positive advantage what may have appeared to be a disadvantage.

No intelligent person would suggest that a man is worse off knowing two languages than knowing only one. No reasonable person would suggest that an individual is the poorer for having been exposed to two great cultures instead of one. The Canadian who enjoys as his rightful heritage the advantages of French and English cultures and the French and English tongues is much richer than his fellow North Americans who recognize only one or the other. That, indeed, is Canada's strength. It is what makes us different from other countries in this hemisphere, that gives us our individual character, that makes it possible for us to say that we are not simply Americans or North Americans, but Canadians, a part of the old world and the new, favoured by two cultures, French and English.

That is our potential, but we are in great danger of losing it because of a foolish family quarrel. For more than twenty years I have spoken in Parliament and on the platform throughout Canada in support of one cause —understanding. I have tried in my small way to persuade Canadians of whatever racial or religious background to forget historic prejudices and seek the friendship and understanding of other groups in the community. I may have accomplished very little, though letters and individual comments by a great many people reward me by suggesting that what I have preached has done some good. What it has done, however, is convince me that if dozens or hundreds or perhaps a few thousand people set out in support of the same cause, we could very quickly give to this country a true sense of unity and a feeling of brotherhood.

There are, of course, as we all know, Canadians who have taken the opposite course and who are intent upon driving a wedge of separatism between our two peoples. In Quebec Province this separatist movement is well organized and publicly recognized. In some of the other provinces, I am afraid, separatism exists without public recognition or any apparent organization. Nevertheless, it works effectively.

Brushing aside for a moment those who attach themselves to any movement or cause solely for the purpose of creating discord and disorder—the bombers, for instance, who have sought to impose terror upon the citizens of Montreal—dismissing those fanatics as subjects only for police or perhaps medical action, let us give to the separatists of both groups the respect that is due men and women of sincerity. Let us attempt to answer their agitation, not with abuse or violence but with reason.

These are not wicked people, just because they believe in a Quebec libre or an English Ontario. They are not criminals or political mountebanks. I for one give them credit for being sincere, honest Canadians who think that this country would be better off—or, at least, that they would be better off—if it were divided in two.

The leaders of these groups, and the people they have persuaded to follow them, honestly believe that there is a brighter future ahead for a Republic of Quebec, or a one-Queen, one-language, one-flag confederation, than there is for a bilingual, bicultural Canada built upon the best from the two great ethnic groups.

That is their belief, and that is the message they are attempting to sell to the people. In Quebec the separatists say that the French-Canadian will only enjoy the good things of life if he forms a unilingual, French-Canadian republic, entirely independent of the rest of Canada and becomes a one hundred per cent master in his own house. This is to be the land that was envisioned by Jacques Cartier, Maisonneuve, and Champlain, that drew French explorers, fur traders, missionaries and priests across the continent to the foothills of the Rockies. The descendants of these bold adventurers of the past are to be penned up within the borders of a single province, to form a little French-governed island on a continent of more than two hundred million souls.

What a sad ending for the great French dream.

The English-speaking separatist, on the other hand, looks forward to a different but nonetheless tragic fate. Denying the right of the French-Canadian to an equal partnership, and denying the existence of a two-language, two-culture country of Canada, he forces his home land more and more into the orbit of the United States of America, until gradually borders, along with customs, disappear and Canada is submerged, having yielded finally to the ultimate destiny of the English-speaking republic.

Canada is surely too great and too precious a thing for that.

Between these two extremes lie the great majority of Canadians, several million of them belonging neither to the French nor the English ethnic group. For them, Canada has some special charm, some special reason for existence. They look upon it as their land from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island, from the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes to the Arctic seas. They believe it is something unique in the world, something to be loved and cherished, and they would not wish it to flounder on the rocks of cultural or linguistic separatism just to satisfy the whim of one of the founding groups.

Separatism, if it were accomplished, would delay if not halt forever Canada's independent industrial development. For the people of Quebec, many of whom have only in recent years reached a stage of economic independence, it would mean a drastic lowering in the standard of living. Jobs would be fewer; pay would be lower. The struggle to live would be intensified and far less rewarding.

At the same time, if the rest of Canada were to continue to prosper, it would have to alter its sights and concentrate upon closer union with the United States. Stripped of the vast resources, and the important market of Quebec Province, it would find it more difficult than ever to resist the blandishments of the republic to the south. And once a breakup began, how long would it be before other sections of the country began slipping away—not for ethnic reasons perhaps, but because of distance or economic distress? British Columbia might well start looking down the coast to booming California; the Atlantic provinces might resume their century-old flirtation with the "Boston States."

These are the negative arguments—what would happen if separatism succeeds. More important to us all are the positive pleas: what can we accomplish as a united country, if we accept, develop and encourage the values to be found in our bicultural and bilingual inheritance? During the past century, we have talked about this a lot, but we have done precious little to put this inheritance to work.

Almost everything in the world today is run on a more international basis than ever before. Jet air transportation, telstar communications, simultaneous publication of books, magazines and newspapers in different countries around the globe, have ended forever the possibility of national isolation. European countries which spent centuries at each other's throats are joined in a common market. The United States which spent its first hundred years protecting itself against foreign competition is now out in the world market place, building American factories and office buildings, establishing American customs and exporting its people to countries on every continent. The American businessman today is more concerned about how many languages he must speak than about the machinery he buys. All trade is becoming world trade and business people must learn to think, to act and to speak internationally.

Into this changing world a bilingual, bicultural Canada moves with a great natural advantage. It is linked at the outset with the two major cultures in the western world—English and French. It has a foot in each door, so to speak. And at the same time, it has the feeling, the tempo and the business sense of North America.

This is the foundation upon which we should be building. This is our strength, and with it we should be flexing our muscles, preparing with team work to take an even greater part in shaping world events and making an even greater contribution to world peace and world understanding.

In Canada, there is a place for men and women of good will of every race and creed. Our natural resources, still untapped, offer to millions of people a bounteous future. Our history has been one of hard work, of daring and skill against long odds. We have maintained ourselves as a free and independent country when many thought we must succumb to the powerful pull of the United States. We have accepted and spread across this continent the culture of our forefathers from the United Kingdom and from France. We have added to this blend the cultures of many other lands to create something that is truly Canadian.

In three years' time we shall be celebrating our country's hundredth anniversary. Before that birthday party is held, all of us who believe in the Canada that our forefathers founded and who believe, too, that its future depends upon a union of minds and hearts of our people, should take the trail and speak up positively for a united Canada. It is not enough to leave the platforms and the press to those who preach the gospel of separatism. Those who believe in a united Canada have been silent long enough. It is time to enter the fray, not in a spirit of bitterness or reproach, but with outspoken, positive appeals for the Canada which, if we join forces together, may become one of the great and influential nations of the world.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce numbered 61 to 111, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, March 17.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, moved the adoption of the reports.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I do not wish to speak at great length on the motion. All I wish to say is that I know nothing about the cases that have been heard by the Commissioner. We have received the reports which contain the names of the parties, their addresses and the recommendation of the Commissioner, but we are not made familiar with the circumstances of the cases. We know nothing. We are asked to approve these reports with blindfolded eyes. We know nothing, and the work that has been done has not been done by a judge. It has been done by a gentleman, a lawyer, who is employed by the Divorce Committee to do part of that committee's work. His position is abnormal.

I understand that there is a resolution before the other house to regularize that condition. The bill that passed the other house at the end of the last session was not passed by the Senate for the very good reason that honourable senators did not have copies of it when it was presented to this house. We received copies of the bill two days after the prorogation of the session.

As we have been reminded, we were unjustly and unfairly criticized by the leader and by two members of one of the political groups in the other house for not passing that legislation.

Something has to be done. The House of Commons has rid itself of the divorce matter, and it has fallen on our shoulders. With great ingenuity and skill, a scheme was devised on the pretense of improving conditions, but at the present time our own position is ridiculous. What are we doing now except accomplishing the work of a rubber stamp?

If I ask any one of my honourable colleagues what happened in such-and-such a case, who is able to answer me? Did the members of the Divorce Committee read the evidence in each case? Perhaps they did, but we have no opportunity of informing ourselves about it. If we go to any member of the Divorce Committee and ask, "Well, what happened in the case of John Doe and his wife?", we will make a perfect nuisance of ourselves. Yet, we are duty bound to ask for information either from the Commissioner, who would not have the time to answer us, or the members of the Divorce Committee, who would find it a perfect nuisance. I have great respect for the chairman and the members of the Standing Committee on Divorce, and I would not enjoy having to intrude and disturb them in their work by going to their offices and asking, "Will you please give me the information that I should have, and that I have not received from the Divorce Commissioner concerning the cases that are to be brought before the chamber?"

My honourable friend the chairman (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) does the best he can under the circumstances. I know that he is willing to supply us with that information, but none of us should be put in the position of having to go to his office and ask him what happened in a certain case.

To put it bluntly, honourable senators, we do not know what has been happening at all. Some members of the Divorce Committee may know, but we do not, and yet we are asked to approve these resolutions. If the majority of us who are not members of the Divorce Committee do not approve these resolutions, then no divorce will be granted.

The Commissioner, who is now the man Friday of the Divorce Committee—and I say that with all deference and due respect—is not by law qualified as a judge, and yet he expects to have the advantages of a judge. He sits over in the West Block and listens to the cases. His work, I am sure, is painstakingly done. It is not very interesting work. He hears always the same story, although there may be some slight variance as between some cases. He does that work for the committee. If the members of the committee receive the evidence and read it, then they must do the same work as they would have done if there had been no commissioner. I hope honourable senators understand me. I notice that some members of the committee are nodding.

I do not doubt that they know what happens in each case, but in our attempt to follow this system we are making them do, by reading, the same work that the Commissioner has to do in listening to the evidence in his department in the West Block. The work is, therefore, being done twice. The work is done by that part of the committee which is presided over by the Commissioner, and then it is done a second time by the members of the committee. They have done it—well, I do not know whether they have done it, but I give them the benefit of the doubt.

I bring the matter to your attention because something has been said about the religious importance of having a commissioner rather than a judge hearing the evidence. That was said in the Senate the other day, and I do not see what argument can be made in defence of the argument that a particular religion is not offended when the evidence is heard by a gentleman who is called a commissioner. What difference does that make to any religion, or to the church to which I belong? We do not live in times when people are splitting hairs to that extent. I have great respect for the teachings of the church, and though I do not do as much as I would like to do, I do my best to abide by them, but I cannot understand why a church would censure the Senate, or the Parliament of Canada, for appointing the man Friday of the Senate committee a full judge, when he has the advantages of that position, rather than appointing him a commissioner. That is the point.

When I spoke about this matter to some members of the Divorce Committee, they told me that it was the opinion of a certain group of theologians that it was better to have a commissioner rather than a judge to listen to the evidence in divorce cases. That reminds me of something I said in the House of Commons when the late Tommy Church, who was a great friend of mine, spoke of the late King as the Defender of the Faith. I told him that he should remember that if the King of England had that title, then it was given to Henry VIII by the Pope, because Henry VIII at the time was a good Catholic. That is in Hansard.

I have never spoken of religious or racial difficulties in the House of Commons, any more than I have in the Senate. I think it is much better to dispense with that. But if I am given the argument that it is in the defence of religion that we have the evidence in those cases heard by a commissioner rather than by a judge, then all I can say is that it is beyond me. I cannot understand it, and I do not think that many of you can understand it either. It is only hair-splitting.

If the gentleman who is now the commissioner is worthy of this position, then he should be made a full judge. He should be made a judge of the Exchequer Court, and should operate in the same manner as judges of the Exchequer Court have in the past when they have been loaned by the court to some branches of the Civil Service to fulfil a judicial function.

I know that divorce is a serious problem. I understand that divorces should be granted by authority of the Parliament of Canada in virtue of that section of the British North America Act which is to the effect that marriage and divorce belong exclusively to the Parliament of Canada. I know that. I do not intend to enter into an argument today and repeat what I have said with regard to the jurisdiction of provincial courts with respect to divorce. I know that each divorce is granted by a law of the Parliament of Canada; and, whether it is in the manner that was used before the change was made or in virtue of the new regulations that have been passed, it is valid. There is no question about it. Even if the evidence might be controversial, the divorce granted is valid because the Parliament of Canada has the authority to grant divorce, and it is in virtue of that authority that divorce is granted. It is clear. As to the formalities to follow, are we to continue in that fashion, to have the work of the committee done by somebody else, who is at the present time an official of the Senate, and to see the members of the committee doing again the same work that the Commissioner has done, and without giving us the proper information?

I will go further than that. We have been highly disturbed on account of the creation of the new system. I feel that all the civil servants, all the Senate staff now under the Commissioner, should belong to the Exchequer Court as soon as the Commissioner is made a judge of that Court. I am not the first person to make that suggestion. It was made here by my honourable and distinguished colleague, Senator Aseltine, and it was made in the other house by Mr. Stanley Knowles, who is also highly respected; it was made in the Senate also by our esteemed colleague, Senator Dupuis. It is common sense that it be done in that way, in order that justice be respected with regard to the divorce problem.

Honourable colleagues, you are men and women of experience. You have independence of thought, and you have experience of life and parliamentary affairs. You know well that what I have told you is the strict truth. If I may say so, it is not with an ulterior motive; it is in order to bring some relief to the members of the Divorce Committee and to put an end to an absurd situation which has lasted too long.

Honourable senators, I presume that when these facts are submitted to the qualified and high dignitaries of all the churches, they will agree that they make sense. Everybody preaches respect of the bench. We have done so on occasion, to prove that we have respect for the bench. We would put an end to an abnormal situation and give a breathing spell to the members of the Divorce Committee—without insinuating that they have erred in their decisions. I do not say that. I do not want to be misunderstood: I have said what I have because of my sincere belief that this was a proper occasion.

Nobody in this chamber is authorized to speak on behalf of the church in matters of divorce. Nobody here is authorized to speak for any church and give a definite opinion on the religious aspect of a matter like divorce, or any problem.

We have the experience of lawmaking. We pass laws every day and we pass them with the required decorum, and according to the formalities that are prescribed by the law of the land and the rules of the Senate.

Honourable senators, there are some rules which should be changed. The rules concerning the Divorce Committee should apply only to that committee; and the rules concerning the future judge—if you decide that there should be a real judge and if the Government comes to that conclusion—should be the rules not of the Senate but of the Exchequer Court concerning divorce; and the staff of the divorce division of the Exchequer Court should be under the court and not under the Senate. Those persons who actually belong to the Senate and who are now under the Commissioner should be transferred to the Exchequer Court.

I have said what I have to say as plainly as I can, and I hope that everybody has understood.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have listened to the honourable Senator Pouliot with great interest, and I am glad to note that he has changed his mind considerably since 1956.

He is one of those who, along with about 30 other senators, in 1956 voted down my bill to refer divorces to the Exchequer Court. Therefore, he is just as responsible as the others who voted against the bill, for the situation that now exists.

Honourable senators who were here in 1956 will remember that I introduced a bill to amend the Exchequer Court Act and give that court jurisdiction over divorces from the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland. You will also remember that that debate continued on and off for some two or three months. Then, lo and behold, when it came up for a vote, my honourable friend voted against it; the present Chairman of the Divorce Committee voted against it—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The honourable Senator Hugessen voted against it, and the bill was defeated; and on that account we are in the difficult position in which we find ourselves now.

Honourable senators, I have been thinking recently of bringing in that bill again, but I would not wish to do so unless I were sure of getting the support of my friends like Senator Pouliot and others who opposed me very strongly in 1956.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Speaker and honourable colleagues, may I be permitted to speak?

In the first place may I say I was appointed to the Senate in 1955 and I started to sit in 1956. That was my first session. I was appointed in July. As a newcomer, I did not know as much about the Divorce Committee as I do now after nine years. That makes a great difference.

I believe that we can learn with the years. One can get some more information, and one can change his mind. What surprises me is that my honourable friend Senator Aseltine should reproach me now for what I did then.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why should I not do so?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: He reproaches me now for expressing the same opinion as he expressed nine years ago. He could say that I am too late to accept his view. That would make sense. But if he criticizes me for repeating today what he said nine years ago, and besides that challenges me, well, that is something else. I never thought it would be as cruel as that. Who can blame anyone for showing his good will? Besides that, I have praised him. I have told him that he was my distinguished colleague, and for that he frowns at me and frightens me with his—I will not say "dirty"—unkind look. Therefore, honourable senators, this may end in perfect harmony, and I hope as my honourable friend reflects on what has been said this afternoon by himself and by me, he will see that I carry in my hand—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do you want me to apologize?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Oh, no—I like to hear you speak. I hope that my friend will see that what I carry in my hand is a branch of an olive tree.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I see that my honourable friend Senator Roebuck is on his feet. If he intends to reply, I would like to put one question to him first.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Do you wish to put a question to me?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes. Is this the time to ask it, or would you prefer that I wait until after you have spoken?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Put the question now.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It is a simple question. I understand that about 111 applications for dissolution of marriage have been considered and approved. Have any of these applications as yet been turned down or refused?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No. No case which has been heard has been rejected. However, honourable senators must remember that the solicitors who present these cases have come to learn very carefully what will be approved and what will be rejected, and it is to their credit that they do not bring cases before us that would have to be rejected. Furthermore, the hearings are most carefully dealt with by the Commissioner.

I have very little to say in reply to my friend Senator Pouliot, although I would like to put myself straight with the former Leader of the Opposition, Senator Aseltine.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Former Leader of the Opposition?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You were the Leader of the Opposition when you introduced your bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, I was not the leader.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: All right; never mind. At all events, you introduced two bills.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is true. Senator McMeans and I introduced a bill in 1938, to enlarge the grounds for divorce. The bill was passed by this house, and referred to the other place, where it did not receive second reading. In 1955 I introduced a similar bill in this house. The honourable senator supported me on that bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I did.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: As did Senator Farris and quite a number of senators. In spite of the fact that I put up the best case I could at the time, that measure was also defeated in the Senate. Then having almost thrown in the towel, in so far as trying to get our divorce laws modernized and brought up to date, I decided on another form of attack. That is why in 1956 I introduced a bill to do away with parliamentary divorce altogether, and transfer to the Exchequer Court of Canada the jurisdiction we were exercising in the Senate with respect to applications for divorce from the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland. That is the bill to which I referred when I said that the honourable senator was one of the 30 or more senators who voted against me. After that I was more or less discouraged, and I have not followed up what I attempted to do in 1938 and 1955 and 1956.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It was good missionary work.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My friend Senator Aseltine does not say why I voted against that bill. Perhaps he has entirely forgotten the argument that took place at the time. I have a vivid recollection of it. I remember saying that I quite agreed with him in his argument, but that out of deference to those people of the Province of Quebec who were specially affected by the bill, I was not prepared to coerce that province into having a divorce court which it did not want.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Do they want this system now?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Are they asking for this new system now?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Apparently this particular speaker on behalf of the Province of Quebec now asks for a divorce court. If the proper representatives from the Province of Quebec had asked for it at that time, I would certainly have voted in favour of it; and I would do so now, if I thought the Province of Quebec and those in authority there were in favour of a divorce court. However, honourable senators, remember this, that we debated the present system fully last session. We did so in proper order as the result of a bill which came before us, and we passed that bill. That is the law under which we now operate and which governs the Divorce Committee in its activities. We are not a law unto ourselves; we are following the directions, given in the proper way by this chamber, to the best of our ability.

I would also say to my friend Senator Pouliot, that if he does not like the system, the proper method is not to attack the procedure under the system—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: —but rather to introduce a bill of his own to change it, transferring the power to which he objects to a judge of the Exchequer Court. I can assure him that all of us in the chamber would give such a bill our very best consideration—and we might pass it. We certainly would do so, were the representatives of the Province of Quebec to endorse it.

Let me say further that so far as the criticism of the system is concerned, every one of the cases that have been passed, every one of the reports which have been approved, have been laid upon the Table with the report of the committee, together with the evidence, if it was transcribed, and all the documents of any significance in connection with the case. These have all been neatly bound and placed upon the Table so that anyone who wished to do so could read them and become informed.

So far as not having any knowledge of any particular cases is concerned, I think my friend will admit that my door is always open, and that any question that he might ask about any particular case would be answered promptly. Perhaps not answered from memory—I might have to look up the case for a moment—but within five or ten minutes he would be given the answer about any case on which he wished to address me.

So far as members of the committee are concerned, my friend, early in the session, asked me whether this was a one-man committee. Let us remember that the Commissioner commenced hearings on January 8 last, but the house did not sit until February 18. During that interval there was work to be done; hearings were in progress, and, of course, I had to look after that. I read 170 reports myself. They are reports which the house has very kindly passed on my recommendation after the committee passed them with my approval.

At the present moment, and ever since the session commenced, that system has ended, and the reports, as they are received, are handed to various members of the committee, usually a day's reports at a time. The member reads them with the greatest of care, checking to make sure that everything required has been attended to, and then moves their adoption in the committee and takes the responsibility involved in doing so. The Divorce Committee has been by no means a one-man committee from the time the Senate convened. I think the old comradeship still exists among us. We are carrying on with the work as best we can, and are not by any means the rubber stamp of anybody. These matters are really thoroughly inquired into and dealt with, with a feeling of responsibility.

I repeat that if the system is not a good one, then the time to attack it is not in the course of the proceedings under the system, but rather by introducing a bill so that we may discuss it in due and proper form, and perhaps do something about it.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I am glad it has come up.

First of all, I would like to say to Senator Aseltine that I am one of the 17 senators who supported him in 1956, when I was a freshman like my colleague Senator Pouliot; and I would support him now, with even more enthusiasm, as a result of my nine years of experience on the Divorce Committee.

In saying this I would like to take the opportunity of paying tribute to the magnificent work done by our chairman, Senator Roebuck. The quality of his work in this particular committee has been recognized from one end of the country to the other. Nevertheless, I say with all sincerity, it was the one feature of the work of the Senate out of which I got least satisfaction—not because it was not well done, for every member of the Divorce Committee was painstaking in the discharge of his responsibilities, but because I have always felt this was not a responsibility which should devolve upon members of Parliament. I was sorry Senator Aseltine's bill did not go through in 1956. I hope it will be introduced again.

I must have some sympathy for the views of my colleague Senator Pouliot; I think he is right. There is a feeling that under the present system the members of the Divorce Committee are, in effect, a rubber stamp. Of course, it is not a correct impression, but it is one that nevertheless exists.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If my friend permits me, I did not say that of the members of the Divorce Committee; I said that of the senators who do not belong to the Divorce Committee.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I know you did.

My understanding of the reason for retaining the Divorce Committee of the Senate under the present circumstances is to make absolutely sure there is a "court of appeal" in case of dissatisfaction with a decision of the Commissioner.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: As long as we retain the present system, where the divorces are granted by resolution on the recommendation, first of the Commissioner and then of the Divorce Committee, there is no question but that work will be done thoroughly and competently. But I believe that so long as this particular system exists it should be made clear that members of the Divorce Committee need not read the evidence; and if they do not read the evidence then they are, in effect, becoming somewhat of a rubber stamp. I say that because those of you who have served on the committee know perfectly well that the impression you get on reading the evidence, as compared to that gained by sitting on the committee where you can assess the personalities and expressions of the people, may be quite different.

So I sincerely hope, honourable senators, that this may be looked upon as a first step in modifying the rules in respect of divorce in Canada. I think the situation is better than it was, certainly for those of us who sat many hours on that committee year after year. I am delighted not to have that responsibility today. However, I would go further. I would say that unless we are prepared to recognize the kind of world in which we are living today, in which there is a tremendous need for broadening the basis of grounds for divorce in this country, we are, in effect, condoning injustice and inhumanity on a very large scale.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: We have to go very much further, honourable senators, and I hope it will not be too long before we have the courage and the honesty to face up to the situation which exists.

In saying this, I am not reflecting on any church. I think I know churchmen of every colour and description. I know many of the Roman Catholic faith who are sincerely concerned about the situation which exists today and who also feel that something should be done.

So I say to Senator Aseltine, I hope you will persist with your legislative project and that the next time you do not throw in the towel quite so soon. And to Senator Pouliot, I say, I think you were quite right in bringing this matter up—it is something we should not overlook.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I did not intend to speak on this subject, but I think perhaps I should contribute something. My honourable friend is right, when he says that I supported his bill to refer divorces to the Exchequer Court, but I am not sure I would do it again at this time.

I think the new system should be given a trial. I voted for it, but I said in my little speech that I did so reluctantly. The reason I was reluctant was I felt there was just a little bit of "gun play" in the other house, because at that time they were blocking the administration of justice as it then stood by a denial of justice, mostly to women with children whose husbands had not treated them rightly, and, as a result, hundreds of cases accumulated. So there was a little bit of "gun play" there which I did not like.

Now we have this system. My honourable friend said that when he opposed the earlier bill he was not as wise as he is now. Well, open confession is good for the soul. But being wise now, my honourable friend, instead of criticizing this procedure, should have brought in the bill he says ought to be before this house at the present time; that is, one to transfer divorce jurisdiction to the Exchequer Court.

At this time I think the new system, which is the law now, should be given support until we find reasons to change it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Or until we are sure we can get support for a bill similar to mine.

Hon. Mr. Farris: All right. But, in any event, let us give this new system a fair trial while it is in operation.

Today, as Senator Roebuck has said, we are involved in a procedure under the laws that now exist, and the discussion under that procedure should be confined, with all deference, to the question of whether or not we have the information necessary to enable us to deal with the resolution endorsing the recommendation of the chairman of the committee.

I want to point out to the honourable senator who has just spoken that there is a "court of appeal" in existence today; it has been explained by Senator Roebuck. You have available all the evidence that has been heard, and you can read it. If any applicant for divorce, or anyone opposing a divorce, thinks an injustice has been done, he or she will find many senators ready to bring the case before this "court of appeal" so that it may decide whether the recommendation should be given effect to or not.

So I say that all we need do at this time is ask ourselves: Is there anything to suggest that the recommendations made by the Chairman of the Divorce Committee ought to be investigated further? If there is nothing to suggest that, and if no senator has taken the trouble to investigate—because this is a court of apeal and we have the jurisdiction right now—then I think the less said the better, and these cases should go through as a regular routine.

In the meantime, if there are complaints we are not doing our duty as a court of appeal, or if there is a better system, or if the Province of Quebec or the Province of Newfoundland wants another system, then let somebody have the courage to bring in a bill for the transfer of divorce jurisdiction and let us fight it out again.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I agree with the constitutional point of order raised by Senator Farris, but the debate has ranged considerably beyond the narrow limits of the resolutions, and I beg leave to make just a brief contribution.

I respect the viewpoint held by Senator Roebuck. I am also inclined to agree with the position taken by Senator Pouliot. My respect for Senator Roebuck stems from my impression that he does not like the system and did not like it when it was brought in, but that with his sense of loyalty to the committee, and to his position as chairman of that committee, he has defended the system as it stands many times.

The reason I say I think Senator Roebuck does not like it is that I well remember, as other honourable senators will, the method by which this present procedure was imposed upon us. And I use the word "imposed" deliberately. On the day before the summer recess last session, the bill came over to us from the other place. We amended it. We took out the word "only", which imposed on us the appointment of a commissioner. The original bill, as it came to us, merely transferred the jurisdiction of the Crown in Parliament to the Senate. We sent the amended bill to the House of Commons and they would not accept our amendment. The bill was considered in hurried sessions of the committee, and the chairman of that committee, in his wisdom, recommended to the Senate that we pass it. I do not think any senator really knew what we were passing on that last hectic day.

With respect to Senator Pouliot, he was not in the chamber on that occasion, and I for one very much regretted his absence because I have no doubt we would have heard from him even more forcefully than we have today.

I protested the measure at that time, and asked if the provinces concerned had been consulted. There was a ruling from His Honour that the question of provincial rights was not involved in the matter before the Senate, and of course I respected that ruling.

The suggestion now made by Senator Pouliot that the whole of this jurisdiction be transferred to the Exchequer Court has support here, and certainly it appears to have the support of logic; but what concerns me is this rather hectic quick-stepping of events. I think the Senate, as I said then, fell into error in passing the earlier bill, and the discussion here indicates that there may be some foundation for that view.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable senator realizes there were some 600 cases awaiting action when we passed that bill and that was the compulsion to act quickly.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I think the honourable senator uses the proper phrase when he says it was done under compulsion. My point is that there was compulsion, and it is immaterial today what type of compulsion was involved. The honourable senator, I think, supports my position that this was done under compulsion. There were other kinds of compulsion at that time, but my point is, that what was done, was done hastily. We are now trying out the procedure then adopted, and I agree with Senator Farris that perhaps we should continue to try it out.

Many a procedure in democracy that did not appear to work at first has worked in time, and I would say, with all due respect to Senator Pouliot, and to the suggestion that another bill might be introduced, that it would be the better part of wisdom to try this system out, particularly when it is in the hands of such a skilled leader of the democratic process as Senator Roebuck, who has made such a valiant attempt to make it work. Because of that I wish him every success. I believe he should have a chance to see if he can make this work, at least for the time being, or until somebody brings before us information which I consider to be essential and which we do not seem to be able to get, namely, the feeling of the people of the provinces involved. What do they want done?

It has been said that this is not a religious question. With all due respect, I suggest it is. There is a religious aspect to it. If there is a large majority of people of a certain faith who have strong feelings on divorce, and on the limitations of divorce, which I have not, I would say we must take that into consideration, particularly if this is the dominant feeling in one of the provinces. What is the feeling of the Province of Quebec and of its people of the predominant faith there? Do they want divorce by this procedure of a commissioner reporting to a committee of the Senate, and of the committee presenting the resolutions? Are they satisfied with this? I do not know. Do they want full and complete judicial divorce under the Exchequer Court? I have heard this suggestion made. The point has been raised that such a judge would have the right to sit wherever he liked—he could sit in Montreal, should he choose.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: My bill covered that. It provided that these cases be heard in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Thank you for the information. Of course I was not here at that time.

I would welcome, as I think the Senate would, any information that could be put before us. I would make an appeal to those who are in responsible positions to let us know the views of the people of Quebec, and of the predominant faith in that province.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I would like to say—

The Hon. the Speaker: I would like to ask the honourable senator if he is now going to clarify some of the statements he has made. He has already spoken, and if I should allow him to speak again, other than to clarify some points, I would have to allow the same right to other senators.

I have granted a lot of latitude to senators this afternoon on this particular question, though I realize it was not according to the rules. If a similar debate were to arise on every occasion, it would certainly transgress the rules.

As your Speaker, I am, of course, in your hands, but I would like to have the co-operation of all honourable senators, and if the question of the principle of the Divorce Committee is to be discussed in the Senate, I hope, as honourable Senator Farris has said, it will be done according to the rules.

Honourable senators, I do not think I can allow the debate to continue in this fashion because I feel it is not according to the rules. Once again, I ask from all of you your co-operation.

I shall allow Senator Pouliot to speak now because I understand he wants to clarify certain statements he has already made.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much.

My honourable friend Senator Grosart said I was not here on the last day before recess. That was a Friday, and I did not expect Bill C-93 to come at that time. On the day we adjourned for recess I was here and you were here, Mr. Speaker. I do not know if the honourable senator was here on that day, when Bill C-93 came to us.

My second point is in answer to the challenge of the honourable Senator Aseltine as to voting for his bill. I would direct his attention to the Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day for the other house for today, item No. 6, a Government resolution which reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act to authorize the appointment of, and the provision of salary for, one additional judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada.—The Minister of Justice.

I leave it to the common sense and experience of the Minister of Justice. What I want is that the Exchequer Court judge should be not only a judge in name but a judge ipso facto.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I was asked a question which I do not think

I answered completely. Some 12 cases are withheld at the present moment, and are under consideration.

Reports adopted.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN IN CHRIST CHURCH—SECOND READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved the second reading of Bill S-11, to incorporate Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-11 is to incorporate the Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church. Similar bills have been passed many times by this chamber. It conforms with all the requirements for the incorporation of religious bodies.

The Brethren in Christ Church is a Christian group which includes amongst its founders Baptists, Mennonites, Congregationalists, and members of the Reformed and Moravian churches, and it reflects amongst its teachings much of the professed faiths of all those other denominations.

Since it is a coming together of several denominations, it might be said that it is not a dissident group from any one denomination, but is a church in itself which has bound together men of several faiths with similar interests and a common evangelical conviction.

This church seems to have had its beginnings in the State of Pennsylvania, and it has expanded into other states of the Union. Today the American branch of the Church supports, amongst other institutions, several colleges in California and Pennsylvania, a chain of book stores well known in the United States as the Christian Light Book Stores Incorporated, and, in addition, it maintains orphanages and homes for senior citizens.

During the American War of Independence several of the Brethren in Christ families emigrated to Canada and settled in the Niagara Peninsula area of Ontario. During the early part of the twentieth century a number of these families moved to the Province of Saskatchewan, homesteading in the southwestern and southern sections of that province. The largest concentration of membership today exists in the Niagara Peninsula and western Ontario area and in the Province of Saskatchewan.

A company was incorporated for the church in Ontario in 1935 by letters patent, which will be surrendered should the Parliament of Canada pass the legislation that is now before us.

The intention and eventual hope of the membership of the church in Canada is to have congregations spread throughout the various provinces. The purpose or object of the denomination, as set forth in its manual, is to promote worship of Almighty God and to disseminate His gospel and, in the process of so doing, to co-operate with other denominations through interdenominational efforts.

This church has ordained ministers, licensed by the governing bodies, including the bishops of the church, who are trained in theology generally and the specific doctrines of the denomination. The petitioners are all duly ordained ministers, and are engaged in their ministerial works, including teaching, in some instances, at Niagara Christian College.

The headquarters of the denomination will be located officially in Hamilton, Ontario, and it is the hope of the sponsors of this bill that after incorporation their operations in Canada will become uniform, and will develop into the various fields of church social service, as was carried on by the church's early pioneer associates.

If this bill is acceptable to the Senate, and is given second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

I have not enumerated the various sections of the bill, of which there are 18. As I said at the beginning, this bill conforms to the pro forma bill that is usually adopted with respect to the incorporation of religious bodies.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask the honourable senator a question? As I listened to his statement of the objects of the corporation it did not seem to me to conform to clause 4 of the bill, and I wondered why there was that difference.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I dealt briefly with the objects of the corporation, which are set out in detail in clause 4. They are to carry out the teachings of the church.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: No. Clause 4 says the objects are to carry on the teachings of the corporation.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Well, the objects of the corporation include the establishment of a church, which is now in existence in the Province of Ontario and is incorporated by letters patent in that province. This act is to incorporate the Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church. In other words, there will be a federal, rather than a provincial, charter.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, perhaps it might be helpful to Senator Hollett if I point out that in clause 1 of the bill, line 18, there are these words:

> ...the name of Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church, hereinafter called "the Corporation"...

For the purposes of simpler draftsmanship the word "corporation" is used throughout the bill rather than the name of the church.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lambert, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

THE GENERAL ACCIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-8, respecting The General Accident Assurance Company of Canada.

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, moved that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): On behalf of Senator Leonard, with leave, I move third reading of the bill now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, on behalf of Senator Leonard, it is moved by Senator Beaubien (Provencher), seconded by Senator Farris, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Do I understand that the bill has stood over from yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. The report was stood over from yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Reid: In that case, I will withdraw my objection.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 24, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 24, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 61, for the relief of Evelyn Alberta Florence Cere Lalonde.

Resolution 62, for the relief of Lorraine Cook Gough.

Resolution 63, for the relief of Susan Joan Hyman Greenberg.

Resolution 64, for the relief of Grace Lillian Humphreys Hutcheson.

Resolution 65, for the relief of William Billington.

Resolution 66, for the relief of Alice May Graham Laing McKenna.

Resolution 67, for the relief of Albert Desjardins.

Resolution 68, for the relief of Demetra Tsivriotis Savourda.

Resolution 69, for the relief of Ruth Marie Victorine Entwistle Weil-Brenner.

Resolution 70, for the relief of Antonia Sanscartier Cloutier.

Resolution 71, for the relief of Jeanne d'Arc Papineau Benoit.

Resolution 72, for the relief of Maureen Ann O'Shaughnessy Maltby.

Resolution 73, for the relief of Jane Hanson Phillips.

Resolution 74, for the relief of Jules Bellemare.

Resolution 75, for the relief of Margaret Ellen Lapaine Lawlor.

Resolution 76, for the relief of Ernest Francis Pattullo.

Resolution 77, for the relief of Huguette Marcoux Nyeste.

Resolution 78, for the relief of Joyce Eileen Menzie Elliott.

Resolution 79, for the relief of Nicolle Potvin Fleurant.

Resolution 80, for the relief of Marianna Marcali Muller.

Resolution 81, for the relief of Elizabeth Sharp Birch.

Resolution 82, for the relief of Ada Josephine Ford Lejeune.

Resolution 83, for the relief of Mildred Emily Velcoff Dumas.

Resolution 84, for the relief of Janine Madeleine Grumbach Dorland.

Resolution 85, for the relief of Hilda Louise Magnusson Howard.

Resolution 86, for the relief of Anna Hackstuhl Csillag.

Resolution 87, for the relief of Norma Elizabeth Peddle Kovacs.

Resolution 88, for the relief of Alexandra May Galbraith Westover.

Resolution 89, for the relief of Elizabeth Salavich Jonker.

Resolution 90, for the relief of Frances Barbara Brewer Smith.

Resolution 91, for the relief of Elaine Evelyne Evans Dunwoodie.

Resolution 92, for the relief of Rita Anne Page Bonner.

Resolution 93, for the relief of Clara Melissa Riche Frampton.

Resolution 94, for the relief of Roberta Sealey Burns.

Resolution 95, for the relief of Joseph Arthur Marcel Allard.

Resolution 96, for the relief of Alice Candide Sullivan Ward.

Resolution 97, for the relief of Patricia Hobbs Kemp.

Resolution 98, for the relief of Arnold Campbell Scott.

Resolution 99, for the relief of Kingsley Seafield Grant.

Resolution 100, for the relief of Marie Imelda Lisette Rajotte Durocher.

Resolution 101, for the relief of Phyllis Elizabeth Cameron Reeves.

Resolution 102, for the relief of Yvette Giraldeau Pons.

Resolution 103, for the relief of Marie Reine Jeannine Groulx Brousseau.

Resolution 104, for the relief of Marilyn Ida Hansen White.

Resolution 105, for the relief of Gilbert Merrill Aspinall.

Resolution 106, for the relief of Zicele Litvack Aisenthal.

Resolution 107, for the relief of Joyce Irene Tannahill Kylea.

Resolution 108, for the relief of Monique Garneau Coutu.

Resolution 109, for the relief of Carol Thornton Blackman.

Resolution 110, for the relief of Olive Annie Kirby Coulombe.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have a number of documents to be tabled. Of the list of ten, four are required by statute to be tabled; the balance consists of exchange of notes, and agreements resulting from negotiations between Canada and certain other countries.

(The following documents were tabled:)

Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Republic of Italy amending the Agreement concerning the sale in Italy of waste material and scrap belonging to the Royal Canadian Air Force, signed in Rome on the 18th of December 1961. Rome, September 18, 1963. (English and French texts).

Protocol amending the Interim Convention on Conservation of North Pacific Fur Seals, signed at Washington on February 9, 1957. Washington, October 8, 1963. (English and French texts).

Exchange of Notes between Canada and Denmark concerning Air Traffic Control over Southern Greenland. Ottawa, September 16 and November 28, 1963. (English and French texts).

Exchange of Notes between Canada and the United States of America amending the Agreement of May 5, 1961, concerning the co-ordination of pilotage services in the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River as amended February 21 and September 10, 1963. Washington, November 19 and December 4, 1963. (English and French texts).

Exchange of Notes between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America on measures to ensure the orderly, efficient and safe control of aircraft operating in the air space near the common boundary of Canada and the United States of America. Ottawa, December 20 and 27, 1963. (English and French texts).

Exchange of Notes between Canada and the United States of America concerning the reimposition of tolls on the Welland Canal. Ottawa, December 19 and 20, 1963. (English and French texts).

Report to Parliament of the Civil Service Commission of Canada on positions excluded in whole or in part under section 74, and appointments made from May 1, 1963 to January 31, 1964 under section 25, of the Civil Service Act, pursuant to section 76(2) of the said act, chapter 57, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English and French texts).

Report of Polymer Corporation Limited, including its Accounts and Financial Statement certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report, dated February 26, 1964, of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, under the Combines Investigation Act, on the Production, Distribution and Supply of Newspapers in the Sudbury-Copper Cliff Area of the province of Ontario. (English and French texts).

Report of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, together with a Statement of its Accounts certified by the Auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 33 of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, chapter 46, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —FIRST READING

Hon. L. P. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, presented Bill S-12, respecting Allstate Insurance Company of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford) moved, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

LAURENTIDE BANK OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Donald Cameron, presented Bill S-13, respecting Laurentide Bank of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Cameron moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE DOMINION LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY— FIRST READING

Hon. Daniel A. Lang presented Bill S-14, respecting The Dominion Life Assurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Lang moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 112 to 161, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 19, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, like those who have preceded me in this debate, I take this opportunity of complimenting you, Mr. Speaker and, through you, your charming wife, for the manner in which you both carried on your duties during the last session and are continuing to do during this session. I extend also my best wishes for health and happiness to you so that you may be able to continue for some years in the position you now occupy with such grace and dignity.

To the leader of the Government during the last session (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Brantford) I convey my sincere thanks and appreciation for the very fine leadership he has given both as Government Leader and Leader of the Opposition. He has held one or other of these posts ever since I came to the Senate in 1953. I have found him always most helpful, considerate and understanding.

To the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) I would like to say that although his responsibilities are heavy, we know that he too is able and willing to discharge them. I am sure he will do so in a manner that will enhance the prestige of the Canadian Senate not only throughout this country but throughout the world.

To the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), one of New Brunswick's favourite sons and a long-time friend, I wish health and happiness, and that he too may long be able to occupy his present position.

As my other colleagues who have spoken in this debate have done, I wish to welcome the new senators, especially the new senator from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Rattenbury) who in his maiden speech in this chamber told us of many interesting developments in our province. I trust that all the new senators will find the work of the Senate as interesting and as satisfying as I have in the past, and as I still do.

My sincere congratulations go to Senator White, a former Speaker of the Senate, on his appointment as a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council. No honour could be more fitting, and no appointment more popular in this chamber.

I congratulate the mover (Hon. Mr. Cook) and seconder (Hon. Mr. Denis) of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne on the very excellent speeches they made. From listening to debates in the House of Commons we knew that Senator Denis could always be depended upon to make an excellent speech, as he did on this occasion in the Senate chamber.

However, it must have been particularly difficult for Senator Cook to deliver such a fine speech, within a few minutes of his introduction into the Senate. The speeches of both honourable senators were of a high order and forecast well what we may expect to hear from them in the future.

The Speech from the Throne mentioned many subjects which are of much interest to me. The signing of an agreement by the President of the United States and our Prime Minister, under the terms of which our two countries become for the first time joint owners of property on Campobello Island in my native province, is a step forward in the friendly relations with our neighbours to the south.

The property, which will be known as the Roosevelt-Campobello International Park, will always remind North Americans on both sides of our long, undefended border, of that renowned American President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was such a good friend of Canada and of Canadians and who spent many summer holidays on Campobello Island.

The Speech from the Throne referred to the improvement of international relations. This is something I know we all support.

I would like to tell you tonight a little of my experience last December when, as a Canadian delegate, I attended a United Nations Seminar on the Status of Women in Family Law, held at Bogota, Colombia. During that seminar I met people from many countries. I would like to tell you a little about a pioneer project which is being carried on by Canadians in Bogota, led by our Ambassador, His Excellency T. F. M. Newton and his staff, which has the co-operation of the other Canadians living there and of some Canadians back home. I know that this project is establishing friendly relations for Canada with many of the people of Colombia.

The General Assembly of the United Nations in 1955 gave authority for the holding of seminars under the United Nations Program of Advisory Services in the Field of Human Rights. Some of these seminars have been held in several different regions of the world, at the request of various governments. If the United Nations accepts an invitation, the country which issued the invitation becomes co-host to the seminar. Colombia had issued such an invitation and it had been accepted by the United Nations.

Although the United Nations provides experts to organize the seminar, and takes care of the expense, such as travel and hotel costs of one delegate from each country, there are many things which the host country is required to do, such as providing the meeting places, the staff and equipment, and looking after the printing of the innumerable reports. The host country also plans for any leisure time or social activities which can be included in the busy program; this they try to do so as to give the visiting delegates an opportunity to learn the interesting history of the host country, to see some of the outstanding sights and also to give the people attending the seminar an opportunity to become acquainted with the people of the host country.

It would take me too long to tell you of even a few of the delightful experiences which were arranged for us by the group of Colombian women which the Government of Colombia appointed to make plans for the seminar. The Colombia Government was most generous in its treatment of the people attending the seminar.

Seminars on the subject of the Status of Women in Family Law were held in Tokyo in 1962 for countries of Asia and the Far East, and in Bucharest, Roumania, in 1961, for the countries of Europe. The Bogota seminar of 1963 was for the people of the western hemisphere. It is expected that a fourth will be held in Africa.

Bogota—and never mind if you learned in school to call it "Bo-go-ta"; the Colombians call it "Bogota". They also call our country "Can-a-da." Bogota, however we pronounce it, until airplanes were used for transportation, had few visitors because of transportation difficulties. It is situated on a plateau in the Andes, 8,600 feet above sea level, and the plateau is surrounded by mountains rising 2,000 feet higher. Today planes easily fly over the mountains and down into Bogota.

Although it is near the equator, the altitude of Bogota prevents the city from ever experiencing extreme heat or cold. The temperature varies between 45 and 71 degrees, and is known as "the city of perpetual spring." Actually, there seem to be only two seasons down there—one when it rains and the other when it does not.

Although I could talk endlessly of the fascinating things I learned about the country and its people, I know that most of you have travelled in many more foreign countries than I have, and I do not propose to bore you with a travelogue. However, I would like to mention briefly a few of the subjects which were discussed in the sessions of the seminar.

There were delegates from all countries of North, Central and South America and the Caribbean Islands, except Venezuela—which was in the midst of an election—Chile and Cuba. Countries could send additional representatives at their own expense, and the United States, Mexico and Ecuador did so.

Except for one man who represented Panama, the delegates were all women. All delegates had reached considerable heights in the professions of law, social work or government administration in their own countries. There were several women judges among the delegates, and also among the observers who had been sent by international organizations which have consultative status with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, entitling them to send observers to the seminar.

The delegate from Mexico was a Supreme Court judge, and we were told that she was the first woman in the world to be appointed a judge of a Supreme Court. Several other delegates were judges of lower courts in their own countries, as was Judge Sarah Hughes of Texas, who, as an observer, represented the International Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

Honourable senators may remember that Judge Hughes administered the Oath of Office to President Johnson in the presidential airplane shortly after the tragic death of President Kennedy, in Dallas, last November, and she was much in demand by the press and by members of the delegation to tell about her experience on that occasion.

The purpose of the seminar was not that the delegates should draw up resolutions to present to anyone, but rather to make possible the exchange of ideas and of experiences in different countries, and to stimulate the thinking of the delegates. It was hoped that when the delegates returned to their own countries they would promote there greater respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The whole agenda was based on the Status of Women in Family Law, and amongst the subjects discussed were marriage, including age of marriage, consent and registration of marriage, parental rights and duties, the legal status of married and of unmarried women, inheritance rights of women and social factors affecting the status of women in regard to family law.

Many of us in Canada are inclined to think that our country leads all others in legislation which guarantees the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and protection for those unable to protect themselves. A careful study of our laws and a comparison of them with the laws of other countries does not always support this wishful thinking. For instance, under the subject of marriage, the absolute minimum age of marriage in the various countries was discussed, and the question of what the minimum age was throughout the western hemisphere was considered. Many were of the opinion that to protect their young people, each country should have legislation forbidding very early marriage. The opinion expressed by several was that a boy or girl under the age of 15 is not mature enough to take on the responsibilities of marriage. It was also stated that very youthful marriages are often unstable and lead to unhappiness of the husband and wife and the children, and many times to separation and divorce.

Honourable senators may know that in the draft of the United Nations Convention on Consent to Marriage, Minimum Age of Marriage and Registration of Marriage, the minimum age of marriage was set out as 15 years. However, before the convention received sufficient support to be adopted by the General Assembly in 1962, this had been changed to a more general provision, worded as follows:

> Member states shall take legislative action to specify a minimum age for marriage.

Some delegates to the seminar stated that the absolute minimum age in their countries was even higher than 15 years, but in some it was much lower.

As you may know, Canada has no federal legislation setting the absolute minimum age of marriage. Please do not confuse the absolute minimum age of marriage with the minimum age at which persons can marry without the consent of parents. There is adequate provincial legislation on this in all provinces, and the consent of parents or guardians is required in marriages of those under 18 in some provinces, and under 21 in others. The absolute minimum age, however, refers to the age below which no marriage takes place even though the parents or guardians have consented to it. Some Canadian provinces have legislation on this subject, and in most of the provinces which do have such legislation the minimum age is 15 or higher. In one province which has legislation on this subject the absolute minimum age is set out as 12 for girls and 14 for boys. In another province the minimum age is 14 for either boys or girls. In the four Atlantic provinces there is no legislation on this subject; therefore, the common law would apply, and the minimum age for marriage of girls is 12 and 14 for boys. After hearing this question discussed very thoroughly I would be happy if legislation could be passed to set the minimum age of marriage in Canada at 15 years.

I am aware of the constitutional difficulties that might arise if a bill were introduced into Parliament specifying an absolute minimum age for marriage throughout Canada. Marriage and divorce under the British North America Act are assigned to the federal Parliament, except for the solemnization of marriage, over which the provincial legislatures were given control. There is some difference of opinion as to whether legislation specifying an absolute minimum age for marriage throughout Canada would have to do with the capacity of the parties, in which case it would be within the federal jurisdiction, or if it would have to do with the form of the marriage, in which case it would be within provincial jurisdiction. If it should be established that the matter comes within provincial jurisdiction, there is another way in which such a minimum age could be established throughout Canada, namely, for each province which has a lower minimum age than 15, to pass legislation setting that age as the minimum. All delegates were in agreement that free consent by the principals to the marriage and registration of marriage were essential to protect women and children.

The delegates gave general support to the principles embodied in the United Nations Marriage Convention. After this convention was adopted by the General Assembly in the fall of 1962 it was opened for signature in December 1962. It has been signed by only 13 countries, of which Canada is not one. Several delegates expressed surprise to me that Canada had not signed the convention, and I was asked by some to do everything I could to secure the signature of my country to this document. The reason given for the request was that Canada is looked upon as a leader, and that leadership from Canada would cause many other countries to follow. After signing, these countries would probably, in order to comply with the principles of the convention, change any of their laws which were not in accord with these principles.

The seminar discussed the civil capacity of women, including the right to vote, to hold office, to sit on juries, and the rights of citizenship. I was proud to be able to say that even before the United Nations Convention on Citizenship was adopted by the General Assembly, Canada had already in 1946 passed its Citizenship Act, which gave women all the privileges provided for in the convention, and Canada was able to sign and ratify the convention without having to make any change in its existing laws. On the other hand, when the rights of married women to an independent domicile was discussed, I had little to say because, as you know, married women in Canada are not entitled to an independent domicile. There is an exception under the provisions of the Divorce Jurisdiction Act of 1930 which permits a woman who has been deserted by her husband for two years to bring a divorce action against him in the province where she was deserted, even though he may no longer be domiciled in that province.

In the matter of domicile, married women certainly do not have equal rights with men in this country, although they do in some countries. I am well aware of the arguments against granting married women this right. I have read the debates on bills introduced both in this house and the other place some years ago, which provided that a woman might bring a divorce action in any province in which she had been domiciled for two years. Even these bills would not have given women equal rights, but they would have provided more rights than our present legislation provides. However, none of those bills passed both houses and became law.

The study I made of Canadian laws in preparation for, and at the seminar, made me realize that although some Canadian laws recognize the equality of women with men, there are also Canadian laws which do not recognize these rights even to the same extent as is done in some other countries in this hemisphere.

I have discussed the previous items in some detail to give you an idea of the work of the seminar. Many other subjects which have to do with women's rights under the law were studied just as thoroughly. After I have done some more research I will probably be appealing to you for your support to change some of the existing laws which I consider discriminate against girls and women and are not in accord with the Declaration of Human Rights.

Honourable senators, if you will bear with me a little longer, before concluding I would like to tell you of an experience I had in Bogota that was not directly connected with the seminar. Ian Sclanders wrote an article which was published in MacLean's magazine of July 6, 1963, telling of a slum district of Bogota called "Barrio Santa Ines" in which there is a small parcel of land called "Parque el Canada." The barrio is about ten blocks square and has 25,000 inhabitants. The people of this barrio are Mestizos—a mixture of white persons, usually Spanish, and native Indians. About five years ago a group of the inhabitants of this barrio—which is something like a ward in our cities—asked the Canadian ambassador if they might call a bit of land in their barrio after Canada and if they might have the Canadian Ensign to fly beside the Colombian flag. Both permission and the flag were given.

Subsequently, the ambassador—who at that time was Mr. Ford—and the personnel of the Canadian mission visited "Parque el Canada," and were much impressed and touched by the extreme poverty of the inhabitants, about half of whom are children. Few of the parents in this barrio have any employment, and those who have, seldom earn more than $50 or $60 a month. They all have large families, and several families live together in very small quarters. The Canadians discovered that a Colombian policeman, whose special duty it was to look after children—and a number of policemen are assigned to such duties in Bogota—had become very much interested in the children of this barrio and was devoting much of his leisure time to teaching them in a small kiosk situated in "Parque el Canada." The members of the Canadian mission and of the Canadian colony in Bogota decided to raise money to expand this small school. They did this, not through government grants but through their own voluntary efforts and the voluntary assistance of other Canadians who had visited Bogota, who had been taken to see "Parque el Canada" and who had become very interested in the project. About $12,000 has been raised.

When I was in Bogota a school was in the process of being built with this money, in which about 200 children of the Barrio Santa Ines will be given an elementary education and one good meal a day, which is much more than most of them have ever had. In the evening the parents of the children will be given similar education, as well as information about nutrition and sanitation. A projector has been provided and at times films will be shown, many of them documentaries from our National Film Board. This is part of an adult education program for the parents. You must remember that $12,000 goes much further in building a school in Bogota than in Canada, for it is not necessary to provide any heating and the buildings do not have to be protected from the extremes of weather as ours do. However, this school will have an indoor toilet, something practically unknown in this barrio.

Because I am a member of the Advisory Board of Co-Operative American Relief Everywhere, which is more generally known as CARE, before leaving Canada I had been asked by the Canadian Director, Mrs. Wadsworth, to make a presentation of Canadian articles which were purchased through money collected by CARE from Canadian school children. I was asked to make this presentation to the children of the school in Parque el Canada. The articles were of a value of $1,000, and included books, school supplies such as pencils, rulers and erasers, and many other items including some sewing machines to teach sewing to the mothers. They also included some agricultural implements like hoes and shovels, so they could cultivate small gardens and raise vegetables.

The sewing machines were used at the school to teach the mothers to make clothes for their children. Many of the children and their parents came to the school to see the presentation of these articles which were packed in large boxes, each bearing a large green maple leaf, and bearing the words in large letters "CARE of CANADA". Ambassador Newton and Mrs. Newton and others from the embassy accompanied me, and I wish I could convey to you the warm feeling of friendship that obviously exists between the people of this barrio of Bogota and the Canadians who were present. The children and their parents were most trusting and affectionate toward anyone who represented Canada to them.

I think one of the things that impressed me most in my visit to Bogota was this simple "people to people" pioneer project which is the result of the voluntary efforts of Canadians. It seems to me that if Canadian missions in other countries would follow this example it would do more to encourage friendly relations with the people of those countries than many larger and more expensive programs which Canada supports.

The Canadians in Bogota continue to work hard to raise money for this project. The ambassador, from time to time, opens his home for bazaars, and members of the staff undertake similar projects. The City of Bogota has been so impressed by the success of this school that when it is completed the city has agreed to pay half of its maintenance. Canadians will still be responsible for the other half. A committee of three Canadians, two Colombians and two British has been set up to manage the school.

The people of this barrio, all of whom are Roman Catholics, are so poor that for many years they have been unable to maintain a priest, and often could not arrange even for burial services for their children—a large proportion of whom die at an early age. Recently a friar has settled amongst them who looks after their religious needs. He asks for very little beyond enough to eat, a place to sleep, and assistance in building a small church. He is a delightful and, I thought, a simple person. With sincere appreciation he thanked the children of Canada, through me, for the abundance of gifts.

I may say that since I returned to Canada I have visited the Broadview School in Ottawa and told the pupils there of Parque el Canada in Bogota and of the delight of the children with their gifts. The children of Broadview School had raised $553 of the $1,000 used to purchase the gifts which I presented on their behalf.

The friar asked me to go through the little church he is having built and, when I praised it and him, I decided he was not quite so ingenuous or simple as I had thought, for his last words to me, as translated, were "Yes, Senora, we will finish the church in time but we need and we never can get money for a bell." This appealed to me much more than a direct request for a bell would have done, and I am sure you will not be surprised when I tell you that I have been involved in a quest for a bell for the little church beside the Parque el Canada in Bogota, and I think I am going to be successful.

I am very grateful for the many kindnesses shown me by the members of the Canadian Mission in Colombia, all of whom were so helpful that I felt I was in the midst of a Canadian family and that I was free to call on any of them for help or assistance. That is a wonderful feeling to have when one is alone in a completely foreign country and not even able to speak the language of its citizens. I think sometimes we do not fully appreciate the devoted service given to Canada and to Canadians by our representatives in foreign lands.

I will never forget and will always be grateful for the opportunity that I was given to attend the United Nations Seminar in Bogota, Colombia, last December.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lang, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Resolutions numbered 24 to 60, both inclusive, which were presented on Wednesday, March 18.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 24, for the relief of Gita Joy Kaplan Davis.

Resolution 25, for the relief of Roger Laframboise.

Resolution 26, for the relief of Frances Margaret Allan Poirier.

Resolution 27, for the relief of Marie Celine Therese Courteau Vezina.

Resolution 28, for the relief of Andre Hourlier.

Resolution 29, for the relief of Marilyn Wexelman Dobrofsky.

Resolution 30, for the relief of Lillian Turowitz Ofter.

Resolution 31, for the relief of Patricia James Lang O'Connor.

Resolution 32, for the relief of William Gordon Allen.

Resolution 33, for the relief of Marie-Anne Landry Desjardins.

Resolution 34, for the relief of Graham Campbell Harris.

Resolution 35, for the relief of Mildred Niren Cubitz, otherwise known as Mildred Nirenberg Cubitz.

Resolution 36, for the relief of Joan Margaret Gooch Wise.

Resolution 37, for the relief of Eric Meace.

Resolution 38, for the relief of Helen Lycas Vipond.

Resolution 39, for the relief of Beverley Respitz Grundman.

Resolution 40, for the relief of Ahuva Lina Sussman Sandperl.

Resolution 41, for the relief of Ida Christina Amalia Helena Koel Arsenault.

Resolution 42, for the relief of Jeanette Dorothy Saysell Wright.

Resolution 43, for the relief of Jurgen Manfred Kluwe.

Resolution 44, for the relief of Sarah Jane Harbinson Scott.

Resolution 45, for the relief of Vytautas Peter Kazlauskas.

Resolution 46, for the relief of Lillian Cere Kulczycki.

Resolution 47, for the relief of Arnold Adie.

Resolution 48, for the relief of Elizabeth Cameron Foucar Kielmann.

Resolution 49, for the relief of Phyllis Wishnowski Kara.

Resolution 50, for the relief of Ruby Grace Christie Buckell.

Resolution 51, for the relief of Dean Roberts Bishop.

Resolution 52, for the relief of Frank (Franciszek) Kaim.

Resolution 53, for the relief of Robert Toupin.

Resolution 54, for the relief of Rhoda Prosterman Zoberman.

Resolution 55, for the relief of Helen Freda Benjamin Markowiecki, otherwise known as Helen Freda Benjamin Marks.

Resolution 56, for the relief of Elizabeth Yvonne Goldberger Buday Mactaggart.

Resolution 57, for the relief of Michel Weissberger.

Resolution 58, for the relief of Denyse St. Hilaire Marshall.

Resolution 59, for the relief of Madeleine Turgeon Caron.

Resolution 60, for the relief of Rita Emma Clara Gentmantel Sanderson.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill S-4, respecting the International Bridge over the St. Clair River known as the Blue Water Bridge.

He said: Honourable senators, from time to time bills have been introduced in the Senate with regard to the erection of bridges crossing international waters. The bill before us today differs from most of these bills in that they refer to bridges about to be built, while this bill refers to the operation of a bridge which has been in use for many years.

Specifically, this legislation refers to the Blue Water Bridge which spans the St. Clair River connecting Point Edward, near Sarnia on the Canadian side, with Port Huron on the American side.

In 1928 a bill was introduced in the Senate and subsequently passed by Parliament, and now appears on our 1928 statutes as chapter 64, as An Act to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company. This act authorized the construction of the Blue Water Bridge, to which the bill before us now refers.

The 1928 legislation was subsequently amended in 1930 and 1935. These amendments empowered the St. Clair Transit Company to assign its powers to the Michigan State Bridge Commission. The Blue Water Bridge was then built by this commission, and opened to traffic in 1938. We do not have exact figures on the cost of the bridge, but on the basis of the most reliable figures available to us, the project cost about $4 million. Of this sum, approximately $1,600,000 was for approaches, and about $2,500,000 for the centre span.

The Canadian approaches cost approximately $900,000, and were built by the Province of Ontario, with federal Government assistance in the form of relief work. The United States approaches cost approximately $700,000, of which about $350,000 was contributed by the United States Government.

The sum of $2,500,000 required for the centre span was raised by the Bridge Commission through the issue of public bonds. That is a fact worthy of note because the St. Clair Transit Company Act further provided that after the corporate obligations of the company, or of any other company with which it might unite, had been retired, the Canadian portion of the bridge would be conveyed without cost to the federal Government or to such authority as the Governor in Council might designate. The bonded indebtedness of the bridge was paid off in 1961.

Since that time, honourable senators, discussions have been taking place between federal, provincial and state officials, and municipal officials on both sides of the border, concerning the future of the Blue Water Bridge. Throughout these discussions the Canadian position has been that the long-term solution to the operation of this bridge, and other similar international structures in which the public has a substantial interest, should involve some arrangement whereby the bridge would be placed under the control of a commission or other authority that is genuinely public in character and made up of an equal number of members appointed by the governments on each side of the international water.

Such an authority would, by virtue of reciprocal legislation in each country, be empowered to maintain and operate the bridge placed under its control, and to impose tolls sufficient to cover the costs of the maintenance and operation of the bridge.

I come now to one of the purposes of the passage of this act. Until such time as reciprocal legislation is enacted in the United States—and I would point out at this time that such legislation has not yet been enacted —this bill provides for the establishment of the Blue Water Bridge Authority, consisting of four members to be appointed by the Governor in Council. The Bridge Authority is given full powers to maintain and operate that portion of the bridge which lies within Canada, and to charge tolls sufficient for that purpose.

The bill also contains a provision that if and when the competent authorities in the United States enact reciprocal legislation clothing the Authority with powers in the United States similar to those it has in Canada, then the number of members of the Authority will be increased to provide for equal numbers of Canadian and United States members. The Authority would then assume responsibility for the whole of the bridge and charge tolls accordingly.

Some of the principal provisions of the bill are set forth in the preamble, and others in Parts I and II. The preamble to the bill explains its purpose much better than I can. I will not read the whole of it, but the first paragraph sets forth words to the effect that it is deemed appropriate that Canada and the United States should operate this bridge on a joint international basis by a public authority having equal representation from each country.

The second paragraph of the preamble sets forth very clearly the necessity of this bill. It is as follows:

> And whereas there is at present no competent authority to levy tolls to defray the costs of operating and maintaining the Canadian portion of the international bridge connecting Canada and the United States across the St. Clair River, commonly known as the Blue Water Bridge, and it is deemed advisable that, pending the establishment of a competent joint international authority to operate the Blue Water Bridge, an authority be established at the earliest possible date to operate and maintain the Canadian portion of the said bridge and to levy tolls to defray the costs thereof;

Honourable senators, it is not my intention to go over this bill, explaining it clause by clause, because I believe the only way in which it can be dealt with adequately is to refer it to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. Departmental officials can then be present, and we can go over the bill clause by clause and obtain all the information we deem necessary. I do, however, wish to mention the more important provisions.

Clause 7 of the bill gives the Authority power to acquire the Blue Water Bridge from the appropriate authorities in Canada and the United States and to operate, maintain and repair it.

By clause 9 the Authority is given power to charge sufficient tolls to cover reasonable maintenance costs, to replenish reserves, and to provide or replenish sinking funds for the payment of outstanding bond issues, and any other expenses the bridge Authority may incur in the performance of its duties under the act.

Clause 13 gives the Bridge Authority power to issue bonds subject to the approval of the Government in Council and the conditions set out in the act. It is not anticipated that the Authority will need to issue bonds because at the present time the structure is fully paid for, but similar legislation in the United States requires such detailed provisions, and it was deemed advisable to include those provisions in this bill in the hope that it can be used as a legislative base for the future operation of the bridge on both sides of the border. I should point out that there is no obligation on the part of the federal Government with respect to any bonds which may be issued.

I deal now with Part II of the bill which anticipates reciprocal legislation being enacted in the United States, and provides for interim arrangements pending such legislation. Clause 23 in Part II provides:

> When the Governor in Council is satisfied that the appropriate authority in the United States has indicated its consent to the joint operation of the Blue Water Bridge, by enacting reciprocal legislation authorizing the Bridge Authority to operate and maintain the portion of the Blue Water Bridge situated in the United States, the Governor in Council may by proclamation empower the Bridge Authority to exercise its powers and carry out its functions in the United States. . .

That is to say, when the United States passes similar legislation the Authority will then consist of eight members which will have power over the whole bridge in respect to its operation in both Canada and the United States. Until such a proclamation is issued, the Bridge Authority, as I have already indicated, shall consist of the four Canadian members only, and shall not exercise any of its powers in the United States. However, in the meantime the Authority may enter into contractual or other arrangements with the appropriate United States agency for the joint or co-operative maintenance, operation and repair of the Blue Water Bridge.

Honourable senators, as I say, I think the bill should go to committee for more careful study, clause by clause; but I trust that in the meantime you have obtained a general idea of its purposes.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I do not quite understand the situation. My honourable friend has said that there is now no competent authority to operate the bridge. Well, how was it built? How has it been operated up to date? What is the proposition? Are we buying the bridge?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): No, we are not buying the bridge. Under the provisions of the act which was passed originally in 1928 incorporating the St. Clair Transit Company, the Canadian section of the bridge was to be turned over to the federal Government or its nominees, upon retirement of the bonded indebtedness. That bonded indebtedness was paid in full in 1961. Since then the Government of Canada has not been prepared to accept conveyance of the bridge. It has felt that an arrangement should be made with the United States whereby the appropriate portions of the bridge would be transferred to a joint public authority charged with the operation of the bridge.

In the meantime the bridge has been operated as previously, except that since 1961 no tolls have been levied. The Province of Ontario has maintained the Canadian section of the bridge with respect to snow removal and it has kept the road in proper repair. No doubt a similar arrangement has been made on the American side.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: How did the bonds become paid?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): The commission had certain moneys on hand. The Michigan State Commission had a surplus of funds from tolls collected prior to 1961, and that surplus was used to operate the bridge since 1961. The commission now has run out of funds and something must be done. That is why this bill is before the house at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Where did they get the money to pay off the bonds?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): When Canada accepts conveyance of its section of the bridge, it will designate the authority to operate it.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, we are all indebted to Senator Macdonald, not only for his clear explanation of the purposes of the bill but also for giving us some of the background of the construction and operation of the bridge.

When I read the bill I noticed that there were no notes on the right-hand pages. Naturally, many questions arose in my mind as to when the bridge was built, how it had been financed, how it had been operated, and the necessity for the change at the present time. Senator Macdonald has given us the background as to dates, as to the cost borne by each country, and how the bridge has been operated.

After an examination of the bill, I think honourable senators will agree that many questions which arise in their minds can be answered only in committee. Nevertheless, there are some points I should like to raise at this time.

Clause 6 provides that there shall be no pay for the members of the Bridge Authority. Senator Macdonald has told us that this bridge cost approximately $4 million in 1928. Naturally, it is worth much more today. It does not seem quite proper to appoint four members from Canada to operate a million dollar business and pay them nothing but their travelling expenses.

Clause 7 provides for the transfer of authority by the two countries. I presume that when that transfer is made, as far as Canada is concerned the entire title to the bridge, including the approaches and everything else, will be made, and that the same will apply to that part of the bridge in the United States.

However, subclause 4 of clause 7 refers to the transfer of that part of the bridge in the United States, and says that that portion:

> . . . shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to be held by the Bridge Authority notwithstanding the title or interest therein acquired by the Bridge Authority.

I wonder how any act which the Parliament of Canada could pass would have any effect on property situated in the United States.

Senator Macdonald indicated that the bridge had been paid for, but he did not state what assets are on hand, if any, as far as Canada is concerned, or what debts or claims or anything of that nature are outstanding. I believe honourable senators would like that and similar information in regard to what might be owing in respect of the portion located in the United States.

Senator Macdonald also indicated that while the Authority will have power to issue bonds, it is very unlikely that they will issue bonds. A brief glance at clause 13(3) shows that the Bridge Authority can issue bonds and that they are to be sold at a price:

> . . . not less than a price at which the interest-yield basis will equal six and one-half per cent per annum as computed from standard tables of bond values; . . .

That seems to be a pretty high rate of interest. Furthermore, if you look at subclause 4 you will notice a very interesting provision. It says:

> (4) In the discretion of the Bridge Authority, a bond issued by it
>
> (a) may be issued with a call provision reserving to the Bridge Authority the right to redeem the bond before maturity at a price or prices not exceeding the sum of the accrued interest plus one hundred and fifty per cent of the par value;

There may be some reason for such an insertion. I do not pretend to be a corporation lawyer, but it struck me as being a pretty nice provision by which some people might benefit. It may be that there is an explanation for it.

As has been pointed out, the bill also provides that, in regard to the bonds or other obligations, the Crown is not liable, nor are any of the employees of the Crown. Nevertheless, clause 17 reads:

> No charge against any portion of the Blue Water Bridge in Canada or against any underlying land therein may be created or enforced, either by agreement or by judicial process, to secure or enforce the payment of any obligation of the Bridge Authority.

That would clear them. If bonds are issued the only backing those bonds would have would be the tolls imposed by the Bridge Authority. Clause 12(2) provides that:

> The Bridge Authority may not incur any liability not dischargeable solely from revenues or funds received by the Bridge Authority under this or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada or under any enactment of the appropriate authority in the United States.

Honourable senators, if it is correct that the physical assets of this bridge cannot be attached for any debt, would it naturally follow that if debt occurred the Crown would be liable to pay its share of the debt, whatever that debt or obligation might be? That and a few other questions have occurred to me. I am sure that when the bill is considered in committee, as Senator Macdonald has indicated, the officials of the department will give us the required information.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 25, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE SENATOR HOWARD

TRIBUTES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I perform a sad task today as I announce to the Senate that one of our beloved colleagues, the Honourable Charles B. Howard, passed away in his home in Sherbrooke this morning.

It is no exaggeration to say that Charlie Howard, as we all knew him, was beloved. He had been in Parliament for nearly forty years. He was a strong party man, but he earned the respect and the affection of members on both sides of this chamber and, indeed, of the House of Commons when he was a member there.

What can be said of him in Parliament applies even more so to him in his own community; and this was not Sherbrooke alone, although he thought Sherbrooke was the greatest town in the world. We all know Sherbrooke is a city, but because Charlie Howard knew everyone there and was at home with them all, the use of the word "town" seems to be so much more appropriate on this occasion.

Senator Howard, to many people in Parliament and elsewhere, was "Mr. Eastern Townships." And the Eastern Townships form a region which is one of the jewels of the Province of Quebec. There has always been a large English-speaking community there. But their collaboration with their French-speaking compatriots was great, and Charlie Howard contributed much to this racial amity. In this connection and as a further illustration of the point, one thinks of his long association and his deep friendship with another of our late colleagues, Senator Jacob Nicol.

Senator Howard was a son of Quebec, too, and he did much to foster the social and industrial life of that province. His blood was a mixture of the English and the Irish. His first language was English, but from his early days, and at the instance of his father, he became fluent in French. This was easy because he understood the mentality of the Canadians among whom he grew up.

If you look at Senator Howard's biography in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide you will see how much he meant to the commercial and industrial life of his city, his region, his province and his country.

During his years in the Senate he was a respected figure, and his capacity for friendship made its mark upon all his colleagues. He was a genial man, and in his soul there was no rancour of race, religion or language.

Canada can be proud of the career which Charles Howard made. The Senate and Parliament are better places because of him. I hope, honourable senators, that the memory of his constructive and helpful career will console Mrs. Howard and the other members of his family.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, as I rise to say a few words this afternoon on this sad occasion I recall the lines of the old hymn:

> Time, like an ever-flowing stream,
> Bears all its sons away.

No place in which I have ever been confirms this sentiment more than the Canadian Senate.

I join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) in his fitting tribute to our departed colleague, Senator Howard. It is sad indeed that we should once again have to record the decease of one of our number, especially at this time when we are about to commence the Easter recess. Death is no more a respecter of time than it is of persons.

I had the privilege of sitting in the House of Commons with the late Senator Howard from 1935 to 1940, before he came to the Senate. I cannot say that I knew him well, but I knew that he was a man who commanded great respect. Senator Connolly has referred to his illustrious career, a full career spanning over half a century and highlighted throughout by outstanding service to his fellow men. The Parliamentary Guide records him as a businessman, farmer and legislator—a full life, indeed. He was what we might call a true Canadian. His ancestry was of English-Irish stock, and at the same time he was fluently bilingual. I have heard him make eloquent speeches in both languages. His contribution to national unity and understanding between the two great races of this country has set a fine example for all Canadians to follow.

Senator Howard came from the City of Sherbrooke in the Province of Quebec. Sherbrooke is in a part of that beautiful province where English and French-speaking Canadians have been living together in harmony for many years. It was indeed a tribute to him, as it is a tribute to the people of Sherbrooke, that an English-speaking Canadian was selected as their representative for many years in Parliament—having served four terms in the House of Commons.

In these days when we hear so much about national unity, it is encouraging to note that we had in our midst for many years a man of the stature of Senator Howard, making his wonderful contribution.

Honourable senators, may I refer to a personal matter. When I came to the Senate a few years ago, Senator Howard, at some inconvenience to himself, made it possible for me to be adequately accommodated in an office. It was difficult to get offices in those days, as it is at present. Senator Howard and the late Senator Donat Raymond—who has since passed on—agreed between themselves to occupy Senator Howard's office, thus making it possible for me to have the office which Senator Raymond had occupied. I expressed my appreciation of their thoughtfulness and kindness, and I also wrote to both honourable senators and received a very courteous reply from each.

Senator Howard was indeed an outstanding Canadian. To his widow, his surviving children and grandchildren, I join with the Leader of the Government in extending my deepest sympathy.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, for many years Senator Howard was my deskmate here. The place that knew him shall know him no more. To me it is a deep loss, as we shared a real friendship and a happy association together.

I cannot forget that one of the penalties of getting old is that many of your friends go ahead of you. I liked Charlie Howard, and I endorse everything which has been said about him. I wish to add to the condolences which have been expressed, my own sincere sorrow.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I can scarcely add to the tribute so well deserved and so well expressed today on the loss of one of our colleagues who was a dear friend to all of us.

When I entered the House of Commons, Charlie Howard was there to greet me and we were close friends from that time onwards. He preceded me to the Senate and was a loyal supporter and adviser to me during my term of leadership.

During the last few years Senator Howard has been ill and has not been here regularly, but he was in touch with the Senate and frequently telephoned to me to ascertain our progress and to ask how I personally was getting along. He and I were close personal friends.

Reference was made today to the respect with which he was held in his home city. I visited him there and I know the close association he had with the people there and the interest he took in all organizations for the welfare of the community.

Charlie Howard was a dear and a faithful friend. He loved the Senate; he looked forward to returning to the Senate. It was my good fortune two months ago to be in the Barbados; he heard I was there and he came to see me. He never looked better; he never seemed happier. The whole conversation was about the Senate, and about you, my colleagues, mentioning you personally. Senator Howard was looking forward to the period after the Easter recess, to be back home and to be with us in the Senate; but that was not to be.

Honourable senators, Canada has lost a great public servant and you and I have lost a true friend. May I join with you in extending deep sympathy to Mrs. Howard and their family.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I wish to join with my colleagues who have just paid a tribute of admiration to one of our colleagues who, for several years, on account of his failing health, has been unable to attend the sittings of the Senate as regularly as at the beginning of his career. Those who spoke before me mentioned their fellowship and friendship with Senator Howard either in the House of Commons or in the Senate.

Personally, I became acquainted with Charlie Howard much before then. It was at the time when he was in the lumber business with his father. Reference was made of the co-operation between him—who was not a French Canadian but simply a Canadian, a true Canadian—and his constituents.

As I was saying, I have known him for about forty years. I was interested in the maple sugar industry when Senator Howard and his father owned timber limits in the upper section of Dorchester county, and in the counties of Beauce, and Frontenac. When maple sugar time came, Charlie Howard would allow the farmers of the upper sections of Beauce and Dorchester counties to go on his lands, tap his maple trees, and harvest the sap. That always appeared to me as a really practical as well as fraternal co-operation between this great industrialist and those to whom he so willingly lent assistance.

Since then, I kept a fraternal memory of Senator Howard, a man who was always ready to co-operate in business matters, even with people of lower level and of lesser means than himself, who cared for these farmers and invited them to go on his property and harvest what they could; and that made him most happy.

That is the reason why Charlie Howard has always been most popular with the people of the province of Quebec.

The honourable leader was referring a while ago to the City of Sherbrooke as being, in the opinion of Mr. Howard, one of the most beautiful cities in Canada. This is true. It is such a beautiful city that in our province we have named it "The Queen City of the Eastern Townships." Charlie Howard led there the life of a good prince, of a good king. He assisted his fellow citizens, be they French or English, Scotch or Irish; that did not matter. The welfare of all, that is what he was concerned with. To this end, he developed many industries in his own city. Moreover, he was president, organizer and manager of many firms but Charlie Howard always went about among his own people and our own as a sympathetic man. It is the finest testimonial I can give him.

To his wife, as well as to all members of his family, I convey my most sincere sympathy.

(Text):

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I had known the late Senator Howard for many years, as a member of the House of Commons and as a colleague in the Senate. I shall never forget him, and that is why I want to join with my colleagues who have spoken so well of him.

When the flag is at half-mast over the Peace Tower, one wonders who has gone to the Great Beyond. This morning I learned with deepest regret that it was our friend and colleague, Charlie Howard, who had passed away. He was very lively and jovial; he saw the good side of life. He was a very important businessman. He had a delightful disposition. He seemed to enjoy life so much, and he was helpful to everybody.

I remember, as I am sure my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) must also remember, the active part that Senator Howard took in the Civil Service Committee, of which we were members in the years 1938 and 1939. Senator Howard's suggestions were always to the point, for he had a practical mind. It touched me deeply when, at the end of the sittings of one session, he moved a vote of thanks to the chairman of the committee. I thanked him at the time. That incident I have not forgotten.

Today it is my privilege to pay homage to Senator Howard. I remember, honourable colleagues, that at times we went to his constituency. If I am not mistaken, our friend Senator Arthur Beaubien was with us one day. We went there four by four to address his constituents, and there we could see the immense popularity which our late colleague enjoyed in Sherbrooke and vicinity. As has already been said, he was known throughout the Province of Quebec as one of the leaders of industry. In the Senate we mourn him very deeply because he was a good member of Parliament, a good senator, a worthy businessman and a great Canadian. I pray Mrs. Howard, his wife, to accept my most sincere sympathy, and also that of my wife, for herself and for all the members of the late Senator Howard's family.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, during the first years I occupied my seat in this chamber I was closely associated with the Honourable Charles Howard. For me he was, indeed, a very good friend. He was a man of sound judgment, a good Canadian, and a good Quebecker.

In my own province, some of our best citizens come from the Eastern Townships. Charles Howard was proud to be a son of the Eastern Townships. He was very successful in business. He also gave sound municipal administration to his home city of Sherbrooke.

What most impressed me, however, and the reason for which I am anxious to pay our departed colleague a most sincere tribute of admiration and gratitude, was his deep understanding of his French-Canadian fellow countrymen. He knew our language, he understood our mentality; we could discuss any problem with him, and we could always be sure that he would suggest to us a fair solution. Senator Howard was a man of tolerance and a most charitable man. I think he was living proof of the fact that it is possible to be a good Canadian and a good Quebecker; that it is possible to have a fruitful co-operation between the various elements of our population.

Honourable senators, to this very good man, our dear friend, I wish to pay tribute, and to offer my sympathy to his family.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Expenditures and Administration in connection with the Unemployment Assistance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 9 of the said act, chapter 25, Statutes of Canada, 1956. (English and French texts).

Report on the Administration of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 13 of the said act, chapter 59, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English and French texts).

Copy of "Data from Radiation Protection Programs", dated February, 1964. (English and French texts).

INTERNAL ECONOMY

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Sydney J. Smith, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's first report:

> Your committee recommend that pursuant to the provisions of subsection 1 of section 44 of the Senate and House of Commons Act enacted at the first session of the 26th Parliament, that, effective from October 1, 1963:
>
> (1) for each session of Parliament there be paid to members of the Senate actual moving or transportation and travelling expenses between their places of residence and Ottawa as may be required for the performance of their duties as members of the Senate, if such expenses do not exceed the cost of air transportation economy fares (plus ground transportation between the airline pick-up point and the airport);
>
> (2) any member of the Senate residing at a greater distance than 400 miles from Ottawa may commute such allowance for moving or transportation and travelling expenses, receiving in lieu thereof an allowance of $20 per day for each day necessarily occupied in the journey between his place of residence and Ottawa, the day of departure and the day of arrival being counted each as a full day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops) moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY RULES AND ORDERS

INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

> In 1963, were there any copies of The Rules of the Senate of Canada and of The Standing Orders of the House of Commons of Canada at the Ottawa libraries of the Department of Justice and of the Supreme Court?

Hon. John J. Connolly: The answer to the honourable senator's inquiry is as follows:

> Copies of The Rules of the Senate of Canada and of The Standing Orders of the House of Commons of Canada were available at the Ottawa library of the Department of Justice in 1963.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT INQUIRY—NOTICE OF MOTION STANDS

On the notice of motion of Hon. Mr. Isnor:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): On behalf of Senator Isnor who spoke to me about this matter, I ask that it stand until April 15.

The Hon. the Speaker: Motion No. 2 stands until April 15 next.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, seconded by Hon. Mr. Denis, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, you will appreciate that I did not have the great good fortune of my deskmate, the honourable Senator Cook, to be pitchforked into my maiden speech almost immediately following my introduction to the Senate. How fortunate Senator Cook was, to be able to rise quite unmindful of the array of rhetoric talent seated about this chamber and quite unaware of the incisive perception with which his words would be greeted. It is little wonder that he was able to deliver of himself with such equanimity and aplomb. Unlike Senator Cook, I am today acutely aware, because of my brief tenure here, of the extent of those qualities of rhetoric talent and incisive perception displayed by honourable senators. This awareness serves to heighten the keen concern I always feel when called upon to speak even on the most mundane occasions. Therefore, honourable senators, I ask you to bear with me this afternoon, perhaps with more tolerance than I might otherwise deserve.

I have been with you now for just five weeks—five weeks from the day His Honour the Speaker so graciously greeted my colleagues, the honourable Senators Rattenbury and Cook, and myself in his chambers, with the words, "Welcome home." Now I can respond to those words spoken with a full appreciation of the strangeness and sense of temerity one feels on being introduced here. I will respond by saying to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all honourable senators: Nous sommes fort honorés de se sentir chez nous après une si courte période de temps.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lang: Only your courtesy, indulgence and many kind remarks delivered from the floor of this chamber have made this possible.

At the outset I would like to take this opportunity of saying that the Right Honourable the Prime Minister is a man for whom I have the deepest admiration and respect and, indeed I must add, to whom I feel a deep sense of personal loyalty which transcends political affiliations. I trust that in the years ahead my performance in this chamber will fully justify the confidence he has shown in me by elevating me to a place among you.

Notwithstanding his protestations earlier, I would like to be permitted to single out for tribute the Honourable Ross Macdonald. His many years of selfless service both here and in the other place are, in some ways, as well known to me as they are to all of you. Senator Macdonald has always been an example of dignity and integrity in public life, and in displaying those fine qualities he has encouraged many others to participate in the affairs of the country, many others who otherwise would not have done so. May his influence long be felt.

To the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), may I join with all of you in welcoming the leadership he is displaying as he assumes his new responsibilities. I am impressed by and confident in that leadership, and look forward to the months and years ahead as ones of challenge and satisfaction in the discharge of duties under his guidance.

Honourable senators, in keeping with the tradition of speeches on such occasions as this, I know I should spend some time elaborating upon the virtues and natural endowments of that part of the country from which I come. I should perhaps speak of the great Province of Ontario in terms of its immense resources in lumber, pulp, nickel, gold, copper, uranium and agriculture; but to do so, I feel, would be quite redundant, as honourable senators are undoubtedly only all too familiar with the good fortunes of that part of the country from which I hail. Perhaps I should discourse at some length on that burgeoning metropolis of Toronto whence I come, but over the years, like so many Torontonians, I have developed a slightly self-conscious reserve in speaking about my own city. It seems to speak very well for itself, but perhaps non-Torontonians speak more often and probably more articulately for it. I must confess, however, that this is often done in a somewhat backhanded fashion.

About Toronto today, however, I cannot avoid remarking that in terms of political colouration the chameleon-like qualities of that great city have been a source of deep satisfaction to some of us.

In a more serious vein, it is interesting to observe that over the past decade approximately one-half of the immigrants to Canada have come to Ontario, and approximately one-half of those have settled in the City of Toronto. The effect of this has been startling, and stimulating beyond measure. These immigrants differ quite radically from those who came to this country a quarter of a century ago. The vast majority of them are people of some financial means, who have come with their trades and professions. They include Dutch and Portuguese market gardeners, Belgian engineers, French goldsmiths and cabinetmakers, Hungarian doctors and accountants, German chemists and draftsmen, Italian builders and ceramic artists, to mention only some of the categories. The contribution of these people in terms of real wealth not only to Toronto but to Canada as a whole cannot be measured. After they settled, the skyline of Toronto changed, as new and stimulating architectural forms appeared; theatres, music centres, community and recreational halls sprang up and flourished where drab old buildings had previously marked the scene. Interesting restaurants, street markets and boutiques opened up. Indeed, everywhere a new and fascinating diversity became evident.

If you ride the Toronto subway, as I do each day when I am not here, you will likely hear as many conversations carried on in Italian, French or German, as in English. There are no bi-, tri- or quadrilingual problems there—just a general sense of urgency amongst those handicapped by fluency in one language only, a sense of urgency to acquire some command of as many languages as possible in as short a time as possible. What an opportunity now exists to practice new linguistic skills!

I mention this phenomenon because, understood for what it is—the fascination of diversity, the creativity through interchange, the deepening of culture in the arts and humanities that it represents, may be an example for the whole of Canada right now.

With these words I conclude what might be called the maiden part of my speech, but with your leave I would like to trespass for a few minutes into what may be considered a somewhat political area of thought.

This afternoon, before the passage of time may dull them, I would like to leave with you some first impressions that I have formed of the Senate since my appointment, and to relay some notions of the Senate that I have picked up abroad. These impressions may be quite lacking in depth because of their freshness, and perhaps not entirely correct because of the inexperience of the relater, but they may be of some value simply because they are first impressions.

Firstly, I have been somewhat disturbed by the general lack of knowledge and understanding among so many persons, not directly associated with activities of government, with respect to the constitutional history and background of the Senate. It is regrettable how few people realize—and I think this is particularly true in Ontario—that the Senate was constituted as one of the keystones in the structure of Confederation and that without it federation of the provinces would very likely have been impossible.

It is a significant fact, too frequently overlooked today, that the Senate still stands as the guardian of those historical rights and privileges reserved in 1867 to the provinces whose relatively smaller populations left them vulnerable to the will of more populous areas holding majority representation in that other place. It is equally regrettable how few supposedly well-informed people do not realize that in legislative power the Senate is equal to the House of Commons except, of course, with respect to money bills constitutionally reserved for initiation in that place.

While such important historical facts appear lost to public awareness, it is strange to find that some of the more anachronistic attributes of the Senate appear to have survived. Herein I refer particularly to the concept of the Senate as being representative of property in the country. I also refer to the idea that the Senate must be available to retard any hasty government action coming from the other place. I presume that this function is now probably more effectively fulfilled in that other place itself than could be done here. I also refer to the anachronistic concept that the Senate would provide a bulwark against rampant universal democracy which was, of course, a fear which prevailed at the time of Confederation and because of its proximity to the years of the American civil war.

While these concepts have little meaning today, in some ways they appear to have survived to a greater extent than the realities of contemporary significance to which I have referred.

Secondly, I would note that there is likewise abroad a general lack of understanding as to the place of the Senate in the modern machinery of government. Many appear to have little knowledge as to why or for how long this chamber remains in session each year, and there is relatively little appreciation of the multitudinous legislative duties carried by this body. There persists instead a vague notion that here some negative veto remains constantly in suspension. The work of the Senate in initiating bills or reviewing bills initiated in the Commons, both of a public and private nature, the numerous and detailed committees constituted for the examination of proposed legislation and for study in areas of particular national concern, pass to a great extent unnoticed by the public.

Thirdly, in all candour, I cannot avoid mention of the many ways in which the public image of a Canadian senator is at such variance with the fact as to be inexcusable in this time of supposedly broad and accurate communications. He is ofttimes considered aged, rather than highly experienced and wise, as is the case. He may ofttimes be considered highly political, as though political accomplishment was in any way less praiseworthy than accomplishment in other endeavours, or he may be considered as someone enjoying a reward in a state of semi-retirement. To this latter suggestion I can only add that if an infinite opportunity for work through sessions, the length of which was unheard of a quarter of a century ago, and for a relatively modest indemnity, be a reward or a retirement, then I am a British Columbia bluenose. While still a novice free from any imputation of self-acclaim and, I would suppose, relatively immune to any suspicion of environmental subjugation, I would like to contradict those notions for the record and, perhaps, for many honourable senators whose services and accomplishments here might make them more diffident in so doing.

Frankly, honourable senators, I am impressed at how this chamber conducts its affairs, free from the time-consuming trammels of partisan bickering. I am convinced that endowed with the experience, dedication and wisdom here assembled, this body is probably as well, if not better, equipped to deal with the complexities of modern legislation as any other legislative body in our country. The dangers inherent in these complexities, combined with a one-chamber legislature, were no more clearly demonstrated than in Ontario during last week when, whether through inadvertence or ignorance, a bill was introduced that could have had the effect of depriving us at one stroke of the personal liberties that are the hallmark of our common law heritage.

Perhaps more than in any other way possible this incident underlines the importance of our institutions of government, not as law-making bodies, but as custodians of the very liberty of our people. It demonstrates that the detachment and independence of the Senate is indispensable in safeguarding and preserving our hard-won traditions of individual freedom and the rule of law. I suggest, honourable senators, that the vigilance of this body alone is a small price to pay for liberty in this day and age.

I suspect that the lack of understanding of the Senate's place in our constitutional structure, and of its role and potential role in government, can be laid to some extent at the feet of our educational authorities and, perhaps to a great extent, at our own feet. I suspect also that these deficiencies, and some of those notions prevalent as to the image of a Canadian senator, can be laid at the feet of our press and other communications media which, deprived here of the sensationalism on which today they seem so prone to feed, tend to deride if opportunity to do so presents itself. Their perfect right to criticize I would never question, but I do question the wisdom of destructive criticism and of sensationalism generally, particularly at this time when the forces of decentralization are marshalling, and disruptive elements are abroad in our country.

Here I make no suggestion—or, I do not wish it imputed to me that I am making any suggestion—that we should avert from the realities of current politics. In fact, it may very well be that in its functions today the Senate might rather emphasize its capacity for political awareness, and in the highest sense of these words.

Most honourable senators here were tempered in the fire of contemporary political controversy, and I for my part hope that this qualification will always be a predominant characteristic of senators in the years ahead. Real knowledge of problems, people and issues is best learned in political activity, and I feel we must decry those cynics who fail to recognize the sacrifice involved in putting aside the privacy of other occupations for the privations of public life.

Honourable senators, I mention this today because I am convinced that there is emerging a new and growing number of highly qualified men and women prepared to play their part in the political party of their choice, to seek office themselves, or prepared to play their part in supporting others who seek public office for worthy causes. This is due in part to the fact that today almost every decision of government has an immediate effect upon the lives of every one of us. I think it may be due in part also to the fact that the breadth and complexities of administration and policy in government today are such as to arouse and challenge the most inquisitive and enlightened minds.

These people are idealistic, and idealism is a vital necessity to enable us to meet new and unprecedented situations, where old ideas and prejudiced attitudes cannot stand up to new facts and swift changes. These new politicians which are found today in every political party are more concerned with discharging duties than protecting rights. They are desperately anxious to find solutions to our social and political problems and, in this search, to rise above special and narrow interests. They are concerned in promoting national welfare through a form of politics which rejects partisan, sectional and selfish interests in the interests of the country as a whole.

These new politicians are prepared to forego pursuit of more comfortable and remunerative vocations, and nothing must be done to discourage them. Pride in one's party, pride in aspiring to be a politician, and pride in one's representatives here and in the other place are all essential ingredients to pride in one's country. I suggest that it is only enlightened national self-interest to recognize and promote what is worthy in politics, to encourage and extend involvement of all people in politics, and thus strengthen our body politic at all levels of government—federal, provincial and municipal.

After passing through just less than one hundred years of change from a country of hamlets and homesteads to one of great metropolitan areas, to a time of industrial automation and mechanized agriculture, and having survived two vast economic depressions and two great wars, we today in Canada find ourselves enjoying prosperity and opportunities for prosperity as never before have been presented. Yet, notwithstanding that, we are being challenged by sectional interests, with both racial and economic overtones, which can come close to threatening our continued unity.

I have no concern, as I know you have not, honourable senators, that, as on such previous occasions, our federal Government will discharge the great responsibility of meeting and resolving the legitimate aspirations of the variety of components that make up this Canada. Much of the legislative program laid before this Parliament is directed to just that end. I am convinced that by virtue of its peculiar sectional representation and its independence, the Senate will play a significant role in meeting this challenge, and that above all it will, in a time of national cacophony, give voice to tolerance and reason on behalf of all Canadians.

[For report of speech delivered this day by honourable Senator Sarto Fournier, see Appendix to Debates of the Senate of tomorrow].

Motion agreed to, and the address in reply to the speech from the Throne adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered that the said address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of this house as are members of the Privy Council.

CONSUMER CREDIT

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

Ordered: That the Members of the House of Commons on the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons to enquire into and report upon the problem of Consumer Credit be Messrs. Bell, Cashin, Chrétien, Clancy, Coates, Côté (Longueuil), Crossman, Deachman, Drouin, Greene, Grégoire, Hales, Jewett (Miss), Macdonald, Mandziuk, Marcoux, Matte, McCutcheon, Nasserden, Orlikow, Pennell, Ryan, Scott, and Vincent.

Ordered: That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Ordered, that the message do lie on the Table.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 26, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, March 25, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report and Financial Statements of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation certified by the Auditor General for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to sections 17(3) and 18 of the Export Credits Insurance Act, chapter 105, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 162 to 219, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Tuesday, April 14.

Motion agreed to.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-4, respecting the International Bridge over the St. Clair River known as the Blue Water Bridge.

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 500 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hugessen reported that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications had considered Bill S-4, respecting the International Bridge over the St. Clair River known as the Blue Water Bridge, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 9: Immediately after clause 22 insert the following as new clause 23:

"23. The Bridge Authority shall provide and maintain at its expense such suitable office, warehouse and other accommodation, with adequate light and heat,

(a) as the Governor in Council or any Minister designated by the Governor in Council may from time to time require for Canadian customs and immigration purposes; and

(b) as the appropriate authority in the United States or any authority designated by the appropriate authority in the United States may from time to time require for United States customs and immigration purposes."

2. Page 10: Renumber clauses 23 and 24 as clauses 24 and 25.

3. Page 10, line 13: Strike out "23" and substitute therefor "24".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, the sponsor of the bill, honourable Senator Macdonald (Brantford) is unable to be here today. I wondered whether it would be suitable to honourable senators to consider the report now, and to allow me to explain the amendments.

I am not asking for third reading this afternoon, unless the Senate unanimously agrees to it. It might be better if I explain the amendment now.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Then we will do whatever we might decide would be best.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

As honourable senators will recall from the explanation given on second reading, this is a bill to set up a Bridge Authority with respect to the Blue Water Bridge, which spans the St. Clair River between Sarnia and Port Huron. It is to be an international authority. This is the Canadian section of the legislation. It is expected that in the United States similar legislation will be passed in so far as the United States section of the bridge is concerned.

This bill raised some rather interesting legal and international questions. At its consideration by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications this morning, we had representatives of the Department of Justice, the Department of External Affairs and the Privy Council. They appeared in support of the bill.

While the committee meeting was in progress, counsel for the Department of National Revenue arrived and, on behalf of his department, asked for an amendment to the bill. He suggested an amendment in the terms which have just been read by the Clerk Assistant, to make certain that the Bridge Authority to be constituted under this bill will have the duty to provide the necessary facilities on the bridge for customs and immigration purposes. There was no objection to that amendment on the part of any member of the committee, and it was adopted unanimously.

The two minor amendments read by the Clerk Assistant are consequential changes, and have no significance in themselves.

That is the explanation of the amendments. If the Senate is willing to agree to third reading this afternoon, I would be glad so to move, but if there is any difficulty the matter may stand until the next sitting.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave, I move third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Resolutions numbered 61 to 110, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, March 24.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 61, for the relief of Evelyn Alberta Florence Cere Lalonde.

Resolution 62, for the relief of Lorraine Cook Gough.

Resolution 63, for the relief of Susan Joan Hyman Greenberg.

Resolution 64, for the relief of Grace Lillian Humphreys Hutcheson.

Resolution 65, for the relief of William Billington.

Resolution 66, for the relief of Alice May Graham Laing McKenna.

Resolution 67, for the relief of Albert Desjardins.

Resolution 68, for the relief of Demetra Tsivriotis Savourda.

Resolution 69, for the relief of Ruth Marie Victorine Entwistle Weil-Brenner.

Resolution 70, for the relief of Antonia Sanscartier Cloutier.

Resolution 71, for the relief of Jeanne d'Arc Papineau Benoit.

Resolution 72, for the relief of Maureen Ann O'Shaughnessy Maltby.

Resolution 73, for the relief of Jane Hanson Phillips.

Resolution 74, for the relief of Jules Bellemare.

Resolution 75, for the relief of Margaret Ellen Lapaine Lawlor.

Resolution 76, for the relief of Ernest Francis Pattullo.

Resolution 77, for the relief of Huguette Marcoux Nyeste.

Resolution 78, for the relief of Joyce Eileen Menzie Elliott.

Resolution 79, for the relief of Nicolle Potvin Fleurant.

Resolution 80, for the relief of Marianna Marcali Muller.

Resolution 81, for the relief of Elizabeth Sharp Birch.

Resolution 82, for the relief of Ada Josephine Ford Lejeune.

Resolution 83, for the relief of Mildred Emily Velcoff Dumas.

Resolution 84, for the relief of Janine Madeleine Grumbach Dorland.

Resolution 85, for the relief of Hilda Louise Magnusson Howard.

Resolution 86, for the relief of Anna Hackstuhl Csillag.

Resolution 87, for the relief of Norma Elizabeth Peddle Kovacs.

Resolution 88, for the relief of Alexandra May Galbraith Westover.

Resolution 89, for the relief of Elizabeth Salavich Jonker.

Resolution 90, for the relief of Frances Barbara Brewer Smith.

Resolution 91, for the relief of Elaine Evelyne Evans Dunwoodie.

Resolution 92, for the relief of Rita Anne Page Bonner.

Resolution 93, for the relief of Clara Melissa Riche Frampton.

Resolution 94, for the relief of Roberta Sealey Burns.

Resolution 95, for the relief of Joseph Arthur Marcel Allard.

Resolution 96, for the relief of Alice Candide Sullivan Ward.

Resolution 97, for the relief of Patricia Hobbs Kemp.

Resolution 98, for the relief of Arnold Campbell Scott.

Resolution 99, for the relief of Kingsley Seafield Grant.

Resolution 100, for the relief of Marie Imelda Lisette Rajotte Durocher.

Resolution 101, for the relief of Phyllis Elizabeth Cameron Reeves.

Resolution 102, for the relief of Yvette Giraldeau Pons.

Resolution 103, for the relief of Marie Reine Jeannine Groulx Brousseau.

Resolution 104, for the relief of Marilyn Ida Hansen White.

Resolution 105, for the relief of Gilbert Merrill Aspinall.

Resolution 106, for the relief of Zicele Litvack Aisenthal.

Resolution 107, for the relief of Joyce Irene Tannahill Kylea.

Resolution 108, for the relief of Monique Garneau Coutu.

Resolution 109, for the relief of Carol Thornton Blackman.

Resolution 110, for the relief of Olive Annie Kirby Coulombe.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

PRIVATE BILL

THE DOMINION LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved the second reading of Bill S-14, respecting The Dominion Life Assurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a simple bill to change the French name of The Dominion Life Assurance Company to another French name. That is not entirely in conformity with the explanatory note to the bill. Originally, this company was incorporated by a special act of the Parliament of Canada, 1889, and in the French translation the name that appears in the preamble to the bill was used. That name in French is cumbersome and lengthy, and accordingly the company has not used it in its policies and other documents. The company is now asking for legislative authority to use another version of its name in French.

The Dominion Life Assurance Company operates in all provinces of Canada, in eight states of the United States, in Jamaica, Bermuda and the Bahamas. Of its 47 offices and agencies in Canada there are three offices and two agencies in the Province of Quebec. Nineteen per cent of the company's investments are now held in that province, and approximately 13 per cent of its business is carried on there.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I propose to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lang, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 112 to 161, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, March 24.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, seconded by Senator Haig, I move concurrence in the reports.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by the honourable Senator Haig, that reports Nos. 112 to 161, both inclusive, from the Standing Committee on Divorce be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): On division.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The resolutions can be carried on division, but not the reports.

Reports adopted.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

FIRST REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. Sydney J. Smith, Chairman of the committee, moved that the first report of the committee be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, the recommendations contained in the first report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts are the result of much discussion and consideration, not only by the members of the committee but also by many honourable senators who were particularly interested in the matter.

An open invitation had been extended to all honourable senators who wished to sit in on the committee discussion, and as a result the recommendations were unanimously approved by a large meeting composed of many non-members as well as members of the committee. I need not say more than that they represented our best thinking at that time; and it is understood that the whole situation will be thoroughly reviewed by the committee after the recommendations have had a trial run.

Report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the bill with reference to interim supply has not yet arrived from the other place. I propose that we rise for about an hour. Would it meet the convenience of honourable senators if we resume at the call of the bell at around 4.30?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 4.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1964

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-84, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1965.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, I have some extra copies of this bill for distribution, which the pages will distribute. I apologize for the fact that not all honourable senators have received a copy.

Hon. Mr. Willis: Are they in French or English?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think they are in both languages.

Hon. Mr. Willis: My copy is in French.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps the honourable senator can make an exchange, although the French version of this bill is just as comprehensible as the English version.

Honourable senators, the fiscal year of the federal Government begins on April 1 and ends on March 31. The spending program of the Government, as all honourable senators know, is set out in the main estimates which have been tabled and are thus available to all. The main estimates, together with supplementary estimates which are presented to Parliament from time to time, contain an outline of the Government's spending program in a given fiscal year.

In some countries the main estimates are considered and approved before the opening of the new fiscal year. This is the case in the United States where the fiscal year begins on July 1. But in countries where the parliamentary system obtains, the main estimates seldom get full approval in the early part of a parliamentary session, and very often final approval is delayed until the dying days of the session.

Accordingly, at the opening of a fiscal year it is customary for the Government to submit to Parliament a bill mentioning an amount of money that is to be voted in respect of the main estimates. A bill of this kind is called an appropriation bill or a supply bill. We have such a bill before us now.

I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that this is not a final supply bill. Since it authorizes expenditures to be made in the interim before the final supply bill is passed, it is usually designated as a bill for interim supply.

I know perfectly well that I am making rather elementary statements, but I think it is useful to have these fundamental principles on the record at this time. The bill before us is designed to enable departments and agencies of Government to meet expenses which they could reasonably anticipate in the first two months of the fiscal year. Those are the months of April and May.

The bill, therefore, authorizes the expenditures of two-twelfths, or one-sixth, of the main estimates for the new fiscal year which will begin in a few days. This authority is sufficient to enable most departments to carry on for this period. However, in addition to the one-sixth of the main estimates which it is proposed to be supplied by this bill, it is necessary to provide for some departments and some agencies of Government in which an extra amount of spending must be carried out in the early part of the year. I give you two examples. The first example appears in Schedule E on page 7 of the bill before us, under the heading "Mines and Technical Surveys—Field and Air Surveys...."

In the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, in addition to expenses to be met by voting two-twelfths, or one-sixth, of its spending program as contained in the main estimates, there are seasonal expenses incurred in the early part of the fiscal year. For example, one of the programs in that department involves the launching of survey parties, the hiring of personnel, the purchasing of equipment and supplies. This survey work is done in the spring and summer and perhaps even carries over into the fall. In any event, quite a number of expenses which are incurred in connection with a program of this kind must be met in the early part of the fiscal year.

I am speaking at the moment about item 10 on page 7. The figure $6,785,000 shown there is the total amount for that item called for in the main estimates. The department, in addition to the two-twelfths or one-sixth which it will receive under this bill, asks for an additional one-twelfth because of these seasonal requirements.

That is why honourable senators will see, at the top of page 7, under Schedule E, that an additional one-twelfth is required for these purposes by this department.

Honourable senators, it might be helpful if I gave another example. I select this from page 4, Schedule B—Atomic Energy Control Board. In the main estimates the board has a vote of $1,250,000. Under this bill the board will receive authority to spend the two-twelfths which is being granted for all of the votes in the main estimates 1964-65. In addition, the board asks for an additional four-twelfths of its main estimates, or a little over $416,000. The reason for this additional amount lies in the fact that in more than 90 per cent of the cases, the grants which are to be made under this item are made to universities, and a substantial portion of the money is advanced for this work in the early part of the fiscal year.

Honourable senators, I want to also direct your attention to section 5 of the bill, page 2, which deals with borrowing powers. As is readily appreciated, the Government has huge requirements for cash. The cash flow from tax sources is substantial, but it comes at irregular intervals. In other words, there is no matching of the cash inflow and the requirements for spending as set out in the estimates. In addition, cash is needed by the Government to meet maturing debt and to make advances like those required to be made under the Canadian National Financing Act, which the Senate considered at the last session, and for the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Company, which we have also dealt with in this chamber, and which requires cash advances from time to time. It is therefore usual in various interim supply bills to authorize the Government to borrow for these and other cash purposes early in the year. In this bill authority is sought to empower the Government to borrow up to $1 billion for this purpose. This is provided in section 5 subsection 1 of the bill.

Subsection 2 of section 5 cancels any unused authority granted by previous supply bills in the fiscal year about to close.

Perhaps I should add that the maximum authorization in the past five years for borrowing authority in any one year was $2½ billion, and it is usual in the first interim supply bill to request borrowing authority in the amount of $1 billion. This has been exceeded only once in the past five years.

Honourable senators, that is a general explanation of this bill. Perhaps I should apologize for being so elementary in the explanation that I have given. However, as I said at the beginning, I think at this time it may be helpful to have remarks of this kind on record because we will be getting several of these interim supply bills before the session concludes.

If there are any questions with respect to this bill, I shall do what I can to answer them.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask one question, honourable senator? I notice that under "Fisheries" there is an extra $1,050,000 added to the general estimates. Is that much over the amount which was granted last year and, if so, is there anything in the estimates here to take care of the fishery program about which we heard a great deal recently? I am wondering if there have been any amounts provided for that purpose, or if it would come out of that $1 billion loan.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Unfortunately, I cannot make any comparisons today, but I shall be glad to get information on the question of the comparisons between this year and last year and send it to my honourable friend. I am informed that the item to which he refers provides for various payments, such as assistance to producers of salted fish, construction and assistance for fishing vessels, and bait freezing and storage facilities. Further, the present indications are that a substantial number of plans, particularly for fishing vessels construction subsidies will be processed and ready for payment within the first two months of the fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, before commenting on the explanation the Leader of the Government has just made, I assume he is giving the usual undertaking that the passing of these estimates will not prejudice our subsequent rights?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I apologize, honourable senators. I certainly should have said at the outset that on behalf of the Government I was giving the undertaking that the passing of any items under this bill would not in any way prejudice the right of any honourable senator later, when future supply bills, including the final supply bill, come before us, to raise questions on any of the items covered by this bill.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all indebted to the Leader of the Government for putting on record, as he has this afternoon, the procedures necessary in order to provide supply for Her Majesty from time to time during the life of a Parliament. As the Leader of the Government has given the usual undertaking, I shall not delay you long, but there are a few comments I feel I should make.

My honourable friend Senator Hollett asked a question a moment ago, which illustrates the unfortunate position in which we are placed by having this bill come before us within a few hours of the recess, within a few hours of a long weekend, and a few days before the moneys we are going to vote will be required to pay salaries and make other necessary expenditures of the Government in the early days of next month.

I regret I have not the eloquence of the Honourable Ross Macdonald, whom I have heard speak on this subject a number of times and whose remarks on other occasions I have read in Hansard. But I would like to say this: there are occasions I can understand and be sympathetic with when an appropriation bill may of necessity have to come before us at the last minute before an adjournment of Parliament. However, that is not the situation today. The responsibility for the position, the humiliating position in which the members of this chamber are placed this afternoon, is clearly that of the Government, and no one else. I leafed back and tried to ascertain just when these estimates were tabled—it was certainly some weeks ago. By the very nature of things, the Government cannot have six supply motions open on all the departments and have all the estimates approved by March 31. But during all that time it has known that by March 31 it was going to have to ask the House of Commons, with the concurrence of the Senate, for interim supply. The debate on this matter in the other place, instead of starting as it might have done two weeks ago, ten days ago, or a week ago, started, I believe, only yesterday morning.

I could offer suggestions as to why that was done. There was an overweening anxiety on the part of the Government to see certain pieces of legislation introduced, to force a budget debate which commenced, I believe, earlier than the great majority of budget debates ever commenced. It need not have commenced until after the recess. The fact is, it is the Government that has put this house in the position it is in this afternoon. I believe it should also be stated that it is only by the leave of each and every honourable senator sitting here that this bill will be passed this afternoon. Had any honourable member risen and said "no" when the Leader of the Government asked leave to move second reading this afternoon, it would not take place at this time. I may speak with somewhat stronger words if about May 30 we are faced with a situation similar to that which we are facing this afternoon.

It is true we have an undertaking that the passage of this bill does not deprive us of the right to discuss any of the items contained therein. It is also true that with this bill before us we are entitled to discuss any matter within the competence of Government, but there is hardly time to do that this afternoon. Every member of this chamber is therefore being deprived of that right this afternoon.

There are many comments one might wish to make on these estimates. One might like to make some general comments on the apparent failure to control expenditures. One might wish to comment on the very substantial deficit indicated, notwithstanding the very heavy increases in taxation which become effective on April 1, and the proceeds of which, if added to the announced deficit, would produce a much larger deficit than we have had in recent years.

We might like to comment upon some interesting changes that have been made in the form of the estimates. We might like to have some information as to why, instead of the moneys paid to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for capital being included as a budgetary expense, as in previous years, they are now shown as a loan and investment to the amount of $14¼ million. We might like to inquire as to who the Government thinks will repay that loan. We might want to ask if this is just a question of sweeping an item of $14¼ million under the rug so that the apparent deficit will be reduced by that amount.

These and many other matters could be inquired into if we had the opportunity which this honourable chamber had, for example, in the spring of 1960—I looked up just one year at random—when the final supplementary bill for that year was passed, to debate the bill until it had been given its full readings in the normal way. There was one long day in which senators raised many questions concerning matters which interested them, as they had a perfect right to do.

There are many matters set out in this volume that I should like to discuss. But there is no opportunity to do so this afternoon, and I am not going to attempt to delay passage of the bill. I hope that the Government, and I am sure all honourable senators will join me in this, will give this chamber the opportunity to which it is entitled to discuss these matters when a similar bill comes up in the month of May.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Leader of the Government speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I have little to add to what I have already said. Perhaps that is because I am a new member of the Government.

I sympathize with what Senator McCutcheon has said about bills of this kind coming to the Senate in the last minutes of a session, or just before an adjournment, but in the ten years that I have been a senator this speech has been made on almost every similar occasion. I go further and say that long before I became a senator, I sat in the Senate gallery on similar occasions and heard the same speech being made.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It may be that on some occasion honourable senators should say "No."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This may well develop some day. I do know it is a very unsatisfactory position in which the Senate is almost continually placed.

I had hoped, and I think I so informed honourable senators at one stage, that this bill could have come to us about a week ago when we could have dealt with it more thoroughly than we are able to today. For what my assurance is worth, I certainly undertake to do everything I can to see to it that bills of this kind come to us early enough so that we can give to them the kind of consideration we should.

I say this, that in dealing with the estimates and with supply we could, and I think should, use the facilities that our Standing Committee on Finance provides for examining the estimates. This has been done to very good effect by the Senate. However, we should not embark upon a project of that kind until the estimates, which after all are primarily the concern of the House of Commons, have been dealt with to some considerable extent by that branch of Parliament. It would help the consciences of all honourable senators if each year our Finance Committee considered the estimates and brought in a report. Of course, if that procedure were instituted all honourable senators who are interested in that work could attend the meetings of the Finance Committee whether they are members or not.

I think there is nothing more I need say at this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move the third reading of the bill now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, there is no word about legislation from the other place. I understand it was proposed today that that house would adjourn at 6 o'clock. Frankly, I do not think we will know anything about progress until that hour arrives.

In the event that the intention is to sit in the other place this evening, it might meet the convenience of all honourable senators if we adjourn now during pleasure, to resume at the call of the bell at 6.15 p.m. I think the bell should be rung promptly at that time. We will know then what the prospects are for further sittings today and for the very important royal assent.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 6.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I understand that the House of Commons has adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock. I do not know what the program is for tomorrow, but in view of the fact that there is a royal assent pending in respect of the bill that the Senate passed this afternoon, I think it would be most appropriate in the circumstances for us to adjourn until tomorrow morning at about 11.30.

Honourable senators, with leave, I so move.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Senate if he knows if there is a peacetime precedent for Parliament sitting on Good Friday? Would it not be possible to have the house adjourn until Monday, or even Saturday, to pass this supply bill, and would that not suffice just as well as if we passed the bill tonight?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The only answer I can make is that this is in contemplation, and for that reason and because of the position the Senate is in in respect of the royal assent, I think we should adjourn until tomorrow. Then, should it happen tomorrow morning that the other place adjourns until Saturday, we could do likewise. We cannot do it now. That is why I think the motion I have submitted is the only practicable one to make at this time.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Honourable senators, apparently this delay is inevitable, and we on this side are quite prepared to co-operate with the Government.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11.30 a.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 233)

REPORT OF SPEECH DELIVERED BY THE HONOURABLE SARTO FOURNIER, IN THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE DEBATE, MARCH 25, 1964

Hon. Sarto Fournier: Honourable senators, at the outset of my remarks I would very much like to join with those who preceded me in paying a tribute of admiration and respect to the memory of our late colleague Senator Howard.

Senator Howard was one of the first I met when I entered public life. His explanation to me of what was meant by "a real Canadian" so much impressed me at the time that the remarks I am about to make today in this chamber are very largely inspired by his true Canadianism.

Honourable senators, every time I rise to speak in public, I feel some sort of difficulty. Usually I speak in French. You have been most kind in the past, and I hope that today you will not mind if I revert to my mother tongue.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I believe it may be said of Senator Howard that he belonged to the world where the finest things have the worst fate. Senator Howard was a kind, jovial and open-minded man who had a thorough understanding of this country. He could speak French fluently and possessed a very acute sense of the Canadian social climate, for he understood the practical spirit of the two great nations who co-exist on Canadian soil. His death fills us with sorrow. It is certainly a great loss for the Senate and this country.

When we returned to Ottawa to attend this new session, we noticed with pleasure the presence of four new faces coming from four different provinces. I wish to join all those who spoke before me to tell the new senators how happy we are to have them among us and to welcome them most cordially. All are men of great experience about individuals and things; they bring us something which was lacking before their arrival among us.

I also wish to join the honourable senators who participated in this debate in congratulating Senator Cook and Senator Denis for the elegant way they discharged their responsibilities, in moving and in seconding the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I did not hear them because at the time of their speeches, I was out of the country. But on reading their remarks in the official report of the Debates of the Senate, I could appreciate the accuracy and relevancy of those comments.

And we have a new leader whose main task is to be the spokesman of the government in this house. Those who know Senator Connolly were not surprised to hear of his promotion to this high office. His culture, his learning and his wide general knowledge, the fine breeding he has always shown, his tact and his sensitive mind, have made him a prominent, respected and respectable citizen. I wish him in carrying out his duties as much success as he has had in the past.

He replaces one of my good friends, Senator Ross Macdonald (Brantford). Every time I think of a friend—and I hope I still have some—Senator Macdonald comes to my mind. I will always remember with joy his very personal and delicate kindnesses. I am happy to pay tribute to him by expressing my gratitude and my admiration for the way he conducted, with all the required dignity and efficiency, the business of the Senate while he held the office of Leader of the Government in this house. No doubt he deserves our admiration in more ways than one, but as a Canadian of French ancestry, I hail with respect the courage he showed by learning, at an age when it is practically impossible to study it, the French language which he speaks with elegance indeed. The heroic efforts that Senator Macdonald had to make to impose such a hard discipline on himself, in order to gain a better knowledge and understanding of a group of Canadians who make up one-third of the population of Canada, makes him an example that all Canadians should endeavour to follow.

All the difficulties facing us now and which are so hard to overcome stem mainly from the fact that Canadians do not know one another and, therefore, can hardly understand each other. I think it is proper to say that, generally speaking, Canadians were not educated to be what they are. We live in a social context requiring from each of our fellow citizens a knowledge of facts which is not required in other countries. It is hard to be a Canadian. It is complicated. Our citizens of good faith endeavour especially to find out and understand what we have in common. Unfortunately, others, less enlightened and of dubious faith, always try to give exaggerated importance to the apparent differences which seem to divide us. Yet, if we speak different languages, those two forms of expression spring from a common source in Greco-Latin civilization; 2,500 words are spelled exactly the same way and mean exactly the same thing in both languages, the only difference being in the pronunciation. I fail to see why that difference should be a source of a misunderstanding and discord.

As far as the racial point of view is concerned, the difference is also very thin. Our common origin is European: the French and the English. According to the fortunes of ancient wars, they occupied each other's territory in turn to such an extent that once a king of England was king of France and the king of France was at the same time king of England. I think one must be of bad faith to use such slight differences to pit one group of Canadians against the other. Surely, we have enough problems which must be solved that we do not want to see the break-up of our nation.

Most of those problems arise out of the weaknesses of the text of the Constitution which has governed us since 1867. It is obvious that this written act places us in a framework that has become too small and is exactly like a garment which becomes less and less fitting. That act has been passed during the steam age. Now that we are in the atomic age and none of the problems which we are tackling today existed a hundred years ago, I say that this act, which could be looked upon a long time ago as ahead of its time, allowing for the social, economic and political climate that prevailed a century ago, is no longer in tune with our needs, with the necessities and with the imperative requirements that exist in Canada in this twentieth century. We have gone far beyond the colonial era. We no longer belong to a distant metropolis, as was the case for several centuries, when we first belonged to France, and, after the Seven Years' War and the Treaty of Paris, due to the lack of care and foresight of Louis XV—who was more interested in the charms of Madame de Pompadour than in the welfare of his kingdom—we had to change our allegiance and become a British colony. Today, we are an adult people, a responsible free nation in full possession of its sovereignty in domestic and external affairs.

Yet, there is a tribute we should render to my fellow French Canadians from the province of Quebec, which is that they never faltered in their loyalty to anybody. The whole of our history proves it, and I do not know of another people in the world who would be more faithful and loyal to their allegiance.

When, in the middle of last century, the call came from Rome for us to stand up for the freedom, integrity and sovereignty of the pontifical states, French Canadians flocked by the thousands across the ocean to fight for a cause they considered to be just. More than 60 years ago another call came from London, where Queen Victoria ruled at the time, for us to go and defend British interests in the deepest South African veldt. There again, French Canadians joined their fellow citizens and risked their lives defending a cause the fairness of which has always remained doubtful, but we did so because of our allegiance.

Twice, we took up arms to defend our country and the interests of the British colony against attempts at American domination over Canada.

At the time of the first world war, again by the thousands, Canadians offered their services, freely and loyally, to fight overseas once again, side by side with Frenchmen, Englishmen, Americans and others, to defend a cause which we believed to be just and which was just, and this in spite of the manhunt organized in our cities and villages by half-civilized soldiery which looked upon us as savages and wanted to enroll us forcibly. We deplored that crime committed against us but we remained faithful and loyal.

At the time of the second world war, another generation of French Canadians joined by the thousands, freely and voluntarily, with their English-Canadian compatriots, to serve in the three forces, give their life and shed their blood for a cause that we believed was just, and still do. We never lacked loyalty towards anyone.

Even though we now find that the Canadian confederation, due to the organization of its public service, encroaches upon the Constitution, we are always faithful and loyal citizens, because we have not and will not stop believing and hoping that our present differences, which make the Canadian Confederation work against us, will finally be settled and removed.

Our fellow citizens from other provinces must know and understand that these problems are of the greatest urgency and that they must be settled, because if we should learn one day that a fair settlement is impossible, there would be a blow-up. The sensible and level-headed persons will be unable to restrain the people. Anarchy will prevail and those who will want to be reasonable will be considered traitors. Any agreement will then be impossible, because the same words said by different persons will have a different meaning and it will be the end of Canada and the end of us unless we recognize that no two provinces are alike.

We do not want joint plans any more, we do not want double-meaning articles in the Constitution any more, especially those dealing with taxation problems in Canada. We have become an adult people, fully aware of what we are and of what we want to be. We are not asking for anything that belongs to others, but we want to keep what is rightly ours.

Confederation has been such a burden to us that there is not sufficient economic means at our disposal left to solve our problems, namely, those in respect of education, labour and welfare. We are looking forward to the day when we will cease to pay for the maintenance of some departments, like Agriculture, National Health and Welfare, Labour, Northern Affairs and National Resources, and Fisheries, which are all very costly to us and which we could easily dispense with. That, of course, would be more compatible with the spirit and the letter of the Constitution.

Do you want me to give you a striking example of what I just said? This year, the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, in Ottawa, are of the order of $300 million. Now, if we take for granted that the people in Quebec alone contribute 25 per cent of public expenditures in Canada, as I was informed by officials of the Department of National Revenue and, on the other hand, I know for a fact, having inquired about this matter from officials of the Department of Agriculture, that this department which is costing us $75 million this year, will hardly bring in $25 million directly or indirectly in salaries, grants, subsidies, or in any other way; we are then overpaying $50 million unnecesarily to a department which is entirely useless to us, which never looked earnestly into the farm problems of the province of Quebec and which imposes on us a financial obligation disproportionate to our means. If somebody would take the trouble to make a similar study in other departments of no use to us and which only duplicate services already available, the same conclusion would be reached.

Honourable senators, the other day a friend of mine came to ask me if I could help him in getting his 12-year old son admitted in a Montreal classical college, the Externat classique Sainte-Croix, on Sherbrooke street, in the eastern section of the city. I talked to the superior; he told me that 300 young men had made the same application; a hundred had not been able to qualify and out of the remaining 200 there was room for only 70. The same situation prevails in all our institutions of higher learning, which means that thousands of young French Canadians will have to give up or postpone their studies because there are not enough facilities. We lack facilities because we lack money. We lack money because the Canadian Confederation, at this stage, is costing us too much.

Some people are asking why Canadians in the province of Quebec feel less and less at home in their country. It is because the Canadian Constitution is too often violated, the federal Government interferes in the field of social welfare among others and administers matters which we could better administer ourselves. The problem is now acute. The solution can no longer be postponed. We are convinced that with good faith and sincerity, Canadians can reach an agreement.

You can be sure of one thing: we want to remain loyal to our country and we understand that separation would be a disaster for everyone, most of all for us. For most French Canadians in the province of Quebec, separatism is unthinkable, because it would be a useless and worthless experience. We want to remain Canadians but subject to human and reasonable conditions.

Like all other peoples, the Quebec people change at such a rapid pace that it is hard to follow the trend. Therefore, public administration standards had to be changed and priorities considered as essential had to be created; we have no alternative but carry them out.

I say to those who find it honestly difficult to understand our situation and our point of view, to put themselves in our place and imagine they are French Canadians, and then to observe carefully their reactions. They would also ask for a change of situation. I want to tell you that in the fields which come exclusively under the federal jurisdiction, we see no objection at all in a frank and generous co-operation towards co-operative federalism. On the contrary, we are quite prepared to do anything in our power to give our country a greater degree of well-being. We love Canada. We know that to be able to live here is a blessing and we understand that the social context of our people and the immensity of a country like ours can create delicate situations and problems difficult to settle. However, you can count on our entire loyalty and our devotion, but, as I said, we are now faced with certain circumstances leaving us no alternative.

Despite the fuss made by a few agitators, some of whom undoubtedly receive their directives from outside, who act in a way that threatens to disgrace the province of Quebec, to achieve an objective contrary to what they claim to seek, our people stay calm because they hope that those they have chosen to lead their destinies within a sound democracy will finally come to an agreement.

I do not feel that the solution can come from a federal body. If we look at history we find that the federal Government is the creature of the provinces, that it was established after the provinces and that it could not be set up without the consent of the latter. That is why I feel that our chances of success will be improved if we proceed along the same lines.

I believe that if the provinces were to agree on a concrete proposal giving back to them all the powers they need, putting all the provinces on the same footing, taking great care not to favour one at the expense of the others, the central government would have no other alternative. Furthermore, I am inclined to believe that it would readily agree to amend the Constitution according to a fair and equitable formula, and this would not prevent the provinces who wish to do so to come to Ottawa and propose for themselves the status quo. They would be free to renounce certain rights, certain privileges, as indeed they appear to be willing to do today.

I appeal to my fellow French Canadians who, in most cases and with the best of intentions, have separatist inclination, to think it over twice. They will ultimately understand that separatism is nothing but a mirage.

Separatism will not change geography. It would only change the present social context of the province of Quebec. If we were to separate from the rest of Canada, the first consequence would be that the others would separate from us at a time when, more than ever, the Christian world and all civilized people seek to unite and when countries all over the world, in Europe as well as in America, are trying to close the gap that divides them. Why give in to futile thoughts and wishes which will only lead to anarchy and ruin when unity has never been such an imperious need?

Everything will have to be started all over again. There are, in the province of Quebec, four or five different separatist groups. They are merely sowing the wind and already they are reaping the whirlwind. Let us not be taken by their fallacious and empty promises. Let us not imitate the example of the frog in La Fontaine's fable because if we do we will have the same fate. I call my compatriots to turn down this suicidal idea.

There is a very significant question I wanted briefly to mention: I was thinking of a national education for Canadians. I believe that, in a general way, Canadians from all parts of Canada have not been very well served in this field. I always wondered why we persisted in teaching different histories of Canada, when there is only one. Unfortunately, the teaching we received at the national level is more than inadequate. Today we see people trying to educate adults. Why? Because, before they became adults those people did not get the complete national education they should have received.

Canadians do not know one another sufficiently and, in many instances, they know each other poorly. If educators in Canada, particularly those who head our great educational institutions, took counsel together and finally agreed on the books Canadian youngsters use in their studies, especially in the matter of Canadian history, it would be found that all Canadians, in less than two generations, having learned the same things, having learned the truth about one another in an atmosphere free from prejudice, would certainly find it much easier to agree among themselves, to understand and to respect one another.

I do not think this initiative can be taken by our governments. It rather belongs to men of experience and good will who devote their lives to teaching and intellectual and moral training among our young people. History should be taught in a better way; if all Canadians knew about the same things, could as much as possible understand and speak both official languages, all our problems, which result from the shortcomings of our national education, would be solved in one fell swoop.

Honourable senators, in a few months we shall receive the visit of our gracious Queen Elizabeth II. I cannot understand why some people object to this additional trip of the Queen of Canada. I know of no other woman in the world who is held in so high esteem and considered with more respect than the Queen of Canada. As we have known her so well since the days of her childhood, we make no mistake when we say that she is the very symbol of nobleness, kindness and generosity. I do not believe that a royal crown could be laid on a head more worthy of receiving it. I feel somewhat ashamed that some people have feelings of hatred for her, feelings which they hide rather badly under the cover of the most futile excuses.

That woman did not choose her destiny. Nor did she usurp her title. If, today, Elizabeth II is Queen of Canada, it is because of the unconcern and the stupidity of a former king of France called Louis XV.

In spite of what some people might pretend, I do not think she will be more in danger in Quebec than in London or elsewhere. All through the years, the lives of princes have been always in danger. Such are the risks of their position. You may be certain that French Canadians will greet her with respect and sympathy. I admit that some hot-heads will try to take advantage of that event to remind us of their existence, but you may be sure that the great majority intend to greet her in a manner worthy of the good reputation of a people for whom an exquisite sense of hospitality is a tradition and a custom.

THE SENATE

Friday, March 27, 1964

The Senate met at 11.30 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am informed that the House of Commons met this morning and adjourned until Monday afternoon at 2.30.

Honourable senators are all aware that we have an interim supply bill standing for royal assent.

In the circumstances, with leave, I move, seconded by honourable Senator Vaillancourt, that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday next, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, March 30, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, March 30, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa
March 30, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Wishart F. Spence, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, at 9.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Capital and Operating Budgets of the Canadian National Railway Company for the year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 37 of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter 29, Statutes of Canada, 1955, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-299, dated February 28, 1964, approving same. (English text).

Copies of correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premiers of the provinces concerning the agenda and procedures for the Federal-Provincial Conference proposed for March 31, 1964. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, there will be royal assent at approximately a quarter to ten this evening. I would therefore move, seconded by Senator Vaillancourt, that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to re-assemble at the call of the bell at approximately 9.40 p.m.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Wishart F. Spence, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Honourable the Deputy of his Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bill:

An Act respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act.

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, March 31, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 5 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 31, 1964

The Senate met at 5 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of "White Paper on Defence", dated March 1964. (English and French texts).

Report of the National Harbours Board, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 32 of the National Harbours Board Act, chapter 187, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 111, for the relief of Helene Cohen Yaffa.

Resolution 112, for the relief of Gisele Plouffe Rivard.

Resolution 113, for the relief of William Guy Ransom.

Resolution 114, for the relief of Lionel Mortimer Pasen.

Resolution 115, for the relief of Margaret Helen Brander Hall.

Resolution 116, for the relief of Maurice Therrien.

Resolution 117, for the relief of Mary Suszek Cieply.

Resolution 118, for the relief of Elizabeth Morecroft Tooke Hamilton.

Resolution 119, for the relief of Joseph Emelien Rene Racine.

Resolution 120, for the relief of Joan Hembling Impellezzeri.

Resolution 121, for the relief of Jean-Paul Mousseau.

Resolution 122, for the relief of Arthur William Tombs.

Resolution 123, for the relief of Adele Caprioli Fisher.

Resolution 124, for the relief of Rose Marie Luci Gates.

Resolution 125, for the relief of Frances Mary Coghill Cushing.

Resolution 126, for the relief of Jacques Marchessault.

Resolution 127, for the relief of Mario Marino.

Resolution 128, for the relief of Sheila Aronoff Cohen.

Resolution 129, for the relief of Elizabeth Rosamund Bushe Kertland.

Resolution 130, for the relief of Marguerite Lacoste Hof.

Resolution 131, for the relief of Roger Martel.

Resolution 132, for the relief of Josephine Agnes Rita Feehan Maltman.

Resolution 133, for the relief of Constance Marion Hulburd Musgrove.

Resolution 134, for the relief of Joseph Leandre Guitard.

Resolution 135, for the relief of Joan Pauline Day Steeves.

Resolution 136, for the relief of Elizabeth Kolokithia Lambrinoudis.

Resolution 137, for the relief of Sheila Cohen Wright.

Resolution 138, for the relief of Jack Reinhold Russel.

Resolution 139, for the relief of Jean Elaine Lowe Pinatel.

Resolution 140, for the relief of Ethelind Zidulka Silverman.

Resolution 141, for the relief of Jeannine Guerin Archambault.

Resolution 142, for the relief of Clairette Schnurer Leibovici.

Resolution 143, for the relief of George Markozanis.

Resolution 144, for the relief of Hipolite Paul Molla.

Resolution 145, for the relief of Barbara Winnifred Kurtz Oleschuk.

Resolution 146, for the relief of Fleur Aimee Marie Liette Ranger Methot.

Resolution 147, for the relief of Magdolna Rado Robert.

Resolution 148, for the relief of Hisako (Elizabeth) Honma.

Resolution 149, for the relief of Gitta Klages Rybicki.

Resolution 150, for the relief of Mary Eileen Slattery Menard.

Resolution 151, for the relief of Patricia Patience Scarbrough Dixon.

Resolution 152, for the relief of Nicholas Kyrangelos.

Resolution 153, for the relief of Edmund Arthur McMahon.

Resolution 154, for the relief of Elizabeth Cormack Franey.

Resolution 155, for the relief of Reine Ethier Lafleur.

Resolution 156, for the relief of Lawrence Giblin McLean.

Resolution 157, for the relief of Diane Irene Gaudard Chicoyne.

Resolution 158, for the relief of Margaret Stuart Cairns Liontos.

Resolution 159, for the relief of Beverley Grace Smith Proulx.

Resolution 160, for the relief of Marcel Talbot.

He said: Honourable senators will recall that quite recently I proposed an amendment, which was carried, requiring two days' notice for the consideration of resolutions of this nature. If I give two days' notice in this instance, let us hope it will be returnable perhaps on April 20. Under those circumstances, I think it would be a public service to consider these resolutions now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I ask leave of the house to move that these resolutions be considered now. Before doing so, may I give some figures as to the progress made in divorce matters.

To date, 280 cases have been passed by the Commissioner. I think he has done very well; he has been most industrious. While that is not a large number of cases when calculated by the day, it is a considerable number when calculated by the week.

The Commissioner commenced his hearings on January 8 last, approximately 12 weeks ago. Making a mental calculation, that represents 25 cases a week. As he has become more accustomed to the work, on some days he has been hearing as many as eight cases. There are 485 cases yet to be heard by the Commissioner. Of these, 415 were on the docket prior to the opening of this session. He has now heard 280 cases.

During this session, which commenced on February 18, there have been filed 70 petitions. These, together with the 415 petitions already filed at the commencement of the session, give us a total now of 485 cases to be heard.

The number of resolutions presented and adopted since the opening of the session, including those which I have just now tabled, total 160. I think it would be a public service if I were to place on Hansard some statistics showing when these various cases, adopted from time to time, will mature to the point where the applicant may ask the Clerk of the Senate for a certified copy of the resolution.

On March 17 we adopted 24 resolutions which will become effective on April 16; on March 24 we adopted 37 which will become effective on April 23; on March 26 we adopted 50 resolutions which will become effective on April 25; and, if honourable senators grant my present request, the 49 resolutions under discussion today, if adopted, will become effective on April 30. If they are not adopted today, they will mature 30 days from the date we reassemble.

I put that information in full on Hansard.

Therefore, with leave, I move the adoption now of the 49 resolutions I have presented today.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by honourable Senator Lambert, that resolutions 111 to 160, both inclusive, be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not thank Senator Pouliot for that.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING BUREAU

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I give notice of two inquiries concerning publications of the Printing Bureau, and translations of the Translation Bureau. Similar inquiries were on the Order Paper last session. The only difference between those inquiries and the ones I now give notice of is that I am asking for information covering fifteen months instead of twelve. My first inquiry is as follows:

1. What reports and other publications were published during the last fifteen months by the Printing Bureau for each House of the Parliament of Canada and for each one of the various branches of each department, each commission and each agency of the Government of Canada, and what are those which have been printed only in English or only in French, or in both English and French languages?

2. What reports and periodicals are being published daily, weekly, semi-monthly, monthly and yearly by the Printing Bureau in English or in French or in both languages?

3. What aforesaid reports and periodicals are edited by a French editor or by an English editor or by both an English and a French editor?

4. During the above-mentioned period, did the Printing Bureau print any books which had nothing to do with the Parliament or the Government of Canada, and if so, what were their titles and the names of their authors?

TRANSLATORS AND INTERPRETERS

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, with regard to translating and interpreting, I give notice of the following inquiry:

1. During the last fifteen months, how many translators and interpreters have been employed in each department, agency or commission of the Government of Canada,

(a) in Canada?

(b) in other countries?

2. What is the total number of translators and interpreters who have been, during the said period,

(a) employed and paid by the Government of Canada,

(b) appointed by the Civil Service Commission after examination and belong to the Translation Bureau,

(c) appointed by order in council and do not belong to the Translation Bureau?

3. How many translators are employed for the translation of the correspondence of the departments, commissions and agencies of the Government of Canada?

4. How many books have been translated by the Translation Bureau during the same period,

(a) from English into French, and

(b) from French into English?

HIGH COMMISSIONERS TO CANADA

NOTICE OF INQUIRY STANDS

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I ask leave to withdraw Inquiry No. 3 on today's Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: That is all right. I will then give notice. I will proceed in another way.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I withdraw my remark. I made it more in jest than in seriousness, although I am not handing any thanks to my friend for what he just did.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: The honourable gentleman is only ten years older than I am. We are contemporaries, and we are on good terms. I have once quoted him as an example to others for his work, but that does not mean that I shall follow him blindly into every corner. I keep my independence as a treasure.

Honourable senators, with the best possible disposition I now give notice of a new inquiry which I can read or put on the Order Paper.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand that the honourable senator has unanimous consent. I do not think it will be necessary to give notice of his withdrawal of Inquiry No. 3.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might wait until the next sitting in order to withdraw it. Time is immaterial with respect to these matters. My previous inquiries have been on the Order Paper for nearly the whole of the last session in order to give the department time to gather the information required. They will now have even more time in which to answer the questions.

Notice of Inquiry No. 3 stands.

UNITED KINGDOM HIGH COMMISSIONER TO CANADA AND OTHER BRITISH SUBJECTS—VOTING PRIVILEGES

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I now give notice of the following inquiry:

1. Is the High Commissioner to Canada for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland qualified as an elector in virtue of the Canada Elections Act, (R.S.C. 1952, c. 23, as amended) inasmuch as he complies with the provisions of section 14 of the said act?

2. Are the British subjects born in the Commonwealth but outside Canada entitled to enjoy in Canada the same public rights as Canadian citizens do in Canada, upon the same conditions?

3. Are the Canadian citizens entitled to enjoy in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the same public rights as the British subject, upon the same conditions?

4. Is the political status of a British subject the same in Canada as in any other part of the Commonwealth?

5. If not, are there any (a) degrees or (b) differences in the British nationality and what are they in each country?

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the House of Commons has not yet concluded its consideration of the bill dealing with the supplementary estimates. I understand that there is some prospect that consideration will be concluded in the course of the evening.

With this in mind, I now move, seconded by Senator Vaillancourt, that the Senate adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 9 o'clock this evening.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, the bill that we are waiting for from the other place is the appropriation bill, containing supplementary estimates which were tabled in the other house on March 6 and in this house on March 10 last. The bill has been debated in the other place on the following days: March 13, 16, 25, 26, 30, and today, March 31, and still we have not received it.

I think there is little prospect that the bill will reach us in time for us to debate it tonight. It may be that the other place will sit after 10 o'clock and finish its consideration of the bill, in which event I feel it would be too late for the Senate to give it consideration tonight. I would therefore suggest, with the concurrence of the house, that even if the other place concludes its consideration of the bill tonight, the Senate should await the arrival of the bill tomorrow, and that we assemble here at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and at that time debate the bill, if it is available. Of course, I can give no assurance whatever that the bill will be available then.

In the circumstances, it now being ten minutes after nine, I think we should adjourn for the day, and I am prepared to so move.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I make a suggestion?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps honourable senators would like to speak before I make the motion; it may have an effect upon the hour at which we should reassemble tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My thought is this: if there is any chance of the bill going through the Commons tonight, we could meet tomorrow morning and that would enable senators to leave by train in the afternoon or evening, rather than having to wait until four o'clock in the afternoon, when the day will be spent so far as travel is concerned. I am prepared to attend tomorrow morning to see if there is any news concerning the bill; then, if necessary, we can adjourn again. That would allow me, as well as others—because the trains go in all directions—to take the afternoon train, instead of waiting for the afternoon train on the following day.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I was going to make the same suggestion. I am quite in agreement with it.

I was going to ask my friend the Leader of the Government in the Senate, must we go on indefinitely until the end of the week awaiting this bill, or can we have his assurance that if the bill is not before us tomorrow we could adjourn until next Monday? I ask that question for many reasons. One, of course, is that since Thursday a number of our senators have been considered absent. On Friday, although it was a short sitting, they would be considered absent, as well as yesterday, today and tomorrow, and probably the rest of the week. Could we have the honourable leader's assurance that if this famous bill does not come to us in some form tomorrow, we will adjourn at least until next Monday? Of course, it would be impossible to adjourn until April 20, in the circumstances.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, it occurs to me that if a satisfactory conclusion is reached tonight it would be an easy matter to meet tomorrow morning. However, if no conclusion is reached tonight, then I think the suggestion of the leader, that we meet tomorrow afternoon, would be more reasonable, than to suggest now in a blind way that we should come back tomorrow morning. If some compromise or solution is arrived at in the other house tonight and there is a chance of the bill being passed, this information could easily be transmitted to us and we could meet in the morning; otherwise, I see no purpose in our meeting tomorrow morning.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, let me say that I do not intend to place any blame upon the Leader of the Government in this house. I am sure he is doing his best under the circumstances. But I wonder if the members of both houses have any real awareness of what is being said outside by the public as to what is taking place in the other house at the present time.

The Leader of the Government mentioned the number of days these supplementaries have been debated. I am not sure that they have in fact been examined and debated all that time. But surely it was possible for grown men to sit down together in the other place and agree among themselves to pass this supply bill, send it on to the Senate, and then proceed with the examination of the items in the supplementary estimates, and if their study was not concluded by Thursday, then to adjourn over Friday. Surely it cannot be true that the Government of this country would stop if all these supplementary estimates were not passed. The members of the Commons are not getting through to the public the various sides of the controversy that are being taken over there, and I am not myself concerned with that; but I am concerned with the spectacle that is being made of this branch of Parliament. I believe this business of calling us back here as messenger boys is not only an affront to the Senate but, because the Senate is an integral part of Parliament, I think it is an insult to Parliament itself.

I was brought up to reverence Parliament in a home to which Parliament was very dear, because it was something for which my ancestors had struggled for centuries. We thought of Parliament as being very precious. But what have we seen here in the last few days?

When I accepted membership in this house I believed I was being done a great honour. During the past few days I have been made to wonder about it when I have been treated, as I said a moment ago, as a messenger boy. I am serving notice now that if in the future there is a recurrence of this, with bills being sent over here and this house being asked to approve them as if it were a mere gramophone of the House of Commons, I am going to resist. I know such speeches as this have been made here every year, and made by distinguished senators far more experienced than I am. Nevertheless, as a member of this house, I feel I have been humiliated in the last few days, and I am sure that there is not a member in this chamber who does not feel that his position in the Senate has been degraded to some extent by what has occurred.

There was no need whatever for this house to be called into session on Good Friday. There was no reason in the world why sensible men in the other place could not have sat down, as good Canadians, and agreed on a course of procedure. Had they done so, they would not have appeared foolish to people outside. During the past few days people outside Parliament have been saying almost unanimously that the conduct of Parliament in the past few weeks has been a disgrace to our democratic institutions. I believe this is true.

I repeat, I am not blaming the Leader of the Government in this chamber. For fifty years I have been following the deliberations of the Senate, and I doubt very much whether Senator Lougheed, or Senator Dandurand or Senator Meighen would have accepted without a more violent protest than we have heard, the condition which has been imposed on us in this chamber this past week.

I repeat that not again will I sit in my seat in this chamber and agree to a supply bill or any other bill being sent to this house, and this house being told to pass it, or else.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, it is not often that one can be so very eloquent when he is indignant. My honourable friend has been eloquent tonight, and I do not disagree with him. I have also spoken, not so eloquently perhaps, but to the same effect as he has done. I have spoken many times, and for a whole session I had a question on the Order Paper, which I left there deliberately, insisting that we have at least two weeks or 15 days in which to study the supplementary estimates before their adoption by the Senate. As I say, that question was on the Order Paper and could be seen by all, but it appears that nobody read it because it has had no effect at all.

I am ready to co-operate, and I am ready to postpone some speeches I would have made on some matters of public concern, but the time has come when all parties should meet together and try to come to an understanding in order to bring the estimates forward at the proper time. I feel that the budget could have been postponed at least for some days in order to bring the estimates forward. I am very sorry this situation has occurred. However, it is impossible to blame any party in particular. All parties have the same responsibility, and it is time for them to unite to bring an end to such a situation which is deplored by all.

What I have said is not intended to reflect in any way on any of my colleagues in the Senate.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, it is with diffidence that I rise to speak on an occasion like this, being so recently appointed a member of the Senate. But I feel I could not be true to myself or express my love for the trust we hold if I did not fully endorse the remarks of Senator O'Leary (Carleton). This reaction by one so recently ensconced in this chamber is a reflection on the situation in which we find ourselves. I would not rise to speak if I did not feel the same indignation which Senator O'Leary feels on this occasion.

I feel that in some respects the dignity of this chamber has been affronted by the present situation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, there is certainly agreement on all sides in this house, and I am sure if it had been possible at all for agreement among the parties in the other place, such an agreement would have been made. I am sure it was attempted, but without success. The honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) says, quite rightly, that this is the time for the Senate to protest. I think the remarks that have already been made indicate that the Senate does protest. However, this matter is beyond our control at the moment.

As I have indicated, these estimates were tabled in Parliament on March 6, and it is now March 31. They have been debated in the other place on six different days, and yet not one item in the schedule before that house has passed, which means that they have not yet come to the consideration of the supplementary estimates. At least up until a few moments before I came into the chamber this evening, the other place had not passed the first item of these supplementary estimates. The members have been debating other matters.

Whether the rules of relevancy apply in the other place, I do not know, but it seems to me that, while we do not tell them how they should conduct their business nor do we expect them to tell us how we should perform, the rules of relevancy that we endeavour to observe here might very well be given a more careful scrutiny there.

I think I should say too that the other place has yet to deal with six supply motions, each of which gives the members there an opportunity to talk on almost everything they care to discuss, and then the estimates of the various departments have to go before the house. There is ample opportunity for very wide-ranging debate to take place on these occasions. In addition to that, the budget debate has to be finished, and that also allows for a general debate.

We should remember, of course, that the voting of money is not in our hands only. It is primarily the responsibility of the elected representatives of the people. I suppose second chambers will always be in the position we are tonight in respect of a bill of this kind.

The honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) has said—and I paraphrase his remarks—that the Senate is humiliated by this kind of performance. I would point out that I am sure there are many members of the other place who feel a similar kind of humiliation. The Senate has been extremely patient in this matter, but there is really nothing we can do about it unless we choose to adjourn and thus delay the passage of this appropriation bill.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has suggested that we adjourn until tomorrow morning. I do not disagree with that proposal if it has the general concurrence of all senators present. We must remember, of course, that to have royal assent the House of Commons must be in session in order to be summoned here. It is not likely to be in session tomorrow morning except by unanimous consent. We will gain little if honourable senators are put to the inconvenience of attending at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning simply for the purpose of adjourning again.

The Acting Leader of the Opposition has suggested I give an undertaking that if the bill is not available tomorrow we will adjourn until Monday.

I do not know how practical or useful that would be. There are senators from far-flung parts of the country in the chamber tonight, and it will not be helpful to them if we adjourn until Monday and then have to come back again. There may be others who could take their places, but there is a difficulty about that aspect of the matter.

However, if it meets with the concurrence of the senators present tonight, I have no objection to the Senate adjourning until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock, although I feel that we will accomplish little by doing so.

Are there any honourable senators who would care to make any further remarks on this point? If the feeling generally is that the motion be that we adjourn until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock, I would be happy to make it, but I do not wish to divide the house on this question and I am sure honourable senators would not wish to do so.

Hon. Allister Grosart: The honourable senator has asked for an opinion. I would favour the original motion he suggested, for the very reason he gave us, that the other place will not be in session tomorrow morning—short of a miracle happening—and therefore we would not be able to proceed with royal assent.

Hon. Mr. Power: Unless they finish in the other place tonight and then adjourn.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If by unanimous consent the Commons agree to sit and finish tonight, then 11 o'clock is much preferable to 4 o'clock as our hour of adjournment.

If it meets the convenience of all honourable senators, we can adjourn until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock, look at the situation at that time and then, if necessary, adjourn until later tomorrow. Is that agreeable?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I therefore move, with leave, seconded by honourable Senator Vaillancourt, that when the Senate adjourns tonight it do stand adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 1, 1964

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CONSUMER CREDIT

COMMONS BILLS REFERRED TO JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the subject matter of the following bills has been referred by that house to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit:

Bill C-3, An Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (Wage Earners' Assignments).

Bill C-13, An Act to amend the Small Loans Act (Advertising).

Bill C-20, An Act to amend the Small Loans Act.

Bill C-23, An Act to provide for the Control of Consumer Credit.

Bill C-44, An Act to amend the Bills of Exchange Act and the Interest Act (Off-store Instalment Sales).

Bill C-51, An Act to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (Instalment Purchases).

Bill C-52, An Act to amend the Interest Act.

Bill C-53, An Act to amend the Interest Act (Application of Small Loans Act).

Bill C-63, An Act to provide for Control of the Use of Collateral Bills and Notes in Consumer Credit Transactions.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, last evening, while the House of Commons was still sitting, we adjourned until this hour today. We did so with the hope that by this time we would have some definite indication as to the progress of the appropriation bill we are expecting to receive for consideration.

The news about the progress of that bill is now no more definite than it was at adjournment time yesterday. Today the House of Commons will sit at 2.30 and, under its rules, unless they are suspended by unanimous consent, it will adjourn at six o'clock this afternoon. With the other matters before that house, the probability is that there will not be sufficient time before six o'clock for it to conclude consideration of the measure we are now awaiting.

To keep all honourable senators as fully informed as I can, I may say that there is some possibility of the House of Commons sitting tonight in an attempt to dispose of the appropriation bill.

Once again we are faced with a decision as to what we should do in the interests of expediting the public business. A number of choices are open to us, and I would invite all honourable senators to discuss this matter briefly this morning so that jointly we can come to the best decision. I think first we might consider waiting until we know what the House of Commons will do early this afternoon, and what the prospects are for later sittings today. That would involve our adjourning until four o'clock or six o'clock this afternoon.

In the event that the House of Commons sits only until 6 o'clock this afternoon, we might consider adjourning, with leave, until, say, 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. The advantage, if any, in such a move would be that if the House of Commons finished its consideration of this legislation tomorrow afternoon we could then debate it, and royal assent could be arranged.

A further alternative is that we adjourn this house until Friday at 11 o'clock in the morning. We would hope that by that time the bill would be before us.

I think honourable senators will agree that throughout this rather distressing week I have not tried to impose any views upon this chamber. If I may say so, I am very proud of the way the Senate has performed since this process began. Nearly one-third of the membership has been present on all occasions. We have been ready and willing to discharge whatever responsibility we have in respect of a bill such as this one. This has been done at considerable inconvenience to many senators.

I would invite honourable senators to express their views as to the best course of action to follow and, in view of the co-operation that you have shown all week, I am sure we can arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I must say that until midnight of March 31 it was my understanding that the passage of this bill was a matter of urgency and it was necessary for us to meet here two and even three times a day; but having passed midnight at the end of the fiscal year we know there is no further urgency, and that we have another 30 days within which we can approve these supplementary estimates.

I have a precedent on this very point, in what occurred on April 18, 1962. The then Leader of the Government, the Honourable Walter Aseltine, introduced the bill entitled "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1962." Section 1 of that bill says: "This act may be cited as the Appropriation Act No. 4, 1962." The honourable Leader of the Government at that time, in introducing that bill, had this to say:

> The bill is in the usual form with the exception of section 4, which it was necessary to include because these supplementary estimates were not passed prior to March 31 last. That section reads as follows:
>
> "Notwithstanding the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, the amounts appropriated by this act may be paid at any time on or before the thirtieth day of April, one thousand nine hundred and sixty-two, and such payment shall be deemed to have been made in and be chargeable to the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and sixty-two."

Honourable senators, it is my humble submission that, even if we meet tomorrow and Friday and again Saturday, we cannot assume that the bill will even then have passed the other place. I understand that up until late yesterday they had not completed the discussion on the first item, which pertained to agriculture.

I appreciate that the honourable Leader of the Government has asked us for suggestions, and I am serious when I suggest that this house should adjourn now until April 20. We would have then about 10 days within which to discuss that bill, when it is before us.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, with most of what honourable Senator Choquette has said I heartily agree. The sacramental sacrosanct date of March 31 has passed now; and whether these estimates come before us on April 1, 5, 10, or 20, steps can be taken by the Government, by legislation or other means, whereby these moneys can be paid.

I would have been prepared to accept, without the slightest hesitation, the suggestion made by my honourable friend Senator Choquette last evening, that we adjourn until Monday next, April 6, and I still support that suggestion.

I suppose this is neither the time nor the place to discuss the reasons for what I might call the mess in which the whole of Parliament is at the present time. Whether it is due to the intellectual political amateurism of one party, or the stupid obstinacy of another, or the blatant opportunism of another, the fact is that in the public mind Parliament has suffered a reverse more serious than any I have known for many years.

I believe that Parliament as such no longer holds the high and dignified position which it should have in the public esteem. That being to my mind the fact, there is no reason why this branch of Parliament, the Senate, should be treated to the kind of procedure which we have had to follow in these hour-to-hour adjournments. Let us be specific and say to what date and to what hour we shall adjourn. This dilemma, not knowing whether or not people in the other place will make up their minds, makes it indecorous and undignified for us to carry on in this fashion.

I quite understand and agree with my honourable friend that up to March 31 there was necessity for it. However, that date has passed and the necessity, to my mind, has disappeared.

I want it to be very well understood by my honourable friend the Leader of the Government and other senators that I am not by any means raising the standard of rebellion. I personally have the highest esteem for my honourable Leader. I felt last night when he was addressing the house, even though he was reticent as to the stand he took in Cabinet, and properly so, that he shared at least the views of all members of this house, that we were being placed in an undignified position, a position which we could not stand for much longer.

I suggest, therefore, that today—allowing one more chance, by sitting this afternoon or this evening—our Leader be instructed to tell those with whom he has to deal, that the Senate is sick and tired of this kind of procedure, that we will adjourn until Monday, April 6.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I would like to hear from the Leader of the Government once again. Will he tell us what the urgency is now, if there is any urgency, for the passing of this bill? What is there in the bill, or what is its subject matter, that requires attention in a special way?

Hon. Mr. Power: We have not even come to the bill yet.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No; we have not even received the bill. It is still under consideration, and we are sitting here waiting to deal with it in accordance with our good judgment.

Allow me to make one comment with regard to the Senate's position in connection with this matter. We heard some eloquent speeches yesterday with regard to the indignity to the Senate. I do not agree with those statements. It is true that it is not very dignified to sit in the antechambers of the great, "cooling your heels." That does not pander much to one's egotism. At the same time, let it be thoroughly understood that we are in no wise responsible for the situation which presents itself to us. On the other hand, as the leader has said, we have been here ready and prepared to do our duty and to attend to the interests of the public, as it appeared to us at the time, and at considerable inconvenience to many of us. I cannot see that we have been in any way downgraded by what has taken place. Rather, I would say that we are entitled to some credit for the patience we have exercised and for the reserve which has been observed by all of us in this chamber. I can take some credit to myself, as can other members, for being here at all under these circumstances.

I agree with the Acting Leader of the Opposition that we ought to adjourn now until April 20. Unless the Leader of the Government has something to say with regard to the urgency of the situation, we should stay here no longer. Perhaps we should sit this afternoon, and then adjourn. However, I see no reason why we should not adjourn right now, go home, and come back when there is work to be done.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do appreciate the fact that honourable senators have expressed their views this morning about this situation. I thank them for their views and for the reasonable way in which they have been put forward.

May I first deal with the point raised by the Acting Leader of the Opposition? He referred to a section in the Appropriation Bill No. 4 passed in 1962. As he very well knows, the present appropriation bill is not yet before us, and I believe it is not even before the House of Commons at this time. It may well be that a similar section will form a part of this bill. Whether or not it will, no one is able to say until the bill is distributed in the other place, when for the first time it will be open to public inspection. However, I do thank the honourable senator for drawing this matter to my attention and I assure him that it will be brought to the attention of the appropriate authorities.

The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) and the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) have substantially agreed on one point. They want to know, now that the "magic hour" of midnight, March 31, has passed, whether there is any urgency with respect to this appropriation bill being debated in this chamber and being given royal assent. I understand there are a number of items in the schedule to the supplementary estimates now before both branches of Parliament which will require urgent attention. One involves payments into the Unemployment Insurance Fund. I understand that the fund is very low, and with anticipated payments out of it in the very near future, money may be required to replenish it within a matter of days. That alone indicates an element of urgency about the legislation.

Honourable senators may ask: Why were not this and similar items in this appropriation bill dealt with separately? I believe the answer is that in making its plans, the normal practice of the Government is to place all the estimates in one bill, including these urgent items, and a great many other items which call for payment. Unfortunately, the bill has been held up, and so both the urgent and the routine items have been delayed.

There are other urgent items in the supplementaries. There is a salary item to be dealt with under the Department of Finance, to which some urgency and importance are attached. I understand there are accounts of the Department of External Affairs which involve payments to other than Canadian nationals, and the Government and Parliament wish these payments to be made promptly.

Honourable senators, I can say little more about the question of urgency. However, I believe I have said enough to indicate there is an element of urgency and that it would be desirable, in the public interest, for this bill to come before this chamber as soon as possible to be debated and, if approved, to receive royal assent.

I think it is fair to say what I have said just now. The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), who does not speak often enough, has had wide experience in the Parliament of Canada, and when he does speak we listen to him with more than usual attention. He has said that Parliament has suffered as a result of the proceedings which we have witnessed here in the past week, and with this I think most of us agree. But whether or not we agree, I think the members of the public have reached that conclusion.

I do not want to embark upon any criticism of the other place, but I do give credit to the members of this chamber for their readiness and willingness to be here to do the duty required of them. The decision of course is not mine; I am in the hands of the house and, like all honourable senators, I am ready and willing to abide by the decision of the house in respect to the time of adjournment. As I said in my opening remarks, I think it would be too optimistic to expect that this measure would be ready to receive royal assent tonight; but there is a possibility, as the senator from Gulf has suggested, that we would know something about this a little later today. Honourable senators may feel that since we are here it might be the part of wisdom for us to adjourn until later today at the call of the bell for the purpose of assessing the situation then.

I know we do not want to engage in a general debate on this matter, but if it is decided to adjourn until later this afternoon, and if then there is no definite word as to what we can expect, I shall ask for leave to adjourn until Friday morning at 11 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What about Monday?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would not want that possibility to be ruled out either, but if we are going to sit later today, perhaps honourable senators would consider sitting Friday morning at 11 o'clock. My personal feeling about the matter is that we would be better off to sit on Friday, as there is a good prospect that the bill may be dealt with in the other place by tomorrow night. Honourable senators, for a very good reason I am not suggesting that we adjourn until late tomorrow night. Even if this measure is dealt with by the House of Commons by 10 o'clock tomorrow night, it is not my intention to ask the Senate, after having waited all week, to sit late tomorrow night to give rushed consideration to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I suggest that we do not sit tomorrow night, and that Friday, for the reasons I have given, might be the best day.

I know there is irritation in the chamber even at my making this suggestion, but I am trying to balance the problems, irritations and frustrations against the duty we are required to perform.

Unless there are other views to be expressed by honourable senators, I would move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I would like to suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government that he move we adjourn until 6 o'clock. We would then have the advantage of knowing what happened in the House of Commons throughout the afternoon until 6 o'clock.

I was present in the gallery of the other place at 10 o'clock last night, and it was not very hard to sense what was the feeling of that house. I think at 6 o'clock tonight we will be in a better position to make an assessment of the situation, and we can then consider the possibility suggested by Senator Choquette and Senator Roebuck, that we adjourn until April 20.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is an excellent suggestion, and I thank the honourable senator for it.

HIGH COMMISSIONERS IN CANADA

NOTICE OF INQUIRY WITHDRAWN

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

That he will inquire of the Government:

1. Are the High Commissioners to Canada for
   (a) the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland,
   (b) Australia,
   (c) Ceylon,
   (d) Ghana,
   (e) Malaya,
   (f) New Zealand, and
   (g) South Africa

   qualified as electors in virtue of the Canada Elections Act, (R.S., c. 39, as amended), inasmuch as they comply with the provisions of section 14 of the said act?

2. Are the British subjects referred to in No. 1 enjoying in Canada the same public rights as Canadian citizens do, upon the same conditions?

3. Is the political status of a British subject the same in Canada as in any other part of the Commonwealth?

4. If not, are there any
   (a) degrees, or
   (b) differences in the British nationality and what are they in each country?

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Dropped. It has been answered personally.

I ask that Inquiries Nos. 4, 5 and 6 in my name stand until April 20.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Resolutions numbered 111 to 160, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 111, for the relief of Helene Cohen Yaffa.

Resolution 112, for the relief of Gisele Plouffe Rivard.

Resolution 113, for the relief of William Guy Ransom.

Resolution 114, for the relief of Lionel Mortimer Pasen.

Resolution 115, for the relief of Margaret Helen Brander Hall.

Resolution 116, for the relief of Maurice Therrien.

Resolution 117, for the relief of Mary Suszek Cieply.

Resolution 118, for the relief of Elizabeth Morecroft Tooke Hamilton.

Resolution 119, for the relief of Joseph Emelien Rene Racine.

Resolution 120, for the relief of Joan Hembling Impellezzeri.

Resolution 121, for the relief of Jean-Paul Mousseau.

Resolution 122, for the relief of Arthur William Tombs.

Resolution 123, for the relief of Adele Caprioli Fisher.

Resolution 124, for the relief of Rose Marie Luci Gates.

Resolution 125, for the relief of Frances Mary Coghill Cushing.

Resolution 126, for the relief of Jacques Marchessault.

Resolution 127, for the relief of Mario Marino.

Resolution 128, for the relief of Sheila Aronoff Cohen.

Resolution 129, for the relief of Elizabeth Rosamund Bushe Kertland.

Resolution 130, for the relief of Marguerite Lacoste Hof.

Resolution 131, for the relief of Roger Martel.

Resolution 132, for the relief of Josephine Agnes Rita Feehan Maltman.

Resolution 133, for the relief of Constance Marion Hulburd Musgrove.

Resolution 134, for the relief of Joseph Leandre Guitard.

Resolution 135, for the relief of Joan Pauline Day Steeves.

Resolution 136, for the relief of Elizabeth Kolokithia Lambrinoudis.

Resolution 137, for the relief of Sheila Cohen Wright.

Resolution 138, for the relief of Jack Reinhold Russel.

Resolution 139, for the relief of Jean Elaine Lowe Pinatel.

Resolution 140, for the relief of Ethelind Zidulka Silverman.

Resolution 141, for the relief of Jeannine Guerin Archambault.

Resolution 142, for the relief of Clairette Schnurer Leibovici.

Resolution 143, for the relief of George Markozanis.

Resolution 144, for the relief of Hipolite Paul Molla.

Resolution 145, for the relief of Barbara Winnifred Kurtz Oleschuk.

Resolution 146, for the relief of Fleur Aimee Marie Liette Ranger Methot.

Resolution 147, for the relief of Magdolna Rado Robert.

Resolution 148, for the relief of Hisako (Elizabeth) Honma.

Resolution 149, for the relief of Gitta Klages Rybicki.

Resolution 150, for the relief of Mary Eileen Slattery Menard.

Resolution 151, for the relief of Patricia Patience Scarbrough Dixon.

Resolution 152, for the relief of Nicholas Kyrangelos.

Resolution 153, for the relief of Edmund Arthur McMahon.

Resolution 154, for the relief of Elizabeth Cormack Franey.

Resolution 155, for the relief of Reine Ethier Lafleur.

Resolution 156, for the relief of Lawrence Giblin McLean.

Resolution 157, for the relief of Diane Irene Gaudard Chicoyne.

Resolution 158, for the relief of Margaret Stuart Cairns Liontos.

Resolution 159, for the relief of Beverley Grace Smith Proulx.

Resolution 160, for the relief of Marcel Talbot.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 6 o'clock this evening.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 6 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I am informed that the private members' hour in the other place, which was scheduled to start at 5 o'clock this afternoon, was dispensed with and that the appropriation bill was discussed during that period. Items for the Department of External Affairs were considered, but were not completed.

Unanimous consent has been given in the other place to sit tonight, because the items for the Department of External Affairs must be completed. I am informed that the Unemployment Insurance Fund will be debated this evening, and there may be other items of interest which will be considered, perhaps at some length.

I may frankly say that, in my judgment—and again this is a "guesstimate" rather than an estimate—there is little prospect of this bill reaching final determination in the other place this evening. The prospects for tomorrow are even difficult to guess. However, the fact that in the other place two significant steps have been taken towards progress—they have foregone the private members' hour and have agreed to sit on a Wednesday night—indicates they are showing some determination to conclude their discussion.

Honourable senators, at this time it might be appropriate for the honourable Acting Leader of the Opposition and other honourable senators to speak on this point, but my own feeling is that there is little prospect of getting the completed bill this evening.

Perhaps I should add this observation. On a number of occasions I have said how grateful I am to all honourable senators for their patience. I think, too, that a sense of duty is actuating the Senate. We are required to deal with these matters, and we have been willing and ready to do so all this week. That is an important point which the public should know. Having gone as far as we can, we should certainly be careful to preserve the position which we have taken consistently throughout the week.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I appreciate very much the position in which the Leader of the Government finds himself. I would say, however, that he seems a little too optimistic. As he has already pointed out to this house, we are all here to co-operate. I think we must bring to an end the complaints which have been lodged during the week to the effect that we cannot go on holidays. School children are on holidays; their parents are working. We are paid to work, and we will stay here as we should. That is the attitude we should take from now on.

The Unemployment Insurance Fund will be discussed at considerable length in the other place, and the question of D.V.A. hospitals being turned over to civilian authorities will also take some time to discuss.

Honourable senators, if we were to adjourn until 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, I feel confident that we would have some concrete work to do then. Therefore, I suggest, subject to the approval of all senators present, that we adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. White: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government a question?

At the beginning of the sitting in the other place today, there was considerable discussion on the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and that was all that was discussed. The honourable Leader mentioned that the members of the other place were on External Affairs. Does he mean that certain items for External Affairs will have to be passed in this appropriation bill, along with whatever money is required for the Unemployment Insurance Fund?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am sure no one knows this better than the honourable senator—and perhaps I am talking about the obvious—but there are a number of items in various departments, including External Affairs, Citizenship, Fisheries, Forestry and so on; then at the end of these supplementary estimates there are Loans, Investments and Advances—items for various departments. One item which apparently is going to cause some debate tonight is item L27e, dealing with the Unemployment Insurance Fund, under the Department of Labour. I do not think the other house has reached that item yet. As a matter of convenience to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is obliged to be away on some business, I believe they agreed to deal with the items under External Affairs at 5 o'clock. The best information I have is that the other house did not finish those items, but I would think they are close to concluding that part of the discussion. Their next item of business is the one to which I have referred under the Department of Labour. Does that answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Denis: Honourable senators, while I was in the other place this afternoon they agreed to sit tonight provided the Unemployment Insurance Fund would be discussed. Of course, one cannot be sure that they will, in fact, deal with it tonight.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I thank the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette) for the views he has expressed. In view of what he has said, and in the circumstances, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today, it stand adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 4 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 2, 1964

The Senate met at 4 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, despite the efforts made yesterday in the other place towards progress—by unanimous consent, to suspend consideration of private members' bills between 5 and 6 o'clock and to sit last evening from 8 to 10 o'clock—I am informed that progress has been very slow.

This afternoon the question period lasted no more than a half hour, and although the appropriation bill has been before that place since about 3 o'clock, I am informed that progress is negligible.

In the circumstances I think it very unlikely that this bill will reach us before 10 o'clock tonight. Should it reach us by that hour, I do not think it would be fair to suggest that the Senate should then begin its discussion of a measure for which we have been waiting about a week.

I think, therefore, our best course of action would be to adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, in the hope that by that time the bill will be available.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Agreed.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, as I had some time to spare I enjoyed myself by reading the text of the debates of yesterday and the day before in this chamber on this same subject matter. I have to take objection to some statements that have been made because I have given to no one power of attorney to speak on my behalf.

Referring to the eloquent speech of my honourable friend, Senator O'Leary, I must say that I was so enthused by the music of his voice that I became absent-minded with respect to the expressions he used in his oration. I agree fully with the first four lines of what he said:

> —let me say that I do not intend to place any blame upon the Leader of the Government in this house. I am sure he is doing his best under the circumstances.

That is what I would have said. Those words were appropriate to the occasion. Then he went on:

> But I wonder if the members of both houses have any real awareness of what is being said outside by the public as to what is taking place in the other house at the present time.

Honourable senators, for the first time in my life, every time I left the building the constables at the door remarked to me, "You senators are working hard these times." I had a taxi to go home and the taxi driver said to me, "How much work you do? When will you take any vacation?"

I went down to my apartment, where the desk clerk said the same thing, "You are coming home late tonight; you must be working very hard." That was the impression of the people.

My honourable friend Senator O'Leary spoke of the reaction amongst the people. I must tell you what it is. I went to buy a tie, and the clerk at the store repeated the same story, "You are very busy these times at the Senate; it is extraordinary how much you work." It went on like that, and for a very good reason.

The reason is that the Canadian people are no longer informed by the press about what is going on in Parliament. In the old days, when we read the paper we knew what had happened every day under this roof, in both houses of Parliament. Now there are some articles on various matters; perhaps one point is reported, but anyone who reads the paper does not get the complete information. I make a few exceptions. I make exceptions in the case of the Ottawa Journal, the Ottawa Citizen, Le Droit of Ottawa; and for my favourite paper, the Halifax Chronicle Herald; for the Gazette, La Presse, and some other papers.

The press is not as good now as it was, and therefore it must assume a certain degree of responsibility for the fact that the people are not as well informed about public business in Parliament as they were some years ago. In fact, when I am at home, if I am late in receiving the official publications, I have to telephone to Ottawa to find out what will happen on the next day.

Senator O'Leary continued:

> But surely it was possible for grown men to sit down together in the other place and agree among themselves to pass this supply bill, send it on to the Senate—

This was said by him on March 31. I was unavoidably absent the day before. What is interesting is that third reading of the interim supply bill did take place in both houses on March 26.

What is more interesting is that the day before Senator O'Leary spoke, namely, March 30, royal assent had been given in this chamber to the interim supply bill. My honourable friend Senator O'Leary was present, according to the record, and he witnessed the ceremony; therefore, what he suggested should be done on March 31, in fact had been done the day before. My honourable colleague continued:

> —and then proceed with the examination of the items in the supplementary estimates, and if their study was not concluded by Thursday, then to adjourn over Friday.

That would have been impossible, according to the rules of the house, because unanimous consent was not given to such procedure. My colleague continued:

> Surely it cannot be true that the Government of this country would stop if all these supplementary estimates were not passed. The members of the Commons are not getting through to the public the various sides of the controversy that are being taken over there, and I am not myself concerned with that—

It is unfortunate. My honourable friend should be concerned with that, and should use his newspaper to convey that information. It is not for members of Parliament, who are busy dealing with legislation, to do that. It is for the press to inform their readers about these matters.

My friend went on to say:

> —but I am concerned with the spectacle that is being made of this branch of Parliament. I believe this business of calling us back here as messenger boys is not only an affront to the Senate but, because the Senate is an integral part of Parliament, I think it is an insult to Parliament itself.

Of course, there are ups and downs in life, and we may take the elevator to come down as we have to take the elevator to go up. It has been always like that. We are waiting to receive the legislation from the House of Commons.

What I am going to say now may be unpopular for some or all of you, but I believe in it sincerely. According to the rules of fundamental freedoms and human rights, the members of the other house have the unquestionable right to discuss every matter that comes before them, inasmuch as they comply with the standing orders of their chamber. It is unfortunate that there was a miscalculation in the preparation of the agenda of the Orders of the Day of the other house, but that is not a reason for saying we are messenger boys. We are not messenger boys; we do our duty, which is to study in turn the matters now being debated in the House of Commons. I am sure that every one will agree with that.

My honourable friend continued as follows:

> I was brought up to reverence Parliament in a home to which Parliament was very dear, because it was something for which my ancestors had struggled for centuries. We thought of Parliament as being very precious. But what have we seen here in the last few days?
>
> When I accepted membership in this house I believed I was being done a great honour. During the past few days I have been made to wonder about it—

That is probably a clerical error. He may have said, "to wander around it," but I will take it as "wonder." In any event, the record says:

> —wonder about it when I have been treated, as I said a moment ago, as a messenger boy. I am serving notice now that if in the future there is a recurrence of this, with bills being sent over here and this house being asked to approve them as if it were a mere gramophone of the House of Commons, I am going to resist.

That is what I have always done with all my power, when I felt it to be necessary. We have the right to explain our position and to express our views. The word "resist" might be strong; that is the language my honourable friend used, but it is not so bad as that. I was sorry to read those words from the honourable gentleman, because I sympathize with him and I like him. He continued:

> Nevertheless, as a member of this house, I feel I have been humiliated in the last few days—

I am sorry that my honourable friend has been humiliated in the last few days. I have not been.

> —and I am sure that there is not a member in this chamber who does not feel that his position in the Senate has been degraded to some extent by what has occurred.

This is why I have risen to protest. I do not consider that I have been degraded, because we have done our very best to accommodate the House of Commons. If the suggestion which was made to adjourn until Monday next had been accepted, and if the estimates should be passed tomorrow, then we would be blamed for delaying the promulgation of those estimates.

What I regret particularly is the arraignment of the house Leader of the Conservative party, the Honourable Gordon Churchill, by my honourable colleague Senator O'Leary. I never thought he could be so violent towards one of the head men of his party in the House of Commons. It is an arraignment that neither Senator Lougheed, nor Senator Arthur Meighen of the Conservatives, nor Senator Dandurand of the Liberals, would have made.

Senator O'Leary continued:

> There was no need whatever for this house to be called into session on Good Friday.

We came here to adjourn. We had to abide by the rules of both Houses of Parliament, and we sat only for prayers and to adjourn. It was to show our respect for the Holy Day.

> There was no reason in the world why sensible men in the other place could not have sat down, as good Canadians, and agreed on a course of procedure.

This was in fact suggested; and the Minister of Justice came with an olive branch in his hand. He asked for understanding and agreement, and it was flatly refused by the house Leader of the Conservative party.

> Had they done so, they would not have appeared foolish to people outside.

To call somebody in his own party "foolish," I find pretty hard to understand. I know Mr. Gordon Churchill, and he is not the most amenable of all those I know, but to conclude he is "foolish," is it not too strong?

> During the past few days people outside Parliament have been saying almost unanimously that the conduct of Parliament in the past few weeks has been a disgrace to our democratic institutions. I believe this is true.

I regret that language very much, and I am sure my honourable friend had not written his speech before delivering it to us, because his editorial writings in the newspaper are much more moderate than this speech. That is all for Senator O'Leary.

Our new colleague, the honourable Senator Lang, said that he fully endorsed the remarks of Senator O'Leary.

> This reaction by one so recently ensconced—

That is a rare word, and I had to put my glasses on and use a magnifying glass.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Honourable senators, now that my friend has finished with Senator O'Leary, I would like to ask him under what rule he is speaking at the present time, and to ascertain if he is really in order.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: The same rule that my honourable friend took advantage of when he spoke.

Hon. Mr. White: I rise on a point of order. I point out to Your Honour that at the present time there is no business before the house. The Leader of the Government made a short statement upon which, I understand, in the usual way any member is entitled to comment if he so desires. Apart from that, there is nothing before the house, and I do not believe that a debate like this is in order.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If I am permitted to say a word in explanation—

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it on the point of order?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I have a question of privilege. I want to explain my position.

The Hon. the Speaker: Does the honourable senator now wish to speak to the question of privilege?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I want to speak on the question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. White: I would ask that the remarks on the point of privilege be to the point and brief, for once.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I understood there was a motion by the Leader of the Government to adjourn the house, and therefore I fail to see how there could be any debate on such a motion. I never heard of such a thing.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I interrupt the discussion to point out that a motion to adjourn has not yet been made. As we all know, for the past two or three days there has been no business before the house except the question as to when we should adjourn. This afternoon I thought Senator Pouliot was going to make some point in regard to that matter. I now feel that he was out of order because he has been indulging too much in a discussion of personalities. One can disagree with another honourable senator, but I think the honourable Senator Pouliot has been indulging too much in personalities. I would ask Senator Pouliot to deal only with the question of the adjournment of the house, and not to criticize the attitude taken by another honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, in this case the honourable gentleman, Senator O'Leary (Carleton), has spoken on behalf of all of us. He said, and I was here when he spoke:

> —and I am sure that there is not a member in this chamber who does not feel that his position in the Senate has been degraded to some extent by what has occurred.

My point is, he had no authority from me to use that language. I do not consider that I have been degraded by what is happening in the House of Commons, nor by what has been done in the Senate. I can paddle my own canoe. I gave no power of attorney to anyone to impute those sentiments to me.

There are other things too, but I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have not used a single unparliamentary word; the strongest words I read were from the speech of the honourable senator, and they are much stronger than any language I have ever used in Parliament. Perhaps there is a little confusion over the fact that I was reading what had been said by another senator, but the expressions I have read were not those that I normally use in the Senate.

The reason I mention Senator Lang is that he said he fully endorsed the remarks made by Senator O'Leary. He said, "This reaction by one so recently ensconced in this chamber—" I looked up the word "ensconced" in the dictionary, and I found that it means to cover or shelter; to place or hide securely; to conceal; to establish or settle comfortably or snugly. I then looked up the word "snugly," and it means serenely comfortable or peacefully secure.

I am not peacefully secure when my honourable friends impute their sentiments to me. I regret to have to say that because I have a personal liking for Senator O'Leary, and the other new senator seems to be a nice fellow; but, in future, I hope they will mind their own business and speak on my behalf only when they have personal power of attorney from me.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, April 3, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—COMMUNIQUÉ PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I desire also to table the communiqué in English and French, of the Federal-Provincial Conference at Quebec City, dated April 2, 1964, and the opening statement of the Prime Minister of Canada to that conference on conditional grants and shared-cost programs, also in English and French.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, may I ask if the communiqué will appear in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It will not appear except by order of this house. If honourable senators so desire I would be very happy to move that it be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

For text of communiqué see appendix, page 284.

TRANSLATIONS BUREAU

TERMINOLOGICAL BULLETINS—NOTICE OF MOTION STANDS

On the notice of motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

That copies of all the terminological bulletins issued in French and in English, and in both languages by the Terminology Service of the Translation Bureau during the years 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963 be tabled in the Senate.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Mr. Speaker and honourable colleagues, this motion has been on the Order Paper since March 13, and it would be very easy to answer it. The Department of Secretary of State has only to table the bulletins mentioned therein. There is no excuse for the delay. I hope that when we meet again the department will have sent that information to the honourable Leader of the Government. I do not insist further now. I ask that the notice of motion stand until the twentieth of this month, please.

The Hon. the Speaker: The notice stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, may I say I am informed that very considerable progress has been made in the other place on the bill for which we have been waiting. I understand there is a real prospect—and I believe many honourable senators share this understanding—that this measure will reach us some time late this afternoon, perhaps shortly after 4 o'clock.

I would move, after we have heard from the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette), that with the approval of all honourable senators the Senate do stand adjourned until the call of the bell at approximately 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May we expect to receive the entire bill, or certain parts of it incorporated in a new bill?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): My understanding is that we shall have the entire bill.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: If the bill should not reach us this afternoon, what would be the alternative?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, we have been faced with so many alternatives that I think we have run out of imaginative answers. However, I think we are at the point now where we can expect something definite. I cannot say more than that.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): If the bill does not reach us before 6 o'clock what will happen then?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would prefer to wait until about 4.30 o'clock to see what might happen. I hope my friend will continue to show the patience which honourable senators have shown all week.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): May I ask the honourable leader if, whenever the bill does come here, we shall be given some time to discuss it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, certainly.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 4.40 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1964

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-86, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, I am sure that after the long wait we have of more than a week, there is some gratification at seeing this measure before us at last. However, this is not the full measure we expected to receive when we began our vigil. This is a bill to provide for a portion of the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964. The amount proposed to be granted by this measure is to be found in the margin opposite clause 2 of the bill, and that amount is $130,793,985.

Perhaps I should just take a moment to give the background of the measure we now have before us. In the last fiscal year there were five appropriation bills. The first of these granted interim supply for the first four months of the last fiscal year; that is, the months of April, May, June and July of 1963. The amount of that first bill was $1,430-odd million. Bill No. 2 granted interim supply for the months of August and September, in the amount of $724 million. I think it would be more convenient if I used round figures in this portion of the discussion. Bill No. 3 granted interim supply for the months of October and November in the amount of $747 million. Bill No. 4 granted interim supply for the month of December, 1963, in the amount of $377 million. Bill No. 5 granted the balance of the main and supplementary estimates, in the amount of $990 million. The total amount voted by Parliament for the last fiscal year, up to and including the approval of Bill No. 5, was $4,270 million—in round figures.

As honourable senators are aware, at or after the conclusion of a fiscal year there are always items representing unpaid bills, new expenditures—items that have to be provided for in connection with the service that has been conducted for the public by the various departments of Government. Earlier in the week I expected that I would be presenting for your approval a bill containing the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64, which ended on March 31 of this year. However, that entire bill which we had been expecting has not yet been finally approved by the House of Commons, and what we have before us today is a portion of the amounts intended to be approved by Parliament at this time.

I think I should say by way of introduction that, according to my understanding, the House of Commons is now busily working on the other items in the supplementary estimates (E) which were tabled in this house on March 10, and perhaps there is some prospect it will finish that portion of that measure later today.

It might serve the convenience of honourable senators if, before I direct their attention to the schedule, I first deal with the sections of the bill. I may say that the form of this bill is that in which bills of this character are usually presented to Parliament at this time.

The first section simply gives the title of the bill, Appropriation Act No. 2, 1964. The second section simply authorizes the expenditure of the money to be provided if the bill is passed by Parliament and, as I have said earlier, the amount authorized to be spent under the authority of this bill is $130,793,985.

Section 3 provides that the amount authorized to be paid out under the authority of the bill must be paid out and applied only for the purposes specified in the items in the schedule appended to the bill. And subsection 2 of this section provides that the provisions of each item in the schedule shall be deemed to be enacted by Parliament on the first day of April 1963, which is the date of the opening of the fiscal year to which these items relate.

Section 4 of the bill confers authority to enter into commitments up to the amounts stated in the various items, and provides that no commitments can be made beyond the amount stated in the items, and, in any event, only after the approval of the Comptroller of the Treasury has been given. This is a normal provision, and later in the discussion I shall have occasion to give an example from the schedule of just what this provision means.

I do not think I need spend any time upon section 5. My honourable friend, the acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette), will be glad to see this provision in the bill. He drew the attention of the Senate to this a few days ago when, it will be remembered, I gave an undertaking that I would bring this matter to the attention of the authorities. It is now in the bill. The explanation I have been given is that before the end of the fiscal year the section which is here as section 5 is not required, but after the end of the fiscal year it is required. It meets the purposes to which the acting Leader of the Opposition referred in his discussion in this chamber a few days ago.

Honourable senators, perhaps it would be helpful if I referred directly to the schedules. It will be seen that they are broken down by departments. The first is the Department of Agriculture, at page 4, for which the total amount hereby voted is $127,343,681.

The second department for which funds are provided in the schedule of this bill is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, also on page 4, and the total amount provided is $631,600.

On page 5 of the schedule provision is made for certain expenditures of the Department of External Affairs. The total amount is $2,502,600.

Next is the Department of Labour, and the total amount to be voted for this department is $312,503. This sum appears on page 6 at the end of Vote 49e.

In addition to the amounts granted and authorized to be spent by these various departments there are certain loans, investments and advances provided for in the supplementary estimates. These will be found on page 25 of supplementary estimates (E), two of which are in this schedule, namely, an amount of $3,600 for the Department of External Affairs, and an item of $1 under the Department of Labour for the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

A few moments ago I referred to section 4 of the bill, which deals with the question of commitments. If honourable senators look at page 6 of the schedule under "Loans, Investments and Advances" and then under "External Affairs" they will see extended in the column the amount of $3,600. This is Vote L17e—the letter "L" before an item indicates that it is a loan item—and reads as follows:

> Additional advance to the Working Capital Fund of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in an amount of $3,268 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1964, which is $3,600.

What Parliament is doing in passing this item is authorizing the payment of $3,268 U.S. to the F.A.O., for the purposes specified in this item. Of course, with the fluctuation in the exchange rate, the exact amount of this appropriation is not known until the time arrives for the payment to be made.

What is extended—and this is the normal practice—is the amount of Canadian dollars which represents the contribution in question. The Comptroller of the Treasury, seeing the authorization to pay the $3,268 U.S., would be able to issue a cheque for an amount required to meet the payment of $3,268 U.S. on the day that the payment is made.

I come now to the last item, "Labour B—Unemployment Insurance Commission." This also is a loan item, L27e, and reads as follows:

> To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may determine, to the Unemployment Insurance Fund such sums as may from time to time be required by the said Fund; the aggregate of the sums outstanding at any one time not to exceed $55,000,000—To extend the purposes of Vote L27a of the Estimates for 1963-64 to cover requirements in the fiscal year 1964-65.

This is a $1 item and can be described as the most important of the urgent items contained in the schedule to this bill.

I am informed by what has been said in the other place—and indeed this is the fact—that the Unemployment Insurance Fund may very well be in a deficit position by this weekend. An honourable senators know, payments out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund are being made constantly and real concern is felt that the payments required to be made at this time will not be made unless this authority is granted.

I am informed, too, that many members of the public, recipients of unemployment insurance payments, will be seriously inconvenienced and disturbed if these payments are not made.

I should add that early notice was given of the prospect of this condition for the end of the financial year. It was given in the Budget Papers a number of weeks ago. At that time these supplementary estimates were before Parliament. The Unemployment Insurance Fund item was not segregated in a separate bill, but was included in the normal final appropriation bill which it was expected would approve the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964.

In these circumstances, and particularly now that we have reached the third day of April, this item becomes an urgent one. I think all honourable senators will agree that this item particularly should engage our serious consideration, and because of the urgency involved I would hope that, with unanimous consent, we would pass it today.

Honourable senators, in so far as I can do so, I shall be pleased to give such further explanations as may be required. Of course,

I have never before been called upon to carry out a role like the one I am carrying out now. All I hope is that I shall be able to answer, in a way that is satisfactory to all honourable senators, questions directed to me.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, less than six weeks ago the honourable Senator Connolly assumed the duties of Leader of the Government. Until a few days ago his duties were not too onerous, but I must say that this week he has been put through a baptism by fire. I think he should be commended for the way he has discharged his duties and for his success in keeping the Senate in session, notwithstanding the sentiment that prevailed, not only on this side of the house, but also on his side.

I am not given to issuing ultimatums. That would be rather repugnant, especially when one is taking the place of an absent leader. However, I wish to go on record, and I think I speak for all honourable senators on the Conservative side of this house, that there should be no repetition of the situation which existed this week, and that if there should be, there will not be unanimous consent such as we might very well have this evening.

Having said that, honourable senators, I shall now deal with the matter under consideration. The bill now before us, for which we have been waiting all week, covers just over one-third of the total final supplementary estimates, which amount to almost $300 million. The amount of the bill now before us is $130,793,985, and covers certain items of the final supplementary estimates which were passed by the other place. We were given to understand that we would be getting a bill this afternoon covering the full amount of the estimates. However, we realize this is a situation over which the Leader of the Government has no control, for in actual fact in bills of this kind, dealing with public funds, we are at the mercy of the other place. We can only deal with what comes before us.

The honourable Leader of the Government was good enough to explain the bill in his usual lucid manner. We notice that section 4 of the bill is a departure from the usual form, and the language of this particular section does not convey very clearly just what is intended. I hope the Leader of the Government will explain that rather nebulous section, which I for one am unable to understand very clearly.

Section 5 of the bill has the same provision that appeared in the appropriation bill which was passed by the Senate on April 18, 1962, to which I drew the attention of the Leader of the Government some time this week, covering the fiscal year which ended on March 31 of that year. Honourable senators will recall that I pointed out the similarity of that measure to the situation in which we now find ourselves, with the exception that we are now discussing a bill which covers only a part of the final supplementary estimates.

On April 1 the Minister of Labour, in replying to a question in the other place, said that unless the item authorizing the Minister of Finance to make a loan to the Unemployment Insurance Fund was approved this week, the Unemployment Insurance Commission would, and I quote, "be in difficulty to make benefit payments by the end of the week."

I would refer honourable senators to page 1679 of the House of Commons Hansard. Here we have the real urgency for the speedy passage of this bill. The bill authorizes the expenditure of $130,793,985. Apart from the authorization of the amount under the heading "Loans, Investments and Advances," this money has already been spent. One gets some idea of the importance of this amount when it is realized that the total deficit for the last fiscal year, according to the Minister of Finance in his budget address, was $685 million.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention to go into individual items at this time, but there are one or two comments I would like to make. We should have been told last week that it was necessary to pass this bill before March 31 in order to replenish the Unemployment Insurance Fund. We are now told that the Government had no statutory authorization to make a loan to the fund after midnight, March 31. At that time, according to the Minister of Labour, the fund showed a debit balance of $4,500,000. The item in question can be found in the schedule of the bill, under "Labour," in the section dealing with loans, investments and advances. It is in the usual form of the nominal statutory $1, authorizing the Minister of Finance to credit to the Unemployment Insurance Fund such sums as may be from time to time required by the fund, the aggregate at any one time not to exceed $55 million, and designed to cover requirements in the fiscal year 1964-65.

The same provision was made last year to cover the fiscal year just ended. I would like to read from page 15 of the schedule, Vote No. L27e:

> Unemployment Insurance Commission—
> To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may determine, to the Unemployment Insurance Fund such sums as may from time to time be required by the said

Fund; the aggregate of the sums outstanding at any one time not to exceed $55,000,000—To extend the purposes of Vote L27a of the Estimates for 1963-64 to cover requirements in the fiscal year 1964-65.

Now we are informed that at the end of the fiscal year the Government had used up $35 million of this amount, and this did not cover any contingencies for the new fiscal year. A new statutory authority was required. The item is for $1, as we all know, but it is provided that it should not exceed $55 million in the fiscal year 1964-65.

For the reasons known only to itself, the Government, notwithstanding the urgency it knew existed respecting the precarious state of the fund, elected to proceed with the perfunctory budget debate in the other place right up to two days before Parliament was due to recess for Easter. This left both houses of Parliament with less than two full sitting days to debate the largest set of final supplementary estimates in history, totalling, as I have said, almost $300 million.

Even then, the Government, under strong criticism for pursuing this course of action, still refused to divulge the true nature of the urgency for the passing of these estimates.

The Montreal Gazette in its editorial section on April 2 said, and I quote in part, and while I do not like to do so, I make these words my own—

> Consider, then, the position in which the Government had placed the Opposition. If the Opposition insisted on examining the supplementary estimates, even if this meant delaying the Easter holidays (and consuming them in part) it could be accused of obstruction—that ancient accusation against any Opposition.
>
> But if the Opposition agreed to snap up the carrot dangled before it in the form of enticing holiday, and let the estimates fly through with barely a passing glance, then it could well be accused of not doing its duty—of thinking more of its holidays than of what happens to the taxpayers' money.
>
> The Opposition had to make its choice. It is a choice with which it ought not to have been confronted. But since the choice has been forced upon it, the Opposition has made the right decision. And perhaps not the least of the benefits of its action may be a better order, on the Government's part, in the way it manages the business of the house.

I am sure there are many honourable senators like myself who will agree with the sentiments expressed in this editorial.

Honourable senators, we do not object to having to meet daily; this is our duty. This is why we are here. But we do object to being placed in the position where we are made to look ridiculous. In this regard I have only to refer honourable senators to the remarks of Senator Power and Senator O'Leary (Carleton). We are not blaming the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), but we do say that the Government should have taken Parliament into its confidence. Now, having attended to our duty all week, we find ourselves once again in the position of having to pass in a few hours a measure which has been the subject matter of debate in the other place for the past ten days. We have no alternative; we must consent to the passage of this bill in order that half a million unemployed Canadians will be able to receive the benefits of unemployment insurance next week. And so, honourable senators, we are placed in a position where we are obliged to waive our rules in order to facilitate the passage of this bill authorizing as it does the expenditure of substantial public funds.

We hope that in the future the Government will arrange its business so as to enable this branch of Parliament to perform properly the duties entrusted to it under the Constitution.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I wish to make a few remarks, and at the outset I wish to make it very clear that I am speaking for myself alone. The bill now before the house covers part of the supplementary estimates for the last fiscal year, and no doubt, as has been indicated, we are going to be called upon in the space of minutes to give it first, second and third readings. I would point out to honourable senators that it is only on second and third reading that we can discuss the various items contained in this bill. Once the bill is passed it is final and complete, but that does not apply to an interim supply bill, such as the bill that was passed and given royal assent on Monday and which granted supply for two months. The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), in introducing that bill, gave the usual undertaking—to be found at page 239 of Hansard—that the rights and privileges of all senators to question and debate any of the items contained in that bill were preserved.

On that occasion Senator McCutcheon made some reference to the practice that has grown up over the years in the Senate, and followed by all parties, of introducing interim supply bills, and other money bills, at the last minute and expecting the Senate to rubber stamp them within a very short period of time. I suggest to all honourable senators that in future the Senate should follow the rules of the Senate. These rules were drawn up, approved and adopted by honourable senators. They were prepared and approved by most capable and experienced senators, and these rules are for very definite purposes. They are for the guidance of honourable senators, and they outline the procedure to be followed in the daily proceedings of the Senate. If the rules are unfair, inadequate, or if they do not cover some particular situation or point, the remedy is very simple. Honourable senators are masters in their own chamber, and they can amend their own rules at any time.

Perhaps it would be as well to look back over the situation that has developed, and that has placed us in the very awkward position which has existed during this week. It has been the custom for many years that Parliament adjourn at Easter, and the adjournment has been from the Wednesday before Good Friday to one week from Easter Monday. This year was no exception. The House of Commons Hansard of March 11, at page 778, contains remarks made by the Prime Minister who stated that the dates of the Easter adjournment would be from Thursday, March 26, to Monday, April 6.

Later, on March 23, as recorded at page 1358 of Hansard of the other place, a question was asked with respect to the adjournment, and the Prime Minister again replied clearly, setting forth the dates of the adjournment as being from Thursday, March 26 to Monday, April 6, but on that occasion he added the following reservation:

> There is one reservation to that, of course, and that is on the understanding that interim supply is passed by the house.

As far as I am concerned there is nothing complicated, vague or uncertain in any way in what the Prime Minister said as to the dates of the adjournment, or the condition upon which the adjournment would be granted.

What followed in the other place I am not going to review, but acting on the words of the Prime Minister, as recorded in Hansard, as to the dates of the adjournment and the reservation regarding interim supply, this house approved and passed the interim supply bill last week. As I said before, it was passed subject to the reservation of the rights of all honourable senators to further question and debate the various items in the bill.

What has happened in this chamber during this week is no credit to anyone. I do not blame the honourable Leader of the Government in any way. I am certain he has felt as embarrassed as any other senator, and I wish to commend him for the dignified and restrained manner in which he handled a very unpleasant situation.

We have waited in the Senate for over a week for this bill which has been before the other place for well over that time. The responsibility and blame for what has happened rests clearly on the shoulders of the Government, for it is the Government which plans the business of the house. It is the Government which decides the day on which an interim supply bill, or any other bill, is introduced. Everyone knew from the day that the session opened in February that interim supply would be required to be passed before April 1, and the same thing can be said with respect to the passing of final supplementary estimates. One can only ask the Government to explain why it did not proceed at the proper time to give both houses time to debate and pass both bills.

One has only to recall that when the present Government was in opposition, on at least one occasion it took several days to pass an ordinary interim supply bill. As far as the supplementary estimates are concerned, there have been claims of urgency, with which Senator Choquette has very capably dealt. It has been stated that certain items had to be passed before the end of the fiscal year. Honourable Senator Choquette disposed of this theory when he placed on Hansard of April 1, at page 257, the record of the proceedings in 1962 when the final supplementary estimates were not approved until April 18. As the honourable Leader of the Government has pointed out, practically the same clause which appeared in that bill is in the bill now before us.

Much was made of the immediate urgency in the Unemployment Insurance Fund, when it was disclosed by the minister at the very last minute that the fund was nearly exhausted. I, for one, am not convinced in the slightest degree that any emergency existed regarding this fund.

I have here a clipping from the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 1, and if I am permitted I would like to read briefly from it. It says:

> Even before yesterday's squeeze play attempt, the Unemployment Insurance Fund was in no real trouble because the Unemployment Insurance Commission had the power to borrow up to $55,000,000 from the Government.

It goes on to state that that authority would expire at midnight on March 31. It continues:

> In the event that the Commons did not extend the borrowing powers beyond midnight, Government officials had drawn up the necessary order-in-council ready > to be signed at an emergency cabinet meeting before midnight authorizing a loan.

>
> Officials declined to disclose the amount of the loan before it became necessary to pass the order-in-council.

True, it is only a newspaper report, but certainly the enterprising fellow who wrote it did not get that information from an office boy.

I am sure that every honourable senator hopes that the spectacle of this week in the Senate will never be repeated.

Honourable senators, today we are in the position that interim supply has been granted for the months of April and May. In the usual course, a second interim supply bill will have to be presented to this house and passed before the end of May. If the usual procedure is followed, the bill will be presented at the last minute on the last day, and the Senate once again, as today, will be asked to give first, second and third readings in a matter of a few short hours.

As every honourable senator knows, the rules of this chamber provide for two days' notice between first and second reading of any bill, and at least one day between second and third readings.

As I said in opening, speaking for myself, I wish to serve notice on the Government right now that, when the next interim supply bill is presented to this house, the passage of that bill through this house will be in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

As far as I am concerned, if the usual cry is made—this bill must be passed today, otherwise there will be no funds to pay the Civil Service employees; or if the excuse is used, as it was on one occasion I well remember, that unless the bill is passed immediately there will be no funds to pay members of the armed forces; or the excuse that certain outstanding accounts have to be paid; or even that the Unemployment Insurance Fund is exhausted; or any other excuse, except an emergency—that will not be sufficient for any interim supply bill to get three readings in this chamber in one day.

Honourable senators, the Government must take the responsibility of planning the business of Parliament so that never again will we see a repeat performance of this past week. If in the future such a situation develops and a plea is made to waive the rules of the Senate, I will simply refer honourable members to the remarks that I am making now.

Honourable senators, I wish to make it clear beyond any doubt that I am not making any threat; I am only asking that in the future the rules of this chamber be followed. I say with all modesty that I consider myself a reasonable person and one easy to get along with. I am more than willing to meet any emergency, or co-operate when the occasion demands it. I admit that I am old-fashioned, and in many ways even mid-Victorian, but I have great respect for tradition, constituted authority, the dignity of Parliament, and proper respect for parliamentary procedure, law and order, for these constitute the very backbone of our democratic parliamentary system.

In the future I shall refuse to be a rubber stamp for the Government or the other place. In speaking again for myself, I am ashamed of the mockery made of our rules, and the affront to the dignity of this chamber during this week, and for my part I am going to try to prevent it happening in the future.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I rise, of course, to support the general remarks made by the acting leader on this side (Hon. Mr. Choquette) and by Senator White. So far, I have refrained from entering into the discussions of the many adjournments resulting from what might be called the "Comedy of Errors" displayed in the Parliament of Canada this week, over what was to be a short recess and which now has apparently gone with the winds of change in the minds of men in the other place. However, I do not think it is proper for us to pat ourselves too much on the back for having been here throughout this period. True enough, it has been irritating and frustrating to meet here, with little or no business before us; but we cannot say that we have done less than our duty, even if our duty has not been entirely commensurate with the time and talent of honourable senators who have found it possible to remain here. Our duty has been of the kind immortalized by the great John Milton in a line from his famous sonnet:

> They also serve who only stand and wait.

If that has been our duty, we have done it. However, I think a word is due in explanation of the absence of so many of our colleagues at this important time when this bill is before us, and also during the previous days of this week. This is especially unfortunate, honourable senators, because the public gallery has been unusually filled, particularly by young Canadians. I regret that these people have seen this chamber occupied by only 25 or 30 senators, because earlier in the session, and during last session, the Senate has had a distinguished record of attendance.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): About one-third of the members of the Senate have been present during this week.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: One-third this week. However, I estimate that our average attendance is about two-thirds.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Quite right.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: We have had an average attendance of about 75 senators out of a membership of fewer than 100 senators. That is a creditable record, regrettably spoiled by the events of the past week.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Will the honourable gentleman allow me to intervene for a moment, because I think we both feel the same way on this point. I think that our attendance, even during this week, compares favourably with the attendance in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I was not going to make a comparison, although it is difficult in discussing this whole problem not to make comparisons; but it is my intention to avoid doing so. However, I think it is fair to suggest why these honourable senators were not present. I believe it can be said without partisanship that they relied on the undertaking of the Prime Minister, referred to by Senator White. The original undertaking was made on March 11 last, and was supplemented by a further statement on, I believe, March 23, when it was emphatically stated that Parliament would recess on the Thursday prior to Good Friday until April 6, with one reservation—if the supplementary estimates were passed.

The honourable Leader of the Government has told us today that a matter of urgency has arisen. Well, it obviously must have arisen since the time the Prime Minister made that commitment, and I think there is good reason to believe that the emergency may not be as real as we have been led to believe. I say that because we have also the statement of the Prime Minister—and I admire him for making it—that he very much regretted he was not at the place of decision on that fateful Thursday before Holy Friday. The inference is clear, that had he been there this impasse would not have been allowed to arise. We can therefore infer, I think, it was the muddled counsels of his lieutenants that brought this about. I think we can go further and say that the implication follows that this alleged urgency in respect of the Unemployment Insurance Fund was discovered— if "invented" is too strong a word—to justify the action of the "temporary management" in the other place which was responsible for the clear undertaking of the Prime Minister not being implemented. I say that was an undertaking affecting the business of this chamber every bit as much as it was an undertaking affecting the business of the other chamber.

It is not my purpose to attempt to assess praise or blame, or to go beyond what I have said, except that I feel it my duty to make an emphatic protest against what I took to be the suggestion yesterday by the honourable Senator Pouliot that Senator O'Leary (Carleton) in his speech had imputed blame in this matter to the distinguished house Leader of the official Opposition in the other place, the Honourable Gordon Churchill. I will go no further at this time than to say that I would also protest the attack on Senator O'Leary, as well as what I regard as the unwarranted suggestion that he had laid the blame for this imbroglio on the Honourable Gordon Churchill. I was here when Senator O'Leary made his speech; I have read it in Hansard. I can find no justification whatsoever for any suggestion that Senator O'Leary singled out the Honourable Gordon Churchill for blame in this matter.

We all know what happened. There was a series of misadventures which brought about this situation. Having in mind the assurance of the Prime Minister, we passed the supplementary estimates. Then we had another example of what Shakespeare called a long time ago, "the insolence of office." I think it is fair to describe it as such, because we had these sudden machinations, this sudden rush to find an excuse to justify the ultimatum that not only were the supplementary estimates to be passed but all of the interim supply and, as Senator White has said, the largest total of final interim supply in 14 years.

It is true that there was resistance in the other place, not only on the part of one party but on the part of several. It is well to remember that this is the whole history of resistance to arrogance, arbitrariness and insolence in office. Men faced with this become stubborn, intractable and sometimes impatient. It is also a fact that that kind of resistance is never actually quite as pretty as it is made to appear in the history books.

I say none of this could have been anticipated by our colleagues who are not here, for they were entitled to make arrangements covering the Easter vacation. I am sure many of them would have been here had it been possible for them to cancel those arrangements without great inconvenience to many others besides themselves.

Secondly, I think we should perhaps take a look at ourselves. As Senator White has suggested, we cannot lay all the blame on the managers of the business of Parliament in the other place. We cannot lay it all on the Commons. Perhaps we should consider very carefully the wise suggestion of Senator White that perhaps all of this could have been prevented had we in this matter, and in our own routine business, given more consideration to the rules to which he referred. They are Rules 23 and 24 of the Senate which, in my short time here—and I regret to say this—have been waived over and over again under circumstances that to me suggested no reasonable argument for this action.

I remember one occasion on which they were waived in a matter that merely involved the authorization of a French translation of the name of a company previously used only in English, and to that I believe we gave three readings in a single day. If we treat our own rules in such a fashion in the ordinary course of our business, perhaps others cannot be blamed if they assume that any time they wish to bring forward a bill at the last minute before a recess or prorogation, the Senate will rush it through in an hour or so. Perhaps we cannot blame them for this, if they think we do not pay any attention to our own rules.

I am going to suggest what has been on my mind for some time. Perhaps now is the time to let bygones be bygones in this particular matter, but could we not in the immediate future do something more than listen to and admire the kind of eloquent speeches which have been made over the years on this particular subject? I believe the stage is set for some action that would be to the benefit of the functioning of the Parliament of Canada. I believe we have set up a committee of the Senate to revise our own rules. The same process is taking place in the other place, and I would suggest to the Leader of the Government that perhaps it would be possible for those two committees to get together, and while they are revising the rules that apply to the conduct of business, each in its own individual house, they might also give consideration to the relationship of the two houses. I am quite sure that if such a discussion took place, and out of it an undertaking that in future the Senate of Canada would abide by its own rules in these matters, as Senator White has suggested, there would result an agreement or the drafting of a set of rules to provide a new procedure which would prevent this comedy of errors that I know is regretted equally by the majority, at least, on both sides.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I am going to be very brief indeed. In speaking in this house on March 31 I used these words:

> I am serving notice now that if in the future there is a recurrence of this, with bills being sent over here and this house being asked to approve them as if it were a mere gramophone of the House of Commons I am going to resist.

Well, I am going to resist. I am serving notice now—and here again, like Senator White, I am speaking for myself alone—that I shall not give my consent to the passage of this bill tonight on third reading.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, may I ask a question of the honourable Leader of the Government? It has to do with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I wonder if the honourable Leader could give me some information with regard to the amounts paid to fishermen in the Province of Newfoundland during the last fiscal year. I realize that this question entails some search of the records, and I would be satisfied to accept the information at a later date.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I will certainly have that information gathered and sent to the honourable senator just as soon as it is available. Because this is a bill with respect to supplementary estimates, the information for which he asks, and to which he is entitled, is not normally provided in the material made available to me. I will obtain the information he requires.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I have one other question. Vote 172e, with respect to the Department of Agriculture, reads:

> Estimated amount required to recoup the Agricultural Commodities Stabilization Account—and the amount is $122 million-odd. I would like some explanation as to why that amount is necessary, particularly in view of the large sales of agricultural products that have been made to various countries of the world. In this case I am prepared also to wait until the honourable Leader of the Government has an opportunity to gather the information.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question concerning the same item. It has to do with the latter part, which reads:

> —including loss resulting from revaluation of inventory, as at March 31, 1964.

I do not recall ever seeing this in a similar item before. Does this provide for the revaluation of the inventory as from the beginning of the operation of the board until now, or is it for the fiscal year, and is the revaluation on the resale value of the commodities—I am thinking particularly of the butter that has been in storage for quite a long time—or is it calculated on the basis of what the product costs the board rather than on the resale value of the product at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, because the questions of both honourable senators involve a considerable amount of information, it might be more satisfactory if I am allowed to have that information collected and sent to them.

I may say to Senator Taylor that this item as it is now written is a new proposal, and I think it is an attempt to be as realistic as possible with respect to the values of these commodities. I cannot tell Senator Taylor now whether or not this amount is restricted to supplies which were available only during the last fiscal year, or whether it goes back to the beginning of the program. I know that an attempt has been made, in accordance with better bookkeeping practices which have been used in respect of this matter heretofore, to be as realistic as possible and to see what the loss position really is.

I will get this information at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): In addition to that, in Vote 175e there is an amount of $1,940,000 required to recoup the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund. I am not familiar with that particular fund and I wonder just what it covers. I am not pressing for an answer now, but I would like to get the answer.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I intend to mention an article which has been written by a highly respected journalist, a member of the Press Gallery who is well and favourably known throughout the country, Mr. James Nelson of the Canadian Press. The article appeared in the Halifax Chronicle Herald last Monday. It reads:

> Commons: 28 Days Of Talk But Wasn't Waste of Time.
>
> Ottawa (CP)—The 28 pre-Easter sitting days of the parliamentary session filled more than 1,500 pages of Hansard with talk but contributed nothing to the statute books. It was, in fact, just a prelude to the hard-working legislative days to come.
>
> The only bill passed by the Commons was a private one sponsored by Liberal backbencher Jean Chretien of St. Maurice-Lafleche to change the name of Trans-Canada Air Lines to Air Canada.
>
> While the legislative accomplishments were nil, the Commons saw the introduction of major government legislation and set up some of its committees. It also cleared away the eight-day general debate on the legislative program outlined in the throne speech, and most of the six-day budget debate.
>
> In the course of doing so, the government survived six opposition confidence challenges by votes ranging from a narrow 128 to 120 to a powerful 222 to 25.
>
> Hears Program.
>
> In financial matters, the government presented a $6,812,410,507 spending and investment program, not including $882,-000,000 to go out in the existing old age pension program, for the new fiscal year opening Wednesday, April 1.
>
> To cover it, Finance Minister Gordon presented a budget designed to raise $6,700,000,000 without increasing taxes. He said actual expenditures in the new year probably would run to $7,155,000,000, leaving a deficit of $455,000,000—a one-third cut from the estimated deficit for the expiring fiscal year.
>
> High on the post-Easter parliamentary agenda will be three major investigations: The Canada Pension Plan, the Columbia River treaty and defence policy.
>
> Before Committee.
>
> The pension plan, regarded by Prime Minister Pearson's government as the single most important piece of legislation to be introduced in the life of the current Parliament, is to be examined by a joint Commons-Senate committee.
>
> The Columbia River treaty, providing for U.S.-British Columbia development of power and flood control resources of the Columbia River, has been referred to the Commons external affairs committee which has mapped a busy schedule of hearings.
>
> The defence committee which began work last session is to be reconstituted and will have before it Defence Minister Hellyer's new white paper outlining plans for integrating the armed forces from the top down.

Honourable senators, I have a few short remarks to make about citizenship, and it is an opportunity to bring to your attention some facts which are of general concern. If we examine the Citizenship Act, we shall see something about the status of Canadian citizens and the condition of British subjects. Part IV of chapter 33, section 21 says, "A Canadian citizen is a British subject."

Section 23(2) says:

> . . . the expression "British subject" and the expression "Commonwealth citizen" have the same meaning.

The matter has been brought before this house before. We are really not Canadian citizens, but we are indeed the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. Accordingly, we should be described now as Canadian citizens, but as the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty.

The word "citizen" applies mostly to those of a republic, and is not a proper description for a subject of a sovereign. We are subjects in a monarchy. We are the subjects of Her Majesty the Queen—the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. That seems to be clear. But we are at the same time described by the Citizenship Act as Canadian citizens, British subjects, and citizens of the Commonwealth. Nearly all of us were born British subjects. What strikes me is that a mask has been put before "British subject" to call us Canadian citizens, with a turban over our heads to give us an opportunity to call ourselves citizens of the Commonwealth. The mask of Canadian citizenship is worn in Canada, and if we go to India or Pakistan we will be considered as citizens of those countries, if we wear the turban of a citizen of the Commonwealth.

In 1960 I asked a question about the high commissioners to Canada for the various countries of the Commonwealth. I asked if they were Canadian citizens as well as British subjects, by virtue of their residence in Canada, and if so, for how long. The brightest intelligence of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration answered:

> None of the high commisisoners is a Canadian citizen by virtue of residence in Canada.

I did not ask who in particular had written that answer, but it was the answer of the Government of the day.

Then I asked:

> Are the High Commissioners to Canada for India and Pakistan Canadian Citizens and British subjects as well as Citizens of the Commonwealth, by virtue of their residence in Canada and, if so, for how long?

The answer was "No." This appears in Senate Hansard of May 27, 1960, at page 712.

On March 13 I put a question about the same matter on the Order Paper, which I have dropped and will not insist upon. I dropped it because it had not been answered, and on March 31 I substituted the item which is Inquiry No. 3 today, for April 20th. To simplify matters, I will read the questions and I will answer them myself. It is the easiest way to deal with it. I obtained some information from the office of the High Commissioner for Great Britain here in Ottawa, and I am very thankful to the office for that.

Question No. 1:

> Is the High Commissioner to Canada for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland qualified as an elector in virtue of the Canada Elections Act, (Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 23, as amended) inasmuch as he complies with the provisions of Section 14 of the said Act?

The answer is: Yes. The answer applies not only to the High Commissioner for Great Britain, but also to all British born who live in Canada.

No 2:

> Are the British subjects born in the Commonwealth but outside Canada entitled to enjoy in Canada the same public rights as Canadian citizens do in Canada, upon the same conditions?

The answer is: Yes.

Question No. 3:

> Are the Canadian citizens entitled to enjoy in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the same public rights as the British subjects, upon the same conditions?

The answer: Yes.

Question No. 4:

> Is the political status of a British subject the same in Canada as in any other part of the Commonwealth?

The answer is: Yes.

Naturally, now that South Africa and Eire are outside the Commonwealth there is no difficulty about it.

Question No. 5:

> If not, are there any (a) degrees or (b) differences in the British nationality and what are they in each country?

The answer is: None—referring to the answer to No. 4, and this is rather interesting, because if a Canadian citizen is, in fact, in virtue of the law, a British subject, therefore a British subject is also a Canadian citizen. It is reversible, and it is important. But now no Canadian-born can be legally deprived of his Canadian citizenship for he has it by virtue of the Canadian Citizenship Act because he is a British subject. Such is the Citizenship Act, you cannot deprive any British-born of the exercise of the public rights to which he is entitled in Canada as well as in the other parts of the Commonwealth.

I want therefore to take the example of Lord Thomson who has been recently invited by Her Majesty to sit in the House of Lords. One may suppose that he has been deprived of his Canadian citizenship, but it is not true. He can at any time run as mayor in any Canadian municipality, be elected there legally in virtue of the municipal law of each of the provinces, and he can run in any other elections in Canada, and therefore he should not worry about the supposed loss of his Canadian citizenship, because it is meaningless.

I have brought this to your attention, and I will express a regret; I regret very much that so little importance is attached to the Canadian nationality. We should be proud of it; we should be proud of being the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty, and we should not encourage the disturbers of peace by using the expression "Canadian citizenship," because Canada is not a republic.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Connolly speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, perhaps I could now answer the last question Senator Taylor (Westmorland) asked me, and I assure Senator Hollett that the only reason I am able to do so is that I happen to be provided with the information on this specific point. I hope to obtain a little later the other information for which they both asked.

This explanation has to do with the amount of $1,940,000 under Vote 175E in the schedule of the bill which we are now considering. The Prairie Farm Assistance Act, as all honourable senators know, was passed in 1939 to provide assistance for farmers experiencing crop failure. The act applies to the defined spring wheat areas in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and in the Peace River district of British Columbia. The act was designed to supplant the previous methods of assistance which were not entirely satisfactory. Under the provisions of the act farmers contribute one per cent of the amount of grain sales made through licensed grain dealers to the fund. Advances are made to the fund, when required to pay awards under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, by the Minister of Finance out of the unappropriated moneys in the Consolidated Revenue Fund with the approval of the Governor in Council. In the month of January 1964 it was necessary to request an advance of $2,200,000 from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, as a review of the fund indicated that payments and awards to farmers during the fiscal year 1963-64 would exceed the estimated receipts from the one per cent levy during the same period by approximately $2,174,000. A further review of the program indicates that an amount of $1,940,000, which is the amount of this item, will be required to supplement the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to be repetitious. Perhaps I could refer in the first place to the remarks made by the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette), honourable Senator White and honourable Senator Grosart, to the effect that they hope no repetition will be made of the events of this week. They will, of course, recognize that the position in which we find ourselves here today after sitting for a week is not of our making.

The plain fact of the matter is that it is the rules of the other place which have made for these delays, and, of course, the rights in the other place which make it possible for protracted debates to occur. I would hope that by agreement of all parties in the other place it might be possible to provide for rules there which would allow the supply bills, about which there is this controversy, to come to us by a given date, such as a week before an adjournment or a week before a prorogation. In this way, honourable senators would not constantly be making the kind of speeches that have been made not only today but on every such occasion since the beginning of the Senate.

I think the point has been well made here. Honourable members opposite have been making it, but members on this side of the chamber have also been making it. When we were on the other side of the chamber we made the same plea, and when our honourable friends opposite were on this side, they had the same difficulties we are experiencing now. I think we all recognize this as a factual statement of the position.

For what my undertaking is worth, I will urge my colleagues in the Government to see if some rules could be devised in the other place whereby these measures could come to us by a certain date prior to a lengthy adjournment or a prorogation, so that these speeches will be unnecessary. I refer to interim supply bills and I refer to appropriation bills. With the changes that are occurring in our nation and in our Parliament, perhaps the time has come when all parties in the other place will see the wisdom and the appropriateness of making a change of this kind.

It has been suggested that the whole responsibility for what has been done here rests with the Government. I do not want to engage in any political debate, and I think honourable senators will agree that I have tried to avoid taking positions on political grounds. But I am bound to make this comment, because reference has been made to the fact that a commitment was given by the Prime Minister in the other place that once the interim supply bill was passed the Easter adjournment would occur. I would direct honourable senators who raised this point to the fact that at the time that statement was made the interim supply bill was on the Order Paper of the other place below the supplementary estimates we are now considering. As I understand it, what the Prime Minister was saying at that time was this: "I assume that the supplementary estimates will be passed and then the interim supply bill will be passed, and then the adjournment will take place." If honourable senators look at the Order Paper of the other place for the date upon which that statement was made they will find that my explanation is borne out.

I think there is another point I should make. I make it not for the purpose of attempting to controvert a position that was taken by any honourable senator. First of all, I say that these supplementary estimates, with the particulars in the items, were tabled in the other place on March 6, and they were tabled here on March 10. That in itself was notice of what these items contained.

In addition to that, in the budget papers which were tabled in the other place on March 6, 1964, on page 117, the following appears under the heading, "Unemployment Insurance Fund":

> The estimated balance in the fund as at March 31, 1964 is $13 million. However, there is a liability of $18 million for unredeemed warrants and deposits from employers.

At that time it was evident—if these estimates were correct, and of course they could only be estimates on March 6 for what the situation might be on March 31—that there was an estimated deficit then of some $5 million in the fund.

The fact of the matter is—and the minister said this in the other place—that there is a deficit. There is very grave concern that these payments will not be made, as they are required to be made under the rules which govern the fund.

The other place has had at least seven days of debate. I do not think there was any intention to conceal the situation with respect to this deficit in the fund. It was pointed up in the budget papers. The reference to the need for the loan was included in the supplementary estimates, which were filed on the same day, namely March 6. I think it was clear to anybody who wanted to look into it, that the situation did require a remedy. The normal practice for the Government in such a situation, I submit respectfully to all honourable senators, is to bring in the supply bill—which they did.

The fact that it was debated at such length, and perhaps without too much regard to the rules of relevancy at times, is responsible, I think, for the position in which we find ourselves today.

Now, I wonder whether I have said enough in my opening remarks to deal with the explanation which Senator Choquette required with respect to section 4. If I have not done so, I may add this simple statement. Most of the items in this bill, as may be seen, provide authority for the payment of a specific amount. Perhaps a reference to any of the schedules will indicate that. Let me take one at random: Vote 147e, Contribution to the Gift Program for the United Nations Building in Santiago, Chile, $10,800. No more than that can be paid under the provisions of this bill. That is a specific amount which the departmental authorities are authorized to expend, and no more than that.

I turn now to vote L17e, the amount provided in accordance with the bookkeeping rules which the Government has used for a long time. In this item the provision is $3,600. But the amount which will actually be expended, the amount that can be committed, will depend on how much Canadian money will be required in order to make a payment in United States funds of $3,268.

Section 4 simply provides that the Department of External Affairs must restrict its commitment under this item to pay no more than $3,268 in U.S. I hope that that explanation is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, Senator O'Leary has said that he does not propose to give his consent. I assume, and I hope, that he is talking now about the third reading of this bill. I understand that message has been received from the other house, and will shortly be read, dealing with certain other urgent items which they have approved. They are items which were in the schedule to the original bill. We are getting them piecemeal. However, in view of what we have said, and in view of the explanations that have been given about the urgency in respect of the payments out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund, I would appeal to him to reconsider his decision. I think we all admire the stand that he proposes to take on behalf of the Senate. I think also that he has a great sense of the importance of public business being conducted as expeditiously and as quickly as it can be. I know he has not been given too good an example of this by Parliament in the last week, but I would hope that when third reading is called, he might reconsider what he suggested he felt he should do.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, with leave, I move third reading now.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): No. I oppose third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, in that event, we are bound by our own rules. Rule 63 reads as follows:

> No bill shall be read twice the same day; no Committee of the Whole House shall proceed on any Bill the same day the bill is read a second time; and no bill shall be read the third time the same day that the bill is reported from the committee.

I will also read rule 4. (e):

> "Leave of the Senate"—Leave granted without a dissentient voice.

In the circumstances, if unanimous consent is withheld, then I think all I can do is ask, with leave, that I be allowed to move that the bill be read a third time at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1964

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-87, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill now before us is called Appropriation Bill No. 3, 1964, and the words of the bill are identical with those which we have just been discussing. I am speaking of the bill itself, apart from the schedule. The wording of the bill is identical with that of Bill C-86 which we have been discussing so far this afternoon. There are certain exceptions to that statement. In this case, in clause 2 the amount provided to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund is $23,368,648.

If honourable senators will look at Bill C-86 and the schedule thereto, you will see that at the opening of the schedule the amount inserted was $130 million. The bill we now have before us shows an amount of $23,368,648, being the total of the amounts of certain of the items in the said estimates as contained in the schedule.

Honourable senators realize that the Department of Agriculture estimates have already been dealt with in Bill C-86, so they are struck out of the items of Bill C-87 now before us. Likewise, the items of Citizenship and Immigration have been struck out of this bill. An item of $131,000 for Civil Service Commission salaries and contingencies of the commission is included in the schedule of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: How much? I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators will be able to follow the items I am mentioning if they use the schedule to Bill C-86 which we have just been debating. This is at the bottom of page 4 of the bill.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

> Item 1e: Salaries and Contingencies of the Commission, $131,000.

That is one of the items covered by this bill. On page 5—

Hon. Mr. Blois: From what bill are you reading? We do not seem to have the same bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am sorry; I was reading from the schedule to the supplementary estimates which were tabled in this house on March 10. Perhaps it would be better if I simply explained to the house the items of the supplementary estimates without making reference to the supplementary estimates, giving the total of each of the items making up the $23,368,648.

These are the items:

1. Civil Service Commission, $131,000
2. Department of Defence Production, $5,523,100 for the department
   $501,100 for Crown companies
3. Department of Finance, $15,774,448
4. Department of Fisheries, $429,000
5. Department of Forestry, $91,000
6. Governor General and Lieutenant Governors, $6,000
7. Unemployment Insurance Commission, $738,000

8. Department of Veterans Affairs, $50,000 for departmental administration $125,000 for War Veterans Allowances and other benefits.

This makes a grand total of $23,368,648.

I have here some explanations that honourable senators may request in respect of these items.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask the Leader of the Government what the amount of $429,000 in respect to fisheries refers to?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is made up of three items: conservation and development services, construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $32,000. Then there are two special items. The first is assistance in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, for the construction of fishing vessels in respect of which capital subsidies authorized by Vote 222 of the Canadian Maritime Commission of these estimates may not be paid, amounting to $200,000. Then there is Vote 77e, the estimated amount required to recoup the Fishing Vessel Indemnity Account and the Lobster Trap Indemnity Account established under Vote 540 of Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955, and Vote 527 of Appropriation Act No. 6, 1956, to cover the net operating losses of $197,000 in the said accounts as at March 31, 1964. These three items make up the amount of $429,000.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Are these items of selected urgency?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am informed all of the items are of urgency, as much as those contained in Bill C-86. These are extracts from the original appropriation bill providing for the passing of the final supplementaries.

Hon. Mr. White: Does the honourable Leader mean that in addition to the two bills there are still further supplementary estimates?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, I believe so.

Hon. Mr. White: The honourable Leader recognizes of course that we do not have such a bill before us. We are speaking on a bill which we do not have.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Are these presented in degrees of relevant urgency? If we pass $130 million, would there still be the same urgency over the weekend?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): All I would say is that the bill we have now put over until next week contains an item of very great urgency, namely, the item with respect to payments for the Unemployment Insurance Fund. I cannot tell the honourable gentleman how urgent it is to provide for these War Veterans Allowances and other items amounting to $175,000, but I would think this is quite urgent.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Is the honourable Leader suggesting that not only with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Fund but with respect to the Civil Service Commission, the Department of Defence Production, the Departments of Fisheries, Finance and Forestry, the Governor General and Lieutenant Governors, and Veterans Affairs—the Government has allowed itself to get into the position where all these matters are of great urgency on this day, a Friday before a weekend?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The question is loaded. In any event I will say this: here is a measure, as I have said earlier this afternoon, which is now part of the original measure covering the final supplementary estimates that come before Parliament at this time of the year every time Parliament is sitting. Of course they are all urgent matters. Every piece of business that comes before Parliament is a matter of urgency and importance. I think nobody denies that. The fact that we cannot get them all in one bill means only that they have not been passed by the other place that quickly.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I just wish to refer to the statement made by the honourable Leader of the Government when he was referring to the item with respect to Veterans Affairs. I want to make it clear that I do not think there has ever been anybody in either house, even including my good friend from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), who has been more interested in the welfare of veterans than myself, and if it is correct, as the minister said, that there is urgency about payments by the Department of Veterans Affairs, or any other payment, I want to say that so far as I am concerned the responsibility is on the Government of Canada, and the Senate should not assume any responsibility for any delay.

What the honourable Leader of the Government has just said is another example of what I said before, that the responsibility is on the Government to plan the presentation of these bills in order that they come before us in sufficient time to be given proper consideration, and to be passed in due course. Here we are at the last minute talking about a bill of which I do not think more than half a dozen honourable senators have a copy.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Nobody has.

Hon. Mr. White: Surely we are all reasonable. I suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government that if we are going to discuss the bill further then we should at least have a copy before us while we are talking about it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I agree with what Senator White has just said. There is nothing more inconvenient than trying to deal with a bill when one has not a copy of it. Unfortunately the practice for many years with respect to interim supply bills, and indeed with respect to supplementary estimates, has been to print too few copies for Parliament. The reason for it is very simple. It arises again out of the rules of the other place. A bill is not presented in the other place until the resolution stage is passed. Supplementary estimates are there for all to see. But the bill itself does not come before the house until the resolution stage has been passed. It is only after the resolution has been approved that the bill is presented. Such bills are in traditional form, and there is seldom, if ever, any dispute about the provisions of the bill itself.

I still say, however, that what Senator White has suggested is true. It is almost impossible to deal with a bill of this kind unless each honourable senator has studied the supplementary estimates. He must be in a position to follow from the supplementary estimates that have been tabled—in this case they were tabled several weeks ago—the items that appear in the schedule to the bill.

Perhaps we can do something about this practice. I would certainly like to see it done, and we might be doing a service to the members of the other place if we are successful.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move the third reading of the bill now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa

April 3, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 3rd April, at 6.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, with respect to the situation at the moment, do I understand correctly that royal assent is to be given to Bill C-87, which we have not seen at all yet, which has just passed third reading, and that Bill C-86, which has passed second reading, has been held up?

Is it the intention to try to get the third reading on Bill C-86? What is to be done?

The Hon. the Speaker: As the honourable senator remembers, Bill C-86 passed second reading but there was not unanimous consent for its third reading. Therefore, it is put on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

As far as Bill C-87 is concerned, third reading has been given and unanimous consent has been given to pass the bill. That is the reason we are about to have royal assent for Bill C-87, but not for Bill C-86.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker:

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, April 6, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, April 6, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

APPENDIX

(See p. 267)

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—COMMUNIQUE

The governments of Canada and of the ten provinces of Canada met in Quebec City from March 31st to April 2nd, 1964. In the spirit of co-operation which had marked their last meeting in November 1963, they continued the discussion of problems of common interest.

The subjects examined included shared-cost programs and conditional grants, and the relation of these to fiscal arrangements. There was also an exchange of views on other aspects of fiscal relations.

The federal Government outlined its proposals for loans to university students, which were examined at some length. There was also discussion of the effects of the extension of the federal program of family allowances to cover children aged 16 and 17 who are students. Before taking action on the federal proposals, the views expressed by provincial governments will be considered.

The federal proposals for the Canada Pension Plan were further discussed. The Government of Quebec indicated that its proposed plan would be one which could provide portability of benefits with the Canada Pension Plan, and there was general agreement to ensure the widest possible coverage for Canadians.

Future liaison arrangements were discussed, together with a calendar for federal-provincial meetings of various kinds during 1964. Other subjects were: the possibility of extending the hospital insurance program to cover mental health and tuberculosis; the Canadian 1967 World Exhibition, in which all provinces indicated their intention to participate; reciprocal arrangements regarding the taxation of government departments and agencies; submarine mineral rights; the proposals of some provinces for further federal assistance to highway construction; and the problem of the distribution of "hate" literature.

It was agreed that the federal Government should immediately enter into detailed discussions with provincial governments concerning contracting-out arrangements for shared-cost programs. Such negotiations would apply to programs which are of a permanent nature and which involve fairly regular annual expenditures.

The federal Government suggested, and provincial governments agreed, that there should be a joint review of the nature and extent of federal and provincial taxes in relation to the financial responsibilities which nowadays have to be carried by federal and provincial governments. This should be a review in depth, but it ought to be undertaken promptly. In furtherance of this agreement, the conference gave consideration to a proposal to establish at once a "Tax Structure Committee", which would work under the auspices of the federal-provincial conference.

This committee would consist of one minister from each provincial government and three ministers from the Government of Canada. It would have expert assistance, and would be charged to deliver an interim report before the end of the current year. This interim report would be reviewed at a further federal-provincial conference. The committee would be expected to produce a definitive report by a fairly early date in 1965.

It was agreed that an important purpose of this review would be to increase the range of tax resources available to the provinces, in order to meet their increasing responsibilities for education and other services.

A joint review of the tax structure is not to prejudice the early solution of the urgent financial problems confronting the provincial and federal governments. This will require mutual accommodation to reconcile their expenditure and revenue requirements.

All participants in the conference agreed that their efforts must be directed to finding mutually satisfactory fiscal arrangements to ensure the continued strength of both federal and provincial governments, working together in the interests of a prosperous and united Canada.

THE SENATE

Monday, April 6, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Master of the Royal Canadian Mint for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 21 of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, chapter 315, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

APPROPRIATION BILLS NOS. 1 AND 2, 1964

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am now able to supply answers to questions asked by the honourable Senator Hollett and the honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland) during the debates on Appropriation Bills Nos. 1 and 2, 1964.

I ask that these answers be incorporated in Hansard for this day.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: The answer to the question asked by honourable Senator Hollett on Appropriation Bill No. 1 is as follows:

The amount referred to is the total for 1964-65 of Fisheries Vote 15 and is the same as in 1963-64. Included in this Vote are:

(a) payments to various universities for educational work among fishermen,

(b) payment of assistance to producers of salted fish,

(c) assistance for the construction of fishing vessels,

(d) assistance in the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities.

No increased provision has been made on account of the new fishery program.

The answers to the questions asked by honourable Senator Hollett on Appropriation Bill No. 2 are as follows:

Agriculture—Vote 172e

The purposes of this item are:

(a) to restore the purchasing power of the Stabilization Account and

(b) to report the net operating loss in the Account to Parliament as contemplated in the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

This item provides for the net loss in operations including loss resulting from revaluation of inventory of the Agricultural Stabilization Board, the details being as follows:

(1) Purchase programs
Dairy Products	21,719,038
Pork	64
Lamb	6,105,880
	27,824,982
(2) Deficiency programs
Dairy Products	40,356,110
Wool	700,000
Other	116,917
	41,353,027
(3) Subsidy programs
Dairy Products	4,598,251
(4) Write-off in respect of inventory as estimated at March 31, 1964
—accumulated operating charges on products in storage	9,880,609
—loss re-evalution of inventory	38,578,377*
	122,235,246
	—246
	122,235,000

* based on estimated market value of stocks as at January 31/64.

Labour—Unemployment Insurance Commission

Up to the end of February the payments from the Unemployment Insurance Fund to fishermen in Newfoundland totalled $2,667,585 for the fiscal year 1963-64. The figure for March, 1964, to complete the fiscal year, will not be available for some two weeks.

The answer to the question asked by the honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland) on Appropriation Bill No. 2 is as follows:

The provision in Agriculture Vote 172e of the loss resulting from a revaluation of inventory is new this year.

The portion of the item representing the revaluation, some $38 million, provides for the revaluation of the inventory on hand and is based on an estimate of the January 31, 1964 market value of the stock. In future years, therefore, the amount of the loss consequent upon the revaluation of inventory, if any, is expected to be much smaller since such amounts will cover one year only.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I beg leave to give notice, under Rule 21 of the Senate of Canada, that I will inquire of the Government at the next sitting, the following information:

1. Had the Government obtained from the Unemployment Insurance Commission on or before April 3, 1964, by request or otherwise, the financial position of the Commission in relation to funds available to meet the anticipated claims on each of the ten days, more or less, preceding and including Monday, April 6, 1964?

2. Regardless of whether the answer to paragraph 1 is in the affirmative or negative, did the Government know on April 3, 1964 whether funds were available to meet all claims on the Unemployment Insurance Commission at any time on Monday, April 6, 1964, whether or not Bill C-86 was given royal assent before the latter date?

3. Was the information referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 presented to the Senate in substance, summary or detail on or before the adjournment of the Senate on April 3, 1964?

4. What was the actual state of the Unemployment Insurance Fund in respect to funds available to meet anticipated claims on April 6, 1964 during the hours when offices of the Commission were open to receive such claims or when payments under the governing legislation should have been made?

5. Was the information referred to in paragraph 4 available to the Government at 6 p.m. on April 3, 1964?

6. If the necessary information with respect to any part of this inquiry is not immediately available to the Government, may the Senate be so informed?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman was good enough to send me a copy of these questions this afternoon, and I think I may be able to supply the answers now to most of the points he has raised. I believe that by so doing I shall be informing the Senate more fully of the actual situation.

I may say that the situation in which the Unemployment Insurance Fund finds itself at this time is a rather unusual one. I have here a statement I received from the Commission showing the balances that have been in the fund as at the 31st day of March each year from 1956 to 1963. Of course, this date is the end of the fiscal year in each case. I will just give round figures. In 1956 the balance was $854 million; in 1957, $874 million; in 1958, $744 million; in 1959, $499 million; in 1960, $365 million; in 1961, $184 million; in 1962, $66 million, and in 1963, $9 million.

Honourable senators, Appropriation Bill No. 2 of 1962 came to this house in March of that year, and I have just said that the balance in the fund as of March 31, 1962 was $66 million. Approval was given to authorize a loan to the fund, if required, in the amount of $25 million. That section of the Appropriation Bill is practically identical with one in the bill which came before us on Friday last. That loan was not required: the fund did not become depleted, and the commissioners did not have to resort to borrowings to keep going.

Honourable senators will recall that at the end of the 1963 fiscal year Parliament was not in session, and on the first day of April 1963 a Governor General's warrant was issued authorizing a loan to the fund of $25 million. The actual amount in the fund as at March 31, 1963, as I said just a few moments ago, was some $9 million. This $25 million authorized to be loaned to the fund by way of warrant was, in fact, used. On the second day of May 1963, by virtue of a further Governor General's warrant, an additional $30 million was authorized to be loaned to the fund in the event of emergency. The emergency continued and of this $30 million authorized by the second warrant on May 2, $10 million was used. I may add that my information is that these advances, the $25 million under the first warrant and the $10 million under the second warrant authorizing up to $30 million, were both repaid by the fund by the end of August.

Now the honourable gentleman's question asks what knowledge the Government had with respect to prospective shortages in the fund at the end of the fiscal year, March 31, 1964. Well, as I pointed out a few days ago, on page 117 of the budget papers there was a reference to the prospective debit position of the fund in the sum of $4 million to $5 million. In addition, there was in the supplementary estimates the item in the bill which we will consider later this evening, and which pointed up the desirability of a loan being authorized in the amount of approximately $55 million.

On Friday last when I was asked about the question of urgency, in addition to citing these two items to which I have just referred, I said on page 269 of Hansard that the situation was considered to be of a serious character, and that as soon as possible money should be made available to the fund because demands were going to be made, and concern was felt that the money would not be there to meet those demands. That, in fact, is what happened.

On Saturday morning last the Unemployment Insurance Commission met. They estimated that after the close of business on Friday last, April 3, and looking at the requirements which could be anticipated for Monday, April 6, that is today, the requirements would be $3.3 million for the benefits which were to be paid today. The cash available or that could be foreseen as being available to meet these claims was $1.6 million. Now the benefits expected to be required to be met today were as follows: cash benefits—over-the-counter benefits—paid in accordance with the practice of the Unemployment Insurance Commission were expected to amount to $1.4 million. In addition to that there were benefits to be paid in the form of cheques or warrants in the amount of $1.9 million.

The decision taken was that the cash benefits of $1.4 million would be paid out of the cash available today in the amount of $1.6 million, leaving approximately $200,000 surplus available to the fund as at the close of business today. There is no money to honour cheques totalling $1.9 million. The reason $1.6 million became available is that instead of waiting until tomorrow, Tuesday—the usual day for the Commission to apply to the Post Office Department for advances of cash received by that department—the Commission made arrangements with the Post Office Department to get those advances today.

The honourable gentleman asks: What about the ten-day period before April 6, 1964? I inquired of the Commission about that this afternoon, and I was told that there is really no ten-day requirement. They operate pretty well from day to day and from week to week. However, they do say that tomorrow the money required for payments in cash and by cheque will be the same as it is today, $3.3 million.

Honourable senators, what I am able to do tonight, and what I could not do Friday, is to report the cash position. This was ascertained after the close of business on Friday. The position became crystal clear at the meeting on Saturday. As a result of that meeting I understand the Minister of Labour made a statement to the press so as to inform the public of the position.

If this explanation does not answer Senator Grosart's inquiry as fully as he wishes, then perhaps he can speak to me and I will endeavour to get the further information he requires. I think in general, I have given an explanation of the circumstances which he tried to explore in his very searching questions. I hope that by giving it here in the house, I have been able to contribute a little to the information which honourable senators feel they need on this particular point.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all grateful to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for making this information available before the date on which the inquiry is to be made. I do not criticize that, of course, because it is in the public interest that this information be made available as soon as possible. This is not the time to enter into a debate on that information, but I am sure it is appropriate to remark that most honourable senators will agree it was very unfortunate that what the honourable Leader of the Government has said was crystal clear on Saturday morning was not crystal clear on Friday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): How could it have been? The books were not closed until Friday night, and the cash position could not be determined until after the close of business on Friday.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I ask leave of the Senate to draw attention to the fact that since we last met there has occurred the very significant Fifteenth Anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, of which Canada is a member.

Honourable senators will recall that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has a duration of 20 years. Saturday last, April 4, was the Fifteenth Anniversary, and therefore the Organization has reached the three-quarters mark in what I hope will be only chapter one in the history of this epoch-making alliance of 15 western nations designed to insure their mutual protection from aggression.

Under Article II NATO is, of course, more than a mere military alliance, but we need not be surprised if the defence aspect of its activities to date necessarily have predominated over the others.

Before the coming into force of the NATO alliance 15 years ago, there was, as we all remember, a succession of countries dragged into the Soviet colonial bloc by armed force or by other direct methods of aggression and interference in their private affairs. However, since that significant date, April 4, 15 years ago, not a single square foot of western Europe has gone behind the Iron Curtain. That fact, above all else, is justification of the NATO alliance and all that it was intended to do.

Recently, Marshal of the Royal Air Force, Sir Thomas F. Pike, Deputy Supreme Commander for NATO in Europe, underlined the continuing validity of NATO, in these words:

> NATO defensive strength has done more than succeed in deterring aggression. It has, in fact, demonstrated unmistakably that the NATO countries cannot be blackmailed by threats of force. So long as the NATO nations maintain the capability to meet any attack successfully, aggression is not a feasible means for communist expansion to take place in this part of the world.

Honourable senators, at the moment NATO is having its troubles, largely because the former threat of imminent aggression appears to have lessened. I say "appears" because I do not think that threat actually has lessened. Indeed, knowing as we do the implacability of the communist designs on the democratic countries of western Europe and on other democratic countries on this continent, we are entitled to assume that the present détente or "cooling off", or whatever it may be called, is no more than part of the deliberate long-term strategy of the Soviet Union to lull us into that same kind of complacency which history records was not only the preamble but indeed the necessary precondition of the aggressions of 1914 and 1939 against the truly democratic countries of Europe.

Again today, because this threat appears to have lessened, some of our allies appear to believe that once again they can "go it alone" in the matter of protection of their national sovereignty and the integrity of their lands. The fallacy of that thinking should be obvious to all, yet it may not be as apparent to some as we should like it to be.

There are grave doubts in some quarters about the wisdom of the course being pursued by President de Gaulle. We must have serious misgivings about the military confrontation of two of our allies, Greece and Turkey, over Cyprus.

Nevertheless, I was personally very heartened to receive a letter from one of our senior Canadian officials accredited to NATO in which he said that, while the superstructure of NATO may from time to time require extensive repairs, he could assure me that the foundations laid 15 years ago are as sound and as solid as ever.

That may be an optimistic view but, having in mind the way of life and the liberties that we all hold dear for ourselves and our allies, I am sure it is not too much to hope it is not over-optimistic.

Honourable senators, on this important occasion, I think it is proper that, in the hope you will be in full agreement, I should commend our Canadian Government for its frequent and continuing re-assertion of its faith in NATO and its principles.

Not long ago, in the month of January, on the occasion of his first visit to NATO headquarters since becoming Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Lester Pearson, who is unquestionably one of the renowned men in the history of NATO, said this:

> Canada is faithful to the ideals and purposes of NATO. While we are North Americans, traditionally and emotionally our ties have been with Europe. History has placed us in Europe but geography has placed us in the Western hemisphere, and therefore for us any new relationship, any new development in NATO or any other European development must emphasize the transatlantic character of our association. We see no salvation, no hope for progress in continentalism, whether it be European continentalism or North American continentalism.

Honourable senators, there will be general agreement that those are wise words.

As one who, with Senator Isnor, had the privilege, as a representative of the Senate, to visit NATO headquarters and many of its sub-commands, I know that the staunch and unswerving support of Canada has been one of the heartening rewards for that group of men of the 15 nations who have dedicated their talents to the maintenance of this unique, effective and exciting alliance for the defence of Canada, western civilization, and democracy.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all most indebted to honourable Senator Grosart for drawing our attention to this important anniversary.

It is important for a number of reasons, not the least of which is the fact that about 25 per cent of Canada's public spending every year is for the purposes to which he alluded, and it is largely for the work of NATO that this heavy financial burden is assumed by our taxpayers.

As the honourable senator rightly pointed out, NATO has been the shield of the West and particularly of northwest Europe, though indeed of the whole of the West as we know it. If NATO had not been set up 15 years ago, heaven only knows what might have happened to the countries of northwest Europe and to the civilization to which we belong.

Honourable senators who have attended conferences of NATO Parliamentarians will remember having been told time and time again that it is not enough simply to defend the integrity of our western boundaries. It is not enough to live under a balance of terror, no matter how much or how little the balance may be in our favour. We have been told that if the West is to survive, something more than a military alliance is necessary.

A military alliance involves a watering down of national sovereignty. What these countries in the western alliance do feel—and my friend has referred to article II of the Treaty—is that if the western countries would appreciate this ideal, their overwhelming economic strength would assure the survival of the West for itself and, indeed, they would be able to do much for the underprivileged and underdeveloped countries which are neither of the East nor of the West but which can be influenced in the proper direction.

While it is extremely important to do all we can to support the ideals of NATO on the military side, the importance of developing economic strength for all the West is something all NATO countries must fully appreciate. To achieve this they must work in a practical way. A very fine start was made in the establishment of the European Economic Community. That idea must be extended, and I hope it will be extended as a result of the Kennedy round of GATT negotiations, which are to open in Geneva next week.

It is just as important that the West be strong economically as militarily, perhaps more important.

More than this, the West should not forget that neither arms nor money alone are good enough for the survival of the West. The ideals of the civilization of the West, to which we subscribe, are ideals towards the realization of which all nations of the West must also work.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1964

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-86, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I suppose that having read some of the editorials in the press I should feel tonight as a sort of pale shadow of Warren Hastings; but I am consoled by the fact that I do not see a Mr. Burke or a Mr. Sheridan across the way, although I expect Senator Connolly is not far behind.

Let me say at once and as firmly as I can—and may I add that I really do not intend to delay the house with a long speech—that I am speaking for myself alone. I have not approached any of the leaders of my party on this side of the house, nor have they approached me. Nevertheless, I ask the indulgence of the house for a brief statement on my own behalf, which I do think will be relevant at this stage to the third reading of Bill C-86.

May I add one thing more? I do not rise to apologize for, to recant, or to retreat one inch from the course which I took last Friday with respect to this bill. To quote from one who was long my hero in public life, the course that I took on Friday last stands "unrevised and unrepented."

Honourable senators, I have no wish at all to fight over again in this house the ground that was fought over in the other place last week. I have been in politics too long, and in fighting journalism too long, to believe that all the angels are in one party and all the devils in the other. It may be that last week there was some fault on both sides or on all sides but, honourable senators, the question here is: who was mainly at fault? For the answer to that question I invite honourable senators, and all others who may have the opportunity, to read the clear, able, moderate speech by Senator White delivered in this house last Friday, a speech that went to the record, that cited the main relevant facts, and which I think showed that the responsibility for the mess which occurred in Parliament last week rests upon the shoulders of the Government, and upon the shoulders of the Government alone.

Let us glance for a moment at that record. Here was a Government which during last year saw the Unemployment Insurance Fund going bankrupt, and this is confirmed by the figures which Senator Connolly gave to the house a moment ago. This fund was broke, it was insolvent, it was unable to continue further without loans from the Government, and yet while this was going on, while the Government saw that this fund was going broke, was going to disaster—during all that time this Government had in its possession the report of a commission of inquiry which aimed to make, and did in fact make, recommendations to avoid that bankruptcy.

I have before me a copy of that report. The chairman was a Mr. Gill, the president of perhaps the largest life insurance company in Canada. With him on the commission was Professor John Deutsch, a man known very well to this Senate, and perhaps the most distinguished economist we have in this nation. This commission, which was set up specifically to inquire into means to save the solvency of this fund, actually carried on an intensive investigation extending over a period of 17 months, and it brought in a report on November 2, 1962. That report has been in the hands of this Government, as well as the hands of the previous Government, for more than two years. The report contained 42 specific recommendations. I shall not cite them all here, but one of the recommendations was that there should be tougher supervision of claims. And why? Let me quote just a paragraph from the report at page 41:

> According to figures provided by the Unemployment Insurance Commission for the year ended March 31, 1961, demonstrably fraudulent claims amounted to $2,268,464. In relation to total claim payments of $514 million, this figure may not appear too startling but it is not a total figure—it is fraud detected and takes no account of undiscovered fraud or payments in circumstances that could not be classed as fraudulent and yet where the payment is contrary to the spirit of the act.

That was one recommendation. Another recommendation was that the maximum duration of benefits should be 26 weeks instead of 52 weeks. Still another recommendation was that fishermen should be taken out from under this act and dealt with in a special category.

These three or four recommendations are typical of what the commissioners found and recommended in order to save the fund; and I repeat, while this fund was going bankrupt for a year, while the Government sat there and saw this fund sinking under their feet—and they had this report in their possession—they never moved a hand to deal with the problem at all. Oh, yes, they had time for budget tinkering; they had time for a half-baked withholding tax; they had time for rash amateurish advances, to be followed by humiliating retreats; they had time to set up a Royal Commission on Biculturalism, as if culture can be bisected; and they had time, finally, for a so-called plan, a national pension plan, which now threatens to Balkanize the nation. What the Government had no time for was the Unemployment Insurance Fund. It watched that fund sink into disaster, and it watched it with hopeless impotence. Either that, or the men at action stations—and you remember the men at action stations promised by Mr. Pearson in his famous speech—apparently had all gone to sleep.

Here is this report. I am sure most honourable senators have read it. What in the name of common sense was the reason for spending over a million dollars on a report like this and then pigeonholing it while the problem it was trying to solve grew more and more acute?

So we came to March of this year, and now it is perfectly clear to everybody that the fund in fact is bankrupt. It would have been bankrupt sooner had it not received loans from the Government. During the whole of March, right up to the end of the fiscal year, the Government had authority to make this loan of $50 million, the loan they sought to gain in this bill. I repeat, they had authority to make this loan; and I ask you, why did they not make it? Would any businessman in this house—and there are many—conduct his business in such a manner? Would you have seen some area of your business going to ruin or disaster when you had the means of averting that disaster? Would you have done nothing about it until the final minute of the eleventh hour, and then sought to override the rules of this house with a cry of "emergency" to do something you could have done ten days before?

Honourable senators, I would not wish, and I hope I would never wish, to charge any of my fellow Canadians with indifference towards the underprivileged or the poor. What I do charge, what I do accuse this Government of—and it can be documented to the hilt—is that in this whole pitiful business they were guilty of incompetence and fantastic disregard for a matter that should have had the attention of the whole Cabinet.

What has happened during the past ten days? You have all read the verse about the King of France who marched his soldiers up the hill and marched them down again. Well, honourable senators, for nearly ten days we marched up Parliament Hill only to hear the Leader of the Government tell us that he had no information, and to hear Your Honour himself intone the words, "This Senate does now adjourn." So irrational did this become, so fantastic did it become, that the honourable Senator Power, that valiant sentinel of parliamentary rights, rose in his seat on April 1 and, as reported at page 258 of Senate Hansard, said this—and I am going to put it back on Hansard:

> . . . Whether it is due to the intellectual political amateurism of one party, or the stupid obstinacy of another, or the blatant opportunism of another, the fact is that in the public mind Parliament has suffered a reverse more serious than any I have known for many years.
>
> I believe that Parliament as such no longer holds the high and dignified position which it should have in the public esteem. That being to my mind the fact, . . .

Now listen to this:

> . . . That being to my mind the fact, there is no reason why this branch of Parliament, the Senate, should be treated > to the kind of procedure which we have had to follow in these hour-to-hour adjournments . . .

>
> I suggest, therefore, that today—allowing one more chance, by sitting this afternoon or this evening—our Leader be instructed to tell those with whom he has to deal, that the Senate is sick and tired of this kind of procedure, that we will adjourn until Monday, April 6.

—until today, the very day to which we did adjourn.

There is another gentleman sitting opposite me, another steeped deeply in parliamentary traditions, not only in this land but in the land of his ancestors, in the mother of parliaments, who rose in the Senate that same day. This is what he said:

> I agree with the Acting Leader of the Opposition that we ought to adjourn now until April 20. . . . I see no reason why we should not adjourn right now, go home, and come back when there is work to be done.

I am, of course, referring to the honourable Senator Roebuck.

Well, honourable senators, the Government was made aware of these protests. Day after day, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) rose in his place. He shared our spirit of revolt, and he said he was reporting back to the Cabinet. Well, gentlemen, if that is so, the Cabinet does not seem to pay much attention to his reports.

So what happened? Last Friday at 5 o'clock in the afternoon we were told that a bill would be coming from the other house seeking, among other things, this loan for the Unemployment Insurance Fund. Not one of us had a copy of that bill; we had never as much as seen it. At about 5.30 p.m. this bill came over here, a bill asking for $135 million-odd—that is more than half the total of the national debt of Canada when I was in the press gallery in 1914—and for leave to make a loan of some $50 million to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. As I have said, not one of us had even seen the bill. Did they listen to our protests, or did they treat them with contempt?

Honourable senators, as evidence of the complete contempt they had for the Senate, immediately we met in this chamber his Honour the Speaker read a message informing us that the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was ready to give this bill royal assent—no consultation with us; not a word with a single member of the Senate; no regard whatever for our rights. They sent over this bill at the last moment, and sent the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General to give it royal assent. If that is not treating this body with contempt, then I do not know what contempt is. I say the very fact of sending this bill to us at that time, in that way, was in itself a travesty of the legislative process.

Honourable senators, this Senate is an integral part of Parliament, with well defined rights, powers, duties and privileges. If we here in this house forget or ignore those rights, if we permit others to trample on those rights or to despise them, then we condemn this house to a place of inconsequence, a place for only ceremony and ritual, a place with no meaningful legislative existence in this land; and doing that we declare that we ourselves have no right to sit here at all. If this place has no meaningful legislative function to perform, if in fact we are not a second chamber at all—and that is what the events of Friday last demonstrated, that we are not regarded as a second chamber with a worthwhile power of any kind; we were treated with contempt—and if the members of this house go along with that concept, then I say that Mr. Stanley Knowles is right and that this Senate should be abolished.

I repeat that I speak here only for myself. However, I wish to say, and to say without any room for mistake, that never again will I be a party to that sort of thing. As long as I hold a seat in this Senate, any legislation coming here, unless it be based upon what Mr. Justice Holmes called "real and present peril," unless it be a real emergency, and not the sort of thing we were subjected to last week, I will see that it does not get my consent.

Honourable senators, I was brought up to believe in a second chamber; I was brought up to believe in and reverence Parliament, and an attack upon this Senate, contempt for this Senate, is not contempt for the Senate alone. It is contempt for the Senate and Parliament, and when this legislation came to us the other day it did not come from the House of Commons, it came on the orders of the executive, it came on the orders of Her Majesty's ministerial representatives in this country, and they are the people who are overriding this branch of Parliament, who are in fact insulting and deriding this branch of Parliament.

All through my life, through more than half a century of politics and journalism, I have spoken and written for the parliamentary way. I propose going on in that way. Never again, and I repeat this, never again while I have a seat in this house will any bill such as the one which came to us the other day, under the circumstances in which it came, get my approval in this house.

Now, honourable senators, before I sit down I would like to say just a word, if I may, to my critics. They have described me as petulant, peevish, rash and irresponsible. Well, I do not think that the senators who sit with me in this house would really regard me as petulant, peevish, rash or irresponsible, and I may say here that I was very sorry that some of my colleagues in this house were inconvenienced by this return here tonight; I was sorry because of the kindness and courtesy and consideration shown to me from both sides of the house since I came here.

There is another friend of mine who spoke in the other place the other day. I hope I am within the rules, but I am not mentioning his name. This gentleman came out and said that because of what I had done this house should be abolished. Gentlemen, I was astonished at that. Here is a man who a few years ago in a very famous debate won acclaim throughout this country for being a great defender of the rights of Parliament, but apparently if you stand up for the rights of this house, which are also the rights of Parliament, then he says "Let us go and abolish the place." Well, I leave this gentleman to his own logic.

There is another person, and I use the word "person" here, who has used what I would consider rather insulting language about me, but I ignore him because I think he has revealed the character of his mind far better than I could ever reveal it.

Then there is that newspaper, the Toronto Globe and Mail. This newspaper suggests that because I have said a word here on behalf of the independence of this branch of Parliament, Mr. Pearson should now revise his plan to reform the Senate and simply provide that any person born on February 19, 1889, which happens to be my birthday, should be expelled from the Senate, and added that this would be an appropriate celebration of my birthday.

Honourable senators, I care little about these remarks because I have been long enough in political warfare to appreciate Mr. Truman's saying that "If you don't like the heat, then don't go in the kitchen." But there is something else I would say. Through my years in journalism and politics there are two things I have noticed: first, the crudity of speech that is the penalty of democracy, and secondly the journalistic illiteracy which is the penalty of fair, decent journalism.

Honourable senators, there is one other group or party to which I would like to say a word. I was represented the other night as sitting in what was called the "posh Rideau Club" in apparent unconcern of the harm I had visited on those people in this country covered by unemployment insurance. Honourable senators, let me say this to you, and I hope you do not mind a personal reference, and I also want to say it to those outside the house who may feel rightly or wrongly that I have visited injury upon them. I was myself a child of poverty, a child of hard circumstances who was compelled to leave school before the age of twelve to gain a livelihood for himself, and help gain a livelihood for his family. Because of that, all my sympathies have been with the sort of people who began my days. I have been first, last and all the time with the underdog, and there is not a social security measure in the statute books of Canada which did not have my undivided support. If I felt I had created hardship or sorrow or suffering in any home in this country I would indeed be sorry, but I would have this consolation, the consolation of believing that perhaps a single day or even two days of a person's being deprived of social security or an unemployment insurance cheque is a very small price to pay for the assertion here of the rights of this Senate and of the rights of Parliament, that Parliament, which in the words of the immortal Churchill, is the very pillar stone of all our liberties.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa

April 6, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 6th April, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker:

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 7, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Canadian National Railways for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 40 of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter 29, Statutes of Canada, 1955. (English and French texts).

Report to Parliament of the Auditor on the Accounts of the Canadian National Railway System for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 40 of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter 29, Statutes of Canada, 1955. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 17 of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, chapter 311, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion for adjournment:

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, perhaps I should now discuss the immediate prospects for further legislation from the other place. So far as I can tell there will be one more supply bill, but when it will come to this house I cannot tell.

Today the other place met at 2.30 p.m. At 5 o'clock this afternoon private members' bills will be discussed, and the consideration of public bills will be resumed at 8 p.m., until 10 p.m. As honourable senators know, tomorrow is a short day; the other place will adjourn at 6 p.m. Speculation varies as to when consideration of the supply bill will be concluded in the House of Commons. Of course, we are again in the position we were in so often last week. There are some who think that the bill can be disposed of before the Commons concludes its business today. If this does not happen, then we are into a short day tomorrow.

Honourable senators were extremely patient throughout last week, and I believe everyone was particularly gratified to see that well over one-third of the members of the Senate were here for the sitting last night, the same being true today. I hesitate to suggest that we should adjourn for a couple of days. This course may be very convenient for those who live nearby, but it may be very inconvenient for those who live at a distance. If there is a prospect of the bill reaching us tonight, perhaps it would save another sitting day if we wait for it. However, I point out that we shall not know any more at 8 p.m. than at 5 p.m., because private members' bills will be heard at 5 o'clock this evening. Following the practice we adopted on a number of occasions last week, I thought it might be desirable to hear the views of honourable senators on the position in which we again find ourselves.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, if I understand the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), we are in exactly the same situation as we were about ten days ago, before Easter, and there is the same problem of the Senate waiting for the House of Commons. It could also be the other way round, that the Commons might have to wait for the Senate. Up to now I think there has been no serious difficulty resulting from this problem, but it seems to me that we are now faced with a situation which requires a solution.

There is nothing wrong in the Senate waiting for the House of Commons, and in fact the Senate should not wait for the House of Commons in such a way as to intimate to the other place that it should proceed more speedily. I think each house should mind its own business, and I would not like in other circumstances, especially when a session is about to end, the Commons pushing the Senate to adopt speedily bills which would require more time than the circumstances I have just mentioned usually afford the Senate.

I would ask the Leader of the Government what would his intentions have been if we had received the last supply bill pertaining to the supplementary estimates which we are now awaiting. To what date would he have suggested that we adjourn our proceedings? It seems to me that the solution would be to adjourn the Senate to that date which the Leader may have had in mind, with the understanding, however, that the Chair would call us back immediately after the Commons had passed that last supply bill. This would mean that we could be here the next day.

If the remainder of the supplementary estimates pass the House of Commons tonight, then we could be called back for tomorrow night. I am sure that at that time we would be able to muster a quorum.

On the other hand, if the bill does not pass the other place today it may do so on Thursday, Friday, or Monday. There is certainly no requirement that the Senate should look into legislation five minutes after it has passed the House of Commons. In the circumstances I do not think that a delay of 24 hours is too much. If the other place should take ten days to consider supplementary estimates, then it would be normal for us to take two days to pass the legislation here.

Nobody could be critical of the Senate if it acted in this manner. As I said before, there is nothing wrong with the Senate waiting for the House of Commons. It all depends on the way in which we are waiting. But, the way we were waiting last week was against the dignity of the Senate. That is why I suggest in all earnestness to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) that the solution to our present problem is to adjourn the Senate for two or three weeks, subject to its being called back by the Chair on a day's notice as soon as this appropriation bill passes the other place.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I wonder if the honourable Leader of the Government can inform us if he anticipates there will be any items of urgency in this third section of the estimates. My reason for asking that question follows Senator Flynn's argument, because if there is no urgency in any of the items, it might be possible to actually set a date which would meet the convenience of all members of this house, and also meet the requirements of the Government in respect to the passage of the final items of supply.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, before the honourable Leader of the Government answers the question put to him by Senator Grosart, may I make just one comment? From what I can see we are beginning to play the same game of on again, off again—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Gone again Finnigin.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: —as we played last week. I notice there are twice as many senators present this week as there were last week, which means there will be twice as many malcontents this week as there were last week. That is the only difference I can see.

I have already pointed out—and in this I was supported by the words of a great senator, Senator Power—that after March 31, which has been called the magic date, there was no urgency to the passing of these estimates, but we might have been mistaken there because there was at least one urgent item which was discussed at considerable length, namely, the loan to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. That has now been taken care of, and I am inclined to agree with the suggestion made by Senator Flynn today.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, I agree with most of what has been said, and I go one step further to say that since I do not believe there is any great urgency in these remaining supplementary estimates, we should adjourn until April 21.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The 27th.

Hon. Mr. Power: The 21st or the 27th. I suggest that we adjourn until the 21st, at any rate, because returning on that date would at least give us time to pass the bill before the end of April. Judging from such precedents as I can recall, we have always endeavoured to pass the supplementary estimates before the end of April. If we return on the 27th it might be a little late in view of the fact that under our rules there have to be two days between first and second readings, and one day between second and third readings. That would get us into the month of May.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: If we had a holiday, we might give consent.

Hon. Mr. Power: Therefore, I suggest that when we adjourn today we adjourn until April 21.

Hon. Mr. White: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a question. If he had in mind that we adjourn until Thursday or Friday of this week, or even until Monday of next week, what would the position be if the bill were not before us by then? We would have to adjourn again. If that is correct, then I think the suggestion made by Senator Flynn and Senator Power has considerable merit. It seems to me that we might adjourn today until April 21, or whatever date is in mind, subject to the right of His Honour the Speaker to call us back if necessary.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, there is one thing I wish to comment on. I do not like the word "malcontents". I know it was said in joke but sometimes when these things appear in cold print they are not humorous at all. I am not a malcontent. My feeling is that while our experience has been frustrating I do not think I have been hurt very much by being here. That was our duty as we saw it and we have fulfilled it.

If there is any real reason for staying on, I suppose I am about as ready to do so as anyone else; but I do not see any reason for staying here, that is why I think we ought to go.

I like the suggestion that we adjourn until the period we planned for a recess shall have elapsed, with the provision already made that we may be called back if there is any urgency.

I would leave that to the good sense of His Honour the Speaker and the honourable Leader of the Government, no doubt in consultation with the honourable Leader of the Opposition. If they think there is something really urgent which demands or justifies our being called together, they could inform us by cable.

If I hear of it any time before 3 o'clock in the afternoon, I can be here the next day. Many other senators are in much the same position. There are some who come from a greater distance and I believe they could be excused. For those of us who are within easier reach of this chamber, a telegram would bring us here. We would know then that there is some matter of urgency. I think there is no one on either side of the house who would feel aggrieved by that. I am thoroughly in sympathy with what Senator Flynn has said.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I would like to point out one thing. Regardless of what our rules say, I believe that if we adjourn today to April 21 or some later day in the month of April, certainly in the House of Commons it will be said that we have adjourned regardless of the fact that this supply bill has not yet been approved, and we will be severely criticized there. Perhaps honourable senators do not care about that part, but it is a factor which I think should be drawn to the attention of the Senate.

In the second place, even though we may adjourn subject to recall, I think the public will say that we have adjourned until that date. That is something which honourable senators individually and collectively should take into account.

I do not like to talk in this way but the question of our own public image here, as a body in Parliament, can be called into question and will be called into question if this should happen. Perhaps the risk is worth it. Perhaps the situation calls for it. But I think I would be lacking in the duty which I owe to the Senate if I did not point this out.

Honourable senators, there is another item that I should mention. There are many senators here who can return by air within a matter of hours; but there are other senators who have come from far distances, some of whom came last night, because they realized the question of a quorum was important. Supposing we do adjourn now, subject to recall, and these senators return to their homes in Nova Scotia, Manitoba or New Brunswick, would they be expected to return if the bill should become available here on Thursday?

We have a problem, and I think we want to approach it in the most reasonable way we can. If senators from a distance are going to remain here, it might be more desirable to adjourn until Thursday or Friday. Certainly there is this to be said, that if we fix a day later, if necessary, we could be recalled for tomorrow, Wednesday, but if we should adjourn until tomorrow we cannot postpone it.

I wonder if any other senators would care to express their views on this point?

Hon. Harold Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not wish to embarrass the honourable Leader of the Government, but is the only alternative to remain here for another five, six, seven or eight days, meet in this chamber at three o'clock every day for a brief prayer, and then be dismissed until the following day? If that is the alternative, I suggest that we shall be engaging in a gross waste of time. I appreciate the difficulties about the money bill, and the relations between the two chambers.

With regard to the public image of the Senate, there is already an image of the Senate which can hardly be more defaced or defamed, if we determine now to go into a recess for a period of a couple of weeks. While on that topic, may I say that if there is an unfavourable image of the Senate in the minds of the Canadian people, it is in large part the responsibility of this chamber. If there is not enough work for us to do, that is not of course the fault of the Senate, but is actually and realistically the responsibility of the House of Commons. It is a simple thing to say that the solution is that we should go on ad infinitum until Parliament winds up the session, but I suggest that is neither realistic nor practical. Why should we not take a breather for 24 or even 48 hours, and see what is going to happen in the other place? We could then perhaps determine with some accuracy when we can recess, and for how long.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I would just like to say that I appreciate very much the difficult position of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West). However, I agree that if we adjourn until a certain date, whatever date may be in mind, the contingency so far as public business is concerned, and the House of Commons is concerned, is covered by the suggestion that we be called back whenever necessary. I think that is the solution.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I am most grateful to all honourable senators for the views they have expressed. I am in the hands of the house, and may I say that I feel confident when I am in that position.

Honourable senators, in the circumstances, I will move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, April 20, subject to the call of the Speaker. In making a motion of this kind I think it is perfectly obvious to all that the bill which we await from the other place will be available here before April 20, and word will be sent to all honourable senators whether they are here or not. I hope that the press of this country, and also the other place, will realize that this is not a definitive adjournment to April 20. We are adjourning subject to the call of His Honour the Speaker, and will reassemble whenever the presence of the Senate is required here for the business of the country and of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I now move the motion, seconded by the honourable Senator Vaillancourt; and it is, of course, a debatable motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will the adjournment be until 3 o'clock in the afternoon, or 8 o'clock in the evening?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Eight o'clock.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave, it has been moved by the honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., seconded by the honourable Senator Vaillancourt, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, April 20, 1964, at 8 o'clock in the evening. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, I should like to ask one question before the motion is put. In the event that the final phase of the supplementary estimates is approved by tomorrow or Thursday, what would be our position then about being recalled?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that in the event that the bill for which we have been waiting is finally disposed of by the House of Commons tonight or tomorrow, His Honour the Speaker would probably consult with the Leader of the Opposition and myself, and we would immediately recall the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: If it is urgent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: But, with respect, I suggest it would not be by reason of the fact that the estimates come to us or are ready to come to us that we should be recalled. My submission is that, having looked into the matter and consulted with the powers that be, if we found there was real urgency then we should be recalled. If not, I see no reason for recalling the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Power: I entirely agree with the acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette). If it is a sort of conditional sine qua non that we return here immediately the bill passes the other place, I do not think the adjournment would be of any use to us, for in all common sense I think the bill will pass at some time during this week. I do not agree with the premise that these estimates are so urgent we would have to be called back within 24 hours. I would be quite satisfied to come back in sufficient time for us to debate the estimates fully and pass them before May 1. That is the position I take. I do not take the position that we should return immediately the estimates are passed in the House of Commons.

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, I was wondering if it might not be more appropriate if the honourable Leader of the Government were to add to his motion to adjourn words to the effect, "in the event of being called earlier," or, "subject to being called earlier?"

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is a simple thing to do, because the motion is made subject to the motion that was passed on March 13 last, namely, to recall the Senate as required.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, April 20, 1964, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

THE SENATE

Monday, April 13, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

> Ordered—That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house has appointed Messrs. Baldwin, Boutin, Brown, Cadieux (Terrebonne), Casselman (Mrs.), Chapdelaine, Chatterton, Choquette, Côté (Longueuil), Crossman, Enns, Fairweather, Fisher, Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke), Honey, Konantz (Mrs.), Laniel, Macquarrie, Martineau, Mullally, and Wahn a Committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament so far as the interests of the Commons are concerned, and to act, on behalf of this house, as members of a Joint Committee of both Houses on the Library.

Ordered, that the message do lie on the Table.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

> Ordered—That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house will unite with them in the formation of a Joint Committee of both houses on the subject of the Printing of Parliament and that the following Members: Messrs. Boutin, Cadieux (Terrebonne), Cardiff, Choquette, Clancy, Cooper, Côté (Longueuil), Cowan, Drouin, Ethier, Kennedy, Lamb, Laverdière, Leblanc, Loiselle, Ormiston, Ouellet, Pascoe, Prittie, Richard, Rochon, Scott, Simpson, and Mr. Speaker will act as members on the part of this house on the said Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

Ordered, that the message do lie on the Table.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

> Ordered—That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house has appointed Messrs. Boulanger, Cardiff, Cowan, Cyr, Doucett, Ethier, Fairweather, Fane, Forgie, Gauthier, Gelber, Gundlock, Hales, Horner (The Battlefords), Irvine, Konantz (Mrs.), Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean), Martin (Timmins), Matheson, McNulty, Peters, Rinfret, Slogan, Tucker, and Whelan a committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the Parliamentary Restaurant so far as the interests of the Commons are concerned, and to act, on behalf of this house, as members of a Joint Committee of both houses on the Restaurant.

Ordered, that the message do lie on the Table.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1964

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-89, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill could be described as the final bill of the final supplementary estimates. These estimates cover the Government's fiscal year ended March 31, 1964. The bill we have before us now is identical in form, except in one or two minor respects, with that of Appropriation Bills Nos. 2 and 3 which we considered last week. Indeed, with the exception of section 5, the bill now before us is the same and contains the same wording as those which have come to us from the other place over a great number of years. So the form of the bill is one with which all honourable senators are quite familiar.

Section 5 of the bill is based upon a precedent established in 1962 when the final supplementary estimates came to this house in a bill on April 16 of that year. Those final supplementary estimates covered the previous fiscal year which had ended on March 31 of that year. Similarly, it is because the items which are contained in the final supplementary estimates now before us are being approved by Parliament after the end of the fiscal year that section 5 is required.

I might say that the difference between this bill and the bills we had before us last week is in the amount that is being granted. That amount, which you will see in section 2, is $143,702,715.

The schedule to a bill, of course, varies with every bill of this kind which reaches the Senate; however, I would point out to honourable senators that the schedule to the bill now before us contains items which appear in Supplementary Estimates (E) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964. These supplementary estimates, as we have reminded ourselves on earlier occasions, were tabled in this house on March 10. Today is April 13, and I am sure all honourable senators have spent as much time studying the supplementary estimates as I have, particularly over the past weekend.

Honourable senators will see by Supplementary Estimates (E) the items on the Table of Contents page, beginning with the item with respect to the Department of Justice and continuing to the end of the page, are, in fact, the items contained in the schedule to this bill, with two exceptions. The first exception is as to the items dealing with the Department of Labour, which were included in a bill we considered last week. The other exception is as to the items with respect to the Department of Veterans Affairs. Those items also were in a bill which received royal assent previously. In effect, what we are doing now is completing the consideration of matters arising out of the supplementary estimates which have been before us since March 10, and which were dealt with in part by two supply bills the Senate has already approved.

I should say, too, that the practice in the House of Commons has been that when bills of this kind reach the committee of supply stage they receive all three readings on the same day in that house. That practice was followed in respect to the other bills arising out of these supplementary estimates. Therefore, the practice of giving three readings to a bill on the same day is not unusual in the House of Commons. Certainly it is not something that is necessarily peculiar to the Senate.

Having said that, honourable senators, I think we should remind ourselves of the nature of these bills which are called supply bills. Because they are money bills, they are indeed the peculiar prerogative of the House of Commons. That house is responsible to the people. The Government is also answerable for these bills, not only to the House of Commons, but to the country. In order to get these appropriations through, the Government must have the confidence of the House of Commons; without that confidence, it cannot continue to function. This applies particularly to money bills. The House of Commons, under our constitutional usage, has always jealously guarded the power of the purse.

We should also remind ourselves that these bills when passed become acts of Parliament, and because they are acts of Parliament they require the normal three readings in the House of Commons, the three readings in this chamber, and as well royal assent.

These are, as I say, money bills, and there is a special emphasis placed upon matters of this kind in respect to the prerogatives, privileges and rights of the House of Commons. Some of these prerogatives are reflected in the formularies which our Parliament through usage and custom have prescribed for our course of conduct. I ask honourable senators, for example, to think about a special direction that is to be found in the Speech from the Throne delivered at each opening of Parliament. Towards the end of the Speech, the Queen's representative, addressing himself directly to the members of the House of Commons, says:

> Members of the House of Commons: You will be asked to appropriate the funds required for the services and payments authorized by Parliament.

I ask honourable senators to think back to the many royal assents they have witnessed in this chamber. Under normal circumstances, when a number of bills are to be assented to, the Clerk of the Parliaments sits at the Table and he has before him the bundle of bills which have been passed by Parliament and which he presents to the Queen's representative for assent. Never in that bundle of bills presented by the Clerk of the Parliaments at that time is there a money bill. The House of Commons comes here, led by its Speaker who, personally and on behalf of the Commons, presents the money bill by itself. The Clerk Assistant then goes to the Bar of the Senate and receives the money bill from the Speaker of the House of Commons. It is brought to the Table and there again the Clerk of the Parliaments, acting as he does with respect to other bills, submits to the Queen's representative this very special kind of bill known as the Appropriation Bill. The wording used in that formulary points up the particular point I desire to make this afternoon. I read from Senate Hansard of this year, at page 282:

> The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:
>
> "May it please Your Honour:
>
> The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.
>
> In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:
>
> An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.
>
> To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent."

When the bill is brought to the Clerk of the Parliaments he stands before the Queen's representative and pronounces the formulary:

> In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General thanks her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Will my honourable Leader allow me a question? Does he think that this parliamentary practice is logical and consonant with the fact that such a bill cannot become law unless the Senate has passed it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I thank the honourable senator for mentioning the point, because I think it serves to emphasize what I said earlier. Any bill which comes to Parliament for enactment has to be read three times in both houses. Any money bill having received three readings in the other place, then comes here and again must receive three readings. But unlike other bills which go through the ordinary course of passage by the House of Commons and then by the Senate, a money bill, after it has been given third reading in this place, is then sent back to the House of Commons and is brought here especially in the hands of its Speaker for royal assent. The formularies I have just read are followed on such occasions.

Hon. Mr. Vien: It is the practice, but it is not a constitutional requirement.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is what I have said. What I am talking about is the constitutional practice which has the sanction of years of usage, not only in this country but indeed in any of the countries where the British parliamentary system has been adopted.

I think the record should also reflect that this house, again by constitutional usage, is not empowered to increase the tax, to increase the levy. Our own rules so direct. The Rules of the Senate provide as follows:

> 70. The Senate will not proceed upon a Bill appropriating public money, that shall not, within the knowledge of the Senate, have been recommended by the Queen's representative.
>
> 71. To annex any clause to a Bill of Aid or Supply, the matter of which is foreign to, and different from the matter of the Bill, is unparliamentary.

As honourable senators know, money bills are initiated by the Crown by a message introduced in the other place by the Governor General. Such bills originate in the House of Commons. They come here for consideration, but the Senate has never asserted a right to increase the amount of the tax or the levy which the bill imposes.

In the course of the history of this institution there have been debates as to the capacity of the Senate to reduce the amount of the impost, the levy or the tax. That too has been resisted, on the ground that it would interfere with ways and means. This argument has been raised many times during the short period of some 10 years I have been a member of this body. It was raised many years ago when Senator Ross was in this house, and as a result of a debate at that time an opinion was obtained from three of the eminent legal luminaries of Canada, Mr. Lafleur, Mr. Geoffrion and Mr. Ewart. I believe this is not the time to debate the merits of the opinions given at that time. I speak as I do so that we can all remind ourselves of what has been our practice through the years with respect to supply bills.

I think it fair to say that in all of its history the Senate has never attempted to set itself up in opposition to the House of Commons. Its work is supplementary to that of the House of Commons. It is here to give sober second thought to legislation and to policy. But I would rather doubt, in view of the precedents which are quotable, that the sober second thought extends to supply bills in the effective sense. I believe the great men of the Senate of the past—men like Dandurand, Meighen and Lougheed—recognized and always guided themselves on the basis of this principle. I hope that it is of some value to the Senate to have these observations placed upon our records today.

Honourable senators, so much for the bill and the general principles which must actuate us as we approach the consideration of a bill of this kind.

The important aspect of the measure before us arises out of the schedules. As I have said, these supplementary estimates have been wholly before us since March 10. The items on the contents page from Justice to the end, with the two exceptions to which I have alluded, are the items we are considering today. The amount of the vote is more than $143 million, which includes loans of some $56 million, the details of which are set out in the schedule. There are some 15 different headings.

I conclude my explanation by saying that if honourable senators have any questions I shall do my utmost to give satisfactory answers this afternoon. If there are matters arising out of the schedule upon which I cannot give complete answers, I would ask your indulgence to enable me to get whatever additional information may be required.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, this bill now before us authorizes the expenditure of $143,702,715. It is the third and final bill arising out of the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64 which ended on March 31.

As honourable senators know, the total amount of these estimates, known as Supplementary Estimates (E), is almost $300 million in budgetary expenditures, loans, investments and advances. As I indicated when the first bill arising out of the estimates was before us, these are the largest set of supplementary estimates ever to come before Parliament. What, in effect, is really a housekeeping matter has, because of the ineptitude of the Government, become a cause célèbre, for, after all, we are dealing with public money that has in fact already been spent.

The main estimates for the current fiscal year and the Appropriation Bill arising out of those estimates will be considered by Parliament at a date in the session to be designated by the Government. Therefore, there will have to be another interim supply bill next month, since, on the basis of past experience, it is safe to assume that the main estimates will not be approved by Parliament before the end of May. As honourable senators know, we have already passed one interim supply bill for the current fiscal year which granted two-twelfths of the main estimates, or, in other words, granted supply for April and May. So, honourable senators, there will be many other opportunities for debate.

I cannot give an undertaking at this time that when interim supply comes to us before the end of May we will consent to waive our rules, as is usually the case with interim supply bills. The Government knows now that it must get supply for the months of June and July. Therefore, we hope that a bill for that purpose will not be presented to us at the eleventh hour, under the pretext that salaries are dependent upon its passage.

It is not our intention to exercise our prerogative and debate this bill. We feel that these estimates have received more than passing attention by both houses—and I do not mean to pun when I say "passing attention." In so far as the Senate is concerned, we had what was in my opinion a good debate on these estimates when the first of the three bills, Bill C-86, was before us. There is nothing we could do or say at this point which would serve any useful purpose. Therefore, it is not my intention to be repetitious or redundant.

The bill is in the usual form, with the one exception, of the inclusion of section 5. In this regard we are grateful to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for the explanation he has given us. Section 5 of the bill confirms what I previously said during the course of this debate regarding the matter of urgency. Honourable senators will recall that during my remarks on Bill C-86 on April 3 I said, as appears at page 270 of Hansard, that once we passed the end of the fiscal year the Government had 30 days in which to get these estimates through. In other words they had 30 days' grace. I was supported in this submission by honourable Senator Power and by other senators. I am glad to see that the stand I took at that time has been recognized in section 5 of the bill, which reads:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, the amounts appropriated by this Act may be paid at any time on or before the thirtieth day of April, one thousand nine hundred and sixty-four, and such payment shall be deemed to have been made in and be chargeable to the fiscal year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and sixty-four.

That is the very clause I brought to the attention of this house, as I have said, in the course of the debate on April 3 last.

However, we are now getting on into April, today being the thirteenth day of the month, and we believe that we should clean up this matter so that the Government can get on with the business of the country.

Before I resume my seat I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government a question or two, the answers to which I am sure will be of interest to all honourable senators. At page 6 of the schedule to the bill, under the Department of the Secretary of State, Vote No. 15e, there is an item for $31,400 for Translation Bureau. It is my understanding that this translation bureau is located in the City of Montreal.

Would the honourable Leader of the Government tell us why this important translation bureau is not located in the national capital since it is intended, as I understand it, to serve the various departments of the federal Government?

Another question I should like to ask is one regarding Vote No. 43e, at page 5 of the schedule, under Privy Council. It contains an item of $275,850, and is shown as expenses of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, of which we have heard so much these days. As the commission has been in existence for less than a year, these expenses seem unusually high. Would the Leader of the Government explain in general the nature of these expenses?

Hon. Thomas Vien: Honourable senators, I do not wish to indulge in a discussion of a constitutional question that arises out of the remarks of my honourable Leader, but I believe that, in the consideration of this and other bills coming from the other place, honourable senators should take into account some specific stipulations of the British North America Act. I do not believe that the rules of either house of Parliament, or parliamentary practice or convention, can override the specific dispositions of the British North America Act.

If honourable senators will refer to section 18 of the B.N.A. act they will find therein that the powers and privileges of the Senate and of the House of Commons are the same as were enjoyed by the Commons of the British Parliament at the time of Confederation. This section has been repeated in the Senate and House of Commons Act of Canada. Therefore, the powers of the Senate constitutionally are exactly the same as are the powers of the House of Commons.

When we come to consider money bills, we look to sections 52, 53 and 54 of the British North America Act, but those do not detract in any way from the basic powers section 18 recognizes as being vested in the Senate and in the House of Commons, both being on an equal basis with respect to their parliamentary power.

The British North America Act of 1867 did not say that our House of Commons would have the rights of the House of Commons in England, or that the Senate would have the rights of the House of Lords. The act specifically mentioned that the Senate and the House of Commons would have all the powers, privileges and rights vested in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom at the time it was passed. There is, however, one restriction as to money bills, and I would ask honourable senators to note that it applies not only to the Senate but equally to the House of Commons. With respect to money bills, section 53 of the British North America Act stipulates:

> Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

The stipulation that such bills shall originate in the House of Commons does not detract in any way from the powers conferred on both houses by Section 18.

Furthermore, section 54 reads:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill is proposed.

That section is applicable to the House of Commons as well as to the Senate, but when my honourable Leader refers to the balance of the budget and its relation to the ways and means measures in connection therewith, that applies to the House of Commons. A number of speakers in both houses have urged that members of the House of Commons cannot reduce or increase appropriations, that any attempt to increase them would be declared out of order. In certain cases the house has been allowed to reduce estimates, but not as a matter of general practice.

This is due to the fact that the British North America Act, section 9, provides that the executive power is vested in Her Majesty The Queen, on the advice of her responsible ministers. The ministers are responsible. Our function is to legislate; the Government is to administer. It has the executive power. It would be embarrassing to the Government in the exercise of its executive powers if members of the House of Commons or of the Senate could disturb the equilibrium of a budget which the Government had carefully studied and introduced.

Therefore, the House of Commons, or any of its members, is just as powerless to modify a money bill as are we in the Senate. But I believe it is nonsensical, illogical and contrary to the basic facts to which I have just referred, to say that a money bill is in the exclusive gift of the House of Commons. How could it be if it has also to be voted by this house? If it is in the exclusive gift of the House of Commons why should our concurrence be required? Therefore, I say it is illogical.

I agree with my honourable friend that Senator Dandurand, Senator Meighen and other eminent leaders of the Government and of the Opposition in this house were conformists. They conformed to the general usages and decisions of Parliament. But at a time like this, when even the usefulness of the Senate is in question and when the revision of the British North America Act is also under consideration, I think we should divest ourselves of the conformist attitude which may be uppermost in our minds.

My honourable friend went a step further and said that in his opinion he doubted that our sober second thought and power of revision could apply to a money bill. If that be so, why should we needlessly spend our time and energy to consider money bills? Let them dispose of money bills exclusively in the other place and then submit them to the Governor General, who will give the royal assent if he chooses to do so.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Treat them like divorce bills.

Hon. Mr. Vien: They would be treated like divorce bills. But I say the House of Commons cannot do that unless the British North America Act is amended. They cannot do it unless section 18 of that act is repealed.

Therefore, in my humble opinion, the time has come to be a little more logical, and to adopt a manner of thinking, acting and speaking which is in keeping with the facts. The usage which has been allowed to develop in our country has had a tendency towards undue conformity. I would say that parliamentary practice or usage cannot overrule the fundamental disposition of the British North America Act, which is our constitutional act.

Furthermore, we should ponder on these aspects of the question at a time when we are considering revising our Constitution. I would be of the opinion that in so doing we should see to it that in the future the Senate will be used a little less as a rubber stamp. We should assert our powers and discharge our functions within the terms of the constitutional provisions to which I have referred.

I regret having taken up so much of your time, but I thought that we should keep the record straight. I do not want it to be thought that I agree to being governed by usages which are in conflict with the constitutional stipulations of the act.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I listened with the greatest of interest to, shall I say, the lecture given the Senate by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West). Some of it was very cogent, some of it able and some of it very elementary.

It was no news to a layman such as myself to be told that the Senate cannot increase money bills. I would put this question to the honourable Leader of the Government: If he admits that we have the right to discuss money bills—and certainly we have the right to discuss some of the items in this particular bill and its general principles—then why does the Government through the House of Commons send us this bill this afternoon and say that it must get first, second and third reading and royal assent today? Is he putting a limit on discussion? Is he introducing a form of closure?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I interrupt my honourable friend?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think in fairness to myself I should say that as yet I have said nothing about that. All I asked of the Senate was that it consent to having this bill read a second time today, to which unanimous consent was given. I have said nothing about closure. I am sure honourable senators are quite well aware that the idea of closure has never once been introduced in this house by me, nor do I expect that it ever will be.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Surely that could be the effect. Surely that was the burden of the leader's argument all the way through, that we should give full and final assent here today.

The acting leader on this side, the honourable Senator Choquette, mentioned that the items in this bill have been pretty fully discussed, and he saw no point in further discussion here today. Who is to determine when discussion has been exhausted on any bill in this house? Is there some one in this chamber, either on this side or on the other side, who is to tell me that discussion and debate have been exhausted on a particular bill, and that it must now pass and receive assent? I do not go along with that at all. The actual fact, as I understand it, is that the Senate today is being asked again to suspend its rules in order to bail out the House of Commons from the consequences of its own incapacity. What is the existing urgency for this bill? If there is no urgency for it, and I am unaware of any, why then the advice to His Excellency to come here this afternoon or to send his deputy, to give this bill royal assent?

Like the distinguished Senator Vien, I am sick and tired of hearing people say in this chamber, and of reading in the press, that the rules of the Senate and of the House of Commons are in fact the rules or the usages of the Lords and the Commons in Britain. This surely is nonsense, as Senator Vien has shown. The position of this house in respect to the House of Commons is that it is an integral part of Parliament, as determined by the British North America Act, and by nothing else. Any layman would know that.

I came here today with the firm intention, I must say, of not giving my consent to third reading of this bill today. The distinguished Senator McCutcheon, speaking on the interim supply bill, served notice that not again this session would he give assent to third reading of a bill brought in that way. The honourable Senator White, only last week, served notice to the same effect. I raised my humble voice to the same effect. Despite that, and despite the fact that there is no great urgency for the passage of this bill today, the Leader of the Government comes in here and says in effect—he does not actually say it, but in fact this is what we were told before coming to this house—that we are called here to give first, second and third reading to this bill, and that it receive royal assent as well. I say this is a piece of insolence. Incidentally, during the course of his talk to us a few moments ago, the Leader of the Government said that over the years it had not been the practice of this house to put itself in opposition to the will of the House of Commons with respect to money bills or bills of that kind. Has he forgotten the naval bill of 1912-13? Was that not a money bill? Not only was it thwarted, it was rejected. As a matter of fact, from my own memory I can cite a number of bills during 35 or 40 years where the Senate did take action against the House of Commons and, what is more, took action successfully and without challenge by the House of Commons later on.

Honourable senators, if this bill does come before us for third reading today I am not going to withhold my consent. One reason is that this is in fact a package deal: this is one of three bills, and so does not interfere too much with the principle I laid down the other day. However, I repeat, and I call upon my friends in this house to stand up here this afternoon and to give me their support in plain language, rather than come to me after a speech and say, "Senator, you did very well." I want to know if my friends are with me or not on this matter. If they are not, let them say so. I cannot abide the pussyfooting which took place in this chamber last week on the part of my own party. As a matter of fact, I am perfectly certain, having heard speeches by the honourable gentlemen again and again in the past few years, that they agreed with the position I took. But I ask myself, why don't they stand up and say so? I am going to give my assent today, but I will not do so again. I hope I will get more backing with this warning that if and when bills come to this house in future, and we are asked to suspend our rules in order to put the bills through to bail out the other place because of its incompetence and failure to manage its own business, I will not again give my consent.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I have listened to the discussions here this afternoon with much interest, and I have followed the proceedings as reported in the press since I left here on March 25 last. As a student of public affairs for more than 30 years, I say I do not think the reputation of the Parliament of Canada has ever been lower than it is at the present time. That is true, in spite of the fact that this is one of the most critical times in the history of our nation.

I was very glad to hear my colleague Senator Vien say what he did, because I believe that in Canada we have been too conformist, not only as to the matter under discussion but in many other matters as well.

As I listened to my friend the Leader of the Government (Honourable Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) a little while ago, I cannot think that I heard him aright, and I hope he will correct me if I am wrong. I understood him to say, in effect, that the idea of sober second thought as applied to the Senate did not extend to money bills. I do not want to put words in his mouth, because I realize that he has a difficult task to perform in the position he occupies. However, I simply cannot accept that. I could cite at least one specific instance in which sober second thought should have been given to the bill before us, long before now. To accept the bald statement at its face value, that the Senate should not give sober second thought to money bills would, in my judgment, further undermine the status of the Senate, or such status as it may possess.

I am prepared to agree that the Senate constitutionally cannot increase the amount of a money bill. Some of my legal colleagues have said that we cannot reduce the amount, even though that has been done in the past. I am reluctant to accept as a fact that we cannot reduce the amount of a money bill, and the constitutional experts would have to rule on that. But assuming that we are bound by it, I would agree with the point raised by Senator Vien and Senator O'Leary: why in heaven's name does a money bill come to the Senate? It is a pure farce to bring a bill to the Senate and say, "You can't do anything about it—pass it right away."

I do not know that we are expected to give first, second and third readings to this bill today. Probably we are. I have just returned to Ottawa and have not had an opportunity to learn what the position is. However, let me say that since 1955, when I first came to the Senate, this situation has recurred time and time again. Money bills have come over at the last minute with the request that the rules of the Senate be suspended and that we pass them at one sitting. Regardless of the party which happened to be in power—whether Liberal or Conservative —members have grumbled a bit but we have fallen into line. I believe it is high time this procedure was stopped. I will certainly join with those members who say that they will not again give assent to that practice if a similar situation arises in this house, unless reasons can be given to demonstrate there is an emergency. I see no emergency here today.

I read the other day that Senator Power—who is one of ablest and most experienced parliamentarians in this house—said there was no reason why this bill had to be passed on the day it was presented. I was hoping the Leader of the Government would give some explanation as to why this bill should be passed today, but he has not done so. Maybe he will yet.

Frankly, I do not feel happy about the situation that exists, and I am going to give you one illustration as to why I think this house should take a good look at some of these bills. I refer you to page 4 of the schedule, item 106e:

> Yukon Territory—Payments in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council during the 1963-64 and 1964-65 fiscal years in respect of expenditures incurred for the Dawson City Festival.

To the best of my knowledge—and this is just from memory—this particular piece of imagination has cost the federal Government something like $654,000. I believe it can be demonstrated that the actual cost will be substantially more than that when all the items have been added in. I do not know who dreamed up this particular venture. I am told that in some respects it was one of the eminent gentlemen who have played a role in the development of the very successful venture, the Stratford Festival. But to develop a program such as the Dawson City Festival, 2,000 miles north of Edmonton, over thousands of miles of gravel roads, is something very different from developing a festival within a few miles of large centres of population in Canada. The official who accepted this particular responsibility should have had his head examined. It is no wonder we have lost money on the scale we have on this particular venture, and we will probably lose more.

I would like to put this question to the Leader of the Government, for him to answer when he can. I understand that in addition to the initial improvidence of establishing this particular, unfortunate venture to which I refer, no provision was made to recapture any money that might accrue from the royalties of the production "Foxy". I understand "Foxy" is having a fairly good run, and if there had been attention given to proper business practices we might have recouped something from the royalties. Specifically, I would like to know whether or not any efforts have been made to establish the right of the Government to share the royalties that may accrue from that successful theatrical production. And if not, will such steps be taken? I mention this as one illustration of the fact there is need for someone to take a look at the expenditures which come over from the other house when they can result in a loss to the taxpayers of some $800,000.

Had time permitted, I would have gone into another area where I have a decided reason for complaint. I refer to page 5, item 10e, on the Post Office. However, I have so many things to say about the operation of the Post Office department that I would like to save those remarks for a suitable occasion.

I believe we should have assurance from someone that there will be a change from the procedures and practices—the usages, if you like—which have grown up over the last few years. We are going through some of the most critical days in the history of Canadian Confederation, and they are going to be more critical before they become better. One of the reasons why we in Canada find ourselves in an unhappy situation today is that we have been too timid, too conformist, too afraid to venture forth and blaze new trails. It is high time the Senate of Canada examined its procedures and took a new look at its responsibilities, to see if it could not discharge them in a way that would give more satisfaction to those distinguished Canadians who sit here, and so reflect greater credit on the Parliament of Canada. Certainly, nothing that has happened in the last two or three weeks reflects much credit on any of us.

Quite frankly, while I was not happy about the fact that my friend Senator O'Leary (Carleton) held up the estimates by not giving his consent the other night, I believe that in the long run it is the very thing that will result in the Senate taking a new look at its procedures and responsibilities and possibly devising some new methods of discharging them.

May I add one further thought? I get thoroughly fed up when I read fatuous statements about the Senate by so-called responsible members of the press, and statements like the one attributed to Mr. Douglas Campbell of Stratford—and please do not misunderstand me, for I think Stratford is a particularly magnificent Canadian achievement—who referred to the Senate as "that house of doddards". I resent these patently foolish statements by newspaper men who constantly undermine and malign the Senate, because there are men in this chamber today who play an active part in community work and run some of Canada's biggest businesses. As I say, I get thoroughly fed up when some ill-equipped or illiterate newspaper man or actor or any other person casts aspersions on the quality of my honourable colleagues. I will defend with all the vigour at my command the calibre, the quality and the contribution of those who sit in this house.

While I am not happy about the way things have been going in the last few weeks, I feel that this whole hiatus will have a good effect if we use this occasion to examine our conscience, to look at our procedures, and to advise those of the other place that from now on we do not want to be put in a position where we are being used as a spineless rubber stamp—that is exactly the position we have been put in.

(Translation):

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, first of all, I wish to say that I agree with Senator Vien about the powers of the Senate with regard to money bills.

Secondly, I wish to accept the invitation of our colleague from Carleton, Senator Grattan O'Leary, and tell him that I support him, but I want to make clear how and why I do so.

I am in agreement with the Leader of the Government when he says that in the House of Commons it is customary to give a money bill three readings the same day. As far as we are concerned, I see no objection to the Senate discarding the general rule and giving three readings to a bill, such as the one which is before us, at one sitting the same day.

Personally, I feel that it is not a matter of keeping strictly to the rules, it is rather a matter of procedure, and I would not worry too much about it, provided the Senate had time to debate and discuss a bill.

Today the Leader of the Government presented a bill. I admit that he did not ask the Senate to give it three readings today. Personally, I feel that we have all the time we need to discuss it and that we must discuss it as long as we deem it necessary. However, it would be childish, in my opinion, to wait until tomorrow to proceed with third reading especially if we have nothing more to say.

But Senator Grattan O'Leary was right on that famous day of April 3. At 4.30 on that Friday afternoon, Bill C-86 was submitted to the Senate which was told: You must give that bill three readings and pass it so that it may receive royal assent before six o'clock; otherwise, next Monday, some people who expect to receive their unemployment insurance benefits will not get them. In that particular situation, the Senate had a knife at its throat in so far as such blackmail, as it were, existed. I am not necessarily talking about blackmail on the part of the government. I am talking about blackmail due to circumstances, which was to place on the Senate or any of its members the blame for not giving this bill third reading so that it might receive royal assent before six o'clock. We had no other alternative. The house, under its rule, adjourned at six o'clock and was not to meet again until the following Monday. Therefore, we had an hour and twenty minutes to proceed with three readings and royal assent. In my opinion, those circumstances were entirely different from those which exist today; it is a different thing altogether. I feel that the House of Commons can be blamed for what happened on April 3, but the Government must be blamed particularly because the urgent item in Bill C-86 was the loan that had to be made to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Well, the House of Commons had passed that item on Wednesday, that is two days previously. If it were that urgent, the government had only to remove it from its list of supplementary estimates, make it the subject of a separate bill, a special bill, and send it to us on Wednesday or Thursday, and we would have had time to consider it.

I believe that those are circumstances for which the government must bear the blame, although the House of Commons must also be held partly responsible. Those are the particular circumstances which led Senator O'Leary to object: I shall not agree to three readings in one day.

We should not concern ourselves with the point of procedure. I do not think we should always require three days to pass a piece of legislation. Indeed not. However, we must have all the time required to discuss a bill. The same situation might arise when another interim supply bill is before us. This would probably happen at the end of the session, because the House of Commons always carries last of all a bill allowing Her Majesty certain sums of money for the current fiscal year and this bill reaches us only a few minutes before the time set by the house for adjournment.

That is the very problem I pointed out the other day.

The procedure to be followed when those bills are given royal assent should probably be reviewed, since the House of Commons would have adjourned, if not officially, at least de facto, in order to enable the Senate to discuss for a day or two this last bill received from the other place. This is another problem. I feel once again that the situation referred to today shows that it is essential for the Senate to have enough time to consider such pieces of legislation. It is less a matter of the standing orders being strictly applied in the circumstances.

As far as this bill is concerned, I do not object in the least to its receiving third reading today and royal assent this evening. I feel, however, that no one should be deprived of his right to discuss it. Everybody agrees that we should take all the time necessary to say what we think about it.

(Text):

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, in view of the speeches made here this afternoon, I am going to drop the first part of my speech which would have kept this house here until tomorrow anyway.

The honourable Senator Choquette said in his reasoned speech—and I really do not quarrel with him—that whatever we do or say with respect to this bill will not serve any useful purpose; the money is all spent, and that is that. In spite of that admonition there is one aspect I want to cover this afternoon, and this gives me the opportunity.

For many years I have been sitting around with prepared speeches on various subjects. When estimates and supply bills came before the house I would always prepare a speech. Then someone would say "This has to go through today; there is an urgency about these measures, and we have not the time." So my best speeches have never been made in this house—they are in a filing cabinet. Perhaps that is something for which the Senate ought to be thankful.

However, while we are talking of constitutional responsibilities, I recall that when I came into this house I had certain views, particularly because I had spent a number of years over in the other place. I took the occasion to find out what were the constitutional responsibilities, and I read very carefully what Geoffrion, Lafleur and Ewart had written on the subject. I felt that if I followed their advice I could not go far wrong. I was not going to erect the barricades and start a revolution that day. However, having been here nine years, I am still not in a revolutionary state of mind with regard to that aspect of our Constitution. Nevertheless I do think this house has some special responsibilities.

If I recall correctly, one of the things the constitutional authorities emphasized was that we were the protectors of provincial rights and minority rights. Therefore I take this occasion, when others are giving notice that they will do this only for so long and no longer, to register on my own behalf a caveat of concern on the proposed transfer of administrative control of some 23,000 or more Eskimos from the federal Government to the Government of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Twenty-five hundred.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes—2,500 to 2,700. But what matters is the welfare of the Eskimo people and how they will make the greatest progress, whether it be under the administration of the Province of Quebec or the continued guidance of the Department of Northern Affairs.

The Eskimos cannot speak for themselves in Parliament. They live in scattered areas far away from the seat of government. They have no recognized spokesman as such, and the officers of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources who might speak on their behalf are prevented from so doing by the regulations.

By a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Parliament of Canada has exclusive jurisdiction and responsibility for the welfare of the Eskimos. I do not deny that the Government may make agreements or arrangements with provinces which may affect Eskimos in one way or another, but such agreements cannot be made without the consent and approval of Parliament. What needs to be done can be done, but it must be approved by Parliament and there is no shortcut. Here we are concerned with full Canadian citizens. The fundamental rights of Eskimos must be respected, and the one certain way to respect those rights is to consult them.

We as a nation are an outstanding advocate of self-determination. We have sent troops to Cyprus to maintain the peace and allow the people there to determine for themselves what they would like to do. We support that principle. We have advocated and supported self-determination at the United Nations and elsewhere. We have been spending money to support the principle of self-determination to the Hottentots of the world. We must now ask ourselves: Can we refuse that same treatment to the Eskimos, who are full Canadian citizens? I think not.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, as is obvious from what he has had to say on many occasions, is doing his utmost to protect the Eskimos, and it is to his credit, but there are other formidable, stubborn, and sometimes unreasonable forces acting against him. My purpose in rising today is to indicate that my caveat is to give support not only to the Eskimos but to the minister. He has indicated it is the intention of his department to bring about their full and complete emancipation.

It is interesting to note that the Arctic owl, which is called Ookpik, made as a toy by the Co-operative Eskimo Association, is now bringing in money at the rate of $2,000 a week on a 10 per cent royalty. That, of course, cuts down the amount the Government has to spend, but I mention it merely to indicate that these people have as much imagination and creativeness as other Canadians, although we may not know too much about it.

I bring to the attention of Parliament the fact that in this instance we have a role to play. We must see to it that in so far as the treatment of the Eskimos is concerned there is a respect for the Canadian Constitution. We must see to it that the sovereignty of Parliament prevails and that the rights and interests of the Eskimos are protected. The only method of which I know of consulting a free citizen is by referendum or election. The Eskimos had the right to vote in provincial elections before they had the right to vote in federal elections. They know what it is all about. They understand what is involved. They should have the right to be consulted. They must exercise that right before the point of no return is reached. They are not pawns in a political game. We cannot permit political appeasement at their expense.

This problem with respect to the Eskimos, in my opinion, touches the soul of this country, for it involves far more than the welfare of the Eskimos. There is involved here the rights of citizens. The fundamental rights of these people must be respected and protected in order that we may preserve the rights of the rest of us.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, this has been an interesting debate. I want first to say that I was unfortunately not able to be present when Senator O'Leary (Carleton) said "No," as I had suggested a few nights before some honourable senator might reasonably do in the near future. Had I been here I would have said "No," not only to the first appropriation bill but to the second one also.

However, the principle having been established, what I see as coming out of this discussion this afternoon is not, as Senator Flynn has said, that we are not prepared to waive our rules—after all, we have the rules, we have the right to waive them, and in appropriate circumstances we are quite prepared to do so—but rather the question of how to obtain the opportunity of discussing, of considering, of examining the financial matters which come before us and which, under the Constitution, we must of necessity approve.

We could sit here and discuss this bill for a long time this afternoon. I have no doubt that Senator Croll has a speech he could make on each item. I do not know what subject he would discuss after the Eskimos, but I am sure he could find some other poor, downtrodden people to tell us about. However, when all is said and done I do not think it would have shed any light on what we are really considering here. I do not think it would have improved our image—although I do not like that expression—in the eyes of the Canadian public, and I do not think it would have contributed to our doing what is really our job.

I am going to suggest—although I have made the suggestion before, and I know it presents certain difficulties—that if the estimates were referred to the Committee on Finance, and if the committee got down to work, we could make a real contribution. I do not suggest that the committee go through every item in the estimates, as is done in the other place. And I might say that going through every item in the estimates in the other place does not necessarily mean an exhaustive and critical review of every item. However, I suggest that we could make a real contribution if we were to study two departments this session, and two departments at the next session, or even three, depending upon the circumstances. For instance, we might take only one of the larger departments this session, and two or three next session. In that way we could really examine them and make a report, the sort of thing the Senate is uniquely capable of doing, such as has been done by many other committees of the Senate which exercised no legislative or executive function, but merely a reviewing, a reporting and a recommending function. If that were done, I suggest that some of these irritations, which I think are quite proper, might be overlooked.

I hope that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) will give this suggestion every consideration; and I hope he will report to his colleagues that the interim supply bill in May might receive quicker and less acrimonious consideration if this suggestion were adopted.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I merely rise for the purpose of adding my voice to what Senator Croll said, and said so well, about the Eskimos.

May I point out that a great many people are very much disturbed about the proposed transfer of jurisdiction of the Eskimo schools in the province of Quebec from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I speak particularly for the Anglican communion, which has done a marvellous job in that area among the Eskimos. I think one can feel proud of the result of their rewarding efforts on behalf of the Eskimos.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is there a question of imposing another religion or corrupting their morals?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I do not want to see any disturbance in the education of their children. The education of the Eskimo children was conducted ably under the auspices of the Anglican Church formerly, but is now under the full jurisdiction of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. That is quite all right and the work is going on very well, but I would be greatly disturbed if some shift took place. Therefore, although I do not belong to the same church as my friend Senator Croll, I support everything he said in that connection.

I also want to support what Senator McCutcheon said. I have expressed the same view many times when we have debated this subject matter in this chamber. The same situation occurs practically every year, and several times I have made a plea that the Finance Committee of the Senate be organized to study these estimates.

I also agree with Senator Cameron, that giving money bills which come to us merely a superficial examination is an absolute farce. I think it is the responsibility of the Senate to do something about this situation, and therefore I again make a plea that the Finance Committee of our Senate study these estimates in order that we may know more about them.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I wish to support the remarks which have been made concerning a study of the estimates by the Finance Committee of the Senate.

I have been a senator since 1940, and I state frankly that I feel very unhappy about the lack of opportunity given to the members of the Senate to discuss the estimates fully. Whatever government is in power at the time, the House of Commons sends over to us interim supply bills and supplementary estimates at the last moment, often at the end of the session and usually late in the day, and we are given only a few minutes to approve grants running into millions of dollars. I feel a personal humiliation about that. The members of the Senate have a responsibility to discharge, we are anxious to do our duty, but we become the victims of circumstances.

I support what has been said by Senator McCutcheon and repeated by other senators. We have a Finance Committee. I am not a member of that committee. However, many years ago, under the able chairmanship of Senator Crerar, the committee discussed the estimates, with the full co-operation of other committees of the Senate.

For a time I was chairman of the committee on External Affairs. That committee heard various witnesses, including the Under Secretary of State for External Affairs, at which time we were able to put our questions to the witnesses and were supplied with full information concerning the items of the estimates we felt were important enough to demand scrutiny. Then we reported to the Committee on Finance, as did other committees, and then the Finance Committee made what I would call a general survey of the estimates.

I believe that could be done again. By referring the subject matter of the estimates to the Finance Committee and, if necessary, with the co-operation of other committees of the Senate, we could make a comprehensive study of the estimates and offer some very useful suggestions, as was done in the past. In those days publicity was given to the various items of the estimates, and information was sought with regard to expenditures by various departments. The reports of the Finance Committee were exceedingly well received by the press and by the public, and this had the practical effect that the Government listened to us and introduced some reforms.

I feel that it is impossible to discuss these supply bills adequately without hearing witnesses. Without their assistance, one is only able to deliver a vague speech on one particular subject or another.

I hope very sincerely that the Leader of the Government will study the suggestion which we have raised so often, of reviving, so to speak, the work of the Finance Committee in studying the estimates. I am convinced that the Leader of the Opposition would support this suggestion, and I know that we would all have a sense of relief if this were done. It takes time to organize such a study, but this work could be undertaken even during the present session and for the estimates now before us.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, as one who spoke in this house on April 3 last on two appropriation bills, I find it rather pleasant to hear other senators today more or less agree with me that the rules of the Senate should be more closely followed in future. I believe I made it quite plain at that time that in future when an interim supply bill comes before the Senate its passage will have to be in accordance with the rules of the Senate. However, I stated that the rules would be waived in case of emergency, for I quite realize that there are times when rules have to be set aside; certainly, I am not one to object when that is necessary.

The honourable Leader of the Government, when introducing the bill, pointed out that it had been the custom and practice in the other place for a bill of this nature to receive three readings in one day. That is quite correct. If you will look at the Hansard of the other place, you will note that the procedure takes little more than half a column. But one should remember that previous to the resolution and the bill being introduced, the estimates, as in this case, or interim supply, are discussed for a day or two days, or a week or two weeks, and there is nothing left to be said when the actual bill comes before the house.

I do not need to point out to honourable senators that the procedure in this chamber is entirely different. I for one hope there will be considerable discussion on the interim supply bill when it comes before the Senate, and I certainly hope it will get here before May 31st.

One of the things I did object to with regard to the procedure of last week, as pointed out by Senator Flynn a few moments ago, was that in the other place these supplementary estimates were considered before Good Friday. But the item concerning the Unemployment Insurance Fund, which was urgent, was not discussed. The House of Commons met on Monday, March 30, and Tuesday, March 31, and spent the full two days on supplementary estimates, and no attempt was made to call those of the Department of Labour to deal with the item on unemployment insurance.

I was in the other place at 10 o'clock on Tuesday night when the house leader, the Minister of Justice, made a request that the house sit for an additional period to consider this item. Mr. Churchill agreed; the New Democratic party refused. The house leader then made a request that the house sit at 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning, and this was again refused by the New Democratic party. At the opening of the sitting on Wednesday, April 1, after the fateful hour of midnight had passed, Mr. Knowles rose and made a plea that the house sit on Wednesday night to discuss this unemployment insurance item, on the condition it be called not later than 8 p.m. Here was this item of the greatest possible importance, the hour of midnight had passed, there were no funds on hand, and it was suggested that the house sit later on Wednesday, provided that the item was not called later than 8 p.m. The item was called, and this particular vote in the estimates was passed.

If the passage of this item was of such tremendous importance, to suggest that it was absolutely impossible for the Government, with its hundreds of expert advisers in every field, to devise a way to lend two or three million dollars, is simply beyond my belief. I have always regarded myself as a country lawyer, and I still do, but I cannot believe there was an emergency of any kind that could not have been dealt with.

However, leaving all that aside, we come to Thursday, April 2. I would have thought we would have had a bill before us dealing with this one item and the other supplementary items that had already been passed; but no. We look at the House of Commons Hansard and see that they proceeded to deal with further supplementary estimates. The Senate met and adjourned.

We come to Friday, and what happened? The Commons sat at 11 o'clock in the morning—but no supply bill. They proceeded with the estimates. The Senate met and adjourned, to meet again later in the day.

If you look at Hansard of the other place you will find that the supplementary estimates bill came before the other place at around 4 o'clock. True, it only took a few minutes. The bell for the meeting of the Senate rang at 25 minutes to five. His Honour came in at 20 minutes to five, and by a quarter to five the Senate was in session. If you look at Hansard of the other place, you will see there was a letter read by the Speaker from the Assistant Secretary to the Governor General advising that the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General would arrive at 5.45 p.m. to give royal assent to this bill. That is what I objected to. I say that was an affront to Parliament; it was arrogant, and it was contempt of this chamber. It was a quarter to five when we received this bill and could deal with it, and the Deputy of the Governor was coming here at a quarter to six to give royal assent.

I have been very proud to be a member of this Senate, and I think it is up to us to uphold and maintain the dignity of this chamber. I repeat my closing remarks on that earlier occasion, for I cannot say it better.

> In the future I shall refuse to be a rubber stamp for the Government or the other place. In speaking again for myself, I am ashamed of the mockery made of our rules, and the affront to the dignity of this chamber during this week, and for my part I am going to try to prevent it happening in the future.

I sincerely hope we will never again witness the performance of last week.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) speaks now, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, in the first place I would say that the debate has gone from one extreme to another. In the earlier part of it the going was a little rough, but towards the end there were hands across the aisle—an example of an ecumenical movement within the Senate itself!

May I first deal with what Senator McCutcheon said, which was so generally supported, not only by the speeches that were made, but as well by the demeanor of all senators. He said that more extensive use should be made of the Finance Committee of this house, to deal with the estimates after they have been tabled here. It is a suggestion that has been made many times in this chamber, and the practice has actually been carried out very effectively in a number of Parliaments. I am reluctant to quote my own words, but in the speech I delivered on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, when talking particularly about committees of this house, I referred especially to the work that was done by the Finance Committee in respect to the estimates under the able chairmanship of Senator Crerar, of Senator Hawkins and of Senator King. They were most effective contributions. They were contributions of which the Senate could be proud. They were contributions which assisted Parliament to a better understanding of the estimates. Some extremely useful changes were made in the form of the estimates, as a result of some of those deliberations.

I hope I do not appear smug in saying this, but after the committees were set up this session I wrote to the chairman of the Finance Committee in this sense and suggested that at the appropriate time—and I must say that the moment did not appear to have arrived before the so-called Easter recess—the committee might be assembled for the purpose described by Senator McCutcheon. I am sure that will be done this session, and I hope it will continue to be done in succeeding sessions. In extenuation of the fact the committee has not sat for a number of years, I should say—and in this respect I am not helping my own party as much as the party opposite—that for the past two years we have had two general elections and much of the work of this committee could not be undertaken for that very reason. However, I think now we are in a position to continue that work.

I am most grateful to all honourable senators for the contribution they have made in this respect. I think it is a constructive idea and, if it does no more, at least the conscience of the Senate will be satisfied when it has to deal with appropriation bills after it has had an opportunity of examining the estimates in committee.

The honourable Senator Choquette asked a number of questions with which I might be permitted to deal at this time. I should point out that he spoke in the beginning about money spent. The fact is, the money to be provided in these estimates is not yet spent; it is, however, committed.

My honourable friend from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) said that as yet nothing has been said by me to indicate to this chamber that this bill should be passed quickly. I would have thought that any bills overdue by the Government of Canada as at March 31, the end of the fiscal year, present an element of urgency. I think that was the reason the Senate responded so generously to the summons issued by His Honour the Speaker over the weekend in respect to this bill.

Senator O'Leary asked particularly if there were items which required urgent and early attention. I am informed that there are accounts of suppliers and contractors which cannot be paid until this measure is passed, because funds have not been provided by Parliament to do so.

In the Department of National Defence item No. 35e of this schedule for some $10,700,000 is one such item. In the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys there is an item of $3,900,000 in respect of payments to be made by the Dominion Coal Board. In the Research Council some $420,000 is due and payable, and in the Department of Trade and Commerce $22,000; for the Department of Transport, under four different items there is an amount of $4,800,000. In the Post Office Department, for transportation involving movement of mail by land, by air and by water, there is some $363,000. In the Research Council there is another half million dollars in connection with construction of certain buildings. In the Department of National Health and Welfare for health services and medical services, there is an item of some $2,300,000.

If I did not mention these items at the beginning, I apologize, but I feel they indicate the element of urgency presented to us by this bill.

My honourable friend, the acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette), asked about item 15e for $31,400 under the Department of the Secretary of State in respect of the translation bureau recently established in Montreal. He asks why this bureau has been established there. I am informed it is not without difficulty that the public service obtains good translators for this work. Apparently a survey indicates that there is more opportunity to get people for this work in a metropolitan area like Montreal than in Ottawa. In addition to that I am informed that the level of pay provided for this translation work is not sufficiently high to attract translators who might be enticed into Ottawa—although that is not the word I should use as between Ottawa and Montreal—

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): —to come here for the purpose of engaging in this work. So it was considered to be a more provident operation to establish the bureau in that city.

Senator Choquette also asked for some particular information as to the vote for the Privy Council, No. 43e, in connection with the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. I can tell him that royal commission was established in July 1963. It has had to provide for staff salaries, professional services, certain travelling expenses, office equipment, and it has done some advertising of hearings. It had a good deal of printing to be done, and there were the usual expenses for postage and telegrams. This is the nature of the item, and the amount is as provided in the item to which the honourable gentleman referred.

My honourable friend from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron) asked a number of questions in connection with the Dawson City Festival. I do not think it is desirable to put all of the information on record. I must say I did not expect to have a question about this matter, although I welcome any question. My information is that in 1959 the services of one Thomas Paterson were engaged as a consultant to advise on the development of the tourist possibilities of Dawson City. In 1960 the Dawson City Festival Foundation was incorporated in the Yukon Territory. Mr. Paterson appears to have taken the initiative in this, and he was retained as consultant. At the same time the Government undertook to assist the festival through the reconstruction of the Palace Grand Theatre, and the transportation to Dawson and renovation of a Yukon River steamer then at Whitehorse, the S.S. Keno. These undertakings were carried out at a final cost of approximately $465,000. The Government also undertook to provide limited advertising in the United States through the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. There was a fund-raising drive to provide capital for the enterprise, and I am informed this was not a success. Subsequently it became apparent that the costs of staging the Broadway production "Foxy" were much higher than had been anticipated by the festival authorities, while the revenues were far less. The festival first ran into difficulties in May 1962, and in June of that year the cabinet approved a treasury board recommendation that the federal Government include in supplementary estimates an item for a grant of $50,000 to the foundation.

Also in June the Yukon Territory guaranteed a bank loan of $45,000 to the foundation. This guarantee was subsequently increased to $75,000 on the understanding that the gate receipts from "Foxy" would be applied to reduce this purely territorial guarantee. Gate receipts of approximately $40,000 were applied to this purpose and the territorial Government subsequently paid off the balance.

On July 4, 1962, on the recommendation of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, a guarantee was made to the Government of the Yukon Territory of $75,000 towards the general operating costs of the festival, and on the strength of this undertaking the Council of the Yukon Territory approved the guarantee.

There is considerable information here which may not be of interest to honourable senators. The foundation has defaulted and now has outstanding obligations in the order of $122,000, apart altogether from the guaranteed loans totalling $137,500 plus interest. The obligation of the foundation to the Government of the Yukon Territory is approximately $35,000 on account of the guarantee which was met. Against these liabilities, the foundation is without funds.

The current supplementary estimate, Vote 106e, is designed to meet the commitments undertaken by the previous Government with respect to the bank loans, and also to meet ex gratia the valid claims of creditors, in whole or in part, who may have no legal call on the Government but who would probably not have extended credit to the Festival Foundation had the latter not been represented as having Government backing.

If my honourable friend requires more, I shall try to get it for him. I think these were the only specific questions asked in respect of the items in these estimates.

With respect to the very interesting discussion of Senator Vien, I would say I quite agree, as I am sure all honourable senators do, with the logic of saying that some of the practices in Parliament may very well be called into question. I think it was once said that the same applies to the Constitution of Great Britain. The fact is that it works. This, in some measure applies, I think, to some of the provisions in our own rules with respect to our method of proceeding. I do think that if Senator McCutcheon's suggestion is carried out—and with this many other honourable senators have agreed—and our Standing Committee on Finance is utilized to the fullest extent possible, much of the illogic in what we do may be dissipated.

My honourable friend from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron) said he hoped he did not hear me correctly when I said that so far as supply bills are concerned there is probably no sober second thought to be exercised in the Senate. I must tell him that he did hear me correctly. This is precisely so from the point of view of what, in a practical way, the Senate can do by way either of increasing the impost or, by interfering with the ways and means, decreasing it. But in the sense that Senator Flynn has referred to the sober second thought which the Senate can give in respect to these bills, I think my honourable friend from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron) should apply his sober second thought to what I said. There was never any challenge issued in the days of the great senators, to whom Senator O'Leary so frequently refers, to the rights of the Senate to debate, to criticize, and to discuss the items of these estimates or indeed the items of any estimates. I hope, too, that Senator O'Leary does not think that I do not recognize the right of the Senate to reject a bill—even a money bill. It certainly can reject a money bill. The Senate has rejected bills, and not only the one to which he referred, namely, the Navy Bill. When the Old Age Pension bill was originally introduced in Parliament it was rejected by this house. There is no question in anybody's mind, and certainly not in mine, about that.

What I do say is that the course of conduct of this house should not be one which is in consistent opposition to the work being done, or to the policies being promoted, in the other branch of Parliament. This is not a chamber for systematic opposition to what is done in the other place.

There have been times when there was a majority in this house which was not of the party which controlled the Government in the other place. On occasions that majority, politically opposed to the Government, passed measures with which it disagreed because it said the Government had a mandate to do the things being proposed in the legislation.

The Senate is primarily an institution to supplement the other place. That is the purpose of a second chamber. I think senators who desire to carry out the best traditions and the highest purposes of this chamber will always keep that in mind. Since I have been here I have not seen an example of this great tradition and high purpose ignored. I say what I do simply for the purpose of the record, because I have such confidence not only in this institution but in the members who make it up.

I hope I will not be charged with insolence if I say that we have had a good debate this afternoon, but the debate has been mainly upon points of procedure and upon the rights of the Senate. What we have not debated is the bill itself. There have been only three questions asked on the items. We ourselves could remedy a great deal of criticism made if we utilize the services available to us through the efficient operation of the Standing Committee on Finance.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move the third reading of the bill now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

April 13, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Wishart F. Spence, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate

Chamber today, the 13th April, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) tabled:

Annual Report of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 11 of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act, chapter 4, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Order in Council P.C. 1964-455, dated March 26, 1964, authorizing, under section 21 of the Export Credits Insurance Act, a contract of insurance to cover the sale by The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited, Downsview, Ontario, of DC-9 aircraft parts to the value of $62.8 million to the Douglas Aircraft Company, Inc., Santa Monica, California, pursuant to section 21B of the said act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1960-61. (English text).

Order in Council P.C. 1964-456, dated March 26, 1964, authorizing under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act, long-term financing by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, for the purchase of capital equipment from Parsons & Whittemore Contractors Ltd., Montreal, Quebec, and engineering and erection services from Sandwell and Company Limited, Vancouver, B.C., by Fabricas de Papel Tuxtepec, S.A., Mexico City, Mexico, pursuant to section 21B of the said act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1960-61. (English text).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, April 8, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday evening, April 28, 1964 at 8 o'clock in the evening.

In making this motion, I would draw to the attention of honourable senators and the public the fact that it is made at this stage of the session subject to the Senate being recalled for such purposes as may be required to expedite the public business. At this time, I am not able to say how quickly legislation will be coming to us from the other place, nor at the moment do I know precisely what new measures will be introduced in this house. However, I shall be here during the interval and will watch the progress carefully. I assure honourable senators that in the event they are summoned earlier it will be not only because I feel the matter is urgent, but they will also know that I have been successful in convincing His Honour the Speaker that this is in fact so.

Motion agreed to.

PENAL REFORM

IMPLEMENTATION OF ARCHAMBAULT AND FAUTEUX REPORTS

On the Notice of Inquiries Nos. 1 and 2:

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, with regard to these two inquiries standing in my name, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government if he will be so good as to indicate to the appropriate department that I am showing symptoms of impatience with respect to these inquiries.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I will certainly give the honourable gentleman that assurance.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Wishart F. Spence, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker:

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 28, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 28, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF ADDRESS ON BIRTH OF THIRD SON

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I desire to deliver to the Senate a message from Her Majesty the Queen transmitted by His Excellency the Governor General.

> The Address which you have sent to me and which conveys your congratulations to myself and to my husband on the birth of our third son has given me very great pleasure.
>
> On this happy occasion we both deeply appreciate the kind sentiments and good wishes which you have expressed.
>
> Elizabeth R.

7th April, 1964

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Seventh Meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group held at Washington and Cape Kennedy from January 14 to January 19, 1964. (English and French texts).

Copy of the aide-memoire from the Secretary General of the United Nations concerning some questions relating to the function and operation of the United Nations Peace-Keeping Force in Cyprus, dated April 11, 1964. (English text).

Report on the Activities of the National Energy Board for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 91 of the National Energy Board Act, chapter 46, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English and French texts).

Report of Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, including its Accounts and Financial Statement certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the National Productivity Council to the Ministers of Trade and Commerce and of Labour, including its Financial Statement and the Auditor General's Report thereon, for the year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 19 of the National Productivity Council Act, chapter 4, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English and French texts).

Report of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and its subsidiary companies, Eldorado Aviation Limited and Northern Transportation Company Limited, including their Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, including its Statements of Accounts and the Report of the Auditor General of Canada and the Quebec Provincial Auditor thereon, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 18 of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act, chapter 12, Statutes of Canada 1962-63, as amended in 1963. (English and French texts).

Report of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Copy of letter sent by the Prime Minister of Canada to all Provincial Premiers, dated April 16, 1964, on the subjects of Tax-Sharing Arrangements, Pensions, Family Allowances and Loans to University Students. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Defence Production for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 34 of the Defence Production Act, chapter 62, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Copy of the Final Report to The International Joint Commission (Under the Reference of 25 June, 1952) by the International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, dated December, 1958, on the Water Levels of Late Ontario. (English text).

Copy of the Report to The Government of Canada and The Government of the United States (under the reference of June 25, 1952) by The International Joint Commission, dated 5 April, 1961, on the Water Levels of Lake Ontario. (English text).

Report of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 10 of the Department of National Health and Welfare Act, chapter 74, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the Administration of Allowances for Blind Persons in Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 12 of the Blind Persons Act, chapter 17, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

Report on the Administration of Allowances for Disabled Persons in Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 12 of the Disabled Persons Act, chapter 55, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English text).

Report on the Administration of Old Age Assistance in Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 12 of the Old Age Assistance Act, chapter 199, R.S.C. ,1952. (English text).

Copy of Appendices to the Final Report of the Fraser River Board on Flood Control and Hydro-Electric Power in the Fraser River Basin, tabled March 11th, 1964. (English text).

Report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, dated February 5, 1964. (Chairman: The Honourable Dana Harris Porter, Chief Justice of Ontario). (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILL

NEW SCOTLAND SAVINGS AND MORTGAGE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor presented Bill S-15, to incorporate New Scotland Savings and Mortgage Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Isnor moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 220 to 263, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

MOTION TO PRINT REPORT AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, with leave of the Senate, seconded by the honourable Senator Brooks, that the report of the Seventh Meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, tabled today, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

Motion agreed to.

For text of report see Appendix "A", pp. 325-34.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot presented Bill S-16, to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act.

He said: Honourable senators, during the last session I presented a bill to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act. I present a similar bill now; and in order that there shall be no difficulty about it, in virtue of the Rules of the Senate of Canada, there is in that book of rules, a chapter entitled "Public Bills," under which title Rule 61 reads thus:

> It is the right of every senator to bring in a Bill.

That rule means that it is the right of each one of us to introduce both public and private legislation, and it is not because a bill is sponsored by a senator or a member of the House of Commons that it is necessarily a private bill. What it is important to consider in order to determine whether a bill is public or private, is the nature and the purpose of the bill itself. Last session I introduced a bill for the same purpose, which was to grant definite rights to all the married women of Canada. I was surprised and shocked when I read the report of the memorandum from the Deputy Minister of Justice to his assistant deputy, when the Private Bills Committee studied Bill S-32 which I introduced last session. He stated:

> In the present case, I note that the bill upon which an opinion is sought is a private bill—

I wondered then if there was a copy of the Rules of the Senate in the library of the Department of Justice. I inquired, and the Government answered me on March 25 last, to say that copies of the Rules of the Senate of Canada and of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons of Canada were in the library of the Department of Justice in 1963. The book was there and, whether it was because that person was too docile or ignorant, he took no knowledge of the book, and made a decision which infringes upon the rights of each honourable senator and of each member of the House of Commons.

It means that none of us has the right to introduce public as well as private legislation. It is an immense absurdity.

What was the more shocking was the increase in the deputy minister's salary from $20,000 in July 1960, to $21,000 in April 1961, and to $25,000 on December 22, being retroactive to December 1 or July 1, I do not know which. However, it was a salary of $25,000 which was paid to a deputy minister who stated that a public bill introduced by a member of the Senate who does not belong to the cabinet is a private bill. The salary of that person should be reduced from $25,000 to $1, as a lesson to others. It meant that we are deprived of our right because of the ignorance of a man who had the knowledge at hand in the departmental library and who had no reason whatever to give an opinion like that in an official document.

This is why in the explanatory notes to the bill I have mentioned that the bill is in virtue of and in accordance with Rule 61 of the Rules of the Senate of Canada and also in virtue of subsection 26 of section 91 of the British North America Act. I must state that what I have just mentioned did not occur under the present Minister of Justice; it was done before.

I have taken precautions, and I have checked the law concerning married women in the Northwest Territories. I have checked the statute book of 1875, when there was a consolidation of all legislation concerning the Northwest Territories which was amended in 1877; but the act of 1875 contained provisions concerning the rights of married women in the Northwest Territories, and the amendment of 1877 did not affect those rights. There was a new consolidation in 1880, and all the references are in the explanatory notes. The act was published in the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886, chapter 50.

It was the law of the land, and it is precisely the provisions contained in the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886 which form the text of this bill for the following reasons: the same statute was included in the various revisions of the Statutes of Canada in 1906, 1927 and in 1952. And it was chapter 195 of the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1952 which reproduced the act of 1875 as amended in 1877, etc., but it was the same legislation that was enforced from 1875 to 1952. In 1952 a subsequent chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 331, repealed the Northwest Territories Act and replaced it by a new act in which the provisions concerning the rights of married women were not included.

Therefore, the purpose of this bill is to revive legislation which has been in force for 75 years for the married women of the Northwest Territories and to apply it to all married women in Canada. I do not think that there would be any doubt about the propriety of this legislation, its validity and its legality. It was good for Alexander Mackenzie, Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, R. B. Bennett, Sir Robert Borden, and Mackenzie King until 1952; and Ministers of Justice like Sir Allen Aylesworth, who was a prominent jurist, and Mr. Ernest Lapointe, who was well known as a great lawyer, left it in the statute book for the benefit of married women in the Northwest Territories.

I shall not speak further for the time being, but I find that this is the kind of legislation which cannot be decided by an incompetent Deputy Minister of Justice but which should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada in due course. I try to do my best to be lenient, good, and tolerant, but there are times when we have to speak loud in the defence of our parliamentary liberties.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED KINGDOM HIGH COMMISSIONER TO CANADA AND OTHER BRITISH SUBJECTS—VOTING PRIVILEGES

ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. Is the High Commissioner to Canada for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland qualified as an elector in virtue of the Canada Elections Act, (R.S.C. 1952, c. 23, as amended) inasmuch as he complies with the provisions of section 14 of the said act?

2. Are the British subjects born in the Commonwealth but outside Canada entitled to enjoy in Canada the same public rights as Canadian citizens do in Canada, upon the same conditions?

3. Are the Canadian citizens entitled to enjoy in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the same public rights as the British subjects, upon the same conditions?

4. Is the political status of a British subject the same in Canada as in any other part of the Commonwealth?

5. If not, are there any (a) degrees or (b) differences in the British nationality and what are they in each country?

Hon. John J. Connolly: The answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is a follows:

1. Yes, as a British subject. However, in accordance with international custom, representatives of governments of other countries do not take part in elections in the host country.

2. Yes, subject to the residence qualification.

3. It is the Government's understanding that no distinction is drawn, as regards the enjoyment of public rights, in the United Kingdom, between British nationals, i.e. citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies, and citizens of other Commonwealth countries, subject to the residence qualification.

4. In Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, as in Canada, generally all British subjects are entitled to the enjoyment of public rights, and more specifically to the franchise, on the same terms. In other parts of the Commonwealth, the franchise is generally limited to citizens of the country.

5. See answers to 3 and 4.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 162 to 219, inclusive, which were presented on Thursday, March 26.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, those reports having been adopted, I now present the following resolutions based thereon.

Resolution 161, for the relief of Louise Beausoleil Lavigne.

Resolution 162, for the relief of Christine Goguen Rivard.

Resolution 163, for the relief of Andre Gervais.

Resolution 164, for the relief of Dorothy Allen Rivard.

Resolution 165, for the relief of Diane Grier Findlay Odell.

Resolution 166, for the relief of Claudette Jarry Dehan.

Resolution 167, for the relief of Charlotte Baetz Wieling Gutkind.

Resolution 168, for the relief of Pasquale Ficara.

Resolution 169, for the relief of Gordon George Donnelly.

Resolution 170, for the relief of Elmer Stephen Cheverie.

Resolution 171, for the relief of Barbara Ann Murray Heffernan.

Resolution 172, for the relief of Russell Pain.

Resolution 173, for the relief of William Wallace Graham.

Resolution 174, for the relief of Klawda Bass Kawalerski.

Resolution 175, for the relief of Carole Anne Douglas Orr.

Resolution 176, for the relief of Roger Gagnon.

Resolution 177, for the relief of Frances Elizabeth Hodgson Eramian.

Resolution 178, for the relief of Liliana Sarda Boros.

Resolution 179, for the relief of Joan Lillian White Marsh.

Resolution 180, for the relief of Blanche Gagnon Mallette.

Resolution 181, for the relief of Marie Isabelle Therese (Gisele) Rodrigue Francoeur.

Resolution 182, for the relief of Susie Susser Rosenblatt.

Resolution 183, for the relief of Joan Isabel Hannaford MacDonald.

Resolution 184, for the relief of Velera Marion Moore Robb.

Resolution 185, for the relief of Ada Brewer Clement.

Resolution 186, for the relief of Jacqueline Lois Lubben Sawers.

Resolution 187, for the relief of Irene Dolgin Teitlebaum.

Resolution 188, for the relief of Francoise Jeanne Raymond Porteous.

Resolution 189, for the relief of Irene Collier Klinger.

Resolution 190, for the relief of Frances Margaret Shaughnessy Woolgar.

Resolution 191, for the relief of Freda Dick Allen Floyd.

Resolution 192, for the relief of Martha Christine Cook Cooper.

Resolution 193, for the relief of Werner Hermann Pluss.

Resolution 194, for the relief of Ann Marilyn Schlesinger Goldberg.

Resolution 195, for the relief of Eleanor Rose Eadle Vincent.

Resolution 196, for the relief of Bruorton Reginald Moore Fitz-Gerald.

Resolution 197, for the relief of Antoinette Fiore Lamoureux.

Resolution 198, for the relief of Mabel Bessie Hart Harris.

Resolution 199, for the relief of Luba Kopanski Slapak.

Resolution 200, for the relief of Anne Marie Mesudeur Atzel.

Resolution 201, for the relief of Violet Maud Willis Jones.

Resolution 202, for the relief of Isobel Janet Duco Noel.

Resolution 203, for the relief of Eveline Beck Zimmerman.

Resolution 204, for the relief of Rita Boudreau Savard.

Resolution 205, for the relief of Jacqueline Mary Atta Shatilla.

Resolution 206, for the relief of Olive Brown Mulcahy.

Resolution 207, for the relief of Catherine Marie MacDonald Beaton.

Resolution 208, for the relief of Barbara June Ibberson Thompson.

Resolution 209, for the relief of Alan John Clarke.

Resolution 210, for the relief of Horst Wolfgang Vogel.

Resolution 211, for the relief of Gertrude Anna Marie Seeburg Neubauer.

Resolution 212, for the relief of Maureen Sandra Murray Hastie.

Resolution 213, for the relief of Dorothy St. Clair Kane Wilson.

Resolution 214, for the relief of Constance Lacireno Walsh.

Resolution 215, for the relief of Suzanna Prins Garner.

Resolution 216, for the relief of Patricia June Graydon Wiens.

Resolution 217, for the relief of Arthur Paquette.

Resolution 218, for the relief of Linda Rose Low Steeves.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill S-12, respecting Allstate Insurance Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a simple bill, similar to many others that have been presented in this house during the last few years. It has reference to the Allstate Insurance Company of Canada, and its purpose is to provide a French designation of that name. Consequently, the bill requests that the name to be authorized should be "Allstate du Canada, Compagnie d'Assurance." As I have said, honourable senators, it is similar to many other bills presented in this house in that it simply asks for the designation of a French name.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

LAURENTIDE BANK OF CANADA—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Donald Cameron moved the second reading of Bill S-13, to incorporate Laurentide Bank of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving the second reading of this bill I am conscious first of the fact that I am not a banker, although I have always found bankers to be my friends, and I hope that those who are my friends now will not have any reason to be any less friendly because I am suggesting they might have some competition in the coming years. As a good Canadian, I feel I need my banker friends.

The presentation of this bill comes at a rather opportune time because we have on our desks as of today—at all events, I received my copy tonight upon my return to Ottawa—the very carefully and thoughtfully prepared report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. I think most of us will agree that this report is likely to become a milestone in the history of banking in Canada. I have not had time yet to go through it, but I read with a great deal of interest the comments in the leading newspapers. I may say, having just returned from New York this evening, that I read similar comments in newspapers there. The consensus of opinion seems to be that it is a very good report and will provide much food for thought. It is to be hoped that in the days to come it will have the effect of making the very fine services which have been performed by the banks of Canada over the years even more effective in covering a wider range of services.

This is the second bill to incorporate a bank that has been presented in this session. This in itself is a unique circumstance, because the last application for a bank charter was, as Senator Leonard told us, one for the establishment of the Mercantile Bank of Canada, a subsidiary of the Netherlands Bank, in 1953. That bank was, of course, incorporated.

This bill follows substantially the form of the model bill set out in schedule B of the Bank Act inasmuch as the first and second clauses describe the petitioners and the provisional directors. The third clause provides for an authorized capital of one million shares of the value of $10 each, as required by the Bank Act.

The fourth clause provides that the head office of the bank shall be in the City of Vancouver, in the Province of British Columbia. As a westerner, I think this is an excellent idea.

May I interject that I am one of those who grew up in the west during the depression of the thirties. I grew up in the farm movement of western Canada when there was a feeling on the part of the people there that the services they were receiving from the established banks were not quite as comprehensive as they might be. However, I would be the first to say that the banks have given excellent service. As has been said by so many in the past, we have one of the finest banking systems in the world.

The bankers of Canada are the prime promoters of free enterprise, and they give complete support to the idea that competition is a good thing. Under these circumstances I think they would welcome the establishment of another banking institution, and particularly one which will have its headquarters in the west but which would be nevertheless national in its scope and operations.

In clauses 5 and 6 the bill departs from the form set forth in the Bank Act and follows precisely the terms contained in the bill to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada. These clauses, as honourable senators know, require the directors to be Canadian citizens and residents of Canada, which is a more stringent requirement than that contained in the Bank Act. They also provide limitations upon shareholdings by non-residents in excess of 10 per cent of the issued stock. This provision, as in the case of the bill to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada, is stated to cease to have effect after July 1, 1965, when it is anticipated the Bank Act will have been revised. The proposed new bank would then become subject to such restrictions with respect to non-resident shareholders as may be contained in the revised statute.

The bank is intended to be a subsidiary of Laurentide Financial Corporation Limited, a Canadian financial institution having its head office in the Province of British Columbia, and which carries on a general finance business in Canada, in certain states of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Bahamas and the British West Indies. The qualifying shares of the directors will, of course, be owned beneficially by them in accordance with the requirements of the Bank Act.

Honourable senators will be interested in knowing the general background of Laurentide Financial Corporation Limited, which has a rather unusual history. This is a British Columbia company incorporated in 1950, the founders being Peter Paul Saunders, its president, and Andrew Elliott Saxton, its executive vice-president and general manager. These gentlemen, at the time of the formation of the company, had recently completed their studies in the Faculty of Commerce at the University of British Columbia, where they received, I may say, excellent training. Commencing with a very modest capitalization subscribed by the founders and some university companions and friends, the company has grown to be the third ranking finance company in Canada, having total assets as at June 30 of last year, which was the end of its last fiscal year, in excess of $272 million. Its capital and surplus are approximately $34 million.

The head office of the company since its incorporation has been, as I have stated, in Vancouver, and from that location its services are offered through 190 branch offices of the company and its subsidiaries located across Canada and in the States of California, Oregon and Nevada. Additionally, two branches are operated by a banking subsidiary in the Bahamas, five branches by a subsidiary in France, and three by a banking subsidiary in the United Kingdom. Another branch office was recently opened in Jamaica.

Incidentally, the banking operation in the Bahamas commenced upon the invitation of the government and business leaders who felt the company's engagement in business there would not only prove a satisfactory venture for the company but would benefit the local community through the provision of services not previously generally available. As a matter of fact, I visited this institution in the Bahamas during the last three weeks, and I can confirm from personal inquiries and experience that it has been a welcome addition to the financial resources there, and is performing a valuable service.

The parent company is Canadian in ownership in spite of the geographic diversification of its interest. The various classes of stock are held by more than ten thousand shareholders. Over 90 per cent of the shares are registered in the names of residents of Canada, and over 90 per cent of the shareholders themselves appear to be Canadian residents. In other words, less than 10 per cent of the shares are owned by non-residents, and less than 10 per cent of the registered shareholders are non-residents of this country.

The parent company is closely associated with Power Corporation of Canada, Limited, which is no doubt well known to honourable senators as a substantial Canadian investment company. Power Corporation acquired its interest in 1956 through the purchase of a class of shares carrying voting rights. The parent-subsidiary relationship was severed last April when a reorganization of Laurentide's share capital conferred voting rights upon the common shares. However, by reason of its continuing substantial share holdings and an agreement, Power Corporation continues to be in a position to cause to be elected a majority of the company's directors.

A further word in connection with the petitioners and the proposed provisional directors may be in order.

As I indicated earlier, Messrs. Saunders and Saxton were the original founders of the Laurentide Company. This is one of those unusual developments whereby Canada has been enriched by some of her immigrants. In recent years I have been intrigued to notice the contribution which has been made to Canada, particularly in the cultural field, by people who have come to us from Hungary. It is not as well known that some of them have also made a distinguished contribution in the business world—and I include Peter Paul Saunders and his partner Andrew Elliott Saxton.

These young men came from good families in Hungary. One came from a family with a banking and legal background and the other from a rural economy. They came to Canada as children. They were educated in Canadian schools and both of them went through the University of British Columbia, the Faculty of Commerce, where they had distinguished records.

To me as a western Canadian, to me as a person who has great faith and belief in the fact that we need more youth and vitality in the business world of this country and in the Government of this country, these two men have achieved an enviable record in a period of 10 or 12 years.

I am sure some of you are familiar with an organization in this country known as the Young Presidents Association. This is a group of bright young men who are exercising an amazing role in Canadian business today. The criteria to become a member of the Young Presidents Association are three in number: first, you must be under 40 years of age; secondly, you must be the president of your company, and, thirdly, you must have done more than a million dollars worth of business in the previous year.

I happened to work with a number of these young men, such as John Scrymgoer, President of Commonwealth Petroleum of Calgary; Ron Southern, the man who built up a small trailer company into one that is exporting trailers all over the world, setting up complete units of offices, dining rooms, sleeping accommodation, everything that is required for a development project; and Don Cormie of Edmonton, President of the First Investors Corporation. I could go on to speak of others. Peter Paul Saunders is a charter member and Vice-President of the British Columbia Chapter of the Young Presidents Association. Here is a group of young men who, with imagination, daring and courage, are blazing through some new trails in the Canadian economic firmament. I am happy as a westerner to be able to support another imaginative venture which has the prospect of a spectacular business success, namely, the proposal to establish the Laurentide Bank of Canada.

The Laurentide Financial Corporation Limited stands as a monument to their initiative, ability and business acumen. It shows what is possible in a country where young men have the freedom to develop their initiative in this land of promise and opportunity. They have demonstrated success in this field of endeavour which may augur well for the success of the proposed bank, because there are few more spectacular financial successes in the history of this country.

Perhaps I should mention briefly the background of the other petitioners and the proposed provisional directors. W. C. Mainwaring, O.B.E., is President of the Peace River Power Corporation, former Vice-President of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company, a member of the Advisory Board of the Royal Trust Company, and a director of a number of other companies including Laurentide Financial Corporation Limited.

Paul Britton Paine, Q.C., is a lawyer in practice in Vancouver, a bencher of the Law Society of British Columbia, and Secretary of Laurentide Financial Corporation Limited. Howard Theodore Mitchell is a publisher operating his own business in Vancouver, and is currently the President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Edgar John Saba is a merchant whose family has for many years engaged in business in Vancouver. Mr. Lionel Leroux is a notary who has carried on practice for many years in the City of Montreal, and is a director of a number of companies engaged in business in the Province of Quebec. Mr. Bernard de Lorimier Bourgeois, Q.C., is a well-known lawyer practising in the City of Montreal; he is currently the Vice-President for Quebec for the Canadian Bar Association, and is a director of a number of Quebec companies.

Turning to the proposed operations of the bank, it is intended that it will offer a complete banking service with branches eventually extending throughout Canada. Initial operations will commence in the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec, and as these operations develop it is intended that branches will be established in major cities in other provinces and expand from there as the growth of the enterprise indicates and warrants. It is proposed that eventually the bank will provide complete banking service throughout Canada.

The management of the bank will be under the direction of a board of directors which will be comprised of individuals prominent in Canadian business and professional fields and substantially distinct in composition from the board of directors of the parent company.

One element for consideration in determining whether or not to incorporate an additional bank in Canada is, of course, the financial stability of the enterprise and the protection of the depositors against loss. In this respect may I remind you of the very substantial capital of the parent company. The extensive experience of its management in dealing with financial matters will undoubtedly be of valuable assistance to the proposed bank. There should also be borne in mind the fact that since the establishment of the office of the Inspector General of Banks in 1924, there has been no bank failure in Canada.

Honourable senators who attended the sitting of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, when the bill to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada was considered, had an opportunity to get a very informative and useful review of the history of banking in Canada. For those who have not read the report of the proceedings, may I commend it to you as a useful exercise and as a reassurance that, under the present bank laws in this country, it is unlikely any depositor or shareholder may lose money, as was the case in former times.

Mr. C. F. Elderkin, the Inspector General of Banks, expressed the view that the safeguards currently employed by his branch of the Department of Finance make it unlikely that any serious difficulty which could cause loss to depositors would remain undetected for a sufficient period to permit this to occur. In this connection, I refer you to the duties of the Inspector General and the very broad powers conferred upon him for carrying them out, as set forth in section 63 of the Bank Act.

An additional element for consideration of such legislation is the question of need or desirability for additional banks. It seems unnecessary at this stage for me to dwell upon this aspect of the matter. You are aware of the shrinkage in the number of banks which has occurred through merger and amalgamation over the past several years.

Senator Leonard, in introducing the proposal regarding the Bank of Western Canada, referred to the fact that in 1954, when the charter was granted for the Mercantile Bank, there were 11 chartered banks in Canada. There are now eight. Therefore, even if the two present applications for charters are granted, we still would have one less chartered bank than we had in 1954. I think it is well to keep that fact in mind.

I have before me a recent article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, by that distinguished Canadian journalist Charles Lynch. It appeared under the heading: "The Booming Northwest." He stopped too soon. If he had gone further than the lakehead—which to Ontario is the west—he would have seen a real boom.

May I just digress to say this? I often feel that people in eastern Canada who are accustomed to going to Europe or South America and such places, should take a little more time and travel west of Sarnia and become acquainted with our own country.

I believe the greatest future of this country is in Alberta and British Columbia. Anyone who goes to that part of Canada today cannot help but feel a sense of the burgeoning vitality and the boom which is evident everywhere. There is a new confidence in the people of those provinces that is good to see. It is good for Canada. In terms of the kind of economic climate in which we are now finding ourselves there is a period of expansion ahead, and I think that smart Canadians will make sure that it continues. There is the need for additional banking services beyond what we have at the present time. In saying this, I do not reflect in any way upon the quality and services extended by the present banks. They have done a good job. However, some of us think they might have done a better job and gone further in extending services.

At the hearings and submissions before the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, a great deal was said about competition from institutions similar to banks, such as trust companies, credit unions and others. Such competition would not have arisen had the chartered banks provided the kind of services that were needed. In saying that, I must be fair, because the banks were prevented from entering into certain types of activity. While Canadian banks today are the soundest in the world, they have been in the past probably extremely conservative in branching out and serving certain needs. Probably they have been confirmed in that conservative—of course I am not using that word in the political sense—attitude by the act under which they had to operate, as well as by the natural conservatism of Canadian people in financial affairs. I feel that we are now entering upon a new, more experimental and, I hope, more daring age than persisted in the past 30 or 40 years. I hope a time will come when Canadians will make greater efforts to own and control their own economy.

We hear a lot these days about Canadians complaining that our enterprises are foreign-owned. The oil industry in Alberta, for instance, is 85 per cent owned by foreign capital. Our manufacturing plants are owned to the extent of 60 per cent. We complain about that. During the past week or two we have been hearing about the magnificent strike at Timmins, but the first blush of enthusiasm has depreciated somewhat, because people have realized that while this enterprise will provide employment in Canada, it will be largely owned south of the border. I do not blame the Americans for what they have done. We need American capital, initiative and enterprise. Until such time as Canadians show a little more initiative and willingness to take risks, I do not think we can complain at all.

Therefore, I welcome the application for two new banks in Canada, and I hope their charters will be granted. I think they are needed in terms of an expanding economy to provide a broader service than we have had. If some of the recommendations of this report are implemented, the banks will be given greater freedom to perform even better service.

Honourable senators, in this extraordinary period of expansion in the Canadian economy, and because today we are operating under what is called a free enterprise system, where competition has always been deemed to be in the best interests not only of industry but of Canada as a whole, I feel we should welcome the entry into the banking field of two new competitors. Their bona fides are sound. The people who are backing them have the confidence of the Canadian population in general. These people have also demonstrated daring and initiative of the kind we should welcome in Canada, and this country would be better off if we had these qualities in larger measure.

Honourable senators, for those reasons I solicit your support on second reading for the establishment of the Laurentide Bank of Canada.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, will recall that early in March last, Bill S-6, to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada, was introduced in this chamber. I spoke to that bill at some length and, among other things, I suggested that the bill be allowed to stand until we had received the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance.

I was pleased at that time that the honourable Senator Leonard, who introduced the bill, agreed with me and expressed his willingness to have the bill remain in committee until the report was received and had been studied. The honourable Senator Cameron, in explaining Bill S-13 this evening, referred to this report, which most senators have received only today. Few of us have had an opportunity to more than glance at the report, and since it contains nearly 600 pages, I suggest it is going to take us some time to read and study it. Therefore, honourable senators, I move the adjournment of this debate until Wednesday, May 6.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 317)

REPORT OF THE SEVENTH MEETING OF THE CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

The seventh meeting of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group was held at Washington and Cape Kennedy from Tuesday, January 14 to Sunday, January 19, 1964. Twenty-four members of the congress of the United States and twenty-four members of the parliament of Canada participated. In accordance with established practice at previous meetings of this group, discussions were conducted in a frank and informal manner and without regard to political affiliation. It should also be emphasized that the talks were entirely off the record and, in no sense, official discussions between the governments of the two countries. They were simply an unofficial exchange of views by parliamentarians interested in one another's problems.

The agenda for the meeting was worked out by agreement among the four co-chairmen, Senator George Aiken of Vermont, Representative Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey and the two Canadian Speakers. Once an agenda had been agreed upon and the Canadian delegation selected, a series of four oral briefing sessions were held. These sessions were attended by ministers, deputy ministers and other senior government officials, who addressed the delegates and led question and answer periods. The oral briefings were supplemented by extensive written material provided to each member of the delegation and prepared by the appropriate government departments, notably external affairs, defence production, trade and commerce and labour.

The delegation we had the honour of leading represented Canada with great credit and we wish to express our appreciation to the leaders and whips of all political parties for their co-operation in the selection of delegates who were able to make a significant contribution to the discussions. A glance at the list appearing as Appendix "A" to this report will reveal the unusually high calibre of the delegation. For example, the representatives of the Senate included the only Canadian who has attended all seven meetings of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group (Senator Sydney Smith), a privy councillor (Senator McCutcheon) a senator with long experience in both Canadian houses (Senator William Taylor), a senator who has made valuable contributions to earlier meetings of this group (Senator Inman) and a senator whose eloquence and Irish wit more than compensate for any lack of seniority (Senator O'Leary).

The delegates from the House of Commons included three privy councillors (Mr. Starr, Mr. Monteith, and Mr. Martineau), a national party leader (Mr. Thompson), a parliamentary secretary (Mr. Byrne) and a former parliamentary secretary (Mr. Nesbitt), a party whip (Mr. Knowles), the chairman of the defence committee (Mr. Sauvé), the deputy speaker (Mr. Lamoureux), the deputy chairman of committees (Mr. Batten) and a former provincial attorney-general (Mr. Fairweather). Backbench representation was a happy blend of youth and experience and of various political affiliations and included Mr. A. J. P. Cameron, Mr. McIntosh, Mr. Brewin, Mr. Latulippe, Miss Jewett and Mr. Chrétien.

The Canadian delegates and their wives were welcomed at the opening plenary session on Tuesday, January 14, by the United States co-chairman who emphasized their great satisfaction that the interparliamentary group was renewing its sessions after a lapse of almost two years. Later the same day, Representative Gallagher was host at a luncheon in the new Senate office building for the Canadian delegates, who then visited the House of Representatives. Meanwhile, the wives of the Canadian delegates were taken for a tour of the library of congress and the supreme court building, a luncheon in the Capitol with Mrs. Wayne Morse and Mrs. Cornelius Gallagher as co-hostesses, followed by a tour of the Capitol and of Washington. That evening the members of both delegations and their wives were guests at a reception given by the Canadian ambassador and Mrs. C. S. A. Ritchie.

Following the plenary session, the group broke into two committees. Committee I discussed defence and foreign policy matters of joint national interest, such as defence production sharing, hemispheric defence and NATO relations; committee II focused its attention on economic matters such as trade with communist countries, aid to and trade with under-developed countries, and labour problems on the great lakes. In each committee, a number of items not included on the agenda came under discussion, such as the recent crisis in Panama, Canada and the Organization of American States, the Passamaquoddy power project and the Canadian decision to declare a 12 mile exclusive fishing zone. The first committee met under the co-chairmanship of Representative Gallagher and Speaker Macnaughton; the second committee was co-chaired by Senator Aiken and Speaker Bourget. The membership of the committees is shown in Appendix "A" to this report.

At the conclusion of the business sessions which are summarized in the committee reports appearing as Appendix "B" to this report, the Canadian delegates proceeded to the floor of the United States Senate where they were welcomed by Senator Aiken, Senator Mansfield, Senator Holland and Senator Young. An extract from the Congressional Record of January 15, which is printed as Appendix "C" to this report, contains the statements of welcome. Following a luncheon at which the Canadian delegates were guests of Senator Aiken, a press conference was held by the four co-chairmen.

Late in the afternoon of Wednesday, January 15, the members of both delegations and their wives had the great honour of being received personally by the President and Mrs. Johnson at the White House. That evening the Canadian delegates and their wives were the guests at a reception and dinner given by the United States delegation and addressed by Secretary of State Dean Rusk.

On Thursday morning the members of both delegations and their wives paid a solemn visit to Arlington national cemetery where Speaker Bourget laid a wreath at the tomb of the unknown soldier. The United States co-chairmen paid a similar tribute at the site of the Canadian Cross. Speaker Macnaughton laid a wreath at the grave of the late President John F. Kennedy as a mark of respect from the people of Canada.

Thursday afternoon the group left Washington by air for historic St. Augustine, the oldest city in the United States. Here the program included a reception and dinner offered by the United States delegation and attended by the mayor, members of the chamber of commerce and ranking city officials.

Friday the party proceeded by bus to Cape Kennedy where, the following day, an extensive tour was made of the installations of the national aeronautics and space administration (NASA) and the U.S. air force. This included detailed explanations by the responsible scientists of the various space programs such as Ranger, Titan, Gemini and Saturn, and on the spot inspections of the several launching sites, affording the Canadian delegation an insight into the complexity and magnitude of the United States space program.

Both delegations returned by air to their respective capitals on Sunday, January 19.

It was the consensus of those members of the U.S. and Canadian delegations who had attended previous meetings of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group that the seventh meeting was among the most successful to date. From the Canadian standpoint, this was due, in very large measure, to the care that went into the selection of delegates and the preparations for the meeting and to the responsible attitude of all delegates. It was gratifying to us that, without exception, the Canadian delegates attended all meetings and other functions and participated to the very fullest extent in the discussions.

We would not wish to conclude this report without mentioning the important contribution made to the success of the meeting by the wives who accompanied most delegates. As it was well said on another occasion, their presence more than doubled the effectiveness of the exchange in the promotion of good will and understanding.

We should like to record our appreciation to President and Mrs. Johnson for their graciousness in receiving the delegation. We should also like to express our thanks to the co-chairmen, Senator Aiken and Congressman Gallagher, and to the members of the United States delegation for the warmth of our reception and to congratulate those responsible on the excellence of all arrangements. We should also like to thank the R.C.A.F., the Department of Transport and the U.S. air force for taking care of all transportation arrangements. Finally, we wish to acknowledge the excellent staff work on the part of officials of various departments of the Canadian government who assisted us so greatly with the organization of the meetings and in our preparations for the discussions.

Dated at Ottawa, March 6th, 1964.

Maurice Bourget, Speaker of the Senate.	Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Joint Chairmen

Appendix "A"

DELEGATES to the Seventh Meeting

CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

The delegates, arranged according to the committees on which they served, were the following:

COMMITTEE I—DEFENCE AND FOREIGN POLICY

United States Delegation

Representative Cornelius E. Gallagher (Co-Chairman)
Senator Mike Mansfield
Senator Spessard Holland
Senator Philip A. Hart
Senator Karl E. Mundt
Senator Milton Young
Representative William T. Murphy
Representative John M. Slack, Jr.
Representative Harris B. McDowell, Jr.
Representative Fernand St. Germain
Representative Mark Andrews
Representative George M. Wallhauser
Representative Robert McClory

Canadian Delegation

Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton, (Co-Chairman)
Hon. William H. Taylor
Hon. F. Elsie Inman
Hon. Paul Martineau
Mr. Herman Batten
Mr. Jack McIntosh
Mr. Maurice Sauvé
Mr. A. J. P. Cameron
Mr. Andrew F. Brewin
Mr. R. Gordon Fairweather

COMMITTEE II—ECONOMIC MATTERS

United States Delegation

Senator George D. Aiken (Co-Chairman)
Senator Wayne Morse
Senator E. L. Bartlett
Senator John O. Pastore
Senator Edmund Muskie
Senator Edward Kennedy
Senator Len B. Jordon
Representative Thaddeus J. Dulski
Representative Harold T. Johnson
Representative William S. Broomfield
Representative Stanley R. Tupper
Representative Howard W. Robison
Representative James F. Battin

Canadian Delegation

Hon. Maurice Bourget (Co-Chairman)
Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon
Hon. Sydney J. Smith
Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary
Hon. Michael Starr
Hon. J. Waldo Monteith
Mr. Wallace B. Nesbitt
Mr. Robert Thompson
Mr. Lucien Lamoureux
Mr. Stanley Knowles
Mr. James A. Byrne
Mr. Henri Latulippe
Dr. Pauline Jewett
Mr. Jean Chrétien

STAFF

United States Delegation

Mr. Darrell St. Claire
Dr. Albert C. F. Westphal
Mr. Seth Tillman
Mrs. Louise O'Brien
Miss Millrae Jensen

Canadian Delegation

Mr. George Carty
Mr. M. L. Card
Mr. G. C. Cook
Mr. R. W. Nadeau
Mr. L. S. Virr

Appendix "B"

COMMITTEE REPORTS

COMMITTEE I—DEFENCE AND FOREIGN POLICY

The Present Situation in Panama

The present crisis in the relations between the U.S. and Panama was discussed as part of the larger problem of the hemispheric relations of Canada and the U.S. The maintenance of active control by the U.S. over the Panama canal, including the preservation of the security of the canal, was justified by U.S. delegates as vital not only to the defence of this hemisphere but also for the commerce of all maritime countries that have access to its facilities upon the payment of uniform and modest tolls. In this connection, it was pointed out that Latin American countries in particular rely on the canal for their participation in world trade.

Several U.S. delegates explained the genesis of the present crisis. The flag issue was only a symptom of more basic issues. Among the reasons advanced for the crisis were the economic disparity between the living conditions of U.S. and Panamanians working in the canal zone, a growing nationalist sensitivity in Panama, approaching elections in that country in which candidates use the presence of Americans as a campaign issue, and communist-inspired activities.

In response to a Canadian inquiry comparing the U.S. role in Panama with its role in the Suez situation, it was pointed out that the Suez canal had been privately owned, whereas the U.S. has treaty rights agreed to by two sovereign governments. The Panama canal, unlike the Suez canal, is not a sea level canal and requires the presence of highly skilled and efficient personnel for its successful operation. Moreover, the cost of the canal was borne entirely by the U.S. The gross investment by the U.S. in the canal, exclusive of investment in military facilities is about $1.7 billion. Of this amount, $1.1 billion has been recovered from revenues, leaving an unrecovered net investment of $600 million. For the last fiscal year the net revenue to the U.S. from the canal was only $2.3 million. Ancillary work in connection with the construction of the canal, such as health measures, made the isthmus a habitable piece of territory; economic improvements have accrued to the advantage of the Panamanian citizens. It was noted that Panama itself has not advocated internationalization of the canal.

Canada and the Organization of American States

The discussion of the present troubled situation in Panama led into consideration of the question of Canada's joining the organization of American states (OAS). Several United States delegates expressed the strong belief that it would be very desirable that Canada join without further delay. The statements of Canadian delegates reflected the complexity, from the Canadian viewpoint, of the question of Canadian membership in the OAS. On the other hand, it was pointed out that for a relatively small country Canada was already well extended in international affairs, with commitments in many areas of the world. In addition, unlike the United States, Canada has no history and tradition of close association with Latin America but has looked to Europe and the commonwealth connection, and there are some who maintain that joining the O.A.S. would be inconsistent with these historical ties and attitudes. Further, it could be anticipated that difficult problems would confront Canada from time to time as the second North American country in the organization. On the other hand, several Canadian delegates expressed the opinion that too much weight has been given to these negative considerations and that the time has come for Canada to give most serious consideration to joining the O.A.S. It was suggested that there is a need for Canada, with its skills and resources, to contribute more directly to the development of Latin America, bearing in mind the constant danger of social unrest and subversion arising from low living standards. It was also recognized that Canada could and should take an active interest in the progress and development of the newly emerging countries in the Caribbean. It was noted that the fact that many Canadians are of French origin and tradition is a great asset in relations with Latin America. United States delegates stressed that Canadian membership in the O.A.S. would in itself be a great asset to the organization and would add to it a further measure of dedication to democratic principles. Canada's basic philosophy of government is little different from that of the United States and both, along with all Latin American countries, have in common a spirit of independence and recognize the need for mutual security of the hemisphere.

Sharing of North American Defence and the NATO Alliance

The committee noted the mutual responsibilities of the United States and Canada for North American defence and reviewed their respective commitments to NATO in the light of changing economic, military and political considerations.

The new special committee on defence of the Canadian Parliament recently visited NATO Europe and members recalled European concern about future United States and Canadian intentions with regard to maintaining forces in Europe. Such concern is leading France, for example, to develop her own independent nuclear deterrent in the face of continued communist threats to world peace. As European defence resources and power increase, the question arises whether Canada and the United States, being the two non-European countries in NATO, should review their changing role. Is it normal and desirable for North American forces to be stationed indefinitely in Europe? The newly established special committee on defence of the Canadian parliament has in effect endorsed Canada-United States defence arrangements, and the United States delegates welcomed this evidence of continued Canadian interest in co-operation in defence matters.

In the light of the heavy burden of defence costs and such new strategic developments at the ICBM, it was debated whether Canada should continue to contribute some small fraction to the now massive western deterrent forces or should develop a new and different role. One approach might envisage the Canadian contribution as a small but well equipped mobile force available for any appropriate world peace keeping mission.

Much discussion concerned the problem of control of nuclear weapons within the western alliance and the position of some members of NATO with respect to the development and maintenance of independent national nuclear capabilities. The committee considered some of the possible means of dealing with this situation, such as the proposed seaborne multilateral nuclear force, or MLF, and recognized the difficulties in the way of finding a solution to this problem which would be satisfactory to all members of the alliance. It was suggested that the incentive to develop independent nuclear capabilities might be lessened by finding some way of associating all members of NATO more closely with the decision making process in respect of the possible use of these weapons. United States delegates noted that several United States proposals within NATO with this objective in mind had failed to be accepted. It was agreed that the major endeavour should be in the direction of reducing the danger of nuclear war by determined efforts in the pursuit of peace. It was pointed out that the disarmament talks could be an extremely useful vehicle in this regard. The test ban agreement was the result of a desire of nations in achieving the goal of a lasting peace.

In general the committee concluded that the success of the alliance to date could accommodate some minor adjustments of forces but that both Canada and the U.S. must and would continue to meet their agreed commitments to NATO and North American defence, while looking to other allies to carry out an appropriate portion of the defence burden as their resources increased.

One good working example of defence co-operation among interdependent allies was the Canada-United States defence production sharing program.

The committee recalled that in recognition of their joint responsibilities for North American defence, the program had been initiated to encourage Canadian industrial participation in U.S. defence requirements to balance Canada's continuing procurement from U.S. sources of major weapons following the Canadian decision to abandon her own independent development of certain major defence equipments. The five years experience with the program had demonstrated that it was a practical and sensible approach to co-operation in industrial research, development and production founded on mutual understanding and of practical advantage to both countries. Although, for the first few years of the program, Canadian production sharing procurement from U.S. companies had exceeded U.S. procurement in Canada, more recently United States procurement in Canada has exceeded Canadian procurement in the U.S. However, the current Canadian requirements for U.S. armoured vehicles, and the anticipated completion of certain U.S. aircraft procurement from Canada indicated that the program in the future would tend to a long-term balance.

The U.S. and Canadian members were unanimous in their support of the defence procurement objectives and emphasized the desirability of sharing not only defence production but also the earlier essential phases of research and development where each country has specialized and unique capabilities to support North American defence needs.

In conclusion, the committee recognized that there remain several outstanding subjects of contention between the two countries, which is an inevitable consequence of two nations sharing a continent and a broad variety of responsibilities. Among these issues are such matters as the Canadian withholding tax on the earnings of foreign investment in Canada, Canadian export incentives in the automobile and automobile parts field, and the proposed United States interest equalization tax. The Canada-United States interparliamentary group provides a most useful forum in alleviating such problems to achieve better understanding and relations.

COMMITTEE II—ECONOMIC MATTERS

Free World Trade

The committee discussed current problems and prospects of trade between Canada and the United States and with other free world countries. It was agreed that with respect to world trade in general the two countries have similar interests, such as the maintenance of export markets for agricultural products, and problems in common such as continuing balance of payments deficits, although the latter problem results from different causes in each country.

The two delegations exchanged views on the prospects of the forthcoming Kennedy round of tariff negotiations and on the problems posed for both Canada and the United States by current policies of the European economic community. Each delegation requested the other's views as to the prospects for extensive tariff reductions in the Kennedy round. The U.S. delegation expressed cautious optimism for the general lowering of tariffs but expressed misgivings with respect to agricultural products. The Canadian delegation indicated that Canada will join in the effort to attain tariff reductions in many areas but expressed concern as to the high level of certain specific U.S. tariffs. It was pointed out the GATT member countries have agreed that the formula for across the board tariff cuts would not be appropriate for Canada in view of Canada's particular pattern of trade and economic activities, but that Canada would be prepared to pay in full by tariff concessions for all advantages gained in the negotiations.

The committee discussed in some detail current problems of trade between Canada and the United States. It was pointed out by the Canadian delegation that while Canada's over-all world balance of trade is favourable, its balance of trade and payment with the United States, its principal market, is chronically adverse. Canada, it was emphasized, therefore views with concern any restrictions on the entry of Canadian goods into U.S. markets. Members of the Canadian delegation expressed dissatisfaction, for example, with U.S. quota restrictions on Canadian dairy products, such as cheddar cheese. The Canadian delegation further emphasized the great importance which is attached to the U.S. market for Canadian lumber, among other reasons because of increased competition from the Soviet union and Scandinavian countries for certain European markets.

Trade with Communist countries

Members of the two delegations expressed general agreement that certain forms of trade in nonstrategic goods with communist countries are proper and advantageous. There were, however, differing opinions as to the desirable overall volume of trade with communist countries and as to the specific communist countries with which trade should be conducted. Specifically, the Canadian delegation did not share the view of the U.S. delegation that a firm embargo should be maintained on trade with Cuba and communist China.

The question of extending credits to communist countries was discussed. Members of the U.S. delegation expressed the view that there should be strict limits on the extension of credits to communist countries, not because these countries are regarded as bad credit risks, but because it is feared that the extension of liberal credits will enable them to divert resources to purposes inimical to western interests. Members of the Canadian delegation expressed the view that, with certain exceptions, communist countries should be granted non-discriminatory terms of trade.

There was frank discussion of the policies of Canada and the United States with respect to trade with Cuba. Members of the U.S. delegation noted with concern that part of the wheat sold by Canada to the Soviet union has been diverted to Cuba. Members of the Canadian delegation expressed the view that there is considerable misunderstanding in the United States as to the scope of Canadian trade with Cuba. Canada's trade with Cuba, it was pointed out, consists only of nonstrategic goods, is on a small scale, and has diminished in recent years. Members of the Canadian delegation pointed to the inconsistency between the sale of wheat to the Soviet union by the United States and its maintenance of a strict embargo on trade with Cuba and communist China. The U.S. delegation asserted, in response, that Cuba was, for historical reasons, an area of exceptional U.S. interest and concern. This concern, in the view of the U.S. delegation, is reasonable and necessary and one which the United States hopes will continue to enlist the sympathetic understanding of its friends.

The deliberations of the committee revealed differing opinions with respect to trade with communist China. Members of the U.S. delegation expressed the view that communist China should be denied trade as well as diplomatic recognition and admission to the United Nations as long as it refuses to renounce force as an instrument of national policy and refuses to accept the continued existence of the Chinese nationalist government in Taiwan. Members of the Canadian delegation endorsed the need for a continuing embargo on trade in strategic goods with communist China but questioned the view that a policy of rigorous embargo on trade in nonstrategic goods would prove effective as a means of deterring Chinese communist aggression. It was agreed by both delegations that the trade policies of their two countries with respect to the communist bloc should be governed by considerations of their own economic and political needs as well as by their desire to deny significant economic benefits to potential antagonists.

Law of the Sea

By mutual agreement the committee devoted considerable time to a thorough discussion of the situation created by the announcement by the Canadian government of June 4, 1963 that it intends to declare in May 1964 a 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone, the 12 miles to be measured by a straight headland to headland base line method. The Canadian delegation explained the particular problems presented for the Canadian fisheries industry by the presence of large numbers of foreign fishing vessels operating close to the Canadian shoreline. The Canadian delegation also emphasized that in the statement of policy of June 4, 1963, the Canadian Prime Minister declared Canada's intention to enter into direct discussions with interested foreign countries, the United States and France in particular, with a view to protecting treaty rights and taking into account claims to historic rights by those countries.

There was general agreement in the committee that in the matter of fisheries rights and the closely related question of territorial waters it would be highly desirable to proceed by way of an international agreement. Some United States members suggested that another effort be made in concert with other interested governments to call together as soon as possible an international conference to discuss fisheries conservation matters and to attempt to arrive at an international convention, quite possibly one based on a 12 mile fisheries limit, which would allow for direct bilateral arrangements concerning any traditional rights. The Canadian delegation drew the committee's attention to the fact that the Canadian government would prefer an international agreement and had so stated but that the failure of the Geneva conference of 1960 and of subsequent consideration of the problem had led to the conclusion that international agreement on the fisheries issue and the related question of territorial waters was not to be expected in the near future. Consequently, the Canadian government considered it imperative that action be taken by Canada to protect its fishing interests.

Some members of the United States delegation emphasized that, apart from the merits of the proposed 12 mile fisheries limit, the long established principles of international law involved in this whole question were of vital importance. In accordance with this view, it was contended by the United States delegation that the resolution of the issue as a matter of international law by means of international negotiation was at least as important as the contents of any agreement that might be reached.

The committee noted that the executive branches of the two governments were continuing their discussions of this question and the hope was expressed that any differences of opinion would be amicably resolved.

Interest Equalization Tax

The committee discussed the proposed United States interest equalization tax bill and also the tax measures invoked by Canada which will affect United States subsidiary companies in that country. The Canadian measures were designed to encourage Canadian ownership of domestic industry while United States measures were designed to help solve the United States balance of payments problem. The Canadian delegation pointed out that Canada was the country most directly affected by the interest equalization tax proposals and was most appreciative of the exemption granted to Canada by the United States on new issues of securities. They expressed the hope that this exemption would be extended to cover existing securities. While both delegations expressed regrets at these restrictions on the traditional free flow of capital between the two countries, they recognized that these measures were necessary expedients designed to solve critical problems in each of the two countries.

Labour problems on the Great Lakes

The Canadian delegation outlined in some detail the background to the serious problems which have been created on the great lakes by differences which had arisen within the Canadian labour movement as to union representation on great lakes vessels. It was pointed out that following increasing violence and the closing of the St. Lawrence seaway in June of 1962, the Canadian government, at the urging of the Canadian Labour Congress, appointed an industrial inquiry commission. Justice Norris, the industrial inquiry commissioner, recommended in his report that the maritime unions involved be placed under trusteeship. It was emphasized that the Canadian government took the view that developments left no other choice but the appointment of a trusteeship, either government or private.

The United States delegation indicated their understanding that the United States government had attempted to prevent difficulties in United States ports, and that the department of labor was doing everything possible, within United States law, to protect Canadian shipping.

The committee viewed this question with concern because of its continuing adverse effects on Canadian-United States relations and expressed the hope that every effort would be made to reach a satisfactory resolution of the problem.

Passamaquoddy Power Project

The U.S. delegation drew the committee's attention to the recent report of the department of the interior which recommended the construction of a tidal power project in Passamaquoddy bay. This project would be associated with hydroelectric developments on the upper Saint John river. Development of these two projects would require resolution of a number of questions and agreement of both the United States and Canada.

The Secretary of State has been instructed by the President to enter into negotiations with Canada as soon as possible. While there have been technical discussions, formal negotiations have not yet commenced. The U.S. delegation pointed to the benefits of joint development and expressed the hope that it might be possible to begin negotiations at an early date with a view to reaching a constructive agreement.

Roads to Alaska

The committee discussed the economic benefits that could accrue to both countries through improvements in the Alaska highway system. They also explored the specific problems involved in any improvement of the system including paving and relocation.

A member of the Canadian delegation expressed the view that there would have to be some agreement between the two countries on the sharing of the considerable costs involved in these improvements.

Appendix "C"

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

Extract from the Congressional Record
January 15th, 1964

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY MEMBERS OF THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Aiken: Mr. President, today the Senate is signally honored by being visited by 24 Members of the Parliament of Canada, our closest friend among all the nations, and one with which we have more than 3,000 miles of common boundary.

Our friends from the north have been here to discuss matters which pertain to their country and ours—both matters in which we have a cooperative interest and some matters in which we have competitive interests.

At this time, I wish the Record to show the presence in the Senate Chamber of these distinguished visitors. We appreciate their visit far more than can be expressed by mere words.

I take pleasure in introducing them to the Senate. Following their introduction, luncheon will be served in the reception room.

First, I am delighted to introduce to the Senate the Speaker of the Canadian Senate, Hon. Maurice Bourget. He and I are really neighbours, for his home is only a short distance across the boundary between the Province of Quebec and Vermont. He is cochairman of this parliamentary conference. (Applause.)

The other Members of the Canadian Senate who are visiting the Senate today are: Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon, a former member of the Canadian Cabinet, as are several of the others whom I shall introduce. (Applause.)

Hon. W. H. Taylor. (Applause.)

Next is a lady Senator, Hon. F. Elsie Inman, who, I believe, has attended the delegation meetings for as long as I have. (Applause.)

Then we go to the Pacific coast, where Hon. Sydney J. Smith represents British Columbia. (Applause.) I know that his record is as good as mine in attendance at the seven Parliamentary Conferences which have been held during the past few years.

Last, but not least in the Senate. Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary. (Applause.) As his name might indicate, Mr. O'Leary is very plain spoken in discussions. We are very happy that he is with us.

Now I come to Members of the House of Commons from Ottawa. I present, first, the Speaker of the Canadian House of Commons, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton. (Applause.) He is a neighbor of mine. He lives just across the Vermont border in the Province of Quebec. He is also cochairman of the delegation meetings.

Hon. Michael Starr, another member from New Brunswick, is an ex-Cabinet member of Canada. (Applause.)

Hon. J. Waldo Monteith, who also has been a Cabinet member. (Applause.)

Hon. Paul Martineau, who is also an ex-Cabinet member and who has almost been something else—almost. (Applause.) He has held a prominent position in the Canadian Government. When I said "almost" facetiously, we anticipated that he might be Speaker of the House of Commons. He served as Deputy Speaker.

Now we come to Mr. Herman M. Batton. (Applause.)

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt. (Applause.)

Mr. Jack McIntosh. (Applause.) In Vermont we think a great deal of the name "McIntosh." We sell about a million bushels a year of the McIntosh apple, easily the best apple grown. I believe the applause is for you, Jack, and not for the apple. (Laughter.)

Mr. Robert Thompson. (Applause.)

Mr. Lucian Lamoureux. (Applause.)

All the Canadian political parties are represented in this delegation; but, as sometimes happens in the United States, it is difficult to tell from the appearance of a member to which party he may belong. So I am not trying to identify any of our guests by party affiliation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles. (Applause.)

Mr. James Byrne. (Applause.)

Mr. Maurice Sauvé. (Applause.)

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron. (Applause.)

Mr. Andrew Brewin. (Applause.)

Mr. R. G. L. Fairweather. (Applause.)

Mr. Henry Latulippe. (Applause.)

The next member, who received her education in the United States, is Dr Pauline Jewett, a graduate of Harvard. (Applause.)

Finally, Mr. Jean Chretien. (Applause.)

I know that the conferences have been attended 100 percent, which should be a good object lesson for some of our own committees. The attendance has been exceptionally good, in spite of the fact that because of certain emergencies that arose two or three members were unable to attend all the sessions.

There have been fruitful discussions, and we have become well enough acquainted so that when the discussions were over, everyone wished to talk some more. That is a sign of a good meeting.

Once more, I wish to tell our friends how glad we are that they could be with us.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. Aiken: I am happy to yield.

Mr. Mansfield: I deem it an honor and a privilege to join the senior Republican in this body, the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken), chairman of the Subcommittee on Canada of the Committee on Foreign Relations. To the best of my knowledge, under a Democratically controlled Congress, he holds the only chairmanship—a well-deserved honor.

Mr. Aiken: A rather well-controlled Democratic Congress. (Laughter.)

Mr. Mansfield: We are delighted to have our colleagues from Canada in the Chamber.

We are especially happy to have Speaker Bourget and Speaker Macnaughton present, because they bring together neighbors who really know enough about each other so that once in a while they can quarrel and get away with it.

The Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken) has mentioned the fact that 3,000 miles of border lie between us. It is a border which is indefensible because it needs no defense.

Coming from the State of Montana, I should like to say, as I have done so many times, that my State has the longest border with Canada. We extend 700 miles along the southern part of Canada, bounded by British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan. We have close and intimate ties with our neighbors in those three Provinces. We celebrate "Canadian days" throughout the year because we like to get Canadian dollars, too, occasionally.

It is good to have you here. You do us honor by visiting us in this Chamber. We are extremely happy that the Interparliamentary Conferences which began under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken) and have continued under his leadership since that time, have been so fruitful in bringing about better understanding and greater tolerance between our two peoples.

I hope that this will not be the last time you will visit this Chamber. I only hope that the next time you visit the Senate, at least some of you will sit on the Democratic side of the aisle, so that we may have a fair representation, too.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Holland: Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. Aiken: I yield.

Mr. Holland: Mr. President, I have enjoyed exceedingly the great pleasure of meeting these fine Canadian visitors.

I cannot claim, as can the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken), to be a next-door neighbor to Mr. McIntosh, whose name has been given to the best Vermont apple; and I cannot claim, as can the majority leader, to have the longest border with Canada. But I can claim that we have our full share of Canadian visitors every year in the State of Florida which in part I represent and that we are proud to have retained many thousands of them as citizens. They are among our finest citizens.

So, from this side of the aisle, I extend the warmest possible welcome. We hope it will be warm when our distinguished friends reach Florida tomorrow afternoon, so that the warmth of our welcome can be more evident than in the present environs of Washington.

I have known of no occasion in which the complete, nonpartisan nature of an important operation of the Senate and of the House of Representatives has been so well evidenced. In the Senate the distinguished Senator from Vermont has been chairman of the delegation and chairman of Committee No. 1. The distinguished Senator from North Dakota has been chairman of Committee No. 2. Senators on this side of the aisle, of whom there have been several of us, have been quite content and happy to serve under their leadership.

I hope these distinguished Senators of the minority party have enjoyed their leadership fully, because I do not believe they have had the opportunity to enjoy it, so much as they should, perhaps in other activities of the Senate.

We are delighted to have had these Canadian ladies and gentlemen with us. Speaking only for a part of this great nation, which may be farthest from Canada, may I say that your coming here and our visits with you have been but a symbol—and a significant one—of the warm friendship which prevails between your great country and ours, and which we hope will always prevail, because the might of these two countries together and the friendship of these two countries together have a weight in world affairs which cannot be measured by any ordinary method. It speaks for itself as being one of the great friendships of our troubled world.

Mr. Aiken: I deeply appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Florida. The Senator has performed yeoman service as a member of the U.S. delegation, as have all the other members, except the two who were interrupted, one by sickness and one by an emergency.

I appreciate the fact that in the presence of our distinguished visitors from Canada, the center aisle of the Senate Chamber is eliminated, just as we always eliminate the international boundary between the United States and Canada when we are thinking of North American welfare and the welfare of our two countries.

When I introduced Mr. Andrew Brewin and Mr. Jean Chretien, they were outside the door and I was a little too fast for them. They are now in the Senate Chamber. The Canadian delegation has a 100 percent attendance. Let that be a lesson to us.

Mr. Young of North Dakota: Mr. President, I wish to join Senator Aiken and say what a pleasant experience it has been to work with so many distinguished Members of the Canadian Parliament. It has been a wonderful experience. I should like to take the present occasion to say a word about the International Peace Garden, which is located on the border between Canada and the United States. The garden is dedicated to the peace which has existed between our two countries for more than 150 years.

Mr. President, the purpose of the International Peace Garden can be best summed up by quoting the beautiful words inscribed on the cairn located in the center of the Peace Garden astride the international boundary:

> To God in His glory—we two nations dedicate this garden and pledge ourselves that as long as men shall live, we will not take up arms against one another.

The International Peace Garden is one of the most beautiful spots in the world. It is visited each year by thousands of people from the United States and Canada. Construction is continuing through the financial cooperation of the Canadian Government, the Province of Manitoba, the State of North Dakota, and the Government of the United States.

I extend to everyone an invitation to visit this beautiful spot.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as a mark of respect and honor, that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair for the purpose of allowing Senators an opportunity to meet our Canadian visitors.

There being no objection, the Senate (at 1 o'clock and 23 minutes p.m.) took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

At 1 o'clock and 29 minutes p.m., the Senate reassembled on being called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. Walters in the chair).

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, is the Senate still in the morning hour?

The Presiding Officer: The Senate is still in the morning hour.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 29, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copies of Orders in Council, P.C. 1964-477, dated April 6, 1964, and P.C. 1964-600, dated April 23, 1964, passed in relation to the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, chapter 227, R.S.C., 1952, and certain other Acts. (English text).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, April 22, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952 (English and French texts).

Order in Council P.C. 1964-581, dated April 23, 1964, authorizing under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act, long-term financing by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, for the purchase of capital equipment and engineering and erection services from Parsons & Whittlemore (Contractors) Ltd., Montreal, Quebec, Sandwell and Company Limited, Vancouver, B.C., and other Canadian suppliers, by Fabricas de Papel Tuxtepec, S.A., Mexico City, Mexico, pursuant to section 21B of the said act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1960-61. (English text).

PRIVATE BILLS

THE DOMINION LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-14, respecting The Dominion Life Assurance Company, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendment:

Line 15: after the word "both" insert the word "of".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, the amendment is a very simple one and seemed to be necessary, according to the purists in the English language who attended the committee meeting.

Section 2 of the bill where this change is proposed says that the company, whose name is being changed from one French name to another, may sue or be sued in "either or both such names". It was felt that, in the interests of good English, it should read in "either or both of such names".

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN IN CHRIST CHURCH—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-11, to incorporate the Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. Allister Grosart inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. Had the Government obtained from the Unemployment Insurance Commission on or before April 3, 1964, by request or otherwise, the financial position of the Commission in relation to funds available to meet the anticipated claims on each of the ten days, more or less, preceding and including Monday, April 6, 1964?

2. Regardless of whether the answer to paragraph 1 is in the affirmative or negative, did the Government know on April 3, 1964, whether funds were available to meet all claims on the Unemployment Insurance Commission at any time on Monday, April 6, 1964, whether or not Bill C-86 was given royal assent before the latter date?

3. Was the information referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 presented to the Senate in substance, summary or detail on or before the adjournment of the Senate on April 3, 1964?

4. What was the actual state of the Unemployment Insurance Fund in respect to funds available to meet anticipated claims on April 6, 1964, during the hours when offices of the Commission were open to receive such claims or when payments under the governing legislation should have been made?

5. Was the information referred to in paragraph 4 available to the Government at 6 p.m. on April 3, 1964?

6. If the necessary information with respect to any part of this inquiry is not immediately available to the Government, may the Senate be so informed?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is as follows:

1. The Government was aware of the financial situation with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Fund as is indicated at page 117 of the Budget Papers made public March 12th and in the item providing for a loan to the Fund appearing in Supplementary Estimates E tabled in the Senate of Canada March 10th, 1964.

2. The Commission had advised that estimated funds available would not be sufficient to meet all estimated claims for Monday, April 6th, in the absence of royal assent for Bill C-86. The exact extent of the estimated shortage could not be ascertained until reports were received after the close of offices on Friday, April 3rd.

3. Yes. On Friday, April 3rd, 1964, the Honourable Leader of the Government stated on page 269 of the Senate Hansard of that day, that " . . . the Unemployment Insurance Fund may very well be in a deficit position by this weekend. As honourable senators know, payments out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund are being made constantly and real concern is felt that the payments required to be made at this time will not be able to be made unless this authority is granted."...

"I should add that early notice was given of the prospect of this condition for the end of the financial year. It was given in the Budget Papers a number of weeks ago. At that time these supplementary estimates were before Parliament. The Unemployment Insurance Fund item was not segregated in a separate bill, but was included in the normal final appropriation bill which it was expected would approve the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964."

4. The estimated amount required for the payment of claims on 6 April, 1964, was $3,300,000 ($1,400,000 to be paid in cash and $1,900,000 to be paid by mail). The amount available to meet these payments on 6 April, 1964, was $1,600,000.

5. No, for the reasons stated in part 2.

6. The information in question was made available to the Senate at the first sitting thereof after it became available to the Government. (See page 286 of the Senate Hansard of April 6th, 1964).

TRANSLATION BUREAU

TERMINOLOGICAL BULLETINS—NOTICE OF MOTION STANDS

On the Notice of motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

That copies of all the terminological bulletins issued in French and in English, and in both languages by the Terminology Service of the Translation Bureau during the years 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963 be tabled in the Senate.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I ask that this motion stand until Thursday, May 7.

Order stands.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO MAKE INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved, pursuant to notice:

That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: Honourable senators, before proceeding with this motion, may I pause—and in this I know I speak on behalf of all senators—to extend congratulations and best wishes to our distinguished colleague, Senator D'Arcy Leonard, who is celebrating his birthday today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I was going to give his age, but I don't know whether it is 47 or 57.

Honourable senators, generally in speaking to any motion in connection with the tourist industry I naturally think of Nova Scotia, and to a considerable extent my remarks centre upon that province. However, as chairman of the Tourist Traffic Committee I felt that today I should leave it to other Nova Scotians, perhaps, to enlarge upon and speak in a more flowery manner than I am in the habit of doing.

I now propose giving a partial background of the tourist industry as we know it. I well recall that in 1933 the committee on Tourist Traffic was set up, largely because of the energetic manner in which our late colleague, the Honourable W. H. Dennis of Halifax, looked into this matter. He felt such a committee could serve a very useful purpose in our country. I also recall that on that committee set up in 1933 was the present dean of the Senate, the honourable Senator R. B. Horner. It is interesting to note that down through the years Senator Horner has continued to maintain his interest in the tourist industry, as he does in many other activities; and I am sure we are all happy to see him in his place today, enjoying such good health.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I further recall that 30 years ago, in 1934, a convention was held under the chairmanship of the then Minister of Railways and Canals, the late Honourable R. J. Manion. I came here as a member of the Nova Scotia legislature, to represent that province on that occasion. As a result of that convention, interest was generated from one coast to the other, and travel bureaus were set up in every province of Canada.

The first director of the Canadian Travel Bureau was a Maritimer, D. Leo Dolan. Mr. Dolan travelled from province to province, stimulating thought concerning the tourist industry, and he was a very much sought-after speaker in the United States. I recall that he spoke in the New England states and in New York on so many occasions, that he became known as "Mr. Canada". I think that title stuck with him down through the years, until finally he was appointed Consul General and took up office in Los Angeles, California, where he continued his interest in this industry. He was succeeded as director by Mr. Alan Field, who has most successfully carried on the work begun by Mr. Dolan, ably assisted, as he is to this day, by Dan Wallace.

To these three gentlemen we in the Senate, and Canadians at large, owe a debt of gratitude. They have done wonderful work. At the moment I can think of only one other person who has made such a name for himself in advertising Canada, and that is Mr. John Fisher, the Commissioner of the Centennial Commission which is organizing the celebrations which will take place in 1967. In that connection, I might mention that at the present time the objective of the Canadian Travel Bureau is steadily to build up the tourist industry, until we establish a record, measured in dollars and cents.

Honourable senators, that is a brief outline of the background of the Canadian Travel Bureau and the work that your committee is trying to promote. I know by the number of senators who have so willingly suggested that they might take part in this debate that you are interested, and I believe we shall hear from each of the provinces from coast to coast. I know several have already spoken to me—senators from Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta. I think I may have missed one province.

An Hon. Senator: Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Prince Edward Island, a very important one. Senator Inman expressed the desire to speak at a later date in order to be prepared to give full effect to the high flavour that comes from the Island.

Honourable senators may be interested in the progress made in recent years, particularly the last 10 years, in the credit and debit balance in the tourist industry. I do not intend to weary you with figures, but I thought you might be interested in a brief comparison.

From 1953 to 1963 there has been a very definite improvement, largely because of the efforts, as I mentioned before, of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. In December of 1953 the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported that travel between Canada and the United States—the bureau also reported on travel between Canada and other countries—produced a revenue of $282 million, leaving Canada with a deficit of $25 million. This deficit position continued until 1962, when instead of a deficit there was a surplus of $93 million. The total amounts in dollars and cents had risen from $282 million to $512 million. There was yet a further increase in revenue last year which resulted in a surplus of $157 million. You will appreciate the marked difference between a $25 million deficit in 1953 and a $157 million surplus in 1963. Last year's total from the United States amounted to $549 million. It is also interesting to note that last year the travel industry represented the third largest asset in our economy, next to newsprint and wheat. It is a very important part of our economy, and because of that I think this committee has an important function to perform.

It is expected that the Travel Bureau will continue its efforts in 1964, 1965 and 1966, with the objective of helping to make that figure in 1967, the year of our Centennial, and of the World's Fair, reach $1 billion. That is the objective of the bureau at the present time, and I know we are all hoping that it will be attained.

There are many encouraging developments in the tourist industry in Canada. The provinces, regions and municipalities have all become conscious of the industry's economic importance. Every newspaper we read seems to tell us that the speaker at some function or other stressed the importance to a particular community or province of the need to promote the tourist industry. Every town has its own promotional effort. This, I feel sure, is all for the good of Canada.

Every one who surveys Canada's tourist facilities is struck by the evident advances made in accommodation, food service and transportation. The Trans-Canada Highway, in particular, opens wonderful new opportunities for vacation exploration. I remember years ago, as all honourable senators do, that the traveller going from certain sections of Canada to the extreme west invariably turned south and took American highways. Today he travels from one end of Canada to the other on the Trans-Canada Highway.

Canada has much to offer every Canadian who moves across this broad land. This is surely the sort of hobby that we should all encourage and practise. It seems strange that so many Canadians should roam the world in search of recreation that can be found in such rich measure in this vast and beautiful land, their own country.

Visitors to Canada tell us how lucky we are to live and work here, but we should find this out for ourselves. As 1967 approaches let us encourage young Canadians especially to realize the richness of their heritage and by travelling widely to know and love their country.

Two years ago the Senate's Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic met under the experienced chairmanship of Senator Horner to consider the state of Canada's tourist industry. With 1967 just around the corner, I submit it is time for this committee to sit again, and to suggest new lines for the advancement of an industry in which traditionally Senate initiative has brought Canada such tangible returns.

Honourable senators will be interested to note the very striking increases that the Government is recommending this year in the Travel Bureau's program. The bureau's budget has been increased from $3.8 million to $4.9 million, and its staff will be augmented by 50 persons. With this greatly increased staff and budget the bureau plans to open two new offices in the United States and two in Europe, and at the same time substantially increase the range of its promotion in this country.

This step-up in the federal bureau's work is in preparation for 1967, and the wonderful opportunity that the Centennial of Confederation and the World Exhibition will offer to Canada's tourist industry. It is expected that the bureau will continue in 1965 and 1966 to expand its efforts with the objective of making 1967 the first year in which visitors bring into Canada $1 billion. I, for one, am confident that that target is quite within our reach. After all, last year's record figure of $602 million from all countries was twice the figure of 1953 and was $182 million more than three years earlier.

There are many more encouraging developments in our tourist industry. First, the provinces, regions and municipalities have all become more active than ever in their promotional programs, which in recent years they have substantially increased and are still increasing. Transportation companies and other sectors of the industry are actively promoting travel to and within Canada.

Honourable senators, this will give you a little background of the tourist industry as it is carried on and promoted by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. I feel that our committee has a worthwhile task ahead of it, and I ask all honourable senators for their co-operation in putting into effect greater promotional energy than we have ever experienced before.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, before I add a few words to this debate, may I also congratulate Senator Leonard and say that he does not look one day over the 40 years which I believe he attained on his birthday today!

We have listened, I am sure, with very much interest to the comprehensive remarks of Senator Isnor, and we are all happy to know that the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic will be sitting this session. I had no idea of the work that had been done by the committee in connection with tourism until yesterday when I read the report of the late Senator Buchanan for the year 1946. I was amazed at the volume of work that had been done by this committee, and I share Senator Isnor's view that the success we have had in our tourist trade is, to a very large extent, due to the work done by this committee of the Senate.

Senator Isnor mentioned the fact that a maritimer, Mr. Dolan, was the first chairman of the Tourist Bureau. I remember that when Mr. Dolan was appointed he was in Fredericton, where he had achieved great success in New Brunswick. It was because of his activities there that he was recognized and brought to Ottawa to assist in the work here.

I had no idea either that the activities of the Tourist Traffic Committee went back so many years. Senator Isnor has mentioned the work of Senator Horner. I know that the committee, under the active chairmanship of Senator Isnor, will carry on in the future the good work that it has done in the past under the chairmanship of Senator Buchanan and Senator Horner.

One of the recommendations that was adopted by the Government was the extension of our national parks. The Maritime provinces were particularly fortunate because it was due to the strong advocacy of the committee that national parks were established in New Brunswick, in Nova Scotia, and in that little forgotten garden in the gulf, Prince Edward Island, although I do not think Senator Inman will let us forget it.

Another recommendation of the committee was with respect to roads. When Roads to Resources was being established a few years ago, it was recognized that the tourist industry should receive the same consideration as mining and other natural resources.

In some of the provinces, particularly Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, tourist roads have been constructed in the last three or four years. Tourism is now an important industry and will become one of the most important we have.

The U.S. News and World Report of April 27, 1964 contains a long article entitled "Going Abroad: Latest on Costs and Places to See." This article mentions practically every country and its attractions for American tourists. It says:

> The whole wide world beckons this year to Americans, who are going abroad on vacations in record numbers.

Besides mentioning Britain, France, the Scandinavian countries, the Low Countries, Greece, etc., it mentions particularly Canada. The heading reads: "Canada Favourite with Families." Therefore, the attraction in Canada is not so much to the individual as to the man with a family. The article says:

> Canada still is first choice for three out of every ten Americans planning a trip abroad and this year 10 million United States tourists are expected to explore Canada's special attraction—low cost, family-style vacations.

It goes on to say:

> The lures are wide-open spaces, spectacular scenery, excellent fishing and boating—adding up to a chance to get away from it all in the great outdoors.

We see, therefore, that Canada is the first choice of the American tourist.

The late Senator Buchanan in his report said that the time would come when one out of every ten American tourists would come to Canada. This article says that today three out of every ten come. That shows how large our tourist industry has grown.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He was a very conservative prophet, for a Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Some of the lures which were mentioned were the wide open spaces, the scenery, the fishing, the hunting and the good accommodation. As Senator Isnor pointed out, a few years ago we were scarcely to be complimented on our accommodation. That seemed to be one of our drawbacks. Today we are happy to know that a magazine of this type picks out, as one of the attractions to recommend, the good accommodation which is to be found in Canada. The only complaint they make is that there is not enough—and that, of course, can be corrected.

This report also mentions the reasonable prices. Compared with other countries, Canadian prices seem to be reasonable and attractive.

Another great attraction is the premium on the American dollar spent in Canada. This is just another indication of the wisdom of fixing the Canadian dollar, as was done a few years ago, at 92½ cents. That has been a popular attraction, to the advantage of the tourist business and other lines of business as well.

Valuable tourist advantages are climate and scenery. Our chief natural resources, such as mining and lumber, may become depleted but climate and scenery we shall always have with us. As we advance north and open up more of our northern country for fishing and hunting, there will be an increase in these special attractions for which the tourist looks.

We in New Brunswick are happy about the increasing number of tourists coming to our province every year and also to the other Maritime provinces.

I also noted in Senator Buchanan's report that a very strong recommendation was made to promote winter tourist trade in Canada. In my home province we never had tourists come in particularly for skiing or other winter sports. But a few months ago a ski resort was opened near the Town of Sussex. The opening of the resort brought over 1,000 cars, and nearly 5,000 people. They came from the neighbouring New England states and from every Atlantic province. It shows the possibilities for tourists not only in the summer but in the winter. I am sure we shall reap great benefits in that respect as time goes by.

We have a good committee with a good chairman and I look forward to a bright future for the tourist industry in Canada.

Hon. A. B. Baird: Honourable senators, many of you may remember the late Senator David. I agree with his remark: "The brain is a wonderful thing; it starts to function the moment you are born and it does not stop until you get on your feet to speak." I think that has happened to me now. However, this is an excellent opportunity to tell you of some of the tourist attractions in Newfoundland.

Newfoundland was for more than a century England's only possession. Newfoundland had a resident governor 50 years before Australia was discovered and 30 years before Wolfe's victory at Quebec.

The Island of Newfoundland is the tenth largest in the world. It is very irregular in shape, with a general outline somewhat like a triangle. It is bounded on the northeast and south by the waters of the Atlantic and on the west by those of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Its greatest length is about 317 miles and its greatest breadth about the same. It really is the key to the control of Canada's waterborne commerce. In fact, it could dominate the whole of the seagoing traffic of the western ocean. In size, it is about one-fifth smaller than England.

Honourable senators, I should like you to note some of these figures for they are important.

Newfoundland is 11,200 square miles larger than Ireland, three times larger than Holland, and twice as large as Denmark. It is twice as large as Nova Scotia, one-third larger than New Brunswick, and nearly equal in area with the three Maritime provinces.

Newfoundland is each year becoming more and more the objective of sportsmen and tourists, attracted by the certainty of employment for rod, gun and camera. Newfoundland offers equal attraction to the angler; salmon, sea trout and lake trout abound. The salmon and sea trout are to be found in all the large rivers, though the streams on the west coast are considered the best. I imagine that my honourable friend, Senator Basha, would agree with that statement, since he has fished in most of those rivers.

In addition to the shooting of caribou and moose, which can be enjoyed in almost any section of the Island, the pursuit of bears, wolves and lynxes forms a diversion practised chiefly by local hunters, though there is no reason why visiting sportsmen should not also indulge in it.

Picturesque and comfortable are the homes of the Newfoundland fisherfolk. Every village has its churches, schools and lodges of the benevolent organizations which are found among them. There are to be seen in some places the old-time houses with large open fireplaces, dogirons and accessories of a vanished period, while curiosities in the shape of old furniture, old silver and other articles of the kind, are often to be seen or secured.

St. John's, the capital, offers to the tourist, the sportsman and to the artist, one of the chief attractions. From the hills above the Narrows one views a seascape rarely equalled. The mighty ocean stretches away below one's feet, sheer to the Irish coast. A few miles distant are typical fishing villages purchased in coves and crooks, which delight the artist's heart. Well cultivated valleys and wooded hills strike the eye on every hand. Beautiful, smiling pastoral country is disclosed by drives in the suburbs, and the salubrious climate enhances the visitor's enjoyment.

Honourable senators, I strongly recommend you to see St. John's, and die.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I do not rise to boast in any way of any performance of mine as a past chairman of the Tourist Committee, but I must say that the present chairman has always been anxious to assist in every way possible.

The other evening, on television, Cyrus Eaton was asked why he held meetings at Pugwash, in Nova Scotia. His reply was that Nova Scotia has the finest climate in the world. At the time, I wondered if the poor man had ever visited Saskatchewan.

When our Canadian dollar stood at a premium, many Canadians went to the United States to take advantage of that situation, because it is only human nature to get the best value for your dollar. However, since our dollar has been devalued we have had no trouble in getting tourists to come to Canada.

Honourable senators, the development of automation is going to mean that thousands of people will enjoy more leisure, and therefore people will travel more than ever before. That will be to the distinct advantage of Canada. The Senate Tourist Traffic Committee can be of much assistance, but unless a warm welcome is extended to people who visit here, any efforts to bring them will be in vain.

I note that there is a great influx of people in British Columbia these days. Many Americans are visiting that province, as well as the Prairie provinces, and they are amazed to find the great forests and wonderful rivers in the vast northern regions of these provinces. The tourist traffic is heavy at the national parks at Banff and Jasper, which are joined by a highway running through the mountains. Tourists, driving over a permanent glacier, may look down a hundred feet through the blue ice and watch the water rushing by. Wildlife is abundant in the mountains and is well worth our protecting.

Honourable senators, there is a lot of work for our Tourist Traffic Committee, and I would suggest that Canadians generally would find it most rewarding, quite apart from the revenue it would help bring to our tourist industry, to impart a feeling of friendship toward the people who visit us.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, after listening to the eloquence of the two speakers who have preceded me, I feel a little timid about taking part in this discussion. We are indebted to Senator Isnor for his resolution, because it has become the subject of an interesting discussion.

Unquestionably, the tourist industry, as it is now described, is one of the important economic factors in Canada. I suggest that its importance is not fully realized. After all, if foreign tourists spend, say, $500 million a year in Canada, what we are doing in effect is exporting our scenery in this great north country, and we can do this year after year. I happen to know that many visitors from the Dakotas and Minnesota, particularly the Dakotas, visit the national park in the province of Manitoba. People living in those states have very few fresh-water lakes and streams for fishing, and they return to Manitoba year after year. So, we are in a sense exporting our scenery, and the economic importance of this industry is great. We have very definite advantages.

It may be of interest to the house to know that every summer there is considerable tourist movement by airplane from the United States to Great Bear Lake, on the rim of the Arctic Circle. There are mistaken notions about the lake, because its southern side is quite well timbered. But on the beautiful sandy south shore, tourist cabins have been erected, complete with modern equipment. This tourist centre represents a substantial investment; the operator of it, a man whom I knew many years ago, has been highly successful.

Because they are wealthy, it is a matter of complete indifference to the American tourists who travel to Bear Lake whether they spend $1,000 or $5,000 on a holiday. They go there because of the peculiar excellence of the fishing, and also because the average American likes to go places, especially as far north as he can.

During the period, now so long ago that I have almost forgotten it, that I was Minister of Mines and Resources in the Government of Canada I had something to do with the development of tourist roads. One such road was developed in northern Manitoba, and it gave The Pas and the area north of it an outlet by modern road to the southern part of the province. Previously, the only way they could get out was by air or train. This road was completed to The Pas, I believe in 1938, and it did not cost a great deal; it was built over country underlain by gravel and was consequently easy to build. In the autumn of that year I happened to be in The Pas for a few days because that was the centre of the constituency I represented in Parliament. I walked down the main street of the town one evening and counted 19 American cars from all parts of the United States, some of them from as far away as California. Those people come back in the autumn to shoot ducks and wild geese, because this is a great bird sanctuary. Such instances could be repeated time after time.

Honourable senators, this motion proposes that the committee examine into what is being done by various agencies in Canada to promote the tourist industry. Mainly these are provincial governments agencies, and it is worth while to consider what they are doing and, as far as possible, to get the general lines of policy laid down. In these sensitive days we must, of course, be very careful not to tread upon the toes of the provinces, but this is a field in which there are co-equal standing and rights, and I believe Senator Isnor's committee might give us a report that would be very useful in indicating what is being done in the provinces and the general principles guiding the development of this industry in Canada.

The tourist industry is undoubtedly important because Canada has great attractions to sell, if I may use that term, particularly to countries like the United States. As I have said, our American friends love to go places, and when they return home they delight in talking about their experiences. Consequently, a satisfied tourist is the best advertising we could get for this industry in Canada. One of the best ways to build up our tourist industry is to treat our visitors from the south or from Europe with courtesy and consideration in every way. It does not cost anything to be courteous to a visitor or to show him consideration. So, if our American friends go back and tell their neighbours, "We had a wonderful time in Canada. The people were kind and courteous, and no one tried to take advantage of us," then we have developed one of the best possible advertising gimmicks for the development of the tourist industry.

Consequently, I am confident that Senator Isnor's committee will do excellent work and enlarge our knowledge of the possibilities and the value of this most important industry.

CANADIAN MOTHER OF THE YEAR

GUEST IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: With leave of the Senate, may I interrupt the present debate to make a brief reference to a distinguished visitor whom we have with us today?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): Honourable senators, I think you will all be glad to know that we have in the Speaker's Gallery this afternoon a very distinguished visitor, and it is my honour and privilege to enumerate some of the reasons why our visitor is included in that classification, "distinguished."

First of all, our visitor is a lady. Secondly, I might say that she is a citizen of Kamloops. I refer to Mrs. Mildred Manuel Gottfriedsen, who is a member of the Kamloops Indian Band. Mrs. Gottfriedsen and her family have been neighbours and friends of mine for nearly 30 years, so I can speak with some authority when I say I have come to know her as a happy and cheerful person who has gained that ability to live in happiness and good cheer through the good works she has done. She has recently been selected as the Mother of the Year for Canada for 1964.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): One of her qualifications is that she is the mother of 12 children and the foster mother of many others whom she has found during her life to be in need of a mother's care. So she has established the reputation of being mother to many more than her own family of twelve. She is the daughter of a distinguished family. The members of the Manuel family have contributed a great deal to leadership among the Indian people of British Columbia, and as first citizens they have lived up to every tradition which we could expect of first citizens. Many of the family have gone down on record as veterans of the First and Second World Wars.

My principal reason for rising at this time to note the presence of Mrs. Gottfriedsen is that I am her neighbour and a fellow citizen of Kamloops and British Columbia. The people of Kamloops and of British Columbia all share in the honour that has been done Mrs. Gottfriedsen; we know that she is the proud leader of a proud people. I hope as a result of the happy experiences she is enjoying this week that she will go back to her people with a new desire and a new inspiration to do even more in bringing to them improvements in learning, educational opportunities, and opportunities for occupation. In this regard she has already established quite a record.

I am sure that Mrs. Gottfriedsen's neighbours and fellow citizens of British Columbia are very proud of the honour that has been given to her, and the opportunity it will give her to extend her good work among the people she loves, as only a noble and worthy woman can love those who she feels need love and help.

Hon. James Gladstone: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to make my contribution to that of my esteemed colleague from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Smith) and to extend a welcome to Mrs. Gottfriedsen, the distinguished lady who has been chosen as Canadian Mother of the Year. I have known her now about five years, and she is a lady whom I could not but admire. I visited her home last year, and I could see all these happy children around her. My son and his wife had occasion to stay there overnight, and they said it was the best place they had ever stayed in British Columbia.

I am very proud of her achievement, and I am sure all the women of Canada join in extending to her felicitations in the distinction she has attained in being chosen as Canadian Mother of the Year.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO MAKE INQUIRY—DEBATE RESUMED

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, before I resume the debate on the motion of the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), I too would like to refer to the distinguished visitor in our gallery today, Mrs. Gottfriedsen.

Senator Irvine and I had the pleasure of lunching with Mrs. Gottfriedsen today, being two of the judges who chose her as Canadian Mother of the Year. At that luncheon the award was presented to Mrs. Gottfriedsen, and I should say that all the judges present at that affair, and indeed everyone there, were very pleased with the choice. Mrs. Gottfriedsen was the unanimous choice of all the judges, although there had been more than 300 nominations throughout Canada. I am very pleased to have this opportunity of extending to her my good wishes. She has already received the good wishes of my colleagues.

Honourable senators, I am very glad to support the motion of honourable Senator Isnor, Chairman of the Committee on Tourist Traffic in the Senate. On this committee, as you probably know, there are representatives from every province in Canada except Saskatchewan. Probably this is an oversight which will be rectified later. With the wide knowledge that senators have of their own provinces, the members of this committee can certainly bring to its deliberations many suggestions as to how tourist traffic, one of the most important revenue producing activities of any of our provinces, can be increased and developed. Such suggestions are not without precedent because, as the honourable Senator Isnor told us, it was as a result of the recommendations of this very committee that the Canadian Government Travel Bureau was established by the Government in 1934.

The travel industry ranks high with newsprint and wheat as an earner of export income, and the value of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau to Canada's tourist industry is unquestionable. Therefore, it is reasonable to expect that a study at this time by the committee of "the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist traffic in Canada," which is the wording of the motion, will bring forth valuable recommendations.

We New Brunswickers are proud to know that much of the early success of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau was due to the imagination and know-how of its first director, Leo Dolan, to whom the chairman of the committee referred as a Maritimer, but who, I would like to tell you, is a New Brunswicker.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Is there a difference?

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Mr. Dolan and his sister have been well known to me for many years and they, like many others, have contributed much to Canada's progress and prestige. We are proud that Mr. Dolan comes from our province. He later became Canada's Consul General in Los Angeles and his successor, Alan Field, has continued to present to travel-conscious people a most attractive picture of Canada. The excellent travel literature produced by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau and by some of the provincial travel bureaux, all of which is, I believe, publicized through the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, is not surpassed by that of any other country.

Besides the efforts to bring foreign tourists to Canada, I particularly commend the work that the travel bureaux do in increasing interprovincial tourism. Although Canada acquires many dollars from foreign visitors, many Canadian dollars are lost to Canada each year by Canadian tourists spending them in other countries. I would like to see more Canadian tourist dollars circulating from one province to another and kept within our own country, for, with its great variety of scenery and attractions—from the rugged coast of the Atlantic through its rivers, lakes, prairies and mountains to the beautiful Pacific coast—Canada has as much, or even more, to offer tourists than has any country in the world.

New Brunswick's attractions are not the least of these, with our beautiful St. John River valley which, besides being a source of power, has some of the most beautiful scenery that I have ever seen. It is frequently referred to as the Rhine of America. Apart from its beauty, it also has another attraction in that at its mouth it has the famous Reversing Falls which flow back up the river and out to the ocean again twice every twenty-four hours. Another attraction we have in New Brunswick is the Magnetic Hill near Moncton, where cars with their engines turned off appear to back up the hill. Thousands of people come to Canada and visit Moncton every year to see this most extraordinary phenomenon. They also come to Moncton to see another unusual sight, the tidal bore of the Petitcodiac River, which at certain times of the year sweeps up the river in a wave several feet high.

In the last few years my home province of New Brunswick and the other Atlantic provinces have come to appreciate and to take advantage of this opportunity to strengthen our economy. We have undertaken three distinct promotional efforts to direct the attention of potential visitors from other parts of Canada as well as from the United States to the charms of the provinces by the sea.

One of these is an advertising campaign or program in which New Brunswick is referred to as the "Picture Province," and which is carried on by our own travel bureau in the regional and national magazines and newspapers in Canada and the United States. Beginning last March and carrying on to early June of this year, 17 Canadian and 23 United States newspapers are carrying New Brunswick travel advertising produced and paid for by the New Brunswick Travel Bureau, and six of these are in French.

New Brunswick also participates in the Maritime Co-operative Advertising program, which is sponsored by the three Maritime provinces and uses as its media Quebec and Ontario newspapers and Canadian magazines which have their biggest circulation in those two provinces. All this material is published in both French and English.

The third promotional effort is the federal Government Atlantic provinces advertising campaign under which the Canadian Government Travel Bureau a few years ago earmarked a special fund to promote tourist traffic to the four Atlantic provinces. All four Atlantic provinces have benefited from this program and certainly want to see it continued and expanded.

The biggest tourist year in the Province of New Brunswick was 1963, when a total of 564,500 tourist cars entered the province.

This was an increase of 7.7 per cent over 1962. It would take too long to explain the details of how these figures are arrived at but, on studying them, I am convinced that very careful calculations were used so that there was no overlapping.

Studies and surveys concerning tourist traffic in Canada have produced two generally accepted axioms: (1) that 90 per cent of tourist travel goes by automobile; and, (2) that the average tourist party consists of three persons. If we apply these axioms to New Brunswick tourist travel last year we have reason to believe that over 1,862,000 tourists visited that province in the 1963 season. According to the figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics an average of $90 is spent per car.

We in New Brunswick believe that the increase in tourist travel to New Brunswick has been due to several factors. One is the increasingly aggressive advertising program, of which I have told you, through which more people have learned of the vacation attractions of New Brunswick. Another, of course, is the exchange rate which was favourable to tourists from the United States last year, and which also encouraged Canadians from other provinces to vacation with us instead of in the United States. Due to the growth of our tourist industry, at the end of 1963 tourist bureaux in New Brunswick had increased to fourteen. Half of them are established or sponsored through efforts of local groups interested in tourist promotion, and the other half are outposts of the New Brunswick Provincial Travel Bureau in Fredericton. All of these tourist bureaux receive some financial assistance and many supplies from the provincial tourist bureau.

As honourable senators know, transportation is one of the main drawbacks to the growth of the economy of New Brunswick. Even though our people can produce goods that compare favourably with those produced in other provinces, the geography of Canada, with wide distances between the Atlantic provinces and the larger markets, puts us at a disadvantage. Increasing tourism does much to counteract this disadvantage. I will illustrate this by quoting from an article written by Mr. Robert A. Tweedie, the outstanding and extremely capable director of the New Brunswick Travel Bureau:

> The tourist dollar is important to us because it takes little, if anything, away from our natural resources and it sells our goods and services at our own doorstep. The customers pay their own way to get here to purchase our goods and services.

Mr. Tweedie says further:

> Wherever people travel, they buy. They spend money on food, on gasoline, on lodgings. They buy goods, services, entertainment. The people who sell these goods and services benefit directly. They, in turn, spend their money for rent, wages, clothing, food, books, doctor bills, taxes and many other purposes.

Honourable senators, I believe that one of the principal attractions of our province for tourists is the friendly welcome the visitors receive from the people. This friendly attitude is natural and is not prompted only by greed for the tourist dollar, although we do appreciate that too. This is instinctive with our people, for they are not prejudiced against persons of other countries and are generally interested in, and tolerant of, all races, religions and creeds.

To illustrate that I would like to tell you of a personal experience. In 1960 the Canadian Women's Press Club brought to Canada from India Mrs. Amita Malik, an Indian press woman for whom they had planned an itinerary from coast to coast, believing this would further understanding and friendship between the two countries. Mrs. Malik spent some of her time in Canadian homes so that she would become familiar with Canadian customs on an informal basis. In each locality she was interviewed by the press, radio and TV. For the week she visited Fredericton she was my house guest. She is a beautiful and a delightful person. Of course, the lovely saris which she always wore, the red mark on her forehead indicating that she was married, and her beautiful features and dark complexion indicated to anyone meeting her that she was undoubtedly a foreigner to Canada. One day when Mrs. Malik and I were driving on a country road I realized it was that time in the afternoon when she liked very much to have a cup of tea. I had not arranged for it, and we were not near a restaurant. However, I noticed a sign on a small store which indicated that food was served there. Amita accepted enthusiastically when I suggested we might get a cup of tea there.

We stepped into the small country store where there was an oilcloth covered counter at which two lumbermen in red checked mackinaws were eating. Beside this there was a small table with chairs at which we sat. After we ordered tea Amita went out to the car to get her coat and while she was out a man in a wheelchair, who apparently was the proprietor, said to me, "Is she the foreign lady we saw on TV last week"? I said she was. No further conversation took place between the people in the store and ourselves until one of the mackinaw-clad men started to leave. He hesitated and then came to our table and, speaking to Amita, said, "We want to welcome you and tell you we are pleased you are visiting here. We would like it if more of your people would visit us." I was surprised and pleased, and even more so when the other mackinaw-clad figure shuffled over to our table and mumbled, "I think that too." We thanked them and continued drinking tea and eating cookies until I went to the counter to pay. The proprietor and his beaming wife said, "There is no charge." I was puzzled and thought that the two men who had spoken to us must have paid our bill. However, the proprietor said to Amita as she came along behind me, "We saw you on TV too and we are honoured that you called on us. We hope you will come again."

Had I been told about what took place there, rather than having witnessed it, I might have regarded it with incredulity. However, on thinking it over I realized that this was the natural reaction which might be expected from kind-hearted people such as we have in New Brunswick. Nothing could have impressed Mrs. Malik more with Canadian hospitality, and she told this story in many other places where she spoke during her trip across Canada, and as well after she returned to India.

Besides the valuable promotional tourist advertising of which I told you, I believe that the tourist bureaux in Canada, both the Canadian Government Travel Bureaux and those of the various provinces, should impress on those Canadians who deal with tourists, whether they are from foreign countries or from other provinces of Canada, that they have in their own hands one of the most potent tourist attractions in the world. If they would overcome the shyness or diffidence they naturally feel with strangers, whether they are from other provinces or other countries, and show to such visitors the unaffected friendliness which is natural to Canadians—giving them a warm welcome on arrival and treating them as honoured guests during their stay—they would do a tremendous amount to popularize very widely the fact that Canada is a pleasant place for tourists to visit. I am glad to have heard Senator Horner express agreement with this suggestion.

One thing I would particularly like the Senate Committee on Tourist Traffic to consider is the increase of Canadian Government travel bureaux in Britain and parts of Europe. Although I am willing to be convinced, I feel that the number of tourists that Canada can attract from those countries is unlikely to justify the expense of maintaining travel bureaux there. My own experience, although limited, is that most travellers to Canada from Britain and Europe come here to visit friends or relatives, or in connection with business enterprises, such as the visiting of affiliated plants. This type of visitor does not leave us many tourist dollars and I recommend that the policy of extending travel bureaux in countries outside Canada be given serious study by the committee.

I reiterate that I support the motion.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Jodoin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 30, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report on the Operations under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 27 of the said act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, as this is Thursday, I thought it might be a special convenience to members of the Senate who are interested in this subject if the explanation of the bill were given today by Senator Cook, from Newfoundland, who has done a good deal of work on the measure. I am not in any sense suggesting that the debate on second reading be continued today. My thought is that the bill will be in the hands of honourable senators for study over the weekend, and if the explanation which Senator Cook is prepared to give is given today, then those who desire to participate in the debate next week would be in a better position than they otherwise would be. If that is agreeable to honourable senators, with leave, I would suggest that second reading be given now, on those terms.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Have we copies of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I have some copies of the bill.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I am not going to stand up this afternoon and say "No" to this proposal, which of course any senator is entitled to do within the rules, but I think I would be remiss if I did not say that had it not been for a conversation I had with the Leader of the Government in this house a few minutes ago, I should have done so.

Regarding the "well-informed source" that produced the story in the Chronicle-Herald on Wednesday, April 29, part of which I shall read in a moment and which I understand appeared in other newspapers, the Leader of the Government has assured me that there was no such well-informed source. But in the light of the publicity that the Senate has received from time to time, I merely want to draw the attention of honourable senators to this article which made me feel at one stage that I should decline to agree to a motion for second reading today.

The story is datelined, "Ottawa, copyright." Certainly it should be copyrighted; there is no question about that. It explains the difficulty in which the Government finds itself in having promised that this bill would be introduced and go through by a certain date. It explains the difficulties of getting legislation through the other place, with which those of us who read the newspapers are quite familiar. The article goes on to say:

> Informed sources advised the Chronicle-Herald that it was a good bet the Senate would introduce the bill today or tomorrow, give it first and second reading, send it to the appropriate Senate committee and then give it third and final reading—all in fairly short order.

On the inside page it indicates how helpful that would be to the Government, to meet just one more deadline one of the members of the Government set up for it.

I am perfectly satisfied to accept the suggestion of the Leader of the Government, that we should permit the motion for second reading this afternoon and hear the explanation of the bill. Then we will all be in a better position to discuss the bill when we resume consideration of it. I have not seen the bill, but I believe that, in some of its implications, it is one of the more important ones which will come before this chamber this session. I want to congratulate the Leader of the Government on having the bill introduced in the Senate, not for the reasons that are set out in this article, but because I believe that the perusal and assessment of the bill taking place first in the appropriate Senate committee will result in better legislation in the final analysis than might otherwise be the case.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, on a point of privilege, perhaps I should comment on the statement made by my honourable friend.

First of all, so far as the story in the Chronicle-Herald of Halifax is concerned, I should say that an almost identical item appeared in an estimable Toronto daily yesterday morning, the Globe and Mail.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That does not improve the story.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think it does not; but no more does it rest with anybody from Toronto to say that somebody from Montreal or Ottawa should have reserved it for himself. I do not know what prompted the publication of this kind of story. One thing I am sure of, and of which we should be perfectly clear, is that nobody in this chamber is responsible for it. I can certainly assure the house that I had nothing to do with it—I was extremely surprised when I saw it in print.

The story apparently goes on to say that it is a good bet that the legislation will be introduced in the Senate. I think it is appropriate for me on this occasion to say that I take advantage of every opportunity available to initiate bills in this chamber.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There are some measures, of course, that we cannot introduce here, particularly measures with financial implications which must be initiated in the other place. There are other measures from time to time which are also more appropriate to be introduced in the other place. But it seemed to me that this measure and, indeed, the other five measures we have already had since the opening of this session, were most appropriate to have introduced here, and I have confidence in the kind of study that is given by this chamber and its committees to measures of this kind. I flatly reject the suggestion that this or any other bill will be run through by this chamber or its committees in short order. That is not the practice of the Senate or its committees, and I am sure the honourable senator who has already spoken to the point feels as I do.

Having said that, perhaps it would be appropriate if we heard the explanation of the bill, if that is the desire of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is it proposed that we give the bill second reading today, or are we only discussing it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In answer to the senator's question, I repeat my opening words, that it might be a matter of convenience to senators who want to speak on this measure when the debate is resumed next week, if Senator Cook were heard today. His explanation would make it much easier for senators to read the bill and consider its implications.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The Leader of the Government is not claiming any urgency for the passage of the bill, but he feels this is an expedient so far as members who wish to discuss the bill next week are concerned. That is as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Quite. Honourable senators, of course, know the rules. We could have this debate go on in the normal course on an appropriate day next week, and have the explanation given then, but in the interests of the kind of debate we like to have here—an orderly, fruitful and full debate—I think it would be a convenience to the Senate to have the explanation given now.

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, with leave, I move the second reading of Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada.

I am very pleased to have the privilege of moving the second reading of this bill which if enacted will be of material help to all fishermen of Canada including, of course, those in Newfoundland, my native province. First of all, I have a few remarks to make about the bill generally, after which I shall endeavour to deal with the more important parts.

The purpose of the bill is to define the territorial sea and the fishing zones of Canada. The bill also authorizes the drawing of straight baselines along Canada's coasts from which the territorial sea and fishing zones will be measured.

The width of the territorial sea is three nautical miles and fishing zones will extend for a further nine nautical miles, or a total of twelve nautical miles in all. The laws of Canada respecting fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea will apply to the fishing zones of Canada in the same way and to the same extent as they apply to the territorial sea of Canada.

The fishing zones of Canada will of course be something entirely new to the statute law of Canada, and will have important consequences for Canada and other countries which have fished off Canada's coast.

While there is not complete agreement between the nations on what is the accepted law of the sea, nevertheless great advances have been made since His Holiness Pope Alexander VI parcelled out the undiscovered world between Spain and Portugal.

Professor Herbert Arthur Smith in his excellent book The Law and Custom of the Sea writes on this important point as follows:

> Towards the end of the fifteenth century the great voyages of discovery gave a new importance to the law of the sea and this period may be taken as the starting point of the modern law. At this point we see the emergence of the fundamental problem of national jurisdiction over the high seas. Was it or was it not possible for the oceans and their shores to become in law the exclusive property of particular States? In 1493 Pope Alexander VI (Rodrigo Borgia) published the famous Bulls which divided the undiscovered world between Spain and Portugal by a line drawn from pole to pole a hundred leagues west of the Azores, and even purported to prohibit all commerce in the oceans except by licence of the Spanish and Portuguese sovereigns. By the Treaty of Tordesillas in the next year the sovereigns concerned shifted the line to 370 leagues west of the Cape Verde Islands, and the consequences of the demarcation remain to this day in the fact that Brazil is Portuguese while the rest of South America is Spanish.

At the time this sweeping claim seems to have passed unchallenged, and it is to Queen Elizabeth I that we must give credit for being the first to assert the freedom of the oceans as a principle of the law of nations. The immediate cause of controversy was occasioned by Drake's voyage in the Golden Hind, which provoked a strong Spanish protest in 1580. In her reply to the Spanish Ambassador the Queen declared that the use of the sea and the air was free to all mankind, and that no exclusive rights in either could be claimed by particular nations or individuals. In due course the English claim was supported by the Dutch, and in the seventeenth century the general principle of the freedom of the high seas became an accepted maxim of law.

But general principles are seldom sufficient for the solution of particular problems. The most difficult task of law is to harmonize principles which may appear to conflict and to define the boundaries within which this principle or that is to prevail. If it was agreed that the high seas lay outside all national jurisdiction, it was equally agreed that every State had authority over the waters within its own land frontiers or immediately adjoining its shores. How was the line to be drawn between the waters which were subject to national authority and the "high seas" which were governed only by the law of nations? Again, was there any overlap between the two? Had foreign ships any legal rights in national waters, and in what cases, if any, could national jurisdiction be extended into the high seas?

While at the present time a number of countries agree that the width of the belt of territorial waters is three nautical miles, such agreement is far from universal. Among the states claiming a wider minimum limit for their territorial sea, the following may be noted. Sweden and Norway claim four miles; Italy, Spain, Portugal, India and Yugoslavia claim six miles; Mexico claims nine miles; Albania claims ten miles; Russia and the United Arab Republic each claim twelve miles. Moreover, a large number of states, including France, qualify their general acceptance of the three-mile limit by claiming certain extensions for varying purposes.

The extent of a country's territorial waters will also be affected by the manner in which and where the baseline is drawn.

If the coast line is fairly regular, in the sense that it is neither deeply indented nor fringed with islands, there is general agreement that the territorial belt must be measured from the low water mark along coasts. Difficulties, however, arise when the coast line is irregular, as in Canada, Norway, Greece or Western Scotland. Bays also raise very difficult questions, including the recognition of historic bays.

You will therefore appreciate that, notwithstanding a certain measure of agreement on the three-mile limit, there is much disagreement as to how to measure the three miles and as to what is or is not the territorial sea of any particular country.

In addition to their own territorial seas, many countries claim rights over further areas of the seas for particular purposes. Examples of these are:

Colombia—Territorial sea six miles; 20 kilometers for customs; 12 miles for fishing.

Belgium—Territorial sea three miles; customs 10 kilometers.

Canada—Territorial sea three miles; and for customs, nine miles from the territorial sea.

The United States claims 12 miles for customs, and France claims 20 kilometers for the same purpose; while, as I have already mentioned, Russia claims 12 miles for her territorial sea itself.

It may not be generally appreciated that Canada already claims, and has so claimed since 1936, 12 nautical or marine miles for certain customs purposes.

Section 2 of the Customs Act defines Canadian waters for customs purposes as including the marginal sea within three marine miles of the baselines on the coast of Canada, determined in accordance with international law and practice. The same section also defines "Canadian Customs Waters" as being the waters forming that part of the sea that is adjacent to and extends nine marine miles beyond Canadian waters.

By section 139 of the Customs Act it is illegal for a vessel to hover in Canadian customs water when such vessel is hovering with intent to break our customs laws and regulations.

Among the countries claiming an additional area for the protection of their fishing are Norway and Iceland, and Denmark for Greenland and Faroe Islands—each of which claims 12 miles. There are other countries which claim a greater distance. Peru, Costa Rica and El Salvador each claim 200 miles. Finally, a number of countries claim different areas for other purposes such as Sanitary Regulations and Pollution of Sea and Neutrality.

If the bill is enacted, certain countries may be affected. I suggest that this aspect of the bill may be discussed in committee.

The two Geneva Conferences on the Law of the Sea, in 1958 and 1960, were unable to reach agreement on a uniform rule of law for the breadth of the territorial sea or on the question of fishing limits. The second conference fell only one vote short of approving the proposal for a six-mile territorial sea, plus a six-mile exclusive fishing zone and a ten-year phasing-out period for countries fishing in the waters concerned. However, a large measure of success was achieved at the first conference in codifying other rules of law relating to the law of the sea. For example, agreement was reached, based on the Anglo-Norwegian Case before the International Court of Justice, on application of the straight baseline system to highly indented coast lines or where there is a fringe of islands in the immediate vicinity of the coast. Agreement was also reached on the right of a state to have a contiguous zone extending 12 miles from the baseline from which the territorial sea is measured in which the coastal state could exercise control for the purpose of customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary regulations.

I suggest that there are two main questions we have to ask ourselves. First, what is the condition of affairs which the creation of the fishing zones of Canada seeks to correct? Secondly, is the creation of the fishing zones of Canada a reasonable exercise of our sovereign rights?

As honourable senators know, particularly those from the coastal areas, we have in Canada many regions, some of which are sparsely settled, and their populations utilize the scarce resources in whatever combinations are feasible, to eke out modest livings. Since the last world war, there has been a vast increase in the number and tonnage of foreign fishing vessels fishing off our coasts. Modern fishing trawlers, which sail from distant ports in ever-increasing numbers, fish not only on the banks some distance from our coasts but approach closer to our shores where our fishermen operate with smaller craft. This large concentration of foreign fishing vessels not only reduces the stocks of fish available to our shore fishermen, but also interferes with their operations. In fact we have the anomalous situation on our eastern seaboard, where during the last 50 years Canada has not permitted its large trawlers to fish closer than 12 miles from the coast line, so as not to interfere with the operations of our shore fishermen, while foreign trawlers are permitted to fish up to the traditional three-mile limit.

In these circumstances, and having regard to the state of present-day law and practice, it is clear that the creation of a fishing zone is a reasonable exercise of our sovereign rights.

It would appear that it is not unusual for countries, when exercising their sovereign rights to extend their jurisdiction over the seas adjacent to their coasts, to act unilaterally in so doing. The established practice is so to act, and then, by multilateral treaties and agreements reached by negotiation when and where necessary, to obtain the agreement of other countries who may claim to have been affected by the unilateral action so taken.

Honourable senators, I trust I will be forgiven if I have been too long, but I feel we will all agree that this is a most important piece of legislation, and I felt some of the historical and legal background would be helpful to us when considering it.

With your permission I would like, as briefly as possible, to comment on the various sections of the bill, which is entitled the "Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act." The provisions of this act extend and apply to every act of the Parliament of Canada.

The bill describes the territorial sea of Canada as comprising those areas of the sea within three nautical miles from the baselines described in section 5.

The bill further provides that the internal waters of Canada include any areas of the sea that are on the landward side of the baselines of the territorial sea of Canada.

The bill defines the fishing zones of Canada as comprising those areas of the sea extending a further nine nautical miles beyond the territorial sea of Canada.

I would like to draw attention to the fact that the bill provides that jurisdiction over fishing and the laws affecting the exploitation of the living resources of the sea, applies to the fishing zones, and applies in the same way and to the same extent as it applies to the territorial sea.

A particularly important part of the bill authorizes the Governor in Council to publish lists of points off our coasts from which straight baselines will be drawn. These will be in accordance with the applicable rules of international law.

Provision is also made for the substitution of outer limit lines for our territorial sea and fishing zones in the event of conflict with the territorial sea of another country, or in the event the outer limits of our sea or fishing zone would be unreasonably close to the coast of another country.

The bill authorizes the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to issue charts delineating the territorial sea and the fishing zones of Canada.

Part II of the act provides amendments to several acts. Because of the definition of the territorial sea of Canada, and the creation of the fishing zones of Canada, certain consequential amendments have to be made in these Acts of Parliament to bring them into conformity with the new definition.

These acts are:

I. The Aeronautics Act
II. The Canada Shipping Act
III. The Coastal Fisheries Protection Act
IV. The Criminal Code
V. The Customs Act
VI. The Fisheries Act

Having compared these amendments with the present sections of these acts, there does not appear to be any substantive changes in any of the six statutes affected, other than those resulting from the redefinition of Canadian waters.

By way of illustration, it is necessary to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act in order to include the newly-established fishing zones of Canada and to ensure that the act applies to waters enclosed by the drawing of straight baselines.

Lastly, Part III provides for the coming into force of this act or any of its provisions by proclamation. This proclamation, or these proclamations, will, of course, be made from time to time as the Government may deem appropriate.

Honourable senators, upon the conclusion of the debate on second reading, I shall move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, first may I congratulate the honourable Senator Cook on his excellent explanation of the bill, an explanation which I am sure is going to be of benefit to subsequent speakers in this debate.

As I understand it, this is a debate on second reading, and I am wondering whether it would be in order for me to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, this is the debate on the motion for second reading. However, I am sure that if the honourable leader wishes to speak this afternoon for either a short or a longer period, and then adjourn the debate, that would be entirely satisfactory to all concerned.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I do not intend to make extended remarks this afternoon, but I wish to adjourn the debate and speak on it at a later date.

Honourable senators, it occurs to me that there should be more information with this bill than we now have. I notice that one of the very important parts of the bill is the determination of the baseline. The baseline is determined on the list of geographical co-ordinates. I cannot see how we can discuss the bill intelligently unless we know what these baselines or co-ordinates are. I should like to ask the honourable Senator Cook, who has just explained the bill, if it is possible for us to get a list of the geographical co-ordinates so that we can study them in conjunction with the bill.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE—FIRST READING

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson presented Bill S-18, respecting the Montreal Board of Trade.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Molson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, May 6.

Motion agreed to.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Norman P. Lambert for Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-10, to provide for the establishment of harbour commissions:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

CONSUMER CREDIT

JOINT COMMITTEE—FIRST REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. F. W. Gershaw, for Hon. David A. Croll, Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit, presented the first report of the committee:

Your committee recommend

1. That their quorum be reduced to seven members, provided that both houses are represented.

2. That they be empowered to engage the services of counsel, an accountant and such technical and clerical personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Allister Grosart, for Hon. Thomas Vien, Chairman of the Standing Committee of Standing Orders, presented the committee's first report:

Your committee recommend that the time limited for filing petitions for Private Bills which expired on Wednesday, April 1st, 1964, be extended to Friday, May 15th, 1964.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With leave of the Senate, I move that it be adopted now.

Report adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, May 4, 1964, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I am not objecting to the motion, but may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government why he proposed a change from the usual adjournment?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There is a good deal of business before the Senate now, particularly with the notices of motion that are on the Order Paper. It would appear that we will have a very full week next week, so it would seem appropriate that we resume on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In that connection, I am sure the Senate would be very interested to know what business is projected for next week.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It seems fairly clear from the Order Paper, if I may say so. We will continue the debate on the territorial waters bill; we will continue the debate on the motion to empower the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic to conduct an inquiry; we will consider the motion to refer the estimates to the Finance Committee, and the motion to refer the report of the Department of External Affairs to the Standing Committee on External Relations.

Having said that, I am sure honourable senators will realize that we have a fairly full agenda for the house itself next week. In addition, certain committee meetings are scheduled for next week.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I quite agree with the honourable Leader of the Government that there is the prospect of business originating in this chamber. May I ask him what business we may expect from the other place? After all, that is the business we rely upon mainly.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I know much is expected of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I do not think the gift of prophecy is a required qualification—perhaps at times one does need a crystal ball. I understand some progress has been made on some of the budget resolutions in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Three of them.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It may be that in addition to what we have before us now, other business will be emanating from the other place. But I am sure honourable senators would not expect me to prophesy with any degree of accuracy as to when measures will be sent over. However, if we can generate business here we are doing a good job for Parliament, and I rather suspect the Senate does get some credit for this kind of work.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if we will also sit on Monday evening?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That will depend on developments during Monday afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE DOMINION LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved the third reading of Bill S-14, respecting The Dominion Life Assurance Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN IN CHRIST CHURCH—THIRD READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved the third reading of Bill S-11, respecting the Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NEW SCOTLAND SAVINGS AND MORTGAGE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved the second reading of Bill S-15, to incorporate New Scotland Savings and Mortgage Company.

He said: Honourable senators, as indicated by the title, this is an act to incorporate the New Scotland Savings and Mortgage Company, a loan company which in all respects will be governed by the Loan Companies Act.

It has significance because the company is being organized by a group of Nova Scotians with the purpose of providing an opportunity for people in that province to participate more actively in this important field. It is also expected that the new company, because of its local ownership and knowledge of the province, will be able to engage in lending in areas not presently served by other companies. In particular, a need exists for more mortgage lending in the smaller centres and in rural areas of Nova Scotia, and it is hoped that this service can be extended by the proposed company.

The group organizing the company, as indicated in this bill, is headed by Mr. Gordon F. Hughes, a successful businessman in Windsor, Nova Scotia. The other incorporators are persons well known in the province. I should mention that this will not be a large trust company, certainly not as large as many others with which we have had to deal in recent months. It will serve an area in which will be found a fine type of Nova Scotia farmer and fruit grower, and, as well, small businesses and the general public.

The location of its head office, as stated in the bill, will be at Windsor, Hants County, Nova Scotia. This is adjacent to that fine fruit-growing district known as the Annapolis Valley, which produces what are considered to be the finest flavoured apples in the world.

Compared to other companies operating in the larger centres, I am convinced the proposed New Scotland Savings and Mortgage Company will encourage greater savings and will add to the prosperity of this particular section of Nova Scotia.

If the bill receives second reading, I shall ask that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Isnor, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 220 to 263, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, April 28.

On the motion of Hon. Austin C. Taylor for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 219, for the relief of Shirley Ann Hinman Charlow.

Resolution 220, for the relief of Bernice Boyce LeBlanc.

Resolution 221, for the relief of Geraldine Edith Joan Girouard Gagne.

Resolution 222, for the relief of Connie Cohen Caplan.

Resolution 223, for the relief of Joan Hilda Holgate Murray.

Resolution 224, for the relief of Constance Lorraine Brown Jackson.

Resolution 225, for the relief of Shirley Christina Anne Rose Stamper.

Resolution 226, for the relief of Eileen Owens Parent.

Resolution 227, for the relief of Earl Hayward Coveduck.

Resolution 228, for the relief of Genowefa Czernianin Delego.

Resolution 229, for the relief of Barbara Schultz Dumansky.

Resolution 230, for the relief of Mary Astrakianakis Kardaras.

Resolution 231, for the relief of Helen Miriam Simond Selby.

Resolution 232, for the relief of Nina Bruneau Choquette.

Resolution 233, for the relief of Wasyl Kaprian.

Resolution 234, for the relief of Joseph Hilderic Albert Joffre Vachon.

Resolution 235, for the relief of Henri Verrier.

Resolution 236, for the relief of Margaret Alguire Mallette.

Resolution 237, for the relief of Elizabeth Anne Walford Wood.

Resolution 238, for the relief of Joseph Jean Plante.

Resolution 239, for the relief of Louisa Greig McAleer.

Resolution 240, for the relief of Micheline Deyglun Holowaty.

Resolution 241, for the relief of Marie Catherine Beaubien Frances Drumm Mathieu.

Resolution 242, for the relief of Jean Zalloni.

Resolution 243, for the relief of Hans Ulrich Lewin.

Resolution 244, for the relief of Andrew Sallai.

Resolution 245, for the relief of Lionel Samuel Tiger.

Resolution 246, for the relief of Louisa Simard Flynn.

Resolution 247, for the relief of Cacilie Johanna Friederike Hagedorn Kaat.

Resolution 248, for the relief of Marion Daphune Cormier Armour.

Resolution 249, for the relief of Joseph Alfred Michel Andre Pierre Mercier.

Resolution 250, for the relief of Neilson Harold Dowsley.

Resolution 251, for the relief of Richard Wilfrid Earl Hogan.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, I move that these resolutions be considered at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, at the request of the honourable Senator Pouliot, I ask that this order stand until Wednesday of next week.

I am sure all honourable senators will be pleased to hear that tomorrow Senator Pouliot will celebrate the 50th anniversary of his admission to the Bar of Quebec, and for that reason he is unable to be present today. I know everyone will be happy to have our good wishes and congratulations to him on this very happy occasion appear on the record.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Order stands.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Resolutions numbered 161 to 218, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, April 28.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 161, for the relief of Louise Beausoleil Lavigne.

Resolution 162, for the relief of Christine Goguen Rivard.

Resolution 163, for the relief of Andre Gervais.

Resolution 164, for the relief of Dorothy Allen Rivard.

Resolution 165, for the relief of Diane Grier Findlay Odell.

Resolution 166, for the relief of Claudette Jarry Dehan.

Resolution 167, for the relief of Charlotte Baetz Wieling Gutkind.

Resolution 168, for the relief of Pasquale Ficara.

Resolution 169, for the relief of Gordon George Donnelly.

Resolution 170, for the relief of Elmer Stephen Cheverie.

Resolution 171, for the relief of Barbara Ann Murray Heffernan.

Resolution 172, for the relief of Russell Pain.

Resolution 173, for the relief of William Wallace Graham.

Resolution 174, for the relief of Klawda Bass Kawalerski.

Resolution 175, for the relief of Carole Anne Douglas Orr.

Resolution 176, for the relief of Roger Gagnon.

Resolution 177, for the relief of Frances Elizabeth Hodgson Eramian.

Resolution 178, for the relief of Liliana Sarda Boros.

Resolution 179, for the relief of Joan Lillian White Marsh.

Resolution 180, for the relief of Blanche Gagnon Mallette.

Resolution 181, for the relief of Marie Isabelle Therese (Gisele) Rodrigue Francoeur.

Resolution 182, for the relief of Susie Susser Rosenblatt.

Resolution 183, for the relief of Joan Isabel Hannaford MacDonald.

Resolution 184, for the relief of Velera Marion Moore Robb.

Resolution 185, for the relief of Ada Brewer Clement.

Resolution 186, for the relief of Jacqueline Lois Lubben Sawers.

Resolution 187, for the relief of Irene Dolgin Teitlebaum.

Resolution 188, for the relief of Francoise Jeanne Raymond Porteous.

Resolution 189, for the relief of Irene Collier Klinger.

Resolution 190, for the relief of Frances Margaret Shaughnessy Woolgar.

Resolution 191, for the relief of Freda Dick Allen Floyd.

Resolution 192, for the relief of Martha Christine Cook Cooper.

Resolution 193, for the relief of Werner Hermann Pluss.

Resolution 194, for the relief of Ann Marilyn Schlesinger Goldberg.

Resolution 195, for the relief of Eleanor Rose Eadle Vincent.

Resolution 196, for the relief of Bruorton Reginald Moore Fitz-Gerald.

Resolution 197, for the relief of Antoinette Fiore Lamoureux.

Resolution 198, for the relief of Mabel Bessie Hart Harris.

Resolution 199, for the relief of Luba Kopanski Slapak.

Resolution 200, for the relief of Anne Marie Mesudeur Atzel.

Resolution 201, for the relief of Violet Maud Willis Jones.

Resolution 202, for the relief of Isobel Janet Duco Noel.

Resolution 203, for the relief of Eveline Beck Zimmerman.

Resolution 204, for the relief of Rita Boudreau Savard.

Resolution 205, for the relief of Jacqueline Mary Atta Shatilla.

Resolution 206, for the relief of Olive Brown Mulcahy.

Resolution 207, for the relief of Catherine Marie MacDonald Beaton.

Resolution 208, for the relief of Barbara June Ibberson Thompson.

Resolution 209, for the relief of Alan John Clarke.

Resolution 210, for the relief of Horst Wolfgang Vogel.

Resolution 211, for the relief of Gertrude Anna Marie Seeburg Neubauer.

Resolution 212, for the relief of Maureen Sandra Murray Hastie.

Resolution 213, for the relief of Dorothy St. Clair Kane Wilson.

Resolution 214, for the relief of Constance Lacireno Walsh.

Resolution 215, for the relief of Suzanna Prins Garner.

Resolution 216, for the relief of Patricia June Graydon Wiens.

Resolution 217, for the relief of Arthur Paquette.

Resolution 218, for the relief of Linda Rose Low Steeves.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO MAKE INQUIRY—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Isnor, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grant:

That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.—(Honourable Senator Jodoin).

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I am quite sure I am not capable of taking the place of the distinguished Senator Jodoin—

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, on behalf of honourable Senator Jodoin, I was going to ask that this order be allowed to stand. However, I am sure Senator Jodoin, if she were here, would not object to the honourable Senator Cameron speaking now. At the conclusion of today's debate, I shall ask that it be adjourned in the name of honourable Senator Jodoin.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, there seems to be some confusion today, and I assume it arises from our discussion on the bill relating to our territorial seas.

I was asked to say a few words on tourism after honourable Senator Jodoin had spoken. However, if there is no objection, and since the honourable lady senator is not here, I will go ahead and get this off my chest because I want to look at the question of our territorial seas. Coming as I do from Newfoundland, I consider it a matter of great importance. May I speak now?

The Hon. the Speaker: Shall we hear Senator Hollett?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to keep you long, because usually on Thursday afternoon we seem to have quite a number of tourists in the gallery of this chamber. Having listened to the many excellent speeches yesterday on the subject of tourist traffic, I feel there is not much left to be said in a general way. However, I should like to make some specific references to my own province, Newfoundland.

First let me say how pleased I am to be a member of the Tourist Traffic Committee, particularly since it is under the able chairmanship of honourable Senator Isnor. I think it was Senator Fergusson who said yesterday how necessary it was to the success of the tourist trade for people to be hospitable and friendly. Well, I think Senator Isnor has definitely started out in that direction, for the first thing he did was to invite the members of the committee to an excellent dinner where we became better acquainted with each other. I think he adopted the right idea in the first instance.

Tourist trade is becoming more and more one of the great assets of many countries, and this applies to most of the provinces of Canada. Only yesterday I saw a news item from London, England, which said that this year some 210,000 people from the British Isles would spend some $84 million in the United States of America and, of course, this does not take into account the expenditures for transportation.

Yesterday several honourable senators mentioned the present and future value of tourism and its related aspects to Canada as a whole. Basically, of course, any country or province has to have something to offer the tourist and, secondly, that something has to be made as easily accessible as possible.

In looking at Newfoundland, including Labrador, for Newfoundland is Labrador and Labrador is Newfoundland, and with those two ideas in mind, what have we to offer the prospective tourist? Labrador has become very prominent. As a matter of fact, it is going to be the show place of Canada in the years to come, but I will not elaborate on that at the present time. In answer to the question what have we to offer the prospective tourist, I could say we have nearly everything. Everybody knows that. We have the finest and most varied scenery to be found anywhere. We have the hunting of wild game such as the moose, the caribou, and birds of all kinds. We have salmon and trout fishing in our lakes and rivers, and deep-sea fishing of many varieties, including tuna fishing.

Incidentally, the best fishing in the world can be found in Labrador. I can say that because I fished there four or five years ago, and in a very few minutes at one lake I caught several trout, each that long.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator allow me to point out that although, no doubt, they were tremendous trout, their length does not appear on Hansard when he demonstrates it with his hands.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I leave it to honourable senators to judge for themselves. In any event, they were very long; they were big fish. I can recommend to Senator Aseltine that he take a trip there and enjoy some really good trout fishing.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is my next port of call, after tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: We have in Newfoundland very many historic sites; and, as everybody knows, we have the most hospitable people in the whole wide world. We suffer, of course, from lack of transportation facilities. In this connection I should like to quote from a letter I received from our Director of Tourist Development, Mr. Oliver L. Vardy.

Mr. Vardy has been in charge of Newfoundland's tourist program almost since 1949, and I know of no man who can size up the situation in a more knowledgeable way. He says that the big problem which confronts us at the present time is that of transportation to and from the province. In his letter to me he pointed out that while much has been said about the ferry which is to operate between the Canadian mainland and the east coast of Newfoundland, it would appear that the earliest we can expect it to be put into operation is three years from now.

The William Carson has been totally inadequate in dealing with the traffic that has been offering across the gulf during the peak season, and despite the improvements that have been made this year it is not anticipated the ferry will be able to handle many more cars than it did in 1963. I gather from Mr. Vardy's letter that certain alterations have been made to the William Carson which will enable her to take more cars each trip but, as he stated, the number of persons making use of the various camping facilities provided by the province is growing tremendously, and there are more and more people who wish to bring their trailers to Newfoundland.

I take this opportunity of reminding the honourable Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) that an east coast ferry was one of the election promises made over a year ago. I do hope that some effort will be made to provide this service as soon as possible, and in less than three years.

While I am on the subject of transportation I should like to remind the Leader of the Government of another election promise which I feel quite sure will be carried out and, I hope, carried out soon. I am referring to the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway from Port aux Basques to St. John's. I am not sure of the exact mileage still to be completed, but I think it is approximately 250 miles.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Will the honourable senator say how much has actually been built?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: The total mileage is somewhere between 550 and 600 miles. I have said that there are about 250 miles left to be completed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): About half of the Trans-Canada Highway there is built now?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I would say that just over half is completed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why is the highway of such length?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Newfoundland is 317 miles wide, but the Trans-Canada Highway runs in a sort of semi-circle from Port aux Basques to St. John's, which adds 200-odd miles to its length.

There are many people from the mainland who cross over on the William Carson to Port aux Basques, and who would anticipate with pleasure the drive from Port aux Basques to St. John's on a paved Trans-Canada Highway. When they come back from their holiday and report how pleasant it is in the province, it will be found that not only the William Carson, but one or two other vessels as well, will have to be on the gulf route in order to carry the increasing number of tourists who wish to come to Newfoundland that way. Most tourists from the Canadian mainland and the United States like to bring their cars with them and thus be able to see some historic sites, to stop off somewhere and shoot whatever game they are allowed to take, and to enjoy themselves without having to drive over certain sections of dirt roads.

To give honourable senators some idea of the number of cars coming to Newfoundland from the mainland, I would point out that in 1962 from the United States alone there were some 2,250, and from the Canadian mainland, 4,986; in all, a total of 7,206. They all travelled across the gulf on the motor vessel William Carson. This goes to show that if there were other ships available and there was a paved Trans-Canada highway we would have many more cars coming in and, of course, many more tourists. If there is added to that the East Coast Ferry service, which could take passengers and cars to the east coast of Newfoundland, I think tourism would become a greater asset to the people of Newfoundland.

I am given to understand that last year the value of the travel industry was in the neighbourhood of $20 million, and that some 154,000 people were accommodated in licensed tourist establishments alone. Do not forget, honourable senators, that this is in little old Newfoundland, of which perhaps some of you have heard. Let it not be forgotten that we have prospects down there. Nearly $3 million was spent in the province by hunters alone, and some $75,000 was collected from the sale of salmon and trout licences, which indicates that we do not charge too much.

Further, to show the value of the services provided by the William Carson, I am given to understand that in 1962 nearly 75,000 passengers travelled both ways on this boat. As a demonstration of the value of this trade to our province I will mention that over $1 million was collected in gasoline sales and garage services from the drivers of cars who crossed over on this ferry.

Having looked over some of the reports of the tourist trade in Newfoundland during the past year, I can heartily agree with our tourist director when he says that the potential for tourist development in Newfoundland is greater than it is in any part of North America. Newfoundland is one of the few virgin territories left to be exploited—I hope it is not exploited too much—by the travelling vacationer. As I said before, we have Labrador which is opening up tremendously fast. The Iron Ore Company of Canada is there, as are two or three other companies and also the great hydro-electric development, and the best fishing I have witnessed anywhere in the world.

Let me conclude by repeating what I said at the outset, that I am most happy and honoured to be a member of this committee. I am quite sure that with a proper study of the problems relating to tourism many recommendations can be made by the committee which, if acted upon, will increase the tourist trade of the whole of Canada. I assure Senator Isnor of my fullest co-operation.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, first of all, I would like to compliment the chairman of the Senate Tourist Committee on his initiative in reactivating this committee and seriously proposing to tackle the problem of tourism in a manner which the importance of the industry to Canada warrants.

It is not inappropriate that the chairman of the committee should come from the Province of Nova Scotia because, as one who has been interested in tourism for a long time, I have been greatly taken with the quality of publicity that has been carried out by that province for many years. The tourist publicity of Nova Scotia, in terms of tourist booklets, has been among the most attractive in Canada. They are certainly a credit to that province, to the industry as a whole and to Canada.

The establishment of a committee to go into the whole matter of expanding the tourist trade is most timely. It has been said on more than one occasion recently that tourism is the third largest earner of foreign exchange in Canada today, next after wheat and the pulp and paper industry. It was estimated that the value of the tourist industry to Canada last year was something in excess of $600 million.

We are in the process of setting our sights for a billion dollar tourist business by 1967. This is a target which I think is quite capable of achievement. However, now that we have set the tentative goal of $1 billion tourist revenue in 1967, it seems to me that we should tackle some of the problems relating to the industry in a more co-ordinated and determined way than we have in the past.

Some of the appropriate steps which have been taken recently to emphasize more effectively the importance of the tourist industry are, first, putting tourism in the Department of Trade and Commerce, where I think it logically belongs, until such time as we have a separate ministry of tourism and recreation. I shall say more about that a little later. Secondly, the Government is providing more funds for the Canadian Government Travel Bureau this year, as was emphasized by Senator Isnor yesterday. I think this is all to the good.

I mentioned a moment ago the question of setting up a ministry of tourism and recreation. While I am the last one who wants to expand the cost of government services, I think this is something which is certainly worthy of consideration. It may be premature at this time to suggest the establishment of such a ministry, but I personally do not think so.

We all admit that tourism is big business, and is going to be bigger business. With the increasing amount of time available to people as a result of reduction of the hours of work, and the introduction of automation and other elements of technological progress, the problem of providing people with adequate recreational services and facilities becomes one of major national importance.

Obviously, the provision of adequate recreational services to meet the needs of the Canadian people will involve the provision of a vast extension of tourist facilities and resources such as these. First, the need is for more and better roads, because the people on the American continent are a mobile people and the vast majority who visit tourist resorts and national parks come by motor car. It calls for the provision of more parks and playgrounds, camp sites, picnic grounds, roadside tables, more adequate resources such as swimming pools, skiing and curling rinks, golf courses, tennis courts, cinemas and theatres. The establishment of more facilities of this kind will call for more people trained in the supervision of parks and playgrounds, and so on.

It will call for a broader interpretation of "recreation" to include supervising of drama, ballet, music, painting, handcraft instructors and recreational leaders. The extension of such a program should be tied in as a part of our national health and fitness program.

In addition, while the peak recreational and tourist season is in the school-free months of July and August, I am satisfied, from living for 30 years in a national park, that we could considerably extend the length of the ordinary tourist season by providing facilities and catering to and publicizing what can be done in the autumn and in other months.

While I live in probably one of the most attractive areas of the world, the Banff National Park, I personally enjoy going down in the autumn to the Eastern Townships to places such as Lake Memphremagog, and other centres in that region. Nowhere could be more beautiful.

While I have not had the pleasure and privilege of visiting Senator Hollett's famed and historic Newfoundland, I hope to broaden my education as time goes on and see that region also. The fact remains that every area of Canada has some particularly distinguishing feature which makes it attractive not only to the people who live there but to those who come from other regions and who should see our own country first.

In the expenditure of our tourist dollars through the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, I think more emphasis must be placed on getting Canadians to see their own country first. It is all right to have Trans-Canada Air Lines advertising package deals to fly to St. Moritz and places like that in Switzerland, but I would like a little advertising done on the part of Canada's national airlines in favour of seeing some of our own winter recreational areas. I think this will come in time, but we in this chamber have a responsibility to make sure that it does come about.

I notice that increasing numbers of people, young and old, are taking up skiing in the winter time. If you go to Montreal on a winter weekend you will see literally hundreds and thousands of people going out by ski trains. While we have not as large a population in western Canada, we have seen as many as 6,000 on the ski slopes at Banff on a Saturday or Sunday afternoon. The numbers are increasing. This is all to the good. In recent years we have extended the length of Christmas vacations. These provide not only time for family reunions but for families to go on holidays. In what better way could they spend their time than by going to some of our winter resorts?

The same is true of Easter. More and more Canadians are finding more and more time for holidaying at Easter. This is one of the reflections of the buoyant Canadian economy.

Therefore, in our thinking about the tourist industry, we have to be more concerned to consider it not just as something that happens in the months of July and August but as something that can be developed appropriately on a year-round basis.

This brings me to the sad events of last winter, when Canada lost its bid to hold the 1968 International Winter Olympics at Banff. I bring this in as evidence of the kind of money governments are prepared to spend on this one event. I was personally very sorry that Canada's bid was not successful. I hope we will be successful in 1972, and I trust that all the members of this chamber will support the application of Banff for the Winter Olympics at that time.

However, the federal Government was prepared to spend $8 million in the Banff-Lake Louise area on the provision of facilities for the 1968 Olympics. The Government of the Province of Alberta was prepared to spend $3½ million; Calgary and area businessmen were prepared to spend another $4 million. In other words, for this one passing event, Canadians—government at three levels and private individuals—were prepared to invest $15½ million. This is a sizable bit of money.

I would emphasize that though we were disappointed we did not get the Olympics, this was not an insuperable blow. I think it only served to underline the importance of looking upon tourist recreation not as something associated with a single passing event but as something that exists all the year round and should be developed on a year-round basis. I hope this is the attitude that will come out of this committee.

I welcomed a statement made by the Honourable Arthur Laing, Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, which appeared in the Calgary Albertan City Page on March 23 last.

> A determined effort to turn the Banff-Lake Louise area into a year-round recreational playground is being made by the federal Government.

To this I say, "Hear, hear." The article continues:

> Arthur Laing, Minister for Northern Affairs and National Resources, said in Calgary Thursday Ottawa will call in an international skiing expert to check Canada's western national parks for potential winter development.
>
> Mr. Laing said the Government is very aware of the value of skiing in attracting tourists to park areas.
>
> "No businessman wants to operate at 110 per cent capacity part of the year and 15 per cent in the off-season," he said.

This is the attitude we have to change with respect to the tourist business in Canada. We have looked upon it as a short term, boom period, and we have not had adequate facilities nor tried to extend the term as we should. I am very happy that the minister made that statement, because there is growing up an attitude which gives some concern to many people in Canada—the unnecessarily restrictive attitude of the so-called conservationists.

May I quote from Maclean's magazine for March 23, 1963. In an article entitled, "Beauty and the Buck," Mr. Fred Bodsworth, a natural historian, strongly put forward the conservationist's viewpoint regarding use of the national parks, one of the great resources of our country. According to Mr. Bodsworth, in the National Parks Act "the stress is on preserving areas of national rather than local signifiance, and the purpose thus becomes educational, cultural and inspirational rather than recreational."

What in fact does the National Parks Act say? It starts off by defining the general purposes of the parks as follows:

> The Parks are hereby dedicated to the people of Canada for their benefit, education and enjoyment, subject to the provisions of this Act and the Regulations, and such Parks shall be maintained and made use of so as to leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

As can be seen, this is a very wide definition. Not many of the conservationists try to support their case by quoting the act, but those who do so rely on the words "such parks shall be maintained and made use of so as to leave them unimpaired." This means the parks must not be impaired or made worse, but certainly does not forbid developments which would not cause impairment. In fact nowhere in the National Parks Act can one find anything about wilderness areas or "museums of nature."

There is a very determined effort on the part of some people to suggest that anyone who is concerned with providing more recreational facilities in the parks of Canada is concerned with, to use their own term, "converting our parks into a Coney Island with neon lights, cinemas and pool halls, and what have you." They suggest that more motels, golf courses, swimming pools and tennis courts would disturb and impair the wilderness areas.

For the past 30 years, off and on, I have lived in Canada's premier national park, and I can say without fear of contradiction that less than two per cent of the people who go there—there were a million last year—go more than two miles off the highway. For whom are the parks provided? Are they for the two per cent, the conservationists, or for the 90 per cent of Canadians who have a right to use them and who in large measure paid for them?

Do not misunderstand me. I would be as concerned as Fred Bodsworth or anyone else if the wilderness areas were becoming impaired. However, I can assure you that we have immense areas of wilderness in Canada. One does not need to go far from the Trans-Canada Highway, or from any other highway, to find them. We must therefore keep a proper perspective.

I have another newspaper article before me, taken from the Calgary Herald. The author, Allen Bill, takes me to task for trying to destroy the national parks. The article says, in part:

> A park highway may skirt a potential copper mine; a park river may be just right to spin hydro-electric power turbines; a mountain of fine trees may make 1,000,000 board feet of house lumber. Should ease of access put these natural resources up for grabs? A swift, badly-planned rush of development, to overtake the explosion of tourism, will, as history shows us, set up such a racket that the despoiler's cutting and pounding will not be heard until his work is done.

I know it is natural for some people, when they see a fine highway, to be attracted by a potential copper mine. I know where there are such copper mines, as well as fine timber limits, and I know some people have been given rights to cut that timber. I would be the first to say that we should protect the rights of the people of these areas and should not destroy the parks by industrial developments of that kind, certainly within our time or the foreseeable future. Mr. Bill goes on to say:

> Too many avid park developers think that he who enjoys the wilderness trails loves to bathe in a frigid mountain stream—

I wish they would try it.

> —likes best to sleep on the ground or to seek entertainment watching the porcupines make love. Not so. He too enjoys the sweet talk on a movie screen of Cary Grant and Maureen O'Hara—

You see, he is not up to date with the current movie stars.

> —a hot bath in a clean motel, a concert of light music to lift his spirits. But these "nature lovers" believe it best to keep the juke box in its kennel, the bathtub off the bridle path.
>
> The present planning of the parks administration aims to bring these varied interests into an amiable relationship. It is undertaking the tremendous and complex task of forging a development policy which will enable park visitors of all inclinations to enjoy these areas free of commercial vandalism. Nearly 8,000,000 persons visited Canada's national parks last year, and present planning is taking a very realistic view of the certain increase in attendance this year.

I think Mr. Bill is right when he says that we should seek an amiable relationship between the legitimate desires and needs of the conservationist and the person who loves to go out into the wilderness. Nothing could be finer than to get out into the woods and mountains, and to fish, thus getting away from the abrasions of a very crude society. However, the number of people who do that constitute a very small fraction of the total Canadian population.

There are some people who would like to provide more facilities in our provincial and national parks, such as more moving pictures, theatres, more tennis courts, swimming pools, ski lifts, golf courses, and so on. On the other hand, others say that this is despoiling the parks, that when they go to the parks for a holiday they want to get away from the things they are able to do in the metropolitan centres.

Well, I think the people who write that stuff must be bachelors or old maids, because again my observation is that in the two, three or four weeks that the majority of Canadians have to go on holiday they like to go with their families. What do they do? They go for picnics in those lovely areas where beautiful picnic tables are provided, near the highway, where there are streams at the foot of the mountains. They spend all day outside, perhaps doing a little hiking or fishing, or "hunting" with a camera—delightful, edifying, healthful recreation. But when the evening comes, what do they want to do? They may be staying in a motel, they may be cramped for space, they may be living in rooms and want to go out with their family. Perhaps they would like to see a show, go to a concert or theatrical production. This is my own observation of what the typical Canadian likes to do. He likes to be with his family in the evening as well as during the day, and the great majority of them would like to find these resources in our parks and playgrounds.

Just to show you what this means in dollars and cents, I will quote from an article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal on January 23, 1964, written by Mr. E. S. Bryant, director of the Alberta Government Travel Bureau. He says that when the figures for 1963 are all in, Canada will have earned $600 million from foreign visitors, and he adds that our target is $1 billion by 1967. He asks:

> Where does Alberta fit into this program?

What he is saying about Alberta applies to other provinces as well.

> Alberta has no accurate means of measuring the value of tourism to the economy of the province.
>
> Steps are being taken to establish this yardstick, and from figures now being gathered by travel research some basic figures are available.

Here are a few of them:

> The Alberta Government Travel Bureau has completed two travel studies.
>
> The questionnaires revealed many interesting facts about our visitors and have provided us with sufficient information to launch a major program of travel research.
>
> Here are some of the facts. Better than 40 per cent of our 1963 visitors had been to Alberta on an average of 2.8 times before, while more than half spent their entire vacation in Alberta.
>
> The average length of stay increased from 2.7 days in 1962 to 7.7 days in 1963.

I can assure you this is what makes the heart of a tourist service official warm up.

> This increase is attributed to the fact that visitors stayed in Alberta this year, whereas in 1962 they were travelling the Trans-Canada Highway through the Rogers Pass to the Seattle World's Fair.

It is interesting to note the effect of the availability of a good road, because the tourist traffic over the Trans-Canada highway increased so rapidly in 1962 with the opening of the Rogers Pass, and because it coincided with the World's Fair in Seattle, people said, "This is a peak which will not be maintained. We will slump back in 1963." But in 1963 we were up nearly 30 per cent. On certain days throughout the summer and the autumn the Trans-Canada highway from Calgary to Vancouver was almost like a city street, with cars moving bumper to bumper.

I want to suggest here, honourable senators, that the time has come when we should think of twinning the Trans-Canada highway. It will be a costly job, but we should start it right away because within two years traffic on that highway is going to be so clogged that it will be inadequate in the peak season.

The article continues.

> The majority of tourist traffic was concentrated in the southwest portion of the province with emphasis on the National Parks. The average party consisted of 3.7 persons and the average daily expenditure of each party was $25.80 and $97.88 per visit.

Roughly $100 each visit.

> Individuals averaged $6.95 per day and $53.30 per visit.
>
> Alberta scenery is the main reason for visiting the province and 85.7 per cent of those responding to our questionnaire indicated they would like to visit Alberta again. We also found that 78.1 per cent arrived in automobiles driving an average of 1,675 miles one way to get here.

In other words, it was about 3,400 miles for the round trip.

This again underlines the importance of an integrated tourist service. It is not just a matter of the facilities we have in the Rocky Mountains, or that you have in the Eastern Townships or down at Peggy's Cove in Nova Scotia. We should plan this on a national basis and integrate our programs and publicity, stressing what people can see and the facilities en route. This is the logical, orderly way in which to develop a very important industry.

Another interesting fact is that those visitors to Alberta also spent 11 per cent of their holiday money on souvenirs—and such souvenirs! Here again, if you go into some of our emporiums in Banff about this time of year you will find the staff comprised of university students pasting over the "Made in Japan" labels on goods and increasing the price about five times. It is high time we thought of producing some of these tourist artifacts and souvenirs that are indigenous to the regions in which we live—articles of good design, pottery, weaving, carving, and so on. We have these crafts, but we are not putting enough emphasis on developing them for the very important and remunerative tourist trade.

Honourable senators, I want to spend a moment or two on what I think should be done particularly with respect to the national parks of the Rocky Mountain region. I will not alarm my friend Senator Donald Smith, because he said, "You are not going to spend all your time talking about Banff?"—and I have hardly mentioned it. We would be less than honest if we did not thank God that we have been given one of the most magnificent regions in the world, the Rocky Mountain region of western Canada. For 500 miles you can drive from Banff to Radium, up to Golden and back to Lake Louise, and then 115 miles to the Columbia Icefields, and you will find more spectacular scenery than you will find in any other 500 miles of the world. It is simply magnificent.

All this belongs to the people of Canada and could and should be developed and utilized for the people of Canada, for the conservationist, the nature-lover and the ordinary citizen who wants to take his family on a holiday out in the beautiful surroundings of mountain lakes and streams. Because there has been an un-co-ordinated attack on meeting the needs of the tourist, we have experienced a hodge-podge development. Some of our developments have not been as aesthetic, artistic or attractive as they might have been.

I had the privilege of attending the meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Rocky Mountain region 10 days ago in Banff and I made the suggestion, in order to support the kind of concept that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has for the parks, that there should be set up a Rocky Mountain Area Development Association, an association not of tourist operators who are certainly concerned primarily with making an honest dollar, but one which would bring in the ablest public servants and citizens of cities like Calgary, Edmonton, Jasper, Banff, Lake Louise, Radium and Kamloops.

May I just say for the benefit of my friend Senator Sydney Smith, that Kamloops is one of the very attractive towns on the Trans-Canada Highway and is a credit to the people who live there. Its tourist facilities are excellent and it is a very good place to stay.

As I was saying, we should bring in the people of Kamloops, Chilliwack, Kelowna and Penticton and tackle this problem on a regional basis. It is probably true that the same should be done in the Maritimes and Newfoundland. Let us tackle this on an organized, regional basis. In order to do that we should make a pretty careful analysis, first of all as to what our target should be in terms of numbers of tourists we should handle, the sort of increments we should plan for each year and the number of tourist beds or, what they call in the tourist industry, "the pillow count." We should know what the pillow count is so that some of the people that Fred Bodsworth refers to would not have to try to sleep listening to the music of porcupines or ground hogs making love. In the peak season we have not enough pillows. It is one of the sad things in our great centres, at the peak of the season, to see a family of three, four or five children packed in a car and finding no place to sleep.

This is not the fault of the parks people entirely: in fact, I think they are to be commended for the magnificent job they have started, and I emphasize the word "started", in providing beautiful trailer and camping grounds. But we do not have enough of these. They are also to be commended for these splendid picnic tables placed along the beautiful highways and rivers to provide enjoyment for a great number of people. They are to be congratulated for the way in which they have provided tenting spaces.

Our provincial authorities are also to be congratulated, particularly those of British Columbia, who have taken such initiative in providing for our people beautiful provincial campsites. However, I think these should be co-ordinated with all the other activities to complement each other so that the dollars we spend on advertising and promoting tourism would count in the most effective way.

I also want to make perfectly clear that I am in favour of a broad extension of tourist facilities in the national parks, such as hotels, motels, and recreational facilities, particularly on a year-round basis. But I would back to the limit the parks officials in controlling the kind of development that should take place, because here I feel they are not as imaginative as they might be in specifying the kind of buildings, hotels, motels and stores that should be built in these national parks. I would like to see them set up a national competition for designs by architects for buildings down in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick of a type indigenous to that region, and to encourage the design of buildings suitable for the Rocky Mountain region. At the present time we have a polyglot hodgepodge. I think most of the people would back the officials to the limit if they set a very high standard for buildings and service facilities and enforce those standards. At the same time, I would not support them unless they were prepared to encourage the development of and the provision of facilities to take care of the visitors.

There is an element growing in western Canada which says the finest thing that could be done to improve tourist facilities in that region would be to take the towns of Banff, Jasper and Lake Louise out of the national parks. There is another element which says that millions of dollars have been spent in putting the railroad through the Rocky Mountains, and that vast sums have been spent putting a magnificent highway through, and if we are not going to use them why have we spent the money? There are even some rabid conservationists who have complained about T.C.A. flying over these regions because they are disturbing the animals. If that is not carrying the idea of conservation and nature-loving to an absurd extreme, I do not know what is.

In conclusion I want to say that one of the most important areas for development in Canada is the whole concept of tourism and recreation. It is something which needs a great deal more attention than we have paid to it in the past, and we are indebted to Senator Isnor and the members of the committee for going into it so thoroughly. I hope we will call the experts in the tourist field and get the information and the facts, and on the basis of the facts work out a program worthy of what we have to offer in the way of scenic beauty and healthful enjoyment to all Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): On behalf of Senator Jodoin, I propose l'ajournement du débat.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, May 4, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

THE SENATE

Monday, May 4, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons stating that the name of Mr. Olson has been substituted for that of Mr. Ouellet on the Joint Committee on Printing.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of Report by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on the Operations of the United Nations Peace-Keeping Force in Cyprus, dated April 29, 1964. (English text).

Capital Budget of the National Capital Commission for the year ending March 31, 1965, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 30, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, for the second reading of Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I am pleased this afternoon to make a few remarks on what is a very important bill. I was also pleased that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) told us the other day that there would be no urgency in getting this bill through. This I think is all to the good, because it is such an important bill it should have a very thorough study here in the Senate, where it is being introduced, and it should also be studied very carefully in the committee to which it is sent.

When honourable Senator Cook, the sponsor of the bill, spoke on Thursday last, he remarked that the bill would probably be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. It seems to me that this bill deals almost entirely with external affairs and with fishing and, therefore, I do not understand why it should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee. It has been our custom here to send practically all legislation to that committee, and that may be the reason. However, as we are looking for work for our other committees, careful consideration should be given in selecting the appropriate committee to deal with this bill.

In the few minutes during which I spoke on Thursday, I congratulated Senator Cook on the able manner in which he introduced the bill. He gave a fine explanation of many of the sections, but all senators will agree, I feel sure, that he left much still to be explained. It was a pleasure to see one of our new senators given such an important bill to introduce; it certainly is a compliment to him.

Undoubtedly, there were two good reasons for asking Senator Cook to deal with this bill. First, he comes from the province of Newfoundland, which is closely concerned with the law of the sea and fishing. The senator is a lawyer and no doubt is well versed in the law of the sea; also, he would be well versed in the needs of the fishing industry in Newfoundland.

I wish also to congratulate the Leader of the Government on his success in having this very important bill introduced in the Senate. This is the type of work which this chamber is well qualified to do. This is not a money bill. There are other bills similar to this which should be introduced here. This is not run of the mill legislation; it is important legislation, of concern not only to Canada but to many other countries and states throughout the world.

Honourable senators, I come from one of the Atlantic provinces, where the fishing industry is one of our chief concerns. Out of the 32 constituencies in the Atlantic provinces, only three do not touch the sea and therefore are not directly interested in deep-sea fishing. I happen to belong to one of those three constituencies which do not touch the sea, so it may seem a little anomalous that I should speak on this matter. However, I can assure all honourable senators that this question is of importance to all of us.

The principle of the three-mile limit was accepted by the major nations of the world more than a century ago. The manner in which that came about was explained to us on Thursday last by honourable Senator Cook. People living near the sea a century ago may not have been as preoccupied about the fishing industry as about their self-preservation, but today those people who live near the sea, in any part of the world, have two main interests. First, there is conservation of this great industry and the food it supplies to ourselves and the rest of the world; secondly, preservation of the labour and work which flows from it.

We in Canada, including of course the Atlantic provinces, enjoy the finest fishing areas in the world. The best fishing is in the cold waters of the North Atlantic. The decision to extend the limit, therefore, is of immense interest to our people. Hence the application of today's requirements from the point of view of security and conservation are claiming not only the interest of the people of Canada but also of other states and nations.

I believe Denmark has already declared a 12-mile limit with regard to the Faroe Islands and Greenland, but not for Denmark proper. Iceland declared a 12-mile limit only a few years ago. Norway has a 12-mile limit. Russia claimed a 12-mile limit some years ago. All these countries have had their difficulties as a result of the unilateral declaration of the 12-mile limit. We all remember that Iceland a few years ago had difficulty with Great Britain and some other countries in enforcing her 12-mile limit. I feel that if it had not been that Iceland is a small country, depending entirely on the sea, the larger nations would not, in a generous mood, have pressed what they considered to be their claims on her.

I read in one of the American periodicals a few days ago that Norway, Sweden and Denmark are also experiencing difficulty in getting an agreement with other countries to recognize the 12-mile limit, as far as they are concerned. Denmark has her difficulties concerning seas adjoining the Faroe Islands. Denmark is having her difficulties over fishing in connection with Greenland. That such a development should occur in this country, I am sure is incomprehensible. Many people in Canada have said that agreements should have been made before this bill is passed, so that there would not be the possibility of trouble with other states.

The other day, after a statement was made by the Minister of Fisheries, the Montreal Gazette carried rather a pointed editorial, from which I would like to quote:

> The Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Robichaud, sees no difficulty in enforcing the new 12-mile limit off Canada's coast that the Canadian Government will proclaim.

Then the editorial quotes Mr. Robichaud:

> We will use the means at our disposal —we have an enforcement fleet now.

I am sure that statement sounds ridiculous to most of us, because we know that some of the larger countries are determined to fish here, and that we have no fleet, no enforcement fleet, that could prevent them. Therefore, it is almost entirely a matter of agreement with these countries that may claim rights here. One finds it difficult to understand such provocative and intemperate language by a minister of the Government of Canada.

I would like to quote more from the editorial which I feel is both cogent and pertinent. As I said a moment ago, I believe we must have, or should have had, some further agreement with these countries with whom we may have difficulties in future. The editorial continues:

> But the matter may not prove so easy.

Speaking of enforcing.

> It is one thing to enforce a law that has international recognition. It may prove quite another to enforce a law that Canada has herself proclaimed unilaterally.
>
> The Canadian Government has fallen back upon its own proclamation because it failed to win international recognition for the 12-mile limit from the United Nations in 1960.

This was very well explained in this house the other day by Senator Cook, the sponsor of the bill. I shall have more to say about that later.

Canada and the United States combined to sponsor a qualified 12-mile limit for all nations, but failed by a single vote to win the two-thirds majority that was needed. At first, Canada wanted an unqualified fishing zone of 12 miles, and the only way she could get the United States to agree was to settle for a qualified 12-mile limit and allow the Americans, who have traditional rights in certain waters of Canada, to fish in areas for a period of 10 years. I understand that was the agreement before the vote was taken in 1960; but, as I say, it failed by a single vote to win the required two-thirds majority.

Canada's three-mile limit has been generally respected. But in the distance between three and 12 miles a great number of nations have been active, including Russia, and Russia's interest is not confined to fish. It is very difficult even for the United States to recognize Canada's claim, as the late President Kennedy asserted when he met with our Prime Minister, just shortly before the President's death.

Continuing with the editorial:

> It is easy to understand the importance of exercising control over the fishing areas off the Canadian coast, as these are in danger of being exhausted, especially with modern scientific fishing methods. But an international agreement (discouraging as it may now seem) would > still be far preferable to trying to enforce a new regulation with the sort of "enforcement fleet" that Canada has at her command, supposing that a powerful nation chose not to recognize Canada's new claim.

Honourable senators, in supporting to a certain degree the sentiment expressed in that editorial, I want to make it abundantly clear that the Conservative Party supports the principle and the need for extending our fishery zone to the 12-mile limit. It was the policy of the last Conservative government of which I had the honour to be a member, and it continues to be the policy of our party, to extend our fishing rights to 12 miles by international agreement, if possible, bearing in mind our trade, for one thing, and our treaty commitments for another.

Canada pressed for an agreement to this end at the conferences on the Law of the Sea held at Geneva in 1958 and 1960, under the United Nations. Although the first conference was successful in reaching agreement to 113 articles of the Law of the Sea—and that was a wonderful accomplishment—it was notable by its failure to agree on the questions of the breadth of the territorial sea and rights to an extended fishing zone. Those are the two matters this bill deals with particularly.

May I note here that one of the outstanding achievements of that conference, insofar as Canada is concerned, was the convention on the continental shelf, which grants to coastal states sovereign rights over the exploration and exploitation of the natural resources of the sea bed and subsoil.

Prior to the first Geneva Conference of 1958, in a preparatory report the International Law Commission of the United Nations listed among other things a recognition that, and I quote:

> States could possess jurisdiction over part of the high seas for particular purposes without having to extend the territorial seas.

That is exactly what this bill is proposing to do. This principle was embodied in the Canadian proposal first put forward at the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1956 and was, in the best Canadian tradition, a compromise formula having fishing particularly in mind.

The Canadian proposal, which is known as the six-plus-six formula would allow for six miles of territorial jurisdiction and a further six miles of exclusive fishery jurisdiction. I hope when further explanation is given of this bill, it will be explained to us why there was a change from the six-mile to the three-mile territorial limit. Six miles was what was agreed upon by the United Nations and some fifty other nations at Geneva in 1960.

As I have said, the first conference on the Law of the Sea failed completely in its attempt to agree on the question of the extension of territorial waters. Realizing the importance of this matter to world peace and the continuation of good relations between states, the United Nations convened the second conference on the Law of the Sea, also held at Geneva, in 1960. Canada once again pressed—and I want to emphasize this because Canada has taken an outstanding part in developing the Law of the Sea—for the acceptance of its 6 plus 6 compromise proposal. I say "compromise" because it was a compromise proposal, mostly with the United States at that time, and failed by one vote to win the necessary two-thirds majority. Anyone who followed the proceedings at that time knows that the man who was largely, if not entirely, responsible for the almost complete success of the negotiations was the Honourable George Drew who led the Canadian delegation at these important conferences. It was largely through his efforts that the Canadian proposal received such wide support at that time.

It was the belief of the previous Government that peace in the world through the United Nations would be hindered by states extending their territorial seas without international agreement; and, may I say, that view was shared by the Liberal Government prior to 1957.

In addition to the traditional and treaty rights of France—and I am sure they will be mentioned more fully by subsequent speakers—the United States, and the traditional rights of Spain and Portugal, there is also the question of the preferred position Canada enjoys with the United States as our principal market for fresh frozen fish. As a matter of fact, in our trade with the United States, 75 per cent of our total exports of fish is made to that country. This will make it a little more difficult for us to deal with the United States, as far as so-called traditional rights are concerned.

As honourable senators know, the frozen-fish industry employs many thousands of Canadians in the Atlantic provinces, on the Great Lakes and on the Pacific coast. The very existence of this industry is dependent on free access to the American market. The powerful New England fishing industry is constantly lobbying the United States Government for the imposition of tariffs on Canadian fish. These efforts have thus far been resisted. It is the responsibility of the Government to ensure that the action contemplated by this legislation, desirable though it may be, does not jeopardize our principal frozen-fish market.

Honourable senators, I know that there are in this chamber men who come from some of the finest fishing areas, not only in Canada but in the world. As I know most of them are going to speak on this bill, and as I also know they are far better qualified than I am to speak about the fishing industry, it is not my intention to say much more in this connection.

Parts II and III of the bill are not controversial, as Senator Cook, the sponsor of the bill, told us in his remarks the other day. They follow in the natural course. The honourable sponsor suggested there were two main questions that we have to ask ourselves. The first he posed was:

> ... what is the condition of affairs which the creation of the fishing zones of Canada seeks to correct?

As he explained, and as I have mentioned today, one is the conservation of our fishing industry, and the other is the protection of the fishermen and the industry, as far as this country is concerned.

> The second question Senator Cook posed was:
>
> ... is the creation of the fishing zones of Canada a reasonable exercise of our sovereign rights?

These are the two main issues as far as this bill is concerned.

There are many problems, and many questions will have to be answered. We will want to know with what countries we will need to make agreements. Of course, we know that we will have to make agreements with the United States. I have noticed in the American press, particularly in the American northwest, in the State of Washington, that they are very much concerned over what they consider a possible intrusion on their rights as far as the 12-mile limit is concerned. I am sure that Senator Reid from British Columbia, who is going to speak, can give us a better idea of that. We would like to know whether—when this agreement was made with the United States in 1960 that the traditional rights would last for 10 years, after which Canada would have supreme control of her 12-mile limit—there is still the prospect of having this 10-year phase out limit included.

I mentioned the other day the geographical co-ordinates. Until these are settled and until the people on both coasts of Canada, thousands of miles long, know what bays, inlets and so on are to be the geographical co-ordinates, where the three-mile limit is to begin and what bays are exempted and not open sea, it is going to be very difficult for them to know just what the situation is. Those are things concerning which, when we sit in committee, I hope we will be able to obtain information which will be of great importance and benefit and which will be helpful to those concerned.

I recall that a few years ago, when I was in the House of Commons, the matter of Juan de Fuca Strait, Queen Charlotte Sound and the Hecate Strait, on the west coast, was discussed at considerable length. I believe the honourable Senator Reid took part in that debate, and I recall that the Honourable George Pearkes, the present Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, the Honourable Howard Green and others were very much interested in it. This problem, I believe, will be one of the most difficult to solve.

As I said, honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak at any length. I am very pleased that this matter is up for consideration. I believe that our thorough and careful consideration of this measure in the Senate will prove of great benefit to the fishing industry of this country.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in rising to speak on Bill S-17, The Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, I want at the outset of my remarks to commend highly the Honourable Mr. Robichaud, Minister of Fisheries, who, by this bill, is taking steps to protect Canada's offshore fisheries by extending Canada's fishery control a further nine miles, thereby giving Canada complete fishing rights up to 12 miles off her shores. I would like also to congratulate and compliment Senator Cook on his speech in explanation of Bill S-17.

One has only to read the discussions of conferences held under the auspices of the United Nations to realize the great difficulty of reaching any agreement regarding territorial seas, especially when 88 nations have a voice in such an important matter. Hence, I wish to congratulate the honourable Minister of Fisheries for the step he is now taking on behalf of Canada by introducing this bill. In general, one can see that the action now being taken by Canada will protect fish stocks from being fished by outside countries to the detriment of Canadian fishermen.

It is generally agreed that the navigable waters of the world fall into three categories: first, inland waters, better known as the present three-mile limit; secondly, territorial seas; and thirdly, the high seas.

Inland waters include all bodies of water within the land territory three miles from shore. Over these waters a nation exercises a sovereignty the same as that exercised over its inland territory. This includes the right to exclude foreign vessels from the use of these waters. The outer limit of a nation's inland waters is the inner limit of its territorial sea. The territorial sea is that body of water lying between the outer boundary of the inland water and the inner boundary of the high seas which also forms part of the national territory of the contiguous country, but foreign vessels have the right of innocent passage through it. This privilege is in the nature of a concession, and it may be conditioned by special regulations laid down by the coastal nation for particular purposes connected with the protection of navigation and the execution of laws of that country.

Seaward of the territorial sea is the high seas. Their essential quality is that they are not subject to the sovereignty of any one nation, but every nation has an equal right to use them. Freedom of navigation over, on and under them, freedom of fishing in them, and freedom to lay cables and pipe lines under them are the essential characteristics of the high seas.

The chief arguments among nations in recent years in respect of these types of water has been the manner of delimiting the inner and outer boundary of the territorial sea and the determination of its breadth.

Amongst the various countries the breadth of the territorial sea has not yet been settled upon. There never has been general agreement upon it among nations. In the course of history the pendulum has swung from the Roman concept of mare liberum, to the claims of Spain and Portugal in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries to sovereignty between them over the whole world ocean, and then back again to a three-mile limit during the nineteenth century.

The three-mile limit has never been agreed to among nations. It was imposed by the two prime naval powers, Britain and the United States, for a long period of time. It was agreed to in the first part of this century by countries whose ships carried upwards of 80 per cent of the world's commerce. However, when the League of Nations convened a conference at The Hague in 1930 to consider the codification of the Law of the Sea, there was so much disagreement on what should be the breadth of the territorial sea that no single resolution proposing an appropriate breadth was even put to a vote. That conference was a failure from that cause.

The United Nations, in 1958, convened a conference of plenipotentiaries in Geneva, Switzerland, to consider the Law of the Sea. It was attended by the representatives of 86 sovereign nations.

While the conference was able to reach agreement on nearly all aspects of the Law of the Sea, and codify them in these four conventions, two aspects defied all attempts at agreement. They were: (1) The breadth of the territorial sea; and (2) The jurisdiction by the coastal country over fisheries lying in the adjacent high seas.

In an attempt to resolve these last two remaining points, the United Nations convened a second conference on the Law of the Sea at Geneva in 1960, to which the representatives of 88 countries came. The contest was between those who wished a three-mile territorial sea, and those who wished a 12-mile territorial sea. The three-milers were willing to compromise to a six-mile territorial sea plus fishery rights in an additional six miles. When, after six weeks of intensive debate and manoeuvre, the final vote came on the compromise proposal on April 26, it failed by one vote to gain the required two-thirds majority.

Accordingly, there still is no agreed breadth amongst the 88 nations for the territorial sea.

It was clear that a majority of nations favoured a breadth of territorial sea less than 12 miles. This appeared even more distinctly at the second conference than at the first. The final vote on the United States-Canadian proposal for a six-mile territorial sea, plus six miles of additional fishery jurisdiction, was 54 nations in favour, 28 against, and five abstentions. There were 87 nations voting, and this was nine more affirmative votes than the United States proposal received at the first conference.

The two conferences on the Law of the Sea occurred during that period of history when the contest for world military and diplomatic supremacy between the United States and Russia was on the ascendancy. The conferences bore squarely on the naval aspects of that struggle. Russia was and still is the prime proponent of the 12-mile limit, and the United States of the three-mile. While there were several other important military aspects to this question, the prime one was its effect on free navigation through international straits. It was estimated there were 116 important international straits under a three-mile territorial sea that would fall subject to national sovereignty if a 12-mile territorial sea became international law. Fifty-two of these would be similarly affected if the six-mile rule for the territorial sea were adopted.

The Canadian Government adopted a policy which would rationalize these internal problems. As early as the 1955 Rome Conference on the Conservation of the Living Resources of the Sea, it became evident that the Canadian Government would not vote in favour of any motion which might restrict her ability to claim a 12-mile limit at least for exclusive fishery jurisdiction. By the opening of the first Geneva Conference in 1958, the Canadian position had become plain, positive and public. Its delegation introduced a proposal calling for a three-mile rule for the territorial sea plus a nine-mile additional area for exclusive fishery jurisdiction. Thus the 12-mile fishery limit, as separated from the 12-mile rule for the territorial sea, was officially launched in the international field.

Canada's greatest danger, however, is in the North Pacific. In Alaska the resources giving rise to fishery disputes are salmon, halibut, and King crab. Much larger internationally fished resources in the area which have not as yet given rise to extended disputes are ground fish other than halibut, and sperm whales.

Research of the past 10 years has shown conclusively that all five species of Pacific salmon migrate widely across the North Pacific during their years of feeding in the ocean. Salmon from American streams can be caught abundantly in the western Pacific near Asian shores; salmon from Asian streams migrate far into the Gulf of Alaska. I do not know any serious students of the problem in Alaska or elsewhere who contend that a 12-mile fishing limit, or a 200-mile fishing limit, would be of any more use in the conservation of the salmon resources of Alaska, or Canada, than would a three-mile fishing limit.

I may point out that if the Japanese, particularly, and the Russians come down the Pacific Coast off Alaska, the salmon from the Fraser River will be completely wiped out.

We have absolute scientific proof that the salmon born in the Fraser River go as far north at sea as 1,500 miles before returning to the place where they were born. Naturally, we view with great alarm the opening up of the fisheries of the Pacific, and we realize that Japan particularly wants that fish. Japanese, fishing three miles off the New Zealand coast, are robbing the waters there to the detriment of the fishing industry of that country.

It has been known for 30 years that the halibut of the eastern North Pacific regularly undertake migrations of as much as 1,000 or 2,000 miles, those tagged off Canada being taken off Alaska, and vice versa, and in the intervening high seas. If Canada and the United States both declared and enforced 12-mile fishery limits it would have no appreciable effect on the conservation of the halibut resources upon which both countries fish. Those resources could be quickly and thoroughly depleted through fishing outside a 12-mile fishery zone. This would still be true even if both countries adopted the straight-baseline method of establishing the outer boundary of their inland waters within the limits prescribed by international law.

The fishery for King crab has become important to Japan, Russia and Alaska in the postwar years, but in this species Canada has not yet been substantially involved. King crab are available abundantly inside 12 miles of the shore along the Alaskan Peninsula and off-lying islands. They are also commercially available there outside the 12-mile limit. In the eastern Bering Sea, from whence most King crab are taken, substantially all the production is on the shelf outside 12 miles from any land.

Thus it is clear that a 12-mile rule would have no practical effect on the conservation of these three kinds of resources in the Northeast Pacific, despite the fact that these are the three sorts of resources about which most of the public controversy arises, and the fact that most of the controversy is publicly stated to be over the need for conservation.

The trawl fisheries which Russia and Japan have established for this sort of resource in the Eastern Pacific during the past 10 years have produced well over a million tons of fish per year, much more than the total production of salmon, halibut and King crab in the whole North Pacific put together. During this period of time, Japan built a great fishery for yellow flounder in the Eastern Bering Sea, and fished the resource out so thoroughly that the biggest company involved in the fishery went bankrupt with a crash last year. They appear to be working on the same theory as the logging companies did a generation ago—to harvest the resource as completely as possible, and then wait for a period of years for it to grow up to harvestable level again. This is contrary completely to conservation theory and practice in Canada and the United States, but so far no great cry has been raised.

This situation has been changing in the last few years as the modernized fishing fleets of Russia and Japan have moved into the eastern Bering Sea, then south of the Alaskan Peninsula, and then into the Gulf of Alaska, fishing on resources that Americans and Canadians were using slightly or not at all, and for which they had neither the modern high seas trawlers to take, or the markets in which to dispose of the catch at prices their inefficient small vessels required to make a profit.

But at this point international politics provided the other reason for no major complaint being raised. Politically, the overwhelming fish issue in the Pacific northwest is salmon. Canada and the United States succeeded, following the defeat of Japan, in getting Japan to agree to refrain from taking salmon and halibut east of 175 degrees west longitude for a period of 10 years. This was under a complicated formula based on the fishery resources presently being used to their maximum sustainable level already by Canada and the United States, this being accomplished by regulations adopted on the basis of scientific research. The word used in the treaty is "abstention".

At the moment we do not know what Japan is going to do. She signed almost immediately after being defeated by the Americans—the Americans took control of Japan, if you remember, and as she was beaten down she signed the treaty. The time of that treaty is now up, and for the past six or seven months we have been wondering if she would stay within the treaty or not. My guess is that she will not stay within the treaty. If that happens, God help our fishing industries off the North Pacific coast.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Has the treaty expired now?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Not yet. So they are waiting, trying to get Japan again to sign or agree to the present treaty. The Japanese are on top now, but they were a beaten nation then, and so signed the treaty.

Hon. Mr. Baird: That was 10 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes, but we are wondering now what the Japanese will do about it. It is a very serious question.

In consequence, Canada and the United States unitedly, no matter what their other disputes, laboured vigorously from 1955 through 1960 to get this so-called "principle of abstention" incorporated into international law before the 10-year period of the Tripartite Treaty fully expired. In this they were quite unsuccessful. During the 1958 conference Russia said quite bluntly that it was poppycock to attempt thus to bar nations from high seas resources on purported conservation grounds which were exclusively economic, and it would have no part of any such nonsense. Japan at that time clearly stated that under no consideration would it accept abstention as a general principle, or abide by it even in the North Pacific beyond the 10-year period of the Tripartite Treaty, and that time is up. Canada and the United States have nevertheless continued, wistfully, to hope that the Japanese would be reasonable and continue to abide by this exclusion after the 10-year initial period of the Tripartite Treaty in 1963.

The Russians' pre-war explorations during the 1930's indicated great unused bottom fish resources in the eastern Bering Sea, and as soon as they accumulated the strength they moved into these fisheries during the 1950's. In the last few years they have extended their fisheries gradually down the coast of the Americas, and earlier this year their exploratory vessels were as far south as southern California.

To bring Japan in again for a moment, just as much trouble has been raised in New Zealand. Japan has a big fleet off the New Zealand shores and has taken fish in abundance, fish which was never thought of by the people of New Zealand. They are in doubt just what to do to block the Japanese. They fear the Japanese will fish the area out.

These are the major fishery problems in the northeast Pacific, among Canada, United States, Russia and Japan. A 12-mile fishery limit established by both Canada and the United States would have no substantial or noticeable effect on these problems. Undoubtedly, Russia would be delighted to recognize such a 12-mile rule at once, as supporting its stand that the proper breadth of the territorial sea is 12 miles in any event. Japan would also be pleased to trade that for the other major harassments it presently has. It would not affect by a decimal point the total fish catch of either Russia or Japan.

The third group, halibut men, feel that they just about got a standoff because the Canadian halibut men reason that they will be about as much damaged by a 12-mile rule off southeast Alaska as the Seattle and Ketchikan halibut men will be by a 12-mile rule off British Columbia.

What has excited the Atlantic coast fisherman to grasp suddenly for a 12-mile fishing limit, like a drowning man reaching for a straw, is the appearance of large fleets of Russian fishermen off their coast, where few foreigners had been before, with much better and more modern vessels, gear, and electronic fish detection apparatus than he had ever dreamed of.

As will be noted from what I have said, I am quite skeptical about the 12-mile fishing limit solving any major international fishing problem, not only for the United States and Canada, but for the rest of the world as well. In the case of the United States and Canada, my suspicion is that five years after such a rule is adopted we will still be faced with the same threat of Russian and Japanese fleets off our coast that we now have, perhaps joined by those of other nations—for instance, Spain—who are rather rapidly expanding their long-range fishing efficiency and effectiveness.

It should be pointed out that the world fisheries have doubled in their production in the past 10 years and that their rate of increase of catch is growing rather than diminishing. Another doubling of production from the high seas fisheries in the next 10 years, which I confidently expect, will more than quadruple the intensity of these problems in international competition on the high seas.

Before concluding, there is one particular matter I would like to deal with, namely, that of the proposed 12-mile limit in Queen Charlotte Sound and Hecate Strait. I trust the decision by the Government will be to run a straight line from the tip of Vancouver Island to Cape St. James, Moresby Island, thereby closing Queen Charlotte Sound and Hecate Strait to foreign fishermen, namely, American fishermen. I quite realize that some protest may be raised by United States authorities who might claim historic rights.

I note from the United Nations News that very few countries in the world have any faith in historic rights. I think that Britain, the United States and one or two others are the only countries who take account of or claim historic rights, so I do not think such talk will make any impression on the 88 nations.

I well remember that back in 1934 or 1935, when I was a member of Parliament representing New Westminster riding, I raised the question of Hecate Strait. I remember I said in the House of Commons that in 1878 or 1880 the Ottawa government of that day had sent up a battleship and chased the Americans out. I do not know exactly when the Americans came back to the Hecate Strait, but I know we sent up a gunboat at that time; and apparently Ottawa then forgot all about it. British Columbia apparently did not amount to much then. That province had only four members in Parliament; we were across the seas, as far as Ottawa was concerned, and the Federal Government did not pay much, if any, attention to what we asked for. It was all forgotten, with the result that the Americans have been fishing there for quite a number of years now.

As far as I know, there was no protest from the United States authorities at that time when we chased them out, and there was certainly no cry then by the United States about vested rights. Our fishermen and our fish packers are going to be extremely disappointed if no steps are taken under the proposed new act to restore to the British Columbia fishermen and canners what we firmly believe to be entirely Canadian waters. According to my understanding, very few out of 88 nations, outside of Great Britain, the United States and France, claim historic rights on fishing.

Personally, I believe if Japan withdraws from the present North Pacific Treaty, all our salmon, including the Fraser River salmon, as well as our halibut, could be and will be destroyed. We have ample scientific evidence now that the sockeye travel 1,000 to 1,500 miles from the Fraser River. These are four-year sockeye, as I pointed out many years ago, and they go to sea after one year; so in three years they will travel as much as 1,500 miles and return. We do not know how they find their way back, but they come back to the Fraser River to spawn in the places where they were born. They are our fish. The sockeye of the Fraser River will be destroyed if and when the Japanese come south in the Pacific. It is therefore extremely important right now that we reserve Hecate Strait water for our own Canadian fishermen. If the American fishermen are allowed to continue fishing in Hecate Strait between Queen Charlotte Island and the mainland, it will be more difficult to stop the Japanese and perhaps the Soviet fishing fleets. As I say, it will be extremely difficult, as the Japanese and the Soviet fishing fleets will be able to say, "You are allowing the Americans to fish in there, what is wrong with us? You have set a law of 12 miles out and now you are claiming over 60 miles."

This is one of the fishery problems we will have to face, and perhaps even sooner than I have indicated.

As I say, if the American fishermen are allowed to continue fishing it will be that much more difficult to handle the Japanese fishing fleet and perhaps the Soviet fishing fleet as well. I repeat, it will be extremely difficult for us to bar Japan or Soviet Russia if the United States is allowed to continue fishing in Hecate Strait.

I fully expect that when the bill goes to committee, complete information will be given as to the various clauses of the bill. However, if the committee meets this week, may I say that I will be unavoidably absent. I shall have to return to the coast to attend a special two-day meeting, in the interior of British Columbia, of the International Salmon Commission, of which body I have been a member since its inception in 1935.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, previous speakers have congratulated the Government and honourable Senator Cook on the introduction of Bill S-17 in the Senate. I would like to join in those congratulations. I was very pleased to hear Senator Cook introduce the bill.

As all honourable senators know, Newfoundland has produced many hardy seamen, and it is, I feel, a tribute to Newfoundlanders that their new senator introduced this legislation.

During the present century many nations have become dissatisfied with the traditional three-mile limit. Many nations have extended the territorial seas or claimed jurisdiction over certain areas of the high seas for particular purposes. Twenty nations claim custom rights outside territorial waters; others claim control of pollution outside the three-mile limit. Twenty-four or more nations make claims for jurisdiction over the continental shelf adjacent to their territories.

It has become obvious that many nations are dissatisfied with the principle of the three-mile limit. This feeling of dissatisfaction is further increased with the advent of new fishing methods and the consequent concern for conservation of fisheries resources.

During the past several years Canada, through both the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Fisheries, has taken a leading part in attempting to reach international agreement on the extension of territorial waters. Canada proposed a six-mile territorial sea and an additional six-mile exclusive fishing zone. In suggesting a territorial sea of six miles, the Canadian proposal recognized the concern of all states with the principle of the freedom of the high seas and by allowing the state a further six miles of exclusive jurisdiction. It granted to all coastal states the same measure of control over the economic resources of their adjacent areas as they would have under the 12-mile territorial limit. The proposal in the bill presently before us calls for a three-mile territorial limit and an extension of the exclusive fishing zone beyond the so-called baseline. The variation here from the proposal put forward by Canada in 1958 and in 1960 is really a very minor one, and as far as fisheries are concerned the end result is the same. In January 1963 the Fisheries Council of Canada presented a brief to the former government, in which they recommended five major points. I would like to outline these recommendations:

1. Declare certain bodies of water as Canadian national waters and adopt a straight baseline principle from which that breadth of territorial seas and exclusive fishing zone would be measured.

2. Recognize the historic fishing rights of France and the United States of America in Canadian national waters as established by the Treaty of Utrecht and the Convention of 1818.

3. Enter into negotiations with France and the United States seeking recognition of Canadian waters and the baseline enclosing these waters.

4. Make this a unilateral declaration with regard to Canadian national waters and the straight baseline, once an understanding is reached with France and the United States.

5. Enforce the Canadian maritime boundaries, thereby preventing all other foreign fishing, save the aforesaid, from exploiting the marine resources in the declared national waters and territorial seas.

The brief went on to emphasize that positive action in implementing these recommendations are imperative for a planned program of fisheries management and conservation.

I fully support the view that certain bodies of water adjacent to Canada's coast must be declared Canadian national waters. The waters of the Atlantic coast naturally come first to mind. The Gulf of St. Lawrence, Bay of Fundy, and the Strait of Belle Isle, should be declared and recognized as Canadian national waters. These waters are as Canadian as Hudson's Bay, which has been recognized as Canadian national waters since 1932.

On the Pacific coast similar bodies of water include Hecate Strait, Queen Charlotte Sound and Dixon Entrance. The principle of the straight baseline was recognized by the 1960 conference on the Law of the Sea and we should expect no difficulty in having it recognized by various nations.

The brief of the Fisheries Council of Canada suggested a baseline which I feel should be adopted. The baseline on the Atlantic coast would commence at the international boundaries between Canada and the United States at the south of the St. Croix River, to a point off the southwest tip of Nova Scotia, then in a northeasterly direction to Cape Breton Island, then in an almost northerly direction to Cape Egmont off the Cape Breton coast, then to Channel Head, Newfoundland. The baseline would then travel along the south coast of Newfoundland, avoiding St. Pierre and Miquelon Islands and travel in a northerly direction along the eastern coast of Newfoundland and Labrador.

On the Pacific coast the baseline would commence at the international boundary between Canada and the United States in the Juan de Fuca Strait, then north to Vancouver Island, along Vancouver Island to the outer island of Scott Islands and then in northwesterly direction to the southeast tip of Alaska. These baselines would enclose all the waters which the Fisheries Council of Canada felt should be declared Canadian national waters.

Bill S-17 in essence calls for unilateral action on the part of Canada. This raises a considerable problem with historic fishing rights. The sponsor of the bill has suggested that these problems could best be discussed in committee. However, I feel some mention should be made of these historic fishing rights at this stage. On the Pacific coast, Canadian fishermen have caught fish in the waters off Alaska and Washington, while United States fishermen trawled, long-line for halibut, ground fish and salmon off the British Columbia coast.

France and the United States have historic fishing rights in the proposed Canadian national waters on the Atlantic coast. These date back to the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, modified in 1904, and the Treaty of London in 1818. The Fisheries Council of Canada recommend negotiations with these two countries to reach a mutual understanding, and that unilateral action be taken only after agreement with these two countries. It will be difficult to persuade either country to suddenly drop their historic fishing rights even if Canadians do not have reciprocal rights on the United States Atlantic coast or the French coast. Therefore, I would suggest a gradual phasing out for these two nations. By "phasing out" I mean establishing fishing rights at the six-mile limit when this bill comes into force; then, another five years from now, moving out to the nine-mile limit; and at the end of 10 years, moving out to the 12-mile limit.

Before approving and passing this legislation, Parliament should be informed of the present standing of the negotiations with the United States and France. I am sure that after the experience this Government has had with unilateral action in dealing with the provinces, it will be most reluctant to take unilateral action in dealing with these two nations. Parliament also needs further information on the type of negotiations being conducted. Are we dealing with phasing-out negotiations, or are we considering granting fishing rights to these two nations for all time to come?

The bill before us is enabling legislation, authorizing the drawing of a straight baseline along Canada's coasts from which the territorial seas and fishing zones may be measured. It is important that we have the co-ordinates to be used in establishing the baseline. This lack of information causes considerable concern because it is possible to draw a baseline and leave waters previously suggested, such as the major portion of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, outside the baseline. I hope that either the Leader of the Government or the Minister of Fisheries will give us the assurance that such waters as the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy will be declared Canadian national waters. Shortly after Newfoundland entered into Confederation, the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent stated that he hoped the Gulf of St. Lawrence would soon be national waters. The former Prime Minister, the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, declared his Government took the viewpoint that the Bay of Fundy was national waters when Russian trawlers entered that body of water and were conducting fishing operations there in 1960. Obviously, the time has come to declare this and other bodies of water as Canadian national waters.

Another consideration is the question of the uniformity of the fishing zone. I believe it is possible under this bill for the Government to establish an exclusive fishing zone of various widths. It may be three miles in some areas, and twelve in others. Surely, all Canadian fishermen will receive the same treatment.

The bill does not give the date on which the measure will come into force. No doubt, this is due to the difficulty in determining the length of time this measure will be before Parliament and, perhaps, the length of time required for negotiations on historic fishing rights.

Like my Leader (Hon. Mr. Brooks), I was somewhat surprised when the honourable Senator Cook stated he would move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I would prefer to see this matter dealt with in Committee of the Whole in the Senate itself, and have the Minister of Fisheries appear before the committee. Failing this, it would appear that the External Affairs Committee would be a far more logical forum before which to deal with this matter, particularly in view of the negotiations that will have to be carried on with nations such as France, the United States and Japan.

In the past the Progressive Conservative party has supported the principle of this bill; that is, the so-called 12-mile limit. The Honourable Howard Green and the Honourable Angus MacLean both attempted to obtain international agreement through the United Nations. It is still the feeling of our party that Canada should attempt to obtain agreement through the United Nations. Unilateral action is too dangerous, both to our reputation as a nation and to our fishing industry. As I stated earlier, the Fisheries Council of Canada recommended unilateral action only after negotiations with the United States and France were successfully completed.

Bill S-17 is unilateral in nature, in spite of the fact it was Prime Minister Pearson who first proposed the so-called 6 and 6 formula in 1956 at the United Nations. Now we find the Prime Minister being responsible for a bill which calls for action outside the United Nations. I find it rather difficult to imagine our Prime Minister abandoning the United Nations for "gunboat" diplomacy.

Seventy per cent of our fisheries products are sold in the United States. If unilateral action is taken by Canada, then in all probability the Americans will retaliate by imposing tariffs on Canadian fish entering the United States. As the honourable Senator

Brooks mentioned earlier, the New England states have a very active lobby calling for tariffs on fish entering the United States from Canada. Indeed, it was only the veto action of former President Eisenhower that prevented these tariffs from being imposed. If this were to happen it would mean the ruination of our frozen fish industry in Canada and would have an adverse effect on the lobster fishing in the Atlantic provinces.

The wording of the bill itself is ambiguous. I find section 5(1) most ambiguous. This is probably due to the fact that I do not have legal training. It states:

> The Governor in Council may, by order in council, issue one or more lists of geographical co-ordinates of points from which baselines may be determined and may, as he deems necessary, amend such lists.

The inference there seems to be that while the order in council may be made it also may not, and unless action is taken to establish these co-ordinates and the exclusive fishing zone, the passing of this bill will do very little to change the situation. The Governor in Council may at some future date decide on the co-ordinates and publish them. On the other hand, it could be years before action is taken. If the Government follows its usual course of retreating and deleting, by the time this bill passes the other place there will be very little left in it.

Honourable senators, I believe the Senate should take time to study all the effects of this legislation. The original copy of the bill I received last Friday was marked "confidential" and was dated April 17. Since that time we have not been given any of the co-ordinates, and one rather gets the impression the Government is more interested in the May 15 deadline than they are in the fishing industry.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if the honourable gentleman would mind my interrupting here, just to say one thing. When the bill received first reading in this house on Thursday last, the confidential character of the document circulated from my desk was removed automatically. I just want to assure him—and I do not think many members of the Senate need to be assured—that the purpose of circulating the bill at that time was for the convenience of honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I appreciate the viewpoint of the Leader of the Government, but I think he is overlooking the point that I am trying to make, and that is that the bill was prepared by at least April 17, and two weeks later there are still no co-ordinates.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Surely the honourable gentleman does not have to refer to that kind of thing at this time. I think in the interests of the Senate it might be preferable not to discuss that aspect of the matter.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I do not wish to enter into any extended argument with the Leader of the Senate, but I do feel that the co-ordinates are the basis of the whole bill, and we should have information on the co-ordinates to give an accurate assessment of the value of the bill. That is the point I am trying to make. Perhaps he misunderstood me.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): On that point I have no complaints.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: In closing my remarks, I wish once again to urge the Senate to give careful study to this bill, and to take all the time honourable senators feel is necessary. The Leader of the Government has assured us that there is no deadline to meet. I would also ask them to give consideration to the importance of the co-ordinates, and the difficulties that we are going to meet in taking unilateral action.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, I know we have all listened with interest and benefit to the speeches already made on the subject of this proposed 12-mile limit. I was particularly glad to hear the honourable senator from Newfoundland, Senator Cook, introduce the bill. He is an eminent legal authority in Newfoundland, and as such one must know something about the fisheries. Besides that, his province is adjacent to the best fishing grounds in the world, and Newfoundlanders have always been known as good sailors and great fishermen.

We heard also from the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks). Although he does not come from a county that borders the sea, he comes from one that is very close to it, and he expressed his pleasure that this important bill came first to the Senate. From his speech it appears he found out that with a minority government it is hard to get ahead. With this bill coming first to the Senate, it is an opportunity, when we have a minority government, to show what we can do. I think the Senate will do a good job with this legislation.

I was also pleased to hear my old friend Senator Reid from British Columbia speak on this bill. I have always envied the way they handle their fisheries on the Pacific Coast. The 12-mile limit, he says, is not very good for them, that they would need provisions that extend farther out to sea. So far as the halibut and salmon fisheries are concerned, over the years they have had many conferences of the sea, and also some dealing with the seal fisheries. I realize from Senator Reid's speech that they have something to fear, because Japan is the biggest producer of fish in the world. In that regard they are having some trouble at the present time, as I read in Time magazine of October 11, 1963:

> Even the conference table can become chilly; last week in Tokyo, Japanese, U.S. and Canadian delegates laboured through the fifth week of a conference stalemated by a U.S.-Canadian refusal to let Japanese fishermen fish for trout, halibut and salmon east of the 175th longitude.

I think that word "trout" is a mistake and should mean some other fish. That 175th degree of longitude is well out in the Pacific. I hope our friends will succeed in their efforts in that regard, because to keep another country that far away from one's own shores would be exceedingly beneficial.

The honourable senator from Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Phillips) has the distinction of coming from the Island province of the Minister of Fisheries in the previous administration. This is a good fishing district, and it is surrounded by a sea well stocked with many kinds of fish. I know that Senator Phillips has given considerable study to this matter, and that he will be helpful in committee when the bill comes before it. I expect he can always consult with the former Minister of Fisheries who, I am sure, will give him good information.

During the last presidential election in the United States one of the candidates had a very colourful theme, which he called "The New Frontier." It was not directed at getting more property or more territory for the United States; it was for the benefit of and the uplifting of the citizens of that country. Their President has been going around that country even recently talking about the weak spots in their economy, saying that they must abolish poverty, that they have to do something in order to bring up the standard of their people to where it should be.

Honourable senators, this is our new frontier. In this free and abundant country of ours we also have these problems of weak spots in the economy. I know of no greater problem area than that of our shore fishermen, so-called, who live in isolated places along our shores from the American border to Baffinland and beyond. We think they deserve attention; we think this measure is something that will bring orderly fishing to the places where they carry on their business; we think it will allow them to carry on their fishing under conditions where they need not fear the heavier trawlers which should be fishing in the deep sea, and where they will have protection for their work and for their gear. We hope our shore fishermen will have a better opportunity and a larger area for their work, and that they may get a better share of the abundance of this country which they deserve.

It is well known that we need conservation in the fisheries of our country. We have noticed in the North Sea, where it was fished for a long time, that when the fish got scarce the trawlers went over to Iceland, and that was a situation that neither the Englishmen nor anybody else liked.

We would like to see conditions on the Atlantic Coast such that the shore fishermen would have the opportunity they rightly deserve. Fishing fleets now come from everywhere to our fisheries in Canada because the fishing is good, but if that continues, and if we fish in the wasteful way we have been doing along our shores, and if we continue to see the small fish, such as the herring, disappear—because the big fish live on the little fish—after a time the fishing will become unprofitable for those people who come to our shores, and they will leave to go elsewhere. However, our small fishermen would still be there, and notwithstanding that it would be hard going, they must still get their living from the sea. Therefore, we feel that conservation properly applied would not only help them at the present time but would protect their heritage for the benefit of generations yet unborn.

As to the matter of these fishery limits, we were told that we were going to do certain things and have respect for traditional and historic rights of others. I do not know that anybody shares that intention, except France and the United States. France is in a peculiar position, in that they have the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, within 10 miles of the coast of Newfoundland.

These islands are in the midst of fertile waters and have the best fishing on the coast. I do not think that the French nation, or even the French people on these islands, will want the big trawlers, the otter trawlers, using machine productions, to come close and destroy the business of their shore fisheries, because they have many shore fisheries in St. Pierre and Miquelon. They fish in dories and produce a lot of fish.

With regard to France's rights, I read in the Illustrated London News of March 21 of this year an article on the Anglo-French Entente Cordiale. This was in connection with French and British people. We were told that King Edward, who succeeded Queen Victoria, was one of the best peacemakers we have ever had. I never thought much about that. My grandmother used to tell me Edward would be a great peacemaker, and this article came particularly to my attention because of that. It tells of Edward's operations in France, where he made friends in France, so that the Entente Cordiale was established between the two countries.

Let me read about France's historic rights:

> On April 8, 1904, less than a year after the visit, the Entente Cordiale came into being. It took the form of three conventions amounting to compensatory bargains for the settlement of colonial rivalries. In one convention France received territorial concessions on the coast of West Africa, Gambia and Nigeria, to compensate her for giving up her "Treaty-Shore" rights in Newfoundland. In another convention Britain recognized France's position in Madagascar and received compensating concessions. In the third, France recognized British rights in Egypt while Britain gave her carte blanche in Morocco, provided she erected no fortifications opposite Gibraltar.

Now there, you see, is the condition of France.

I understand that they had similar rights, judicial rights as to fishing, as those granted to the Americans. You know, there were so many wars between France and England during the early days that you never knew exactly through history when things started or how they began. However, we do know that in the Island of Cape Breton the French had extensive fish operations before the fall of Louisbourg; and after the fall of Louisbourg these gradually declined.

It seems to me, as far as France is concerned with her possessions near the Newfoundland coast, that they have a rendezvous for Spanish and French trawlers, and the Portuguese come there also; but those are officially a hook-and-line fleet, not a fleet that does much damage to the fisheries of this part of the country.

With regard to the United States, I think we had a convention with them on October 20, 1818. That convention gave to them the right to take fish on certain portions of the coast of Newfoundland, a part of Labrador and the Magdalen Islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. These fishing rights were granted in perpetuity, but then they had the right to cure and dry fish on the uninhabited parts of this territory, and that made it not a permanent agreement, but an agreement so long as people did not settle in these parts.

Well, in those days it was an important concession, because the fishermen had to go down there in sailing schooners from Boston —Gloucester, I mean; Boston came later. They had to go down to the coast of Newfoundland, because they had to catch fish, first for bait, and for this operation they used seines and jiggers. Then they used the bait on their trawls to catch cod, halibut and haddock.

The air in Newfoundland is well suited to the drying of salted fish—and it was the days of the salt fishing trade—and they would land their catches on the beach and would go hunting for bait while part of the crew were curing the fish on the beach. So they had their fish all properly prepared for the American and other markets.

That is all outmoded at the present time. Nobody from the United States wants to dry and cure fish on Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Baird: I would like to tell the honourable senator that the drying of fish in Newfoundland is solely due to the salubrious climate, as I expressed it the other day.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Oh, yes, I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Baird: I just wanted that on the record.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: That is an historic right but it is of no value; nobody wants to do that at the present time. It is a fresh fish operation for the United States altogether. They have refrigeration and mechanical drying, if they need it. That is one of the only rights I know they have. Now the only one which would be of any use at all is the taking of fish in perpetuity. They could take fish right up to the coast. They need not even stay outside the three-mile limit.

This agreement was complicated and so much discussed that they had to appoint an arbitration committee to decide how the internal affairs should be arranged. In this arbitration the British contended that the Americans did not have the sovereign rights which they claimed, but had only the liberty to catch fish in common with the inhabitants of Newfoundland. They had this, and the British claimed that they had a right to make the municipal laws that would govern the operation. The committee decided that they had the right to catch fish, in common with the people of Newfoundland; but with regard to the way they do it, they had to defer to the will of the municipality.

They have long since changed their method of fishing. Now they are fishing with machines and trawlers. There were three conditions: first, they could fish only in the time and in the seasons when the Newfoundlanders and the British Government allowed; secondly, they could use only the methods of production and the machinery and the way of fishing that the Newfoundlanders allowed and that the British Government allowed; and there were some other similar subjects applicable to the situation.

All Canada has to do today is to invoke the restrictions above and the trawlers can not go in there and fish. Canada has the power to say what kind of fishing can be done on that coast. Therefore I do not think that that is very much good as a traditional right.

However, other agreements were made with the United States. I come now to a very important treaty, the Washington Treaty of 1871. In that treaty the same rights that were granted in 1818 were granted to American inhabitants or arranged with Newfoundland, and were granted in Quebec, Nova Scotia, the Colony of Prince Edward Island, in New Brunswick and Newfoundland.

With the Washington Treaty of 1871 there was a degree of reciprocity with the United States. Our fishermen could fish on the coasts of the United States down as far as part of the coast of Virginia, and also have freedom of trade in fishery products back and forth between the two countries. That carried on for a number of years, I think 10 years, and after that they could give notice. I think the United States gave notice that they wanted to stop it.

This Washington Treaty was a very important one. It dealt with the Alabama Claims, and with all the things which were troublesome between the United States and Canada. Negotiations were mostly through the British government. This was the treaty that gave to the United States free passage and navigation in the St. Lawrence River forever, where the river parted from their territory; the rights were on the lower reaches of the St. Lawrence River to the sea.

It also was on this treaty that the conflict arose as to who was getting the better of the bargain on fishing rights. An arbitration committee met in Halifax and gave the Halifax award. They gave $1 million to Nova Scotia and $2 million to the Maritimes in order to compensate them for what was thought by the arbitration committee to be a one-sided bargain.

At other times, Newfoundland wanted to make agreements with the United States, and the Canadians would object to it, and the British would therefore not concur in the agreements.

We travelled on a long time and what was known as a modus vivendi was adopted, a way of living, which we carried on for 10 years.

Then you remember we had the offer of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1911, which I thought was one of the best agreements in the interests of this country we could ever have. But this country turned it down. We did not have good fishing relations with the United States until Mr. Mackenzie King came back into power, and we negotiated a reciprocity treaty with them. That treaty gave us a better entrance to the American market.

I think we still operate under most of the provisions of that treaty. We must remember that the Americans are the biggest importers of fish in the world, and they are a big market for Canadian fish. They are importers from all countries, including Iceland. Iceland showed their hand, and demanded that the fishing should be protected.

I do not think that the United States of America would do anything that would impair the entry of Canadian fish, which they so badly need at the present time; moreover, the balance of trade is most favourable to the United States, Canada being their best customer.

I think the United States and France would be in favour of conservation, and we do need it. The Americans, I think, are not a big producer of fish. They produce about 6.5 billion pounds, while Canada produces 2.3 billion pounds, and Japan 14.8 billion pounds, the highest in the world. My honourable friend talks about Spain. I think Spain produces as much fish as the United States.

With regard to what other people are doing in the world, as we have been told, they are trying to develop their fisheries and they are attempting to extend their territories in a unilateral way. The United States has, I think, only three miles of territorial sea. Somebody mentioned six miles. They were trying to deal with it at the United Nations, which is authoritative, but there is a provision whereby if you have a private agreement with another nation, the United Nations will not interfere with it. Under our private agreement with the United States we have a three-mile limit.

First we want to see what this bill is all about; then we want to find out why we want it; and then we must see if it will cause us undue trouble with our neighbours.

At the meeting in 1957 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, it was decided, with respect to a bay, that:

> If the distance between the low-water marks of the natural entrance points of a bay does not exceed twenty-four miles, a closing line may be drawn between these two low-water marks, and the waters enclosed thereby shall be considered as internal waters.

Our present agreement with the Americans is 10 miles across the first place where the inlet is that distance across—it is here increased to 24 miles. I do not think that would be satisfactory for us at the present time in the case of the Bay of Fundy and some places in Newfoundland. We would, of course, love to have the Gulf of St. Lawrence as a part of the protected area. The distance from St. Paul's Island to Cape Ray is about 45 miles. That 45 miles is the Cabot Strait where all nations have the right of innocent entry and passage. When it comes to the Bay of Fundy, you must remember that that is an international bay, as the Americans are on one side and we are on the other.

It seems to me that if we could put a line from Brion Island across to the border we would do pretty well as far as the Bay of Fundy is concerned.

There has been some talk about "going this alone," and we could go it alone.

Article 6 of the Convention on Fishing and Conservation of the Living Resources of the High Seas, adopted by the conference at its 18th plenary meeting, states:

> 1. A coastal state has a special interest in the maintenance of the productivity of the living resources in any area of the high seas adjacent to its territorial sea.

Article 7 states:

> 1. Having regard to the provisions of paragraph 1 of Article 6, any coastal state may, with a view to the maintenance of the productivity of the living resources of the sea, adopt unilateral measures of conservation appropriate to any stock of fish or other marine resources in any area of the high seas adjacent to its territorial sea, provided that negotiations to that effect with the other states concerned have not led to an agreement within six months.

Therefore, we are not now placed in a hazardous position.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Would the honourable gentleman tell us what he is reading from?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I am reading from the Convention on Fishing and Conservation of the Living Resources of the High Seas.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Dated when?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: 1957.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is it not a fact, under that particular annex, that if other nations should disagree with the unilateral action to which he has referred, it would be necessary to place the matter before a committee of five other nations for decision? If the honourable senator will continue, I think he will find that.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It is not stated in this article.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: In any event, there will be an opportunity to discuss these matters in committee. What I wish to point out is that Article 1 says:

> 1. The sovereignty of a State extends, beyond its land territory and its internal waters, to a belt of sea adjacent to its coast, described as the territorial sea.
>
> 2. This sovereignty is exercised subject to the provisions of these articles and to other rules of international law.

Now, with regard to the Americans: I had an opportunity to speak on this subject last session during the debate on the Speech from the Throne; I regard it as a subject of importance, and therefore concentrated my remarks on it. At that time I read an article from the New York Times reprinted in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, in which approval was given of what is being done. There is no difference in principle between their country and Canada on this matter. In fact, the Americans intimated that they should be doing something for themselves.

May I read from a striking article in Time magazine of October 11 last, entitled "Fishing":

> In the midst of all its other problems—from the tax cut to civil rights—the Senate of the U.S. last week found time to take up two bills that are essentially wartime measures. Wartime, that is, for the U.S. fishing industry. Across the world's oceans in recent months, dozens of fishing nations have battled in a series of "fish wars"—usually nonviolent but sometimes under gunpoint—that have important economic and political consequences for the nations involved. As one of the participants, the $381 million U.S. fishing industry has turned to the Government for help that most of the world's other fishing fleets already receive.

As we know, the fishing industry in Canada is subsidized to the extent of 35 per cent. This has had a powerful effect on the fishing and marine industry in the Maritime provinces, and I think accounts for much of our prosperity at the present time; we hope it will continue. The United States has taken notice of it, and feels something should be done about the industry in that country.

> Spurred by the presence of Russian trawlers that have invaded traditional U.S. fishing areas off the Northeast coast, the Senate passed a bill empowering the Administration to penalize foreign fishing vessels that venture into U.S. territorial waters, and extending U.S. jurisdiction to include the waters of the continental shelf.

That is a long way out. One should bear in mind that this magazine is regarded as one on which one can rely.

Continuing:

> The next day the Senate approved a bill granting a 55 per cent Government construction subsidy for the U.S. fleet, which is woefully antiquated in comparison with the fleets of other major fishing nations. The U.S. industry, warned Senator Warren G. Magnuson, "is caught in a cold and losing wet war with Soviet Russia, Japan and other foreign nations."
>
> Antitank Guns. Moving onto Georges Bank off Cape Cod and the Grand Banks off Newfoundland, proliferating Russian trawlers snag American nets, ram smaller boats in the fog and often force fishermen right off the banks; in Alaska, fishermen recently became so furious about Russian trawlers pulling their crab pots that they began ordering antitank guns to mount on their decks, were dissuaded only by a flying visit from Alaska Governor William A. Egan. Texas shrimpers have to deal with Mexican gunboats that wait to pounce on them over western Gulf of Mexico shrimp beds; and San Diego tuna men are still bitter about last spring's capture of two of their boats by Ecuador, which assessed $26,000 in fines.
>
> U.S. fishermen are not the only ones whose tempers have been rubbed as raw as a seaman's salt-sanded hands. The Brazilians and the French have vied with gunboats over Brittany lobster—boats working in traditional Brazilian fishing waters. Icelandic gunboats chased British trawlers from Iceland's cod grounds, and the Danes are shooing them away from the Faroe Islands. Norway is chasing Swedish fishermen from grounds that the Swedes have fished for hundreds of years. Japanese boats are barred from South Korea, badgered by the Russians in the North Pacific. Irish corvettes have scattered Dutchmen and Belgians from Ireland's herring grounds, and Canada last year ordered a Russian fleet out of the Bay of Fundy. Even the conference table can become chilly; last week in Tokyo, Japanese, U.S. and Canadian delegates labored through the fifth week of a conference stalemated by a U.S.-Canadian refusal to let Japanese fishermen fish for trout, halibut and salmon east of the 175th longitude.

That shows that the United States is taking action unilaterally, and that it has its problems. If it is against conservation on the North Atlantic coast for the fisheries on which it depends so much, I do not see how it can reconcile that attitude with the interest it has shown. As I have stated, Japan is the biggest producer of fish in the world. Over 25 nations have adopted a 12-mile limit. Africa has decided to do so. Russia has adopted a 12-mile limit on both the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. Norway also has a 12-mile limit. I am glad to see that Parliament is taking some action with regard to the adoption of a 12-mile limit for Canada on the North Atlantic.

Three things are needed: first, orderly fishing for the shore fishermen, and protection of their activities; secondly, safety for their gear; and, thirdly, conservation. These are mutual needs, both of our people and the Americans. We are the two nations that must agree, and I think if we can agree with the Americans we shall have very little trouble with anyone else.

Honourable senators, I am pleased to see this bill before this house and to see that everyone is in favour of it. We all talk a little politics at times and try to make our story sound good; and I do not blame our friends for doing that. However, the people of the Maritime provinces know this story well, and you cannot tell them anything they do not know about the 12-mile limit and the troubles they have. The deep-sea fishing fleet is very prosperous in the Maritime provinces. It is a mass-production unit, catching a lot of small fish, and while the nets are large in the mesh to let the small fish out, once you get to the bottom layer of the net the top fish get very little chance. However, we are getting to the stage where the small fish are becoming of increasing value. They are called "scrods". The Americans advertise them as quite a delicacy. They are appearing frequently on the menus of American hotels, and the price is becoming sufficiently high that they can now be sold advantageously on the market.

I know that the Banking and Commerce Committee is a good body, and included in its membership is splendid legal talent. I have no doubt there is similar talent in the membership of the External Affairs Committee. At the moment I do not know who is the chairman of that committee.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Senator Thorvaldson.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Well, he comes from Manitoba. Only 9½ per cent of the world's fish are caught in inland lakes and rivers. It is not much, but it represents quite a large amount in Canada. The Leader of the Government no doubt has some view as to which committee he thinks this bill should be referred. It is my impression that of all the committees of the Senate, the Banking and Commerce Committee represents the widest experience and the greatest variety of talent. I believe this bill would receive careful consideration in that committee. I may add that it is a splendid and interesting committee, and we learn a lot when we attend its meetings. I hope we will give this bill our best attention.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, if we are all agreed that we have had enough fish for one day, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hollett, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Resolutions numbered 219 to 251, inclusive, which were presented on Thursday, April 30.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 219, for the relief of Shirley Ann Hinman Charlow.

Resolution 220, for the relief of Bernice Boyce LeBlanc.

Resolution 221, for the relief of Geraldine Edith Joan Girouard Gagne.

Resolution 222, for the relief of Connie Cohen Caplan.

Resolution 223, for the relief of Joan Hilda Holgate Murray.

Resolution 224, for the relief of Constance Lorraine Brown Jackson.

Resolution 225, for the relief of Shirley Christina Anne Rose Stamper.

Resolution 226, for the relief of Eileen Owens Parent.

Resolution 227, for the relief of Earl Hayward Coveduck.

Resolution 228, for the relief of Genowefa Czernianin Delego.

Resolution 229, for the relief of Barbara Schultz Dumansky.

Resolution 230, for the relief of Mary Astrakianakis Kardaras.

Resolution 231, for the relief of Helen Miriam Simond Selby.

Resolution 232, for the relief of Nina Bruneau Choquette.

Resolution 233, for the relief of Wasyl Kaprian.

Resolution 234, for the relief of Joseph Hilderic Albert Joffre Vachon.

Resolution 235, for the relief of Henri Verrier.

Resolution 236, for the relief of Margaret Alguire Mallette.

Resolution 237, for the relief of Elizabeth Anne Walford Wood.

Resolution 238, for the relief of Joseph Jean Plante.

Resolution 239, for the relief of Louisa Greig McAleer.

Resolution 240, for the relief of Micheline Deyglun Holowaty.

Resolution 241, for the relief of Marie Catherine Beaubien Frances Drumm Mathieu.

Resolution 242, for the relief of Jean Zalloni.

Resolution 243, for the relief of Hans Ulrich Lewin.

Resolution 244, for the relief of Andrew Sallai.

Resolution 245, for the relief of Lionel Samuel Tiger.

Resolution 246, for the relief of Louisa Simard Flynn.

Resolution 247, for the relief of Cacilie Johanna Friederike Hagedorn Kaat.

Resolution 248, for the relief of Marion Daphune Cormier Armour.

Resolution 249, for the relief of Joseph Alfred Michel Andre Pierre Mercier.

Resolution 250, for the relief of Neilson Harold Dowsley.

Resolution 251, for the relief of Richard Wilfrid Earl Hogan.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 5, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

LES SCOUTS CATHOLIQUES DU CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot presented Bill S-19, to incorporate Les Scouts Catholiques du Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-10, to provide for the establishment of harbour commissions, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 7: Strike out subclause (2) of clause 17 and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) All books, accounts, records and documents of the Commission shall be at all reasonable times open for inspection by the Minister or by a person authorized by the Minister for such purpose, or, in the case of a municipality having a substantial interest in the harbour, as determined by the Minister, by the auditors of such municipality."

2. Page 9: Srike out clause 27 and substitute therefor the following:

"27. The Governor in Council may order any Commission established pursuant to this Act to wind up its affairs and may by proclamation dissolve any Commission in respect of which such an order has been made: Provided that such order or proclamation shall become effective only upon the expiration of ninety days from the date of the publication thereof in the Canada Gazette."

3. Page 9: Strike out subclause (2) of clause 30 and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) No proclamation shall be issued pursuant to subsection (1) unless the Governor in Council has received
(a) a by-law passed by the Commission requesting the Governor in Council to declare the Commission to be established pursuant to this Act; and
(b) a resolution or resolutions approving such by-law, passed by the council of any municipality having power to appoint or to participate in the appointment of a member of the Commission, or where there is more than one such municipality, by the councils of a majority of such municipalities."

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, these are three fairly substantial amendments to this bill. I would suggest that we allow consideration of the report to stand until tomorrow, and I could then explain the amendments. In the meantime the amendments will be printed and the item will appear on the Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I should think that would be very satisfactory.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, I give notice that on Thursday next I will move for an amendment to the Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate of Canada relating to Resolutions for the Dissolution or Annulment of Marriages as follows:

1. Immediately after paragraph (g) of clause 1 of Rule 162 insert the following:

"(h) a statement of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof;"

From time immemorial—at least, since I have been a member of the committee—petitioners have always been required to include this information in their petitions, but when the new rules were drawn, for some unaccountable reason which I cannot explain this clause was not included, although this practice is being continued now in the taking of evidence.

The amendment continues:

2. Re-letter paragraph (h) of clause 1 of Rule 162 as paragraph "(i)".

3. Immediately after paragraph 5 of Form C-1 (General Form of Petition) insert the following:

"6. That the following is a statement under Rule 162 of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof. (If no previous proceedings, so state)."

4. Re-number paragraphs 6 and 7 of Form C-1 as paragraphs 7 and 8.

We are now about to print a second edition of the Standing Rules and Orders, and these changes should be incorporated in it.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO STUDY REPORT—ORDER STANDS

On the Notice of Motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson:

That the Fifty-Fourth Report of the Department of External Affairs, covering the calendar year 1963, laid before the House on February 25th, 1964, pursuant to section 6 of the External Affairs Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for consideration.

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I just wish to say that I am ready to proceed with this motion today, or at any other convenient time, but I understand that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) would like the debate on the second reading of Bill S-17 to continue this afternoon. Consequently, I am content that my motion should stand.

Order stands.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, for the second reading of Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I am very glad to note that at last the Government has seen fit to present Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada. You all remember of course that it was an election promise made prior to April 8. Now we have it. I believe it was understood that this bill would be brought in and passed at least before the fifteenth day of this month, so I shall do nothing to tie it up.

Since the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, held at Geneva in 1958, the fishing limits as they apply to us in Canada, and particularly to the province from which I come, Newfoundland, have been very much under discussion. The more I study the matter, and in particular the United Nations conference of 1958, and also the conference which took place in 1960, the more dubious I am as to whether or not a bill such as this, which would supposedly allow Canada to act unilaterally on the limits of the territorial sea and the fishing limits, is likely to give us a workable solution of the problem.

I would like it clearly understood that I am entirely in favour of a 12-mile limit—a little more if we could get it—but I wish it just as clearly understood that I have grave doubts as to this method of procedure to obtain it.

The big question which confronts my thinking on the subject is this. Have we as a single nation the right to assign to ourselves any portion of the high seas? Honourable senators will remember that all the seas outside the territorial limits are the high seas. In 1958 at Geneva certain resolutions were passed and became international law as they apply to us. For instance, in Annex I we find described and defined in certain instances the territorial sea, which extends beyond its land territory and its internal waters to a belt of sea adjacent to its coast. It does not there definitely state the extent of this territorial sea.

Under Article 3, section 2, the normal baseline for measuring the breadth of the territorial sea is the low water line along the coast as marked on large scale charts officially recognized by the coastal state.

Honourable senators, you will agree that this is not very definite. In the first place, the baseline from which the territorial sea of any state is measured outwards certainly does not appear to be clearly defined. If you will read Article 4, Annex I, of the 1958 convention you will understand exactly what I mean. However, a method is defined which states that the drawing of such baselines must not depart to any appreciable extent from the general direction of the coast.

At this point I should like to take the opportunity to congratulate honourable Senator Cook, who explained the bill, on the able manner in which he spoke on this troublesome subject. Senator Cook spoke of the geographical co-ordinates of points from which baselines may be determined. These points may be described and issued by the Governor in Council. In other words, even yet we do not know where our baseline can be found. It has to be found and described by the Governor in Council.

Honourable senators, as most of you know, we have in Newfoundland several large indentations or bays. If you take for instance Placentia Bay, the district in which I was born, you will realize it is important for us to know just how the baseline will be described by these co-ordinate points. I would like to point out that Placentia Bay is a particularly good fishery area. If the baseline goes down on the east side of the bay and then the territorial sea goes out three miles and the fishing limits a further nine miles, we just have 12 miles on each side of this bay, which leaves a vacant area down through the centre, through which foreign vessels may come in and do their trawling.

Having spoken of Placentia Bay, I could also speak of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. We all know the distance between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, and if we have a 12-mile limit on either side, there is ample space to fish there, and space in the gulf for foreign trawlers. There are similar bays in Newfoundland. In that particular bay there is considerable inshore fishing. If the baseline runs down the shore, along the eastern side of the Burin Peninsula, as I pointed out, it would leave an opening for foreign fishing vessels.

Section 5 says:

> The Governor in Council may—

I draw attention to the word "may".

> —by order in council, issue one or more lists of geographical co-ordinates of points—

Under the present international law, in localities where the coastline is deeply indented and cut into, as it is in Newfoundland, the method of straight baselines joining appropriate points may be employed in drawing the baseline from which the breadth of the territorial sea is measured. The whole value of this, of course, depends upon the interpretation of the words "appropriate points." If it were from cape to cape, or from headland to headland, it would be clear. I take it that the Governor in Council will have this in mind when issuing the lists of the geographical co-ordinates. However, it is most important, not only in Newfoundland but all along the east coast of Canada, to make the correct decision when defining the baseline. In this connection they will have to be guided by Article 7 to the annex, which I quoted a moment ago, where it states that an indentation shall not be regarded as a bay unless its area is as large as, or larger than, that of the semi-circle whose diameter is a line drawn across the mouth of that indentation. I am quite sure that is quite plain to everyone here.

Here again, I should like to refer to the convention of 1958, and the international law as laid down by that convention, with reference to the high seas. It will be noted that under this bill now before the Senate, the territorial sea will extend only three miles from the baseline; but if you will refer to Article 1 of Annex 2 of the aforementioned convention, you will find the following:

> The high seas means all parts of the sea that are not included in the territorial sea or in the internal waters of the state.

In other words, the high seas include all waters outside of the territorial sea here in Canada.

In Article 2, we see the following:

> The high seas being open to all nations, no state may validly purport to subject any part of them to its sovereignty. Freedom of the high seas is exercised under the conditions laid down by these articles and by the other rules of international law. It comprises, inter alia, both for the coastal and non-coastal states:
>
> 1. Freedom of navigation,
>
> 2. Freedom of fishing—

In my opinion, we have jurisdiction over the territorial sea which extends outward only three miles; but as far as I can see, for fishing purposes we have no jurisdiction whatsoever outside that three-mile line, which is described as the high seas. That is why I have some doubt as to whether we are approaching this in the correct manner. Under this bill we propose to take possession, for the purposes of fishing, of an area of the high seas which extends outwardly nine miles from the territorial sea. I sincerely hope we can do this. However, I feel that unless we can get agreement internationally, either at the Geneva conference of the United Nations, or in consultation with the other states of the world, which have been fishing for a number of years within that particular area, then I am afraid we are going to run into serious difficulties. I do feel that it would be much better for us to risk running into these difficulties than to do nothing whatsoever.

I should like to point out, however, that there seems to be an "out" for us under Annex III, where it was agreed that, in consideration of the development of modern techniques for the exploitation of the living resources of the sea, which has exposed some of these resources to the danger of being overexploited and, considering also the nature of the problems involved in the conservation of the living resources of the high seas, there is a clear necessity that they be solved whenever possible on the basis of international co-operation through the concerted action of all states concerned.

Taking that into consideration, the 86 nations assembled in Geneva in 1958 laid down certain methods whereby conservation measures might be carried out, and a method was declared under Article 9 of said Annex III whereby any disputes arising between states—and I anticipate some disputes after this bill becomes law—as to conservation measures could be peaceably settled. I will not go into these methods, but I do feel that they will have to be employed in certain instances where fishing vessels of other nations, in times past, have been accustomed to fishing just outside our territorial sea.

It will be remembered that at the first convention, general agreement seemed to be reached as to the defining of our territorial sea but no agreement could be reached relative to fishing limits.

At the second Geneva Convention, which was held from March 17 to April 27, 1960, there were times when it appeared that the nations could come to some terms on the definition of fishing limits for the various nations but, in spite of many compromises, not only by Canada but by the United States and other nations, the conference broke up without coming to any understanding as to what should or should not be the fishing limits of the various nations.

At this stage I should like to point out that the last previous Government of Canada during that period made every possible effort to secure the 12-mile limit. In that connection I should like to quote from the foreword of a pamphlet put out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in December 1959, which reads as follows:

> The second United Nations Conference on the law of the sea, which is to be held in Geneva next spring, provides the nations of the world with a second chance—possibly the last for some years to come—to reach agreement on the breadth of the territorial sea and on fishing limits. The impressive achievements of the First Conference give encouragement for the prospect of reaching a solution of the two remaining areas of disagreement. The goal of a complete code of international law is so close at hand that the nations which will participate at the next conference cannot afford to let the opportunity pass.

I cite this to show again how difficult the problem is; and I, at any rate, appreciate this special effort which is now being made by the present administration to raise some hope for those of our men who go down to the sea in ships to earn their livelihood, even though I doubt that it is the best method of approach.

Also, I should like to refer you to an address delivered at the annual meeting of the United Maritime Fishermen, held at Amherst, Nova Scotia, on February 14, 1962, by Mr. S. V. Ozere, our present Assistant Deputy Minister of Fisheries. Mr. Ozere, who, in my opinion, has a thorough knowledge of our fishery problems, clearly pointed out to his audience on that occasion the efforts which had been made and which were in contemplation, and also the difficulties to be encountered. In that address he stated:

> It was evident the only way that restrictions on fishing could be imposed > on fishermen of all the countries participating in the exploitation of particular resources of fishing in a particular area, was by agreement between the governments of the countries concerned.

We are not doing it that way.

He also pointed out that, until recent times, the fisheries resources of the seas were exploited without any thought being given to their depletion, and the freedom of navigation of the seas included the freedom of unrestricted fishing, except within the narrow strip known as the territorial sea. At that time he also pointed out that the two subjects of greatest importance to us are the development of international rules for the conservation of the sea fisheries and the breadth of the territorial sea.

Further, I should like to bring to your attention—for I know each of you is interested in the problems facing the Government and the whole of Canada—an article appearing in the American Journal of International Law, of October 1960, by Arthur H. Dean, who was chairman of the United States delegation in that year. It carries the heading, "The Fight for Freedom of the Seas."

I should like to quote several of the statements made by Mr. Dean, but I do not wish to weary you. I merely point out that if you will take the trouble to read Mr. Ozere's speech and the description of the Second Geneva Conference on the Law of the Sea by Mr. Dean, you will have a clear idea of the problem facing us. However, I do hope the Government can persuade the Russians, Japanese, Portuguese and Spaniards, who are fishing off our coasts—and when I say "our coasts" I mean our Newfoundland coasts, our Canadian coasts, if you like—that the regulations which will be brought into force by this bill will be in their interests as well as ours.

Last year Japan took nearly six million metric tons of fish from the ocean, and some of it came from the seas surrounding Newfoundland. The Russians took nearly as great a quantity, and the Spaniards and the Portuguese fared very well. I am thinking particularly of Newfoundland because I was born and bred there, and as a boy, I fished there, in Labrador, 55 years ago. So I do have some idea of the need for conservation and freedom with regard to our fishing.

It will be seen, therefore, that if we are to preserve our fisheries and our fishermen, we must leave no stone unturned to bring in this 12-mile limit for conservation purposes if for no other. I wish, however, to express again certain misgivings about this approach to the fishing limit problem.

The first paragraph of the final act and annexes of the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea held at Geneva in 1958, reads as follows:

> The General Assembly of the United Nations by Resolution 1105 (xi) of the 21st of February, 1957 decided to convene an International Conference of plenipotentiaries to examine the law of the sea, taking account not only of the legal but, also, of the technical, biological, economic and political aspects of the problem, and to embody the results of its work in one or more International Conventions or such other instruments as it might deem appropriate. The General Assembly also recommended that the Conference should study the question of free access to the sea of landlocked countries as established by international practice or treaties.

Does not this assume the jurisdiction of the United Nations over all matters relating to the high seas? If it is otherwise, why should they bother their heads about it? If they have the jurisdiction, can we pass this bill? And, if we pass this bill, can we enforce it? I raise the question.

As you know, some 87 nations met and were in session from February 24 to April 27, 1958. Canada was one of the 87 nations, all of which came to an understanding on well over 100 articles having reference to the high seas, the territorial sea and contiguous zones, and the continental shelf, as also fishing and conservation. They may not have had the right to do it, but they reached agreement on all but two items.

Since they did not resolve all the problems relating to coastal fisheries, they passed the following resolution which is headed:

> Special Situations Relating to Coastal Fisheries

This was adopted on April 26, 1958. I quote:

> The United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea,
>
> Having considered the situation of countries or territories whose people are overwhelmingly dependent upon coastal fisheries for their livelihood or economic development,
>
> Having considered, also, the situation of countries whose coastal population depends primarily on coastal fisheries for the animal protein of its diet and whose fishing methods are mainly limited to local fishing from small boats, recognizing that such situations call for exceptional measures befitting particular needs,
>
> Considering that because of the limited scope and exceptional nature of those situations, any measures adopted to meet them would be complementary to provisions incorporated in a universal system of international law,—

Not the Canadian system, or Russian or American or French, but a universal or international system.

Believing that states should collaborate to secure just treatment of such situations by regional agreements or by other means of international co-operation,

Recommends:

1. That where, for the purpose of conservation it becomes necessary to limit the total catch of a stock or stocks of fish in an area of the high seas adjacent to the territorial sea or a coastal state, any other states fishing in that area should collaborate with the coastal state to secure just treatment of such situations by establishing agreed measures which shall recognize any preferential requirements of the coastal state resulting from its dependence upon the fishery concerned while having regard to the interests of the other states;

In the case of foreign vessels fishing in our area, they should co-operate with us, and if we are fishing in their areas we should co-operate with them.

2. That appropriate conciliation and arbitral procedures shall be established for the settlement of any disagreement.

I think if honourable senators will peruse that resolution, having in mind all the other articles with reference to the high seas which were decided at that conference by the General Assembly, they will agree with me that by passing this bill as it is here outlined, we are attempting to take away the jurisdiction of the United Nations in this particular matter. Of course that is only my own point of view. If we do not recognize the jurisdiction of the United Nations, then whose is the jurisdiction? Does it belong to Canada, or Russia, or the United States, or Great Britain, or are we going back to the Middle Ages or to the days of the "Spanish Main"?

As I have said before, I want, as much as anybody else, the 12-mile limit for the protection of our fishermen, but I do believe that when this bill goes to committee we should take a very careful look at its international implications.

As has been stated here, the United Nations agreed to call a second conference in 1960 on this matter. That conference met, and again there were 86 or 87 nations attending, and they endeavoured to resolve the two problems left unsolved in 1958, namely, the breadth of the territorial sea and fishery limits. You know the result of that conference.

I merely wish to stress the point that, in my opinion, a 12-mile fishery limit, or a 200-mile fishery limit as is claimed by Costa Rica and El Salvador, is a question for international agreement under the jurisdiction of the United Nations. If by the passing of this bill we can hasten such an agreement between Canada, the United States, Spain, Portugal, Russia and Japan—and all these nations are fishing off our coast—then I am all in favour of it. But if there is any likelihood of antagonizing any of the international friends which we had at that conference in 1960, when we all but won out, then I doubt the wisdom of this approach.

If you read Articles 6, 7 and 9 on fishing and conservation agreed to at the convention in 1958, you will notice that there is a method by which problems concerning the living resources of the high seas may be solved. I would like to point out that the method is not by unilateral action but by negotiations between the states involved, and, when such negotiations break down, Article 9 outlines a method of resolving the differences.

Honourable senators, as I said before, I was a fisherman, as were my people for many generations before me, and I know the damage that foreign trawlers do to the fishing gear of our inshore fishermen. I have known fishermen to set their fishing gear in the evening with bait and hooks, only to go out the following morning to find the whole thing had been swept away by foreign trawlers—and sometimes inside the three mile limit.

I have come across an article in the Daily News of St. John's dated April 8, 1963—that was an important date, I believe—entitled "12-Mile Limit Needed Save Seal Fishery."

Sealing captain Guy Earle says only a 12-mile territorial limit can save the rapidly declining Newfoundland seal fishery.

He was out at that particular time last spring.

Capt. Earle, managing director of Earle Freight Services, Carbonear skippered the sealer Kyle to the hunt this spring and returned home Saturday with about 18,000 pelts...

Capt. Earle said should the 12-mile limit be applied to Canadian waters "we would have the seal hunt to ourselves".

That would be a little bit selfish, I suppose.

The captain, who completed his second spring at the ice with the coal-burning Kyle, said too many foreign boats are > operating inside 15 miles and are consequently reducing the catch of the Newfoundland fleet.

>
> A large Russian vessel and several Norwegian ships had been in the area of the Kyle since the hunt began. Capt. Earle said nine of the foreign ships appeared to break the present three-mile limit.

I want to point out that I am very much concerned about this. I want the 12-mile limit. In fact I would like to have a 20-mile limit, but I think we are not going about it the right way by passing this act and by trying to do the thing in a unilateral way. I hope we are right, but I am afraid we are wrong.

This is a very important bill because it may involve the livelihood of millions of people around the world and many thousands here in Canada. I hope when we go into committee we will be able to get the advice and opinions of the best authorities available on the subject.

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, after having listened to six or seven excellent speeches on this subject there is not as much for me to say as there would have been had I had the opportunity of speaking a little earlier in the debate. However, I wish to make a few remarks which cover ground a little different from that which has been covered already. If in the process of reaching the point I wish to make I repeat something that has been said before, I hope I will be forgiven.

I must begin by joining with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in extending congratulations to the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) in having a bill such as this introduced in this house. Perhaps I can do no better than adopt these words of Senator Brooks and bring them once again to the attention of the house:

> This is not run of the mill legislation; it is important legislation, of concern not only to Canada but to many other countries and states throughout the world.

I join with Senator Brooks in hoping that the Leader of the Government in the future will be able to continue to bring such legislation as this to us in the first instance.

Honourable senators, I would like to comment on Senator Cook's introduction of this bill. Senator Cook may be a freshman here, but he is certainly not a freshman in introducing a subject before judges, and he displayed that gift on Thursday last. I was most interested in his talk on the early history of the rights of the sea. I had not realized that as far back as 1493 this was a very lively subject.

In the course of his presentation, Senator Cook pointed out what the present situation is, which seems to be something that has escaped the minds of some of those who have spoken in this debate. He pointed out that today more than a dozen countries—I have not consulted the records—claim a wider limit than three miles for territorial waters and fishing rights, and that these wider limits vary from four miles to 200 miles. The countries which have claimed jurisdiction over fishing rights to the extent of 200 miles are Peru and the Central American states, and I believe that that was because of an attempt on their part to reserve their rights to the rich tuna fishing that extends almost to the continental shelf off that part of the world.

I remember there was a little fuss in the newspapers when Peru, or one of those other countries, asserted that right, but my impression is that no serious argument resulted and that eventually a compromise was worked out with those nations which had some historic rights. I have been unable to find any serious situation which continues to exist to this time.

More importantly, I want to remind honourable senators of something Senator Cook said, that all these wider limits were imposed unilaterally. Canadian attempts to deal with this question go back quite a long time. To my memory since I have been concerned with affairs in Ottawa, they go back to discussions held at the United Nations at least 15 years ago. Those discussions at the United Nations indicated that Canada's policy at the time was to deal with this subject on a multilateral basis, and through the organization of responsible states in the world.

The first Conference on the Law of the Sea, which has been mentioned a number of times since the beginning of this debate, was set up after the prolonged and frustrated representations I have referred to, at least 15 years ago at the United Nations. I think it is of more than passing interest to note that the person who headed the Canadian delegation which discussed this matter at the United Nations in those earlier years was the present Prime Minister of this country.

As has been mentioned several times, some progress was made at this first conference, but the matter of extending fishing zones was not dealt with, and I believe the extension of fishing zones has been a prime objective of Canada from the beginning.

It was a disappointment to all those of us who have any knowledge of the effects of a narrow territorial limit that the 1960 conference failed by one vote to pass the resolution. I have referred to that before in this chamber, as have other honourable senators, and I need say no more about it except that if that resolution had passed we would today be operating under a multilateral agreement with a six-mile limit for territorial waters, plus an additional six-mile fishing zone, and the fishing zone would have been subject to a gradual withdrawal by those nations which had historic and treaty rights. It has continued to remain a puzzle to a great many people, and is still rather puzzling to me, that those nations which supported the so-called six-plus-six resolution could not be persuaded by the Canadian Government long before now to agree bilaterally to establish what would be in effect a 12-mile fishing zone under Canadian control.

While I was making some notes on this subject the other day, I recalled that I had mentioned this subject in the Senate just before the visit of the late President Kennedy to Ottawa. As a result, the late Senator Brunt, who will remain vividly in our memory for a long time, undertook to inquire whether this subject might be added to the agenda of those high-level meetings that were being held at that time. However, we never received any indication that he was successful in his endeavours, and no mention was made of the subject in the statement that was issued at the end of President Kennedy's visit.

In the meantime, honourable senators, the situation seems to have become worse so far as we on the Atlantic coast are concerned. I should mention that all I have to say today will have no reference to the Pacific coast because I have no knowledge of the local situation there. I enjoyed listening to the remarks of Senator Reid, and I consider him quite capable of looking after his own part of the country. Foreign draggers in increasing numbers have continued their operations up to the three-mile limit without restriction or control and, indeed, without competition from Canadians. They have swarmed in on the coast near Yarmouth—this is the latest report that I was able to get from the Department of Fisheries—they have been off the tip of Cape Breton, and as everyone has heard—and it was mentioned years ago in the House of Commons—they have been very close to the cost of Newfoundland. My honourable friend Senator Hollett referred to that today. Russian vessels have been observed very close indeed to our coast line, and some fishing friends of mine have observed them from time to time very close to the south coast of Nova Scotia where I make my home.

I cannot help but feel, honourable senators, that this legislation, which is after all, enabling legislation, will be welcomed by those who know anything about the effects of the situation which has been allowed to continue for so long. When this legislation becomes law the Canadian 12-mile fishing zone will place important areas of living resources under the jurisdiction and control of Canada. Perhaps the most important aspect of it concerns conservation practices in general, and I believe it concerns the protection of certain fishing grounds and the reservation of them to Canadian inshore fishermen.

Honourable senators may recall that several years ago Parliament passed enabling legislation to permit the licensing of large Canadian draggers to fish alongside foreign draggers within the 12-mile limit. But the government of the day never carried out the terms of that legislation because they found, and it was quite understandable, that it was very difficult to indicate and to mark out the inshore grounds which, if they were permitted to be dragged over by Canadian draggers along with those who were there because of treaty or historic rights, would not seriously reduce or reduce even further the stocks of fish which the smaller fishing vessels had available to them.

Honourable senators, it is my hope that under this legislation Canadian jurisdiction over fishing resources within the 12-mile limit will also not lead to the wholesale replacement of foreign draggers by those registered in Canada. I believe that any decision on this point should be made only on a basis of sound conservation practices and the effect on the economic position of the inshore fishermen.

I might be permitted to make a passing reference to conservation in general, by saying that I hope that more rapid progress can be made through the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries with respect to conservation practices beyond the 12-mile limit.

The heavy concentration on certain offshore grounds is creating an alarming situation. What has been done by international agreement with respect to the halibut and salmon fisheries of the west coast is a model which may be capable of being copied on the Atlantic coast.

There is at present some concern that the point of over-exploitation of stocks of scallops and swordfish through the use of new methods of taking these species will soon be reached. In this connection, it is noteworthy that some of the best catches by Canadian vessels have been taken from fishing grounds off the coast of the southern Atlantic states of the United States, as well as off the New England coast. This is a subject of international concern, particularly in so far as the United States interests are involved.

Scientific knowledge is greatly needed in this field, and I hope that it can increase at a fast rate and lay the foundation for effective international conservation practices. The restriction on the size of the mesh of nets is one of the few accomplishments of the International Commission in the Atlantic and is generally regarded by the fishermen as a small contribution to conservation. However, it is a step which many hope will be followed by more important steps.

One particular phase of conservation which many would like to see investigated is the possibility of international agreement to periodic closed seasons on certain offshore banks. The opinion is held by some that this step would periodically provide for undisturbed spawning areas which would increase the stock of fish, not only for the large draggers in the future but also relieve the fishing pressure so that migration from these closed grounds could replenish the stocks of fish available to the inshore fisheries.

I know that such a proposal will not be readily acceptable by all. However, since I was a little boy and engaged in some trout fishing, I have always known of fishing "hogs". They were amateurs in those days. There are fishing hogs today on the high seas. I do not think that any country is exempt in this regard.

I followed the contribution to the debate by honourable Senator Brooks very carefully yesterday, and I find myself in agreement with most of what he said. He did mention the difficulties which will be faced by the Government in trying to enforce regulations under this act. To sum up his speech, it seemed to be one in which he was urging caution. I agree with that, too.

I listened carefully also to the contribution by honourable Senator Phillips, who also comes from a maritime province. I believe he listed about all the difficulties of enforcement there might be. Some of course were real, but others he listed were in a realm closely approaching imagination.

The attitude that things are too difficult and that if you try to do them you may run into problems is an attitude that has very little place today, even in dealings between nations. Perhaps this is why we have to wait all this long time to get something which has more hope of reaching a conclusion that will be beneficial to the Canadian fishermen.

I think we have all been worried and overly cautious. It seems to me that this is the proper time to put this bill on the Order Paper and to have it discussed and passed, and I am convinced that it should be passed in its present form.

I took the inference from some of the remarks made, that Canadians are hotheads. I do not think we ever had a reputation of being international hotheads. We have been going at this matter very cautiously.

One phrase used by one of the honourable senators opposite was "gunboat diplomacy". I do not think that this has been established as a Canadian technique for getting things done that would be for the benefit of this nation or other nations. That this legislation will be followed by responsible action, I am really quite confident.

I want to tell honourable senators that the Fisheries Council of Canada—which is an organization with members coming from all provinces of Canada, representing fishermen and the industry in general, as well as those concerned with marketing—is in favour of this present legislation and have so indicated publicly. I think the time has arrived to go ahead and declare a 12-mile fishing zone under Canada's control. Therefore, I would assume that the Fisheries Council of Canada shares the confidence that I have. We must not forget that few nations have either historic or treaty rights. I am indebted to Senator Kinley for clearing up some doubts in my mind on this subject. Those nations which have those historic or treaty rights are nations which have already indicated, by their vote at the international meeting four years ago, that they are in favour of a 12-mile Canadian fishing zone. So happily, they have already shown support for this proposition.

The Canadian negotiating team—if there is a group that could be so designated which has been carrying on some kind of negotiations with other countries for quite a long time now—has the favourable prospects which any sound proposition should have.

In the first place, the United States, for example, in 1960 not only supported this resolution to which reference has been made but was a co-sponsor of the resolution for a 12-mile fishing zone.

I think we should consider what I believe to be a fact, that the American people have a sense of fair play which will make it very difficult to refuse agreement at this time for eventual Canadian control and regulation, particularly if Canadian reasons are based on conservation. We have a long history of having refused Canadian draggers access to these inshore grounds, and the Americans know that in the past our reasons have been very good indeed.

Again, advance notice of the Government's intention in this matter was given almost one year ago to all nations concerned. To deal otherwise than cautiously with this subject might have jeopardized our position in the markets of the United States. By "markets", I mean markets for fish, for 75 per cent of the Canadian production is sold in the United States. This is a large and fast growing market, due to population growth.

I saw an item in a publication a few days ago—I believe it was the Christian Science Monitor—which indicated how big that market is. The latest report is for 1963. There are 4.5 billion pounds of fish consumed by human beings in the United States annually. That is a lot of fish. It must be remembered that the population of that country is growing rapidly. The item leads me to believe that at the rate of growth in population, it will not be many years before that figure will have increased to nine or ten billion pounds of fish. So the United States may be glad to have Canadian fish available. Of that huge amount of fish consumed in the United States, their domestic catch last year was 55 per cent. Therefore, they will have to look to foreign countries to supply them.

Everything is in our favour to conclude negotiations amicably. I think we have been cautious enough, and that not many weeks or months will elapse before a protective 12-mile limit will be declared in this country.

In conclusion, I want to say, with regard to the other nations without historic and/or treaty rights, that the fishermen from Nova Scotia tell me that if this legislation is passed, they are expecting that very early notification will be given to those other nations that they must from that time on "keep off." Many of them have felt strongly, for example, that the hammer and sickle have been riding the seas in large numbers, too close to our shores for too long. We sometimes wonder what kind of fishing some of them really are interested in.

Honourable senators, I take great pleasure in supporting the motion for second reading of the bill.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, perhaps I should ask to be pardoned for having anything to say on this bill, considering the fact that every previous speaker has, or has had, salt water in his nostrils, and I have not. Indeed, a few moments ago one of my colleagues from Manitoba asked me if I was going to speak on this bill. I remarked that I might say a few words, and he said, "Why, man, don't you realize you were born just beside Lake Winnipeg, which is an inland water?" I replied to my colleague, "Have you forgotten that Manitoba is a maritime province, bounded by no less than 500 miles of salt water?" I refer, of course, to that great body of water, Hudson Bay.

Hon. Mr. Reid: After all, we who are interested in fisheries also discuss wheat.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right. One reason I rise to say something is that the problem envisaged in this bill is, to the extent of about 90 per cent of its depth, an international problem, and consequently I think it is most essential that there be unanimity, both in this body and in the other house, in regard to this bill. It has been a pleasure indeed to find so far that there has been agreement in all essential particulars concerning it. I for one certainly hope that continues. I say this because it is a very simple matter for us to pass Bill S-17, dealing with this problem; but what has not been done to any great extent yet is to predict what the future holds in regard to the results it hopes to achieve.

Senator Hollett referred to some extent to what must be done in the future, namely, the negotiation which has to take place with many countries, particularly with the United States, with France, and also with Portugal and Spain, and probably to a less degree with the U.S.S.R.; and that is all on the east coast. Then there are the negotiations which must take place, referred to by honourable Senator Reid yesterday, in regard to the fisheries on the west coast, involving, to a large extent, entirely different interests. I wonder if we ever recognize, and this fact has not been stated before, that Canada has a coast line of 60,000 miles. I understand that Japan is the only other country with a coastline of similar length. Also, Canada is the only country in the world which borders on three oceans, namely the Atlantic, the Pacific and the Arctic. In addition, Canada harvests from its waters the sixth largest quantity of fish of any country in the world. I cite these facts to indicate the tremendous importance of this bill to Canada and its future.

I do not want to cover points which have been so ably dealt with by other speakers. Senator Cook, in presenting this bill with a clarity which was indeed praiseworthy, dealt with some of the international problems involved, as did other speakers who followed him. Consequently, I am not going to discuss those matters, but I am going to deal with two or three points which come to mind and which have not yet been dealt with, although one of them was touched on briefly by Senator Hollett this afternoon.

On that particular point, fortunately, I find myself able to disagree with Senator Hollett, for reasons I shall indicate in a few moments. One of these points is: Why did we not attempt to enact legislation such as this before now, because I believe we shall find it very easy to pass this bill now through both houses of Parliament? Indeed, I shall be very surprised if any senator or member of the other house will oppose it. Consequently, why did we not try to enact the legislation before?

The second point which occurred to me, and which was touched upon by Senator Hollett was this: Is this the correct way to deal with this particular problem? In other words, what is the right thing to do—to pass our legislation first and then negotiate—or should we negotiate first and then pass our legislation?

There is also a third point which has not been touched upon to any extent, and that is, how soon can we expect a favourable result from this legislation? I must say that if anyone here thinks we are going to achieve our desired results in a few weeks or months, or even in anything less than five or ten years, then indeed I would be very surprised. In due course I will comment on why I hold this belief.

Honourable senators, the main reason that I am presuming to say anything on this bill is that a few years ago I had a peculiar relationship with this problem. I had the honour of being one of the Canadian delegates to the United Nations in New York in 1958, when I had the privilege of representing Canada on the legal committee, which is the so-called Sixth Committee of the United Nations. One of the problems before the legal committee in 1958 was to make a determination as to whether or not there should be convened a second Conference on the Law of the Sea. There have been many references made in this house to the first Conference on the Law of the Sea which was held in Geneva in 1958 and which was attended by delegates from over 80 countries. That conference sat for many weeks, and I think it is true to say, as I believe the honourable Senator Brooks stated yesterday, that Canada took a leading part in it. I recall various members of the Sixth Committee of the United Nations in 1958, most of whom were distinguished international lawyers, telling me that the Honourable George Drew was really the leading figure at that whole conference, and that the success achieved was due in large measure to the leadership he displayed at the conference.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would the honourable senator allow me a question?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would you agree with me that steps should be taken to allow only those nations that border on the sea to make decisions, rather than all 88 nations, half of whom do not border on the sea at all?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is a good question, but I think the honourable senator will find that although some nations which do not border on the sea were in attendance at the first conference in Geneva, there are actually very few countries which do not border on the high seas. It is true a few such countries did send delegations, but they had the right to be there as members of the United Nations, for this was a conference convened by the United Nations.

Honourable senators, I am making these remarks because those two conferences really form the background of this bill. If it had not been for those conferences and the work done at them and in the Sixth Committee of the United Nations in 1958, the presentation of such a bill in this house would be very premature, if not impossible.

Returning to that 1958 conference, it has been said by many to have been the most successful conference on international law ever held up to that time. I believe that is true. Indeed, it dealt with the most important fact in international affairs, the sea and the Law of the Sea. As has been said before, finally a large measure of agreement was reached at that conference. In fact, there were over 100 articles upon which agreement was reached, and the only major disagreement was in regard to what is called the territorial sea and the contiguous fishing zones. I may say with regard to these other resolutions which were passed and which, of course, became framed in conventions later accepted by a large majority of the nations, that in order to pass they had to receive 75 per cent of the vote. At that first conference those 100-odd resolutions carried, and this one was the only resolution that failed to carry, failing by only eight or nine votes.

At the end of that conference in which Canada played such an important part, a resolution was presented by Canada, Australia, Ceylon and Ghana calling for the convening of a new conference at an early date in order to deal with this unsolved problem. That resolution was partially passed in that it was decided to refer to the United Nations the problem of convening a new conference. The Geneva conference having closed on April 17, 1958, the question as to whether a second Conference on the Law of the Sea should be held was in fact referred to the United Nations. As a result of that resolution the matter came before the United Nations General Assembly in September 1958, and then the assembly referred it to the legal committee where it was debated for a period of approximately four weeks. Finally, the question was decided in the affirmative.

As a result, the second Conference on the Law of the Sea was held in Geneva in 1960, at which additional nations were represented over and above those attending the 1958 conference. I think it can be said that again the Canadian delegation played a leading role. Of course, we should take a leading part in such conferences, because our interests are not identical with those of the United States or, in this regard, of Great Britain or France. Consequently, those countries were more or less antagonistic to our point of view and naturally so, because passing this final resolution would be contrary to their best interests. So it was a very hard fight, but, as I say, Canada again led the way. The result was most unfortunate, in that we lost out by only one vote.

Let us consider this bill for a moment. It provides for a territorial sea of three miles and a contiguous fishing zone of nine miles. The resolution before the second conference on the Law of the Sea was for a territorial sea of six miles and a contiguous fishing zone of six miles, which would actually make the fishing zone 12 miles. Such is, of course, proposed in this bill, but in this bill it is three and nine miles whereas the conference resolution provided the six-and-six mile rule. Be that as it may, the resolution failed to carry. Perhaps the reason it failed to carry by just one vote was that the resolution, although providing for the six-plus-six rule, also provided for a phasing out period of 10 years. Two or three countries which would have supported the six-plus-six resolution without the addition were too impatient to accept the phasing out period of 10 years.

You will recall that at that time Iceland—which is an important fishing nation despite its small size—was engaged in what might be called "gunboat" diplomacy with the United Kingdom. As everyone knows, that was a most unfortunate situation. You will recall having read about it. Canada had worked very closely with all Scandinavian countries in the legal committee. We worked harmoniously together because our interests were identical, and consequently I and others had hoped that Iceland would cast her vote in favour of adopting the six-plus-six rule at the Geneva Conference. However, their problem was the 10-year phasing out feature, and Iceland decided it could not afford to wait that long for a final solution. In the result, however, you may recall that an amicable solution was subsequently reached between that country and the United Kingdom. In other words, after the conference the United Kingdom—largely, I presume, through considerations of friendship and good will for another NATO country, and also because it was a very small country which was dependent to the extent of 90 or 95 per cent of its foreign trade on its fisheries—came to an agreement with Iceland to recognize the 12-mile limit which had been unilaterally legislated into effect by that country.

But I want to make this point, that in that case no solution was possible without negotiation between the United Kingdom and Iceland. Indeed, Iceland was in the identical position that Canada is in today. No agreement was possible without negotiations which they successfully conducted with the United Kingdom after the failure of the 1960 conference.

That is generally the background of those two conferences; the second one having failed by, as we all know, one vote to secure the 75 per cent majority. Consequently, we are here with this bill.

I come now to the first question I posed: Why did we not attempt to enact this legislation before now? Well, the reason is that international law in fishing matters had not developed to its present extent until very recently. The fact is that although it is perhaps not international law, as such, that every nation must accept a 12-mile limit in respect to other nations, nevertheless there is a tremendous moral and persuasive force in the fact that 74 per cent of the nations of the world have decided that this should in fact be international law. I repeat that while that has now no legal effect, it has a moral effect.

Another point raised by Senator Cook is as to whether the 3-mile limit has legal sanction. For many hundreds of years it was deemed that the three-mile limit had legal sanction in international law, but it is doubted now whether that is in fact the case. Indeed, the vast majority of nations say it is not international law, and that it was simply the larger maritime nations of the past—Portugal, Spain, Great Britain and the United States—that tried to make it international law. However, I do not think any court of international jurisdiction has accepted the three-mile limit as being international law as such.

Anyway, the state of the world's political situation concerning fisheries has now come to a point where I think it is a correct thing for Canada to take the step we are now taking in this bill.

The second question that I asked myself is this: Is this the correct way of dealing with the problem? My friend Senator Hollett had the same query; in fact, he considered that this was not the way to deal with it but that we should negotiate first. In that regard I want to refer to one of the most famous legal cases in maritime history regarding fisheries, known as the Anglo-Norway case of 1951, which was heard and decided upon by the International Court of Justice.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That was dealing with the baseline?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It was dealing with baselines. That was one problem it settled. This decision of the International Court of Justice pretty much settled the law in regard to baselines, thus making the problem easier of solution for the two Geneva conferences.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Who made the law?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It is a decision of the International Court of Justice. It was a most important legal case between England and Norway. The facts were that Norway had legislated to increase the breadth of its territorial seas and fishing limits and had also made some change in the former practice concerning baselines. The matter was brought before the International Court of Justice, and I now read to you one short portion of the judgment of that court. It is as follows:

> The delimitation of sea areas has always an international aspect; it cannot be dependent merely upon the will of the coastal state as expressed in its municipal law.

Here is the important part of that decision so far as the bill now before us is concerned.

> Although it is true that the act of delimitation is necessarily a unilateral act, because only the coastal state is competent to undertake it, the validity of the delimitation with regard to other states depends upon international law.

I repeat that to me the important part of this statement of the court is that it is appropriate that each state which claims to extend its fishing limit should first pass its own legislation. That is what we are doing here. Then it adds that the validity of the delimitation with regard to other states depends upon international law.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: If we have an opportunity to pass the bill it may subsequently be declared invalid by an international court. Is that what my friend is saying?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It may be declared invalid, but then again it may not be. I say this for the reason that I do not think any court of international justice has decided that there is a valid doctrine of a three-mile territorial sea, and no more binding on all nations. That is the point I was trying to make a little while ago, namely, that none of the great powers of the world, such as the United States, Great Britain, France, or the other seafaring powers who have been fishing off other people's coasts for generations and indeed for centuries, have been able to convince an International Court of Justice that the so-called three-mile limit is a part of international law.

Indeed, this matter might eventually go before the Court of International Justice for adjudication. If we fail to reach agreement with the United States, France, or these other countries that are involved in our fisheries, I admit it may be necessary at some future time to have the matter adjudicated by a court. On the other hand, I think there is tremendous moral persuasion inherent in the fact that such countries as the United States, Great Britain and, I believe, France, all voted in an affirmative way for the six-plus-six proposal in the 1960 convention, subject only to the consideration that there should be a 10-year phasing-out period.

Therefore, while I am quite aware of the fact that we may have great difficulty in negotiating our way out of this situation, nevertheless, I, for one, shall continue to have high hopes for an eventual successful conclusion.

We can point to the fact that at this very important international conference in 1960, the United States, Great Britain and France—I am not sure how Portugal and Spain voted on the resolution—showed at least a willingness to adopt the six-plus-six rule. Whether it be the six-plus-six rule or the three-plus-nine rule, does not matter very much to me. Indeed, I have been wondering why we had not adopted the six-plus-six rule in this legislation instead of the three-plus-nine rule. There may be reasons for that. However, these countries at Geneva agreed to this 12-mile total limit, subject to a ten-year phasing-out period.

I realize, of course, honourable senators, that we would like those countries to accept the law we are trying to create without delay, and perhaps no one here or in the other house should even suggest that there be a phasing-out period. Nevertheless, I think we have always to face the fact that it may be some years before this legislation becomes effective.

Honourable senators, I intended to speak on this subject for only about five or six minutes, and I have now spoken for far too long a time. I have done so because I had occasion to listen to some of the great legal minds of the world speaking on this problem in the Sixth Committee of the United Nations in 1958. That in itself was an interesting personal experience. It was there that the decision was made to call the second Conference on the Law of the Sea, which came so close to producing the result that Canadians want and which, indeed, produced a result which makes possible the presentation and enactment of this bill with the reasonable hope that it may become effective sometime in the future—the sooner the better.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO MAKE INQUIRY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from April 30 the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Isnor:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Mariana B. Jodoin: Honourable senators, permit me to address you in French. I believe you will understand me better than if I speak English.

(Translation):

This being the first time I have spoken since the beginning of the present session, I should like to extend my most sincere congratulations to our honourable Speaker for the dignified and competent manner in which he presides over the proceedings of the Senate.

So that my comments may not be too protracted, I shall merely say that I associate myself with the tributes paid to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and to Senator A. J. Brooks for his speech that was so deservedly well received.

I salute our new leader, Senator John J. Connolly (Ottawa West), whose competence cannot be questioned, and I bid welcome to our new senators.

May I express my special gratitude to Senator W. Ross Macdonald (Brantford) for his courtesy towards everyone and especially for his very special tactfulness by always speaking to me in French.

Honourable senators, I am pleased to second the motion moved by Senator Isnor, Chairman of the Senate's Tourist Traffic Committee, because I consider that tourism is an enrichment for a country, both from the cultural and financial points of view; moral enrichment which is an appreciation of the special beauty of each nation of the world; financial enrichment which is the result of the prosperity brought about by industries related to tourism. Under the able management of Senator Isnor, I am sure this committee will contribute to a tremendous development of the tourist industry in Canada. In order to help tourists, there are in our large towns tourist agencies, trained guides and a number of easy and adequate transportation facilities.

The beauties and wonders that you will see cannot be described in a few pages, but you will keep impressions of them that will remain as your most precious memories. Let us attempt to describe a few beauties peculiar to the Province of Quebec.

Although I had the opportunity to admire from a tourist's point of view the eastern and western parts of Canada, it is only natural that I should speak particularly about my own Province of Quebec, the largest province of Canada. With its six million people, the province presents to its visitors ancestral treasures inherited from its first settlers and still jealously kept in villages where the scenery is wonderful and the sunsets splendid. The province is bounded to the north by our Laurentian mountain range extending over miles and miles and the peaks of which stand out against the sky while at its base crystal clear waters from more than six thousand lakes and streams wind their way through numerous quaint villages.

If we take a look at the documentary publications concerning that province, we find that its real face reveals something or other that is different from its sister provinces, something that seems to have survived the past while adapting itself to present needs.

There is Levis and, on the cliff opposite, Quebec, the capital city, an historical city known for its legendary hospitality, for the friendliness of its inhabitants, for its basilicas and its archaic treasures, and which has a very particular character: Bois-de-Coulonge, the lieutenant-governor's residence, which in 1648 was so named by Louis d'Ailleboust de Coulonge, the third governor of New France; the Parliament buildings where so many serious matters are settled; its unique winter carnival, its historical gates, and so forth.

Then, you have the eastern townships with their queen, Sherbrooke, the ingenious Mauricie and Sorel, the riding I am trying to represent as best I can. Closer at hand, there is Hull, a busy town located along the shores of the Ottawa River.

If we follow the majestic St. Lawrence River across our province, our tourist's admiration is only increased when we get to the Saguenay, when we pass Bonaventure Island and its myriads of white birds, Percé and its sea gulls, Gaspé and its bold cliffs; everything is different and attractive. Our curiosity is also attracted by handicrafts, brought to a degree of perfection by old artisans: ceramic work of art, famed carpetry. All that in a beautiful scenery, where wonderful landscapes prevail, and scattered in its cities oratories and century-old sanctuaries.

This French land, almost four centuries old, is still defending its ancestral way of life. That heart is still beating, jealous of its rights, but respectful of both cultures which co-operated hand in hand to the establishment of a bicultural Canada.

Of course, I would not like to conclude those few observations, the scope of which could cover several pages, without mentioning Montreal, my native city. It is only a few miles from here; you all know it, but with the progress under way, with its gigantic projects, it is undergoing a face lifting at the present time. Everything is on the march in our metropolis: arts, science, industry and trade.

For those who witnessed the first years of this century, who lived through the pre-war quiet days, during which this unique city, located at the foot of a mountain of greenery, was the meeting place of people thirsty for natural beauty, no doubt, it is hardly recognizable. However, it still remains a city with a hundred steeples and domes whose musical bells fill the air. It is also, with its old section, the second largest French-speaking city in the world. But it is obvious that tremendous changes are taking place due in part to the Great World Exhibition of 1967, to be held on St. Helene Island. Montreal knows no limits to its development, and everybody, in a not too distant future, will find in it the satisfaction provided by innovation, renewal, and hope. This exhibition will show to all foreign visitors the possibilities of advancement of the province of Quebec, especially if both cultures present remain united.

(Text):

It is also my sincere hope that Quebec will receive our Queen, this admirable woman who is an example for all the women of Canada, in fact of the entire world.

(Translation):

In conclusion honourable senators, may I extend to you a very special invitation to visit the Province of Quebec. You will be received with courtesy in Montreal as well as in the whole of "La Belle Province."

(Text):

On motion of Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 6, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Text of Canada-United Kingdom Cereals Arrangements: Special Arrangements for Canadian Wheat Flour, dated April 15, 1964. (English and French texts).

Text of the Speech by U.S. Under Secretary of State George W. Ball, delivered April 26, 1964, at Harriman, New York, entitled "Interdependence: The Basis for U.S.-Canada Relations". (English text).

Copy of Report by Dr. C. J. Mackenzie, dated January 28, 1964, entitled "The Organization of Government Scientific Activities". (English and French texts).

Copy of Communiqué issued by the Joint United States-Canadian Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs following ninth meeting held at Ottawa on April 29-30, 1964. (English and French texts).

Copy of Report by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on the Organization and Operation of the United Nations Peace-Keeping Force in Cyprus, dated May 2, 1964. (English text).

PRIVATE BILLS

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—FIRST READING

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris presented Bill S-20, to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Farris: With leave of the Senate, I would ask that this bill be placed on the Order Paper for second reading tomorrow. I have two reasons for making that request. First, I am told the temperature will be 85 degrees tomorrow, and higher after that; so the sooner we get rid of this the better. My second reason is that I cannot be here again until next Wednesday. It was my understanding that this bill would have been introduced earlier. However, it is entirely up to the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Farris moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ALLSTATE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-12, respecting Allstate Insurance Company of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

NEW SCOTLAND SAVINGS AND MORTGAGE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce reported that the committee had considered Bill S-15, to incorporate New Scotland Savings and Mortgage Company, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Line 14: Strike out "New Scotland" and substitute therefor "Evangeline".

2. In the title: Strike out "New Scotland" and substitute therefor "Evangeline".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, the reason for the proposed change in name is that a long-established Nova Scotia company known as Nova Scotia Savings and Loan Company, which proposes to apply to this session of Parliament for federal incorporation superseding its provincial incorporation, made some objection to the proposed name New Scotland Savings and Mortgage Company. The petitioners in this bill were perfectly happy in the circumstances to agree to a change, and they adopted the name "Evangeline" in place of "New Scotland".

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, for the second reading of Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I have listened with interest and admiration to the discussions so far on this bill. We had a clear, succinct, though I think rather short, explanation from the sponsor, Senator Cook. We have heard from two honourable senators, namely, Senator Brooks and Senator Thorvaldson, who have actually taken part in negotiations in this difficult field. We have heard from Senator Reid, whose intimate knowledge of the entire problem extends over many years. Senator McCutcheon addressed the house on a very important aspect. We also heard from Senators Kinley, Hollett and Phillips, all of whom have had intimate knowledge of and close experience with the problem of our fisheries and are aware of the urgent necessity of action to protect this great resource, which directly affects the livelihood of thousands of Canadians.

I would say at the outset that I agree entirely with the necessity for action. I can only hope that before this legislation progresses much further the Government will provide us with the kind of information which will convince me that this is, if not the only method, at least the best possible method of achieving this very desirable objective.

After listening to senators with far more knowledge than I have, I presume to offer a few thoughts today only because I have been interested in the subject matter of the bill for a very long time. As a matter of fact, as far back as 1928, in my salad days, I devoted a year of post-graduate work to a study which resulted in a treatise entitled The International Law of Territorial Waters. Whether it was of any significance, I do not know; I can only say that it appears to be impossible now to find a copy of it. I undertook that task under the guidance of a highly distinguished scholar, Dr. Norman A. M. MacKenzie, of the University of Toronto, who later became President of the University of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: He was also President of the University of New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: That is true—all of which adds to his distinction as a scholar, and points up the fact that as I go along I shall be citing him as my leading authority on one of the two viewpoints which I shall put before the Senate as to the legality or otherwise of the legislation before us, under existing international law.

That there are two viewpoints, I think no one who has seriously studied the authorities will doubt for a moment. One viewpoint is widely held, particularly by some of the scholars and statesmen of the nations who are involved and who will be directly affected by this bill. It is that the territorial waters of any nation today are, and can only be, those extending from the line of the mean low-water mark spring tides three miles seaward, and that any action by any nation further extending that territorial sea is in violation of the law of the nations.

The scholars who take that position make some exceptions, of which I think many senators are aware. There is general recognition of certain consequential rights out to the 12-mile limit, but these are limited today, in the opinion of these scholars, to such matters as customs, sanitation, and certain fiscal requirements of domestic laws. Of course, there is some recognition, very important to Canada, of the doctrine of exceptionality, by which there is recognition of the special position of certain nations, particularly Norway, which has a heavily indented coast, and regarding which there has been acceptance, if not full recognition, of the decision of the Royal Norwegian Government some years ago to base their territorial waters on a new kind of base known as the baseline, which in general effect is a line extending from headland to headland rather than following the coast line at its low-water level. Also there would appear to be general recognition or acceptance of the Norwegian claim to a four-mile limit.

However, leaving aside those qualifications, there is the strongly-held view that the territorial waters of any nation may not, except in violation of the law and comity of nations, extend beyond the three-mile limit. I think it important that that view be kept before us, because if it is an accepted principle of international law, then I am sure honourable senators would hesitate before taking steps here which would lead to unilateral action on the part of Canada in defiance of international law, which would amount to Canada taking the law into its own hands.

However, I am glad to say there is another view, sometimes called the Canadian view, which is that since the war certain events have taken place—international cases, action by various nations, treaties between nations —which have so modified the once universal recognition of the three-mile limit that no longer can it be regarded as a universally accepted or established law of the sea binding on all nations.

The first and narrower view is well set forth in one of the accepted texts, known as the International Law of the Sea, fifth edition, which I have here, by C. John Colombos, an eminent scholar. The year 1962 is important because it is subsequent to some of the events or developments which have been mentioned by honourable senators, and it is also subsequent to the Geneva sea conferences of 1958 and 1960, of which we had such an excellent and inside account by Senator Thorvaldson yesterday.

The so-called Canadian view is well expressed, should any honourable senators be interested in looking it up, in a small pamphlet under the title, International Law, Rivers and Marginal Seas, published by the University of British Columbia in 1956. It includes an article entitled, "A Canadian View of Territorial Seas and Fisheries," written by Professor Jacob Austin and Dr. N. A. M. MacKenzie of the University of British Columbia. Again, the date is important because the view put forward by these eminent scholars antecedes some of these events, particularly the Geneva sea conferences, and I am sure both authors would feel that what took place there gave added support to their argument.

May I summarize what these two learned Canadian authorities say? First of all, they refer to the old law, going way back to Grotius in 1609, to the doctrine of mare liberum, the open sea, and to another great international law scholar, Selden, seven years later, who published the more or less opposite view, mare clausum, the closed sea. These scholars say, in effect, that the mare liberum, the open sea doctrine of the inviolability of the high seas, was accepted for many years, and that it is only since the end of World War II that the doctrine of mare clausum, the right of nations to close the seas off their coasts, has come into general acceptance.

As evidence of this change—and I think it is important if such a change has taken place that it be established in our minds—they instance six important examples some of which have already been referred to.

The first is the famous Anglo-Norway Fisheries case. The second is the agreement reached between the United Kingdom and Iceland following the dispute over fisheries. The third is the very summary exclusion of the Japanese from hundreds of square miles of high seas by the unilateral action of the U.S.S.R. The fourth is what is called the Truman Doctrine, enunciated by President Truman in 1945. The fifth is the claim of a number of South American countries to extend their territorial waters and the action they have taken to enforce that claim. The sixth is the current Canadian pressure for protection of our fisheries beyond the present three-mile limit and up to a suggested 12-mile limit.

I would like to summarize these cases very quickly, since they bear on the legality of the action we are now being asked to take.

The Norwegian case was a reference to the International Court of Justice by the United Kingdom of its dispute with Norway following a Royal Norwegian decree, a unilateral decree, which extended Norway's territorial waters. By virtue of this decree they set up these new baselines, and claimed full territorial jurisdiction four miles beyond the baseline. The reference to the court was couched in these words:

> . . . whether the method employed for the delimitation of the fisheries zone by the Royal Norwegian Decree of July 12, 1935 and the baselines fixed by the said decree in application of that method, was contrary or not to international law.

The majority opinion of the court, which divided ten to two, was that the baseline method was not contrary to international law, but the court reaffirmed the generality of the three-mile low-water limit. However, it is said that Norway is an exceptional case, and under the circumstances and because of its having this highly indented coast line, the baseline method was not a violation of international law.

The question of the four-mile limit did not come before the court because, in effect, the United Kingdom had agreed to it. It is interesting to note that the Norwegian baseline consists of 48 fixed points, some of them 10 miles apart, and in one case two of the coordinates are 44 miles apart. The words used by the court are important to the present Canadian case, because in approving the doctrine of exceptionality as applied to Norway they said they did so on the basis of what they called "geographic realities" and "great economic interests peculiar to a region, the reality and importance of which are clearly evidenced by long usage." This again is a decision of prime importance to the present Canadian case.

Oddly enough, Mr. Justice Reid, one of the two dissenting judges, was a Canadian, and he asserted very strongly the inviolability of the old three-mile low-water mark rule.

In the case of Iceland, the newly independent nation extended its territorial waters in 1958 to the 12-mile limit. The United Kingdom in a very sharp note refused to accept this, and used these words that they regarded it as their "duty to prevent any unlawful attempt to interfere with British shipping outside the normal limits of territorial waters," by which, of course, they meant the old three-mile limit. There were some gunboat incidents, and finally a truce was arranged in the hope that the matter might be settled before the 1960 Geneva conference. As we all know, it was not; finally, it was settled by an exchange of notes. Iceland won its point, although the United Kingdom was careful to point out that it was only because of the exceptional circumstances due to Iceland's dependence for its economic welfare on its fisheries. They insisted that they were not conceding the fundamental point of the three-mile limit. Nevertheless, this exception had the effect of denying the United Kingdom fishing rights in two-thirds of the entire fishing area within the 12-mile limit, and completely within the three-mile limit.

The Russian exclusion of Japanese fishing vessels had little legal effect and was purely a dictatorial act, and no explanation has been given and no attempt made to defend it. The Truman Doctrine of 1945 made extraordinary claims of exclusive United States rights in the continental shelf far out to sea, but did not claim exclusive sovereignty or general jurisdiction over the waters above the shelf beyond the three-mile limit. Nevertheless, they still insist that the three-mile limit is the existing international law.

Following the Truman Doctrine a number of South American countries claimed extension of their territorial maritime jurisdiction, in some cases up to 200 miles, and they acted accordingly in support of their claim because in one case the Peruvian authorities seized a United States ship 160 miles from their coast, brought it into port, and the captain and owners were fined $5 million, with five days to pay.

The sixth item in this list of cases cited by eminent Canadian authorities is before us today, the Canadian position.

At this stage I would like to read the general conclusion of the argument of these two eminent professors, Professor Austin and Dr. MacKenzie. They say:

> Canada, then, until the end of the second world war adhered to the three-mile rule and to the rule that the baselines should follow the sinuosities of the coast. It was believed that these rules were principles of international law. However, since 1945 it has been demonstrated that neither practice nor theory demands that these rules be adhered to. Agitation in Canada has long existed for an extension of her territorial seas to a breadth of twelve miles and such a claim does not seem unreasonable or exaggerated in the light of recent state practice. The decision of the International Court of Justice in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case has strengthened these demands. Both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts are irregular in shape, the Pacific coast in particular bearing a great similarity to the coast of Norway; and it cannot be denied that fisheries are of the utmost importance to the British Columbia economy. International law, it seems, does recognize a straight baseline system so long as it is reasonable and follows the general direction of the coast; and Canada would, therefore, be acting in accordance with international law if she were to re-draw her baselines in the Norwegian manner along the west coast of Vancouver Island extending north to the west coasts of the Queen Charlottes and then to the Alaskan boundary. This would preserve Queen Charlotte Sound and the Hecate Straight as Canadian waters where no foreign vessel could fish. Further, it would be in accordance with the draft conventions of the International Law Commission if Canada, having sought in vain to reach agreement with interested states, were to regulate fisheries on the high seas contiguous to her coasts for conservation purposes, so long as aliens are treated in the same way as Canadians.

Now, it should be said that there are many nations, some of them very directly concerned in the action contemplated in this bill, who do not agree with that position. The difference between the viewpoints is summed up in two headings that appear in these two sources. In the Colombos book there is this heading:

> The Three-mile limit is the proper limit of Territorial Waters

In the Canadian source the heading reads:

> Former general adherence to the three-mile rule.

It should also be noted that the textbook, while insisting that the three-mile rule is still the law, and citing statements made officially by the United Kingdom and the United States following the 1960 Geneva Conference on the Law of the Sea, does concede this:

> There is not in existence a universally recognized rule of international law as to the extent of territorial waters but the limit most generally accepted is the marine league.

And that is, of course, three nautical miles. So there does appear to be a basis in international law for Canada's claim to a fishing limit extending nine miles beyond the outer limit of the territorial waters measured three miles from the baseline.

However, I am concerned as to whether that legal basis necessarily justifies unilateral action to enforce our claim. I do not say it does not, but I do not think that Canadians at this time should be put in a position, without a clear statement from the Government, of taking the law into their own hands. Most of us at one time or another while reading world news have deprecated the unilateral action of any one country, particularly when that country has failed in its claim before such an organization as the United Nations.

That, by and large, has not been the Canadian way, and students of history might well argue that we have suffered considerably on that account. However, I am sure that few Canadians would want to think that we are without justification, and that without stating the grounds for our justification we are now taking the law into our own hands merely because in 1960 we were not able to get recognition of our claims.

For that reason it is regrettable that when this bill was introduced there was not a fuller explanation of some of these matters. I should have liked to have known what our position is. Are we resting on the Canadian view of international law? Are we saying that the three-mile rule does not exist? Are we saying that we have done our best to reach agreement and that under another principle of international law, which I will not elaborate, we feel we are now entitled to go ahead on our own? Perhaps it is not too late for such a statement to come from the head of the Government, the Prime Minister.

This legislation is now before the Senate, having been introduced first into this branch of the Canadian Parliament. This is unusual, exceptional and internationally controversial legislation, and I say again that I would hope there will be shortly a full statement made. I suppose it would be too much to hope that that statement might be made by the Prime Minister before the committee of the Senate to which this bill is referred. If the Prime Minister graced our committee meeting with his presence it would add, I think, to the prestige of that committee and of the Senate.

We presume, of course, there were negotiations before this somewhat precipitous action was taken, particularly in respect to the drawing of the baselines. Senator Brooks made the point that we should have these baselines before us, and implied that it is really not possible to discuss this bill intelligently unless we know what the policy in regard to the baselines is going to be. I agree with that, because the baselines are an integral part of the legislation. The legislation has no effect at any time unless section 5 is implemented, because the other lines have to be drawn from the baselines.

In that connection I am surprised—although I think I can guess the reason—that in section 5 it is stated that the Governor in Council "may" proceed to settle these baselines. Surely, from the point of view of those who are hoping for relief from some of their problems—people interested in fishing, and others—they would want some assurance that if this bill is passed there will be some responsibility upon the cabinet to implement it. I think Senator Phillips, and perhaps others, made that suggestion, and I would hope it is given serious consideration.

It is easy, of course, to think that the Government did not put the word "shall" in because they wanted to think of this as merely enabling legislation; to make it easier to persuade some other nations that we are not at this moment going ahead unilaterally; that we were merely passing enabling legislation. I submit that we should do one thing or the other. If we can justify this action, then surely we should go ahead as quickly as possible in bringing it into effect.

The suggestion that it is only enabling legislation would, of course, mollify some others outside our borders, but I doubt whether it would be received with satisfaction by the Canadians most interested in this matter. It is also to be noted that the baselines have not been made a schedule to the bill. I suppose that is more or less for the same reason.

It is fair to say, I think, that the Government found itself faced not with the three-mile or the 12-mile limits, but with a time limit—a one-year time limit. I do not want to be misunderstood in this, because we are all aware that the exigencies of political democracy are part of the problems of government, but it is just as important that the Government move cautiously in this as it is that it moves speedily. The reconciliation of those two viewpoints is, of course, much of the whole skill of politics.

I would certainly hope that we are not being asked, with this bill before us, to pass mere token legislation. I would hope that we will have assurance that this is not token legislation, that in due course a schedule comprising the baselines will be added to the bill, because in the bill as it now stands not only is there no requirement on the cabinet to draw up these baselines or to reach agreement on them, if that is necessary, but the Governor in Council may also act at any time without reference to Parliament. I very much doubt, in a situation fraught with international problems such as this, if it is wise that the essential and operative part of a bill of this kind be left to the discretion of the cabinet.

It is for these reasons—they may appear on the surface to be contradictory, but fundamentally they are not—that I suggest that from the Canadian point of view the bill should be made more explicit, and that from the international point of view there be an immediate statement, here or elsewhere, to explain and justify in the eyes of the world this Canadian decision to proceed in this way in order to arrive at a solution of what is unquestionably an international Canadian grievance. There is, I think, most general agreement that such a grievance exists, and that in the interests of Canada and of thousands of Canadians it should be removed. So, the question we are asked to consider is really whether this is the best and, indeed, the only method by which this desirable end can be achieved.

Many questions in that connection arise at once. Was any effort made prior to the introduction of this bill, or the decision to introduce it, to arrive at a bilateral or a multilateral agreement with these nations who have direct interest in our fishing areas? I am not aware whether that has been done, but I believe that information should be before us, before this bill proceeds much further.

This is particularly important, as I indicated earlier, because there is a principle in international law that a state may be justified in taking measures such as this only after it has exhausted every possibility of reaching agreement with the nations most directly affected. One would like to know, of course, whether other nations have made any objections to this bill or whether any nations have been assured that there will be no action on this bill, and no action to implement section 5, unless agreement is reached with other nations.

Above all, many Canadians will want to be assured that if we are taking the law into our own hands we are doing so on sound legal and moral grounds and that the Government is fully aware of the possible consequences, including retaliation in the United States and other of our fishing markets. I respectfully suggest, therefore, that these and other matters inherent in this legislation should be fully disclosed and explained before we are asked to proceed any further in implementing this bill.

Honourable senators, I presume that a motion will be made that this bill go to a committee. I wish to make a strong plea that the committee chosen be the Standing Committee on External Relations. There is a motion on the Order Paper which indicates that that committee is to be re-activated. I believe the sponsor of the bill earlier suggested that the bill might go to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. If there is any reason why a bill dealing so completely and absolutely with external affairs should go to the Banking and Commerce Committee rather than to the External Relations Committee, the chamber is entitled to a very full explanation.

I would urge honourable senators—and I pass the thought along to the sponsor of the bill—that the proper place to discuss it in detail is in the Committee on External Relations.

Hon. Frank C. Welch: Honourable senators, I also take this opportunity of discussing with you Bill S-17, regarding the 12-mile fishing limit. Having lived down by the Bay of Fundy for many years, I will confine my remarks to that area. This bill, as I see it, has two features.

At the present time our three-mile limit follows the coast line and takes into consideration every bay and cove. Under the proposed bill, the coast line will run from headland to headland, without reference to any indentations. From this, our territorial waters will extend for three miles as at present. Then, in addition to that, we will receive control over the next nine miles for fishing and customs patrols.

On May 12 last year the Prime Minister stated that Canada would have a 12-mile limit within one year. He apparently hopes that this bill will be enacted by May 12 of this year. However, the Minister of Fisheries admitted to the house that there were many negotiations yet to be carried out before the bill could be effective.

The bill provides that it shall come into effect upon proclamation by order in council. Therefore, although Parliament may pass it, it will not become effective until such time as it is proclaimed, and that may be at some indefinite time in the future.

The bill could, of course, become effective immediately as far as Russia is concerned, and I think everyone would welcome that. However, Portugal, France and the United States have, or claim to have, historic fishing rights in many waters adjoining our coast. They are not going to give them up without a struggle. It probably will work out in such a way that a long period of years will elapse before these treaty rights are extinguished.

The Americans also claim historic fishing rights in the Bay of Fundy. This has been denied by the Canadian Government, but the fact remains that the Americans are there and will probably continue to stay there. I would think we might work out an agreement whereby, over a period of some years, they would agree to withdraw from most of these waters. But the Americans, of course, are subject to a great deal of pressure from the New England fishermen. They will not want to see their rights extinguished and will not willingly give up fishing grounds in which they have been operating, even if they have no legal right to them. This will be a matter of negotiation, and it has to be a very careful negotiation, because our Atlantic coast fishermen are absolutely dependent upon the American markets for a large proportion of their sales, and any restriction upon our fish entering the American market could be disastrous to the Nova Scotia fishing industry.

As you know, this is a very involved question, not only politically as far as the Conservative party is concerned, but more important in so far as the industry is concerned.

During the 1963 election, the present Prime Minister said that he was in favour of Canada making an unilateral decision for a 12-mile limit. The Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, Mr. Crouse, who is himself a fisherman, the Honourable George Nowlan, and all the other members from Nova Scotia, said that this was very poor judgment. They pointed out that the Maritime fishing industry was dependent for survival on the market of the New England states.

They suggested that, unless some agreement was reached with the Americans, our fishing industry might well be prejudiced by the imposition of increased duties and/or the reduction in the quotas of fish allowed into the markets.

More than that, one should bear in mind that Canada is dependent upon the American market for more exports than fish. For instance, the plywood industry, particularly that of British Columbia, might well be prejudiced by a reduction in quotas applicable there. Therefore, it is essential that whatever course of action is decided upon, it should be by agreements with the American authorities, and not by flaunting in their faces policies which would endanger our exports to that country. Applying this to our own local situation the Bay of Fundy, the Americans claim that they have treaty and historic rights in the Bay of Fundy. We dispute that they have any treaty rights, but we admit that they have been fishing there for many years. In other words, they might have a possessory title.

What does this bill mean in so far as the Bay of Fundy is concerned? Do we recognize the treaty rights of the Americans? If so, we have to renegotiate the treaty? Do we recognize the historic rights of the Americans? I cannot see how we can question these, because they have been there for many, many years.

If there are treaty rights, what are we doing with respect to them? Are we renegotiating a new treaty, or what? If there are no treaty rights, and I understand there are not, or at least this is questionable, what do we do about historic rights? How many years are we going to give the Americans to get out of the Bay of Fundy? This is the $64,000 question in so far as we are concerned in the Bay of Fundy coast of Nova Scotia. In the meantime, we are worried about the Government playing a dangerous game because of a rash promise of the Prime Minister that on or before May 12, 1964, Canada would have a 12-mile fishing limit.

Ask the fishermen in the Bay of Fundy on May 13 what difference there has been as a result of this bill, assuming that it has been enacted. And if it is not enacted today, tomorrow or the next day, what will be the effect on Canadian fishermen generally?

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, this debate commenced last Thursday afternoon, and is still continuing. By and large, there has been an expression of favourable opinion on the part of all who have participated. They are in favour of morality and of protecting our fishermen, and I am completely in favour of that. If I may use the metaphor, "Everybody has been in favour of motherhood." I, too, am in favour of motherhood, honourable senators, but I have a strong objection to illegitimate children. I think that is what we have before us this afternoon. I am afraid that I may have to descend from the high level of the debate that we have had to date, and talk about a few mundane things.

I have a photostat of a document entitled, "Notes for Address by Honourable Lester B. Pearson, Leader of the Liberal Party in Canada"—dated March 1, 1963, Sydney, one paragraph of which contains these words:

> Now, so far as the 12-mile limit is concerned, our policy is this. As we have not been able to do this by international agreement, then we as a Canadian government will declare a 12-mile limit by national action. I think the time has now come for such action. I am sure that if Norway and Iceland can do this, so can we, and in a way which will not cause difficulties with our friends. I'm not afraid of this step—the present government is—and it is a government that talks about much standing up for Canadian rights; not buckling down to Washington and all that.

We have been gathered here since Thursday afternoon to redeem that political promise. I think it should be put on the record that what we are engaging in will not redeem that promise, because if it is not put on the record a great many people in this country will feel that that promise has been carried out. I have been unable to find that a time limit was put on it, although it is an occupational hazard on the part of this Government to put on time limits. The press had said the time limit was May 15. I have been unable to find anything to document that. However, there is the statement.

So, since last Thursday afternoon there has been a certain sense of urgency about getting this bill through, and I sense that that urgency has nothing to do with the effect the bill will have on the fishermen or on anyone else in this country; because, honourable senators, this bill does nothing. Section 1 gives the title. Section 2 of the bill says that every provision of this act shall apply to certain other bills; then there are some consequential amendments to other bills. Section 3 says that subject to any exceptions with regard to certain baselines described in section 5, baselines to be established shall define the outer limit line of the territorial sea three miles distant from the nearest point of the baseline. Section 4 says we can go nine miles beyond the territorial sea for our fishing zone.

Section 5 reads:

> (1) The Governor in Council may, by order in council, issue one or more lists of geographical co-ordinates of points from which baselines may be determined and may, as he deems necessary, amend such lists.

The section then goes on and provides for exceptions, and so on. Finally, we end up with section 13, which provides:

> This Act or any provision thereof shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

What we are being asked to do is to issue a blank cheque which will entitle people to say, "But we have asserted our rights. We are as big as Norway; we have done exactly what Iceland did. We are a great country, and we have asserted our rights to these extraterritorial waters." However, we should read the fine print, that the bill does not become effective except when fixed by proclamation.

We are now being asked to pass on the principle of this bill, because on second reading we discuss the principle. I propose to vote against this bill, because I object to the principle by which you allow the executive to take the very important decisions which they are authorized to take under section 5 of the bill.

What salt water is going to be declared an inland sea? What is going to be the effect on our relations with other countries? Are we going to draw a line across the mouth of the Bay of Fundy and upset our friends in Washington, who have historic rights and, I suggest, also have treaty rights? What are we going to do about Queen Charlotte Sound and Hecate Strait? If my recollection is right, one of my colleagues suggested that we would draw a straight line from the top of Vancouver Island to the most westerly point of Alaska. It seems to me that that would create a situation—and this is the baseline for territorial waters—which would be unfavourably regarded not only by our friends in Washington, but by many other people. If we establish this principle, what will be the effect around the world? How many other nations can draw long lines and include great bodies of the open sea as their inland waters, and regulate international shipping, fishing and other matters within those waters?

We have heard about the Norwegian case —and I am not going to bore honourable senators by discussing it. I simply say that the Norwegian case is a very special one. It is the type of case with which every lawyer is familiar. It deals with its own particular facts, and it deals with a discussion between two parties. No precedent can be taken from it. It was a private transaction between the United Kingdom and Norway. As a lawyer, I would say it is not binding on any other nation in the world.

I would say the same thing about the Iceland situation. Frankly, I do not like Canada being equated with Iceland by the present Prime Minister, but that is what he did in his speech. Nor do I like Canada being equated with Norway, because its problems and circumstances are far different from ours.

As Senator Reid said, and I am sure Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne) will agree, you do not solve the problems of west coast fishermen by anything that is in this bill. Even if everything that is in it were implemented, you still do not solve the problems at all. The salmon run can still be killed by the Japanese out on the high seas. You solve these things by negotiation and by agreement. But I do not like to go into a negotiation with a gun in my pocket or a loaded stick. That is all we are authorizing the Government to do because, let us be frank about it, we must realize that we cannot denounce international treaties unilaterally. We do not do that, and I have no idea that the present Government is going to do it. We are not to denounce the historic rights of some of our NATO partners and other friendly nations with whom we have dealings unilaterally.

There is no tradition, there is no basis in international law, for baselines from headland to headland, except in a very narrow sense. Undoubtedly, there are people who will read this and be deceived. They will think we can strike off—without any objection from our friendly allies in the western world—great bodies of the sea and say, "These are our exclusive waters." There is no foundation that I know of in international law for that. There are many better qualified than myself to talk on that, but with the research I have done, that is the conclusion to which I have come.

So I simply say that I object to being asked to pass a blanket bill to redeem a political promise which merely says, "Well, we will let the executive do it all." I would like to know where they are going to draw the baseline in the Bay of Fundy; I would like to know where they are going to draw the baseline in Placentia, and I would like to know where they are going to draw the baseline in many of the places with which I am familiar on the west coast. I am not satisfied to give my approval to this sort of blanket authority, this open power of attorney.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, it is not my desire to weary the house this afternoon in respect of this debate. In the first place, it should be said that we have had a good debate. We have had wide participation in it by honourable senators from the Maritime regions of our country, both east and west. I gather that, generally speaking, those who are close to the problems of the fishery on both coasts are in favour of taking some kind of action which would have the effect of helping preserve a great resource which has meant so much to this country and to these Maritime peoples.

I do not want to suggest that this bill answers all the problems of the fishery. Certainly, the things that Senator Reid said about the problems facing the halibut and salmon industry far beyond the reaches of the 12-mile limit are not to be solved by the passage of this bill or by its complete implementation. That is another matter, and I believe it is one which can only be solved by co-operative action by the countries primarily concerned with that problem.

I have been much impressed by the fact that members of the Opposition have been a little concerned as to which side to come down on. Some of them have come down strongly on the side of the bill; others expressed serious doubt.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is no doubt where I stand.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There never is, and for that we greatly admire the honourable senator.

Generally, however, people are in favour of taking some appropriate action. Senator McCutcheon has said this is a blank cheque to the executive, that this is going to authorize action by order in council. I certainly agree with every word of that. But honourable senators will remember that no more was claimed for this bill than that it should be enabling legislation.

A good deal has been said too about the wisdom of legislating before we negotiate. In a certain sense, in the sense that negotiation means discussion, I believe there has been a great deal of discussion and negotiation about the matters with which we are concerned as we contemplate this measure. I give credit to the former Government, and for their participation in this debate I give credit to honourable senators opposite like Senator Brooks and Senator Thorvaldson, both of whom spoke extremely well and most informatively.

When the bill comes to committee I believe there will be a good deal of talk about the discussions which took place, particularly in Geneva in 1958 and 1960, when many of the nations of the world met there. True, they did not reach complete agreement, but certainly there were many points of agreement regarding a new and emerging doctrine on territorial waters, fishing zones and the conservation of the living resources of the sea.

So, honourable senators, no one can say that Canada is legislating before negotiation or discussion. There has been discussion for a great many years. Because we are so vitally concerned, I believe that Canadians will generally approve the proposal that Canada do now take a stand and try to move forward. There is no suggestion there should be any "gunboat" diplomacy over implementing the provisions of this bill.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is no suggestion they will be implemented.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The very fact the measure is now before us is suggestion enough that the Government proposes to implement the provisions. However, I say that it will implement with due regard to the rights, whether they be treaty or historic, of our friends and associates on this continent and, indeed, on other continents.

I do not think it is a question, as honourable Senator McCutcheon said, of equating Canada to Norway or Iceland, both fine countries. If there are points of comparison, as there are bound to be, between the peoples of those countries and this, the people on both sides benefit. But the fact of the matter is that Canada, like Norway and Iceland, has a vital interest in the fishery, not only on the east but also on the west coast. So, in that respect, there is a basis for comparison between the Norwegian and Icelandic situation on the one hand and the Canadian situation on the other.

I say the doctrine which has emerged from the Geneva conferences of 1958 and 1960 with reference to the drawing of baselines, territorial waters and fishing zones, is a doctrine which in time will be generally accepted. This is new law which is now emerging. There is no area of law which is more indefinite, as every honourable senator who is a lawyer knows, than the law of nations—the international law.

I do not think that, following the passage of this bill, Canada will enter into negotiations with a loaded stick or gun any more than she has done in the negotiations which have already taken place with many of the affected countries. Canadian diplomacy has not been conducted on that basis, nor will it be so conducted under the aegis of the present Government.

Where are the baselines to be drawn? Who can say? I think honourable senators will benefit greatly from the information which will be made available when a committee of this house studies these problems, as is done in the normal course in the Senate. The committee will have the opportunity of hearing the experts and the ministers concerned, and will have the opportunity of asking such questions as the members feel should be asked.

In conclusion, I repeat that this is enabling legislation. It can be useful legislation. The Government desires it to be legislation helpful to the country, to the fishing industry, and to the maritime people who have contributed so much to the development of all regions of this country.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Cook speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, when I was endeavouring to explain this bill I said it was a privilege, but now that we have had such an excellent debate, I should have been much happier explaining the bill after the debate instead of before it. I now realize all the things I should have said.

It seems to me that nearly all honourable senators spoke in favour of the principle of the bill. It is true some questions were asked and some doubts were expressed. As to the questions, I do not think it would serve any useful purpose for me to attempt to answer them now. They are all on the record and have been drawn to the attention of the minister concerned. No doubt they will be answered and discussed during the committee stage.

As to the doubts expressed, I cannot understand why it should be right for Denmark, Norway and Iceland, to mention only three nations, to establish a 12-mile fishing limit, while it is wrong for Canada to do so. Is it right for the United States and for Canada to have a 12-mile zone for customs but wrong to have the same zone for fishing? I cannot agree that international law is at all settled on the point of the breadth of the territorial seas, or on the breadth of the waters over which a country claims jurisdiction for various purposes. Indeed, at the 1958 Geneva conference the following proposals were advanced by various countries advocating the 12-mile limit. I refer honourable senators to an excellent pamphlet entitled "The Law of the Sea, A Canadian Proposal," and in the annex thereto are outlined the several proposals advanced.

The Canadian Proposal:

1. A State is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a limit of six nautical miles measured from the baseline which may be applicable in conformity with articles 4 and 5.

2. A State has a fishing zone contiguous to its territorial sea extending to a limit twelve nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of its territorial sea is measured in which it has the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea.

The United States Proposal:

1. The maximum breadth of the territorial sea of any State shall be six miles.

2. The coastal State shall in a zone having a maximum breadth of twelve miles, measured from the applicable baseline, determined as provided in these rules, have the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea; provided that such rights shall be subject to the right of the vessels of any State whose vessels have fished regularly in that portion of the zone having a continuous baseline and located in the same major body of water for the period of five years immediately preceding the signature of this convention, to fish in the outer six miles of that portion of the zone, under obligation to observe therein such conservation regulations as are consistent with the rules on fisheries adopted by this conference and other rules of international law.

3. Any dispute with respect to the interpretation or application of this article shall, at the request of any party to the dispute, be submitted to arbitration unless the parties agree to another method of peaceful solution.

4. For the purpose of this convention the term 'mile' means a nautical mile (which is 1,852 metres), reckoned at sixty to one degree of latitude.

5. As respects the parties thereto, the provisions of paragraph 2 of this article shall be subject to such bilateral or multilateral arrangements, if any, as may exist or be entered into.

Note: It is proposed that this article be entered into with the express understanding that each party to the convention undertakes to consider sypmathetically the request of another party to consult on the question of whether the rights granted by the article are being exercised in such manner as to work an inequity upon one or more of the other parties and, if so, what measures should and can be taken to remedy the situation.

The U.S.S.R. Proposal:

Each State shall determine the breadth of its territorial waters in accordance with established practice within the limits, as a rule, of three to twelve miles, having regard to historical and geographical conditions, economic interests, the interests of the security of the coastal State and the interests of international navigation.

The Eight-Power (Burma, Colombia, Indonesia, Mexico, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Republic and Venezuela) Proposal:

1. Every State is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a limit of twelve nautical miles measured from the baseline which may be applicable in conformity with articles 4 and 5.

2. Where the breadth of its territorial sea is less than twelve nautical miles measured as above, a State has a fishing zone contiguous to its territorial sea extending to a limit twelve nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of its territorial sea is measured in which it has the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea.

As pointed out by many speakers at the 1960 Geneva conference, the six-plus-six formula lost by only one vote.

Some honourable senators seem to feel that Canada should make firm agreements before taking any steps to protect her own interests, while those who support the bill as it now stands feel we should, if necessary, act first and seek agreements afterwards. The problem here is like the old conundrum: which came first, the chicken or the egg? I would stress that the Government's decision to proceed unilaterally is not an arbitrary decision. Negotiations have been and still are being carried on with many countries in an effort to satisfactorily settle these difficult problems.

One of the strongest arguments in favour of passing the bill is that it would declare Canada's national policy, and would supply a firm legal foundation on which and from which to conclude these negotiations. In doing so we are following the procedure adopted by other countries, which is to act unilaterally and to negotiate afterwards. For example, in 1959 Denmark extended its exclusive fisheries zone around the Faroe Islands to 12 miles, but by agreement vessels registered in the United Kingdom were permitted access to certain waters within the outer six-mile zone.

Other important agreements were concluded by the United Kingdom with Norway and Iceland. The agreement with Norway, signed November 17, 1960, was based upon the United States-Canadian compromise proposal at the 1960 Geneva conference. The United Kingdom promised not to object to exclusion of its fishing vessels from a six-mile fishing zone, measured from the baseline for the territorial sea. The United Kingdom agreed that after October 31, 1970, it would not object to exclusion from a 12-mile fishing zone, similarly delimited.

The British agreement with Iceland declares that the United Kingdom "will no longer object to a 12-mile fishing zone around Iceland." British rights to fish within that zone are limited to certain areas and to certain periods of the year and in any case cease after three years, that is, in 1964. The agreement also provided for submission to the International Court of Justice of subsequent disputes should Iceland promulgate a further extension of the exclusive fishing zone.

It should not be forgotten that at the second Geneva conference in 1960 the United States not only voted for the six-plus-six formula, but indeed, with Canada, was a co-sponsor. It does not seem likely to me at any rate, that the U.S.A. would now feel so differently as to threaten reprisals should Canada find it necessary for her own protection to decide unilaterally upon a plan very similar to that sponsored by both countries in 1960.

Finally, I would once again emphasize that the bill will be simply an enabling measure, and the times when, and the manner in which, Canada will act will be left to the discretion of the Governor in Council acting on the advice of the appropriate ministers, who in turn will have the benefit of the advice and experience of the permanent officials of the departments of which they are the heads.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by Honourable Senator Cook, seconded by Honourable Senator Lang, that this bill be now read a second time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Cook: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, it will be recalled that when I spoke on this bill a few days ago I expressed surprise that it should be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. This bill, as was pointed out again today by Senator Grosart, is concerned essentially with external affairs. Its subject has been treated as an external affairs matter by other nations at the United Nations and at Geneva. So why it should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee of the Senate is more than I can understand, especially when we have a Standing Committee on External Relations which is, I might say, a very fine committee. Anyone who reads the list of members of that committee will appreciate that it is extremely capable of doing this work.

I note also that the honourable Leader of the Government (Honourable Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) is anxious to activate the various standing committees of the Senate. I know that he has requested the chairman of the External Relations Committee to try in some way to provide work for that committee. Here we have a matter which belongs essentially to that committee. Why this bill should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee, I do not know.

What I am saying is no reflection at all upon the members of the Banking and Commerce Committee, because anyone who knows anything about the work of the Senate and its committees could not cast reflections upon that particular committee. I have said before, and I repeat, that I have been a member of a great many parliamentary committees, and never have I sat on one that was more efficient than the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce of the Senate. But, to my mind, that is no reason why this bill, or any other bills that perhaps embrace matters belonging to other departments, should be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

The honourable Leader of the Government has expressed the hope that representations with respect to this bill will be received from all parts of Canada. This is a most important bill not for what it does, perhaps, but for what we hope it will do. There will be representations from fishermen from the east and west coasts, and from many other interested bodies. The Banking and Commerce Committee is a busy committee. It is presently dealing with a bill to incorporate a bank, and very likely will be dealing with two similar bills; in addition, practically all other committee work of the Senate is sent to it.

I say that in justice to this bill it should be sent to the External Relations Committee, and not to the Banking and Commerce Committee which has all the work it can do. This bill does not really belong to it at all.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I appreciate what the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) has said. First of all, I wish to say that he shares with me a desire of activating as many of our committees as is possible. The chairman of the External Relations Committee has a motion now on the Order Paper which would activate his committee by referring to it the annual report of the Department of External Affairs. This has not been possible for the last couple of years because of unusual circumstances. I hope this will mark the beginning of very active days for that committee. As many honourable senators have taken part in international conferences and meetings, there is a great facility in this house for dealing with international problems.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition says that this bill is primarily a bill for that committee. Frankly, I think it is primarily a commercial bill. It deals with an industry; it deals with fisheries. It has very important legal implications, and the lawyers, for the most part, are members of the Banking and Commerce Committee

I am giving you, honourable senators, the points that went through my mind long before this question arose as to what committee this bill should be sent to.

I say also that most of the senators who have participated in this debate, and who have shown an active interest in it because they come from those parts of the country to which the fishing industry is very important, are members of the Banking and Commerce Committee. Moreover, that committee has 50 members, and the External Relations Committee has 35 members. There will be plenty of opportunity as this session continues for the External Relations Committee to become very active and to do a great deal of work.

In the circumstances, I hope that the motion moved by the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Cook) will be adopted by the house.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, the fact that the Banking and Commerce Committee has many lawyers among its membership is something with which I cannot disagree. I think there are certain virtues in lawyers, and I have thought that for some 34 years. But when I see the work that is coming before the Banking and Commerce Committee—and I need not enumerate it because every honourable senator knows about it—then I consider that a matter which is essentially one of external affairs should be dealt with by the External Relations Committee.

If one could see the telegrams that may have passed between Ottawa and Washington, I think it would be apparent that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was taking a greater interest in the problem before us than was the Minister of Fisheries.

Be that as it may, we are dealing here with something the implications of which are in the external affairs field and, accordingly, I move that the motion be amended by striking out the words "Banking and Commerce", and substituting therefor "External Relations".

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I am impelled to say a word or two at this time on the question as to which committee this bill should be sent.

It is almost impossible to discuss this issue, if it can be dignified by that name, without invidious references to the personnel of the respective committees involved. As a former chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations I am quite frank to say that I think there is as much ability represented in the present personnel of that committee as in any other standing committee of this house.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: If you say anything else you will reflect on your deskmate.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I am a member of the External Relations Committee, and I am sure there are other members of that committee who are also active members of the Banking and Commerce Committee. I refer particularly to the chairman of that committee, who is also a member of the External Relations Committee. However, I refrain entirely from making comparisons on that basis.

As far as I am personally concerned, I can see that this bill has many international implications which can be considered from the point of view of a piece of diplomatic legislation. On the other hand, there is also a good deal to be said for what the leader on this side has referred to as the commercial and business aspects of the fishing and shipping industries.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: If it had no international implications, we would not have debated it.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: There are implications; no question about that. But my point is this, that the means of dealing with this important bill in committee is of secondary importance, in my opinion, to the whole purpose of the bill and the objects which are supposed to be achieved by it. The term "enabling legislation" has been used here to describe this bill. I have not quite grasped just what is involved in that term; I suggest that possibly it is dependent on what the Governor in Council will do. It is enabling legislation so far as it goes.

The analysis of the provisions of this bill has been done in the house as a whole most effectively by those who have spoken, and the doubtful features of the bill have also been emphasized in the most broadminded way.

I do not think it matters much whether the bill goes to the External Affairs Committee or to the Banking and Commerce Committee. The main thing is, what will be done with the legislation after it has been analysed and discussed in committee, where the important aspects of it will be determined and probably decided upon more thoroughly than they have been here?

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, surely some relevant questions here are: Where was this bill drafted? Does it come from the Department of External Affairs or from the Department of Trade and Commerce? Has it anything to do with banking? When we come as a committee to consider this bill, whom do we call? Surely we call the officers, the experts, from the Department of External Affairs to explain to us why this bill was drawn in this way.

I think it is obvious that this is an External Affairs matter, and that the bill was conceived and drafted by that department. Consequently they are the people, and almost the only people, who should be consulted by us when we come to examine the reasoning behind this bill.

I think it is nonsense to suggest that this bill should go to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Obviously, it deals almost completely with matters of external concern.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, it is not very often I disagree with a point of view taken by the honourable Leader of the Government on a procedural matter. However, I should like to say this to him. This is an important bill. It is one of the comparatively few which have been introduced first in the Senate. The Senate has a Standing Committee on External Affairs. The eyes of many people all over the world will be on the progress of the bill.

I would in all sincerity ask the Leader of the Government to reconsider the decision, so as not, in these important circumstances, to begin the passage of this bill through Parliament with what would have to be regarded as an utter fiasco.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by honourable Senator McCutcheon, seconded by honourable Senator Flynn:

> That the motion be amended by striking out the words "Banking and Commerce" and substituting the words "External Affairs".

Is it your pleasure honourable senators, to adopt the amendment?

Those in favour of the amendment will please say "Content".

Some Hon. Senators: Content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those against the amendment will please say "Non-content".

Some Hon. Senators: Non-content.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the Non-contents have it.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Mr. Speaker—

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators.

Amendment of Hon. Mr. McCutcheon negatived on the following division:

CONTENTS

Honourable Senators

Aseltine	Horner
Beaubien (Bedford)	Irvine
Belisle	Macdonald (Cape Breton)
Blois	MacDonald (Queens)
Brooks	McCutcheon
Buchanan	Methot
Choquette	Molson
Flynn	O'Leary (Carleton)
Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche)	Pearson
Gladstone	Quart
Grosart	Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River)
Haig	Sullivan
Hnatyshyn	Thorvaldson
Hollett	Walker
Welch	White
	Willis—31

(See P. 413 for correction)

NON-CONTENTS

Honourable Senators

Baird	Isnor
Beaubien (Provencher)	Jodoin
Boucher	Kinley
Bouffard	Lambert
Burchill	Lang
Cameron	Lefrançois
Comeau	Leonard
Connolly (Ottawa West)	McGrand
Cook	McLean
Croll	Paterson
Denis	Pouliot
Dessureault	Rattenbury
Dupuis	Robertson (Shelburne)
Farris	Roebuck
Fergusson	Smith (Kamloops)
Fournier (De Lanaudiere)	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Gershaw	Stambaugh
Hayden	Taylor (Norfolk)
Hugessen	Vaillancourt
Inman	Woodrow—40.

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

It is moved by the honourable Senator Cook, seconded by the honourable Senator Lang, that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, on division.

PRIVATE BILL

LAURENTIDE BANK OF CANADA—ORDER FOR RESUMING DEBATE STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cameron, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stambaugh, for second reading of Bill S-13, intituled:
>
> "An Act to incorporate Laurentide Bank of Canada".—(Honourable Senator Blois).

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, it has been suggested that I ask that this order stand. However, because I would prefer to have it stand beyond the next sitting, possibly I should give my reasons for making the request.

In the first place, I have not had an opportunity completely to read the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. I have gone over certain parts of it, but by no means a large proportion of it. In fact, I have serious doubts that many honourable senators have had an opportunity so to do.

My second reason for suggesting that this order stand concerns an article that appeared in the Montreal Gazette of this morning on an interview with the Minister of Finance, Mr. Gordon, in which he is reported to have indicated that the three proposed banks must wait until the fall for their federal charters to be granted. According to this article, he said in an interview that the Government hopes to amend the Bank Act this fall, after studying the recently received report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. If that is correct, I see no urgency for further debate on this matter at this time.

On the other hand, if any honourable senator is ready and wishes to go on today, I would be quite willing for him to do so, and I would move the adjournment of the debate after he is through. If no one wishes to speak, I would move that the debate be adjourned until two weeks from today.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, that is a rather long adjournment, in view of the fact that we have interested people coming here at considerable expense in time and money. I am sure Senator Blois is not the only one who has not completely digested the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. I thoroughly agree with the position taken by Senator Crerar in commitee this morning, that there is nothing in that report which should prevent action being taken on these charters now.

Personally, I think it would cause considerable inconvenience to delay this matter for that length of time, and I hope that Senator Blois will agree not to ask for such an extended adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. McLean: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words on these banking bills today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators will appreciate that I cannot permit debate on a motion to adjourn. Does the honourable Senator Blois wish to withdraw his motion?

Hon. Mr. Blois: Perhaps it would be more agreeable to honourable senators if I were to move that the debate stand adjourned until one week from today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Instead of making a motion for one week's adjournment, would the honourable senator just ask that the order stand until one week from today?

Hon. Mr. Blois: I agree.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Please let the order stand until Tuesday of next week.

Order stands.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill S-10, to provide for the establishment of harbour commissions, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, this report makes three amendments to the bill in the form in which it was originally introduced, and perhaps it would be of assistance to honourable senators if I were to explain what the amendments are.

We had a long meeting of the committee one morning last week at which were present the Minister of Transport, some of his officials, and various representatives of private organizations which might be affected by this measure. It was agreed during the course of the morning that these three amendments should be proposed, and they were drafted during the course of a short luncheon interval by our Law Clerk in conjunction with the officials of the Department of Transport.

The three amendments are the following. Clause 17 of the bill requires a harbour commission to keep account of all its moneys and transactions, and that the books and accounts shall at all reasonable times be open for inspection by the minister. One of the municipalities affected, the municipality of Oshawa, said that under their present act they are empowered to examine the books of the commission dealing with the harbour of Oshawa. As a result of that representation we drafted an amendment to section 17 to the effect that all books and accounts of any particular harbour commissioners should be open for inspection, in the case of a municipality having a substantial interest in the harbour, as determined by the minister, by the auditor of such municipality. That amendment was quite agreeable to the representatives who made the suggestion to us.

The second amendment was to section 27 of the bill, which provided in its original form that the Governor in Council might order any commission established pursuant to the act to be dissolved, and by proclamation to dissolve it. It was thought that in some cases there might be a local interest in determining whether or not a harbour commission should be dissolved, and that some reasonable notice should be given of the intention of the Governor in Council to proceed to dissolution of a harbour commission before it actually came into effect. So we amended section 27 by inserting a provision that such order or proclamation only becomes effective upon the expiration of 90 days from the date of publication of notice in the Canada Gazette.

The third amendment has relation to section 30 of the bill which allows the Governor in Council to bring under the provisions of this act any one of a number of existing harbour commissions, of which eight are listed in the schedule, which had been incorporated by special act of this Parliament. In its original form section 30 provided that this should not be done by the Governor in Council unless he had received from the local commission in question a by-law requesting the Governor in Council to bring the said commission under the provisions of this act.

Representations were made to us that there were some municipalities which had interests in some of these harbour commissions, and in fact in some cases had turned over property to the commissions, and that in the case of these particular commissions the municipalities have a right to appoint a member to the harbour commission. We felt, therefore, that it would be only fair if the Governor in Council wishes to take over one of these harbour commissions that he should receive a request not only from the harbour commission itself, but also from the municipality interested in that commission. That is the purpose of the third amendment to the bill.

With these amendments, the bill appeared to meet the requirements of all parties who appeared before us as witnesses.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Do I understand, Senator Hugessen, that these amendments have the approval of the Minister of Transport?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, he approved them during the course of the representations, and after the sitting was adjourned the amendments were drafted and the committee met again in the afternoon and adopted them.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, because I spoke rather critically in this chamber and in committee on the bill as originally drafted, I think I would be remiss if on this occasion I did not commend the committee on the bill as it is now before us. The purpose of the bill as originally drafted, and as it still is, is to set a uniform basis for the establishment of harbour commissions. This is quite a proper object.

A number of large municipalities found that the provisions of the bill might not suit their circumstances and asked that the committee amend the bill to exclude them, and the committee accepted those representations. The City of Oshawa, while not asking to be excluded from the bill, did ask for an amendment to subclause 2 of clause 17 and to subclause 2 of clause 30, and the committee has acceded to this request in some of the amendments now before us.

It has been a long process, extending over several months. There have been some misunderstandings along the way, but the process has been marked above all else by the patience and consideration given by the committee to what I think can properly be described as the minority interests of certain municipalities.

The process in committee has been more than mere routine. The Chairman, Senator Hugessen, the Acting Chairman, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), and the sponsor of the bill, Senator Leonard, have gone far beyond their normal responsibilities in making sure that the viewpoints of these municipalities, particularly the City of Oshawa, were given the fullest possible consideration. The handling of this bill in committee reflects great credit on the committee, and on the Senate, because it is an example of how the Senate discharges that responsibility which has been attributed to it by learned writers from time to time, of protecting minority interests. I believe that is what has been done in this case.

Honourable Senator McCutcheon asked if these amendments had the approval of the minister. I am glad to commend the minister in that regard. He came to the last committee meeting, where once again representations were made by the city solictor for the City of Oshawa, and almost immediately the minister said that in general he would accept those amendments.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I too would like to say a word in connection with this bill, because honourable senators will remember that I attacked it very bitterly in its original stage, and I moved that it be referred back to committee in order that it might hear further representations from those municipalities seriously affected. The bill as it stands before us today is very different from that which came before us last session.

I would like to acknowledge the time, the effort and the reasonable thoughtfulness of the chairman of that committee and of the sponsor of the bill in bringing about a compromise with the parties involved. I was unable to be present at the last meeting, but I congratulate the committee on what it has done; I agree with my friend Senator Grosart that it is a credit to the Senate, and is another illustration of the usefulness of this body in dealing with complicated legislation of this kind.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE—SECOND READING

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson moved the second reading of Bill S-18, respecting The Montreal Board of Trade.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a very simple bill, and I think most of the explanations required appear in the explanatory notes. Perhaps, however, honourable senators would like me to give a background to the bill, and in doing so I assure them that I will be brief.

The Montreal Board of Trade had its inception in a committee of trade which was founded on April 11, 1822, in an effort to bring some sort of order into the chaotic conditions which then applied to the commerce and trade of the country. It should be remembered that at that stage many of these matters had to be referred to a government across the sea, and at that time the return mail period was approximately 90 days in summer and possibly considerably longer in winter. Conditions must have been very bad indeed, because the principal resolution passed by the group of merchants to set up this committee in 1822 was as follows:

> That the ruinous consequences now apprehended from the growing embarrassments of Canadian commerce can no longer be averted, or even delayed by the solitary exertions of individuals, or by the occasional hasty and inadequate deliberations of public meetings, and that the present alarming crisis demands the establishment of a Standing Committee of Merchants, to be authorized by their constituents to watch over the general interests of the trade of the country.

The struggle of those merchants composing the committee must have had some measure of success, because the committee was later incorporated as The Montreal Board of Trade, by Act of Parliament of the Province of Canada, 4-5 Victoria, chapter 90, which received royal assent on March 19, 1842.

The board has had a continuing history since 1822, in the course of which it has made a vast contribution to the trade of this nation in a variety of forms which naturally have changed with the passage of time.

It is obvious from the original legislation that in the early days the greatest problems were to do with commercial arbitration and the maintenance of standards of quality of the principal articles of commerce, because they were given both the powers to establish boards of arbitration and also to appoint examiners to examine applicants for the offices of the "Inspector or Assistant Inspector for or within the City of Montreal, of flour and meal, or of beef and pork, or of pot and pearl ashes, or of any other article subject to inspection." It is obvious that the duties of the members of the council of the Board of Trade were sufficiently onerous, because they were exempted by statute from serving as jurors.

The history of the board is another example of where private initiative outpaced government action in filling needs which had become important or imperative in the society of the time.

During long years of history the Board of Trade has made tremendous contributions to many of the things which we today take for granted, such as an adequate ship channel to Montreal, the development of a canal system to the Great Lakes, improved municipal government, and the creation and maintenance of the highest possible standards in all forms of trade, both domestic and external.

In more recent years, and particularly since 1939, many of the earlier functions are no longer necessary because they are being taken care of by other means; some by legislation, some by government agencies, and some by the course of natural development over this period.

Today the Board of Trade is more of a service organization for its membership, which includes over 2,800 firms with a total of some 5,700 individual representatives in the board's membership. There is an international trade section for importers and exporters which provides complete information and assistance in matters of tariff rates, documentation, reference books, legislation, taxation and so on, without which a company engaging in foreign trade would be severely handicapped. It also has been a leader in educational activities which have provided services for its membership touching on all the facets necessary for the maintenance, growth and prosperity of a society.

Since its original incorporation the Montreal Board of Trade has progressed from the most modest financial requirements to a situation where it now needs the power to acquire and hold property in excess of the sum of $1 million, which was given to it in an amendment to its act passed 70 years ago.

In 1841 the property limit was set in the terms "clear annual value . . . shall not exceed two thousand pounds currency." In 1875 an amendment raised the "clear annual value of the real and personal property" which might be held by the corporation to a maximum of $16,000 currency. In 1886 further amendment provided that the "clear value" should not exceed $500,000, and in 1892 the last amendment set the maximum at $1 million.

With changes and modern developments occurring in the City of Montreal, the board now feels that its present building on St. Sacrament Street which was erected in 1903, is no longer adequate for its needs. It wants to be free to rebuild or to move, and to have the freedom to act in this respect which its long history of responsibility would recommend.

This bill, then, is to amend the charter of the Montreal Board of Trade so as to permit it to hold all the property, real and personal, it requires for its corporate purposes without any specific dollar limitation.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I will move that it be referred to a standing committee, preferably the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Oh, no—External Relations.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I am not a member of the Bar of Quebec so I am not familiar with the rules of mortmain in that province. Is there a mortmain act in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, there is.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If there is such an act I would like to know whether this bill complies with it, because the Board of Trade is asking the power to hold as much property as it desires without limitation in either amount or time, unless it be in the phrase > may deem necessary for attaining the objects for which the Montreal Board of Trade is constituted.

That might be very wide. As I say, I am not familiar with the rules in the Province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Molson: In reply to Senator Roebuck I must say that this bill parallels almost precisely the bill that was passed with respect to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto about a year ago. I do not know about the mortmain law in the Province of Quebec. I would have to ask one of my legal colleagues from that province about it, but I had always understood that we did not have such an act.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I know there are some provisions concerning mortmain in the Province of Quebec, and I intend inquiring about them when the bill is before the committee. If my memory is correct there has been a recent amendment to the Mortmain Act in the Province of Quebec. Perhaps we shall be able to determine this in committee. I presume the Montreal Board of Trade will be represented by a lawyer?

Hon. Mr. Molson: Yes, it will be represented by its counsel; and if honourable senators would ask this question in committee I shall be very grateful.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They call it mainmorte in Quebec—dead hand.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Molson, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 7, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

CORRECTION OF DIVISION LIST IN MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been drawn to my attention that the name of Honourable Senator Phillips was inadvertently left off the division list printed at page 272 of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, May 6, 1964.

Therefore, it is ordered:

That the division list printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, 6th May, 1964, be corrected by the Clerk as follows:

1. In the list of CONTENTS on page 272, immediately after the name of the Honourable Senator Pearson, insert the name of Honourable Senator Phillips.

2. At the end of the list of CONTENTS on page 272, strike out the number "31" and substitute therefor the number "32".

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-92, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Consolidated Index and Table of Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, for the period January 1, 1955 to March 31, 1964. (English and French texts).

STE-FOY—ST-NICOLAS BRIDGE BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-21, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River between the City of Ste-Foy, in the County of Quebec, and the Municipality of St. Nicolas, in the County of Levis, both in the Province of Quebec.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

COMPANIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-22, to amend the Companies Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): I move. with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, May 11, 1964, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING BUREAU—TRANSLATORS AND INTERPRETERS

NOTICES OF INQUIRIES NOS. 3 AND 4—ORDERS STAND

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

That he will inquire of the Government:

1. What reports and other publications were published during the last fifteen months by the Printing Bureau for each house of the Parliament of Canada and for each one of the various branches of each department, each commission and each agency of the Government of Canada and what are those which have been printed only in English or only in French, or in both English and French languages?

2. What reports and periodicals are being published daily, weekly, semi-monthly, monthly and yearly by the Printing Bureau in English or in French or in both languages?

3. What aforesaid reports and periodicals are edited by a French editor or by an English editor or by both an English and a French editor?

4. During the above-mentioned period, did the Printing Bureau print any books which had nothing to do with the Parliament or the Government of Canada, and, if so, what were their titles and the names of their authors?

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

That he will inquire of the Government:

1. During the last fifteen months, how many translators and interpreters have been employed in each department, agency or commission of the Government of Canada,

(a) in Canada,

(b) in other countries?

2. What is the total number of translators and interpreters who have been, during the said period,

(a) employed and paid by the Government of Canada,

(b) appointed by the Civil Service Commission after examination, and belong to the Translation Bureau,

(c) appointed by Order-in-Council and do not belong to the Translation Bureau?

3. How many translators are employed for the translation of the correspondence of the departments, commissions and agencies of the Government of Canada?

4. How many books have been translated by the Translation Bureau during the same period,

(a) from English into French, and

(b) from French into English?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Inquiries stand.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, when I drafted those questions I asked that the information be for a period of 15 months, three months more than was asked for in the questions which were put on the Order Paper last session. From what I have been told, Inquiry No. 3, concerning the Printing Bureau, has been answered, but I have not had time to check it. I ask that it stand.

With regard to Inquiry No. 4, I know that last year the Department of the Secretary of State got in touch with the diplomatic posts outside Canada to obtain the information concerning the translators. The length of time for which the information has been asked for has been reduced from 15 to 12 months in order to make the question similar to those that were on the Order Paper last year.

I am most interested to have as soon as possible an answer to Inquiry No. 4 concerning translators who do not belong to the Bureau of Translation in Ottawa, and I would ask the Leader of the Government to be kind enough to make representations to the department to that effect.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This I shall do.

Orders stand.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO STUDY REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved pursuant to notice:

That the fifty-fourth Report of the Department of External Affairs, covering the calendar year 1963, laid before the House on February 25th, 1964, pursuant to section 6 of the External Affairs Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for consideration.

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

He said: Honourable senators, this motion has now been on the Order Paper for some days, and has been allowed to stand in order that Bill S-17 might proceed to second reading. So perhaps it is appropriate that I proceed to speak to this motion now.

As we all know well, the expansion of Canada's international relationships, particularly since 1945, has been enormous. Indeed, I doubt if any other country has had such a high rate of expansion in these relations as has Canada. In my opinion this development has been so rapid that it has been difficult for the average person to follow what has been happening in regard to them. As a basis for what I have to say in that regard I shall quote a paragraph from a chapter in regard to organization and administration of the Department of External Affairs, which appears at page 49 of the report referred to in the motion.

In the past decade—

That would be the years between 1953 and 1963.

> —the number of countries with which Canada maintains diplomatic relations has increased from 41 to 84. During this period, the number of Canadian diplomatic and consular posts abroad has risen from 53 to 77. Of these 44 are embassies, 12 are high commissioners' offices, six are permanent missions to international organizations and 16 are consulates or consulates general. In addition, Canada maintains a military mission in Berlin, which also performs consular functions, and three delegations on the international supervisory commissions in Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam.

I read that to indicate the tremendous part now played by this country in international affairs, and how this part has increased during the last 10 years. This increase really started in 1945, that is, immediately after the Second World War.

As these relationships have increased, our international responsibilities have increased at approximately the same rate. In other words we have assumed responsibilities which naturally we did not have many years ago, and I think it can be said proudly that Canada is playing a full and appropriate part in international developments throughout the world.

I should also like to quote the first paragraph of a very thoughtful article entitled "Canadian External Policies Since 1945", written in 1963 by Mr. John W. Holmes, who is president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, and formerly one of the senior officials of our Department of External Affairs, in the spring issue of the International Journal. Some may agree and others may disagree with the sentiments expressed by the writer, but I think the paragraph is reasonably accurate in regard to the matters I am now discussing, that is, the expansion of our foreign relationships.

> Until the Second World War, Canada's external relations were tentative and circumscribed, limited in later years not so much by colonial status as by a lingering colonial mentality—a mentality even more characteristic of Liberal nationalists like Mackenzie King than of the traditionally imperialist Conservative Party. Mr. King, having secured with disconcerting ease recognition of Canada's right to an independent role in the world, was left with undeveloped convictions about what to do next. He cherished the view that Canada was a remote and uniquely peace-loving area, too much burdened with domestic problems to be drawn into the struggles of an obstreperous world. Because his primary impulse was to keep out of trouble, he preferred that Canada's role in the world be a modest one. To satisfy a modest sense of mission the illusion was nourished that Canada was a linchpin which kept the United States and Britain in harmony, and Canadians lectured the League of Nations without pain or cost on the virtuous example of North America.

Honourable senators, my only remark in regard to that is that this condition was a very happy one for Canada to be in until 1945. Canada was kept out of too many embroilments in the foreign field except, of course, the two Great Wars. However, that did give Canada an opportunity to develop her own economy and her own system of living. The Second World War brushed all those things aside, as Mr. Holmes proceeds to indicate in this article from which I have just quoted.

Honourable senators, the intention of this resolution is to review the highlights of the 1963 report of the Department of External Affairs, which was recently submitted to Parliament. These reports are submitted annually to Parliament.

I express the hope that there might be a further debate or, shall I say, discussion in regard to this resolution, because I think we are all agreed that the Senate should play some part in at least thinking about the external relations of this country. Indeed, we might be helpful in providing solutions to problems which Canada must face in the months and years ahead. I will refer in a moment or two to what I think some of those immediate problems are. Furthermore, I want to express the hope that we may have sittings of the Standing Committee on External Relations. I realize that this committee was downgraded a little bit yesterday—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, not a bit of it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: —but it may rise again and become worthy of the duties it is expected to perform in the Senate.

As I said, it is my opinion that the work of that committee might be useful in pointing to solutions to some of the difficult problems we face in our international relationships. Let me refer briefly to the highlights of international affairs in so far as they concerned Canada in 1963.

The first of those highlights—and unfortunately I must refer to it as a failure—is the work of the 18-nation disarmament committee of the United Nations, which has now been sitting almost continuously for more than two years. It has been, unfortunately, a notorious failure. I refer to this because it must be admitted that Canada has taken a very leading part in the work of that committee.

We read frequently these days of the work being done by General Burns as Canada's representative. We can indeed be proud of the dedicated work General Burns has done on our behalf on the 18-nation Disarmament Committee, as well as in other matters of this kind.

The second item I wish to refer to can be deemed a very considerable success, namely, the partial nuclear test-ban agreement which was concluded first between the nuclear powers during 1963, and then signed by most of the countries in the world. I do not have to explain it. It is called the partial test-ban agreement because it bans all nuclear testing except that underground. It can be said, at least, that this was a major achievement in that it began the easing of tensions in the military sphere between East and West.

Another hopeful indication of the easing of tensions is displayed in the economic field. The U.S.S.R. has become more or less reconciled to the European Economic Community, which it had strongly opposed until it became an accomplished fact. We must recognize also that it was a great achievement that the West has started to trade more with the U.S.S.R. In this regard I refer particularly to the wheat agreements and wheat sales that Canada has made with that country in 1963, and is making now. An important outcome of those wheat sales is that the United States, which refused to deal with the U.S.S.R. in these commodities, has followed Canada's example in deciding to do likewise.

Those facts are all on the plus side of our relationships, and have helped in the process of easing tensions between East and West.

I want to say a few words with respect to the United Nations and the responsible role which Canada now plays in that body, and indeed since it was formed after World War II. In speaking of the United Nations I would mention what I deem to be three of the problems of most immediate concern—problems on which Canada must vote yes or no within the next short period.

One of those is the question of the membership of The People's Republic of China in the United Nations. I recall, as I said in another debate a few days ago, that I was privileged to be a member of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations in 1958. One of the most important debates on that occasion was the question of the membership of The People's Republic of China in the United Nations.

It was during that time that the then Secretary of State for External Affairs and head of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations, the Honourable Sidney Smith, told me in a casual conversation, "We Canadians have followed the lead of the United States in this matter for quite some years, but I am just wondering how long we can continue to follow that lead." I will say no more about that conversation, except that it indicated that the thinking of some of us even then was that perhaps we might not be right in excluding Communist China from the United Nations. I have no hesitation in stating my conviction in the matter. It is that Canada should play a part in bringing that country into the United Nations. I know there is a great deal of disagreement on this point, but it is my belief nevertheless that the majority of Canadians support this point of view.

One could, of course, make speeches both pro and con on this matter. I have no intention of doing so, but I do say that this problem must be dealt with in due course and that Canada must take her stand upon it. It is a problem to which we in the Senate of Canada can give some thought as time goes on.

Another problem at the United Nations which we are all aware of is the condition of the finances of UN. In that regard I refer particularly to the financing of the peacekeeping operations which we are finding so necessary and which are becoming an increasing burden on UN. When we realize that even a responsible country like France has refused to pay its share of the Congo operation, I think we can understand how serious this matter is and may become.

As everyone knows, the U.S.S.R. and the Soviet bloc have refused to pay their share of these costs. Indeed, of the arrears of over $100 million in the UN today, 65 per cent is owed by the Communist bloc.

I mention these points because they are important and everyone who is interested in the United Nations must give some thought to them.

A third problem which is rapidly coming to the fore in the United Nations is the question of the voting system. You will recall that in the early years of UN the membership started with 60 or 65. It is over 100 now. That membership which has accrued to it during the last few years consists virtually of those countries which we call underdeveloped—generally African countries, with small populations. Nevertheless, each of those states has an equivalent political power in UN to that of the U.S.S.R., United States, Great Britain, Canada and so on. This is a problem which those who read the reports of UN observe is coming more and more to the front in these days.

Canada can be proud of the part it has taken in the peace-keeping operations. I do not have to tell honourable senators the history of that. I think Canada was the first of all countries to volunteer in those operations. We started in Kashmir a few years ago, then in the Middle East, then the Congo and we are engaged in this most unfortunate affair in Cyprus at the present time.

Furthermore, Canada has taken a leading part in these matters. The present Prime Minister should be congratulated for the fact that he has recently made speeches in regard to the development of a permanent United Nations peace-keeping force. As you all realize, these peace-keeping operations abroad are much of a hit-and-miss matter. These problems arise, and then there is a quick shuffle as to who is going to provide forces to put out the "brush fire" conflicts, wherever they may be. Most of us hope that some day there will be a permanent United Nations force to help keep peace in the world.

Honourable senators, I should like to make some remarks about the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. As is well known, NATO is the main element of Canadian foreign policy and is the most realistic guarantee of our national security. Nevertheless, I am sure all of us who read the press are concerned about what is happening in NATO today. Perhaps there should be changes.

I should like to refer to an article in the Globe and Mail of April 30, headed "Reform NATO Now—French Suggestion." We know that President de Gaulle of France is determined to change the basis of NATO: how radically, or to what extent, we do not know. This article, dated from Paris, says:

> The French Government last night proposed re-organization of the North Atlantic alliance.
>
> Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville told the National Assembly that President de Gaulle's Government accepted Maurice Schumann's proposal that the North Atlantic Treaty should be reformed now. Mr. Schumann is chairman of the Assembly's Foreign Affairs Committee.
>
> No one will deny the "irreplaceable" character of the alliance, Mr. Couve de Murville told the Assembly.
>
> "But is the United States to be solely responsible for our security?" he asked. The question, he said, poses the whole problem for France and Europe.

I might add that the NATO treaty continues until 1969, that is, for 20 years from its formation in 1949. France says, in effect, "let us reform NATO now and not wait for the renewal date in 1969."

In any event, I am sure we are all concerned about the naval withdrawals which have taken French ships and officers from NATO commands in recent days. These things may be ominous for the future of this great alliance.

That is all I intend to say about NATO. I merely wish to pose those problems which face Canada and the other members of that alliance.

Honourable senators, another problem on which Canada must make a decision sooner or later is in regard to the Organization of American States. You all know the background of this organization. You have heard about the "vacant chair" which has existed in Washington, the headquarters of O.A.S. since 1913, the chair which at that time was intended to be occupied by Canada. You will recall that successive presidents of the United States from that time on opposed the entry of Canada into O.A.S. It was only in recent years that the attitude in Washington changed. The government of the United States now shows undeniable signs of a desire that Canada should join.

As is well known, Canada now has membership in various agencies of O.A.S. but we have continuously resisted full membership.

I think I can conclude by saying that during the last few years the pattern has been that when a party has been in power it has said no and the opposition has said yes; then when the opposition has come into power it has said no and the other party has said yes. Is not that the position today? I recall the honourable Paul Martin suggesting two or three years ago that we should join O.A.S., but the Government said "No, let us not go too hastily."

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Today the Opposition still says no.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The Government still says no. I am not saying that I advocate joining O.A.S. at the present time. I say it is one of the problems facing us and we are being subjected to considerable pressure from south of the line to become members of the organization, whether we like it or not.

I would like to say a word or two about the Commonwealth, which we all take for granted. Indeed, we take the Commonwealth so much for granted that I sometimes wonder if we ever take a real look at the tremendous changes which have occurred in regard to the Commonwealth in the last five, ten, twenty and thirty years. I am aware of the existence of our Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I had the pleasure of meeting Senator Hugessen in London, I think in 1961, at a meeting of that association when I was there to attend another meeting. Last year there was a meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in Malaysia.

I sometimes wonder what they talk about at these conferences, because the Commonwealth has become so diffused during the past few years; and one wonders if there is any cohesion left, except for the basic fact of the Crown, which continues to unite us all. In 1931 there were only five members of the Commonwealth—Great Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Of those countries, South Africa is no longer a member. Now there are 18 members. Let me recite to honourable senators when these other member countries came in: In 1947, India and Pakistan; in 1948, Ceylon; in 1957, Ghana and Malaya; in 1960, Nigeria; in 1961, Cyprus, Sierra Leone, and Tanganyika; in 1962, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, and Uganda; in 1963, Zanzibar and Kenya.

Honourable senators, what a tremendous change there has been in the picture of the British Commonwealth in the past few years. It now includes only a few countries where the colour of the people's skin is white, and many more countries where the skin of the people is black, brown, yellow. However, all I want to do is to pose this problem so that we can give some thought to what the Commonwealth is today, what it means now and where it is going tomorrow. From my experience at the United Nations a few years ago, we had much less to do with the British Commonwealth of Nations in our day-to-day business than with various other nations. For instance, is there anything in common between Canada and some of these newer nations at the present time? That is the question I pose to you.

To turn to one other subject, I know that no review of the kind I am making is complete without reference to our relationships with the United States of America. Those run on pretty much like the proverbial brook. Indeed, I think we had quite an interesting debate on one phase of those relationships during the past few days while discussing the bill on the territorial sea and contiguous fishing zones.

Then, of course, there are our relationships with other countries in the world—economic relationships, both in Europe and elsewhere. I will refer briefly to the negotiations that are being carried on in Geneva, in respect to GATT—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—and which indeed we hope will become of paramount importance, both to Canada and the rest of the world.

Honourable senators, I know I have spoken longer than I should on this report, but I want to say in conclusion that we Canadians sometimes fail to recognize the tremendous growth and development that has taken place in this country in the last 20 or 30 years, which has indeed made of Canada a giant, economically and politically, and potentially a giant in military affairs. In that regard, let me say this.

Take Brazil—with its population of 75 million—I cannot give you the exact figure, but I know that its gross national product is slightly more than one half that of Canada's. Canada, with a population of 19 million, has a gross national product today at the rate of $44 billion. That is why I say, do not let us sell ourselves short in our own minds, because Canada today is among the giant nations of the world. Furthermore, we have assumed greater and greater responsibilities and, if it can be said that one should be one's brother's keeper internationally, then Canada certainly has done a reasonable share in that regard in recent years.

Finally, honourable senators, let the Senate keep in touch with these international problems. I express the hope that there may be further discussion on this resolution, and that later we may study some of these problems in the Standing Committee on External Affairs.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I am sure that the house is indebted to Senator Thorvaldson for the thoroughgoing review of the current international conditions in which Canada is playing such an important part.

In rising to support the resolution which stands in his name, I feel that one's observations at this time can be best expressed fairly briefly and in more or less general terms.

As honourable senators realize, it is customary for all of our Senate standing committees to meet only when definite legislative bills are referred to them. In the case of the External Relations Committee it is also customary to refer to it for examination and enlightenment certain international conventions which from time to time come before both houses of Parliament for ratification.

The resolution now before us is not dissimilar from others adopted by the Senate in the past, asking for information on some phase of external affairs. For example, one might cite the discussion that took place in this chamber prior to the meeting of the United Nations in San Francisco in 1945, and also the discussion which took place both in the committee and on the floor of this chamber upon the return of our delegates from San Francisco, concerning the finished form of the United Nations Charter at that time.

References to the beginning of this committee might be of some interest to honourable senators in looking back over the period which has been emphasized so well by Senator Thorvaldson. The record reflects the expansion of its activities in external affairs.

It is of some interest to recall that in 1938, as recorded at pages 28 to 56 of Senate Hansard of that year, an interesting discussion took place. The gentleman who introduced the subject was none other than the late Honourable C. P. Beaubien, of honourable memory, the father of Senator L. P. Beaubien, who is now representing his province in this house.

In February, 1938 the late Senator Beaubien said:

> At a meeting of the members of all the committees of the House this morning it was suggested, and I think the suggestion was accepted almost if not quite unanimously, that it would be advisable for the Senate to create a new standing committee for the purpose of dealing with international affairs, so that all the members of the House could get first-hand information with respect to such matters as they concern Canada. I need not tell honourable members that we have in our midst, in the leader of this House, probably the best informed authority on all matters of that kind, and I feel sure that if he were protected, so to speak, by the secrecy which would be obtained in such a committee he would be only too glad to give information of great interest to each and all of us.

It is not necessary to say that the gentleman to whom he referred at that time was the late Senator Raoul Dandurand, who for many years had presided at the League of Nations, during which time he made his residence mainly in Paris.

I should now like to mention the names of the members of that committee. They were as follows: Senators Sir Allen Aylesworth, C. P. Beaubien, F. B. Black of New Brunswick, W. A. Buchanan of Alberta, J. A. Calder of Saskatchewan, Sir Thomas Chapais of Quebec, A. B. Copp of New Brunswick, Raoul Dandurand, J. W. de B. Farris, W. A. Griesbach, J. T. Haig, Arthur Hardy, H. H. Horsey, A. K. Hugessen, Dr. King, A. J. Léger, E. S. Little, C. MacArthur, W. H. McGuire, A. D. McRae, Arthur Meighen, J. E. Prévost, J. H. Rainville, C. E. Tanner and Gerald White.

I should also mention that in the report of the debate in the Senate in connection with the establishment of that committee there is recorded an appropriate speech by our friend Senator Aseltine of Saskatchewan, who later became a member of the committee but who was not a member of that first committee.

I think it is only fair to say that, as one contemplates the names I have just read, it is evident they represented qualifications which would be quite competent to deal with such a question as the "12-mile limit," or any other that might have come before them at that time. I was a junior member, by one year, to Senators Farris and Hugessen, who today are the only surviving members of that committee. We had the great advantage of the experience and wisdom of people of renowned standing such as Sir Allen Aylesworth who had given his services in the early experiences of this country in the Yukon Boundary Award and who was generally an authority on matters of international importance. I mention these names and dates of the beginnings of this committee to show it had some real background of historical interest.

The resolution which Senator Beaubien proposed at that time called for a committee on foreign affairs. Later that reference was amended, characteristically at the suggestion of Senator Meighen, the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, who was then Senate Leader. He suggested that the resolution should read:

> That a new standing committee of this honourable House be created, called the Standing Committee on External Relations and all matters having to do therewith, to consider and report upon the same, and that the Rules of the House be amended accordingly.

Then he proceeded with these characteristic observations:

> I do not like at all the term "foreign affairs" in relation to Canada. Perhaps I am out of date, but it seems to me very presumptuous for us to be talking about a foreign policy. Professors write very learned books and magazine articles on the subject. I read a book a little while ago, before it was finally published, about the foreign policy of Canada. The term is altogether too embracing. If we are to have a foreign policy we must launch upon a course of conduct wholly different and mightily more portentous than we are embarked upon today. We have external relations, of course, but that is a less ambitious term. It does seem hard to comprehend how people take this country so seriously as a great, influential factor in world affairs. I do not want to minimize our strength and our growing consequence, but this picture of Canada constantly assuming to lead democracies in matters of foreign affairs is really pretty tiresome. We had better realize just where we are and what we amount to, and behave accordingly.

I suggest that is an observation which might be read with some degree of application in these present days, particularly when we realize that in the revised estimates for this year we find assigned to the Department of External Affairs something over $95 million, which represents an amount easily three or four times what it was 10 or 15 years ago.

The first chairman of the committee was the late Senator Major-General A. D. McRae. Other illustrious names identified with the membership of the first committee might be quoted, in addition to the ones I have already mentioned. However, I think it sufficient at this stage, at any rate, to say that the impulse which led to the establishment of this committee in 1939 was a sound one, and subsequent events have certainly substantiated the rather prophetic considerations which were expressed at that time.

In the face of all that is going on today throughout the world, it is hardly necessary to stress further the desirability of an increased measure of activity on the part of the Senate's Standing Committee on External Relations. I shall not attempt to review or to cover the ground that has been so adequately covered by my friend from Winnipeg South, Senator Thorvaldson, but I would like to suggest certain topics that I consider proper to be referred to the committee on external affairs in the immediate future.

Senator Thorvaldson has referred at some length to our involvement in the United Nations, and chapter 3 of this report, which covers from page 10 to 16, gives a fairly comprehensive account and review of this involvement. The responsibilities for action by the so-called smaller nations, of which Canada is regarded as one of the foremost, is something we hear a great deal about from time to time, in a boastful way. But from the point of view of realism, I think one of the future sessions of the external affairs committee could well be devoted to summing up and giving an account, fairly succinctly but definitely, of what is involved in that pretension.

The distribution of financial support, which now has become of very immediate concern not only to Canada but to the other larger contributors, to the welfare of the United Nations, is of pressing importance. The increased membership since 1947, when I had the privilege of being in New York, to which increase my friend has referred, is largely the result of representation from former colonial areas with recently acquired self-governing status. That brings up the question of our Commonwealth status within the United Nations. It is a complicated position, as many measures that have arisen there, and on which resolutions were passed, will indicate.

There is the question of the advisability of closer association in the Western Hemisphere through the Organization of American States, to which my friend has referred. This, I would suggest, is another subject for inquiry and examination. Canada's orientation towards the Pacific and the Far East, including China, Japan and India, seems to me to be another phase of our external interests which could well be subjected to examination and inquiry in the committee. The strategic importance of the northern half of America during and since the last world war is another. Is Canada, with its vast area of varied wealth, and its relatively small and incompletely assimilated population, capable of dealing with its problems alone? The importance of a joint meeting with a similar committee of the House of Commons to discuss questions of international interest such as have been discussed in the past might well be considered again. There is surely a common ground of approach by the two branches of Parliament in this field.

One might by way of recollection refer to the joint committee that met in the large railway committee room at the time of the visit of Sir William and Lady Beveridge. They elaborated at that time their concept of a postwar area of social welfare which finally sparked the beginning of the present Department of National Health and Welfare in this country. I mention that purely as an example of the opportunities that should be taken to approach, and join with, the committee on external affairs in the other house. I think our common interests would be well served in so doing.

Sooner or later this country will be confronted with the enforced prospect of closer economic and financial relations with other countries, particularly with the United States. I think that is a matter which should be examined with all freedom and without prejudice, in the hope of pointing the way to a sane and more cordial relationship with the republic to the south.

The pending meetings in Geneva for the purpose of adjusting the terms of GATT by the proposed Kennedy "round," to provide for freer trade throughout the world, is another item which should occupy the attention of this committee at the earliest possible moment, when the reports of the latest developments in Geneva, which are none too promising for future satisfaction, are available. I think we should hear about them as soon as we possibly can. I remember very vividly when the reports from the former meetings on GATT were given to us in committee by Mr. John Deutsch and Mr. Hector McKinnon, and other members whose names I do not recall at the moment. They were most enlightening and gave the committee a real appreciation of what was expected from those agreements.

With that rather scattered series of suggestions, I have much pleasure in supporting and seconding the resolution which my friend Senator Thorvaldson has covered so well.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, if it is the wish of the house I shall be glad to adjourn the debate; otherwise, I shall not take more than 10 or 15 minutes with what I have to say.

Some Hon. Senators: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: I do not rise to oppose the motion of my distinguished colleague from Winnipeg South, Senator Thorvaldson. Indeed, it is my opinion that we should all feel indebted to him for his very informative and interesting discourse; and also to my friend Senator Lambert, for what he has told us.

But, I confess I could not remain silent here after Senator Thorvaldson had put on the Hansard of this house some words written by Mr. John Holmes, a gentleman for whom I have indeed the greatest respect, but who is one of those in this country afflicted with what Professor Creighton has called the "Liberal mythology" about the colonial position of this country prior to a certain year. In the words which Senator Thorvaldson placed on Hansard, seemingly with his benediction, there was the statement that prior to 1945 this country had what he called "a lingering colonial mentality."

I look across the floor of this house and I see my distinguished friend, Senator Crerar. I ask him if he had a "lingering colonial mentality" when he sat in the Union Cabinet of Sir Robert Borden.

Did this country have a lingering colonial mentality when Sir Robert Borden, in Paris, insisted that Canada sign separately the Versailles Treaty? Did we have a lingering colonial mentality when Sir Robert Borden insisted that Sir Arthur Currie, and he alone, should command a separate Canadian army corps? Did we have a lingering colonial mentality when Sir Robert Borden in fact told the British Government that unless certain things happened in France in regard to our forces he would bring back the Canadian troops to Canada? Did we have a lingering colonial mentality when Sir Robert Borden proposed a Canadian minister at Washington —for he was the first to propose it?

Honourable senators, I happen to be the proud possessor of the original memorandum about a Canadian minister at Washington, drawn up by Mr. Loring Christie, one of the very ablest of the men who have served Canada in the Department of External Affairs. I prize it, and I shall keep it with some other papers of a like character.

Did we have a lingering colonial mentality when Sir Robert Borden proposed a Canadian as Governor General? Did we have a lingering colonial mentality when Arthur Meighen went to the Imperial Conference of 1921 and there fought Churchill, Lloyd George, Birkenhead and Curzon, and compelled them by the sheer force of his logic to abrogate the Anglo-Japanese Alliance?

These things are part of the record. But there is a Liberal mythology in this country encouraged by people like Mr. Holmes and, I am sorry to say, given some credence by my friend, Senator Thorvaldson, who put those words on Hansard today. This is not history; this is not true.

We talk of the Statute of Westminster as if something new and wonderful had been born in this country by that statute. Honourable senators, the Statute of Westminster was a purely declaratory statute, and nothing else. It merely stated what was in existence before. In my opinion, it is a falsification of history and a wrong to this country to have it stated again and again, and accepted by people who ought to know better, that before 1945, before the advent of Mr. Mackenzie King, we had a "lingering colonial mentality." Was there anything in Canada that interfered with the freedom of a citizen, of a Canadian, before 1945 that did not exist afterwards? This is all nonsense. It is not true to the record. There was no constitutional development in Canada after 1945 that we did not have before.

It is true that certain things happened then; but we always had the power to make those things happen. There was no power in London or elsewhere to tell us we could not do some of the things we have done since. Why, away back in the days of Edward Blake, who proposed that the Supreme Court of Canada be the final court of appeal in this country, there was nothing in the law, and nothing in our relationship with Britain, to stop us making it so.

I do say that I, as a Canadian, can not stand in this house and abide people getting up and saying time and again how certain things have happened since 1945, and perpetuating what Professor Creighton has called the "Liberal mythology," that some new freedoms were vouchsafed us in the period when Mr. Mackenzie King was Prime Minister. This is not true.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to say more, but I cannot say what I have said without adding a few further words. I hope that when the External Relations Committee comes to consider the report of the Department of External Affairs, one of the questions it will take up will be the position of Canada today with respect to Cyprus. Some weeks ago when the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) came into this house and announced that our troops were to be sent to Cyprus I ventured to ask him a question. I asked him then: What provisions are being made, if any, for the reinforcement of our troops on the Island of Cyprus, and are any other nations going to take part in this peace-keeping expedition? He answered, and quite properly, that the matter was then the subject of negotiations at the United Nations, between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and U Thant, and that he was not in a position to say anything more than he had said. But, he added—and I looked this up in Hansard the other day—that he would return to this house with further information as the occasion warranted. Well, he came to the house two days ago, I think, with a statement —a very vague statement—by U Thant.

Honourable senators, make no mistake about it, there is a great sense of unease throughout this country at the present time about the position of our troops in Cyprus. We do not even know what their mission there is, and in my judgment and that of many others it is pure make-believe to say that this force in Cyprus is a United Nations force. It is nothing of the kind. U Thant does not create a United Nations force by pasting a UN label on the arms of troops there that belong to the Commonwealth or to the other nations who have contributed.

Sweden has contributed but a token force; Finland a token force; Ireland a token force. The troops in Cyprus who are keeping the peace there today are troops of the British Commonwealth. They are British troops and Canadian troops, and U Thant who goes around talking about his United Nations force is not even paying for it. We are paying. He is talking.

Honourable senators, I doubt whether the Canadian people realize at this time that the commander of our troops in Cyprus is not even responsible in any way to the Canadian Government, the Canadian Parliament, or the Canadian people. He reports to U Thant. For all I know, U Thant may be a great general, although I have seen no evigence of it so far, but this, I say, is something that should be taken up by the External Relations Committee. It is something about which the Parliament of Canada should insist upon having more information.

More interest in this question must be taken by us as a body. If other troops had gone with our troops then I would say: "God speed them all." But, honourable senators, we were told, and given the impression, that this would be in truth a United Nations force, and it is not. Our troops are in Cyprus. They may be in peril. The United Nations talks about it, but does not even pay their way.

That, honourable senators, is all I have to say for the present.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

MOTION FOR AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES AND ORDERS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved pursuant to notice:

That the Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate be amended as follows:

1. Immediately after paragraph (g) of clause 1 of Rule 162 insert the following:

(h) a statement of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof;

2. Re-letter paragraph (h) of clause 1 of Rule 162 as paragraph "(i)".

3. Immediately after paragraph 5 of Form C-1 (General Form of Petition) insert the following:

6. That the following is a statement under Rule 162 of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof. (If no previous proceedings, so state).

4. Re-number paragraphs 6 and 7 of Form C-1 as paragraphs 7 and 8.

He said: Honourable senators, I gave a short explanation of this addition to the rules when I gave notice of the motion. This is a purely technical matter. The fact is that this subparagraph was dropped from the rules through sheer inadvertence. For some unaccountable reason it was not included in the original draft, and I did not notice it was missing. We have been carrying on as though that rule was there, and now that a new edition of the rules is being printed it is best that it be included. This clause was in the rules when Senator Aseltine was Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, and for how long before that I do not know.

I do not think any further explanation is required.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to make any remarks on this motion. However, my deskmate, honourable Senator Choquette, is anxious to speak on it, and as he is unavoidably absent from the chamber I would ask that I be allowed to adjourn the debate in his name.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, for Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —THIRD READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the third reading of Bill S-12, respecting Allstate Insurance Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

EVANGELINE SAVINGS AND MORTGAGE COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved the third reading of Bill S-15, to incorporate Evangeline Savings and Mortgage Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. A. L. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Leonard, moved the third reading of Bill S-10, to provide for the establishment of harbour commissions.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-20 intituled an Act to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I will be some time with this bill. As you know, I am generally brief but on this bill I would like to have a little more freedom of time than is available at this hour. I feel we have had enough strong arguments this afternoon, and unless someone has serious objection I would ask that this order stand until Wednesday, May 13.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, May 11, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

THE SENATE

Monday, May 11, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Operations under the Bretton Woods Agreements Act (International Monetary Fund, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and International Finance Corporation) and Report of Operations under the International Development Association Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the first-mentioned Act, chapter 19, R.S.C., 1952, and section 5 of the latter Act, chapter 32, Statutes of Canada, 1960. (English and French texts).

CUSTOMS TARIFF

TABLE OF RATES OF DUTIES PRINTED AS APPENDIX TO MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave, moved:

That a table setting out the rates of duties provided for in Bill C-92, intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff", and the corresponding rates in effect prior to the 1964 Budget, be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

He said: Honourable senators, perhaps a word of explanation for this motion would be appropriate. As honourable senators know, in the other place when amendments are proposed to the Customs Tariff, the budget resolutions themselves contain tables showing the present rates and those which would be in effect assuming the resolutions passed. This is done in the other place at the time the budget resolutions are presented, at the resolution stage. But, as we in this house have no resolution stage for these measures, it has proven of convenience to senators, following the explanations given on the bill to amend the Customs Tariff, to have both sets of rates of duty—those before the budget and those which the budget proposes to implement.

For that reason, and in anticipation of the explanation which is to be given on the motion for second reading of this bill, this step was thought appropriate at this time.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is in addition to the schedule of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO STUDY REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 7, the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Thorvaldson:

That the fifty-fourth Report of the Department of External Affairs, covering the calendar year 1963, laid before the House on February 25th, 1964, pursuant to section 6 of the External Affairs Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for consideration.

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I rise at this time to make a few brief remarks in support of the motion which, I take it, is in effect a motion to reactivate our Standing Committtee on External Relations. I believe it is both expedient and in the public interest that this be done, mainly for the following reasons.

In the first place, as some honourable senators have already pointed out, we are living in a completely new era of international relations, one different in fact from any the world has ever known.

Secondly, the upper chamber of any legislature is in many ways a very appropriate place for discussion of the international relations of any country.

Thirdly, this chamber, which embraces the committee membership, has a wealth of talent which could well be applied to this subject matter, but which is, to some extent, at the present time being wasted.

Fourthly, I think it is true that Canada, unlike many other nations, does not have a comparable authority on international relations, fully activated, fully aware and carrying out its responsibilities, doing the job which, it seems to me, needs to be done in any nation, namely, the continuous examination and assessment not only of international policy but of the routine mechanism by which that policy is implemented at various levels of government.

Fifthly, I am sure all honourable senators will agree that we have in the chairman of this committee one eminently qualified to give leadership.

Now if I may, I shall say just a few words on each of those five points. In relation to the new era in international affairs I emphasize merely the one aspect, that we have in the world today more sovereign nations than ever before in the history of mankind. At the same time we have more international groupings of nations than ever before. I think there is a particular reason why these two facts emphasize the opportunity for Canada to play a much greater role in international relations in the future than we have done in the past.

In that connection one remembers the words of an eminent statesman of former years, as quoted by Senator Lambert at the last sitting. I think it is true that the march of events has, to a considerable degree, negated the validity of that statement, which was in effect that Canadians are perhaps too inclined to be self-important in the realm of international affairs. It is an amazing fact that the trend of recent times has been towards nationalism in the world, for over the previous centuries the trend had been the other way, that of the establishment of great empires. I think that any historian looking into the future at, say, the turn of the century, would have predicted that the organization and groupings of mankind would have been in the direction of more and greater integrated national groups rather than in the proliferation of individual nations, which was in fact taking place.

This emphasizes, I think, that, whether we like it or not, nationality and nationalism are here to stay. In some of my reading, particularly that by writers who would describe themselves as intellectuals, I find a tendency to denigrate nationalism. That is understandable, because many will feel that the more nationalism we have, the less likely we are to have the "One World" of popular fiction which was introduced, on at least one occasion, into more or less practical politics.

I think the historian of that day would have suggested, for example, that when Africa emerged from colonialism there would be three or four great African federations rather than the multiplicity of nations which have come forth. The significance of this to Canada is that in a world where there are going to be fewer and fewer great nations and more and more small nations, the position of Canada as one of the leading middle nations is inevitably going to become more important. I think we are going to be in a position of leadership, or at least have the opportunity to lead more nations than was ever the case in the past.

That is all I will say now on the subject of nationalism, though one could speak for a considerable time on the subject.

On the other hand, internationalism is also one of the phenomena of recent times. The United Nations alone has some 14 very active and important international agencies. It is rather interesting that on page 11 of the current issue of the Stateman's Year Book, the 100th issue, there is a chart setting out these 14 agencies, and starring those nations which participate in any or all of them. Canada is one of those nations which rates a star in the matter of participation in each, and therefore all of these important United Nations agencies.

Then there are of course all the other agencies, the other groupings, not too many of them fully international because even the United Nations itself, as has already been pointed out in this debate, is not fully international since it still takes upon itself—and I shall not express a view one way or the other on this—the right to exclude some nations that in its view cannot qualify under its charter.

So there is really no completely international organization, but there are many, as we all know, which accept international responsibilities over large areas. One thinks, of course, of our own Commonwealth, NATO, CENTO, SEATO, the Arab League and others.

Internationalism, like nationalism, is here to stay, and here again the opportunity for Canada to play an important part in the future of the world is greater than it was. In this realm of internationalism the great responsibility will fall upon those nations which are sometimes referred to as the more developed nations. The developing nations can be expected to be concerned more with their own national affairs. Surely, it is one of the responsibilities of national maturity that a nation looks to its responsibilities in the international sphere.

The second point I mentioned was the role of an upper chamber. It is a fact that more often than not upper chambers in other jurisdictions have distinguished themselves by participation in the development of national policy in the international field. The United States is an example that comes immediately to mind. In that country there is a specific constitutional responsibility on the upper chamber. Among other things, it must approve international treaties before they can be ratified. The Senate of the United States also has the right to approve or disapprove of the appointment of ambassadors. We, in this chamber, do not aspire to anything like that, but I think it is reasonable that we do aspire to a more important role than we have at the present time in the assessment and examination of our national policy in the international field.

It is also a fact that national concern in international affairs—perhaps more than any other subject—lends itself to bipartisanship. I regret, as I am sure many honourable senators do, that while we in this chamber pride ourselves in, or at least talk a great deal about, our non-partisanship there are times when we do seem to lapse into partisanship, as we did the other day. I say that deliberately, because that was a lapse into the ultimate kind of partisanship—it was a partisan vote. However, we do pride ourselves on our being able to rise above partisanship. I think one or two of us occasionally do descend into the depths, and perhaps we should be heartened when it is demonstrated to us that partisanship has at some times at least a place in the deliberations of this chamber. I am sure that bipartisanship should have a place in discussions of the national policy of our country, and if the committee is given the authority asked in the motion we will have some very outstanding demonstrations of bipartisan judgment in its deliberations.

This brings me to the third point I mentioned, that of the wealth of talent here. The speeches of Senator Thorvaldson and Senator Lambert were but a mere surface indication of the tremendous talent, skill, experience and ability in this very important field that resides in members of this chamber. In my opening remarks I said that at the moment I felt that talent was being wasted. During the short time I have been a member here we have not had many debates on international affairs, but I am sure that if the committee is given the authority sought in this motion, one of the results will be that there will be brought to bear on these problems in international affairs the tremendous experience that exists here. I am sure also that no other body in Canada can offer such talent, skill, judgment and experience.

My fourth reason for supporting the motion is, therefore, that I believe there is no other national body conducting such an investigation. We are all aware that there are societies, seminars, groups in universities and such like that once in a while address themselves to a particular problem. The Standing Committee on External Affairs of the House of Commons meets from time to time and does an excellent job, but as one reads the reports of its proceedings over the years it does seem that there is no continuing assessment of our international policy, and certainly not very much of the mechanism of that policy. Of course, the motion would bring this very aspect definitely before the committee. It would allow the committee to examine at once the latest report of the Department of External Affairs. From such an examination, I hope the committee could make some valuable suggestions for improvement of that mechanism.

In saying that, I am not criticizing the department or its personnel. However, in all countries the personnel of the Department of External Affairs tends to become more removed from the main stream of the thought of the nation. Perhaps this is inevitable, as they are dealing with varied, detailed, and intricate matters and reports. I believe that some candid questioning of senior officials in such a committee would result in information which may be very much in the public interest.

For example, the weekend supplement of the Globe and Mail contains an article which calls attention to the fact that there are many international conventions and treaties in which Canada is interested but regarding which there appears to be no record of Canadian action.

Honourable senators, it is a fact also that we are committed internationally to some courses of action in international treaties, but in spite of that we have domestic laws which are of themselves a defiance of those treaties. Without particularizing at the moment, I say that is the situation. It is a matter which might well be examined in this committee.

Finally, honourable senators, we have in the chairman of the committee, honourable Senator Thorvaldson, one who is eminently fit to take the leadership such a committee requires if it is to discharge its duties efficiently. Most honourable senators are aware of Senator Thorvaldson's qualifications, so I will not go into detail. He has represented Canada and this Senate at international conventions in various countries. He has spoken eloquently here and shows a full knowledge of world affairs. That is my fifth and final reason for supporting this motion and suggesting to others that it is worthy of support.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Belisle, debate adjourned.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO MAKE INQUIRY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 29, the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Isnor:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, it is a privilege to have the opportunity to say a few words about the tourist industry. I have listened with interest to the debates and note the general expression of agreement.

I should like to compliment honourable Senator Isnor on his work in this important matter. I also compliment honourable Senator Fergusson, who spoke for our province last week and covered the subject so well. Naturally, I should like to compliment also all those other senators who took part in the debate. All senators have talked at length on this subject, so I do not intend to repeat what has been said. I shall limit myself to a few minutes and make my humble contribution by trying to define or classify tourists.

Honourable senators, what is a tourist? Who are the tourists?

A tourist is someone travelling through the country for pleasure or for business. Tourists are people like you and me and they may be classified into two groups. For example, a person coming from and going to a specific point, say directly from Toronto to Halifax, is one type. Then there is the tourist at large, one who has no specific destination, who is travelling for adventure, visiting the countryside, vacationing. There is a wide difference between two classes of tourist.

In those two classes we find some people travelling through their own province, some going through several provinces, and others travelling from one country to another country. Among those varieties one finds distinctions, and each group deserves attention and service.

One can go further and consider the pocketbook of the tourist. That adds to the classifications. We have the wealthy tourist and the average tourist. Each one travels according to his ability to pay and expects service to be provided. This presents a problem for the tourist himself and for those who provide the services. The wealthy tourist is in a class by himself. The vacation of the average tourist calls for planning, budgeting, saving. There may be a year of planning before a trip takes place during the vacation. This group, which is by far the largest, comprises more than 75 per cent of the tourist traffic. Those groups patronize motels, highway dining rooms, recreation parks. They are the tourists looking for adventure. They have set aside a certain amount of money for the trip and they spend it before returning home.

Honourable senators, I have spoken so far of only half of the tourist industry, the visitor. The other half is that which has to provide the services. The person who caters for tourists must undertake some obligations in order to be successful. His service must be both acceptable and reasonable. Courtesy is the essence of success in the tourist industry. The caterer must understand the tourist and must realize that lack of courtesy and overcharging are the main enemies of the industry. Many tourist centres have failed because they have tried to recover their capital expenditure in too short a time from too few customers. Tourists dislike overcharges and abuses. Such things have driven thousands of tourists to camping grounds.

In itself, camping is a good thing, as it enables the tourist to have a family vacation. It is an education experience for the children, and deserves encouragement.

In Canada, the tourist facilities are unlimited. In the last 10 years the industry has been booming. Hotels, motels, dining rooms, highways, parks, recreation centres have been built beyond imagination. Our natural resources provide the best attraction in the world.

Honourable senators, what can we do to assist this industry? My first recommendation is that every Canadian should become a tourist for a few weeks each year. He should put aside his troubles, pack his luggage in the car, and take his family on a tour across Canada. By doing this he, the tourist, will learn three things without much effort. First, he will learn more about the tourist industry. Secondly, he will find that the troubles he has left behind are nothing compared to the difficulties of those who have to provide him with the tourist services he requires. Thirdly, he will appreciate his home much better on his return.

We heard last week the soft voice of Senator Jodoin in a masterful address on tourism. I wish to compliment her and support her appeal for visitors to the Province of Quebec. I would ask all western people to visit the Province of Quebec on their way to the Maritimes. The Maritimes has much more than beautiful Atlantic seas. No one need go to Bermuda to see miles of sandy beaches, blessed with beautiful sunshine. The handcraft work done in the Maritimes is some of the best in the world, and this industry can be increased to a high level.

Honourable senators, I should like to remark sincerely that in the Maritimes we have many Indian reserves, wherein are to be found some of the best people in Canada.

I regret very much the lack of interest in preserving Indian traditions and customs. Is there anything more pleasant and more appealing to a tourist than a visit to an Indian reserve, where old native customs are preserved; to see the tents, the colourful dresses, the lively children, the Indian dances and the campfires, not to overlook the native handicraft which has reached world-wide reputation? We have many such Indian reserves. One may travel through the Maritime provinces and scarcely notice them, because our Indians are well looked after; their children go to the same schools as do the white children. We go to our various churches. There is plenty of employment. This is all well and good. However, I feel that Indian tradition should be preserved.

I should like the senators of New Brunswick to join together to do something to promote these things for the tourist industry, through the appropriate department in that province. We are spending a lot of money to provide Canada with tourist service, but do not give much attention to tourist attractions. There is practically nothing being done to revive the traditions of our Indians. I remember years ago that along the roadside Indians sold their handicrafts, such as baskets, shoes, fancy clothes, all made by themselves. In the last few years all that has disappeared, possibly because they are able to live better and more like the white people. I think those traditions could be revived, and they would be good for the tourist industry. I hope we can do something about it.

This branch of the tourist industry may be divided into two groups: the tourist service and the tourist attractions. Many Canadians are investing a large sum of money on tourist service, but not on tourist attractions. A tourist service without attractions is an invitation to move elsewhere; and while we may not all be in a position to provide the service, we can surely assist in promoting the attractions. This should be the duty of each locality and of each individual. As individuals, we can be salesmen. If we stop to think about it, we shall find that we have much to sell the tourist.

I have before me an example of how people in the Maritimes can become salesmen for the benefit of the tourist industry. I have two restaurant table mats, such as one finds provided in many restaurants in New Brunswick. These are very impressive. The first shows a map of Canada as seen by a maritimer. In the area of British Columbia there is marked "high hills." In the Prairie Provinces the notations are: "Wheat—Some oil here—Gas line here." In the area shown as "Upper Canada" there is, "Some industry here—Trono."

Then when you come to New Brunswick, and to the other maritime provinces, you see some real salesmanship displayed on this mat. Starting in the northern part the areas are identified variously as, "World's greatest pulp industry; Largest supply of dead bud worms in the world; World's longest village; World's best table potatoes; Largest Power Development in the world; Longest covered bridge in the world; World's most beautiful river; Greatest forestry training centre; World's largest sardine factory; World's longest village; World's prominent V.I.P.'s lived here." And that is the area where Senator Burchill lives.

In Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, areas are marked, "Millions of scallops; World's tastiest apples; World's finest oysters; Confederation started here; Very little Scotch; No hay fever here; World's fastest harness horses, and most beautiful women; World's best seed potatoes."

I have in my hand another table mat which is an attraction to tourists. It reads like this: Canada's Atlantic provinces are famous for many things, not the least of which are the famous people who originated from there, such as: Walter Pidgeon; Cyrus Eaton, Margaret Anglin; Lord Beaverbrook; Ruby Keeler (no relation to Christine) but the wife of Al Jolson; Albert Fuller; Sir James Dunn; Nathan Cummings; Robert Norwood; Bliss Carman; Hugh McLennan; R. B. Bennett; Dr. Robert A. Bartlett; L. M. Montgomery; Dr. J. C. Webster; Sir William C. Macdonald; Cardinal McGuigan; Joe O'Brien, and many others.

This sort of salesmanship costs little but means a great deal as a tourist attraction.

Some years ago, before I was in politics, I took a keen interest in the tourist industry. The local chamber of commerce was finally able to get the government to build a tourist bureau in the city of Edmundston. A keeper was appointed to operate it. He was surrounded with pamphlets for distribution. When tourists from the United States came they were first invited to see the Reversing Falls, 275 miles away, or the Magnetic Hill, 300 miles away. However, that was an invitation to leave the area, which was a bad thing for business. We had one of the world's famous pulp and paper mills, and we decided to give tourists an opportunity to see how paper is made. We got excellent results. First, we got in touch with the Fraser Company, which was very receptive and even provided guides and organized tours. Many people came from great industrial centres to see this mill, as well as others, and of course they stayed in the province and spent money there.

We also organized a trip through the vast forests, of which we have many hundreds of square miles. We planned fishing trips, and we obtained qualified guides for visitors. I can assure you that the visitors will never forget their experience, for black flies and mosquitoes are always looking for new victims. However, that is an example of what can be done locally. I do not think that we give enough consideration to developing our attractions for tourists.

You will recall that last session I brought to the attention of honourable senators that we have in New Brunswick many historic sites. I referred to the old leper colony at Tracadie, which was going to ruin and nobody paid any attention to it. I visited there last year. The Department of Public Works expended some money and rebuilt the cemetery. They put a fence around it, lifted out the old stone, cut the old bushes. Now that it is to some extent restored, many tourists come to see it. Naturally, I should like to see a little more done, but that is a start. In New Brunswick we have many such places to be revived.

Tourists often travel as families on vacation, and they want to see something. Unless we have something to offer them, something to sell them or show them, they are going to by-pass us. This is the serious mistake many of us are making in the tourist industry. We do not generate enough interest in our local attractions, for every place could become a tourist attraction if a little effort were put into promoting it.

Je vous remercie de votre bonne attention.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I compliment the honourable senator who has just sat down, my friend Senator Fournier, for the excellent address he has just delivered. I compliment him on the enthusiasm he shows for the part of the country from which he comes. There is nothing like a little puffing if you want to sell something, and if you can do it with a certain amount of good humour, such as he has exhibited in his speech, no one is offended and frequently many are impressed.

We all recollect the old lines:

He who has something to sell
And goes and tells it down the well
Will not reap the silver dollars
Like he who climbs a tree and hollers.

Honourable senators, I too would like to say a few words in connection with this subject. My first words are in respect of our honoured and most effective chairman, Senator Isnor. He has told us that a member of his committee from each province is prepared to speak in connection with this motion, and therefore, of course, in his own support. That demonstrates 100 per cent co-operation of the chairman of this committee.

This does not surprise me in the least because, honourable senators, are not the members of this committee the best fed in the entire range of standing—or should I say "sitting"—committees of the Senate? I believe that most honourable senators present will agree with me when I make the comment that nothing assists or promotes more effectively good fellowship in a committee than a good, juicy steak. All those who have enjoyed the restrained conviviality of a dinner meeting of this committee will agree with me, I think, that we of the committee and the Senate itself are fortunate indeed in the chairman we have of the Tourist Committee. Nothing could have brought us together in one common object better than the leadership of the honourable chairman of this committee for many years past.

In addition, what could better inspire the speeches that we have heard during the last few days in connection with this matter than loyalty to his province, such as my friend Senator Fournier has exhibited? What could better inspire the literary gems to which we have listened in the immediate past than the dazzling glories of the Canadian scene? No discussion on tourist traffic would be complete or do justice to the subject which failed to pay a tribute to the work of the chairman, his business ability, organizing genius and devotion to any task to which he applies himself.

Honourable senators, apparently each one of us who speaks as a member of this committee is expected to extol the attractions of the province from which he comes. Of course, that would be easy on my part, for do I not come from the great province of Ontario—Ah yes, with its great cities, including Toronto with all its entertainment? I believe it was someone from down my friend's way who once said that he spent a week in Toronto one Sunday. Just how could anyone put in a better Sunday than that? I suppose what he meant was that in that one day he saw enough in tourist attraction and in the glories of nature that would ordinarily have filled an entire week.

We have our broad acres, fertile farming lands, thousands of scenic lakes, both great and small, our magnificent rivers, mountains, valleys and woodland slopes. If it is scenery that attracts tourists to a province, we in the province of Ontario certainly have it in abundance.

I suppose if a casual visitor listened, as we all have this evening, to the enthusiasm of the speakers from the various provinces in the course of this debate, it might sound a little like boasting. But, on the other hand, do not forget that advertising is a prime implement of promotion, and you who have spoken so far in this debate are wonderful advertisers.

Honourable senators, I am becoming serious at this point. It seems to me that this committee has a more important function than huckstering or puffing the beauties of our own provinces or of the Dominion of Canada. Certainly, the provision of a forum for competition among the representatives of the different provinces in order to attract the tourist dollar is not one of the chief functions of this committee.

In my judgment, the tourist traffic is a very important industry in this country, and it seems to me that our job, as members of the committee, is to find a means, if we can, of smoothing the channels through which the tourist traffic comes to our country, the channels through which the traffic flows; of increasing the number of our visitors, if we can; and of making the trade even more lucrative than it has been in the past.

It has been said in this debate, and on many other occasions, that our roads are excellent—and they are. I am sometimes impressed by the thought that we of this generation in America have interlaced a whole continent with hard-surfaced and very expensive roads. We have done something in building roads we can leave to the generations which will follow.

We are told, and I think it is true, that the service stations along our main highways are good and helpful. It has been said too—and I think my friend repeated it just now—that the hotel and motel accommodation along the way is of the best. Well, I would like to be a little more sure about that last statement; and I would like to have some assurance that at all times and in all conditions the charges made are right and reasonable.

I notice in the British tourist advertising that great emphasis is laid on the moderate cost of travel and accommodation in Great Britain. I would like to see something done to assure accommodation of the highest class, at least along our main highways, that it is uniformly satisfactory, and that proper rates are charged. I would like to see lists published of the places at which to stay and their charges. I would like some assurance as well that these published prices would never be exceeded under any circumstances. I believe the tourist should be supplied with information in this regard of an authoritative and certainly authentic character, so that when he receives our literature he will be in a position to budget his trip with certainty, with satisfaction and with ease.

It has been said that the best advertisement of tourist accommodation and service is a satisfied tourist. I agree with that, but I would like to add that the very worst advertisement is a tourist who feels that he was fleeced, or that he paid more than the facilities provided merited. I think that we as a committee, with the paid assistance that we have, are in a position to do something along these lines, to gather information, to see that it is authentic, and to distribute it to those who are and might be interested.

There is another subject I would like to discuss with you. It is that the main consideration in pushing what we have to sell is the purpose that we present to the prospective tourist. I state as a principle that the first essential in promoting travel is the provision of a purpose for the trip. I am under the impression that our tourist advertising is not sufficiently organized in that regard. I may be wrong, and more may have been done in this respect than I know of, but my impression now is that we have not given sufficient attention to that phase of this problem.

The tourist nowadays will not travel long distances by car just for the pleasure of the buggy ride. Nor is he effectively lured to our country by boasting about its scenery and its fresh air. There is boasting of that kind for the prospective tourist from all points of the compass. Tourists must have something better than scenery and fresh air if they are to come to this country in large numbers. They need something more than this as the purpose for their trip.

Let me illustrate what I mean. There will be thousands of tourists coming to Canada to see the World's Fair in Montreal, in 1967. We hope so, we expect so, and we believe so, because the fair will provide a definite specific purpose for coming. People come in thousands to see Niagara Falls. That is the purpose of many a trip, and many a bridal trip at that, and once there at the Falls, many go on to Queenston to see Brock's Monument and the battlefield at Queenston Heights. Others go on to Stoney Creek, and yet others go on to Toronto to see the old fort. Many people are interested in history, and Canada has a very large number of historic sites, with a story, something to show and something to carry away. I sometimes wonder whether we have ever made a definite appeal to the history-minded prospective tourists. Have we arranged tours for the specific purpose of studying history at first hand?

But history is not the only thing. There are many other approaches to this subject. Take, for example, the people who are interested in sport. There are many golfers in the United States who might come here for the definite purpose of playing golf in the cool of the Canadian summer season. I wonder, have we ever discovered those courses which would welcome tourists; have we ever inquired as to the fees which would be charged with a view to supplying that information to the golfing public where it might be received, read and welcomed? I doubt it.

Then there are those who are interested in tennis. We have tennis courts hither and yon, that are well located, but have we ever shown how to reach them, and what they would cost?

Let us also consider swimming, which is one of the great attractions for many people. Have we made it perfectly clear where the beaches are, what they are like, what it would cost to go to them and how tourists can enjoy themselves when they arrive?

I suppose there is no greater sport than that of a canoe trip. I can remember as a young man we used to pile our canoes on the train at Toronto en route to Severn Bridge, where we took to the water. We paddled down the Muskoka and up the Muscosh. It took about two weeks or less of reasonable paddling to do the round trip. It was a wonderful experience; I can think of nothing more attractive.

Have we laid out the various canoe trails available, and there are innumerable such trails in our country with its thousands of lakes and little rivers? Have we laid out these trails, put them on maps, showing the lakes and the rivers connecting them, and outlined the course? Have we shown the places where a person can camp? Have we listed the equipment required for a trip of that kind? Have we calculated the cost both in time and money, and have we prepared plans for such enterprises—little enterprises each one, but in the aggregate perhaps very great—and made that information available where it might attract people to our country? Such information would be attractive to young men in the colleges and in that age group.

But, honourable senators, the greatest attraction we have is that of fishing. There is nothing to equal it, apparently. The tourist will travel untold distances, will disregard roads, accommodation and discomfort, if he thinks that at the end of his journey he may get a few fish big or little, as the object of the trip.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They are bigger than that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They will be that big by the time he gets home.

We have innumerable lakes and rivers in all parts of Canada that once were alive with fighting fish but where now it would be impossible to assure a visitor of a single catch. I was so impressed some time ago with this factor of fish and its relation to the tourist industry that I suggested a special meeting of the Tourist Committee just on the subject of fish. The chairman agreed with me and we held such a meeting. It was a success. We invited knowledgeable men both amateur and professional to come to Ottawa and tell us all about it, and I think it was at that meeting that I made a suggestion which has never been acted upon, has never been explored. I think under the circumstances I should repeat that suggestion now.

As we know, the fish have disappeared from our small lakes, particularly in the southern portion of the Province of Ontario, not as a result of fishing but because of a change of the character of the water. Fish are so prolific that you cannot fish out a lake with a hook and line. You may reduce the size of the fish to be caught, but one fish will lay enough eggs in one season to stock a small lake, provided the conditions are right so that the minnows will live and develop. The disappearance of the fish when humans establish themselves in the vicinity is a result of sewage and garbage getting into the water. Nature cleans up the water by oxidization of this material, but oxidization consumes oxygen, which is suspended in the air in the water, and which is essential to fish life. When it disappears from the water the fish die. Oxygen is essential to fish life.

Honourable senators know, I am sure, how fish gather at every rapid and at the base of every waterfall. That is because where water is turbulent it mixes with the air and thus supplies oxygen for the fish. If this air is required to clean the water and to keep the fish alive in our smaller lakes, why do we not supply it? It is my suggestion, having regard to the comparatively small cost, that we try the building of robust windmills beside some of these lakes for experimental purposes. The windmills could pump water through a pipe to the lowest part of the bottom of the lake. The windmills would run all year with very little attention; they would operate whenever the wind blew, night and day, and the air would bubble to the surface and aerate the water. It would also turn over the surface water, mixing it with the deoxidized water below.

No one seems to have paid any attention to this suggestion, but personally I see no reason why it should not be tried. At the present time many thousands of dollars are expended by my province, and by other provinces as well, in dumping fingerlings into these lakes—fingerlings which soon die because of lack of oxygen. They die of oxygen starvation.

Should the experiment I suggest prove successful, then the presence of fish in all our little lakes hither and yon would provide a purpose par excellence, and might double, or even quadruple, the tourist traffic that comes to this country.

That is my suggestion, and it is really all I have to offer this evening. I do wish to close in a spirit of goodwill to my fellow members on this committee. I compliment my colleagues from the Maritimes, from Prince Edward Island and from the west, on their eloquence in describing the beauties and extent of the parts of this country from whence they come. The speeches have been thoroughly delightful. I enjoyed and agreed with every word that was spoken, because I too am a believer in this country in which we are fortunate to live. In a practical way, however, I would commend to the chairman of this committee (Hon. Mr. Isnor), and to its members, a down-to-earth organization of the tourist trade that can be of such great benefit to the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, there have been excellent speeches on this subject already, and I promise to repeat nothing that has been said. The chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Isnor) must be very pleased with the response to his motion. There have been many useful suggestions, and I have just one more to make.

The history of the west is rich in adventure and romance, and as people like to learn something about the locality they visit, and are anxious to know something of its history, I suggest that certain pamphlets be prepared so that each visitor can have something to take away with him and to talk about to his relatives and friends. I think this will be of considerable value.

Place names are intriguing. Winnipeg, meaning "Muddy Water," and gets its name from the Red River. The legend is that an Indian woman wanted to purify an evil spirit which the tribe was going to worship, and it needed so much purification that the water of the Red River has been muddy ever since.

St. Boniface is named after a great Christian missionary who accomplished much.

Take Moose Jaw. An Englishman, the Earl of Dunmore, shot a moose while travelling through the country. He took part of the carcass and left the rest for the wolves. Then, in about 1857 Captain Palliser, who was travelling through that part of the country on a mission for the British Government, stopped at that place because the pegs of his cart were working loose. He saw the whitened bones of the moose there, and he used the jaw to tighten up his cart. That place became known as Moose Jaw.

Regina was originally called "Pile of Bones." Princess Louise, the wife of Lord Lorne, the Governor General at the time, thought that "Pile of Bones" was a rather bad name for the place, and she renamed it using the Latin word for "Queen".

Medicine Hat is so named because the Blackfoot Indians were having a battle with their hereditary foes, the Cree Indians. When the Crees were crossing the river the hat of the medicine man dropped into the water, whereupon their morale fell also, and they fled in confusion and lost the battle.

Calgary means "clear running water." The great commissioner of the Northwest Mounted Police, Captain MacLeod, was born in the place called Calgary in the Isle of Mull, and he gave that city its name.

Banff gets its name from Banffshire in Scotland, which was the home of Baron Mount Stephen who was one of the outstanding presidents of the C.P.R.

