Honourable senators, if you go to the National Museum here you will see a complete skeleton of one of the huge prehistoric animals, the dinosaurs. That skeleton was brought from a spooky place called the Bad Lands of Alberta. These towering animals, 20 feet high and 20 feet long, lived, played, fought and died in that region, and their bones can be excavated to this day. People go there to excavate the skeletons, which have been sent to museums in Toronto, New York, England and other places. It is the great burial ground of the dinosaurs in the world. The Province of Alberta has built roads into this area and has made it an attraction for those people who are interested in these things.

I want to mention two of the very early tourists who went to the west. Away back in the spring of 1789 a man named Alexander Mackenzie was working for the Hudson's Bay Company in Fort Chipewyan. In the spring of that year, while the swans, ducks and geese were flying north, he took the notion he would like to go north as well. After a very strenuous trip he found himself paddling north on the great river which now bears his name, the Mackenzie. At one place he paddled for seven hours between perpendicular white rocks on each side of the river—rocks that rose as high as 250 feet. They were most spectacular. When he reached the mouth of the river, where it flows into the Arctic Ocean, he erected a wooden post bearing his name and the date, July 14, 1789. There was daylight there for nearly all of the twenty-four hours.

Just four years later he began to get the wanderlust again, and this time he went westward. He crossed the mountains and the Great Divide. He and those who were with him were amazed at the huge trees and the beautiful sparkling springs and the majestic mountains with their snow-capped peaks.

He got as far as the Pacific Ocean, the first white man to reach that great body of water, and there he mixed up some vermilion and melted grease and along the rocks he painted "Alexander Mackenzie, from Canada, July 22, 1793."

Honourable senators, I have one other reference to make. For 200 years a company of adventurers of England, trading in the region of Hudson Bay, had full control of that vast area, larger than many continents, from 1670 until after Confederation, until 1870. They controlled and governed and traded in that immense area for those 200 years. All the land that was drained by streams flowing into Hudson Bay was under their control. Right along Hudson Bay they had a number of posts, and there they traded beads, knives, hatchets, guns and whiskey to the Indians in return for their furs.

One day, on September 11, 1754, the commander of Fort York called in one employee by the name of Antony Hendry and asked him how he would like to go on a long trip which no white man had ever taken, to see strange people, to see a new country which no white man had ever seen. Hendry was told he would be away for a year and would travel 1,500 miles. He was delighted at the prospect of the trip. He started off with a few Cree guides and went up the Hayes River and the Carrot River and up the Saskatchewan. He encountered many difficulties but he finally got to the Red Deer River region. He was the first white man to step into the Province of Alberta; he was the first white man to spend a winter with the Indians, and to see in the distance the shining rocky mountains on the western horizon.

He was welcomed by the Indians at that time. They knew he was coming and some of them rode out on horseback to meet him. They brought him to their camp, and they marched him down between two long rows of teepees. The Indian women and children gazed at Hendry in wonderment, for they had never seen a pale face before.

Hendry sat with the chief on a huge white buffalo robe, and he ate a meal of broiled meat and the pipe of peace was passed around. He told the chief that he hoped to persuade some of his braves to take their furs over to Hudson Bay, but the chief replied "Caw in". He said it was too far to go, that the Indians lived off the buffalo, which were so plentiful in the spring they covered the ground as far as the eye could see. He said that the young braves did not want to journey that far, that some of them had gone there and had never returned. That was only too true.

These two men I have mentioned, like the early Christian missionaries and like the original members of the Northwest Mounted Police, made their contribution and then passed on and we hear nothing more of them. They lie in unmarked graves somewhere beneath the sod of western Canada. They had a philosophy which is a western philosophy and which might be expressed in these words:

> Under the wide and starry sky,
> Dig the grave and let me lie.
> Glad did I live and gladly die,
> And I laid me down with a will.
>
> This be the verse you grave for me:
> Here he lies where he longed to be;
> Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
> And the hunter home from the hill.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk), for Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops), debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 12, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report on Activities under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 9 of the said act, chapter 175, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Capital Budgets of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, Northern Transportation Company Limited, and Eldorado Aviation Limited, for the year ending December 31, 1964, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-432, dated March 19, 1964, approving same. (English text).

Press Release, dated May 6, 1964, of the Meeting of the GATT Trade Negotiations Committee at Ministerial Level, held in Geneva, May 4-6, 1964. (English and French texts).

THE ESTIMATES

MOTION TO EMPOWER FINANCE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE AND REPORT—ORDER STANDS

On the Motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West):

That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, in advance of the bills based on the said estimates reaching the Senate; and

That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I ask that motion No. 1 stand today, in the hope that we will be able to proceed with it on Thursday afternoon next. I do not suggest that we should attempt to complete the debate that day, but it might be convenient to honourable senators to proceed with it at that time.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That will be satisfactory.

Order stands.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO STUDY REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Thorvaldson:

That the fifty-fourth Report of the Department of External Affairs, covering the calendar year 1963, laid before the House on February 25th, 1964, pursuant to section 6 of the External Affairs Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for consideration.

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Rheal Belisle: Honourable senators, there are some of us who are by nature bystanders in the world, observing, weighing and making private judgements of which few others know. There are others of us who are caught up in the midst of activity, whirled about almost by a power beyond us, by a love of being concerned in the activity of the world. And there are the rare few who, while acting as catalytic agents and creating activity, are able to stand aside and observe. As I am not one of those who stand aside and watch only, I ask you, honourable senators, not to be too severe in your criticism of my humble knowledge of the important subject I would like to discuss briefly with you.

I believe it was Plato who said:

When you have a really difficult question to ask, ask it of a young man because he will be audacious enough to offer an answer, and because of his youth his elders will be charitable enough to forgive his errors.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention in taking part in the debate this afternoon to try to cover the field of external affairs. I thought I would confine my remarks to a subject with which I have had the occasion to become fairly familiar in the last year. I refer to the Canadian role in NATO and, more particularly, the Canadian role in the NATO Parliamentary Association.

I had the honour to attend the NATO meeting in Paris last year with our honourable Leader of the Government in this house, accompanied also by representatives of all parties in the other place. I would like to give some of the observations I made and the opinions I gathered during that trip. First of all, may I say it appeared to me that the Canadian NATO parliamentary delegation last fall made a very good impression at the Paris conference, and also during the tour of our forces in France and Germany.

Having as our leader the Honourable John J. Connolly, a man of great experience who has shown a tremendous interest in the NATO alliance, was not only a good start but the assurance that knowledge and wisdom were to be the guidance of our actions and decisions.

I was very pleased with his promotion to the position of leader in this honourable assembly, but I think NATO has lost a qualified man who could have been chairman of the whole NATO conference this fall.

What can we as Canadians contribute to this conference? I say that we are truly well suited to make a contribution. All we need is men of high calibre who have gained the necessary experience to enable them to make that contribution. Traditionally, we have had a role which we have carried out for the last hundred years of interpreting the United States to the United Kingdom and in turn interpreting the United Kingdom to the United States.

Therefore, this should be a land of born diplomats. We have the experience of having to carry on the government of a vast country made up of two distinct national groups. Possibly this is a poor time to mention this fact, because we do not seem to be doing too good a job of it at the moment.

We have something else. Canada has an excellent reputation abroad. This was brought about in the main by the conduct of Canadian troops during the two World Wars. It has been brought about also by the deportment of the Canadian troops who are abroad at the moment as Canadian representatives in the NATO forces and in other places.

We met many people both in military circles and in civilian life who had only the highest praise for the Canadian personnel who are carrying out Canada's commitment to NATO at the present time.

I would like to mention that our two military escorts, Lieutenant Colonel Rene Rochefort and Wing Commander Avant, did a splendid job. I know that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) will agree with me when I say that they were such good diplomats they should return this fall.

Peace-keeping activities occupy a central position in the widest sphere of United Nations activity. For Canada the maintenance of peace and security was the principal reason for establishing the new world organization in 1945. The basic Canadian approach to the United Nations is reflected in the fact that Canada has participated in almost every one of the dozen peace-keeping operations conducted under the United Nations flag, from Korea to Cyprus.

The United Nations has never established a genuine military force by direct international recruitment, and today there seems to be a growing understanding at the UN that to maintain a standing international force would not, at the present time, be a satisfactory arrangement. To determine a combination of suitable nationalities that should constitute such a force for every possible future situation could well be an impossible task. We are still a long way from achieving international citizenship and, consequently, equally far from accepting the international soldier.

The United Nations is already facing serious difficulties in financing emergency forces. How much more difficult it would be to persuade the members to provide the upkeep for a standing force. The Congo military operation cost the United Nations about $10 million per month during the years from 1961 to 1963, about 83 per cent of this amount being for direct expenses, and the remaining 17 per cent for reimbursement to the governments providing contingents. Canada has paid its full share of $15 million, but 46 other members of its bloc, including France and Belgium, have paid nothing at all. This has caused a severe financial crisis, and has forced the United Nations to borrow from the more willing members.

Last year the Assembly sent the question to the International Court of Justice for a ruling, and the court ruled that peace-keeping expenses properly come within the charter. According to the charter, any member who is more than two years overdue in paying its assessments shall lose its vote in the General Assembly. It appears that many members will be in this position when the next Assembly opens in the fall.

One would presume that with so many and so varied peace-keeping missions as now exist, the United Nations would have set up some fairly complex machinery for the planning and execution of such missions. Such, however, is not the case. Suffice it for me to say that once we recognize the importance of this alliance, once we recognize what we could contribute to NATO and to the UN, what we can contribute to this country by knowledge gained from both, then and only then can we play our proper role in NATO, make our proper contribution and make a greater contribution to the service of Canada itself.

(Translation):

Honorable senators, as briefly as possible, I should like to give my impressions and ideas on Canada's participation in the peace-keeping operations on Cyprus under the banner of the United Nations and which remind me that such police expeditions ought to be better organized.

Until now, a few countries, always the same ones, including Canada, seem to be on call for those tasks where they have to pay the whole cost, in men as well as in dollars.

Would it be unreasonable to require at last that all member countries of the United Nations without exception contribute their share each time the international agents of peace are called into action?

I am not questioning the merits or demerits of those interventions as such. I am only talking about their organization which seems, to say the least, confused.

The money needed to maintain peace or postpone disorder should come from a common fund. However, it seems too much to expect the opening of a small savings account for that purpose, when it is known that some countries, and not the poorest, take their time about paying their regular contributions, which does not prevent them in any way from banging the table and criticizing the General Assembly. In the meantime, the blue berets are organized in a haphazard way. If an international police force is needed, all countries should be forced to contribute to it.

When the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Mr. Home, came to Canada to ask for help in Cyprus, which is a member of NATO just like the United Kingdom, the only condition laid down by our Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mr. Pearson, and our Minister for External Affairs, the Honourable Paul Martin, was that such help be put under UN auspices.

Our colleague, Senator Grattan O'Leary, stated quite clearly the UN's position with respect to the mission in Cyprus and it would be useless for me to deal too long with that point. Like our colleague, I feel that Secretary General U Thant's trips are mere fancy skating to regain the sympathy of NATO members and to rebuild the UN's popularity.

Recently, I read a statement in which Dr. Antonio Salazar said that Portugal intends to stay in Angola and in its other African territories in spite of the United Nations' pleas for independence on behalf of the people concerned.

Mr. Salazar added that the mechanisms of NATO which were set up to ensure the defence of western Europe are no longer suited to present needs. He feels that the organization will become useless if it does not undergo some changes.

Honourable senators, allow me to ask you the following hypothetical question. If there were trouble in Portugal or in one of her possessions, would we rush to her assistance to solve the problem because we feel we are most qualified in international justice?

It is high time that Canada insist that in future all members of the world body provide whatever assistance each one of them is able to give.

If it is desirable to maintain peace in the world by preventing outbursts anywhere on the globe, it is imperative that responsibilities be shared by all and not only by a handful.

Newspaper headlines report that major reforms are foreseen in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization which will be recommended at the meeting of the External Affairs ministers that is now taking place at The Hague, I think.

During the discussions I had last autumn with other delegates at the NATO Conference, I was led to understand that due to broad political and military changes that have taken place since 1949 when NATO was instituted to rally Western Europe devastated by war, NATO does not reflect any longer the same needs for common defence against the threat of communist aggression.

Knowing that the North Atlantic Treaty will end in 1969 only, that is 20 years after being signed, I believe that it might be advisable to review our obligations in the light of the present facts. As you all realize, peacekeeping operations abroad must resort to makeshift. Problems come up, then suddenly everyone ducks, when it is time to supply the necessary troops to contain those clashes which start as brushfires.

Why, the majority of Canadians wonder, are we always the first ones to pay? Is it because we are used to living in a broad and beautiful country that we are affected with delusion of grandeur? Certainly, we are living in a big and beautiful country but the fact remains that we are only 19 million people to pay for those grand ideas.

Most of us are hoping that some day a permanent force will be created under the United Nations to accomplish this work for peace. It seems difficult to understand to what extent Canadians consider their country as a remarkable influential factor on world affairs. I do not want to belittle the power of Canada or its importance which is more and more evident, but we are tired of hearing that Canada wants to lead the democracies in foreign affairs. I think it would be better if we understood our true position, our value, and act accordingly.

I thank you.

(Text):

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, this is an important motion, and all our colleagues who have spoken on it have dealt seriously with the matters that are mentioned in the report of the Department of External Affairs for last year.

At the outset, I wish to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the appointment of a new deputy, Mr. Marcel Cadieux, a relatively young man, but with a great deal of experience which he has acquired in many important missions at NATO and at the United Nations Organization in New York. He is familiar with our external policy, and I am sure he will do very well. His appointment is a credit to the Prime Minister and as well to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is a well-deserved tribute to his constant work, which is being appreciated by all those who follow the publications of the department.

I hold in my hand the report which was tabled at the beginning of the session, which gives one a good idea of the activities of the department during last year.

I will also say that the minister and the personnel of his department are very active in doing their best to promote Canadian interests throughout the world. However, there are many ways to do that. I may be said to belong to the old school, but I still believe very firmly in the sovereignty of Canada, and that our country extends from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, and from the boundary of the United States to the far north. This is our country, and I hope that you will not find me too parochial in insisting upon the fact that Canada, within those boundaries, is our country. I will go further and say that a red-blooded Canadian should feel himself as much at home in any province of Canada as he is in his own province and in the town where he lives.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: This is the basis of my argument today. I speak not as one who has travelled very much, though I have twice been to the United Nations, once at my own expense and a second time as a member of a delegation which stayed there for some time and saw how things were going on.

What is in my mind is that I do not want to tell you anything new, but to remind you that the head of this country is Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth, who is represented here by the Governor General of Canada. It is important that we do not forget it, in order to understand what we are and where we live.

What is a Canadian? A Canadian is a man or woman who is firmly convinced that Canada, as described at the beginning of my remarks, is our country, is the country that we shall love and the country that we shall put in the first place in our thoughts and keep in our hearts too. This is not commonplace at all although it is often ignored in high quarters.

I believe also in the right of association for countries and as well for individuals, but that association should be free and we should be able to govern ourselves independently of all other countries. My contention is that the government we shall support and maintain shall be the Government of Canada, because it is the only government of which we can have control. I am sure that you follow me.

I agree to a large extent with what Senator O'Leary (Carleton) has said about Sir Robert Borden, who was in Paris after World War I and who attended the deliberations to ensure peace for the world. To my knowledge, he published three books, two of which were memoirs edited by his nephew. He wrote another book which was fascinating, concerning the difficulties he had in Paris with all the leaders of the world who were there when a question arose concerning the peace settlement after the First World War. I am sure my honourable colleague has read it. I took the trouble to summarize some chapters of that book in articles which were published in a Montreal daily a few years after.

I have great respect for Sir Robert Borden, who did his best but who was ignored by all the leaders at that peace conference, about whom he complained in his book. He suffered as a result. He was not treated any better than was the Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King at the Quebec Conference, when Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt avoided him in order to make their own decisions. We were footing the bill for that Quebec Conference, but the Prime Minister of Canada, the head of the host country, was often ignored by those two gentlemen who went together on fishing parties and to other places and who wanted to talk secretly to each other behind Mr. King's back.

A movement for world government has been going on for some time. In this connection I have in my hand a periodical, sent to me with the visiting card of a well-known Canadian capitalist. The first copy of that publication was sent to me by that gentleman, and I have received copies regularly ever since. It is entitled "Freedom and Union," and is published by Mr. Clarence K. Streit of New York, who was invited to come before one of the groups of this Parliament but who excused himself and never came. However, we receive his propaganda. Today, in my name, I have received a copy of "Canadian World Federalist," with the compliments of the president, who is a member of Parliament. It is propaganda for world government, the world government of Wendell L. Willkie, which I have always considered Utopia, and I will tell you why.

On March 20, 1964, the secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Parliamentary Association for World Federalism sent me an invitation, together with an application form, to join the group. This is immaterial; I did not consider it very important, because in the last Parliament there was a Winnipeg member who was also very active for the same purpose. Bu what gave me great concern was the summary of a speech made by the present Minister of External Affairs at the four-day McGill Conference on World Affairs on November 4, 1963. The headline of that article reads:

> One World Approach Predicted by Martin

Then there is another article entitled:

> One World Without War—
> An account of the Eleventh Congress of the World Association of World Federalists, the first to be held outside Europe.

This is another publication entitled, "Canadian World Federalist." I also have the March-April copy of "The United Nations in Action," in which there appears "Nous devons devenir citoyens du monde" by Paul Martin. It is the text of a speech made by him at Hamilton on January 6.

All this gives me a great deal of concern because while I have great respect for U Thant, who is the Secretary General of the United Nations in New York, I will never accept him as my leader of the Government of Canada. We have one leader, Mr. Lester B. Pearson, the Prime Minister of Canada; and in this house we have one leader, our distinguished colleague, the honourable Senator John J. Connolly, Leader of the Government. I do not recognize Mr. Thant as the head of Canadian politics, the head of the Government of Canada, or the head of a government which would comprise all nations of the world. Have we not enough trouble with the United Nations now without changing our constitution, and changing our way of life to be governed by the so-called great of the whole world, who boss the United Nations in New York?

At first there were about 20 nations represented at the UN; now there are over 100. Speech-making there is interminable, since the representative of each country comes with his speech and with different ideas and different suggestions. In fact, it all rather reminds me of the Tower of Babel. I do not see how we could possibly be governed by such an institution as the United Nations, nor can I see how it could govern Canada properly. I do not agree with it, and that is my deep conviction.

I am reminded of what Sir Robert Borden wrote in his book in 1919, some 45 years ago, and what happened at the Quebec Conference many years later—I think it was in 1943—when Mr. King was put aside by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill. I do not want those things to happen again for our country. I admit that the propagandists for world government could be sincere, and I am sure they are sincere, but they are Utopians.

It is time to put Canada in the first place in our feelings and in our sentiments, and to revert to the time when Canada was considered by the politicians of the day to be the greatest country in the world. How could we expect good government if Canada were to be governed by people who have never set foot in this country, or who come here on a short visit? What do such people know about Canada?

Most honourable senators were born in Canada, and those who were not, came here at a very early age. You are all familiar with what happens in every part of our country; that is why it is an honour to address you, because each one of you is familiar with the conditions of his own part of the country. How could we expect the greatest men in the world, if they have not the knowledge of the country that you have, to be in a position to govern this country? It seems to me that I had good reason for not answering the invitations to join the World Federalist movement.

We are Canadians; we are called Canadian citizens; but we are not Canadian citizens—we are the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty the Queen. I have said this many times, and I feel this is a suitable time to repeat it. I wonder why the Citizenship and Immigration Act is not changed in order to express our fundamental principles, and to revert to the time when we were simply Canadians. We should also be called Canadian subjects of Her Majesty the Queen. I have no objection to that. I consider it nonsense to call us Canadian citizens, because we do not live in a republic; we live in a kingdom, the kingdom of Canada, the head of which is Her Majesty the Queen, the Queen of Canada. Among her royal titles, perhaps that is the one of which she is most proud. I am. For my part I am a humble Canadian, but I am proud to be so, as I am sure the Queen is also very proud to be the head of this country.

This does not mean that Canada is a hermit, or that she should stand alone, or that we should have no dealings with the other nations of the world. But it does mean that we should be the masters of our own destiny, and we cannot delegate our powers to be so to any other body, whatever might be the ranking position or the prestige of those who would take control of our Government.

If Canada is to form a nation, then it is time for all Canadian men, women and children to show their pride in a practical manner. And what would be this practical manner? By changing the Citizenship Act to give us the name that belongs to us, a name that is not offensive to Her Majesty, and a name that is not an encouragement to separatists. We should call ourselves the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty the Queen. That is the first thing. It would mean that Canadians would be the equals of the British subjects. For the time being I have no objection to Canadians also being described as British subjects. We have the same Queen, so it does not make much difference, but we are in fact also citizens of the Commonwealth, to please Mr. Nehru and the Pakistanis who do not have any governor general in their countries. They are republics, they have a president, but by a strange understanding they belong to the Commonwealth whose head is Her Majesty the Queen.

All that is much more simple than it looks, but if we are a complete entity, and if the Canadian nation is what it should be in the eyes of the world, then there should be an unmistakable manner to recognize that fact. We should no longer have a colonial spirit and we should put Canada before any other country. Those of our people who are of French descent should put Canada before France, and those who are of English descent should put Canada before Britain. I hope I do not offend anyone by speaking in this way. But if we do not do this, we give to the whole world the impression that here in Canada we parliamentarians of all parties, and representing all parts of Canada, are imbued with the thickest colonialism that ever existed.

There is a word common to both French and Italian which derives from the Latin patria. In French it is patrie, and in Italian it is patria, and in English it is "mother country" —all good names.

Our patrie, our Canada, should be our own mother country and, if it is, then there should be a distinctive emblem flying over our diplomatic posts throughout the world, and which our soldiers will carry with pride. It will be a truly distinctive emblem. If we are not mature enough to have it, then let us keep the Union Jack in its entirety.

The Union Jack is an honourable flag. It contains the emblems of three great European countries. It contains the cross of St. George of England, the cross of St. Patrick of Ireland, and the cross of St. Andrew of Scotland. But it is not our flag.

What we need is a flag with a distinctive emblem that can be well seen, whether it is flying over the peace tower here in Ottawa or over our diplomatic posts outside of Canada, or is held by gallant soldiers who defend our country anywhere in the world. It should be on all our public buildings. It should be a flag containing a well-known and well-recognized emblem, the green maple leaf, and the maple leaf alone, large enough to be seen, so that all who see it will think of Canada in the first place. That is my point of view, and I submit it to you.

I do not worry about the delay that would occur in the adoption of such a flag. I do not worry about it at all, because what I want is a real Canadian flag. I do not want an ersatz flag. I do not want something that is called a flag, but which is merely a piece of bunting which does not represent our feelings or our own country.

Honourable senators, you may ask me, why a green maple leaf? I say the flag should contain a green maple leaf for two reasons. The first is that when the maple leaf is green it is full of life, like our country; and, secondly, when it is green it has not fallen on the ground, but is high in the air above human contingencies, and we have to raise our eyes to see the emblem of Canada, the maple leaf.

You may disagree with me. I will not object, because opinions are free. But, I believe that the Senate of Canada could accomplish much more than any other legislative body because, you, honourable senators, are men of experience. You are not the victims of prejudice. You are open-minded. You are free. You are in a position to make the right decision at the proper time.

How should that flag be adopted? It should not be adopted by a plebiscite. That would give rise to a lot of unpleasant discussions. The only thing to do is to have it adopted at the earliest opportunity by Order in Council. The Government of Canada should follow the example given by Quebec, as the Premier of that province said:

> From today the flag of the province will be the one that is flying over our Parliament buildings in Quebec City.

That is the way to do it. In our country the doctrine of the accomplished fact has a great many disciples; we bow to the accomplished fact. If that approach is taken with respect to the adoption of our national flag, then we will have one.

I do not insist on the colour of the emblem on the flag, although I have given two reasons for my opinion that it should be green. The emblem can be of any colour, but it should be the same emblem. It should be the maple leaf, the maple leaf forever, with any suitable background.

This is what I wanted to tell you. I could tell you much more, but there is another topic I want to speak about before closing my remarks.

When we establish a diplomatic post outside of Canada it may or it may not do well. I am not in a position to discuss that in the short time at my disposal. But what I cannot understand is that when Canadians, born in this country, achieve great success outside of Canada they may be penalized. I cannot conceive of it. I believe more than you may think, honourable colleagues, in fundamental freedoms and human rights. If anyone organizes an important business in Canada, and then goes to another country to continue the progress of his organization, is it good or bad for Canada? If he thinks that in order to be more successful in achieving the supremacy of his business he must go outside of Canada, to another country, then shall he not be praised for his spirit of enterprise?

I understand that at the present time there is a movement afoot to bring to Canada immigrants from Asia, from Africa, and from all parts of the world, but is this a reason for depriving Canadians, who have been doing so well outside of Canada, of what is called their Canadian citizenship but which amounts to practically nothing? I say that because I am proud of my country. You can look at the record and see the answers that have been given by the honest Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I had the satisfaction of telling him that I found his answers honest. He asked me why I said that, and I replied: "Because you answered the questions well; you answered them as they should be answered."

Do you think it is right, honourable colleagues, to deprive a great Canadian who has made a success of his business, and who, with Beaverbrook, controls practically all of the press of Great Britain, of his Canadian citizenship because he has accepted the invitation of the Queen to sit in the house of Lords? What do you think of it? I am not asking you for any decision now on the matter, but I bring it to your attention. All I ask now is that you think about it. Where is the encouragement for any Canadian to work hard, to do his best for his country, and to make the name of his country respected throughout the world, when he is penalized for it?

I once shook hands with Lord Beaverbrook, and I wonder if some day I will shake the hand of Lord Thomson. Up to this moment I have never met him. He is a true Canadian, and he and all the other great Canadians who do well in other countries of the world should be praised and encouraged.

That is what I wanted to tell you. There are many things that I can speak to you about, but I have taken long enough. I thank you for your kind attention, and I hope you will understand that I am sincere in what I have said.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Irvine, debate adjourned.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO MAKE INQUIRY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Isnor:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: Honourable senators, in addressing the motion of the honourable Senator Isnor, I first want to remind honourable senators, in spite of repetition, that the theme of the motion we are debating is:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada—

I propose to deal for a few minutes with the activities of two such agencies with which I am quite familiar and the success of which I think will provide some good material for study by the Tourist Traffic Committee.

I have chosen one provincial agency, the British Columbia Travel Bureau, and one municipal agency, the Tourist Information Bureau of the Greater Kamloops Chamber of Commerce.

For the pleasure and information of honourable senators who may be quite disappointed when they learn that I do not propose to engage in a travelogue on British Columbia, I am having distributed complimentary copies of the current issue of the magazine Beautiful British Columbia. This is the first issue in the sixth year of publication of this quarterly magazine, which is not by any means an advertising handout. It is a magazine in every sense, distributed by subscription and found on all newsstands and such places in British Columbia, and indeed in many places throughout the world.

Honourable senators, if I were to select a text for the little talk I am about to give, it would be this observation:

> There is a tide in the affairs of men, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.

I am sure all honourable senators are familiar with this line and that most of us associate it with the success and fortune of the individual, but on closer examination you will note that the line goes, "There is a tide in the affairs of men." I think from the plural "men" we can assume that it applies to the affairs of men collectively as well as individually. I do not think anyone can argue successfully that tourist traffic is not an affair of "men."

During recent days we have had speaker after speaker give indisputable evidence that our tourist traffic throughout Canada is running at flood tide. At least, it has been gaining momentum at an increasingly rapid rate. I am not suggesting that our tourist traffic has reached its peak. Not at all. I think it is only beginning on a sound basis, which is reflected in the fact that it is looked on today as one of the giants in the factors of our general economy. As a previous speaker has pointed out, it is third in importance as to income, coming only after wheat and pulp and newsprint.

I think it is significant that this giant in our economy has had a phenomenal growth. It has been more or less slipshod and hit or miss. It has grown up like Topsy without any planning based on definite knowledge.

We are entering now a new era of the tourist business, an era in which we are trying to find out what makes this business tick.

I want to join with others in congratulating the chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Isnor) for the vigour and enthusiasm with which he has led the Senate Committee on Tourist Traffic into a study of the tourist traffic business with a view to finding out what makes it tick and seeing what we can do to improve it.

Dealing with the provincial agency of British Columbia, I hold in my hand—and I hope you will be able to examine this personally—a booklet which is entitled "Visitors, 1963—A Study of Visitors to British Columbia in the Summer of 1963." It is a 72-page report of a study conducted by the British Columbia Government Travel Bureau.

The survey was directed by one of the large national advertising agencies of Canada who are specialists in marketing surveys. The material which was gathered is largely transposed into coloured charts, breaking down the information which was secured. I want to explain that in making this study a random sample of 1,881 parties were interviewed as they left British Columbia by automobile. The sample was drawn from such parties crossing the British Columbia borders from June 15 to September 10, 1963, and from 7 a.m. until 10 p.m. each day. Both United States and Canadian cars, other than from British Columbia, were checked and were included in the study. Each interview took approximately one half hour to conduct. The questionnaire dealt with three major areas of interest, which are described in detail in the objective section of the booklet and again this is transposed into charts.

Section "A" covered tourist identification: who our visitors are, their characteristics and how these characteristics relate to the British Columbia visit. Section "B" dealt with the holiday trip in that province: where our visitors went, what they did, and what they thought of our province. Section "C" referred to attracting tourists to British Columbia: specific items on the sources of information which tourists in British Columbia used in relation to their visit.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to bore you with a detailed review of the report but I should like to refer briefly to some of its highlights. The information obtained will be used to facilitate continuing development of programs to build the visiting industry of British Columbia.

I think it is rather significant that throughout this report we find the terms "visitor" and "visitor industry", instead of the more familiar terms "tourist" and "tourism". It is felt by the B.C. Travel Bureau, after extensive studies, that "tourist" and "tourism" have taken on a connotation which is less warm, less friendly and less complimentary than the terms "visitor" and "visitor industry" and related words.

The charts which I have described deal with such subjects as where our visitors come from: the region visited within our province; age groups of visitors and number in party; income of visitors, and when they plan their trips; length of stay and money spent; type of accommodation preferred and many, many other details that will enter into the programming of future efforts designed to build up and expand the tourist industry, or visitor industry, as we are given to call it.

So much for the activities of the provincial agency. I think I have given sufficient insight into the activities of this agency to warrant a detailed study by our Tourist Traffic Committee.

Finally, I want to speak briefly of the local or municipal agency. This agency has carried on the tourist promotion work of the greater Kamloops Chamber of Commerce for a period of about 25 years, and it must be given credit for that area being one of the best publicized recreation areas in Canada. I am sure there are many areas of similar population which could profit from taking a leaf from the history of the 25 years' experience we have had in this work.

Relating it to other sections of the country, I can tell you that Kamloops is roughly midway between Vancouver and Banff. It is located in a dry belt that enjoys record hours of sunshine throughout the year. In the past decade the population of the greater Kamloops area has tripled and is now estimated at about 30,000. Kamloops is located on the main line of both national railways, has a good airport, and is on the Trans-Canada Highway to the west of Rogers Pass. It is located at the hub of an extensive system of good highways. It is the home of the fighting Kamloops trout, found in most of the 150 lakes of the district. About fifty of these lakes are accessible for a day's fishing by people who occupy accommodation in the city.

Here is the picture as I saw it when I visited the greater Kamloops Tourist Information Bureau on Saturday April 18, about four weeks ago. That morning's mail contained 62 letters of inquiry from prospective visitors. The staff at that time numbered three. In the summer it will be increased to nine.

The visitor business in 1963 was up 65 per cent over 1962. The budget in 1963 for operating the bureau was $19,873. Four weeks ago there were eight hotels and 28 motels open for business. A number of new ones are under construction and will be open for the holiday season. Those operating now have a total of 937 rooms and/or units with a total accommodation for 2,400 visitors each night.

A recent survey indicates that on a year-round basis the cash registers of hotels and motels in Kamloops contain in excess of $10,000 in brand new foreign money each and every morning of the year.

The information bureau is open evenings and Sundays from June 15 to September 15. During that period in 1963 the bureau placed an average of more than 250 parties each Sunday throughout the summer—not only in local hotels and motels but, when accommodation became scarce, in accommodation as far away as 75 miles. This latter accommodation was arranged by long distance telephone.

Local business interests appreciate what the information bureau is doing and has done for the community during these many years, and they are very generous in their support. When I visited Kamloops a few weeks ago I attended a dinner meeting at which the forest industry of the district made a presentation of a spacious, beautiful and expensive kiosk, to be used as a summer information headquarters at a strategic point at the entrance to the city.

Other highlights that can be credited to the booming visitor industry there are contained in a few figures for 1963. The gross income for Kamloops' local urban area in 1963 was $37 million. The trading area, which takes in many fishing and lake resorts, and so on, had a gross trading income in the neighbourhood of $95 million. The building permits, for which hotels and motels accounted for a substantial number, totalled $14 million last year, and it is expected that that figure will be exceeded in 1964.

Another feature that is well known there, especially by those who employ labour, is the fact that everyone in the Kamloops district who wants to work has got a job.

In conclusion, honourable senators, may I say that I am wholeheartedly in favour of the resolution to empower the Tourist Traffic Committee to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned in promoting tourist traffic, because I believe that we are experiencing a flood tide in the tourist industry, which if pursued will continue to lead on to greater and greater fortune.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, my remarks today on this important subject will be in a lighter vein than usual. During the past week we have had many difficult and controversial matters under consideration. This afternoon we have had two important speeches on foreign affairs. I hope that my remarks will be in an entirely different category.

Honourable senators, some of you, at any rate, know that my first session as a senator was in the year 1934. At that time one of the first acquaintenances I made was that of the honourable Senator Dennis, who was chairman of the first Standing Committe on Tourist Traffic in the Senate. I was mightily interested in the subject, and we had many talks about it. I helped him all I could at the time to get the committee organized and working.

Our present Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic has 25 members, and there are no vacancies on it at the moment. I was a member ex officio for some four and a half years, and I sincerely hope that when a vacancy occurs I shall be able to serve on the committee again.

In September 1962 an important step was taken. I was busy at my home in Rosetown when I received a long distance telephone call —and who was on the telephone but the Honourable Walter Dinsdale, then Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. He told me that he was having some difficulty getting together a delegation to go to London, England to inaugurate and establish a Canadian Travel Bureau. Then he said, "I would like to have you go along, if you could possibly do so." I considered the matter for a moment and replied that I would let him know the next day. In the meantime he told me there would be other representatives from the Senate, the House of Commons, the Canadian Press and the provincial legislatures. I agreed to go, and away we went. The Government flew us over and back, but in other respects we paid all our own expenses. I found the ceremony most interesting, and we were instrumental in setting up the Canadian Travel Bureau right downtown, in the centre of the City of London, just a stone's throw from Canada House.

I am not going to say much more about that experience except to suggest, that when the committee starts work I think it should obtain a report on how the Canadian Travel Bureau in London, England, is getting along, on the work it has been doing and the success it has had. The motion is wide enough to cover that point.

After we inaugurated the travel bureau we were taken on a delightful bus trip to south-eastern England, to the City of Canterbury. After visiting the cathedral and listening to an historical review by the person who showed us around, we were invited to an enjoyable luncheon in the Canterbury Hotel.

We paid due respect to that luncheon, and there were some speeches, as is usual at affairs of that kind, and I was asked to make a few remarks. Well, you know, I never pass up an opportunity of talking at such a gathering, when I can tell people something about the Province of Saskatchewan where I have lived and thrived, more or less, for more than 50 years.

I confined my remarks generally to the Province of Saskatchewan, as a place which people from England and other parts of the world could visit as tourists and have a very good time. First, I thought I should tell them about our wonderful farmlands, and I proceeded by saying at that moment we were harvesting and threshing 17 million acres of wheat. Then I went on to tell them that in the part of Saskatchewan where I came from the land was a beautiful plain extending level and fertile in every direction, with the top soil 50 feet deep; that you could plough a furrow for two miles without having to turn around and without hitting a single stone. I think I explained to them pretty well what these big farms of ours were like. Then I invited them to come out the next September and see for themselves these miles and miles of beautiful, golden wheat blowing in the gentle winds we have on the prairies about harvest time.

Then I went on to say that most of the farmlands I was talking about were in the southern part of the province, but that the northern half was beautiful wooded country, with more than a thousand lakes and many rivers and streams, a veritable hunter's and fisherman's paradise visited every summer and fall by thousands of tourists from the United States and other parts of North America and some from Europe as well. I told them about the big-game hunting for moose, elk, caribou and deer. I told them too that in the fall there was wonderful hunting of migratory birds because there is a migratory birds' flyway right down through Saskatchewan to the Gulf of Mexico, to which the birds migrate in the fall and from which they return in the spring to nest and reproduce. Having told them of the wonderful migratory bird hunting, I invited them to come out and look things over for themselves.

Then I went on to tell them about the wonderful fishing we have in Saskatchewan. I believe we have more fish in the northern part of that province than has any other province in Canada, except perhaps for the Northwest Territories. We have only to go a few miles north of the place where I reside to find magnificent pickerel fishing, the walleye. You have to bait your hook behind a tree there to stop the fish getting on the line!

A little farther north we have the great northern pike which the Americans love to catch and about which you read in Field and Stream, Outdoor Life, and other such magazines. Still farther north is great lake trout fishing at Cold Lake, on the border of Saskatchewan and Alberta and also Lac La Ronge, where I have fished. The farther north you go the more fish you catch and the more fun you have. Up north we have the grayling, and north of that the Arctic char.

This point is important: all our lakes, rivers and streams are open to the public. You can go where you like to fish and you do not have to ask any person for the privilege of fishing anywhere in the Province of Saskatchewan.

I told all this to the people at the luncheon in Canterbury, where I was speaking, just as I have been telling you today. Maybe I was a little more eloquent, but I tried to give them a picture of Saskatchewan, the fine things we have there for them to see, and the wonderful hunting and fishing they could enjoy if they visited our province.

Then I told them a little story to illustrate how big the fish are in Saskatchewan. For the information of the readers of Hansard I would like to put on record that my hands are now extended about three feet apart. I told them this story which, with the leave of the Senate, I will repeat to you today, even though I do so at the risk of casting a reflection on my reputation as a truthful fisherman. The story goes like this.

Once upon a time, not so long ago either, in the Province of Saskatchewan there was a young married couple who were avid fishermen. Every time they had a chance to go fishing, off they went. This particular year they had been out two or three times, but they were about to have a baby and they were doubtful whether they could get in another fishing trip before the baby was born. However, after considering the matter carefully, off they went to a lake in the northern part of Saskatchewan.

No sooner had they arrived than the baby was born. Fortunately, there were enough women in the camps there to assist in bringing the baby into the world. Now, when a baby is born it seems it should always be weighed. But in this case they had no scales. This is where I come in.

Someone happened to remember that I was at my fishing camp up at the other end of the lake, and he was pretty sure I would have a set of scales to weigh the big fish I was catching, and which I had been telling them about. They came after my scales, and I was pleased to let them have them, and off they went. When they returned the scales next day they informed me that they had placed the baby on the scales and found it weighed 62½ pounds.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Having told them that story, I summed things up by saying that with the big farms we have in Saskatchewan, the big game hunting, the big fish, the big babies and the big prevaricators, they should come and see for themselves. And then I sat down.

I want next to mention the fact that during the last five or six years many roads have been built through the northern parts of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, called "roads to resources." We have two or three of them in the Province of Saskatchewan, one of which is called the Hanson Lake Road. Last September I decided to go north and travel over that road to see what it was like. I was surprised to find that it was a beautiful road, and led into country where the fishing and hunting and all that kind of sport were of the best.

We left the main highway between Nipawin and Prince Albert, and went north to MacDougall Creek where they have the brook trout or speckled trout. Then we went on a little farther to Little Bear Lake, which is 100 feet deep and which is full of lake trout. Next we went to Big Sand Lake where they have northern pike, and on to Deschambault Lake and Jan Lake, and finally ended up at Flin Flon, Manitoba, where they have the big mining and smelting plant. From there we went south to The Pas, and then southwest through the Pasquia Hills, where all along the roads we saw deer, bear and moose; thence down to Hudson Bay Junction, and on to Tisdale and Nipawin, which was our starting point.

Those roads are bringing tourists into Saskatchewan by the hundreds. The Melfort Board of trade put on a winter ice fishing tournament, and it took a thousand cars to bring the people who took part in the derby. Some of them came from as far south as the Gulf of Mexico to take part.

Then we have the Buffalo Narrows Road—and Senator Crerar has told you about the fishing in Great Bear Lake, in the Northwest Territores. About six weeks ago the Member of Parliament for the Yukon showed a number of us a movie film of the fishing in that part of the country. Had people outside Canada seen that film they would hardly have believed their eyes, for the fishermen were catching lake trout of 30 pounds and over on ordinary spinning tackle.

An Hon. Senator: According to whose scales?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: He also showed pictures of grayling fishing. It seemed that when you cast a lure the fish took it before it even hit the water. It was a marvellous picture. Then they went farther north into the Coppermine country and showed us pictures of Arctic char fishing.

My remarks are entirely different from those of Senator Smith (Kamloops). Senator Smith used to live in Saskatchewan, and he was an active supporter of motor clubs in that province. We were sorry to lose him when he went to British Columbia, because I will say for him that he knows more about motor clubs and tourist traffic than almost any person here. He dealt with this subject in quite a different way, and I was very pleased to hear his remarks.

But Senator Smith did not tell you about the wonderful fishing they have in British Columbia. I am not going to say much about it, except to mention that at Campbell River on Vancouver Island they have a club called the Tyee Club. A tyee is a salmon that weighs 30 pounds or more. If you join the club and fish with the proper rod, line and lure, and catch a fish weighing over 30 pounds you get a bronze button for your coat. If you catch a fish between 40 and 50 pounds you get a silver button—and I am the proud possessor of one of those. If you catch a salmon between 50 and 60 pounds you get a gold button, and if you catch a salmon between 60 and 70 pounds you get a diamond button. Several fish have been caught there weighing more than 70 pounds.

I have heard Senator Hollett talk about fishing in Newfoundland, but they do not have fish there to compare with these salmon.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: We have whales.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Senator Crerar told us about the big fish caught in the Great Bear Lake, the second largest fresh water lake in Canada. I can believe him, having seen the pictures shown to us by the Member of Parliament for the Yukon.

All these things make the Province of Saskatchewan and western Canada generally a tremendous tourist country. We are trying to build up the tourist traffic, and make it a bigger industry than ever.

I am of course going to vote for this motion, and I hope to be able to give the chairman (Hon. Mr. Isnor) some help with his work. I feel sure that if we make the necessary effort, the income from this great natural resource will reach $1 billion by 1967.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, I feel I shall have to do some fast talking to do as good a selling job for my province as the honourable senator from Saskatchewan (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has just done for his.

With vacation time here, people are beginning to think of travel, where to go, what to see and what to do. During the next three months millions of visitors and tourists will come to Canada to spend, we hope, about half a billion dollars. This really is big business, and it is time we appraised our potential in this industry and got down to basic facts. In the first place we must realize that this industry affects everybody to a certain degree. Tourists travel, they eat and sleep, but apart from this they buy many kinds of goods and services.

I have been advocating since I was first privileged to address this chamber that we badly need a department of tourism, for it is a fact not to be ignored that our tourist trade ranks third in Canada as an income producer federally, provincially and personally. Every level of government gains from the spending capacity of our visitors. Tourism is everybody's business from the nickel in the parking meter to, perhaps, the purchase of a farm or summer home.

Around 1925 Mr. Justice Arsenault, who was then Premier of our province, organized a tourist association in Prince Edward Island. I well remember the first meeting, for I was there. He took an active interest in promoting tourism as an industry and he followed it up continuously for many years. Two years ago Mr. Justice Arsenault, now in his nineties, spoke at the annual meeting of the Tourist Association of Prince Edward Island, and received a standing ovation. This association in our province is one of the first such organizations in Canada, and is one of the most active.

We must do more for the promotion of this industry. Our advertising is not as effective as it should be. We have everything that almost any country can offer to lure the tourist. We have varied scenery, fishing, hunting, camping facilities, sports, good food, the best beaches to be found anywhere, warm sea water and history. In fact, name it; we have it.

If tourists are to appreciate their visits, and to look forward to return visits, satisfied and happy with what they found in Canada, then Canada must be able and prepared to look after them well. Canadians must give service.

We have as chairman of our Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic this year Senator Isnor, who is a dedicated promoter of tourism in Canada. He started us off this session with an unsurpassed dinner, and a speech which could not fail to make us very enthusiastic towards the tourist industry.

It takes many attractions and qualities to transform a playground, no matter how large or small or how varied its features, into a "land to love." Yet, this is what we have to give our visitors to Prince Edward Island.

Planning a vacation is to many people a problem of time and finance, coupled with the wish to get the most out of the holiday. Prince Edward Island is the answer to today's tourist. It is a lovely idyllic land, full of charm and unsurpassed pastoral beauty everywhere one looks. Here our visitors can relax and really enjoy themselves for as long as they wish to stay.

With the Centennial of Confederation less than three years away, this is Prince Edward Island's year, and the province is preparing to welcome the biggest rush of visitors in its history. Why are we celebrating a centennial this year in Prince Edward Island? It is because this is the one hundredth anniversary of the first meeting of the Fathers of Confederation in the Confederation Chamber of the Provincial Building in Charlottetown. Twenty-six prominent citizens of three of the Atlantic provinces and Upper and Lower Canada met in what is now known as the Confederation Chamber in Charlottetown to consider a union. Without that first meeting at Charlottetown in 1864 there might well never have been formed this great nation of Canada that stretches "from sea to sea and unto the river's end."

On one of the walls of the Confederation Chamber there is a bronze plaque commemorating the Charlottetown Conference. The crests of the uniting provinces are shown, the names of the delegates appear in the margin, and at the top the Arms of England rest on the folds of the Union Jack. At the bottom centre are the Arms of Canada, and at the right a herald is announcing the event. The line which reads: "Providence being their Guide" comes from Milton's Paradise Lost, and "They builded better than they knew" is from Emerson—Old and New World writers who lived centuries apart and yet whose works, in combination, accurately describe the conference.

On the left of the tablet are the features of five statesmen from the provinces concerned. Sir John A. Macdonald from Upper Canada holds the symbol of medicine, the winged serpents, the ideals of union. At his feet are a scythe, a sheaf of wheat and a locomotive. These tell us that Manitoba had joined the Union. British Columbia became a province. The Prairies were populated, seed time and harvest came and were followed by development and prosperity.

I should like to note at this point that Sir John A. Macdonald spent part of the summer of 1870 recuperating in Prince Edward Island. The session of Parliament had been very trying, and as it drew to a close the Prime Minister was completely exhausted, so he chose to bring his family to this island away from the strain and pressures of public business. The former summer home of the Lieutenant Governors on the beautiful Hillsboro River was put at his disposal, and there he relaxed, rested and regained his usual vigour and vitality.

Sir Georges Cartier from Lower Canada holds a torch and the sword of justice, symbolic of the fact that his notable professional achievement as a lawyer was the re-coding of the laws of his native province.

Colonel Gray of Prince Edward Island, who was the chairman of the Charlottetown Conference, holds the Roman symbol of unity, the Fascis, being four staves bound together.

At the time of the Charlottetown Conference the American Civil War was being fought, and all areas along the Atlantic seaboard were insecure. The provinces were feeling the need of union, and Downing Street was also urging it. I might mention too that it was from a daughter of Colonel Gray that I heard many stories regarding the activities of the Charlottetown and Quebec Conferences.

At Sir Charles Tupper's feet are a pick-axe and a fish representing the basic industries—mining and fishing—of his native province of Nova Scotia. His hand is pointing to the words "Unity is Strength."

Sir Leonard Tilley of New Brunswick holds a scroll on which is written the word "Dominion" from his statement: "Thy Dominion shall extend from sea to sea and unto the river's end."

I have given you a brief description of this plaque because I have heard that it is to be removed from the Confederation Chamber when that building is restored. This is something that should not happen. Its place is in the chamber where the meeting which resulted in Confederation took place. I am sure those who respect our national traditions would bitterly disapprove of such an action, and I would therefore ask each province to voice its disapproval. I do not know whether it is the intention to discard the plaque altogether, or to put it in some other place. Certainly, it should stay where it is.

One of the highlights of Prince Edward Island's year will be the opening of the Confederation Memorial Building, and here I would like to give due credit to Dr. Frank MacKinnon for his foresight and effort in bringing this great memorial to Prince Edward Island. It is a national project, and is being constructed at a cost of $5,600,000. As every province has a stake in the Confederation Memorial Building, no doubt many visitors from other provinces will be coming to our Island to see how their money is being spent. They will be very welcome indeed. We Islanders feel that the provinces of Canada have been most generous in giving us this memorial of Canada's greatest historical event, Confederation.

Many special events, conventions, cultural activities and sports are planned. On almost every day of every month during 1964, with the exception of December, there will be attractions for the tourist in the principal centres. There will be some form of entertainment to suit each person. The theatre in the Memorial Building will be the scene of many events featuring outstanding personalities in music, drama and many other branches of the performing arts. I might mention a few without taking up too much time.

Mavor Moore is bringing his highly successful revue Spring Thaw. Lois Marshall will be there, as will Glenn Gould, the Halifax Symphony Orchestra, and the Canadian Opera Company. There will also be a movie entitled The Drylanders. Wayne and Shuster are giving up a big assignment in order to come to the Island, and the French Canadian author-actor, Gratien Gelinas will bring a new play. There will also be the Vancouver International Festival's production of Irma La Douce.

The art gallery will have paintings from famous collections. In fact, the program is so large and varied that one could not possibly in one short visit, take it all in.

Then, for those who like to get away from crowds for a while, the finest beaches in North America are available, where warm salt water bathing is at its best. Water sports, regattas and fishing offer summer-long entertainment. And now we are looking forward to promoting the Island as a centre for winter vacationists, as we have plenty of the ice and snow necessary for winter sports and games.

Deep sea fishing is a prime attraction. It is a thrill to pull a large fish out of the water. It is worth getting up at 3.30 a.m. in order to get out to the fishing grounds from 4 to 15 miles offshore by 4.30 or 5 a.m. when the fish seem ready to bite. I have often had the experience of catching large deep sea fish. It is an exciting adventure. Prince Edward Island can offer its tourists 26 or more different kinds of fish, at least 12 of them deep sea varieties.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: How big are they?

Hon. Mrs. Inman: Fifty or sixty pounds. You can catch your fish and have a meal fit for a king. Fishing is perhaps the oldest industry in man's activity for survival, to provide food. Even before the end of the Stone Age, fish were preserved in an organized way. As far as nutrition is concerned, fish is one of the most desirable foods known. It is too bad this delectable source of protein and minerals is not better known and more widely used by our citizens. No matter where a tourist stays in Prince Edward Island he will find a stream or pond not very far away where he can do some trout fishing, or go to the salt water rivers where he can land some sea trout in a couple of hours or less, have a swim, and be back before dark to wherever he is staying. The family can go along too, as safe bathing for children and unsurpassed scenery make an excellent outing for the whole family.

There are many historic sites to see in Prince Edward Island; we have even a magnetic hill, in fact, two of them. I have told on a number of occasions in this chamber stories about our places of particular interest, so I will not repeat them at this time but will have more to say later. Also, I wish at a later date to speak on the new industries which are coming to our province. Tourism is rapidly becoming a very important source of revenue for the province and it is an industry that will grow. Tourist trade brought somewhere around $8,384,000 to Prince Edward Island last year and that's a lot of money for a province with very little over 100,000 population.

One great need at our ferry terminals is for good restaurants, perhaps emphasizing our sea foods. We hope this need will soon be filled either by private enterprise or public ownership. I would ask our Government to subsidize that part of the industry.

Our Island Province may well become the favourite vacationland of the North American Continent. We look forward to an ever-increasing tourist industry and I know those who come will not be disappointed.

I join with other honourable senators who have congratulated honourable Senator Isnor on his motion, and take pleasure in supporting it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill C-92, intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff".—(Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C.)

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I would ask that this order stand until tomorrow, and also that it appear as No. 1 on the Order Paper for tomorrow. My purpose in doing so is not to complete the debate tomorrow, but simply to get the item started.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

STE-FOY—ST-NICOLAS BRIDGE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. J.-M. Dessureault moved the second reading of Bill S-21, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River between the City of Ste-Foy, in the County of Quebec, and the Municipality of St. Nicolas, in the County of Levis, both in the Province of Quebec.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this proposed legislation is to authorize the Province of Quebec to construct and maintain a bridge across the St. Lawrence River between the City of Ste-Foy, County of Quebec, and the Municipality of St. Nicolas, in the County of Levis, both in the Province of Quebec, together with the necessary approaches for the passage of pedestrians and vehicles, and for other related purposes.

In view of the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, legislative approval by the Parliament of Canada is required before any bridge can be constructed over the St. Lawrence River, which is the most important waterway in this country.

The procedure, which has been followed where bridges are to be constructed across the St. Lawrence River by a province, has been to obtain a special Act of Parliament. The special act normally provides that the province is authorized to construct and maintain the bridge in question, but prescribes that such authorization is subject to the approval by the Governor in Council, prior to construction, of the plans, drawing and location of the bridge. The special act also empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations for the security of navigation and regulations in relation to the bridge as he deems necessary for navigation purposes.

Since the proposed bridge structure is to be located in a navigable water under the jurisdiction of the National Harbours Board, the plan of the work and description of the site are referred to the said board for perusal and comments. Subsequent to the passage of the bill and following receipt of the board's favourable views and our engineers' final recommendation, a submission to the Governor in Council, requesting approval of the plan of the work and description of the site, will be signed by the Minister of Public Works and forwarded to Privy Council.

It is considered that this bridge will benefit not only a considerable portion of the Quebec area, but also it will benefit the interests of commerce generally.

For further information, I might add that the Trans-Canada Highway going east from Montreal runs along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River, that is, on the opposite side of Quebec City.

Prior to construction of the Trans-Canada Highway, the main highway between Montreal and Quebec was on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, and the construction of this new bridge is required to link the south and north shores and the City of Quebec, where the traffic is dense.

Actually, there are only two connections between the two shores. One is a two-lane driveway on the Quebec bridge, which you know was built over 50 years ago for Canadian National Railway, and is considered a piece of master engineering, one of the Seven Marvels of the world. The other connection, from the south shore to Quebec City and the north shore, is by ferry between Levis and Quebec, but this is altogether insufficient.

(Translation):

I may perhaps add that, according to information obtained from the Department of Public Works, this bridge will be erected 550 feet above the present Quebec bridge, that is to say, very close. It will be a suspended bridge. Its clearance will be 150 feet over high water. Its horizontal clearance will be 1,800 feet. These dimensions are those of the present Quebec bridge. The width of the deck will be 90 feet, which will allow six lanes and two sidewalks for pedestrians.

I have not the figures concerning the estimated cost, but I am sure this information may be obtained in the committee to which the study of the bill will be referred.

If it is given second reading, I intend to have it referred to the standing committee on Transport and Communications, so that the members of the committee as well as the honourable senators may obtain from the engineers in the Department of Transport all information or explanations they wish.

Therefore, I move that the study of this bill be referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I shall be very brief. I do not think it will be necessary for me to keep you for more than a few minutes, since the sponsor of this bill has given us the most important information concerning the bridge we have to authorize the Quebec government to build a short distance from the existing Quebec bridge.

This legislation is required because navigation is under the jurisdiction of Parliament and the federal Government, and also because the Navigable Waters Protection Act does not apply in the case of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River. As we know, under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, any person or corporation who wants to build or carry out a work project alongside or across a navigable waterway must submit his plans beforehand to the Department of Transport and, in certain circumstances, to the Department of Public Works, so that the authorities concerned can make sure that the proposed works do not constitute an obstacle to navigation. As a rule, the legislation could apply to the St. Lawrence River and, by way of an exception, on account of the importance of that river, each time the construction of a bridge is planned, special legislation is introduced. This is the reason for the bill now under consideration, so that its principle is similar to that of previous legislation, especially the one which we had the opportunity to discuss during last session concerning the Boucherville bridge and tunnel.

The important thing which must concern Parliament in such a bill is that the necessary precautions are taken, in order that the works planned on the site of the bridge will not hinder navigation. Of course, the necessary provisions are included in this bill, that is, the regular provisions which are found in bills of this kind and provide every guarantee in this respect.

As a matter of fact, the advisability of building a bridge is hardly our business and I may say that we should care little whether this bridge is required, especially when it is to be built by the Quebec government. That is surely its own problem. But, as a resident of the province of Quebec and of Quebec City, I am very pleased with this decision, because the present Quebec bridge is no longer adequate. Traffic is so heavy at peak hours that it takes sometimes over an hour to cross from Quebec City to Levis, or in the opposite direction.

As pointed out by the mover of this bill, that bridge will be located about 600 or 1,000 feet west of the present Quebec bridge. Thus, in short, it is a matter of twinning the bridge which links the capital to the Trans-Canada highway which is being completed. I do not know if the bridge is what is needed most between the south and the north shore in the vicinity of Quebec. Personally, I always had the impression that it was much more urgent to link the two cities of Quebec and Levis directly, either by a tunnel or a bridge. I am sure that Senator Vaillancourt as well as His Honour the Speaker of the Senate must, in their heart, agree with me on that. But, in any case, even with direct communication between Quebec City and Levis, the problem of the Quebec bridge, which would remain inadequate, would not be solved.

The Government decided to proceed first with the construction of that bridge. As far as I am concerned, I am very glad over this decision, but I hope that before long a new bill will be presented to the Senate to settle the problem of direct communication between Quebec and Levis.

As far as we, on this side of this house, are concerned, we feel that the bill could be immediately read the second time, provided that we receive more information when the bill is studied by the Transport and Communications Committee to which it will be referred.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill whether people who have studied the construction of a tunnel between Quebec City and Levis will be called before the committee to explain how the work could be proceeded with.

If the proposed bridge is built, residents of Levis and of the lower St. Lawrence will have to go further to cross the river.

However, as honourable Senator Flynn pointed out, another bridge will have to be built or some other project will have to be carried out to solve the problem.

That is why I should like to know whether thorough studies have been made by people who could give us sufficient evidence of the fact that the project is feasible.

It seems to me that the Department of Transport has done some work and the officials concerned might be able to give us some information when the bill is before the committee. Consequently, I hope that experts will be called as witnesses to give us the information we may ask for.

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: I would like to tell the honourable senator that we will start by building that bridge; then, we will make further plans later for another bridge or a tunnel.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: A tunnel would be better.

(Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dessureault, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

COMPANIES ACT

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-22 intituled an Act to amend the Companies Act.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I would ask that this item stand until Thursday next, and that it appear as item No. 1 on the Orders of the Day for that date.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

DIVORCE

MOTION FOR AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES AND ORDERS—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 7, the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Roebuck:

That the Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate be amended as follows:

1. Immediately after paragraph (g) of clause 1 of Rule 162 insert the following:

(h) a statement of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof;

2. Re-letter paragraph (h) of clause 1 of Rule 162 as paragraph "(i)".

3. Immediately after paragraph 5 of Form C-1 (General Form of Petition) insert the following:

6. That the following is a statement under Rule 162 of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof. (If no previous proceedings, so state).

4. Re-number paragraphs 6 and 7 of Form C-1 as paragraphs 7 and 8.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, the only reason this item stands in my name on the Orders of the Day is that last Thursday, when it was explained, I had to leave the chamber rather early. What I have to say now will be brief, and is only by way of a suggestion.

When the honourable Senator Roebuck gave his notice of motion a few days ago, and said that something had been left out of the rules inadvertently, I thought of something else that might be added now, which had not existed before and has not been included in Rule 162.

What is proposed to be included now is a statement of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage, or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, etc. We have a similar clause or rule in our Ontario rules. I know the honourable chairman has always wanted to conform as much as possible to the rules existing in our Ontario courts relating to divorce.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We have the same in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes.

I thought another provision should be included, similar to Rule 788 of our Ontario Annual Practice, 1964 edition. That is, a provision to the effect that if the petitioner—the plaintiff, in our Ontario courts—is also guilty of a matrimonial offence, he or she is required to state that in his or her petition, and the officer hearing the action, in this case the Commissioner, must exercise his discretion. We know that the present Commissioner, as his functions now stand, does not give a final decision, and therefore will not exercise his discretion, or might not be called upon to do so, but the committee might be called upon to do so, on his suggestion, after hearing about the matrimonial offence committed by the petitioner. At a later date, if he is to be made a judge of the Exchequer Court, I believe the inclusion of this clause would become pertinent. In our Ontario rules it reads thus:

788. (1) Where a party has been guilty of a matrimonial offence,

(a) the statement of claim or counter-claim shall contain a special prayer that the court will exercise its discretion in favour of such party notwithstanding the commission of such matrimonial offence; and

(b) a statement signed by such party setting forth all the facts relating to such offence and the grounds upon which the exercise of the discretion is asked shall be placed in a sealed envelope and filed with the statement of claim or counter-claim, as the case may be.

(2) Except by fiat of a judge given prior to the final disposition of the action, such statement shall not be open to inspection by any person.

(3) A judge seized of the action may peruse the statement which, subject to any direction as to its disclosure to any designated person, shall then be resealed and left on file.

That is a matter of procedure. I do not suggest that each petitioner would have to file a sealed envelope along with his petition, but I think that in certain cases the discretion of the presiding judge, when he becomes a judge, or of the committee, should be exercised, because we know of cases where a man might have been living with another woman for many years and who, because of his conduct, will almost have driven his wife to commit adultery. He then comes to court and asks for relief. I think that in such cases we should look into the circumstances, and whoever hears the case should be called upon to exercise his discretion.

That is the only suggestion I wish to make.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My friend is not actually moving an amendment. I suggest we adjourn the matter, so that I can have an opportunity of considering my friend's suggestion. At the moment I see no objection to it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We do not go that far in other provinces. In the province of Saskatchewan, when the plaintiff gives evidence at the trial he must disclose the facts as to what has taken place.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We have met with circumstances such as have been described. Very recently we had such a case, and refused the discretion. It is, in fact, under consideration now. However, if the house would agree to let the question stand until tomorrow, we will consider it.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands for consideration tomorrow.

PRIVATE BILL

LES SCOUTS CATHOLIQUES DU CANADA—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-19, intituled: "An Act to incorporate Les Scouts Catholiques du Canada".

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Please stand until the Tuesday after next.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 13, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ESTATE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-94, to amend the Estate Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

SEICHO-NO-IE—FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll presented Bill S-23, to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Croll moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Cornwall International Bridge Company, Limited, for the year ended September 30, 1963, certified by the Auditor General, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of The Seaway International Bridge Corporation, Ltd., for the year ended December 31, 1963, certified by the Auditor General, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Capital Budget of the Farm Credit Corporation, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, and a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-539, dated April 16, 1964, approving same. (English text).

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 264 to 292, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Tuesday next.

He said: Honourable senators, may I place on record information as to the progress made by the Commissioner and the committee in divorce matters, since this seems an appropriate time to do so.

Petitions heard since January 7, 1964, total 368. Petitions held for adjudication to date—that is, cases in which some delay has occurred in connection with their passage or rejection—total 18. These cases are in abeyance. Five petitions have been rejected. A total of 345 cases have been dealt with, and 18 are in the process of completion.

Cases still to be heard, not counting the petitions I have just presented, total 677. They provide a fairly good bill of fare, but nothing to concern us because the work is going forward fairly rapidly. Some of these 677 petitions will not be heard at all. There are always some cases not proceeded with because the parties effect a reconciliation or change their minds. I still anticipate that we will have caught up on the backlog and will be on the regular flow of petitions by sometime this fall.

Motion agreed to.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Eric Cook moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FLAG

UNDERTAKING ATTRIBUTED TO PRIME MINISTER—INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I direct a question to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West)?

In the other place yesterday the Prime Minister gave an undertaking that he would submit the cabinet's choice of a new distinctive flag to a free vote of the House of Commons. The question I wish to ask is: Does that undertaking as to a free vote apply to this branch of Parliament as well?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I shall certainly look into the question that the honourable gentleman has raised, but I have always been of the opinion that the votes here are free, generally.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Sometimes we wonder about it.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the second reading of Bill C-92, to amend the Customs Tariff.

He said: Honourable senators, so far as the operative part of the bill is concerned, it is very short. It consists of three sections.

The first section deals with the repeal of certain tariff items and their replacement by items which may have a different wording; they may be new items and they may, as they do in some instances, affect the rate of duty.

For the convenience of senators, there was attached to the Minutes and Proceedings of the Senate for May 11 excerpts from the tariff, showing the new rates of duty and the rates at present in force.

Honourable senators, I may say that section 1 paragraph (a) lists a number of tariff items which are to be struck out; then, in schedule A, Part I, you have the substituted items.

I should tell you that, with three exceptions, the changes occurring in the tariff, as provided by section 1 (a), are brought about by two reports of the Tariff Board. One report was known as Reference 129, and followed a hearing requested by the then Minister of Finance in relation to tableware and glassware for decorating.

In schedule A you will see that two items, 287b and 326m, are new items replacing existing items in the tariff schedule, and follow the recommendation of the Tariff Board.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: For increases?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. I should point out for instance, in relation to the new tariff item 287b, that, as a result of the Tariff Board recommendation, the wording of the section has been broadened, and there has been incorporated, as a permanent item in the tariff with a permanent rate, rates which were levied heretofore by order in council and which had an expiry date on June 30, 1964. The rate has not been changed. The expiry date has been removed so that it becomes a permanent item in the tariff until Parliament seeks to change it.

The same applies to item 326m. The language has been changed and broadened so as to permit an easier importation of the items covered by item 326m, but the rates of duty are those presently in force under the tariff.

The other items, with the exception of the three which I shall deal with in a moment, arose by reason of Tariff Board report No. 130, which was also a report following a hearing requested by the then Minister of Finance, respecting machinery and equipment used in the mining industry and in the oil and gas industries. The tariff items in Schedule A, Part I, that arise by reason of this report, are items 399a, 410d, 491, 492, 492a, 492b, 492c and 492d.

These items, and the wording of the items, in the main, follow the report of the Tariff Board; but the effect so far as increases and decreases in duties are concerned is that upon a very careful analysis you might find that overall there is something of an increase in duties, because some of these items proceed alternatively—one duty on the basis that an item is not of a class or kind made in Canada, and another on the basis that it is of a class or kind made in Canada.

Since these were bound items under GATT in relation to the United States, it became necessary for Canada, in accordance with the well-known practice, to negotiate. The negotiations in this case proceeded, and Canada made certain concessions which were accepted as being sufficiently compensatory by the United States. Those three items are: 46a, 225d and 683. These concessions were enough to secure the overall approval of the United States in respect of the items in relation to oil field equipment, in which, on balance, there would be some increase in duties.

So far as item 46a is concerned, the wording is, "Bread made with the use of yeast as the leavening substance," and the concession was that we provided that that would be free under British Preferential, free under Most-Favoured-Nation, and 20 per cent under General Tariff. As far as bread is concerned, we do not import bread of the description here from the United States, beyond the most nominal amount, but the exports of bread from Canada to the United States might be of the order of $1 million a year. In areas like Ogdensburg, Watertown and Buffalo, in New York State, there was a great deal of resentment over the intrusion of Canadian bread, even to the extent, as honourable senators may have noted in the press, I believe last year, that the New York State Legislature passed a bill in both houses, in which there was a provision prohibiting the sale of bread in that state unless it had been produced by the use of facilities located in the state, or unless it secured the approval of the proper sanitation or health department of the state.

In the circumstances, it was felt that before this reached the point of serious consideration at a higher level than New York State, a concession should be made on this item, because we were exporting a quantity of bread but not importing any. The United States had no duty on bread entering that country, and we had a duty, even a Most-Favoured-Nation duty, in our tariff. So we offered a concession on this item, and the Governor of New York State subsequently vetoed the bill which had passed both houses of the New York State Legislature. Whether one is related to the other, I do not know, but that is the sequence of events.

Montan wax is another item, 225d, on which we made a concession. I do not pose as an expert on Montan wax, but I can tell you that in one form it is a derivative of a petroleum product and is used in the manufacture of carbon paper. Our importations come mainly from the United States. There are few concerns in Canada which produce this particular product, and the dollars involved are very small. We offered the concession to the United States as a compensation for relieving us from the bound provisions in relation to oil field equipment, with which we wanted to deal, and that is an item they accepted.

The duty up until the time the budget resolutions were introduced was: 5 per cent, British Preferential Tariff; 7½ per cent, Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff, which would include the United States; and 10 per cent, General Tariff. The bill indicates the new rates as being free under the British Preferential, free under the Most-Favoured-Nation, 10 per cent under the General Tariff. I should tell you that the volume of this importation might be of the order of $30,000 a year.

The third item which we conceded was item 683, which you will find on page 4, barytes. The information I have is that this is a kind of mud, a clay substance, used as a filler in paints, varnishes and paper, or as a flux, or decolourizer in the manufacture of glass. There is another use dealt with separately in these tariff items. It is a drilling mud used in drilling for oil. That is covered under item 492a where free entry is provided for drilling mud and additives. The importations are mainly from the United States, which might amount to a little under $200,000 a year; and a very small quantity from Germany, of the order of $3,000 a year.

I understand there are many grades of barytes or clay material, and certain grades are specified. For instance, in certain manufactures of glass or operations in the decoration of glass, where particular grades of barytes are specified, these grades are specified by the location in which they are found. This accounts mainly for the American importations. So far as the use of this material for drilling is concerned, I am told that it is found in western Canada, where it is used in oil-drilling operations, and not very much of it is imported for that purpose from the United States. Those are the three items of concession we gave. Apparently, they were enough in the circumstances to tip the scales to the extent our new items in relation to oil field equipment were released, so far as the United States was concerned, from the bound provisions of GATT. They were included in the budget resolutions and given effect as from budget night, and we are now able to present them to Parliament.

In Part II of schedule A, which is identical with section 1(b) of the bill, a miscellaneous list of items is set out. There is no correlation at all by item, and they are mostly of a relieving or clarifying nature. In anticipation of what my friend might say I can say this, that no increases are involved in what is done in relation to these items which appear in Part II of Schedule A.

One which I might direct your attention to is that which appears in item 156. This has to do with rates of duty on whiskey, gin, rum, brandy and liqueurs. By a series of provisos that had been attached over the years to this item 156, a method had developed of dealing with the rate of duty and its application to importations of Scotch whiskey, for instance. I might read one of the provisos to you, just to indicate what I mean.

> Bottles, flasks and packages, containing more than one and one-half gallon but not more than two gallons per dozen, as two gallons per dozen.

If you had 12 bottles of Scotch whiskey being brought in and the contents were in the range between one and one-half gallons and two gallons, you paid a fixed rate of duty. You can see, therefore, that in some cases you were paying a higher rate of duty than if the duty were based on the actual content that was brought in. These provisos in the tariff are eliminated by virtue of item 156 in Part II of schedule A, with this provision at the end of the article, which says:

> When the goods specified in item 156 are of greater or less strength than the strength of proof, the measurement thereof and the amount of duty payable thereon shall be increased or decreased in proportion for any greater or less strength than the strength of proof.

All this means is that when a Scotch whiskey comes into Canada now the rate of duty, which is on a gallon basis, will be calculated on the exact content of the bottle. I have not done the arithmetic myself, but I am told the saving per bottle as a result of applying the duty on the content rather than on the assumed content, within limits, would be of the order of 11 cents a bottle.

Canadian whiskey is sold in bottles of 25 ounces, but imported Scotch in 25-ounce bottles would pay duty on the basis of 26 and $\frac{2}{3}$ ounces, having regard to the provisos in item 156 by the change in the budget resolutions. In applying the duty to the actual content of the bottle it becomes economic to import, for example, Scotch whiskey in 25-ounce bottles, thus making it more competitive with Canadian whiskey in 25-ounce bottles.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): What about Irish whiskey? Is there no relief for Irish whiskey?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Surely "whiskey" includes Irish and Scotch.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I used Scotch whiskey as an illustration. The statute says "whiskey" which, I assume, would include Irish whiskey.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I see.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: There are some items I should call your attention to very briefly; for instance, the aircraft items, 440m and 440n. These are regarded as important items, and they are dealt with for tariff purposes and for importations, etcetera, in large volume. At the present time there is an order in council provision establishing a certain rate of duty in the different classifications, but that will expire on July 1, 1964. So, in order that further consideration should be given to this whole question, what is proposed here is that that provision which expires on July 1, 1964, be extended to July 1, 1965. There is no change in the rates of duty; they remain the same. That deals with item 440m and 440n.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Could you give us any idea of the quantity of aircraft and aircraft engines involved?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: If I have it here, I will give it to you.

The imports of aircraft for 1962 were in the order of $96 million, for 1963 roughly $22 million; and the imports of aircraft engines for 1962 were in the order of $22 million, and for 1963, $2,940,000.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is under the British preference and the most-favoured-nation treatment?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, these are the total of the imports, and you can see the rates of duty there are free under both categories, British preference and Most-Favoured-Nation.

The other items are in a long list in 440r. It is given at such length because the practice is to re-enact the whole item, incorporating the change. The only change in 440r is the addition of the item you see in italics on page 6, "Fittings and couplings." The rest of the items are the same and the rates of duty are not disturbed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is an addition?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is an addition.

One item to which I should draw your attention is item 521 which has to do with import of yarns, including threads, cords, twines and items wholly of cotton. We had this item before us last year and we made certain changes which had the effect of limiting the benefit of a low tariff rate to what last year we might have called general importers of this material for the purpose of processing it into production of thread, because thread could be imported in undyed and unbleached form, as well as in dyed and bleached form.

It was found that this proved a hardship on some small operators who imported the thread in a more advanced stage of being dyed and bleached, and the operations performed in Canada were substantially less because of that. By reason of the change made last year by delimiting the entitlement to lower rates of duty, this had an effect on them. What is being done here is to re-establish the original basis, and the minister has referred to the Tariff Board for study and report the question as to what should be included in the definition of "manufacture" for the purpose of this item. It is sought to ascertain whether the word "manufacture" should be used in the narrow concept where you do little to the product to add to the stage in which it is when you import it, or whether it should require more substantial addition to the product as against its imported state. As I say, this has been referred to the Tariff Board.

The other items found in Part II are not of any particular significance. In item 696a you will find added to the list of items which come in free under all headings, "Video tape recordings." Under this item film may be imported free of duty by reputable cultural organizations for educational purposes. When representations were made it was felt that if such material were imported in the form of video tape rather than in the form of film it should be treated on the same basis and admitted at the same rate of duty, which is no duty.

The last item on schedule B is one which arises out of section 2 of the bill. That section strikes out item 1047 of the Customs Tariff, which is a drawback item. In item 1047 a 99 per cent drawback is provided for on materials used in the manufacture of wire rope classified under item 104e. Item 1047 is being withdrawn in connection with the terms of this report, and materials for the manufacture of wire ropes used in connection with oil and natural gas wells will come in free under section 1042d, to which I have referred.

A new item is added, 1007, which deals with "machine-made tumblers of glass, not cut nor decorated". The entitlement of drawback is when it is used in manufacture of cut or decorated tumblers, provided no drawback shall be made under this item unless 25 per cent of the cost of producing the finished article has been incurred in Canada. Heretofore, you had a regular rate of duty of 20 per cent, and then if the machine-made tumblers were brought in and further decorated, and were brought in for the purpose of so decorating, there was a lower rate of 10 per cent.

The Tariff Board in the course of consideration of the matter before it—and this is to be found in its report No. 129 on tableware and glassware—recommended after hearing the industry that a better way to deal with this, and an easier way of policing the item, would be to withdraw the lower rate of duty and to provide for a drawback on the furnishing of information to show that this was the use to which these tumblers were put, that this was the work done on them, and that they satisfied the requirements that at least 25 per cent of the cost of producing the finished article was spent in Canada. To implement the Tariff Board report we have this item included as a drawback where the policing will be much easier, because the person looking for the drawback will have to present his case and file the necessary material to show what he has done in relation to the article, and show that at least 25 per cent of the cost of producing the finished article was incurred in Canada.

Possibly I have taken a little longer than I should have on this, but I thought I should tell you what these numbers and words mean and what is sought to be done. The provisions are in force at this time, as you know; they came into force on March 17.

In accordance with our usual practice, when this bill receives second reading, I shall propose that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What is the overall effect of these changes?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I can only give you a very general answer. If you want a particular answer we can get it from the departmental officers in committee. The overall monetary change from what it is now would be negligible. In the first group, which came under schedule A, section 1, attention was given to certain concessions which were supposed to satisfy the Americans for the amount of increase which would occur in any items dealing with oil field equipment.

On the new items, which occur by reason of subsection (b) of section 1, there are no tariff increases. Then in the third, which deals with the drawback, we find that that depends on meeting these conditions.

I should say, under the law as it stood before budget night, any manufacturer meeting the requirements contained in 1007 is getting a drawback under the rate of duty, which was 10 per cent. But under the drawback provision the effective rate of duty, when you qualify for this 60 per cent of drawback, will be 8 per cent. It will therefore be a benefit to those who import tumblers of this classification for the purpose as stated in schedule B.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Before Senator Hayden concludes, may I ask him a question in regard to Item 440m on page 5? The item reads:

> Aircraft, not including engines, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe—

Can the honourable senator give us an explanation of the ministerial powers involved in the words "under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe"? Are those regulations of such extent that they give the minister very wide discretionary powers with respect to the rates of duty on, and the classification of, aircraft?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would prefer that the honourable senator obtain that information in committee.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure we all listened with interest to the explanation just given us, and are grateful to Senator Hayden for it.

As he mentioned, Part I of schedule A is a sort of package deal. There are some increases and some decreases which seem to more or less balance each other. The concessions that we had to give in addition to those decreases do not seem to be of any significance. I do not propose to enter into any detailed discussion of the items because, after all, they can be discussed in committee where it is more convenient for honourable senators to ask questions about them. Personally, I feel that the explanation covered the situation very well.

Part II of schedule A clarifies or modernizes the wording of certain of these items. This, I think, is important because it must be very difficult for importers to classify some of these items. After all, there are thousands of items in the Customs Tariff. Judging from notices I have read in the Canada Gazette, there have been many appeals to the Tariff Board from the classification of commodities by the Department of National Revenue. An importer may think something should be listed under Item 426a, and the Department of National Revenue thinks it should come under Item 426b, or something of that nature. It can be seen that this is a difficult problem, and anything which can be done to make it less difficult would be beneficial.

As has been mentioned, this bill, so far as increases and decreases are concerned, follows the recommendations of the Tariff Board. Anyone reading the reports of the Tariff Board must be impressed by the amount of study and consideration that it gives to the matters placed before it. The Tariff Board's report following the reference on oilfield equipment and mining equipment runs to two volumes. No one can deny that the board gave this matter close study.

Over the years the Tariff Board has rendered valuable service to this country. It has been the custom for some years now for the Government to receive these recommendations before making changes in the tariff structure. As a result of the Government's receiving the recommendations of an independent board, people know that changes are not made as the result of regional pressures or requests from any special interest. This, I suppose, is the best way of doing it, but I expect too that it has taken a lot of the pleasure out of debates on tariffs. I am sure honourable senators present remember, as I do, that when any change in the Customs Tariff was proposed it was good for violent debate by men who held strong convictions on the matter, and who would argue it at considerable length.

However, though the changes this year are slight, one thing did interest me. I wondered why it was that there should be any increases at all because, after all, in this day and age the general trend is towards a lowering of tariffs. People want to get away from trade barriers. Yet, we find in regard to some types of oilfield equipment that we are raising the tariff. The oil industry in this country is pretty well concentrated in western Canada, the region that has been traditionally opposed to tariffs of any kind. Having regard to this fact I thought I should read the report of the Tariff Board as best I could to see if I could discover the reasoning behind these increases. I found one reason which partly satisfied me, for I was given to understand that the financial consideration was not the only consideration involved.

Canadian manufacturers of oilfield equipment were unable for various reasons—and the report lists them—to sell their equipment in Canada. Perhaps I should mention those reasons because they show something of the thinking of the Tariff Board. At page 63 of the board's report these words appear:

> It appears that, with one exception, the major supply houses in Western Canada are subsidiaries of supply houses in the United States. The latter, in turn, are usually owned by oilfield equipment manufacturers, whose products they sell. The effect of this close inter-relationship on the position of a Canadian manufacturer of oilfield equipment wishing to place his product on the market has been described as follows:
>
> "The oilfield supply business is dominated by American oil supply stores usually controlled by manufacturers of oil country goods. It is impossible for a Canadian company to break into this supply and distribution system without a price advantage over the American manufactured article."

The report goes on to state that another difficulty was that those people operating oilfields in Western Canada were accustomed to using equipment of a certain type—certain brand name equipment—which was manufactured in the United States. Rather than take a chance on new equipment, and a new brand name, they preferred to stick to that to which they were accustomed.

Another point was the service which the large equipment manufacturers could give. This, I take it, was one of the reasons why it was felt that a tariff, which in most cases does not seem to be large, would be beneficial to the Canadian manufacturer.

At page 70 of its report the Tariff Board gives an answer to the question I ask, although I cannot say that it wholly satisfies me. With your permission I would like to read a fairly long quotation:

> During the rapid expansion of the 1940's and 1950's, the petroleum industry became well established in Western Canada. In the opinion of the Board it is no longer necessary to extend to the industry specially favourable concessions of free entry for oilfield equipment to ensure the growth and expansion of the industry. At the same time, the Board does consider reasonable the request of the Group of Canadian Manufacturers that their position in the Canadian market for oilfield equipment be accorded moderate protection.

Barring some spectacular new discoveries, the number of drilling rigs likely to operate in Canada in the future is relatively small, and so the main market for oilfield equipment will not consist of complete rigs or even the major components of drilling rigs. Rather, the chief market to be served by Canadian producers will consist of those articles required in large quantities, chiefly wearing parts that must be replaced frequently. Wire rope, drilling bits, and the wearing parts in the fluid end of slush pumps are all used in considerable quantities. Wall scratchers and casing centralizers are simple pieces of equipment used in every hole. Moderate tariff protection for these and similar articles will encourage their manufacture in Canada.

Honourable senators, perhaps I should interject at this point that if some of the terms I have just read are not familiar to you, a complete explanation of the terminology used in the oil field is given on page 17 of the report.

It would seem that the Tariff Board feel that a new industry in Canada is entitled to what they call a "moderate protection," though from their report I do not understand upon what principles they proceed.

It may well be, as many people feel, that any new industry is entitled to some protection. I have always felt that the only argument for a tariff was that a new industry needed protection for a short time so that it may be able to compete, or that it was an industry required in the national interest. I am not too certain just on what theory the board has approached this problem. In any event, it has recommended a moderate tariff, a sort of permanent solution to the complaints of manufacturers of a type of oil equipment which can be manufactured in Canada.

When listening to the honourable Senator Hayden explain the bill, it struck me, as it has before, when he mentioned bread, that in the long list of tariff items there are probably many which no longer serve a useful purpose.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: We keep them for bargaining.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): That is a good idea but perhaps they are kept there expressly because neither the Tariff Board nor anyone else has time to go over these in detail and find out the effect of such protection.

I recall that not too long ago I was looking at and listening to a panel discussion on television. One of the gentlemen, an officer with the Studebaker Corporation of Canada, in the course of the discussion on the production of automobiles, mentioned, I thought quite casually, that automobiles could be produced in Canada as cheaply as in the United States. A gentleman from another company was asked about it, and he did not agree. Perhaps he was right. He claimed that that would apply only, as I recall, if the manufacturer were making one type or style of automobile.

That is one of the things which should be looked at. Perhaps the automobile market in Canada has become large enough for that industry to prosper without tariff protection.

I think a beneficial side effect which will come out of the present conference in Geneva —to which I am sure we all wish success— will be that the Canadian Government will have to give a long hard look at all the items in the tariff schedules in order to be in a good bargaining position. As I understand it, our Government has taken the view that bargaining at that conference, so far as Canada is concerned, must be done product by product and not on just an across-the-board reduction.

Honourable senators, I do not think anyone has any strenuous objection to the present bill. If there are some details which need explanation, I am sure the honourable senator who sponsored the bill (Hon. Mr. Hayden) will see that we get them when the bill reaches the committee stage.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO STUDY REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday, the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Thorvaldson:

That the fifty-fourth Report of the Department of External Affairs, covering the calendar year 1963, laid before the House on February 25th, 1964, pursuant to section 6 of the External Affairs Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for consideration.

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Olive L. Irvine: Honourable senators, it is not my intention this afternoon to cover the field of external affairs, but I would like to deal briefly with the range and variety of subjects placed on the agenda of the Eighteenth Session of the United Nations, which I had the honour to attend. It was a reflection of conditions as they exist in the world today, a world of multiple revolutions, of vast ferment, of pervasive change and political turmoil.

Before dealing with matters concerning today's issues, may I review briefly the preamble of the United Nations Charter, which expresses the ideals and the common aims of all the peoples whose governments joined together to form this world organization.

It was a name devised by the late Franklin D. Roosevelt. It was first used in the Declaration by United Nations of January 1, 1942, when representatives of 26 nations pledged their governments to continue fighting together against the Axis.

The charter was drawn up by the representatives of 50 countries at the United Nations Conference of International Organization which met at San Francisco from April 25 to June 26 in the year 1945. The representatives worked on the basis of proposals worked out by representatives of China, the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom and the United States, at Dumbarton Oaks in August and October 1944. The charter was signed on June 26, 1945. Poland was not represented at the conference, but signed later and became one of the original 51 members.

The United Nations officially came into existence on October 24, 1945, when the charter had been ratified by China, France, the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom and the United States, and by a majority of other signatories. October 24 is now universally celebrated as United Nations Day.

The purposes and principles of the United Nations are:

(1) To maintain international peace and security.

(2) To develop friendly relations among nations.

(3) To co-operate internationally in solving international economic, social, cultural, and humanitarian problems and in promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The official languages of the United Nations are Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish. Its working languages are English and French. Spanish is also a working language of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council.

Membership in the United Nations is open to all peace-loving nations which accept the obligations of the U.N. Charter and, in the judgment of the organization, are able and willing to carry out those obligations.

Six main organs go to make up the United Nations:

First Committee (Political and Security)

Second Committee (Economic and Financial)

Third Committee (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural)

Fourth Committee (Trusteeship, including non-self-governing territories)

Fifth Committee (Administrative and budgetary)

Sixth Committee (Legal).

The General Assembly, as a rule, refers all questions to one of the main committees or a joint committee. These committees then submit proposal for approval to a plenary meeting of the whole assembly. Questions not referred to a main committee are dealt with by the General Assembly itself in plenary meetings.

The Assembly is composed of all member states. Each member has not more than five representatives in the Assembly. Each nation decides the way in which it chooses its representatives. Each member of the Assembly has one vote, and the Assembly meets once a year in regular session, commencing on the third Tuesday in September.

I realize that many members of this house are much more familiar than I with the workings of this magnificent organization, but for the benefit of new members, who have not had the pleasure of attending a session, may I say that I found this background very beneficial when I attended as a senatorial observer.

The time spent at the United Nations was one of the most thrilling experiences of my life. Much of the pleasure derived was due to the wonderful way in which the members of the Permanent Mission looked after our every want. This, coupled with the kindness of members of the Department of External Affairs who were sent down from Ottawa for the session, along with our own delegates, alternates and observers, made for a very happy group. I trust that the friendships made there may continue for many years to come.

The morning of September 18 dawned sunny and bright, and it was with an air of intense expectancy that I entered the United Nations building, following a meeting of our briefing committee. The flags of the various nations seemed to wave me a joyous welcome. Inside the building with so many bright television lights it was like a movie premier, with a multiracial cast of hundreds, all playing their respective parts. We had our designation, and here under this extraordinary cone of modern architecture, with floodlights streaming down on the scene past gilt, wooden sidings that looked like a huge pipe organ, sat the five hundred or so delegates from all parts of the world.

The scene was a sea of predominantly dark suits, cut into stripes by the blond wood railing and the chartreuse tops of the desks, and dotted by the blue leather of the chairs. Here and there a Nigerian robe; a "Simple Simon" hat in rich purple and gold; or a black Indonesian Sukarna hat would come into view. On the whole, however, the whole impression was one of regularity.

It was clearly visible that many, many weeks of preparation had gone on behind the scenes. After the warning bells had sounded, the outgoing President, Sir Muhammed Khan of Pakistan, took the chair, and all were asked to stand and observe one minute of prayer and meditation.

An air of calm had seemingly settled after the previous session, the reason being that two important developments had taken place: the conclusion of the treaty banning nuclear tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and under the water; and the establishment of a direct telephone line between the capitals of the two great nuclear powers. The peoples of the world could see in these developments an assurance that further steps are possible in developing mutual understanding, in resolving conflicts and in strengthening peace and security.

Sir Muhammed Khan, the retiring President, had this to say:

> In our time we are both witnesses of, and participants in, the gradual development of a world community of nations and of peoples. Throughout the world, there is a deep sense of expectancy, a longing among all the peoples to live in peace and to strive together to achieve social progress and better standards of living in larger freedom. Today I humbly pray, sincerely and earnestly, that we may be rightly guided in our deliberations and be granted the courage, the strength, the vision necessary for supporting and advancing the course of justice, peace, freedom and prosperity for all.

As I sat looking over that great assemblage I could not help but feel that truly here was a peace-making organization composed of men and women of goodwill. For all its imperfections—imperfections which are inherent in it as an institution shaped by human hands—to me the United Nations is today an indispensable need of mankind.

Balloting for a new president was a most interesting procedure. Last year delegates from Mongolia and Sierra Leone were chosen "tellers." As delegates were called one by one, they left their seats, walked to the dais, deposited their secret ballots in the blond wooden cube of a ballot box whose history I had read with interest. May I tell its story?

In the spring of 1946, when the United Nations was making its temporary home in New York City's Hunter College, the box was built for the Security Council delegates who were assembled in the gymnasium. When the first voter was called the box was opened for pre-balloting inspection. Inside lay a piece of paper bearing the words:

> May I, who have had the pleasure of fabricating this ballot box cast the first vote? May God be with every member of the United Nations and through your noble efforts bring lasting peace to us all—all over the world. Signed, Paul Antonio, mechanic.

To me that simple ballot box is a sacred possession of this noble organization.

The result of the vote was 99 to 0, with 11 communist abstentions, for Dr. Soza, which he prefers to be called, of Venezuela. The new President was escorted to the platform, looking youthful and vigorous. He was born in Caracas in 1912, educated in Venezuela, and later at Baddingham College, England, the University of Paris and the Central University of Venezuela. He holds a doctorate in law degree from Paris, and one in political science from the Central University. This varied education has left him fluent in English and French as well as in his own native Spanish. He conducted his difficult role in United Nations sessions in Spanish, and was complete master of the situation.

In his opening remarks Dr. Soza echoed the assertion made by Secretary General U Thant, to the effect that the Eighteenth Assembly would be an assembly of the three "D's"—disarmament, decolonization and development.

Since World War II three political imperatives have emerged with irresistible force and are shaping the course of history in this second half of the twentieth century. They are as follows: (1) The outlawing of war as a means of settling international disputes; (2) The abolition of the dependence of certain peoples on others; and (3) International cooperation with a view to improving the standard of living of the developing countries.

It has become increasingly apparent that because of the changing framework of international assistance, our international aid effort has required a fresh look. The requirements of the developing countries are urgent and growing, and economic asistance for them has become an established policy of all of the advanced nations of the free world which have recognized the need to co-operate in assisting to the best of their ability those countries in the process of economic development.

The tempo at which new states are gaining independence has been breathtaking. Between the year 1945, when the United Nations was created, and the year 1963, the number of new member states has risen from 51 to 113. Their leaders, who learned the art of statesmanship in a long struggle for independence, have brought considerable wisdom and understanding to the councils of the world. It is most evident they are determined that their countries shall not now be left behind in the struggle for progress.

We all realize that an arduous task faces the newly independent states to gain economic freedom. For centuries two-thirds of the world's population has lived at subsistence level. The underprivileged are now demanding higher standards of living, education, health and social welfare, so that they can enjoy freedom from want together with political liberty.

The overwhelming majority of the people in the newly independent states are subsistence or peasant farmers, labouring with their own hands to extract enough food for themselves from the soil and always in terror of famine in the wake of drought or flood. Poverty, disease and difficult natural conditions have hindered the development of Africa, Asia and South America. Now, with the political liberation of their continents, they must catch up in the economic race.

As an example, let us look at the growth of the African states. In 1945 there were three states, and as of November 1, 1963, there were 32.

It was our own Prime Minister Pearson who said that the United Nations was the assembly of opportunity but, if we will, we can make it the assembly of "action for peace." Our experience has taught us the importance of advance planning and opportunity.

As I emphasized before, and I repeat, of all the changes of the past few years none has been more dramatic than the emergence of new and free nations in the continent of Africa. This emergence has given rise to new and urgent emphasis on two major questions of our time, colonialism and racial discrimination. It is the duty and interest of all members of the United Nations to see that the swift march of science and technology does not lead either to universal destruction by war or to intolerable differences between nations in human welfare.

Throughout the session I sensed that a charter revision is overdue to provide recognition of changes in the geographical pattern of United Nations membership, as none has been made since the founding conference held in San Francisco in 1945. Moscow's proposals for allocation of the six non-permanent seats in the Security Council are selfish as to time and intent and designed deceptively to win some Afro-Asian sympathy for, after all, the loudest noises are bound to come from the Africans, with Asian support. There is a campaign on foot to end the rule of white minorities over black majorities, chiefly in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. Our Prime Minister stressed the fact that the Security Council and ECOSOC should be enlarged in order to permit a better balance in composition. He said:

> We should not confine our interest, however, to representation. We should be more concerned about powers and functions.

A most interesting day, long to be remembered, was spent in plenary when the Assembly once more rejected by 41 votes to 57 the proposal by Albania and Cambodia to seat the Chinese People's Republic. The United States and Britain, who had reluctantly come around to supporting Afro-Asian demands for increased representation if the Russians were also willing, contented themselves with abstaining on the resolution. As a novice I could not but see that with the two newly independent states, Zanzibar and Kenya, about to join the organization, their entry would raise the African members to 35 and the strength of the Afro-Asian group, excluding Israel, Nationalist China and South Africa, to 58. This group which has an underrepresentation in the Security Council clearly reflected in their argument that the three non-permanent seats to fall vacant in 1964 meant a chance for them. A series of inclusive ballots resulted in the Ivory Coast and Bolivia replacing the Philippines and Venezuela, but the third so-called Commonwealth seat caused many votes to be taken. On each ballot the count remained the same until finally a compromise was reached and the seat vacated by Ghana was to be shared between Czechoslovakia, who would fill it in 1964, and Malaysia, in 1965. Real political strategy was shown during this most interesting vote and the pressure was again relieved.

October 15 resulted in an exciting plenary session, when the United Nations Pledging Conference was held. This consisted of the Expanded Program of Technical Assistance, known as EPTA, and the Special Fund. The Special Fund Assistance is used for the purpose of expanding world economy and helps prepare countries for economic "take off." It assists governments of low income territories to make pre-investment surveys of their natural resources and to establish and strengthen national training, educational and applied research programs. To date, the fund has provided $250 millions for 286 projects. There seemed to be a difference of opinion among the nations as to whether this fund was being used to the fullest and best advantage.

Canada, through the Honourable Paul Martin, Minister of External Affairs, announced a large increase in the grant to the United Nations Technical Assistance programs. Subject to parliamentary approval, Canada pledged $7,325,000 (Canadian) to the Expanded Program of Technical Assistance, and the Special Fund for 1964. Of this sum $5,000,000 is pledged to the Special Fund, virtually double our contribution of the previous year.

The concept of international co-operation has won universal acceptance during the last 20 years. Today few recollect that the idea of one state aiding another, without political or economic subjugation, was unknown before World War II. Today the countries that are offering technical and other assistance are impelled by the knowledge that friendship, prosperity and peace are indivisible. No nation can consider itself insulated from the problems of others. In a good life, nations must work together for better things, for higher standards, on every plane of human existence. Thus friendships based on mutual co-operation are the best foundation for international understanding and peace.

In closing may I speak briefly on the consecration ceremony of the Church Centre for the United Nations that it was my privilege to attend. The centre has been built in an endeavour to bring about a new and more vital relationship between the churches and the United Nations. The churches helped create the United Nations and to shape its charter, and they now feel that they must play their part in making this world organization an enduring instrument for lasting peace. This new 12-storey structure, which faces the United Nations' entrance, is a marvel in modern construction. Of special interest is the striking front window, which shows a symbolic sculpture in stone on the outside of the building and sheds a glow of subdued colour from the stained glass on the inside. It will provide for leadership seminars, afford hospitality for those from across the seas and will facilitate consultations between the leaders of the United Nations and church leaders. In short, it will provide a place where the world-wide life of the church may work through love and fellowship for more justice, freedom and peace in the world. All religious groups are invited to use this marvelous structure. On this occasion it was the Honourable Adlai Stevenson who was the principal speaker, and in one of the most eloquent addresses I have ever listened to the American ambassador to the United Nations summed up the work of this wonderful organization. He stressed the fact the Eighteenth Session began in an atmosphere of rising hopes but, of course, political weather was no easier to predict than the meteorological kind and at that time the forecast was fair and a little warmer, with a chance of scattered thundershowers. He said, and I quote:

> But we are used to thundershowers, and even lightning. The headlines about the United Nations are made by disputes, not by agreements, by intemperate words, not by harmonious actions. Sometimes a torrent of such words threaten to drown our hopes that the U.N. will ever become that real community of nations which would guarantee peace in the world. But let us not forget to pursue the metaphor—that rains and storms do produce fruitful results. To the question "What does constant sunshine produce?" The answer is a desert.

His final words were a warning to all who see only the shortcomings of the United Nations and who look upon the organization as a mirror of the world. If we do not like what we see, let us not blame the mirror. The better people understand that any weakness is but a reflection of our own weakness, the sooner this complicated and remarkable instrument for peace—the best man has contrived—will do an ever better job of fulfilling mankind's oldest dream. It stands to reason that to survive in this age mankind has no choice but to erect a mighty fortress of safety and sanity.

Honourable senators, in looking ahead I hope that in the years to come we may all be imbued with a spirit of tolerance. If all human beings, and nations, large and small, were to be moved by this spirit we could indeed make the world safe for diversity and posterity.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Yuzyk, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

LAURENTIDE BANK OF CANADA—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, April 28, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Cameron, for the second reading of Bill S-13, to incorporate Laurentide Bank of Canada.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, you will recall that on Tuesday, April 28 last, the honourable Senator Cameron moved the second reading of this bill, S-13, to incorporate Laurentide Bank of Canada.

In his usual very fluent manner he explained that the bill follows substantially the model of the bill set out in schedule B of the Bank Act, but he went on to explain that in clauses 5 and 6 the bill departs from the form set out in that act and follows precisely the terms contained in the bill to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada.

I do not think it is necessary for me to enlarge on this statement, nor can I find any fault with that part of Senator Cameron's explanation. However, I do come to some parts that in my opinion need further explanation and need very careful study by the honourable members of this Senate.

Honourable Senator Cameron stated that the proposed bank was intended to be a subsidiary of the Laurentide Financial Corporation Limited, a Canadian financial institution having its head office in British Columbia and which carries on a general financial business in Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, France, The Bahamas, and the British West Indies.

Senator Cameron went on to say that the Laurentide company is closely associated with the Power Corporation of Canada Limited, and that by reason of its continuing substantial shareholding and an agreement, Power Corporation continues to be in a position to cause to be elected a majority of the company's directors. That is the directors of the Laurentide Financial Corporation. In other words, honourable senators, if a bank charter should be granted to Laurentide, the new bank would be controlled by Power Corporation of Canada Limited. In this connection I think it might be interesting to honourable senators to know that four of the directors of the Power Corporation of Canada Limited are also directors of some of the chartered banks of Canada. This is something that may or may not be serious, but I think it is an item that should receive very serious consideration when this bill comes before committee.

Now I would like to have it clearly understood that I am not saying anything against Power Corporation, who are well known as a sound and reliable Canadian investment corporation.

Honourable senators, Canada has many firsts, but I believe this would be the first finance corporation to have a bank as a subsidiary, and I have grave doubts that such would lend diginity to our present banking system which is, I think you will all agree, considered to be the finest in the world.

The present chartered banks are not controlled by any two or three persons, nor by any corporation, nor by any company. But in this case Power Corporation would control the new bank. In my opinion this is absolutely wrong, and contrary to the general practice in our banking system in Canada.

Honourable senators, the facts and figures that I presented to this honourable body when speaking on Bill S-6 on Thursday, March 12, I suggest apply equally to Bill S-13. And again, I question the need for another chartered bank or for several new chartered banks. On the former occasion I pointed out that Canada is presently served by 5,643 branch banks.

I doubt if there is any community in Canada which is not adequately served under the present system, if there is at least a chance that the opening of a branch bank would show a profit over the next three to five years. We must remember that banks, like any other business, must earn a profit if they are to stay in business, and my observation is that the competition among banks is so keen that branches are opened up by one of the presently chartered banks wherever and whenever required. In my own Province of Nova Scotia I know this to be true. As an example, at Brookfield, eight miles from Truro, where Canada Cement is making plans for a Nova Scotia cement plant to be built this summer, one of the banks has already opened up a branch, using a trailer, until a permanent building is erected this summer. That, I think, bears out what I have said, that all communities are adequately served.

When I was speaking on Bill S-6, I gave another reason why I felt additional chartered banks were not necessary to our economic growth, and I referred to the relative rates of growth of the chartered banks and competing financial institutions. I do not want to take too much time, but I would like to quote from some of the figures I gave in that connection, because I think this has a very important bearing on the question of a charter being granted to this or any other bank. At that time I said:

> From 1955 to 1960 the Canadian dollar deposits of chartered banks increased by slightly over 19 per cent. By contrast, in the same period the shares and deposits of credit unions increased by 98 per cent, the deposits and certificates of 17 trust companies increased by 90 per cent, the deposits and debentures of seven mortgage companies increased by 60 per cent, and the notes and debentures of finance companies increased by 89 per cent.

Senator Cameron, in explaining the bill, referred to the statement made by Senator

Leonard when he introduced the bill proposing the incorporation of Bank of Western Canada, that in 1954 there were 11 chartered banks in Canada and now there are only eight. The honourable senator might also have referred to an earlier time when, I believe, Canada had 38 banks. What happened? Why did those banks amalgamate with other banks, or fail and go out of business?

In my opinion, there were too many banks, and there was insufficient business from which each could earn a profit. It was a case of either joining up with other banks or going completely out of business. It is fair to say, I think, that there is no doubt that the present desirable status of the chartered banks is because of the strict regulations made under the Bank Act. Those regulations have brought about a reduction in the number of banks over the years, and as a result we have had only one bank failure since 1923.

It might be of interest to honourable senators if I quote some figures showing the total assets of the eight chartered banks in Canada as of March 31 of this year. The Bank of Montreal reports total assets of $4,391,848,000; The Bank of Nova Scotia, $2,687,946,000; the Toronto-Dominion Bank, $2,475,447,000; the Provincial Bank of Canada, $492,519,000; the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, $5,213,435,000; the Royal Bank of Canada, $5,576,347,000; the National Bank of Canada, $927,697,000; the Mercantile Bank of Canada, $93,963,000. The total assets of the eight chartered banks amount to $21,859,202,000. Honourable senators will agree with me, I am sure, that this is a very creditable showing.

I have said I do not want to take up too much of the time of this honourable body, but perhaps I might be allowed to summarize briefly a few of the statements I made in connection with the application by Western Bank of Canada, and what I have been saying on this bill presently before us to incorporate the Laurentide Bank of Canada.

We have before us three bills for the incorporation of banks. How many more there will be, I do not know. There may be three; there may be four; there may be a dozen.

Obviously, there is a general feeling that there is money to be made in the banking business under the present circumstances of the Canadian economy. We all agree, I think, that for the past several years, including the present year, our economy has been booming. There is a great demand for credit, and the current rates of interest are very attractive. But, will that always be the case? That is one question we must consider. I feel that our greatest responsibility, in any decision we make in this field, must be to the maintenance of the stability of the Canadian banking system, which is one of our greatest national assets.

As I understand the rules of the Senate, we are required to deal with each application for a new bank charter separately. However, I do not think we can ignore the fact that we have several applications to consider, and this fact, to my mind, raises several important questions. In relation to the public interest is there a need for the extension of credit that cannot be met by the present facilities? If we do need this additional credit, then is the incorporation of new banks the answer?

We might ask ourselves: What is the present relationship between the solidity of our banking system and the present restricted number of banks? It may be a good thing, or it may be a bad thing—I do not know—but should we rush into any new incorporation without the fullest consideration of these larger questions?

The whole field of banking and finance in Canada is the subject of a very recent and comprehensive report of a royal commission. Even the Government has made it clear that it will take time to digest and co-relate this report with our national policy. It is also my understanding that no action is anticipated by the Government until at least the fall. Therefore, it is important that the Senate proceed with equal caution; and perhaps it would be wise for us to defer any positive action on these bills until the Government has indicated what the fiscal plan, in which these banks will operate, will be.

As we look at each application we will have to make some far-reaching decisions about the future of the whole banking system. We will have to consider the broad principle of the extension of the banking credit facilities, and its effect on the solidity of the present chartered banks.

Again, if it is thought to be in the public interest to incorporate new banks we should ask ourselves: How many should we have? What capitalization should there be? What additional lending power will there be? Then, if it is desired that we permit new banks, we must decide which ones are to be incorporated and surely, honourable senators, this means that we cannot adequately deal with any one application until we have the whole picture before us.

It is for these reasons that I suggest we proceed very carefully; that we give this bill very serious consideration when it is before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I presume it will be sent to that committee, and when it is I hope that the suggestions and remarks I have made will be carefully considered. I confidently believe that every member of that committee, and every honourable member of this house, is just as anxious as I am to see to it that we make no mistakes. This matter must be given careful consideration not only for the protection of the depositors in the bank but also the protection of those who are investing money in it.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: May I be permitted one remark? It was said a short time ago that the business of the banks has increased by 20 per cent during the last few years, while that of the credit unions has increased by 80 per cent. That comparison is not a very good one, because 20 per cent of $10 billion is a great deal more than 80 per cent of $100 million. On the one hand you have an increase of $2 billion, and on the other an increase of only $80 million. It is not always fair to make a comparison based on percentages.

Hon. Mr. Blois: I think it gives a fair picture. The statements I made are absolutely correct.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, my own opinion, as an old-time banker, is that this honourable body should proceed cautiously with these bills calling for the incorporation of new banks. I am not connected with any bank now as a director or otherwise, and I have no direct loans. I am thinking only of the public interest.

It seems to me that whereas we have recently received the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, we should at least be given time to carefully read and digest its contents. Furthermore, we do not know for sure whether or not the Government may decide to put into effect some of the recommendations of the report within a year, which, of course, will mean changes in the Bank Act.

We have heard arguments for regional banks in the presentation made for charters. I started banking in my middle teens, in 1903. At that time regional banks were failing or being taken over in most parts of the country. I will name some of them later. I was impressed by some statements the Inspector General of Banks placed before our Banking and Commerce Committee recently. He said:

> The British North America Act of 1867, as you well know, placed under the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada the power to make laws with regard to banking and the incorporation of banks. Since then 77 banks have obtained charters, of which three have survived. Of the 112 banks that were active on, or which have been incorporated since July 1, 1867, 104 have ceased to exist. Of these 38 never commenced business, 28 failed, and 38 were taken over by or were amalgamated with other banks. It is probable that many of those merged in earlier years—that is, before the last three amalgamations—would have failed had they not been taken over by a stronger institutions.
>
> The total of losses to creditors through bank liquidations since Confederation has been about $15 million.

The $15 million loss fell upon depositors and noteholders, but nothing was said about the many millions lost by shareholders of these weak banks that were taken over by stronger banks to save them from failure. In the takeover no one but the stronger banks that took over the weaker banks knows whether the shareholders got anything or not after the stronger banks assumed the liabilities to depositors and noteholders. I can find no figures on file at Ottawa as to what these shareholders lost, although they should be on record here. I quite agree with the Inspector General of Banks when he said that many banks that were taken over would probably have failed if stronger banks had not come to their rescue. However, I have gathered together the figures of the losses of shareholders of most of the banks that failed and will place same on Hansard.

The Central Bank of Canada, Toronto, failed in 1887. The depositors were not paid in full; the shareholders lost $500,000 of paid-up capital.

The Sovereign Bank of Canada, Toronto, failed in 1908. The shareholders lost their paid-up capital of $3,000,000.

The Home Bank of Canada, Toronto, failed in 1923, the shareholders losing all their capital of $1,960,591.

The Farmers Bank of Canada, Toronto, failed in 1910, the shareholders losing all their capital of $567,579.

The Bank of Vancouver, Vancouver, failed in 1914, the loss to shareholders being $445,188.

Ontario Bank, Toronto, failed in 1906. The shareholders lost all their capital of $1,500,000.

La Banque de St. Jean, St. Jean, P.Q., failed in 1908. Shareholders lost all their capital of $316,386.

La Banque Ville Marie, Montreal, failed in 1899. Depositors were paid only a percentage of their deposits. Shareholders lost all the capital they had put into the bank, amounting to $479,620.

Bank of Yarmouth, Yarmouth, N.S., failed in 1905. While the noteholders and depositors were paid, all the shareholders' capital was lost, amounting to $300,000.

The St. Stephens Bank, St. Stephen, N.B., failed in 1910, the shareholders losing all their capital of $200,000, the president having also paid up around $150,000 to satisfy noteholders and depositors.

Commercial Bank of Manitoba, Winnipeg, failed in 1893. Depositors and noteholders were paid. If the shareholders were paid anything I can find no record. Their share capital was $552,650.

Commercial Bank of N.B., Saint John, N.B., failed in 1868. Noteholders were paid in full. I can find no record of shareholders being paid anything. Their share capital was $600,000.

Bank of Acadia, Liverpool, N.S. failed in 1873. Neither noteholders, depositors or shareholders received anything. Their share capital was $100,000.

Bank of Liverpool, Liverpool, N.S., failed in 1879. The depositors were not fully paid, which meant the shareholders received nothing. Share capital was $370,548.

Bank of Prince Edward Island failed in 1881. They paid noteholders and depositors 59½ cents on the dollar, which means shareholders lost their capital of $120,000.

Exchange Bank of Canada, Montreal, failed in 1883. Depositors were paid 66¾ cents on the dollar. Shareholders lost their capital of $500,000.

The Maritime Bank of Dominion of Canada, Saint John, N.B. failed in 1887. Depositors were paid 10¾ cents on the dollar. Shareholders lost their capital of $321,900.

The Consolidated Bank of Canada failed in 1879. Noteholders and depositors were paid. I can find no record of what the shareholders received, if anything. The share capital was $2,080,920.

La Banque du Peuple, Montreal, failed in 1895. Depositors were paid 75¼ cents on the dollar. Shareholders lost their share capital of $1,200,000.

Mechanics Bank of Montreal failed in 1879. Noteholders were paid 57½ cents on the dollar. The shareholders lost their paid-up capital of $194,794.

Metropolitan Bank of Montreal failed in 1876. Their share capital of the bank was $800,170. I find no record of the shareholders getting anything.

La Banque de St. Hyacinthe, St. Hyacinthe, P.Q. voluntarily went out of business in 1908. Their capital was $331,235 and was all lost by the shareholders. It is quite obvious that the capital of a bank that went voluntarily out of business would be greatly impaired, if not all gone.

The Federal Bank of Canada, Toronto, went out of business voluntarily in 1888. Depositors and noteholders were paid in full. I can find no record of shareholders being paid. Their share capital was $1,250,000.

Stadacona Bank, Quebec, went out of business voluntarily in 1879. Their depositors and noteholders were paid off. What the shareholders received, if anything, I am unable to say, as I can find no record but, as stated, their capital of $991,890 was probably seriously impaired or they would not have needed to go out of business.

Pictou Bank, Pictou, N.S. went out of business voluntarily in 1887. Noteholders and depositors were paid in full. I can find no record of what shareholders received, if anything. They had a capital of $200,000.

Bank of London, London, Ontario went out of business voluntarily in 1887. Depositors were paid in full. I can find no record of what the shareholders received, if anything. The capital shares amounted to $241,101.

Besides the shareholders of all these 26 banks I have named losing their capital shares, the shareholders paid up $3,654,702 more during the years. The double liability law on stock was in force.

I think I have covered the millions of dollars shareholders have lost through bank failures, and it seems they lost many millions more through takeovers. No wonder the Inspector General said the record of bank closings is unfortunately high and, I might add, costly to the investors.

According to the official report of the House of Commons Committee on Banking and Commerce of 1944-45:

> No bank that has failed since 1895 has paid anything to shareholders in respect to their capital investment. There is little reliable information as to earlier dates.

This committee report, which I have here, further states:

> Information is not available from which to compute losses with respect to liabilities other than deposits and circulation. In some instances these liabilities would include liabilities to governments (having preference) and to banks and others.

The word "circulation" there means noteholders.

The following is a list of banks which took over smaller or regional banks and the year of takeover.

The Bank of Montreal took over:

Exchange Bank of Yarmouth	1903
Peoples Bank of Halifax	1905
Ontario Bank	1907
Bank of British North America	1918
Merchants Bank of Canada	1922
Molsons Bank	1925

The last bank named was in good shape financially. The position of the others was problematic.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce took over:

The Gore Bank	1870
The Bank of British Columbia	1900
Halifax Banking Company	1903
Merchants Bank of Prince Edward Island	1906
Eastern Township Bank	1912
Bank of Hamilton	1923
Standard Bank of Canada	1925

The Bank of Nova Scotia took over:

Union Bank of P.E.I.	1883
The Bank of New Brunswick	1913
Metropolitan Bank	1914
The Bank of Ottawa	1919

The Royal Bank of Canada took over:

Union Bank of Halifax	1910
Traders Bank of Canada	1912
Quebec Bank	1917
Northern Crown Bank	1918
Union Bank of Canada	1925

The Imperial Bank of Canada took over:

Niagara District Bank	1875

The Banque d'Hochelaga took over:

La Banque Nationale	1924

The name of the latter bank was continued. There was quite a heavy loss involved. I do not know the amount, but the Quebec government came to the rescue to the extent of $15 million.

The losses to shareholders in the aforementioned banks are in the neighbourhood of $22,727,274. Besides this amount, one must add losses to depositors and noteholders estimated at $15 million, as quoted by the Inspector General of Banks.

Now I have a list of regional banks that were taken over by stronger banks, and the latter have since been absorbed by still larger banks.

Bank of New Brunswick took over the Summerside Bank in 1907.

Union of Halifax absorbed the Commercial Bank of Windsor in 1902.

Northern Crown Bank took over both the Northern Bank and Crown Bank of Canada in 1908.

Union Bank of Canada absorbed the United Empire Bank in 1911.

Home Bank of Canada took over Le Banque Internationale du Canada in 1913.

Standard Bank of Canada took over the Western Bank of Canada in 1909, and the Sterling Bank of Canada in 1934.

I can find no record of what losses were incurred in these banking transactions, but I feel they would be substantial.

From experience I know that shareholders do not manage banks. Neither do directors. The latter, of course, can give advice, but seldom use a veto. The banks are really operated by their top, full-time executives such as general managers and assistant general managers.

I would call banking a confidence and risk business. A bank must keep the confidence of its depositors. The men I have spoken of at the top pass on risk loans of the banks' money every day, amounting to millions of dollars, which finance all kinds of projects that are sound, in their opinion, and make profits for their shareholders, if possible. It is easily seen that the men at the top of our banking system have to be expert bankers.

I would say, from what I know, that a bank clerk, starting on a small salary on the average, would take 15 or 20 years of hard work to become a top executive of one of our present banks. Many fall by the way. However, if one has the patience and the ability, he can reach the top. Top executives are very well paid, for they are men of exceptional knowledge. Banks have to train their own men. Banking is not taught in any universities in Canada that I know of. It is really a profession, and banks seldom part with top executives, for, having trained them, they desire to keep them. I would say top executives in the banking profession are very scarce today.

It was stated before our Banking and Commerce Committee, by an applicant for a bank charter, that the sponsors had many applications for positions in the new bank. I would venture to state that applications from top bank executives, if any, would be few and far between.

The Inspector General of Banks stated that 38 banks that have been incorporated since Confederation never commenced business. I think one of the chief reasons was that they were unable to get general managers.

I know a case in point. Years ago I had a building rented to the Standard Bank of Canada. Later, when they were taken over by the Canadian Bank of Commerce and vacated the premises, I rented the office to the Eastern Bank of Canada that had just been organized as a regional bank. It had a fine board of directors of outstanding gentlemen, with plenty of money to invest. One was a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, another was owner of the Bathurst Paper Company, another a prominent lawyer in Saint John. They paid the rent for a year for the office, which was never occupied, and then came to me and said they were giving up their charter. When I asked why, they said they were not bankers, and they had to have a top banking executive for general manager; that after a year's search they had not been able to find the right man who was willing to join them and occupy such a position, and without such a top executive they could not risk their reputations by entering the banking business—something they knew little about. I am of the opinion that top executives for new banks are just as scarce today.

A new bank commencing business is not likely to make profits in any great amount for two or three years. In the meantime, if it meets a substantial loss, it will have to show impaired capital in its balance sheet, that is, if it has no reserve fund; and this will weaken the confidence of depositors. Therefore, I would advocate that any new chartered bank should have a substantial reserve fund backing its share capital structure; then, any bad debts could be charged to such reserve fund, such as is being done by our present banks.

To sum up, in my opinion, we should be very careful indeed in incorporating new banks, and explore their future prospects thoroughly, for they are very important undertakings as far as the economy of our country is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Croll: May I ask the honourable gentleman one question? It it not a fact that since 1923, when the government of the day instituted an Inspector of Banks, there have been no failures?

Hon. Mr. McLean: I think that is correct.

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: I would like to make a correction of a statement made by Senator McLean. When the Bank of Hochelaga absorbed La Banque Nationale, the two banks joined together under the name of National Canadian Bank. No losses were sustained by either the shareholders or the creditors.

Hon. Mr. McLean: I did not say there was any loss. I said that the Quebec government came to the rescue to the extent of $15 million. That is on the record.

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: I thought you said there was a substantial loss sustained by the shareholders. There was no loss.

Hon. Mr. McLean: May I say that I did not add any figures; I quoted.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: May I remind honourable senators, that if the honourable Senator Cameron speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, I will not detain you for long, but I think a few comments at this time are in order.

Honourable senators, I propose to move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, but before doing so may I comment on one or two points made by my friend, Senator Blois? One of the points he emphasized rather strongly was that if a charter was given to the Laurentide Bank, it would be the first time in the history of Canada that a bank had been established as a subsidiary of a finance company. I do not think there is anything very heinous about that. It may be new, but I think the record of this company itself speaks very well for the competence of the people to do a good job in banking as a whole.

However, may I draw to the attention of honourable senators our latest authority on banking? I refer to page 8 of the Porter Commission report, which says:

> A creative financial system is one which does not just passively accommodate the usual—

"Accommodate the usual", mark that.

> instead, it is one in which active and inventive efforts are constantly being made to meet the sound requirements of lenders and borrowers, regardless of how untried and unusual such needs may be. A spirit of vigorous, restless innovation in the financial system—of devising new ways to do new things rather than of justifying why they should never be done at all—can ordinarily best be achieved in conditions under which the participants are not prevented from responding to changed opportunities, in which price and other competition is too intensive to be comfortable, in which there is relative ease of entry for honest men with ideas and imagination, and in which different classes of institution can compete with each other on an equitable and open basis.

That is my philosophy, and I am quite happy to go along with it. So I am not very worried about that particular reservation on the part of my friend.

The second question was that of the position of the Power Corporation of Montreal, four of whose directors are directors of the chartered banks. Honourable senators will have ample opportunity to explore this particular point before the Banking and Commerce Committee, and I am not going to say anything about it at this time.

My friend went on to say that Canada is served today by over 5,000 branches of the existing chartered banks. This is true, and I would be the last to reflect in any way on the quality of service that has been rendered by these banks or on the soundness of the establishment; but I think he must remember that the economy of this country is growing, and growing very rapidly.

I believe there is no reason whatever why we should not contemplate the establishment of further banks without any fear, under the present regulations, that there might be losses to the shareholders or the depositors. As Senator Croll mentioned when he asked a question a while ago, there has only been one bank failure since 1923. I believe that under the present rules, by which the Inspector General is given authority to keep a complete check on the banking system, the possibility of a similar failure is no longer a serious danger.

Then, as I listened to my friend Senator McLean, who says that he has been a banker all his life until recently, and as he recited this dismal tale of failures and losses in former days, all I can say to him is that I am glad the banks of Canada are now in much more competent hands than they were years ago. I believe this is something we can accept, that the people who are administering these billions—I think Senator Blois mentioned $21,859 million in assets—are certainly competent to handle our finances with safety to themselves and the people who put their faith and trust in them.

With the safeguards we have in our banking system by legislation, I believe we are not likely to have a rash of failures such as we had in years gone by.

Turning to Senator Blois again, in his comment on May 6, at page 409 of Senate Hansard, in giving his reasons for asking for two weeks' delay he said:

> My second reason for suggesting that this order stand concerns an article that appeared in the Montreal Gazette of this morning on an interview with the Minister of Finance, Mr. Gordon, in which he is reported to have indicated that the three proposed banks must wait until the fall for their federal charters to be granted. According to this article, he said in an interview that the Government hopes to amend the Bank Act this fall, after studying the recently received report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. If that is correct, I see no urgency for further debate on this matter at this time.

If you will refer to page 2982 of the House of Commons Hansard for May 6 you will see that the Minister of Finance, Mr. Gordon, was asked a question to which his reply was in part as follows:

> In reply to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, the applications are now before the Senate or the Senate banking and commerce committee, who I am sure will proceed to deal with them in their usual fashion. As to when the amendments to the Bank Act will be brought in, it is my hope, as I have said on other occasions, that we will have an opportunity to make progress with this very difficult legislation within the Department of Finance this summer, with a view to being ready to present the bill to the house in the late fall.

In my reading of the Minister of Finance's statement I see no reason why we should not proceed with the disposition of these charters at the present time in the Senate.

I just want to make one or two other observations. On page 120 of the royal commission report, in the last paragraph of the first column, it says:

> In their efforts to attract business, the Canadian banks have in fact placed great emphasis not only on the liquidity and safety of their deposits but on the development of their branch systems.

I am not going into that. I just marked that to verify the number of bank branches—5,361. If you will turn to page 121, where the report deals with the banks' position today, it says:

> Another factor in the banks' loss of position in the savings field is that they offer only one type of interest-bearing deposit to individuals with balances of less than $25,000 and that they appear to be less flexible than some competing institutions...

I could go on indicating throughout this report numerous instances where the emphasis is on the fact, but not in any way critically, that while the banking system has been sound and Canadians have every right to be proud of that system, there are things that could have been done in the provision of services that have not been done, and that one of the reasons for the proliferation of finance companies and near banks in recent years has been the fact these people have stepped in to fill a need which has not been met adequately by the banking system as it has existed.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Would my honourable friend permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Does the report not follow through and point out that one of the main reasons for some of these problems we have had is the fact there was a ceiling on the interest rate for the chartered banks but not for the near banks?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: That is true, but it also goes on to recommend that they raise the interest rate to give flexibility. However, the general tenor is that the introduction of more banks or more institutions would not be a bad thing.

Honourable senators, I do not propose to take more of your time at this stage than to say that nothing I have heard in this debate has convinced me there is any reason why we should not proceed in dealing with these applications at the present time. There will be ample opportunity provided before the Banking and Commerce Committee to go into any questions of doubt or reservations that individuals may have.

I feel that the number of applications for new banks is an indication that people feel that there is an opportunity to make some money, which is a legitimate purpose in a land of free enterprise; and I think some people are quite impressed with the fact the banks have not done too badly over the past few years. I am quite sure that Senator McLean's concern for the people who might be investing in these new banks can well be left to the officers who will guide them. They are not doing this just as an exercise in charity or for their own health. They certainly hope to make some money, and the past performances of the individuals concerned in all these applications that have come before us so far indicate they probably could give a pretty good account of themselves.

Hon. Mr. McLean: To answer the honourable Senator Croll's question, I do not believe there have been any chartered bank failures since 1923. It was chiefly of the regional banks I was speaking.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Honourable Mr. Cameron, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-20, intituled: "An Act to incorporate Bank of British Columbia".—(Honourable Senator Farris).

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I asked that this order stand last week in the hope of getting a little right of way, but I have not achieved that very well. I certainly could not do justice to my presentation of this bill by six o'clock. I hope that if at six o'clock we adjourn until tomorrow afternoon, I shall still have the right of way—not still, but for once have the right of way.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I suggest that the honourable gentleman allow the order to stand today, and that the house consent to its being first on the Order Paper tomorrow.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I quite appreciate the situation in which Senator Farris finds himself for the second time, in being far down on the Order Paper, and his order being called late in the sitting. However, the Companies Act, an important Government measure, is first on the Order Paper for tomorrow. I think it is appropriate that Government business, public bills of this kind, should come first. But if Senator Farris would agree and the Senate concurs, I would certainly be satisfied to have his bill placed second on the Order Paper for tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Farris: How long will the first order take?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I cannot predict that, but I do not think it would be lengthy.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I was assured by my friend this afternoon that it would not be long before I was reached today.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I was sure that that would be the case, but there were speeches made that I did not anticipate at that time. I do not say that the Companies Act will be debated to conclusion tomorrow, but since it is on the Order Paper it might be explained, and then Senator Farris could proceed.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I have a lot of preliminaries that are not particularly important. Perhaps I could deal with those today.

I move second reading of the bill to incorporate—and I emphasize the name—Bank of British Columbia, which has its head office in the City of Vancouver.

The petition for this bill has been made by five well-known citizens of British Columbia, who are to be provisional directors. The Legislature of British Columbia, and to this I wish to give some emphasis tomorrow, has passed a bill authorizing the Government of British Columbia, which is a Social Credit Government, through its finance minister to purchase shares in this bank, not to exceed 25 per cent of the paid-up capital.

Now, honourable senators, as you know Mr. Bennett is the head of this Social Credit Government in British Columbia. He has been the Premier for, I think, about 11 or 12 years.

There are some senators who may think it a matter of comment that such a bill, involving the acquisition of large shares in this company by the provincial government, should be introduced by a Liberal senator. Some may wonder if in my advancing years I have at last fallen from grace. I bring this up not merely as a joke, although I thought it was a bit funny myself, but because I feel I would like to be permitted to wander a little from the strict text, and since we have had so much talk of banking this afternoon I think it might be a relief for honourable senators if I did so.

While it is not strictly relevant to the motion, I would state that there are no political implications in my speaking for this bill sponsored by Mr. Bennett. I want to develop this point a little, if honourable senators will be patient with me, and I want to stress that I am still a consistent Liberal, and my Liberalism may be explained on two grounds. First, I have inherited my Liberalism—and I want to elaborate that just for a moment also, because I know there are Liberals in British Columbia who are critical of my moving second reading of this bill. Secondly, I want to state my reasons as to why I am a continuing Liberal since coming to the Senate.

Let me first quote an uncle of mine who used to say "He who bloweth not his own horn, the same shall not be blown." So if you will permit me, I shall continue my remarks. I see my friend the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) is smiling—I am going to say something about him that he will find extremely friendly.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Is it not a friendly act he is now committing, as one New Brunswicker sponsoring legislation for another New Brunswicker? Mr. Bennett happens to come from New Brunswick, as does Senator Farris.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is true, but I was not boasting about that at this stage. That is another reason. But to continue this personal history for anyone who may be interested, I am talking about this inherited Liberalism.

My grandfather was the first Liberal member for Queens County in New Brunswick at Confederation, and he remained a member during more than one continuation of Parliament until 15 years later, when he was forced by advancing years to retire. My father was Minister of Agriculture in the Liberal Government of the province. Do you know, honourable senators, I made my first political speeches in the election of 1896 when the Laurier Government came into office? I do not attribute that fact to my speeches, however.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why not?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, it is so long ago perhaps I might get away with it if I said that it was so.

I spoke on behalf of a gentleman who was later a member of the Senate, Mr. George King. He succeeded my grandfather as the Liberal member for Queens County in New Brunswick.

My friend opposite speaks about his fellow New Brunswickers. My friend and I are both from Queens County, and I want to make a few references to him. I am glad that I am allowed to do that this afternoon because I can then get down to more serious discussion of this bill in my remarks tomorrow afternoon.

Senator King was succeeded in the Senate by his son, Senator James King, who many here will remember. Both of us were members of the Liberal Government of John Oliver in British Columbia. So you can see, honourable senators, that by inheritance I could not very well be anything else but a liberal. But, I am also a liberal by conviction, and I have a definite purpose in making these remarks. I make them in answer to some of the criticisms that have been directed at me personally.

I consider that during the 27 years I have been a member of the Senate my conviction with respect to the principles of the party I support has grown and intensified. I consider that to be one of the tenets of liberalism—and it is not confined to Liberals—is the duty of every citizen to exercise his independence of thought, and to act according to his convictions. This, of course, applies to senators as well as other party men in politics. I am not unmindful of the fact that in the active strife of party politics too much independence may defeat its own purpose. Adherence to caucus decisions may become necessary for the maintenance of good government. However, in the Senate these political obligations are less binding.

When the Fathers of Confederation established the Senate it was declared to be a chamber of sober, second thought. The very fact that a vote in the Senate does not involve the defeat of the Government is a recognition by the Fathers of Confederation that the Senate was not to be tied to purely political limitations which must necessarily at times exist in the House of Commons.

That brings me to another matter. It may be irrelevant, but I do not think so. It arises from the position taken by Senator Grattan O'Leary just before Easter. I want him to understand that I am in no way criticizing what he did, although that particular time might not have been the most happy time at which to have done it. When the late Senator Haig was a member of this house he and I had several controversies over this very thing. Perhaps I should say we were in general agreement, and that there were no controversies at all. At that time the very same thing would be done, and we would be led up to a motion to put through bills involving millions of dollars without any time in which to consider them. Although I was not present before Easter, I was rather gratified to hear that somebody at last had had the courage—it may be even the temerity—to deal with that question.

What I want to say is that as a result of that stand a bill was introduced in the House of Commons to abolish the Senate, and asserted that nobody should represent the people unless elected—that true democracy could only be exercised by those who were elected to the House of Commons.

I must say that I was, and still am, surprised that there should be such a misconception of the theory of democratic government as we have it in Canada and which follows the British principles. Abraham Lincoln defined democracy as government of the people, by the people, for the people, and that is well understood not to mean government by a majority of the people for a majority of the people.

I would ask honourable members of this house to think of the thousands of votes that have been cast for men who have been defeated. Who represents those electors in the House of Commons? The Legislature of the Province of British Columbia has not a single Conservative member. Mr. Davie Fulton was a candidate. I do not think he used very good judgment, with all deference to him, when he picked Mr. Gaglardi as his opponent. Mr. Gaglardi is not only the best road builder we have ever had in Canada, but he also preaches every Sunday either in his own church up at Kamloops or over the air. What I am getting at is the fact that Mr. Fulton was defeated, and there is not a single Conservative in the Legislature of British Columbia. Who represents those thousands of people who voted Conservative? I could not find anybody in the legislature that I could say represented them.

The Fathers of Confederation recognized the fact that the only branch of Parliament which can represent and support the thousands of electors who are not represented by the candidates they voted for, is the Senate. One of the things for which we stand is the fulfilment of democracy by recognizing that majority rule is not necessarily a complete satisfaction of democracy.

You must have, in addition to that, the independent thought that we are supposed to have here in the Senate. I am sure that is one of the basic grounds which justifies the existence of the Senate.

These remarks, honourable senators, may appear to be a little aside from the point, but I do have the feeling that they have some definite relationship to the problems we have to deal with, and particularly in connection with a motion such as I am making and where the premier of a province is sponsoring a bill.

I support this bill not because I belong or ever expect to belong to the Social Credit Party. I support it because, in my opinion, there are good features to it. The passage of this bill will be in the interests of Canada, inasmuch as it will be in the interests of British Columbia and the adjoining Province of Alberta. This is a bill to provide a truly representative western bank, the directors of which will be westerners, and the head office of which will be in Vancouver, the largest city in Canada west of Toronto. There is today, as we all know, a number of banks, but there is not a single chartered bank with its head office, or the office of its president, west of Toronto.

My learned friend Senator Leonard introduced a bill to incorporate the Western Bank of Canada, which is to have its head office in Winnipeg. On the Pacific Coast we regard Winnipeg as away back east. However, I want it clearly understood that so far as my motion is concerned I have not the least intention of attacking these other two applications. There may be some questions I will raise—I know they will be raised in committee, whether I say anything or not—but I am hoping that this bill along with the other two will be considered by the committee so that all these matters may be fully thrashed out.

I want to say, and I may be a little out of turn in saying it, that so far as my friend Senator McLean is concerned—like the rest of good New Brunswickers, he comes from Saint John—he gave a striking reason why we should make sure that any further banks that are incorporated have such a backing that there is not the least danger of any financial failure. When you have a bank with up to 25 per cent of its shares owned by the great Province of British Columbia, a province that is growing at such a rate as to stagger the imagination of an easterner, then I say it is a mighty good thing.

That is just a little aside. I am coming back to it.

It is my opinion—and this I have written down. During all the time I have been in the Senate I have never read a speech, but I shall read a few extracts here because this is not the normal kind of speech that I make. It is my opinion that it is in the interest of western Canada, and particularly of British Columbia and Alberta, to have a truly western bank with its head office and president in Vancouver.

These are days of big expenditures. With our growth and development, it is most important in the west to have a bank president who has special knowledge of the west, knowledge of our vast resources and, most of all, gentlemen who have had the western spirit and faith in our great possibilities.

My honourable friend from Nova Scotia has spoken—I appreciate his speech and I whispered to my deskmate that it was a good speech. I went to college in Nova Scotia and got my wife in Wolfville. I have the highest regard for that province of any in the world. But I would hate to have a Nova Scotian pass on some of my imaginary ventures that I might make out in British Columbia.

They have a fine prime minister in Nova Scotia. He married a daughter of one of my closest friends with whom I went to college, and I have the greatest admiration for him. But I do not think that in Nova Scotia they have the conception of our possibilities in the west that would give them the courage to go ahead with the projects that are essential to the development of that province.

Now I come to my friend honourable Senator McLean from Saint John. Both the honourable Leader opposite and I came from Queens County, about 50 miles up river from Saint John. We all know the limitations of the Maritimes in the great development that there is in Canada, the failure of necessity to have the conception, the imagination that they would have if those people had the same opportunities and the same prospects ahead of them that we have out in British Columbia.

I am thinking now of some man with some big venture that he is about to start, a new venture in British Columbia. It is going to take a lot of money. In order to deal with this great enterprise, would he sooner go to a local manager who, in turn, would write a letter to Toronto to the president there to get his opinion as to whether the bank would support the venture, or would he not sooner have a bank right in British Columbia with its headquarters in the great City of Vancouver, the third largest in Canada, and deal directly with the man who is breathing the atmosphere of the west and has a conception of its possibilities and its growth and its efficiency? Many of those young men came from Nova Scotia. Some of us came from New Brunswick, and we got—and I am boasting again—a conception of the possibilities of our new country that we live in, that we would never have had if we had stayed in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia.

Honourable senators, that covers the first and main reason why I am supporting this bill. The second reason is that, as I said in anticipation a few minutes ago, the doleful report that Senator McLean gave us places a great emphasis on the necessity of having banks that have all the backing necessary to make sure that the bank they are supporting will never fail and that their shareholders or depositors will never suffer a heavy loss.

I am giving that as the next reason why I think a bank that is proposed to be supported by the legislature should be established.

I have before me the bill passed in the legislature of British Columbia this year, 1964. It is bill No. 15, and reads as follows:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of British Columbia, enacts as follows:
>
> 1. This Act may be cited as the Revenue Act Amendment Act, 1964.
>
> 2. Section 9 of the Revenue Act, being chapter 341 of the Revised Statutes of British Columbia, 1960, is repealed and the following substituted:—
>
> "9. The Minister of Finance may, in his discretion, invest any moneys of the Consolidated Revenue Fund
>
> (a) in the debentures or other securities of or guaranteed by Canada or any Province of Canada; or
>
> (b) in the capital stock of a bank chartered or to be chartered under the Bank Act of Canada having or to have its head office in the Province, before or after incorporation, in an amount not greater than one-quarter of the sum paid up on the capital stock or on the subscriptions for capital stock of the bank, or in both."

Now, it is proposed by the Government of British Columbia to invest sufficient funds in the shares of that company to be a guarantee that that bank will be solvent and will be carried on effectively.

As far as motivation is concerned, I am going to come to that in a minute. I will refer you to a resolution from the Board of Trade in Vancouver City, objecting to the idea of what they term a political bank. I will deal with that for a moment, and then ask you to call it 6 o'clock.

The Honourable Mr. Bennett is an able businessman; he has many stores that he operated successfully before he went into politics, and they are still operating successfully. He is also a good politician. Can you imagine that a successful premier would fall for one minute to what the Board of Trade of Vancouver says in that resolution, namely, that he would use that bank for political purposes? The greatest political purpose for which any bank could be used is to be a success and to provide proper and up-to-date banking facilities for the people there.

Now, may I call it 6 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: May I ask a question before we adjourn? Can the Province of British Columbia subscribe 100 per cent of the stock, if the act says so?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am not sure, but I think they could.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Can the legislature pass an act to that effect?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I do not know why my friend should ask a question that has nothing to do with the issue. I have not thought over this, and I do not see why I should be called on at this hour to answer on that point. I do not see why they should not do it, if they wish.

I would like to hear my friend give some reason on this point. As a matter of theory they could, but as a matter of expediency why should they? It might be so or might not be so. I would like to hear my honourable friend on it. He has asked this question in a tone of voice as if he had me over a barrel. I would like him to point out to me why that should not be done.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Undoubtedly, I think they could.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am glad to hear that. I hope the honourable senator is pleased with the answers I have given.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Farris, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 14, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CROWN CORPORATIONS (PROVINCIAL TAXES AND FEES) BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-95, respecting the payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the number and amount of loans to Indians made under section 69(1) of the Indian Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 69(6) of the said act, chapter 149, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES (UNITED NATIONS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-24, to amend the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

GENEVA CONVENTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-25, respecting the Geneva Conventions, 1949.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 19, 1964, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

STE-FOY—ST-NICHOLAS BRIDGE BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-21, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River between the City of Ste-Foy, in the County of Quebec, and the Municipality of St-Nicholas, in the County of Levis, both in the province of Quebec:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hugessen reported that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications had considered Bill S-21, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River between the City of Ste-Foy, in the County of Quebec, and the municipality of St-Nicholas, in the County of Levis, both in the Province of Quebec, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. J.-M. Dessureault: With leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Dessureault, seconded by the honourable Senator Pouliot, that this bill be now read a third time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Adopté. Carried.

A bill, honourable senators, originating in the Senate, intituled—

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting. This is being rushed through.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is too late now. The motion has carried.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Honourable senators, may I rise on a point of order. An honourable senator sought to raise an objection to the motion being carried now. I think we should wait until we have been given a chance to hear the objection of the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I have nothing to explain. I do not know anything about the bill. However, I object to bills receiving third reading, contrary to the rules of the Senate, unless there is unanimous consent, as required by the rules. I think that we might live to regret our shoving a bill right through in this manner.

The Hon. the Speaker: Third reading was moved, with leave of the Senate, and no objection was raised. Therefore I considered there was unanimous consent.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Mr. Speaker, and honourable senators, the formal procedure goes so quickly that sometimes by the time one rises it is all over. That is not the way the procedure should be carried out in this chamber. Even if the reading of a bill is proclaimed "Adopté, carried," if one of the honourable senators rises and makes an objection, the motion should not carry.

The Hon. the Speaker: I put the motion; there was no objection at all; so I said, "Adopté, carried." I did not hear any senator objecting to third reading of the bill. That is the reason the Clerk Assistant rose to read the bill a third time. I thought there was unanimous consent.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I think I understand your point of view. You are a long way from the honourable gentleman from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), but I am his neighbour, and I could see him standing. The acoustics in this house are not perfect, and in the circumstances, I am of the opinion that the motion should not carry now.

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: Honourable senators, if there is any objection, I will move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, the bill has received third reading, but the bill has not been passed. I suggest that it would meet the objection of the honourable Senator Reid if the question on the passage of the bill, which indeed is debatable, were to stand until the next sitting.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: The question on the passage of the bill stands.

ESTIMATES

MOTION TO EMPOWER FINANCE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE AND REPORT—ORDER STANDS

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West):

> That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, in advance of the Bills based on the said Estimates reaching the Senate; and
>
> That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I suggest that this motion stand until later this day, subject to the length of today's sitting. If time does not permit today, I might proceed with it on Tuesday evening next. For the present I ask permission of the house to return to the motion later today, if time permits.

The Hon. the Speaker: Motion No. 1 stands until later this day.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have just a few words to say about motion No. 3, on the understanding that the Senate will have no objection to an adjournment of it in order that I may have the opportunity to give more information about it.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the honourable senator. Is he moving the motion standing in his name?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am speaking to the motion on the understanding that after I have finished my remarks it will be adjourned to a later sitting. I have only a few words to say at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the honourable Senator Stambaugh:

> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators to adopt the motion?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: With the permission of the honourable Senator Pouliot, I would like to raise a point of order here.

The motion requests that Bill S-16 be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion as to its validity. This bill has not been discussed as yet; it has not received second reading. It seems a little awkward that we should be called upon to discuss a motion requesting the Government to submit this bill to the Supreme Court of Canada, before we have discussed the principle of the bill itself. I believe it is contrary to the rules in general to discuss a bill before second reading is moved. In the normal course, we would have a debate on the principle of a bill.

Therefore, it seems to me that we should proceed with second reading of Bill S-16 before discussing this motion. In fact, I would suggest to the honourable Senator Pouliot that after this Bill has been referred to committee we might then be in a position to decide whether we can discuss the subject matter of this motion. At this time we are called upon to anticipate a debate which will have to come later, after this motion. The second reading of Bill S-16 should come first.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable colleagues, the remarks of my honourable friend were premature. Speaking to the point of order, the motion and the bill are one. The reason the motion comes before the bill is because the motion is in its proper place on the Order Paper, under the caption "Motions." The bill is at its proper place, under "Orders of the Day," as item No. 5.

It is evident, honourable colleagues, that any member will be allowed to discuss the bill at the same time as the motion, and each member will have the full opportunity to discuss the bill.

The purpose of the motion is so that the bill shall not be submitted to a committee, and for the very good reason that as sponsor of the bill at the last session I suffered a great injustice when it was before the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. I have a tribute to pay our honourable colleague, Senator Bouffard, who was chairman of the committee and who did exceptionally well. But I have personal reasons for insisting that this bill will not go again to a committee. Every member of the house will have the opportunity to discuss it fully in the Senate, and I will even ask the Senate to use the Committee of the Whole for that purpose, if my colleagues wish to do that. I consider that the Senate will have ample opportunity to discuss the bill and the motion while discussing the motion; then, if the motion is adopted, I shall withdraw the bill, with the leave of the Senate, and the bill will be sent with the motion to the Clerk of the Privy Council so that the Government may refer it to the Supreme Court, according to the Supreme Court Act. If the motion is adopted it will be done that way. If the motion is defeated I shall proceed with the bill. I hope I have made my position clear.

It is only after very careful consideration and lengthy consultations that we came to the conclusion that the motion should be as it is, and that Bill S-16 should be where it is.

I do not want to take too much time today, because there are urgent matters on the agenda, and I do not want to delay the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) or my honourable friend from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) in proceeding with the items which stand in their names. But, honourable colleagues, I presume that my honourable friend who raised an objection will not insist on it, and will allow me to proceed further and very summarily inform you of what will happen if you agree to the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the honourable Senator Flynn satisfied with the explanation given by honourable Senator Pouliot?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I raised the objection, but I shall not insist if the Senate is willing to hear the remarks on the motion at this time. If nobody is complaining, I shall not insist on my point.

Hon. Sarto Fournier: Honourable senators, it is not that I want to complain, but the suggestion made by the honourable senator from Rougemont, the honourable Senator Flynn, seems to me to be quite reasonable. He suggested that this bill be referred to a committee for further study; and, as the bill concerns each and every individual in this country, I think it should be referred to a committee. If the idea behind it is correct, then the more we study it the more we will be convinced of the correctness of the idea; but if there is something wrong in the principle of the bill, we shall know that.

Therefore, in my opinion we should support the suggestion of the honourable Senator Flynn.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I would merely like to be assured that if we proceed as Senator Pouliot has suggested, it would be in order to discuss the substance of the bill on this motion in view of the fact that the objection might very well be raised that we cannot discuss the substance of the bill when the bill itself is before us for second reading.

I am merely asking for information, and for Your Honour's ruling on that point.

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, I had the opportunity to hear the discussion on this bill when it was submitted last year to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. It was very interesting, but as far as I am concerned I am suggesting that the same procedure be adopted with respect to this bill.

If this bill is submitted to a Committee of the Whole, no witnesses could be heard. I think it will be necessary to call the attorney general of each province to come and testify as to what they think of the bill and its constitutionality. It is a very serious bill, in which we are getting away from the provinces for the first time for nearly one hundred years. To refuse to hear the provinces would, I think, be very unjust. If we had considered the bill further last year, the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee would certainly have called in every provincial attorney general and would have advised them that such a bill was before the committee. Then, if they had anything to say about it they could do so, and could state their opinion on the matter of its constitutionality. This could not be done if we submit the bill to a Committee of the Whole. No witness could be heard. It would be a very grave fault to pass on a bill of this kind without hearing the attorneys general.

The Hon. the Speaker: The motion as it now stands is quite in order. The same procedure has been followed in the House of Commons, to submit a bill to the Supreme Court of Canada. In the circumstances, I shall allow the honourable Senator Pouliot to proceed with his motion.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In my long experience of 40 years in politics it is the first time that four of my colleagues have jumped to a conclusion before I had time to explain the motion. However, I am hard-boiled and am accustomed to it, and I will not lose my good character on account of this.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Your pleasant disposition.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Yes, as you say, I have a pleasant disposition today.

Honourable senators, this is a matter of very great importance, and if I had not considered it such I would not have introduced it in this chamber now. It was most difficult; the seas were stormy; I had so many obstacles in my way from everybody that the time came when a decision should be made, and the first decision will be made by you. But it will be for a very good purpose, namely, to have a ruling about it made by the highest tribunal in this country. Then you will feel safe about it.

Honourable senators, there are more red lights in the way of truth than there are to block the traffic on any street in this capital City of Ottawa or in any other city on the North American Continent. Truth is seldom given the green light—I am most thankful that you have given it to me now for a short time, because I have made arrangements, if you give me leave, to adjourn the debate in order not to delay proceedings this afternoon.

This matter deals with married women's rights. It deals with the question of whether married women in the Province of Quebec, or anywhere else in Canada, shall have the same rights as single women or widows for their regular business. It is a simple thing. Do you know, honourable senators, many bankers have told me that they were fed up with the law concerning the permission that married women have to seek from their husbands to do certain transactions, especially for immoveable property and so on, that they are never sure whether they have the consent of the husband, or they do not know always how to locate the husband when he is away. Therefore, I feel I owe this to the number of women who have been so good to me during my long years in the House of Commons, and I owe it to all the women of Canada in order that their rights cannot be questioned.

You will remember, honourable senators, that I have brought to your attention the fact that in the universities from coast to coast no professor, except one at the University of Ottawa, has stated the close relationship which exists between the constitutional law—between the British North America Act and the powers exercised respectively by the Parliament of Canada and by the provinces. It is on account of that lack in our university teaching that so many errors have been committed by the lawmakers who belong to the provincial legislatures.

It is time to awaken. It is time to open our eyes to the distress. Instead, we have societies of mutual admiration amongst professors. A new society of 40 professors has been formed, and it is nothing but a society of mutual admiration. They published books as big as dictionaries, dedicated to a professor, to say that he was such a great jurist. It is not of interest to know whether a man is a great jurist. What is important is to have sound and valid legislation—legislation that stands against all objections made against it. That is my view.

You know, there is some political propaganda here and there. It reminds me of the Scythians, the barbarians who put the women ahead of the men in battle. They were afraid to fight. I have never considered that women should be shields in battle, nor the offensive weapons, but that does not mean I lack respect for them. Some people try to make political propaganda out of the law—the law which means justice, and which should be respected by all.

In answer to my honourable friend Senator Bouffard, I repeat that I pay him the tribute of having been fair at the sittings of the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee, to which a similar bill was referred last session.

I can pay no greater compliment to him. I knew his father who himself was known for his fairness. He was a great judge. But, honourable colleagues, you know it is very difficult to argue against prejudice. There are many forms of prejudice. There is religious prejudice. There is racial prejudice, which we do not have in this chamber. There is also prejudice concerning the law, the worst prejudice of all.

Honourable senators have Rules of the Senate in your desks, and you are familiar with all of them. You know very well that any one of us has the right to sponsor public as well as private legislation. But, if you go back a few numbers of the Senate Hansard you will see what has been said about a man who should know, a man who should be impartial and who should tell the truth. What he said was a negation of the rights of each one of us to introduce public legislation in this chamber, or for members of the House of Commons to introduce public legislation in that chamber. That derogation of our rights was protested in blunt and hard language, I know, but he deserved it.

I took the precaution of inquiring whether there was a copy of the Rules of the Senate in the Library of the Department of Justice, and the answer of the Government was: "Yes, it has been there all year." The ruling he gave, forbidding one of his assistants to give evidence before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills of the Senate, was illegal, unsound, untrue and unworthy of a deputy minister of a great department.

I will not keep you long. I have no inferiority complex. I do not suffer from melancholia. I take things as they come, but at times I feel indignant when I see the lack of respect that some people have for the law. Now, to correct that situation I am not to bring a bill before the committee, to hear the same officer, or to hear the Law Officer of the Senate, quoting again, with regard to the rights of married women, the judgment of the late Chief Justice Duff about adoption. We do not need them. I presume you do not need them. You would be offended and indignant, just as I was, to read the report of the Deputy Minister of Justice forbidding one of his assistants to give evidence before the committee because he had been doing some excellent work with regard to the rights of married women. He had taken the trouble to go to the sources of information, and he had come to the same conclusion as myself. The Deputy acted not as a jurist, but as a scribe in taking the dictation that was given to him in preventing that person from appearing before the committee to tell the truth.

Do you not think it is enough to pay no attention to the committee? I ask you to discuss it with me in this chamber. Each one has the same opportunity. If you deem it is the right thing to do, then together we will make a decision, and if the decision is favourable the bill will be sent to the Government.

I will not keep you any longer. I have said what I wanted to say as a preliminary to what you already know about the respect for the law, and about the importance of having good, sound, logical and valid legislation in this country. That is that.

I have discussed many matters. You have been kind and helpful to me, but this time I do not want you to be helpful only to me; I want you to be as helpful to the Canadian people as you can. I want you to be helpful to the married women, to see to it that they are not deceived.

You know very well that this legislation is for married couples who do not agree together. When couples agree together as the previous generation did, as our parents did and as we have done, there is no difficulty about the approval of a transaction there.

Do you think that any woman who owns personal property to the value of $5,000, $10,000 or $30,000, and who is happily married will sell it without saying a word about it to her husband? This bill is mostly for the couples who do not agree together, for married women who do not live with their husbands, or those who are having some difficulty with their husbands. Most of all, this bill is to give married women the same rights as have unmarried women and widows —the rights that belong to them.

Women have obligations. Women have rights. We hear of human rights and fundamental freedoms, but nobody speaks of the obligations of the women. You can speak to them about freedom and human rights, but in themselves, in their hearts and minds, they realize that they have their own obligations, which they fulfil perfectly.

I am through now, honourable colleagues. I thank you for your kind attention. I do not mind the interruptions. I have taken them gladly and joyfully. The only thing I regret is that I have taken up so much of your time, but I want you to realize the importance of having some sound and valid legislation in this country.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot, debate adjourned.

COMPANIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Thomas Vien moved the second reading of Bill S-22, to amend the Companies Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the statutes of Canada contain a remarkable corpus juris; they encompass a collection of laws which are indeed comparable to similar laws in the best civilized countries.

Outstanding among those laws are the British North America Act and the Statute of Westminster. Other laws can also be cited, such as the Criminal Code, the Bank Act, the Railway Act and the Companies Act. These laws were carefully considered before they were enacted and they now have had the test of years of application. They have shown their worth; they have brought a considerable and most valuable contribution to the growth of the Canadian economy. Nevertheless, the world is marching on dynamically and our laws cannot remain static. We have to amend them and bring them up to date to cope with the ever-changing Canadian conditions.

I am submitting to you now Bill S-22, which purports to amend the Companies Act. It is voluminous; it contains a vast number of amendments. Certainly it would be tedious for us at this juncture to go into all of them in detail. I want to bring to your attention only the major amendments. Other amendments can be readily understood at a glance, particularly with the help of the explanatory notes.

Honourable senators, the Companies Act was revised in 1934, and it has not been amended since. Some public bodies, such as the Canadian Bar Association, the Institute of Chartered Accountants, and others, have offered and recommended amendments similar to those which this bill contains and which I am bringing to your attention now.

Obviously, most of these amendments can be more properly and effectively dealt with in committee, where they can be discussed at greater length and where departmental officers can be present to offer proper explanations in greater detail. I wish to bring to your attention certain major amendments which it is in order to discuss here on the principle of the bill. No fundamental changes in the Companies Act are brought about by this bill, except in a few particular respects. The other amendments are intended to make the act more easily workable and satisfactory to those to whom it applies.

I would crave the indulgence of honourable senators who have been sitting in this house for some time, whilst I am explaining to newly-appointed honourable senators certain particulars as to how bills are printed and presented for our attention. There are certain conventional signs which newly-appointed senators may not readily understand.

For instance, when a section of an act is being substantially amended, the section is generally repealed. A new section is introduced, in which the new parts are underlined; and the old section is printed in extenso in the explanatory notes on the page opposite. The words being added are underlined in the text of the bill.

When sections or parts thereof are added, there is a deep black line on the left hand side of the bill, indicating that these are new. Sometimes there is an empty bracket in the text of a bill, which indicates that in the new text submitted for consideration the words of the old text are omitted.

I apologize to the senior senators, who know all of these signs, for taking the time to explain them. I do it so that new senators may now more easily read and understand bills presented to us in that form.

When, on the suggestion of the Bar Association and of other public bodies, the Companies Act was submitted to the Secretary of State for amendments, recommendations were made to the cabinet, and an interdepartmental review committee, including three members of the legal profession, drawn from Ontario and Quebec, was created pursuant to a recommendation of the Legislative Committee of the Cabinet. The Companies Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State submitted to that interdepartmental committee a volume of information that had already been accumulated.

The subjects under review were the following:

1. The title of the Companies Act;

2. The simplification of the forms required for incorporation;

3. The clarification of the authority of the Secretary of State to alter the capital structure of companies;

4. The capital structure of mutual fund companies;

5. The use of bilingual corporate names;

6. The procedure for the surrender of charters and terminating the corporate existence of non-operating companies;

7. The sanctions applied to companies that fail to hold annual meetings or to make annual financial returns to shareholders or annual summaries to the Department of Secretary of State;

8. The disclosure of dealings in shares by directors and officers of companies;

9. The prospectus requirements of the Companies Act in the light of modern securities legislation in various jurisdictions;

10. The remedies of aggrieved shareholders and creditors;

11. The financial statements required under modern accounting practices, to comply with the Companies Act and the Income Tax Act;

12. Annual returns generally and the simplification of annual returns;

13. The means of controlling associations without share capital;

14. The amalgamation of companies incorporated under the Companies Act;

15. Consequential and other amendments.

Proposed amendments were then drafted, carefully considered, revised and approved by the cabinet.

Honourable senators, that is the genesis of Bill S-22 which I now present to you for second reading.

This is an important bill; it will apply to a great number of people engaged in financial, industrial and commercial undertakings. I am confident that it will greatly assist all concerned.

The Companies Act, 1934, is divided into seven parts that apply as follows:

Part I—to all companies incorporated by letters patent, and also to companies incorporated under previous companies acts that were being repealed by section 208;

Part II—to corporations without share capitals;

Part III—to companies incorporated by special acts, subject to certain restrictions and exceptions specifically enumerated in sections 145 and 146;

Part IV—to British and foreign mining companies;

Part V—deals with incidental powers of certain corporate bodies created otherwise than by letters patent;

Part VI—contains certain provisions of general application with respect to registration and transfer offices within and without Canada;

Part VII—deals with the repeal of certain former companies acts and the coming into force of the act.

In this bill, the framework of the Companies Act and of the British corporate law system that has been developed in Canada are safeguarded and maintained; basic principles remain unchanged; no encroachment is made on the Civil Law of Quebec.

May I now briefly outline the important changes made by this bill.

The Companies Act applies to other corporations, besides joint stock companies, from which it originally derived its name. Therefore, to call the act "The Companies Act" is, to a certain extent, a misnomer, inasmuch as it is not all inclusive.

Under sections 1 and 2 of Bill S-22, it is now proposed to call the act "Canada Corporations Act." This new title has the further advantage of more readily differentiating this act from various provincial companies acts.

Section 3(1) enlarges the list of "courts" referred to, by adding "The Territorial Court of the Northwest Territories."

Section 3(2) clarifies the words "special resolution", so as to remove a linguistic difficulty.

Sections 4 to 10 need no explanation. Their purpose can be seen at a glance.

Section 11 deals with so called "open-end" mutual fund companies, which started to operate in Canada only a few decades ago and now occupy a place of substantial importance in the Canadian economy.

I have had some difficulty in finding an accurate and precise definition of what is generally called "open-end" mutual fund operations. The sources that I consulted were conflicting. I believe I finally was able to summarize that information quite accurately in the following language, which I crave the indulgence of the Senate to allow me to read, because it is highly technical.

Open-end investment companies are commonly called "Mutual Funds." The distinguishing feature of open-end investment companies is their readiness to repurchase or redeem their outstanding shares at current worth—which may, of course, be more or less than what the investor paid for them, depending on the market value of the portfolio securities at the time of redemption. Most open-end investment companies are also continuously offering new shares, generally through investment dealers and their registered representatives. Mutual funds shares are sold at prices based on the current asset value, which is simply the total value of all investments and cash, less all liabilities, divided by the number of shares outstanding. The sales price usually includes a distribution or sales charge, fully explained in each fund's prospectus. For all practical purposes, the potential supply of new shares in most open-end companies is inexhaustible. The great majority of "Open-end Investment Companies" redeem their shares at net asset value, that is, without charge.

The closed-end company is similar to the ordinary publicly-owned corporation, except that its business is simply to invest its shareholders' money effectively and profitably. Like ordinary corporations, a closed-end company has a relatively fixed capitalization, consisting of shares and possibly bonds issued at some time in the past. Closed-end shares are usually traded on stock exchanges, and are bought and sold through stockbrokers or securities dealers, just as any other listed or unlisted security. Because their prices are determined by supply and demand, as well as by fluctuations in their asset values, closed-end shares may sell above or below their asset value.

Nowhere in the Companies Act is to be found anything to define mutual fund companies, nor their power to carry out such operations. Therefore, some doubts were expressed in that regard, particularly by those trading in such securities. It was therefore found expedient to dispel such doubts by specific legislation. The method hereinabove outlined is clearly at variance with the well-known principle that an incorporated company cannot redeem and re-issue its own shares.

These funds can be assimilated to funds entrusted to trust companies but, in the latter case, trust companies are directed and limited by the provisions of trust agreements and by law, but mutual fund companies are not.

Mutual fund companies contend, of course, that their operations are covered and authorized by the provisions of section 12 of the act as it now stands, and by their charters and by-laws.

It seems advisable that all doubts in that respect should be removed. Mutual fund companies have been in operation for a few decades and a considerable amount of money has been transacted through the stock market and elsewhere. Section 11 of this bill, therefore, adds a new section after section 12 of the act, which becomes section 12(a), giving statutory recognition to mutual fund shares.

That statutory recognition is nowhere to be found in the Companies Act. This section also dispels all doubts as to the validity of the capital structure of these companies, and regulates such operations.

Another important amendment simplifies the applications for incorporation, retaining, however, the substance. (See section 6 at pages 3, 4 and 5 of this bill.)

It has now also been found necessary to remove doubts as regards the authority of the Secretary of State to amend by letters patent or supplementary letters patent the capital structure of companies. At present, some changes can be made only by giving a doubtful interpretation to some sections of the Companies Act. It seems obvious that we should not impose upon high civil servants a responsibility which could be questioned.

Minority shareholders are given greater protection. Doubtful cases, at their request, may be referred to the courts of justice, which have the facilities to hear evidence and dispose of such cases. This change will not bring an undue burden to bear on the courts; very few cases will have to be submitted. Furthermore, some amendments to other sections of the act concerning prospectuses will reduce the number of cases with which the courts are now often called upon to deal. These provisions are to be found in sections 10, 14 and 19 of the bill.

Major corporations, as you have seen during this session, now request permission to use a bilingual corporate name. Section 15 of this bill provides that a company wishing to do so would now be permitted to use, and can be legally designated by, either the French or English form of its corporate name, or both.

Many non-operating companies, or almost non-operating companies, fail to submit their annual return, and certain public companies fail to file their annual financial statement. The sanctions imposed in the Companies Act have been found unsatisfactory and insufficient. The bill proposes to give power to apply to the courts of justice for a winding-up order, although we give to the defaulting company full opportunity to comply with the act and to be reinstated in good standing. It would thereby be protected against drastic departmental actions, as found in section 5 of the bill.

With a view to protecting shareholders, and especially minority shareholders, the directors and officers of the company will be compelled to disclose their dealings in the shares and securities of the company and of subsidiary companies. Section 32 of the bill so provides.

The prospectus requirements of the Companies Act, introduced in the Canadian Companies Act in 1917, were taken from the Imperial Act (1908). We had then no effective provincial securities commissions. The creation of these splendid provincial agencies now renders our provisions on prospectuses outdated and causes an unnecessary duplication of work. Therefore, section 29 of this bill provides that companies complying in good faith with the requirements of the provincial or foreign security agencies need only file with the Department of the Secretary of State a certified copy of the material filed in those other jurisdictions. To safeguard the public, however, the existing provisions will remain in the act to operate against companies which might file prospectuses with an unsatisfactory jurisdiction.

I have already referred to the provisions regarding financial statements contained in this bill. This is to ensure that these statements will be more in accordance with modern accounting practices. The Ontario act and the Draft Uniform Act were closely followed, and our draftsmen have received the assistance of professional accounting organizations. This new legislation will render the work of company auditors much easier, and will afford greater protection to the shareholders and the public generally. I refer in particular to section 34 of the bill.

The amalgamation of companies, which was almost unknown 30 years ago, has now become a common practice. Under section 37 of this bill a procedure is provided for the amalgamation of companies incorporated under this act. The amalgamation of companies incorporated under this act and companies incorporated under other jurisdictions, and particularly provincial companies acts, is not yet possible. It gives rise to some constitutional difficulties which have not yet been solved. Therefore, the question of the amalgamation of federal and provincial companies must remain in abeyance for some time to come.

Consequential amendments were made to cover the case of corporations without share capital, so as to provide that such corporations created by special acts of Parliament be directed to file with the Department of the Secretary of State an annual return indicating the postal address of its head office and disclosing the names and addresses of its directors. This amendment is necessary because there is at present no Government agency to follow up those organizations.

It is also proposed to delete from the act Part IV, concerning the licensing of British and foreign mining companies operating in the Northwest and Yukon Territories. This legislation was adopted in 1898, but the legislatures of these territories will soon be ready to assume their respective responsibility in that field. Section 43 of the bill will then be put into effect by order in council.

That, honourable senators, is an epitome of Bill S-22. I apologize for the time I have taken to explain it, but this is a voluminous bill containing important amendments which are bound to affect a great number of people engaged in industrial, commercial and other endeavours. I am sure that this bill will bring to all concerned considerable assistance.

Honourable senators, let us all thank Divine Providence for having called us to live at a time when and in a country where matters of this importance can be studied and soberly discussed, having solely in mind the progress and welfare of our country.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Honourable senators, in order to accommodate Senator Farris, who is anxious to proceed, I move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Walker, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Farris for the second reading of Bill S-20, to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I appreciate the courtesy that my honourable friend has extended. I also wish he could have kept a few more Liberals on this side of the house so that I could have talked to them.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It is impossible to keep them.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is one of the disadvantages of speaking late on a Thursday afternoon. However, I have been here 27 years and I have become accustomed to disappointments as well as to courtesies.

Yesterday in my remarks I stated the reasons for supporting this bill. I stated first that it was in the public interest to have one or more—I do not know if I emphasized the "more," but I am willing to include it anyway—truly western banks with head offices and presidents in Vancouver. Secondly, I suggested that if such a bank—and I might add, banks—is advisable, it is also beneficial to have the financial backing of a great and growing province behind the resources of that bank.

I have already pointed out to you the provisions of the British Columbia Bank Act, which is the Bill No. 15, which I read yesterday and is on Hansard of yesterday.

I am not sure that I stated this yesterday, but I want to emphasize the fact that it was enacted by the Legislature of British Columbia giving authority for the government of that province to purchase shares in a bank up to 25 per cent of its capital as invested. That legislation was carried in the Legislature of British Columbia by a vote of 41 to 5. I think that is of importance in considering the various steps.

Now I could have stopped there, but my training as a lawyer—I was admitted to the Bar of British Columbia 61 years ago in June—and the experience I have had has taught me it is well sometimes to anticipate objections and meet them head-on. In so far as I can, I shall anticipate such objections as I feel may be raised to the policy I am pursuing in this case. Of course it is sometimes better to stand pat and see what the objections are, and then answer them; but I shall have a chance to do that too.

We have in British Columbia a board of trade, and it so happens that I am an honorary life member of that organization. However, I find among my papers a resolution which, according to the newspapers, was passed, objecting to this legislation. I did not get notice of this, and I am not altogether sure that it was at a full meeting of the Board of Trade of Vancouver; in fact, I rather suspect it was one of the committees of which there are several. That is immaterial because I want to deal only with the substance of this. While I do not always agree with opinions of the majority of the Board of Trade, I have respect for them. I also found on my desk today a resolution by the Liberal organization of British Columbia, and my curiosity is aroused as to who wrote it.

I have a clipping from the Vancouver Sun, a newspaper published in Vancouver, of May 1, where it says in big headlines:

> Politically-Free
> B.C. Bank Wanted
> Trade Board Sends Resolution
> To Senate Banking Committee

The article reads:

> Vancouver Board of Trade wants to make sure the proposed Bank of B.C. is free from political control.

I wonder what if anything is completely free of political control in the provinces.

> It has sent a resolution to that effect to the finance ministers at Ottawa and Victoria and to the leader of the Senate. A Senate committee hears all applications for bank charters.
>
> The Board of Trade resolution said if the B. C. government bought 25 per cent of the shares that would give it effective control and thus leave the institution open to political influence.

I think ordinarily in commercial experience all businesses find that with scattered shareholders a concentrated holding of 25 per cent does give a substantial control. But we must keep in mind always that the basic difference in this case is that while property and civil rights are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, banking is within the jurisdiction of the federal Government, and we have in the Bank Act page after page of controls; and we also have in that Act provisions in regard to the Minister of Finance which give the most drastic control over all banks incorporated. And if this bank, the incorporation of which I am now advocating, is so incorporated, it will be under all the controls of federal jurisdiction. That is something which is overlooked in these resolutions.

> The Vancouver Board of Trade subscribes to the proposition that no government should enter any field of business which is adequately and well served by the private sector of the economy.

That may be so, but it may have important reservations.

> The board also holds the view that no government should control or dominate any large public financial institution other than a national agency—like the Bank of Canada.
>
> In the light of its principles, the board is concerned over the development of the Bank of B.C. The government of B.C. has,

by virtue of legislation enacted at the last provincial legislative session, power to acquire up to 25 per cent of the shares of this proposed bank.

This resolution does not state that that was carried in the legislature by a vote of 41 to 5. I think that should be regarded as a fair representation of the view of the people of British Columbia, because under our democratic system is seems safe to assume that a very substantial vote of the legislators in the provincial Parliament or in the Parliament of Canada is a fair representation of the views of the people, and particularly should that be so where there is not a split vote which unduly affects the minority.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: How many of those would be members of the Opposition?

Hon. Mr. Farris: They were divided between the Social Credit and socialists, and there were five Liberals who voted against it. And I say all power to those Liberals within their jurisdiction. I am not here to criticize their vote and I am not here to support it. To develop my argument a little further I would say that that is entirely outside our jurisdiction; it is a matter for the provincial legislature and the people of British Columbia. I would assure my friend that in my opinion, no matter how right these Liberals may be, the majority of the people are represented by the 41 members who voted as they did. I shall develop that a little more.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I was not asking that critically.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I know, and I am not answering it critically either. Because I shake my fist does not mean that I am directing it at you.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Exclamation point.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes. To continue:

> Acquisition of this number of shares, or even a substantially reduced percentage, could, if as indicated the balance of the shares are widely distributed, give effective, if not complete control to the Government.

As I say, we do not dispute that.

> We would urge that all concerned with the creation and affairs of the bank give early assurance that the bank will in every sense be a private enterprise, permanently free of the danger of government control at the operating level and of political domination in any sense.

Honourable senators, I have several answers to that. I take that as my text because it is the only objection of substance that I can find to this bill—that is apart from the general objections that might apply to all new banks, and we have enough proposed incorporations before us now. My answer is, first, that the powers are only the powers of shareholders. The government, as owners of shares, will have no more rights than other shareholders. The shareholders will be no freer of domination by the regulations made under the Bank Act or the Bank of Canada Act than other shareholders of any other bank.

I do not know what is necessarily meant by "political domination." Political control might be good or it might be bad. I notice that the Board of Trade's objection is directed only to the provincial Government, which clearly represents the majority of the people of the Province of British Columbia.

I call attention to Senator Cameron's speech in moving second reading of the bill to incorporate the Laurentide Bank of Canada. I want the Senate to clearly understand that I am not attacking that bill, but I am making the comparison that if the Board of Trade is right in its criticisms of the Bank of British Columbia, in which the Government of the province proposes to take some shares, then it might give some consideration to the provisions of the bill to incorporate the Laurentide Bank of Canada.

I have marked some of the statements in the very fair and clear speech of Senator Cameron. At page 321 of the Debates of the Senate of this session, referring to the Laurentide Financial Corporation Limited, Senator Cameron said:

> —the company has grown to be the third ranking finance company in Canada, having total assets as at June 30 of last year, which was the end of its last fiscal year, in excess of $272 million. Its capital and surplus are approximately $34 million.
>
> The head office of the company since its incorporation has been, as I have stated, in Vancouver, and from that location its services are offered through 190 branch offices of the company and its subsidiaries located across Canada and in the States of California, Oregon and Nevada. Additionally, two branches are operated by a banking subsidiary in The Bahamas, five branches by a subsidiary in France, and three by a banking subsidiary in the United Kingdom. Another branch office was recently opened in Jamaica.

Near the bottom of that page Senator Cameron said:

> The parent company is Canadian in ownership in spite of the geographic diversification of its interest. The various classes of stock are held by more than ten thousand shareholders. Over 90 per cent of the shares are registered in the names of residents of Canada, and over 90 per cent of the shareholders themselves appear to be Canadian residents. In other words, less than 10 per cent of the shares are owned by non-residents, and less than 10 per cent of the registered shareholders are non-residents of this country.

The parent company—

That is, Laurentide, and Senator Cameron makes no bones about the domination of this new bank by Laurentide.

—is closely associated with Power Corporation of Canada, Limited, which is no doubt well known to honourable senators as a substantial Canadian investment company. Power Corporation acquired its interest in 1956 through the purchase of a class of shares carrying voting rights. The parent-subsidiary relationship was severed last April when a reorganization of Laurentide's share capital conferred voting rights upon the common shares. However, by reason of its continuing substantial share holdings and an agreement, Power Corporation continues to be in a position to cause to be elected a majority of the company's directors.

I am not making any attack on that. I am not in any way suggesting that the bill to incorporate Laurentide should not go to committee, but I am saying that when you are considering a company like Laurentide with all its diversity of shareholders, not only in in Canada but in the United States and other countries, and when you consider the fact that another company dominates that again, then you must wonder if the Board of Trade of Vancouver is so concerned, why it has not made some comparisons between the possible control of shares by the Government which represents the people of British Columbia and control by two corporations which represent a scattering of people all over canada, the United States and other foreign countries.

I do not want to be misunderstood when I say that. I want to say simply that if there is a justification for a concern of that nature then, in my opinion, it should apply just as much to one or two companies dominating a bank as it does to the people of British Columbia, through their representatives, dominating a bank. Which, I ask you, is most likely to have the welfare of the province as its paramount consideration? If that is to be the essential test, then do you think that these companies, scattered as they are, will have more concern for the welfare of the province than the people of the province of British Columbia themselves as represented in the ratio of 41 to 5 by the voters in the legislature?

Apart from that, I want to point out that section 91(15) of the British North America Act provides that exclusive jurisdiction in respect of banking, incorporation of banks and the issue of paper money shall vest in the federal Parliament. My honourable friend who has spoken already this afternoon on another subject thought, from my conversation with him, that the power to issue paper money would be conferred upon this new bank. That is not correct. Exclusive jurisdiction with respect to the issue of paper money is vested in the dominion and in the Bank of Canada, and not in the chartered banks. The jurisdiction over this bank, if it is incorporated, will be the same jurisdiction that exists with respect to every existing bank. If the Government, following the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, causes a new Bank Act to be enacted, then this bank will be subject to the regulations made under the new Bank Act and will not be confined to the regulations under the present Bank Act.

I have in my hands a document I received this morning. It has the card of W. A. C. Bennett, the Premier of the Province of British Columbia. I thought I was being exclusively favoured, but I find that many other senators have received copies of this. I do not know that all honourable senators have received them, but I know that several have. This is the only communication, direct or indirect, that I have had from Mr. Bennett in connection with the motion I am making. I did have a request from the Attorney General of the Province of British Columbia that I move the second reading of this bill, but he never stipulated in any way, shape or form the conditions under which I might make my speech. I have complete freedom, and I am giving what I consider to be my own opinion and nothing else.

Mr. Bennett refers to two pages of the speech he made to the Vancouver Junior Chamber of Commerce on April 30. I have not heard that after Mr. Bennett's speech they sent in a resolution similar to that made by the senior Chamber of Commerce. Sometimes younger people have just as sound and sometimes a sounder opinion than the old fellows. I say that without any reference to anybody's age in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We are not convinced.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, perhaps after I and my learned friend next to me here (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) have made speeches, you will be.

Hon. Mr. Bennett referred particularly in this matter to pages 9 and 10 of this speech:

> In January of this year we announced that the provincial government will be one of the sponsors of the new chartered bank with headquarters in Vancouver. The general public reaction to this announcement has been more favourable than I would have dared hope.

I am surprised at that, because he is a great optimist. He continues:

> I was glad to learn last week that the Royal Commission on Banking agrees with our position that Canada is now at a stage in her development when the public interest will be better served by the creation of new chartered banks.

I accept honourable Mr. Bennett's word for that. I have not attempted, in the short time I have had, to wander through that report. I know some honourable senators have done so, and I think that is the impression that prevails generally. This continues:

> Nevertheless, there has been some criticism of our plans for the Bank of British Columbia. It has been charged that there is no real need for a bank with headquarters in this province, and it has also been charged that this will be a "political bank" operated by the government. I would like to deal briefly with both those charges.
>
> First, as to the question of need, I have said repeatedly that I believe the chartered banks of Canada have performed an outstanding service to this country, and I am confident that they will go on doing so. But banking is an industry—a service industry—and like all other industries, it should have the opportunity to grow. The economy of British Columbia is growing at an all-time record rate; the industries which serve the economy should be growing at the same rate. In our judgment, there is a very definite need today for a chartered bank headquartered in British Columbia, and with the growth of British Columbia as its primary field of interest.

I do not think anyone could complain about that statement. He continues:

> This judgment, and this judgment alone, led to our decision to show leadership in the establishment of the Bank of British Columbia. And in stating this principle again, I hope I will be able to dispose once and for all of the charge that this will be a "political" bank.
>
> Because it certainly will not be, as far as I personally am concerned, and as far as the government is concerned. We have the authority of the Legislature to purchase, on your behalf, up to 25 percent of the shares of the bank. Depending on its requirements, we may find it necessary to purchase only 5 or 10 percent of the shares; but whatever the final amount, our basic interest is simply to ensure that it is firmly established.

That is an important statement to come from the premier of the province. I am sure that some of my Liberal associates in British Columbia will not agree with it, and I am going to deal with that on the ground that they are perfectly within their rights; but their forum is the legislature and the people of British Columbia, not the Canadian Senate or the Canadian Parliament.

Premier Bennett continues:

> Thereafter, our interest will be the same, and no more, as that of all other shareholders—to be satisfied that our investment is being handled in a sound and careful manner. As investors, we will certainly have no interest in seeing this new enterprise become a political football; in fact, we will have every reason to fight any such attempt as a matter of basic business principle.
>
> We believe the Bank of British Columbia can make a tremendous contribution to the development of our Province; and we think the location of its head office in Vancouver will allow this city to take its rightful place as a major centre of North American financial activity. We hope, too, that it will make an immediate contribution to the development of the downtown business core, because as you know, we plan to locate the head office building in the Robson-Howe-Smithe-Hornby block for which we are now negotiating with the City of Vancouver.

I want honourable senators to understand that I am not taking a stand on what honourable Mr. Bennett said, one way or another. I am simply stating that that is the avowed policy of the government, and I want to fill this in with respect to what I consider to be the constitutional position and the rights of the Dominion in connection with a policy enunciated by the Legislature in British Columbia, having the support of a very substantial number in that legislature. I give two propositions. The first is that that bill which I quoted to you, Bill 15, passed in that legislature, is absolutely within the jurisdiction of the province.

All honourable senators will understand that under the British North America Act the jurisdiction between the provinces and the Dominion is divided under section 91, dealing with federal powers, and section 92 dealing with provincial powers. Section 92 (13) gives the exclusive jurisdiction to the province on property and civil rights.

I wish to say to you that I have the books in my desk here, but I am keeping them out of sight, though anyone who wishes may see them. The authorities all say that the right to buy shares, whether by an individual or by a bank, is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the province, under the heading "Property and Civil Rights."

I do not believe there is a constitutional lawyer in Parliament who will challenge that statement. I give you a reference which I think will settle it.

I refer first to Clement's Canadian Constitution, third edition. Mr. Justice Clement, in my mind, was one of the great lawyers of Canada. Unfortunately, he died at a comparatively early age. He wrote this book on the Canadian Constitution. The third edition appeared quite a number of years ago. I am referring to the third edition, 1916, at page 815, citing Parsons case in the Privy Council, establishing that contracts are "civil rights" under the meaning of section 92(13). It establishes that the motives do not invalidate if the language is sufficient.

I also refer you to a case in the Court of Appeal in Manitoba, Bergethaler vs. Waisenamt, 1949, 1. W. W. R., at page 323.

I will not read those cases because I do not believe there will be any challenge to the fact that that Bill 15, which I read yesterday, passed this year in British Columbia, is completely within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Province of British Columbia. If that be so, it is my submission that it is not for the Parliament of Canada to question the motives of the province, if the provincial act is valid—and there is very high authority for that.

I want to impress on those who are not lawyers here that the law of Canada is that the decisions of the Privy Council, while it was our final court of appeal, are just as binding on us as if those decisions had been given directly by the courts of Canada.

I remember that at the time the legislation was being drawn to abolish appeals to the Privy Council, I had a discussion with Mr. St. Laurent, who was prime minister at that time. We both agreed that we did not need any provision to that effect in the amendment, because to lawyers it was without any doubt that a decision of the Privy Council, while it was our final court, would in future be just as binding as it would have been if the Supreme Court of Canada had always been our last court and as if the decision had been passed by the Supreme Court. The Privy Council was our Supreme Court until appeals were abolished. Therefore, anything in that decision by the Privy Council is part of the authoritative binding law of the courts of Canada.

I refer you to the case of the Bank of Toronto vs. Lamb, 1887, reported at 56 L.J.P.C. at page 87; and, in the same year, 12 Appeal Cases, at page 586. That case was an appeal questioning the legislature of the province of Quebec, which imposed taxes on banks, and the constitutionality of its power to do so was attacked. One of the grounds of attack was that it did not have jurisdiction to impose taxes on banks. Lord Hobhouse said:

> Then it is suggested that the legislature may lay on taxes so heavy as to crush a bank out of existence, and so to nullify the power of Parliament to erect banks. But their Lordships cannot conceive that when the Imperial Parliament conferred wide powers of local self-government on great countries such as Quebec, it intended to limit them on the speculation—> —that they would be used in an injurious manner. People who are trusted with the great power of making laws for property and civil rights may well be trusted to levy taxes.

I emphasize the word "speculation".

That is an unqualified statement. I would add to it, as an obvious and necessary conclusion to draw from it, that a legislature such as British Columbia, that is trusted with the great power of making laws for property and civil rights, may also be trusted to invest public funds in shares of the Western Bank without violation of their public responsibilities.

That case was considered later in one of Aberhart's bills in Alberta. He made no bones about putting a bank out of existence. Chief Justice Duff, of the Supreme Court of Canada, pointed out the distinction between the two cases. He said that if this was beyond his jurisdiction, then the courts must interfere. He also referred to Lord Hobhouse's judgment, and there was no question of the validity of that judgment, where it was based on speculation.

Honourable senators, I want to point out one very important part of the whole issue in this case, an issue important as distinguished from either of the other two cases, because this constitutional question does not arise in either of them. It is my submission that the Senate, in accordance with the principle laid down by Lord Hobhouse, is no more justified in questioning the bona fides of the provincial legislation or its administration, than was the Privy Council in the case of an attack on taxation legislation by the great Province of Quebec. The great Province of British Columbia stands in exactly the same position, and has a right in its jurisdiction to exercise its laws, and not to find them defeated merely on any speculation that it may abuse its powers. Outside of speculation, in my respectful submission, there is nothing to justify these attacks.

As part of my case, I wish to come to the position in which I find myself, and I ask honourable senators to put themselves in the same position, that is, the position taken by the Board of Trade, as well as by others; and I am not unconscious or unmindful that even some Liberal associations have taken the position—on whose advice, I do not know. However, honourable senators, I take this position, that we are confronted here with a grave constitutional position.

I have before me Bartlett's Familiar Quotations, which is not binding upon us, but I think the logic of it is binding upon us. I want to read from a letter written by that great Frenchman, Voltaire, to Madame du Deffand. I do not know the lady, and of course I never knew Voltaire; but this quotation has gone down in history, and been restated by Will Durant, in The Story of Philosophy. The quotation from Voltaire's letter says:

> I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

I think that is a sound philosophy. If a person has a right to say something, the fact that you may disagree with it to the utmost limit does not justify your challenging his or her right to say it. Will Durant put it this way:

> I do not agree with a word that you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

I am not here to say whether or not that legislation in British Columbia is right or wrong. I am not saying whether I would or would not take that position. I will put my position in this way. Assuming that I oppose to the limit Bennett's decision to go into the purchase of these shares, I have the right and I do defend to the limit his right to make a decision that he is going to do that, because it is within the exclusive provincial powers of the legislature of the province under the British North America Act. If the Senate or Parliament decides to interfere with that, I say they are interfering with serious constitutional rights.

I want to point out to honourable senators that there are two features with respect to that. One is that a lawyer may argue, and he may be right or wrong, that under the Bank Act you have a right to refuse to grant a charter to a bank that is going to have the support of a provincial legislature, even though under the Constitution they are authorized to purchase those shares. My own opinion, as a lawyer, is that that would be unconstitutional on the part of the Parliament of Canada. I may be wrong on that; however, I am not wrong when I give the alternative.

The alternative is that we have today great problems throughout the world about the comity of nations. Has it ever occurred to you that we have almost as serious a problem about the comity between the Dominion and the provinces? Mark you, honourable senators, this application has conformed to every requirement of the existing Bank Act. We shall appear before the committee, if we are allowed to go there, and we shall be able to show you that we have conformed with every requirement to be incorporated as a bank. If we become incorporated we shall be subject to every restriction existing under the Bank Act today, or which may be added to it in the future. There is one thing, however, we are not entitled to do. We are not entitled to say we are going to nullify the powers of the province to purchase shares under the Constitution, which they have the right to do, on the excuse that they may abuse that right.

I have cited these two cases to show the logic of that position. I have submitted the cases to show, first under Clements, and secondly, the cases he cites, that the jurisdiction is unlimited with regard to property and civil rights. The purchase of these shares involves property and also civil rights, because it is a contractual relationship, which of course is a civil right. If the province has that power, then I say it is not for the Dominion, under the guise of not liking Mr. Bennett's proposal, to refuse to accept the authority of the Privy Council, under Lord Hobhouse, that no mere surmise is justifiable, and to challenge the good faith of a government of a great province.

If we take that position, honourable senators, then I say that if we refuse to give the same treatment to this bill, which has met with every requirement under the Bank Act —which I am sure we are going to give to every other bill—we shall create first a constitutional problem; and even if you lose it or win it on that, you are going to create a serious problem, if not more serious, between the province of British Columbia and the Dominion Government.

I would say without any hesitation—and this has influenced me greatly in the decision I have made to take the position which, as far as I am concerned, is not a popular one—that I have no doubt that at this time, when conflict exists between the provincial and federal rights and when assertions are being made, particularly in the Province of Quebec, we do not want to encourage any more disputes between the provinces and the Dominion Government.

I have never had any submission on what I am about to say on this, but I predict it would be a mighty good political issue for Bennett to take to the people of British Columbia that the Dominion Government has denied his powers under the British North America Act to purchase shares in this bank for the good of his province, western Canada and, for that matter, the whole of Canada. I have no doubt that is not a conjured up issue, but one fully justified, and I would have no hesitation in taking the position Bennett has taken. I do not say I support Bennett's proposal; I do not have to say I disagree with it; but if I do disagree with it I would fight to the death for his right under the constitution to take that position. Right or wrong, that is his constitutional right and, believe me, this Parliament of Canada could inject unnecessary and unfair problems into this time of great uncertainties, great conflicts and demands among the provinces.

I go back in my mind to the royal commission. I was counsel for the province of British Columbia at the time. We received many presentations. I have some of these documents here, but will not take time to read them now. At that time we had a lot of controversies and complaints in British Columbia. Some have been remedied and some have not, but the British Columbia people, perhaps more so then than now, were a British people; they were loyal to the great empire, and they were loyal Canadians; and the disappointments we suffered because we did not get all the things we ought to have had at that time did not challenge our loyalty and adherence to Canada.

But in these days, when questions are coming up more vividly and more pointedly than perhaps they ever have in the history of this country, I can see nothing less desirable for us than to start interfering with provincial rights unnecessarily, when they have all the control they need under the Bank Act, and to refuse to grant this charter under the guise of the argument that Bennett may be going to abuse the power after he gets it. He has stated—and there is logic in it—that he wants to be assured this new bank will have new financial support. He did not add, but might have, that he wanted to have a suitable source for his investment. He has nearly $300 million coming to British Columbia under the arrangement on the new Columbia River Treaty. I would not imagine for a minute he would want to put all that money in there, but he might logically find it a suitable place to put a good part of it.

I do not want to press that aspect further, but I want to make some closing observations. In my attempt to get this thing in order I seem to have confused it a little. Let me say a word about banks.

I have questioned the effectiveness of the system under which we are operating today, by which all the head offices and all the presidents of the banks are in Toronto, none of them being located west of Toronto. I have asserted it is desirable that we should have this kind of bank out in British Columbia. I have also asserted it would be in the interests of that bank to have the backing of the great financial resources of the province of British Columbia. So far as the bank is concerned, that is largely a question of geography.

I think I would have the sanction, not only of other members of the Senate, but also of Bennett, if I ever asked him, to say that they are not attacking the bank. I think we ought to pay tribute to the great service the existing banks have rendered in Canada and to the immense development to which they have contributed. I have not the least ground for complaint on that score, except that of geography, and that happens to be a very important point.

In conclusion, it was Kipling who said:

> Oh, East is East, and West is West,
> And never the twain shall meet...

But as an eastern-born Canadian, living for the last sixty years in the west, these words have no meaning for me in this issue. The issue of geography is important, but it is not important in the sense of deliberately carrying on a conflict between the east and the west or perpetuating the suggestion that "never the twain shall meet." Whether it is about banks or pensions; whether it is about flags or provincial rights; whether it is about Bennett or Pearson, there is no east and there is no west: all are for Canada; all for the land we love.

Gentlemen, I ask you to support this bill and send it to the committee where it may mingle with the problems of the other two bank bills that have already been referred to Committee for consideration. I say that to turn it down here would be a grave reflection on the constitutional rights of the province; such action would instigate dissatisfaction and political controversy out in the Province of British Columbia. If you decide that this bill should receive second reading, I shall have pleasure in moving that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, debate adjourned.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Eric Cook moved the third reading of Bill S-17, respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES AND ORDERS—ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, May 12, the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Roebuck:

That the Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate be amended as follows:

1. Immediately after paragraph (g) of clause 1 of Rule 162 insert the following:

(h) a statement of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof;

2. Re-letter paragraph (h) of clause 1 of Rule 162 as paragraph "(i)".

3. Immediately after paragraph 5 of Form C-1 (General Form of Petition) insert the following:

6. That the following is a statement under Rule 162 of all previous proceedings instituted with reference to the marriage or to any children thereof, including applications to the Parliament of Canada, petitions and writs for divorce actions, alimony or maintenance, separation from bed and board and the custody or maintenance of any children of the marriage, and the results of any such proceedings; and a statement of any agreements or financial arrangements between the spouses with reference to the marriage or any children thereof. (If no previous proceedings, so state).

4. Re-number paragraphs 6 and 7 of Form C-1 as paragraphs 7 and 8.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I have nothing further to add. I made my speech by way of making certain suggestions. I am now awaiting the answer of the committee. If the honourable Senator Roebuck is not ready, I am in no rush.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, in the first place I want to thank Senator Choquette for the thought he has given this matter. We of the Senate Divorce Committee welcome the interest others take in our work, particularly when they have a bright idea such as this. We welcome such ideas being brought forward, and I thank Senator Choquette for doing so.

The suggestion he made was considered this morning by the Divorce Committee, and I have the authority of the majority—the practically unanimous authority—to proceed somewhat along the lines of his suggestion.

Senator Choquette called our attention to the rules of the Province of Ontario with regard to divorce, page 450 of the Debates of the Senate, which may be summarized as follows—these are not the exact words, because I have condensed them somewhat:

"Where a petitioner is himself guilty of a matrimonial offence, he shall state the facts in a statement, place the statement in a sealed envelope and give it to the judge who shall read it and replace it in a sealed envelope and leave it in the file where it can be opened only on the order of a judge."

Now there are two considerations here; first, that he shall divulge the facts, and second, that they shall be kept secret. I think Senator Choquette agrees with me that any secrecy on our part is quite out of the question, and the practice of putting something in a sealed envelope would not conform to our procedure. Obviously, we could have a closed envelope containing secrets given to the Commissioner, but I assure you that I am not voting for anything regarding which a secret is kept from me, and that would apply to the 23 members of the committee. I am sure Senator Choquette does not wish for any such rule.

On the other hand, I am quite agreeable, that we should have some provision in our rules with regard to divulging such facts. In adopting such a rule we shall not change the law as it now stands and has stood for a long, long time. That is the common law with regard to a guilty petitioner divulging the facts to the court.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: He must divulge it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And if he fails to do so the courts in all the provinces take a very dim view of his plea.

I have taken the trouble to make a very hurried review of the laws of the various provinces in this regard.

In Alberta, a plaintiff guilty of adultery is under no duty to divulge that fact in his statement of claim or at trial. He may make the disclosure, should he wish to do so, but even when the facts are elicited by the defendant the discretion of the judge is not to be prejudiced by the non-disclosure of the plaintiff. That is rather an opposite view, but that is the only province that takes that view.

In Nova Scotia there is no rule of the court requiring disclosure, but it may be required by the court.

I have read the rules of court of New Brunswick and I see no reference whatever to the case of a petitioner who is himself guilty of adultery, and I presume that the general law as to disclosure and the exercise of discretion is followed.

In Prince Edward Island, I see nothing in the rules in this regard. The Prince Edward Island statute establishing a divorce court was passed in 1835 and continued in force following the British North America Act of 1867.

In the Province of Saskatchewan where a defendant pleads the alleged adultery of the plaintiff, the defendant gives full particulars of the persons with whom, the time when, and the place where the adultery is alleged to have been committed. At the trial the parties are not allowed to bring forth the names of any others who have not been mentioned and served.

I mention that fact because Senator Choquette, of course, has mentioned the rules of the Province of Ontario, and I wish to show that the Ontario rule is confined to that province. In all these provinces, Ontario included, with such modifications as I have indicated, it is the common law that rules, and it is the common law which we in this committee have followed, to my knowledge, for many years. Let me give you some indication of what I mean.

I read from the most recent edition of Power—The Law of Divorce in Canada, and I quote from page 71, where he says:

> Adultery as a bar seems to stem from the doctrine of recrimination applied by the ecclesiastical courts.

For many years in England the ecclesiastical courts operated on the principle that a petitioner shall not benefit by his own default, by his own wrong. And so when it became known that a petitioner—or a plaintiff, I should say in this instance—was guilty of adultery it was a complete bar to his petition. Power goes on to say:

> Although its basis has not been formulated with precision, it is essentially a refusal, by a court, of relief from obligations which a suitor has himself flouted and a refusal to hear him complain of a consequence to which his own conduct has contributed; inherent in it, also, is a recognition of the fundamental interest of the state in the maintenance of the marriage unity.

That phrase was adopted in a Canadian case and quoted by Mr. Justice Rand. In New Brunswick, and this is also from that same case, Power says:

> —the appellate court held that under the provincial law the adultery of the petitioner was an absolute bar to the granting of a divorce but this decision was reversed by the Supreme Court of Canada which held that the adultery raised only a discretionary bar.

May I pause to mention that the rights of our courts to grant a divorce is limited to the law of England as it existed in 1870, and so we who are administering law here must be very careful in following decisions in England which may be based on a change of law after that date. But when we follow decisions of our own courts, we are assured that such decisions are based on the limitations under which we work. We can depend on a decision in our own courts with confidence without examining the basis upon which the decision was made.

It is perfectly clear that in modern jurisprudence the court has the right to exercise its discretion in cases where the petitioner himself has been guilty of a matrimonial offence. And these are the four considerations governing the exercise of such a discretion.

> (1) The position and interest of any children of the marriage; (2) The interest of the party with whom the petitioner has been guilty of misconduct, with special regard to the prospect of their future marriage; (3) The question whether, if the marriage is not dissolved, there is a prospect of reconciliation between husband and wife; and (4) The interest of the petitioner, and in particular the interest that the petitioner should be able to remarry and live respectably. To these four considerations Viscount Simon ... added a fifth, saying:
>
> "To these four considerations I would add a fifth of a more general character, which must indeed be regarded as of primary importance—namely, the interest of the community at large, to be judged by maintaining a true balance between respect for the binding sanctity of marriage and the social considerations of which make it contrary to public policy to insist on the maintenance of a union which has utterly broken down. It is noteworthy that in recent years this last consideration has operated to induce the court to exercise a favourable discretion in many instances where in an earlier time a decree would certainly have been refused."

The committee has been functioning, as I am sure the Commissioner is today, along the lines of that common law so concisely stated. The only question is: Shall we state in our rules that there is an obligation upon the petitioner to divulge such facts to the court? It is already common law that he shall do so. I think it would be well for us to make it clear in the rules. So, with the consent of the house I propose to amend my motion by adding this provision:

5. Immediately after Rule 192 insert the following:

"192A. Where a petitioner has been guilty of a matrimonial offence, all the facts in connection therewith shall be disclosed by the petitioner to the Commissioner at the Hearing."

I might add that Rule 192 of The Standing Rules and Orders of the Senate of Canada relating to Resolutions for the Dissolution or Annulment of Marriages reads:

If adultery be proved, the respondent (or co-respondent) may nevertheless be admitted to prove connivance at, or condonation of the adultery, collusion in the proceedings for divorce, or adultery, or cruelty to the respondent or her children or bad conduct on the part of the petitioner.

This amendment is the law already, and when the petitioner fails to disclose such facts, and it is later brought to the attention of the court that he has asked for equity while his own hands are dirty, then the court regards his nondisclosure as a very serious default on his part. If this provision is included in our rules it will give to counsel and to others notice of what is expected of them.

With the consent of the house, I shall add this to my motion, I thank Senator Choquette again for the kindness of his thought, and for his suggestion, which we have adopted. I compliment him on it, and I have no doubt it will be of value to the future work of the Commissioner and the committee.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I am most pleased that I was able to make some contribution. Although I am not a member of the Standing Committee on Divorce, the honourable Senator Roebuck knows of the interest, from a legal standpoint, I have always taken in its work. On other occasions I have sent precedents from different provinces to my learned friend, and I am very happy that he has moved the addition of this clause to the rules.

Motion as amended agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 19, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 19, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Supplementary Report of The Canadian Wheat Board on the 1962-63 Pool Accounts for wheat, oats and barley, certified by the Auditors, pursuant to section 7(2) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, chapter 44, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 252, for the relief of Francesco Clemente.

Resolution 253, for the relief of Robert Brooks.

Resolution 254, for the relief of Mina Weiss Zimmerman.

Resolution 255, for the relief of Joan Alice Ainslie Jameson.

Resolution 256, for the relief of Pauline Sharko Martel.

Resolution 257, for the relief of Iren Roth Bak.

Resolution 258, for the relief of Joseph Emile Serge Jean Guy Paquin.

Resolution 259, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Aline Normandeau Bedard.

Resolution 260, for the relief of Patrick Howard Boucher.

Resolution 261, for the relief of Phyllis Sandra Sloan Ostrovsky.

Resolution 262, for the relief of Annabelle Susan Silver Sostak.

Resolution 263, for the relief of Paul Bedard.

Resolution 264, for the relief of Ruth Auerbach Bernstein.

Resolution 265, for the relief of William Sharko.

Resolution 266, for the relief of Susan Guttmann Van Den Bergh.

Resolution 267, for the relief of Edith Mary Henderson Kelly.

Resolution 268, for the relief of Stanley Frank White.

Resolution 269, for the relief of Cyril Edward Wood.

Resolution 270, for the relief of Morris Alexander Kulba.

Resolution 271, for the relief of Thomas Wesley Dixon.

Resolution 272, for the relief of Ruth Wiseblatt Ward.

Resolution 273, for the relief of Constance Phyllis Penny Stewart.

Resolution 274, for the relief of Maria Adalgisa (Gisele) Rossignoli Abbruzzese.

Resolution 275, for the relief of Marie Nicole Lacaille Gagnon.

Resolution 276, for the relief of Eva Livia Iranyi Blumberger.

Resolution 277, for the relief of Pauline Abrams Foster.

Resolution 278, for the relief of Walter Barber.

Resolution 279, for the relief of Ethel Mickenberg Agulnik.

Resolution 280, for the relief of Doreen Eleanor Bishop Mulcahy.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES

MOTION TO EMPOWER FINANCE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE AND REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, in advance of the bills based on the said estimates reaching the Senate; and

That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: Honourable senators, I think it is highly appropriate that the Leader of the Government in the Senate should sponsor a motion of this kind, and I am pleased indeed to do so.

The order of reference is a general one, as honourable senators will notice, and, in view of the practice of the Finance Committee in respect of estimates in other years, I think it is wholly appropriate that the terms of reference should be general.

I think the authority of the Senate to deal with the estimates tabled by the Government each year is clear and unquestioned. In the first place, the Senate is an integral part of Parliament. In the second place, the Senate, like the other house, is required to pass appropriation bills because each one is an instrument not only of the House of Commons but of the whole of Parliament.

The question of the desirability of referring the Government's estimates to a committee of this house has been debated on other occasions. There was a rather notable debate some 14 years ago, in 1950, when Dr. King who, in his career here had been a very prominent member of the Senate—having served as Leader of the Government and as Speaker—took issue with the idea of a Senate committee investigating and studying the estimates, on the ground that these were concerns primarily of the elected representatives of the people and of the Government in the other place. However, the view which he then expressed was not accepted generally in the Senate, and our friend, the honourable Senator Crerar, made what I think I can refer to as a most helpful contribution to the debate on that occasion. I should like to quote briefly from his remarks as reported at page 234 of Senate Hansard that year.

> It may be a nice question how far the Senate, being a non-elective house, has the power or the right to inquire into the amounts of money asked for by the government for administrative purposes. Personally, I very strongly hold the view that the responsibility of senators in this respect, although we are appointed rather than elected members of parliament, is just as continuing and just as important as is that of members of the Commons. To anyone who accepts that view it follows logically that we are quite within our right in examining the proposals that the government submits to parliament—bear in mind, not to the House of Commons alone, but to parliament—for the expenditure of public moneys raised through the ordinary processes of revenue.

A little later in the same speech he said this:

> The point I am trying to make is that the more attention we give to these expenditures and the more light we throw upon them, the more intelligent will public opinion about them become, and to my mind that is a valuable service which our committees will render through their current examination of estimates.

The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) also participated in the debate on that day, and he supported the views of Senator Crerar. He said too that he felt work of this kind, as projected under that resolution, and indeed under the present resolution, would help carry the work load of Parliament. I believe this is still true and that it is perhaps even more necessary today. Senator Hugessen also emphasized the value of using the special facilities which a Senate committee affords to enable officials to be questioned by members of Parliament on the details of the estimates, to the extent that members of the committee might desire to do so.

In passing, I should say that the debate on that occasion arose as a result of the leadership given in this respect by our good friend from Shelburne, honourable Senator Robertson, who was leading the Government in this chamber at that time.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think it fair to say that at that time the Senate saw very clearly the problem before it, and that it acted upon it in a judicious way. Indeed, the report of the committee—which commences at page 530 of the Debates of the Senate of 1950—is one that bears examination today, not only by members of the committee but by all honourable senators; in fact, those in another place might profit by reading it. Of course, I need not say that the chairman of that great committee was our friend from Churchill, Senator Crerar.

Without reading from the report itself, I would like to summarize a few of the recommendations made at that time. There were valid and useful suggestions made as to the format the estimates should take and, as I understand it, these recommendations were acted upon. There was a good deal of discussion concerning the volume of Government publications which had then been undertaken, and some firm recommendations were made as to how this situation could be improved and how overlapping could be prevented. It suggested in the report that the estimates of each department should also reflect the actual cost of running that department—all the costs incurred by that department. The report further suggested that any increases in departmental spending should be subject to the approval of Treasury Board.

Another significant feature of the report and another effective recommendation subsequently adopted was that every annual estimate book should contain a table of government spending in the nation at all levels—federal, provincial and municipal. I believe this has been a valuable contribution to the content of the estimates book, and it enables honourable senators and members of Parliament generally to appreciate something of the magnitude of the spending for public purposes in this country.

Without labouring the point, I should like to refer briefly to a report of another finance committee, made in 1956, under the chairmanship of the late and lamented Senator Hawkins. That report commences at page 753 of the Debates of the Senate of 1956. I remember the occasion very well because Senator Hawkins had presided at the committee hearings and at the preparation of the report, and died just hours before it was presented in the house. Senator Horner had the very difficult task at that time of presenting the report on behalf of his late chairman.

That report also made a distinctive and useful contribution to the work of Parliament. Among other things, it was careful to define the meaning of the terms gross national product, net national income, and expressions of that kind, in their relationship to the tax levels which prevailed in the country. It repeated a recommendation made in the 1950 report, that the estimates of each department should reflect the actual costs incurred by that department. It also recommended that the erection and maintenance of public buildings be the prime responsibility of the Department of Public Works, and that land procurement generally on behalf of the federal authority should, with certain statutory exceptions, be the responsibility of that department. It reviewed the whole problem of the use of rental accommodation by government departments and agencies, and it recommended that the rules of depreciation normally applicable in business be applied to the capital assets owned by the federal Government.

There was another memorable report of the Finance Committee, made in 1959, under the chairmanship of Senator Emerson, our late and lamented colleague from New Brunswick. That committee made a special study of inflation, a problem which was of serious national concern at that time, and which indeed can become a matter of national concern almost any time in a developing and expanding economy.

Those were three good reports which might well be considered by a new committee as patterns for their activities.

Honourable senators, I shall not comment further at this stage on the Senate's powers in respect of supply bills. I think the views I hold, and which I think are pretty generally held in this chamber, were adequately placed upon the record when I spoke on this matter on April 13. The pattern set by those earlier Finance committees dealing with the estimates seems to indicate little disposition to consider or to report on too many of the details of the estimates, but they all reflect a desire on the part of those committees to deal generally with financial policy and financial administration. While all their recommendations were not acted upon immediately, I think all members of this chamber philosophically realize that Rome was not built in a day.

I would invite discussion by honourable senators on this motion. I think we should clear up any misunderstandings we might harbour on our approach to the consideration of the estimates. The Senate's position can, if necessary, be clarified as we debate the motion. I think the committee can perform a useful function. I hope it will be an active and a fruitful committee because it will be working in an area of vital public concern.

I close by saying that I think all honourable senators would see the committee embark upon this work with great confidence, because it will be under the chairmanship of our distinguished colleague from Toronto, Senator Leonard.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to speak for about ten minutes on this motion. I am going to support it, but I would like to go into the history of motions of this kind a little deeper than did the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West).

Generally speaking, it has not been the practice to refer the estimates to any committee of the Senate before they are first considered in the other place. But, during the session of 1943-44, the late Senator J. H. King, the then Leader of the Government, referred to the Supplementary 1942 War Appropriation Bill being passed in one sitting on the last day of the previous session, and went on to make this statement:

> It seems to me that this session, in anticipation of such a Bill coming from the House of Commons, we might well study its provisions through a standing committee, or set up a special committee for the purpose, and so familiarize ourselves with them before actual receipt of the Bill. I understand there would be no objection to that procedure and I believe that for our own satisfaction and in the public interest it would be wise to follow it.

Those words of Senator King were spoken on February 16, 1943, and appear at page 66 of the Debates of the Senate, 1943-44.

On March 3, 1943, Senator King introduced his motion, which was similar to the one before us tonight except that it referred also to "resolutions relating to war and other proposed financial measures." The debate on that motion was very brief, and the Standing Committee on Finance was set up with its membership increased from 17 to 25. The committee held several meetings before the bill arrived from the other place. As far as I can learn, honourable senators, that is the first time that such a study was ever attempted by the Senate.

No further motion such as this was introduced in the Senate until 1950. The Leader of the Government at that time, the honourable Senator Wishart Robertson, conceived the idea of introducing a series of motions such as this, and they appear at pages 70 to 75 of the Debates of the Senate for 1950. His first motion was to refer Votes 269 to 274 inclusive, Votes 459 to 527 inclusive, and Votes 557 to 561 inclusive to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. By another motion he referred a number of Votes to the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations. By another motion he referred Votes 48 to 62 inclusive and Votes 150 to 170 inclusive to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour. By yet another motion he referred quite a large number of votes which appeared in the estimates of that year to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, and by another motion almost all of the other votes were referred to the Standing Committee on Finance.

The Standing Committee on Finance commenced work, but came to the conclusion that the reference was not quite enough. So, on May 8, 1950, the Senate adopted a report from the committee extending its terms of reference by granting authority to secure statistical information on:

> Total revenues from taxation collected by the federal, provincial and municipal governments, showing sources of income and expenditures of same under appropriate headings for the year 1939 and for the latest year for which the information is available.

That report was adopted by the house, and the committee commenced its work.

With the standing committees on Transport and Communications, Canadian Trade Relations, Immigration and Labour, Natural Resources, and Finance all studying similar matters, it was found almost impossible to arrange the sittings of the committees. The same senators were members of several of these committees, and it was impossible to obtain the necessary quorums. However, as has been stated by the honourable Leader of the Government, the Standing Committee on Finance, under the chairmanship of the honourable Senator Crerar, held many meetings, and presented its report on May 9, 1950. The report is printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of that year, and covers pages 530 to 548. Honourable senators will find many tables and references attached to this report which give a great deal of information on financial matters and supplement what the honourable Leader of the Government has told us about the committee.

As I remember it, no actual items of the estimates were studied. I was a member of the first committee to be so set up, and I have been a member of the Committee on Finance ever since. Although no actual items of the estimates were studied, many recommendations were made with respect to the form that the estimates should take in the future, as to the increase in Government publications, and particularly as to the total cost of governments, federal, provincial and municipal, and many other matters of that nature.

Another motion of this nature was presented in 1951, another in 1952, and another in 1953. These three resolutions passed during those years referred the estimates to the Standing Committee on Finance, and during that period of time the honourable Senator Crerar was the chairman of the committee. He rendered, as has been said, very valuable service, and the information in the report that he presented to the Senate has been quoted widely throughout the whole of Canada.

I come next to 1956, when the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, P.C., was Leader of the Government in the Senate. He moved a motion that appears at page 157 of the Debates of the Senate for that year. At that time the honourable Senator Hawkins was elected chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, and I remember attending many meetings under his chairmanship while the estimates were being considered. The report he presented is dated June 20, 1956, and is printed at pages 753 to 777 of the Debates of the Senate of that year.

It did not deal with specific items or votes but, as has been stated by the Leader of the Government, it reported extensively on eight items. I mention those items now in order to have them inserted in Hansard. They are:

1. The gross national product and expenditure.
2. The preparation of the estimates.
3. Responsibility for public works.
4. Government annuities—which the last report of the former chairman of the committee suggested should be taken up the next time the Finance Committee dealt with estimates.
5. Land procurement.
6. Rented accommodation.
7. Financial accounting.
8. Inflation and export markets.

As I have said, I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Finance over the years. I have no objection to this motion; however, I point out that it was found practically impossible to get ministers and deputy ministers to appear before the Finance Committee and explain the estimates in advance, before they were first explained in the House of Commons.

As has been stated, we have the right and power to look into and deal with such matters as were considered and reported on by those earlier committees which were headed by the honourable Senator Crerar and honourable Senator Hawkins.

However, when it comes to a full investigation of individual items, that is another matter. I for one do not know how it can be done. There is nothing to hinder the committee, when it is set up, looking into very important matters generally. I would like the Leader of the Government to tell us just how he would expect the committee to proceed, and what Government officials he thinks could be summoned to appear before the Senate committee.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: May I move the adjournment of the debate?

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, before honourable Senator Pearson moves the adjournment of the debate, I would like to say a few words, with the honourable senator's consent.

I have made no special preparation for this debate, as have the two gentlemen who have preceded me, and they have left very little to be said by the comprehensive treatment they have given to the subject. However, there are two points in my mind that I would like to express.

Some years ago, this house appointed a committee to go into the question of the right of the Senate to review the expenditures of the Government. It was known as the Ross Committee. That committee, composed of eminent legal minds, brought in a report that the Senate had a perfect right to reduce the appropriations of the government but, according to the British North America Act, the Senate is prevented from increasing them or adding to them. The important point in that report was that we of the Senate have a right to reduce the expenditures of Government—and goodness knows, Mr. Speaker, this is a time when somebody should do something on the question of reducing the expenditures of government.

Honourable senators, we have had a long series of deficits, of extremely large amounts, averaging more than $500 million a year. So far as I can see, there is little prospect, if the matter is left entirely to the Commons, of any material reduction in those over-expenditures in relation to the revenues of this nation.

I should point out that we can go on for some time to come with deficits of that kind; but as surely as the sun rises in the morning, if we keep on having deficits of half a billion dollars a year, we will pay the price, or rather, the creditor portion of our population will pay the price in the steadily decreasing, and perhaps drastically decreasing, purchasing value of the Canadian dollar.

One may look ahead and wonder when the elected representatives, and those who elect them, will wake up to the fact that governments are never in bankruptcy, that governments are always safe in that regard, because the creditor class bears the real responsibility and suffers the real penalty of improvident spending.

If we go on long enough in this kind of expenditure, such as has been the habit of the Commons for some years back, the time will come when we will pay off the national debt of Canada with a postage stamp. That is an exaggerated statement, but it has in it an element of truth. They will pay off the borrowings of this nation with a very small amount indeed.

The mortgages, the debts, and so forth, will be settled at a trifle as compared with their original value. Therefore, I suggest to my fellow senators that we are embarking at the moment on something which might be of vast importance to the people of Canada.

The British North America Act gives to this chamber the responsibility of voting for every dollar that is spent by the Government of Canada, and accordingly throws upon us not only a privilege but also a responsibility. Included in that responsibility is the obligation to know what we are doing. We must not vote with blinkers on our eyes, as would be the case if we admitted that we have not the power or authority to inquire into the expenditures of the Government. That would put blinkers on our eyes. No one would suggest that those who framed the British North America Act and gave us the power either to reject or to pass expenditures of the kind thought that we would hesitate for one moment to ask all the questions that are necessary and to make all the inquiries that are required so that we would thoroughly understand the votes that we are required to cast.

Honourable senators, someone has told us in this debate that we are not elected as are members of the Commons. That is true, but I question whether the manner of our coming here has much to do with the responsibility that we bear when we arrive here—and there is something more to be said even than that.

In a debate only last week, the honourable Senator Farris pointed out that in the Legislature of British Columbia there is not one single Conservative member. That is to say, all the Conservatives of the Province of British Columbia are without representation in the Legislature of British Columbia. That is a condition which has general application throughout the entire Dominion of Canada. The Government of this country at the present moment is a Liberal Government, that is, elected by Liberal voters and have not one single Liberal representative from the Province of Saskatchewan in the House of Commons as at present constituted. Not one single member.

Furthermore, every member of the House of Commons is elected by a group that happens to be more than 50 per cent of the electors who actually vote.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Or 40 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I said those who actually vote. Yes, 40 per cent or perhaps less than that, of all the electors on the list—and there are some people who are not even electors. That means that those who actually sent members to the House are not by any means 100 per cent of the people of the riding which the member represents.

Honourable senators, all of the people are taxpayers, every mother's son of them—at least every person in our entire community who is a producer is a taxpayer, and only those producers who vote for the successful candidate are represented in the House of Commons. They talk about representing all the people. Who represents the losers, I would ask you? We do! The only representatives of the losing voters in every constituency are the members of this house, and not the members of the other house. They talk about the member, after he is elected, representing all the people of his riding. Poppycock! Members who are elected represent those who elect them, and should they represent those who were the losers, they will not long hold their seats in the House of Commons; they must represent that side of the argument which they helped to make successful in the previous election, and in elections to come.

Our responsibilities, on the other hand, are to all the people of Canada, irrespective of how they vote or voted. That is why this assembly is as non-political as it appears to be. It is true that we all hold membership in our party caucus, in our party associations, that we still are Liberals, still are Conservatives, still have our attitudes toward public questions; but as we sit here we are representatives not of the Liberals, not of the Conservatives, or any other party. We in this house are representatives of all the people. Therefore, when someone speaks of our putting blinkers on our own eyes and of our not examining this most important of all questions, the expenditures of state, either he does not know what he is talking about or he has not recognized the broad considerations that prevail. Certainly he is not impressed with the present urgent necessity for financial reform in the government of our country.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

LES SCOUTS CATHOLIQUES DU CANADA—BILL WITHDRAWN

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I beg leave of the Senate to withdraw Bill S-19, to incorporate Les Scouts Catholiques du Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the honourable senator leave to withdraw his bill?

Hon Senators: Agreed.

Bill withdrawn.

STE-FOY—St. NICOLAS BRIDGE BILL

PASSAGE OF BILL

On the Order:

> Passage of Bill S-21, intituled: "An Act to authorize the Construction and Maintenance of a Bridge across the St. Lawrence River between the City of Ste-Foy, in the County of Quebec, and the Municipality of St. Nicolas, in the County of Levis, both in the Province of Quebec".

The Hon. the Speaker: This bill has been read the third time, and is now ready to pass. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to pass this bill?

Bill passed.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act."

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I will try to be brief in order that we may come to a conclusion at the earliest possible opportunity. You are all familiar with this bill. The explanatory note gives the background of the legislation.

On two occasions, April 28 and May 14, I had the opportunity of saying a few words about this legislation. You should not consider it with concern or apprehension, because all that it seeks to do is to submit the bill in reference to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Some objection was made in the first place as to the right of senators to discuss the bill. As this is a motion to submit the bill to the Supreme Court of Canada, the matter before the house now is not only the motion but is the motion and the bill together. If the motion is adopted, I will withdraw the bill so that the Government can refer it to the Supreme Court. If the motion is defeated, I will proceed with the bill. That seems to be clear. Nobody has to ask permission to discuss the matter of the bill on the motion, because the bill is pertinent to the motion. But this bill will not come into effect if this house adopts the motion. The only body that has the right now to give a ruling about it is the Supreme Court bench, which will have an opportunity to decide whether the bill is intra vires—that is, within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. The Supreme Court shall have to say yes or no. If the court's decision is favourable, we will proceed with the bill. If the decision is unfavourable, there will be no more question of the bill.

I have done my best to make it as clear as possible, and if there were a few repetitions I hope there were no contradictions. However, I wanted what I had in mind to be well understood.

With this bill I seek no political advantage of any sort. All I want is the triumph of the truth, which must exist in law to a certain degree, a relative truth, an objective truth, which we must find in law as in any other science.

The reason I would suggest that this bill not be referred to a committee is obvious. It has already been referred to a committee presided over by one of our colleagues, a well-known lawyer and jurist who belongs to a legal family and has all the qualities of a good lawyer. Besides that, at this point I wish to express my gratitude to the members of the committee who formed a quorum to listen to the evidence. I would name them, but I am afraid that by so doing I would hurt their modesty.

A suggestion has been made that the attorneys general or other witnesses should come before the committee to give their opinions. I had the privilege of communicating with all those gentlemen, but only one has deigned to acknowledge receipt of my communication. I speak of my friend the Honourable Fred M. Cass, the former Attorney General of Ontario who no longer belongs to the government of that province. All the other attorneys general have remained silent. As I say, there was a suggestion that they should be called before the committee to give opinions. What need have we of the expression of opinions of those gentlemen before the committee? Our aim and purpose should be to ascertain whether or not this piece of legislation is within the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

If in its wisdom, the Supreme Court finds that the bill is not within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, then nobody will hear any more about it. On the other hand, if the Supreme Court decides it is within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, then the bill will receive second reading and may be sent to a committee of the Senate, or studied in the Committee of the Whole, as you like. It will receive third reading in the Senate, and then will receive its three readings in the House of Commons. It will then need royal assent to come into force.

This matter is not complicated, but you know, honourable colleagues, it is most difficult to succeed in discovering what is the relative truth in law: some say "white" and others say "black". At this time I do not necessarily intend to win; nor am I afraid to lose. As I have told you, I have no personal interest in the matter. All that impels me is my ambition to discover what is the truth, and to determine whether or not we have the power to legislate concerning married women's rights. The law is a strange thing, as you know.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: This is why I want the bench of the Supreme Court to do its share.

I have in my hand a very interesting booklet. It forms part of The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Lionel Cohen Lectures, of December, 1962, and is entitled, "Some Aspects of the Development of English Personal Law in the Last Century," by Sir Seymour E. Karminski, Judge of the High Court of Justice, England. The reason I mention this is that, in part, it concerns a suggestion made by Lord Denning. I quote from the last page of that booklet, page 40:

> As Lord Denning M.R. put it in Formosa v. Formosa 1962 3 W.L.R. 1246, the old notion that the husband and wife were one, and the husband that one has been swept away in nearly all branches of the law. There remains the rule that a wife still takes her husband's domicile, a rule described in the same judgment by Lord Denning as the last barbarous relic of a wife's servitude.

I know full well that if I mentioned this to a jury of married women they would scream; they would not agree at all with Lord Denning, that the wife should have a domicile separate from that of her husband. I remember that not long ago one of our learned colleagues raised the point, but he has very discreetly not insisted. Unquestionably, married women have rights. I do not agree that all married women should have a separate domicile, but they have other rights which are theirs and which cannot be denied.

Honourable senators, in numerous copies of Hansard and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for more than two years you have read a question put to the previous Government and this Government too. I will refer to it briefly. It was put on the official papers of this chamber in order to know what action had been taken with regard to the transfer from Ottawa to the provinces of jurisdiction over married women's rights. I wanted to know if anybody had made representations to the Government asking for the transfer of that jurisdiction and asking the federal Government for an amendment to the Marriage and Divorce Act.

The answers given by the Acting Leader of the Government under the previous administration and by the previous Leader of this Government were similar. Both those honourable colleagues informed us that no representations had been made by anyone, neither for the transfer of federal jurisdiction to the provinces nor to the Government to have some legislation passed by this Parliament to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act in order to rectify the position of married women with regard to the sale of immoveable property. That question was not drafted in Greek; it was drafted in English and in French, the two official languages of this country. They refer to the Constitution, which is the law of the land, the British North America Act.

Whether you like it or not, whether you praise it or decry it, the Constitution as amended binds us. You are entitled to your opinion, but the Constitution shall prevail, and if you have difficulty concerning the right to amend, the right to legislate, it is for the courts to decide. You are subject to the decision of the courts for the validity of your legislation. This is a fundamental principle in law, and it has existed from the time of the Babylonian Code.

The Constitution, the British North America Act, says on the one hand, regarding the powers of this Parliament, that matters of divorce are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. That is to be found in section 91. In section 92, it states that the celebration of marriage is all that belongs exclusively to the provinces.

This matter has been brought before the courts. A bill was referred by the government of the day in 1912, first to the Supreme Court of Canada and then to the Privy Council. Both courts decided that according to the Constitution all powers to legislate on marriage and divorce belong exclusively to the Parliament of Canada, with one exception, and that is the celebration of marriage. And the jurisprudence which explains the Constitution, the Supreme Court of Canada and the Privy Council likewise—of course the Privy Council is no longer our highest tribunal.

In one of the three volumes of the Supreme Court Reports, 1912, you will find a lengthy judgment of that Court. The factums of both parties were published before the judgment, and therefore you will have the full explanation of the case by reading that report. However, in all deference I suggest that you also read the judgment of the Privy Council which can be found in Appeal Cases, 1912, at page 880. It is also to be found in Olmsted's compendium of constitutional cases before the Privy Council.

The case of Conger vs. Kennedy was mentioned before the committee. That was a case involving legislation concerning married women who lived in the Northwest Territories. You will find in the explanatory notes to the bill some comment about that judgment, which is anterior to the judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Privy Council in 1912. It was a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court in 1896, and which is very clear. It is based on the federal legislation of the Parliament of Canada concerning the Northwest Territories, and the matter is explained as clearly as possible. If you read the judgment of Chief Justice Strong you will see that the judge quoted in full the federal legislation concerning married women living in the Northwest Territories, so that there could be no error about it. Furthermore, the question was published again as an appendix to one of the committee reports last year, the committee that studied the previous bill, Bill S-32, and there is some legislation referred to. These are not cabalistic figures. I say that for those who do not belong to the bar or to the bench. These are references tc statutes which have been passed by this Parliament to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act, and also to the revised statutes which have been published by authority, and which have been approved in the normal and legal way.

Therefore, all that being said, we have the Constitution which says that we have full jurisdiction about marriage and divorce; we have the support of the jurisprudence in the Conger vs Kennedy case in 1896 and in the case in 1912 to which I referred; and we have the act of the Parliament of Canada amending the Marriage and Divorce Act. Is it not enough to convince you that we have jurisdiction?

Last year the bill that I sponsored had only one sentence, which read:

> Married women shall have the same rights as unmarried women for the sale and alienation of immoveable property.

I have not met one person who has disagreed with that principle. I think you all agree with it. On the other hand, since we had difficulty in some quarters, I decided to do better and to sponsor this year a bill containing the very text of the federal legislation concerning married women as we find it in the Northwest Territories Act, and as it was for a period of nearly 80 years. For some reason, which I do not know, that piece of legislation was struck out from the new Northwest Territories Act in 1952. It is one of the last chapters of the revised statutes of that year.

I submit my view to you, honourable colleagues; that what was good for the parliamentarians of Ottawa for a period of 75 years, could not be bad for us. Fashion could not change as much as that, even in law. Therefore, if you look at Bill S-16 which is on your files now, you will see the text of the legislation concerning married women as it was in the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886. Exactly the same legislation was on the statute books from 1875 until 1952. I do not see how that legislation could be found to be ultra vires the Parliament of Canada, or illegal.

May I mention also the regulations of the Supreme Court of Canada? I refer you to section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, which deals with the reference of legislation to the Supreme Court for a decision as to validity, and the jurisdiction of this legislative body.

I wonder if I should tell you about my experience with the Bar of the Province of Quebec with respect to that legislation. I wonder if it would interest you. I think it was unique, but I do not want to take up the time now in telling you about it. I will keep it for another occasion. If the bill is declared valid I will have an opportunity then of telling you about it.

However, it is extraordinary, honourable colleagues, that with the exception of the honourable Mr. Cass, who is no longer a member of the Government of the Province of Ontario, that all the other provincial attorneys general did not show a sign of life in regard to this matter when they were asked for an opinion. If this bill is submitted to the Supreme Court it will then be for each one of them to appear before the court in order to submit their objections before the judges can give their judgment.

Do you not think that is fair? At the present time, why should they come here? Perhaps this is their reasoning. Why should they come and spend some time in Ottawa when the only occasion upon which their trip could be useful would be to argue their case with success before the Supreme Court? Do you follow my argument? We have already asked a member of a provincial government to appear before the committee, but she wrote a very gracious letter to the chairman telling him that she was unable to come. She was invited, but she did not come. If we send this bill to a committee of the Senate in order to call witnesses, and, in particular, the attorneys general of the provinces, I can bet with anyone that not one of them will come, because a committee of the Senate is not a place where they can argue their case with a chance of impressing the judges.

To summarize the steps I have taken in order to awake the Bar of the Province of Quebec I will tell you, in the first place, that last year I attended the eleventh convention of the bar of that province. The Bâtonnier was a former president of the Quebec Provincial Liberal Federation. He told me that the structure of the bar was democratic enough, but when the time came for me to address the convention, well, he was not democratic himself. I was not to tell about the insistence I have shown in order to inform the bar about what should be done in this matter, namely, to inquire for the truth. But they did not seem to be interested in that. Why? I do not know, but I find, honourable senators, and you may find it also, that the importance of the law is such that nothing should be neglected in order to make truth and justice prevail.

This is why I suggest that the motion should be agreed to in order that the Government may refer this bill to the Supreme Court. For me this is the only thing to do in order to stop all the political propaganda that is made about it, and at the present time in some quarters there is some political propaganda. It is undignified. What we need is a clarification of the matter.

I have many other papers that I will mention in due course. There is a letter I wrote to the bar. All this will be put aside for the time being, as I told you. What concerns me personally is of little interest; what is important for me is that our rights, the rights of the Senate of Canada and the rights of the House of Commons of Canada—the rights of the Parliament of Canada—should be recognized in order that women can be secure in their dealings with everybody. Married women should have as much freedom as unmarried women in the management of their own property, and their actions should be valid and not open to attack in the courts.

I thank you for the interest you have shown in this matter. I see many members of the legal fraternity present, and also some other of my honourable colleagues who are not members of the bar. They have followed my remarks with praiseworthy attention. I thank you all, and I hope that you will understand that the motion I am sponsoring now is to ascertain the power of Parliament to legislate with respect to the rights of married women.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I will move the adjournment of the debate in a minute, but first I would like to say a word in explanation of the objection I raised at the last sitting, which may have been misunderstood by the mover of this motion.

It would be temerity for me to try to prevent the honourable Senator Pouliot from explaining the very important matter which is contained in this motion, and that was not my intention. I was concerned only with the procedure to be followed in considering this question, which is an important one from a legal viewpoint. It is an interesting constitutional matter. I am not to sure that it is as urgent as one might think at first sight but, in any event, the Senate would do well to look into it.

On the next occasion when this motion is before us I shall try to express my own views.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Flynn, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Farris, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaubien (Provencher), for second reading of Bill S-20, intituled: An Act to incorporate Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I would ask that this order stand until a week from tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Does my friend have any serious reason for doing that? I would like to adjust my time so that I can be here when the opportunity for reply comes.

Hon. Mr. White: I would like to point out to the honourable senator that he finished his remarks only late on Thursday afternoon, and the Senate adjourned then until this evening. I did not receive my copy of Hansard, like everybody else, until today.

I see by the Order Paper that there is considerable business before the house. Also, I would point out to the honourable senator that at the present time there are two applications for bank charters, which have been referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce; therefore, it would seem to me that it might be some time before this bill could get second reading and go to that committee.

I am not prepared to go on at the present time, but I will be prepared a week from tomorrow. In the meantime, if there is any senator who wishes to speak, I am quite willing to give him my place. Otherwise, I would ask that the second reading order stand until a week from tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the order stands until Wednesday, May 27.

ESTATE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved the second reading of Bill C-94, to amend the Estate Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators will recall that the Estate Tax Act was first enacted in 1958, as a completely new departure in the field of estate taxation, superseding the old Dominion Succession Duty Act. Honourable senators also will recall that the Estate Tax Act has been amended since that time on two occasions, namely, in 1960 and 1962. The bill before us tonight is the third amending bill since the original act came into force.

Honourable senators, of the amendments contained in this bill, 13 changes are involved, and I might refer to four of them as being of a relieving nature, to one as dealing with matters of enforcement and to the balance as being of a restrictive nature or, for lack of a more appropriate explanation, as clauses dealing with the closure of loopholes in the legislation.

First, I would draw the attention of honourable senators to Clause 1, subclauses 1 and 3, which I would categorize as in the nature of loophole closures.

As the act now stands, property in Quebec disposed of under a settlement by a person during his lifetime, property in which that person retains a life interest, or some other interest of that nature, reserving the same to himself, that is, property under the wording of the act as it now stands, escapes taxation in that province.

This is due to the difference between the common law concepts and those of the Quebec Civil Code, and as they bear on the interpretation of the words "interest in property" as contained in the act in its present form. In the Province of Quebec, a life interest so retained by a person during his lifetime is not an "interest in property" so as to bring it within the meaning of the act and render the corpus of that property taxable at the time of death.

Accordingly, the amendments in Clause 1, subclauses 1 and 3, are required for the purpose of bringing such property within the taxing provisions of the act as far as property in the Province of Quebec is concerned, and thereby making the provisions of the act uniform in their application throughout Canada, that is, in the Province of Quebec under the Civil Code as well as in the common law provinces.

Similarly, Clause 1, subclause 2, deals with an anomaly in the present legislation. Under the act today, avoidance of tax is possible by the use of a device whereunder an insurance policy is purchased at the same time as a single premium annuity is purchased. Specifically, it involves the placing of a life insurance policy on an otherwise uninsurable person on condition that a single premium annuity somewhat larger than the face value of the life insurance policy be taken out at the same time.

Honourable senators will appreciate that this transaction, accomplished under the terms of the act as it now stands, effectively removes the proceeds of a life insurance policy on the death of the deceased from the assets of that estate for tax purposes, and specifically because the ownership of that policy is not ownership by the deceased.

Clause 1, subclause 2, defeats this device and taxes the amount of the reduction of the value of the estate thereby accomplished, or the value of the benefit accorded the beneficiary, whichever be the lesser.

Similarly, under Clause 1, subclause 4, another anomaly in the act is to be repaired. I would refer to this provision as a relieving provision.

As the act now stands, the proceeds of a life insurance policy effected on the life of a deceased in the course of his employment are included in his estate for tax purposes, except to the extent that the proceeds were payable to his employer. This exception in its present wording creates an anomaly, in the event that such proceeds become payable to a subsequent employer or to an individual or corporation not related to the deceased in any way, or where the policy having been assigned to the deceased was not re-assigned to the employer of the deceased or to the trustee of a fund established to pay pension or death benefits to the deceased.

This clause in the amending act is also to exempt from taxation the proceeds which never were intended to be included under the act as it originally was provided, because such proceeds are not in fact assets of the deceased.

Clause 1, subclause 5, refers to the disposition made out of community property by a spouse during his or her lifetime. As the act stands now, such dispositions are taxable entirely in the hands of a deceased husband's spouse in the event that the husband predeceases his wife and the disposition is made within three years of death.

This obviously creates an inequity. This amending act provides that such a disposition will be deemed to have been made in the ratio according to the deceased's share in the community property. This amendment brings the provisions of the Estate Tax Act in this connection into conformity with the concomitant sections in the Quebec Succession Duty Act.

Similarly, as the act now stands, the value of a gift made by a person in his or her lifetime to a charitable organization, or to the Government of Canada, which gift is subject to a power in favour of a third party, such as a right to encroach thereon, may nevertheless be treated under the act as an outright gift if the beneficiary renounces his or her rights therein within two years of the death of the donor. Such persons who have such rights to encroach, or otherwise, sometimes die within the two-year period, without renouncing the rights in the charitable gift, and thereby the estate of the donor from the standpoint of tax is adversely affected.

Clause 2 of the bill makes death under such circumstances—that is, by the person who holds a right or reservation in a charitable gift—effective in itself as a renunciation permitting the total value to be deductible for tax purposes.

Honourable senators, if I may, I would try to deal very briefly with what at first glance appears to be a rather cumbersome part of this amending act, namely, clauses 3 and 5. In fact, notwithstanding the rather involved wording of these sections, the principles behind them are quite simple. The necessity for the inclusion of both these clauses in the amending bill arise from the dominion-provincial conferences held during November of last year.

Clause 3 specifically is required to defeat a possible tax avoidance device. Under the new arrangements made with the provinces that levy succession duty, the abatements with respect to property in one province may be greater than in another. For example, in the 1964-65 fiscal year a 75 per cent abatement will be in effect in British Columbia, but only a 50 per cent abatement will be in effect in Ontario and Quebec. Of course, as honourable senators will recall, Ontario and Quebec receive the equivalent of the additional 25 per cent abatement by direct payment from the federal Government. In other words, Ontario and Quebec have not undertaken directly the collection of that 25 per cent tax, as yet, but have left it with the federal Government for the time being. However, because of this mechanical differentiation between Ontario and Quebec, on the one hand, and British Columbia, on the other hand, it is now possible for a person domiciled in, say, Alberta, to take advantage of the present estate tax rule governing the situs of shares, with the result that on his death the estate tax in respect of his shares would be abated by the higher of the two rates of abatement, that is, 75 per cent for British Columbia. But the succession duty paid in respect of them would be in a province with a lower succession duty rate, that is, in a province where a 50 per cent abatement applies, as in the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec.

Such a testator would then have successfully avoided tax at the expense of the federal Government, or at the expense of a provincial government, and may at the same time have defeated or distorted the federal provincial tax sharing arrangements which are now in effect.

Tax avoidance made possible by the difference between a 50 per cent abatement for taxing provinces and no abatement for non-taxing provinces was blocked by an amendment passed in 1962. This new amendment extends the blocking mechanism to deal with the difference between 75 per cent abatement provinces and 50 per cent abatement provinces. In the result, the additional 25 per cent abatement will be given only if the shares are transferable in the province where the additional 25 per cent abatement applies.

Linked with clause 3 is clause 5, which provides in Part II of the act a 15 per cent tax on property situate in Canada passing on death of a foreign domiciliary, an additional deduction of 25 per cent where succession duty has been paid to a designated province, which under the regulations is a 75 per cent tax abatement province, and the existing 50 per cent deduction will continue to apply where succession duty has been paid to a prescribed province under the regulations, that is, a province with a 50 per cent tax abatement.

Honourable senators, clause 3 strictly is what I have referred to as a "loophole closing" clause.

Clause 4 is the one I referred to earlier as dealing with an enforcement provision. Under the present act penalties are provided for wilfully in any manner evading or attempting to evade payment of tax. Evidently the minister does not consider this provision adequate. Accordingly, clause 4 is concluded in this bill, enlarging the penalty provisions to include assenting to or acquiescing in the making of a statement, or omission, knowingly, under circumstances amounting to gross negligence. Such wording is contained now in similar provisions in the Income Tax Act.

The amendments go on to provide that this is an alternative penalty to the one that is now in the act and does not apply to a person liable to a penalty under the old section and in respect of the same matter.

Honourable senators, in conclusion we come to a relieving provision of this bill contained in clause 6. It will be recalled that certain property, generally speaking, moneys on deposit in various forms, are made available to the executors or the personal representatives of a deceased immediately after death, and without the prior consent of the minister, up to the amount of $1,500.

Clause 6 increases this amount so available and, in addition, extends the exemption, i.e., the exemption from the minister's prior consent to include amounts payable under sickness or accident insurance policies as well as to moneys on deposit of the kind referred to.

Honourable senators, I am advised that as a piece of legislation the Estate Tax Act has been most satisfactory, both from the point of view of administration and, by virtue of its clarity, from the point of view of those advising the personal representatives of the deceased. These amendments form the third set of amendments brought forward since the act came into force, and it would seem to me that under the circumstances and in view of the novelty in concept and draftsmanship involved in the act as originally enacted, this speaks very well for that piece of legislation. This bill further perfects the machinery under the act and is generally designed for that purpose.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I propose to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I am sure we all appreciate the clear and explicit explanation given by the honourable Senator Lang with regard to this somewhat complicated bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. White: Any amendment to the Estate Tax Act is, in my opinion, very important because this is one act that affects the individual citizen. This is a taxation statute and is a clear indication of the extent to which every individual in Canada is subject to control by the state.

I, for one, was rather disappointed that when the Minister of Finance delivered his budget speech he did not announce that the federal Government would retire from the succession duty field entirely and return it to the provinces, where it rightly belongs. The amount collected under this act by the federal Government is not large when you consider the budget is approximately $7 billion, and it is to be decreased under this act; and when you take from the amount collected the cost of administration, I am sure the amount remaining is not great. Some people believe the only real reason this act is retained by the federal Government is to give the Income Tax Department a chance to look over the assets of the deceased and to compare them with the information contained in his income tax returns.

The honourable senator who introduced the bill made several references to "plugging loopholes" in the act, and in the other place the parliamentary secretary to the minister used somewhat the same words at page 2985 of Hansard in introducing the legislation:

> The proposal in paragraph 5 is intended to prevent the use of tax avoidance devices.

When the bill was before the house, at page 3201 of Hansard, he further stated:

> The final item was to close a loophole with respect to a single premium annuity coupled with a life insurance policy whereby certain individuals, taking advantage of the provisions of the Estate Tax Act as it existed, were evading estate tax.

The only reason I mention that is to point out how quick the Government is—and what I say about this Government applies equally to the former Government; they are all the same—to move to plug any loopholes; and yet, on the other hand, where injustices exist as far as taxpayers are concerned, it takes years and years to catch up.

I was in the House of Commons when the old Dominion Succession Duty Act was introduced early in the war, and there were certain provisions in that to which I objected. I remember the minister telling me, "After all, this is a new statute, this is a new field, and we will just see how these things operate. If they develop as you think they may, they can always be changed." Well, it took just a "short" period of 18 years before they caught up with that.

The amendment in the bill regarding the agreement made at the provincial-federal conference last fall as to the abatement of 75 per cent instead of 50 per cent of the federal estate tax affects only three provinces—British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec. It appears to me that as far as the estate of the deceased is concerned there is going to be no benefit whatever. It was stated in the other house that the province of British Columbia has already raised its provincial succession duty tax by an amount approximately equal to the 25 per cent abatement.

From reading the debate in the other house and listening to the honourable Senator Lang this evening, I am quite satisfied that in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, while to date they have not increased their provincial succession duties, the estate of the deceased is not going to benefit in any way.

I wish to commend the Government for the increase they propose from $1,500 to $2,500 as far as moneys on deposit in the bank and proceeds of insurance policies are concerned. This has been asked for by many honourable members, both in the house of Commons and the Senate, because members of the bar who handle estates know only too well how often funds are urgently needed in the case of death for funeral, medical, nursing and hospital expenses, and many other items at such a time.

When introducing his budget, the Minister of Finance had this to say of the Estate Tax Act at page 980 of House of Commons Hansard:

> In reviewing the Estate Tax Act in the light of the representations that had been made about it, I was impressed with the case made by women's organizations saying that more recognition should be given to the special contribution that a wife makes to the accumulation of property by her husband.

This refers to the great number of briefs presented by various women's organizations, both to the minister and the Royal Commission on Taxation. These briefs covered many items and subjects of great interest to women and children. One of the main things they asked for was that the basic exemptions be increased, largely on account of the great increase of the valuation of real property. One of the sore points was the present method of taxation of pensions and annuities. Now that the Estate Tax Act is before the house, I personally regret the Government did not go into this item and do something regarding the way it is capitalized at the present time.

I am sure every honourable member, at least those from the Province of Ontario, could recall and state different cases that have come to him through his own office where there has been a death, where the widow is middle aged or below that, and where there is a fair pension which, when capitalized and brought into the estate, puts the value of the estate for succession duty purposes at a sky-high rate. I believe the women's organizations who have presented briefs on this point are 100 per cent correct.

The minister also said in his remarks:

> Death duties are under review by provincial commissions of enquiry as well as by our royal commission on taxation. We have therefore deferred any action on this matter, and hope that there will be consultations with the provinces on it, as well as on other aspects of death duties, following the reports of the various commissions.

I hope that will be carried out. On the other hand, if it is the intention of the Government to retain this field of taxation, I would repeat the suggestion I made when speaking on the address, that the Leader of the Government in the Senate should set up a special committee of the Senate to review the Estate Tax Act and to present a list of recommendations to the Government to modify and correct the abuses and injustices that now exist under this act.

The various other amendments to the act, as stated by the honourable Senator Lang, have to do with the situs of property, community property, property held jointly, life estate, and the new penalties listed under the act. These are all of a more or less technical nature, and I am sure that when the bill goes to committee we will be able to obtain full information on these matters.

On motion of the Honourable Mr. Choquette, for Honourable Mr. McCutcheon, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 264 to 292, inclusive, which were presented on Wednesday, May 13.

On motion of Honourable Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 20, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of "Data from Radiation Protection Programs", dated March, 1964. (English and French texts).

ROOSEVELT CAMPOBELLO INTERNATIONAL PARK COMMISSION BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-26, respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello International Park.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-18, respecting The Montreal Board of Trade, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-92, to amend the Customs Tariff:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill C-92, to amend the Customs Tariff, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSLATION BUREAU

TERMINOLOGICAL BULLETINS—MOTION STANDS

On the Motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

That copies of all the terminological bulletins issued in French and in English, and in both languages by the Terminology Service of the Translation Bureau during the years 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963 be tabled in the Senate.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, this motion, and Inquiry No. 3, which deals with the reports and publications of the Printing Bureau, and Inquiry No. 4, dealing with translators and interpreters, form a trilogy, and it is very difficult to proceed on one of those items and leave the other two aside.

In this case an informal answer has been given to Inquiry No. 3 and to the motion for the production of papers. However, I cannot use them unless there is an answer to Inquiry No. 4. I will tell you why. One inquiry concerns the publications of the Printing Bureau and another inquiry and the motion concern the Translation Bureau. The information I sought is the kind that should be available to every cabinet minister concerned. The answers to those questions would prove to be very useful to the department of the Secretary of State and of External Affairs.

They must have a broad picture—what we call in French "une vue d'ensemble", of what is done by the department.

The quantity and size of the publications of the Printing Bureau each year are enormous. They would fill the largest room of this building.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Why not refer it to the Finance Committee?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I thank my honourable colleague for his question which is very timely, and I am just coming to it.

The information that we have about the translation services is incomplete because it takes only two pages of the report of the Department of the Secretary of State. The bulletins asked for have been tabled informally, which means that I have them in my office, and they occupy a space of at least one cubic foot. I cannot discuss them now because it will take me some considerable time to extract the information contained in that cubic foot, and save you the trouble of doing that work yourselves.

You will also understand that we need the information asked for about the translations made outside of Canada by the various Canadian diplomatic posts. It is important to have the size of the publications from the Printing Bureau; it is important to know the kind of work done on official translations both within the country and outside, and it is equally important to know the directions given to the translators in the bulletins.

Now I come to the timely question which has been asked by my good and learned friend, honourable Senator Isnor. I am doing the preliminary work for the benefit of the Finance Committee; if we did not have that information before the matter goes to the committee it would take a very long time to obtain it. It would take as long as I have been waiting to get the detailed information before the committee. And when Inquiry No. 4 has been answered I shall be in a position to give more information to the Senate, which the members of the committee may consider to be of some use to them.

Furthermore, I must say to my honourable friend that since the beginning of the session I have been in touch with the Chairman of the Finance Committee, (Hon. Mr. Leonard) and I have given him personally the information that I give now to the Senate.

That being said, I ask that the motion stand.

Motion stands.

ESTATE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Lang for the second reading of Bill C-94, to amend the Estate Tax Act.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, we are all grateful to Senator Lang for the clear explanation he gave yesterday of the terms of this bill. I would not be speaking this afternoon if I were going to direct myself merely to a particular provision of the bill. The bill will go to committee, and any further explanation we require will be obtained there.

For the ameliorating provisions of the bill, we are all very grateful. With respect to those provisions which are to plug loopholes—which is the expression my honourable friend used—I merely say that they are examples of the very complicated position which our whole system of taxation has reached, where each year we go through the game of plugging loopholes, thus providing lawyers and accountants with twelve months of work in finding out how to get around those provisions, and then the following year there is the plugging of further loopholes.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It is like squeezing a balloon.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Exactly.

I think a great deal of time and talent is wasted in this country because of the complexity of our system of taxation. I am not suggesting that we take any drastic measures before we receive the report of the Royal Commission on Taxation—which report, rumour has it, might be available this year—but I do hope that when that report is received we do try to simplify the whole tax structure. I know of no body better equipped to make a start on that task, if the Government will permit it to do so, than one of the standing committees of this chamber.

But I want to say this afternoon that I think the time has come when the federal Government should give the provinces notice that when the present dominion-provincial taxation convention expires the federal Government proposes to withdraw from the field of estate tax. It entered the field during the war, in 1941, with the Succession Duty Act. As my honourable friend Senator Lang said, that act was subsequently replaced by the Estate Tax Act. I think the present act is better than the old Succession Duty Act, but we are now reaching a ridiculous situation.

My honourable friend Senator White read from the budget speech of the Minister of Finance. He quoted two sentences, both of which occurred in the same paragraph, but he omitted what I regard as the most important sentence. Senator White, in referring to some of the hardships the act imposes, referred particularly to the position of a widow who inherits an annuity from her husband's firm and suddenly finds that when that is capitalized on a quite proper actuarial basis it becomes subject to succession duty and to income tax. The sentence that Senator White omitted from the speech of the Minister of Finance is this:

> Any action to give effect to suggestions of this nature—

The suggestions he was referring to were that more consideration should be given to widows with respect to their husbands' estates—in other words, that the tax should be reduced.

> Any action to give effect to suggestions of this nature, however, would now affect provincial revenues more than our own budget position.

Of course, that is the situation. We find that 75 per cent of the succession duties, under the recent agreement, now go to the provinces. So the position now is that the Minister of Finance is saying—that means the federal Government is saying—"I cannot reduce these taxes, because I get only 25 per cent of them; the rest goes to the provinces. I would be interfering with provincial revenues were I to do such a thing."

That is an intolerable position for the Government of Canada to be in. We had an example of co-operative federalism in the last month or two. We have seen the Minister of Finance—I will acquit the Minister of Finance of this, as I doubt if he was happy about it—we have seen the minister's colleagues give away $135 million to $145 million a year to the provinces in order to get an agreement on a measure on which I hope to have an opportunity to speak later in this chamber.

Already we have the Minister of Finance issuing warnings, sending up kites and telling the Canadian people that there is but one way to get back that $135 million to $145 million, and that is to increase taxation.

Here now is an opportunity to get ourselves out of an anomalous position in one tax field, to move out. One asks, what will it cost?

In his budget speech, the minister estimated that it would mean $90 million to the federal Government. My estimate, and it is only my estimate and a very rough one, is that, now that 75 per cent of these revenues are going to the provinces, it will cost a net of $35 million to $40 million. That is nothing compared to the money which was given away, as I say, quite casually.

Hon. Mr. Croll: "What is a million?" What is $35 million?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I know, I have heard that. What is $135 million? That is what the minister's colleagues gave away in Quebec a few weeks ago, for a reason that I do not regard as of overriding importance.

If you assume that you will not have to take into account revenues you might otherwise have obtained from succession duties in the equalization tax, then the figure that I have mentioned can be cut almost in half. In other words, if you assume that you do not need to compensate the provinces which do not now impose succession duties, you will not have to include that in your equalization formula.

I realize that this cannot be done today. The provinces must be given fair notice. There are only three provinces that are in this field now. The others may or may not want to come in. I suspect that some of them will not come into it.

There is of course also the problem of the estates of persons of foreign domicile. It may be that in order to see that the assets in another jurisdiction of persons domiciled in Canada are put in the same position as foreigners here, we will want to renegotiate the treaties. I do not think that is too important, but at least it is a matter into which we should look.

However, I will not go along with the suggestion which has been made from time to time that the federal Government must be in this field because this serves as a useful policing function, to make sure that people paid their proper income tax while they were alive. If you carry that principle to the extreme—and I saw it carried a long way during the war, on the ground that if you cannot catch up with man here, you catch up with him there—then you just have a police state.

The people who are really hit by this procedure are those thrifty, frugal people who put aside a modest competence which it is hoped will provide their widows with $6,000, $7,000 or $8,000 a year.

The last statistics for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1962, show that out of 3,892 estates assessed in Canada that year, 2,599 were of gross value under $125,000.

As I say, the money involved is small. We are getting ourselves into the position where we are not our own masters. It is very popular to be your own master these days. We are setting up elaborate machinery, passing bills with complicated provisions, in order to do what? In order to protect provincial revenues.

The sooner we move out of this field and turn the matter back to the provinces the better. The provinces have said they want it, or at least some of them have, including the two largest. The treasury will be very little affected and the benefits to Canada in the long run may be great.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why then would you not reduce the subsidy by an equal amount?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is a matter for the Minister of Finance to decide. As I say, he has some problems. There are provinces which are not in this field. He has to give them time. If my friend is suggesting that we stay in the field, I cannot agree with that. If he is suggesting that we move out of the field and reduce our equalization payments, I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I did not suggest that we stay in the field. You were suggesting that we get out of the estate tax field and I say, why then, if we hand that to the provinces, do we not reduce the subsidy by an equal amount?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I do not know what the honourable senator means by the subsidy. I merely suggest that there are some provinces now which are not in this field and which might put forward a claim that they are still entitled to some equalization, to have this factor taken into account in what is a very complicated equalization formula. I said that if that was not the case, then the figure I gave of $35 million to $40 million less in revenue could probably be cut by $15 million to $17 million dollars.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Surely the answer is a very simple one, that if the federal authority gets out of the field, it is then a matter which is solely within the jurisdiction of provincial authority. They could increase the rates to take up the slack, or do anything—it would be entirely in their power. Is not that right?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I quite agree.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I did not intend to intervene in this debate on the Estate Tax Act, but some remarks by Senator McCutcheon have brought me to the hasty conclusion that perhaps it would be better to discuss now some of the things I planned to mention in discussing the resolution setting up the Finance Committee, simply because they probably are more germane to the discussion on this bill.

Senator McCutcheon has raised a very interesting point, one that I am bound to say has given me a good deal of thought, and that is the federal Government's tendency, ever since the end of the war, to relinquish more and more of its revenues to the provinces.

May I draw the attention of the Senate to a few factors in this matter that to me are of grave importance.

Under our Constitution, as originally drafted, expenditures for welfare of all kinds were the responsibility of the provinces. In the passing of time there has been a transformation, and, to my mind, not a healthy transformation.

Today Ottawa has accepted practically all the responsibility of the provinces in the broad spectrum of social welfare, and that amounts to very large sums of money. It was my intention to give some of these figures a little later today, when I hoped to take some part in discussing the resolution respecting a reference to the Finance Committee. However, let us look for a moment at the obligations that Ottawa has assumed, as reported in the documents that have been submitted to Parliament.

First, there is the Government's contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Fund of $60,500,000 for the present year. That is the contribution at 20 per cent which the federal authority makes to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. The balance of 80 per cent comes from equal contributions by the employer and the employee. The total cost of administering the Unemployment Insurance Fund is $113 million. If we subtract $60,500,000, the remaining administrative costs amount to about $53 million, which is a very substantial amount. I realize this covers the expense of maintaining employment agencies where people can register for employment, but $53 million is a sufficiently large sum of money to engage the attention of the Finance Committee.

In addition, Ottawa has taken over family allowances. Under the Constitution as it was originally drafted, and under which we functioned for 50 years or more, family allowances, or payments of that kind, were the responsibility of the provinces. The amount provided for family allowances this year is $546 million.

We come to old age assistance, payments to blind persons and disabled persons. In this category, Ottawa puts up 50 per cent and the provinces put up 50 per cent. The federal contribution this year is estimated at $188 million.

Hospital insurance was certainly the responsibility of the provinces, under our original constitutional provisions, but now the provision for hospital insurance and health grants this year by Ottawa will be $471 million.

Then of course we have old age pensions, which the Minister of Finance estimated in his budget would require $885 million.

The point I am making, honourable senators, is that all these matters were originally the responsibility of the provinces. The federal authority has taken them over, and today the cost is well over $2 billion a year.

Honourable senators, how is the federal Government going to finance all this? After the great depression in the thirties, the Sirois-Rowell Commission was set up to consider the economic position of the provinces vis-a-vis Ottawa, and what could be done. That commission brought in certain reports which have never yet been fully implemented, and probably have since passed into the discard.

During World War II the provinces agreed to surrender their revenues from personal income tax and corporation income tax for the duration of the war. That situation continued after the war. I think that then, with the best intentions in the world, we got off the track. Ottawa undertook the responsibility of the whole broad field of social welfare, and if there had been no interruption in the matter of revenues, probably it could have carried the load. But while the provinces have been relieved of all these responsibilities in the whole spectrum of social welfare, they are not content to leave Ottawa with all the revenues from personal and corporation income taxes and estate taxes that are necessary to discharge these obligations.

In my humble judgment, honourable senators, that is the crucial problem that has to be solved between the provinces and Ottawa. How it will be solved, I do not know. However, I am convinced that we cannot go on as we are at the present time. This is not a criticism that can be directed against any government in particular.

We got along after the war until the change of government in 1957 because we were rebuilding from the devastation of war, and we paid off very large sums of debt. I think I am within the mark when I say that the reduction in our war debt up until 1957 had been close to $3 billion. However, the tide turned. The reason for that was not alone the fact that a Conservative government came into power. Economic conditions had changed. However, I feel bound to say, and I offer this criticism, that Mr. Diefenbaker's government, from 1957 until the time it went out, failed to meet adequately the responsibilities it was obliged to face. I regret to say now that it looks as if we are going to continue this business of deficit financing.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Only doing it bigger and better.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: There is a definite danger in that policy. I am saying now what I intended to say on the other motion for a reference to the Finance Committee.

From 1957 to the present time, with the estimated deficit for this financial year, we shall have gone into the red to the extent of approximately $3½ billion.

It is not without significance that another item in this analysis of expenditures which is worth examination and study is the interest on our public debt, that is, the service of the debt. The interest cost this year is estimated at over $1 billion, and the payments to the provinces at $241 million, which does not include the payments that will arise out of the arrangements made at the recent conference in Quebec.

Now, my question to the house is this: Where are we going to land in the end? If we include old age pensions the total spending today is over $8 billion, and we will have yet another deficit, which the Minister of Finance estimates at $420 million. Notwithstanding the fact our revenues are buoyant, the deficit may well exceed that amount, because there are these additional payments to the provinces that have to be met. I simply say to the house, that is the most serious problem we are facing today.

We have gone along by deficit financing. There is nothing new about it; anyone who is familiar with history in all western countries recognizes that this is not a new phenomenon at all. We have had the experience of history to guide us, and as a result of that it is apparent that when we have deficit financing, in the end you get a rising cost of living. Then this is bound to bring more or less inflation, and it is not without significance that since 1949, when the new cost-of-living index was established, the cost of living has increased by 34 or 35 points. This means that an article costing a dollar in 1949 now costs $1.34. It is interesting to note at the same time that an article that cost a dollar in 1939, before the outbreak of war, now costs well over $2. Where is this going to end? Deficit financing will continue this business of inflation of the cost of living, and when you get inflation of the cost of living you get labour troubles. There is no surer way to destroy a nation than to destroy the purchasing power of its money; and I think, honourable senators, that today it is one of the supreme matters that should have the first consideration of this Parliament.

I know how difficult it is to resist the pressures to spend money, but sooner or later some government will have to do it, and it will have to bring order out of financial disorder. It is in the interests of the freedom of our people and of their welfare in the long run that this be done. I am bound to say that from present indications I am not too hopeful for the immediate years ahead, but I shall say also that if a change of government took place now I would be much less hopeful about what might happen under such a change.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I never knew you were so pessimistic.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, it was my intention to discuss these matters on the resolution to refer the estimates to the Finance Committee. Now I forgo that. Usually when I speak I put my colleague Senator Power to sleep, but I note from present appearances he is wide awake. Therefore, honourable senators, I must have achieved some success in the contribution I have made to this discussion.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lang, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

THE ESTIMATES

FINANCE COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO EXAMINE AND REPORT

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. John J. Connolly:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, in advance of the bills based on the said estimates reaching the Senate; and
>
> That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, before speaking on this motion I would like to know how an honourable senator can switch from one item to another. When he is prepared to speak on finance, how can he switch to the Estate Tax Bill? I do not see how those two topics gibe. However, the honourable Senator Crerar's excellent speech applies also to the motion for a reference to the Finance Committee. Therefore, I believe that when the committee has concluded its deliberations, it will present a good report.

Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the Leader of the Government in the Senate for bringing this motion before the house; it is most timely, and we should have a thorough review of the estimates by the Senate.

I understand that the honourable senator Crerar, and also the late Senator Hawkins, when each served as chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, produced reports, but in the reports of the committee of those days they dealt largely with topics other than the estimates. I hope that at this time the committee will stay within the bounds of the subject under review, the estimates themselves, and that it will not stray and deal with other subjects.

There is an urgent need at this time for a study of Government spending. We seem to be caught in a vicious circle just now, with a continuous round of deficit budgets, which are getting larger and larger as the years go by.

Just prior to the last war the total budget estimates were in the neighbourhood of $1 billion. In 1958-59 the budget stood at $5,179 million-odd. Two years later, in 1961-62, the total budget stood at $6,123 million. Now, in spite of the election promises of the present Government to have a balanced budget, the 1964-65 spending estimates stand at $6,703 million, very nearly $600 million more than they were in 1961-62, with every indication that there will be a further deficit.

I have taken some of the estimates, not by dividing them into separate departments but rather by taking the totals for all departments under separate headings, such as appear on this white sheet at the back of the Blue Book. One heading is "Travelling and removal." In 1958-59 the total spent by all departments under this heading came to $57,720,000-odd. In 1961-62 this had gone up to $67,258,000—an increase of $10 million. Now, in 1964-65, the estimates stand at $69,929,000-odd. So the spending under that one heading is still rising.

Under the heading of "Postage", in 1958-59 there was a total of $5,882,000-odd in 1961-62, a total was $6,319,000-odd; and this year the total has gone up to an estimated $7,068,000-odd. The Postmaster General, as quoted in the Regina Leader-Post of May 2 last, said that the real deficit of the Post Office Department is $37 million. He made that statement in the other place when he sought to have the four-cent urban postage rate raised to five cents. There have already been increases in the rates on registered mail, C.O.D. orders, special delivery, and other services.

Referring to the estimates under the heading "Telephone Communications" we see that in 1958-59 the total was $17,505,000. In 1961-62 the total was $22,574,000, and for 1964-65 it made an extremely high jump to $47,891,000, more than double that of 1961-62.

Honourable senators, these figures are small when we are considering a total budget of nearly $7 billion, but unless we start checking on our smaller items we will never arrive at the point where we will get rid of the deficit spending.

The telephone account is something that should be looked into quite seriously. I well remember a very small instance of the squandering of public money by a bus driver. Apparently it became necessary to carry out some minor repairs on his bus in a small town, and he put through a long distance telephone call for authority to pay for the repairs because he had no authority to buy the parts locally. He got through to his headquarters, and when he had finished talking about the necessary repairs, he continued discussing matters of a social and general nature for almost 15 minutes. It is such disregard for cost that cause these extremely high telephone accounts.

Now looking at the estimated spending for one or two of the departments, we find that the Department of Labour anticipates reducing its 1964-65 spending by some $112 million as compared with the 1963-64 estimates, and the estimates of the Department of National Defence for 1964-65 are reduced by $108 million compared with those of 1963-64. Nevertheless, despite these large reductions, the total expenditure for 1964-65 is estimated to be $84 million more than in 1963-64. Why are other departments not making the same effort, as are the two I have mentioned, in achieving reductions?

Our economy is expanding quite rapidly and we should consolidate our prosperity at this time, allowing our people, as individuals, to consolidate their position through savings and investments, rather than encourage more and greater spending on welfare projects. It has always been held that given good exports and high gross national product there should not be any unemployment. Yet today we have both of these in good measure. We have good exports and an expanding economy, and yet unemployment stays with us. What then is the cause? Can the inquiry of the Finance Committee of the Senate into the budget estimates bring forth an answer? Is high taxation one of the causes? We must get the facts and give the facts to the public.

I trust that we will have a very full inquiry into the estimates and not into a great many outside subjects as was the case in previous reports.

There is some concern that we might run into a period of inflation in spite of the general prosperity we have in Canada. The cost of living is rising, and labour may make a determined effort very shortly to overtake this rise in the cost of living. If labour succeeds in getting an increase in wages, this, plus the high spending of government, will unquestionably lead to inflation. In this connection I shall read to you a quotation from the Ottawa Journal of May 13:

> Those who scoff at the dangers of inflation could well afford to acquaint themselves with the fact that this is one of the pressing problems now facing the western world. Over the last few years we have been more successful than many of the nations of western Europe in holding the price line against this enemy.
>
> We are courting trouble if our Federal Government proceeds in a manner which ignores inflationary dangers.

Further, in the Regina Leader-Post of May 14 there was an editorial which read as follows:

> On March 1, Canada's cost-of-living index reached 135 after a month in which prices rose along a wide front. Food costs were up, as well as prices of adult clothing, housing, piece goods, footwear and jewelry.
>
> The rise brought living costs to a record high level, 2.7 points above the index for the corresponding date in 1963.
>
> On a percentage basis, living costs rose in the year by two per cent. The index is based on the value of the dollar in 1949 being represented as 100. In other words, things which cost $1 in 1949 now cost $1.35. Living costs have increased by more than a third. Putting it another way, the buying power of the dollar has dropped by more than a third since 1949.
>
> These disturbing statistics give the lie to those who claim we should not worry about inflation. This enemy is at work in the economy, in an insidious creeping way.
>
> Those who have money put away in dollar savings and who may be happy over reaping a return of five per cent actually receive much less.
>
> On a $100 government bond they received $5 in interest. But the real value of the $100 declined by $2 in the year. So the net return was approximately $3—the equivalent of three per cent. It was even less for those who had to pay income tax on their dollar savings in bonds.
>
> If creeping inflation continues at the rate of two per cent a year, $100 invested in a 20-year five per cent bond has a real value in terms of buying power of only $60 at the maturity date.

Apparently in the United States they are having problems of a similar nature. In a speech at Bethany, West Virginia, Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York said:

> Voters must choose this year "whether to have fiscal integrity and balanced budgets . . . or to continue massive federal spending which in four years will have added $28 billion to the national debt."...
>
> The Johnson administration, Mr. Rockefeller said, "has yet to meet the problems of unemployment, as evidenced by the 4½ million men and women out of work."

That is an Associated Press report of a speech made at a convention meeting at Bethany College.

Honourable senators, I trust we will have a full inquiry into the spending and estimates for 1963-64, under the leadership of Senator Leonard, who is now chairman of this committee, and for whom most of the members of this chamber have considerable respect, since his career has been connected with financial matters. Under his capable leadership this committee should be in a position to give us a very fine report.

Motion agreed to.

COMPANIES ACT

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Vien for the second reading of Bill S-22, to amend the Companies Act.

Hon. David J. Walker: Honourable senators, may I pause a moment to say what a very great pleasure it was the other day to have that distinguished corporation lawyer and veteran legislator (Hon. Mr. Vien) expound on the introduction of the second reading of this bill. It was a treat to listen to his words; and his clarity of thought and his simplicity of expression made this complicated bill much more understandable to all of us.

Surely, this bill is long overdue. In Canada we are in almost a jungle of corporation law. Under the letters patent jurisdiction, which includes Canada, we have one Corporations Act in British Columbia, another in Alberta, another in Manitoba, one in Ontario and one in Quebec. As a result, we have great confusion as between the different provinces and Canada.

It was very appropriate that almost a decade ago the Conference of Commissioners on the Uniformity of Legislation in Canada should have set up a special committee in order to bring about a uniform companies act. This committee, after labouring for years, drafted a revised uniform act under the letters patent jurisdiction, which I commend to all honourable senators. It is a very fascinating result after a great deal of labour.

This draft act is helping to bring about some uniformity in what promised to be a chaotic condition. Ontario has partly followed it, and so has Manitoba, and those who drafted Bill S-22 in the Department of the Secretary of State have given much cognizance to it.

This uniform act was studied at great length by that very dedicated body, the Commercial Law Section of the Canadian Bar Association. After amending it, and deleting parts of it, they made recommendations to the Canadian Bar Association which, at its meeting just last September at Banff, adopted it. Another dedicated body, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, have considered it, and have given a lot of very good advice.

After perusing the Ontario Act, an interdepartmental committee of the Department of the Secretary of State, with outside lawyers and accountants to assist it, has brought in what I consider to be—we have to be perfectly fair about this—a very commendable effort to amend the long-standing Dominion Companies Act.

I have had an opportunity of comparing this bill with the Ontario Companies Act of 1960. A great many of the amendments are taken from the Ontario Companies Act. It is appropriate that that should be so. In Canada when we incorporate a company we want it to be able to do business in many of the provinces, and it would be much simpler if we could have a good Canada Corporations Act, so that we could incorporate under a dominion charter. But there are ten times as many companies incorporating in the Province of Ontario as are incorporating with the Secretary of State at Ottawa. This is something that should not be, and this bill will do a great deal to alter that trend.

As I have said, this bill is long overdue. It is incredible to think that it is 30 years since the act was last revised. The last amending bill was pressed through Parliament by a great corporation lawyer who happened to be the Prime Minister of Canada at the time, the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett. After 30 years have passed we now have another bill to amend the Companies Act.

In saying this I do not mean to criticize anybody. After all, we had to wait until the special committee on the uniform Companies Act brought in its report. That report had to be approved by the Canadian Bar Association and by the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. After receiving all that information the Secretary of State set up an interdepartmental committee assisted, as I have said, by outside help, and it has presented what I consider to be a worthwhile bill, which is a step in the right direction. Having regard to all the tremendous industrial and economic development in Canada during the past years, and the very modern corporate practices that have been adopted, the Companies Act is certainly in need of revision.

Honourable senators, may I review very briefly certain of the provisions of this bill?

I refer you first to clause 2 which provides that the statute shall now be called the Canada Corporations Act instead of the Dominion Companies Act. The connotation of the word "company" is very small. It emanated from joint stock companies, and "Corporations" is all inclusive. The word "Canada" had to be used to avoid confusion with the acts of Ontario, British Columbia and other provinces; and other foreign acts have their own names.

Clause 15, on page 11, contains a very worthwhile amendment which is in keeping with the spirit of Confederation. A company will be able to use either a French name or an English name, or both names at the same time. As a matter of fact, either or both names may be used on the company's seal. This is not compulsory; it is optional. It is an excellent step, one which mirrors the spirit we are all attempting to bring into Confederation.

Clause 6 simplifies greatly the application for letters patent so that it is more in accord with modern corporate practice. Many of us used to wonder why we had to get out a memorandum of agreement when making application. That practice was redundant, and it is now being abolished. The procedure is being simplified.

Clause 11, it will be noted, contains amendments to cover mutual fund shares so that there can now be no question about their legality. Such shares were a source of worry over the years. They were thought to be illegal, but there was no certainty as to whether they were or not, particularly under the dominion legislation. By this amendment they are made abundantly legal, and the amendment so states in a very simple way.

One of the great problems throughout the years has been that there have been so many dead or dying charters, or charters that have gone into disuse. There have been thousands of them in the various jurisdictions. For many it has been difficult to find the money necessary to surrender a charter.

Clause 16 provides a very simple procedure. What a great thing it is, honourable senators, to have simplicity in legislation with respect to surrendering a charter of a company that has no assets, and without paying any fee. The surrender of the charter of a company that has no assets can now be effected by declaration and notice in the Canada Gazette.

A great addition to the act, to my mind, can be found in clause 5. In the past great difficulty has been experienced by the Department of the Secretary of State, not in policing the corporations but in seeing that they carry out their duties. By this amendment the Secretary of State, through the Attorney General of Canada, can go to a court and apply for an order that a company be wound up. This is an excellent thing, and it should have been done long ago.

A company can be wound up, for instance, if the annual meeting of shareholders has not been held for two years, or if the company has committed other obvious misdemeanours. This simple procedure gives to the Secretary of State a power he did not possess before and is, therefore very helpful.

Another problem that anybody trying to supervise corporations has had occurs when the Secretary of State is not able to find any director to whom notice can be given. With respect to companies that are in default, part of clause 35 gives another power to the Secretary of State, and provides a procedure by which such a company may be dissolved. If a company has failed to file a summary with the Secretary of State, as is required by the act, for three years in succession, then the Secretary of State may give notice in the Canada Gazette of his intention to dissolve the company. If a further year elapses—and surely that is sufficient time—and the summaries have not yet been provided, then the Secretary of State can simply file a declaration that the company has, in fact, been dissolved. All this is very helpful.

Clause 29, on page 17 of the bill, contains an amendment which waives a special prospectus in dominion form. The preparation of a dominion prospectus was always a nuisance, and a lot of hard work, since it was different from the provincial prospectus. If a dominion company is selling shares in, say, Ontario, then even though it is a dominion company it is required to file a prospectus in Ontario form, and that prospectus has to be passed by the Ontario Securities Commission. The requirement that it file as well a prospectus in the dominion form is redundant, and so that provision is waived. It is now necessary only to file at Ottawa a duplicate certified copy of the prospectus filed in the Province of Ontario.

Again, at page 18, Clause 31, we find that, in accordance with our modern practice, it is necessary to tighten up the control over directors and officers dealing in the shares of a company. Instead of being permitted to do what they like for a whole year, the director or officer of the company will be required within 30 days to file a statement of all transactions in the shares, with the secretary of the company, who in turn makes a notation in a book which is open to the public. These are some of the helpful things we have.

Then, starting at page 19, by reason of the representations of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, there are several pages setting out simply and succinctly the requirements concerning financial statements, a very important subject.

That is the requirement under modern accounting methods. There have been great changes in modern accounting practice, so that these financial statements, when filed, will comply with, first, modern accounting practice; secondly, with the amendments to the Companies Act; and, thirdly, with the new amendments to the Income Tax Act.

It is most important that proper financial statements should be filed. The law is rapidly changing.

In England, at the end of 1963, a decision in one of the most important cases in this generation was handed down by the House of Lords, entitled Hedley-Byrne Limited vs. Heller Limited, 1963 2 All England Reports. Under that decision, the liability for making a negligent or careless statement goes beyond any contractual relationship and goes as far as third parties not even known to the person making the statement but who nevertheless rely on the accuracy of the statement.

Of course there is a limit as to how far that can go, but it is of very great moment to the accountants, and renders the statements which they now make under contract to their corporations such that the accountant can be held responsible for them to third parties who rely on them provided they turn out to be made negligently or carelessly.

Therefore, Clause 34 makes it simple for the accountant or the actuary who is drawing up statements for the company to follow in detail the subclauses here, and so keep out of a great deal of trouble.

There are so many things in Bill S-22, I am trying to confine my remarks to show the advantages which accrue as a result of this bill. It is long overdue that we should have clauses to make it possible to amalgamate dominion companies. For years we did not have such procedures as are now set out in Clause 37, page 37. The trouble is that it is only applicable to Canadian companies, and to Canadian companies alone.

For instance, a Canadian company cannot amalgamate with a provincial company, although provincial companies—one in Manitoba and one in Ontario, for example—can amalgamate. This may be due to some conflict as to the effect of the British North America Act. It is hoped that some way may be found by which, in addition to amalgamating dominion companies, it will be possible to amalgamate a dominion company and a provincial company.

In conclusion, may I say that I approve of the principles of the bill. I hope that it may be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presided over by that able chairman, Senator Hayden, where it can be studied and where I trust the chairman will give an opportunity to the Commercial Law Section of the Canadian Bar Association to make representations. I suggest that because there have been many omissions from this bill. There are certain clauses which are harsh, and others difficult to comprehend. This is not the time, in a discussion on the principle of the bill, to go into these details or to make any carping criticisms; but I trust that those persons I have mentioned may have an opportunity of being heard.

Furthermore, may I suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate, who is so obliging in matters of this kind, that as and when the bill is finalized and royal assent is given, it should be the aim of the Government that what will now be known as the Canada Corporations Act will be consolidated. It is most unwieldly, as I know Senator Hugessen and other distinguished corporation lawyers have found, at the present time; and that will be found to be even more so with all these amendments added.

May I suggest also that the Department of the Secretary of State may have gone as far as it could go. It is true that if you have a suit of clothes and you get it changed to bring it up to style, you cannot do that more than two or three times, as the suit begins to look funny. So it is with an act which has been amended generation after generation. It becomes very cumbersome and unwieldy.

Honourable senators, my respectful submission to the Government is that, since corporations are so important to the economic life of this country, there should be set up a royal commission on corporations, which would also take into consideration what is now a very important element, share issues. Also the security laws of Canada should be gone into very carefully.

All of us appreciate the importance of banking. Every decade we set up a royal commission on banking; and the Porter Commission, which has brought in its report, has done a very efficient job. However, if banking is important, to my mind corporations are equally so.

There are literally thousands of corporations in Canada crying out for proper laws and for modern direction. My respectful suggestion is that a royal commission on corporations should be set up, composed of distinguished citizens who have a lot of common sense; and, after that, experts should draft a new act—not revise the old one.

This royal commission should take cognizance of the acts in many foreign countries. There are excellent clauses in many of those in the United States, where they have splendid corporation acts. There are some good acts in Europe also. Furthermore, the provinces can also be of valuable assistance.

This study would take a long time. It should not be left to a department to undertake. Therefore, we might get rid of this overly cumbersome act we have at the present time.

All in all, may I repeat that Bill S-22 is a step in the proper direction. I have no hesitation in supporting the principle of the bill on second reading, on the understanding that it will go to the committee for detailed working out, clause by clause.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I think we must all feel greatly indebted to Senator Vien for his lucid explanation of this bill the other evening; and also to Senator Walker for his further explanation of the bill and the additional comments that he has made in respect of it. My only objection to both of those honourable gentlemen is this. They have said most of the things I intended to say and leave me with but little to go on with.

Having practised corporation law for over 40 years, I have had a great deal to do with this Companies Act and its predecessor. I fully agree with my honourable friends, that it is high time the act should be amended and brought up to date. As Senator Walker said, the last revision of the Companies Act was exactly 30 years ago.

Since that time, as my friend said, there have been a number of important developments in corporation law, and quite a number of those developments have been embodied in some of the provincial legislation dealing with provincial companies acts, particularly in the Province of Ontario. I think I can say that it is generally agreed that the Province of Ontario, as a result of its fairly recent amendments, has an extremely good and up-to-date corporation act. I am delighted to find that this bill that we now have before us proposes to insert in our present act provisions substantially similar, if not indeed entirely similar in some respects, to those now contained in the Ontario Corporations Act.

There are a good many provisions in this bill which I welcome very warmly, and which have been mentioned by those who preceded me. The provision in regard to mutual fund shares and the redemption of shares by mutual funds is very necessary. The changes that have been made and the simplifications that have been made in the sections dealing with alterations of capital structure are, I think, valuable. I agree also that the prospectus provisions, in so far as they have been simplified to make it unnecessary for a company to comply with the dominion prospectus requirements, when it has already complied with similar requirements in its own province, is valuable.

I am particularly happy to see in section 116 and following, changes which greatly enlarge and put into more detail the information which companies are required to give to their shareholders in submitting the annual accounts—requirements as to what is contained in the profit and loss account, the statement of surplus and the balance sheet, and the additional information which companies may be required to give under the circumstances set out in section 120. I think that is all to the good, and all in accordance with the modern practice under which, I think everybody agrees, every shareholder of every public company is entitled to a full and complete disclosure of the financial position of that company at the end of every fiscal year.

I also agree that the provisions covering amalgamation of federal companies as included in this bill may be of considerable value.

I have one minor comment to make in relation to a provision which will be found on page 37 of the bill, as the new section 125A. Section 125 of the present act is the section which requires every federal company to file an annual summary with the Secretary of State, accompanied by a moderate fee. This summary contains a certain amount of information, not very much; but here we have section 125A, which it is proposed to add, and which I will take the liberty of reading to the house.

> 125A. The Secretary of State may at any time by notice require any company to make a return upon any subject connected with its affairs within the time specified in the notice, and on default in making such a return every director of the company is guilty of an offence.

That seems to me to be going rather far, honourable senators. I do not make any immediate criticism of that provision, other than to say that I think when the bill comes before us in committee we should make very certain that there is justification for giving this extraordinary power to the Secretary of State. That is the only criticism of any detail that I have been able to find so far in my consideration of the bill. This section looks much like some of the sections that we used to see in the wartime legislation, where ministers could do anything or require anything, and insist upon and demand anything. I am, you might say, from Missouri in respect of section 125A, and I think we should investigate that when we have departmental officials before us in the committee.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Does that section give the length of the term?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No. It says, "within the time specified in the notice." The minister can make it as short as he likes, and if the company does not comply with that requirement, every director of the company is guilty of an offence. That is pretty strong, honourable senators.

I do not think I ought to finish these remarks without paying what I think is a very well-deserved tribute to the Companies and Corporations Branch in the Department of the Secretary of State. They are the people who administer this very important act. They have a very great deal to do. It affects vast numbers of corporations. From my personal experience, lasting over many years, I can say truthfully that I think we have received out of the Companies and Corporations Branch in the Department of the Secretary of State excellent service, and service which has been for the good of the country.

I agree with Senator Walker that this bill deserves the most careful consideration before the Banking and Commerce Committee, and I am quite sure that when we are through with it and when the bill has been enacted into law it will substantially improve the present provisions of our Companies Act.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not propose to detain the house for more than a few minutes in respect of this bill.

I should like, first, to thank Senator Vien for undertaking the explanation of the bill and for having done so in such a thorough and clear way. I should like also to thank Senator Hugessen for the comments that he has made, which have been very helpful. And, if I am not impertinent, I should like to congratulate Senator Walker, a very experienced parliamentarian, on what I think may have been his maiden speech in the Senate, and to say how helpful the remarks that he has made have been to the house, and I am sure will be to the committee as well. To all three honourable senators, we are greatly indebted.

It has been said that this is a lawyer's bill. In one very restricted sense it is, because I think it is the lawyers who are primarily concerned with the operation of company law. However, it is also a bill for the accountants; and as Senator Walker said, a good many of the provisions in this measure are there because of developments in corporate accounting practices. I think, too, as has been emphasized, that because of the multiplicity of corporate citizens we have in this country, because of the economic development we have experienced over the years, it is highly important that our corporation law should keep step with that industrial and commercial development.

Senator Walker drew attention to the fact that there are a great many companies, important companies, in many communities which are not incorporated under federal law but are incorporated provincially, mainly because their objects are carried out within the scope of the provincial jurisdiction. Many of them, as Senator Walker well knows, are so incorporated because of the special mortmain laws which apply in the given province; sometimes it is an advantage for a corporation to incorporate locally for that reason alone. However, the fact is that the corporation law of Canada must at all times be in step with Canadian development. When a company wants to incorporate federally and operate in various jurisdictions, it should not experience many of the difficulties and impediments that exist under the act as it stands today.

I believe these amendments are a step forward. However, I would say—and I speak on behalf of the Government—that this bill has been entrusted to the Senate because of the special kind of work a Senate committee can do. This bill is before us for the purpose of being improved by amendment, to the extent honourable senators feel it can be done.

I have been informed that the Canadian Bar Association, the federal Chartered Accountants' Organization, and several of the important boards of trade and chambers of commerce of this country, who have done important studies on these matters, will seek representation before that committee. I am sure these representations will be listened to with sympathy; they will probably be helpful, I think, not only to the discussion in committee but also with regard to the terms of the bill itself.

I believe that the Companies and Corporation Branch of the Secretary of State Department are fortunate in finding themselves in such competent hands as the Senate Committee on Banking and Commerce. The committee might well consider and make a recommendation, if this is within its terms of reference, that the act should very shortly be consolidated, when these amendments have been put together.

I sincerely thank all honourable senators who have participated in this debate for the contributions they have made.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), for Hon. Mr. Vien, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

SEICHO-NO-IE—SECOND READING

Hon. David A. Croll moved the second reading of Bill S-23, to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving the second reading of the bill may I say, first, that it is in the usual form so far as religious incorporations are concerned. However, it is perhaps unique in that it is, as far as I know, the first incorporation by the Parliament of Canada of a religious body having its origin in Japan.

Let me assure honourable senators that this bill is not unprecedented. In 1949 the Parliament of Canada incorporated, by Chapter 25 of the statutes of that year, the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Canada, which was assented to on April 30, 1949.

The name of this religious body in English means, "The House of Life, Wisdom and Abundance." The founder of the movement was Dr. Masaharu Taniguchi, a scholar born in Kobe, Japan, in 1893, who majored in English literature at Waseda University in Tokyo. He was a student of many religious philosophies and was ardent both in prayer and meditation. Indeed, the movement which he originated reveals the eclecticism of the founder in that he sought the truth wherever it might be found.

The movement is non-denominational, being based on universal truth. It neither bars nor excludes any true religion. Its basis is the essential brotherhood of all men and the essential unity of all religions which, in their view, are confirmations of a basic truth which has appeared in various forms, depending on time, place and race—for example, Christianity, Judaism, Buddhism and Shintoism. One rule common to all and basic to Seicho-No-Ie is the so-called Golden Rule: Do unto others as you would be done by.

I will not go further into the characteristics of the religion, other than to assure honourable senators that it is a peaceful, non-violent and sincere religious movement, and one that has no connotations inimical to the welfare of this country. It has more than five million adherents in Japan, with 1,800 assemblies, including centres in all the principal cities. There are also assemblies in Brazil, Peru, Germany, France, the United Kingdom and Sweden. There are approximately 1,200 adherents in Canada, with assemblies in Vancouver, New Westminster, Richmond and Steveston in British Columbia, and others in Hamilton, Montreal and Toronto. The organization is incorporated in California, Japan, Hawaii, Brazil and Mexico. Its main centre in North America is Los Angeles.

In this country, with its deep tradition of freedom, I do not think it is necessary for me to enter a special plea for freedom of religion. Freedom of religion is, of course, the first human right claimed under any bill of rights and, needless to say, is set forth in the clearest possible terms in the Canadian Bill of Rights.

If this bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, where members of the movement will be able to answer any questions which may occur to honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Have we a copy of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes. It is Bill S-23.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, we have it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 21, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

May 21, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 21st May, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor-General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a report from the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament, recommending that salary rates of the professional classes in the Library of Parliament be brought in line with the recently revised salaries paid for comparable positions in the public service.

Honourable senators when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

For text of report see appendix, p. 538.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, part II, of Wednesday, May 13, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

ESTATE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. William H. Taylor, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-94, to amend the Estate Tax Act:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk): I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk) for Honourable Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-94, to amend the Estate Tax Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE ESTIMATES

REFERRED TO FINANCE COMMITTEE—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March 1965, presented the following report:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their day to day proceedings on the said estimates.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, May 25, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): Would the honourable Leader of the Government not consider sitting Tuesday afternoon and Tuesday evening rather than Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I can understand the situation of my honourable friend. I would point out, however, that we have a good deal of legislation on the Order Paper, and there is also a considerable amount of committee work to be done. I think the committee work requires almost as much attention as does the work of the house itself.

I do not wish to give the impression that there is any attempt to overwork this honourable chamber, but I should say that we may be sitting Monday evening, Tuesday afternoon, and Tuesday evening as well. That announcement may help my honourable friend, and other honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): Can we count on sitting Monday night?

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING BUREAU

INQUIRY ANSWERED

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

1. What reports and other publications were published during the last fifteen months by the Printing Bureau for each house of the Parliament of Canada and for each one of the various branches of each department, each commission and each agency of the Government of Canada and what are those which have been printed only in English or only in French, or in both English and French languages?

2. What reports and periodicals are being published daily, weekly, semi-monthly, monthly and yearly by the Printing Bureau in English or in French or in both languages?

3. What aforesaid reports and periodicals are edited by a French editor or by an English editor or by both an English and a French editor?

4. During the above-mentioned period, did the Printing Bureau print any books which had nothing to do with the Parliament or the Government of Canada, and, if so, what were their titles and the names of their authors?

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Answered privately.

Honourable senators, yesterday my honourable colleague Senator Isnor made the suggestion that the information which had been personally given to me in answer to this inquiry should be given to the Standing Committee on Finance. Therefore, I am pleased to pass to my honourable friend a voluminous answer in French, and the same in English, concerning the Printing Bureau. It is the catalogue of publications printed by the Printing Bureau during the year 1962. I have asked for the information for fifteen months, but I agreed to accept it for twelve months, and I am sure that it will occupy the leisure moments of my honourable friend during the weekend.

Besides that, I have a list of the publications printed by each department, and the bulky books come from the Printing Bureau, and the bulky file comes from nearly all departments. There are one or two that have not answered, but I am only too glad to send that information to my honourable colleague in the hope it will be useful to him and to the committee.

I see the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance (Hon. Mr. Leonard) is at his desk, so I shall send him the English copy and I shall send the French copy to Senator Isnor.

I would suggest, in all deference, that the chairman and other members of the Finance Committee get in touch with the Department of the Secretary of State with a view to having a bus made available to take the whole committee to visit the Printing Bureau before studying those papers, but I shall not insist upon it. If you look at the catalogue you will see that a lot of printed matter comes out of the bureau.

TRANSLATORS AND INTERPRETERS

NOTICE OF INQUIRY STANDS

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

1. During the last fifteen months, how many translators and interpreters have been employed in each department, agency or commission of the Government of Canada.

(a) in Canada,

(b) in other countries?

2. What is the total number of translators and interpreters who have been, during the said period,

(a) employed and paid by the Government of Canada,

(b) appointed by the Civil Service Commission after examination, and belong to the Translation Bureau,

(c) appointed by Order-in-Council and do not belong to the Translation Bureau?

3. How many translators are employed for the translation of the correspondence of the departments, commissions and agencies of the Government of Canada?

4. How many books have been translated by the Translation Bureau during the same period,

(a) from English into French, and

(b) from French into English?

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, with respect to this inquiry I must remind you that a translation made outside of Canada is a very delicate matter, and it is important for us to know who are the translators in the various diplomatic posts of Canada throughout the world. Those translators handle all the secret correspondence.

I remember that when the Canadian Embassy was created in Japan there was for a time no Canadian on the staff who knew the Japanese language. The first Canadian who went there as a translator some years after was Mr. Norman of the Department of External Affairs.

I remember also that at the outset of the war there was a foreign embassy in Ottawa, at the corner of Nelson Street and Daly Avenue, which was a nest of spies.

We must be very careful about translations, and it is as much in the interests of the Department of External Affairs and the country at large that we should have this information. All those Canadian diplomats who should have answered this question a long time ago are too busy in social engagements. They should curtail some of them, and first think of answering the orders of the Parliament of Canada, whether they are given by the Senate or the House of Commons.

Inquiry stands.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, moved the third reading of Bill C-92, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT

SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved second reading of Bill C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill to amend the Exchequer Court Act and the Judges Act has special reference to the proceedings of this house with respect to the dissolution and annulment of marriages. In consequence, the Leader of the Government has very kindly referred the matter to me, and I thank him for doing so.

Honourable senators, in the first place, I would like to make it clear to all my fellow senators that these amendments to the two acts involving the procedure to some extent of the Divorce Committee. in no way change the substance of the law and in no way affect the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada or indeed the authority of His Honour the Speaker in this regard. The bill affects only procedure.

The British North America Act, Section 91, states that:

> —the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects hereinafter enumerated . . . 26. Marriage and Divorce.

It has been under that authority that Parliament, since 1867, has granted divorces on the individual basis by special parliamentary action in each case.

When, in the last session, we passed the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act, we made no change in that principle: we changed only the procedure. Parliament empowered the Senate at that time to grant parliamentary divorce by resolution rather than by bill of divorce, although the latter procedure was also retained. The principle of parliamentary action by special resolution of this division of Parliament based on each individual petition remained the same.

Honourable senators will remember that the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act also empowered the Speaker of the Senate to designate an official of the Senate to hear the evidence in support of the various petitions under the act and to report to the Senate his findings and recommendations. That act gave the Commissioner no authority to dissolve or annul marriage. The Commissioner recommends only, and the Senate acts on its own authority exclusively—usually in accordance with the recommendation of the Commissioner but not necessarily so.

The Commissioner's reports are received and considered by the Standing Committee of the Senate on Divorce, and it is upon the reports of that committee that the Senate acts in adopting the resolutions which I, as chairman of that committee, have the honour to move from time to time.

Therefore, the dissolutions and annulments of marriages which we grant in this chamber as a part of Parliament are parliamentary enactments by this branch of the Parliament of Canada.

Bill C-96, to which I am addressing myself and which is before you, opens the way for the appointment of our present Commissioner as a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada. However, I want this distinction clearly understood, that it does not place the petitions or the proceedings upon the petitions under the Exchequer Court Act. The proceedings remain as they are, under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

Bill C-96 makes no alteration in principle of the parliamentary action. It gives the Commissioner no authority in respect to matrimonial causes which he does not now possess. His recommendations, if this measure is passed, will not be decrees of the Exchequer Court; they will be recommendations, as they always have been, and we will exercise the final authority.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Can we be sure that if this measure is passed by the Senate it will actually have the same effect in law?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: When the honourable senator says "the same effect," that is a sweeping statement. He is asking me what are all the circumstances, all the possible and imaginable conditions. My only answer could be that it is the same so far as its application to the dissolution of a marriage is concerned. It has the same effect as if a bill of divorce were passed dissolving a marriage. There is no distinction. So far as that is concerned, when we pass a resolution in this house dissolving a marriage, it is just as completely dissolved, and the parties stand in exactly the same position with regard to future marriage, as if a bill of divorce were passed by both houses.

Now, should the Commissioner at some future time find leisure—which I can assure you is most unlikely from present indications—to sit as a judge of the Exchequer Court, he will of course be addressed as "Your Lordship"; but when he is presiding in our jurisdiction under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act, he will still be "Mr. Commissioner".

Hon. Mr. Farris: Will that be a demotion?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Not at all. He is Mr. Commissioner now. If he becomes a judge of the Exchequer Court, his duties in so far as we are concerned will be under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act, in which he is described in our rules as a commissioner.

Let us now consider the sections of Bill C-96. First, I refer to subsection (1) of section 4, which says:

> The Exchequer Court shall consist of the President and six Puisne Judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

If honourable senators will refer to the Exchequer Court Act as it now stands, they will see that that act provides for five judges of the court. The bill now makes it possible for the Government to appoint by order in council six puisne judges. I not only understand, but the Minister of Justice has said, that it is the intention of the Government to appoint our present commissioner, Mr. Allison A. M. Walsh, Q.C., as that sixth judge. However, honourable senators, Mr. Walsh is now the Commissioner appointed by His Honour the Speaker of this house, and so a further provision was necessary in the Judges Act. Section 3 of the bill provides:

> The Exchequer Court Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 6 thereof, the following section:
>
> 6A. "A judge of the Court designated by the Speaker of the Senate for the purpose of this section after consultation with the President of the Court, if he is granted leave of absence for such purpose by the Governor in Council from his duties as a judge of the Court, has and may exercise and perform all of the powers, duties and functions of the officer of the Senate referred to in section 3 of the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act."

That section gives the power to the Speaker of the Senate, in consultation with the President of the Exchequer Court, to select a judge of that court to sit as commissioner persona designata, under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

There is a good deal to be said as to what is to be gained by that procedure. In the nature of things, a judge hearing five, six, seven or eight cases a day cannot continue to do so indefinitely without absence from his work. He may at times want to take a trip; he may fall ill; or, in time—and I hope it will be a long time from now—he may reach retirement age. This provision facilitates this chamber, by action of His Honour the Speaker, to select any other judge of the Exchequer Court, in consultation with the President of that court, to get by order in council leave of absence for that judge and to designate him a commissioner under this act.

We would, therefore, have much greater facility than at present, should it be necessary to find someone, either temporarily or permanently, to take the place of our present commissioner.

Furthermore, if, for instance, domestic peace should reign in the Province of Quebec, and all the spouses got along well together so that there would be fewer divorces or none at all, our Commissioner would not be left without anything to do. In all probability, he would sit on the Exchequer Court bench as a judge.

Hon. Mr. Walker: May I ask a question of the honourable senator?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Would the honourable senator be good enough to say, if the present commissioner becomes an Exchequer Court judge, where the sittings of divorce hearings would be held? Would they be held in the Exchequer Court, or here?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They would be held in the West Block, where they are being held now. There will be no change whatsoever. This is not an amendment of the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

Let me comment further with regard to that. This amendment to the Exchequer Court and Judges Act does not limit in any way the right of His Honour the Speaker to designate any other person than a judge of the Exchequer Court to be the commissioner under that act. In that regard he has the whole world before him to choose from, just as he has had.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We would not want him to exercise his right in that way.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No. However, there might arise circumstances when it would be most advisable to do so. The Exchequer Court also has its docket of very important cases, and the time might arise when our Commissioner could no longer sit, perhaps temporarily, and the judges of the Exchequer Court might be very busy; or, it might not be desirable for some other reason that a judge be taken from the bench for a temporary purpose. His Honour the Speaker, therefore, retains as much authority as he ever had to select anybody who in his judgment would satisfactorily perform these functions.

Until now I have been discussing our own convenience. The question naturally arises as to what would be gained by authorizing our Speaker to designate a judge of the Exchequer Court. Mr. Walsh is now acting as commissioner and, in my judgment, very satisfactorily so. He is a man of considerable legal knowledge, is a sound and capable lawyer, and very industrious. What I like very much about him is the quiet, judicial manner in which he conducts the proceedings before him; he is very satisfactory. I have no desire, as I suppose no one else in this chamber has, to make any change in that arrangement, but there are a number of reasons compelling us to support this amendment.

In the first instance, the appointment, as I have indicated, will give the Commissioner the status and dignity of a judge of the Exchequer Court, and in my judgment this is desirable both from his standpoint and ours. He is dealing daily with counsel and witnesses in judicial proceedings, and it would certainly be advisable that he should have the status and dignity—shall I call it the "kudos"—to which the public is accustomed.

The salary the Commissioner will receive as a judge of the Exchequer Court and as the Commissioner under us will not be affected by this alteration, but the incidental benefits enjoyed by a judge are considerably superior to those of a civil servant. The Commissioner is a civil servant today; when this act is passed he will be a judge.

The first of these benefits is security of tenure. Under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act the designation by the Speaker of this chamber may be revoked at any time and on a moment's notice, while a judge's appointment is permanent—formerly for life, and now until his statutory retirement age. Why any lawyer with a successful practice would abandon it to accept a position terminable at any time, at pleasure, on a moment's notice, is beyond my comprehension, and is not a fair deal for us to put up to anybody.

The second of what I might call in colloquial terms "the fringe benefits" is in regard to pensions. A judge of the Exchequer Court can retire at the age of 70 years, and after 15 years' service, with the approval of the Governor in Council, his pension is two-thirds of his salary or, in this particular instance, $14,000 per annum. And note, that pension is not contributory—a very important point. At 75 years, according to the act, he must retire, but he does so on full pension irrespective of the years of service; and in the event of retiring because of disability, he retires upon full pension, and at any time he does retire he has the full pension irrespective of his years of service.

Contrast that, honourable senators, with the pension of a civil servant. To begin with the civil servant's pension is contributory. A person with Mr. Walsh's rate of salary is subject to an annual deduction of $1,040. The normal retirement age of a civil servant is 65 years, when after a minimum of 13 years' service a civil servant such as he would be entitled to a pension of $4,160. A civil servant is sometimes permitted to continue to 70 years of age, in which case the pension would be $5,760. Contrast that with the pension of $14,000 to a judge of the Exchequer Court. And even that is not all the distinction, shall I say, in fringe benefits.

For a civil servant's widow to qualify for any pension, the civil servant must have had five years' service behind him. If he had not, she gets no pension. Then, if there is five years' service she will receive 1 per cent of his salary for each year of his service. Were our commissioner to serve as a civil servant until 65 years of age, his widow would then be entitled to a pension of $2,080. Contrast that with the pension of a judge's widow. It is one-third of the pension a judge would have received had he lived to that time, or $4,666 per annum. This is more than double the pension paid to a civil servant's widow under similar circumstances.

While financial considerations are therefore very important to a person accepting a position of this kind, I am perfectly sure that such considerations rate second in the mind of our present commissioner to the prestige and dignity which this procedure before us will afford him—the dignity attaching to the office of a judge. And yet, when you consider the importance and the quality of a judge's position and his work, the salary paid, the security of tenure, the pension protection to him and his wife are not excessive. What a judge receives is not greater in value than what a successful barrister and solicitor may expect to earn after some 25 years of private practice in his office and at the bar.

Let me emphasize that there is nothing new in this procedure of designating a member of the bar persona designata to some extramural service. It is not a departure from the usual; there are many precedents. Let me mention an outstanding one. In 1948 the Railway Act, the Exchequer Court Act and the Judges Act were all three amended to permit a judge of the Exchequer Court to act as Chief Commissioner of the Board of Transport Commissioners. Section 10(2) of the Railway Act was amended, and it is so close to what we are doing in this instance that it is worthwhile reading it:

> Any person may be appointed Chief Commissioner who is a judge of the Exchequer Court, and, notwithstanding anything in this or any other Act but subject to subsection two b, he may continue to be and to exercise the jurisdiction of a judge of the Exchequer Court and may hold and perform the duties of the office of Chief Commissioner.

The qualification of subsection 2 provided for an addition to his salary.

The first Chief Commissioner of the Board of Transport Commissioners who was a judge of the Exchequer Court appointed under the authority I have just read was Mr. Justice Kearney. He served for one term of seven years, and then retired. He retired to the Exchequer Court bench, where he is now rendering distinguished service as a judge of that court. Illustrations are unending. The judges of the Exchequer Court now serve on the Court Martial Appeal Board. They also serve on the Copyright Appeal Board.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Do they give judgments?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They do; and not only that, but they pass on the judgments of others. They are on the appeal board. That is extramural from their work on the Exchequer Court, and is quite different.

The justices on the Supreme Court of Canada, the highest court in the land, have frequently acted in an extramural capacity. Honourable senators will all remember that Mr. Justice Rand acted for the United Nations, inquiring into and reporting on the future of Israel when the British withdrew from Palestine. He rendered splendid service not only to Canada but to the United Nations.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Did you say he was acting as a judge?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, he was a judge, and he was acting under the authority of the United Nations, just as our Commissioner will be a judge, acting under the authority of the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

Honourable senators will also remember that Mr. Justice Kellock was a commissioner appointed by act of Parliament to arbitrate in the dispute in the railroad industry. That is not long ago.

Judges of the supreme courts of the provinces have frequently acted as conciliators in industrial disputes and on royal commissions. A recent example of this is the appointment of Mr. Justice Roach to inquire into organized crime in the Province of Ontario.

From what I have said honourable senators will realize that there is ample precedent for what is proposed in Bill C-96. But let me emphasize again that the elevation of our Commissioner to this status of a judge does not alter in any way the principle of parliamentary divorce, nor does it detract in any way from our freedom of action regarding our own Commissioner. We should bear in mind, of course, that should we wish at some future time to change our present method of handling these cases, or indeed to change our Commissioner, the Commissioner, who is also a judge of the Exchequer Court, has an open door at all times. That, I think, is very important.

In conclusion, I should mention that Mr. Walsh accepted the position of commissioner under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act on the undertaking of a member of the Government that he would be made a judge of the Exchequer Court. I understand from him that he would not have abandoned his practice and accepted that position in the absence of such a promise.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Who had authority to give an undertaking of that sort?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I certainly did not give such a promise, and of course it is not at all binding on this house. At the same time, under the circumstances I should not like to be charged with dishonouring that undertaking after he has accepted the position and has worked for some months. I think it would be most unfair for us to lead him into that position on a promise by the Government of his own country, and then to dishonour the promise.

I am not prepared for one moment to suggest that this sets any precedent to be followed in the future, but under the present circumstances I think the situation is exceedingly compelling upon us to honour the promise made by a high official of the Government of Canada.

For all the reasons which I have given, and I have given a good many in this very condensed address, I commend Bill C-96 to your favourable consideration.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I would like to ask my honourable friend a question. I am in entire agreement with what he has said; but I am puzzled to see how we get the Commissioner up to the status of a judge. Section 6A says that if a judge is granted leave of absence from his duties as a judge of the Exchequer Court he may exercise and perform the powers, duties and functions of a commissioner. How then is it that the Commissioner is raised to the status of a judge by this section? This is something I do not understand.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: This question has many sides. The Commissioner is raised to the status of a judge when he is appointed a judge by order in council. This has in fact already been announced. It is true, there is nothing in the bill to that effect. But judges are not appointed by Act of Parliament; they are appointed by order in council.

Hon. Mr. Farris: But somewhere there is an act that authorized the order in council.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have not gone into that because naturally that is the basis of all appointments. It comes under the provisions of the Exchequer Court Act. But I do not have the details clearly in my mind at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is what I wanted to get clear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There is no doubt that the Governor in Council has that authority under the act; nor is there any doubt that the Minister of Justice has assured Mr. Walsh, and has so announced, that he will be appointed to occupy that sixth position.

Hon. C. G. Power: I wish to ask a question along the same lines.

I gathered in listening to the observations of my honourable friend Senator Roebuck that in the Railway Act, or one of the other acts to which he referred, there is a reference to the head of the Board of Transport Commissioners and to the fact that the person so appointed, being a judge of the Exchequer Court, would remain a judge of that court after he had finished performing his duties as the head of the transport board. However, there is no such provision in this case.

Did I understand my honourable friend to say that under the Railway Act there is some provision assuring the person who becomes head of the transport board that when he relinquishes those duties he is once again a judge of the Exchequer Court, and is regarded as such a judge?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is true. But there is nothing in this particular case that disqualifies the Commissioner to be a judge simply because he accepts a position persona designata. I think we can assume that if Parliament desired him not to be a judge of the court it would say so in the act. The whole purpose of this legislation, and its obvious purpose, is to make him a judge, and to allow him to act in these judicial proceedings with the title of a judge.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, I hope I will not exacerbate the feelings of the honourable senator who has stated the purported object of Bill C-96 when I ask him if this is really not the thin edge of the wedge in the final and irrevocable transfer of the duties of the Senate in regard to divorce to the Exchequer Court of Canada. This is really the first step in that direction.

Mr. Walsh is by this legislation being raised from the position of a commissioner to that of an Exchequer Court Judge. If this legislation is passed His Honour the Speaker may call on Mr. Justice Walsh, as he then will be, or on any of the other five judges of the Exchequer Court, to act, and then the Exchequer Court, in reality, will become a divorce court but there will still be the formalities and trappings of the Senate's giving its final approval. Is that not really the object of this bill?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I think I can say positively and effectively that that is not the purpose of this bill. It was not conceived with that thought, nor carried through with that object.

Let me point out that while, perhaps, it would facilitate the transfer of power from Parliament to the court, there has been no difficulty in doing that at any time. If at any time in the future we desire to transfer our authority with respect to divorce to the Exchequer Court, or to any other court, a simple Act of Parliament, passed by a majority of the members, will do the job. We do not need to take that procedure step by step.

There is no need to train our judges in the way we are training our Commissioner. They now handle divorces in all provinces with the exception of two. The judges of the courts of the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland are entirely competent to take over this work when we, in our wisdom, desire to make the change. These incidental and, in some respects, unimportant procedural changes have very little to do with the object to which my friend refers.

I can appreciate people thinking that we are getting in the thin edge of the wedge, as it were, but that is not so. If we want to do it, then we can do it without any trouble. However, do not think it would be a small matter to do so. It would be changing the whole basis of divorce that has existed since 1867, during which time parliamentary, and not judicial, divorces have been granted. Such a move would be strongly opposed by some people, although not by me. I think it would be fine, but it is not in the interests of Canada to compel any province to have a divorce court if it does not want it.

My answer can be definite, positive and explicit. The answer is that there is no such implication in this move.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, may I make just one comment? I am not saying I am opposed to this bill, but I do have some serious misgivings about it on at least three counts. The first is the very tortuous path by which we have arrived at this lessening of the involvement of the Parliament of Canada as a whole in the dissolution of marriages originating in Quebec and Newfoundland.

The second is the indefiniteness of the path ahead. The point raised by Senator Walker has, I think, more substance than is indicated by the answer he received.

The third count upon which I have misgivings is that we have as yet no clear statement that there has been consultation at the official level with the governments of the provinces concerned, or of their official approval of this step.

I hardly need remind honourable senators that there is some basis for the phrase "tortuous path" that I used. Bills leading to this were brought before this house on two occasions in the last moments of the last day of the session.

On the first occasion the judgment of the Senate was expressed in an amendment that was sent to the other place to the effect that this judicial officer should not be forced upon us. I am sure Senator Roebuck will remember that. I believe he supported that position. We rejected the Commons amendment requiring us to appoint this official. Then, when the Commons insisted, we had hurried meetings of the standing committee, with very few senators present, and it was agreed to accept the imposition of this official on the Senate. This was after the acceptance in substance of the original resolution that there should be this transfer of the sovereignty of Parliament as a whole to one house of Parliament. We said that if we accepted that we would not accept the imposition of this judicial officer.

On the second occasion a bill in this very form came before us, again during the last minutes of the session. Representations were made to the then Leader of the Government who, in my view, very courageously and wisely, and with extreme consideration for the viewpoints of several senators, decided not to proceed with the bill, and it died on the Order Paper.

It comes before us again, and I am very glad to say that now we have time in which to discuss it, and we are not under any pressure of urgency. It comes to us also, I am glad to say, with adequate notice, which was lacking in both the other instances.

On my second point, there is some clear evidence that the course ahead is indefinite. The minister who introduced this bill was asked some questions about it. He was asked whether the Senate would have exactly the same authority it had previously, and also what the power of the Senate is to overrule what would be, in effect, a judgment of a judge of the Exchequer Court. The minister's reply, in part, as reported at page 3238 of Hansard of the other place, was:

> But the Senate remains the master, because we are not tampering here with chapter 10—

That is, of the previous act.

> —unless an amendment is brought forward. However, it must be assumed that if the Senate were to set aside the commissioner's recommendation, it would only be because new evidence had been uncovered or for some other very serious reason.

Senator Walker spoke of the thin edge of the wedge. I believe that here is another thin edge of the wedge. Here is a statement by a minister of the Crown to the effect that in his view and in the view of the Government there is a limitation of the power of the Senate. On this point I say that if we are going in the direction of judicial divorce, and going to remove divorce entirely from Parliament, I personally would have no objection, although there may be others who would.

I do object to the method, and particularly to the fact that we have no evidence that the provinces have been consulted. The lack of consultation with the provinces has caused a good deal of trouble, not only in the last few months but over a long period of time. I would like to ask the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) if, before the debate is concluded, or before we are asked to vote on the second or third readings of this bill, we could have that assurance.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: An assurance as to what?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: An assurance that the provinces have been consulted officially, and have given their consent to this step. The minister in answer to the honourable member of Parliament for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm said, as reported at page 3198 of Hansard of the other place:

> I can assure the hon. member, and the house also, that we made the consultations, at least the unofficial ones, which we felt were necessary.

That is a long way from saying there have been official consultations with the governments of the provinces concerned.

The minister went further—and this is very interesting because he indicates again that the fears of Senator Walker and others are not entirely without substance—and said:

> If there is ever some talk of establishing—I am not predicting or announcing that—divorce courts, I think, as Minister of Justice, that one of the essential conditions would be to consult with the provincial governments of Quebec and Newfoundland and also with the religious authorities who, under the circumstances, may be interested.

If I understand the sense of the minister's reply, it is that at this stage he does not think it is necessary to consult with the provinces or with the religious organizations concerned; that all that has to be done is to assure those who might have some views on this matter that there have been at least the unofficial consultations which were felt necessary.

I suggest that that is not adequate assurance to the members of this chamber that this bill has the consent of the provinces concerned.

One or two other questions have occurred to me. There was a statement by the minister that this commissioner, albeit a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, would be subject to some kind of authority of the "higher officials of the Senate."

On the question of whether the judge may be overruled by the Senate itself, or by the Divorce Committee, I am not yet fully convinced that the position practically and realistically is that the authority of the Senate remains. I am sure the honourable senator who sponsored the bill (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) will be able to assure me on that ground.

Finally, I would refer, not critically, to the arguments put forward by honourable Senator Roebuck—and he developed them at length—that one of the important reasons why this step is necessary is to assure the Commissioner of some stability of employment, pension for himself and his dependents, fringe benefits, and a status above that of a mere—and I use the term only relatively—officer of the Senate.

The fact that such an argument was put forward, and put forward so forcibly, indicates to me that the other grounds have not as much force as some of us would like. Surely the only way to provide an officer of the Senate with this kind of security and income is not necessarily to make him a judge of the Exchequer Court. I am sure there are many other worthy officers of the Senate who would feel that their just claims could be looked after without their being appointed judges of the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. Power: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? I was a little puzzled about his suggestion that there should be consultation with the provinces. How are we to consult, on the matter of divorce, with a province that does not believe such a thing should exist—a province such as Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I am not a constitutional lawyer and I cannot answer fully, but I would say to honourable Senator Power that the provinces concerned are well aware of the law of Canada and the procedures of this house. We are dealing now with a process of the law of Canada. Surely they are aware of that law, and it would be quite proper for the federal government to discuss it with the officials and the cabinet of those provinces.

This is a matter of changing the procedure under the law of Canada, regardless of what the subject matter may be. The provinces may not agree with divorce, but they are subject to the law of Canada, and I am quite sure they would be willing to undertake discussions on a matter of this importance respecting the law as it stands.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, it has been said that this is a legal problem, but the matter of divorce is more than legal, it has a human aspect to it. There is the question of the public welfare.

I venture to make a few observations, because I have served under the present chairman for quite a long time. It did happen that on the Divorce Committee there were not enough lawyers to act as chairmen of the subcommittees and some of us who were not lawyers had to act in that capacity. We often found great difficulty in ruling on the admissibility of evidence and questions of that kind.

Therefore, the present arrangement, whereby an experienced lawyer and judge does that work, has many advantages. But he has not the last say.

For instance, during this week I have been reading over some of the cases on which he has adjudicated and which he has recommended; and in at least two of them I hesitated to sign them because I thought there was some evidence lacking.

The Divorce Committee still meets and goes over those cases.

I feel quite sure that though the recommendation does not need to be accepted in every case, the big advantage in the present arrangement is that the court procedure can be kept in order by a man with an experienced mind, and that responsibility does not rest with some of us who know little about court precedure.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, when I put a question to my honourable friend, I was concerned with the authority to create the Commissioner a judge. That I am satisfied with now, under the authorities given to me by both the honourable gentlemen who answered me. I am satisfied that there is that power.

The next question is that raised by Senator Grosart and also by Senator Walker. I do not think that is a correct inference. I think there is a circuitous route in the method of getting the proper annuities to the Commissioner, but not as to his authority. By his being made a judge, his authority is not increased but it made clear that he is going to get the pension that a judge would get. That is the way I see it.

So far as the question of his authority goes, it is as it was before. He is not as a judge giving his judgment. He is still giving his report as a commissioner; and as a commissioner, this house has the full right to reject his decision.

My honourable friend quoted from a statement by the Minister, that the power to reject his report would be exercised with great care and hesitancy. But that does not affect the question of jurisdiction; it affects only the question of discretion.

Honourable senators, I am thinking these points through pretty well as I am on my feet, since they did not occur to me until I heard those two speeches. As I follow it, as to the authority of the judge, whether it is the authority of a commissioner made a judge, or the authority of a judge made a commissioner, in either case he is acting as a commissioner in any decision he renders. In his capacity, acting as a commissioner, he is entirely under the control of this Senate. If the Senate does not agree, it may overrule a decision. The fact that he happens to be a judge as well as a commissioner does not in any sense limit the power of the Senate.

I repeat that I can quite understand that whether one of these distinguished lawyers originates a commissioner or as a new commissioner who is also a judge, this house would hesitate, except on very good grounds, to overrule him; but on the question of jurisdiction, our power to do so is absolute.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I wonder if my honourable friend knows that since this man has been appointed a commissioner, he cannot and has not given any rulings or decisions. So all we have now from the honourable senator is that we can overrule his decisions. The Commissioner does not make decisions: he makes recommendations.

Hon. Mr. Power: I can elucidate on that point. When the bill came before us last year it contained a clause to the effect that divorce could only be granted on the "recommendation" of an officer appointed by the Speaker of the Senate. To that phraseology I took very strong objection. Certain changes were made in committee, and were then carried in this house. However, my recollection is clear that when the bill came back to us from the Commons—I believe on the very last day of the session—our phraseology was changed slightly, but the word "report" remained instead of the word "recommendation", to which strong objection was taken in this house.

If my memory serves me aright, the language still is to this effect, that a divorce can only be granted after a report, instead of a recommendation, is made by the Commissioner. So that in effect it is only a report. But with the original bill as it came to us, I do not know what the Senate committee could have done. All it had to do was to say "Yes" to whatever the Commissioner reported.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of resolutions, numbered 252 to 280, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, May 19.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 252, for the relief of Francesco Clemente.

Resolution 253, for the relief of Robert Brooks.

Resolution 254, for the relief of Mina Weiss Zimmerman.

Resolution 255, for the relief of Joan Alice Ainslie Jameson.

Resolution 256, for the relief of Pauline Sharko Martel.

Resolution 257, for the relief of Iren Roth Bak.

Resolution 258, for the relief of Joseph Emile Serge Jean Guy Paquin.

Resolution 259, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Aline Normandeau Bedard.

Resolution 260, for the relief of Patrick Howard Boucher.

Resolution 261, for the relief of Phyllis Sandra Sloan Ostrosky.

Resolution 262, for the relief of Annabelle Susan Silver Sostak.

Resolution 263, for the relief of Paul Bedard.

Resolution 264, for the relief of Ruth Auerbach Bernstein.

Resolution 265, for the relief of William Sharko.

Resolution 266, for the relief of Susan Guttmann Van Den Bergh.

Resolution 267, for the relief of Edith Mary Henderson Kelly.

Resolution 268, for the relief of Stanley Frank White.

Resolution 269, for the relief of Cyril Edward Wood.

Resolution 270, for the relief of Morris Alexander Kulba.

Resolution 271, for the relief of Thomas Wesley Dixon.

Resolution 272, for the relief of Ruth Wiseblatt Ward.

Resolution 273, for the relief of Constance Phyllis Penny Stewart.

Resolution 274, for the relief of Maria Adalgisa (Gisele) Rossignoli Abbruzzese.

Resolution 275, for the relief of Marie Nicole Lacaille Gagnon.

Resolution 276, for the relief of Eva Livia Iranyi Blumberger.

Resolution 277, for the relief of Pauline Abrams Foster.

Resolution 278, for the relief of Walter Barber.

Resolution 279, for the relief of Ethel Mickenberg Agulnik.

Resolution 280 for the relief of Doreen Eleanor Bishop Mulcahy.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

CROWN CORPORATIONS (PROVINCIAL TAXES AND FEES) BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Harold Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-95, respecting payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations.

He said: Honourable senators, unlike some other measures which have gone before this, I submit this is the ideal piece of legislation. It is a measure on which there cannot possibly be any controversy, because it represents the best public and political thinking.

Although the bill is presented on behalf of the Government, it is not the brain child of this Government. On the contrary, it was first introduced by the former government, and was in fact debated in the resolution form during the session of 1962. Subsequently, because of an error in the date of the application of the proposed measure, it managed to find itself somewhere down at the bottom of the heap, was resurrected this year, and is now before us with no major change whatever in the principle involved.

The purpose of the bill is to compel—I use that word advisedly, although it does not appear in the bill—28 crown corporations to pay special taxes to those areas in which they function. The taxes, for example, would be the sales taxes, the gasoline licence taxes and motor vehicle licences. The reasons for this are in the main three-fold—two major reasons I think , and one of lesser importance.

First, many of those agencies are engaged in commercial or semi-commercial operations and are in direct or indirect competition with private interest which is subject, of course, to the payment of taxes. Secondly, provincial agencies already pay the federal sales tax, and this legislation will put the federal agencies in the same position with respect to provincial sales tax. Thirdly—and perhaps as important, although I do not regard it as such—is the fact that certain administrative difficulties have been encountered over the years out of problems arising from sales tax exemptions, which this policy of mutual taxation should avoid.

Honourable senators will find the 28 Crown companies affected listed on page 3 of the bill. They consist essentially of bodies listed in schedules A and D of the Financial Administration Act. However, there are certain exceptions. These are Canadian Arsenals Limited, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, and Defence Construction (1951) Limited, which are listed in Schedule C of the Financial Administration Act. They are excepted from the provisions of this bill, as I understand it, because they are servicing corporations, in the real sense of the word, and are not competitive in any sense, and therefore, it is felt, they ought not to be obliged to pay these three forms of taxes which I have just mentioned.

Five corporations which are not listed in the Financial Administration Act have been added to the original group. They are the Bank of Canada, Canada Council, Canadian Wheat Board, Industrial Development Bank, and the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

These changes, both the additions and the several deletions, have been made to achieve as logical a division as possible between those bodies which are departmental in nature, and those which are not. In other words, while these companies mentioned on page 3 of the bill will pay the taxes already referred to, there is no suggestion that departments of government should do so. That, of course, is consistent with the age-old practice in matters of that kind. The basic intention is that our federal corporations and agencies will be exposed to the three kinds of provincial taxes, but the departments of government will not.

There may be some curiosity as to the amount of money involved in this proposal. I have not been able to ascertain what it will mean in terms of dollars and cents to the provinces affected, but my understanding is that a rather rough approximation of the total moneys involved would be in the nature of $3.5 million annually.

Honourable senators, I am going to wind up briefly, because I see no point in an overly long debate on this matter. I should say that my specific interest, aside from the general principle in which I have always believed, revolves around the crown corporations in my native City of Halifax, where, for example, the National Harbours Board makes a puny, pigmy-like grant in lieu of taxes, and where the Canadian National Railways does likewise. My hope is that this is the first step in a new type of thinking within the federal setup of this country which will admit the rights of provinces, and perhaps municipalities, to collect all taxes, real taxes, as well as these mentioned, from the various agencies of government, departmental or otherwise, which are located in those areas. If that were to happen in Halifax, for example, or in the City of Saint John, as another outstanding example, the tax load carried by the ratepayers of those cities would be considerably reduced.

So, honourable senators, while I present this measure to you in the form in which it was handed to me, I express the pious hope that this is the first hesitant step in the direction of real taxation on all government properties—both crown companies and departments—which I hope will one day be enjoyed by the various areas in this country which house government agencies.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading, I shall propose that it be referred to committee.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, as the honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly) has so eloquently explained to us, this is a bill over which there is not, nor has there been, any controversy. I followed the debate in the other chamber, and there was no controversy there.

Senator Connolly also pointed out that it was an ideal piece of legislation, and explained to us why it should be considered so, because it was prepared by the former Government and was a measure already on the orders in 1962.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is part of its virtue, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is the chief reason; and I am sure my honourable friend from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly) will agree with me.

May I say it was a pleasure to hear the lucid explanation of the honourable senator from Halifax North.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And the melodious voice.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes; he is always eloquent. When he speaks in the chamber we always listen with care, whether he is making a speech on a particular topic or introducing a bill.

He has pointed out that municipalities—and not only that of Halifax but others all across Canada—and provincial governments will benefit. It is a piece of legislation that probably should have been thought of and placed on the statute books many years ago. The bill is straight forward and is designed to cover this anomalous situation which has been pointed out to us.

Under the present circumstances many federal corporations are exempt from certain provincial taxes. The honourable senator has mentioned principally the sales tax in the different provinces, but I believe there are two provinces in Canada which do not have a sales tax. Then there is the gasoline tax and the motor vehicle licensing tax. As we know, the federal Government collects taxes from the provincial governments. We are in agreement with this legislation which will place more money in the hands of the provinces and place crown corporations on all fours with private companies as far as paying taxes is concerned.

I notice that some 27 crown corporations are affected; they are listed in the schedule to the bill, at page 3. These crown corporations are all well known to us and are very important. There are some other crown corporations which possibly will be considered later. Most of these do many millions of dollars worth of business and are well able to pay their share of the cost of the services provided to them by the various provinces and municipalities in which they are located.

I notice that an estimate of the cost was given in the other place during the course of the introduction of the resolution precedent to the bill. As the honourable senator has mentioned, the cost to the federal Government would be in the vicinity of $3½ million. However, the amount involved in the actual taxes that would be paid to the various provinces and municipalities is considerably in excess of this amount, and this is where they are to be the great beneficiaries. To my mind, it is a small price for the federal Government to pay in providing this legislation by which the provinces will collect more revenue and by which there will be better relations between the federal Government and the provinces.

Whilst I am a firm believer in the principle of crown corporations and a great admirer of the useful services they perform, nevertheless I feel there is a tendency to look upon them as a sort of sacred cow. In the past it has been felt they should be more or less excluded from taxation. That concept has been a mistake, one which this bill corrects. In most instances these crown corporations should be and are able to stand on their own feet and assume the same obligations as other corporations. In my own province the collection of taxes will not be large. It will be very large, of course, in provinces like Quebec, Ontario and some of the western ones.

Our government departments do not pay taxes, as crown corporations will under this bill. I think particularly of the Department of National Defence in my own province, where they have huge trucks and army vehicles of all kinds using the roads. They are very hard on the roads, but I am not going to advocate that the departments of the federal Government should pay taxes in that respect. However, it would be of great benefit, because it is quite a burden on smaller provinces like New Brunswick to have to maintain roads when there is a terrific volume of heavy traffic such as we find through Gagetown.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is a great thing to have Camp Gagetown there though, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, it is a good thing to have Gagetown there; that is where I was born.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is another good reason.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I was born within eight miles of it.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Gagetown was very important before they built the camp there, as Senator Farris and I well know.

This is a good bill, and it is going to be welcomed in the provinces. There should be unanimous agreement on it. There was in the other place, and there should be here.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, there is one point in connection with the schedule that interests me. I think it is one possible reason why this bill should be referred to committee for further inquiry.

I notice among the corporations listed is the Canadian Wheat Board, which is virtually a central selling agency for a series of co-operative wheat pools. The question naturally arises concerning the exemption from taxation of a corporation dealing with private enterprise pools.

I am not making any invidious reference to my friend's speech, because it was an excellent one, but it would be enlightening to have an analysis made of the contributing and integral parts of the organization that support the Canadian Wheat Board.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I always look askance at any piece of legislation which brings in new taxation. When I look down the schedule I come to certain organizations, such as Trans-Canada Air Lines, and others that are consistently in arrears at the end of the year, and the federal Government has to supply funds to keep them going.

Where is the federal Government going to obtain the money in this case? From us, from the people. What we are doing is inflicting additional taxation on the people in order to pay taxes to the provincial governments on behalf of these crown corporations listed in the schedule. By doing this I do not think you are relieving the people; rather, you are inflicting additional taxation on the people in order that the provincial governments may get a little more out of it—$3½ million.

I would like to have some explanation on that point when the bill goes to committee, because I do not like additional taxation, and I am sure none of you do.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO MAKE INQUIRY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, May 12, the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Isnor:

> That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, as this is the last item on the Order Paper I would ask the Leader of the Government if he would like me to stand it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If the honourable senator is prepared to proceed I would suggest that he do so, unless there is any desire to the contrary on the part of honourable senators. I know he has been waiting to make his speech for a few days, and if he wishes to proceed now, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: It is not that I particularly wish to proceed, but that I hesitate to inflict myself on the chamber for a second time in one day.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is not an infliction.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank the honourable leader. It is a case of man proposes and the Leader of the Government disposes, as best he can.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I propose and the others dispose.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Quite properly so. It, can, however, be said that being the day of the week and the hour of the day it is, at no time has such an infliction been borne by so few senators.

We have had a very interesting discussion on the motion by Senator Isnor, and there has been no lack of very aggressive selling of the attractions of the provinces. As a matter of fact, at the weekend I was speaking with some advertising friends in Toronto and I told them that if they were looking for well-informed, enthusiastic, and non-exaggerating copywriters they could do no better than to come to the Senate. I also said if they were looking for bigger and better fish stories they would not have to look farther than the front benches.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): On both sides.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I am sorry we have not heard from Senator Choquette, because at the weekend I encountered him along the shore of a lake not far from here; he was in fishing attire, and he had that unmistakable gleam in his eye which showed that he was catching. He has the secret of success, because every weekend in the summertime I see him hauling in fish not 25 miles from here. I know this is a secret he might not wish to share with the 31 million people who cross the border into this country each year. I have heard it said he does not even feel favourable to sharing his secret with his colleagues in the Senate.

We have heard much about what could be done to maintain and improve our position in the tourist industry. Having had some considerable contact with this industry in the past, I was glad to note that every single suggestion that has been made by senators in this debate, with one exception, has been actively under consideration for definitive action in the last few years. The result is that we can say Canada is very definitely among the leaders, if not the leader, of the 80 nations in the world who are competing for the world tourist trade. I say that because at the present time at the government level, both federal and provincial, the combined expenditure on the promotion of this industry amounts to approximately $10 million. Last year about one-third of that was spent by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau and the rest by the provinces.

It is rather interesting to note that there is wide disparity between the expenditures of the various provinces. I realize there is often a good reason for that, so it is no reflection on the provinces at the lower level; but, on the other hand, I think Senator Isnor's committee might look at these figures and indicate to some of the provinces that there may be an area where their own self-interest is perhaps being neglected.

On last year's figures the total expenditure of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau on tourist promotion amounted to 18 cents per capita for the population of Canada. Against that, the combined expenditure of the federal Government and of the provinces is 54 cents.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): What would that include? Does it include overhead?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: This is everything. I have here a document supplied by the travel bureau dated May 14, 1964, headed "Per Capita Spending on Travel Promotion by the Federal Government and the Provinces, Fiscal Year 1962-63." Before I conclude this short recital I am sure the honourable Senator Connolly (Halifax North) will be very happy at the position his province holds in this list.

Looking over the list, Saskatchewan spends 12 cents per capita, Alberta 21, Quebec 25, Newfoundland 26, Ontario and British Columbia grouped together at 35 cents, and, Manitoba 38. And here we get an extraordinary jump as we go to the Mainland Maritime provinces, from a high of 38 cents per capita in Manitoba to 97 cents in New Brunswick, $1.05 in Nova Scotia and $1.48 in Prince Edward Island.

My honourable friend asked if this figure included overhead. I would say that by and large the overhead is rather a small part of the total of all these as I have listed them. Most of the money is spent on newspaper, magazine, television and radio advertising. For example, the Canadian Government Travel Bureau "travel shorts" last year reached 180 million Americans.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Is that the total amount spent in advertising, $180 million?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: No; perhaps I did not make myself clear. The 180 million was the total number of American viewers reached by these travel bureau shorts that are made particularly for the use of television.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Can my honourable friend supply the answer to the question as to how much would be spent on advertising and publicity?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: You are asking for the total amount by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau for last year?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: It would depend to some extent on what you mean by advertising and publicity. If you take radio, television, newspapers, magazines and booklets—

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The whole thing.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I would guess that, out of a total of $3,326,000—I am quoting now from casual memory—the actual expenditures on advertising would be about $2½ million. The rest would go into the maintenance of bureaus at various places and to other activities of the travel bureau, which in the narrow definition you could not call advertising. It is very difficult to break these down. If you take television, for example, do you take only the cost of time or do you take the production and staff required, as well? It is difficult to break down.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Surely there must be figures available showing the costs, including the administrative costs of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. I would like to know about the administrative costs in particular.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: There are such figures, but I am not at this time introducing or sponsoring a bill, and I am not here to defend the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. If I were given notice I would be delighted to undertake to supply the figures.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): On the other hand, there might be some able criticism.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Possibly, but my disposition at the moment would be to say I know of very few criticisms of the current activities of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. I cannot say I have studied it intensely, but I have followed its activities and I have looked at the annual reports which are very comprehensive. I would say to honourable Senator O'Leary and to all honourable senators, that the administrative costs are to be found in a booklet published by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, but I would not undertake at this time to break them down.

The result of all of this activity is well known. There are many indications of it. For instance, the Canadian Government Travel Bureau received last year 1,200,000 inquiries as a direct result of its promotional activities. This is the highest number of inquiries received by any travel bureau anywhere in the world, and is a very good indication of the effectiveness of what it is doing. I repeat that I am not here to defend that bureau. I am just impressed with what I know of its activities.

Last year Canada brought in 10 million tourists. Earlier I mentioned the figure of 31 million, but that figure includes all those who crossed the border, of which 20 million, apparently, were not tourists. Ten million of that number stayed a day or more last year and spent $600 million in Canada. They gave us, for the second year running, a favourable balance in the tourist travel trade. This is extremely important, because for a number of years we had an unfavourable balance, which in turn affected our over-all balance of payments.

I would say on this point that one of the problems—and one which could engage the attention of Senator Isnor's committee—is that although we have a very high rate of tourism we do not have a correspondingly high rate of per capita expenditure. There are many reasons for that. The average per capita expenditure by tourists in Canada last year was less than $10 a day, which is much less than that spent on the average by the Canadian tourist abroad. One reason is that the bulk of our tourists come from places fairly close at hand. Eighty-five per cent or more come from within 500 miles of the border. Some of them are cottagers who live here throughout the summer at more or less the same rates of family expenditure as other Canadians. In the tourist business this is just as important an indicator of the public usefulness of the tourist trade as is the total number.

I come now to some suggestions as to what I think the committee might deal with, among many other things. I suggest, first of all, that the committee take a look at the over-all effort in this field. I have spoken of the Government bureau and the provincial government bureaus; there are also our great transportation systems, the C.N.R., C.P.R., T.C.A. and C.P.A., and also some of our larger hotel and motel associations. However, there do appear to be areas in which some who are benefiting greatly from our tourist business are not, from observations, pulling their weight.

I would suggest to the committee that it takes a very careful look at the oil and gas industry, and perhaps examine some of its representatives. That industry is in many ways the largest single beneficiary of the tourist trade. Ninety-seven per cent of all our American trade, which is 90 per cent of the total, comes into Canada by car. Yet, one seldom sees any indication of any expenditure by the oil and gas companies in promoting tourist trade abroad. Yet they are, as I say, very great beneficiaries.

The second suggestion I would make is that the committee take a careful look at the position of what in the trade is called our tourist "plant". I mentioned the figure of expenditure of less than $10 per capita per day. That is one indication of the fact that our tourist plant is not a highly efficient money-producing plant.

In the past we have had a tendency to think that what tourists wanted in this country was only hunting and fishing, and that if we gave them that they would continue to come. Very comprehensive surveys have been made, and checked over the years for accuracy, and it may surprise honourable senators to know that 54.5 per cent of all the tourists coming to Canada say that their primary reasons for coming are to take part in scenic tours, to go sightseeing, and to view our historic sites. Only 14 per cent say they are interested in fishing, and only 3.5 per cent say they are interested in hunting.

That brings me to the point that the main division of the whole tourist business is as between the promotion effort directed to bringing people in, and the effort directed to giving them something to see and do. I do not think that the latter has even begun to match the former.

The committee might consider whether some of our provincial governments, and perhaps even the federal Government, might either lend money to improve our tourist plant, or actually subsidize such improvements.

There is a good example of this. We have down on the St. Lawrence, as honourable senators know, the St. Lawrence Park, which extends for about 30 miles from Fort Henry to Upper Canada Village. It is estimated that the investment there, made mostly by the provincial government, is about $10 million, but that attraction last year brought in 1,800,000 of the total of 10 million tourists. I am told that this attraction during the few years it has been in operation has paid back the investment of $10 million in both private and public benefits.

Another indication that good plant is a big attraction is the example of Banff, where there is something to see, something to do, and good accommodation. Banff leads all our other attractions in the field of national parks.

The committee might also address itself to the matter of control, which is a very difficult and delicate field. In Ontario, legislation was introduced a few years ago to impose very rigid standards of tourist accommodation. Although the legislation was actually passed, it was withdrawn because the tourist operators did not like it. On the other hand, Nova Scotia, in spite of that experience, has gone ahead recently and developed a measure of control which has upgraded all its tourist plant. I am told by those who are in a position to compare the plant across Canada, that Nova Scotia leads the other provinces in this respect by a substantial margin.

There are many other things that might be mentioned. One of the important minor deficiencies in our approach to this problem is in the field of guide-books. To illustrate what I mean, I will merely say that if one comes to the City of Ottawa he or she would spend a long time getting any information as to what to see and do. Ottawa has many attractions, but nowhere is there a guide-book. When a visitor enters a hotel, or a transportation terminal, nobody hands him a book which says: "This is an interesting and exciting city. While you are here you should see the National Art Gallery, the museums, and the many other attractions."

An Hon. Senator: And Charlotte Whitton.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Yes.

This applies to most cities. I would suggest that the committee take a hard look at the degree to which our cities are or are not pulling their weight. The very fact that our promotion has been as good as it has, and that tourists are coming in, tends to make municipalities and others just sit back and say: "This is fine. Somebody else is bringing them here; they are here anyway, so why worry." But, as honourable senators have said in this debate, the tourists do not return unless they are cared for.

In conclusion, may I say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has set a goal of $1 billion as our tourist income for 1967. This has been accepted as a challenge by the Canadian Travel Bureau and by many others in the business. There will be a tremendous crash program designed to reach this goal. It is a very high goal. It amounts to one-eighth of today's total world tourist business—one-eighth of the business enjoyed by all 80 countries competing. That is what we are looking for in 1967. I am told there is good reason to believe that that goal can be attained.

I am sure that this committee of the Senate, under the direction of Senator Isnor, whom I have already complimented as a world traveller, and whom I now compliment as one who shows every indication of revitalizing this important committee, will make a great contribution to our total tourist trade, and will contribute in large measure towards reaching of the goal of $1 billion in 1967.

Hon. Harold Connolly: Honourable senators, in the same spirit of sweetness and light, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give royal assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting the International Bridge over the St. Clair River known as the Blue Water Bridge.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An Act to amend the Estate Tax Act.

An Act respecting The General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 5, 1964

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-99, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, May 25, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 521)

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Your committee met on May 14, 1964 and begs to submit the following recommendations:

1. In order to bring the salary rates of professional classes in the Library of Parliament in line with the recently revised salaries paid for comparable positions in the public service (T.B. 622520 dated 20 March 1964) we recommend the following salary revisions to be effective 1 July 1963:

Cataloguing Librarian 1
Reference Librarian 1

From:	4560	4740	4920	5160
To:	4800	4980	5160	5340	5520

Cataloguing Librarian 2
Reference Librarian 2

From:	5160	5400	5640	5940
To:	5400	5640	5880	6180

Cataloguing Librarian 3
Reference Librarian 3
Vertical File Specialist

From:	5640	5940	6240	6540
To:	5880	6180	6480	6780

Reference Librarian 4

From:	6240	6540	6840	7140
To:	6600	6900	7200	7500

Chief Cataloguing Librarian
Reference Librarian 5

From:	7140	7500	7860	8220
To:	7620	7980	8340	8700

Chief Reference Librarian
Senior Library Consultant

From:	8220	8580	8940	9300
To:	8640	9000	9380	9780

Assistant Librarian, Library of Parliament

From:	8760	9120	9480	9880	10300
To:	9380	9780	10200	10600	11000	11400

2. In accordance with the establishment proposals approved in the Main Estimates 1964-65, we would recommend that salary revisions and promotions be approved as follows:

(a) that the salary range of Chief Cataloguing Librarian be revised

From:	7620	7980	8340	8700
To:	8640	9000	9380	9780

and that Miss Florence Moore, Chief Cataloguing Librarian, be paid at the rate of $9000 in the new range effective 1 April 1964;

(b) that Mme. Monique Gould, Librarian 4, present salary range (6600-7500) be promoted to Assistant Chief Cataloguing Librarian (new classification) and be paid at the rate of $7620 in the new salary range

7620 7980 8340 8700 effective 1 July 1964;

(c) that Miss Irene Coughlan, Cataloguing Librarian 2, present salary range (5400-6180) be promoted to Cataloguing Librarian 3 and be paid at the rate of $6180 in the new salary range (5580-6780) effective 1 July 1964;

(d) that Mme. Thérèse Foster, Reference Librarian 3, present salary range (5880-6780) be promoted to Reference Librarian 4 and be paid at the rate of $6900 in the new salary range (6600-7500) effective 1 April 1964;

(e) that Mrs. Hazel Manderson, Library Assistant 3, Position No. LP-A-35, present salary range (3930-4380) be promoted to Library Assistant 4 (new classification) and be paid at the rate of $4440 in the new salary range

4260 4440 4620 4800 effective 1 April 1964;

(f) that Mme. Claire Quirouette, Library Assistant 3, Position No. LP-A-34, present salary range (3930-4380) be promoted to Library Assistant 4 (new classification) and be paid at the rate of $4440 in the new salary range

4260 4440 4620 4800 effective 1 April 1964;

(g) that Alexis Vanasse, Library Helper 1, present salary range (2930-3300) be promoted to Library Helper 2 and be paid at the rate of $3520 in the new range (3520-3980) effective 1 April 1964.

3. It is further recommended:

(a) that the position LP-A-8x, Library Clerk 1, salary range (3390-3840) be reclassified as Library Clerk 2, salary range (4050-4500) and that René Bergeron, Library Clerk 1, be promoted to Library Clerk 2, to be paid at the rate of $4050 effective 1 July 1964;

(b) that the position LP-A-13Y, Cleaning Service Woman, be reclassified as Library Helper 1, effective 1 May 1964.

Respectfully submitted,

MAURICE BOURGET
Speaker of the Senate

ALAN MacNAUGHTON
Speaker of the House of Commons
Joint Chairmen

THE SENATE

Monday, May 25, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE UNITED NATIONS

NOTICE OF ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF BOTH HOUSES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I desire to inform the Senate that U Thant, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, will address a joint meeting of the Houses of Parliament in the House of Commons chamber tomorrow morning, Tuesday, May 26, at 10 o'clock.

Seats will be reserved for honourable senators in the main aisle of that chamber, as has been the custom on similar occasions in the past. I would also inform honourable senators that the seats in the Senate gallery of the House of Commons will be held for wives or husbands of senators who desire to attend. Unfortunately, tickets cannot be made available, as that gallery is rather small; so, ladies and gentlemen who wish to attend should arrive fairly early.

CANADIAN CONFERENCE ON FAMILY

DESIGNATION OF FAMILY DAY

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I also desire to announce that the Canadian Conference on the Family, which is sponsored by His Excellency the Governor General and Madame Vanier, will meet in Ottawa from June 7 to June 10. It is the intention of the Governor General to invite the heads of religious denominations in Canada to attend and participate in a special religious observance as part of the opening ceremonies of the conference, to be held on the grounds of Government House, Rideau Hall, Sunday, June 7.

In recognition of this significant meeting, June 7, 1964 is being designated by the Government as "Family Day."

I am sure all honourable senators wish to join me in expressing the hope that the conference will meet with great success.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Does that mean that there will be a Family Day every year, like Mother's Day and Father's Day?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am unable to answer that question. But since we do have a Mother's Day and a Father's Day, it might be appropriate to have a Family Day as well.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copies of letters exchanged between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of the Province of Quebec, dated April 29 and May 14, 1964, on the subject of Federal-Provincial Relations. (English and French texts).

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT (CAPTIVE SALES FINANCING)

SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL TO AMEND—REFERRED TO JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. The Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the subject matter of the following bill has been referred by that house to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit:

Bill C-60, An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (Captive Sales Financing).

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 293 to 331, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO MAKE INQUIRY AND REPORT

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 21, the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Isnor:

That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada and that the committee be authorized to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Harold Connolly: Honourable senators, it seems to me that this debate has been overly long and I wish to reassure you on two points: first, that I shall be brief and, secondly, that I shall not argue that Nova Scotia is the grandest of all the Canadian provinces.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why not?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): I shall not argue that, even though I think it is. As a matter of fact, I participate in this debate for several reasons. The first is based upon my affection and respect for the gentleman who is the Chairman of the Tourist Committee (Hon. Mr. Isnor); my second reason is that this is one debate in which there has not been the least bit of partisanship. Perhaps I should qualify that latter statement.

Honourable senators, my concept of my duties as a member of this Senate is not that I should unduly praise the political party with which I have been associated all my life, or its leaders, any more than I should unduly criticize opposing political parties or their leaders.

As I see it, the function of this Senate is twofold: first, to protect the provinces and, secondly, to review with care and to scrutinize with equal care the legislation which comes here from the other place. In my judgment, the Senate chamber was never intended to be a political arena. Of course, we have the right to maintain our political allegiances, but I submit we have no right to approach problems that come before us with a view to party advantage or disadvantage, as we have so often approached them. Another forum is provided for such tactics.

We do the Senate, the founders of Confederation, and ourselves a great disservice when we permit ourselves to proceed in that way. With all deference, I say that if it were within my power, I would ordain that when men or women become members of this chamber they separate themselves completely from partisan, political activity. I do not know how we can justify the myth, or the fact if you like, that we are a chamber of sober second thought if we allow that sober second thought to be construed according to what we consider to be party need or party desire.

I would hope, therefore, that in so far as it is humanly possible we would avoid that type of bitter, vitriolic partisanship which I have seen displayed here all too frequently.

Honourable senators, I have had a long connection with the tourist industry. I feel that in all the provinces of Canada there has been a belated recognition of the value of that industry. In Nova Scotia, for example, for the major part of our history, no governmental effort was made to attract tourists. The first efforts there were made by steamship companies in the 1850s and by the railway organizations a decade later. In this latter connection, Nova Scotia owes a debt of gratitude to the Dominion Atlantic Railways, a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was this railway organization which, more effectively than any other, saw the value contained in the new-found money which Nova Scotia needed so badly and which could be provided by visitors.

For many years the Canadian Pacific Railway took advantage of that epic of Nova Scotia's foremost developer, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, in his immortal poem Evangeline. That beautiful poem tells so feelingly of the expulsion of the Acadians—a blot that will remain in the history of Nova Scotia as long as history endures.

It was not until 1923, most belatedly, as you will agree, that the government became interested in tourist promotion. In that year a body known as the Tourist Advisory Council was established. I was one of those who were privileged to become a member of that council. As a result of its twelve months' activities the government of Nova Scotia in 1924 set up what became known as the Information Bureau, which in reality was the Nova Scotia Travel Bureau.

It is ironic and pathetic as we look back over the records to read that in its magnanimity and in its consciousness of the great potential within this industry, the Government of Nova Scotia voted the tremendous sum of $2,000 to enhance the tourist attractions of the province. A year later the government was able to report the result of this "vast investment." It had attracted to the province 65,000 visitors, who had spent an undetermined sum of money at that time.

In any event, that was the embryo of the present travel bureau of Nova Scotia, an organization which is well headed, well directed and well staffed. Progress has been so great that last year 740,000 persons visited the little peninsula, and left in that not-too-well-off province the sum of $54 million. This was not achieved without a great deal of hard work. It was just as difficult for the average citizen of Nova Scotia to visualize the importance of new-found money as it was for governments of those far off days; and the inability, or perhaps the unwillingness, of innkeepers and hotelkeepers to cash in on this new-found wealth, delayed the progress of the industry for a long period of years.

Some progress was made in the late thirties. During the war, of course, all activity ceased. Since 1945, however, Nova Scotia has established an excellent record. The consciousness of the people, once aroused, aided and abetted by their native hospitality, made the province, even without its physical assets, a pleasant place to visit. When the vision of the money that could be made spread among more and more of the people, and all the inns and hostelries and cabins faded out of the picture, to be replaced by the most modern form of hotel and motel appurtenances, then the industry started to zoom.

I say in all modesty that Nova Scotia was the first province in Canada to issue a two-colour travel booklet; and I say also, in the same modest spirit, that while there are others on an equally high plane, I believe that no province of Canada surpasses the little province of Nova Scotia in the tourist literature which it produces year after year. The hopes of those in the business are that in the almost immediate future a total of one million tourist visitors will tour Nova Scotia in a single calendar year. I would remind you that that is several hundred thousand more than the total population of the province. One million visitors into Nova Scotia will, I think, be an epic event, aside altogether from the material value, because they will be able to discover that within that little peninsula there live almost 800,000 people, all of whom are well worth knowing. Inarticulate and bashful they may be, but they have that fundamental kindness which sells itself to people from other parts.

I have great hopes for the industry. In the last ten years I have not been as close to it as I used to be, but my heart is with it.

While I speak in that vein may I say to you that, worthy as they are and wholesome as they have always been, there are more people in Nova Scotia than the Scots. There are many English, Irish and French. Perhaps I should have put the French first, for nowhere along the shores of that province or in its hinterland will you find warmer hospitality or more kindness than that which emanates from the French Acadian people who, in many respects, are the backbone of our entire province.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): I pause at this point because I do not want to seem to be boasting. However, I should be glad in private conversation to enlarge upon the remarks I now make, should anyone be interested.

I turn next to speak of the Canadian Travel Bureau. I was interested the other day in the statistics offered by the honourable senator from Pickering (Hon. Mr. Grosart), who had obviously made a close study of them; and I was impressed by his kindliness towards the Canadian Travel Bureau. I have no desire to be otherwise, but I think it would be a mistake to assume that every move the Canadian Travel Bureau makes is a good one and that no errors have been committed by that organization, worthy though it be.

For example, I seriously question the desirability at this time of opening offices in remote parts of the world when we have beyond the border immediately to the south a market of almost 200 million people, and that market has only been scratched. I wonder if we would not be better advised, in the interests of the Canadian people, to apply our acumen, knowledge and sales ability to the people of the United States, rather than opening offices in distant parts of the world. Expansion to distant parts may be worth while a quarter of a century hence, but with the condition of our finances, with the devalued Canadian dollar, and the many things we have in common with the people of the United States, it seems to me that is where our effort should be directed. I would hope to convince my associates on the Tourist Traffic Committee that perhaps we might make a change in some of our policies as effected by the Canadian Travel Bureau, with that point in view.

I hope you will understand me when I say that there are two great tourist events on the horizon that are all-Canadian in their scope. I look askance and aghast at what I see going on—or, perhaps I should say, not going on—at the moment. The centennial year 1967 is less than three years off. We look forward to two tremendous events: the World's Fair at Montreal, and Canada's 100th birthday. It is quite true that the World's Fair is being organized at high Government level, but I submit it is not merely a Montreal or Quebec attraction; it is a Canadian World's Fair, in which all the people of all the provinces of this country should take an active interest. I wonder why the activities of all the travel bureaus across this country have not been harnessed in some fashion, as they could easily be, to propagate this fair upon which the reputation of Canada will either shine resplendently or be dulled.

With regard to Canada's birthday—and without meaning to be unfairly critical— I see the provinces reaching out for every dollar they can get from the federal treasury to build monuments, allegedly to recognize Canada and our hundredth anniversary of Confederation, but really to enhance their own real estate; and yet I see no participation by any provincial tourist bureau across this country thus far.

In my judgment, the commissioner who is in charge of this centennial celebration is a competent person, but I suggest, as you already know, that this job is far too big for any one man, that time is fast slipping away and that the potential will not be reached unless more rapid progress is made in the two and a half years that remain before this big event commences. I propose that the travel bureau of each province of Canada be entrusted with the task of looking after its province's contribution to the things that will attract people and make them conscious of Canada's birthday. All these ten bureaus, working together with the commissioner and his aides and assistants, can make Canada's birthday a really outstanding event. Without that assistance I think there is some danger it will not be as good as it ought to be.

Honourable senators, I said in the beginning the debate has been overly long and I did not intend speaking at any length. I merely leave these suggestions with you, hoping you believe I have nothing to gain by what I have said except the greater welfare of my fellow citizens.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: May I first congratulate honourable Senator Isnor, as Chairman of the Senate Tourist Traffic Committee, on his success in stimulating such interest and action among its members. It is quite obvious that his enthusiasm has rubbed off on the members of his committee, and it is indeed commendable, for the tourist industry is big business in Canada.

The honourable senators who have spoken on tourism have treated us to colourful word pictures and travelogues, taking us right across Canada from coast to coast; the speakers have eulogized their native provinces with the greatest display of supersalesmanship. I compliment them for setting a high price tag on the tourist attractions in their respective areas, for every province in Canada has it particular scenic beauty and charm. It makes one proud to be a Canadian, to belong to our magnificent country, and I am equally proud of my native province, Quebec, about which my colleague Senator Jodoin, from Montreal, addressed you in such eloquent manner. But may I add just a few words about someone in Quebec City who is loved by young and old alike. He is a fantastic, huge character, shaped from 40-odd pounds of papier-mâché: our "Bonhomme Carnaval", who reigns as king during Quebec's Winter Carnival.

Now, honourable senators, so as not to be accused of boasting I shall quote from the January 1964 issue of the Canadian Geographical Journal, which as you know is published by the Royal Canadian Geographical Society. In this particular issue, the first 15 pages are devoted to Quebec's Winter Carnival, with photographs of "Bonhomme Carnaval" and other important features of this winter festival which, by the way, celebrated its tenth anniversary last winter. I quote:

> Quebec has for several years had cause for pride in its unique carnival. The merry-making, laughter, singing and dancing that characterize carnivals the world over are enacted at Quebec on sparkling snow in a bracing climate.
>
> However, the idea of celebrating with rejoicings the period between Christmas and Lent did not originate in 1954 with the first modern Quebec Winter Carnival.
>
> Actually, this city of Champlain held its first carnival in 1880. Looking back over the history of the old capital, we note that a very successful carnival was inaugurated in that year and reached its peak about 1894. We find in those years a foreshadowing of the carnivals of today.

A principal attraction was the presence of the Governor General. There was great excitement in the city when he arrived at the station, greeted by large delegations of Huron and Montagnais Indians, snowshoers and others. There followed a succession of events and festivities, all marked by a spirit of gaiety and good humour. The city was dotted about with lively structures of ice, chief of which was the sparkling palace in front of the Parliament Buildings.

The modern carnival was inaugurated in 1954 by a large group of enterprising businessmen organized as a carnival committee. Like any enterprise of such magnitude, it had its growing pains. Its brief history and the outstanding successes of each succeeding year are a tribute to those who have so amazingly developed it into one of the principal attractions for visitors in all Canada.

However, the prize publicist of them all is certainly the picturesque and unique "Bonhomme Carnaval". Who does not know of him today? To Quebecers he is the embodiment of happiness and good humour. He is popular in towns across Canada and even beyond its borders, in the United States. The Quebec Carnival is marked by his coming. He is welcome everywhere. Every viewer of the Grey Cup football game telecast saw him strolling in the streets of Toronto during the Grey cup parade.

The carnival opens with the crowning of a carnival queen. For this purpose, the division of the area into duchies with historical names is unique in its way. Even the crown and sceptre of our queen are heraldically correct and are based on our history. For some time prior to the carnival, young ladies in each of the seven duchies wage a brisk but friendly competition for the honour of representing it as duchess. After being crowned in their duchies, with all their youthful charm and the devotion of their supporters they assemble side by side for the selection of one of them as queen of the carnival.

In Quebec as in any other city, four elements are necessary to the success of such an event as a carnival: decor, imagination, fantasy and humour. All were in evidence at the tenth Quebec Winter Carnival, held in 1964. The public dances and the various balls, such as the Sorcerers' Ball, and masquerades of all kinds for children and adults as well, were the high spots of the season. Most brilliant of these was the Regency Ball, a glittering pageant of periwigs and lace where celebrities of seven centuries mingled till dawn in jovial friendliness under the patronage of civic and provincial dignitaries. Musicians donned costumes of the period and a city choir sang characteristic Canadian songs.

Each year the fabulous Regency Ball affords to all a unique opportunity to absorb the spirit of the golden age. The costuming is not restricted to any particular period, so there we may meet Henry VIII, Madame de Montespan, Monsignor de Laval, Marie Antoinette, Louis XIV and other historical figures. The Regency Ball affords scope for imagination and humour and also recalls the notable phases in the history of Canada and other countries. "Bonhomme Carnaval" moves jovially from group to group, joking or teasing, or chatting of the glorious days revived in the harmonious setting of the Chateau Frontenac.

It is cold in Quebec, but enthusiasm is warm and infectious, with hundreds of thousands singing in the streets of the old capital and joining in the exciting carnival parade.

The carnival spirit also touches off a program of amusements of all kinds—games, tournaments, sporting competitions. The Pee-Wee Hockey Tournament is one of the principal activities, and boys' hockey clubs from all parts of America journey to Quebec to take part in the tournament. There you meet lads from Boston, Providence and other United States cities and many centres across Canada. The competition lasts two weeks from nine in the morning to nine at night. The boys are accommodated in Quebec homes. More than 100,000 people crowd the Coliseum to watch the performance of these young bantams.

Then there is the International Curling Bonspiel, the first activity held at the beginning of the carnival, to determine the curling championship. The curlers flood Quebec with their gay songs and boisterous laughter. They kindle the festive spirit before the carnival itself is officially opened.

The dogsled race, which lasts several days, lends another touch with a typically local flavour, and many other outdoor sports add to the colourful scene. The torchlight descent on skis at Lake Beauport, is a spectacle of unforgettable splendour. Other competitions of various kinds are held out of doors, such as the barrel race on one of the city's main streets; and there are masquerades of various kinds on outdoor rinks in every corner of the city.

One of the main and exclusive attractions at Quebec is undoubtedly the canoe race. Some twenty sturdy canoes, each with a crew of four, race across the river from Quebec to Levis and back. The crews need skill as well as muscle, now paddling at top speed through open reaches of water, now leaping and dragging their boats from ice floe to ice floe to be first at the finish. The mighty St. Lawrence with snowclad banks and icy weather provides the setting.

Besides all these organized activities, there are public outdoor dances every night in the principal squares of the city of Champlain; in Jacques-Cartier Square, d'Youville Square, the 'Rue du Carnaval' and the Carnival Village.

The organizers of the carnival need imagination to embellish and illuminate the old capital. In 1963 and 1964 they reconstructed a typical old Quebec village, correct to the last detail, in one of the principal city parks. There was the church of former days, the traditional village general store, a dance hall, the office of the 'mairie' etc. Various amusements were provided there every evening. This little town in miniature recalled the early days of Quebec, when the colonists had to build with their own hands their dwellings made of logs and heated by a little stove in the middle of the room.

Why does the Quebec Winter Carnival gain momentum and popularity while similar efforts elsewhere have failed? Quebec herself supplies the answer. It is 'her' carnival, supported and enjoyed by her own citizens far beyond any participation by visitors, welcome as they are to join in. The originality, gaiety, colour and magnitude of the celebrations is each year a spontaneous reaction of the old city to the challenge of a long winter with its frosty air and deep mantle of snow. The Quebec Winter Carnival, living up to its reputation of being the biggest winter carnival in the world is celebrated each year during a 20-day period preceding Mardi Gras. "Bonhomme Carnaval," that animated snowman, the living symbol of gaiety, reigns over all the carnival festivities.

One of the interesting and definite characteristics of Quebec's carnival is that it is organized, as I have said, with the participation of, and designed for the amusement of the local population itself. In this way, tourists and out-of-town visitors arriving for the event have the pleasing sense of joining in a genuine movement of gaiety and revelry already established.

The Quebec Winter Carnival, now a permanent feature in Quebec City, has already demonstrated its importance in the field of tourist promotion. Last winter, its tenth anniversary, over 300,000 persons came to the city during the carnival, and the chamber of commerce study indicated that they spent well over $10 million.

Again I quote, this time from the Chronicle-Telegraph:

> Quebec City has been called the world's most exciting 'all year round' vacation centre. For rare indeed are the tourist resorts that can count on two full active seasons each year.

Therefore, it is up to Quebecers to boost the popularity of our city. So, I thank you, honourable senators, for giving me this opportunity of doing just that.

May I extend an invitation to all honourable senators to come to our carnival and to join in the fun. Who knows, maybe it could be arranged to have jolly "Bonhomme Carnaval" in person come to Ottawa to issue a special invitation to the honourable members of the Senate, and I hope the Speaker will grant him the privilege of remaining in the gallery. Loved as he is by all who see him—by royalists and separatists alike—Quebec's papier-mâché Bonhomme could well become a symbol of understanding and unity in this era of turbulence and confusion.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, after we heard from Senator Connolly, my namesake from Halifax North, I knew it would be very difficult to follow his great oratorical performance; it is even more difficult, now that we have heard the honourable Senator Quart.

I commend Senator Quart particularly for what she has said, because she pointed up one important aspect of the tourist industry that has not had the kind of attention in the past that I am sure it is bound to get in the future. I refer to the attractions that can be developed during the cold winter months when snow covers the country.

The honourable senator from Halifax North spoke about the importance of the work of this committee in the context of the two events that are to take place in 1967. The doing of something constructive in respect to these two great national events seems to me to be of particular importance at this time. We are all indebted to him, I am sure, for bringing this so forcibly to our attention.

At the outset I should say that the Chairman of the Tourist Traffic Committee (Hon. Mr. Isnor), who is rather anxious to get on with the work of this committee, has suggested that I, by speaking for a few minutes tonight, might conclude this debate. That I am very happy to do.

I congratulate Senator Isnor for his enterprise and for the debate he has inspired in this chamber, for he has drawn speeches from every province of the country. If I may say so, he is performing in the tradition of other very successful past chairmen of this committee, notably Senator Dennis, Senator Buchanan and Senator Horner. He has induced not only good and interesting speeches, but speeches which have persuaded some of the bigger fish, particularly those in the waters of Saskatchewan, to come to the surface and exhibit themselves. I am sure we all regret that the fish Senator Hollett told us he caught in the waters of Newfoundland never had its dimensions recorded. I hope that some time soon the senator will correct that deficiency.

The purpose of the committee, of course, is to stimulate and encourage every area of activity that can be encouraged and stimulated by the tourist industry of this country. It is interested in attracting people to Canada for the primary purpose of enjoying a holiday, but also for the purpose of having them know this country and its people. Without seeming to pat ourselves on the back, I think this should be a rewarding experience for people outside our borders.

But the committee has also the purpose of promoting tourist travel within Canada. This is a most praiseworthy object, because if it is achieved it is bound to develop a pride in Canadians in what they have in their own country. Travel, a knowledge of the different parts of the country, and having friends there, develops within an individual a sense of national consciousness which is all to the good.

We cannot ignore the very significant fact that Canadians are travelling more and more within their own country, as well as travelling abroad. Facilities for foreign travel at the present time are very good. We should never discourage our people from travelling to Europe, to the East, or to Africa. Foreign travel is educational as well as recreational. It is good for our people, and their appearance in foreign countries as ambassadors of Canada is a good thing.

I cannot speak in this debate, of course, without making some reference to the city in which I was born, and in which this Parliament sits. Ottawa is one of the most attractive cities of Canada, and it is a unique place. The Parliament Buildings, situated as they are on a rocky promontory over a mighty river, occupy such a site as very few other national capitals have. The Ottawa River, which was traversed by explorers, by missionaries and by traders, is within a stone's throw of the chamber in which we sit.

People who visit this city should think not only about the architecture of the buildings, but also of the significance and the symbolism of them. For example, on one side of Sussex Drive is the home of the Queen's first minister, and opposite it is Rideau Hall, symbolic of the contribution made in the early days of this country by people from the United Kingdom. On one side of the home of the Queen's first minister is the beautiful embassy of France, symbolic of the great contribution made to Canada by people from that country.

The Parliament Buildings themselves are structures of beauty and dignity. They were built that way purposely. They are monuments to our continuing devotion to parliamentary democracy. The more we impress our people with this great purpose, the better we serve democracy and freedom.

There are other symbolic buildings in this city. The Supreme Court is also situated on the rocky promontory overlooking the river. It is a symbol of the maturity and sophistication of Canada's legal institutions. Indeed, it is a symbol of the relatively new independence of the country. On Sussex Drive is the National Archives, the repository of the title deeds of the nation.

We have developed, too, the National Capital Plan, under the guidance of the National Capital Commission. This plan was thought of originally as being a memorial to the men and women who served Canada, and who died for Canada in two wars. But, I think it is more than that. The idea of a national capital can be a symbol of the nation. It is true that roads, bricks and mortar alone cannot do that. But together they can symbolize the spiritual aspirations of a young and vibrant country.

Honourable senators, I hope the committee will approach its terms of reference on a plane that is not only businesslike but somewhat higher. Last fall the 18th Federal-Provincial Tourist Conference was held in the Chateau Laurier, in Ottawa, under the auspices of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It was attended by the officers of that department, who are directly in charge of the tourist traffic business. It was attended also by representatives of the tourist industry from all provinces of Canada and the Northern Territories. The reports of the speeches and the arrangements made at that meeting are available. I hope the committee will look to them, as they may contain helpful suggestions for its guidance.

I hope also that the committee will think of what the tourist might take back to his home after his visit. Nothing could be more useful to him and to our country than that he should know what he saw. Therefore, literature not only to attract him but to instruct him should hold an important place in our efforts.

Honourable senators who have travelled to places in Europe and in the United States know that instinctively tourists go to the newsstands and bookshelves for pamphlets and books about the history of the places they have visited.

I wonder if many honourable senators have visited Williamsburg near Richmond, Virginia. There an old establishment of the pre-revolutionary days has been reconditioned and restored, particularly by the munificence of the Rockefeller Foundation. The lectures, moving pictures and literature available there constitute some of the most attractive features of a visit to that historic place.

Senator Grosart said the other afternoon that many visitors are interested primarily in our scenery and not so much in the sporting side of a holiday. Some of our literature might well reflect the views expressed by some of our good Canadian poets about the kind of country we have.

For example, E. J. Pratt, the brother of our late colleague Senator Pratt, wrote in "Brebeuf and His Brethren":

> Skylines unknown to maps broke from the mists
> And there was laughter on the seas.

That poem is full of the kind of imagery which makes more meaningful the Canadian scene as we have it in so many of our provinces.

Charles Sangster wrote:

> Our lakes are deep and wide,
> Our fields and forests broad;

Charles G. D. Roberts said:

> Grey rocks, and greyer sea,
> And surf along the shore—

Wilfred Campbell, writing about one of the seasons, said in "October Morning":

> Bright, pallid, changing, chill October morn;
> Across your windy, keen exhilarant air,
> You loom.

Frederick Scott, writing about the lake country, in "The Unnamed Lake" said:

> It sleeps among the thousand hills
> Where no man ever trod,

And only nature's music fills
The silences of God.

Robert W. Service, whose other poems we know, but perhaps not one about "The Mountain and the Lake", said:

I know a mountain thrilling to the stars,
Peerless and pure, and pinnacled with snow;

Then we have E. Pauline Johnson, who wrote:

West wind, blow from your prairie nest,
Blow from the mountains, blow from the west.

I am sure these words have a special inner meaning to people who live in western Canada. She spoke also about the harvest time and in her poem of that name she spoke of the prairies:

Pillowed and hushed on the silent plain,
Wrapped in her mantle of golden grain.

Another poet whose verse might be appropriate, is Arthur Stringer, who wrote these lines in his poem "Northern Pines":

And I see the glooming pine-lands,
And I thrill to the Northland cold,
Where the sunset falls in silence
On the hills of gloom and gold!

These are beautiful expressions descriptive of the land we live in, of the land we love. These are literary gems. I do not say that every tourist would wish to spend his time reading poetry. But by exposing him to this kind of production we do him a favour, and we certainly do not downgrade Canada and her writers.

Honourable senators, I am sure this committee will perform a notable function not only for the Senate but for the tourist industry.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, many years ago I attended a school concert at Christmas, where the most popular speaker was the reverend gentleman who, when the audience had listened to a fine concert and to other speakers, made a speech of two words only: "Merry Christmas." He received wonderful applause. I do not expect applause, but I intend to make almost as short a speech this evening.

I am reminded of another well-known clergyman who at dinner one evening wore a puzzled expression, scratched his head, and asked his family: "I wonder what I should talk about tomorrow?" His son, a bright boy, replied, "About two minutes."

Honourable senators, I rise to thank all those who took part in the debate. I appreciate that every province from Newfoundland to British Columbia has been represented. Including this evening's speakers, 19 senators, whose names I have noted, took part and said some fine things about our country. They have been kind to me, as the chairman of the committee, and I close with these few words: I thank you, one and all.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report dated May 14, 1964 of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the report be adopted.

Report adopted.

GENEVA CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. B. Baird moved the second reading of Bill S-25, respecting the Geneva Conventions, 1949.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-25, which it is my privilege to move on second reading, seeks explicit statutory approval of the international conventions which are appended as Schedules I, II, III and IV to the bill, as follows:

I. Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field.

II. Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea.

III. Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War.

IV. Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.

Most of the requirements prescribed in the conventions can be satisfied under existing Canadian legislation. Consequently, the bill now before us seeks: First, to discharge the obligations arising from articles common to the four conventions to bring to trial in Canadian courts persons who have committed "grave breaches" as listed in the conventions, regardless of their nationality or a place where the grave breach was committed. For this purpose, the relevant offence sections of the Criminal Code are given extra-territorial effect. This is provided for by Part I of Bill S-25.

Secondly, to treat as members of the Canadian armed forces, for purposes of criminal and disciplinary proceedings against them, prisoners of war held by Canada. To this end, Clause 7 of Part II of the bill provides that prisoners of war held by Canada be subject to the Code of Service Discipline defined in the National Defence Act, thus placing them under the jurisdiction of Canadian service tribunals as if they were members of the Canadian forces.

Thirdly, to afford to prisoners of war and civilian internees in Canadian hands specific judicial safeguards when they are brought for trial during the appeal period and in the execution of a major sentence imposed on any such protected person.

Honourable senators, while I do not propose to analyze in any detail the conventions set out in the schedules to this bill, it might be of assistance if I spoke briefly of their development and significance.

The present text of these Geneva Conventions is the result of a development dating from 1864, when the original convention for the amelioration of the condition of soldiers in armies in the field was signed. In 1906, and again in 1929, revisions were made at Geneva of the original 1864 convention. In 1929 also a new convention relative to the treatment of prisoners of war was drawn up and signed. Canada ratified both the 1929 Geneva Conventions in 1933.

In 1945 a general movement began for the revision of these conventions, which resulted in a conference at Geneva in 1947, an International Red Cross Conference in Stockholm in August 1948 and, finally, in a diplomatic conference for the establishment of international conventions for the protection of victims of war, held at Geneva in 1949. Fifty-nine governments were represented at the diplomatic conference.

The first three of the 1949 Geneva Conventions represent a revision and a modification of the earlier international conventions; in some respects they afford greater protection, and in others they are more practical than the earlier ones. The fourth convention, relating to the treatment of civilians, is now in form and is designed to afford protection to categories of civilians who are particularly exposed to mistreatment in time of war.

The need for the convention has long been recognized, and has been particularly urged by those European countries whose populations had been the victims of aggression during the last war.

Each of the four conventions contains certain general provisions common to all of them, which deal with its application and the mechanics of its enforcement. These common articles contain provisions for the application of the conventions to armed conflicts not of an international character, as well as to formally declared warefare; to resistance fighters or partisans who are entitled to protection; to all protected persons, without discrimination as to race, colour, sex or birth, and for the appointment of a protecting power to act in the interest of nationals of a belligerent country.

Honourable senators will note that under section 9 of the bill where, in legal proceedings, some doubt arises as to whether a state of war or armed conflict existed at any given time or place, a conclusive certificate shall issue from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In addition to such common articles, each of the four conventions contains specific provisions related to its own particular field. The first of these, the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Conditions of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, has the longest history of any of the Red Cross conventions. Its source is the convention similar in name and purpose, which was signed in Geneva in 1864. Its basic purpose is to ensure respect and protection of the wounded and sick and dead in the field, and also medical personnel and establishments. Military chaplains are accorded the same treatment as medical personnel.

The second of the four schedules is the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea, referred to as "Maritime Convention." It adopts the principles of Convention I and applies them to the conditions of maritime warfare. In so far as it departs from the provisions of the convention for the wounded and sick, it does so by reason of conditions peculiar to the conduct of war at sea.

This brings me to Schedule III, the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War. It is based on the 1929 Prisoners of War Convention, and contains 143 articles, as compared with 64 and 63 respectively for Conventions I and II. It provides protection for the prisoner from the time he falls into enemy hands until final release and repatriation.

It therefore becomes of prime importance to discover who comes within the definition of a "prisoner of war." It includes not captured soldiers alone, in the traditional sense, but also persons accompanying the forces. For example, war correspondents and welfare workers are given the status of prisoners of war; crews of merchant vessels and civil aircraft of the belligerents fall within the definition. Included as well are members of organized resistance movements, and even inhabitants of non-occupied territory who lacking time to organize themselves spontaneously spring to arms to resist an invader, provided they carry arms openly and respect the laws and customs of war. If there is doubt as to a belligerent's status, he must be afforded the protection of the convention until it is determined.

The last is a new definition. The fourth convention known as the Civilian Convention, is new in form and is designed to afford protection to categories of civilians who are particularly exposed to mistreatment in time of war. Previously there were few rules for the protection of civilians in wartime. The fourth Hague Convention of 1907 provided certain rules for the protection of civilians in occupied territory, which were admittedly inadequate and lacked precision, but they were the only rules in existence during the First and Second World Wars.

The Geneva Civilian Convention of 1949 goes far beyond The Hague rules in endeavouring to ensure humane treatment for civilians in wartime. The need for an international convention on this subject was brought home by the lessons of World War II when, it is estimated, war crimes were the cause of more loss of life than military operations. The Geneva Civilian Convention of 1949 is a charter of fundamental rights for civilians in time of war. It attempts to give to civilians those rights and safeguards which have been established for prisoners of war, the wounded and sick military personnel.

Honourable senators, in closing may I say that none of the conventions is inconsistent with former conventions by which Canada is bound. There may be room for differences on points of detail, in the conventions, but I doubt if there is any room for disagreement with the fundamental principles upon which they are all based, and their ratification by Canada would be in keeping with this country's traditions of record for individual rights, human freedoms and the welfare of man.

I therefore hope that second reading will be accorded this legislation and that it will then be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for detailed study and examination.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, debate adjourned.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

MOTION TO EMPOWER COMMITTEE TO STUDY REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, May 13, the adjourned debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Thorvaldson:

> That the fifty-fourth report of the Department of External Affairs, covering the calendar year 1963, laid before the House on February 25th, 1964, pursuant to section 6 of the External Affairs Act be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for consideration.
>
> That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I would like to go on record in support of Senator Thorvaldson's motion which, in effect, would make the Standing Committee on External Relations a useful and, I hope, indispensable instrument for the study of Canadian external relations and of the pursuance of Government policies on the international level. I am sure the chamber is grateful to him for his comprehensive survey of Canada's foreign affairs for the year 1963.

I agree with Senator Grosart's arguments concerning the expediency of this matter, which certainly is in the public interest. There are many members of the Senate whose great knowledge, ability and experience could be used beneficially for Canada in the solution of her problems in international affairs.

Senator Lambert's observation that perhaps the tendency of Canadian governments was simply to deal with external relations and that perhaps the time has come to consider seriously a foreign policy, warrants deep thought. The fact that many senators can and are willing to devote their whole life to Canada's international affairs can greatly aid governments in the pursuit of a long-range and stable foreign policy, which would be able to adapt itself readily to changing circumstances and conditions.

If Canada desires to continue her role as a leader of the increasing number of middle nations of the world, her principles of foreign policy must be constructive and lucid, inspiring confidence in all nations who are striving to achieve peace, progress, prosperity, justice, co-operation, freedom and democracy.

Honourable senators, I am taking this opportunity to make an appraisal of Canadian policy in the United Nations regarding the Soviet Union. Having been a senatorial observer in the Canadian delegation to the Eighteenth General Assembly of the United Nations last fall and having lectured for many years at university on Russian, Soviet and Eastern European history, I believe that I have a contribution to make in this field.

While at the United Nations I was privileged to see and hear the late President of the United States, John Fitzgerald Kennedy, deliver his last speech to that assembly. His tragic assassination on November 22, 1963, caused a tremendous loss not only to our southern neighbour but to all freedom-loving mankind. Canadians mourned his death as if he were one of our own. In his short term of office, the young president—for Kennedy was only 46 years of age when he was ruthlessly shot down—proved that he was a great statesman, possessing a keen insight into the human struggle of the twentieth century and a vision of the future of a rapidly changing world.

Kennedy's ideas, so eloquently and profoundly expressed by him, stir all men of reason and good faith. His comprehension of the essence of the struggle of humanity and the highest values of mankind is clearly evident in his famous speech to the Senate of the United States on July 2, 1957, on the eve of the celebration of American independence. Here is an extract from that speech.

> The most powerful single force in the world today is neither communism nor capitalism, neither the H-bomb nor the guided missile; it is man's eternal desire to be free and independent.

Kennedy, who at that time was a senator, followed up by stating that the single most important test of United States foreign policy is what should be done to further man's desire to be free. It is a test that should as well be applied to Canadian foreign policy.

Kennedy perceived that the direction of mankind was not toward uniformity but rather toward "a world based on diversity, self-determination, freedom." As an historian and a philosopher, when he was addressing a university convocation in 1962, the late President noted that the emerging world would inevitably reject the communist concept of a monolithic world. Here is the significant part of that speech:

> No one who examines the modern world can doubt that the great currents of history are carrying the world away from the monolithic idea toward the pluralistic idea—away from communism and toward national independence and freedom. No one can doubt that the wave of the future is not conquest of the world by a single dogmatic creed but the liberation of the diverse energies of free nations and free men.

The greatest enemy of the freedom of man and nations is imperialism with its attendant colonialism. Empires, however, have risen and fallen. In our age we have witnessed the fall of the Austrian Hapsburg Empire, the Russian Tsarist Empire, and others, as these are not the natural condition of mankind today. Britain, France and other colonial powers have been progressively relinquishing their control over their colonial territories.

The liberation of man and nations, which was ushered in by the French Revolution, has become the spirit of our age. For example, we have witnessed the rapid decolonization of Africa. A little over a decade ago only four independent states existed in Africa. Today there are 35 independent states, of which 26 are seven years old or less.

The United Nations, which began its life 20 years ago with 51 members, today has 113, more than double its original membership, and during that time almost one billion people have achieved their independence. In its efforts to bring an end to the era of colonialism, the United Nations has helped many peoples to gain their independence and statehood.

With the disappearance of imperialism and colonialism throughout most of the world, the great paradox of our age is the existence of a United Nations member, the Soviet Union, which has emerged as the world's greatest imperialist power. It is most ironical that the U.S.S.R., while steadily expanding, has been the loudest in the United Nations in denouncing imperialism. The greatest threat to the freedom and independence of man and nations and to the peace of the world today is Soviet Russian imperialism, under the guise of spreading revolutionary socialism and communism to all peoples.

We can be proud that Canada was one of the first in the United Nations to challenge Russian colonialism. In his famous speech of September 26, 1960, Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker reminded Khrushchev of the Soviet declaration for "the complete and final elimination of colonial regimes." Diefenbaker then presented the record of Britain and France regarding the elimination of colonialism:

> Since the last war seventeen colonial areas and territories, comprising more than 40 million people, have been brought to complete freedom by France. In the same period, fourteen colonies and territories, comprising half a billion people, have achieved complete freedom within the Commonwealth...this with the approval, the encouragement and the guidance of the United Nations, the Commonwealth and France. There are few here that can speak with the authority of Canada on the subject of colonialism, for Canada was once a colony of both France and the United Kingdom. We were the first country which evolved over a hundred years ago by constitutional processes from colonial status to independence without severing the family connection.

Later the Canadian Prime Minister posed the following questions:

> How many human beings have been liberated by the U.S.S.R.? . . . How are we to reconcile the tragedy of the Hungarian uprising in 1956? . . . What of > Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia? What of the freedom-loving Ukrainians and many other Eastern European peoples? . . .

And very emphatically he stated:

> There can be no double standard in international affairs.

Our Prime Minister later elaborated his views to a large gathering of ethnic groups in Toronto on November 22, 1961. I quote for the record:

> The Soviet Union, while pretending otherwise, is a colonial power and a colossus of empires.
>
> It dominates, subjugates, and exploits vast areas of Asia and of the Caucasus, initially colonized in the nineteenth century and earlier by Imperial Russia, using them as a source of cheap raw materials, cheap labour, and as a captive market.
>
> Furthermore, the Soviet Union, by force of arms, has deprived highly developed countries of their independence, deported tens of thousands of their citizens to misery and death, exploited their riches, and ruthlessly suppressed every attempt on the part of their people to maintain any semblance of national identity . . .
>
> This was the course followed in 1919 when the Red Army trampled on the newly-attained independence of the Ukraine. This occurred while the new Bolshevik Government of Russia was piously declaring that, under its new nationality policy, every part of the former Russian Empire was free to go its own way. The same story could be told of Trans-Caucasia and Central Asia.
>
> Soviet representatives will tell us that the peoples of these subject countries invited the Soviet Army to invade them because what they wanted most was to become part of the Soviet Union.
>
> Is there any sovereign state in the world—independent, democratic, economically vigorous and having a high standard of living—which would willingly invite military occupation and political subjugation by a large neighbour? Would such subjugation be welcomed when that neighbour had a lower living standard, had no democratic institutions, and was under the rule of dictatorship?
>
> No free country would invite such invasion and subjugation. The peoples of the Ukraine, the Baltic countries, or other Eastern European countries or Trans-Caucasia and Central Asia did not invite it. They had it thrust upon them. They were never given an opportunity to choose freedom. They are still being denied the right by the U.S.S.R., which the U.S.S.R. contends should be the right of all peoples.
>
> Is the Soviet Union to be the only colonial power remaining in the world? Why should the Soviet empire be more sacrosanct than any other? Different rules do not and should not apply to Soviet imperialists. There must be no double standards in the United Nations.
>
> The United Nations Declaration makes no distinction as to the colour or race of people subjected to alien domination and exploitation, it does not qualify the right of peoples to self-determination. It uses the all-embracing word 'all' in the preamble that 'all peoples have an inalienable right to complete freedom, the exercise of their sovereignty, and the integrity of their national territory.'

The United States took a firm stand against Soviet imperialism at the Sixteenth General Assembly in the fall of 1961. President Kennedy expressed American sympathy and support for the continuing tide of self-determination in the following statement:

> But that is why there is no ignoring the fact that the tide of self-determination has not yet reached the Communist empire, where a population far larger than that officially termed 'dependent' lives under governments installed by foreign troops instead of free institutions—under a system which knows only one party and one belief—which suppresses free debate, free elections, free newspapers, free books, and free trade unions—which builds a wall to keep truth a stranger and its own citizens prisoners. Let us have the choice and the practice of free plebiscites in every corner of the globe.

The American Ambassador to the United Nations, Mr. Adlai Stevenson, at the same session, on November 25, 1961, condemned all forms of colonialism and urged the United Nations to focus attention on the colonialism of the Soviet Union by applying the key of self-determination. He related the historical events of the Soviet conquest of several peoples who had established independent states after the fall of the Russian monarchy at the end of the First World War, noting how the Bolsheviks employed a double standard with complete impunity. This is the reference to Ukraine, one of the large so-called "republics" of the Soviet Union and a voting member of the United Nations:

> We are told that the peoples of the Soviet Union enjoy the right of self-determination. Indeed the Soviet regime at its inception issued a Declaration of Rights which proclaimed 'the right of the nations of Russia to free self-determination including the right to secede and form independent states'.

> How did this 'right' work in practice? An independent Ukrainian Republic was recognized by the Bolsheviks in 1917, but in 1917 they established a rival republic in Kharkov. In July 1923, with the help of the Red Army, a Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic was established and incorporated into the U.S.S.R.

Ambassador Stevenson then explained how the Soviet Government attempted to justify the double standard:

> The right of self-determination has never been accepted for its own dependent areas by the Soviet Government. Stalin in 1923 explained that 'there are instances when the right of self-determination comes into conflict with another, higher right, the right of the working class to fortify its own power. In such cases the right of self-determination cannot be and must not serve as an obstacle to the realization of the right of the working class to its own dictatorship. The former must give way to the latter.' In short, self-determination is a right which can only be upheld when the peoples concerned have not fallen under Communist domination.

Stevenson warned the United Nations members that the ascendancy of the smiling Khrushchev has brought no changes in the Soviet nationality policy, whose announced design was to eradicate all national differences between the diverse nationalities and the Great Russian model. The ambassador called attention to the Soviet Communist Party program, which lamented that "the obliteration of national features, particularly of the language differences, is a considerably longer process than the obliteration of class differences." Khrushchev's speech to the 22nd Congress of the Party warned that "even the slightest vestiges of nationalism should be eradicated with uncompromising Bolshevik determination."

Stevenson concluded:

> This is the unique aspect of Soviet colonialism—an aspect that differentiates it from all other historical examples of one state's suppression of another's freedom. Through the total state controls of mass culture, propaganda, education, and movement, the Soviets seeks to wipe out forever the national characteristics that differentiate the Turk from the Ukrainian, the Kazakh from the Armenian, the non-Russian from the Russian. They not only seek the eradication of differences and the suppression of freedom, but the eradication of the desire for freedom.

At the Seventeenth General Assembly of the United Nations in 1962, the Canadian and American policies continued to be identical with respect to Russian imperialism. The Canadian representative, Mr. Heath Macquarrie, M.P., on November 23, reiterated the original stand of Prime Minister Diefenbaker, in these words:

> But what about the position of subject peoples within the Soviet empire? Assessments may vary but there are about 96 million people under Soviet rule who have never been permitted to exercise the right of self-determination which the U.S.S.R. so loudly proclaims for others. It is a unique and disturbing phenomenon at this time in world affairs, when one of the highest aspirations of mankind is the peaceful and orderly evolution to viable freedom for all dependent peoples, that the U.S.S.R. should continue to deny the rights of free election and expression to subject nations under its domination...
>
> Consistent with the position outlined by the Prime Minister, the Canadian Government has continued to urge that the focus of United Nations' attention be brought to bear on conditions within the Soviet empire and more particularly on the denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms. These conditions should be placed in the context of all Assembly discussions about these rights and freedoms and about the status of dependent peoples everywhere. Our aim is to provide perspective for the strident demands which the U.S.S.R. makes on behalf of others for rights and benefits, denied the subject peoples of the Soviet empire.

In view of the harmony of Canada and the United States regarding Soviet Russian imperialism, one would have expected a stronger combined effort at the Eighteenth General Assembly of the United Nations last fall. The American delegate, Mr. Yates, delivered a speech on December 4, 1963, pointing out that "fortunately for the rest of the world, and fortunately perhaps for the Soviets themselves in the long run, this new empire is tending to crack up."

Referring to the fact that the United Kingdom, France and other powers had granted independence to their formerly colonial territories, he asked outrightly, "Can the Soviet Union point to one territory that it has surrendered?" And answered, "It cannot". He called upon the nations of the world "to make sure that every people now under colonial domination is given the chance to exercise the right as well as the pure form of self-determination" according to the promise of the United Nations Charter for all peoples.

In my capacity as senatorial observer I urged the Canadian delegation of the present government, in our conferences, to support the stand of the United States Government and the former Canadian Government. The response was not forthcoming. It appears that the new Canadian Government decided to pursue a policy of noncommitment, ostensibly in view of the impending wheat sales to the Soviet Union at that time. The fact remains, however, that the sale of wheat to the U.S.S.R. by the former Government of Mr. Diefenbaker did not prevent him from censuring Soviet Russian imperialism and championing the cause of subjugated peoples, as a matter of principle.

It is my belief that this noncommital attitude of the Canadian Government in this issue and many other instances considerably tarnished our image in the United Nations, which means throughout a great part of the world. One of the Canadian journalists, Bruce Phillips, wrote an article in the Ottawa Citizen of December 11, 1963, entitled "Fence-sitting begins to hurt." It reads:

> United Nations, N.Y.—The Canadian delegates here are getting to be known among their colleagues from other parts of the world as the Old Abstainers from the Faraway Woods.
>
> And they are not talking about Canadian consumption at the bar in the delegates' lounge, either, which is at least on a par with the best of them from the rest of the globe.
>
> What they mean is Canada's voting record in the General Assembly and in the U.N. committees, which this year includes an unprecedented number of issues on which the Canadian delegation has taken no official position.
>
> There are good reasons for this; at least, the Canadian spokesmen believe they are good reasons. The fact remains that Canada's careful fence-sitting at the United Nations this year is costing the country prestige among the small and new nations whom Canada has tried most energetically to influence.

The annual celebrations by the Ukrainians in Canada and throughout the free world of the Act of January 22, 1918, by which the Ukrainian Parliament proclaimed the independence of Ukraine, serve to remind the free nations of the world that the Ukrainians are an old nation, which had been subjugated by the Russian tsars and finally realized her right to self-determination. The establishment of an independent Ukrainian National Republic was the rejection of Russian imperialism and colonialism in all their forms. The new state rejected the autocracy and tyranny of the tsars and the dictatorship of a single party which was instituted by Lenin. The Act of January 22, 1918, proclaimed full democracy guaranteeing freedom of speech, press, religion, association and to strike; all minorities were granted "national-personal" autonomy.

When the imperial structure of Tsarist Russia crumbled in 1917 under the heavy weight of its oppression, the Ukrainian Government of the Central Rada convened in September a congress of the nations of the former Russian empire, which approved the implementation of the principle of the self-determination of nations. One by one the non-Russian nations followed the example of Ukraine and proclaimed their independence and statehood. This is the sequence: Idel-Ural, November 12, 1917; Finland, December 6, 1917, Kuban Cossacks, February 16, 1918; Lithuania, February 16, 1918; Esthonia, February 24, 1918; Byelorussia, March 25, 1918; Don Cossacks, May 5, 1918; North Caucasia, May 11, 1918; Georgia, May 26, 1918; Azerbaidzhan, May 29, 1918; Armenia, May 30, 1918; Poland, November 11, 1918; Latvia, November 18, 1918; Far-Eastern Democratic Republic (Siberia), April 4, 1920; and Turkestan, April 15, 1922. In most cases, by means of subversion and with the aid of the Russian Red Army, these nations after heroic struggles were re-incorporated into a new Russian empire under the deceptive name of Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

This newly reconstituted Soviet Russian empire acquired as insatiable an appetite for more territory and world domination as the old Tsarist Russian empire, except that it developed more subtle techniques, and makes use of powerful propaganda to conceal the true nature of its motives and actions. At the end of the Second World War and subsequently the Soviet Union extended its domination over other European nations, which, having become known as the Soviet satellites, in reality became Russian colonies. Even Asian leaders have denounced Soviet colonialism including Moscow's exploitation of the satellite peoples. Here is the statement of Sir John Kotelawala, Prime Minister of Ceylon, spoken to Asian and African nations at the Bandung Conference, April 21, 1955:

> There is another form of colonialism, however, about which many of us represented here are perhaps less clear in our minds and to which some of us would perhaps not agree to apply the term colonialism at all. Think, for example, of those satellite states under Communist domination in Central and Eastern Europe—of Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, Albania, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Lithuania, Esthonia and Poland.

I would also add East Germany.

> Are not these colonies as much as any of the colonial territories in Africa or Asia? And if we are united in our opposition to colonialism, should it not be our duty openly to declare our opposition to Soviet colonialism as much as to Western imperialism?

Subsequently, the declaration of an Asian nation was forthcoming at the United Nations when the Malayan Ambassador, Mr. Dato Ong Yok Lin, spoke to the 17th General Assembly on November 28, 1962:

> We are opposed to colonialism in all its forms and manifestations, whether it is the traditional type practised by Western European powers or the new and more sinister kind of colonialism perpetrated by Communist imperialism. We subscribe to the view that colonialism, in whatever form or shape, is a constant threat to international peace and security, and, as such, it must be speedily liquidated.

Had the Western World recognized and supported the non-Russian states that had emerged after the fall of the Russian Monarchy in 1917, in accordance with Wilson's principle of self-determination, this would probably have prevented the expansion of Bolshevik Russia into a Soviet empire, which has become a menace to the free world. The cure of this cancer is now much more difficult, but it must be consistently and constantly applied. If the United Nations declaration that "all peoples have an inalienable right to complete freedom, the exercise of their sovereignty and the integrity of their national territory" has been made to apply to peoples in Africa and Asia, most of whom have never possessed a historical statehood, then surely it must be equally applicable to all the non-Russian nations and satellites under Soviet Russian domination who had already exercised their right of self-determination about a half-century earlier.

All the free nations of the world, including Canada, must make a constant, concerted effort in the General Assembly of the United Nations to compel the government of the Soviet Union to liquidate its imperialism and colonialism by granting the right of self-determination to the non-Russian nations and satellites under Russian communist rule.

The cornerstone of Canadian foreign policy should always be what Canadians treasure most—to make the world safe for democracy, the freedom of the individual and of nations; peace, prosperity and progress; and to co-operate fully with all nations of the world who recognize these principles and adhere to them in the spirit of brotherhood and in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Quart, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 26, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CRIMINAL CODE (HABEAS CORPUS)

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-35, to amend the Criminal Code (Habeas Corpus).

Bill read the first time.

Hon. David A. Croll, for Hon. Mr. Lang, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

HON. JOSEPH A. SULLIVAN

FELICITATIONS ON HONORARY FELLOWSHIP, THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MEDICINE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators will, I am sure, be pleased to know I have been informed that our colleague, the honourable Senator Joseph A. Sullivan, was elected to the Honorary Fellowship of The Royal Society of Medicine, in England, on May 19.

I am told that among the very few Canadians so honoured are Professor Charles Best, Professor Wilder Penfield, Professor Douglas Cannell, Emeritus Professor Robert Janes and Dr. L. C. Montgomery.

I am sure all honourable senators are happy to join in congratulating our colleague on this signal honour.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we are all proud indeed that Dr. Sullivan has received this honour. It is an honour not only to him but also to the Senate. I agree wholeheartedly with the sentiments expressed by the honourable Leader of the Government.

GENEVA CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Baird for the second reading of Bill S-25, respecting the Geneva Conventions, 1949.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, as the Geneva Conventions are part of our international relationships, I hope you will not deem it inappropriate if, at the outset, I refer very briefly to the inspiring address given to both Houses of Parliament this morning by U Thant, the distinguished Secretary-General of the United Nations.

I am sure that all honourable senators who were present at the joint meeting this morning were moved by the serious dedication which was evident in the remarks of the Secretary-General. I am also sure that we deem it a compliment to our country to have U Thant here as a visitor. Indeed, as we were told this morning, it was the first time that any Secretary-General of the United Nations has honoured our Parliament in this manner.

Certainly, he made us all more conscious of a fact of which we are already aware, that this country is playing a leading role in the very important function of the United Nations through our efforts in peace-keeping in various fields of potential serious international conflict.

I am sure that Canadians generally may take pride in the visit to our capital of this distinguished world statesman.

I come now to the purpose of my remarks, namely, to discuss Bill S-25, an act respecting the Geneva Conventions of 1949.

I am sure that we are all most indebted to the honourable Senator Baird, who last evening gave a lucid explanation of the bill and referred at the same time to the Geneva Conventions. Indeed, he covered the subject so fully and efficiently that perhaps no further remarks are necessary. However, I would like to comment briefly on the bill and the conventions.

I am sure we are all aware that the year 1964 marks the one hundredth anniversary of the first Geneva Convention. I refer to the first Geneva Convention because the other three of the four conventions have been developed throughout the years since 1864.

I deem the Geneva Conventions the most important and the most far-reaching international agreements in the history of mankind. The League of Nations lasted, as you will recall, from 1919 to 1933, only 14 years. Even now, the age of the United Nations Organization is only 15 years, spanning the period from 1949 to 1964. Consequently, you will recognize the tremendous achievement which now lies behind the Geneva Conventions in that the original is now 100 years old.

The formation of the International Committee of the Red Cross in 1863 was the precursor of the first Geneva Convention. In that regard I would like to place on Hansard one paragraph from an article in the American Journal of International Law, for the year 1951, entitled, "The New Geneva Conventions for the Protection of War Victims." The author Jean S. Pictet, Director, International Committee of the Red Cross, speaks first of the origin of the original convention. I quote this paragraph because it places before the reader the fundamental purposes of the original convention and the reasons for the development of the other three:

> The Geneva Conventions are the basis on which rest the rules of international law for the protection of the victims of armed conflicts.
>
> The International Committee of the Red Cross founded in 1863 the Red Cross organization, whose headquarters have remained at Geneva; it has by tradition the duty of watching over the application of the conventions. In peacetime its constant endeavour is to ensure better protection, under international law, of the individual against the rigours of war. From its inception in 1863 the Committee has been the executive agent of the Geneva Convention for the Protection of Wounded Combatants, and of the humanitarian conventions related to this fundamental agreement. These basic treaties are all founded on respect for the individual and for his dignity; they embody the principle of selfless relief, without discrimination, to all human beings in distress whether they be wounded, prisoners of war or shipwrecked, and thus defenseless and no longer to be regarded as enemies.

I have quoted that paragraph simply because it covers in so few words the field of these international conventions of which I am now speaking.

The three conventions subsequent to the 1864 Convention all relate to the fantastic ability of men to expand the scope and ferocity of war. Of course, we arrived at the ultimate in warfare known to mankind, which we call total war. That was inaugurated by Hitler in World War II.

Senator Baird referred yesterday to these conventions. I will refer to them briefly again, just to indicate them in perspective over the years. The first was in 1864. Its purpose was the amelioration of the condition of the wounded and sick in armed forces of the countries of the world. The second one, in 1906, revised and adapted the first one, and applies to naval warfare. The third, which was completed in 1929, adopted rules in regard to the treatment and repatriation of prisoners of war.

Honourable senators, how fortunate it was that this third convention had been adopted before the war of 1939, because it is generally admitted that it was of tremendous value during that war in the amelioration of the lot of prisoners of war throughout the world.

The fourth and last convention resulted directly from the total war techniques which were adopted by the Hitler regime during World War II, namely, rules applicable to civilian persons in time of war. As I said before, all three latter conventions resulted from the new techniques of warfare which have developed throughout the last 100 years.

The respect in which the Geneva Conventions have been held is shown, for instance, by the fact that in the Korean war, 1950-53, all parties involved declared themselves bound by the conventions. I make this remark because by 1950 very few countries had by then ratified the fourth convention. Nevertheless, all countries involved in that war—including, of course, Canada—declared themselves bound by the conventions.

I would like to make one more general remark in regard to these conventions, by way of paying tribute to the tremendous part that the little country Switzerland has played in the development of these conventions. All four conferences have been held in Geneva. Switzerland has acted in the nature of a world-wide umpire in regard to these matters, and is today the registrar of the various agreements under these conventions. That is all I have to say about the conventions generally.

I come now to the bill itself. In his remarks on the bill last evening, Senator Baird said, first, that Bill S-25 seeks explicit statutory approval of the international conventions. Secondly, the bill gives extraterritorial effect to some provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada in regard to grave breaches of the conventions. "Grave breaches of the conventions" is a term used in the conventions themselves. It is very easy just to use the phrase that the Criminal Code of Canada acquires extraterritorial effect, but for the purposes of the record I would like to read section 3. I think it will give a better idea of what is meant by "extraterritorial effect."

> 3. (1) Any grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, as therein defined, that would, if committed in Canada, be an offence under any provision of the Criminal Code or other Act of the Parliament of Canada, is an offence under such provision of the Criminal Code or other Act if committed outside Canada.
>
> (2) Where a person has committed an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of this section, the offence is within the competence of and may be tried and punished by the court having jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in the place in Canada where that person is found in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that place, or by any other court to which jurisdiction has been lawfully transferred.

Let me give you one example in my own words of the type of cases that might come under this section. Supposing a grave breach of one of these conventions is committed in some part of Europe by an individual. Whether that person is a national of Canada or not, if he becomes a resident of or flees to Canada, then, under our law, be it the Criminal Code or some other, we have the right to try him, and, if he is found guilty, we can sentence him under our laws. This power is given to us by these conventions, and it is necessary, as we are told by the law officers of the Crown, to enact this bill and this section for the purpose of completing that power and making it possible for this country to act under the conventions in that respect.

Clause 4 refers to legal proceedings in respect of protected persons. What does that mean? Protected persons are prisoners of war and internees. In the case of both these classes there is generally a protecting power. The bill deals with the right of Canadian courts to try these persons in respect of offences they have committed while internees or prisoners of war, subject always, of course, to the giving of notice to the protecting power in order that that power should have the ability to provide counsel or otherwise protect the individual in regard to the charges.

Clauses 5 and 6 of the bill merely give certain definitions and deal with notice of trial, notice of appeal, and such matters. That, honourable senators, is what is covered by the second part of the bill.

I should like to say a word, however, in regard to clause 2 of the bill. It reads:

> The Geneva Conventions for the Protection of War Victims, signed at Geneva on the 12th day of August, 1949 and set out in Schedules I to IV, are approved.

Honourable senators, as I understand it, a treaty or convention of this kind normally comes before Parliament for ratification. We may be somewhat surprised that the Geneva Conventions of 1949 have not yet been ratified by the Parliament of Canada. I have tried to find out why that should be so, and I must say that I have discovered certain reasons for this which will probably be indicated to us in committee, if we desire to go into this matter there. It might, however, be said that the successive governments of this country since 1949 should be somewhat red-faced over the fact that the conventions have been ratified by practically all countries of the world except Canada. But at the same time it must be said that this present bill, while it does not ratify the conventions, does at least lead to their ratification.

There are two methods that can be adopted for the ratification of an international convention. The first is by a resolution of the Parliament of Canada, and the second is by approval, as is given in clause 2 of the bill. When that approval is given by both Houses of Parliament, the Government has acquired power to ratify. That, as I understand it, is the procedure being adopted in regard to the ratification of the conventions in this bill.

I might at this stage mention that at the Geneva Conference of 1949 there were represented 58 nations, including the Holy See, and the conventions at that time were signed by all those countries. Since that time, however, as a result of the tremendous addition to the full-fledged nations of the world, they have now been ratified by no fewer than 98 countries.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I should say that when this bill has been passed by both Houses of Parliament I trust there will be no delay on the part of the Government in ratifying the conventions in a formal manner.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, the bill under consideration at the moment is one that appeals to our compassion, perhaps more than it does to our powers of reason.

May I at this stage compliment Senator Baird on the lucid explanation he gave of the principles underlying this measure, and its importance, and may I also compliment him on the brevity with which he made these explanations. I would add—and I hope Senator Baird will forgive me—that there is no one in the house better qualified to introduce a bill of this kind than Senator Baird, because he not only served with distinction in the First World War, but was for more than two years a prisoner of war in Germany, and can speak from personal experience of the plight of prisoners of war at that time.

It is impossible to obliterate entirely by international conventions the inhumanity and atrocities that often accompany war. When the passions of men and of nations are aroused, human beings can do some extraordinary things. However, the very fact that we are considering this afternoon the approval of a convention of this kind is in itself evidence that humanity has not entirely failed, and that the good instincts of mankind are on the march in the hope of ultimately achieving a better state of affairs in these matters. We can all approve this bill without reservation. It may well be that when it goes to the External Relations Committee we may get more explanations and viewpoints on matters that may still be somewhat obscure to us.

I notice, for example, that Japan is not among the signatories to the convention. It would be interesting to probe a little and find out why that is so. I know that in the Second World War, Japan's record in the treatment of prisoners was pretty bad, but I think we have some reason for hoping and believing that in that respect she has turned over a new leaf. Nevertheless it would be interesting to learn, if we can, the reasons why Japan's name is not associated with the other nations who have adhered to these conventions.

Honourable senators, I do not think I have anything further to say. This, I repeat, is a measure which engages all our sympathies and upon which there need be no point of controversy in our consideration of it in this house.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Baird, bill referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations.

ROOSEVELT CAMPOBELLO INTERNATIONAL PARK COMMISSION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. G. Percival Burchill moved the second reading of Bill S-26, respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello International Park.

He said: Honourable senators, it is my very great privilege this afternoon to move the second reading of a bill which seeks to implement by legislation an agreement signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States in Washington on January 22, 1964, relating to the establishment of the Roosevelt Campobello International Park on the Island of Campobello in the Province of New Brunswick. I am sure this bill will receive the warm approval of every honourable member of this house.

I shall begin my remarks by reminding honourable senators of some of the historical background of Campobello Island and the Roosevelt connection with it. The island, which was named for Lord William Campbell, Governor of Nova Scotia, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, is eight miles long and three miles wide, and is situated in Passamaquoddy Bay only 300 yards from the border of the State of Maine. It became a popular tourist resort for Americans, and was acquired by a syndicate of American gentlemen of Boston and New York in 1880. One of the first Americans to build a summer cottage on the island was Franklin D. Roosevelt's father, James Roosevelt, who in 1884 purchased four acres of land. From that time on the Roosevelts became accepted summer residents of Campobello.

From the time Franklin Delano Roosevelt was one year old until 1921 he spent the greater part of each summer at Campobello, but the house which is known as Franklin D. Roosevelt's cottage is not the cottage that Roosevelt used as a child. That building has been demolished.

The cottage which is known as Franklin D. Roosevelt's cottage, and with which this legislation is concerned, was built by a Campobello neighbour of the James Roosevelts, and was purchased by President Roosevelt's mother, Sara Roosevelt, who gave it to her son, the late president, as a wedding present in 1910. It is a much larger house than the original, being of Dutch Colonial design and containing 34 rooms.

It may interest honourable senators if I recall to mind that it was at Campobello that President Roosevelt was stricken with poliomyelitis. On August 10, 1921, after returning from sailing his yacht, he joined other men in fighting a brush fire. He then took a swim in the Bay of Fundy, after which he sat about in his wet bathing suit and developed a chill. This was the beginning of an illness which was diagnosed a few days later by a specialist from Boston as poliomyelitis, and which crippled him for the rest of his life. The then 39-year old man, proud of his athletic prowess and his splendid body, kept fit by swimming, sailing and hunting but was never able to walk alone again. But in spite of this affliction, he performed the unprecedented feat of winning the high office of President of the United States for four consecutive terms. After that President Roosevelt made only short visits to Campobello, in 1933, 1936 and 1939, but he never lost his love for what he called his "beloved island."

The Roosevelt family, however, continued to visit Campobello during the summers until 1952, when the estate was sold to Armand, Harry and Victor Hammer of the Hammer Galleries in New York City. In May 1963, at the Hyannisport meeting between President Kennedy and Prime Minister Pearson, the Hammer family informed the two leaders that they were prepared to donate the property to the government of Canada and the United States as a memorial to President Roosevelt and as a symbol of friendship between these two great neighbours. The property which the Hammer family so generously donated consists of a 34-room house, its furnishings and outbuildings, and 20 acres of land.

The Premier of New Brunswick was immediately consulted. He indicated his enthusiastic approval of the project, and the two heads of government accepted the generous offer in principle.

Details of an international agreement were then worked out between officials of the two countries, and this led to the signing of an agreement on January 22, 1964 by the President and the Prime Minister, in Washington. The legislation now before this house seeks to implement that agreement, which is attached as a schedule to the bill.

Honourable senators will see that the purpose of the bill is to establish an international commission of six members, three to be appointed by Canada and three by the United States. One of the Canadian members is to be nominated by the Government of New Brunswick, and one of the United States members by the Government of the State of Maine. Nationals of both countries may be employed on the staff of the commission, which is invested with all the necessary legal powers and capacities to discharge its functions.

Article 8 of the agreement provides that the commission shall be exempt from various federal and local taxes. The legislature of the Province of New Brunswick, during the last session, took the necessary action under this article by passing an act to exempt the commission from any provincial taxes.

Legislation corresponding to this bill has been introduced in both houses of the United States Congress, and is now being processed as rapidly as possible.

There is considerable urgency in this matter, honourable senators, because it is hoped to open the park for tourists in July of this year; and it is hoped that before that date the respective acts will have been passed by both countries and the commissioners named.

The proposed international park will consist of the Roosevelt cottage on Campobello Island, the grounds adjacent thereto, and other grounds on the island. One of the functions of the commission will be to restore the house as nearly as possible to the condition it was in when occupied by President Roosevelt, and to administer as a memorial the Roosevelt Campobello International Park, which will comprise the Roosevelt estate and such other lands as may be acquired.

Such, honourable senators, is the object of this bill. I am sure you will all welcome it as a unique opportunity of cementing the ties between Canada and our neighbour to the south, as well as perpetuating the memory of a great man who was a good friend of Canada.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we all agree with the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Burchill) that it is a very interesting measure. It is particularly interesting of course to the people of the Atlantic provinces.

As I should like to say a few words on it later, I would ask the indulgence of the house in adjourning the debate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Would honourable Senator Brooks allow honourable Senator McLean to speak now?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I have no objection of course to the honourable senator speaking now.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about my one-time good friend and neighbour, the late President Roosevelt. We are all very happy at the establishment of this memorial park, which should be a strong binding force between the United States and Canada.

Shortly after President Roosevelt's death, I took up with the Government of New Brunswick the matter of their acquiring the property for a park in memory of the late President, the same as Hyde Park in New York State commemorates his memory in the United States, and is visited by tens of thousands of tourists every year.

The President made his summer home at Campobello from his youth until his death. He always kept a home there, and even when he was not there himself his family always visited the place and kept the home open. His mother came there practically every year up to the time of the President's death.

All the people of the island were his friends and neighbours and I was honoured to be one of them.

We had a plant there that always made available to the President any boats he needed for fishing, a sport of which he was very fond. A friend of all the sea captains, he loved to come and sit on the shore to relax and talk with them. Sometimes one would look at him questioningly: Are you really the man who is President of the United States, that the newspapers are hammering at so much? He did not seem to have a worry on his mind when he came there. A helicopter arrived every day or so carrying papers which required his signature as President.

The Honourable James Sinclair, one time Canadian Minister of Fisheries, once visited Russia, and he in turn invited the Russian Minister of Fisheries to visit Canada. He came to visit us, and I was asked to entertain him.

The Russian minister came to look at the fisheries—we have a large plant on the coast—and we let him and his group talk freely to all employees. I did not know there was anyone in our party who understood Russian, and when they came up the bay I pointed out that that was President Roosevelt's former home on the shore.

The Russian Minister of Fisheries had seven or eight in his party, and they all wanted to see the President's home. They thought they would see a great mansion. But there it was, a very plain home, with plain furnishings. They went up to the President's home, and I found out afterwards from this man in our technical department who spoke Russian that they were taking pictures and could not understand, when they were told that the President of the United States lived in a great mansion, why it was that he came to this very plain place, lighted by oil lamps because they did not have electricity to the island then. The room used as an office for the President was very ordinary, and I do not suppose the desk and other furniture was worth more than $300 or $400. Yet that was his office. I doubt if there is an office in this building which is furnished as plainly as Roosevelt's island office was. He was a kindly man to all the fishermen and neighbours down there and he never forgot them when they visited Washington.

One fisherman, who afterwards became Inspector of Fisheries, was the man who picked up Mr. Roosevelt on the shore when he was stricken with polio. He took him on his boat. They did not have a doctor on the island and they did not know what the trouble was. They took him over to Eastport, and did not learn until they got him to a hospital that there was anything seriously wrong with him. Then it was diagnosed as polio, and he went to Georgia Springs to take treatment.

While he was there they put it up to him that he was the only one who could win the presidency for the Democrats. At that time the United States was in pretty bad shape. Many of the banks were failing, and about one-third of the people were unemployed. Roosevelt's doctors said they would wash their hands of the treatment if he left there and went back into politics again. They said they could not help him further if he chose to do that.

However, the pressure was put on Mrs. Roosevelt and by and by he decided he would go. He made the great sacrifice of himself, and easily won the election. He really made a great president.

There is another point about the Russians who visited that area and took the pictures. They said, "We are going to have a different story to take back home, that President Roosevelt lives in a plain home like this." They said that the head of the Russian state—it was the present head—had a summer castle on the Black Sea with 40 rooms where everyone lived in splendid style. It was nothing like the plain summer home in which the President of the United States used to live.

Any Canadian friends who ever went to Washington were always welcomed at the White House. One day the President said to me, "You know that fisherman did his best for me when I was stricken with polio." That is the only time he ever mentioned his disability. He asked, "Why would you not bring him down?" I said, "Certainly, Mr. President, I will bring him down."

A party of four of us, including the fisherman, went to Washington. When we got to the Mayflower Hotel, the fisherman, a sea captain, said, "I must phone Franklin right away." He had taken Mr. Roosevelt on many fishing and hunting expeditions before he became President. I said that I did not think we should do that, that we had better send a card first to the White House, because the President was a very busy man. The sea captain replied, "No. If he knew I were here and did not telephone him, he would not like it."

I said that I did not have his private number, but the sea captain replied, "He sent it to me and I have it in my pocket." He then picked up the telephone, got the White House private number, and got into conversation. He enquired, "Is that you, Franklin?" After a few moments of talk he turned to us and said, "It is just as I said; Franklin wants us to go right over."

No member of royalty ever received more favours than that fisherman did. That was the way Roosevelt treated all his friends who went to visit him at the White House. He was always friendly to Canadians. He was a true friend of Canada.

The President was disabled, it is true, but I remember being with him in Kingston, Ontario, and I do not think anyone knew he was lame. He wore braces on his knees to assist him in walking, but he could not go upstairs. He used a ramp, coming from his private car. Then he had a seat in the automobile that swung out forward and went back into place. He was in Kingston to accept a degree from Queen's university. I walked across the field alongside him. A plank was placed right on the grass of the campus and he did not have to go up stairs or enter the university. The degree was conferred on him there, and I do not think anyone in Kingston knew he was lame—at least, no one ever mentioned it to me.

That was the kind of energy President Roosevelt had. He had a wonderful personality and was full of kindness. I do not see how anyone could meet him and fail to vote for him. It is no wonder he was elected president four times. He will go down in history with Lincoln and Washington as one of the great Presidents of the United States.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 21, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, before making a modest contribution to this most interesting debate, may I compliment the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) for the comprehensive and lucid manner in which he explained its principle. This, of course, is no less than we would expect of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Divorce Committee, whom I have heard described by a colleague as "our most useful senator." It is also no less than we could expect of a parliamentarian of very great experience, and a former Attorney-General and Minister of Labour in the Government of Ontario.

As honourable senators know, Senator Roebuck recently completed ten years' service as Chairman of the Divorce Committee, an office which he still occupies with vigour and distinction, giving ample evidence that his usefulness to the Senate will continue for many years to come. I trust, therefore, that nothing I may have to say about the present bill will be taken as qualifying in any way the remarks I have just made.

With the apparent intent of this bill, namely, to give security of tenure to the Commissioner and to provide him with an adequate pension, there can be no opposition. However, as has been remarked about certain miracle drugs, there are side effects which, in my view, will be harmful, if not fatal to the patient.

One could take no exception to a simple bill which would guarantee the Commissioner both security of tenure and an adequate pension, commencing at the age of 75. However, the present legislation does a great deal more than that. It confers upon the Commissioner a judgeship in the Exchequer Court. My first observation is that this is unnecessary in order to give adequate security and pension benefits to the Commissioner; but far more important than that, to my mind, is the suggestion that he should be constituted in any way as a court of law or as a judge thereof.

What has happened so far is merely that Parliament has delegated to one of its constituents, namely, the Senate, its legislative capacity to dissolve or annul marriages—subject only to this, that the petitions are to be heard by an officer of the Senate, now referred to as "the commissioner." No decision has yet been taken, either expressly or by implication, by accident or by design, to transfer the jurisdiction of Parliament to a court or to a judge thereof.

The present bill, innocent though it may appear, and benevolent as it may seem, would take a giant step forward in the direction of having divorce applications from Quebec and Newfoundland determined by exclusively judicial rather than by legislative processes, whether those processes are those of Parliament or of the Senate.

In my opinion, we have gone so far, and must go no further, or we will be in grave danger of, if not betraying, at least offending the provinces concerned. I am not alone in the view that this bill is neither necessary nor desirable. In this connection, I refer to the fact that, so far as I know, neither the Government of Quebec nor the Government of Newfoundland has either requested or agreed to this further and perhaps fatal step.

I have had the opportunity of reading the debate on the earlier motion of my good friend and former leader, the honourable Senator Aseltine, who proposed the transfer of the divorce jurisdiction of Parliament to the Exchequer Court of Canada. His motion was defeated, due in large measure to the forensic efforts of the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) and the present Chairman of the Senate Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I wonder if they recall the pungency of their remarks made at that time.

I would like to read from the Senate Debates of March 1956, at page 294. This is what the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) had to say at that time about the competency of the Exchequer Court judges to deal with Senate divorces:

> Honourable senators, I felt at first blush that the Exchequer Court would have the ability, as well as the jurisdiction, to handle these broader questions that are involved in divorce, and in consequence that I should support the bill. However, on more mature consideration, I have come to the conclusion that if the transfer of jurisdiction in these matters in petitions from Quebec and Newfoundland is in fact desirable, the Exchequer Court of Canada is not the court that should receive that jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask whom you are quoting?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Senator Roebuck. There has been quite a change of heart. Let me continue:

> Let me give you some idea of what the Exchequer Court of Canada is in character, and let me indicate in the broadest terms the nature of its jurisdiction. Broadly speaking, the Exchequer Court was constituted to deal with: (1) claims against the Crown; (2) controversies between Canada and the provinces, and between the provinces; (3) matters concerning interprovincial railways; and (4) cases relating to the dominion railways. The Exchequer Court interferes between subject and subject, generally speaking, only in such cases where patents, copyrights and trademarks are concerned. It is not a court constituted for the trial of ordinary litigation between person and person, as are the courts of the provinces.

Then on the following page, 297, we get his opinion as to why, although he had contemplated first being in favour of the bill, after thinking it over he felt it would be coercing the provinces involved. I will read two short paragraphs:

> And shall we now, honourable senators, at long last forget the role in which we were cast in Confederation and indulge in what the province of Quebec will certainly consider arbitrary legislation? To do so would, in my judgment and in my submission to you, be to reverse almost everything good for which we in this chamber stand. Are we to sacrifice now at this long last, after 80 or 90 years of experience, the esteem, the friendship, the regard and the confidence of large sections of the people of Quebec for the supposed advantage of a mere procedural measure? I think not.

I quite agree with that, and I quite agree that we should take that stand when dealing with this bill. Further on, the honourable senator says:

> So I say to the senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and to other kind senators of this chamber who agree with him, let us be patient. If there is a general, material advantage in the change of procedure outlined in this bill, or some other such change of procedure, can we not rely upon the good sense of the province of Quebec, not only to tolerate it, in time, but actually to come here and ask for it? If it is worthwhile and does not meet with the objections to which the people affected are wedded, will they not in due season come here and request it? And would that not be the time for us to act, rather than prematurely forcing something upon them which they do not desire? Is not the little suggestion that I took the liberty of making—Let us not get ahead of our train—applicable here?

Honourable senators, the spokesman for the group who carried on a blockade was unsatisfied on May 12 last with the attitude that the Senate had taken when this bill was presented to us at the last hour before the recess. Here is what he said in the House of Commons and outside of it:

> It seems to me that the Senate was very unfair a year ago in refusing to pass a similar resolution, to be followed by a bill, to make the commissioner an Exchequer Court judge.

I think that the then Leader of the Government, Senator Ross Macdonald, should be commended for the respect he showed the Senate at that time by not even giving it first reading and trying to shove it down our throats with first, second and third readings.

He continued:

> I hope the government has conferred with some of their confreres in the other place and that this bill will get speedy passage there as well.... I think this is an opportunity for parliament, and should be an opportunity for parliament, to examine the operations of that office periodically—

And note, they are going to continue, "periodically."

> —at which time we should be prepared to make further recommendations in the whole field of matrimony and divorce.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator say whom he is quoting?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Mr. Peters, as reported in the House of Commons Debates of May 12, 1964, on the resolution stage, before the bill was introduced for first reading. I know it should not be done—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is all right.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Go ahead; Peters will not mind.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I could understand the group which organized a blockade being enthusiastic about the first bill, creating the position of commissioner, but how can they possibly be interested in further legislation relating to matrimony and divorce? Spokesmen for this group have said on many occasions that the only useful purpose of the Senate was to deal with divorce, and that when this house was no longer necessary to handle divorces it should be abolished. They are the people who have said this repeatedly in and out of the House of Commons, who are interested in this bill and who were elated after the divorce bills were taken away from them and they could not exercise a further blockade. Yet they say, in effect: We are going to support this bill; you go ahead and do it fast. You have a new leader on the Liberal side, and that should help expedite matters, because the other Leader was unsuccessful, or dared not do it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Are you adopting this argument or merely repeating it?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I am repeating it, and putting everyone on guard. I say there is an ulterior motive behind the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope the honourable gentleman is not imputing ulterior motives to the Government, or members on this side of the house.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: No, I am not doing that. Let me continue. It is unnecessary legislation, but it becomes necessary in the minds of these people who have an ulterior motive—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Well—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: If I am unable to go on, I will sit down.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): On the contrary; we just wanted to be sure.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: There is no doubt in my mind that we are in the process of creating a divorce court, the very thing that the Province of Quebec has objected to heretofore. Here I want to quote from the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec, section 185:

> Marriage can only be dissolved by the natural death of one of the parties; while both live, it is indissoluble.

That is the law in Quebec, and that is the law which was in existence before Confederation.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What is the relevancy of that at this stage?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I say that if we get to the stage where we have a court dealing with Senate committee divorces it will, in effect, abrogate that law which has been in existence in the Civil Code of Quebec since before Confederation.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Do you say he is dealing with it as court?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It is the next stage to it. We are into a court which we said is not competent to hear divorce actions. We are entering it through the back door, and the door is wide open. Some day we will find ourselves in that court, having entered through the front door.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Are you not doing your best to achieve that?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I am certainly not.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do you not think that would be a good thing?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: If it comes to that, but we were told we should not have to ask for it. As long as private bills were bills of exception, the Quebec law remained in the Civil Code of that province; but if we create a divorce court there is a danger that this will constitute an amendment to the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec.

We have been talking about rotating the judges of the Exchequer Court. Let the Commissioner stay where he is and learn to differentiate between those detectives who are telling the truth and those unscrupulous ones who would not hesitate to commit perjury. There are many judges who have gone through life as lawyers and who have never wanted to plead a divorce action in any court or in the Senate. I do not see at all that a judge of the Exchequer Court would be interested in coming here and sitting as a commissioner on a type of case that he has never handled before and never wished to handle. On that point I agree with the sponsor, that this is not a competent court, let alone rotating its judges to do the work.

Speaking of perjury, I believe the honourable sponsor will be able to tell us how the situation was rectified, but some seven or eight years ago there were two detectives charged with perjury while giving evidence before the Senate committee, and they were found guilty by a magistrate here in Ottawa. The case was appealed to the Court of Appeal of Ontario, where it was decided that they could not be found guilty of perjury. I think the reason given by the court was that the Senate committee was not constituted as a tribunal, and so they could not be found guilty under a certain section of the code.

I have not gone into that, but I am wondering if this Commissioner—who is going to be appointed a judge and yet will not be sitting as a judge, will not be wearing a gown and who will be referred to and addressed as "sir" or "Mr. Commissioner"—is properly equipped to swear such a witness in, and if a charge of perjury is laid, whether it will stand.

I do not know what happened to remedy the situation, whether section 99 of the Criminal Code was amended, but I do think that that section of the code would now take care of the situation. I am sure that the sponsor of the bill can enlighten us on that matter later in the debate or in committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Perhaps I might answer that point quickly right now.

These men were convicted of perjury under the Criminal Code. They appealed to the Appeal Court of Ontario, and it was decided that the code was not sufficiently wide to include a perjury charge. Well, it was not exactly a perjury charge—it was one of fabricating evidence before a court. It was held at that time that a committee of the Senate was not a court within the meaning of the code. Then, when the very next amendments to the code were effected, we changed that provision and made it as wide as possible.

I have not studied it recently, as to its application to proceedings before the Commissioner, and I am glad to have the suggestion made of the possibility of a lapse there as to what fabrication of evidence would be before the Commissioner. As I say, I have not studied it recently with particularity, but I think it is broad enough to cover a charge of fabrication before our present Commissioner.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Thank you.

I have just a few words in conclusion, honourable senators.

There were several reasons advanced as to why this Commissioner should be appointed a judge of the Exchequer Court.

I cannot see how his appointment will give him a greater status at all if he is not even going to be referred to as a judge and will not be acting as one. His salary is not affected. Security of tenure could be taken care of by legislation, and the same could apply to fringe benefits. We could pass legislation right here in the Senate to the effect that this man is to stay in office until he reaches the age of 75, and that his widow, in the event of his death, would get the same benefits as would the widow of a judge.

I want it clearly understood that there is absolutely nothing personal in the remarks I have made. I have had the pleasure of meeting on two or three occasions the present commissioner and his charming wife. I have had the occasion to converse with them in both French and English. They are without doubt a most charming couple. There is also no doubt that he is probably the most competent man we could get for the job.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I have no doubt that he will do a good job, rapidly and efficiently. But I see no reason why we should take any further step at this time. We have succeeded in dispensing with the procedure of sending bills of divorce to the House of Commons. That was quite a feat. Nevertheless, having done that we are now taking a further step, and the next step, as I see it, will be right through the front door of the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, you will remember what happened last August when we were about to recess for the summer adjournment. Bill C-93 was adopted by the House of Commons on the 1st day of August, the day before that adjournment. It was understood that that bill, which had been brought in in a hurry and when there were very few members in attendance in the Commons, would not be sent to the Senate before the adjournment. Nevertheless, it came to this chamber at the last moment, and after discussion lasting a full day it was finally adopted, and now is chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1963.

The same story can be told concerning Bill C-133, which was introduced in the Commons on the last day of the last session. We were about to prorogue, and we heard that a certain bill had been passed by that place. It was a scandalous bill. Why do I say that? For the very good reason that the bill was not in existence. It may have been on a sheet of paper, but it was not distributed to anybody. I took the trouble to inquire at the distribution office. And what did I find there? I found that the bill had been received at that office, in this building on December 23, two days after prorogation, at 2.55 p.m., and I got a copy in my post office box on January 13, 1964 at 3 p.m. I have a note to that effect on Bill C-133.

That bill was not printed for the first reading. The only impression for the distribution office came after the third reading in the Commons, and it did not contain the name of the sponsor. I hold in my hand a copy of that bill, C-133—and I have an original copy, without a number, that I got when it was about to come before the Senate.

I must pay tribute to Senator Ross Macdonald, who was the Leader of the Government in the Senate at that time, for his refusal to allow this bill to pass the Senate. I wonder if there is anyone in this chamber who would have approved that kind of procedure. What does it imply? It is the old saying: "You must trust me." But it is not a question of trust; it is a matter of procedure and the question of a printed paper that anyone can read, become familiar with, and discuss intelligently.

Honourable senators, as I have said, this was a scandalous piece of legislation. There was no excuse for it. The attempt to pass it over the Senate made a mockery of this Chamber.

Now we have Bill C-96, which is exactly the same as Bill C-133—the only difference being that it was presented in due course and on time. What was the reason for smuggling the previous bill through the House of Commons, and trying to smuggle it through the Senate? I cannot see any reason for it. If it was a good bill there was ample time to submit it in a regular manner to both houses so that it could be discussed.

In dealing with Bill C-96, I am sorry to differ with my honourable friend Senator Choquette on one point as to his citing article 185 of the Civil Code of Quebec about the indissolubility of marriage. He was right to a certain extent; but on the other hand he was not. I say this because article 185 of the Civil Code became worthless from the time the British North America Act was adopted on July 1, 1867, the year after the Code came into force.

It was the Constitution that changed the law concerning marriage and divorce, and gave to the Parliament of Canada powers that belonged previously to the provinces. There has been an argument about the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada concerning divorce. But I sincerely believe that the B.N.A. Act gives to the Parliament of Canada full authority concerning divorce, and that that authority is exclusive. It cannot be bargained about with the provinces. It is exclusive. It is clear enough. It is clear that the Parliament of Canada has the power to pass bills, and many have been passed since Confederation, to dissolve marriages. I think there is common agreement on that point.

Now, how shall we proceed in this matter? I agree with the tribute that has been paid the honourable Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, and I am on record as having spoken in the same vein about him and his colleagues. But here, with respect to the matter of the Exchequer Court, I have been taught a lesson by Senator Roebuck. Besides the quotation that my honourable friend Senator Choquette has read from Hansard of 1956, may I read another from the Debates of the Senate, page 102, of February 3, 1960.

> Hon. Lionel Choquette: May I ask one question of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck)? What would prevent Parliament from appointing two or three judges in a federal court, such as the Exchequer Court, to hear divorce cases exclusively? Was that ever discussed, or has that ever been thought of?
>
> Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, it was thought of.
>
> Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I brought in a bill along that line.
>
> Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable senator who now leads the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) once introduced a bill with two clauses: one was to introduce rules of divorce similar to those in force in the United Kingdom, and the other was to transfer jurisdiction in divorce to the Exchequer Court of Canada. I supported that bill to the extent of the suggestion of widening the grounds of divorce, but I was unable to follow him in the suggestion that we transfer the jurisdiction to the Exchequer Court, although I was perfectly ready to transfer it to the ordinary courts. I thought the Exchequer Court was not the proper tribunal to which to transfer the jurisdiction. My remarks on that occasion are fully set out in Hansard.
>
> Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did you favour the Supreme Court of Canada?
>
> Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, I do not think that is the proper court to which to transfer jurisdiction. If we are going to transfer jurisdiction to the courts it should be transferred to the ordinary courts which sit in the province, so that witnesses would not have to travel all the way to Ottawa to be heard. It should not be transferred to the Exchequer Court of Canada, which is concerned with matters of Government revenue and similar matters...

Listen to that, honourable senators. It is not my objection; it is the objection of honourable Senator Roebuck.

> ...and not so much with trials and contests between litigants. The jurisdiction should go to the Supreme Court of the province, and I mean the Supreme Trial Court and not the Appeal Court. That was my view, as a lawyer, in the matter.
>
> I refused to support legislation that had even the appearance of coercing the province of Quebec, and that is my position now. I am willing to transfer this jurisdiction when the province of Quebec agrees to it. I am not prepared to do anything that even appears to be high-handed or oppressive or coercive to the province of Quebec. When the leaders of opinion in the province of Quebec consider this situation and our position in it, and come to some reasonable solution, . am sure they will find all of us in this house ready to co-operate with them to the very last degree. They can rest assured that so long as men of my mind are senators we will never do anything that is oppressive to that province.

I appreciate it, and I will proceed on the lines suggested by the honourable gentleman.

Was he not in error in suggesting that divorces should be handled by the provincial courts? I ask that question for a very good reason. It is that, according to the Constitution, divorce is the exclusive right of the Parliament of Canada, and the provinces have no jurisdiction whatever in regard to divorce. It is a great error to leave the matter of divorce to the provincial courts. Because the powers of the Parliament of Canada are exclusive, they cannot be legally transferred, even by legislation, to the provincial courts. It is clear that the word "exclusive" must have a meaning, and in the minds of the Fathers of Confederation it meant that they did not want divorces to be handled by the provinces. Not only that, but one of the Fathers of Confederation said that the reason why divorces were under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada was to have only one place where divorces could be granted, thus making them more difficult to obtain. That is naturally a question of opinion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If that is the case, why did you not vote for my bill in 1956?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I have already told the honourable gentleman that one can change his views, and be honest. Does he now blame me for sharing the views that he expressed eight years ago? Should he not rather praise me?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is the honourable gentleman in favour of the bill we are now discussing?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: No, and I will say why. It is because I find this bill, in the circumstances, a mockery. The appointment of a judge is something that deserves proper consideration. I have no objection to the appointment of a judge of the Exchequer Court, provided that he is a real judge, that he has the independence of a judge, and is not the man Friday of the Senate committee.

The bill is simply ridiculous. It means that the Commissioner will not wear his mortarboard or his judicial robe to sit and listen to the evidence, and to make his report. But he will put on his cap and robe to go to the office of the treasury to get his cheque. I find that most ridiculous, and I hope that my honourable friend understands my point of view.

The Commissioner will not be a judge for the purpose of listening to the evidence, which is where he should be a judge, and have the dignity and independence of a judge. But, he will carry a satchel with him, and as soon as he has finished listening to the case and has made his report he will put on his cap and robe and go to get his cheque. This is absurd.

Moreover, I would like the honourable Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce to accompany the Commissioner to the office of the taxpayer. He will then see that his man Friday gets a salary which is $6,000 a year more than his own. Do you realize that, honourable senators? The Commissioner will get $21,000 a year, and the honourable Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, as a senator, will get $15,000, including his travelling expenses. The Commissioner will get $6,000 a year more just for wearing a cap and a judicial robe. It is a paying proposition.

I warned the Minister of Justice about the seriousness of this legislation. I believe it has been badly handled in the House of Commons. We hear about an agreement that has been made—between whom and by whom, we do not know—as to the treatment of the Commissioner. I know him just by having shaken hands with him. I do not know anything more about him; I give him the benefit of the doubt, and imagine he is just as good as he has been described to be. I have no objection to accepting him and putting him in charge of divorce matters, but I think he should be a real judge, and that for a very good reason.

He should be independent, and he should neither tolerate nor suffer the former investigators, some of whom are already in jail. The members of the committee have acted in good faith. I do not accuse them of being in bad faith. What happened before the committee? The organization that existed to make divorce cases was scandalous, as has been described by my colleague who spoke before me.

If anybody is interested in legal research and wants more information they can get it easily by reference to an appendix to Hansard of March 29, 1960. It is a list showing the number of cases that were handled by those investigators.

Now, coming to Bill C-96, let me put on record clause 2, which provides that:

> The Exchequer Court shall consist of the President and six Puisne Judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

That means any one of the existing judges of the Exchequer Court, plus the Commissioner, will be a judge of the Exchequer Court.

Then we come to clause 3 of the bill, which says:

> The Exchequer Court Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 6 thereof, the following section:

6A. A judge of the Court designated by the Speaker of the Senate for the purpose of this section, if he is granted leave of absence for such purpose by the Governor in Council from his duties as a judge of the Court, has and may exercise and perform all of the powers, duties and functions of the officer of the Senate referred to in section 3 of the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

That means that all the other judges of the Exchequer Court will be demoted to the rank of commissioner to come in turn to sit here in the Divorce Court.

Is it not nonsensical? I have practised law for many years and have learned to respect the bench, but I would say that all the judges of the Exchequer Court coming in turn here to be demoted to act as commissioners is, for me, pure nonsense.

I sincerely believe that the bill should be defeated and that new legislation should be introduced by the Minister of Justice to create a new judge of the Exchequer Court to deal with divorces. There could be a proviso to the effect that his judgments can be heard in appeal by the present Divorce Committee of the Senate. That would be a satisfactory arrangement, and it will not overburden the members of the Senate committee with this very painstaking and unpleasant kind of work.

There is a question of the sentiment of the Province of Quebec, concerning the Exchequer Court. If this bill is shown to the people in authority in the Province of Quebec—I mean the church dignitaries, the members of the Government, the members of the bar, the Chamber of Notaries, the judges—they will find that it is bad legislation.

We are not in a hurry. We have lots of time to deal with this matter. It has never been as urgent as it has been described to be. It seems that the matter should be put aside for some time, to give an opportunity to men of good counsel, wise men, to discuss the matter together and come to a satisfactory conclusion.

The President of the Exchequer Court and the whole bench of that court should be brought into the discussion before new legislation is passed. What do they not want in the Province of Quebec? They do not want grounds for divorce to be enlarged, but even those who disagree with divorce legislation realize that it has been in our Constitution since July 1, 1867. Therefore, although it is a sad and unpleasant matter, although the Fathers of Confederation expected that there would be no more divorce cases in the years to come than there were at the time of Confederation, those people will realize that we have to deal with it in a manner that is less obnoxious to the Senate.

I admire the zeal of those senators who are ready to do a lot of committee work. When it is essential, that is the thing to do. But if they can dispense with a large amount of work that should be done by other people, I would appreciate it, for this reason. The members of the Divorce Committee are among the best qualified of our colleagues. They are well-informed, and we need them to give us their personal point of view about the numerous bills which come before us.

Although I have no power of attorney to speak on their behalf—no more than the members of the Divorce Committee have any power of attorney to speak on behalf of the Province of Quebec—we can talk together in a friendly manner to come to a satisfactory conclusion.

What is the hurry to pass that legislation which in itself is really bad? What is the hurry? I believe it would be a good thing for the Government to hold a conference so that all those who are for or against the bill would have an opportunity to express themselves freely, and come to a satisfactory understanding.

I believe that the best solution is an independent Exchequer Court, a federal court, which could make a recommendation to the Senate itself, not to the Divorce Committee. The recommendations of the court should be made to the Senate itself, through the Clerk of the Senate, and with the right for those who are not satisfied with the recommendation to appeal to the Divorce Committee, if it is necessary.

Honourable senators, this is what I want to say, and I have said it in the hope that it will serve some purpose. I listened with interest and profit to the remarks made by everyone who spoke on this matter, but I took the trouble to try to find my own way among all those contradictions. For that reason I hope there will be a meeting soon to give everyone an opportunity to reach the best manner to settle this difficult problem.

(Translation):

Hon. Léon Méthot: Honourable senators, I realize it is getting late, but I still feel I should tell you about the doubts I have concerning this bill.

First, I wish to join with honourable Senator Choquette in congratulating honourable Senator Roebuck. Ever since I have been a member of the Senate, I have seen him at work and I know what his merits are. I think we should all be very grateful to him for the fine work he has done.

(Text):

I must say, first of all, that I have no objection at all to a guarantee given to the Commissioner for his salary, his benefits and his rights. That provision is right. I would be 100 per cent in favour of a bill if it had only that purpose for him. However, I think it will be easy to understand from those who have spoken on the motion that they do not seem to agree on the principle of the law itself. Article 185, which was read this afternoon by Senator Choquette, according to Senator Pouliot has been valueless since 1867 or 1868, after the passing of the British North America Act. According to a friend of mine, it has been useless since the Parliament of Canada first enacted a Divorce Act. According to my own opinion, it is still useful and it is still in force now. What does article 185 say:

> Marriage can only be dissolved by natural death of one of the parties; while both live it is indissoluble.

When I read that article for the second time it struck me that natural death is not what we usually accept as, for instance, when a woman has poisoned her husband and can remarry if she can find another one. No. If she has poisoned her husband and he dies, the marriage is dissolved in that way. When the article speaks of natural death it is in regard to civil death, which was in force at the time of the code, and which annulled the effect of the marriage but did not give the right of remarriage.

If we examine the history on these matters, we find that in United Canada in 1859 Sir George Etienne Cartier proposed legislation for the codification of the laws in civil matters in the Province of Quebec. This commission was approved by everybody. In the government at that time were Sir George Etienne Cartier and Sir John A. Macdonald, both lawyers, and therefore having some knowledge of law. They gave to three commissioners, who were three Justices at the time, namely, Caron, Day and Morin, the duty to study and codify the law. This task took them five years. During those five years while they worked to produce a codification, the same government was thinking of what we would have after Confederation. In other words, the Government was preparing the British North America Act at the same time as the civil code of Quebec was being codified. Is it logical to think that they would codify the law, and at the same time by another law nullify that law? Surely not. This is why I claim that in 1868, a year after Confederation, the Civil Code remained as it was before, because the Civil Code was, I believe, enacted in 1865 and came into force in 1866, eight months before Confederation.

In the Civil Code we find many references concerning married women. It may surprise some persons that we have not only Article 185, but also an article dealing with the qualifications and conditions for contracting marriage, which is still in force and still approved by the Supreme Court. This was placed under the "Solemnization of Marriage." It has been decided by certain Supreme Court cases that the age at which a person could marry in Quebec was legal in our code and could be decided by Quebec. There is also the title "Action for Annulling Marriage." We can still take an action for annulling a marriage in the Province of Quebec. We go to the Superior Court, and from there we can go as high as the Supreme Court to annul a marriage. However, annulment of marriage is not the same as dissolution, nor is it the same as divorce. In divorce, as in dissolution, we recognize the validity of the marriage, but if we do not recognize the validity of the marriage, that is not the same at all. We can annul that marriage. It has not the same effect. We are dealing with this law rapidly, without getting to the bottom of this matter, and it may very well have more effect than we think.

Supposing two persons, married in community of property in the Province of Quebec, decide to obtain a bill of divorce. If this law is not solid and sound, the marriage will remain; the community of property will remain; the husband, having married a second wife, will keep on saving his money, or he may have acquired a property, or will acquire a property, of which his first wife will be entitled to one half. This is serious. Those who marry in separation as to property in the Province of Quebec usually have a marriage contract. Why? Because they still think, as I do, that separation as to property is not good for the wife. That was my own opinion when I studied this question in Quebec. Community of property is better for the wife, because she possesses half of what is earned and saved by the husband, otherwise she has nothing. In 45 years of practising law, I have never seen in the Province of Quebec a person married in separation as to property. I said that once before to a group of women, and I was told that I did not know what I was saying. When I say in separation as to property, I mean in the real sense—separation as to property. We usually correct the law by obliging the future husband to give with the marriage contract an insurance policy, and certain moveables and immoveables to the future wife. That is the case with my three daughters. I advised them to marry in separation as to property, but I also advised the three future husbands to take an insurance policy in favour of their respective wives, because I felt that separation was not a good policy. If I had not had the idea that I could give something to my three daughters I would have told them to marry in community of property. This is a question of property and civil rights. If we now look at the British North America Act, we will find in Article 91:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, By and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, . . .

etcetera.

Article 26, "Marriage and Divorce." We see "Marriage and Divorce": we do not see "Marriage" alone; we do not see "Divorce" alone. This is why we have not given to "marriage" the sense many of us want to give it now. This is why they were able to say in paragraphs 12, 13 and 14 of article 92 that the solemnization of marriage in the province is under the control or jurisdiction of the legislature, as are the property and civil rights in the province and the administration of justice in the province.

Article 94 states:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the Parliament of Canada may make Provision for the Uniformity of all or any of the Laws relative to Property and Civil Rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick,

There is no mention of Quebec.

Article 129 states:

> Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all Laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick at the Union, and all Courts of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction, > shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick respectively.

—etcetera—

So why have they enacted article 94; why have they enacted article 129? Because—and I think I am not wrong in stating this—they thought the civil law of the Province of Quebec was going to remain in force after Confederation. And it has remained in force, it has been applied, and it has gone to the Supreme Court and the Privy Council in many cases in which they have decided contracts concerning property which have been passed according to the law of Quebec. To say this could all be washed out without the consent of the province is to say something to which I do not and cannot agree. To delegate the power to the Senate alone is a delegation of legislative power which is wrong. Perhaps you will tell me this was done in the case of the War Measures Act. But it was for special reasons.

And I could answer by asking why is it that for 90 years now they have proceeded by way of a special law, or a separate Act of Parliament, for each divorce asked by persons residing in Quebec? This way of proceeding was for no other reason than to protect our Civil Code, and all the laws enacted in 1866.

Now we have decided that the Senate alone can deal with divorce, with the consent of the parties though; and it is the consent of the parties on which we count, because under the last piece of legislation men and women will be divorced by the Senate alone on the condition they accept the jurisdiction of the Senate and do not go on appeal to the House of Commons. For me that is no good. I must be frank. I think I was in the Senate chamber when the law was passed, but I must tell you I was very surprised when I read the first resolution and saw its conclusion which read:

> On the expiration of thirty days from the date of the adoption by the Senate of this resolution, the said marriage shall be dissolved—

So it shall be dissolved with the consent of the parties interested in it, because if they appeal to the House of Commons it will not be. This is a kind of delegation of power that we have effected.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If he does not mind my intervening for a moment, I take it what the honourable senator is attacking now is the legislation passed last session, chapter 10 of the statutes of 1963. He is not attacking this bill?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: I am attacking it now because I think the situation will be worse with this new bill than it is now.

What is going to happen under this legislation? Clause 3 states:

> A judge of the Court designated by the Speaker of the Senate for the purpose of this section after consultation with the President of the Court,. . .

What is going to happen about that consultation? If there is agreement, all right. If there is no agreement between the President of the Exchequer Court and the Speaker of the Senate, there is no solution. We have to admit that someone must have authority and have the last word if they do not come to an agreement. So now we will delegate our power to what I think will be a tribunal which can be called a committee of the Senate, which can be called a part of the Exchequer Court, which can be called anything; but it will be a tribunal which will act when in the Province of Quebec. We will still have in existence all those laws on matrimonial matters. I think there are 100 such articles. I could tell you of many other articles that concern marriage and the civil rights of married women.

Honourable senators, I do not like this legislation, and before passing it I think we should be absolutely sure of its validity, for this will certainly affect many property or civil rights of married persons who may think their marriage is dissolved when it is not. That is my opinion.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), debate adjourned.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 5, 1964

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-99, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a bill for interim supply for the month of June, 1964. The amount of money which is to be voted is $338,136,717.59, as provided in the bill at section 2.

I should say, first, that what the Government asks for on these estimates is one-twelfth of all the items to be voted in the main estimates, which amount is $329,299,209.25.

In addition to the one-twelfth of the main estimates required for the month of June, there are certain additional amounts which are thought will be required before the end of June. These additional amounts are given in section 2 of the bill, and the particulars are given in the schedules. For example, an additional four-twelfths of a Forestry item, Vote 25 which appears in Schedule A, is required in the amount of $480,333.34. An additional three-twelfths of certain Finance items, under Vote 15 is required, the details of which appear in Schedule B. That amounts to $1,500 million.

There is also required an additional two-twelfths of External Affairs Vote 15, which appears in Schedule C, amounting to a little more than $1½ million.

There is also required an additional one-twelfth of certain other enumerated votes in Schedule D in the departments of Finance, Forestry, Justice, Mines and Technical Surveys, the National Research Council, and the Privy Council, amounting to $5,260,175.

I must say that in no instance is the total amount of any one of the items in the main estimates being released by this bill. There will be an amount still to be granted for every one of the items of the main estimates. I should assure honourable senators also that the bill is in the usual form for interim supply bills of this character. Furthermore, I give assurance that the passing of the bill will not prejudice the right and privilege of any honourable senator to criticize or to inquire into any item of the estimates when they come up for further consideration either in this house or in committee. The right to debate any item will not be curtailed in any way by the passage of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Will the honourable senator indicate whose authority we rely in in the meantime? This must come from somebody on whom we should be able to feel sure we can rely.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In regard to the assurance I have given?

Hon. Mr. Farris: On whom do we rely for assurance that the bill ought to be passed now?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I suppose in the first instance the honourable senator would look to me as the representative of the Government in the Senate. I bring it before the Senate as a Government measure. As I have said, it is a bill which provides interim supply to the Government for one month ending on June 30. It is based, of course, on the estimates that have already been tabled, and have been referred to the Finance Committee of this house.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: The bill has been passed by the Commons?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, it has been passed by the Commons. We cannot of course initiate an appropriation bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do we not have the inherent right to speak on any subject when the next supply bill comes up, including what we have done in the past?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am glad the honourable senator who has had so much experience in affairs of this nature in this house has raised this point. I wonder if this assurance is necessary, although it is always given. I do not want to depart from the customary practice. The honourable gentleman gave this assurance to us many times. as did the present Leader of the Opposition, when each in turn was Leader of the Government in the Senate. But I think we have the basic right to debate any item of the estimates on appropriation bills, normally called money bills. The assurance I give simply proves that we are all against sin.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It is only a matter of relevancy. It is given in the other place because of the matter of relevancy.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In the other place the situation is different because they are primarily concerned with the details of the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: If I may interject at this point, I think the reason for giving the assurance is to make perfectly clear in the minds of honourable senators that if we do approve of this interim appropriation, it will not preclude us from discussing or criticizing any items of which these estimates form a part.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In the meantime the Government will have been authorized to spend the amount provided by this bill, which is one-twelfth of the items of all estimates, plus certain additional amounts.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: A number of years ago I raised this point when the assurance was given to the house, and I asked the Leader of the Government by what authority he pledged the Senate to do anything in the future. No answer could be given, because he had no such authority.

The only significance of this assurance is that we vote on the understanding that no one will raise objection later on, although everybody has the right to do so. Among ourselves we are free to discuss any point in the appropriations at a later date. That gentlemen's understanding has been effective. It has been customary, and I think it should be continued. I am sure every honourable senator present will respect the understanding in due season.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): May I ask a question? In discussing this bill are we confined to specific items or may we discuss the general financial policy of the Government?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I do not presume to lay down a rule in regard to the question asked by the honourable senator from Carleton, but I think it is generally understood that on an appropriation bill either branch of Parliament is free to discuss almost any appropriate point of financial policy, or indeed other Government policy. I think the latitude on an appropriation bill is perhaps the widest a parliamentarian receives. I think the answer to the honourable senator's question is yes, the latitude is there.

There are details of individual items in the schedules that may interest the house. It is now almost five-thirty, and we are to reassemble at eight o'clock. I am prepared to try to answer any questions that anyone wishes to ask, but if it is more convenient to adjourn now until eight o'clock, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I suggest we adjourn.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Is the honourable leader adjourning the debate?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Are you continuing this evening?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I have given a general explanation of the principles of the bill. If there are details concerning individual items on which honourable senators require information, I shall be happy to try to supply it.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is the general principle. In the circumstances I should like to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not a question of adjourning. It is simply a case of Mr. Speaker recognizing that the clock is now showing six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. White: May I ask the Leader of the Government if the item will be continued tonight after the Income Tax bill?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the Leader of the Opposition would prefer that I go on with this at eight o'clock, and then proceed to the Income Tax Act afterwards.

That being the case, I would move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at eight o'clock.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, at 6 o'clock the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) had given us an explanation of Bill C-99, which is an interim supply bill in the usual form. I believe it is the fifth such bill to come before us this session, which means that five votes of the estimates have already come before Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not quite.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Well, a fraction of the estimates—one-fourth or one-fifth has already been passed.

This bill, as the honourable Leader of the Government has said, appropriates one-twelfth of the estimates, and a larger fraction of some particular items so that certain accounts may be paid before a certain season is over.

Honourable senators have been wondering about what opportunities there might be at times for discussing the estimates in this house. It is well known that in the House of Commons interim supply bills are passed in a very short time. As a matter of fact, when I examined the record of the Commons with respect to this particular supply bill I discovered that it was passed in five or ten minutes. However, that is no reason why the Senate should do the same thing because, as we all know, the examination of the estimates by the Commons takes many weeks. Officials from all departments are present before either the Committee of the Whole or other committees of the House explain each one of the hundreds of items in the estimates.

When the usual assurance is given in the other place that debate on the main estimates will not be prejudiced, it does not mean that all the items are going to be passed. It is taken for granted. That assurance does not mean as much there as it does in the Senate, where these bills are received sometimes just a few hours before they receive royal assent. On occasions the Senate has very little time in which to consider the items. This is one of the reasons why the Senate should take more time in considering interim supply bills than does the House of Commons.

The question of whether we could discuss the estimates at different times when interim supply bills come before us was brought up. Of course the estimates are never passed until twelve-twelfths are passed. By this bill, we are passing one-twelfth and a little more, and no doubt next month another bill will come before us with respect to another twelfth. Each time such bills come before the Senate there should be an opportunity for us to discuss the estimates.

May I at this time congratulate the honourable Leader of the Government because in the short time that I have been in the Senate I think this is the first time that the interim supply estimates have been before the Senate apparently in time to discuss them before royal assent is given the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Take some credit yourself.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I would be very glad to do so. I feel that this is a very important step. We have set up a Finance Committee in the Senate. It is nothing new. We have had a Finance Committee for many years, but in some years it was not active. This year it is being activated.

May I suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government that it might be well to set up this committee as early as possible in each session, say, when the estimates come down. While the committee never could examine estimates in the sense in which they are examined in the House of Commons item by item, the committee in the past, as one will note from reading Hansard, adopted a policy of picking out important and broader general subjects. That method is, I think, the only function which the Senate can perform, but it is a very important one. If they got bogged down in trying to examine thousands of estimates as we see in our books of estimates, they would get nothing done at all.

I am very pleased indeed, therefore, that the Finance Committee has been set up to do the work which it can and will do, but not to attempt the work that it is not equipped or not entitled to do.

Honourable senators, I am very pleased to see my good friend Senator Crerar here this evening. In his remarks the other evening on the Estate Tax Act he mentioned the surpluses which the Government had over a number of years after the war. There is no member of this Senate to whom I would sooner listen in debate than honourable Senator Crerar. He spoke about the devastation of Europe. We all know one of the chief reasons why our economy was good, why there was employment and why we could sell practically everything we could manufacture for quite a number of years after the war. The reason was that the factories of Europe—of France, Great Britain, Czechoslovakia, Germany, and so on—were all destroyed. It took years to build new factories and to get the machinery necessary to recommence manufacturing operations. In Canada we were fortunate in being able to supply goods that were needed. Our economic success was due to that factor and not to any great effort on the part of the Canadian Government or Canadian people. The market was there and we took advantage of it, as we should.

Honourable Senator Crerar spoke about the deficits in 1957, after the change of Government. I know he did not wish to be unfair, but I would point out that those deficits occurred at a time when we all know there was a great change in the economy, not only of this country but of European countries. Those European countries were able to supply their own markets and become competitors with Canada in other countries.

The honourable senator conceded that there were other economic factors at work besides the change of Government in 1957, but I feel he left the impression that the national debt was greatly increased at that time because the previous Government failed to meet its obligations. I would like to say a few words in that connection.

The fact is that the national debt was increased, but I think we can say it increased for one particular reason more than any other, namely, that the provinces were demanding and getting more and more as their share of the federal revenues. The social services of this country had been greatly increased in those years.

May I say, honourable senators, that when the Diefenbaker government took office in 1957, it inherited an increasing demand on the part of the provinces for the greater share of the national income in order to discharge the constitutional obligations placed on it by this social legislation which had been passed by the previous Government. I am not objecting to that, for it was something which the times seemed to demand, and possibly that the people were demanding. It was for this reason that the government of the time, in 1957, reluctantly embarked on a series of budgetary deficits. The policies that resulted from those deficits had not only been adopted by the present administration, but indeed have increased and been enhanced in many cases.

One could speak for a long time and produce much evidence to this effect. Our expenditures are continually rising. That is what the honourable Senator Crerar and the honourable Senator Roebuck complained about so emphatically the other day. I do not blame them at all, for I think they are right. However, this is something that has been accumulating over a long period and it seems almost impossible for us to stop.

While it is true to say that we are going further in the red, it is also true that Canadians are producing more and selling more of our goods abroad than at any other time in our history. I believe that is what Senator Roebuck meant the other evening—that in those circumstances we should not be going further in the red. Actually, we now have trade surpluses, and as a result of the increase in our gross national product and in our trade, Canadians are now enjoying the highest standard of living in our history. Therefore, we should be getting nearer and nearer to a balanced budget. To my mind, there is no doubt about that.

May I point out that the increase in our trade did not come about by accident. It was the result of deliberate government policies, planned and carried out in the last few years. One of the major contributing factors to our trade surplus, as we all know, was the devaluation of the Canadian dollar by the previous Government.

In order to sell more, we have produced more, and this resulted in an increase in production and trade. Also there were various incentive programs instituted by the former Government. These incentives include export credit insurance, subsidies to the shipbuilding industry of this country, and other forms of assistance.

I do not intend to elaborate on any of these, but merely wish to draw attention to them. More particularly I would refer to the ambitious sales promotion program conducted by the Department of Trade and Commerce —the sponsoring of trade missions to various countries of the world; government-sponsored trips by manufacturers, and the bringing of trade commissioners to Canada. All of this has helped to provide for our surplus and increase in trade which we are enjoying at the present time.

The major single problem facing us today —and I expect this was what my good friend, Senator Crerar had in mind—is the fact that the federal revenues have not been able to keep up with the federal expenditures. Of course, that is a serious problem not only in this country, but in other countries as well. One has only to review the figures for the past five years to be made aware of that fact. For example, in the last fiscal year total revenues amounted to $6,207 million and total expenditures amounted to $6,892 million, indicating a widening gap in revenues and expenditures since the fiscal year of 1959. For the present fiscal year total expenditures are down slightly in the estimates. The estimates, as we all know, have a faculty of increasing as time goes on during the year. "Keep down expenses. Keep down taxes." Those are good slogans.

The honourable Senators Crerar and Roebuck talked about the dire results if we keep on spending and over-spending for years to come, and their warning is sound. We have listened to speeches such as this for many years, but that does not mean that we should do nothing about it now. Taxes and expenses go on increasing from year to year. All we have to do is to look at this year's estimates. We can go from the Department of Agriculture through to the Department of Veterans Affairs, and we find there have been few decreases from the previous year. I would say that 90 per cent show an increase.

I would also like to point out—I do not have the statement with me, but honourable senators can check on it—that the greatest percentage increase we find is in the department of Government called the Privy Council. It is nearly 40 per cent over the previous year. It occurs to me, and I am sure it must occur to all honourable senators, that the Privy Council, which is the very heart of the Government, is where a good example should be set to the other departments of government.

I would like to make a short comment on one item under Board of Transport Commissioners. This is just the opposite from the one I have just mentioned. There is an outstanding reduction in expenses of the previous year of from $83,500,000 to $13,500,000, a difference of $70 million. There is perhaps some explanation for this. Maybe it has something to do with freight rates or something of that kind.

However, I think the Finance Committee could check up on that.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That will be corrected when the supplementary estimates come in.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: "Corrected" may not be the right word to use in that connection; it may be "changed." In any event, I was pleased to see this, and I hope it is not changed too much, unless it means the Atlantic provinces are losing their Maritime freight rates. Of course that would be a different story.

Honourable senators, I do want to compliment our two great railways, the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway, for the tremendous effort they are making, and I believe successfully, to compete for freight and passengers on their lines at the present time. I have in mind the little scooters, as they call them, in my own province. Anyway, they are giving excellent service as far as the public is concerned, and if this is due to the efforts they are making, then great praise and commendation should be given the railways of this country, especially if they are saving us $70 million a year. I might say they are satisfying the public by their efforts.

One hears all sorts of praise for the railways now. Using an illustration I know best, the public has nothing but praise for the short time it takes to travel by train from Moncton to Saint John. The service is splendid and they compete with the trucks, buses and airplanes. They can give and are giving just as good service as any of their competitors; in fact, I think it is better and cheaper.

Honourable senators, I am not going to take any more of your time. I did want to comment on what Senator Crerar said. I am sure he did not wish to leave a wrong impression. I just wanted to point out the well-known fact that after World War II the former Liberal Government had every opportunity to improve trade, manufacturing conditions and the economy of this country. It became difficult later on, and that is when the Conservative Government came into power, but through the efforts they made we are now reaping benefits as time goes on.

As far as the Finance Committee is concerned, from reading Hansard—and I like to read the back numbers of Hansard because you get some splendid ideas from them—we become too optimistic over what this committee can do. While it can do great things, there is one thing it cannot do, and that is make an analysis of all the items in our estimates. But it can consider general principles.

I was pleased indeed to read in Hansard today that one of the members in the other place, a very competent member who has been there for many years, suggested to the Commons that they should give more work to the Senate, that we have splendid committees here. There is no question about that. Our committees are competent and capable of analysing many of the big problems we have in this country. He said he often wondered why there were so many royal commissions appointed when the same work could be done just as well by members of the Senate. I agree with him. I have often thought it would be the part of wisdom to give this responsibility and duty to the Senate.

Up to the present time we have had many such commissions. We have had the Gill Report, which might be considered by this committee we have set up. I understand this report recommended a number of economies which could be effected if its recommendations were adopted. We also had the Glassco Report. What is the use of having all these reports, costing large sums of money, and doing nothing about them, but putting them on a shelf to collect dust. There was the MacPherson Report, and many others. There are many propositions, many general principles which I believe this Finance Committee of the Senate could study.

We have a good chairman in Senator Leonard. I do not think we could find another who could better conduct the affairs of a committee of this kind than he can.

I am sure that with the chairman and members of the committee, with the proper selection of problems, and with a careful study of them, we can do much in the future to help the economy of this country.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, before the adjournment the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) said he would be glad to answer any questions and to give any information that he could. There are a number of questions I would like to ask him. While I do not expect an answer tonight, I would ask him if he would be kind enough to give the information before the next supply motion comes before the Senate.

These questions have to do with the yearly expense to Canada involved in the military operations in which Canadian forces have participated since the end of the Second World War. The United Nations Emergency Force in Palestine was formed in the fall of 1956, and is still continuing. Part of this force is composed of about 1,050 men of the Canadian army and air force. I noticed in a return in the House of Commons in the last session that the sea lift for this operation in the fall of 1956 by H.M.C.S. Magnificent cost $605,561. According to the same return the annual cost to Canada for the army and R.C.A.F. personnel in the Gaza Strip amounts to over $4½ million. I would ask the Leader of the Government for the following information:

1. Does the United Nations or some branch of the United Nations pay part of all the expenses of the Canadian troops in the Gaza Strip, including the sea lift in 1956? If Canada pays for the lift and for the forces, does the UN reimburse Canada, and, if so, to what percentage amount?

2. Does the figure of $605,561 for the cost of the air lift and the annual expense of $4.5 million for army and R.C.A.F. personnel, represent the total costs of this operation, or do these figures simply cover the share paid by Canada? If the figures represent only the share paid by Canada, then what is Canada's share on a percentage basis?

3. Do the Canadian forces in the Gaza Strip receive pay over and above their ordinary pay and allowances? If so, what is the amount, what is it for, and how was it arrived at?

4. When the operation in the Gaza Strip is concluded, who will pay the cost of the air lift and the sea lift to Canada of the troops, equipment and supplies?

The Canadian forces have been in the Gaza Strip since the fall of 1956. Is it not reasonable to ask after this long period of time if the size of the force could be reduced, and why the Canadian forces should not be brought home? If it is still necessary to maintain this type of peace-keeping force in the Gaza Strip, the Canadian troops can be replaced by troops from other United Nations countries. No doubt when the Canadian forces went to the Gaza Strip it was to be for only a short period of time, but almost eight years have elapsed since they were sent there. This same problem of length of service now faces the new Canadian peace-keeping force in Cyprus.

In 1959 it was the privilege of Senator Donald Smith and myself to visit the Canadian forces in the Gaza Strip. We were both much impressed with the job being done by our soldiers, and by their high spirits and morale. Certainly it was easy to understand the very high regard in which the Canadian forces were held by the Government of Israel and by citizens of that State. Their task was not easy. It was monotonous. It was out in the lonely desert with blowing sand and heat, and more sand and more heat.

Canada also has eight army officers on the United Nations military observer group in India and Pakistan. This force has continued since 1949 at an annual cost to Canada of $90,000. I ask the honourable Leader of the Government to answer these questions:

1. What is the purpose of this force after 15 years? What has it accomplished? When will it end?

2. Does Canada pay the full cost of the Canadian personnel in this group, or does the United Nations pay part? If the United Nations pays a part then what is the percentage share paid by Canada?

Canada also has 18 army officers on the United Nations truce supervisory organization. This has continued since 1949 at an annual cost to Canada of about $177,000. I ask the honourable Leader of the Government:

1. What is the purpose of this force? Where is it stationed? In what countries has it operated? What has it accomplished in the last 15 years?

2. Does Canada pay the full cost of the Canadian personnel in this group, or does the United Nations pay a part? If the United Nations pays a part what is the percentage paid by both the United Nations and Canada?

Canada has supplied about 83 officers and other ranks from the navy, army and R.C.A.F. to the International Supervisory Commissions in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. This has continued since 1954, at an annual cost of about $900,000. This very substantial sum of money has been provided each year for the past ten year. What are the duties of this force? What has it accomplished? When will its work be ended? Does Canada pay the full cost of the Canadian personnel on these commissions, or does the United Nations pay a part? If each pay a part then what is the percentage of the total cost so paid by either the United States or Canada?

Canada is represented also on other military forces around the world in such countries as the Congo, Yemen, and Korea, and Canadian forces have served with other United Nations groups and missions whose work has been completed.

With reference to the Canadian forces in Cyprus, we all heard the Secretary-General of the United Nations this morning explain the hopes and ambitions of the United Nations Force in solving the dispute there. Even yet it is somewhat vague as to the direct authority of this force in Cyprus to ensure the keeping of the peace. Just what are the operating orders to the Cyprus force, and what collective financing provision has been made to carry on this force under the United Nations?

When this force was set up in a great hurry and flown to Cyprus, the honourable Leader of the Government, at page 158 of the Debates of the Senate for this session, stated:

> It was further recommended that the stationing of the force on Cyprus should be for a period of three months.

After discussing the cost and the short time there was in which to make financial arrangements, the honourable Leader of the Government continued as follows:

> For that reason the Government has decided to assume the cost of the Canadian contingent for a three-month period, and also to pay the cost of transporting the men and the material. It is estimated that the cost involved for this period will be approximately $2,600,000.

I have since read in the press that the cost of this three-month operation, including the air lift and the sea lift by H.M.C.S. Bonaventure, will be much more than the original estimate of $2,600,000. The period of three months will soon expire, and no doubt the question of the Canadian forces remaining after that time is being discussed today in Ottawa. I ask the honourable Leader of the Government:

1. What will be the total cost to be paid by Canada for the first three months in respect of the Canadian forces in Cyprus, including the cost of the air lift, and the sea lift by H.M.C.S. Bonaventure?

2. What division of cost will be made after the three-month period? What percentage of the total cost will be paid by Canada?

3. When the Cyprus mission is completed who will pay for the air lift and sea lift of the troops, supplies and equipment back to Canada?

4. Do the Canadian forces in Cyprus receive extra pay over and above their ordinary pay and allowances? If so, what is the amount, what is it for, how was it arrived at, and what other Canadian forces serving on United Nations missions receive extra pay? If any receive extra pay, what is the amount of such extra pay, and what is such extra pay for?

A few days ago the press reported the first casualty suffered by the United Nations forces in Cyprus. A Finnish soldier was killed. This raises the question of pensions and allowances in case of death or disability. This question of pensions applies not only to the Canadian troops in Cyprus and in the Gaza Strip, but to the Canadian forces serving anywhere in the world with United Nations forces or missions. There have been Canadian casualties in the Gaza Strip. I would like to know who is responsible for the pension benefits in the case of the death or disability of a Canadian soldier. Is the pension paid entirely by the Government of Canada, or does the United Nations pay part or all of the pension claim?

To date Canada has done her share—in fact, more than her share—in supplying forces for the various policing organizations around the world. After all, there are over 100 member nations of the United Nations. Is it unreasonable to ask that all nations make some sort of fair and equal contribution in both men and money to these forces? Certain countries, which are members of the United Nations, have refused to pay their part of the cost of the Gaza Strip and Congo operations.

In 1958 the then Secretary-General of the United Nations made suggestions as to certain permanent international forces to meet future emergencies. The United Nations refused to accept his recommendations. The U.S.S.R. and other communist countries, and certain African and Asian countries which had recently received their independence, opposed the organization of any peace-keeping force by the United Nations. Apparently, they did not like the idea of the United Nations being able to put force behind international decisions in a way which might interfere with their own national policies. Countries which join the United Nations should accept the responsibilities that come with membership in such an organization. If troops are required, each should contribute in turn and all should pay their portion of the cost of the force.

When the Leader of the Government is obtaining the information I have asked for, would he also please obtain whatever information he can showing all military operations in which Canadian forces have participated since the end of World War II, the nature of their operation, the number of officers and other ranks employed in each force, the annual cost of each operation since the date of commencement to date or to the date the special operation was concluded?

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, my remarks tonight on this interim supply bill will not be very extensive. However, I could not resist the temptation to respond to my good friend the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks). I was really unable to determine whether he was criticizing me or praising me.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Neither one.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I sometimes think that if an inhabitant of Mars is familiar with what goes on on this terrestrial sphere, he must at times be greatly confused. As it appears to me, when we change governments in this country the new government, in the matter of spending, immediately proceeds to follow the policies of the preceding government and turn its back on most of what it criticized during the time it was in opposition. Likewise, the new opposition, when it ceases to have a party to support in the seats of power, immediately becomes very economy minded. I do not think I am overstating the situation when I say that.

I am bound to say that this state of affairs —and what I have just stated is a fact— is confusing the Canadian people to no end today. In my judgment, the two major political parties, so far as public esteem is concerned, were never at such a low ebb as they are today.

I am not going to change my views on public spending simply because I sit on this side of the house, supporting the Government and facing an opposition that until a year ago was supporting the Government that was in power then. We have developed extremely bad habits in public spending and, as far as I am concerned, while my voice may not reach very far, it is going to be raised in protest against that.

Any glance at our expenditures today rather appalls one. It is quite true that after the end of the war there was a period of about ten years when, as Senator Brooks said, the country could sell everything it produced. There was not only devastation in Europe, devastation almost beyond imagination, but there was a tremendous shortage of everything here in Canada and it took years to catch up. However, to the credit of the Liberal Government of those days, I must say that it did pay off debt, and that fact cannot be denied.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: They had every opportunity to do so, for the reasons you have just cited.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Any government in a position like that would have done the same.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: They paid off $3 billion of debt between 1945 and 1956, up to the time they went out of office.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Why should they not have done so?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: In 1957, the then Minister of Finance brought in a budget, knowing that an election was coming within four or five months. In that budget, facing an election, he budgeted for a surplus of $150 million.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: He was just living in a fool's paradise.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If my honourable friend has anything to say, I will be glad to sit down and let him say it.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I did not say it. It was my friend on my left, and I remarked to him that you did not hear it.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The then Minister of Finance raised old age pensions by $6 a month. It is within the recollection of everyone what criticism was offered to that. I say that those who criticized that ought to go back and read the report of the Joint Committee on Old Age Security, published in June 1950, when the recommendation was for a $40 a month pension, and where it was clearly intimated that the pension was not to be considered as the sole support of the pensioner.

What did Honourable Mr. Harris do in that budget? That $6 increase matched to a fine fraction of a point the increase in the cost of living that had taken place between 1950 and 1957. That was one of the most honest and courageous budgets ever delivered in this Parliament. Honourable Mr. Harris was facing an election, when everyone wanted tax reductions or favours so as to get votes, but he stood by his responsibility. What was the result? The result was that he was practically driven from public life. That was done not only by my honourable friend opposite but, I regret to say, by some of his own Liberal friends who did not defend him as they should have defended him.

Now we come on to the new regime in 1957. That regime increased the spending. The old age pension, which was a test, was increased immediately—or as soon as the Government could get authority—to $55 a month.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I would prefer not to be interrupted.

That $55 a month was based on the theory that an old age pensioner could not live on $46 a month, while the committee which reported, and upon which the increased pension was based, stated very clearly it was not intended that the old age pension should be the sole means of support.

But there was worse than that to follow. In the autumn of 1961, in the Speech from the Throne there was an announcement that the old age pension was to be increased by another $10 a month. That legislation was put through. I protested against it in the few remarks I addressed to the house on the occasion of the Speech from the Throne debate. Believe me, I got some rather blistering letters—which did not annoy me at all, as people who do not sign their names to letters are not entitled to any respect. I respect those who may differ honestly with me, but I have no respect for the person who writes anonymously and abuses one like a pickpocket. However, that is by the way; that is the fate of public men. I dare say some of my honourable friends opposite have had that experience also.

To resume the point, the increase of $10 a month at that time was given at a period when the Government was running heavy deficits. The Government should have known then, and must have known, that they would have to go into the market and borrow every dollar to pay this increase in the old age pension. Frankly, I consider that irresponsibility, and I make no bones in saying so. If it was intended to increase the old age pension at that time the sensible thing would have been to increase taxation to meet it. However, the imposition of taxation when facing an election was not an alluring prospect for the government in power, and it is no less an alluring prospect for the Government now in power.

Honourable senators, in order that my criticism may be fairly given, let me give a little background. During the election last year the Liberal party made a promise of another $10 a month increase in the old age pension. At the time, quite frankly, I felt that was an irresponsible promise, although the plan was to institute a new overall pension scheme, and the dollars that flowed in to support that scheme would be used to give the increase.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The plan was cheap for the public too.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I submit that that added to the tax burden of the country. That promise should not have been given. Today we are in the same position with regard to that $10 a month increase as we were in 1961. Every dollar of it has to be borrowed.

Frankly, honourable senators, I do not think that is what we are sent here to do. If there is one responsibility resting upon Parliament, it is to use wisely and frugally the taxes it collects from the people. A review of history will show that revolutions have been caused by over-taxation, probably more so than by any other means. It is unfair and unjust to spend one dollar of the taxpayers money, if it can be saved. That is why I agree with much of the criticism of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in regard to the increases in these estimates. They need to be scrutinized closely.

For four years, as I recall, I was Chairman of the Finance Committee, the job that my distinguished colleague from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) has now. I do not think I received much applause from the party I was supposed to support at that time, on account of some of the strictures that we made on the spending in some of those days. However, I just cannot get out of my system that I am here as a Member of Parliament to spend prudently the taxpayers' money, as far as it is within my power to do so.

When I see these vast expenditures, this burden of debt, increasing steadily until today it takes over $1 billion a year to pay the interest on the debt, I think of a workman in his shop who has difficulty in making both ends meet, or the farmer, or the wage-earner, or the businessman who is trying to conduct his business so as to make a profit and is burdened with these taxes. I say that this Parliament will fail in its responsibility if it does not sooner or later take that into account.

One hears fanciful theories from economists that a debt does not matter. The other day I read a statement by a prominent man, that public debt in some respects was a good thing. Well, I was not brought up in that school. It may be that I am a hundred years behind the times, but I do not think I am. At any rate, as long as I have my place of responsibility in this house I shall frankly criticize this kind of spending.

We have another supreme fallacy which has seized upon the imagination of the people, and certainly upon their governments, that money is of no account. I do not believe that. Much of the prosperity we enjoy today, which Senator Brooks spoke about, and it is quite true, is made apparent by the fact that people have money in their pockets. Look at the weekly returns of the Bank of Canada. Look at the amount of money in circulation. We are told there is pretty nearly $100 for every man, woman and child in this country. So they have money in their pocket. However, I will remind this house that in large measure that is the result of more than 100 per cent inflation in the past 30 years, and this inflation, continuing daily, is of a creeping character.

Honourable senators, we can put our house in order. Canada is a country with vast resources. Unfortunately, the federal Government does not control these resources. I will withdraw the word "unfortunately," but it is a fact that the federal Government does not control these resources.

I am hoping, everything being in order, to make some remarks on the Income Tax Act in respect of the situation of Ottawa vis-a-vis the provinces, because that is one of our most important problems. However, I shall not deliver those remarks tonight. I may speak on that subject tomorrow or the day after. In the meantime, honourable senators, I hope I have made my position clear.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I note that a number of senators have to attend a committee in the morning, so if it is your wish, I will adjourn the debate. If I go on, I promise to be brief.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Don't be brief.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I do not wish to get into the private quarrel between my leader, Senator Brooks, and my distinguished friend, Senator Crerar.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That was not a quarrel. We never quarrel.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): However, I would remind Senator Crerar of one thing. When he tells us that over a certain period of years the Liberal government paid off, I think he said $3 billion of debt—

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Almost $3 billion.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Almost $3 billion—there was one important fact he overlooked. He overlooked the fact that during those years his good friend, Angus Macdonald, and the good friend of the Leader of the Government in this house, was coming to this capital year after year pleading for more of the revenues of this country for his province. And so were the other provinces—fields of revenue belonging to the provinces, which the federal Government had taken over during the war and refused to surrender.

And I remember—because I sat through the last dominion-provincial conference—Mr. Ilsley saying that he could not afford to surrender a single item of the revenues he was collecting, despite the fact that in that year and the year following he had federal budgets of from $500 million to $600 million surpluses.

I remember well, as I am sure my friend Senator Crerar remembers well, Angus Macdonald returning to his province reciting the wrongs and grievances under which Nova Scotia was labouring by virtue of the fact that it was being denied the revenue which he thought rightly belonged to him, saying, "They haven't seen the last of my bonnet and me."

There were surpluses in those years; but if the Diefenbaker government had starved the provinces to the extent they were starved under Ilsley and Abbott he would not have had a deficit at all during his years. These moneys went to the provinces, and they went to provinces which had been starved by the preceding governments, a situation which laid the foundation for a lot of the trouble we are having with the provinces right now. However, I am not going to concern myself too much with this subject.

I am not going to deal, and in fact I am not in a position to deal, with specific estimates in this interim supply bill. But, honourable senators, what strikes one about these succeeding bills coming to this house is that nowhere is there a single sign of any sincere effort, any effective effort, to reduce costs in this country. I am going to give you now just one example of, to my mind, the appalling extravagance of the present Government and, I must say quite frankly, to some extent of the Government which preceded it.

I have been trying in the last few weeks to get a statement from London showing the total floor space occupied in London by the United Kingdom Government. I hope to get it soon. But, honourable senators, I will make a wager now that the Government of Canada has more floor space in offices in the City of Ottawa than the United Kingdom Government has in the City of London. Many of you have gone to Whitehall and visited these offices; you have been in the Admiralty Building; you have been in the Foreign Office Building. Do you see there the spacious, palatial offices we have here in the City of Ottawa?

Let me read you just a few lines from the report of the Glassco Commission about government housing in the City of Ottawa. This is almost fantastic. It says:

> In 1960, about 180 million square feet of building space were occupied by departments and agencies—the equivalent of over 100 buildings, each the size of a football field and 28 storeys in height—and the value of real estate holdings was estimated at $4 billion.

Honourable senators, that was in 1960, yet in the intervening years Government buildings have been mushrooming all over Ottawa. Now, despite what we have seen between here and Uplands, for example, they are talking about a "Pentagon" building down on the Flats and, in addition to that, what they call a "prestige building" for the Department of External Affairs.

Honourable senators, I remember the day when the Department of External Affairs in this country consisted of Sir Joseph Pope and one stenographer. I remember when Sir Wilfrid Laurier had a man called William Mackenzie to keep him informed on foreign affairs by clipping the foreign press, mainly the London Times. I remember when it was under Loring Christie, with a staff of four or five. I remember when it was under Dr. Skelton with a small staff. I remember that when Arthur Meighen went to the London Conference of 1929 he took along one private secretary and a stenographer. Now we are spending some $58 million or $59 million under the Department of External Affairs alone. In my judgment, this has come about through a false national pride, a phoney national pride. We are attempting to take over areas all over the world which, whatever it may tell of our good heart and our good intentions, tells very little of our realism and our good sense.

I was very glad tonight to hear the honourable Senator White ask the questions he did about the operations of our troops abroad. It is all very well to undertake these things; it is all very well to minister to the vanity of certain people who strut their little hour in this country in the field of external affairs. But this is a small country—we are not a big power; we are not a middle power—and it is utter nonsense for this country to be undertaking some of the obligations it is undertaking on the ground that we must keep our obligations to the UN.

What is the UN about? Read one section of the charter—I think it is section 6. Read what it says about the obligations of the various members, obligations for collective security. What have we now? We have collective security, but we are not having it collectively. We are having it by virtue of a few nations who are bearing the main burden, and that was never the idea of the United Nations at all.

Wat is the consequence of all this spending? As was pointed out a few moments ago, we have come now to the position where this country has a federal budget of $7 billion. But that is not all: in addition to that budget of $7 billion for the federal Government we have a budget of roughly $1 billion for Ontario, a proposed budget of $1 billion for Quebec, and a budget for British Columbia, the western provinces and the Atlantic provinces as well, amounting to more than $11 billion a year—$11 billion a year for 19 million people, which actually works out at $600, or more, for every man, woman and child in this country, or $2,400 for every family of four. That is what it is costing to govern this country: $2,400 annually for every family of four in the country.

I submit to you that this country at the present time is being smothered by big government, and that big government, with its constantly mounting costs, must inevitably and inescapably lead to financial ruin.

I have no intention of fighting over the election battles of the last three years but, honourable senators, read some of the election speeches that were made in the course of those elections. Read Mr. Walter Gordon's "Troubled Canada." I am not speaking now of ordinary election speeches made on the hustings; I am speaking of the financial and economic promises made by responsible leaders of Parliament.

Mr. Gordon promised that he would reduce taxes, that he would reduce deficits —and he stressed that most of all. He has not done either of those things; he has not done anything toward achieving either of those ends. When asked in the other place the other day what his budget plans were, Mr. Gordon—this man of great decision a year ago—said he did not know. He actually was not sure whether, because of these new contributions of revenues to the provinces, he would have to increase taxes or do something else; but he gave three alternatives, not one of them along the lines of a policy that he preached a year ago. This man of decision has now become a man of indecision. He does not know, but he did say this, and I quote from Hansard:

> The third choice, obviously, is to consider, in the light of the fact that additional revenues are being made available to the provinces and therefore that their deficits would be reduced below what they otherwise would be, whether in these circumstances a higher federal deficit may be justified.

Here is the man who for two or three years preached, among other things, the vital need of cutting down our deficits; and now, here he stands in the other place only last week saying that we have reached a position where higher deficits may be justified.

Mention was made of our public debt. I do not think the people of this country realize that the interest on our public debt at the present time is perilously close to $1 billion a year. That is one-seventh of our total expenditure and twice the deficit. The interest on the public debt at the present time is more than twice the deficit which Mr. Gordon had this year, and will have next year, and yet I see no sign anywhere of a sincere effort to economize.

It is true that Mr. Hellyer has come forward with some organizational proposals with respect to National Defence. At least we must give him credit for paying homage to the idea, but we are not sure, and he is unable to tell us, whether these proposals will really result in any net gain.

On the first occasion when I had the privilege of speaking to this chamber, I closed my speech by saying that I had feared, as did many others, that we were putting too much sail on the ship. I think we are putting too much sail on the ship now, and we are doing a great deal of it because of this almost fanatical obsession of our politicians with foreign affairs.

I remember a few years ago going into a club and encountering there an ex-Prime Minister of Canada. I happened to ask him a question about some domestic problem, and he said, "I am surprised that you are interested in that question at all. No one today in Canada is interested in domestic problems any more. It is all foreign affairs." And today it is all foreign affairs. You go to a dinner party and meet some charming lady. She can name for you every single member of the Security Council, but she could not for the life of her tell you the names of the councillors in her own municipality. That is phony democracy. That is the sort of thing Mr. Churchill had in mind once when he spoke of people who had a "passion for distant freedom," the people who were all for the good life in Bulgaria,

Hungary, and other countries, but would not speak to a British workman in the street. We have too many people in this country who are concerned only with foreign affairs. They speak of our image abroad. Did you ever hear of an Englishman asking about the image of England abroad? He did what he thought was right and let it go at that. Why this eternal concern in Canada about what other people think of us? In that respect we are becoming almost as bad as our American neighbours, who want to be loved.

Something else comes to my mind. Only last week in the British House of Commons a proposal was made to enlarge the rooms and facilities of the members of that house, and to give them more secretarial help. Do you know what happened? Member after member rose and opposed the idea and they did so on two grounds. They said "We don't need these facilities, we don't need the secretarial help, and the country cannot afford it."

Honourable senators, all this concern with the world is not going to do this country good. We are not going to make the least contribution to setting the world's house in order unless we first show a capacity to set in order our own. We are not showing that capacity today.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If the honourable Senator Connolly speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I shall not delay the chamber for more than a few moments. I think it has been proven here tonight that when we have an appropriation bill before the Senate, we can have a wide-ranging discussion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Frankly, I am very pleased that we can have this kind of discussion here, with a good deal of thrust from both sides, and I might add, trust on both sides. This is the kind of thing we would all like to see continue to develop in the Senate. I think it is healthy not only for Parliament, but—and I say this conscious of the fact that I am a member of the Government—it is healthy for governments to have second chambers perform as this house has been performing this evening.

Senator Brooks has said he would like to see the Senate refer the estimates to the Finance Committee at a very early date. I must say that I was most anxious to do this at the early part of the session, and I wish my honourable friend would think about this aspect of it, because it has been referred to in debates of this character in this chamber in other years. However, it was said and felt at that time, and I think the feeling still prevails, that until estimates are introduced into the other house this house should not engage in a study of them. But if there is a general desire on the part of the Senate to follow the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition, I certainly would be glad to discuss it further, and if it is desired to do so, I shall do all I can to implement the wish.

The Leader of the Opposition also asked about the decrease in the amount of the main estimates in respect of the Board of Transport Commissioners. Senator McCutcheon had the answer very quickly. He said "Wait until the supplementary estimates come." This is correct. The reason, as all honourable senators know, is that this was referred to by the Royal Commission on Transportation in their report, and the Government of the day was concerned about the preparation of legislation to implement that report; in the meantime, it disallowed freight rate increases and subsidies were given as a result. The amount of those subsidies is approximately $70 million a year, which is the difference between the $83 million and the $13 million mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I was a little suspicious of the coincidence.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is more than coincidence. It is a fact.

I understand over the past few years it has been the custom to have this item in the supplementary estimates. I have no doubt it will appear there again. I think the reason it did not appear this year is, firstly, we did not have any, and, secondly, there is on the Order Paper of the other place a resolution which purports to implement some of the recommendations of the royal commission.

Senator White asked a series of questions, and he was kind enough to suggest that perhaps I could not have all the answers tonight. That is a masterpiece of understatement, but I certainly will do all I can to get answers for him at an early date, I hope long before another appropriation bill comes to this chamber.

So far as the speeches of the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) are concerned, I have very little to say except that I think both these gentlemen will be outstanding members of the Finance Committee to which the estimates have been referred.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the second reading of Bill C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am going to say a few words in connection with this bill tonight, but the length of time during which I speak will depend upon when you feel you have had enough. First of all, I wish to make a few general observations.

It is most appropriate that this taxation bill should follow the speeches we have heard this evening, because those speakers should react somewhat in the fashion of the man who received a bill of account the morning after the night on which he had had a particularly good party, and thus realized very quickly what the cost was. It may be that if taxing bills are presented often enough, and are large enough, people will begin to realize that their demands, as the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) put it, for distant freedom, and the projection of the image of a loving father over long distances, have to be paid for.

This bill does not increase the revenues in any substantial way, but there are some features of it that I should explain with some care. There are other features which I think are fairly obvious and clear cut, and which I might dispose of this evening. When some honourable senator cries: "Hold, enough!" I will adjourn the debate until tomorrow afternoon.

In the first category, I put two amendments which are proposed by this bill. The first one, found on page 7, deals with a partnership interest. This amendment, and another one to which I shall refer, are designed to meet and, I should say, overcome decisions that have been made by our courts.

So far as a partnership interest is concerned, paragraph (j) on page 7 has the effect of providing that where a person sells a parnership interest, then to the extent that there is depreciable property in the partnership interest, the proceeds from the sale are proceeds of disposition and come into income to the extent that there may be recapture.

There have been a series of decisions in our courts that have distinguished between an interest in a partnership and the assets of a partnership. In a number of cases the courts have held that the sale of an interest in a partnership is not a sale of the assets of the partnership, and is, therefore, a capital transaction, and as such attracts no tax. When this amendment is given the force of law the decisions in those cases to which I referred will no longer be of any value.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Will the honourable senator give us some estimate of the revenue that will result from this change?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No; I am sorry. It would be the height of speculation on my part if I attempted to do so, and it would not be even a reasonable speculation. If my friend is still anxious to know what increase this amendment will cause in the revenues, then possibly he can obtain that information when the bill is before the committee. We must leave some work for the committee to do.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I doubt even that.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I did not want it to appear that I thought your question was intended other than to be an important and searching question designed to discover how the revenues were to be improved.

The second amendment to which I wish to refer is in paragraph (ar), on page 18 of the bill. The Eastern Abattoir case, which was recently before the courts, had to do with the winding up of a pension plan. Honourable senators know that under section 6 of the Income Tax Act superannuation or pension benefits are to be included in the computation of income. But, in this case the courts held that since on the winding up of a pension plan a distribution was made of some of the moneys in the plan to the company, it was not a payment in relation to an existing plan but was a payment on the winding up of the plan.

That conclusion being entirely contrary to the views of the department, and their enforcement practices theretofore, we have before us this amendment which now provides for such cases. It will be seen that the events that would make any moneys payable to the employer income are recited in paragraph (ar). For instance, included in this category are payments which result from the termination of the fund or plan. This amendment specifically negates the decision in the Eastern Abattoir case. These are the two amendments that are designed to meet situations created by legal decisions.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I ask the honourable senator a question? Does the whole of the residue of the fund in that case go into income in the year in which it is paid?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The contributions by an employer to the pension plan have been deductible in each of the years in which they were made. If on the winding up of the fund there is a distribution of any part of those contributions that were deductible at the time they were made, then it seems only logical that they should come back into income in the year in which they are returned to the employer. That was the attitude of the department, and its interpretation of the law. Now that the courts have held differently we find that the law is being made more specific so as to cover the situation.

There is a group of sections to which I would like to refer, and which I describe as being in some way or other beneficial. For instance, so far as legal costs are concerned—and I can see that as soon as I mention that the lawyers present become more interested—it is now provided by the new paragraph (q) in clause 1 of the bill that legal costs awarded to a taxpayer by a court on an appeal in relation to an assessment of tax, interest or penalties, have to be included in the income of the taxpayer in the year in which he is awarded those costs, if with respect to that assessment an amount has been deducted, or—and these next words are very important—may be deductible under paragraph (w) of subsection (1) of section 11 in computing his income.

If you look at paragraph (w) on page 4 you will see the other side of the coin. By this paragraph the amounts paid by the taxpayer in the year in respect of fees or expenses incurred in preparing, instituting or prosecuting an objection to, or an appeal in relation to, an assessment of tax, interest or penalties under this act are deductible. This comes under section 11 of the act, and is one of the deductions which a taxpayer will be entitled to make when this act becomes law. The departmental attitude apparently is that it was always permitted that you could make those deductions.

In what areas that view of the law was operating, I am not too sure, because in my own experience I have found time after time that there were great difficulties, even an impossibility, in getting the department to allow any deduction to a taxpayer in relation to expenses that he incurred in resisting the income tax assessment. Sometimes, in relation to a corporation—and I think there are cases on the point—there were circumstances where it might relate, and a decision one way or the other might affect the business of the corporation, and expenses have been allowed.

I am thinking of certain cases—for instance, that of a lawyer who may have a substantial assessment and who fights it and wins it. Lawyers have at times been allowed a deduction, on the basis that the overwhelming expense would put them out of business, but I do not think there is any legal basis. Now you will have a legal basis; to that extent we have moved along.

The next item, which still comes in the category of beneficial, is that given on pages 13 and 14 of the bill. When you are appealing to the Tax Appeal Board or to the Exchequer Court, and when there is a number of assessments involved covering different years, up to the present you had to file an income tax appeal in relation to the assessment of each year. Now, by virtue of the provisions which you will find on pages 13 and 14, amending the pertinent sections of the Exchequer Court Act and also the Income Tax Act, you can put all your appeals in the one notice of appeal, no matter how many years may be involved nor how assessments as a consequence may be included therein.

That is beneficial in its nature. It does not translate into any revenue one way or the other, as far as the Crown is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It is just procedural.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It makes it very convenient.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, much more convenient.

The next section to which I wish to refer under this heading of "beneficial"—and in this case there may be some people who do not agree with me, but I think it is beneficial—is in regard to the amendments which have been made in relation to expenditures for scientific research. You will find them in Clause 14, on pages 11 and 12. One addition that you are permitted to deduct, that you could not heretofore deduct on the grounds that it was an expenditure on scientific research, is in relation to research carried on outside Canada where the expenditures are of a current nature and where that research is, as it says at the bottom of page 11:

> (a) on scientific research related to the business and directly undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer; or
>
> (b) by payments to an approved association, university, college, research institute or other similar institution to be used for scientific research related to the class of business of the taxpayer.

That language is similar to any which you will find already in the act dealing with expenditures on scientific research in Canada.

There is one word in the section which bothers me, but it may be that my language appreciation sense is too highly developed at the moment. I refer to the word "directly". I am just wondering how you could have expenditures on scientific research related to the business and "directly" undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I was going to ask you if you could give an example of how it might operate.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I can tell you what was intended to be covered. You would have, say, a large parent industrial operation in the United States, carried on by a United States company, and have also a company in Canada. The facilities available for scientific research in the United States would be substantial and very extensive and would be in relation to many classes of products which were also being produced by the Canadian company, and would also in the United States be in relation to new products, the benefits of which would greatly improve the operations of the Canadian company and the cost of establishing such scientific facilities in Canada would be completely uneconomic. Now, this is the sort of thing that it is intended to cover.

I should point out to you that I do not think the Government, in making this concession as part of the law in this fashion, is giving away much, if anything, in revenue. At the present time, in situations where you have had scientific research of this kind carried on outside Canada, if you could establish certain things, you were able to get the deduction, but you were not entitled to get the deduction by saying, "This is scientific research, therefore I am entitled to make the deduction." You had to follow the provisions of Section 12(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act, which says:

> In computing income, no deduction shall be made in respect of
>
> (a) an outlay or expense except to the extent that it was made or incurred by the taxpayer for the purpose of gaining or producing income from property or a business of the taxpayer . . . .

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You went under "general".

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You went under "general," if you had established that this research was being done outside of Canada and was for the purpose of gaining or producing income from the business of the company in Canada. So I suppose, administratively, putting this section in the bill and exempting it as scientific research provides a simpler administration.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The trouble is that the administrators interpreted the other too narrowly.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They did not allow it as an expense up to now.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Now, if my friend Senator McCutcheon is giving the evidence, he may have cases that he can speak about; but I must be fair with the department and say that, in my experience—and I have had a substantial amount of it on this subject—I have found that the department takes a very fair look at the presentation you make, and if the facts are of the nature that I have described to you here tonight, and if the parent relationship is established, you have no trouble in getting your allowances.

Incidental to that, it was necessary to make some changes in the definition section, in Section 72(4). You will find that in the definition sections which occur on page 12. In regard to subsection (3), paragraph (c), they now subdivide that paragraph so as to say, when you have references to expenditures in respect to scientific research and the references occur in subsection (1a)—which is the one I have just read, where it gives you the right to deduct scientific research expenditures made outside of Canada—that that reference includes only expenditures incurred in and wholly attributable to the prosecution of scientific research; but where the references to scientific research occur other than in this section (1a), that includes expenditures incurred for and wholly attributable to the prosecution or the provision of facilities for the prosecution of scientific research in Canada.

So the first part of the new definition deals with scientific research outside Canada and is limited to the prosecution of scientific research; and the second part of the definition relates to expenditures for scientific research in Canada and it is related not only to the prosecution of research but also to the provision of facilities for that research.

The next item deals with the many changes which occur in this bill to implement a decision of the Government with respect to the withholding tax. That decision was to the extent that the withholding tax was increased last year from 15 to 20 per cent in relation to dividends paid to nonresident shareholders who did not have a degree of Canadian ownership, commencing with January 1, 1965. The item deals with all the various aspects of the application of that decision as put into the income tax law last year. That phase of it is being undone by the provisions of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You can note the harpings with which I referred to these particular things. I am sure honourable senators will recall what I had to say about the increase to 20 per cent, when I was explaining the amendments to the Income Tax Act last year.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I recall the views of the honourable senators opposite, and I recall the way they voted.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: If this is going to be a game of recalling, I am sure that even in the short space of time my friend has been in this house, I can match him in recalling some of the things he has done. One correction that I will make for the record is that the Chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee did not vote, and he did not take part in this vote either.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Maybe you will go back and change now.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I was casting no reflection on the chairman. I was making a general statement.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, except that your statement referred to the honourable senator, and I took it that you—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: "Honourable senators," I said.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: If you made it plural, fine. As I heard it, it was in the singular.

May I refer very briefly to the sections dealing with the change from 20 per cent to 15 per cent, mentioned in section 12 of the bill, that is, to reinstate the former rate of 15 per cent on nonresident-owned companies, which had been increased to 20 per cent effective January 1, 1965.

Section 19 repeals Part IID of the act, and is effective from December 5, 1963. This was an extra penalty section that was put in the bill, imposing a rate of 5 per cent on any dividends that were paid by a Canadian company to a nonresident shareholder in excess of what the normal rate of dividend had theretofore been in the period from the time this law came into force until January 1, 1965, when the 20 per cent rate came into force. The purpose was to prevent a number of these companies from making extraordinary distributions at the lower rate of 15 per cent, and then escaping the incidence of 20 per cent if they waited until January 1, 1965.

Section 20 repeals section 106(1a)(a) of the act. This is a general reduction from 20 per cent to 15 per cent of the non-resident withholding tax which was effective January 1, 1965. That now goes by the boards, and the original rate of 15 per cent is reinstated.

Subsection (2) of section 20 deals with dividends paid by a company on or before March 16, 1964. Let me take a moment to explain. If a company in 1963 qualified as a company with a degree of Canadian ownership, then it was entitled to take the lower rate, which was 10 per cent. It might well be in many of those cases that when the budget of March 16 of this year was brought down, the new standards or formula or qualifications for a company having a degree of Canadian ownership were such that this company which qualified on that basis in 1963 was no longer qualified as having any degree of Canadian ownership, and since the change was made effective for the year 1964 it would mean that if any of those companies had paid any dividends earlier than March 16, 1964, they would be liable for the extra 5 per cent, having only got the 10 per cent. This is a saving provision, therefore, which says that for dividends that were paid or declared prior to March 16, 1964, the statute will be read without giving effect to the amendment. Then there are certain procedures to be followed to get the benefit.

Subsection (3) of section 20 is a consequential amendment by virtue of reducing the 20 per cent to 15 per cent, because there was a provision that if a company at any time before 1967 satisfied the requirement—that is, between January 1, 1965 and January 1, 1967—and that company had a degree of Canadian ownership and at some part of that time had been paying 20 per cent, it could then apply for a refund of 20 per cent.

Clause 22 of the bill reduces the proposed branch operations tax under section 110B from 20 per cent to 15 per cent. This was also made applicable to the 1965 and succeeding taxation years, and prospectively is repealed. So the old rate of 15 per cent remains as the rate.

I should point out that of course there remains in force the beneficial side of the proposal which was made last year and incorporated in the law; that is, to the extent that if you have a Canadian company which has a degree of Canadian ownership stipulated for in the amendments, whether it possesses the benefit of a lower rate of the withholding tax, the 10 per cent remains, and those companies from March 16, 1964, that do not have this degree of Canadian ownership are subject to the 15 per cent rate.

Honourable senators, if it is convenient, since there are several changes of this kind, I should like to deal with them now and they will be out of the way in this grouping. Perhaps I should deal with designated areas. There is also another provision on brother and sister allowance, when such persons are over the age of 21.

With regard to designated areas, at least one of the proposed changes, and there may be more, arose from discussion in this chamber, and may have been mentioned by me when I was explaining the bill. A number of changes will be found in section 13 of the bill. One is in the definition. Near the bottom of page 9 of the bill, under section 13, is defined "Manufacturing or processing business," and the words there underlined are the changes that occur.

May I explain why this change was made? The act originally required that a manufacturing or processing business, in order to qualify for the tax holiday, must have net sales in a designated area of at least 95 per cent of its gross revenues. "Net sales" were defined as gross revenue, less any amount paid or credited to a customer of the business as a bonus, rebate or discount or for returned or damaged goods. The effect of that was that the business operating in a designated area had a margin of only 5 per cent, because the net sales had to be at least 95 per cent of the gross revenue. It was felt this would impose such a hardship that the amendment makes it clear that the calculation of the 95 per cent of net sales is to be made after you take the gross revenues and deduct these bonuses, rebates or discounts and returned or damaged goods. So you have a more respectable area in which you can take care of the charges which may be offset against net sales, because your 95 per cent is really based on your net revenues.

Also, you will find in clause 13, on page 10, the period within which manufacturing may commence in reasonable quantities is extended from December 4, 1963 to April 1, 1967. You will remember that the old provision was that you must start that manufacturing within 24 months from the date of the coming into force of the section. Now a longer time has been given.

On page 10 you will also find rules for determining if the new business is carried on in a designated area, applicable to 1964 and succeeding years. Subsection 3 of clause 13 changes the basis of qualification in respect of machinery, equipment and buildings. There was a provision in the act as it stands that at least 95 per cent of the cost of the company for buildings, machinery and equipment had to be expended in relation to new machinery, equipment and buildings which, if owned, were located in a designated area. The purpose of that was to bring into the designated area as much of the expenditures as you possibly could. Now they have changed this base from "capital cost" to "value." I assume when they say "value" that is 95 per cent of the value of this equipment, machinery and buildings. I assume when they say that, they mean "the fair market value." And yet the provisions still remain in these sections that this must be, in effect, new machinery, equipment and buildings. Therefore, I am forced to the conclusion that this may be intended to cover the situation where there may be a change in the value of the machinery and equipment as against its capital cost, as between when it was bought and the date you commence to do business. That may be why they have broadened the language and used "value" instead of "capital cost."

I raised a question previously on this matter. I said you have to wait until you are ready to operate and then make your application, because, in the language of the law as it stands, you could not make an application for a certificate to qualify under this section for the tax holiday until you were operating. Now there is a provision under which you may file a notice of intention to carry on a new manufacturing or processing business, and the processing of that can be carried on during the period you are getting ready to go into production. So the ministers have notice, and you can be told at an early date whether you are conforming to the requirements in order that you may be entitled to that tax holiday, and not be told when you are ready to operate that you are not conforming to the requirements and are not entitled to the tax holiday. This is intended to overcome possible hardship.

Another provision is as to what happens if the designated area ceases to be a designated area, say, after the certificate has been granted by the minister, or after a notice of intention has been filed with the minister. If the area ceases to be a designated area, there is a provision in the new subsection 8 on page 11, under which in certain circumstances the designated area shall be deemed to be a designated area, notwithstanding such event, for the purpose, so far as the taxpayer is concerned, of computing his income. In other words, he would be entitled to the benefit of the tax holiday. Then you will find the conditions set out under which, in those circumstances, he is entitled to reap the benefit of the tax holiday, even though the area has ceased to be a designated area. Those conditions you will find in section 13(7)(d) (i) and (ii) on page 11 of the bill; and the key words are that you must have made "substantial progress" before the area ceased to be a designated area, and you must have proceeded with "reasonable expedition" to a stage of operation after the area ceased to be a designated area. Those are the requirements you must satisfy if you are going to survive, either by holding the certificate of the minister before the area ceases to be a designated area or if you filed a notice of intention at that time.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is quite an area of ministerial discretion.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: There certainly is an area of ministerial discretion. I would have thought the use of the words "substantial progress . . . before" are capable of interpretation and sound interpretation; and I would have thought that " 'reasonable' expedition after" —while I realize "reasonable" is a relative term—is also capable of interpretation. The courts are interpreting the word "reasonable" all the time in its different contexts. If necessary I suppose they could do so again and, if we had to, I suppose we could look up a lot of law to see what is actually meant by the word in that context.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Surely, my honourable friend is not suggesting the courts interpret the words, "if the Minister . . . is satisfied"?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. The language says, if the minister is satisfied these things have happened.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It is the minister's discretion.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Let me restate what I said, in answer to my friend. In the courts the problem of interpreting "substantial progress" and "reasonable expedition" has not been difficult. In the application of many of our laws today, where the word "reasonable" occurs ministers have interpreted it in a way that proved acceptable to those who have been dealing with them.

I have no reason to believe the minister in this case will be reckless or careless. I do not know in what other way you could expeditiously deal with the problem with which you are faced on these particular facts, because if you have to go to court you are prolonging the time until it becomes meaningless and unimportant, and the businessman has had a substantial amount of money tied up in the enterprise if he has made any progress in it in the meantime. So, in the circumstances they have had to find an expeditious way of doing it. While I am not a great supporter of many discretions, of this one I do not complain.

Honourable senators, I have finished with one aspect of my considerations and there are some other major aspects with which I have yet to deal, such as the change in the degree of Canadian ownership and the implications of that, and a few of what I call the clarifying provisions which always creep into any income tax bill when it is presented. I will not say "invariably," but usually the clarifications are in the interests of making it appear definite that although the section might entitle the taxpayer to claim a deduction in two different ways, the clarification is in fact intended to shut the door so he can only claim one way. I was going to deal with those this evening, but at this hour of the night I would prefer to move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA —FIRST READING

Leave having been given to revert to the Order for Motions:

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard presented Bill S-27, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE QUEBEC BOARD OF TRADE—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Bouffard presented Bill S-28, respecting The Quebec Board of Trade.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 27, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

TRIBUTES TO THE LATE PRIME MINISTER OF INDIA

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the Senate of Canada today mourns the death of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. He was a son of India and, indeed, the leader of his people. In him were combined the qualities of the mysticism of the East and an understanding of the traditions and ways of the West. He was educated for the law in England. He became a legislator and served his country faithfully, and with sympathy, through his 75 years of life.

The late Prime Minister Nehru knew and understood the non-violent ideals of Gandhi, whom he succeeded, and he carried his people to independence. But when India's freedom was won he aligned his country with the Commonwealth. In his subcontinent, India stands as a bulwark against the inroads of the communist philosophy. This will be one of his greatest monuments.

The late Mr. Nehru became a world statesman, a man of sober judgment and certainly a man of unflinching courage. He was one of the truly distinguished men of our time. His countrymen will mourn him for his dedication to their welfare. Men of peace everywhere will mourn him, and his memory will ever be held in respect and affection. Years ago his family gave him to the nation but their sense of loss at this time will be deeper than any other.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, the name of Prime Minister Nehru has been for years almost a household name in the homes of people in every nation of the world. He became Prime Minister of India in 1947, and has taken a very active part in world affairs since then.

Earl Attlee referred to him, at the time of India's independence, as an outstanding world figure who might be regarded as the doyen of world statesmen. Premier Nehru did all he could to promote friendship between the peoples of India and Great Britain, following the struggle for independence.

Today the world mourns the loss of this great statesman and senior Commonwealth Prime Minister, who exemplified the moderation of his great mentor Mahatma Ghandi. Both leaders succeeded in obtaining the independence of their country by a passive revolution, with very little bloodshed, although hundreds of millions of people were involved.

Nehru has been the head of the neutral nations of the world for many years. We all received the news of his illness with deep concern, for here indeed was a man whose influence in the councils of the world and in the Commonwealth that he helped to evolve will only now be truly appreciated. His death came at a time when he was taking new and promising initiatives to resolve the Kashmir dispute with Pakistan. Honourable senators know this has been one of the trouble spots of the world since the Indian subcontinent was divided in 1947.

Nehru also had his troubles with China, a nation which he had every reason to believe, only a few years ago, was friendly to his country.

I had the distinct pleasure of meeting Mr. Nehru on several occasions. I met him once in London and twice in New York. I witnessed the reception he was given there by the neutral nations and the emerging independent nations of Africa and Southern Asia. No man was more highly respected than Nehru at the United Nations, particularly by those nations to which I have referred.

Honourable senators, Nehru was indeed a great man, and his death is a serious loss, not only to his country but to the nations of the world. I join with our leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) in expressing on behalf of the Senate of Canada sympathy to the people of India and to his immediate family. I also express the hope that India may find a successor who is capable of filling the shoes of this great man.

DISSOLUTION AND ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGES ACT

BILL TO REPEAL—FIRST READING

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot presented Bill S-29, to repeal chapter 10, 12 Elizabeth II, 1963, being an act to authorize the Senate of Canada to dissolve or annul marriages.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, June 10.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

LAURENTIDE BANK OF CANADA—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-13, to incorporate Laurentide Bank of Canada:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

COMPANIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-22, to amend the Companies Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—QUESTION AS TO PROCEDURE

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by the Honourable Senator Leonard, for second reading of Bill C-96, intituled: "An Act respecting the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act".—(Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C.)

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have a question to ask the honourable Leader of the Government with regard to item No. 4, respecting the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Would the honourable Leader of the Government have any objection to submitting this measure to a committee of the whole house before third reading, or would he give us enough latitude on third reading to discuss the whole matter in a friendly manner, in order to come to a happy solution? I ask this question because I have just sponsored a bill to repeal chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1963.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure most of our discussions in this chamber take place in a friendly manner; certainly, discussions initiated by our honourable colleague Senator Pouliot are conducted in such a fashion.

I would draw attention to the fact that Bill C-96 is a Government measure which has already been passed by the other place. I think the procedures that normally apply here should apply to this important measure. I adjourned the debate myself, and intend to speak briefly on it at the appropriate time.

It may be the wish of the house to send this bill to committee. I cannot control that. If the house wishes it to be considered in Committee of the Whole, that is of course a decision for the house. Furthermore, I do not think I have any authority to give or withhold latitude on third reading. The rights of senators are clear. Third reading is one of the normal stages of procedure. If Senator Pouliot desires to speak on third reading of this measure, that is his right, and I am sure nobody in the house would try to curtail it in any way, least of all the Leader of the Government.

CANADIAN FLAG

QUESTION AS TO CONSIDERATION IN SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. John Hnatyshyn: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to ask the honourable Leader of the Government a question? Will the resolution concerning the proposed flag, or two flags, be brought before this house? If so, will it be debated at the same time as in the other place, or afterwards?

Hon. John J. Connolly: I cannot make any statement today on that matter, but I think, as is usual, it would be more appropriate to have the debate in the other place completed first, and then have the matter come before this chamber. I fully expect the resolution will be introduced in this house in due course.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 5, 1964

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-99, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROOSEVELT CAMPOBELLO INTERNATIONAL PARK COMMISSION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Burchill for the second reading of Bill S-26, respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello International Park.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, this bill, respecting the commission to administer the Roosevelt Campobello International Park, was explained fully to us yesterday by the sponsor, Senator Burchill. After listening to Senator Burchill's interesting explanation, I do not think there is much more to be said.

We were told the history of Campobello Island, where this park is to be established, and I must say it has a very interesting history for such a small island. As we were told, the island is much nearer the United States than Canada, being a few miles from the Canadian coast, but only a few hundred yards from the American coast.

There are to be six members of the commission to administer this international park, three of whom will come from the United States and three from Canada. I believe that this will be the only international park of its kind, so naturally it requires special legislation. Of the three commissioners appointed by Canada one will be from the Province of New Brunswick, and of the three United States commissioners one will be from the State of Maine.

It appears that the commission is to have wide powers, such as the authority to make appointments in connection with the administration of the affairs of the park. One of the appointees is to be an executive secretary, but the agreement does not provide whether he is to be a Canadian or American citizen. Of course we can obtain such information as this when the bill is before the committee, but it is my opinion that, since this international park is to be on Canadian territory under Canadian sovereignty, the executive secretary should be a Canadian.

The executive secretary's job will be a very important one. He will have the authority to employ help. He will direct the general administration of the park, under the commission. This is one matter that might be discussed in committee. There is also authority for the employment of staff from both the United States and Canada.

I note that the Canadian members of the commission will report to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and that this park, although on Canadian soil, will not come under the same authority as other national parks of Canada. This is another aspect that should receive consideration in committee.

The park is to be called the Roosevelt Campobello International Park, after the late President Roosevelt who made his summer home there for many years. I am sure we all listened with interest to the remarks of Senator McLean, who comes from Charlotte County, of which this island is a part. He told us of the boyhood days of President Roosevelt, and also of the life of his family on this island. We all agree that the late President Roosevelt, besides being a great world figure and one of the most influential men of this century, was also a very human and kind man. I have met people from the island who knew him as a boy and a young man, and they all spoke of him as did Senator McLean yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Can the honourable senator tell us if other people have lived on the island besides the Roosevelt family?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, there are some 1,200 people living on Campobello Island. I think Senator Burchill told us that it has been inhabited since 1701. It is one of the oldest settlements in New Brunswick. A Welshman was the first governor, if he could be called that. The land was granted to him, and he brought out settlers from Great Britain. They farmed on the island in those days, and engaged in fishing.

I might mention that Campobello is only one of a number of islands. There are Campobello Island, Deer Island, Grand Manan and The Wolves. During the time of the American Revolution, United Empire Loyalists coming from the United States found these islands a very convenient place at which to land on British soil. The population of the two larger islands are descendants mostly of the United Empire Loyalists. They are quite thickly settled.

I should say also that Mrs. Roosevelt, in her own right, was a very great person, and she also had the affection of the people of that island.

There is another point in connection with this park that I think should be emphasized. Honourable senators will remember that a few years ago there was an agitation to build a bridge from Campobello Island to Lubec, in Maine. The distance from the island to the shore is between 250 and 300 yards. A Board of Trade, formed by the citizens of Campobello Island, worked very hard for many years to bring about the building of this bridge. In 1958 a delegation was sent to Ottawa. I recall that it visited Fredericton; it also came to Sussex to see me when I was the minister from New Brunswick. A strong case was put up. The construction of the bridge required the consent not only of Ottawa but of the Province of New Brunswick, the State of Maine, and Washington. Those men behind it worked very hard, and eventually the international bridge was built. I may say that without the bridge there would be no park on Campobello Island at this time.

Campobello is a wonderful tourist attraction, as are the other islands near it. Grand Manan is a beautiful island, and so is Deer Island. This group of islands form one of the more attractive spots in eastern Canada or the eastern United States, and I predict that with this international park located on Campobello the islands will become one of the greatest tourist centres of eastern Canada.

The attractions there include the great tides of the Bay of Fundy. Campobello is at the entrance of Passamaquoddy Bay where the tides are the highest in the world, and where it is advocated that this mighty source of power be harnessed. It is said that the power that can be generated from the tides of Passamaquoddy Bay is greater than that that can be obtained from the St. John River and all the other rivers of the Maritime provinces.

I might mention another historical fact. When the great Champlain came to this country he spent his first winter on a little island in the St. Croix River known as Dochet's Island, which today is part of the United States. Most of Champlain's men died of scurvy, but in the spring of the year he left for Nova Scotia, and his boat was wrecked off the coast of one of these islands. He spent some months there, and wrote in his diary the story of his shipwreck, the story of his landing on this island, and his experiences there before he went on to Nova Scotia and founded Port Royal in 1604, the first white settlement on the eastern mainland of Canada. It was not the first white settlement in Canada because there were some in Newfoundland before that time. The history of these islands is very old.

We have also stories of Captain Kidd's treasure being buried around these islands, the history and romance of which make them attractive in many ways.

When listening recently to the eloquent speech by the Leader of the Government on Tourist Traffic, in which he quoted from Canadian poets regarding the attractions of different parts of Canada, I was a little disappointed that he did not include our most distinguished Canadian poet, Bliss Carmen. Bliss Carmen came from the Province of New Brunswick and wrote about the tides of the Bay of Fundy. To complete what the honourable Leader of the Government started, I should like to quote a portion of that poem.

Tides of Fundy, Tides of Fundy,
What is this you bring to me?
News from nowhere vague and haunting
As the white fog from the sea.

In "The Ships of St. John," Bliss Carmen wrote:

Swing, you tides, up out of Fundy!
Blow, you white fogs, in from sea!
I was born to be your fellow;
You were bred to pilot me.

Honourable senators, I am sure all Canadians, and particularly those in the Atlantic provinces, will appreciate the founding of this park, which I believe will be one of the prominent parks of Canada and one of the main tourist attractions of North America.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Burchill, bill referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden for the second reading of Bill C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, when the adjournment took place last night I had spoken about a number of amendments which I described as being "beneficial" in some one or other aspect. I would like to refer to several more of the same nature.

The next amendment to which I would refer is found in Clause 7, on page 7 of the bill. It is a deduction. You will recall that under Section 26 of the Income Tax Act a deduction is allowed in the case of a brother or sister of the taxpayer, who is under 21, and also, if 21 or over and dependent because of mental or physical infirmity. In such cases the act at present allows a deduction to the taxpayer on whom such a brother or sister is dependent. In such case it would be of the order of $550 in the year if the dependent were not entitled to family allowance; and it would be of the order of $300 if such dependent were so entitled.

This particular item has been expanded now so as to include a brother or sister if such brother or sister is in full time attendance at a school or university and is over 21. So, the allowance in such cases—since the brother or sister over 21 meeting this requirement would not be entitled to family allowance—would be $550 a year.

Honourable senators, when you look at clause 3, on page 2 of the bill it appears to be extremely complicated. It deals with the right of an employee who makes contributions to a pension plan, which contributions up to $1,500 a year in relation to future service are deductible from what would otherwise be income. Then, over the years we had provided that up to $1,500 a year would be deducted in relation to contributions for past service.

Certain difficulties from a departmental point of view have developed because it appeared that the language used in permitting the deduction for a contribution up to $1,500 a year for past service was one which the employee was entitled to make each year during the period he was a member of the plan. The department in its administration sought to limit the $1,500 a year to $1,500 times the number of years of past service which the employee had. Since that was resisted in a number of cases and the department had to give way, you now have this amendment to provide that the deduction up to $1,500 a year in relation to past service is in relation to the years of past service of the employee.

In a very quick review, I should like to point out that under the present law for current service an employee can contribute voluntarily the difference between $1,500 and the amount of contribution deducted by the employer; or if, in any previous year, while a member of the plan, the employee did not contribute the full $1,500, such employee, by virtue of the amendments in this clause, may now in 1964 and succeeding years contribute the difference up to a total of $1,500 in any one year or, for years while the employee was not a contributor to a pension plan but was an employee, the employee can now contribute $1,500 for each of those years of past service. You can see that this limits the $1,500 a year in relation to past service to the period of past service which the employee actually enjoyed.

There are other amendments which appear on the same page, following what I have explained. These are simply technical and are intended either to prevent undue deduction or taking the same deduction twice in relation to certain contributions to pension funds.

The next point to which I wish to refer is in relation to tuition fees. There has been a change and an addition on the question of deductions which a taxpayer may make on account of money expended for tuition fees.

If you look at page 3, you will see in clause 3 that new things are added by paragraph (qb), that is, where a taxpayer who is a student in full time attendance at a university outside of Canada in a course leading to a degree—the words "outside of Canada" are new. That is an addition to what was formerly the law, and a deduction is permitted there.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Those letters "qb" do not stand for "quarterback", of course.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: As has just been remarked, the letters "qb" do not mean "quarterback"; and I would say, nor does the "qc", which follows, stand for "Queen's Counsel".

There is an enumeration in (qc) of a number of different universities and secondary schools, etc., in Canada, where a taxpayer who was a student during the year may deduct his tuition fees from what would otherwise be income. You will notice the limitation, that if the fees are not in excess of $25 the section does not apply.

I call your attention now to a section which deals with gifts inter vivos. The section does not provide any new law; it is purely for clarification. I simply refer you to it as clause 23, on page 17 of the bill. What has been done is to substitute a reference to the Estate Tax Act for the language that speaks of succession duties; and what is further done is to provide that the only deduction that is made from estate tax, before you arrive at the difference between the gift tax and the estate tax for the purpose of this section, is the deduction permitted in respect of provincial succession duties. The second part of section 23 has to do with inter vivos gifts in Quebec where there is community of property, and it implements or goes along with a somewhat similar section which we passed the other day in relation to the estate tax.

Another section of the amendments which I think I should direct attention to, because it changes the law, is in relation to what we call "unpaid accounts." That is found on pages 5 and 6 of the bill. It sets out a new rule. May I summarize it briefly, without reading the section?

If you have a taxpayer who incurs a deductible expense in relation to some transaction with some other person, and they are not at arms length, under the law as it at present exists, if that expense is not paid at the end of the next year following the incurring of the expense, then in the second year it must be brought into the income of the taxpayer.

What this amendment proposes to do is this: If in those circumstances the expense—which being a deductible expense has been deducted in the year in which it was incurred for income tax purposes—has not been repaid at the end of the second year, the latitude being increased from one to two years, then it must be brought into the income of the taxpayer for the third year; but if the debtor and the creditor get together and make an agreement to substitute a loan for this debt relationship, then it is presumed at the beginning of the third year, or at the end of the previous year, that the debt has been paid, and a loan has been incurred in the next year. That is some advantage to the taxpayer, in that he has made his deduction in the year in which the expense was incurred, and then when it is presumed to have been paid it goes into the income of the creditor.

There is a transitional provision, which I will not bother you with except to say that it covers the situation where a debt incurred in 1964 was paid before 1967. That is clause 4, subclause 3, on page 5 of the bill.

Honourable senators, this explanation does not cover all the items that are dealt with in the bill, but in my view it covers, with one exception, the important items. The items I have not mentioned are highly technical—a matter of changing language so as to provide a broader base for consideration of all cases that may arise. In some cases it is to shut one door where there may be two opportunities, that is, opportunities under different sections for deductions in connection with contributions to retirement saving plans, etc. This is to make sure that you only get them once in the circumstances.

The two remaining items are in section 9, on page 8 of the bill. I think it is fortunate that I have the opportunity of returning to this, following the discussion last night, when for a few moments the air seemed to be emotionally supercharged.

In section 9 there are provisions for changes in the deductions which a resident of a province may make from his income tax otherwise payable to the federal authority. As the law stands, without section 9, in respect to the year 1965 the deduction by a resident of a province from his federal tax otherwise payable was 19 per cent. It will be observed that section 9 changes that to 21 per cent. The deduction under the existing law in section 33 for the 1966 taxation year was 20 per cent. Section 9 changes that to 24 per cent.

Some reference was made in this house last night—and I expect from indications then that there will be at least one speech from one senator who sits not too far away from me, on the basis of what is contained in section 9 of the bill. All I want to direct attention to at this time is that historically, if you look at the basis for these deductions, they arose originally in 1942 when we had our tax rental agreements during the war years, and they continued on through.

In 1957-58 there was a renewal of these agreements. You will recall that the basis for the tax rental agreements was that the federal authority imposed certain taxes on personal income and corporate income and succession duties, and refunded a percentage of those to the provinces. Also, there were stabilization or equalization payments to the provinces, based on their need or their requirements, or the rights which they put forward. My position at that time, and it has been the same ever since—I say this especially for the senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary), is that I took exception to these payments, other than equalization payments. In those days I believe I was a voice in the wilderness, because no one else took the same point of view. What I said in relation to tax rental agreements appears at page 559 of Senate Hansard of January 30, 1958:

> I believe that, on account of the special situation which prevailed during the period of the war, tax rental agreements at that time could be justified. But since then I have never been able to satisfy myself that it is a good thing that the federal authority should act as a conduit pipe and levy taxes upon the people of Canada for purposes which have no relationship to ordinary federal spending or for particular objects of national development, but solely in order to syphon off the product of the increased taxes for provincial purposes.

A little farther on, I stated:

> What I say is that the federal Government is now collecting, and has collected for all the years the tax agreements have been in force, vastly more in taxes than it needs for its own budget and fiscal spending. The reason it has done so is that it has been making these contributions to the provinces for their own use. Therefore, I say, if the federal authority looked after its own business and such additional obligations of a national character as it might have, including also contributions for certain developments in this or that province, the federal taxation would be less, the federal revenue would be correspondingly less, and the provincial authorities would be left to impose taxes of their own to the extent necessary to cover such provincial expenditures as they felt they could afford.

Again, when this matter came up and we were still engaged in this business of levying taxes and then rebating the money to the provinces in 1960, I was obviously quite alone in what I had to say. I spoke in the same vein at page 871 of Senate Debates of 1959:

> The honourable senator said something to the effect that we should have a conference soon because of the tendency on the part of provinces and municipalities to spend too much money. The moment he takes that view he is on the way to thinking in line with the views I have expressed here from time to time.

I think I was referring then to the honourable Senator Aseltine, who was then Government Leader.

> To my mind tax rental agreements are in essence wrong unless there is some supervening emergency that requires the sort of administration that we had during the war, when the purpose was to force everything in the way of availability of revenue into the federal authority, which in turn would hand out minimums to the provinces. But if you look at the financial records of the various provincial governments, you will see that notwithstanding the moneys which are paid to them under the tax rental agreements, many of them are increasing their capital debt. As I said on a previous occasion, where you have the federal authority levying taxes for the purpose of getting money to hand over to a province, you have a negation of the principle of democracy and the theory of government, as I understand it.

That is still my position.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: To some extent we appear now to be departing from the former practice, and I am very happy to see that. For instance, I understand in relation to succession duties and the additional 25 per cent concession which was made recently—which I think was the subject matter of the Estate Tax bill we had before us recently—the province of British Columbia is the one province so far that has imposed an additional succession duty tax, to the extent of 75 per cent of what was formerly the federal levy, and they are collecting that directly. We still find in the other provinces—and I am thinking particularly in terms of Ontario and Quebec—that we go through the provisions in section 9 of this bill and the basic provisions of section 33 of the Income Tax Act as it now stands, and we have tax rates which produce in personal or corporation tax a certain amount of tax liability to the individual or corporation, which is payable to the federal authority.

On the form you have you will see the percentage deduction made, which is used for provincial purposes. This method still does not go as far as I think it should. It still does not go far enough to make the residents of the various provinces, who have to pay this money, realize that this percentage—which in 1964 will be 18 per cent—is a provincial levy and it is not, in essence, a federal levy. We still follow a form where it is accounted for in the income tax return to the federal Government, and the rate is one which produces that extra 18 per cent, for instance, in the year 1964, and then the federal authority pays it to the provincial authority.

I think there should be a direct relationship of the provincial levy and the payment to the individual province, so that the people in the provinces will have a clear-cut, definite and unmistakable appreciation of the fact that this money is being levied by the province and is to take care of provincial expenditures, expenditures that are not in any way the responsibility of the federal authority. Not until that has been achieved will I stop talking about this subject. It may be that I will continue to talk about it as long as I am able to talk, because they may never get to that stage. It seems so convenient to do it in this form, but I think the realization should be brought home to the people of what is causing this amount of tax to be levied. You should be able to point your finger at the taxing authority and the spending authority. I say one way of controlling expenditures and keeping costs down, in my book, would be if you had such close identity between the spending authority and the taxing authority that the public would get a better appreciation of what was going on. That is all I have to say about that item in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask a question? What additional payments will be required to meet this percentage increase in the transfer to the province?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I have not the figures available. However, it is information that will be readily available in committee. It runs into millions, and that is substantial, in my view. This certainly runs into a considerable number of millions of dollars in additional payments. It simply means the federal treasury is foregoing that amount of money so the provinces may receive it. I object to the federal Government carrying rates which enable it to collect this amount and then turn it over to the provinces.

That brings me to the last item, the degree of Canadian ownership. Much could be said on that, but could I just take a minute and tell you what the basis was last year?

If you recall, last year the Minister of Finance developed a concept and put forward a plan as a result of which he expected to encourage investment in the shares of Canadian companies by Canadians, where you had predominantly or entirely non-resident holdings of shares of such Canadian companies. One of the provisions has now gone. That is the penalty provision, as I call it, under which the ordinary 15 per cent withholding rate was increased to 20 per cent effective as of and from January 1, 1965.

The second was the formula for determining whether there was a degree of Canadian ownership in these companies as a result of which dividends paid to nonresidents would bear a 10 per cent withholding tax instead of 15 per cent. Also in connection with the special depreciation, the companies that had this degree of Canadian ownership would be able to take advantage of the special depreciation of 50 per cent a year in relation to construction projects in those years.

The basis for the determination of that degree of Canadian ownership was that 25 per cent of the fully voting shares of the company, fully voting in all circumstances, must be owned by one or more residents of Canada or by a corporation resident in Canada or by a combination of both; or, the class or classes of shares that were fully voting in all circumstances must be registered on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and not more than 75 per cent of those shares could be owned by a nonresident or a group of nonresidents of Canada. As I said, in those circumstances those shares must have been listed on a prescribed stock exchange. Of course, when the limitation formula was based entirely on voting rights, the simplicity of overcoming that was such that a great many companies immediately qualified as having a degree of Canadian ownership, because where only voting determined the situation you found in a number of cases companies created preference shares which were fully voting but had a very small paid-up value. Thus you were able to create in these companies a voting capacity so that the provision of a degree of Canadian ownership of 25 per cent was quite easy to accomplish. But the capital value of the investment was negligible, in many cases, in relation to the total paid-up capital and surplus of that company.

So, that formula is being scrapped and we have a new formula which you will find in this bill, starting on page 19, clause 25. Before you are through reading all the complexities of it you will have gone through to the bottom of page 25.

I have always believed that the longer it takes to say something, the more words and the more pages, then the more difficulties you may create for yourself, and the more problems there may be in finding your way through what has been drafted. While I am not suggesting that these six pages present such problems, I would just assume that by reason of the number of words used there may well be such difficulties.

Now I have to tell you what the formula is. It is one which attempts to tie in the capital invested with the percentage holding of the shares. For instance, whereas last year it was that not less than 25 per cent of the fully voting shares must be held by one or more residents of Canada, it now says in the first part of clause 25 on page 19 that you must have not only that, but also equity shares. This is the introduction to what is called the equity shares, the theory of the minister being that there should be an equity investment in the company—at least to 25 per cent of the equity, in addition to having this 25 per cent of the voting rights in all circumstances.

So in the first part of this new definition you have the combination of 25 per cent of the shares fully voting in all circumstances, and equity shares in the aggregate representing not less than 25 per cent of the paid-up capital that stands behind those equity shares. I think from the reading of this section that it is possible that the voting shares you have might be equity shares, and therefore you would satisfy the requirement by having 25 per cent of such fully voting shares.

If that is too difficult to do, you have the alternative method for qualification which may be even more difficult. That is, a class or classes of shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances must be listed on a prescribed stock exchange, and not more than 75 per cent of these shares are owned by a nonresident person, and equity shares representing in the aggregate not less than 50 per cent of that part of the paid-up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada. And you must be able to establish that no nonresident held more than 75 per cent of those shares.

You will notice that under these conditions you do not have to register all the shares that are voting. Last year you had to register all voting shares; this year you have to register a class of voting shares. If this class of voting shares that you list on the exchange also satisfies the requirement of equity shares, you can accomplish the thing by the holding of one class of shares. The problem really only starts then because you have to look to the definition of an equity share and of a non-participating share. There is an exclusion in this formula when you are looking to what is a voting share and what are equity shares.

You cannot include any shares that are, as this section on page 23 says, "other than a nonparticipating share."

It is when you come to the definition of an equity share that you run into this problem. The bill defines a class of share which it calls a nonparticipating share. A nonparticipating share is defined on page 24 as a share, > the owner of which is not entitled to receive, as owner thereof, any dividend other than a dividend, whether cumulative or not,

>
> (i) at a fixed annual rate or amount, or
>
> (ii) at an annual rate or amount not in excess of a fixed annual rate or amount.

An equity share is defined as a share other than a nonparticipating share. Therefore, if you have any class of shares which carries a fixed rate of dividend or which carries a rate of dividend not in excess of a fixed rate or amount per year, such shares are not equity shares.

The definition of "equity shares" presents problems and difficulties. "Equity share" is defined on page 23 as a share—> other than a nonparticipating share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof a right

>
> (A) to a dividend and
>
> (B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital and payment of arrears of dividend, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding up of the corporation, at least as great, in any event, as the right of the owner of any other share—

The difficulty here is that once you say that an equity share is a share the owner of which has a right to a dividend, you have problems. If you recall share certificates you hold, the certificate reads that you are the holder of so many shares, and the responsibility of the company is to the shareholder, the name appearing on the share register. Whether that person is the owner or not is of no importance to the company. It does not mean that the person certified as the holder is of necessity the owner.

In addition there may be a provision that such shares pay a dividend as and when declared by the directors at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Then the question is, has the person who holds that share a right to a dividend when the provision is that as and when declared by the directors the rate is a fixed rate of 5 per cent? The shareholder could not sue for it. The shareholder at the end of a year or at the end of a quarter, if dividends are paid quarterly, could not sue for a dividend unless the directors declared it. Therefore, what is accomplished by the definition here is that an equity share cannot be a share or class of share carrying a fixed annual rate of dividend. That is the significance of "owner", and a right to a dividend in the context presents difficulties of interpretation.

In addition, such a shareholder must have a right to participate in the surplus after redemption of the shares and after arrears of dividends have been paid. That must have relation to an accumulation of dividends on preference shares. He must have a right, rateably, with any other shareholder.

This presents more difficulties. In studying this we have got to the situation where we have concluded that it is possible under the definitions we have here to have a company which might be 100 per cent Canadian-owned, and which would not have one equity share. Therefore it would not be entitled, under the definitions here, to qualify as having a degree of Canadian ownership. If you are interested sometime in having that displayed to you, I think I could demonstrate it very quickly.

But there are three things you must remember. First, that if you have any shares in a company which carry a fixed rate of dividend payable, of course, at the discretion of the board of directors, then those shares are not equity shares no matter how much of the capital may be represented thereby, and whether or not 100 per cent are owned by Canadians. Such a share is not an equity share under these definitions. It is eliminated.

The second thing to remember is that if you have preferred shares that are entitled to a dividend at the discretion of the board of directors, and you do not stipulate any rate—that seems to be a very peculiar sort of animal, and one, quite frankly, that I have not run into—then they would seem to be the kind of share that might qualify as an equity share.

However, in these circumstances it would appear that common shares are the only shares that might qualify as equity shares, and they would qualify on the basis that they are entitled to dividends in the amount and as and when declared by the board of directors. Therefore, they are not nonparticipating shares, and they can qualify as equity shares.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Could not these complications be remedied?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Well, I think so.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Are you moving any amendments?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. This is only my view. My position here today is to explain the provisions of the bill, the purpose of them, and their limitations, if any, in so far as accomplishing the purposes of the bill is concerned. When the bill is before the committee we shall be able to obtain the views of those who have lived with these problems and who drafted the bill.

One difficulty I see in the bill, and which might account for some of the problems I have indicated is that in drafting these particular provisions the draftsman certainly had in mind every method that was used in 1963 to qualify for a degree of Canadian ownership. These provisions are drawn in such a way as to disqualify the use of such methods as an effective way of acquiring an equity share position. Some of the provisions can only be explained on that basis.

For instance, a nonparticipating share can in no way be an equity share, but if the equity shares of a company are less than 50 per cent of the total paid-up capital, other than the nonparticipating shares, then they shall not be deemed to be equity shares, and the company would end up without any equity shares. Again, if you have nonparticipating shares which, of course, pay a fixed rate of dividend—that is why they are nonparticipating—and that fixed rate of dividend is in excess of 8 per cent per annum, then the equity shares are not equity shares, and you end up with no equity shares in the company.

I think the design in those particular cases was to meet particular methods that were employed in 1963 to gain the qualification of a degree of Canadian ownership. They only complicate the situation, but I would say that having regard to the scheme of these six or seven pages they are necessary. It is only if you settle on a different approach to the accomplishment of this desired equity position, where voting shares and the capital represented by them will have the characteristic of 25 per cent—in other words, that the voting shares will be held to at least 25 per cent by a resident of Canada, and will have a capital value in relationship to the entire paid-up capital of at least 25 per cent. That is the basic plan, and this is the method which is proposed to accomplish that.

In the course of propounding this method you close many doors. There are provisions which say that if you go on such and such a route you cannot get by. For instance, if there are nonparticipating shares having certain characteristics, then even your equity shares are disqualified as equity shares. Once you embark on this method or scheme for accomplishing this result you inevitably, it seems to me, have to make these provisions.

If I might offer a criticism it would be that I think insufficient consideration has been given to the capital setup of companies as they actually exist. Many companies today have preferred stock issues. They have common share issues. Some of them may even have "A" issues which are voting like the common but have a preferred dividend for a certain amount, after which they participate equally with the common. These are factual situations, and in dealing with them the question of how the provisions proposed here are to be applied arises, because to the extent that there are preferred shares with a fixed rate of dividend they do not constitute equity shares, no matter how they are held or what may be the capital value of the company represented by them.

Even your "A" shares, although they may be fully voting, since they carry a fixed rate of dividend after which they participate with the common, would not be equity shares.

The bugs that are in this bill are going to have to be experienced and worked out. There is no doubt but that tremendous amount of time and thought has gone into the development of the provisions to which I have referred, and they have been drafted against the background of the methods that were employed last year to overcome the plan that was then propounded.

I have said nothing about the purpose of this legislation to secure a larger participation by Canadians in Canadian operations, because whatever I said on that last year still holds. This plan may work, but there will be many difficulties and, I venture to say, amendments before these provisions are in the workable shape that is desired. In the meantime, some situations will be adversely affected. I am thinking of companies in which there is substantial Canadian participation which will be precluded, by virtue of the wording of these sections, from the qualification of having a degree of Canadian ownership.

It must be remembered in this connection that companies are only affected to the extent that they are paying dividends to nonresidents. That is the area that is affected. The provisions do not affect the day-to-day operations, except on the question of depreciation, which I shall mention in a moment.

The only effect of all the provisions in this plan is that if a Canadian company qualifies as having a degree of Canadian ownership, then when it is withholding tax on dividends payable to a nonresident shareholder the rate will be 10 per cent instead of 15 per cent. The only other effect is in relation to the item of special depreciation. If you have not a degree of Canadian ownership, then you do not qualify for these special rates which last year were 50 per cent, and are 50 per cent this year, in relation to certain construction projects.

I should point out that in the bill one thing has been overlooked, and I propose to raise it in committee. If a company, which in 1963 qualified as having a degree of Canadian ownership and was, therefore, entitled to the special rate of depreciation of 50 per cent, embarked on a construction program on the basis of its entitlement to that, and it has a fiscal year which is other than the calendar year, then as from March 16, budget night, the provisions in relation to a degree of Canadian ownership are effective with respect to that company for the year 1964. That means if any company that had a degree of Canadian ownership in 1963, and a fiscal year that ends in January, February, March or April of 1964, embarked on a special construction program on the basis that it was entitled to this special depreciation, and that company ceases to be a company having a degree of Canadian ownership by reason of the changes in the qualifications, it would not be entitled, even from the beginning of its embarking on the plan, to this special depreciation, because since its taxation year would end in 1964 it would be barred, because you would be into the 1964 taxation period.

Now steps are being taken to correct it, as I pointed out last night, in relation to any dividends that were paid in 1964, up until budget night, paid or declared; but it has not been corrected in relation to this special item of depreciation.

Honourable senators, I have taken much longer than I thought I would take on this. All I can say is that, when you get wrapped up in a question of this kind—

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is very confusing.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —and you feel you have some understanding of it, you wish to explain it clearly. It may be that as a result of the explanation I have given you now, I have made confusion more confounded, but I have tried not to do that.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, we are all grateful to Senator Hayden for the most lucid and careful manner in which he has gone through the provisions of this complicated piece of legislation. It would be a work of superarrogation on my part to attempt this afternoon to traverse the ground he has covered and deal clause by clause with the bill. I have no intention of doing so.

Apropos of the remarks he made during the last few minutes of his speech, with regard to these rules about equity shares—and I shall come back to that later—he suggested certain reasons as an explanation of some of these rules. My suggestion is that even with Senator Hayden's lucid explanation of the bill and the rules, a great deal of it will still remain inexplicable.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: What I said was that this may be an explanation as to why it was done in this way; I am not saying it is an explanation of the language used.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I accept that and agree with it. I just want to touch on two or three important matters that seems to me are raised in this bill.

As Senator Hayden said, the bill will go to committee. I have no doubt that in committee there will be changes and amendments. Also, I have no doubt that a year from now, if the same concept to which I am now going to refer underlies the principal sections of the bill—that is, of course, the concept of discriminatory taxation in order to accomplish an end, the necessity for which is not established as far as I am concerned—if that same concept is in the mind of whoever may be Minister of Finance at that time, then of course I anticipate very much more involved amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Senator Hayden referred to a number of sections as "relieving" sections. Generally speaking, that is true. I still do not understand what the motive was in enacting the new paragraph (w) as an addition to subsection 1 of Section 11. It is given on page 4. This is a deduction that is allowed on:

> amounts paid by the taxpayer in the year in respect of fees or expenses incurred in preparing, instituting or prosecuting an objection to, or an appeal in relation to, an assessment of tax, interest or penalties under this Act.

I am sure the minister will give us a full explanation. However, as I recall, it was reported in the press that he thought a chamber of commerce put this forward and it did not seem very important to him, so he allowed it.

What happens when you make these additions to deductions or exemptions? You start getting into trouble. I hold in my hand the issue for May 20, 1964 of a taxation bulletin which many of us pay for in our offices. I would like to read one or two sentences which indicate the kind of thing that inevitably happens, the more we add to these exemptions and deductions. This says:

> It would appear to be reasonably clear that some fees or expenses may be deducted in the year paid with respect to preparing a notice of objection even if the notice is not filed. Until taxpayers know how the section will be administered and interpreted by the Department the course of wisdom would appear to be to prepare a notice of objection in case negotiations with the Department are successful, to ensure that at least a portion of the expenses incurred in carrying out such negotiations will be deductible.

I just mention that as typical of the sort of problems that arise. There will be many problems arise for the assessors and for the departmental officers. When do you incur expenses in objecting to an assessment? Is it when you go down to the local office, or when you write a letter? Here are people who are reputed to be tax authorities, giving the public this kind of advice.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Do you suggest the word "and" instead of "or"?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I will make my suggestions in committee.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Very well.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I want to turn for a moment to clause 9 of the bill, on page 8. It is the clause which provides for the increased abatements to the provinces.

I agree with the honourable senator in that I would like to see the time arrive—and I certainly expressed this with respect to the Estate Tax Act the other night—when the jurisdiction which spends the money would raise the money. I would like to see the time when the provinces would raise the money they require to carry out their own responsibilities.

In certain events that may mean—as I think I suggested the other night, and as I certainly suggested on other occasions—that the federal Government, without giving up its constitutional right to impose any kind of taxation, a right which it should never give up because that right must be available to it in a case of emergency, might gracefully withdraw in times such as we have today from certain fields, or refrain from imposing taxation to the maximum limit that the taxpayer can afford. But that is not what is involved in this change in section 9.

On the night of March 16 the Minister of Finance delivered his budget speech. At that time he had no idea any such clause would ever appear in this bill, and there was no resolution in the original budget resolutions corresponding to this clause. Honourable senators, what actually happened was that the minister delivered his budget speech and then went to a federal-provincial conference, during that famous week when the hard-working senators appeared here twice a day for a few minutes and adjourned.

Various matters were discussed at that meeting in Quebec. According to the press and according to communiqués issued, there was some disappointment about the attitude that the Government of the Province of Quebec at least, and possibly one other province, took with respect to what I call the "third edition" of the Canada Pension Plan, which at that time was being disclosed to the provincial premiers.

Following that, however, we had an illuminating example of the new type of federal provincial conference—the new type of co-operative federalism. The way to hold a federal provincial conference is to send a minister and an executive assistant from the federal Government to see the representatives of, not ten provinces, but one province. You then make your deal with that province, a deal which, of course, in so far as monetary implications are concerned, must be applicable to all the other provinces, and if it involves the federal Government giving more money away, as this conference did, it is obvious that the other provinces are not going to object to it very strenuously, if indeed at all. However, that is the reason for section 9 in this bill. It is in the bill because that is the price that the federal Government is paying to obtain the agreement of the Province of Quebec to a pension plan, the details of which Parliament has not been told. All we know about it is what we have read in the newspapers. It is a plan which I suspect will not commend itself to many members of this chamber when we have an opportunity to analyze its economic effects.

Incidentally, I was most interested in hearing Senator Crerar refer last night to the pension report of 1950. I suggest that honourable senators who want to prepare for the consideration of the Canada Pension Plan might well read that report, because the basic principles in it which the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons laid down at that time are just as applicable today, in my opinion, as they were then. Those are not the principles which the Government apparently proposes to proceed on, but as I have said, all we know about the plan is what we read in the newspapers. However, in order to obtain that agreement the revenue of the Crown, in right of the federal Government, will be reduced, according to the best estimates I have, by $65 million in the calendar year 1965, and by $135 million to $145 million in 1966. We are being relieved of no obligations; the obligations statutory and otherwise of the federal Government remain as they are.

Honourable senators, I suggest that that is not the kind of co-operative federalism we want. Of course, it is the kind that Mr. Lesage wants. I will read now from a letter, dated April 29 last, from Premier Lesage to the Prime Minister, which was tabled by the Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) the other day:

> The new personal income tax abatement in favour of the provinces, which supplements the arrangements of last November, is tangible proof of the spirit which should in future exist in the field of federal-provincial relations in Canada.

If I were Mr. Lesage, I would agree with that statement; but standing in this place, I say that we cannot afford much more of that kind of federal-provincial relations.

I could read other extracts from the letter to emphasize the point. What is the result? The result is that the Minister of Finance has made several speeches in which he said, "Now, I am losing this money—" Of course he loses very little this year, because it takes a little time to catch up, and you wait for payments you do not pay on accruals. He also says, "I have either to increase taxes, cut expenses, or incur larger deficits." Some of the minister's supporters in the press congratulated him on that last suggestion. They said that, after all, in Canada it is the total overall deficit at all levels of government that is important; and of course this payment, they rather naïvely assume will result in a decrease in provincial deficits.

It has not been my experience that more money from a superior taxing body has necessarily resulted in the deficit of the inferior taxing body being reduced; it is rather an incentive for it to spend more. So really what they are suggesting is that the federal treasury be the surge tank for the overall public deficit of Canada. That is a suggestion that I am certainly not prepared to accept.

There are some other clauses of the bill I want to refer to. With regard to clauses 12, 19, 20 and 22, I will merely say that they almost complete the retreat from the budget of June 1963. Those clauses are in the bill in order, as Senator Hayden explained, that the withholding tax shall not be imposed above a 15 per cent level on any company. The stick has been put away, as Senator Hayden and some others predicted it would be. I am happy that the stick has been put away. It should never have been taken out. But the stick has been put away, with the result that the carrot has become much less, and the possibility of the minister accomplishing what he says he is seeking to accomplish, I think, is that much more remote. What has really been accomplished is that we have given away part of our revenue, with no compensation to Canadian companies operating through subsidiaries in foreign jurisdictions. We have given it away for an idea, for a theory, with which (a) I do not agree, and (b) I have seen no evidence—if there is any evidence I would be happy to have it—that there has been any substantial accomplishment of what the minister has stated from time to time he wishes to accomplish.

With regard to clause 13, I have written down here that it plugs a loophole; it provides an extension of time for going into business in designated areas; and it also provides for the situation where you may have made substantial commitments in the designated area, did not get into business, would have been in business by 1967, before the area has been, as someone said, desegregated.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Rehabilitated.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, rehabilitated. I am going to say no more than this, honourable senators. This is part of what complicates our tax laws, and in my opinion, provisions such as these operate mainly as windfalls to corporations who would have acted in exactly the same way as they are acting in their own economic interests, without the incentives.

It was reported in the press that the Minister of Finance said that he thought he could give the names of companies—I do not know the term that was used—to whom the Minister of Industry had given a "letter of intent." I believe there were some 40 companies. It was an indication that if they went ahead they would be entitled to obtain the certificate under the act, which would entitle them to the special depreciation, provided they complied with all the other qualifications set out. Then I believe the minister retreated from that and said his colleague, the Minister of Industry, had suggested he should not give these names—that these companies might not want their plans known.

But I suppose the names will be available some day, because some time Parliament should have an opportunity of assessing whether or not this type of so-called incentive really accomplishes what it was designed to accomplish. Was the "XYZ" company going into the designated area, in any event? Well, I suggest that when we can obtain the names of the companies, and some information as to the circumstances under which they conducted these new operations, and whatever collateral information may be available, that we will find it was not the incentive that made them act as they did, but rather it was their own economic interest; and the grateful Government gave them a taxation windfall.

Section 25 is the only other section to which I want to refer. Senator Hayden has taken some time to go through it, and I understand it somewhat better now than I did before, though it would be idle to say I now have a complete understanding. He has pointed out it covers better than six full pages of the bill. I think the resolution setting it out took up four columns in the Hansard of the other house.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: About which item are you speaking now?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Clause 25—I said "section".

Of course, there is no need for that section at all. The minister, having put away the stick and reduced his carrot, should have retreated the full way. He should have withdrawn this distinction between the good and the bad boys. Here are six and a quarter pages of something that will be a delight for the lawyers and tax accountants, and it will be subject to more amendments next year as surely as we are in this chamber this afternoon, because I have great faith in the ingenuity of lawyers and tax accountants. And why? To simplify it. It is as a result of a theory that if 25 per cent of the equity shares of a company are made available to Canadians that will mean a measure of Canadian control. Twenty-five per cent may be almost equivalent to effective control in many cases, but any person who has had corporate experience knows that when there are 75 per cent of the shares sitting here and 25 per cent sitting there, there is no degree of control worth mentioning in the hands of the 25 per cent as long as the 75 per cent observe the law.

So we are going through all these legal manoeuvres, for what? To deprive these companies of the right to accelerate depreciation which manufacturing companies generally are granted under our tax laws.

Again, this is just an incentive. I am not saying this incentive either is really accomplishing what it is designed to do. I think it has a somewhat better chance of doing it than the incentive related to designated areas, for obvious reasons. But what is the purpose of the incentive? It is to stimulate our secondary manufacturing industry, to encourage plant expansion and more employment. It is not as though we were talking to newcomers coming into this country, but it is to people who have been here for 75 years that we are saying, "Well, you go ahead; you expand your plant; you employ 500 more people; but you are not going to get the same benefits as your next door neighbour because we have decided we do not like you." That is the theory. Of course, it is ridiculous. Even these rules are ridiculous.

I think Senator Hayden would agree with me in this statement, that having come within all these new rules, if the equity shares of a company are listed, and one corporation, let us say in the United Kingdom, owns 75 per cent of the shares, and other people outside Canada not related to that corporation own 24 per cent of the shares, that is 99 per cent outside Canada—now, with 1 per cent or a fraction of 1 per cent held in Canada, that company would still have a degree of Canadian control, provided its equity shares came within the meaning of this new definition, and most companies will have no difficulty in coming within that definition.

Honourable senators, the bill will go to committee, and we will have an opportunity to discuss it further there, but I felt I must speak this afternoon on these points of principle, more in sorrow than in anger, and with no real hope that anything will be accomplished.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Could the honourable gentleman answer one question? How does he distinguish between the principle involved in designated areas and the benefits that are given to the people who enter into those designated areas, and what he consented to as a member of the Government when he gave benefits to, for instance, the Volvo Company in the Maritimes?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I am not going to answer that question at this time. I would be very glad to talk to my friend about it. The circumstances are completely and fundamentally different. I will be glad to discuss it with my honourable friend, but I do not think it is a matter for discussion here.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, there are two aspects of this bill that I should like to discuss briefly. Before I do that, however, as far as I am personally concerned I wish to compliment my colleague Senator Hayden on the lucid explanation he gave of one of the most complicated measures that comes before this house. I think we are all indebted to him.

The first of the two matters to which I wish to refer is this business regarding the degree of Canadian ownership we should have in corporations controlled from the United States. We have improved the situation greatly by the withdrawal of certain provisions inaugurated in the budget a year ago, but there are still a few things that need to be cleared up. I am one of those who believe that this country cannot be fully and successfully developed without foreign capital, and I have not the slightest reservation on securing that capital from the United States, if we can get it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The notion seems to exist in the minds of some people that because we live alongside the United States we are in danger of being absorbed by them. To me, that is nonsense. In the first place, if you proposed to the majority of United States citizens today that they should take over Canada, I believe they would reject such a proposal. They would reject it because their country is now too big to govern, or is, at least, as big as can conveniently be governed.

In the second place, it does not follow that because Americans invest in Canadian enterprises that our political affiliations may be affected as a result. I cannot for a moment agree with that theory. Let us look at a few instances. A year ago when discussing this point I gave one instance where it was impossible to get Canadian capital to develop what has turned out to be a thriving mining industry in Manitoba. The promoters could not get capital in Canada, so they went to New York and obtained there the 90 to 95 per cent of the thirty-odd million dollars required at that stage for the development of the enterprise. Nevertheless, today the control of that enterprise, I am told, lies in Canada.

Take our oil development in Alberta. The Americans had the know-how, the understanding and the experience. It was impossible to get Canadian risk capital interested in drilling exploration wells in Alberta. But our American friends came. If at that time we had imposed a condition that a certain percentage of Canadian capital must be invested in any company organized in Alberta for the drilling of oil, we would have placed a handicap on that development. I think it is foolish, to say the least, to have this continuous barrage against the investment of American capital or any other capital, for that matter, in this country. As a matter of fact, the United States itself was developed after the Civil War by a tremendous influx of capital from Europe, which over the course of the years has all been repatriated to the United States.

Another point I wish to speak about is this situation referred to by Senator Hayden and Senator McCutcheon, which I might describe as Ottawa vis-a-vis the provinces, or the relationships which should exist between Ottawa and the provinces. We hear much today about co-operative federalism. Frankly I have not been much impressed by that term. I do not think we are going to resolve these problems by the adoption of slogans of any kind. The relationships between the provinces and Ottawa in many instances and in varying degrees have deteriorated definitely since the end of the last war.

We had co-operation from the provinces after the outbreak of war, when they surrendered certain revenues to Ottawa for the prosecution of the war. And I, as one who at that time had some responsibility in regard to our part in the war, felt very grateful to the provinces for the generous position they took in the national interest. But we do seem now to have wandered into an area where we are squabbling over money. There are few things that damage morale more than difficulties of this kind. I agree completely that if conditions remain as they are at the present time we should not surrender another dollar of revenue to the provinces, and I shall tell you why. As I stated the other day, Ottawa has taken over the responsibility of the provinces in the whole broad field of social welfare, and in other respects too. Ottawa has been urged and has shown at times an inclination to give consideration to the question of help in the matter of education as well, which is a matter exclusively reserved to the provinces.

On the basis of information supplied to us in the estimates to be voted by Parliament, there is a total of almost $24 million, which is related directly to what was constitutionally the responsibility of the provinces. I think I am correct in that. I am speaking of pensions, family allowances, hospital insurance and items of that nature.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Surely more than $24 million.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Did I say $24 million?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am wrong. I thank you for correcting me, Senator Hugessen. I was glancing hurriedly through the figures. It amounts to $2,390 million. I put these figures together rather hastily a few moments ago. I should have said $2,390 million.

If we add together what we get out of personal income tax and corporation income tax for Ottawa, it is less than what we pay to maintain the services Ottawa has taken over from the provinces.

Now what should be done about it? Well, I would suggest that representatives of Ottawa and of the provinces sit down around a table and discuss this question on the basis of a clear-cut division of responsibilities as between the provinces and Ottawa, and then have a discussion as to how each could be put in possession of the revenues necessary to discharge their responsibilities. Some may say it is impossible, that you could not expect of get agreement on that. Well, let us look at the situation 100 years ago. Then confusion and disaster faced the new Province of Canada composed of Ontario and Quebec. Yet at that time there were men big enough to put the welfare of the country ahead of their partisan bickering, and as a result we had the Fathers of Confederation, and the Constitution in the British North America Act under which we have operated for nearly 100 years. The question simply is this: have we got statesmen today in the provinces and in Ottawa who are big enough to sit down together and consider these grave problems in that way? There was a time, perhaps 25 years ago, when I rather believed that if we were ever to have a great nation in Canada we must have more authority in the central area, that is in the federal Government. Experience has disillusioned me a good deal in regard to this matter, due not alone, by any means, to the fact that we have two elements, French and English, in our population, but also to the vast expansiveness of our country. When we consider that from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island is a distance of nearly 5,000 miles, and that over this area we have the country we call Canada, extending from the international boundary in the south to beyond the great Arctic regions, you realize that we have a country too vast to have too much centralized authority.

I have spent some months during the last two winters out on the Pacific coast. I enjoyed it. It is a good place in which to live. But, when I read the Vancouver papers and the Victoria papers I find in them very little news of the rest of Canada. When I go to Nova Scotia, as I do occasionally, I look for a Winnipeg paper, an Alberta paper or a British Columbia paper, and I find them difficult to obtain.

All this means is that we are separate communities. We will get the best results if we leave these communities as far as possible to manage their own affairs. If the provinces would take back all their responsibilities under the Constitution as it was drafted, I would be quite willing to hand them back. I would return to them the corporation income tax, the personal income tax and the succession duties, and let them administer all these responsibilities in the whole spectrum of social welfare, and let Ottawa get out of this field altogether, and stay out of it.

The essential thing, it seems to me, is that at as early a date as possible we obtain a clear understanding between the provinces and Ottawa as to their respective jurisdictions, as to the division of revenue, and where the taxing power will lie, and then let each play in its own backyard. I venture to assert that if we do this, then within five years the harmony that reigned in this country from the time of Confederation down to comparatively recent years will be restored.

There is another argument in favour of something of this kind being done. Senator McCutcheon referred to the matter of one government collecting revenue and passing it over to another government to spend. I agree with his view on this 100 per cent. The government that undertakes the spending should have the responsibility of obtaining the money. If money, which they had no responsibility in collecting, is handed over to the provinces, then it is just like an indulgent father handing over sums of money every month to his son to spend. The principle is bad. That principle, instead of solidifying and unifying the country, works in precisely the opposite direction. For that reason alone I am impelled to make the suggestion I have.

There are certain matters with which Ottawa must deal, and about which I think the provinces—even Quebec—would not object. For instance, it is quite obvious that we cannot have each province dealing with external affairs, with our relationships with other countries. It is desirable to have one postal system in the country we call Canada. It is equally desirable that in matters of trade and customs there should be one authority. There should be one authority with respect to banking, and aviation and transportation. The control and direction of all these matters must, I think, remain in the central authority.

Some may say that these proposals, if carried out, would leave some of the provinces in an inferior position. May I deal with that for a moment? I do not know whether or not the industrial changes that have taken place in Canada in the last 20 years have appealed to honourable senators. It was about 25 years ago that the investment in northern Manitoba by what is known as the Hudson's Bay Mining and Smelting Company was made. It was American capital, but, as I have already said, the company is now controlled in Canada. During this period of time we have uncovered vast oil resources in Alberta and Saskatchewan—even Manitoba has gas and oil potentialities—and there have been vast mineral discoveries in western Canada.

If we look at each of the provinces across Canada today, what do we find? We find in British Columbia a great timber industry, a great fishing industry, a great mineral industry and a very substantial oil and gas industry. British Columbia is a wealthy province. By the way, all of these provinces have control of their resources. If British Columbia manages its business efficiently, it has a great basis for development and the production of wealth.

Alberta is one of the richest provinces of Canada. Saskatchewan has very important oil and gas resources, and during the last ten years there have been discoveries of potash fields.

Hon. Mr. Croll: And a new government.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The potash fields of Saskatchewan constitute the greatest potash reserves in the world, and potash is a material which finds a ready sale to an increasing degree not only in Canada but in the United States and throughout the whole world. Saskatchewan also has important metal mineral resources.

In Manitoba today there is a fine agriculture. Farm practice has improved enormously. One company, International Nickel, has invested within the last five years $250 million in northern Manitoba, and has recently discovered another ore body that is, apparently, as great as the one it was working on. I saw the predictions from a pretty responsible source the other day to the effect that in the matter of nickel, which is one of the world's scarce commodities, Manitoba had resources greater than those of the Sudbury area. And it may be added that last year the Prairie provinces produced over 700 million bushels of wheat.

I do not need to discuss Ontario and Quebec. They are rich in resources and wealth.

New Brunswick is developing important mineral resources and timber. Nova Scotia is not so well off. Prince Edward Island is a little farming province, and Newfoundland has great resources in Labrador. Personally, I feel that if the provincial Government of Newfoundland handles its affairs wisely, that province in twenty years can become one of the best in Canada so far as per capita wealth is concerned.

These are all reasons why I think there should be a re-examination of the relationships between the provinces and Ottawa in respect to economic and monetary matters. In my opinion it is possible to find a formula or a basis for a definite settlement of these matters, and I would not be adverse to an election being fought on that, once agreement was reached, in order to obtain the confirmation of the Canadian people of such a program.

One hundred years ago the Fathers of Confederation were engaged in framing our Constitution. I have always marvelled at the resourcefulness they displayed, the policy they exposed, and the forbearance they had with each other. They met for a purpose. Our Constitution was the result of their meeting, and Canada emerged as a nation. Since that time has our statesmanship become so poor in quality that it cannot measure up to the responsibilities of today? I do not believe so. I am certain as I am of anything that in the hearts of the overwhelming majority of the Canadian people today there is an ardent desire that these differences be settled, and for Canada to get back on the road of progress to the fine nation I am convinced it will ultimately become.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the last question which has been discussed by Senator Crerar and which was touched upon by Senators Hayden and McCutcheon is, to my mind, too vast to hold in the restricted frame or vase of the bill which is before us. Therefore, I do not intend to go very far in discussing this matter.

For several months I have been toying with the idea that the Senate could do well with a permanent committee to deal with constitutional problems. I leave this idea for the time being, but I would be very much obliged if my colleagues who are interested in this idea would give me, privately or otherwise, their views.

Honourable senators, I come now to the only point I wish to deal with, the principle which has been enunciated by Senator Hayden, and approved by the other senators who followed him, that the government which spends the money should be the one to levy the taxes required to raise that money.

Senator Hayden has said that in 1958 and 1960 he had the impression of being in the wilderness in enunciating this principle. I will tell him that I was saying the same thing in the other place, and I could refer him to the House of Commons Hansard of 1959 in particular, where I said that it was essential in fiscal relations between Ottawa and the provinces to put first the general principle that the provincial governments should have the responsibility of levying the taxes they needed to meet the obligations imposed upon them by the Constitution. I added then, and I have not changed my mind, although this may not be completely in agreement with what Senator Crerar said just before he sat down, that it is difficult to do away with the principle of equalization payments; but outside of this principle of equalization, I think we have to apply the principle of maintaining the fiscal responsibility of each level of government. I am speaking of senior governments. I do not think it is as important when we discuss the problem of municipal government, but senior governments should accept their responsibilities. If they need more money, they have the usual ways of borrowing, or increasing taxes or creating new ones.

For the record, I wish to mention that our troubles started after the war. At the beginning of the war the provinces agreed to vacate the fields of personal and corporation tax and succession duties for the duration of the war. The purpose was excellent. But after the war the central government refused to vacate those fields or refused to go back to the situation—I think this is more accurate—that prevailed before the war.

The Province of Quebec, which at that time did not want to sign any rental agreement to continue those that had been accepted and passed at the beginning of the war, was penalized because there was no compensation for the taxpayer of Quebec or for the Government of Quebec as a result of a refusal to sign a rental agreement.

Ten years later we know what happened. We know that in 1955 or 1956 the central Government, in the matter of personal income tax, agreed to grant a deduction of 10 per cent from the federal income tax to any taxpayer from Quebec in order to permit him to pay to that extent the provincial income tax. But at that time we were still saddled with those rental agreements which, to my mind, were preventing the provincial governments from taking real initiative and assuming true responsibility in the matter of determining and levying taxes.

The former Government, of which I had the honour to be a member, made a major step to restore that principle of responsibility, when in 1961 it put an end to the rental agreement. We have no rental agreements now in the matter of personal income tax or corporation taxes. The federal Government gives the provinces a rebate, which in the case of personal income tax has been increased in the bill now before us from 19 per cent to 21 per cent. It was 10 per cent in 1957. Later it was increased to 13 per cent and then, when the rental agreements were terminated, a scale was established for five years ranging from 16 per cent in 1962 to 20 per cent in 1966. This scale has been accelerated since the last federal-provincial conference. But this does not prevent the provincial governments from determining their own rates of taxation. The provinces are entirely free in this matter, but the problem is that no provincial government dares increase its rate unless the federal Government is prepared to give a proportionate rebate on the federal tax.

The federal-provincial conferences for years have reflected a preoccupation on the part of the provinces to settle their budgetary problems, but not to assume their responsibility. I think we had a perfect example of that at the last federal-provincial conference.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Would my friend permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, certainly.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Did you know that the original federal-provincial tax earning agreements, which provided for rental payments at certain rates on personal income tax, corporation tax and succession duties, also provided that if a province did not wish to accept that rental agreement, it might impose its own personal income tax, corporation profits tax and succession duties and that the Government would rebate to the province an amount equal to the amount provided in the rental agreement?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I know that the first rental agreement provided, for instance, that if a province did not want to sign a rental agreement in the matter of personal income tax, it would allow 5 per cent of the federal personal income tax.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, it was 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No, it was only in 1956 that 10 per cent was provided. I remember that very well. It was after the federal-provincial conference of 1956. The only relief provided in the law as it existed prior to 1956 was 5 per cent of personal income tax. That is all. If the province had imposed, as Quebec did in 1955, personal income tax on the basis of between 10 and 15 per cent, the taxpayer of Quebec could have a rebate of only 5 per cent at that time. That is why the federal Government of the day had to backtrack. The situation was untenable, agreeing to rebate only 5 per cent when the tax was between 10 and 15 per cent and was bringing to the provincial government about the same amount as the payment which was made by the then federal Government to the other provinces.

So I say that I agree. However, some people seem to think that if a province were to increase the rate of corporation tax or personal tax we would have double taxation. I think that the term "double taxation" is entirely false under those circumstances. If double taxation means being taxed by two levels of government, we have that both in personal income and corporation income tax. If double taxation is said to mean tax on tax, that is not the case. We may have double taxation in other fields. The way double taxation is understood at present is simply inequality of taxation where a taxpayer in a province would have to pay a higher rate of tax, if both federal and provincial taxes were imposed. For instance, you might call it double taxation because in the Province of Quebec the sales tax is 6 per cent while in Ontario it is 3 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is not double really, but a combination, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes; I know. But to my mind the way people speak of double taxation is entirely false. Certainly, one day the principle will have to be accepted that the government which increases its expenses will have to levy the taxes, or borrow. However, borrowing is only postponing the issue.

The main point I wanted to make is that so far as the federal Government is concerned, a very important step was taken in 1961 by putting an end to the rental agreements and by forcing the provinces to adopt their own laws to levy personal income tax and corporation taxes. I hope that we shall continue in that direction.

Hon. Mr. Croll: May I ask the honourable gentleman one question?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Croll: You argued that the government which spends should be the government that collects. The last figures I saw were to the effect that the people of Ontario and Alberta contribute more by way of tax to the federal treasury than their provinces receive in return, and that the other provinces receive more than they pay in. How would you provide for the poorer provinces?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I think I made my position clear, that we could not under the present circumstances do away with the equalization payments. I said that I thought this system must be maintained, but that we should once and for all provide, through the equalization payments, for these differences. Outside of that, I think we should apply very strictly the principle of the responsibility to levy taxes by the government which spends the money.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I ask the honourable senator a question? He repeated his suggestion over and over again that each province should raise money which it requires to discharge its responsibilities by its own taxation. Is his suggestion in respect to, say, family allowances, old age pensions, unemployment insurance, hospital grants, and veterans allowances? Or does the honourable senator mean it should only accept this responsibility as the appropriate taxing power in certain areas that someone is going to determine?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: The honourable senator has just reminded me that I had made a note when I was listening to the honourable Senator Crerar, saying that the provinces should take back the administration of all welfare legislation. This is one problem which would take too long for me to discuss. The only comment I want to make is that if the provinces were to assume the administration of the domain of welfare, and obtain from the federal Government, if you wish, a corresponding measure of the tax dollar—and there is a method of doing that—it would not settle the problem I have indicated. This is something else. This is a constitutional matter from an administrative viewpoint. I was thinking mostly of constitutional problems from a strictly fiscal viewpoint.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Farris, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaubien (Provencher), for second reading of Bill S-20, intituled: "An Act to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia."

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) if he is going to call six o'clock, and we shall sit this evening. If not, would he permit this item to be placed first on the Orders of the Day for tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would certainly be agreeable to whatever honourable senators wish. If they wish to sit this evening and deal with this and other items on the Order Paper, I would be in entire agreement.

I would call attention to the fact that under Rule 13, if the Speaker leaves the chair, and we do sit this evening, unless the Senate otherwise directs, he returns to the chair at 7.30. If the house desires to sit this evening for a while, I would like to have some expression of view as to what time we should return here. I am quite prepared to sit tonight.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not necessary.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I think I am safe in saying 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I have to return home tomorrow night.

Hon. Mr. White: Could the honourable leader have this item placed first on the Orders of the Day for tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Again, I am in the hands of the house. Certainly, we could give it precedence over any other business by putting it first on the Order Paper tomorrow.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 28, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

28th May, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 28th May, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

HON. W. ROSS MACDONALD, P.C.

FELICITATIONS ON HONORARY DEGREE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not think, as a matter of practice, the kind of announcement I am about to make now need be made every time one of our members is honoured; but I am sure all honourable members will be particularly pleased to learn that the honourable Senator Ross Macdonald has been honoured with an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by Waterloo Lutheran University. On behalf of all of us I express not only our congratulations but our great pleasure.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I join with the Leader of the Government in congratulating our colleague, Senator Ross Macdonald, on the honour which has been conferred upon him by Waterloo Lutheran University.

Frankly, I do not know of any one of those who have been mentioned in this house at various times as receiving such honours, who was more deserving than my old and dear friend Senator Macdonald. I offer him my personal congratulations, as I know all members of the Senate would wish to do.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I sincerely appreciate the kind references which have been made to me by the two honourable leaders of this house.

My purpose in rising is to say that the Waterloo Lutheran University over the years has been, and still is, very dear to certain senators. You will be interested to know that the first Chancellor of Waterloo was a very wise and well-informed member of this house, who is now deceased. I refer to the late Senator W. D. Euler. In his memory, the Euler family presented to the university its first mace. That mace is so exquisitely beautiful it is going to be on exhibition in various places throughout Canada after the university rises for the summer.

Also, honourable senators will be interested to know that the shaft, the main stem of the mace, was made and donated by Lunenburg Foundry and Engineering Limited, of which the president is one of our wise and well-informed senators, the Honourable J. J. Kinley.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

ROOSEVELT CAMPOBELLO INTERNATIONAL PARK COMMISSION BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-26, respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello International Park:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-26, respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello International Park, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I am going to ask the Senate to waive a rule this afternoon, in view of the urgency of this matter. It is hoped to have this park open in July, and the authorities, both in United States and in Canada, are very anxious to have this legislation passed as soon as possible.

Therefore, I move, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be given third reading now.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before the motion is adopted I would suggest that the speeches delivered on the second reading of this bill by Senator Burchill, Senator McLean and Senator Brooks should be printed and distributed widely as an advertisement for this international park.

Motion agreed and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 2, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stambaugh:
>
> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I ask that this Order stand for today and that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Flynn for making that suggestion. I hope it will be accepted because this is a bill of public interest and I think the time has come to submit it to the members of the Senate. I accept this on the understanding it will be first on the Order Paper on Tuesday. It will not be a long debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would like to hear the views of the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not know as yet what business we will have to deal with on Tuesday. However, I assure the honourable senator that this item will not be placed lower on the Order Paper than it would normally come. In making up the agenda we will give it the best position we can.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Thank you.

Order stands.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Farris for the second reading of Bill S-20, to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, in rising to speak in this debate on the motion for second reading of Bill S-20, to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia, I am fully aware that I am following Senator Farris, the sponsor of the bill, who for many years has been recognized throughout Canada as a leading member of the bar and a noted constitutional counsel. The honourable senator presented his case in careful detail, but from listening to him, and later reading his speech in Hansard, I felt that he did not have his heart in his task, and that he, personally, was opposed to the bill. He went to considerable pains to point out that he did not agree with certain remarks made by Premier Bennett. At page 487 of Hansard, Senator Farris said:

> I want honourable senators to understand that I am not taking a stand on what honourable Mr. Bennett said, one way or another.

At page 489 he said:

> I am not here to say whether or not that legislation in British Columbia is right or wrong. I am not saying whether I would or would not take that position.

And at page 490:

> I do not say I support Bennett's proposal; I do not have to say I disagree with it.

I think, in all fairness to Senator Farris, he realized that he had a rather poor case to present.

I do not propose to be indefinite, as was Senator Farris. I am opposed to the federal Government's granting this application for a bank charter. I am opposed also to the granting of other applications for bank charters now before the Senate or which may be presented at a later date.

In the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill S-6, to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada, Senator Blois very clearly and in complete detail placed on record, at page 126 of Hansard, reasons why further banking facilities are not required in Canada. It is not necessary for me to repeat them, but I agree with and support in every way the remarks of Senator Blois. He showed that there were over 5,600 branch banks in Canada as at January of this year. This figure, of course, relates to bank branches which are capable of carrying on a complete banking business.

Senator Blois dealt also with the established trust companies, and the increasing number of new trust companies. He indicated how these trust companies are establishing branches throughout the country, and which carry on business as so-called "near banks."

In addition to the large number of bank branches, and trust companies and their branch offices, there are other facilities in Canada which receive savings. I refer to the Post Office Savings Bank, which has over $25 million on deposit. The provinces of Ontario and Alberta have provincial savings banks. In Ontario there are 21 branches with over $77 million on deposit, and in Alberta there are 56 branches with over $37 million on deposit.

In recent years, especially since the Second World War, the number of credit unions and co-operatives has greatly increased in every province from coast to coast. In 1961 there were 4,697 credit unions with a total membership of over 2,740,000.

I mention these facts simply to indicate that Canada, at the present time, is more than well supplied with banking facilities and institutions for savings.

I refer honourable senators to the proceedings before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on March 18 of this year, when Mr. Clayton F. Elderkin, Inspector General of Banks, appeared before the committee. At page 18 of the report of the proceedings there is this question by Senator Pouliot and the answer by Mr. Elderkin:

> Senator Pouliot: I have a very short question to ask you, Sir. Did the Department of Finance receive any complaints about the insufficiency of the number of branches of banks in Canada?
>
> Mr. Elderkin: Not that I have heard of, Senator. At the present time there are almost 5,500 branches of banks in Canada. This is almost double the number there was at the end of the last war. This is roughly one branch office for every 3,300 persons in the country, and is far greater than the corresponding figure for either the United States or the United Kingdom.

Of course, that figure refers only to branch banks, and in addition to those, as I have already mentioned, there are the trust companies and their many branch offices.

The three honourable senators who introduced the three bills to incorporate banks in this house did not give any information as to the actual need for more banks, or additional banking facilities, in Canada, except in a most general and caual way. Neither did the witnesses appearing before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce with respect to the Bank of Western Canada show any need for any new banking facilities. There was nothing but a casual reference.

I would have expected that in presenting an application for a bank charter the applicants would show in detail the need of new banking facilities in the country at large, or in some particular section of the country or province, or in particular, in certain areas.

I know that as far as the Province of Ontario is concerned all sections of the province are well and adequately supplied with banking facilities. My point is well illustrated by the evidence of Mr. Stevens before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce at page 33:

> A number of my associates and I have felt for several years that it was financially a feasible proposition, and desirable in the public interest, to organize a new bank in Canada.

He made no attempt to show how a new bank would be in the public interest or where banking facilities are needed.

I would draw your attention to the wording "it was financially a feasible proposition, and desirable in the public interest." I was touched with the remarks "desirable in the public interest." The evidence showed the interest was financially solely in the interest of three men who, by the various companies they control, would exercise complete control over the new bank if a charter were granted.

The press indicates that a Montreal group are now working on an application for a bank charter to serve that district. Certainly if the present application is granted we may expect several other provincial governments to make application for a bank charter.

I am of the opinion that all applications for bank charters now before the Senate, and any other applications received, should be held up until such time as the Government decides on the revision of the Bank Act.

There appears to be too much haste in dealing with these applications.

The Montreal Gazette of March 5, the day after Senator Leonard introduced his bill regarding the Bank of Western Canada, had this to say respecting a delay in granting bank charters:

> The principal cause for expecting a delay arises in the large equity position to be taken by the provincial government in the Bank of British Columbia. No legal obstacle to provincial participation is raised within the context of the Bank Act. The objection arises, rather, in the precedent that would be set and the implications for implementation of monetary policy by the central bank. These must be worrisome, indeed, for the federal authorities—and with good reason.
>
> If the Bank of British Columbia is chartered, petitions may be expected from Quebec and the Maritimes, petitions which could hardly be held up. The central bank would then be in the position of having to implement a national policy through regional, and politically dominated, institutions. As long as policy requirements were uniform, policy implementation would be no more difficult than now. But what happens when a tight money policy is wanted in central Canada and an easy money policy is wanted on the west coast?

On April 28, a few days after the Porter Commission reported, the same paper had these further remarks as to why there should be delay in granting any further bank charters:

> The conditions it lays down for competition, though, bear directly upon at least one application, for the Bank of Western Canada, and may be found to bear upon two others, the Laurentide Bank and the Bank of British Columbia.
>
> The difficulty in attempting to establish to what extent these conditions will finally apply, assuming their acceptance by the government, is found in the number of qualifications entered by the commission. It would appear, then, that before new charters are granted, Parliament must have a clear idea of what the revised Bank Act will say. It must also have a clear idea of what guidelines will be followed in permitting the exceptions which the commission has recognized.

A bank controlled by a provincial government may be dangerous to Canada's financial system and likely to damage its constitutional structure. It is not because of competition with the present banks but because it would plunge banking into politics, thus greatly expanding the power of a provincial government.

If this charter is granted, does any senator doubt that other provinces will apply for bank charters? Thus, we would have ten provincial banks and sooner or later there would be difficulties with the Bank of Canada. Just think of the power of ten provincial banks, each backed by a sovereign government. Would any honourable senator argue that such a condition was contemplated under the B.N.A. Act? Ten provincial banks banded together could bring tremendous pressure on the Bank of Canada and the federal Government. If a dispute arose, then the provincial banks could bring the dispute or argument into federal and provincial politics. In fact, ten provincial banks could pressure the federal Government to overrule its own central bank, the central control of money might be affected, and savings could become the prey of political manœuvre, something the federal Constitution never contemplated. The B.N.A. Act gave the complete control and issuing of currency to the federal Government.

There is a very good argument mentioned in the press as to whether or not an application of the type now proposed is constitutional. This is somewhat borne out by the argument that a provincial government is allowed to collect its revenue from within the province and to use such revenues for provincial purposes, but a bank with a federal charter controlled by a provincial government operating a banking business throughout Canada, as intended under the present application, would not in my opinion be provincial.

Honourable Senator Farris, in his presentation, dealt with the resolution passed by the Vancouver Board of Trade. At page 484 of Hansard, he quoted from the Vancouver Sun as follows:

> Politically-Free
> B.C. Bank Wanted
> Trade Board Sends Resolution
> To Senate Banking Committee
>
> Vancouver Board of Trade wants to make sure the proposed Bank of B.C. is free from political control.
>
> The Board of Trade resolution said if the B.C. government bought 25 per cent of the shares that would give it effective control and thus leave the institution open to political influence.

As far as political control is concerned, Senator Farris made this most significant remark on the same page:

> I wonder what if anything is completely free of political control in the provinces.

How then can the honourable senator say that the Province of British Columbia, holding the controlling number of shares in the new bank, will not exercise at least some political control? The honourable senator quite frankly agreed that 25 per cent of the shares would give a substantial control.

The honourable senator quoted further, on the same page, from the Board of Trade resolution:

> The Vancouver Board of Trade subscribes to the proposition that no government should enter any field of business which is adequately and well served by the private sector of the economy.

I do not think many senators can disagree with that statement.

I simply cannot understand or appreciate why any provincial government should enter any field of business which can be, and is, adequately and well served by the private enterprise sector of the economy, except for the reason and purpose of acquiring some political control. It would appear to me rather difficult for anyone appearing before the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee to show that under the present banking system the whole country has not been adequately and is not today being well served by the banks and trust companies under private enterprise.

The last quotation the honourable senator read from the Board of Trade brief appears at page 485, as follows:

> Acquisition of this number of shares, or even a substantially reduced percentage, could, if as indicated the balance of the shares are widely distributed, give effective, if not complete control to the Government.
>
> We would urge that all concerned with the creation and affairs of the bank give early assurance that the bank will in every sense be a private enterprise, permanently free of the danger of government control at the operating level and of political domination in any sense.

The senator has already agreed that 25 per cent would give control, and he answers these statements by the Vancouver Board of Trade in the following manner:

> Honourable senators, I have several answers to that. I take that as my text because it is the only objection of substance that I can find to this bill—that is apart from the general objections that might apply to all new banks, and we have enough proposed incorporations before us now. My answer is, first, that the powers are only the powers of shareholders. The government, as owners of shares, will have no more rights than other shareholders.

I would ask the honourable senator what further powers are required, and who controls the bank. If honourable senators will look at the Order Paper for today they will find that there is coming before this house a bill to be explained by the honourable Senator Bouffard, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, which seeks to increase its number of directors from 15 to 20. When the bill is passed the new section 8 of the Telephone Act will read as follows:

> The business of the Company shall be managed by a board of not less than five nor more than twenty directors, as may from time to time be determined by resolution of the shareholders.

I point out the importance of those two sentences: "The business of the Company shall be managed . . ." and that the number of the directors will be ". . . as may from time to time be determined by resolution of the shareholders."

The bill to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia could provide in the same manner:

> The business of the Company shall be managed by a board of not less than five—

Etcetera.

—as may from time to time be determined by resolution of the shareholders—

It seems to me that any group of men, or a company, or several companies, or a provincial government, as shareholders holding the majority or the controlling interest in any company or bank, control that company or bank. Does that not give them the necessary authority and the opportunity both to select and elect the officials and officers of the company or the bank, who will decide the policies and who will direct and manage the affairs of the company or bank? To me it is impossible to believe that any group of men, or company, or government, holding a controlling interest will not exercise their right to control such company or bank.

The honourable Senator Farris apparently recognized this point, because he placed on Hansard certain remarks made by the honourable Senator Cameron when he introduced the application for a charter of the Laurentide Bank. At page 486, he quoted Senator Cameron as follows:

> However, by reason of its continuing substantial share holdings and an agreement, Power Corporation continues to be in a position to cause to be elected a majority of the company's directors.

Senator Cameron was referring there to the Laurentide Finance Company. I should point out in fairness to him that the evidence before the committee yesterday showed that there is now going to be a different set up.

The honourable Senator Farris, throughout his speech, made several references as to possible future difficulties if this house, or if Parliament, refused to pass this bill or grant this charter. The remarks sounded to me of the type, "I dare the senators to refuse this charter." I would refer honourable senators to the following statements made by him at page 488, where he had been discussing the case of the Bank of Toronto vs. Lamb:

> It is my submission that the Senate, in accordance with the principle laid down by Lord Hobhouse, is no more justified in questioning the bona fides of the provincial legislation or its administration, than was the Privy Council in the case of an attack on taxation legislation by the great Province of Quebec.

Then, at page 489:

> If the Senate or Parliament decides to interfere with that, I say they are interfering with serious constitutional rights.

He is there referring to the right of the Province of British Columbia to pass legislation authorizing the Government to purchase shares in the new bank.

On the same page 489, the honourable senator went on to say:

> I want to point out to honourable senators that there are two features with respect to that. One is that a lawyer may argue, and he may be right or wrong, that under the Bank Act you have a right to refuse to grant a charter to a bank that is going to have the support of a provincial legislature, even though under the Constitution they are authorized to purchase those shares. My own opinion, as a lawyer, is that that would be unconstitutional on the part of the Parliament of Canada.

Then at page 490 the honourable senator pointed out that this would be a choice political issue for Premier Bennett. He also stated:

> Right or wrong, that is his constitutional right and, believe me, this Parliament of Canada could inject unnecessary and unfair problems into this time of great uncertainties, great conflicts and demands among the provinces.

In the concluding paragraph, the honourable senator stated:

> Gentlemen, I ask you to support this bill and send it to the committee where it may mingle with the problems of the other two bank bills that have already been referred to committee for consideration. I say that to turn it down here would be a grave reflection on the constitutional rights of the province; such action would instigate dissatisfaction and political controversy out in the Province of British Columbia.

It seems to me that this house is not questioning the right of British Columbia to pass the bill they did authorizing them to purchase shares in the new bank. I think the question the Senate has to decide is whether or not it is constitutional to grant a charter to a bank which will be controlled by a provincial government. The honourable senator in his remarks dealt with and quoted at some length from a speech delivered by Premier Bennett as to the probable future action of the British Columbia government if this charter is granted.

Well, the honourable senator resides in British Columbia, and as I pointed out, he is a well-known counsel. He must have been well informed and familiar with all the facts when the present Premier of British Columbia and his government took over the B.C. Electric. The only information I have is what I read in the press, but I am sure the honourable senator will agree that the method employed and the actions taken by Premier Bennett and his government in that takeover were not exactly in accordance with the principles of law the honourable senator and I were taught in law school. The action by the B.C. government was both tough and high-handed, and this attitude only changed when the law was invoked. What regard or consideration, if any, did the B.C. government show to the shareholders of B.C. Electric? The action of the B.C. government in the takeover of B.C. Electric was somewhat similar to what one might expect from the government of a banana republic.

If this charter is granted, Mr. Bennett and his government can, in the future, be just as tough and high-handed as they were in the B.C. Electric takeover. Perhaps they can be even tougher, for, after all, the B.C. government as the shareholder having the majority control of the new bank will have much to do in selecting the officials and directors who will direct and decide the policies of the bank.

In conclusion, I wish to quote from a short article in the Toronto Globe and Mail of May 9 last, headed, "British Columbia—Bennett Wants Charter Now," and is written by Douglas Collins, of Vancouver.

The article reads in part:

> The main objections to the bank are that it may give the Social Credit Party a greater opportunity to "put the arm" on business for contributions to the Socred war chest, and that firms which want Government contracts may find themselves pressured to establish accounts with the bank . . .
>
> The Vancouver Board of Trade has not accepted these assurances. Following Mr. Bennett's pronouncements, it submitted briefs to both Ottawa and Victoria in which its objections to the provincial Government's entry into the banking field were specified. "No government should enter any field of business which is adequately and well served by the private sector of the economy," it was stated. It was stated that the Government still has the power to take 25 per cent of the available shares, and that "even a less amount could be dangerous."
>
> This sort of criticism is echoed in the press, and The Sun, which supports the Liberals, has suggested editorially that the establishment of a provincial bank may be unconstitutional. The paper suggests that the federal Government could send the whole question to the courts under the terms of the Constitutional Question and Determination Act.

I would draw to the attention of honourable senators the raising of the question that a provincial bank may be unconstitutional and that the whole matter should be referred to the courts.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, before my friend Senator Lambert speaks, may I say that I have to leave, but I do not want to appear to be running away. I shall be back.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I have been much interested in the debating quality of the speech of the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White). It was characteristic of most of the statements he makes in this house. There is no mistaking the meaning of what he has in mind, and what he wants to say in support of his point of view. Even if I have to differ from him, it will be on a ground other than what he made the basis of his speech.

In discussing Bill S-20, which was so forcefully presented to the Senate on behalf of the Province of British Columbia by Senator Farris last week, I would say at the outset that I intend to support the bill on second reading, in the hope that it may be referred to the appropriate standing committee for further examination and enlightenment.

In the meantime, I propose, as briefly as I can, to express certain indirect factors and influences which have a bearing, not only on this particular bill, but which might be applied also to other proposed measures similar in character which already are under consideration by this chamber.

I desire mainly to emphasize, without prejudice of any kind, something of the historical, political and social background out of which this proposed legislation has emerged. I do so mainly, I think, because I happened in my earlier and possibly more impressionable years to spend the greater part of the period from 1911 to 1930 in western Canada, first as a resident correspondent for a well-known eastern journal which pretentiously carried at its masthead the title, "Canada's National Newspaper." Later I had the privilege of being connected intimately with the organized agrarian movement with which my respected colleague, Senator Crerar, was associated with much distinction over a much longer period than myself.

The point I wish to make now is that a widespread opinion in western Canada still reflects a certain inherited reaction to an earlier colonial environment. I suppose it might be described as a kind of prenatal influence. One does not refer here to the imperial power of Britain in the days of its great empire so much as to the reflection of a different and more materialistic influence emanating not only from Ottawa but from developing eastern centres of industry and finance. This influence was felt in new and undeveloped western areas long after the Confederation Act of 1867 was adopted by the Parliament of Canada.

For example, from 1821 to 1849 British Columbia, Manitoba and the northwestern territories, including the present provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, were largely the property of the Hudson's Bay Company. That vast area was an imperial colony administered by representatives of the British crown.

In 1849 Vancouver Island was proclaimed a British colony, and ten years later, consequent on the discovery of gold and a large influx of miners from California and elsewhere, the mainland territory was united with the colony of Vancouver Island under the name British Columbia.

It was not until 1871 that British Columbia entered Confederation. One of the principal conditions under which that area entered the dominion was the speedy construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and in 1876 the nonfulfilment of that obligation and the apparent indifference of Ottawa to the representations from British Columbia created strained relations which were only ameliorated when the construction of a transcontinental road was begun in that year. At that time British Columbia, with an area of 373,000 square miles of unknown resources, had a population of less than 50,000.

Notwithstanding the persistant and persuasive efforts of Sir Frederick Haultain, as the leading spokesman of the Northwest Territories, long before 1900, to gain provincial autonomy for that area, it was not until 1904 and 1905 that even limited provincial status was granted by Ottawa to Alberta and Saskatchewan, and not until much later were they granted ownership and control of their own natural resources.

Much more could be said about this so-called colonial inhibition in western Canada. It really assumes the form and thought of an inferiority complex with respect to the dominant influence of the headquarters of industry and finance, which have resided mainly in Toronto and Montreal.

The present branch banking system, which since Confederation has been so closely linked up with federal jurisdiction, has been highly praised for its flexibility in serving the development of Canada as a whole. In the earlier years of the western provinces, when rural districts represented over 70 per cent of their population, and grain growing, ranching and feeding of livestock were their major occupations, credit facilities were somewhat more difficult to obtain, and the west was regarded elsewhere more as a field of speculation than of sound and mature development. The chartered banking system, while serving the seasonal requirements of western Canada at seeding and harvest time, did not always show the best judgment in dealing with those needs.

Within the last 20 years, western agriculture has been augmented by the discovery of great wealth in the form of oil, natural gas and base minerals. Farm population, aided by automation, has declined to 35 per cent instead of 70 per cent of the whole; and secondary industry, which in recent years has been emphasized as the great objective of a new Canada, is appearing rapidly as a rich asset extending all the way from Manitoba to the coast of British Columbia. The chartered banking system undoubtedly has participated in this latter phase of western development and has profited by it.

The application contained in this bill and other applications for bank charters suggest some belated competition in the field of banking which is not necessarily undesirable.

As I have said, much more could be said about this so-called colonial inhibition in western Canada. Superficially this might be regarded as an evidence of imitative institutionalism, the desire to have monumental head office buildings on the street corners of their own rapidly growing cities.

Today it requires only the most casual observance of the growth and development of the middle west and British Columbia since the conclusion of the last war to realize that these provinces are now fully qualified and entitled to demand convenient financial facilities to enable them to accommodate their own economic requirements. In the full sense of the word, they have reached man's estate. If they cannot get these requirements from within their own country because of restrictions in present federal legislation, they will surely seek them elsewhere.

There has been much idle talk and fomentation about revolts arising over considered injustices in other well-known sections of Canada. Constitutional weaknesses in the Confederation act have been stressed. These have been identified with questions of language, and an alleged maldistribution of the produced wealth of the country.

In western Canada, the situation is of much different character. A large percentage of New Canadians, drawn from postwar Europe as well as the United States, have contributed with enthusiastic optimism to the establishment of themselves as loyal and useful citizens of this country; and their desires to enjoy all the privileges of self-government and self-management of their inherited resources, in company with older Canadian compatriots, represent a potential influence upon the future destiny of Canada. If, in the past, there have been indications of revolt in the western provinces, they have been due to impediments, which the people in that area felt were obstructing the fair development of their part of the country.

In the midst of the rapid whirl of such current problems as are represented in this bill, affecting the status of Canada as a whole, the Senate surely has a vital part to play—a part which the founding fathers of this country sincerely intended it to play.

I feel that this bill should go to the Senate Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and that every effort should be made to have enlightening evidence presented to it, even by inviting Premier Bennett himself to state in person the position of his province. At any rate, our decisions in these vital matters should not be rushed. "The way of gradualness," as has been truly said, is the way of Parliament. I hope that I have said enough to indicate that what are commonly called party considerations are irrevelant to much of the stuff of our current legislation, and that it is high time in the interest of public enlightenment that they were being clarified and reaffirmed.

In conclusion, it should also be said that party considerations, when they are based on clear-cut, realistic facts and policies relating to the national existence of Canada, really do mean something. Until comparatively recently, lines of national policy have been more easily identified than they are today. One consideration now confronting this chamber and this Parliament in all this legislation is the principle of provincial autonomy, of provincial rights and responsibilities.

The authoritarian power which developed and centred in the federal Government during, and immediately following, the last war is being challenged, I submit, in every province of this country, especially by those provinces concerned with the costs of education, transportation and the absorption of new citizens. The demands for these charters for new banks in the newer areas of western Canada reflect an insistence upon a larger measure of provincial rights. If this means changes in the British North America Act with respect to banking in this country, then I submit they should be thoroughly and unhesitatingly examined.

There is nothing sacrosanct in the present system of banking in Canada nor in the Bank Act itself. The establishment of the National Bank of Canada some 30 years ago supplies evidence of that fact. If these matters are to be expressed in terms of definite party policy, then let them be clearly defined, and let the chips fall where they will.

Finally, I maintain that none of us, in the light of the present pressing need for co-operation and unity in this country can lightly dissociate these demands for change from the future development of Canada.

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, in a recent press story entitled "Baby Banks Battle Bills" it is stated:

> The senators, many of whom are connected with the eight "old" banks and other financial houses, now are wrestling with private bills to incorporate three new banks.

I happen to be a director of one of the "old" banks, but in presuming to address you on this bill to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia I do not speak as a bank director, a lawyer, a director of a life insurance company, or in any capacity other than that of a member of this honourable house.

My reason for speaking now is that unless the honourable sponsor can change my mind by his closing address, I intend to vote against the motion for second reading. But I do not wish to register my vote without giving my reasons.

Having informed honourable senators that I am a director of a chartered bank they may, to use a banking expression, discount anything I have to say to whatever extent or degree each may think necessary and proper in the circumstances.

In fairness to the applicants desiring incorporation as the Bank of Western Canada, and the Laurentide Bank of Canada, it was agreed that these bills should go before a committee so that they would have an opportunity of stating their case fully and frankly. However, the main principle behind this bill is nothing more or less than that of one of the provinces setting up its own chartered bank. The fact that there may be one or 10,000 other shareholders in the proposed provincial bank does not alter the fact that it will be purely and simply a provincial Government chartered bank.

It has been suggested that the proposed bank would be unconstitutional, inasmuch as the province is seeking to do something indirectly that it cannot do directly. However, there are others who are more capable of dealing with the constitutional aspect. My objections to the bill are based on practical grounds.

It is conceded—indeed, it does not matter whether it is conceded or not—that the provincial Government will have effective control. If the purchase of 25 per cent of the shares does not give the province, together with such other shareholders of the bank as are allied with the provincial Government for political, financial, commercial or industrial reasons, effective control, then there is nothing to stop the province amending its own legislation to authorize it to purchase a larger proportion so that it will at all times, in law as in fact, have complete control. Once the province acquires any substantial shareholding it would be only a very short step, and not a very difficult one, to obtain a 90 per cent or even a 100 per cent interest in the bank. We would then have a provincial Crown corporation carrying on business as a chartered bank.

Think of the consequences of a provincial crown corporation being a chartered bank. It would pay no income tax to the federal Government, and, I assume, no income, property, or municipal tax in British Columbia. It would be under no obligation to make a profit on the capital of the shareholders. In these circumstances, it probably would not be long before all provinces had their own banks, and Canada would soon have not only a federal banking system but also a provincial banking system.

This may or may not be a good idea. If it is a good idea then Parliament should bring it about by repealing the present Bank Act, and substituting the new system therefor. If this should come about it would be only after considerable debate on the merits of the proposal, but if this bill is enacted it might come into existence through the back door. If British Columbia can establish its own chartered bank, then so can Ontario, Quebec and all other provinces. Indeed, they probably would have to do so in order to protect themselves. We would then have ten nationalized banks under provincial control.

In the event of dispute between the central bank and the provincial banks, what control would be vested in the central bank? We are warned we should not refuse this application, because we might not be acting in a proper constitutional manner if we deny the wishes of the Province of British Columbia. If the federal Government should not, or cannot, deny the province a charter then, following the same line of reasoning, the federal Government cannot subsequently revoke or take away the charter which it was powerless to refuse. What sanction then will the Bank of Canada or the Government of Canada invoke to insure that any provincial bank will carry out, from time to time, the national financial policies?

Clause 7 of Section 91 of the British North America Act entrusts "Militia, Military and Naval Service and Defence" to the federal Government. If this bill becomes law, the financial position would soon be the same as the military situation would be if each of the ten provinces had a defence department with armies, navies and air forces. In the event of a national emergency the national forces would be deployed as ordered by the general staff, while the provincial field marshals, admirals and air marshals would all be contending between themselves and Ottawa as to what should be done, and how it should be done. In short, as applied to banking we would have nothing more nor less than an absolute financial jungle.

It is said the new bank would not have any political influence. The answer to this, surely, is that while we might be easily persuaded to accept the assurances of the present Prime Minister of British Columbia that the bank would in no way have any political connections or objects, we, nonetheless, are all aware, as is every school boy, that no government can bind its successors. Within its own jurisdiction a provincial government has complete and absolute sovereignty at all times. If, therefore, in the future a subsequent government desires to change the policy of the Province of British Columbia in respect of the conduct of the affairs of its own nationalized provincial bank, then it would be entirely free to do so.

It is noteworthy that all provincial prime ministers desire to act at all times as statesmen. In the event of differences, it is the opposition and, occasionally, the government in Ottawa, who play politics. Therefore, if a difference should arise between central government monetary policy and the policy of the Bank of British Columbia, it will be the central bank in Ottawa which will be playing politics while the Bank of British Columbia will be conducted in a most statesmanlike manner.

It should also be noted that once the provincial bank of British Columbia receives a charter it can compete with all other chartered banks in Canada, and anywhere in the world. If this bill is enacted there would be granted a full banking charter to a bank which would be, or which could become, a provincial nationalized bank, controlled and directed by the province in the same way as a crown corporation of a province is controlled and directed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Does he say we should not incorporate a company the shares of which might be bought by a provincial government? Is it his proposition that we should not incorporate any company for fear that its shares might be acquired by a provincial government?

Hon. Mr. Cook: No, I do not go that far.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Then, what is the distinction?

Hon. Mr. Cook: Possibly there may be no distinction, but I suggest there is. The policies of this bank would be difficult, if not impossible, for the Bank of Canada to control, and it would not be possible to operate it to suit and fit every political whim and purpose. In addition, the bank would be in the position of being able to use public funds in order to compete with banks which use only private funds.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask another question? Does that not apply to every industry? It was not very long ago that the Province of Quebec took over the private power companies. Should we not incorporate hydroelectric companies in future for fear that their shares might be bought by provincial governments?

Hon. Mr. Cook: The honourable gentleman may quote all sorts of examples, including nationalized railways. For my part and my judgment, I do not agree with a nationalized bank and for these practical reasons I submit the bill should not receive second reading.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, in the first place I must tell you that I am not a director of any bank. I come here as any Canadian who uses the banks when needed, to put a little savings in or to ask for a loan of some money, on some guarantees. It is the only dealing I have with the banks, the ordinary dealings of any Canadian citizen.

Besides that, I find that this matter should be considered objectively. Although I live in the east, I have the right to pass judgment on a bill which concerns our province on the west coast, British Columbia. Besides that, I consider the matter so objectively that my remarks about it could have been made if I had been born in Vancouver or Victoria, British Columbia, instead of in Rivière-du-Loup, Quebec.

In order to understand this bill, one has to go to fundamentals. The fundamentals are not a reference to new Canadians or to those who live in the Prairie provinces. That is immaterial, for the very good reason given by Mr. Elderkin, Inspector General of Banks, Department of Finance. I take this opportunity to congratulate Senator White on what he has said. He mentioned it.

When one of these bills for new banks was before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, I asked Mr. Elderkin what was the number of branches of banks in Canada, if there were enough to answer the demand, to satisfy the needs of the people. Mr. Elderkin gave me a large figure, and told me that the number of branches of Canadian chartered banks in Canada was larger than anywhere else. I think he said that it was double the number of bank branches in the United States—something to that effect.

In the first place, that established that there is no need for new banks. If we have enough banks now and if they are decentralized in order to serve the people at home in every province and in every district of Canada, why should we insist to establish new chartered banks? We have enough now, according to the evidence given by the one gentleman who knows more about it than anybody else, the Inspector General of Banks. That is my first point.

My second point is that if I want to revert to fundamentals, the fundamentals for me are the Constitution of this country, the British North America Act of 1867, which is still in force, and by which we have to abide. What does it say? As my honourable colleagues are aware, section 91 deals with the exclusive powers of the Parliament of Canada. I need not read the preamble to the subsections, but subsection 14 is: "Currency and Coinage".

May I mention here that the Province of Alberta, at the time of Mr. Aberhart, tried to invade the banking business. It was found that they had no right to do so. Strongly enough—and I think that my memory is good enough to allow me to say that—the bills passed by the Legislature of Alberta to enter into the banking business were disallowed by the Parliament of Canada at the time.

There is a precedent against provincial banking on the same scale as chartered banks in Canada. There is the precedent of Alberta, and it was the policy of the founder of the Social Credit system in Canada, Mr. Aberhart, who failed lamentably.

Now, the Honourable Mr. Bennett, the Premier of British Columbia, probably is under the false impression that matters have changed, that there have been many revolutions of the earth since Mr. Aberhart died, that the history of Canada is completely forgotten and that he can start the same thing again.

I listened to honourable Senator Farris. The first part of his speech was an apology. He did not need to apologize for sponsoring this bill; it was his right to do so. I would not deny his right to sponsor legislation in which Mr. Bennett, the Premier of British Columbia, could be interested. He has the right; whether he is of Liberal lineage or not is immaterial. He comes here as a senator of Canada to sponsor a bill. Why did he excuse himself for that? Why did he challenge us about that? There was no challenge from us. We take for granted that he had the right to sponsor that legislation, as any other legislation. But it is not because he sponsored it that I have to be in favour of it. That is an important distinction.

The other day I saw on a television program a woman who was hypnotized by a gentleman who had the gift of hypnotism. I have not yet been hypnotized by anyone and the opinions that I express are my own, just as much as the opinions of Senator Farris are his—and they are subject to controversy.

All that takes me away from my fundamental point, the British North America Act, which I hold in my hand. Dealing with the exclusive rights of the Parliament of Canada, I come to subsection 15. Mark you, it is "exclusive." As I have told you in other circumstances, "exclusive" means that the party which has the right to do a thing exclusively is the only one who can do that, and others have not the right to do the same thing.

Subsection 15 says: "Banking, Incorporation of Banks, and the Issue of Paper Money." Paper money was issued in the first place by the chartered banks. Now this is one of the duties of the Bank of Canada, which is also a federal organization, coming under the Minister of Finance, just as much as a crown corporation may. But it has been created by the Parliament of Canada to serve as an instrument of banking for federal affairs.

Subsection 16: "Savings Banks". Savings banks come under federal jurisdiction for their incorporation. Naturally there are provincial savings banks; there is one for the Province of Ontario, right here on Sparks Street in this city; and there are others which do business within the province itself, and that according to the charter that is granted by federal legislation.

There is also the matter of the issue of paper money, which is under the control of the Parliament of Canada.

Subsection 18: "Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes". This logically comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada.

Subsection 19: "Interest". Interest on loans is under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. I would not say that our Parliament has been always very fair in establishing the rates of interest, and there might be an equalization that would be well appreciated by all those concerned. But that is something else.

I have not read the first part of section 91, which has been repeated ad nauseam; but the last paragraph of the section I will put on record to show that there is no possible doubt about the exclusive jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada in banking. It reads as follows:

> And any matter coming within any of the Classes of Subjects enumerated in this Section shall not be deemed to come within the Class of Matters of a local or private Nature comprised in the Enumeration of the Classes of the Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces.

This is exactly what I have reminded you of. The Parliament of Canada alone is able to do this. Parliament has the exclusive right, and therefore the provinces have not the right to do that. This is why the courts and the federal Government have been adamant with regard to the new legislation which Mr. Aberhart had passed.

Now I come to Section 92, entitled "Exclusive Powers of Provincial Legislatures". There is nothing mentioned about banking in the section, except subsection 3: "The borrowing of Money on the Sole Credit of the Province."

They can borrow money from the banks, and borrow money in other countries if they want to do so, or through brokers. That is that.

What is enumerated in section 92 concerning banking as an exclusive power of a provincial legislature? Nothing, concerning banking. Mr. Bennett, who is very able and whose province is one of the most prosperous in Canada, due to splendid natural resources, thinks that he can put the Constitution aside, and become a banker in his capacity as provincial premier of his government. It is pretty hard to accept that. It is not that I mistrust him; he may have great qualities. I have met him on occasions. The last time I met him was in the general election before the last one. I happened to be between Mr. Fleming and Mr. Bennett at a hotel in Montreal, and at that time I told a journalist that once again I came as a peacemaker with an olive branch in my hand. However, at that time there was no question of this legislation. I really think that it is only personal ambition on the part of Mr. Bennett to start something that dear old Mr. Aberhart was not successful in accomplishing.

I see no other reason, because the province is prosperous. Is it not by reason of the assistance given by the present chartered banks that the Province of British Columbia is so well off today? I would say that it is due, in the first place, to natural resources, and then to the assistance given by the chartered banks to that provincial government. I say that without having any personal knowledge of the dealings of Mr. Bennett with the banks, but that is the only conclusion one could come to when one analyzes the whole matter.

I have heard some most likeable people from the Prairie provinces and the Province of British Columbia say, "Now is the time for us to have our own bank—it will be the Bank of Western Canada." Well, that is a very nice ambition; but would it really help the people of Canada west of the Great Lakes? No. Would it help the people of eastern Canada? No.

The new bank, if you deem it in your wisdom to adopt this legislation, will not be a horn of plenty, any more than the present banks, if it is well administered. When customers go to the bank to make their deposits, they will expect that the bank will be managed along the same lines and according to the same principles of administration as the existing chartered banks. They will not make deposits in the new bank unless they are sure that it is managed in the same manner as existing chartered banks. Is that not also your view, honourable senators? Therefore, what will be the advantage?

At the present time the banks have divided their operations into regions. I know from reading reports of the annual meetings of the banks that for banking purposes Canada is divided into three regions: a western region, a central region, and a maritime region, and in charge of each region is a general manager for the province. Moreover, in the two older provinces—Ontario and Quebec—there is a general manager for each province. I understand that the annual reports of the chartered banks are not always as interesting reading as the latest novel that has been described as a "best seller," but it is important that they be read.

What it is important to check also are the reports that appear monthly or in the Canada Gazette to inform us about the operations of the banks. That information is available to all of us. What I admire is that since the failure of the Home Bank, when I was a young Member of Parliament, I have never heard of a wrong-doing by the banks. The service of the banks is excellent, and I do not see what useful purpose this new bank would serve.

If I were from New Westminster, Vancouver, Nanaimo or anywhere in British Columbia, I would say exactly the same thing as I say now, because all those who are rich and prosperous in the Province of British Columbia, as well as in the other nine provinces of Canada, in large measure owe their affluence to the good and faithful service the chartered banks have rendered them. You know very well that when you wish to speculate you are warned by your bank manager to be careful; and if you want to make a sound investment it is not the broker you have to consult, but you have to go, in the first place, to your personal bank manager and ask him. If you have $500, $1,000 or more to invest, he is the one you have to see. Those men are well-trained, competent and honest, and they serve you well.

Therefore, I pay tribute to them for the good services they have rendered to the Canadian people. It should be appreciated. Those who come under the protection of helping the new Canadians, of helping this one or that one, in preference to those who were born here, play a very dangerous game. It is not right to speak that way. If the banks have done something wrong and if there is some complaint about them, let them say so. If the service rendered by the banks is not satisfactory, let them prove it. Unless they do so, I have no reason to change my mind and I have no reason to vote for this piece of legislation.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I only want to take a few moments, because there have been so many fine speeches made already—for example, by Senators Blois, Cook and White. I want to congratulate them all. I feel uneasy that some of my good old friends, the bankers, would think I was being unjust to them. I also prompted quite a lecture from the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) that reminded me of the early days of the banks, especially before the railroad came in and we were starting up. Another gentleman and I were going to ship some horses. He asked me if I had been to the new bank, and, if so, how I had got along with the manager. I said I had had a little trouble talking to him, but I finally got everything I wanted. He had been to the bank and had been turned down. Referring to the bank manager, he said, "Well, he isn't a very good judge of character!"

The honourable senator from Churchill gave me the same sort of treatment the other day when he said that if a man was of good character he could always do business with a bank. It was other than the general policy as far as I personally was concerned. It would be unjust for me to say anything other than that I was well treated.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If my honourable friend is referring to me, will he tell me when I made those remarks?

Hon. Mr. Horner: When the bill was first introduced and I first opposed it. The senator across the way made no attempt to point out any place that needed banking facilities. As a matter of fact, the honourable senator from Churchill and Senator Pouliot were in the House of Commons when they heard Dr. Motherwell raging about the bank closing in his little town where he paid interest and did business for 50 years. However, they closed that bank. He denounced the head management, and there was a bitter feeling. After all, it is pleasing when a little building goes up in your community, but it is a sad sight when it is dismantled, loaded on a truck and hauled to the country for a hen house. There have been many banks closed in western Canada.

If a man is worthy of credit and can talk well enough, he can get his money. I would go into the bank with a scheme and the banker would tell me many times, "That is not a banking proposition." I paid no attention but would argue that it was, whereas other fellows would take their hats and walk out. I know that in some cases the banker was trying to find out whether they were determined enough, and would be able to make money and return the loan with interest to the bank.

So far as needing new banks is concerned, look at the corners of the streets, they are all occupied now, either by a bank or a trust company doing good business. They will have to create new corners if they wish to create new banks. I think it is a national waste. We had the Weyburn Security Bank start up, and they paid $10,000 to a man so he would refrain from banking for three years. That was just a little prairie village. The last bank is closed up, and there is no bank at all in the place now. However, with increased transportation facilities there are not so many branches needed.

Do we know of any place where banking facilities have been refused? In my experience bank branches will move in to fill the slightest need. With the number of banks we have now the banking business is highly competitive. They are chasing one after the other, looking for new locations. I have heard no complaints about anyone lacking banking facilities in western Canada.

There is money out in western Canada now, but what I am fearful of is what has happened before, where there have been unscrupulous but persuasive salesmen selling foolish men worthless stock; it was simply like taking honey from the bees. Perhaps some of these banks will go broke with a full pocket. It is a dangerous move.

My advice to western Canada and my friends in western Canada is that if they wish to buy, then buy in some of the well-established old banks whose shares are for sale, but do not put a single dollar into any of these new banks, if they should happen to get a charter—and I hope they do not.

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I do not wish to enter into the debate on the pros and cons of whether we should pass this bill or not, but since the Province of Alberta has been mentioned I should like to set the record straight in this regard.

I understood honourable Senator White to refer to the "Provincial Bank of Alberta." There is no provincial bank of Alberta, but there is what is called a Treasury Branch, and it is owned, operated and controlled by the Alberta Government. There are no shares sold, and it operates almost entirely the same as a chartered bank but has no federal charter and does not come under the Bank Act.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: It is a savings bank.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: It is not a bank at all. Its branches are not allowed to use the title "Bank". You can deposit money with them, or you can borrow money from them, the same as a bank, but they do not come under the federal Bank Act. They are not subject to inspections by the Government. They are an entirely provincially-owned and controlled institution.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They do not have a clearing house.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: If the Government of British Columbia wants to start the same sort of institution, they will not have to apply for a charter to do so.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: My honourable friend must remember that some legislation passed by the Alberta Legislature was disallowed.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: In that regard what Aberhart intended to do and tried to do was not to form another bank—he was going to take charge of the present banks.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What he really wanted to do was to try to issue paper money.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: And to force the present banks to accept that money, the same as any other currency. It would have put them out of business.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), for Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford), debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 7:

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 293 to 331, inclusive, which were presented on Monday, May 25.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 281, for the relief of Jeannine Roger Couvrette.

Resolution 282, for the relief of Florence El'nore Anne Friel Stevens.

Resolution 283, for the relief of Hazel Vera Caines Kennedy.

Resolution 284, for the relief of Kurt Sperlich.

Resolution 285, for the relief of Joseph Azarie Rene Major.

Resolution 286, for the relief of Harriet Agnes Hellier Anderson Ainslie.

Resolution 287, for the relief of Margaret Jane O'Brien Dagenais.

Resolution 288, for the relief of Yvonne Alice Wilson Thomas.

Resolution 289, for the relief of Barbara Susan Ship stone.

Resolution 290, for the relief of Fred Cury.

Resolution 291, for the relief of Margaret Jean Coutts Moffatt.

Resolution 292, for the relief of Michael Chabotar.

Resolution 293, for the relief of Antoinette Raymonde Francoise Joseph dit Teyssier Audet dit Lapointe.

Resolution 294, for the relief of Barbara Joan Eversfield Boudrias.

Resolution 295, for the relief of Catherine Eileen Kennedy Tennant.

Resolution 296, for the relief of Frederick Roberts.

Resolution 297, for the relief of Mary Hurley Simmonds.

Resolution 298, for the relief of Jeannine Thauvoye Wiame.

Resolution 299, for the relief of Ruth Ensor Decosse.

Resolution 300, for the relief of Herbert Elliot Siblin.

Resolution 301, for the relief of Roland Malaket.

Resolution 302, for the relief of Nicole Desjardins Kudin.

Resolution 303, for the relief of Joyce Muriel Blight Smith.

Resolution 304, for the relief of Claudette Amyot Gingras.

Resolution 305, for the relief of Iris Lawson McFarlane Land.

Resolution 306, for the relief of Panagiotis Vekos.

Resolution 307, for the relief of Eva Daniel Mack.

Resolution 308, for the relief of Harold Norman MacCallum.

Resolution 309, for the relief of Dorothy Ann Derick Weir.

Resolution 310, for the relief of Mary Cameron Ross Atkinson.

Resolution 311, for the relief of May Sherwood Bishop.

Resolution 312, for the relief of Irene Dorothy Stevens Jones.

Resolution 313, for the relief of Robert John Day.

Resolution 314, for the relief of Carole Irene Leggett Paterson.

Resolution 315, for the relief of Emile Simard.

Resolution 316, for the relief of Richard Price Bradley.

Resolution 317, for the relief of Gertrude Elisabeth Drehmann Sas.

Resolution 318, for the relief of Marie Frances Theurkauf McMahon.

Resolution 319, for the relief of Ludmilla Gorny Chiriaeff.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the second reading of Bill S-27, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I shall be very brief in my remarks concerning this bill. It is a very simple bill, the purpose of which is to increase the number of directors of The Bell Telephone Company of Canada from fifteen to twenty.

At the present time, according to the charter of 1880, the shareholders have the right to elect not less than five and not more than fifteen directors. From time to time the company elected seven, nine, and then ten directors. Since 1927 the number of directors of the company has been fifteen. In each case the election has been made following a resolution of the shareholders.

Permission is now sought to increase this number to twenty, after the shareholders have decided to do so in a regular or special meeting called for that purpose.

When I outline the growth of the company I think this will be considered a step that is long overdue.

In 1888 the number of directors was 10, the number of telephones was 14,000—I am giving round figures—the gross receipts were $585,000, the total assets were $2 million, and the number of shareholders was 50,000.

In 1927, when they went to 15 directors, there were 668,000 telephones; gross revenue was $33 million; the number of employees, 14,000; and the number of shares outstanding, 2.1 million. In 1963, the number of telephones was 4 million; the gross revenue, $502 million; total assets, $2,300 million; number of employees, 35,000; number of shares, 26 million; and number of shareholders, 195,000.

It is felt by the shareholders that the company should now be represented by at least 20 directors, and the shareholders have passed a resolution to that effect.

I can also give some information as to the shareholders. For instance, the shareholders in Ontario number 130,000; in Quebec, 44,000; and in the remainder of Canada, 15,000. The total in Canada is 189,000, which means that practically all the shares are owned by Canadians.

The total number of shares is 26 million, that is after a division made some time ago of four to one. There are 196,000 shareholders; men hold six million shares, and women hold nine million. Small shareholders, holding from one to twenty-five shares, hold 887,000 shares; those with 25 to 99 shares, hold 3,700,000; and from 100 to 499 shares, 9,627,000. Nearly all the shares are held by Canadians, a very small percentage being held by foreign shareholders.

If this bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for further study.

Motion agreed to.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bouffard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

THE QUEBEC BOARD OF TRADE—SECOND READING

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the second reading of Bill S-28, respecting The Quebec Board of Trade.

(Translation):

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, the effect of this bill is to revise the charter of the Quebec Board of Trade.

In the first place, the name must be changed, in order to represent a little better the activities of the Board of Trade which apply to all metropolitan businesses, so that the Quebec Board of Trade will be known under the name of "Chambre de commerce de Québec métropolitain."

This charter was granted by the federal government in 1841. It was amended once in 1845, in order to make it permanent, and once again in 1889, to enable people who had not been residing in Quebec City for two years and who had not been residents of Quebec City for two years to become members of the Board of Trade. Since the 1889 amendment, anyone, even a corporation, can be a member of the Board of Trade.

That board looks after the interests of the Quebec metropolitan area which, as defined by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, includes the neighbouring municipalities of Sillery, Ste. Foy, Giffard, extends eastwards to the Montmorency river and, in the direction of Lévis, includes Lévis, St. Romuald and the neighbouring municipalities which are all in the Quebec metropolitan area.

The powers asked by the charter, which becomes a new act because the others will be repealed, are the usual powers of boards of trade. The title locates the head office. The objects of the corporation are broadly to defend and promote the professional and economic interests of its members, to acquire appropriate office accommodation for its activities, to organize a stock exchange if necessary, to promote uniformity in business transactions, to adjust and determine disputes and, finally, to do all the necessary publicity. It also has the right to purchase and sell any property whatsoever and to acquire new property, if need be. It has the right to enact by-laws for internal management. It has the right to invest its own funds. It determines its membership. Its board of directors must be made up of not less than 18 nor more than 35 members. It has the right to appoint officers as well as employees.

In short, those are the general powers of that corporation which promotes trade and industry in Quebec City and in neighbouring areas.

If this bill is read for the second time, I intend to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce for further study.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. senator what is the exact translation of "Board of Trade".

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The French name will be: "Chambre de Commerce de Québec métropolitain." I do not have a French version of the bill, but I know that the French name will be "Chambre de Commerce de Québec métropolitain."

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Speaker and dear colleagues, the reason why I ask that question is that a senator introduced a bill concerning the Montreal Board of Trade which was translated in French by the words "Bureau de Commerce", an expression I have never heard. Moreover, it seems to me that the designation "Board of Trade" cannot be translated, since there already is a Chamber of Commerce in Montreal which is different from the "Board of Trade". I wonder why the Montreal "Board of Trade" is translated as "Bureau de Commerce" in French, an expression which no one will understand.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The reason is that there already is a Chamber of Commerce and a Board of Trade. Now, they did not want to confuse the two names, because the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce are two altogether different organizations. That is why they tried to find the best name and called it "Le bureau du commerce." I do not say the name is good, but I say it was used because there already was a Board of Trade for purposes other than those of the Chamber of Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: That is quite all right, but it was the first time I saw the expression

"Bureau du commerce", and I imagine that nobody will understand what it means.

Here, honourable colleagues, I wish to point out the fact that in trying to francize certain words to the utmost, errors are committed, and "Board of Trade" should not be translated by "Bureau du Commerce", but we should say "Board of Trade", and everyone who speaks French calls that organization "Board of Trade" rather than "Bureau du Commerce."

I think that a better translation of the bill will add nothing; only confusion would result. That has no relation with this bill, but I wonder why the name "Chambre de Commerce" was not translated by "Chamber of Commerce" which is accepted in ordinary language.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: If there are discussions or suggestions to be made as far as the name is concerned, I am sure that my hon. friend could make them before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and his remarks will be listened to attentively. If it is in order to change the name, that is where the change will be made because, as far as I am concerned, I have no authority to make a translation other than that one. That is the official translation given by the promoters. I am convinced that, in committee, that matter can be discussed and the change made, if necessary.

(Text):

Motion agreed to.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bouffard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand, but I take the liberty of reminding you of what was said at the beginning of this sitting. I would appreciate it very much if Senator Flynn is given the opportunity of discussing this bill as early as possible at the next sitting.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker:

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 2, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 2, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-373, dated March 12, 1964, authorizing the manner in which fishing bounty may be distributed for the year ended March 31, 1964, together with a statement of such payments for the said year, pursuant to section 4 of the Deep Sea Fisheries Act, chapter 61, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the Operations of the Exchange Fund Account for the year ended December 31, 1963, together with the Financial Statement for the said year, pursuant to section 26 of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, chapter 315, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, May 27, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILLS

THE DOMINION OF CANADA GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard presented Bill S-30, respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Leonard presented Bill S-31, respecting The Casualty Company of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 332 to 370, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

GENEVA CONVENTIONS BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-25, respecting the Geneva Conventions, 1949:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-25, respecting the Geneva Conventions, 1949, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR APPROVAL

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, June 4, I will move:

> That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: I take from the notice that there will be a debate on this subject on Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. The intention is that we in this chamber should have a debate on the treaty and the motion for its approval. From talking to a good many honourable senators who have expressed interest in it, I think the treaty should be considered also by the Standing Committee on External Relations.

I should add that the debate may not proceed on Thursday. However, if it is desirable to go ahead with it on Thursday, then at least we will be in a position to do so.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Will the debate in this chamber be concurrent with the debate in the other place, or has it been concluded there?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think after the debate has been concluded in the other place we shall be in a better position to debate the matter here. But we shall cross that bridge when we come to it. It will depend upon how the debate proceeds in the other place. The members there have made an intensive and exhaustive study of the whole matter in committee, but just how long it will be before the debate in the house is concluded no one can prophesy.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is my understanding that the debate in the other place has not yet commenced.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am told there is a possibility of it starting today.

REFUND OF FEES

THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE CANADIAN BRANCH OF THE ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION

Hon. John J. Kinley, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the parliamentary fees paid upon Bill S-5, intituled "An Act respecting The General Council of Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association", be refunded to the petitioners, less printing and translation costs.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. John J. Connolly: Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask if all honourable senators would agree to vary the order of the items on the Order Paper by dealing first with Order No. 5, second reading of Bill C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act. As the second item of business I would ask leave to proceed with Order No. 8, the resumption of the debate on Senator Pouliot's motion.

If honourable senators agree, I would ask the Clerk Assistant to call the items in that order.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. T. A. Crerar moved the second reading of Bill C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is a simple one. It can scarcely be said to have any principle at all.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It is an "unprincipled" bill.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: In the exigencies of fortune, the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act come up for revision this year. If nothing is done the charters of both will expire at the end of this month, and we should then be without banking facilities. I have been told that the Government had intended to proceed earlier with the revision of these acts, but after careful consideration, and apparently with general public agreement, it was decided to postpone this decennial revision of these acts until Members of Parliament and the public generally had had an opportunity to digest the massive report of the Porter Commission on Banking and related subjects. Quite obviously, we already know enough of the contents of that report to understand that it will have a very definite bearing, in its recommendations, on any consideration of a revision of these two statutes.

Consequently, all this simple bill does is extend for one year the revision of the Bank Act and of the Quebec Savings Banks Act, so that an opportunity will be available to those who wish to study further the Porter Commission Report. That is really all there is to this measure. It simply extends for one year the operation of the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

I thought I should give a little information on the matter of these extensions, and it may be of interest to senators, as it was to me. The original Bank Act was passed first in 1871, a few years after the Confederation of the Canadian provinces. It evidently became apparent to the statesmen of those days that the existing banks should be brought under a measure of regulations and have definite statutory authority.

Thereafter the Bank Act was revised every ten years, with one or two exceptions when a general election or something else intervened.

So far as the Quebec Savings Banks are concerned, they are in precisely the same position. The original act affecting them was passed in 1890. The act was repealed and a new act was passed in 1953 or 1954. Many senators who were in the house at that time will remember the discussions which took place then. There were further revisions in 1957. These banks also have no authority after the end of this month.

This bill is simply an extension of the charters for one year, and I cannot see that there could be any exception taken to that. Let me repeat that the reason for the extension is to afford an opportunity not only to members of both houses but to the public generally and to all interested persons to study the recommendations of the Porter Commission and the reasons therefor, in regard to the operations of our banks and related subjects.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, as Senator Crerar has said, there is nothing at all to take any exception to in this bill. If the bill is not passed, it will certainly be most embarrassing. I can see no reason in the world why the bill should not be passed, and every reason why it should.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) spoke of the savings banks in the plural. I know that originally there was only one bank, but is there only one bank involved in this bill now before us?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: All banks are involved.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is what I was going to ask. This bill is with respect to the Quebec Savings Banks—

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: In answer to the question Senator Roebuck was about to ask, may I say that I am Vice-President of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, which is doing business in the Montreal District of Appeal. The other savings bank is the Caisse d'epargne de Quebec. It is doing business in what we call the Quebec District of Appeal. There are only two savings banks in Canada, both in the Province of Quebec, one in Montreal and the other in Quebec City.

Our Montreal Savings Bank is more than 100 years old. Our statute is to a large extent the same as that of the so-called chartered banks. However, the chartered banks engage in commercial operations, which our savings banks are not allowed to do. Otherwise, to a great extent their powers are the same as those of other banks. In the old days there were several savings banks in different parts of Canada, which have since ceased to do business.

I will be glad to answer any questions that might be put concerning our two Quebec savings banks.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have no objection to this bill, but I have a question to put to the Government.

We have received the report of the Porter Commission, both in French and English. They are two bulky books. The printing is beautiful and is done on the choicest paper. The books are well bound, but they are too heavy and are very difficult to handle. Also, the paper is glossy; therefore, the print is very difficult to read, although it has been well done on splendid paper.

My suggestion is that there should be a paperback edition of the Porter Commission report in both languages, so that we can carry it without the need of a special brief case or a trunk. As it is at present, we must put it on a table to read it.

I have made my suggestion, which is a simple one, and I will not repeat it. I know that our leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) who is always willing to help us, will submit that suggestion to whom it may concern. It would not be very expensive, and one presumes everybody would appreciate it.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, it might help if I make a simple reply to the question Senator Roebuck has raised.

Looking at the Bank Act, which is chapter 48 of the Statutes of Canada, 1953-54, section 2 (1)(c) defines the word "bank" as follows:

> "bank" means a bank to which this Act applies;

Section 4 states:

> This Act applies to
>
> (a) each bank enumerated in Schedule A,
>
> (b) an amalgamated bank as specified in subsection (5) of section 100, and does not apply to any other bank.

Schedule A contains the names of the important banks incorporated under the act.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: According to the Orders of the Day, the title of the bill is "An Act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act." Whereas, Bill C-98 gives as the title "An Act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act." So the title in the Orders of the Day is not correct.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The honourable gentleman is quite right.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: May I ask Senator Crerar a question with respect to this particular bill? Will it have any effect on applications for charters now pending before the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: As I understand the question of Senator Cameron, it is this: Will the passage of this bill have any effect on pending applications for bank charters? No, it will not. If, in the good judgment of Parliament, charters are issued for new banks before the Bank Act revision ultimately takes place, they will operate under the existing Bank Act. If they are not issued, of course they do not operate. So I do not think there can be any difficulty on that point at all.

The applications that we have before Parliament for the incorporation of new banks are wholly independent and separate from the proposals in this measure. This is simply to enable the banks to continue in business after the end of this month.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, is it your wish that the bill be referred to committee?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Do I understand that the bill is to be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: For what purpose? There is no desire to do so.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Third reading next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think the bill should go to the Banking and Commerce Committee. I raised a question on a matter of which I was not at all clear, nor am I yet clear as to the whole purpose of the amendments. I would be more satisfied if the bill were reported on by the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I say that we on this side have no objection to the bill going to committee. Senator Roebuck thinks that it should be referred.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, if there is a desire on the part of anyone that the bill should go to a committee, I think it would be more satisfactory to do so. There are not many senators who can explain a bill on second reading and then receive almost unanimous consent that it should not go to a committee, but perhaps Senator Crerar will not mind in these circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: There is no more agreeable mortal on earth than I, when it comes to a matter of this kind. If the bill goes to committee one or two questions will be asked, it will come back for third reading and receive the royal assent.

Honourable senators, in order to terminate this discussion, and to save time, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

An Hon. Senator: On division.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crerar, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, May 19, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act."

(Translation):

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the resolution proposed by Senator Pouliot exemplifies his character, his fighting spirit and his steadfastness of purpose. People know Senator Pouliot especially because of his long political career. It will be forty years next December that he entered Parliament. Throughout that period, he has been sitting continuously in one place or the other. He has been in this Chamber for almost ten years.

However, I think that the other facet of his personality is less well known. Some might be unaware that he has always been a true jurist, and that just a few years after the beginning of his legal career he published a municipal code and compiled a book of parochial statutes. He has always taken an interest in legal problems, as shown by his numerous interventions in this house. I think, once again, that the resolution he has moved stems mainly from his judicial mind. He asks us to urge the government to submit Bill S-16 to the Supreme Court.

Of course that resolution is based on section 55 of the Supreme Court Act which provides that important matters of law or fact touching the interpretation of the British North America Act or the constitutionality or interpretation of any federal or provincial legislation may be referred by the governor in council to the Supreme Court. The resolution is based on that section rather than section 56 which confers to the Supreme Court, according to the Standing Orders of this house or of the other place, the right to consider the constitutionality of a private bill.

I wish to say now that I am in complete agreement with Senator Pouliot in that it is really a public bill. When this resolution was first called, I pointed out that, in my view, it would be easier to consider it after we had examined the bill itself. The mover did not think so. He suggested that the committee to which a similar bill was referred last year, had not given his bill the consideration it deserved. He would prefer to have the whole discussion take place in this house. As the discussion on the resolution progresses, perhaps he will change his mind. In the circumstances however, and since we are now considering the resolution, we must examine the problem from this angle only.

Of course, we cannot but discuss Bill S-16 itself, I agree; but I do not think it is easy to consider Bill S-16 in detail during a general debate as this resolution will have us do.

Bill S-16 deals with the legal status of married women. It could be said, I think, that its object is the emancipation of married women of Quebec or rather that the mover of the bill wishes to emancipate the married women of Quebec. This is the object of the bill, though we should forthwith say that the bill does not apply locally, but nationally, and would affect the legislation in other provinces as well as the law of the province of Quebec in respect of the legal status of married women. But did Senator Pouliot only intend to emancipate the married women of Quebec?

I think that the aim is rather to submit to the Supreme Court, not so much the problem of the legal capacity of married women, but the jurisdictional conflicts which may result from the interpretation of sections 91 and 92 which award, on the one hand, to the central government, that is to the federal parliament, jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce, and, on the other hand, under section 92, to the provinces, jurisdiction with regard to the solemnization of marriage and property as well as civil rights; because, if the mover only wanted to emancipate, if I may say so, or to abolish the state of bondage of married women in the province of Quebec, I might say that the work is already half done, if not entirely finished, now that the Quebec legislature passed its bill No. 16. It is a strange coincidence that the provincial legislature of Quebec should have passed a bill bearing the same number as the legislation which may eventually be submitted to us by Senator Pouliot. That bill has, I think, been read for the third time last Friday in the Legislative Council, where it had been amended to a considerable degree. It was again submitted, as amended, to the legislature last Friday, where it was passed without further amendments.

Obviously, from a strictly legal point of view, the main problem was most definitely the system of joint property in the province of Quebec. It was not possible to tell Quebec married women overnight that their legal status was exactly the same as that of single women regardless of their matrimonial system. At any rate, Bill S-16, which has only to receive royal assent, settles the essential points regarding certain incapacities which were obviously outdated.

Consequently, the purpose of this resolution is to ask the Supreme Court of Canada to determine whether the provisions concerning marriage which were enacted by the provincial legislatures since 1867 are ultra vires and whether the federal government could change such legislation.

In other words, does section 91 of the British North America Act, when conferring to the federal Parliament jurisdiction over marriage and divorce, merely mean that the federal Parliament alone will have jurisdiction to determine the necessary qualifications to contract marriage or does it say more than that?

Senator Pouliot seems to suggest that when marriage is concerned one must necessarily take into account the civil consequences of marriage not only with respect to the wife but also with respect to relations between husband and wife as a consequence of marriage and also with respect to children. All civil consequences of marriage, according to Senator Pouliot, would come under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal Parliament.

Of course, when last year, the bill he introduced on the same subject matter was deferred to the miscellaneous private bills committee of this house, Senator Pouliot clearly stated his position.

Since 1867, the federal parliament was content to pass only one act concerning marriage and divorce which I believe is chapter 176 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What year?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: 1952, the last. We must consider section 129 of the British North America Act which says:

> Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all Laws in force in Canada, Nova > Scotia, or New Brunswick, at the Union, and all Courts of Civil and Criminal Judisdiction, and all legal Commissions, Powers, and Authorities, and all Officers, Judicial, Administrative, and Ministerial, existing therein at the Union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick respectively, as if the Union had not been made; subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,) to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada or by the Legislature of the respective Province, according to the Authority of the Parliament or of that Legislature under this Act.

It could well be said that the federal Parliament was satisfied with the legal provisions then in existence in the provinces and did not want to interfere. As a matter of fact, we quite agree that, if the federal Parliament did not amend, for instance, a provision of the civil code as it stood in 1867, that provision remains valid. Therefore, the problem is to know if the new provisions or the amendments made since 1867 in matters of marriage and divorce or which could affect the civil consequences of marriage are ultra vires, as suggested by Senator Pouliot. Of course, there is the specific case I pointed out, that of the Marriage and Divorce Act, chapter 176, which sets out certain conditions to enter into marriage. In my opinion, that act amended the provisions of the civil code, and may have changed the terms and conditions of some statutes that may have been in force at the time in New Brunswick, Ontario or Nova Scotia, at all events, in the provinces that entered into confederation.

Of course, this is a very important question, but I feel that when one refers to the wording of the British North America Act—the texts I quoted previously—section 91 that says, on the one hand, that the federal parliament has jurisdiction in the field of marriage and divorce, and section 92 that says that the legislature is responsible for the solemnization of marriage and in the sector of civil and property rights—by considering those texts as a whole, one must of necessity come to the conclusion that the federal parliament has jurisdiction only as far as the necessary conditions to get married, and that does not go further.

Hence I draw a first argument from the fact that, if this did go further, why would the marriage solemnization have been taken out of the subject matter if, when the British North America Act deals with marriage, it also means the civil effects of marriage? Why merely take out this minor provision that deals with the solemnization of marriage?

Of course, the second argument is that provincial legislatures have jurisdiction in the field of property and civil rights and that civil consequences of marriage certainly form part of property and civil rights.

This is to say that I do not agree with Senator Pouliot. I have much respect for his opinion, and the more so inasmuch as he had on his side to support him, in 1958, when he referred the problem to the premier of the Province of Quebec, when he was a member of the committee for revision of the Civil Code, none other than the former Chief Justice of Canada, the Right Honourable Thibaudeau Rinfret.

But if there is any difference of opinion between himself and some jurists, on the one hand, and, if I may say so, the body of the present jurists, on the other hand, does this justify referral to the Supreme Court of Bill S-16 which is before us? In my opinion, this is only an academic difference, which would not warrant asking the Supreme Court for a ruling.

I say this would not be justified. First of all, there is no real conflict between the federal government and the provincial governments, because, since 1867, the federal parliament always interpreted section 91, granting it jurisdiction in matters of marriage, as limiting its power to the strict requirements to contract marriage. In fact, such is the position taken by the federal government. Besides, since 1867, the provinces always considered that they had jurisdiction in matters relating to civil consequences of marriage. Then, there is no real conflict at the present time. There can be a theoretical conflict, an academic conflict, but there is no real conflict.

The second point I should like to stress and because of which I think we should reject Senator Pouliot's resolution is that indeed, if there really existed the serious doubt he is suggesting, the Supreme Court, through the years since 1867, would certainly have had an opportunity to make a ruling. In other words, there were all kinds of judicial conflicts of a private nature which would have brought the matter before the Supreme Court. There were some decisions, of course, dealing indirectly with the problem, decisions which Senator Pouliot mentioned himself before the committee that studied his bill last year and which the Law Clerk also mentioned in the opinion he gave at that time. But those are not decisions dealing specifically with the case at issue, that is whether the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament overrides the strict frame of qualifications and conditions required to be able to contract marriage.

In other words, Senator Pouliot brings up a very fine legal point. But when the Quebec Bar or the bar of other provinces, the legal minds of our law schools, the attorneys general of the provinces, the attorney general of Canada, when all those people see no conflict, do not discuss the issue, do not see any real problem, I fail to see why the Senate should want—even though it might be a very agreeable task from a strictly academic and intellectual point of view I am sure—to deal with that matter which might have been brought up in 1958 in the circumstances I mentioned. How could the Senate, today, on the strength of those facts alone, ask the government of Canada to bring the matter before the Supreme Court?

There are many other questions of constitutional law, of real conflict between the federal government and the provinces, which could be dealt with by the Supreme Court, before we ask them for a ruling on a matter which, I repeat, is very interesting for a jurist, very interesting in the perspective under which it was presented to us by Senator Pouliot, but which, as a matter of fact, certainly has not the necessary qualifications to justify the government to ask the Supreme Court for a ruling in the matter.

(Text):

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Dupuis, I move that this debate be adjourned.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable gentleman if Senator Dupuis will be present tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): Senator Dupuis asked me to adjourn the debate for him. Like my honourable friend, I always like to render a service.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 28, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Farris for the second reading of Bill S-20, to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, before commencing I would like to say I am sorry that Senator Farris is not present today, for I would have liked to have told him how able I thought he was in his presentation, and to congratulate him upon it. I listened to him with the greatest of interest, and I must say I was impressed by the adroit way in which he made an excellent case for what I think is a bad bill.

May I say to Senators White, Cook, Lambert and Pouliot that I regret not being in the chamber when they made their excellent speeches. I have read their speeches carefully, and congratulate them most sincerely.

With the opinions expressed by the honourable sponsor of this bill and the four honourable senators who followed him in this debate, the subject has been more than well covered from every conceivable angle. Therefore I am not going to tackle the whole field, but will concentrate on those aspects of the bill that I consider the most important.

All honourable senators will agree, I think, that if a charter is granted to this bank then the bank will be, or could be, controlled by the Government of the Province of British Columbia. As Senator Cook put it, if participation to the extent of 25 per cent as contemplated by the province is not sufficient, then the province can buy more shares if it wishes to assume control. Each provincial government, quite naturally, controls its natural resources, and if it wished to do so it could influence people and corporations who hold timber limits, mineral rights, etcetera, to deal with its bank. Also, those who build roads and bridges, and even those who sell liquor to the provincial liquor board, could, no doubt, be prevailed upon to patronize the bank of the province. Honourable senators will not have to let their imaginations run riot in order to be able to mention many refinements of the gentle art of extortion which a government-controlled bank could put its hand to if it wished.

My dear colleagues, I am not accusing the Premier of the Province of British Columbia, or his government, of having any such intentions. Furthermore, I do not think that the intentions of the honourable gentleman in question should sway us one way or another in our decision. I am thinking simply of the principle involved. If we grant a charter to one province, can we deny a charter to another such applicant? We cannot base our judgment on approval or disapproval of any one provincial leader, for provincial leaders come and go. The Province of Quebec has had four premiers in five years.

Honourable senators, we are called upon to decide now whether or not we will grant ten provincial bank charters, whether or not premiers in the generations to come will control the banks. A charter once granted will not be surrendered in a hurry. I maintain that if we grant these charters then sooner or later a political party will start using the bank as a sort of toll gate. Sooner or later it will undermine public morality. Sooner or later such action will divide Canada into ten little economic camps. Our excellent system of chartered banks, which is the best in the world, would commence dying on the vine, and it would die very quickly if the big provinces followed British Columbia's example.

Honourable senators might be interested to know that the issued and outstanding shares of our seven big chartered banks have a combined market value of about $1,900 million. These shares are owned by our people. They are part of the people's savings. They are owned by our pension funds and insurance companies. If we did anything to shake confidence in these institutions then Canada's economy would suffer. Those who worry about the amount of foreign capital coming into this country would find they had new problems of a more distasteful nature with which to contend.

I am not trying to say that our chartered banks are hothouse flowers that should be protected from competition; far from it. Our chartered banks are able institutions. They are well managed, and they have the respect and support of the public. They can live and thrive with any competition that observes the same rules they do, but, I say they cannot compete with the Crown if the Crown wants to use its vast influence to deprive them of their customers.

In a few words I have tried to prove that we have a great deal to lose if provincial politicians, once granted a bank charter, should use their bank as a sort of fund-raising institution. On the other hand, what have we to gain? If a provincial bank were to act normally, then I point out that that function is already being adequately performed by existing chartered banks. If honourable senators look at page 120 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance they will see that British Columbia has more banks per capita than any other province, and more than twice as many per capita as the United States of America.

The argument that British Columbia should have a bank with its head office in the province does not impress me very much. Let the people of British Columbia put up the money, if they want such a bank, and let it be clearly and simply a bank that can stand on its own feet. By that I mean that such a bank should not be a subsidiary of any company, and should not be controlled by any one person or any small group of persons. It should be a company with its voting shares well distributed, as are the shares of the chartered banks. If such a bank had no connection with a provincial government then I would be glad to support its application for a charter.

In my opinion, there is no body in Canada that is better suited to understand and judge the merits of this bill than this honourable house. We should deal with it firmly. I repeat that I think the principle of this bill is bad. I am going to vote against it, and I ask all honourable senators to do likewise.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate that has taken place on the second reading of this bill. Following the example of some honourable senators, I think I should say at once that I am not a director of any of our chartered banks, although I do happen to be a small shareholder in some of them. I am not aware that my judgment is influenced in any way by that circumstance.

Generally speaking, I do not think I agree with Senator White when he says there is no need for more chartered banks in this country. I think there is quite a field for additional chartered banks, for two reasons. The number of our chartered banks has gone down to so great a degree in the last 30 or 40 years that there are now only eight or nine such banks in operation. A little more competition from new chartered banks will be a desirable thing.

The second reason which strikes me is one which was mentioned by my honourable friend Senator Lambert. It will be a good thing if we get away from the concentration of bank headquarters in the cities of Montreal and Toronto. Under present conditions, with the west developing so rapidly, I, like my honourable friend who has just spoken, would welcome banks which had their head offices in other parts of the country. I am glad to see that of the three applications for new bank charters now before us, one bank proposes to have its head office in Winnipeg and the other two in Vancouver.

As regards Vancouver, I should issue a caveat. The honourable senator who introduced this bill (Hon. Mr. Farris), and who I am sorry is not in his place this afternoon, rather led us to believe that the exhilarating air of British Columbia is such that it has a eupeptic effect upon bank managers there and causes them to grant loans to their customers on inadequate security which we in the effete east would perhaps not do. I suggest that sound banking is sound banking, whatever may be the atmosphere in which the bank manager happens to live. Therefore, I wish to issue that short caveat about the remarks of my honourable friend.

With these preliminary observations, I come to the consideration of the bill that is now before us.

Honourable senators, I am wholeheartedly with those who have spoken in opposition to this bill. I intend to vote against it myself on second reading, largely for the same reasons which they have given and which can be summarized in one short sentence: Banking and politics do not mix.

I do not need to repeat the arguments of my honourable friends, but I wish to emphasize what seems to me a constitutional issue. As we are all aware, banks and banking come within the purview of the federal Parliament, under the British North America Act. A province cannot enter directly into the business of banking. That position has been upheld by our Supreme Court in the case of Mr. Aberhart of Alberta. It seems to me that we are faced here with the position in which we are told that the Government of British Columbia is going to take a 25 per cent share interest in this bank. The proponent of this bill himself admitted in his speech that in normal circumstances a 25 per cent interest is effective control where the other shareholdings are scattered.

Under those circumstances, the attempt of the Province of British Columbia to exercise share control over the new bank is in effect trying to do indirectly what they cannot do directly under the B.N.A. Act.

We were told by the honourable sponsor of the bill about the wishes of the Premier of British Columbia and about the resolution adopted by the Legislature of British Columbia. It was suggested to us that we should take these things into consideration and not object to what the premier and the legislature wished to do. I cannot accept that position. This is a federal matter, and this Parliament has to make a decision in the interests of Canada as a whole. We cannot abdicate our responsibility in favour of the Legislature of British Columbia.

Honourable senators, I wish to remind you that this is not the first time that the Parliament of Canada has had to take action to restrain the Premier of British Columbia from doing something contrary to the interests of Canada as a whole. You will recall that in 1954 the premier proposed to sell to Mr. Henry Kaiser of the United States the right to construct a dam at the outlet of the Arrow Head Lakes on the Columbia River, in British Columbia, to permit Mr. Kaiser to produce a considerable quantity of electric power for a factory he proposed to build.

The objections to that were twofold. First of all, the consideration which the premier was proposing to get from Mr. Henry Kaiser for that enormously valuable privilege was simply derisory.

Secondly, if that scheme had gone through it would have interfered with and perhaps entirely prevented the enormous scheme for the development of the whole Columbia River, which we will have to consider in a few days when we discuss the resolution introduced by my honourable friend the Leader of the Government this afternoon.

The Parliament of Canada had to act in 1955, by passing the International River Improvements Act, which provided that nobody could build any work in any international river flowing from Canada across the border, which affected the flow of that river over the border, without the permission of the Governor General in Council. That was the manner in which the Premier of British Columbia was restrained in 1955.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Might I ask, did he have authority before that act was passed here, or was it not ultra vires even then for the Province of British Columbia to try to give authority to build that dam?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That would be a doubtful point, because the work itself was entirely within the province. The reason the federal Parliament was able to take authority was because it was in an international river and the work was proposing to affect the flow of the river beyond the country. There was no specific statute in existence until the act of 1955 permitting the federal Parliament to act.

I would also remind my honourable friends that this is not the first time that the Government of this country has had to restrain a Social Credit provincial government from attempting to enter the banking business. You will remember the case of Premier Aberhart, of Alberta, in the year 1936. I believe it was referred to by my honourable friend, Senator Pouliot, in the debate on this bill last Thursday. In that case, the government had to act, and it acted, if I remember rightly, in two ways. First, it submitted to the Supreme Court the proposed banking legislation of the Province of Alberta, which the Supreme Court promptly declared to be ultra vires of the province. Secondly, if I remember rightly, it had also to disallow one or more of the pieces of provincial legislation which had been enacted by the Alberta legislature.

In the present case, honourable senators, it is the Senate which is in the front line. My view is this: The statements made by the proposer of this bill (Hon. Mr. Farris) in his opening speech, coupled with the resolution of the Legislature of British Columbia to which he referred us, forces us to face on second reading, fairly and squarely, this question of principle: Should a provincial government be allowed to own the controlling share interest in a federal chartered bank? I personally think that that would be a deplorable principle for us to agree to, for the many reasons which have already been advanced by some of the other speakers in this debate, and particularly by the honourable gentleman who preceded me (Hon. Mr. Beaubien, Bedford). I think we have to face this question fairly and squarely on the second reading of this bill. That is my reason for saying, as I repeat now, what I said at the beginning of my remarks, that I intend to vote against the second reading of this measure, and I can only hope that those of my honourable friends who think like me will do the same.

Hon. Mr. Croll: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Let us assume that we turn down the application for this bank, and we grant the application to the Laurentide Bank, which is located in British Columbia and has its head office there, and the province then proceeds to pick up 25, 30 or 35 per cent of the stock, which would not be very difficult to do, in those circumstances, where would we stand?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: What is the difference in principle? Well, we are not at the moment faced with that question at all. Did my honourable friend happen to attend the last meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee where the Laurentide Bank application was considered?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: According to them, they are going to offer their shares to a very wide circle of the public in such a way that there will be no controlling interest. There is nothing to prevent anybody, I suppose, from attempting to acquire a controlling interest in the shares of any company, but it is a very difficult thing to do with a bank which has a great number of shareholders; and the disadvantage of a province attempting to do that, to my mind, resides precisely in the legal question whether they have the constitutional right to do so—whether some of the other shareholders could not attack them right away if they attempted it.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have not studied this matter with the same great care as have some other senators, but I would like to make my position clear with regard to this and other applications for bank charters. As all honourable senators know, I am a free-trader. As a rule, I am prepared to allow businessmen to do those things which are in their best interests and, therefore, usually in the interest of the public at large. In general, I am not in favour of restrictions imposed from above.

My honourable friends have been talking about the Constitution. It seems to me quite clear that we have a perfect right either to issue a charter or not to issue a charter, as in our good judgment we see fit. Banking, the issue of paper money, and so forth, are within our jurisdiction by virtue of the British North America Act. However, the rights and wrongs of this situation do not rest there. The people of British Columbia, or of any other province, and indeed the legislatures of the provinces, also have certain rights. One is with respect to property and civil rights. If we interfere with the exercise of provincial rights with regard to property and civil rights, we are assuming something far beyond our jurisdiction. Our right is to decide whether we shall issue a charter. The province's right is to say whether the shares of a company within the province, or within Canada, shall or shall not be dealt with in that province by the individuals there, or indeed by the government there. That is not our business. If the government of the Province of British Columbia wishes to buy shares in a bank, that is an exercise of property and civil rights. That is not the incorporation of banks.

Honourable senators, for us to say we will not incorporate a bank because one of the provinces may acquire some of its shares is going far beyond our jurisdiction, and far beyond what is wise on our part in the carrying on of the financial business of this nation. If we were to refuse the incorporation of a bank, say, because a provincial government may acquire some or all of its shares, would that not apply to every other company which we are asked to incorporate?

Recently, someone mentioned the acquiring by the Province of Quebec of a controlling interest in some or all of the power companies of that province. I can imagine all sorts of abuses the Province of Quebec might impose upon the people there because of the power that was acquired by their provincial government in the control of those shares. Indeed, I think I could set up straw men by the dozen and knock them down. Shall we then refuse to incorporate a power company because the province may acquire some or all of its shares, and wrongfully abuse its power, to the injury of the people in that province? Well, hardly.

Moreover, if we are to refuse this charter because of the prospective purchase by the province of shares in the company which we have incorporated, what about the companies that are already incorporated, as my friend Senator Croll has just mentioned? There is no law in Canada that prohibits a provincial government from buying shares in a chartered bank; nor is there any law which prevents a provincial government from buying shares in any company incorporated by the dominion, or by itself. That is a matter of property and civil rights; and for us to interfere would be wrong. If the provincial government abuses its powers acquired by the ownership of shares, that is something for the provincial government to answer to the people of that province, and not to us.

Honourable senators, as I stated, I have not studied this measure in great detail, but I have yet to hear anything that influences me to vote against the granting of this charter. Therefore, I intend to vote to send this bill to a committee of the house for further consideration.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, there are two aspects in my consideration of this proposed bill. First, there is the question of whether or not it is desirable to give charters to responsible people who wish to organize a bank.

Let me say at once, I have no sympathy with the argument that we have now a sufficiency of chartered banks. That is of course a matter of opinion. I should think that our population has increased by several millions since the last charter for a bank was issued. Certainly, the commerce of the country has increased enormously. If that is so, and I believe it is, I cannot see the reason why we should refuse to give a charter to a bank on the bare argument that we have enough banks now. I do not believe in that principle; I believe in the principle of competition.

In so far as this particular application for a charter is concerned, there is a proposal in it that gives me a great deal of concern. I do not like the idea of a province, any province, controlling a bank. I may be wrong—it may be my judgment in this is at fault—but that does not prevent me from saying that I shall vote to send this bill to a committee if we come to a vote in this house upon it. I would justify that vote, in my own judgment, on the ground that we would, I think, be acting unwisely to say to the people who wished to charter this Bank of British Columbia, "We will not even give you a chance to explain your case in committee." That would be very unwise. But that does not affect my attitude to the principle.

Senator Roebuck was quite right a few moments ago in stating it is quite within the power of a province now to get control of a bank, if it wants to do so. The province of Ontario has its Hydro Commission. It has a brood of crown corporations through which it could buy up the shares of an existing bank until it got control of it. I think that would be wholly undesirable too. The Province of Quebec could do it.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Any province could do it.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I would not be too certain the Province of Manitoba could not do it, though it is not nearly as rich in dollars as are Quebec and Ontario.

If this question of keeping a province out of the banking area is to be settled effectively, let us settle it when we come to a revision of the Bank Act—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —and provide in the Bank Act against any province controlling a bank. That can be argued on the ground of general public interest.

In my philosophy of government I have always held the view that the public interest is paramount. I do not care whether it is in labour, agriculture, banking, or anything else. What is best for the majority of the people is the sound principle to apply, and I think it could be argued on the basis of the paramountcy of the public interest that it is unwise in our country today to allow provincial governments to control banks.

I have stated my reasons very briefly, but before registering my vote I simply wanted to state to the house why I propose to vote to send this bill to committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator, does he know that the Province of Ontario now has a provincial bank in which deposits are accepted and on which cheques are drawn?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: It is a savings bank.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, it is a savings bank.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not a chartered bank, but it is a bank.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Hugessen a question, even at the risk of appearing to be the devil's advocate.

It gives me some concern when this chamber, or any other body, is quite willing to grant a charter for a bank, with all the powers which that entails, to a group of private citizens on the one hand, but then will say it is not prepared to grant a charter to a provincial government representing all the people of the province. It seems to me there is a principle here which is rather important and very dangerous. I would like to hear Senator Hugessen's answer to that. My question is: If we are prepared to grant a charter to a group of private citizens, why are we not prepared to grant one to another body representing a larger number of citizens? This question bothers me, and I would like to hear your answer.

However, before you answer, let me say one thing more. By way of the grapevine we hear that an attempt will be made to kill this bill in the Senate. I must just say that were this done, it would be one of the biggest mistakes the Senate ever made. My feeling is we should by all means send this bill to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, lean over backwards to be fair about it, and leave it to the committee to decide. That is my view.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I think I can answer my honourable friend's question by asking him one. Is he in favour of the principle that a province should hold stock control of a federal bank?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: That is not answering my question.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And it is not in issue at this moment.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I would like to hear your answer to my question first.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, it would be expected that those men from British Columbia would sometimes join in the parade. Before I say much about the bill or the premier of the province, may I say I am one of those who believe in fairness, and that the bill should go to committee and that its backers be given an opportunity to be heard. At the moment I am not convinced that I will support the bill. My mind is still fairly open.

There are many things that could be said about the premier of the province of British Columbia. One of the things that still rankles is his taking over the B.C. Electric in one fell swoop, though the year before he had said he had no intention of doing so and gave a pledge. The pledge did not mean much, because the following year he just took it over. Just ask people who lost money in bonds if they would trust him with a bank. As I say, I have an open mind as to how I would vote, but I would propose that the bill be sent to committee for consideration.

The honourable Senator Hugessen mentioned some of the events which have occurred in the past. When the bill on the Columbia River Treaty comes before the Senate I shall have quite a story about the actions of the provincial government and the fact that up until last year Bennett had a cheque in his possession for $120,000, given by Kaiser Aluminum Company, with the promise, I believe, of a million. So far as I know, he never denied this. I think it was only last year he said he had sent it back. The mystery is, why did he keep it all those years? Those who come from British Columbia know about these things, and we are a little afraid of what he might do. As I said, he took over B.C. Electric in one fell swoop, and people who had shares in that company did not get full or fair value for them. So you can understand why those of us who come from British Columbia and who have watched Bennett and his government are somewhat uneasy about giving him control of a bank. Every one here realizes what can happen and does happen with a government that wants something done.

Later, when the bill goes to committee, I may have more to say. However, I think that the Kaiser deal would have been a dastardly one for British Columbia, had the federal Government not stepped in to pass this new hydro bill to take care of the situation. When they came to Ottawa in 1955 half the cabinet was arguing about what they were to do. It was never clear, in my mind at any rate, why he kept that cheque for $120,000 which I think was given to him in his name, and then took over the B.C. Electric in one stroke. Just ask those who had shares in the B.C. Electric if they thought they got a fair deal from the premier of that province.

That is not all. You can realize that those of us who come from British Columbia are very hesitant about giving the premier of that province the control of a bank. I don't have to tell you what it would entail. If you wanted a timber licence or an oil licence or any other kind of concession, they would say, "Well, you had better use the Bank of British Columbia. If you do, you may get the concession you are after." That is one of the dangers I see in a situation where a government takes control of a bank. They would only have to ask, "What bank have you got your money in?" That would be sufficient intimation to people that they should put their money in the Bank of British Columbia. That is what we are afraid of. We do not want the situation to arise where it will be intimated to people seeking contracts of various kinds that they would get greater concessions if they were to do their banking with the Bank of British Columbia.

I am not going to delay the debate any longer, but I would like this bill to go to committee, because at the moment I am not fully satisfied that the Province of British Columbia should get a bank charter.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask a question? Has the Premier of British Columbia, on behalf of the province, received all this money he was supposed to get under the Columbia River deal? He will not be able to get the money for his new Bank of British Columbia until the Columbia River arrangement has been completed.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I know he has not got the money, but he makes everybody believe he has it.

Hon. David A. Croll: My only purpose in rising at this point is to keep the debate open, because if the honourable Senator Beaubien (Provencher) were to move the adjournment now in the name of Senator Farris it would mean the closing of the debate. I do not want to see it closed, and if any senator wants to speak now he is welcome to do so. I have just a few remarks to make on it.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Adjourn it.

Hon. Mr. Croll: May I say a sentence or two before I sit down, because I have a few things on my mind.

I am disturbed about one point, and in mentioning it I am not indicating how I shall vote on the bill. I am troubled about what Senator Cameron said—and we must remember that he is not the only one who has his ear to the grapevine. I think it would be the height of folly to kill this bill in the Senate. If we think in terms of co-operative federalism, and if we want to get on speaking terms with the provinces, then we have got to hear them, and the one mistake we ought not make is to close them off here. Let them get to the committee stage, and let them have their day in court. Give us an opportunity to ask them what are their plans. Let them explain Social Credit to us. Let them tell us what they are going to do. It gives us an opportunity to have a day of enjoyment, as well as being educated along certain lines. Those things are important.

That is all I have to say for the moment.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions, numbered 281 to 319 inclusive, which were presented on Thursday, May 28.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 281, for the relief of Jeannine Roger Couvrette.

Resolution 282, for the relief of Florence El'nore Anne Friel Stevens.

Resolution 283, for the relief of Hazel Vera Caines Kennedy.

Resolution 284, for the relief of Kurt Sperlich.

Resolution 285, for the relief of Joseph Azarie Rene Major.

Resolution 286, for the relief of Harriet Agnes Hellier Anderson Ainslie.

Resolution 287, for the relief of Margaret Jane O'Brien Dagenais.

Resolution 288, for the relief of Yvonne Alice Wilson Thomas.

Resolution 289, for the relief of Barbara Susan Ship Stone.

Resolution 290, for the relief of Fred Cury.

Resolution 291, for the relief of Margaret Jean Coutts Moffatt.

Resolution 292, for the relief of Michael Chabotar.

Resolution 293, for the relief of Antoinette Raymonde Francoise Joseph dit Teyssier Audet dit Lapointe.

Resolution 294, for the relief of Barbara Joan Eversfield Boudrias.

Resolution 295, for the relief of Catherine Eileen Kennedy Tennant.

Resolution 296, for the relief of Frederick Roberts.

Resolution 297, for the relief of Mary Hurley Simmonds.

Resolution 298, for the relief of Jeannine Thauvoye Wiame.

Resolution 299, for the relief of Ruth Ensor Decosse.

Resolution 300, for the relief of Herbert Elliot Siblin.

Resolution 301, for the relief of Roland Malaket.

Resolution 302, for the relief of Nicole Desjardins Kudin.

Resolution 303, for the relief of Joyce Muriel Blight Smith.

Resolution 304, for the relief of Claudette Amyot Gingras.

Resolution 305, for the relief of Iris Lawson McFarlane Land.

Resolution 306, for the relief of Panagiotis Vekos.

Resolution 307, for the relief of Eva Daniel Mack.

Resolution 308, for the relief of Harold Norman McCallum.

Resolution 309, for the relief of Dorothy Ann Derick Weir.

Resolution 310, for the relief of Mary Cameron Ross Atkinson.

Resolution 311, for the relief of May Sherwood Bishop.

Resolution 312, for the relief of Irene Dorothy Stevens Jones.

Resolution 313, for the relief of Robert John Day.

Resolution 314, for the relief of Carole Irene Leggett Paterson.

Resolution 315, for the relief of Emile Simard.

Resolution 316, for the relief of Richard Price Bradley.

Resolution 317, for the relief of Gertrude Elisabeth Drehmann Sas.

Resolution 318, for the relief of Marie Frances Theurkauf McMahon.

Resolution 319, for the relief of Ludmilla Gorny Chiriaeff.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 3, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

WORLD MORTGAGE CORPORATION—FIRST READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard presented Bill S-32, to incorporate World Mortgage Corporation.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the leave of the Senate to move second reading of this bill tomorrow. I do so for the reason that if it does receive second reading tomorrow it can then be considered by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce at its regular meeting next Wednesday. If second reading is delayed until next week the bill cannot be considered by that committee until the following Wednesday, on which day I have to be in Vancouver. So, with the unanimous consent of the Senate, I would move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move this bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Why the hurry? What is so special about it?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move third reading now because if honourable senators have any questions to ask I would like to be here to deal with them.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

SEICHO-NO-IE—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Norman P. Lambert, for Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-23, to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Lambert moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

DEBATE ON MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—OFFICIAL REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to say that I shall make several corrections to my speech as reported in the Debates of the Senate of yesterday. I am not going to indicate what those several corrections are. I merely want to enter a caveat.

GENEVA CONVENTIONS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. A. B. Baird moved the third reading of Bill S-25, respecting the Geneva Conventions, 1949.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Farris for the second reading of Bill S-20, to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, may I defer to honourable Senator Sydney Smith?

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: Honourable senators, I wish to make a brief statement regarding my stand on Bill S-20.

As a representative from British Columbia, I have a particular interest in this bill, but at this time I am not prepared to endorse the bill in principle. I wish to give notice that I intend to support the bill on second reading, for the sole purpose of endeavouring to put it before a committee where the applicants will have an opportunity to convert me, if they can, to the principle of the bill. In the meantime I want to reserve my final decision.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, my remarks on this bill will be brief and they will deal only with one problem, the question which has been referred to by honourable Senator Sydney Smith, namely, the problem that some of us face on the second reading of this bill.

As we are all aware, it is an old rule of parliamentary practice that on second reading we either affirm or deny the principle of a bill. As for myself, I must say that at the moment, and without having heard anything more than the speeches made in this house during the last few days, I am quite convinced that this bill is bad in principle.

Nevertheless, and consequently, I am faced with a problem of conscience, namely, whether or not to vote in favour of second reading.

As a result of that, I was prompted to do some research during the last half hour in regard to this problem of what we are doing if we give second reading to this bill. In other words, I asked myself the question: Am I approving of this bill in principle by voting for second reading? That is the problem I have tried to determine.

I recall the parliamentary experience I had before coming here, which was in the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba. Certainly there, in regard to public bills, we acted on this principle quite sternly. On public bills, if it was deemed that it was not in the public interest that such a bill be passed, then the second reading was the time to deal with it and the bill did not go further.

Nevertheless, I believe there is a distinction to be drawn, particularly in the Senate, in regard to private bills, when we are considering on second reading the principle of such legislation.

I read from May's Parliamentary Practice, Fourteenth Edition, page 496, referring to second reading of a bill—and this refers to the House of Commons:

> The day having been appointed for the second reading, the bill stands upon the notice paper amongst the other orders of the day, and when the day arrives, is called on in its proper turn. The second reading is the most important stage through which the bill is required to pass; for its whole principle is then at issue, and is affirmed or denied by a vote of the House . . .

From that, I go to the Rules of the Senate of Canada, and read Rule 64, which is in these words:

> The principle of a Bill is usually debated at its second reading.

The reason I read that is to indicate that in our own rules this principle I am speaking of is diluted by insertion of the word "usually".

Now I would like to read from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, 1958, at page 351, part of article 482. Honourable senators will note that this refers to a private bill, and that the bill now before us is a private bill.

> The second reading of a private Bill corresponds with the same stage in other Bills, and in agreeing to it the House affirms the general principle, or expediency, of the measure. There is, however, a distinction between the second reading of a public and of a private Bill, which should not be overlooked. A public Bill being founded on reasons of state policy, the House, in agreeing to its second reading, accepts and affirms those reasons; but the expediency of a private Bill, being mainly founded upon allegations of fact, which have not yet been proved, the House, in agreeing to its second reading affirms the principle of the Bill, conditionally, and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee.

Honourable senators, that is all I want to say on this point, because I have frequently been personally bothered by this question as to whether I can conscientiously vote for a bill, the principle of which I do not believe in, on second reading, or whether I should vote against it under those circumstances. In the case of this bill, under the rules as I believe them to be from what I have read, I feel I am justified in voting in favour of second reading without, shall

I say, compromising my conscience. Consequently, the point of the whole matter, as I see it, is that we should allow this bill to go to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce in order to allow the allegations by the mover (Hon. Mr. Farris) to be proved.

The first principle which of course I reject in regard to this bill is that I think it is not in conformity with the Constitution of this country. The second principle I oppose in regard to it is that I believe it is not in the best interests of Canada that the provinces should be granted bank charters.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say on this, but as far as I am concerned, I propose to vote for second reading, not because I am in favour of the bill but because I believe the petitioners and the mover of the bill should have an opportunity to prove their case, both constitutionally and otherwise, before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask my honourable friend a question? What is there in the principle of this bill with which he does not agree? I have read all its sections. I would like to know if the honourable senator can tell me what his objection is to the principle of this bill settting up the bank?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: In answer to my honourable friend's question I would say that, in my judgment at least, until it should be proven to the contrary in committee, it is not in accordance with the Constitution of this country that a province should be authorized by Parliament to become the majority shareholder or have a controlling interest in a chartered bank. That is my first reason.

My second reason is that, as I indicated a moment ago, I think on other grounds it is contrary to public policy that a province should become the owner of a chartered bank. I do not have to say anything further, except simply to remark that I can see tremendous conflicts arising between such a bank and, for instance, the Bank of Canada which is owned and controlled by the people and Government of Canada. That is just one point I would refer to as a practical problem in regard to the proposal of a province becoming the owner of a chartered bank.

There are several other points I have no doubt will be referred to if the debate continues in this house, and certainly if it goes to committee. There are several other reasons why, as a matter of public policy, we should not allow the banking system of this country to be proliferated, I may say, by banks becoming owned by provinces, which would eventually put them into serious conflict, both constitutionally and otherwise, with the federal authority in so far as banking is concerned, and including various other matters related to banking, such as the issuing of currency, the control of credit, and so on. All these and other related problems would likely create dangerous conflicts between the federal and provincial governments of this country.

Those are some reasons which have been enumerated in this house during the course of the debate and which appeal to my mind.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I have a supplementary question, following the concise answer to the first.

I would like to ask the honourable senator where in this bill he finds that any province has any interest in this particular bank? Where, any more than in the case of the Laurentide Bank or the Bank of Western Canada bills, is there any indication in this bill that the bank is going to be controlled by any province? If there is, would he kindly point out the section to me? If he is able to, then I also would be against the principle.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I refer my honourable friend to a bill passed by the Legislature of the Province of British Columbia a few weeks ago wherein the government of the Province of British Columbia was authorized to do certain things; namely, it was authorized to use public funds of that province for the purpose of subscribing to a 25 per cent interest in this proposed bank.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege, and not to take part in this debate.

My honourable friend has raised a question as to whether or not he is at liberty to vote in favour of second reading of this bill because if he does so the authorities that he has read would seem to indicate he has approved the principle of the bill. That is a matter of privilege of us all—and I am not discussing the bill, but only speaking to a point of privilege.

Let me point out that the rules of the Senate and its traditions are for the purpose of facilitating the conduct of the business of the Senate, and not for the purpose of obstructing it. In the authorities that he read, I think it is implied that the principle is presumptive only. It is a presumption, and not a rule, or a fact, or a law, that a favourable vote on second reading approves the principle of the bill. I submit that we are at all times permitted to vote for second reading of a bill without that presumption being held against us, if in doing so we state the purpose of our vote.

The honourable senator has stated that he is not in favour of the bill, but that for some reason he wishes to send it on to a committee. Under these circumstances, the rules do not require an interpretation that he has voted approving the principle of the bill. He has said clearly and publicly that he votes for the reading of the bill for quite another purpose. The rule is a presumption; it is a rebuttable presumption, and my friend has emphatically rebutted it.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I would just like to make an observation in connection with this discussion, aside from the principle of the bill. I am very glad to hear Senator Thorvaldson take the stand he did because if we were not prepared to send this bill to a standing committee, it occurs to me there would be only one other way of doing it which would be fair to the province represented by the petitioners. That would be to consider it in a meeting of the Committee of the Whole.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am very sorry to interrupt the honourable senator, but I think he has already spoken on the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Mr. Speaker, my intervention yesterday was only to ask a question.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I had the adjournment of this debate, but I am glad it finally came back to me. The purpose of my taking the adjournment yesterday was to be able to express the view that I thought this bill should go to committee. From what I have heard today, that is the general impression.

I would point out the pitfalls we can encounter. You will remember that we began with the Bank of Western Canada bill, and certainly I went for it hook, line and sinker. However, when we got into committee we found the cowboys came from Bay Street.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I must admit the picture changed. The honourable senator who introduced the bill gave us all the facts he had in his possession. Then on further questioning we obtained a little different picture than was originally presented. That indicates the importance of having such bills go to committee where we can obtain all the facts which are pertinent.

With respect to the Laurentide Bank bill considerable emphasis was laid on the interests of Power Corporation, and we were very much impressed. When we got into committee we found a letter had been received from that corporation saying they wanted no part of the bill. In the face of those facts we had to assess the situation.

I do not know what new facts will appear in connection with the bill now before us. Senator Hollett's remarks made sense, when he asked where is there any evidence that the Province of British Columbia has anything to do with the bill. There is no such evidence before us, and yet every one of us knows that is so. We know there was a resolution, and we know that the Province of British Columbia has authority to pass such a resolution.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The sponsor said so.

Hon. Mr. Croll: That is so. Once we consider the bill in committee, then we can collect all the pertinent facts. I think that is the importance of sending it to committee. Senator Thorvaldson drew a distinction between a private bill and a public bill. My seatmate (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) agrees with that distinction. That is good enough for me.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, it was not my intention to speak on this bill, but I think there is one point we have perhaps lost sight of; it is that there is not only one but three banking bills before the Senate. In the other two cases we sent both bills to committee and, as Senator Croll has just pointed out, information was gained there which helped us make our decision as to what should be done, possibly, though I am not saying we have made up our minds yet. However, I do think this bill should be given the same treatment as the others, and that it is only right and fair that it should be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The same question, as to whether or not there is need for additional banking facilities, was raised with regard to the other banking bills before the Senate. There is the added objection my good friend Senator Thorvaldson has mentioned about the British Columbia government having control. But we have no definite information on that; it is only supposition and rumour. We in the Senate are not going to base our decisions on suppositions and rumours.

I listened yesterday to the honourable Senator Roebuck while he expressed the opinion that if a bill conforms to the rules and regulations of the Senate, then such a bill should receive our serious consideration and should be sent to a committee. I do not agree altogether with that, because these bills all conform to the regulations. Supposing we had 10, 15, 20 or 25 such bills, all conforming to the regulations, I think the Senate would decide that this country does not need so many bills. That is one of the main questions we have to decide, whether we need more banks in this country, or whether the country is already well served.

I am very pleased indeed that it looks as if this bill will go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. If I had a vote on it at the moment, without having it first considered in that committee, I think I would be against it. But I think it is only right and proper that it should go to that committee, and I am pleased the indications are that it will go there.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: I think my friend quoted me rather too broadly. He certainly gathered from what I said more than I intended. I said the Senate had the right to incorporate or not to incorporate as it saw fit, according to our own good judgment. If we should incorporate a new bank, then it would come under the jurisdiction of the Bank Act. But I made the distinction that when it came to the matter of dealing in the shares of such a bank, if incorporated, this would then come within the scope of civil rights and would not be within our jurisdiction. I did not say we were under an obligation to send all applications to a committee, although I think it would be a very good thing to do so.

Furthermore, in view of the fact that these gentlemen have all paid a very considerable sum when they made their application for a private bill, the least we can do is to give them a chance to speak to it. I did not go quite as far as my friend said.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You went very far. I shall read it again. The revised version is much better.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): If nobody else wants to take part in this debate, may I be permitted to move the adjournment of the debate on behalf of Senator Farris who is unable to be here this week?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator if that is at the request of Senator Farris?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understood Senator Farris would be very happy if this bill were to go to committee after second reading.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): I am doing it at his request.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I say a word? Senator Farris is absent today, and it is possible that there are other senators also absent today who would like to speak to this bill.

An Hon. Senator: But they are not here.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Neither is Senator Farris. Even I might want to say a word or two on it myself.

The Hon. the Speaker: As all honourable senators know, the motion is not debatable. If other honourable senators wish to speak, I am sure that Senator Farris will give them an opportunity to do so before he closes the debate.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): Honourable senators, before I made the motion, I used the words, "if nobody else wants to take part in this debate." Nobody rose to do so, so I stated I was moving the adjournment of the debate on behalf of Senator Farris, because he asked me to do so.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stambaugh:

That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Dupuis).

An Hon. Senator: Stand.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, I wonder when the honourable gentleman will be ready to proceed on this bill. It is the same story as before. I rise on a question of privilege, because there were many postponements at the request of Senator Flynn, who spoke yesterday, and now Senator Dupuis is playing the same game. I am ready to proceed on this bill at this time, and I do not think it is fair to have it postponed from day to day and so prevent the Senate from considering it.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I only asked on one occasion that the order should stand, because I had a reason for doing so. At all other times I was ready to proceed but there was no time available.

Order stands.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES (UNITED NATIONS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 7:

Hon. L. M. Gouin moved the second reading of Bill S-24, to amend the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act.

He said: Honourable senators, first of all I wish to thank the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for having entrusted to me the task of moving the second reading of this bill. In this way I shall be able, in a modest way, to assist him in his parliamentary work which he has carried on so ably and efficiently since the beginning of the session.

It gives me great satisfaction to move the second reading of this bill, which will enable Canada to fulfil its international obligations.

I wish to state very clearly that by the provisions now before us we do not undertake any further international obligations, but we want to be able to honour our signature, which is, by the way, a good old Canadian tradition.

In 1947 we adopted the bill which we are now seeking to amend. If honourable senators will refer to the Senate Hansard of 1947, at pages 520 and 521 you can read the very interesting remarks made by the then excellent chairman of our Committee on External Relations, Senator Norman P. Lambert. That bill of 1947 is now chapter 79 of the statutes of 1947, but it is reproduced in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, as chapter 219.

The original title of the bill was An Act to provide for Privileges and Immunities in respect of the United Nations and Related International Organizations. The purpose of that original bill was to enable Canada to apply the provisions found in the schedule to the original act, which is now the schedule to chapter 219 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. The purpose of that legislation was to enable us to apply the conventions on the privileges and immunities of the United Nations, conventions which had been adopted by the General Assembly on February 13, 1946.

We want now to extend those provisions to some international organizations which are not part of the United Nations, and not what can be called specialized agencies of the United Nations. I will mention some of them in a few minutes. I submit it is quite in order for us to grant to them the privileges I will describe.

The first amendment, in clause 1 of the bill, is to change the long title of chapter 219 of the Revised Statutes, which now reads:

> An Act to provide for Privileges and Immunities in respect of the United Nations and related International Organizations.

I put the accent on "related" because the original act covered only the United Nations, and the organizations that are recognized as part of or affiliated with the United Nations in virtue of Article 63 of the charter of the United Nations. The other organizations cannot come within all four corners of chapter 219 of the Revised Statutes. Now the word "related" is eliminated, and the title is to read:

> An Act to provide for Privileges and Immunities in respect of the United Nations and International Organizations.

Clause 2 of the bill changes the short title of the act to "Privileges and Immunities (International Organizations) Act." In other words the United Nations is included within the meaning of the words "International Organizations". The present short title of the act is too restricted, if we wish the result I shall explain in a few moments.

Clause 3 of the bill is the really important clause, and it brings about two changes. Section 3 of chapter 219 of the Revised Statutes reads:

> (1) For the purposes of this section, the expression "organization" means—

I stop quoting at this point to say that immediately after that beginning of what is a definition we find the words:

> —any specalized agency of which Canada is a member and which is brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with Article 63 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Immediately after the word "means" clause 3(1) of this bill would insert "(a)" so as to make a separate and distict paragraph, followed by the words I have just read from section 3(1). Then another paragraph, designated "(b)", will be added, as follows:

> (b) any international organization of which Canada is a member, the primary purpose of which is the maintenance of international peace or the economic or social well-being of the community of nations.

This second paragraph has the effect of covering organizations which do not come within the provisions of Article 63 of the United Nations Charter. The first paragraph of Article 63 of the Charter reads:

> 1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into agreements with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations. Such agreements shall be subject to approval by the General Assembly.

The second paragraph of Article 63 does not concern us, but Article 57 of the United Nations Charter reads:

> 1. The various specialized agencies, established by intergovernmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

The best example I can give of such specialized agencies is one upon which we all look very favourably, namely, the International Labour Office, which has existed since 1919, and the Peace Treaty after the First World War. After the extinction of the League of Nations it became autonomous, and was affiliated with the United Nations in virtue of Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter, which I have just read.

The new paragraph (b) of section 3 of chapter 219 is very clearly inspired by the wording which we find in the first part of Article 57 of the United Nations Charter. These are international organizations of which Canada is a member, the primary purpose of which is the maintenance of international peace or the economic or social well-being of the community of nations.

There are many such organizations which are not part of the United Nations, such as the International Atomic Energy Agency for Peaceful Purposes. I have no special enthusiasm for atomic energy when used for military purposes, but when it is looked upon as a source of power which can distribute, to what I call the undernourished nations, energy to enable them to irrigate their land, and for other uses, then I think this association to which we belong deserves to enjoy the privileges I shall describe in a few minutes. Its officials and experts should enjoy privileges and immunities. Canada became a member of that agency in 1957, whose head office, by the way, is in New York.

In 1957 we also became a member of the International Bureau of Exhibitions, which has its head office in Paris. That bureau has been mentioned very often recently, especially in view of the fact that a World's Fair is to be held in Montreal in 1967. We have every reason to believe that representatives of that bureau will come to Montreal from time to time, and I submit it would be quite normal to grant to them the privileges and immunities which are granted them by other nations such as Great Britain, the United States and Australia.

In 1961 we became a member of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which, for the sake of brevity, we refer to as O.E.C.D. That organization is quite active in Europe, and through its European members it helps underdeveloped countries. Again, we want Canada to be able to discharge her obligations concerning officials of that organization.

I referred a few moments ago to statutes of some friendly nations that give us a good example. Such statutes, which are similar to the bill we are now discussing, were passed by the United Kingdom in 1950, by the United States in 1945, and by Australia last year. Canada must also offer a good example of international co-operation.

I come now to the last amendment which is before you, on page 2. It deals with section 3(2) of the 1947 act, which is now found in Chapter 219 of our Revised Statutes.

The present section 3(2) has four paragraphs. At present the word "and" appears at the end of paragraph (c). This amendment would mean the transposing of that word to the end of paragraph (d); but it is purely a question of drafting. I will read now verbatim the proposed new paragraph (e):

> such experts performing missions for an organization as may be designated by the Governor in Council shall, to such extent as may be specified in the order, have the privileges and immunities set forth in Article VI of the Convention for experts on missions for the United Nations.

The experts, in a certain sense, are different from officers or officials of one of the international organizations to which I have just referred. The experts are eminent men in engineering or other fields, who are employed temporarily for a special mission. For instance, they may be sent to Canada in connection with the Montreal World's Fair. Suppose it becomes advisable to have an engineering expert to advise on the building of the artificial island in the St. Lawrence River, the purpose of the bill would be to grant that expert the privileges he would enjoy on projects in various countries—in particular the United Kingdom, Australia, and the United States.

The act, as it now reads in Chapter 219, refers only to Article IV and to Article V, of the 1946 convention. The present amendment would also include Article VI of the Convention for experts on missions for the United Nations, and would cover the privileges and immunities as they are mentioned in Article VI of the 1946 Convention. They would be only such privileges and immunities as would be granted by the Governor in Council.

It is intended that these immunities and privileges would not be granted in a wholesale manner to any so-called international organizations. In the past, the case has arisen only for a few international organizations. One is ICAO—the International Civil Aviation Organization—which has premises in Montreal and some representatives who live permanently in Canada.

To some extent we have the same situation in the case of ILO—the International Labour Organization. During the last war, the ILO enjoyed the hospitality of McGill University, and in fact its head office was in Montreal during that time. The ILO still has an office in Montreal, but has returned its head office to the original site at Geneva.

In addition there are some distinguished visitors, representatives of international organizations, who come to Canada to attend congresses or conventions. We have had representatives from UNESCO—the United Nations Educational, Social and Cultural Organization. They were welcomed to Canada when they came and we all hope they will come often. It is an excellent thing that our country be better known, and from a business point of view it is in our interests that Canada should be the place of meeting of such international organizations.

Secondly, I wish to mention some representatives for the Congress on Meteorology which took place in Canada about a year ago. We also have some representatives of the United Nations who came here to discuss questions concerning reduction of taxes. Here we have an organization which has enjoyed some of the privileges I mentioned a few minutes ago.

The immunities to which I referred include the immunity from personal arrest or detention, the immunity from seizure of personal baggage. There is also the immunity from legal process of any kind for the official acts done by a representative of international organizations. There is the inviolability of all papers and documents. There is the question of communication facilities, that they may freely communicate with the international organization in question. There are also some immunities and facilities similar to those of a diplomatic envoy, for their personal baggage. These immunities, or those which the Governor in Council would think it advisable to grant, would be given either to officials, officers or experts of organizations coming within the purview of the provisions I have described. The personal baggage of such persons is not subject to inspection by customs officers and is not subject to customs duty.

As I have explained, these privileges have been granted in the past only in a few cases, and we have no reason to believe that in the future they would be given too freely.

Another organization which deserves mention is FAO—the Food and Agricultural Organization. It is a world body whose purpose is precisely to try to prevent famine and starvation, even hunger and undernourishment, in several parts of the world, the greater majority of human beings being precisely in that unfortunate condition.

Finally, I believe in international co-operation. I believe ardently in human brotherhood. I am convinced that international co-operation is precisely the application of that fine principle of brotherhood which I have mentioned. I am anxious that we continue to give to the whole world the good example we have given in the past as a champion of peace, always ready to co-operate in the promotion of peace and welfare throughout the whole world.

If this bill in due time receives second reading, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations. In that committee, of course, the officers of the department will be present, and they will be in a much better position than I am to answer any questions which honourable senators may wish to ask.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all grateful to the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Gouin) for his full and detailed explanation of the bill amending this act.

In effect, what is proposed here is another extension of the immunity of a large number of persons from the domestic law of this country. This is another step in a long process. I need hardly remind honourable senators that immunities and privileges were first confined to the heads of states, under international law, then extended to ambassadors, then to ministers, and following World War II, were for the first time extended to representatives of an international organization and its related organizations, namely, the United Nations. The extension has been not only to new categories of persons over the years, but within those categories it has kept extending from time to time. That is the reason for one of the specific amendments proposed in the bill by section 3 (1) (e).

Originally, immunity referred only to persons as representatives of a nation. Now immunity is granted to representatives of the United Nations. That immunity has been extended to the officials of the United Nations and its related organizations, as well as to the actual representatives. It was also extended to the UN experts, bringing in a whole new class. So that we have created in effect an international body of civil servants exempt from the laws of various lands.

What has not been explained to me, either in the chamber today or as the result of some inquiries I have made outside, is the vital question as to why these people under section 3 (1) (b) need these immunities and privileges. One of the organizations specifically mentioned in the explanatory notes, for example, is the International Bureau of Exhibitions. I have had some contact with officers, representatives and officials who might come under that designation, and in my experience these are people doing strictly a commercial job. Why they need these extensive immunities and privileges is beyond me. Perhaps this will be explained by the officials when the bill goes to committee.

I am also interested in knowing how far we are going to extend this list of organizations mentioned in the explanatory notes. The honourable Senator Gouin said great caution would be exercised, that it would not be a wholesale—I believe he used that term—expansion. One would certainly hope not. There is nothing in the bill to indicate the basis on which the decision will be made by the Governor in Council as to what organizations are going to be granted these extensive immunities and privileges as enumerated by this Senate bill.

Perhaps it is worth noting, if I may use the senator's words, that three of the immunities are (a) immunity from personal arrest; (b) seizure of personal baggage; (c) immunity from legal process of any kind, in respect to official acts. As I have said, I find it difficult to understand why members of international organizations, such as those coming under the definition in the bill, need this exemption.

Perhaps it may be interesting to note a divergency of meaning between the wording of the bill and the explanatory notes. Section 3(1)(b) extends these immunities and privileges to:

> any international organization of which Canada is a member, the primary purpose of which is the maintenance of international peace or the economic or social well-being of the community of nations.

The explanatory note, in two places, reads, "all those international organizations of which Canada is a member." I submit that the explanatory note is far too wide in its application, because obviously the wording of the bill will rule. However, I think it is important that this has been said in the explanatory note, because it arouses, in me at least, some fear that there may be too wide an extension of the privileges and immunities proposed here.

There is no mention in the amendments or in the bill itself of the method of control. In diplomatic immunity a method of control has been found necessary, and that is the official listing by each nation with its own foreign office of the names of the persons to whom that immunity is to be extended. As I read this bill, there is no such control. I would suggest that this is another matter that might well be discussed in committee because, while it is true, as the honourable senator has said, that this same type of legislation has been introduced in Great Britain and the United States, Great Britain has found it necessary to qualify it in a subsequent act known, I believe, as the International Organizations Restrictions Act, which specifically restricts the power of the Crown to extend these immunities to any nation which does not extend reciprocal immunities and privileges.

The reason I raise that point is the possible legal situation created when any nation gives effect to an international convention, which this act does, because the act itself by section 2 authorizes the Governor in Council to authorize the accession of Canada to the United Nations Convention on Immunities and Privileges, mentioned by Senator Gouin, and which of course is a schedule to the act. When you do that, as some honourable senators know much better than I do, you begin to create rights in international law. I will not go beyond that, because there are divergent views as to what rights are created. However, I suggest that the control feature of this extension of these immunities and privileges might well be considered in committee, and perhaps incorporated in the bill.

Another matter which arises is the status of these organizations that are named by the Governor in Council as coming under this act. Do these organizations themselves obtain the same kind of status that the United Nations obtains in Canada? I think that is an important question, because the amendments in section 3 very definitely relate the status of these new organizations to the status of the United Nations under the convention which is a schedule to the act, and that schedule confers on the United Nations a juridicial personality. Some of these organizations may well claim that because they are linked in paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 3 with the United Nations, they may claim a juridical personality, which I am sure is not the intention of this bill.

In passing, it seems to me that the addition of paragraph (b) to section 3 makes paragraph (a) completely redundant. What has been done here is to say that the expression "organization" means: (a) the United Nations and related organizations; and, (b) any international organization of which Canada is a member and which meets these tests. Of course, (b) would take in the United Nations. Perhaps the reason is to make it clear we have acceded to the convention.

One can think of other problems arising. For instance, Red China might well be a member of an international organization which is important enough to be regarded by the Governor in Council as worthy of these privileges and immunities. We might be in the difficult position of saying: Do we exclude all the members of that organization from these privileges and immunities because Red China is a member; or do we admit them all, including Red China, and put ourselves in the ridiculous position of granting privileges and immunities to nationals of a nation we do not recognize diplomatically?

That is all I have to say on the bill, honourable senators. I am not a member of the External Relations Committee, but it occurred to me it might be of some use to the committee if these points were raised so that they might be taken up with the appropriate officials. I thoroughly agree with the honourable sponsor of the bill that we do have in Canada an obligation to behave well in our international relations, to show that spirit of co-operation leading toward the day when perhaps we as international citizens will all enjoy the privileges and immunities of these privileged persons. I have merely thrown out a few warnings because I think there are some dangers inherent in this continual extension of immunities and privileges to these classes of persons. It is not fully in keeping with the original philosophy and theory of these immunities and privileges which were given only because persons to whom they were given were themselves representatives of a head of a state or a state itself. We are now giving much the same general immunities, if I understand the bill, to these various classes of international officials, as are extended to diplomats.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Which are often abused.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: My honourable friend rightly observes, if I may quote his words, "which are often abused."

I was going to conclude my remarks with that very observation. Perhaps that aspect of it might be covered by the remarks I have already made on the necessity of some kind of control, and perhaps we will be given that information in committee. I do think there should be control, that at least the officials should be named, and that immunity should not be given to them in extenso, merely because they happen to be representing one of these organizations. We should know that each one of these persons is worthy of this grant of immunity, which the rest of us unfortunately do not at the present time enjoy under the laws of our own country.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gouin, bill referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, May 26, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, at this stage of the debate it might be appropriate for me to say a few words about Bill C-96.

In the first place, I conceive it to be a simple bill. It enlarges the Exchequer Court by one judge; it provides for his remuneration in accordance with the scale provided for other judges of that court; and it authorizes the Speaker of the Senate to designate, in consultation with the President of that court, a judge of that court to hear evidence in the matters of parliamentary divorce as the obligation has been passed to this chamber.

Of course, this measure can really be understood only in relation to Chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1963, and it is in fact supplementary to that legislation. I should say, first of all, that for two provinces of this country—namely, Quebec and Newfoundland —divorce is still a matter to be determined and handled by Parliament. In that respect each divorce which Parliament grants is an exception to the general law prevailing in both those provinces which have no specific divorce laws.

Chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1963 gives the Senate sole authority to grant divorces; and the House of Commons, by the passage of that act, divested itself of responsibilities in this field. The act which the Senate performs in respect of these matters, we should remind ourselves, is a legislative one. It is not a judicial act, although there is a judicial step in the process, and that judicial step is incidental, is preliminary to the legislative step which is taken by Parliament. In provinces other than the two I have already mentioned divorce is the result of a judicial act. For these two provinces, and because of the way Parliament deals with it, divorce is a legislative act. It is a step taken in Parliament: it is a step taken by the Senate, for Parliament. But if the Senate has the authority to do this under Chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1963, I think the Senate has the responsibility to ensure that the work is done as efficiently as possible.

Chapter 10 of 1963 also decreed that the evidence in respect of parliamentary divorces should hereafter be heard by a divorce commissioner. As all honourable senators know, this work was formerly done by the members of the Divorce Committee of the Senate.

I pause for a moment to say—and it has been said many times and on many occasions —the work that that committee has done through the years is work of which the Senate and Parliament can be justly proud. It is very difficult and exacting work, but it was always thoroughly done.

Now the change in the method of hearing evidence connected with divorce arose from a number of reasons. The first, I think, was the pile-up of divorce bills in the other place, the blockade that went on there in respect of this area of legislative action, the practical strangulation of Parliament and its work in this field. As a solution, the House of Commons passed the bill which became chapter 10 of the 1963 statutes, divesting itself of responsibility in this area.

However, there are other important reasons for providing that this evidence should be heard by a divorce commissioner rather than requiring members of the Senate to sit and hear it in the divorce committee. First, the increasing number of divorces gave that committee a tremendous amount of work. It must be remembered that in the early days of Parliament in this country there were one, two or three divorce applications a year. In latter years the number of applications have been counted, not in single numbers but in the hundreds. This work placed an undue burden upon senators who had to sit long hours hearing this kind of evidence. As a result of the transfer of this task to the Commissioner, honourable senators are more free to deal with the work of the chamber and of the standing and special committees of the Senate. I think it is no exaggeration to say that honourable senators generally feel they were appointed to this chamber primarily to do that work. Previously the Senate had the responsibility of hearing divorce evidence, and under the chairmanship of the honourable Senator Roebuck, that responsibility was assumed and the duties entailed were discharged excellently.

I think the time has come to provide relief for honourable senators. While the Senate, and the Divorce Committee, have been relieved of the burden of screening this evidence, they would of course want to assure themselves that these hearings were conducted with the utmost competence, and that the reports made upon the evidence were completely reliable. In this field not only must justice be done, but it must also appear to be done. Parliament, the Senate, the Divorce Committee and the public must have confidence in the work done in respect of the hearing of evidence in these cases.

When it comes to a decision on the standard of competence required for this work, and having regard to its legal and judicial nature, it is appropriate that someone skilled and learned in the law should be chosen, because there are technicalities involved, particularly in the application of the rules of evidence, the assessment of evidence given by witnesses, and in the testing of their credibility. These matters often give rise to difficulties. Many members of the Divorce Committee, if not all, were or became skilled in this field.

So, it was considered advisable to select a person who would be worthy of appointment to one of the Superior Courts of the provinces, or to a federal trial court. In the circumstances it was felt that if a person worthy of appointment to the Exchequer Court could be found, such a person would be suitable for the discharge of this kind of responsibility. Personally, I think members of the Divorce Committee and all honourable senators who have met him, feel that Mr. Walsh, the present Commissioner, is such a person.

The legislation now before us is helpful to the Senate in another respect. In an emergency, if the Commisioner is ill or for any reason cannot attend to his duties, the bill allows for the appointment of another member of the Exchequer Court to take his place. In that way the work will continue to be competently done.

My friend Senator Choquette said that this is a step towards the removal of divorce from Parliament and transferring it to the Exchequer Court. This is like a man saying "you cannot get there from here," but a step in any direction may be a step either towards or away from a given objective.

I think we all realize that neither this bill nor Chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1963 take divorce out of Parliament. Parliament still must act in accordance with the requirements of the statutes. And if divorce for the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland is to cease to be granted by Parliament, then only Parliament can so decide; only Parliament can take such a formidable step. I would venture the personal opinion that it is a step unlikely to be taken without a request from the provinces to be affected.

I say too, in passing, that this act does not confer a judgeship upon the present divorce commissioner, because judges are appointed by order in council upon the recommendation of the minister.

Honourable senators, there is nothing devious about this measure, or the other one which is its companion. At all times I have wanted to be frank with respect to this and other measures. This bill is a simple one. It is a consequential measure, in view of other legislation. I think it is a provident bill, one that can help a great deal in the work this chamber performs.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I shall take only a few moments to explain my reluctance to support this bill.

I have nothing to say against the bill that was passed last year creating the post of divorce commissioner. But this bill has only one justification—one that was mentioned by the honourable sponsor (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) —namely, that a member of the Government assured the present commissioner that he would be made a judge of the Exchequer Court. There is nothing very wrong in that, and if the bill was otherwise justified I would not be critical of it.

However, I think it has been clearly shown by Senator Choquette that it is not necessary to appoint the commissioner a judge of the Exchequer Court if the object is simply to assure him security. This can be done without making him a judge. There are other positions in the Senate which do not lack lustre because their appointees are not members of the court, and who, at the same time, are provided with reasonable security.

My second point is that this measure goes against the principle of the division of legislative and judicial powers. The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) has taken great pains to demonstrate that the Senate in dealing with divorces is making legislative and not judicial decisions. I do not like the idea of a judge of the Exchequer Court, or any member of the judiciary, coming under the authority of this chamber or one of its committees. The principle that the judiciary should be completely outside the influence of Parliament is one we have always taken care to preserve.

If this was a bill to give our present divorce commissioner security of tenure of office, then I would approve of it, but I am against the idea that such security cannot be given him otherwise than by appointing him a judge of the Exchequer Court. This is against the principle of the division of legislative and judicial powers.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Roebuck speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, this debate has carried on for so long and so many things have been said, and no one knew that it was to be continued today, that I feel I am not quite ready to speak at the moment. Therefore, with your consent, I would like to move that it be adjourned until tomorrow, when I shall be ready to speak.

However, there is one thing that is large in my mind—perhaps it is the largest of all in my mind—that I can mention to you. I am thinking of the very great kindness with which one honourable senator after the other has referred to me and my committee. I have particularly in mind the remarks of Senator Choquette, those of my friend directly across the chamber, Senator Grosart, and those of my good friend, Senator Pouliot. The honourable Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) made some rather nice references a few moments ago. Many times my committee and I have been grateful for the kindness and understanding we have received from the members of this house.

Senator Choquette, in his opening remarks, hoped that I and others would not take anything personal out of them. All he was asking me at that time, I think, was not to be juvenile. We are able to carry on our debates in this house without unfriendliness resulting, and yet to approach them vigorously and without pulling punches. That is one of the characteristics of this house, that we are more adult than those in some other places. We have reached a degree of maturity in which we can agree or disagree without it affecting the relationships. I would say to Senator Choquette and the others who have spoken that I hope they will extend to me the same latitude and tolerance that was asked of me.

I shall certainly reply in a spirit of humbleness, although in vigorous disagreement with some of the statements already made. That is all I wish to say now because, as I have said, the very great kindness with which the members of this house have viewed thte labours of the Divorce Committee, and their expressions of appreciation over the years, are very large in my mind.

Honourable senators, while I have been chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce for more than ten years, the fact that Senator Aseltine carried this burden for the previous ten years, and did so with the same devotion and attention to detail with which I hope you will credit me, should not be overlooked. As the years go by we are sometimes inclined to forget what people did a long time ago, but I, for one, having acted as chairman for so long, realize what my predecessor did in that regard.

I thank you, and I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Would the honourable senator permit me a question?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Does the honourable senator remember that a few years ago an investigator was prosecuted for perjury?

He was convicted in the first court, but on appeal the conviction was quashed. That is true, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Will the commissioner, as a judge of the Exchequer Court, be able to cause the prosecution, if necessary, of a witness for perjury? Does the honourable senator understand my question?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Honourable senators, I might point out to honourable Senator Vaillancourt that he was away when I raised that point in my speech. I put the question to Senator Roebuck, who answered it partially and who promised to look into it and give us the answer. Is not that correct?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The question of the status of a commissioner, not being a committee of the house, has been open to question in my mind and in the minds of members of the Committee on Divorce ever since he was appointed.

The whole question has been under advisement prior to the time Senator Choquette raised this question. I am not ready right now to answer it fully. I should answer the point raised by Senator Vaillancourt.

The charge against this man was the fabrication of evidence. It was held in the Court of Appeal that the Senate committee was not the kind of court to which the Code referred and therefore the charge was not good as against him and he was discharged. At the next session we amended the Code so that it applies now to a committee of this house.

The question arises now—it has been very largely in my mind for some considerable time and I am taking action in connection with it—as to whether or not the fabrication of evidence, the right to administer an oath, and the effect of misstatements amounting to perjury, come under the Code as it now stands.

I can assure both Senator Choquette and Senator Vaillancourt that the matter is not being overlooked. I think that is as far as I wish to go at the moment.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, debate adjourned.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO STUDY REPORT

The Senate resumed from Monday, May 25, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson:

> That the fifty-fourth Report of the Department of External Affairs, covering the calendar year 1963, laid before the House on February 25th, 1964, pursuant to section 6 of the External Affairs Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Relations for consideration.
>
> That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, while governments of many countries rise and topple, while conflicts explode and subside, all the while the women of this world have been waging their own quiet revolution—and not so quiet revolution—over the years.

What women are fighting for and have largely won are some of the basic twentieth century rights which men take for granted but for which women still have to struggle and strive to achieve success.

This may seem like an old story to women and men in Canada, the United States and Great Britain, but not so in Asia, Africa, Latin America, and even in some parts of Europe where the right to vote, to be elected and to hold public office on equal terms with men is still a far cry.

The question of rights and wrongs between men and women has always been a problem since the time of our first parents, Adam and Eve, and, as is usually the case, the woman was blamed, rightly or wrongly, for that Garden of Eden episode.

All down through the ages other controversial issues have come and gone, but not so with the battle of the sexes, even though that is a battle which neither side can win, for there is too much fraternizing with the enemy. But, to help solve these injustices the United Nations has emerged as woman's best friend. This may sound like a good advertising "gimmick," but in reality it is one of the most honest and truthful compliments that any woman in any part of the world could pay the United Nations.

Since the UN Commission on the Status of Women was set up in 1946, the delegates to this commission have wholeheartedly and persistently used the commission's world-wide influence to endeavour to persuade governments to extend political and other rights to women in countries where they did not already have them.

Canada was elected for the first time to the UN Status of Women Commission in 1958 for a three-year term. I assure you it was quite an important occasion for Canada, and a great honour and privilege for me to have been appointed as the official delegate to this commission, where I was conscious of speaking and voting in the name of the Government of Canada, on behalf of the women of Canada.

A three weeks' session of the commission is held yearly, usually at the United Nations headquarters in New York, or at the Palais des Nations in Geneva. One session was held in Beirut in 1949 and one in March 1960 in Buenos Aires. That was the last one I attended, as Canada's three-year term expired that year.

However, as is the case with all other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, with the exception of the Human Rights and Narcotic Commissions, the Commission on the Status of Women will not meet in 1964. This is due largely to a combination of the increased work placed on the Secretariat by the United Nations Trade Conference, and to the reconstruction of committee rooms now in progress at the UN Headquarters Building in New York.

Therefore, in 1963, in the Eighteenth Session of the General Assembly, Resolution 1921 was adopted, requesting the Economic and Social Council, the commission's parent body, to invite the Commission on the Status of Women to prepare a draft declaration on the elimination of discrimination against women, with a view to its consideration by the General Assembly at its Twentieth Session. Governments of member states and appropriate nongovernmental organizations have been asked to send to the Secretary-General their comments and proposals relating to the principles which might be incorporated in the draft declaration. The drafting of this declaration on the elimination of discrimination against women in all member countries of the United Nations will probably be the major task of the commission for its next session in 1965.

There is a very strong rumour at the United Nations, and seemingly gaining favour with many countries, that since women have obtained voting and major political rights in over 75 countries of the world, it may be that the Status of Women Commission should now be merged with the Human Rights Commission.

It is my understanding that the Government of the United Kingdom is favourable to this suggestion, but I do not know what Canada's policy is on this matter, so at the present time I shall not venture my personal opinion. However, as the Status of Women Commission may eventually be merged with the Human Rights Commission, I deem it my duty to place on record a few of its achievements and its background before they are filed away from our memory into the history books of the United Nations, to gather dust and be forgotten by future generations.

At the San Francisco meeting of the United Nations in 1945, the question was discussed whether women should be segregated to work out their own salvation, or treated as part of the human race. Bertha Lutz, a well-known feminist on the delegation of Brazil, proposed that the status of women in different countries be radically improved and their political rights extended to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms; that a Status of Women Commission be set up by the United Nations to study conditions in member states and to prepare reports with special reference to discrimination and limitations placed upon women on account of their sex. The Brazilian resolution was strongly supported by other Latin American countries and by the majority of other countries.

The United States and the United Kingdom were not too enthusiastic about setting up a special commission on women's rights, believing at the time that it was a retrograde step, that women would achieve equality and settle problems of discrimination far better and more quickly within the framework of the Human Rights Commission.

Many nongovernmental organizations in the so-called "advanced" countries were lukewarm about the value of the commission and its plan of action, and sent in resolutions to the effect that it would be a mistake to have a commission composed only of women. Some suggested that the membership should be made up equally of men and women—whether the intention was to educate the men or to keep the women in order was not too clear.

Be that as it may, the Economic and Social Council, at its first meeting in March 1946, sponsored the setting up of the Status of Women Commission. Its aim is to consider measures for removing discrimination of all kinds against women. Whereas the commission deals particularly with the rights of women, its aim is to foster a real partnership between men and women—husband and wife. It recognizes the family as the natural group unit of society; it believes that the subordinate status of the wife is not conducive to family unity and mutual respect; it believes that the legal equality of husband and wife, and the sharing of authority, prerogatives and responsibilities involved in marriage, are of benefit not only to the status of women, but also to the family as an institution.

A three weeks' session of the commission is held yearly, usually at the United Nations headquarters in New York, or at Le Palais des Nations in Geneva.

The eighteen member states which constitute the membership of the commission are usually represented by women delegates, although there are many men who act as legal advisers. I guess it takes a brave man, or maybe a foolhardy one, to claim he is an authority on women. Perhaps that is why the Status of Women Commission is made up of women delegates from the various countries.

Although Canada has not been a member of the commission since 1960, Canada's permanent mission, either in Geneva or in New York, usually sends an observer to the sessions to follow the procedures and to prepare a report for the Department of External Affairs. When Canada's term expired, we supported Australia's election on the commission. It would be hard to deny that the existence of the commission has not strengthened the fight in every country for full political rights for women. Since its inception over forty countries have granted women voting rights and the right to hold public office; and there are only comparatively few countries where women, as yet, have no voting rights at the national level. Some of these are: Afghanistan, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Libya and Switzerland. Of course the women of Switzerland now vote in elections in three or four cantons. And it seems strange that a country as advanced as Switzerland would still deny the women the right to vote on a national level.

Many of the achievements of the Commission on the Status of Women would never have been possible if left solely to the Human Rights Commission.

There are articles on the agenda of the commission which men would never have touched with a 50-foot telegraph pole, such as bride sale, where abuses exist; the abolition of the ritual operations on girls, especially in African countries, which are degrading to women and are a form of slavery.

It is good news that the Secretary-General of the United Nations, U Thant, following the Resolution (960 XXXVI) concerning slavery, passed at ECOSOC last July, has now appointed a special rapporteur, "Charged with the preparation of an accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date study on the extent to which slavery, the slave trade and practices similar to slavery, still persist." This will, however, not be presented to ECOSOC until 1965.

Then again, only the persistence of the women delegates on the Status of Women Commission, in continually sending back their requests and draft resolutions to ECOSOC, finally got through a Convention on the Political Rights of Women, and a Convention on the Nationality of Married Women. Both these conventions have had a wide effect on women's rights, and the commission's recent effort, the Convention on Minimum Age of Marriage and Consent to Marriage, is already having important legal and social consequences, although it had a rough passage both in ECOSOC and in the General Assembly.

The Status of Women Commission at every session deplores the small number of women serving in official positions on delegations at the General Assembly and on United Nations' commissions, other than the Status of Women Commission. But one cannot blame the United Nations organization for that situation, for there is no democratic means of insuring more women as representative delegates, for it is not individuals, men or women, who are appointed or elected to the General Assembly or to the commissions, but governments, and they have the right to choose their own representatives. The fact that so few women are appointed as representative delegates or alternates only reflects the unequal status of women in the countries that send delegates.

As an example, the total number of women serving in official capacity on the main committees of the 1963 General Assembly was 92, and even then some served on more than one committee. There were 48 official delegates on the six main committees, and 49 alternates.

When I was a representative delegate on the Canadian delegation to the General Assembly in 1957, upon my return to Canada I sent a recommendation to the Minister for External Affairs stating that it added to Canada's prestige to appoint a woman as representative delegate on the Canadian delegation. In that year there were only seven women as representative delegates at the opening of the General Assembly, and last year, if I am not mistaken, there were eight representative delegates. I am not talking about alternate delegates, nor observers or advisers.

The proposed agenda for the 1965 Status of Women Commission will include the following:

1. The implementation of the commission's resolutions;

2. The importance of co-operation from international women's organizaitons;

3. The advancement of women in developing countries;

4. Governments and N.G.O.'s are to contribute reports on types of action to be taken to carry out commission resolutions, beginning with political rights and family law.

5. A new pamphlet on civic and political education of women directed to leaders in this field is being prepared and will be circulated to governments, specalized agencies and N.G.O.'s for comment;

6. The commission will ask UNESCO to seek further information on programs and methods which N.G.O.'s and others have used in combating illiteracy among women;

7. The consideration of economic rights and opportunities for women centered mainly on retirement age and pensions.

With respect to the status of women in private law, the commission at its last session, as requested by the General Assembly, drew up a draft text of the recommendation on consent to marriage, minimum age for marriage and registration of marriages, to parallel the provision in the convention adopted by the General Assembly in 1962. The commission felt that its adoption could exert a moral influence on all member-states, while the convention bound only those which ratified or acceded to it.

I understand that at the 1965 session there will be a discussion on the effects of dissolution of marriage, as well as on the subject of guardianship. This will probably interest the Senate, which is rather deeply involved in the marriage question at the present time.

As regards the minimum age of marriage, consent of the parties to the marriage and the registration of marriages, the more I look into this question the more I am impressed, in fact dismayed, by its complexity. With all the torrent of factual information from many countries, reflecting, as might be expected, wide diversity with respect to marriage laws, one may question, as have many people, on hearing the proposals before the Status of Women Commission, whether ancient laws and customs so deeply rooted in social traditions are possible subjects for international agreements. However, I feel that all efforts must be pursued until some satisfactory instrument can be evolved as a touchstone for marriage laws in all member states of the United Nations.

At the session in Buenos Aires in 1960 the most controversial and most challenging subject on the agenda was the minimum age of marriage. The proposal of a definite age created difficulties for Canada's vote, since the federal Government obviously could not take the matter out of provincial hands, nor, I am sure, would it want to do so. Therefore, I was authorized by the legal division of the Department of External Affairs to support a resolution, rather than a convention.

Here in Canada, the question of marriage laws is one of considerable complexity. Under our federal system the solemnization of marriage, as my honourable colleagues know, is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. The resulting diversity of legislation among the ten provinces and two territories is a veritable microcosm of the wider situation in the world as a whole. However, I firmly believe that already in Canada, as the result of the discussions in the Status of Women Commission, considerable interest has been aroused in the subject, and a good deal of critical thinking is being brought to bear upon the adequacy of our legislation, especially with respect to the minimum age of marriage.

Honourable senators, at the expense of being somewhat tedious, I would like to place on record a statement I made in Buenos Aires, regarding marriage laws in Canada, in compliance with a questionnaire for information requested by the Secretary-General from member states as contained in document 356, and the alternative projects presented in document 353 of the United Nations. I quote excerpts from my statement as I would like to have them included in the Senate Hansard for future reference:

> First, with respect to consent to marriage, as is indicated in the report of the Secretary-General, the various jurisdictions in Canada belong in the category called group 2, in which the consent of both parties is required subject to an age limitation, together with the consent of other persons. In all ten provinces and the two territories as well, a man or a woman who has reached the age of 21 is free to marry without consent of parents or guardians. In one province the requirement is 18 for the prospective bride but not for the bridegroom, and in three provinces parental consent for both parties to marriage is waived at the age of 18. In one province and two territories, marriage at 18 is permissible without consent of parents under circumstances which are laid down in the relevant acts or ordinances. The requirement of the consent of parents or guardians is generally regarded as a salutary check upon immature decision regarding marriage on the part of young people who have not yet reached the years of majority.
>
> It is in the matter of a legal minimum age for marriage that the greatest diversity exists. In the older provinces of eastern Canada no absolute minimum is fixed by statute, although in the absence of a statute, the minima of the Anglo-Saxon common law, 14 for boys and 12 for girls, presumably would apply. In Quebec, the only Canadian province which does not derive its law from the Anglo-Saxon common law, the Civil Code fixes a 14-year minimum for boys and 12 for girls. Ontario has a minimum of 14 years, while in the four western provinces and the territories the minimum legal age for marriage is either 15 or 16 years and is the same for both girls and boys. Where legislation exists to prevent very young marriages, it is not usually a matter of declaring invalid all marriages of persons under a certain age, but control is exercised through the issuing of licences and other provisions concerning a legal marriage ceremony. I might add at this point that statistics show that the proportion of very young marriages in Canada is very, very small.

> But to come to the heart of the matter, first, I must remind you again of the constitutional situation whereby the Canadian provinces have individual and complete jurisdiction over the age of marriage. For that reason therefore, and because of the variations in the minimum age from one province to another, together with the fact that four provinces have no minimum age fixed by statute, I am not in a position to present or vote for any firm recommendation regarding a minimum age.

I am using "I" because this is an excerpt from a statement I made before the Buenos Aires Status of Women Commission.

> However, expressing my own preference, but without commitment for the Government of my country, I must confess that I am personally inclined to a minimum of 16 years. Already this is the minimum legal age of marriage in three Canadian provinces and since, as is noted in the Secretary-General's report, the trend in recent legislation is towards a higher minimum age I feel that the majority of my compatriots would perhaps tend to favour the age of 15 or 16 as an acceptable compromise.

Here may I mention that my colleague Senator Fergusson has also expressed that idea.

> The requirement of the full and free consent of the intending spouses stands beyond dispute. Nor does provision for the registration of marriage present any problems for Canada, because in all parts of the country some form of registry of marriage is required by law. In several instances in Canada it is a Vital Statistics Act rather than a marriage law that sets out the provisions concerning the registration of marriages.
>
> At the same time, of course, one must not lose sight of the very basic importance of registration in protecting the marriage, in particular in safeguarding the position of the wife. I should like therefore to express—> my complete agreement with articles 2 and 3.

—which I did—

Now, as to seminars, it is wholly apparent that the advisory services program has become a very significant part of the work of the Human Rights Division of the United Nations, and surely it has had no more effective expression than in the many seminars it has sponsored on the participation of women in public life in all its phases.

Honourable Senator Fergusson gave a glowing and interesting report on the seminar on "Women in Family Law," held last December 3 to 16, in Bogota, Colombia. She said she was deeply impressed by the calibre of the delegates attending. Her enthusiasm was eloquent testimony of the influence of these seminars on the thinking of the delegates, the peoples, and the governments of the countries participating. I am happy to say, Senator Fergusson, that during my three-year term on the Status of Women Commission I strongly supported seminars, with a preference for regional seminars. I stated that in my opinion more effective and better integrated programs are possible in a regional seminar which brings together women from countries with some similarity of background, while from a financial point of view regional gatherings are also more practicable.

Honourable senators, I am very happy that to date Canada has signed and ratified two international conventions. The first is the United Nations convention on the political rights of women, drafted by the Status of Women Commission and opened for signatures in 1952. The convention had three principal provisions: article 1, the right of women to vote on equal terms with men; article 2, the eligibility of women for election to all publicly elected bodies; and, article 3, the right of women to hold public office and exercise all public functions.

Canada signed this convention in 1952, but only ratified the convention in 1958, thereby officially accepting article 3 of the convention, which is "the right of women to hold public office and exercise all public functions." It is article 3 of the convention that has held back many governments from ratifying the convention.

The United Nations Convention on the nationality of married women was signed by Canada in 1957. Canada was the first country of the Commonwealth to sign. The Canadian Parliament approved the ratification of this convention, as I am sure all of you remember, on July 15, 1959, and it was ratified officially at the United Nations General Assembly on October 21, 1960. It provides that neither marriage nor its dissolution nor the change of nationality by the husband during marriage shall automatically affect the nationality of the wife. Countries that have ratified the UN convention also agree that an alien wife may, at her own request, acquire her husband's nationality, following privileged naturalization procedures. Formerly there were times when women found themselves without a country.

In concluding, may I say that although each country has its own history, its own traditions, its own personality, its own political, economic and social systems, the policies of which are reflected in the votes and statements of the delegates, nevertheless, when you scratch beneath the surface you realize how similar are the interests of women, their objectives and aspirations, their eagerness for information about, and contact with, women from other parts of the world.

The Status of Women Commission provides an outlet for first-hand information. Unlike any other functional commission of the United Nations, there is on this commission a common bond among the delegates, as all are working towards the same goal: full political rights and equal opportunities for the women of the world.

Here, I would like to clarify a point. The women delegates on this commission should not be regarded as militant suffragettes nor a group of frustrated females. On this commission there was general agreement that the age of hunger strikes, indignant protests for women's rights is past; for with women's new found freedom in so many countries, it is possible to evaluate women's responsibilities in an atmosphere calmer than that at the turn of the century.

Any normal woman will agree that the role of wife and mother is a woman's crowning glory. Canadian statistics prove that Canadian women are more interested in marriage than in a career. That is as it should be. But do not forget, all women are not called to the married state. It requires the co-operation of a man to sign a marriage contract and put his name on the dotted line. A woman may say, "I do", but if the man says "I won't", there is just no marriage and a single "unclaimed treasure" is just as free as the air to follow a career. So are widows and women with no family responsibilities.

However, I do not think the women or men of today should scorn or ridicule the suffragettes of yesteryear, for it is very easy for us in our generation to forget the debt of gratitude we owe to the pioneers of women suffrage, who laboured so long, and against such tremendous odds, to give women the measure of equality we possess today. Remember prior to World War I women voted in only three countries: New Zealand, Norway and Finland.

Of course, it is one thing to obtain basic political rights, but it is quite another thing to make the most effective use of those rights once they have been obtained. Mere legislation is not enough—what is needed afterwards is political education to stimulate interest and spread knowledge amongst all women and men, in order to eliminate as soon as humanly possible social and economic discrimination and inequality of the sexes in all civilized countries of the world.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, at this stage in the debate to refer the subject of tourist traffic to committee, I rose to speak, and afterwards I was very bluntly told by one of our colleagues, whose name shall not be mentioned, that my speech was completely unnecessary and that I might very well have dispensed with it. I propose to observe that injunction today in respect of this item.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That was well-deserved applause.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): However, as I understand this is the last speech to be made on this item, I rise only to thank the Chairman of the Committee on External Relations for the work he has done, not only by his contribution to the debate, but for the encouragement he has given to other honourable senators to participate in it. We all realize that there is a great deal of capacity for discussion of foreign affairs among the members of the Senate. A number of senators have been on delegations to various international meetings, and have acquired much experience in the field. This has been borne out by the quality of the speeches which have been made, and in my view this augurs well for the success of the work of this committee this year. I wish the Chairman and its members success in the work they undertake.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I ask that this Order stand until Wednesday next, June 10.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 4, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the number and amount of loans to immigrants made under section 69(1) of the Immigration Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 69(6) of the said act, chapter 325, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

OTTAWA TERMINAL RAILWAY BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-33, to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

NOVA SCOTIA SAVINGS & LOAN COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor presented Bill S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings & Loan Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Isnor moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA —REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-27, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On motion for adjournment:

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, June 8, 1964 at 8 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Can the honourable Leader of the Government give us some idea of the business we might expect next week?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, I will do my best. In addition to a fairly full Order Paper, there are some prospects that the other place may this week finish the approval of the Columbia River Treaty, the Farm Credit Bill—I know honourable senators will think I am dreaming as I go on—the Export Credits Bill and possibly the housing legislation. There is a possibility that one or more of those last three pieces of legislation will reach us early next week.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Could the flag be included in that list?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, I think not. We will be putting out more flags on other occasions.

We have, of course, the notice of motion on our own Order Paper for the approval of the Columbia River Treaty and Protocol, and I would hope that the debate would start in this chamber on Tuesday afternoon next. On Monday evening next we will have some items on the Order Paper which will be left over from today. Perhaps some of these other bills to which I have alluded will reach us from the other place.

I was happy to introduce today a further Government bill for consideration first in this house, to deal with the agreement between the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways with reference to railway relocation in the City of Ottawa, to conform with the requirements of the National Capital Commission. So that there is a good deal on the Order Paper for work next week.

In addition, honourable senators will note from the Minutes of the Proceedings that on Tuesday next, we will have two committees sitting in the morning, and another in the afternoon. Therefore the Senate will be fairly active next week.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I hope the honourable leader is not too optimistic in his projection of business. I would like to ask if it is necessary that the debate on the Columbia River be concluded in the other place before we debate it here.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think not. I think we can go ahead with our consideration of it, as I propose. As the honourable Leader of the Opposition will appreciate, a great deal of preparatory work had to be done for the explanation of the treaty in this house. Perhaps I should announce that the honourable Senator Hugessen has undertaken that work and will be making the explanation. He has agreed to do that on Tuesday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Thank you.

Motion agreed to.

CONVENTION ON DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT AND OCCUPATION

MOTION FOR APPROVAL

Hon. David A. Croll moved, pursuant to notice by Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West):

> That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve of Convention No. 111 concerning discrimination in respect of employment and occupation, which was adopted by the International Labour Conference on the 25th of June, 1958, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: Honourable senators, the convention concerning discrimination in respect of employment and occupation, the text of which has been distributed to honourable senators, was adopted by the International Labour Conference in 1958, and has since been ratified by 43 member countries. Following its approval by Parliament, the Government proposes to ratify the convention.

The purpose of the convention is to promote efforts throughout the world to remove discrimination in employment and occupation, based on grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction, or social origin, and to promote equality of opportunity.

When the convention is ratified its obligations will be—and I quote:

> to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote by methods appropriate to national conditions and practice, equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation with a view of eliminating any discrimination in respect thereof.

After the convention is ratified, a member country must report to the ILO regularly on the manner in which the policy is being observed.

In December of 1958 an opinion was obtained from the Justice Department indicating that the subject matter of this convention is partly within federal and partly within provincial jurisdiction. The obligation imposed by this convention, unlike some other ILO conventions, rests essentially on the federal Government. An ILO committee of experts, which has reviewed this convention, states that it is possible for the federal authorities, in federal states, to give effect to this convention by—and I quote:

> ... declaring a national policy and pursuing it through methods appropriate to existing constitutional practice, i.e. by taking direct legislative or other action, in areas which are within the competence of the federal authorities and by exercising their influence in other areas through educational measures, co-operation by employers' and workers' organizations and other appropriate agencies, as envisaged by the Convention.

In October of 1963 the Prime Minister wrote to each provincial premier a similar letter, to ask confirmation that the provinces were pursuing by methods considered appropriate within the province a policy of promotion of the equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation within the spirit of the convention. In the course of his letter he said—and I quote:

> I am confident you will agree it is important for Canada to support this international effort to remove all forms of discrimination in the field of employment. Ratification of the Convention would confirm a non-discrimination policy practised by the federal and provincial governments. It would be in keeping I feel with desires of Canadians—it would act as a spur to greater efforts to eliminate any discrimination which exists in Canada and it would undoubtedly have a beneficial effect in helping to achieve the same objective to other parts of the world.

Honourable senators will be pleased to learn that the response to the Prime Minister's communication to the provincial premiers was one of full concurrence. The government has received confirmation from all the provinces that they are pursuing policies to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation. Clearly, an anti-discrimination policy has been and is being pursued in Canada at the national and provincial levels.

At the national level, a number of pertinent statutes speak for themselves. The Canada Fair Employment Practices Act has the express purpose of preventing discrimination in employment in industries under federal jurisdiction; and the Fair Wages Order in Council set forth a similar policy regarding work on federal Government contracts. The Female Employees Equal Pay Act, applicable to industries under federal jurisdiction, prohibits differences in rates of pay based solely on the sex of the employee. The National Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Act set forth clearly the principle of nondiscrimination in placement and operation. The federal-provincial agreements under both the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and the Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act contain clauses providing that assistance will be available without discrimination of racial origin or religious views of persons seeking such service.

The Civil Service Act specifically expresses a nondiscrimination policy in public employment, in that provisions authorizing the Civil Service Commission to prescribe qualification state that in so doing they shall not discriminate against any person by reason of race, national origin, colour or religion.

The Canadian Bill of Rights proclaims rights, and then provides that all Canadian statutes shall be construed and applied so as not to infringe on these rights. It says:

> It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely, (b) The right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law.

This is a shield, but the victim of discrimination needs a sword as well, and the sword is legislation that forbids discrimination. Moreover, the Department of Labour undertakes educational measures aimed against discrimination with the advice and co-operation of employers, workers, and other organizations.

The provinces have provided a sword, and they have given leadership to prevent discrimination in employment. Saskatchewan spelled it out first. In 1951 Ontario passed a very similar act, followed in 1953 by Manitoba, in 1955 by Nova Scotia, and in 1956 by New Brunswick and British Columbia.

I remind honourable senators that the Canadian employer, worker and government representatives all played a significant part in the framing of the text of the discrimination convention in the 1958 ILO Conference. The text was developed by a conference committee, the chairman of which was Mr. Arthur H. Brown who was then Deputy Minister of Labour for Canada. The committee was tripartite, and the leader of the workers' group and vice-chairman of the Committee was Mr. Kalem Kaplansky, director of International Affairs for the Canadian Labour Congress. He was thus the principal spokesman for labour at this convention.

In the year 1957, when the conference committee first discussed the proposed convention, Mr. Kaplansky was also Vice-Chairman of the Committee for the workers' group, and the employers' Vice-Chairman was Mr. Allan Campbell, Vice-President in charge of Industrial Relations of Canadian Westinghouse, the Canadian employer delegated to the conference. Thus, you will see Canadian representatives were spokesmen for the workers and employers of the world in framing the convention against discrimination in employment and occupation.

The struggle against discrimination must be a continuing one. The legislation which has been enacted in Canada must be viewed as part of this continuing struggle, and not as evidence of a struggle that has been finally won. The Government of Canada, using all media at its disposal, has conducted a continuing expanding program of educational publicity to assist in removing the attitudes of mind that give rise to acts of discrimination.

Between 1950 and 1960, Parliament and six provincial legislatures passed a Fair Employment Practices Act, prohibiting discrimination in employment on grounds of race, colour, religion and national origin, and two more provinces have acts before them at the present time.

The enactment of these acts is recognition of the widely accepted truth that legislation can and does serve as a potent educational agent. And experience indicates clearly that rarely, if ever, has there been need for resorting to the judicial sanctions provided in the law.

The very enactment of Fair Employment Practices law proclaims that henceforth public policy will be one of employment on merit to the exclusion of such criteria as race, creed and colour.

To most law-abiding citizens, and Canadians on the whole are that, the very declaration of this policy determines their behaviour pattern. Legislation attacks discrimination as such, as the underlying prejudice and by so doing it corrects injustices, and at the same time it weakens chances for a further growth of prejudice.

Too often governments have adopted the attitude that the mere passing of human rights legislation solves the problem. Our task is to make certain that the laws which have been passed will become living, working realities rather than mere pious words.

Let me indicate what I have in mind. In this instance I shall speak of the Province of Ontario, because that is the one I know best, but there are other provinces equally responsive. The Province of Ontario has not permitted its Fair Employment Practices Act to lie dormant. It has appointed a director to its Human Rights Commission, which is part of the Ontario Labour Department, and it has provided him with adequate staff for its implementation and enforcement by educational campaigns; and in March of this year an historic agreement was signed between the Ontario Human Rights Commission and the Association of Professional Placement Agencies and Consultants and its 15 member agencies. In signing the Declaration on Equal Employment Opportunity, the association and its members pledged their co-operation to the advancement of full and equal employment opportunity for all qualified workers irrespective of race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry or place of origin.

Honourable senators may have read yesterday the report concerning an incident where two gentlemen from Florida came to Ontario to transact some business here. They phoned a stenographic agency and asked for a stenographer. The agency made a stenographer available. However, she was a coloured girl and they would not hire her. The matter came to the attention of the Human Rights Commission of Ontario. The result was that these gentlemen not only apologized but they compensated the girl for the time she had lost. This is an indication of how the Human Rights Commission was on the job, and it is well for our friends to the south to know that we are concerned about these matters. That is the kind of enforcement that makes some sense.

Now I think it is well understood that society uses pressures, legal or non-legal, to make its members conform in their conduct. Indeed, one of the roles of law is to operate as an instrument of social control. While the law will be ineffective if it goes counter to the deeply held views of the majority, it can, on the other hand, help to form opinions, and while a discrimination law does not purport to make discriminators love a man of a different race or colour, it does tell them to treat him as they would anyone else.

It is often said that you cannot legislate morality. Well, we legislate hardly anything else. All movements of law reform seek to carry out certain social judgments as to what is fair and just in the conduct of society. Moreover, these laws have worked because they have been in harmony with the thinking of the people. If this country really believes in the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights and the principles of the Canadian Bill of Rights—and I think it does—it will, through its federal and provincial governments support, pass and enforce legislation to put all humans on the same basis in the matter of employment.

Opponents of such a measure often invoke the right of a businessman to deal with whom he wishes. We must ask ourselves this question: Can a member of a race that suffers from discrimination justifiably ask society, through its branches of government, to take steps to protect him from the hurt he suffers through the refusal of persons in business or trade to treat him the same as anyone else? The answer in our country is a thunderous "Yes."

Ratification of this convention does not constitute a declaration that we in Canada are entirely free of the evil of discrimination in employment, but it is an affirmation that the policy of Canada at the federal and provincial levels is directed against discrimination in employment. Ratification will act as a spur to greater efforts towards the elimination of any discrimination that now exists in Canada, and it will demonstrate our support of the international campaign to achieve the same objective in other parts of the world.

The very able and distinguished Minister of Labour will be attending the ILO convention in Geneva on June 17. I hope that the Senate will consider the appropriateness of making it an occasion for him, as well as for us, to advise the convention that Canada has ratified this convention. I ask your support.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Honourable senators, I move that the debate be adjourned.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Before the motion for adjournment of the debate is put, may I ask the honourable Senator Croll a question?

In view of the fact that the motion asks for the approval of the convention, and not approval of ratification, what will be the next step? My information is that this will not be ratification in the usual sense.

Secondly, is it intended to submit this convention for similar approval, which is not ratification, to the provinces?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The provinces have already approved of it by letter. I do not think there is any intention of submitting it for further approval, but I really do not know the mechanics by which this is to be done. Once the motion is passed here it will be considered and passed in the other house.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And then the Government will take action.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes; the Government will then take action by order in council.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: My question is: What will that action be? My information is that it will not be ratification, although that word has been used here several times, and it was also used in the Prime Minister's letter.

May I ask a supplementary question? Will this convention go before the Standing Committee on External Relations?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I suggest that it should, because although this question is not a terribly important one, it is of interest in view of the legal decision some years ago in respect of the "ratification" of ILO agreements.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It was not intended to send it to the committee, and I understand that when it is before the other place it will not be considered by any committee. It is intended that it be dealt with in the house.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Can the honourable senator tell me if any consideration has been given to having the legislatures of the provinces formally approve this convention by way of legislation rather than by sending letters to the federal authority?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The opinion of the experts was that the provincial governments could give that approval, and that was the procedure followed by the Government. There seemed to be no hesitation on the part of the various governments which, in effect, said, "Here is our act. Look at it. We have it on our statute books"; or they said, "We are going to pass similar legislation very shortly."

Hon. Mr. Lambert: This point was raised previously in relation to other matters where approval of the provinces was given in the form of a letter from the attorney general or another member of the government of a province to the federal authority. I have always felt that this approval would be more representative if it was accompanied by formal legislation passed by the respective provinces.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Perhaps the names of those who signed these letters are familiar to honourable senators. A gentleman named Manning signed a letter from the Province of Alberta. A gentleman whose name is Bennett signed the letter from British Columbia. Manitoba's letter is signed by a certain Duff Roblin, and New Brunswick's by Louis J. Robichaud. The letter from the Province of Newfoundland is signed J. R. Smallwood, and the one from the Province of Nova Scotia is signed Robert L. Stanfield. Ontario's is signed John P. Robarts; Prince Edward Island's is by Premier Shaw; and Saskatchewan's—this was before the election, and I must say it is a long letter, well put together—is by Mr. Lloyd.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Would the honourable senator read one of those letters so that we may see whether in effect approval is given to the convention, or whether it is a mere statement that the province is in general abiding by the principles of the convention?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am sorry, I overlooked the letter from Quebec. It is in French, and is signed by Mr. Lesage.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Perhaps the honourable senator would read that letter in French.

Hon. Mr. Croll: He approved.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Would the honourable senator read the Prime Minister's letter?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I did give honourable senators the pertinent parts of the Prime Minister's letter.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: In order to keep it non-political, would the honourable senator read the letter from Newfoundland?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes.

> —I wish to assure you of Newfoundland's strong support of the position you propose to take and announce.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Do they promise legislative action to give effect to their approval? Have they said they will pass laws?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Six of them have already passed laws, and the others say they observe these laws. I have here a letter written by the federal Minister of Labour to the Minister of Labour of Alberta, in which, in discussing this matter, he says:

> You and your Premier will I think, be pleased to learn that we have now received confirmation from each of the provinces that they are pursuing policies to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Pursuing policies, surely, is something different from having laws to enforce these rights.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The honourable senator will appreciate that we cannot tell the provinces how to conduct their business. They say they agree with the principles and that they will carry them out, or are pursuing policies to that effect. Six provinces have passed laws. The others are considering the matter and will, in due time, I presume, pass laws. They thoroughly agree with the convention. What more is there to say?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I would like to ask Senator Croll two questions. First, are the terms of the convention of general application, or are they limited to admonitions to governing authorities, wherever they may be and whoever they are? Second, are there any sanctions proposed for violation of the terms of the convention?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not think there are any sanctions. I think they are of general application.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would it not be advisable to have the matter discussed in committee?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Are there any sanctions proposed for violations?

Hon. Mr. Croll: There are no sanctions as such.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Then it is simply a pious hope that it may do some good. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is far more than a pious hope. I have said that six provinces have laws upon the statute books which they are enforcing, and I have given you an example of one that came to my attention the other day; and two other provinces are considering laws and are likely to deal with them in the near future. What more?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If these discriminations continue, as they probably will, what can be done about it? What is proposed to be done about it?

Hon. Mr. Croll: There are sanctions in the law, in the Fair Employment Practices Act. There are no sanctions in the ILO convention, but the laws that are passed by the provinces have sanctions in them.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Does my honourable friend expect that these discriminations, which we all deplore, will cease when this convention is passed?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Well, they ceased in Canada to some extent back in 1950. And if the law is passed, is not that an expression of opinion to the world generally?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: In view of the fact that there are answers to some of these very important questions that have been raised regarding the effect of approval or nonapproval by the provinces, and the question of sanctions, I wonder if the honourable Leader of the Government would consider sending this matter to the Standing Committee on External Relations so that we could have the answers that I know are available to these important questions.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Senator Hnatyshyn has moved the adjournment of the debate. When this debate is concluded we can certainly decide that point. If the Senate desires that this motion should be referred to the Committee on External Relations, that can be done, most assuredly.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

SEICHO-NO-IE—THIRD READING

Hon. David A. Croll moved the third reading of Bill S-23, to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it is not my expectation to take very long in closing the debate. I have already spoken once on this subject. However, there are some things I would like to say.

I am sure you will not expect me to answer all the points raised. The debate has been a lengthy one, but the bill under discussion is a very simple one. I am rather inclined to think that if some of those who drafted the bill had been listening to some of our debate, they would hardly have recognized the child of their own creation. However, there is an old saying, "Tall oaks from little acorns grow."

In discussing a short bill of this kind it serves a useful purpose sometimes to read the bill.

Many years ago I used to know the illustrator of Mark Twain's famous book A Yankee at King Arthur's Court. His name was Dan Beard. He once told me about the interview he had with Mark Twain—Mr. Clemens—when he was commissioned to illustrate the book.

After he had finished the details as to how much and so on, Mark Twain said to him, in that manner so familiar a generation ago: "You know, I am not going to tell you how to illustrate this book; when someone wants me to write a story and tells me he wants such-and-such a hero and that the heroine is to be so-and-so and do such-and-such, I tell him, 'you do not want a storywriter, what you need is a stenographer.' But there is one stipulation which I ought to insist on: before you illustrate this book of mine, I think you ought to read it."

It would be well to remember the admonition of Mark Twain: when we are discussing a bill, it is just as well sometimes to read it.

Honourable senators, do not take any offence when I say this, because it is not aimed at anyone in particular. It is a good idea, in discussing a bill of this kind, to remember that a lively imagination is not a qualification for the interpretation of statutes. If you stick absolutely to the text of the measure that is under discussion, usually it is a short discussion and an intelligent one; but if you wander abroad, all sorts of ghosts may be raised, and "the Gobble-uns'll git you ef you don't watch out."

Honourable senators, let me read this bill. This is not the first time I have done it, but let me go over it again, so as to keep the discussion on the rails. The first clause says that six puisne judges are to be provided for, each at $21,000. Clause 2 says:

> Subsection (1) of section 4 of the Exchequer Court Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
>
> 4. (1) The Exchequer Court shall consist of the President and six Puisne Judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

Now we have made a place for another judge in the Exchequer Court and, as the intimation has been given us that our Commissioner shall be appointed to that vacancy, a further section is necessary. It is this:

> 3. The Exchequer Court Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 6 thereof, the following section:
>
> 6A. A judge of the Court designated by the Speaker of the Senate for the purpose of this section after consultation with the President of the Court, if he is granted leave of absence for such purpose by the Governor in Council from his duties as a judge of the Court, has and may exercise and perform all of the powers, duties and functions of the officer of the Senate referred to in section 3 of the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

Now I call attention to the fact that the person who will be designated is on leave of absence from his duty as a judge. He is no longer acting as a judge. I call attention to the absolutely plain words of the act. His duties are to perform "all of the powers, duties and functions of the officer of the Senate referred to in section 3 of the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act." In the plain wording of the act itself, he is not to act as a judge; he is to act as our official, appointed by the Senate under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

Out of that very simple enactment, I have noticed that others than myself have been able to imagine that the Commissioner's proceedings have become a court of law. How one can logically draw that conclusion is beyond me, but that seems to be in the air, and also that the act removes the Commissioner from his functions under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act and places him under the Exchequer Court Act.

Having, during the course of our debate, got that far away from the act itself—that far down the road to St. Ives—Senator Choquette was able to quote me against myself in what I said in the debate on Senator Aseltine's bill in 1956. That bill, plainly on the very face of it, was a transfer of jurisdiction from the Senate of Canada to the Exchequer Court; and I said that if we were to constitute a court to hear divorce cases I would not choose the Exchequer Court. I said that I would be much more in favour of the ordinary courts where the cause of the litigation arose, where the witnesses and the parties and the lawyers resided, and where the case could be much more conveniently heard.

Honourable senators, I am still of that opinion. I also said that I was not prepared to force a divorce court on any province that was opposed to it. I am still of that opinion. However, I do not see what relevancy that has to this bill before us.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask a question of the honourable senator? If you do not see the relevancy, I ask you this: If a judge is taken from the Exchequer Court, do you think that the fact that you have him sit as a commissioner will make him more competent now than you thought he was in 1956?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think the situation is completely different from the transfer of our jurisdiction to the Exchequer Court; that taking a judge on leave and allowing him to act as our official in carrying out the legal responsibilities of our act, is a totally different thing. He might be the same man, but it is a different court. It is not a court at all, as far as we are concerned, except in general terminology; it is not a court of law such as is the Exchequer Court.

Since my friend would like to go into that situation, let me say that I have never thoroughly understood the reason the Province of Quebec is so determined against transferring this jurisdiction to a court. It has been explained to me that what is required is an individual act of Parliament, rather than a general law. I cannot see all the fine distinctions. However, I do see this, that the Province of Quebec does not desire these cases to be tried in a court, and does desire to leave them in our jurisdiction. I am ready to bow to that wish. That is what we are doing now. At this time, however, all that is not pertinent, because this act does not transfer any jurisdiction whatsoever to the Exchequer Court. I might ask, why read something into an act that is not there? Why set up straw men, and then perhaps get the idea abroad that the "Gobble-uns'll git you ef you don't watch out?"

Equally irrelevant, I suggest, was the quotation by my friend Senator Pouliot from remarks I made on February 3, 1960. At that time I said that when the leaders of opinion in the Province of Quebec desire a divorce court, I was prepared to co-operate, but until then I did not propose to coerce the province by forcing upon it a court which it did not desire. Note, honourable senators, I said, "leaders of opinion" in the Province of Quebec. I did not say the government of the Province of Quebec.

Senator Grosart wanted my assurance that the federal Government had consulted the Government of Quebec, and that Government of Quebec had approved this Bill C-96. I can give no such assurance. This Parliament, honourable senators, is not subservient to the Government of Quebec. We represent the people of Quebec in nearly, if not exactly, the same way as does the government of Quebec itself. We represent those who have elected representatives to our Parliament, just as does the provincial Government of Quebec. We have our responsibilities to them directly, not through the Government of Quebec, but directly to the electors and the people of that province. When there is some real attempt to constitute a divorce court, I for one will be prepared to consult the leaders of opinion in the Province of Quebec and do my best to follow their wishes in this matter. I will not take dictation from the Government of Quebec.

Once again, honourable senators, all that is irrelevant to this act, because there is no transferring of jurisdiction.

It has been suggested, perhaps not in these words, that some evilly-disposed persons are scheming to deprive the Senate of jurisdiction in divorce, just as they also wish to take from us our jurisdiction in money bills, so that when the Senate has had all its teeth pulled, then the argument that the Senate be abolished will have more force. Well, the Senate has had enemies since its constitution in 1867, and I am not much interested at the moment in reading the minds of the schemers in that regard, because such suspicions, while they may be perfectly correct, are not relevant at this moment, in my judgment, for no powers are being taken away from the Senate by this bill. This bill is in pursuance of the powers given to the Senate, not in derogation of the powers the Senate already possesses.

The argument we have heard seems to me to be something like this: to permit a judge on leave from the Exchequer Court to function under the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act is tantamount or will lead to a transfer of jurisdiction from the Senate to the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court. That is where I think imagination comes in.

Let me point out that some years ago the Exchequer Court Act was amended to permit a judge on leave from that court to function under the Railway Act as Chief Commissioner of the Board of Transport Commissioners. So far as I know, nothing terrible has happened, and it has not resulted in the placing of the railroads of Canada under the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court. I submit there is no more reason to suppose that a judge on leave from the Exchequer Court handling some of our business is going to take jurisdiction from us and give it to that court, than that the Exchequer Court would take jurisdiction over railways from the Board of Transport Commissioners. I see very little difference between the one and the other. The wording of these two acts in that regard is almost the same.

Senator Grosart questioned our right to overrule the Commissioner under the bill of last session. Honourable senators, there is not the slightest suggestion in that bill that the Senate is made a puppet of our own official. Indeed, the bill that came to us in the first instance had that feature sticking out like a sore thumb, and largely as a result of the leadership given us at the time by Senator Power we knocked that provision out of the bill and sent it back to the House of Commons, and they accepted our amendment. At the present moment there is not the slightest suggestion, either in the way we have been handling the cases to date or in the plain reading of the bill, or any implications that may be taken from the bill, that we are subject in our decisions with regard to divorce to the advice, report, dictates, or what-have-you, of our own official. I say to you: why raise doubts where none exist?

This is a very simple measure, honourable senators, and it is purely administrative in character. It is designed to carry out the Government's bargain with the Commissioner which, as I said previously, does not bind us, but it is a factor; it is a circumstance. If we wish to treat our Commissioner decently and properly it is surely a circumstance for us to observe.

This bill is, after all, a small matter and has none of the sinister implications that have been raised in the course of our debate. Should a bill come before this house at some future time to transfer the jurisdiction of the Senate in divorce to a court of law, there will be no doubt about where I stand on the subject. My position was made amply clear, not once but a number of times. The most prominent was in the debate on Senator Aseltine's bill in 1956.

As honourable senators know, this work of divorce came to us as the result of a compromise reached in 1867, when the majority, in their wisdom, tolerance and decency, recognized the rights of a minority. The majority were opposed to a divorce court, but were satisfied to allow the Parliament of Canada to exercise the jurisdiction in divorce of all parliaments under the British system, and thus they harmonized what would otherwise have been a very difficult situation. While the burden of this divorce work has grown greatly over the years, I submit the Senate has discharged its responsibility industriously, meticulously, judiciously and successfully. We accepted the responsibility; we carried it out for years; and I have always felt that in the service I personally rendered I was helping to carry on the understanding of Confederation, and in that way I was assisting to preserve the unity of our country.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We accepted that responsibility in the past, we accept it now, and we are going to continue to perform our duties as far as we can. We accepted the change in the act of last session because the situation forced something upon us due to the utter incapacity of the other house to carry out its responsibilities. If we were to carry on the understanding of Confederation, it was necessary for us to let the Commons get out of the act, and we did so. In that way we are still carrying on the understandings of those days and are preserving Quebec's right to parliamentary divorce. Each divorce is an act of this section of Parliament in each individual case, and not a general act.

Now I am prepared to continue to discharge this obligation, and so are the other members of my committee. I do wish the other members of this house could see what is going on with regard to divorce. The cases are being heard by the Commissioner. His reports are presented to us and, wherever we think it necessary, a transcript of the evidence. These documents are read by the members of the committee. We meet in session, and in each case we have before us the motion by those who have read the details. If a particular point arises, we discuss it and in suitable cases finally come to the determination of advising this house to pass the measure. It is not a mere formality; it is a task properly, industriously and responsibly performed.

This bill is not important and there are no sinister implications. It is just an arrangement. Perhaps a better one might have been made, but this is the one that was made, whereby the services of a very capable lawyer were obtained for this job, on the understanding that he would have the same status, salary, and security of tenure of office as a judge. That is just administrative and nothing else. It does not touch any of the principles involved.

So, I ask my fellow senators to view it in that light. When the time comes to defend the principles which I have discussed, they know where I stand and I know where they stand, and I am pretty sure I know where the Senate will stand. We shall do our duty and we shall not override the religious principles, desires or rights of the people of any province.

Honourable senators, I ask you to pass this bill.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, when Senator Roebuck rose to speak this afternoon the Speaker did not announce that it would have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes; he did when I began my speech yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Then, might I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Certainly; that does not prevent you from asking a question.

Hon. Mr. Horner: The Commissioner has sole authority. You will remember that in our committee meetings we sometimes remitted the costs of a divorce in a needy case. Now the Commissioner will have sole authority.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, senator.

Hon. Mr. Horner: He will see the parties and have a chance to judge. I do not wish to serve in any capacity on the committee any longer.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The Commissioner sees the parties and makes his recommendation. It comes to us and we make the decision. I am not going to go into an argument as to whether we were not better off before the act was passed. That is not relevant to this bill. I quite agree with my friend from Blaine Lake that we were doing a good job, and we should have been left alone to do it as we had done it in the past. There is no disagreement among us on that.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I do not believe a divorce granted this way is legal anyway.

The Hon the Acting Speaker (Hon. A. L. Beaubien): It is moved by honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by honourable Senator Kinley, that this bill be now read a second time. Is it your pleasure, Honourable Senators, to adopt the motion.

Hon. Mr. Horner: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable Senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the bill will be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 332 to 370, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, June 2.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted, on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 320, for the relief of Ruby Emma Clough Davies.

Resolution 321, for the relief of Mary Louise Hooper Buchanan.

Resolution 322, for the relief of Brigitta Hoess Knauth.

Resolution 323, for the relief of Anna Sophie Johanna Dora Winter Hoppe.

Resolution 324, for the relief of Eileen Patricia Sullivan Johnston.

Resolution 325, for the relief of Barbara Newlove Broadbent.

Resolution 326, for the relief of Giovanna (Joan) Salvatore Garley.

Resolution 327, for the relief of Paul Harrison.

Resolution 328, for the relief of Joan Geering Stockloser.

Resolution 329, for the relief of Claire Limoges Cyr.

Resolution 330, for the relief of Evelyn Shirley Borenstein Silverman.

Resolution 331, for the relief of Georgette Patricia Marie Drummond Haugwitz.

Resolution 332, for the relief of Marjorie Helen Stainer Poirier.

Resolution 333, for the relief of Micheline Gagnon Laporte.

Resolution 334, for the relief of Dorothy Marie Beale McElroy.

Resolution 335, for the relief of Ethel Lois Read Dixon.

Resolution 336, for the relief of Alfred George Wirth.

Resolution 337, for the relief of Kathleen Elizabeth Savage Bragger.

Resolution 338, for the relief of Joanne Louise Gibaut Joyce.

Resolution 339, for the relief of Doreen Gladys Ada Nicholson Perry.

Resolution 340, for the relief of Mary Eleanor Latimer McGibbon.

Resolution 341, for the relief of Louis Mathieu Delfosse.

Resolution 342, for the relief of Charlie Wing, otherwise known as Hong Fong Wing.

Resolution 343, for the relief of Jean Robert Boucher.

Resolution 344, for the relief of Gertrude Falkenstein Pajer.

Resolution 345, for the relief of Lise Bergeron Goulet.

Resolution 346, for the relief of Hubert Langlois.

Resolution 347, for the relief of Rene Beauregard.

Resolution 348, for the relief of Shirley Guss Moss.

Resolution 349, for the relief of Dorothy Orion Baldwin Foster.

Resolution 350, for the relief of Anita Pearl Knox Elliott.

Resolution 351, for the relief of William Frederick Tissington Tatlow.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE DOMINION OF CANADA GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-30, respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a bill which follows the precedent established and acted upon by both Houses of Parliament in a number of cases over the past several years whereby a company may use either an English version or a French version of its corporate name. The enacting provisions in this bill are identical with those of similar bills in the past.

The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company was incorporated in 1887. It is well known throughout Canada where it has done business since incorporation by act of Parliament. The name in French is Dominion of Canada, Compagnie d'Assurance Generale.

If the bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

THE CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-31, respecting The Casualty Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, The Casualty Company of Canada is a subsidiary of The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company, with which we have just dealt. This bill is intended to achieve the same purpose as the previous one. This company was incorporated by act of Parliament of Canada in 1911, and the French version of its name is La Casualty, Compagnie d'Assurance du Canada.

If this bill receives second reading I shall move that it also be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

WORLD MORTGAGE CORPORATION—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-32, to incorporate World Mortgage Corporation.

He said: Honourable senators, this is not a bill to change a name but is one to incorporate a mortgage company under the provisions of the Loan Companies Act. As you know, Schedule A of that act sets forth a model bill for the incorporation of new mortgage companies, and sections 1 to 6 inclusive of the bill before us correspond exactly with the provisions in the model bill. If you turn to page 2 of the bill you will notice that sections 7, 8 and 9 are additional to those contained in the model bill and provide special powers.

Section 7 provides an additional power which will permit this new mortgage company, when incorporated, to make an offer in accordance with the provisions of the bill to purchase or otherwise acquire or exchange its shares for all or any portion of the outstanding shares of the Eastern and Chartered Trust Company. This is notwithstanding the provisions of the Loan Companies Act, and is also subject to section 8 of this bill, which provides for a limitation on the amount of such investment.

The Eastern and Chartered Trust Company was formed last November by the amalgamation of two long-established and well-known trust companies in Canada. The Eastern Trust Company was incorporated in 1893, and had its head office in Halifax, and the Chartered Trust Company was incorporated in 1905 and had its head office in Toronto. As I have said, these two companies amalgamated under the Loan Companies Act last November, and the amalgamation was approved by order in council dated November 26, 1963.

It is proposed as a result of the power given in section 7 of this bill that World Mortgage Corporation, when it is incorporated and after it has made its offer, will acquire at least a controlling interest in the Eastern and Chartered Trust Company.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Has the name of this company any significance? Does it intend to operate all over the world?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, I hold no particular brief for the name, "World Mortgage Corporation." The best I can say is that this is something we shall want, no doubt, to discuss when the bill is before the committee.

I can observe that there is a Company with a similar name in the United States of, I think, recent incorporation. Its name may not be exactly World Mortgage Corporation but the word "World" is a significant part of its name. Those south of the border are not known for their modesty, and I suppose it can be said that we should not allow them to pre-empt the world in favour of a United States mortgage company.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is like T.W.A.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Yes, I think a number of illustrations could be found of titles that are spatial, and which connote doing business beyond the confines of one country. The name of the North American Life Company takes in quite a bit of territory, and the Sun Life Insurance Company has gone beyond the confines of the world and among the planets.

While we can always decide whether or not the proposed name of this corporation is the most appropriate one, I would not be inclined offhand to say that there is anything very wrong with it, especially when it is the name of a company which may some day be doing business throughout the world.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable sponsor of this bill what the figures 1729, in the eighth line on page two of the bill, mean?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That is the number of the order in council. Orders in council are numbered, first, in accordance with the year in which they are passed, and then they are numbered from one on. This was the 1,729th order in council passed by the cabinet in 1963.

Not only will this company make the offer I have mentioned, but when incorporated it proposes to carry on the business of a mortgage company, and on the basis of its presently anticipated capitalization it expects to be able to raise and channel up to approximately $350 million of public savings into both conventional and National Housing Act mortgages. The company should also become an important facility in the secondary marketing of mortgages.

The initial subscribers to the capital of this mortgage company will include Wood Gundy, which is an investment company in Toronto; Burns Brothers and Denton, also an investment firm in Toronto; the Bank of Nova Scotia, and Harris and Partners Limited.

The association of this company with a trust company, as the result of the exchange of shares referred to, will promote the business interests of both the trust company and the loan company. The loan company proposes to make use of the services, facilities and experiences of the trust company in the making and servicing of mortgage loans. This will provide a much more economic basis of operations for the loan company, and will be a source of interesting service revenue to the trust company by virtue of its increased participation in the mortgage servicing business. The company meets the need for an expanding source of mortgage funds, and introduces an important competitive factor into the mortgage finance field. This will be a Canadian company managed by Canadian enterprise.

I should add, honourable senators, that there is a printer's error in line 16 on page 2 of the bill. Reference is made there to section 80 of the Loan Companies Act, but it should be to section 81 of that act. I suggest that that error can be corrected when the bill is before the committee.

I call the attention of honourable senators also to the fact that section 8 of the bill limits the amount the company can put into the shares of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company to the aggregate of the World Mortgage Corporation's unimpaired paid-up capital and reserve. The reason for that limitation is that World Mortgage Corporation should not borrow money for the purpose of investment in these shares, and that only to the extent of its own capital and reserve can it in turn acquire the shares of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What effect would that have on the price?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I think that is a matter of negotiation between the two companies. I may say that there are one or two directors of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company present who can add to what I have said about the matter. The capital stock, general reserve and undivided profits of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company totalled $14,596,000 as at December 31, 1963, so one would assume that that is at least the price paid for the shares of that company, and it would mean that World Mortgage Corporation would require a capital and reserve of $14,596,000 in order to acquire all of those shares.

Section 9 of the bill is the normal model clause of bills of this kind except for the addition of the words "except as otherwise provided herein." Those words are added for the purpose of taking care of sections 7 and 8 which deal with the acquisition of the shares of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company.

The title of the company in French is La Corporation Mondiale d'Hypotheques.

If the bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Would the honourable sponsor of the bill care to indicate what place the Bank of Nova Scotia will have in this company? Is its position purely that of an investor?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That is the type of information that can best be obtained from the applicants for the charter when they are before the committee. From general knowledge I think I can say that up until the amalgamation of the Chartered Trust Company and the Eastern Trust Company, the relationship between the Chartered Trust Company and the Bank of Nova Scotia was that type referred to in the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, in which it was said that close links exist between all five of the important chartered banks and trust companies. There was, undoubtedly, a close link between the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Chartered Trust Company—

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Does that apply to the Eastern Trust Company as well?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: —involving a share ownership, along with others who were associated with the bank, which amounted to effective control of the Chartered Trust Company. I know nothing of the relationship of the Bank of Nova Scotia to the Eastern Trust Company, nor what the situation is now with respect to that equity ownership and control as the result of the amalgamation of the two companies.

One of the applicants for this incorporation is Mr. Boyles, who is a senior officer of the Bank of Nova Scotia. I am sure all information in that connection will be available in committee.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wonder if the honourable sponsor of this bill would be good enough to enlarge on the words "or any portion of the outstanding shares of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company" which appear in clause 7? I have in mind the number of authorized shares and the unissued shares. Would that include the unissued shares?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Again, I do not think my information permits me to be definite in my answer, but I would assume that the offer World Mortgage Corporation would make would be for the issued shares, but clause 7 gives it power to acquire any shares that might be issued subsequently.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: My question hinges on the words "additional shares," and I wonder if they include the unissued shares.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: It seems to me it is quite clear from the wording that World Mortgage Corporation may acquire any portion of the outstanding shares, and then the clause continues:

> —and may purchase or otherwise acquire ... any additional shares of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company which may from time to time be issued, or all or any of the shares of a company formed by the amalgamation of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company with one or more other trust companies—

That seems to be a continuing provision.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stambaugh:
>
> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Dupuis).

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I ask that this Order stand until Wednesday next, June 10.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 8, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 8, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN IN CHRIST CHURCH—COMMONS AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-11, to incorporate Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

1. Page 2, Line 7. In subclause (a) add the word "Christian" before the word "faith".

2. Page 2, Line 11. In subclause (b) add the word "Christian" before the word "faith".

3. Page 2, Line 17. In subclause (c) add the word "Christian" before the word "faith".

4. Page 5, Line 23. Renumber clause 18 to 19, and insert the following new clause 18:

"Application.

18. The provisions of subsection (3) of section 147 of the Companies Act shall apply to the Corporation."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: I move that these amendments be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada—Volume III, Annual Statements of Life Insurance Companies and Fraternal Benefit Societies, for the year ended December 31, 1962, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Insurance Act, chapter 70, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report respecting the operation of the agreements with and payments made to the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island under the Crop Insurance Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 10 of the said act, chapter 42, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English and French texts).

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-35, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

ALLIED INVASION OF NORMANDY—TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY

TRIBUTE TO LE RÉGIMENT DE LA CHAUDIÈRE

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish to draw attention to a special occasion. Yesterday, I was present at a special Mass for the soldiers of le Régiment de la Chaudière.

(Translation):

Twenty years ago last Saturday, the Régiment de la Chaudière landed on the beaches of Normandy. It was the first French-Canadian regiment to land with the Allied forces on these beaches.

Yesterday, I attended a memorial mass celebrated in honour of those valiant soldiers killed in Normandy. During mass, the padre, Major Jobidon, delivered a most touching and very realistic address. I should like to quote a few excerpts from it. He began as follows:

> Their names will live forever!
>
> Those simple words are engraved on the granite base of the crosses of sacrifice, whose shadows spread over our Canadian cemeteries in Europe. They perpetuate the memory of our elders, your comrades in arms who have fallen on the various battlefields.

He was speaking to the soldiers of the Régiment de la Chaudière, that is why he said "your comrades in arms".

> The great stone cross is for each of them a memorial that will endure forever.
>
> We are gathered here this morning to pay tribute to that memory and to prove by our common prayer that the new guard does not forget the dead; that there are generous hearts ready to take over and to maintain always high the name of the regiment; the value of those who prepare you to that noble mission is worthy of your confidence and your admiration.

We are also gathered here this morning, he added, to commemorate the greatest military feat of all times: the landing of the allied forces in Normandy on June 6, 1944 and, for the Régiment de la Chaudière, its landing at Bernières-sur-mer.

You are wondering perhaps why I am speaking of the Régiment de la Chaudière. I gave the reason at the outset; it is because that regiment landed in Normandy.

There is another reason, however. That regiment has had its headquarters in Lévis for close to 20 years. I am its honorary colonel and a father is always fond of speaking of his children.

Our thoughts accompany those who represent us at the ceremonies being held at present in France.

He then went on to give the history of the regiment commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Paul Mathieu, who is now deputy minister of national defence in Ottawa and who attended, on Saturday, the unveiling of a monument at Bernières-sur-mer to commemorate the landing of June 6, 1944. Lieutenant Colonel Mathieu was seconded by Major Lapointe, former federal minister who now represents the province of Quebec in London, the late Major l'Espérance, Major Sévigny, of the Quebec area, and Major Taschereau who was reported lost in action. I should not want to omit Father Huard, who was the regiment's padre at that time.

A soldier who took part in the assault told me of the excitement he felt when he and his comrades landed on the coast of Normandy. He told me: "That morning, we all attended mass and received communion. The padre gave us a last general absolution. Then, he added:

At 6.30 a.m., we boarded the landing barges and at 7.45 a.m. we set foot on French soil. The beach was mined and protected by the Atlantic wall. There were already some casualties because two boats had struck a floating mine.

A hail of bullets greeted the assailants, while enemy aircraft tried to check the advance of the regiment. However, nothing could stop this offensive. We kept moving forward in spite of this murderous gunfire.

All the men, added the padre, thought about their families, their wives, their brothers and sisters or their fiancées. And for a moment, some faltered and wondered: "Why are we here, while others are over there?" But immediately they mustered up their courage and reflected: "We are attacking in order to deliver the world from that dictatorship so that Canadians may live in peace and freedom."

That is why I want to emphasize that heroic action on the part of the young people of that time. We all have read books about the great heroes of the past. However, there is no need to go back so far in ancient history because just 20 years ago there were many young heroes, since modern warfare is much more terrible that in days gone by.

Another soldier said to me last Saturday: This is what we were telling ourselves—since the war was so terrible, it would be the last. We fought to establish peace. But 20 years later, can we say that peace prevails? Since then, another type of war is going on, the war of nerves, the cold war, the war of pride. It might be even more ravaging, because it attacks the minds and the hearts of all men and kills all brotherly love.

What must we do to have that peace?

And the padre went on: There is only one thing to do, revert to the great principles that Christ taught almost 2,000 years ago, when He said to men, "Love one another." It is the love of men for one another which will save the world.

Our soldiers valiantly gave their lives for their country. Please note that in all regiments which landed on the coast of Normandy on June 6, 20 years ago, the average death toll was 7 per cent, while for the Régiment de la Chaudiere it was 12 per cent.

But so that that action will not be useless and will serve as an example for our young people of today, they sacrificed their lives, their freedom, so that we may live in liberty and peace in our own home. Let that be an example for all our young people of today and tomorrow, so that they will be as brave, as valiant and as faithful as those of 20 years ago. And if we keep that ideal, the world of tomorrow will be as good as the world of yesterday.

(Text):

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, Senator Vaillancourt has very feelingly introduced a subject of great interest to us all, and we take pleasure in sharing with him his pride in the Chaudiere Regiment. Across this country from one shore to the other there are men who would wish to join with my honourable friend in expressing pride in that and other regiments which took part in the great allied invasion.

The Chaudiere Regiment was known in my home town of Sussex, where they took their training before going overseas, as did many other regiments from other parts of Canada. I want to say to Senator Vaillancourt, who was honorary colonel of that regiment, that no regiment stationed in Sussex enjoyed the good feeling of the people more than did the Chaudiere Regiment. To recall one little incident, I was in a barbershop just after the regiment left, and the barber, speaking about it, said that it was one of the few regiments that had left Sussex with all its bills paid. He told me that when the men in camp did not get their pay, they would come in to him and have a haircut or a shave and charge it up. He said he did not lose one cent as far as the Chaudiere Regiment was concerned. This was not true of all regiments. I mention that just in passing.

My honourable friend has paid tribute to his regiment. We all pay tribute to all these very brave men from the many regiments who landed on the beaches of Normandy 20 years ago Saturday. In 1955 I had the privilege of visiting the war graves and war cemeteries in Europe with Colonel Harkness, representing the Veterans Affairs Committee of the House of Commons. We visited the cemeteries in and around Caen and Falaise, and many other places, and saw the names of these men by the hundreds.

As Senator Burchill well knows, the North Shore Regiment from the Province of New Brunswick landed at the same time, the same day, as the Chaudiere Regiment. Those brave men gave all they had.

Sometimes we speak about disunity in this country, but let me say that in the two world wars—although I had very little part in the Second World War—there was no disunity among the men at the front. They were all united for one purpose, the defence of freedom of the world, and of their own country in particular.

I have no more to say except once again to join with my honourable friend in his tribute to these very gallant young men who gave their lives for the world in general but particularly for European countries, France, Belgium and others, who were especially grateful to the men from other parts of the world who fought there not only to retain their own freedom but to regain it for those great countries by driving the enemy from their soil. This our armed forces helped to do, not only in the war of 1939-45 but also in the war of 1914-18. We cannot pay them tribute enough.

PRIVATE BILL

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA —THIRD READING

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the third reading of Bill S-27, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved the third reading of Bill C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CONVENTION ON DISCRIMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT AND OCCUPATION

MOTION FOR APPROVAL — DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 4, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll:

> That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve of Convention No. 111 concerning discrimination in respect of employment and occupation, which was adopted by the International Labour Conference on the 25th of June, 1958, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. John Hnatyshyn: Honourable senators, first I would like to congratulate honourable Senator Croll for the concise and thorough manner in which he explained Convention No. 111, a convention concerning discrimination in respect of employment and occupation, which was adopted by the International Labour Conference at its forty-second session, and which convention we in this house are asked to ratify.

I know it can be said that the mere ratification of the convention will not serve any useful purpose, but it expresses a principle which should be adopted, because in my opinion once this convention is ratified it will provide the means for more useful legislation that can be passed by the federal Parliament and the legislatures of the various provinces.

Although great progress has been made in the field of legislation with respect to human rights, Canada still has discrimination in the fields of employment, public accommodation and housing. I need not go into the Immigration Act, because all honourable senators are aware that it contains many discriminatory measures. It must be remembered however, that many steps in the right direction have been taken by the federal and provincial governments, and, as I have said, although much remains to be done, real progress has been made.

In his speech Senator Croll said:

> The provinces have provided a sword, and they have given leadership to prevent discrimination in employment. Saskatchewan spelled it out first.

I agree with that statement, and I think that to some extent my province pioneered legislation in this respect.

I would like to refer honourable senators to the Saskatchewan Bill of Rights Act which was passed in 1947, section 8 of which provides:

> Every person and every class of persons shall enjoy the right to obtain and retain employment without discrimination with respect to the compensation, terms, conditions or privileges of employment because of the race, creed, religion, colour or ethnic or national origin of such person or class of persons.

That is quite exhaustive, but it exempts, of course, religious institutions and schools by which people of certain religions would certainly be hired. It exempts appointments by the federal Government and to the federal Civil Service, but, amongst other things, it provides for the right to engage in any occupation, the right to own and occupy property, the right to membership in professional and trade associations, and the right to education.

It also prohibits publications that are inflammatory. For instance, if the hate literature that we have been hearing about were distributed in Saskatchewan, prosecution would be a very easy matter, and there would be no difficulty in obtaining a conviction. The act provides for penalties, and also for leave to apply for an injunction before any Superior Court judge in respect of any action against the section I have mentioned.

There is another act in Saskatchewan known as the Fair Employment Act, which was passed in 1956. The purpose of this act is also to prevent discrimination in regard to employment by reason of race, religion, religious creed, colour or ethnic or national origin. I shall not go into all the various provisions of the act in detail because it is available in the statutes. It covers, however, advertising in which there is any suggestion of discrimination in regard to the position being advertised. It provides for the same exceptions as the other act in respect of religious schools and appointments by the federal Government and to the federal Civil Service.

Considerable progress has been made in other provinces. I shall not list all of them, but during the past two years such legislation has been passed by the Province of Quebec. I refer to the amendment of Quebec's Hotel Act in 1963, which provides that no owner of a hotel, restaurant or camping ground shall refuse to provide services to, or discriminate against, any person or class of persons because of the race, colour, nationality, ethnic origin or place of birth of such person or class of persons.

I draw attention of honourable senators to the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the present session of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, which indicated that the Quebec Government intends to introduce fair employment practices legislation "to prohibit in general discrimination in matters of employment." As I have explained, similar legislation now exists in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Senator Croll dealt with various legislation that has been passed by the federal Government in this regard. In 1962 the federal Civil Service Act was amended to include an anti-discrimination clause, forbidding discrimination on the basis of race, colour, religion or national origin.

It was announced last December by the federal Government that the convention we are dealing with now would be ratified. If we ratify it now it will, in my opinion, be a step in the right direction.

Hon. John A. Robertson: Honourable senators, a few weeks ago as I listened to the debate in this chamber on tourist traffic I thought one could have more than a few words to say. However, having listened to the comments of many honourable members from across Canada, I concluded that there was very little left for me to say in that respect. It seems to me that if one were to multiply everything that was said by two, including the size of the fish caught, one would be speaking of my area in northwestern Ontario.

Turning to the matter before the Senate, it is after much thought in respect to this complicated problem that I rise to speak in favour of this motion for approval of Convention No. 111, which concerns discrimination in respect of employment and occupation.

I am positive that complete approval and ratification by both the federal and provincial governments will not erase the scar of discrimination from our society. However, it is the thin edge of a very long wedge and I certainly approve of it.

The fact that we have the Bill of Rights at the federal level, and that six of our ten provincial governments have enacted legislation along this line, indicates to me that much more can be done. The Prime Minister has received positive replies from all ten provinces indicating full concurrence, and this adds to greater hope.

In respect to the Province of Ontario, I sincerely believe that over the years this province has spearheaded legislation more or less coming under a convention of this nature, and I do not think there is any doubt that similar legislation will be enacted in all ten provinces.

Down through the years I have had many occasions to talk to delegates who have attended International Labour Conferences. They have always expressed their confidence in this great world movement. The approval and ratification of Convention No. 111 certainly will not solve this problem, but it will indeed be a good start towards helping to solve it.

Honourable senators, I suppose that those in this chamber who are members of the legal profession and of the business world realize better than any others this serious problem. In most cases it is nearly impossible to prove just what this motion in its entirety will tend to overcome when it is ratified and approved by all legislative bodies concerned. It is most certainly moving in the proper direction, to help solve the problem of discrimination in respect of employment and occupation.

Honourable senators, owing to the fact that the International Labour Conference will convene in Geneva on June 17, I would like to place my plea before you to approve Convention No. 111 in plenty of time for this date.

As I have sat here day after day listening to debate, I have thought what a wonderful nation and country we have in Canada, and what a great blessing it is that this chamber is endowed with men who have so much legal and business experience.

To tie in these thoughts with my thinking in respect of this convention, I wondered just how many workers would tumble down if you shook the family trees of the members of this chamber. I am sure there would be many.

The name of honourable Senator Roebuck was one with which I was most familiar before coming to this chamber. I had known him for many years in the labour movement, and I am sure that most honourable senators have thought as he has over the years.

Honourable senators, I wholeheartedly ask for your approval of this motion endorsing Convention No. 111.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), for Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions, numbered 320 to 351, inclusive, which were presented on Thursday, June 4.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 320, for the relief of Ruby Emma Clough Davies.

Resolution 321, for the relief of Mary Louise Hooper Buchanan.

Resolution 322, for the relief of Brigitta Hoess Knauth.

Resolution 323, for the relief of Anna Sophie Johanna Dora Winter Hoppe.

Resolution 324, for the relief of Eileen Patricia Sullivan Johnston.

Resolution 325, for the relief of Barbara Newlove Broadbent.

Resolution 326, for the relief of Giovanna (Joan) Salvatore Garley.

Resolution 327, for the relief of Paul Harrison.

Resolution 328, for the relief of Joan Geering Stockloser.

Resolution 329, for the relief of Claire Limoges Cyr.

Resolution 330, for the relief of Evelyn Shirley Borenstein Silverman.

Resolution 331, for the relief of Georgette Patricia Marie Drummond Haugwitz.

Resolution 332, for the relief of Marjorie Helen Stainer Poirier.

Resolution 333, for the relief of Micheline Gagnon Laporte.

Resolution 334, for the relief of Dorothy Marie Beale McElroy.

Resolution 335, for the relief of Ethel Lois Read Dixon.

Resolution 336, for the relief of Alfred George Wirth.

Resolution 337, for the relief of Kathleen Elizabeth Savage Bragger.

Resolution 338, for the relief of Joanne Louise Gibaut Joyce.

Resolution 339, for the relief of Doreen Gladys Ada Nicholson Perry.

Resolution 340, for the relief of Mary Eleanor Latimer McGibbon.

Resolution 341, for the relief of Louis Mathieu Delfosse.

Resolution 342, for the relief of Charlie Wing, otherwise known as Hong Fong Wing.

Resolution 343, for the relief of Jean Robert Boucher.

Resolution 344, for the relief of Gertrude Falkenstein Pajer.

Resolution 345, for the relief of Lise Bergeron Goulet.

Resolution 346, for the relief of Hubert Langlois.

Resolution 347, for the relief of Rene Beauregard.

Resolution 348, for the relief of Shirley Guss Moss.

Resolution 349, for the relief of Dorothy Orion Baldwin Foster.

Resolution 350, for the relief of Anita Pearl Knox Elliott.

Resolution 351, for the relief of William Frederick Tissington Tatlow.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—ORDER FOR RESUMING DEBATE STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Farris, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaubien (Provencher), for second reading of Bill S-20, intituled: "An Act to incorporate Bank of British Columbia".—(Honourable Senator Farris).

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I have been travelling by airplane all day, and would like to have this order stand until tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I think honourable Senator Farris would appreciate if this could be placed first on the Orders of the Day for tomorrow.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 9, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE LORD BEAVERBROOK

TRIBUTES

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, New Brunswick is mourning the loss today of its great benefactor, in the death of Lord Beaverbrook.

I think it is not out of place that this Senate might pause for just a moment this afternoon in the transaction of its business to pay tribute to one who was described only last week, at his 85th birthday dinner in London, by another distinguished Canadian, Lord Thomson, as "the greatest living Canadian."

It has been suggested by the honourable Leader of the Government and by the Leader of the Opposition that I, on behalf of the Senate, should say a few words in tribute to this eminent man.

Lord Beaverbrook was born in Maple, Ontario, 85 years ago. He came to Newcastle, New Brunswick, as a child. His father, the Reverend William Aitken, was the pastor of the Presbyterian church in that town. He therefore spent his boyhood, his schooldays, his youth, and in fact all of his years as a young man, in the town of Newcastle. Those of my generation who are left will remember him quite well as a young man. We would often reminisce with him incidents which took place during those early years.

I take it that most honourable senators are fully aware of the wonderful career of Lord Beaverbrook—which I do not intend to enlarge upon now—of his success here in Canada, and then of his moving to Great Britain, where he became a member of the House of Commons and was knighted as Sir William Maxwell Aitken. You know of his phenomenal success as a newspaper proprietor, and, during World War II, of his magnificent achievement as Minister of Aircraft Production in the Government of Great Britain. As has often been said, the victory of the Battle of Britain was due in large measure to the achievement of Lord Beaverbrook in producing the aircraft that was needed in that combat.

Honourable senators, Lord Beaverbrook has been kind to the people of New Brunswick. It would take me a long time to enumerate—and I do not intend to do so this afternoon—all the wonderful gifts he bestowed on his native province.

The manse where he lived as a boy has been preserved, presented and endowed by him as a gift to the town of Newcastle, where today it is known as the "Old Manse Library." But that is only one of the many benefactions he conferred upon the people of New Brunswick.

He was made Chancellor of the University of New Brunswick, and from that time on he showered the university with gifts. The present gymnasium—which my classmate on the other side, Senator Brooks, is well aware of, as no doubt are many others—was his gift, as was the building which at present houses the Faculty of Law in Fredericton; and many other generous things has he done for that university.

Perhaps his most outstanding gift to the province was the establishment of Beaverbrook Scholarship. Over 40 years ago he instituted what are known as Beaverbrook Scholarships, making it possible for graduates of high schools in that province to attend university. From then on he established Overseas Scholarships by which graduates, not only of the University of New Brunswick but of others as well, could attend the University of London to pursue their studies and obtain higher degrees. Later on he made it possible for high school teachers of New Brunswick—chosen, of course, by a board—to study at the University of London. Up to date between 600 and 700 students have benefited by Lord Beaverbrook's generosity in providing scholarships. If I am not mistaken, a member of the present federal Cabinet is a Lord Beaverbrook scholar.

In addition to the scholarships, the magnificent art gallery which he built in Fredericton will remain a monument to his memory.

Then, among other things, he built ice rinks. He presented the City of Fredericton, the City of Saint John, the Town of Newcastle and the Town of Chatham with modern rinks, and the boys and girls and young people who use them—and, I can assure you, they are well used—bless Lord Beaverbrook's name.

Honourable senators, I have given you a short sketch of Lord Beaverbrook's career, and have indicated what his death means to the people of the Province of New Brunswick. I speak on behalf of them because I know that in every corner of New Brunswick there will be a sense of great loss and a feeling of mourning today at the news of his death. He was a renowned son of New Brunswick, an eminent Canadian, and a great international figure. Canadians all across this land pay tribute to his memory.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, I should also like to say a word about the late Lord Beaverbrook, even though Senator Burchill has expressed a full tribute.

The late Lord Beaverbrook was a friend of mine for many years; he was a friend of New Brunswick, and he was a friend of the Free World. I think he has done more than any other Canadian in the exercise of charity and philanthropy. He helped many poor scholars to rise in the world. I was at a meeting of schoolteachers a short while ago, when the chairman asked all teachers present who had been helped by Lord Beaverbrook to stand, and, honourable senators, over three-quarters of those in attendance stood.

Lord Beaverbrook had a particular friendliness for all Canadians visiting England, and was happy to do anything he could for them. He was always Max Aitken to me, and would never let me call him anything else. When at times I would forget and address him by his title, he would say, "Stick to Max."

I have a letter from him dated Thursday last; it is signed by himself, because he always signed letters to friends in his own hand instead of having a secretary sign them. This letter does not sound like that of a sick man. Rather, it sounds to me like the owner of the Daily Express, which we all know is the greatest newspaper in the world, as far as circulation is concerned, and which has a tremendous influence. Every item of any importance appearing in the newspaper was looked over by him. When he was in France a helicopter would come daily with editorials and other items for his approval.

A few years ago I was in London with my brother and some other Canadians from Saint John, and we had the pleasure of visiting Lord Beaverbrook. He was so proud of his Daily Express that he insisted we should go down to see the wonderful machinery installed there. Afterwards he invited us all to dinner at his home.

The death of Lord Beaverbrook is a serious loss to Canada, to New Brunswick, and to the entire Free World because his influence was very great in every nation of the Free World.

I understand he has established foundations in both Canada and England which will carry on his charities. He was that kind of man; he wanted his work to go on when his days in this world came to an end. We have lost one of the greatest Canadians we have ever had, and I have lost a lifelong friend, which loss I feel very, very deeply.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report relating to the Administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 41(2) of the said act, chapter 111, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Since these amendments are important I would move, if honourable senators concur, that we proceed with the consideration of this report tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

For text of report see appendix, p. 694.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES (UNITED NATIONS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-24, to amend the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act.

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-24, to amend the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Gouin moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSLATORS AND INTERPRETERS

INQUIRY ANSWERED

On the Notice of Inquiry of Honourable Mr. Pouliot:

1. During the last fifteen months, how many translators and interpreters have been employed in each department, agency or commission of the Government of Canada,
   (a) in Canada,
   (b) in other countries?

2. What is the total number of translators and interpreters who have been, during the said period,
   (a) employed and paid by the Government of Canada,
   (b) appointed by the Civil Service Commission after examination, and belong to the Translation Bureau,
   (c) appointed by Order-in-Council and do not belong to the Translation Bureau?

3. How many translators are employed for the translation of the correspondence of the departments, commissions and agencies of the Government of Canada?

4. How many books have been translated by the Translation Bureau during the same period,
   (a) from English into French, and
   (b) from French into English?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Answered privately.

TRANSLATIONS BUREAU

TERMINOLOGICAL BULLETINS TABLED

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot moved, pursuant to notice:

That copies of all the terminological bulletins issued in French and in English, and in both languages by the Terminology Service of the Translation Bureau during the years 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963 be tabled in the Senate.

He said: Honourable senators, I am most thankful to the honourable Leader of the Government in this chamber (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for his having helped in securing this vast amount of information. Be assured that I will not take advantage of your good disposition in reading it all to you. This is just part of the many cubic feet of information that I have been asking for. These bulletins are called terminological —it took me some time in order to be able to pronounce that word with sufficient speed— bulletins which have been published, or mimeographed, for the benefit of the Bureau of Translations. These are in addition to all the dictionaries they have, and they indicate what should be the translation of certain French expressions into English, and certain English expressions into French.

It would take the whole of the two months' recess, if we have it, to check these out for the benefit of the Standing Committee on Finance, but today, when in the company of a friend of mine, I glanced over this material and found something that you may enjoy. It will bring to your memory reminiscences of younger days by reminding you of the image of a celebrated actress of the time who was renowned for her curvaceous figure which was the inspiration of the streamlining art. I am referring to Mae West. You may imagine my surprise to find her name in one of these bulletins. This is "Comite d'Etude des Phrases Techniques Françaises," which is a committee studying technical French terms. Under the heading "May West" there are aviation terms, a definition of lifesaving equipment which could be inflated. There is a proposed translation, "lifesaving equipment" or summarily, "gilet".

There are pearls in the manure of Ennius— to use an expression of Virgil. I apologize for that reference to the classics.

Honourable senators, the only thing to do now is wrap this up and send it to our good friend the Chairman of the Finance Committee, with my compliments, to provide for him some moments of relaxation and enjoyment.

Difficulties may occur in defining some words; but there are many books for that. They are the well-known dictionaries in which there are enough words to make satisfactory translations.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, I presume I should rise on this occasion to thank the honourable Senator Pouliot for his presentation to me today on behalf of the Finance Committee.

As he ventured to intrude into the classical field, perhaps I might be excused for doing likewise. Therefore, let me say: "Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes."

Motion agreed to.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

MOTION FOR APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. K. Hugessen moved, pursuant to notice by Hon. John J. Connolly:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the Protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this House do approve the same.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I must confess that I submit this resolution to you with considerable trepidation. It involves matters of extreme importance and of great complexity.

The Senate is entitled to as full and clear an explanation of what is involved as will enable it to form a reasoned judgment. I am afraid that, in order to do that, though I will do the best I can, it will be necessary to trespass upon your time for a good deal longer than I normally do when I speak to the house. A long explanation, I am afraid, is essential. In fact, I am rather disturbed as to whether my endurance or your patience will be first exhausted.

In this respect, we stand in a different position from the House of Commons. This is the first time the Columbia River Treaty comes to us. In March the House of Commons had a debate on it lasting several days. It had another debate lasting three days last week. In the interim, they had 50 sittings of their committee on External Relations, taking evidence with respect to this matter, resulting in almost 1,500 pages of printed evidence. We, however, not having had the benefit of any of these discussions, must consider this thing more or less de novo.

Honourable senators, may I start by reminding you that in the year 1909, in the days of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Canada and the United States entered into a treaty known as the Boundary Waters Treaty, which is still in effect. That treaty was for the purpose of setting out the rights of the two countries in respect of rivers flowing from one to the other and in respect of boundary waters between them.

Under that treaty there was set up an International Joint Commission, with a certain amount of jurisdiction and with wide powers of inquiry. That International Joint Commission consisted, and still consists, of three members from each country—three from the United States with a United States chairman, and three from Canada with a Canadian chairman.

Over the years, that International Joint Commission has done a great deal of excellent work. I might remind honourable senators that for several years, until about two years ago, the Canadian chairman of the commission was General Andrew McNaughton.

Honourable senators, in the year 1944 the governments of both countries charged the International Joint Commission to study the Columbia River Basin and, > to determine whether a greater use than is now being made of the waters of the Columbia River System would be possible and advantageous.

The International Joint Commission thereupon set up a body to conduct this investigation, known as the International Columbia River Engineering Board. That board conducted investigations for 15 years. It finally made a report in the year 1959 in which, among other things, it discussed three different means by which the Canadian Columbia might be developed.

Also, in December 1959, at the request of the two governments, the International Joint Commission made a special report on the principles which they felt should govern the calculation and the apportionment of the benefits which would result from the co-operative development of the river.

Armed with these two reports, the two governments began negotiations for a treaty in February 1960. These negotiations resulted in the Columbia River Treaty signed on January 17, 1961. That treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States by resolution dated March 16, 1961, as required by the constitution of the United States. It has not yet been ratified by Canada. The reason for that is that some difficulties arose after the signing of the agreement with the Government of British Columbia, to which I shall refer later. But the negotiations continued, or rather were resumed, and they have resulted in two things: First of all, a protocol between the two countries, dated January 22, 1964, clarifying, and to some extent modifying, certain provisions of the treaty; and, secondly, an exchange of notes between the two governments, also dated January 22, 1964, relating to the sale of a part of Canada's downstream power benefits, of which I shall have more to say later. It is this treaty, as clarified and modified by this protocol and exchange of notes between the two governments, which you are asked to approve by the resolution before you. It is the result, I think it is fair to say, of 15 years of investigation and five years of negotiation.

In considering this matter, it is essential to bear in mind that the Canadian part of the Columbia River basin is situated entirely within the Province of British Columbia, and that what we are dealing with in these documents are natural resources belonging to the Province of British Columbia.

Obviously, the Province of British Columbia cannot make a treaty with a foreign power, not being itself a sovereign state, so that the treaty is made between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States. On the other hand, there is no means by which the federal Government can force the Government of British Columbia to develop its own resources in a way in which it does not want to. Furthermore, in any development of the resources of British Columbia, it is the British Columbia government itself or its agencies which will have to make that development. It is therefore perfectly clear that the British Columbia government has to be very closely tied in with the treaty, that it must agree to the things that the treaty provides, and, in fact, I think I am right in saying that the Government of British Columbia and its agency, the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority and their technical advisers, have been parties to all the negotiations that have taken place since the year 1960. The result has been an agreement between the federal Government and the Government of British Columbia, dated July 8, 1963, with a supplementary agreement, dated January 13, 1964.

I can summarize these agreements very quickly for honourable senators. In the first place, the Government of British Columbia recognizes that the treaty and the protocol have been entered into, and declares that it agrees to them. It undertakes that it will carry out all the works and perform all the obligations which the treaty imposes upon Canada, in place of and to the exoneration of Canada. On the other hand, it is entitled to receive all the moneys which the United States is required to pay to Canada under the provisions of the treaty.

Hon. Mr. Farris: How much is that?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I will be going into that in considerable detail in the course of my remarks.

The treaty, the protocol, and the exchange of notes, on the one hand, and the agreement with the Government of British Columbia, on the other, are the foundation stones of this whole structure.

Honourable senators, in order to understand this treaty, I am afraid that I will have to enter into an exercise in geography. I shall be referring to a number of places, a number of rivers and lakes, and their relationship to one another. I think honourable senators will find it much easier to follow me in what I say if they have before them a map of the Columbia River Basin.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I have accordingly had such a map prepared by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, which I gather is being distributed to honourable senators at the present time.

Let me make a few preliminary remarks about the Columbia River system as a whole. It is the fourth largest river system on the North American continent, being exceeded only by the St. Lawrence, the Mississippi and the Mackenzie. I think about a third of the whole basin, the northern part, is situated in Canada, in the Province of British Columbia. The Columbia River itself is 1,220 miles long from its source in the Rocky Mountains to its mouth in the Pacific Ocean. Of these 1,220 miles, 480 are in Canada and 740 in the United States. From the source of the Columbia River to its mouth it drops 2,650 feet, slightly more than half of which drop is situated within Canada.

I shall want to describe in a little more detail three rivers with which we are going to be concerned. These are the Columbia River itself, the Kootenay River and the Duncan River.

The Columbia River rises in southeastern British Columbia, to the west of the main ridge of the Rocky Mountains, at a place called Columbia Lake. Columbia Lake itself is not marked on the map, but it is at a place marked on the map, called Canal Flats. For the first 150 miles or more of its course, the Columbia flows in a northwesterly direction. Then it takes a wide sweep around through an angle to the west, through an angle of about 150 degrees, and turns south. At the point where it turns south, you will find Mica marked on the map. I shall be referring to Mica as we proceed. From there on for nearly 300 miles the Columbia proceeds in a generally southern direction to the United States border. About 90 miles below Mica it passes the town of Revelstoke which, as honourable senators know, is a divisional point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and shortly thereafter it falls into the Arrow Lakes.

The Arrow Lakes are a rather interesting geographical formation, not unusual in that part of British Columbia. They lie in a trench in the mountains, and though they are more than 100 miles long they are nowhere more than two or three miles wide. There are two lakes, the Upper Arrow Lake and the Lower Arrow Lake, joined by a short stretch of the Columbia River in between. In fact, the whole Arrow Lakes system can be called more or less a widening out of the bed of the Columbia River, and in their natural state they store vast quantities of water. At the southern end of the Arrow Lakes, about 30 miles from the United States border, is a point marked Arrow Lakes on the map.

A mile or two below Arrow Lakes the Columbia is joined from the east by its principal Canadian tributary, the Kootenay, opposite the town of Castlegar. The joined river then proceeds southward for 20 miles or so to the United States border, which it crosses near the Town of Trail. After crossing the border the Columbia River proceeds in a generally southerly and westerly direction, with wide sweeps and loops, being joined on the way by a number of important tributaries, until it finds its way to the sea at Astoria in the State of Oregon, where it enters the Pacific Ocean. In about the last 250 miles of its course, while it is flowing west, the Columbia River forms the boundary between the states of Oregon, on the south, and Washington, on the north.

Now I come to the Kootenay River. It rises in the Rocky Mountains in the same general locality as the Columbia River, but about 75 miles or so to the north-east of it, not far, I understand, from the Town of Banff. The Kootenay River flows down to the border, a distance of about 200 miles, in a southerly direction. It is rather interesting to note that while the Upper Kootenay is flowing south, the Columbia River leaving Columbia Lake, in apparently the next valley, or the next valley-but-one, is flowing north. It so happens that the Kootenay River runs very close to Columbia Lake at this place called Canal Flats—in fact, I am told it runs within a mile—and it would be very easy and comparatively inexpensive to build a canal at Canal Flats to divert the waters of the Upper Kootenay into Columbia Lake, so that thereafter they would run down the Columbia River instead of running down the Kootenay River.

After leaving Canal Flats the Kootenay runs south for more than 100 miles, being joined by a number of tributaries on the way, and crosses the international boundary into the northern part of the state of Montana where, after 50 miles or so, it reaches a point called Libby, marked on the map, to which I shall also have to refer as I continue.

After Libby the Kootenay River does what one might call an almost complete somersault. It turns around through the State of Montana and the northern part of the State of Idaho, through 180 degrees, starts flowing north, and enters Canada again from the northern part of the State of Idaho, flowing north this time, about 70 miles west of where it originally entered the States. At the place where it re-enters Canada there is an area called the Creston area which, I am advised, is one of the few places in that part of British Columbia where there is considerable and quite prosperous agriculture. The Kootenay River then falls into the southern end of Kootenay Lake at Kootenay Landing. The waters flow through that lake, the outlet of Kootenay Lake being at its western end, opposite the Town of Nelson. From there the river resumes its course for about 20 or 25 miles, or so, in a southwesterly direction, dropping quite rapidly as it goes, and joins the Columbia opposite the Town of Castlegar, at the place I mentioned some time ago.

It is perhaps interesting to note that at the point where the two rivers join, 60 per cent of the water is contributed by the Columbia and 40 per cent by the Kootenay, which is an indication of the importance of the Kootenay as a subsidiary of the Columbia.

Compared with these two great rivers I have just mentioned, the Duncan River is rather "small potatoes." It is a tributary of the Kootenay. It does not flow into the Kootenay directly, but flows into the northern end of Kootenay Lake, and altogether it is about 50 or 60 miles long. It flows south into the northern end of Kootenay Lake, roughly parallel with and to the east of the Arrow Lakes, and a few miles before it falls into the Kootenay Lake it runs past a place called Duncan Lake, where it is joined by some tributaries. Duncan Lake is also marked on the map.

To turn to another branch of the subject, honourable senators will appreciate that this treaty relates basically to the control of the flow of the rivers and to the production of hydroelectric power on the Columbia in Canada; and it is pertinent to inquire what is the present state of hydroelectric development, first of all, in Canada and, secondly, in the United States.

At the present time, in Canada on the Columbia River proper there is no hydroelectric development of any kind. The water flows as it has always flowed, down the river without let or hindrance of any kind. On the Duncan River there is no hydroelectric development of any kind. On the Kootenay there is no hydroelectric development all the way from its source to where it enters Kootenay Lake. In fact, the only hydroelectric development in the whole of the Canadian Columbia and its tributaries at the moment exists in the short stretch of 20 or 25 miles from the Town of Nelson to the junction with the Columbia River itself.

In that area there are five hydroelectric power plants, all owned by the West Kootenay Power Company. That company is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company and, as honourable senators probably know, Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company is controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway by a majority stock ownership, though there is a very wide public holding of the minority of the shares which are quoted actively on the various stock exchanges. Consolidated Mining and Smelting is a vast mining and industrial complex which is the big factor and the big employer of labour in that area of the Kootenays. It produces copper, zinc, chemicals, fertilizers and all sorts of products, and it needs a great deal of power for its operations. That power is supplied from the five power stations to which I have already referred, and these plants also supply the surrounding area with their requirements of power for commercial, industrial and domestic purposes. As I say, that is the only power development in the Canadian Columbia so far.

When you come to the United States you find a completely different picture. The northern Pacific states, as they are called—the states of Washington and Oregon—have been undergoing a great period of development during the last 30 years. Their population has been increasing, industry has been establishing itself there in increasing quantities and amounts, principally, I think, during the course of the last war. As the result of these developments and the heavy and increasing demand for power which these developments have initiated, the Columbia River in the United States has been very highly developed for the purposes of hydroelectric power. As you will see by the map, there are no fewer than ten big hydroelectric developments on the Lower Columbia, one of which, the largest of all, is very well known to everybody, the Grand Coulee. I dare say some honourable senators have visited Grand Coulee. As I say, there are ten such power plants already in existence, and an eleventh is under construction. I am informed that up to date the United States has invested in these power plants almost $3 billion; and, as I say, in that area of the United States the demand for power is great and growing all the time.

Now, having dealt with the present power situation, I have to turn to an entirely new factor, but one that is very important in our consideration of this matter, and that is as to the physical characteristics of the Columbia River in Canada, and the same is true of its tributaries. It is a very "flashy" river, as the technical expression goes, which means that there is an enormous variation in its flow, as between different seasons of the year. In Canada, the Columbia receives its flow of water from the melting of the snow in the Rocky Mountains, and, as you would naturally expect, the result is that the period of high flow starts about the middle of May and carries on into August, with the peak sometime about the end of June or beginning of July. On the other hand, in the winter and early spring the flow is extremely low.

I am advised that at the boundary where the river flows from Canada into the United States it is not unusual in any one year for the high flow in the summer to be 50 times the amount of the low flow in the winter, which is a really remarkable variation when you come to think of it. By contrast, perhaps I should tell you that in the St. Lawrence, a few miles away at Cornwall, the variation between the high flow and the low flow is only in the ratio of about two to one.

This factor of the flashy nature of the Columbia River is of the greatest importance in relation to two other things; first of all, the production of hydroelectric power and, secondly, the danger of flooding. I am not a technician, but I want to try to explain what I think the situation is as regards the production of hydroelectric power in this connotation.

As honourable senators know, the efficiency of a power plant depends upon the flow of the river upon which it is built. Two kinds of power are normally produced by a power plant; first, primary or firm power, which is power which can be produced 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. This power is generally sold at quite a high price because of its value to heavy industry. The second kind of power is interruptable or secondary power, which can only be supplied at certain times of the day or periods of the year when the river is high.

Let us apply that state of affairs to the Columbia River in its unregulated state. You would find that the amount of primary or firm power that you could produce would be very small. It would be what can be produced by the lowest flow of the year, which is the only constant factor. On the other hand, you could produce a large amount of secondary or cheaper power because you would have a great deal of water coming down in the flood periods, but the result would be that the flow of water would be so heavy that you could not possibly use all your machines to produce the secondary power, even if you could sell it, and you would have to let much of the water flow over the dam without using it at all.

When you come to consider what would happen by regulating the river by dams built upstream so that the flow is contained and controlled, in spring and early summer, its waters being held back by the dams and only allowed to flow down in a steady even flow, then the position is very different in your power plant. You can immediately increase your firm or primary power very considerably, and you can also bring under control your secondary power which you can produce with the extra water that comes down at times of flood, which is not nearly as considerable as it would have been at times when there was no control at all.

So that by the construction of control dams in the upper part of the river you produce a condition where the power plants in the lower part can produce more and better power than before. When you apply that factor to the Columbia River with these 10 or 11 plants in the United States, each one of which will receive this controlled flow as it comes, you will see how valuable the control of the river by Canada will be to those power plants in the United States.

Secondly, as to flooding danger, I do not know that I need go into that very extensively. If you have an unregulated river like the Columbia with 50 times the flow in summer that you have in winter, there is bound to be flooding. There have been times when the Columbia has run wild, and there have been extremely serious floods. There was one in 1894—I think that was the year—and another in 1948.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Was that in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Only partly. The flood started in Canada by the melting of the snows, but the effects were felt in the United States.

So honourable senators will see how valuable it will be to the United States from the point of view of power production and from the point of view of flood control to have the Columbia controlled as to its flow.

There are two questions which I think we should ask ourselves at this particular point. First of all, what does the United States expect to get out of this treaty? And, secondly, what does Canada, and more particularly British Columbia, expect to get out of this treaty?

Dealing with the first question, the requirements of the United States are pretty clear and patent. The United States wants two things: more power from its plants on the Columbia River, and more flood control, both of which it wants as soon as possible.

Dealing with the second question, what does British Columbia want from this treaty? Generally speaking, I think one might say that British Columbia needs an assured supply of cheap power for its future requirements. The position of British Columbia is this: the province is developing rapidly, the population is increasing and industry is thriving. There is an annual increase in its power requirements estimated at between seven and eight per cent per annum compounded.

The province has for the time being enough power for its requirements, but it has undertaken a large development, the Peace River development, in the northern part of the province, and also the construction of transmission lines from the Peace to the industrial area of the province close to Vancouver. It is expected that it will begin receiving power from the Peace River development by the year 1968, when its present power resources will all have been taken up. But after 1968 it is anticipated that the whole of the Peace River production of power will have been taken up between that year and 1975 or, at the latest, 1976. By that time British Columbia will need a new large source from which to obtain its requirements of power.

I hope to show as I go along that these two requirements, that of the United States and of British Columbia, mesh in and are brought together, and are both satisfied by the provisions of this treaty.

Honourable senators, after this lengthy but, I am afraid, necessary preamble, I turn to the provisions of the treaty itself. Basically, Canada is required to build three control dams. I will give a brief description of them and their location in ascending order of importance, which also happens to be the order in which they are to be completed.

The dam at Duncan Lake on the Duncan River is the smallest of them. It will be an earth-filled dam with a height of 120 feet and a crest length of 2,600 feet. Its reservoir length —that is the length of the body of water that will back up behind it—will be 28 miles. Fortunately, the 28 miles of land to be flooded is practically entirely uninhabited. The Duncan Lake dam will be built solely for the control of the flow of the river, and for flood prevention, and it will produce no power.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It will be a storage dam.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, exactly. It is to be completed on April 1, 1968, and it is to cost $33 million.

The next and much more important dam is that at the outlet of the Arrow Lakes at the point marked "Arrow" on the map. This is to be an earth-filled dam, and its height is to be 190 feet. The length of its crest will be 2,850 feet, and the length of the reservoir behind it will be 145 miles, the whole length of the Arrow Lakes and on up to Revelstoke. This dam will raise the level of the Arrow Lakes by 40 feet, and it too is solely for control of the flow of the river and for flood prevention. It will produce no power. The date set for its completion is April 1, 1969, and its estimated cost is $129 million.

Unfortunately, when this dam is built it will flood a considerable area of land and displace quite a number of people. It will flood about 27,000 acres of occupied land and displace 2,000 people. I am told that the estimated cost of $129 million includes amounts considered to be ample to recompense the people who will be displaced, and to resettle them in other more suitable locations.

I should perhaps remind the house at this point that the Barnhart dam above Cornwall, which was built in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway, displaced 4,500 people and flooded a very much larger area of land.

The third, and by far the most important of the dams provided for by this treaty, is Mica. Mica will be built where the Columbia River flows through a narrow rocky gorge with high hills on either side. It will be of earth and rock fill construction. Its height will be 645 feet, and the length of its crest will be 2,500 feet. The reservoir behind it will extend 85 miles into the mountains, but I am able to tell the house that in those 85 miles to be flooded by the dam, according to present figures, only ten people live; so there will be no question of damage in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: What is the distance between those two dams?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Between Mica and High Arrow?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It is about 200 miles or perhaps a little less.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Will the flooding be created north of Mica?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, north and east of Mica.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And south, too?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No, not south of the dam. Mica will flood north and east where the river bends around, as can be seen from the map.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Does the area to be flooded extend to 85 square miles?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No; 85 miles is the length of the reservoir behind the dam.

It is interesting to note that Mica is to be completed on April 1, 1973, and its cost is estimated at $245 million. Mica is basically a power project. That is where the power will first be produced on the Canadian Columbia, and I should point out to you that the estimated cost of $245 million represents only the cost of construction of the dam. The cost of installing the power house and the ten turbines is expected to be another $100 million.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Do the figures you have given cover the cost of the land that will be flooded because of Mica?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: There will be substantially no cost because—

Hon. Mr. Horner: There is timber there.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Well, that all belongs to the province. That is a matter of clearing by the province. There are no, or practically no, individual holdings of land in the area to be flooded.

Mica will produce really prodigious amounts of power. It will have an installed capacity of 1,800,000 kilowatts. I dislike using these technical terms because I am frank to say that I do not understand them too well. In fact, I doubt very much if I would recognize a kilowatt if I were to meet one walking down the street. However, I can give honourable senators a comparison to indicate to them the amount of power that Mica will be capable of producing. I think all honourable senators at one time or another have paid a visit to the Barnhart dam above Cornwall, to which I referred a few minutes ago. That is the dam, it will be recalled, which extends right across the St. Lawrence River and which has a large powerhouse in the middle. Half of the power produced there goes to the United States, and half of it comes to Canada. Mica will produce just about twice as much power as the powerhouse at the Barnhart dam. It is important to understand the relationship between High Arrow and Duncan, on the one hand, and Mica on the other, in connection with the objectives of the treaty. High Arrow and Duncan are to be built as soon as possible to satisfy the requirements of the United States for flow control and flood protection, and Mica, which will not be finished until 1973, is to provide for the future power requirements of British Columbia. As I have said, it is expected that the machines and the powerhouse will be installed at Mica by the year 1975, and not later than 1976.

I have heard the argument from opponents of the treaty that the High Arrow and Duncan dams will be of no benefit to Canada because they will produce no power. I disagree entirely with that argument for two reasons. I disagree first of all from the point of view of cash. The amount of money that we will receive from the United States in payment for the benefits that High Arrow and Duncan will produce will be almost twice as much as the capital cost of those projects. My second reason for disagreeing is that under the treaty the United States is entitled to call for certain control of flow for power production and the prevention of flooding. Except under the most unusual conditions, the dams at Arrow and Duncan will be able to meet the requirements of flow control and flood prevention. That will be done by manipulating the height of the Arrow Lakes up and down, as water is or is not required to flow down the river.

There is another factor in connection with this to which I should draw your attention. That is the fact that between Mica up the river and the Arrow dam down the river, the flow of the Columbia River increases by almost 100 per cent, owing to various tributaries and sources of water which flow into it in that mileage. That means that when the power is installed at Mica it will be able to operate solely in the interests of the maximum production of power, without regard to any requirements down the river for flood control or flow of the river.

High Arrow, therefore, is very important in the sense that, though it will not produce any power itself, it will enable the maximum production of power to be created at Mica. It will act as a sort of buffer or intermediary between the requirements of the United States and the production of power at Mica and will perform the function of a re-regulating reservoir.

There is another matter in connection with this area to which I should direct your attention. When Mica is machined and when the power from Mica is used up, there are two other sites below Mica, one at Downie Creek, and the other at Revelstoke Canyon, which can be economically developed for the production of power.

There is still a fourth development that is possible, almost down by the boundary, at a place called Murphy Creek, which is not marked on the map but is quite close to Trail.

You see what will happen under this when 1975 comes along and the turbines are put into Mica. The power requirements of British Columbia will be met for the next few years. When that is taken up, then Downie can be built, and when that is taken up Revelstoke can be built, and when that is taken up Murphy Creek can be built. The power of the Columbia River from these four plants, when completely developed, will be about 4 million kilowatts, which is roughly one and a half times the total power production of British Columbia at the present time.

Now I turn to the Kootenay River. Under the treaty, Canada makes no immediate development on the Kootenay River. Honourable senators will recollect that I mentioned Libby in the State of Montana. Under the treaty, the United States has the option to build a dam at Libby. It must exercise that option within five years of the ratification of the treaty. If it exercises the option, it must complete the construction within seven years. I am told that the exercise of this option by the United States to build at Libby is extremely likely, and in fact that they have made considerable progress in the preparation of the plans of development.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Is this a power project or for flood control?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I understand that it will be both. It is going to be an extremely expensive project. It will cost, according to the latest estimates I have seen, over $300 million, but Canada will not contribute in any way to that cost. The only contribution Canada will make under the treaty is this: if Libby is built, the dam will flood the waters back across the Canadian boundary for a distance of about 42 miles and will flood about 15,000 acres of land. The cost of that, which will be borne by Canada, is estimated at $12,500,000.

On the other hand, if Libby is built, with the control of flow and flooding control which that will bring about, Canada will benefit very greatly indeed in other ways. First of all, in the Creston district near Kootenay Landing, which I mentioned, which is valuable agricultural area, flooding will be prevented—and it has been fairly common, I think, in that area in the past.

The second and more important benefit from the building of Libby will accrue to those five power plants of the West Kootenay Power Company, to which I referred you some time ago. The regulation of the flow of the Kootenay River will greatly increase the capacity of those five plants and will, I understand, permit of the economic construction of a sixth. I am told that the estimate of the benefit which those plants will derive from Libby runs to the order of 200,000 kilowatts—and 200,000 kilowatts of power, by any standard, is worth a great deal more than the $12,500,000 which Canada will pay for the flooding.

There is a corollary to the Kootenay provisions in the treaty. If the United States builds Libby, of course it does not want any interference for some time to come with the river flow of the Kootenay which Libby is designed to control. So that, under the terms of the treaty, if Libby is built, Canada agrees that for the first 20 years we will make no diversion of the Kootenay River. After that, we can divert approximately 20 per cent of the flow of the Kootenay River; after 60 years, 60 per cent; after 80 years, 90 per cent. If the United States' option is not exercised and if Libby is not built, then we can make this 90 per cent diversion at any time.

I do not know how honourable senators feel, but I am not much interested in what will happen in 60 or 80 years from now; but I am interested to see what will happen in 20 years when Libby is built. At the end of 20 years, we will be able to divert 20 per cent of the waters of the Upper Kootenay into the Columbia Lake by this cheap little canal I mentioned some time ago. It will be very cheap and easy to do that, and if we do it, then by this diversion at Canal Flats, this will increase the power potential at Mica by about 8 per cent, and at the plants lower down, if and when they are built, by a little less.

I have tried to describe to you the various physical works that are going to be done under this treaty, both by Canada and by the United States, assuming, as I think we are entitled to assume, that the United States will build Libby.

I would like you to get some sort of a visual picture of what this will all mean. I would ask you to imagine yourselves ten years from now standing beside the Columbia River at the point where it leaves Canada and enters into the United States, and that you are watching the river flow by. At that time 57 per cent of that flow will be controlled by Arrow and Mica, 5 per cent by Duncan Lake, and 16 per cent by Libby, which is really an 80 per cent control of the river. In fact, the Columbia will have been tamed.

Honourable senators, I have been taking up an enormous amount of time, but I cannot help that.

I turn now to the financial side of the treaty.

That is in two sections. As I told you, the United States will benefit immensely from these works, first, by way of flood control and, secondly, by way of the downstream power benefits. I will deal with flood control first.

I told you that the International Joint Commission established certain principles as the basis for the division between the two countries of the benefits that would be derived from the development. In connection with flood control, the International Joint Commission adopted the principle that the upstream country, in this case Canada, will be entitled to one half the estimated average annual value of the flood damage prevented by the storage. Elaborate calculations have been made by the engineers on both sides, with which I do not need to trouble you, but they have calculated the annual savings provided over the term of the treaty by each dam, and they have related those savings back to one lump payment payable when the dam comes into operation, and discounted by $3\frac{7}{8}$ per cent per annum. The resulting figures are these: When Duncan comes into operation on April 1, 1968, the United States will pay $11 million. When Arrow comes into operation on April 1, 1969, the United States will pay $52 million. When Mica comes into operation on April 1, 1973, the United States will pay $1.2 million. The small amount payable for Mica simply bears out what I said a few minutes ago, that the United States is very little dependent on Mica for flood control. That totals $64.5 million in United States funds, and roughly $70 million Canadian.

With regard to the downstream power benefits, I have already described to the house how these benefits arise, and I do not need to go into that again. The principle that the International Joint Commission adopted with respect to these benefits was this. They said that the upstream country, that is Canada, is entitled to receive back half the additional power that is produced in the lower country power plants by the control of the river flow. The treaty of January 17, 1961, followed this principle and provided that this power, this half power entitlement, should be returned to British Columbia at a point on the boundary near Oliver, British Columbia, and it contained provisions for standby and transmission charges. That did not suit the Province of British Columbia, for this reason. They had decided at that point to develop the Peace River power site, and expected to receive large amounts of power from the Peace River power site by about the year 1968. That is exactly the year, when Duncan and Arrow are completed, when they would be entitled to get the additional power from Lower Columbia, and they could not see a market for these two large new sources of power. Therefore, the original treaty arrangement has been modified by the protocol and the exchange of notes of January 22, 1964, in a way that now suits the convenience of all parties.

By the protocol and exchange of notes, the United States agrees that a single private purchaser, consisting of power producers in the Pacific northwest area, will buy under a deed of sale from the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority the first 30 years of this additional supply of power to which Canada is entitled, and will pay for it, concurrently with the ratification of the treaty, in a one-lump sum, discounted at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum. Here again, elaborate calculations have been made and agreed upon by engineers on both sides as to the amount of power to which British Columbia will be entitled in each of these 30 years, the value of that power, and the whole thing related back to the date of ratification of the treaty; the result being that Canada will receive in payment for this half additional power, when the treaty is ratified as of October 1 next, $254,400,000 United States dollars, which is roughly equal to $275 million Canadian.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: You said that Canada will receive that money. Is it British Columbia which will receive that money?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Canada receives it and turns it over to British Columbia. The moneys will be received at certain times, which I have indicated. Moneys will be spent for the various projects at certain times which I have indicated, and we have got to establish some single final point for the evaluation of this whole financial picture. That point has been suggested as being April 1, 1973, when the last dam, Mica, has been completed; and it is estimated that when the moneys are received by Canada they can earn interest at 5 per cent per annum until they are used, and at the same time as from the dates of completion of the various projects, 5 per cent per annum has been added, all to bring the thing down to April 1, 1973.

The picture looks like this: The value of the total receipts from the United States on April 1, 1973, will be $501 million, Canadian dollars. The value of the total capital costs incurred on April 1, 1973, will be $448 million. That leaves a surplus of about $53 million in Canada's favour.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Canadian dollars?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Converted into Canadian dollars, yes.

I have told honourable senators that the cost of Mica did not include the cost of machining, as it is called, which is estimated at $100 million. The net result of this will be that all the storage dams will be paid for in full, with moneys in hand at the time of their construction, and half the generators at Mica provided for.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Provided the estimates are right.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Always providing the estimates are correct, and that is a question to be considered under any circumstances.

Honourable senators, in the course of my professional career I have had to do in a legal way with the financing of quite a number of hydroelectric construction projects, as I am sure other honourable senators have too, and I have never seen a proposition of this kind before—no interest during construction, no bond interest or sinking fund requirements, no capital indebtedness of any kind. On that basis the cost of the generation of power by Mica will be the extremely small figure of 1½ mills per kilowatt hour, which I am told is the lowest generating cost of any plant on the North American continent. This will have a marked effect upon power costs in the Province of British Columbia. I am told that at the present time British Columbia is a high-cost power province, and that the average cost of power in that province is of the order of five mills per kilowatt hour. Costs of power will inevitably go down in British Columbia as Mica produces power at this extremely cheap rate.

At this point, there are two things which I think I should draw to your attention in a clause in the agreement between Canada and British Columbia which deals with Mica and its power. They are both parts of clause 16:

> (1) British Columbia agrees that generators will be installed in the dam at Mica Creek as soon as economically feasible.
>
> (2) Subject to the requirements of British Columbia, British Columbia will make available to other provinces of Canada, through a national grid or otherwise, on a first call basis, electric power from the Columbia River and other power developments in the Province of British Columbia at prices not higher than those obtainable by British Columbia from time to time from the United States of America for any comparable British Columbia entity electric power exported thereto.

So British Columbia is willing to share its benefits of Mica with other provinces.

There are just one or two final observations on this subject of finance. I do not need to remind honourable senators of the substantial benefit that will accrue to our exchange fund from the receipt from time to time of these large amounts of United States dollars. Nor do I need to remind you of the enormous boost to the economy of British Columbia that will be created by the construction of these projects, the many thousands of men who will be employed, and the vast amounts that will be spent on materials, construction and so forth. But the benefits do not terminate there. As I told you, Canada is selling the first 30 years of power benefits to the United States now. When the 30 years are over there will still be some power benefits accruing to the province of British Columbia which the United States will have to pay for, and these have been estimated as being at least $5 million a year.

I have dealt with the physical undertakings and financial provisions of this treaty. It is a long and complicated document and contains many other provisions with which I will not trouble you. It provides that operations under the treaty are to be carried out by the process of continuous consultation between entities designated by the parties. The Canadian entity will be the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority. It provides for the setting up of a permanent engineering board consisting of four members, two from the United States and two from Canada, who will make periodic inspections and reports, and make special reports on the progress of the whole enterprise, and help resolve differences that may arise, as and when required. It provides for settlement of these by the International Joint Commission and, failing that, by arbitration.

The treaty is to last for 60 years from the date of ratification and thereafter until terminated by 10 years' notice by one or other of the parties. In other words, Canada or the United States can terminate the treaty at the end of 60 years, or at any time thereafter by giving 10 years' notice.

There is one further provision of the treaty to which I am afraid I will have to refer, because it has been the subject of a good deal of public controversy in the last few months. That is the diversion of waters of the Columbia River by Canada. We have been told that the provisions which this treaty contains with respect to the diversion of the Columbia River waters constitutes the surrender of Canadian sovereignty. I want to discuss this matter for a few minutes.

Under Article II of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 there is a provision as to the rights of the parties to divert water, and it reads as follows:

> Each of the High Contracting Parties reserves to itself or to the several State Governments on the one side and the Dominion or Provincial Governments on the other as the case may be, subject to any treaty provisions now existing with respect thereto, the exclusive jurisdiction and control over the use and diversion, whether temporary or permanent, of all waters on its own side of the line which in their natural channels would flow across the boundary . . .

—And so on.

So that under the treaty of 1909 we have the complete right to divert the waters of the Columbia in any way we wish.

Now we have modified that right by the terms of the treaty. The treaty provisions with respect to diversion are contained in Article XIII, subsection (1) which reads as follows:

> Except as provided in this Article neither Canada nor the United States of America shall, without the consent of the other evidenced by an exchange of notes, divert for any use, other than a consumptive use, any water from its natural channel in a way that alters the flow of any water as it crosses the Canada-United States of America boundary within the Columbia River basin.

We cannot divert for any use other than a consumptive use; and "consumptive use" is defined in Article I of the treaty as follows:

> "consumptive use" means use of water for domestic, municipal, stock-water, irrigation, mining or industrial purposes but does not include use for the generation of hydroelectric power.

We have therefore agreed in this treaty not to divert the waters of the Columbia River for the purpose of the production of hydroelectric power. What is the practical effect of what we have done in this connection, and to what extent have we surrendered Canadian sovereignty?

For all practical purposes only two suggestions have ever been made, that I know of, for diverting the waters of the Columbia for the purpose of the generation of hydroelectric power. I want to say a few words about each of these in turn.

First of all, there is the diversion into the Fraser River system. We heard a good deal about that a few years ago, but it is now little heard of, and I do not think it is now regarded as a very practical proposition. It is perfectly feasible, from an engineering point of view. There was a study made in 1956 by the British Columbia Engineering Company for the Department of Northern Affairs, which examined that project. What you would have to do would be to divert that part of the Columbia water you were going to divert somewhere near the Town of Revelstoke. You would have to dig a tunnel westward under the mountains for about 40 miles from that point to a place where the water would flow by gravity into the Eagle River, thence into Shuswap Lake, thence into the Thompson River, past Kamloops, and thence into the Fraser River at Lytton, and then to the sea. The report went on to suggest that about 12 powerhouses could be built, with adjacent dams, across this stretch of these rivers, and you could produce considerable power thereby.

At first sight one would think a scheme of that kind would appeal to Canada, and particularly to the province of British Columbia, because it would be diverting Columbia River water—which would otherwise flow down and produce power in the United States —to the Fraser River where it would produce power in Canada. However, there are two reasons which militate against that. The first is the cost. According to this report, it would be very expensive power; it would be an expensive project. The engineers came up with a final figure, everything included, of, I think, slightly over 7 mills per kilowatt hour for power produced in this way, which would make it an expensive proposition

The second reason was even more important. Honourable senators know very well that in the Fraser and Thompson rivers British Columbia has a very important salmon industry. It is an industry employing several thousand men and brings several million dollars a year into the province. Now, I am not an expert on commercial salmon fishing, but we do have an expert in this house on that, who knows all there is to be known about that subject, in the person of Senator Reid.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Senator Reid tells me, and I quote his authority, that if you were to build a series of powerhouses and dams all the way down the Thompson and Fraser rivers you would inevitably and in short order destroy the salmon fishing industry in those rivers. In fact, that is exactly what happened on the Columbia River. Up until 30 years ago, when the Columbia River began to be developed for power, there was, I am told, quite a considerable salmon fishing industry in that river. That industry has now been completely wiped out. I am told that for some years past now there has been an almost irreconcilable conflict on the Fraser River between the proponents of salmon and the proponents of power. This time the proponents of salmon appear to have won.

Hon. Mr. Reid: We had a good case.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Perhaps honourable senators may remember that famous line in Fitzgerald's Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám which reads:

> Ah, take the Cash, and let the Credit go...

In this case one might paraphrase it by saying:

> Ah, take the Fish, and let the Power go.

The second possibility of diversion from the Columbia River is diversion to the prairies. That has given rise to much controversy and publicity in the last few weeks—more, I think, than the subject intrinsically deserves. It is a comparatively new idea.

There was a report in 1962 by the Crippen-Wright Engineering Company to the Saskatchewan Power Corporation as to the various sources from which additional water could be obtained for the Saskatchewan River basin, and particularly for the arid southern sections of the Prairie provinces.

This was the subject a few months ago of correspondence between the then premier of Saskatchewan and Mr. Paul Martin in which it can be said that the premier put forward a claim for consideration on behalf of his province in regard to the water of the Columbia River. It is interesting to note that the premier did not approach the owners of the waters, the Province of British Columbia, but he approached the federal Government. It is also interesting to note that where you have a matter which relates to the arid parts of the Prairie provinces you would have thought that the premiers of Alberta and Manitoba would have joined with the premier of Saskatchewan in making representations. They, however, kept completely silent on the subject.

Basically, this claim did not relate to the use of the water for power generation, but for the purpose of consumption and irrigation on the Prairies. However, it is evident that costly diversion of water over the Rocky Mountains could not be justified for consumptive purposes alone, and a part of such a scheme would have to include the generation of power from such water as it flowed down the eastern side of the Rockies to compensate as far as possible for the loss of power from the Columbia itself.

That gave rise to a legal question which has been considerably canvassed in the last few weeks. As I told you, the treaty allows the diversion of water from the Columbia for consumptive purposes, but it does not permit use for the generation of hydroelectric power. Mr. Paul Martin has several times expressed the opinion that if you divert waters to the Prairies for the primary purpose of consumptive use it does not matter if it is used incidentally on the way to produce hydroelectric power, and I notice he was supported in his view very strongly by Mr. Davie Fulton when he gave evidence before the House of Commons committee. I am not going to enter into that. I am a little doubtful of the arguments of Mr. Paul Martin and Mr. Fulton, quite frankly, but for reasons which I shall give in a few minutes it seems that this is a purely theoretical speculation and has no practical application whatever.

The Crippen-Wright report clearly showed two things: First of all, that diversion of the Columbia waters to the Prairies would be extremely costly; and, secondly, that there are ample supplies of water from other sources which could, if necessary, be diverted through the Saskatchewan River system at very much lower expense. The Athabasca, the Peace and the upper Fraser would be much less expensive for that purpose. I have heard estimates that water from these alternative sources could be provided to Saskatchewan to meet its needs for the next hundred years.

Turning to the specific problem of diverting the water of the Columbia over the Rockies, let us see what would be involved. From an engineering point of view it would be possible—anything is possible from an engineering point of view. You would have to take the water stored above the dam at Mica, and you would have to take a considerable quantity because it would not be worth while to do so unless you had a fairly substantial amount. Then you would have to push that water some 2,000 feet up over the mountains and across the Rockies in order to enable it to run down the other side. This in turn would also involve two things; First of all, the water so diverted would no longer be available to produce cheap power at Mica; and secondly, and far more important, to push that water up the mountain would need practically the whole of the power—not only power produced by Mica but the power produced by Downie and by Revelstoke and the other plant as well—the whole of the power production of the Columbia River valley would be needed for that purpose. It needs an immense amount of power to push a river vertically nearly half a mile uphill.

It is true, of course, that we could recover a part of that power when the river is running down the eastern side of the Rockies by building power plants and producing power there. But the whole proposition to my mind sounds like a project from Alice in Wonderland. What you would be doing would be using cheap power on the west side of the Rockies to produce dear power on the east side of the Rockies.

I was rather impressed by a statement made by one of the witnesses before the House of Commons committee, Mr. Seaton from the Montreal Engineering Company, which was one of the consulting engineering firms. This was his way of describing what you would be doing in this situation if you attempted an operation of that kind. I quote:

> The proposal to pump the Columbia River water up the west side of the Rocky Mountains to generate power on the east side could be likened to depositing one dollar in the bank in British Columbia in order to draw out fifty cents on the Prairies after paying a two dollar service charge.

I again remind you that these resources belong to the Province of British Columbia, and I ask my honourable friends what the province would say to any such proposition as that. British Columbia will have developed four million kilowatts of cheap electric energy for the use of its inhabitants and the inhabitants of other provinces, and for the propagation and increase of industry throughout the province. You go to British Columbia and say, "Please give up all that power and let us use it to carry a part of the Columbia River across the Rockies"—no government of British Columbia out of bedlam could possibly agree to any suggestion of that kind. That is why I say that I think this whole proposition is not worth serious consideration by honourable senators. It is completely unrealistic. I would go as far as to say it is a pipe dream thought up a year or two ago by the ex-premier of Saskatchewan and some of his political friends, having no relation to the cold, hard facts of life.

Now I just want to come back to the accusation made by the opponents of this treaty, that by agreeing not to divert the Columbia except for certain purposes we are surrendering Canadian sovereignty. Honourable senators, just what are we surrendering? First of all, we are surrendering the right for 60 years to divert Columbia River waters into the Fraser system to produce expensive power and ruin our salmon fishing industry. Secondly, we are giving up the right for 60 years to carry part of the Columbia River across the Rocky Mountains. If that is surrendering Canadian sovereignty, then all I can say is that the more Canadian sovereignty of that kind we surrender, the better it will be.

I have nearly finished. I could of course go on for a very long time because this is an immense subject, but I do want to refer finally to one fact of which I think we should also be conscious. We are told that the United States has "put one over on us" in this treaty. We are told that our negotiators were incompetent. We are told that the United States will make demands and requirements on us in connection with the operation of the treaty which will impair our sovereignty and do I don't know what other things to us.

I suggest to my honourable friends that we have to remember that this is a treaty between Canada and the United States. Canada and the United States do not deal with one another, as governments, as one would expect the Government of Greece to deal with the Government of Turkey, or the Government of Israel to deal with the Government of the United Arab Republics. We are friends, and have been friends for many years. We are engaged in many co-operative efforts together. I have no fear that the United States will attempt to put one over us in connection with this treaty, any more than I have a fear that we will try to put one over the United States. We are not accustomed to dealing with one another in that kind of way.

It is true that we bargain hard. There was some hard and intense bargaining in connection with this treaty, but once it is signed, then both parties will carry out its terms in a reasonable way and so as not to hurt each other.

In looking at the various documents I was very much impressed by the preamble to the treaty itself, because it bears out the point I have been trying to make. It consists of four very short clauses which, with the permission of the house, I will read:

> The Governments of Canada and the United States of America:
>
> Recognizing that their peoples have, for many generations, lived together and co-operated with one another in many aspects of their national enterprises for the greater wealth and happiness of their respective nations, and
>
> Recognizing that the Columbia River basin, as a part of the territory of both countries, contains water resources that are capable of contributing greatly to the economic growth and strength and to the general welfare of the two nations, and
>
> Being desirous of achieving the development of those resources in a manner that will make the largest contribution to the economic progress of both countries and to the welfare of their peoples of which those resources are capable, and
>
> Recognizing that the greatest benefit to each country can be secured by co-operative measures for hydroelectric power generation and flood control, which will make possible other benefits as well,
>
> Have agreed as follows:—

Honourable senators, that is the spirit in which this treaty was negotiated, and I am as sure as I am of standing here this afternoon that that is the way in which the treaty will be carried out by the two parties to it.

Hon. Mr. Horner: The Alaska Panhandle should have been mentioned. That turned out to be not very good for Canada.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I have come to the end of what I have to say. I apologize for taking up so much of your time, but I think you realize, having heard my explanation, that the whole undertaking is an extraordinarily complicated one, and that it was necessary for me to say all of the things I have said this afternoon.

I have just one more thing to add. When the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) asked me to undertake the task of explaining this treaty to this house, a little over two months ago, I was abysmally ignorant of the whole affair. I knew nothing about it beyond what I had read in occasional news reports. Such names as Mica, Arrow, Libby and Duncan, and many other places, were unknown to me. Since that time I have done my best to qualify myself for the task the honourable leader imposed upon me. I have read the treaty and the protocol and the conditions of sale several times. I have read the whole of the documents included in this green-covered paper issued by the Departments of External Affairs and Northern Affairs and National Resources in February, 1964, and headed, "The Columbia River Treaty and Protocol and Related Documents," which includes extracts from the various engineering reports given at various times by different engineering firms. I have read this blue-covered book issued by the same departments in April 1964, entitled, "The Columbia River Treaty and Protocol: A Presentation." I have read the debates in the House of Commons, and I have read the 1,500 pages of evidence given before the House of Commons committee on External Affairs. That task started off, I agree, by being rather tedious, but as time went on it became rather fascinating. This project is one that grips the imagination, and I am not at all sorry I undertook the task the honourable Leader of the Government asked me to undertake.

Honourable senators, no man is infallible. I make no claim to infallibility. All I can state, speaking as one fallible man to other fallible men, is my sincere and honest conclusion after examining the whole of this material. My view is that this is a good treaty—a treaty that is good for both Canada and the United States, and good, in particular, for the Province of British Columbia. It is a treaty which fully protects Canadian sovereignty, and is a really striking example of international co-operation. As such, I commend it, without qualification and without reservation, to the favourable consideration of this honourable house.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, this afternoon we have listened to one of the finest explanations of a subject that we have heard in the Senate for a long time. Senator Hugessen has performed a very difficult task in, we all agree, a most proficient manner. He has said that he is not sorry that he made such a long study of this subject. I can assure him that the rest of us are not sorry either.

After listening to such an excellent explanation of this treaty this afternoon may I say to honourable senators that I personally would prefer to adjourn the debate, and make the few remarks I have to make about it at a later time. Accordingly, I move that the debate be adjourned.

Debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 2, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Farris for the second reading of Bill S-20, to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, perhaps I might be allowed to make a remark or two in connection with the speech to which we have just listened. I agree with what the honourable leader on the other side said about the clear, informative and reliable speech we have just heard. It relieves my mind in another way, if I may say so, because I have read my honourable friend's speech in the debate on the motion for second reading of the bill to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia and, knowing his great ability, I was intensely disappointed that he did not make a better job of it. But, the explanation is now clear. He has devoted himself in such an able and remarkable way to this very vexed problem of the Columbia River Treaty that he never had time to do justice to the other subject.

I understand from the Whip on our side and from both leaders that it is the general intention of the Senate to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I am at this late hour, when some of my friends have gradually disappeared, now making this speech to close the debate, on the assumption that that will be so.

There are a few comments that I think should be made in my own interest in connection with my original speech and some of the comments that have been made since. There are also a few other things which are in need of explanation.

The first issue we have to consider here, and I am sure it will be discussed more fully in the Banking and Commerce Committee when the bill goes there, is this: Do we need a western bank at all? I think the decision here is almost unanimous; I think it is common ground that, whether we need it or not, we would be benefited in Canada by the existence of a bank of that type.

There are today a number of chartered banks in Canada, but of these banks not a single one has its head office or its president west of the City of Toronto. I stated that before, and I submit to honourable senators that there has been no substantial challenge of that fact.

The next question that arises is this: Granting the need of a western bank, is a bank in which shares are allowed to be purchased by a government on behalf of the province, a detriment to or a good thing for that bank? It was my submission before and I repeat it now that, granted a western bank is a good thing for Canada, and particularly for the western provinces, then if that bank is financed in part by the resources of the province, in my submission it strengthens and gives assurance to the effectiveness and success of that bank. It is only when you challenge the good faith of the premier of the province and his conduct of that bank that you can have any doubt about it.

After the speech we have just listened to about the co-operation between the United States, Canada and British Columbia, which for the present time means the Government of Mr. Bennett, and the necessity for the success of this treaty to be carried out in its almost untold millions—if that is a good thing for this country, in which I agree 100 per cent, it is equally a good thing to take chances with the same premier of British Columbia in one paltry bank.

There are reasons offered against this bank. It is said we do not want a bank politically controlled; in other words, we do not want a bank in which the people of a province, through their government, which is the only way they can act, are making an investment to ensure and guarantee the success of that bank.

To my mind there has been a tremendous overlooking of the fact that the shares in this bank are the same as shares bought individually by the people of British Columbia, because they are under the complete control, once the bank is established, of the Bank Act and the Bank of Canada.

Speaking of the Bank of Canada, I wonder if it ever occurred to honourable senators that that is the most outstanding political bank there is in Canada. It is a bank with wide powers. I ran over them last night, after the adjournment. The Bank of Canada can issue bank notes; it has tremendous control, and if you have somebody running that bank in keeping with the picture that has been painted by my honourable friend Senator White, it might get us into more trouble than even Mr. Bennett would be capable of doing, because the powers are far greater than any premier and his government can exercise in buying shares in a bank.

I repeat what I said in opening, that the shares purchased in this bank are shares that confer only the ordinary powers of an owner. It is just as if you and I and the rest of us had enough money and put it all in shares. It is just as if Laurentide, which claims it has enough money to finance a bank, put its money into this bank and controlled it—it would control it as an owner—and Laurentide or any other body would have just as much power to interfere with the well running of that bank as would the government of the Province of British Columbia.

I said in opening, and I repeat it now because I have heard no successful denial of it, that between a private company that can purchase enough shares, as Laurentide has boasted it can, and an equal amount of money put in by the government of a province, which is most likely to have the interest of the people in the province in which the investment is made?

In that statement I am making no attack on Laurentide whatever. I am simply stating that as an illustration of the fact, that I would sooner take chances with the government of a province in that connection than I would with the moneys of any big company, particularly so after the letter which came from Power Corporation of Canada Limited. I do not know what that letter means, but it certainly does not give me the same impression that I had before. And again, I am not saying that by way of attack, but only by way of comparison.

Honourable senators have done some surmising about what Mr. Bennett will do. My honourable friend Senator White has gone into the question of what happened in regard to the B.C. Electric.

All I have to say about that to my honourable friend and to the other senators is that those things happened some time ago. The judgment was given in the court against the government and adjustments were made accordingly, and then the provincial government election was run, and there was not a single Conservative elected in the Province of British Columbia, including the former Minister of Justice who resigned under Mr. Diefenbaker's Government and came to British Columbia to challenge the government on that issue.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: What has that to do with this bill?

Hon. Mr. Farris: What has that to do with the bill? It has this to do with it, that the issue was an attack made by my honourable friend Senator White on Mr. Bennett.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: He did not make an attack on Mr. Bennett.

Hon. Mr. Farris: All right. You can read it there. You say that and I say to the contrary. I say you can see it right in the record, and I do not think Senator White will challenge that.

Hon. Mr. White: Do you approve of the action of Premier Bennett and his government in taking over the B.C. Electric?

Hon. Mr. Farris: No I do not, but people of British Columbia, by a majority of 41 to 5, did approve.

Hon. Mr. White: You have one example of what he did and can expect another.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That may be so, but I dispute that that is proof.

I want to recall what I said in opening when I quoted from the case of the Bank of Toronto vs Lamb, decided by the Privy Council. This was a case, as you will recall, in which the Province of Quebec imposed taxes on banks, and Lord Hobhouse said:

> The next point raised is that this power of taxation has a power to destroy, and if it is allowed for a province to have that power, that may destroy the banks of the country.

Lord Hobhouse said, "There is no proof that any such thing will happen; there are only assumptions." And I say that all my friend has to suggest about Premier Bennett, or any government that is investing in shares in a bank, is that because he has done one thing that we may not approve of, therefore, we can assume he will do that again. The judgment of the Privy Council was to say in effect that "As far as the courts of this country are concerned, we refuse to act on any such assumption."

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Would the honourable senator agree that we do have a discretion as to whether the charter is granted?

Hon. Mr. Farris: We have a discretion but it is a discretion which has to be properly exercised within the limits of the Constitution. I will have a word or two to say about that.

My friend, the Whip on this side (Hon. Mr. Beaubien, Provencher) said to me, "Be sure you do not get into any controversy at this stage, because this bill is going to committee." I do not want to get into a controversy; I want to to be peaceful, and I want to see this bill go to committee. I point out to honourable senators that I have never discussed this question with Mr. Bennett. However, he has said to the press that he is willing to come to the committee and to state his case before it.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): Then we won't have a meeting—we will kill the bill on second reading.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I would think that if the bill did not receive second reading Mr. Bennett would be justified in saying they were afraid to give second reading. He would say, "I was willing to go down there, and they didn't want to hear me." I would expect that those who did not want the bill would be the first to welcome him for that purpose. I hope he will come. I would be interested to see how he would perform there. I do not think I have ever heard him make a speech in my life. I think he should come, so that some of our senators, with all their ability, will be able to ask him questions, and then we will get the acid test. That is all I want to say about that.

Senator Cook made the statement that if the province put 25 per cent in, they can make it 90 per cent by changing the legislation, that is, assuming that the Legislature of British Columbia would be prepared to do that, and that if such a change were made they would be free of taxation. That can be looked after very easily in two or three different ways. In the first place, it can be looked after by the Legislature of the Province of British Columbia. In the second place, it can be looked after in the Bank Act. Once these banks are established, the full jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada can deal with the matter, and they could deal with it mighty soon.

Honourable senators, some discussion about the Constitution came into this debate. My friend Senator Thorvaldson gave as his opinion—I do not recall that he gave any reasons to support it—but he gave as his the opinion, which I respect, that it would be unconstitutional to have a bank controlled in part or in whole by a legislature. I know of no authority to support that.

My honourable friend who sits just in front of me (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), and who delivered such a fine speech today, stated that if the province controls in that way it will be doing indirectly what it cannot do directly. Now, there is no doubt about the high authority of the Privy Council and the Supreme Court of Canada that a legislature, or as a matter of fact the Dominion itself, cannot do indirectly what it has not the constitutional power to do directly. However, I want to point out my considered opinion as a lawyer, that this is not a case of the province doing anything indirectly.

Section 92 of the British North America Act deals with the powers of the provinces, and paragraph 13 says that the province has exclusive jurisdiction over property and civil rights. The Bank Act itself has said that shares in a bank are personal property. Therefore, under the Bank Act, and under the British North America Act, the province has exclusive jurisdiction to deal with property, including shares in the bank; and of course that is subject, after the bank becomes incorporated, to the exclusive powers of the Bank Act itself. When the province is passing an act, as it passed Bill 15 in the legislature sometime in January or February, it is not dealing indirectly with any powers, but directly with its own express powers; and I say that it has just as much jurisdiction to buy shares as has the Laurentide Company, or as have any of us in our individual capacity to buy shares, and once they have bought them, they do not have any jurisdiction to go outside the limitations of ownership in the shares. That is all subject to the rights and powers of the Bank Act, under the British North America Act.

Honourable senators, I have prepared notes only to this extent this afternoon, because I have had the assurance from senators who have spoken in this debate, and from the leaders on both sides of the house, that this bill will go to the Banking and Commerce Committee. I think the bill should go to that committee, where members on both sides of the house will have an opportunity to learn more about it, and will have a good showdown on this question.

The Hon. the Speaker: It has been moved by the honourable Senator Farris, seconded by the honourable Senator Beaubien (Provencher) that this bill be now read a second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Farris, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN IN CHRIST CHURCH—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-11, to incorporate Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved that the amendments be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, there are four amendments to this bill. I learned that the legal advisers who appeared before the committee in the other house were in agreement with the amendments suggested. I am of the opinion that concurrence in these amendments is not such as to require the house to go into committee to discuss the bill clause by clause.

Amendments concurred in.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1954

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of the Senate I should draw to the attention of members of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce that there will be a meeting of that committee tonight at 8 o'clock and another tomorrow morning at 9.30. The Senate is very busy.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 675)

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to whom was referred the Bill S-7, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of March 18, 1964, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 3, line 8: Strike out "twenty-five" and substitute therefor "one hundred".

2. Page 4: Strike out clause 5 and substitute therefor the following:

"5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 116 thereof, the following sections:

'116A. (1) The Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the certificates of competency and service to be held by masters and mates of fishing vessels, including the regulations prescribing,

(a) the grades and classes of certificates;

(b) the qualifications of applicants for certificates;

(c) the examination of applicants for certificates; and

(d) the fees to be paid for examinations and the issuance of certificates.

(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Part, regulations made pursuant to subsection (1) may provide for the issue of certificates to persons who are not British subjects.

'116B. (1) Every person who is a Canadian citizen and every person who is a landed immigrant within the meaning of the Immigration Act is, on application to the Minister, entitled to

(a) a certificate of service as a fishing master, or

(b) a certificate of service as a fishing mate, if within the five years preceding the date of his application and before the first day of December, 1965, he has served for one fishing season as fishing master or fishing mate, as the case may be, of a Canadian fishing vessel of over twenty-five tons gross tonnage and is able to provide evidence satisfactory to the Minister as to his experience and ability.

(2) A certificate issued to a landed immigrant pursuant to subsection (1) shall be valid for such period as the Minister may fix.

(3) In this section and section 116A, "fishing vessel" includes a vessel used in the transferring to shore of the catch of other vessels.' "

3. Page 16: Strike out line 23 and substitute therefor the following:

" '(c) the manager or operator of a ship and any agent of a ship made liable by law for damage caused by the ship.' "

4. Page 19: Strike out clause 35 and substitute therefor the following:

"35. Section 671 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (2) thereof, the following subsection:

'(2a) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2),

(a) no goods shall be transported by water or by land and water, and

(b) no passengers shall be transported by water either directly or by way of a foreign port in any ship other than a Canadian ship from one place in Canada to another place in Canada both of which places are situated within the area comprising the Great Lakes, their connecting and tributary waters and the River St. Lawrence and its tributary waters as far seaward as a straight line drawn

(c) from Cap des Rosiers to West Point Anticosti Island, and

(d) from Anticosti Island to the north shore of the River St. Lawrence along the meridian of longitude sixty-three degrees west.' "

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 10, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965. (English and French texts).

Copy of Ordinances, chapters 1 to 17, made by the Council of the Yukon Territory, assented to at the 1964 First Session pursuant to section 20 of the Yukon Act, chapter 53, Statutes of Canada, 1952-53, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-849, dated June 4, 1964, approving same. (English text).

PRIVATE BILLS

THE DOMINION OF CANADA GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-30, respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendment:

Line 22: Strike out "contained" and substitute therefor "continued".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be taken into consideration now.

Honourable senators, the amendment which was made in committee changing the word "contained" to "continued" was, I think, in order to correct a typographical error, but we had to deal with this by way of an amendment. In section 2 of the bill providing for the saving of existing rights, it went on to provide that these actions might be "prosecuted, contained, completed and enforced", whereas what was meant was, "prosecuted, continued, completed and enforced".

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-31, respecting The Casualty Company of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CROWN CORPORATIONS (PROVINCIAL TAXES AND FEES) BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-95, respecting the payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE QUEBEC BOARD OF TRADE—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-28, respecting The Quebec Board of Trade:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-28, respecting The Quebec Board of Trade, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 6: Delete clause 15.

2. Page 6, line 16: Strike out "16" and substitute therefor "15".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, the first amendment is simply to strike out clause 15 of the bill. Clause 15 provided for the area of operations of The Quebec Board of Trade, which was covered already by clause 3. The committee felt that clause 15 was repetitive. The second amendment is as a consequence of the first. Because clause 15 is deleted, clause 16 becomes clause 15.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

WORLD MORTGAGE CORPORATION—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-32, to incorporate World Mortgage Corporation:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings of the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-32, to incorporate World Mortgage Corporation, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 2, line 16: Strike out "80" and substitute therefor "81".

2. Page 2, line 17: after "invested" add the following:

"Provided that nothing in this Act shall be deemed to permit the exchange of unissued shares of the Company for any unissued shares of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company or of any company formed by the amalgamation of Eastern & Chartered Trust Company with one or more other trust companies."

3. Page 2, line 18: Strike out "other than" and substitute therefor "including".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, the first amendment is necessary because the figure "80" in the bill is a misprint.

The second and third amendments were adopted by the committee in order to have the bill conform with the recommendations of Mr. K. R. MacGregor, the Superintendent of Insurance. The second amendment is to the effect that there shall be no share-for-share arrangement; that it would be shares for issued shares of the trust company. The third amendment is to ensure that no borrowed money will be used to acquire more shares of the trust company.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PENAL REFORM

UNANSWERED INQUIRIES

On Inquiries Nos. 1 and 2—Hon. Senator Croll:

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, when might we expect answers to the very important inquiries by honourable Senator Croll? They are lengthy, and are reprinted daily in the minutes, involving thousands of pages of printing over a period of three months. Is there any possibility of having them disposed of?

Hon. David A. Croll: I can give some information on that. The department officials have discussed the matter with me. They have not come up with the complete answers as I thought they ought to; they are working on it and hope to do it by the fifteenth of the month.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, as I understand it, the honourable senator has had a return to his inquiries, but he was not satisfied with it. I wonder what right he has, to have a return made to him, and, not being satisfied with it, to demand another one. I think we all would like to see this completed and removed from the Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I did not say I had a return. I said I discussed a return with them. I have not had any such thing as a return. They discussed it with me and they are making a return that will be, I hope, more explanatory and will give the house more facts than they intended to give.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Is not that exactly what I said, honourable senator? I said a return had been made to you, with which you were not satisfied and you asked for a new return. That seems to me to be an amazing procedure.

Hon. Mr. Croll: What is amazing about their not answering the questions that are there before them? That was the only reason I did not think they had made the kind of return that would give the answers to the questions. That is the only reason that I objected; it was not a complete return; it was not a proper return. They agreed with me and said they would go back and work on it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: What right had you to ask for a different return from the one you got?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I had a right to obtain complete answers to the questions.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, may I ask permission of the Senate to call item No. 11—which deals with the bill in respect of the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company—as item No. 3 on the Order Paper, so that Senator Lambert will have an opportunity of presenting the explanation this afternoon.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

DEBATE ON MOTION FOR APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, on a question of personal privilege, I am afraid I must admit to the Senate that one of the statements that I made yesterday afternoon, in connection with the Columbia River Treaty, was erroneous though quite inadvertently so.

I was dealing with the power that can be produced by the Mica dam and comparing it with the power that is produced at the Barnhart dam above Cornwall, half of the power from which goes to the United States and half to Canada. At page 682 of Hansard, I said:

> Mica will produce just about twice as much power as the powerhouse at the Barnhart dam.

What I should have said was that Mica will produce just about twice as much power as Canada gets from the Barnhart dam. In other words, it will be about the same capacity as the Barnhart dam. Therefore, I was 50 per cent in error.

Perhaps I might be permitted to observe that when a politician makes a statement for the first time that is only 50 per cent in error, that is not too bad.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES (UNITED NATIONS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. L. M. Gouin moved the third reading of Bill S-24, to amend the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRESIDENT OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MEDICINE

GUEST IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, with the leave of the Senate, I would like to make a few remarks at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is agreed.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Honourable senators, seated in the Speaker's gallery is the most distinguished President of the Royal Society of Medicine, Mr. Terence Cawthorne, and his wife. I am sure all honourable senators join with me in extending to them a most hearty welcome, not only to Ottawa but to Canada.

We are to have the pleasure of listening to Mr. Cawthorne tomorrow at a luncheon being given by the Health Society at a joint committee meeting between the Senate and the House of Commons.

Thank you.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hugessen, pursuant to notice by Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West):

> That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the Protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this House do approve the same.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all greatly pleased that this important resolution is now before the Senate. It deals with one of the most important matters that will come before Parliament this session.

I congratulated the honourable sponsor of this resolution (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) yesterday on his fine presentation, which certainly indicated considerable hard work and research on his part. I feel he presented a full picture of the work that is being done in connection with this treaty.

Since listening yesterday to the speech by the honourable sponsor of this resolution, and reading it this morning in Hansard, I have had to spend most of my time determining just what I would say. Indeed, I have spent most of my time eliminating much I had prepared, because the subject was so well covered by the honourable sponsor that what I had prepared would have been repetition on my part.

I was reminded of a slogan which appears every morning on the top of the first page of the Charlottetown Guardian, a very fine newspaper of the Maritime provinces. Quite modestly, the slogan says, "The Guardian covers the Island as the Dew." The thought occurred to me that Senator Hugessen covered this subject in much the same manner; and he has left little to be said.

Senator Hugessen gave us first a comprehensive history of the development of the Columbia River, not only in Canada but also in the United States, in which latter country, of course, there has been far greater development than in Canada. He also thoroughly described the geography of the Columbia River and supplied us with a map so that we would understand it better. He explained to us the legal situation as far as the two countries are concerned, and also as to the rights of the Province of British Columbia.

I am sure that all members of this house will agree that this is a vast subject. For the past 20 years it has received careful study both in Canada and the United States. One has only to examine papers, booklets, pamphlets and newspaper clippings to realize that fact. I am sure honourable senators will agree that the subject has been deserving of that attention, for the Columbia River can be considered as one of the great international rivers of the world. So far as power production is concerned, it is one of the greatest on the North American continent.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention, nor do I think it necessary, to become involved in a lengthy discussion of the treaty and the protocol, because the subject has been thoroughly discussed in the other place, in committees, and of course by engineers, and others, at different times. Secondly, there is general approval of the treaty and the protocol. I believe there is very little objection anywhere in Canada regarding this matter, and there is certainly very little in the United States. Both countries, I am sure, feel that the treaty and the protocol are fair to each of them, and that it is going to be of great benefit to both.

It has been said, and rightly so, that this is a matter which concerns principally British Columbia and western Canada. However, it is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of Parliament, and in general is of concern to Canada as a whole.

Some may wonder why I, coming as I do from the Atlantic provinces, a long way from British Columbia, would be debating this resolution today. I make no apology for doing so, although I feel a bit nervous in speaking before some of our senators from British Columbia, who are not only well informed about the Columbia River by reading about it, but also have a thorough knowledge of the river, being, as it were, on the ground.

I would point out, however, that I was a member of the Cabinet committee in 1957 and 1958, which heard evidence and studied the subject matter which led to the enacting and signing of the treaty we have before us now. That committee was under the chairmanship of the Honourable Alvin Hamilton, then Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Serving on the committee were such men as the Honourable Davie Fulton, former Minister of Justice; the Honourable Howard Green; the Honourable George Pearkes, all ministers from British Columbia, and many others. General McNaughton, of course, attended many of the meetings and gave evidence. As honourable senators well know, General McNaughton was Chairman of the International Joint Commission, an outstanding engineer and a distinguished soldier. Many others attended, particularly from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Negotiations undertaken at that time with the United States culminated in the signing of the treaty in Washington in January 1961. The treaty was signed by the then Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, and the then President of the United States, General Eisenhower. This treaty and subsequent protocol, indeed stand as testimony to the hard work, perseverance and dedication of the men I have mentioned, and many others who worked with them at that time and subsequently.

The list is long, and I would not care to undertake to mention all who took part and made worthwhile contributions. However, I think special mention could and should be made of men like Mr. Gordon Robertson, who was Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and Mr. Gordon MacNab, a brilliant engineer connected with the Department of Northern Affairs. Both these men gave able assistance and made a commendable contribution.

May I point out at this time that the development of the Columbia River formed part of a program of national development embarked upon by the previous government after it was elected to office in 1957. Many projects were undertaken at that time in Canada which would not have been possible without that national development policy.

In that connection, I think of the South Saskatchewan dam, under construction at the present time and which will soon be completed, and which will mean so much to that province. I think of the federal aid which was given to the Beechwood Power project in the Province of New Brunswick, and which has meant so much to the economic welfare and development of industry there. I think of the Maritime Power Grid, which I hope some day will be part of an electric power grid for the whole of Canada. I also think of the Pine Point Railway—and I could go on and mention many more projects. This great program of national development made it possible for each province to get, to a large extent, the full potential of the natural resources of which it is the owner under the British North America Act, just as British Columbia is the owner in this instance and will receive valuable benefits from the development of the Columbia River.

Furthermore, recognizing the importance of hydroelectric power and its relationship to the policy of national development, the former government also set up the National Energy Board, as you will recall, which supervises and in certain cases regulates the export of hydroelectric power while at the same time ensuring that there will be adequate supplies to meet domestic demands. The development of these resources augers well for the future of Canada, for without power industrialization is not possible. This seems a rather hackneyed phrase, but nevertheless we all recognize that it is true.

Returning to the treaty under discussion, the Honourable Davie Fulton, who took a tremendous part in this work, and who was the chairman of our negotiating team, testifying before the External Affairs Committee of the other place on May 11, 1964, said:

> May I say at the outset that my view then—

That is, in 1961.

> —was and now is that the treaty represents both an extremely advantageous arrangement for Canada, and a distinguished and practical example of international co-operation in the development of a project to the mutual advantage of the countries concerned.

I might say that this was in reply to considerable criticism which was being received at that time.

It is well known that the members of the present Government, who were then in opposition, did object in great measure to this treaty and to the development. It is comforting to know now that the objections they raised at that time have now been reconsidered by them and that they give the same approval to the treaty that is before us today as did the former government.

The treaty which we are being asked to approve is, in the main, the same that was signed in Washington in January 1961. The exchange of notes and the protocol of January 22, 1964, which now form part of the treaty, merely clarify some of the articles of the treaty itself. The difficulties and, I might say, the controversy arising out of these difficulties, arose after the treaty had been signed when the Province of British Columbia decided it would dispose of its downstream benefits in the United States and proceed with the development of the Peace River to satisfy its own immediate hydroelectric requirements. We were told something of this yesterday by Senator Hugessen. It has been said that the disposal of these benefits by British Columbia confers benefits on the United States which are over and above those to which they are entitled or which were intended under the treaty. Of course, there is the old argument that once hydroelectric power is exported its benefits are gone forever.

I have no intention, honourable senators, of entering into a discussion on these points. I think they have already been quite thoroughly answered in the other place.

However, this does not affect the treaty in the main, in that it makes possible the development of the Columbia with all its benefits. It will also make possible in the years to come other great hydroelectric power developments in the Province of British Columbia—this also was outlined for us yesterday—that would not be possible without this treaty. I am sure this is fully understood. I will not elaborate on the benefits to Canada from the development of the Columbia. These have already been referred to and fully explained by Senator Hugessen.

While there is not general agreement over the decision of the government of British Columbia, which disposes of what is at the present time surplus hydroelectric power, there is nevertheless general agreement on the treaty itself which creates this surplus power in that province.

I come now to the agreement. This was, of course, an international agreement, and as is the case in most international agreements there are only two parties to it, namely the two countries involved. But, as we all know, energy resources, as with all other natural resources, are the property of the provinces. Consequently, for all intents and purposes, the Province of British Columbia has been considered as a greatly interested party to the agreement. This also was very plainly outlined to us yesterday.

This agreement secures for British Columbia the right to divert the Kootenay River into the Columbia, as one of the main benefits involved, if this is ultimately desired in order to increase the output of power from the Canadian hydro plants on the Columbia. This right, in addition to the three dams that are to be constructed, will subsequently mean the generation of tremendous hydro power in British Columbia. As a matter of fact, the treaty confers on Canada, or more particularly on British Columbia, a tremendous net advantage. In other words, in spite of all the criticisms, and there have been many, British Columbia and Canada will benefit to a degree not possible without a treaty.

Honourable senators will note that, including other benefits, the development of hydroelectric power on the Columbia River will under the terms of the treaty mean great benefits to Canada. It provides that Canada, or more particularly British Columbia, is entitled to one-half of the power generated downstream as a result of Canadian storage dams. It took a long time to get the United States to recognize that Canada should be entitled to these downstream benefits. This was a great victory for our negotiating team.

The treaty further provides that this power is to be delivered free of charge to a point on the border for use in this country. We do not have to build any transmission or other lines in the United States: the power is delivered right to the door of Canada. The United States will pay substantial sums to the Province of British Columbia in return for downstream benefits and for flood control. These payments will have a total value of over $500 million by 1973, when the project is completed. Again, this was fully explained to us yesterday by Senator Hugessen.

I was also interested to hear that the total construction costs, including compensation, will amount to some $448 million by 1973. As a result of these payments three necessary dams we have mentioned will be built in British Columbia at no cost to the people of that province—Mica, Arrow and Duncan. Furthermore, it will pay half the capital cost of the generators for Canadian use at the Mica dam, the largest of the three; and, as has been explained, Mica is the dam which will produce the power, and it is the one concerning which I think the honourable Senator Hugessen corrected a statement he made in his speech to us yesterday. It is the most important dam of the three, and the other two, Arrow and Duncan, are mostly for storage purposes. It will mean the eventual production of 20 billion kilowatt hours of energy for Canada. I also hesitate to mention such large quantities of power, knowing so little about these figures myself. The magnitude of this can be realized from the fact that the total kilowatt hours represents one-fifth of the total for all Canada. It will mean the construction of the Libby reservoir by the United States in the State of Montana, and will make possible the generation of more than 200,000 kilowatt years per annum of low cost energy in Canada for the development of the Kootenays. That is another downstream benefit.

The actual construction of the various dams will also mean a lot to the labour force in Canada—a peak labour force of about 3,000 men will be needed for a few years.

Canada will benefit in foreign exchange reserves as a result of payment by the United States of over $300 million in United States funds, of which $254 million will be paid in 1964. The benefits to the United States are considerable. It will secure substantial flood protection and a very large increase in power production at plants on the Columbia River downstream.

Honourable senators, as I said at the outset, the benefits are mutual. This treaty, which will mean so much to Canada, is the product of an enlightened and well-planned policy of national development, introduced and implemented, as I have mentioned before, by the previous government, and supplemented by the present government. It is just one of the many projects being undertaken in Canada as a result of this policy. Such projects as the Hamilton Falls in Labrador with a potential of six million horsepower, the Manicouagan development in Quebec, and the harnessing of the tides of Passamaquoddy in New Brunswick and the State of Maine, which I personally and sincerely hope will be proceeded with, and the development of hydro power at Baie d'Espoir in Newfoundland, will lead to what we hope will eventually materialize as a national power grid in order that the country as a whole may obtain maximum benefits from these developments.

At this stage I should like to say a few words in connection with flood control. I have mentioned this already, and my honourable colleague Senator Hugessen mentioned it extensively yesterday. This is one of the great benefits which will accrue to the United States. Under Article IV of the treaty Canada is responsible for providing this flood control for 60 years after the ratification date. The treaty provides that Canada shall operate storage in the Columbia River basin when called upon by any authority designated by the United States Government for that purpose, and Canada shall be obliged to provide the necessary flood controls for the duration of the flood period at the time the request is made. In return the United States Government undertakes to pay to Canada a total of $64,400,000. That amount is to be paid at the present time and not over a period of sixty years. I think if we estimate the interest on $64 million over a period of sixty years, the amount would be approximately $180 million.

In addition to flood control there is the matter of irrigation. In this respect the United States will also benefit from the control of the Columbia. However, Canada is not so fortunate. We had hoped that there would be more benefits, but physically and economically it is not possible.

I was interested in the brief presented to the committee by the Government of Saskatchewan in which they complained of lack of water from the Columbia River for this purpose. As honourable senators know, the South Saskatchewan basin is one of the few water-hungry areas of this country. Senators from the west will understand this better than we do in the east, particularly those of us from New Brunswick where we always have an abundance of water and at times too much. The South Saskatchewan dam, started by the previous government, and still under construction, will fulfill a substantial amount of the need from the point of view of irrigation on the Prairies. But it has been said that the demands on the South Saskatchewan River in the future will exceed the supply, and undoubtedly this is true. The government of this province maintains that the Columbia River represents the only direct source of additional water for the South Saskatchewan basin. I am not sure they will be so insistent upon this opinion because I think it has been proved that the situation is otherwise. At any rate, this view is not generally conceded. There are other rivers mentioned in northern British Columbia which it is felt can and will in time be used for this purpose. The two rivers mentioned in the evidence before the committee were the Peace River and the Athabasca River.

The question arises, can water from the Columbia River be diverted to satisfy Saskatchewan's needs? That was explained very thoroughly yesterday, and also by the witnesses appearing before the Commons committee, particularly in relation to the cost of pumping water up one side of the Rocky Mountains and down the other.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I think he might have been about 50 per cent out on that too.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Who?

Hon. Mr. Horner: The speaker yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We have pretty sound evidence. I find on reading the evidence before the committee that the witnesses then made the same statement. However, there are a lot of people like yourself who are not convinced. There still seems to be some doubt on this.

The Saskatchewan brief requested that ratification of the Columbia treaty be made subject to a further protocol which would provide for 6,000 cubic feet per second, or five billion acre-feet, to be diverted annually from the Columbia for the use of the Prairie region.

The treaty further states that water from the Columbia may be diverted during the life of the treaty for consumptive purposes, and it goes on to define "consumptive" as "water for irrigation and domestic requirements". A study by a Montreal engineering firm, which is part of the evidence, pointed out that it would be a costly operation to pump water from the Columbia over the Rockies: it would be cheaper to divert water from the Peace River and the Athabasca River. A consequence of diverting water from the Columbia over the Rockies, should this be brought about, would be the generation of hydroelectric power on the downward passage.

The Province of Saskatchewan maintains that the present terms of the treaty defining the word "consumptive" preclude this generation of power. I think their minds have been disabused on that score by what has already been said, but it can be stated that this would be merely an ancillary effect of the pumping of water from the Columbia over the Rockies for irrigation in Saskatchewan.

As I understand the situation, this whole question is hypothetical because, in the first instance, we are dealing with a water resource which is the exclusive property of British Columbia, and diversion would be a matter of negotiation between the two provinces. Secondly, we are dealing with a need or requirement that does not exist at the present time.

Honourable senators, it is generally understood that it is impossible to draft a treaty or agreement of any kind that will satisfy everyone, but I do feel that the present treaty is in the best interests of Canada and of the people of British Columbia. In this connection I would quote from the evidence of Mr. Fulton when he spoke to the committee. On page 1161 of the record he had this to say:

> Mind you, while we had been negotiating for a year during the formal treaty negotiations, this was under study since 1944 and other intensive studies were going on prior to our actual negotiations. I therefore felt, and I still feel, that we had exhausted the possibilities by way of analysis, study and so on, and that this treaty was—I am going to say this and I want to be allowed to go on—the best that Canada could get, and that this treaty represents a substantial net advantage to Canada.

To sum up very briefly, the treaty provides, (a) Canadian entitlement and participation in the downstream benefits—it was a great victory having the United States agree that there was entitlement in the first place; (b) in return for flood control, the United States pays $69.6 million towards the cost of the construction of the Mica, Arrow and Duncan dams in Canada; (c) United States and Canada agree on a 50-50 basis to share the downstream benefits, with the United States undertaking to deliver the power free of charge to a point designated at the border; (d) British Columbia will sell its share of the power to the United States for 405 mills; (e) the treaty is to last for 60 years; and (f) the treaty insures Canada's right to divert the Kootenay into the Columbia to increase the generation of power. There are other benefits on both sides, but I think those are the most important.

I am sure that these points have been thoroughly discussed and approved. May I say that we in the Opposition are definitely in favour of this treaty, particularly since it is the same as the treaty proposed by the former government of 1961. We are in absolute agreement with it, and I believe the people of Canada, and all people in general who are concerned with it, will give it their full approval.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I want at the very outset to sincerely compliment honourable Senator Hugessen upon his splendid explanation of the Columbia River Treaty. In my opinion, his speech was a masterpiece, especially so when one considers that he lives two or three thousand miles from British Columbia.

In rising to take part in the debate on the motion for the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States regarding the Columbia River, I feel that, for the benefit of honourable senators who reside in other provinces, I should in my opening remarks make some mention of the Columbia River itself. Senator Hugessen yesterday gave certain information relative to the number of dams on the North American continent, and also the elevation of the Columbia River from its source to the sea and the land along its banks. It is not my purpose to repeat that information. However, with respect to the Columbia River it is not generally known, and is now well nigh forgotten, that back in 1846 a treaty was signed between Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and the United States of America, for the settlement of the Oregon boundary. One particular clause in that treaty preserved the rights of Canadian or British subjects in Canada to free access to the sea through Oregon and Washington. I will take up but a minute in order to read you the clause giving that right to British or Canadian settlers on this side of the border. The act is dated 1846, and the clause reads as follows:

> From the point at which the 49th parallel of north latitude shall be found to intersect the great northern branch of the Columbia river, the navigation of the said branch shall be free and open to the Hudson's Bay Company, and to all British subjects trading with the same, to the point where the said branch meets the main stream of the Columbia, and thence down the said main stream to the ocean, with free access into and through the said river or rivers; it being understood, that all the usual portages along the line thus described, shall in like manner be free and open.

That treaty was signed many years ago, and no attention was paid to it, and here we are at this date with a treaty between the two countries respecting the Columbia River.

As I pointed out, that particular clause preserves the right of Canadian and British subjects to free access through Washington and Oregon right to the sea. Navigation on the Columbia River was to remain free and open to the Hudson's Bay Company and to all British subjects trading with the same. Yet, when dams were built on the Columbia in United States territory between the boundary line with Canada and the Pacific Ocean, no specific protest was made by Canada regarding our rights on the river. British Columbia did not mean much, or anything, in those very early days, and so the Columbia River in the United States was blocked by dams.

The Columbia River in the United States was a great salmon spawning river, as mentioned by Senator Hugessen, but with the building of the dams the salmon began to deteriorate, with the result that today there is left no more than ten per cent of the vast hordes of salmon which used the river in those days. It is true that Canadian and United States authorities have, since that date, spent many millions of dollars in hatcheries in an endeavour to restore the salmon, but all without success.

Honourable senators can quite understand, therefore, the great and successful fight we in British Coumbia put up to prevent a repetition of what happened on the Columbia should the building of dams on the Fraser River be proceeded with, although I am inclined to the view that General McNaughton used it as a kind of club, and I must say it seemed to work as a club for quite a while.

I am pleased, therefore, that the question of diverting the waters of the Columbia River to the Fraser River has been left out of the present treaty for at least 30 or 60 years. The salmon in the Fraser River are not to be sacrificed or destroyed.

It should be noted that Canada, or British Columbia, up until 1944 did not consider diverting the Columbia River into the Fraser, and apart from what no doubt would have happened in British Columbia, the diversion of the Columbia River into the Fraser River would have damaged not only the electric power of the State of Washington, but would also have caused a lowering of the water available for irrigation and domestic purposes in the Columbia.

It is worthwhile recalling that the problem of diverting water from either the United States or the Canadian side arose also in connection with the Great Lakes at a time when the United States authorities threatened to divert the water of the Great Lakes through the Chicago sanitation canal to the Mississippi and, finally, to the Gulf of Mexico. It appears from information received that the consequent lowering of the level of the lakes below Chicago navigation would have been seriously affected, to the detriment of Canadian shipping.

The Fraser River is fully protected under the treaty for 60 years. I believe that long before that time hydraulic dams may well be a thing of the past, and that nuclear power will have taken over. It will not be surprising if the dams to be built in the United States, and the one to be built in the Peace River area, are found to be the last dams built because of the coming into use of atomic power.

Having said that, I would like to deal with parts of the treaty itself. First of all, it should be noted that the Columbia River and the treaty have been before Parliament now for some ten years or more. I am of the opinion that the history of how it started should be placed on the record.

In 1954 the government of British Columbia signed an agreement with the Kaiser Aluminum Company of the United States to build a dam at the lower Arrow Lake. I hold in my hand a copy of that agreement. The Kaiser Aluminum Company at that time was at loggerheads with the Aluminum Company of America and, therefore, wanted cheaper power in order to be able to successfully compete with its rival. The proposed dam at the lower Arrow Lake would have done just that.

Kaiser, in 1954, placed a deposit of over $132,000 in the hands of Premier Bennett, but it was not until last year that that cheque was said to have been returned. Mr. Bennett's excuse, when challenged on the matter, was that he was holding the cheque simply because Kaiser had not asked for it back. That, to me, seemed a somewhat lame or poor reason.

However, it was well that the Kaiser deal was quashed by a bill introduced by the late Right Honourable C. D. Howe in June 1955. I am surprised that in the debates in the House of Commons and in the debate here so far, the name of C. D. Howe has not been mentioned. He was the one who spiked the first deal that Bennett would have made, which would have ruined that entire section of country and river. Mr. Howe introduced a bill, which is still on the statute books, that had that effect.

Mr. Bennett, the Premier of the Province of British Columbia at that time, had not consulted any of the United States Government authorities, or even Ottawa. His only contact was with the Kaiser Aluminum Company of the United States. Honourable senators can read the entire story if they care to look up the records. As it turned out, the intervention of the late Mr. Howe has been a great help to the provincial government, especially when one considers the large sums of money British Columbia will receive under the present treaty as compared with what it would have received under the Kaiser deal. Canada therefore owes a great deal to the late C. D. Howe, for without his timely intervention the present treaty might never have been born.

If Premier Bennett had got his way with his private bill with the Kaiser Aluminum Company, the present treaty, as I said, would not have been possible. As the matter stands now, many millions of dollars are going to be placed in the control of Mr. Bennett and the provincial government, greater by far than the cheque he received from the Kaiser Company, a cheque which he personally held for some 9 years and kept us in British Columbia guessing why.

I should like to add a word or two now regarding the Columbia River itself. As was mentioned yesterday, the one big problem which the United States authorities are trying to meet and overcome is the fact that in winter, due to ice and freezing conditions in the upper reaches of the Columbia River in British Columbia, the flow of the river through and over the dams in the United States is extremely low and in some instances the turbines are idle and at a standstill.

On the other hand, when spring arrives in the mountains of British Columbia, another but entirely different problem faces the authorities in the State of Washington, namely, that of flooding. So one can readily understand how pleased and willing the United States authorities were to sign the present treaty with Canada, realizing that with the dams which we have agreed to build, they will on the one hand generate more electric energy and more power and, on the other hand, they will be able to cultivate thousands of acres of land more than they are able to at the present time due to the annual flooding of the lands in the early months of the year.

The building of the dams by Canada is really a bonanza for the United States. However, I believe Canada should be well recompensed for the extra water, which will be a godsend to those in California and down south. Let it be noted that the value of the extra water has been neglected.

It should be noted that the last flood from the Columbia River in the United States cost 34 lives and over $100 million in property damage. It should also be noted that the Columbia River Basin covers or drains six states in the United States, the total area of which is 259,000 square miles. It is not generally known that 40 per cent of the potential hydroelectric development in the entire United States is found in the vast Columbia River system. The Libby dam site contains nearly 50,000 acres of valuable farmland suffering from floods. This will be cured by Libby dam, and I doubt if Canada will gain anything from Libby.

Premier Bennett's scheme with Kaiser would have prevented the present treaty ever being carried out. This is why I am taking the time to bring to the attention of Parliament and of the people, that a great deal was done by the late C. D. Howe when he fought the provincial government's sell-out to the Kaiser and made the present treaty possible. We have the late Mr. Howe to thank for stopping an extremely bad deal and for putting on the statute books of Canada in 1955, Bill No. 3, entitled "An Act respecting the Construction, Operation and Maintenance of International River Improvements."

It is not generally realized that the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia are practically the only two in Canada with any large amount of hydroelectric power.

I notice that when the Honourable Paul Martin, Secretary of State for External Affairs, appeared before the Commons committee, he informed the members of that committee that no changes or amendments could be made in the treaty by the committee. That means there is little to be gained by members of the Senate considering this treaty in committee. However, I feel its importance warrants its going to committee, even though the Minister of External Affairs says no change of any kind can be made. It is therefore either a case of adopting the entire treaty as presented to Parliament, or rejecting it. As I say, there may be some good reason for sending the bill to a committee for further information and examination, although I realize no changes whatever can be made in the treaty itself. The Senate has to accept it without any changes as it is presented to us by the Government. Nevertheless, I would like to see General McNaughton appear before that committee. That is a private view.

I personally would like to hear more about what actual changes, if any, have been made in the treaty since the Liberal Government came back into office. I say this because many criticisms and protests were made by members of the Liberal party when the treaty was in the hands of the Diefenbaker administration. As I say, the last government, under the Right Honourable Mr. Diefenbaker, placed the treaty before President Eisenhower and it was signed and accepted by President Eisenhower but opposed by members of the present administration. I am anxious to know what has happened since.

There is one further matter with which I should like to deal before closing my remarks, and one which so far as I know has been soft pedalled, if not overlooked. It is the value of Columbia River water itself to the State of Washington and other states south. In certain districts, particularly in California with its teeming millions, lack of adequate water is one of the serious problems confronting the authorities. Water from the Columbia River 12 months of the year after the dams are built will be the greatest boon to the citizens of the United States, and will be worth many millions of dollars entirely apart from the increased electric power. It is my opinion that the United States have by far the best part of the treaty, and that the water is more valuable to the Americans than even the electric power.

It is interesting to note that the estimated cost of some of the dams, even before being started, is already being altered upward. As an example, in 1956 it was estimated that the High Arrow Dam would cost $72 million. The latest figures now quoted by provincial authorities is $124 million, an increase of $52 million on one dam only—and no one knows how high the others will go when they get to the point of building them. The total estimated cost for the three dams—High Arrow, Duncan and Mica—is at present, before construction commences, some $400 million or more.

There is one final matter I want to touch on before closing my address. At the present time, the Government of British Columbia is developing the Peace River project, a project in the north of the province, some 600 miles from the City of Vancouver. The Honourable Mr. Bennett has intimated that the power developed there may go south to Vancouver. I mention this to point out that in my opinion it may well be a long, long time, if ever, before the people of British Columbia have the cheap power that the premier of the province so glibly speaks about. I mention this particularly to point out that all the statements the premier makes about cheaper power are to my mind just political double talk and to keep down criticisms. We had the same kind of story when he took over the B.C. Electric, with many promises of cheaper power, and so far we have had no reduction in our electric light bills. So why did he take over the B.C. Electric?

It is interesting to note that the cheapest power for Canadian homes throughout Canada is in Ottawa, Toronto and Winnipeg. According to the latest report issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics—which I brought with me today and which any member can get—covering electricity bills for domestic, commercial and small power service, shows that for 100 kilowatts per month the cost in Toronto is $2.60; in Winnipeg it is $2.22; and right here in Ottawa it is $2.03. But what a difference when you look at the costs throughout Canada, particularly in Vancouver, where the cost is $4.46 for 100 kilowatts, more than double that of the three leading cities. And then you hear a lot of big talk about cheaper electricity. They have seen nothing like it in British Columbia yet.

It is my belief that the premier of the Province of British Columbia will have the Peace River power delivered and sold in and around Vancouver and in the Fraser Valley and will, in all likelihood, sell the cheaper power from the Columbia to the United States, while at the same time developing the Peace River project some 600 miles away from Vancouver and the Fraser Valley. Premier Bennett has already intimated that the power developed in the Peace River will go south. As a matter of fact, it is difficult to know where else it could go.

We in British Columbia expected, when the provincial government took over the B.C. Electric, that there would be wonderful reductions in our electricity bills, but this so far has not materialized; today we in Vancouver and the lower Fraser Valley are paying over twice the amount residents are paying in cities like Ottawa, Toronto and Winnipeg. The cheap power talk by Mr. Bennett is just so much political eyewash.

I would like to press for the attendance of the honourable Minister for External Affairs before a committee, as well as such other witnesses who may desire to make representations. In my opinion, the Senate should have the same opportunity to hear the honourable Minister for External Affairs and witnesses like General McNaughton who may desire to come before us, and it should be on equal footing with the House of Commons.

Before closing, I should like to address three questions to the senator sponsoring the motion for ratification. I noted in the American copy of the proceedings in Washington, regarding this very treaty, there was an item there which showed that the treaty was to be placed before the United Nations. My curiosity was aroused, because I cannot find any such statement in all the material I have read on the Canadian side. I am curious as to why this agreement would have to be registered with the United Nations—a document drawn up between Washington and the Parliament of Canada.

Secondly, what changes were made by the present Government in the treaty now before us, not the treaty signed by the Right Honourable Mr. Diefenbaker and President Eisenhower? There must have been some objections, and I would like to know how the treaty stands now and what the objections were.

Thirdly, after 30 years or so, is there provision anywhere in the treaty to prevent the Columbia River from being diverted into the Fraser?

Honourable senators, thank you for your attention.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, I want to congratulate the mover of this resolution (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) for the tremendous amount of work he has done on this matter, and also to compliment him on his lucid explanation of so difficult a subject. Indeed, I have never heard a better explanation than the one which Senator Hugessen gave us yesterday.

When one has analyzed all that Senator Hugessen said, however, apparently the development of power is the dominant feature taken into consideration by this treaty. In fact, power appears to have been the central thought from the beginning, in relation to the provinces, the United States, and apparently, the Dominion of Canada.

Honourable senators, being a farmer from Saskatchewan, a water conservationist and a land use man, I feel there is another factor to be taken into consideration. Although the development of the Columbia River for power is of great advantage to both countries, I am not quite sure that Canada itself, by the control of the water in the Columbia River, will receive as much benefit as will British Columbia and the northwestern United States.

The problem of the scarcity of water now looms very large in the United States. In an article appearing in the Christian Science Monitor of February 26, 1964, Robert C. Cowen states that the Senate of the United States made a statement that the nation uses 355 billion gallons of water a day, but by the turn of the century they will need, at the present rate of consumption, some 600 billion gallons of water a day, yet at the present rate of development they will only achieve a supply of 515 billions.

The foregoing statement means that within the next 40 years the United States is going to be short of its needed supply of water, and I would judge that water from the Columbia River will be of greater value to the United States for domestic and industrial use than for power development and irrigation.

Again referring to the Christian Science Monitor, I would like to quote from an excerpt by Kemmis Hendrick, Chief of the Western Bureau of that publication. He makes this statement: "Who owns the water controls the future,"—quoting those words from a subheading of a long paper written by Harold W. Kennedy, county counsel of the County of Los Angeles. Mr. Kennedy's paper was background for a bill sponsored in the current session of the United States Congress by Senator Thomas H. Kuchel, Republican of California; Frank E. Moss, Democrat of Utah; and Len. B. Jordan, Republican of Idaho. That bill is scheduled for hearings in Washington by the Senate Subcommittee on Irrigation, of which Senator Moss is chairman.

Mr. Kennedy suggests that their bill, Bill S-1275, amounts to "probably the single most important question that confronts California and its future."

The main features of the bill are as follows:

1. The withdrawal of reservation of public lands shall not affect any water right required under State Law.
2. In the West consumption of water must take priority of navigation.
3. When the United States acquires a water right under State Law, the State should comply with State Procedures, for the U.S. should pay for the water rights which it acquires.

I am putting these statements on record to indicate that water has now become a major problem in the United States.

In the article by Robert Cowen, to which I have referred, he sets out the cycle of the origin of water in the United States, the initial source being from the ocean. This rises in the form of vapour from the ocean and falls as rain or snow over the land. The winds bring some 1,430 cubic miles of this water to the United States in the average rain or snowfall of 30 inches. This is the main domestic supply unevenly delivered, and Mr. Cowen says that some day it will have to be augmented by desalination plants or even by importing water from Canada.

Of these 1,430 cubic miles of water, roughly some 1,000 cubic miles of water are returned directly to the atmosphere by evaporation from the lakes and rivers and transpiration from the crops and forests. Also some of the water finds its way down through the permeable layer of soil to the water table. In the southwest United States they are pumping a great deal of this ground water out on to the land for irrigation purposes, but it is believed that this supply will disappear in the not too distant future.

Dr. Raymond L. Nace, of the Water Resources Division of the United States Geographical Survey, estimates that ground water stored to a depth of half a mile under the United States is equal to 150 years' accumulation at the present recharge rate. He further estimates that in the arid southwest, the yearly recharge rate is only two-tenths of an inch, and in such areas it is not uncommon to pump two feet or more of water per year. If the entire ground water were pumped at this rate of two feet per year, it would be equivalent to 120 years' recharge and 10 years' pumping would remove a 1,200-year accumulation of water.

This statement is valid in principle, but it is highly improbable that all the ground water would be pumped. It does indicate, however, there is a possibility that irrigation of agricultural land, which depends on ground water, may in the not-too-distant future come to an end. This will mean that other water will have to be found, or those agricultural areas which are now being irrigated will have to be abandoned.

For the reason that the Americans are now making a determined study of their water resources and their possible shortage, I question the value of this Columbia River treaty in allowing in perpetuity the waters of the Columbia to be carried to the United States, merely to get back a few thousand kilowatts in electric power.

Honourable senators, I say "in perpetuity" because while the treaty says that at the end of 60 years we have the right of reviewing the Columbia River Treaty, and that one may have the right to take water from it, once it is established that it is useful water to the United States, it will be extremely difficult for Canada to get back that diversion of water. Therefore, I question the value of the treaty in allowing in perpetuity the waters of the Columbia to be carried to the United States, merely to get back a few thousand kilowatts in electric power, particularly as a noted engineer of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation has turned attention to the fact that one of our own provinces, the Province of Saskatchewan, will develop industrially and agriculturally, and will need a great deal more water than is in sight at the present time. All three cities of Saskatoon, Regina and Moose Jaw take their water from the South Saskatchewan River, and those three cities are growing rapidly and will need an abundance of water for domestic use.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would the honourable senator allow a question? How far away are you from the Peace River? It has been suggested that Saskatchewan can get all the water it needs from the Peace River.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I would say that the Peace River is something like 750 or more miles from the Saskatchewan River.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And I think it would be impossible.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: This Saskatchewan engineer suggested that one of the ready sources would be to bring this water from the Columbia, either through or over the mountains and down through the Bow River in Alberta to the Saskatchewan River and on to the great plains of our provinces. I may say here that the honourable Senator Hugessen, in a facetious manner, said it sounds like Alice in Wonderland, trying to get this water across the mountains.

I asked a question of an engineer just before I came into the chamber, but I did not get an answer, and not being an engineer myself I do not know what the answer is. I asked if it would be possible to syphon water across the mountains. He said he did not know and would have to find out. Being a farmer, I have done a lot of syphoning of water. I realize it would take a large amount of pipe to do it, but I do not think it is out of the realm of reality, unless physics steps in and interferes with it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I say that 32 feet is the academic extent to which water can be raised by syphoning.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Anyway, this is a question I would like to ask when this matter is referred to committee.

I think that before this treaty is finally passed by our Parliament very serious thought should be given to a further study of water resources, and especially its implication in the context of our agricultural needs. The supply of water is becoming quite a problem throughout Canada. I think most honourable senators received this yellow pamphlet in the mail, which is a circular put out by the Montreal Port Council. It reads in part:

> The Montreal Port Council cordially invites you to attend a seminar on the vital topic of water management and the water crisis, particularly as it results in low water levels in the St. Lawrence River at Montreal.

Ontario is having the same problem regarding its harbours on the Great Lakes, and water is certainly one of the big items we should consider in Canada.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, it is not my purpose to delay the discussion of this resolution now before us, nor to hold it up. However, there are a few aspects of it I should like to discuss briefly. Before doing so I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the previous speakers in relation to the explanation given yesterday by the honourable Senator Hugessen, which in my opinion was a masterful performance and a Herculean task. As a matter of fact, as far as I am concerned, while I have read much about the possibilities of this development, I think I am clearer in my mind now than I have ever been in relation to its full aspect.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): There are certain aspects of a technical nature I am not qualified to discuss, but there is one aspect I am concerned about, and that is the High Arrow dam development. Most of you realize that during my lifetime I have been associated in one way or another with the men and women of the soil. For some 20-odd years I worked entirely with the farmers of my own province. During that period of time I had occasion now and then to visit various parts of Canada and to view the agricultural outlook and the possibilities of Canada as a whole.

I think those of you who know Canada well will agree with me that we have in this country large areas of land that are not suitable for agriculture. It is also recognized that due to our climatic conditions, and particularly to our severe winters, the costs of production of many of our commodities produced on Canadian farms make it a pretty expensive operation.

I have said on many occasions, and more particularly before the Land Use Committee, that in my view the time is rapidly aproaching when we in Canada will need every square foot of good land we have. I have more than once expressed deep regrets at the developments that are taking place in Canada. I am thinking particularly of the Niagara Peninsula and some of the areas of British Columbia, particularly in the Fraser Valley outside Vancouver, where we have the best land under heaven and it is not being used for agriculture. We must recognize that the time has come when we must give consideration to saving for future generations the good agricultural land of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): What type of agriculture?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): General agriculture. I am speaking of dairy farming, vegetable and fruit production, and those sorts of things.

As I understand it, due to some inadvertence on the part of a reporter one or two years ago, I was named in the press as the chairman of the Land Use Committee, and for the next few months I was flooded with correspondence and documents from the people of the Arrow Lakes valley. According to the statement made yesterday—I have read it over, and it corresponds with the statements made by those people—this valley, which is 150 miles long and extends from Castlegar to Revelstoke, is an area the greater part of which comprises some of the best land under heaven. There are very few areas in Canada which can produce soft fruits satisfactorily and economically—peaches, plums, cherries, and so forth. Without any particular attention to it or trying to get a maximum yield they have produced in this area large yields, as high as $2,800 per acre from apples, $2,500 per acre from cherries, and have reached as high a yield as 25 crates from a cherry tree. There are various other commodities produced in that area with high rates of production. Speaking of apples, and particularly Macs and Delicious, the crop yield has averaged 92 per cent extra fancy in Delicious and 86 per cent extra fancy in Macs. That will give you some idea of the production potential of this area.

It was stated yesterday by the sponsor of the resolution that there are about 27,000 acres in this valley which will be flooded. The 27,000 acres, as I understand it, is land under production at the present time; but there is a potential in that area of about 40,000 to 50,000 acres of good land that, when this project goes through, will be wiped out for all time to come. As I understand it, and I believe this is on good authority, all the good agricultural land in British Columbia comprises only about 3 per cent of the total land surface of the area. Most of the good land is in the five valleys of the province. This is one of them. The Okanagan is another much like it, and you know something of what is happening there.

When the High Arrow dam is built, as is intended, and I think it is the second project to be developed, that whole valley will be flooded and around 3,000 people will have to move. Not only that, but the industry that is now there will be wiped out. The potential of the tourist attractions in that area is unlimited, and no one can estimate the value of the potential tourist business in that area for, say, the next hundred years. This will be gone for all time.

If I understood correctly yesterday, the cost of the High Arrow dam will be in the vicinity of $129 million, of which the United States will pay something like $52 million.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is only for the flooding. You have to add the increase in power.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): But there is no power development at High Arrow.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It is the power that is developed in the United States as a result of it that you have to take into account.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): That is not in Canada, though.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No, but we receive payment for it.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): But the fact remains, as I see it, that the High Arrow dam is making provision for flood control in the United States, and for water for irrigation, and as a consequence the farm people of that area will compete with the Canadian farmers who will not be able to compete favourably.

When the International Joint Commission finally gave its reports, the Canadian section recommended ten projects, but the High Arrow was not one of them. Possibly the Canadian Government at that time approved of that recommendation, but it is due to the activities and insistence of the British Columbia government this whole scheme was wiped out. I have here the ten projects that were recommended by the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission.

Dorr	storage and diversion
Bull River-Luxor	storage
Luxor	power
Calamity Curve	power
Mica	storage and power
Downie	power
Revelstoke Canyon	power
Murphy Creek	storage and power
Duncan	storage
West Kootenay	additions to existing power plants.

Those are the things that concern me, but I realize that probably nothing can be done now. The treaty has been negotiated, but I felt it was my duty and responsibility to place before this body the views of the farm people of that area and that valley. Again I say that I regret very much that we in Canada have not reached the point where we recognize the need of preserving and conserving every square foot of good soil we have in Canada.

Last week I read in an Ottawa newspaper a statement from one of the agricultural officials from Regina, in which he said that within 25 years 11 million acres of improved pasture and four million acres for use of grain production will be needed to carry the additional six million head of beef cattle that Canada will need. That is some indication of what is happening.

While I am not opposing this treaty or the resolution, I am placing on record my views on this matter. To my way of thinking, we are giving away for all time to come one of the finest assets that Canada has.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I would like to ask the honourable Senator Hugessen whether he now intends answering questions or closing the debate. If he speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I was going to make a short final speech.

The Hon. the Speaker: In that event you will be closing the debate. Is it agreed, honourable senators, that if honourable Senator Hugessen speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I do not know that I am in a position to answer all the questions asked in this extremely interesting debate this afternoon. However, I think I can answer some of them.

Senator Reid asked two questions, the first of which was why the Canadian documents do not state that this treaty is to be registered with the United Nations. Well, I do not have a great deal of knowledge about that. I think the practice of nations which belong to the United Nations is to register their treaties with that organization, although the validity of such treaties is in no way affected whether they are registered or not. I would assume that if the United States registers the treaty it will not be necessary for Canada to do so, since that will be sufficient for the purposes of the United Nations.

The second question referred to the changes which have been made in the treaty since the former government left office. He referred to the fact, I think, that some of the members of the party now in office had criticized the treaty while they were in the Opposition, and now approve of it. Well, I have had nothing to do with any criticism of the treaty when it was proposed under the previous government, but the protocol of last January and the exchange of notes, and the provisions for sale of Canada's power for the next 30 years, do make very considerable clarifications, and, indeed, changes in the treaty itself. For instance, the protocol clarifies quite considerably, and I hope I shall not be asked to go into great detail on this, the extent of Canada's obligations to provide flood control under certain circumstances and when so required by the United States. It also makes clear what the treaty did not make clear, that before calling upon Canada to control floods the United States has to use its own flood control organization.

The principal change made by the protocol and the exchange of notes was in relation to the question of payment. Under the treaty, as I explained yesterday afternoon, Canada was entitled to get back one-half of the additional power produced downstream as a result of the Canadian dams, and that power was to be sent back to Canada, as the Leader on the other side explained, physically by transmission line, and to be delivered at a place called Oliver in British Columbia. The arrangements with respect to that power were to be made after the treaty had been ratified. Well, the protocol and the exchange of notes alters that arrangement completely. It provides that for the first 30 years of Canada's entitlement to this extra power it shall not be delivered to Canada at all, but shall be paid for in cash by the United States, and at the time of and concurrently with the ratification of the treaty. That is the method by which Canada will receive this sum of $254 million in United States funds, as and when the treaty is ratified.

So the real basic change between the treaty as made by the government of which my honourable friend was a member, and as now amended and clarified by the protocol and exchange of notes, is that Canada will receive this large sum of money. The result of that has been, of course, that the Government of British Columbia is now satisfied to proceed.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Might I ask in that connection, was it not brought about by the fact that British Columbia had decided that they would go ahead with the Peace River development, and in doing so they would not need this surplus power—at least that is what their government said—so they were willing to sell it for a lump sum? When the treaty was originally discussed it was expected that this power would come to British Columbia and would have been used there, and so there was no need for making any financial arrangements at that time.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I think that is a completely fair statement. I think the differences between the treaty of 1961 and the protocol of 1964 arose largely from the fact that just about the time the treaty was signed the Government of British Columbia decided to proceed immediately with the Peace River development.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Then the situation had completely changed.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The situation had entirely changed then, because from their point of view once they decided to proceed with this development from which they would receive power by 1968—

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Entitlement was the big question, and that had not changed at all so far as the treaty was concerned.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No; the entitlement was either power or cash. Under the treaty it was power, and now it is cash.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yesterday you said in Canadian dollars and today you say in United States dollars.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I told the house what Canada would receive in United States dollars, and I converted them into Canadian dollars for comparison purposes. I do not think there is any disagreement on that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I agree with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), that the difficulty arose on account of the change of policy of the Government of British Columbia.

Senator Pearson made a very interesting speech. I agree with him, that the problem of water is going to be an exceedingly difficult one in the years to come, but I say that he must bear in mind that the treaty we are now asked to ratify does, in perfectly clear terms, permit Canada to divert water from the Columbia to the Prairies, or anywhere else, for consumptive purposes. The question is whether at the present time it is economically possible to do that in view of the enormous difficulties and great cost involved. There is also the question of whether the treaty would permit Canada to divert that water to the Prairies and, at the same time, to use it on the way for the production of hydroelectric power.

I can quite conceive that a time may come when the need of the Prairies for water from any source becomes so desperate that we may even have to pump the water over to them simply for consumptive use, and if the treaty prevents us from using it in the meantime for hydroelectric power, then we shall have to accept that situation.

I do suggest, honourable senators, if we come to a critical stage of that kind, that this is, after all, a friendly treaty with a friendly country. If we find we have to go to the United States and say it is essential under critical conditions that we divert water to the Prairies, and that while doing that we would like their agreement to decrease the cost as much as possible by using the water on the way to produce power, then I do not think there would be any great difficulty in obtaining their agreement. As far as they are concerned, the result is the same. We divert the water anyway. We have the right to divert it for consumptive use, in any event. All that they would be doing would be agreeing to our using it to produce power while it is flowing down the eastern side of the Rockies, which would slightly decrease the cost of that water to us.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Did not the honourable senator say yesterday that there would be an alternative source of water?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes. According to the reports that have been presented to us there are these substantial alternative sources of water from the Athabasca and the Peace rivers, which would cost a great deal less than the cost of pumping the Columbia River water over the mountains, and which can be used for the purposes of the South Saskatchewan dam.

The question really is this: The opponents of the treaty suggest that we should refuse to ratify it now on the ground of the possible need of the Province of Saskatchewan for additional water—that is, water from the Columbia—25, 50 or 75 years hence. I do not think that that makes much sense in view of the enormous immediate benefits which the treaty will confer upon Canada and, in particular, the Province of British Columbia.

I was interested in what my honourable friend from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Taylor, Westmorland) said about agriculture in the High Arrow district, and the damage that would be caused by the dam there in flooding some of this land. My information—and it may be wrong—is that the land surrounding the Arrow Lakes it not as good as all that, from the point of view of agriculture. This blue-covered book, issued by the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources last April, under the heading of "Agriculture", says this:

> With the exception of the Creston area in the West Kootenays agriculture is not of major economic importance in the Columbia River basin.

It may well be—and I do not dispute for a moment what my honourable friend says—that there will be some flooding of agricultural land in the area of the Arrow Lakes, but I would ask him to remember that the best agricultural land in the whole district is in the district of Creston, and that that is going to benefit considerably from the flood control that will be provided by Libby. My friend has to balance the one against the other.

Honourable senators, I do not know that I can say anything more, except, perhaps, to refer for a few minutes to what my honourable friend said about the value of the tourist industry in the Arrow Lakes district. Arrow dam will raise the level of the water of the Arrow Lakes by about 40 feet. That will flood a number of very nice beaches that now exist, as I am told, for the tourist industry. But, on the other hand, I am also told that in the course of a few years, when the new level of the lakes is established, other beaches on the higher level will be formed, and ultimately the tourist attraction and beauty of those lakes will be substantially the same as it is now. I cannot vouch for that. This is simply information I have gleaned from the great amount of evidence that was given before the House of Commons committee on this and kindred subjects in connection with the whole matter.

I am afraid that is all I can say in answer to the various questions that have been raised.

Resolution adopted.

OTTAWA TERMINAL RAILWAY BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved the second reading of Bill S-33, to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-33, to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company, represents the attainment of an objective in the development of the national capital area which has been discussed and recommended repeatedly during the past 50 years by official commissions and parliamentary committees.

To recount the periodic starts and recessions that have been recorded in connection with what finally is projected by this bill would occupy too much of the time of the Senate at this sitting, and, like so much history in this day and generation, would probably be regarded with polite, if not bored, indifference. I would suggest, however, if honourable members of this chamber care to have a full picture of the background of this bill, that this volume before me on my desk, with its maps and illustrations, provides a romantic story of the growth and development of this capital area since the beginning of the century. It will well repay anyone for the time spent in its perusal. It was published in 1950, and is entitled "Plan for the National Capital—a General Report," and is by Jacques Greber. It is available in the Library of Parliament, and would also be available from the Queen's Printer or, upon application, from the National Capital Commission.

Official reports dealing with the whole question of a federal district and a capital city plan for Canada, involving relocation of railway lines and terminals, might briefly be enumerated for purposes of reference, notwithstanding the omission of so many copious details.

The first one is the Ottawa Improvement Commission in 1899, when the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier manifested, as an established citizen of Ottawa at that time, a great interest in the future development and beautification of the capital city.

The next document to which I refer is the Todd Report of 1903; and then the Holt Report of 1915, entitled "The Federal Plan Commission," which never received due consideration because of the intervention of the First World War.

The next one I might mention is the Cauchon Report of 1922.

Next, is the reorganization of the Ottawa Improvement Commission in 1927, and the beginning of the Federal District Commission established by Act of Parliament in that year and designed to include the hitherto excluded area of Hull.

Then came the Greber studies of 1937, 1938 and 1939, subsequently, after the end of the war in 1945, to be renewed and consolidated in the form of the Greber Plan which, during the past 20 years, has supplied the guiding lines of all the work that has been done by the National Capital Commission in this federal area.

Then there was the report of the joint parliamentary committee in 1944 which marked the enactment of a new Federal Commission Act in 1946 and which provided for national representation in the personnel of the commission from all the provinces of Canada.

Finally, there is the report of the second joint parliamentary committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Gershaw and the late Armand Dumas, M.P., in 1956, which report was tabled and approved in both houses, and provided for an accelerated program of development within the City of Ottawa and the adjacent National Capital area.

Common to all of these discussions and reports on which legislative action has been taken, has been the pressing problem of proper road and railway facilities to serve this expanding capital centre. Fundamental to the proposed solution of this problem, as stated as far back as 1915 in the Holt Report, was "control by a single authority of railway trackage and terminals." Later, Mr. Greber in his report on the future of the National Capital District said: "The remodelling of railway facilities has become the framework of the master plan."

Railway lines, combined with the Ottawa and Rideau Rivers and the Rideau Canal, have divided this city into nine separate parts, and the City of Hull into four distinct sections. While the railway lines made a considerable contribution to the early progress of this area, they have in the last half century hampered proper development, and actually large areas of land adjacent to their tracks have become depressed areas. Altogether, the retarded effect upon the movement of traffic as the result of earlier unplanned location of railway lines, has been a handicap to this Capital District for many years.

Definite periods of delay, of course, were marked by two world wars, with their priority demands in materials and finance, which made peremptory regulations by government unavoidable.

But now this Bill S-33 finally marks a far-reaching prospective change in the appearance and character of this National Capital centre. I think here that I should place on the record the official Memorandum of Understanding referred to in several sections of the bill and its attached schedule, and which was approved by the Government as the basis of the proposed legislation now before us. I quote:

> In order to further the objects and purposes of the National Capital Commission in the development and improvement of the National Capital Region as envisaged by the National Capital Act, Chap. 37 of the Statutes of 1958, it is necessary that there be incorporated a terminal railway company which will co-ordinate and consolidate railway facilities in the National Capital Region.
>
> The Commission has prepared a National Capital Commission Railway Relocation Plan contemplating the relocation of railways in the Ottawa area; the abandonment of railway tracks and structures of Canadian Pacific Railway Company and Canadian National Railway Company; also the construction of a new railway station, railway yards, tracks and structures in the said area.

The Commission, the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National concluded a Memorandum of Understanding on the 17th October, 1963, respecting the implementation of the Relocation Plan. This agreement also provides that there should be incorporated a terminal railway company to be known as "Ottawa Terminal Railway Company", with such share capital, power and objects as may be necessary to acquire railway lines and facilities of the Canadian National, the Canadian Pacific and the Commission, as referred to in the Memorandum.

The Canadian National and Canadian Pacific have agreed to participate equally in the incorporation of the Terminal Railway, each to be the owner of one-half of all shares of its capital stock as may be issued from time to time.

The Relocation Plan has been proceeding and is now at a stage where it is considered necessary by the Commission, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National that the Terminal Railway be incorporated and established. While all phases of the Relocation Plan are not expected to be complete until October 1, 1965, the Memorandum of Understanding specifies that all transfers of land and facilities between the parties and to the Terminal Railway shall "take place simultaneously on the second day of January, 1965". It is also necessary that this corporate body be available during the implementation period, as it is anticipated that certain phases of the Relocation Plan (such as maintenance of new facilities as they become available and the staffing of the new terminal company) will involve action by the Terminal Railway prior to October 1, 1965."

The Bill S-33 contains 19 sections giving the legal form to all the provisions contemplated in the foregoing memorandum and set out in section 9 and in the attached schedule.

The names of the original directors of the incorporation, included in section 2, are chosen from the chief officers of both railways and are well known to everyone.

The capital stock of the company is to be $30 million, and the head office is to be established in the City of Ottawa.

As stated in section 2 of Part I of the schedule, it is intended that the Canadian National Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway each shall be the owner of one-half of all the shares of the capital stock of the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company.

20224—46

Section 14 provides that the Terminal Company may issue bonds, debentures or other securities to an amount not exceeding $20 million, to be secured by mortgage upon the whole or any part of the property, assets and revenues of the new Terminal Company.

The powers of the company are set forth in section 10, and the conveyancing of various buildings and properties to the Terminal Company by both the C.N.R. and the C.P.R., is provided for in sections 11, 12 and 13.

Section 17 provides that the construction of the railway and related facilities shall be completed on or before January 1, 1967.

The works and undertaking of the company are declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and the Railway Act applies to the company and its undertaking.

In section 34 of the schedule to the bill, it is stated that any differences "arising between the parties hereto" concerning any provision of this memorandum of understanding, shall be submitted to the Exchequer Court of Canada for determination.

Finally, in relation to the exact location of the new passenger station, which naturally is of much interest to honourable senators and others coming to Ottawa from Montreal and Toronto, it will be situated in a site about one half mile east from Hurdman's Bridge and two miles from Confederation Square. The new station will be connected to the different parts of the city by wide and direct boulevards. The main approach to Confederation Square and the Chateau Laurier will be formed by a double-drive expressway two miles long, following the Rideau Canal on the east side and paralleling the existing national capital district driveway on the western side of the canal, leading to Confederation Square and to Sussex Drive, where it will emerge at a lower level than at present, thus avoiding all crossing points. So actually there will be a trunk line directly from the station to the square, where most of the passengers who come here weekly or daily disembark.

If this bill receives second reading, and is then referred to the Senate's Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, officials of the National Capital Commission will be available, with a full equipment of maps and charts, to enlighten honourable senators in a comprehensive way about this long-planned and rather complicated engineering project.

It is possible also that representatives of both lines of railways will be present to contribute any light or views on this subject that might be necessary.

In the meantime, if I can supply further information to honourable senators, I shall be glad to do so, or, to the best of my ability have it supplied at a later date.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, having spent the greater part of the afternoon reading, and being lost in admiration for the great speech delivered here yesterday by Senator Hugessen, I now address myself to this bill; and after trying to understand its extraordinary phraseology, I appreciate more than ever what a czar of Russia had in mind when he visited Paris many years ago, and, when asked how many lawyers there were in Russia, he said there were four, and that he was going back to have three of them shot.

Honourable senators, this bill is of considerable concern to the city in which I live, and to Carleton which I am supposed to represent in this house. So there are some things I would like to know about it, but not having had a chance to see the bill before today, I shall be grateful to the Senate if it will permit me now to adjourn this debate until a reasonable time tomorrow.

On motion of Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton) debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ORDERS STAND

On Orders Nos. 3, 4 and 5:

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I would ask that Orders Nos. 3, 4 and 5—for the second reading of Bill S-29; for the second reading of Bill S-16; and for resuming the debate on the reference of Bill S-16 to the Supreme Court—all stand until June 24.

Orders stand.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1954

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not propose to detain the house long in respect of this bill, since I know that all honourable senators have an important engagement later. However, Senator Walker informed me that he would be speaking on this bill, and I thought perhaps it might be a convenience to him, and certainly to the house tomorrow, if I put my explanation on record this afternoon.

Before I come to the bill itself, I should like to say that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has, as all honourable senators are aware, sustained a severe loss in the sudden death of its President, Mr. Stewart Bates. Mr. Bates was president of the corporation for some ten years, and was well known to all honourable senators through his appearances before our committees in respect of legislation such as we have before us today.

Stewart Bates was a Scot. He came first to Nova Scotia, where he became secretary of the Nova Scotia Economic Council. He was a professor at Dalhousie University. He was one of those officials who worked on the Rowell-Sirois Report. In his death, Canada has certainly lost a highly valuable and enthusiastic public servant—a man who did a great deal in a vital field at this particular stage of our history, namely, the field of housing.

Honourable senators, I want to say, also by way of preliminary remarks, that this legislation is not anything very new. Indeed, legislation such as we are to consider this afternoon has been progressively developed over the years, both provincially and federally. I think each year, and indeed each government, builds upon the experience of the years gone by for the needs of the present and with a view to the future.

I think that a good many of the proposals that are here will ring a familiar sound in the ears of, for example, Senator Walker, who for a good length of time was the minister in charge of this kind of operation. He gave splendid service over those years in respect of problems touching the National Housing Act, Central Mortgage and Housing, and that whole area of activity. We are very pleased indeed to have him here and to have the benefit of his advice upon these problems.

I do not propose to deal with this bill by referring specifically to the sections one by one. I thought I would deal first with the question of urban renewal, which is one of the important aspects of the matter before us. I would deal then with the question of public housing, which is also treated in the bill. I shall speak briefly about university housing, and say something about loan ratios, of two or three relatively minor things dealing with provisions in respect of default in the payment of mortgage interest, and with a small provision dealing with marketing machinery. Finally, I shall touch the question of sewage treatment projects. As I said earlier, these main areas of concern are familiar to all honourable senators. We have had legislation touching all these problems on other occasions, and this bill it is hoped will improve upon the experience that has been developed through the years.

On the question of urban renewal, I think it is appropriate to start by saying there are various aspects of urban renewal with which the officials in Central Mortgage and Housing are concerned. The problem of clearance and redevelopment is a very important one, especially in the slum areas of our cities. They also have to consider the problems of the rehabilitation of areas which are capable of renewal without clearing. Finally, the question of the conservation and preservation of good existing areas is a provident kind of practice for the various levels of government to concern themselves with.

In the field of urban renewal the matter of planning is all important. There is a provision here for the making of suitable agreements, both with provinces and municipalities, for the planning of schemes for urban renewal and redevelopment under which, for the planning stage, the federal Government will pay 50 per cent of the cost. This is in section 23 of the bill. But in addition to the planning, of course, the matter of getting a scheme or project going is of great importance. Section 23B provides that the federal Government will pay 50 per cent of the cost of acquiring and clearing the land, of installing certain municipal services and other specified incidentals which are set out in the section. Then when it comes to the actual development itself, to the installation of the buildings and the other projects to be developed in the area to be renewed, the amendments provide that the federal Government will lend either to a province or to a municipality up to two-thirds of the cost to the municipality of carrying out certain portions of the scheme. I should tell honourable senators that under section 23E a fund of approximately $100 million has been earmarked for this purpose.

There is another provision which should be drawn to the attention of the Senate. For the first time there is provision for insured loans in respect of existing housing in urban renewal centres. There is also provision for direct loans from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in these areas. So much for the general direction that has been given by these amendments to the problems of urban renewal.

On the question of public housing, under the amendments, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is authorized to make loans to provinces, to municipalities and to public housing agencies, as they are defined in section 35B, for the purpose of acquiring land for public housing, and up to 90 per cent of the cost of the acquisition and servicing of such land; and Central Mortgage and Housing is also authorized to make loans for the construction of public housing projects, again up to 90 per cent of the cost. This is under section 35D. This includes the acquisition of existing housing facilities.

In addition to that, again in the field of public housing, by section 35E, Central Mortgage and Housing is authorized to underwrite losses of low rental housing projects to the extent of 50 per cent of any loss incurred in any one year, for a period not exceeding 50 years. Of course this is subsidized low-rental housing. I am sure all honourable senators will want to have more information about this particular section. I should say that this is certainly a bill which should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee for study.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would you mind explaining section 16? It says that the purpose of these amendments is to authorize direct loans to owners of housing accommodation in urban renewal areas which are unable to obtain loans from approved lenders. I would take it a man who could not get a loan from an approved lender would not be a good risk.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think a better answer would be available in committee. There are approved lenders sometimes who do not have any funds. They themselves have certain budgets allocated to them. Sometimes it is difficult, in a given municipality, for instance, if there are only two or three approved lenders and they have allocated all their funds. In cases like that I would think under this section Central Mortgage and Housing would be able to make direct loans. However, I am sure there is a fuller explanation than that to be given to the question, and perhaps the honourable gentleman could raise it in committee.

On the question of university housing, under existing provisions Ceneral Mortgage and Housing Corporation is authorized to lend on dormitory type of housing accommodation for resident students. The proposal now in the amendments extends the lending authority to self-contained housing projects for married students and their families. These loans can be made to co-operative campus associations or other associations formed for this purpose, or to charitable corporations. Perhaps even the university corporation itself could qualify for this purpose. There is a fund available for such loans up to a maximum of $150 million. If this bill is passed it will be possible for loans to be made for a single family unit, for apartments, for dormitories and, indeed, for hostels for university students. So much for the university area.

Last year by Appropriation Act No. 3 of 1963 the mortgage ratio for owners, builders and co-operative associations in the field of insured loans was increased from 95 per cent of the first $12,000 to 95 per cent of the first $13,000. This provision which was in the Appropriation Act now becomes a permanent part of the National Housing Act by the amendment proposed in clause 2. The amendment is, of course, beneficial. It takes into account the rising costs which develop from time to time in housing. It involves smaller down payments and therefore larger loans for borrowers.

In clause 3 there is a small amendment which deals with insured loans in which default has occurred. If a mortgagor falls into default with his interest, heretofore there was a subsidy for the interest payment to the insured lender for a period of six months. Under the amendment the proposal is that this period should be extended for another six months, making a total of 12 months.

In clause 4 there is a provision which helps a dealer in insured mortgages who may acquire a certain number of these mortgages for sale to investors, and who finds that for some reason or other, shortly after he had made his purchase, the market has fallen off. The provision here is one whereby Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation can, on the security of these mortgages, advance him certain moneys to carry him over for a short term period, and thus not force him to sell the mortgages he has bought, at a discount or at a loss.

Clause 13 deals with the general question of sewage treatment projects. At the present time Ceneral Mortgage and Housing Corporation is authorized to lend moneys up to a certain percentage of the cost of the project to municipalities. Under the amendment it is proposed that such loans can also be made to provinces which engage in projects of this kind. The clause also provides that Central Mortgage and Housing may forgive up to 25 per cent of a mortgage in respect of a sewage disposal project which shall be completed before March 31, 1967. It also provides that on those sewage disposal projects and sewage treatment projects which are not completed by that date, there can be a forgiveness of 25 per cent of the work completed by that date.

Finally, I should draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that under clause 6 of the bill, the fund available to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the provision of direct mortgages has been increased from $2 billion to $2½ billion.

I think, honourable senators, this covers the essentials of the bill, and if it is given second reading by the Senate, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Honourable senators, there is a very important engagement coming up which I am sure we all wish to attend. May I therefore move the adjournment of the debate in the hope that the Leader might include this high in the list of items for second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am always a little puzzled about how the list comes out. I think I know how it should appear, but it does not always appear that way. Perhaps the house would agree that this should be the first item on the Orders of the Day tomorrow after the bills entered for third readings.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Honourable Mr. Walker, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

NOVA SCOTIA SAVINGS & LOAN COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved the second reading of Bill S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings and Loan Company.

He said: Honourable senators, I realize the hour is late, and that we have certainly had a long day and considerable dealings with matters of finance. I shall be as brief as possible.

As you will note from the title, this bill is to incorporate the Nova Scotia Savings & Loan Company. It is in the usual form for incorporation of loan companies, subject to the provisions of the Loan Companies Act, except that section 8 of the bill provides that the company being incorporated may merge and amalgamate with the Nova Scotia Savings, Loan and Building Society. Sections 9 to 15 of the bill deal with the amalgamation procedure. The principal purpose of the proposed legislation is to enable this amalgamation to take place.

I do not propose to deal with the bill at any length. After it has been given second reading I shall move that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, before which committee the Superintendent of Insurance, Mr. K. R. MacGregor, who has already examined the bill, and others interested, as well as representatives of the company, will appear to answer any questions concerning the various provisions.

At this stage I think perhaps a little background information might be helpful. The Nova Scotia Savings, Loan and Building Society has been carrying on business in Nova Scotia for 114 years. It was established in 1850 under legislation, passed by the province in that year, which was very similar to the Building Societies Act then in force in England. This form of business organization is unique in that it is neither a company nor a partnership. Furthermore, it has no shares of stock in the usual sense, and no fixed capital. This society is now the only one of its kind existing in Canada and has become out of date in the modern business field.

The members and directors of the society have, therefore, sought for some time past to reorganize the society so as to give it the freedom of operation enjoyed by companies under the federal Loan Companies Act, lending under security of first mortgages on real estate. Various methods of achieving this have been explored, such as reorganization of capital alone and the sale of assets of the society to a new company, but in each case obstacles have arisen which have required abandonment of such methods of reorganization.

The directors of the society, as a result of a study, now consider that the only feasible method of enabling the society to carry on its business efficiently and enjoy normal growth is by amalgamation with a company, as before stated, under the federal Loan Companies Act. Such amalgamation requires the legislation which is before you, and also legislation in the Province of Nova Scotia which, I might add, has already been obtained at a recent sitting of the legislature of that province.

I should also point out that section 14 was inserted in the bill after consultation with the Taxation Division of the Department of National Revenue.

The effect of this bill, as I have stated, will be to enable the society to carry on its business more efficiently, to expand in normal growth, to introduce certainly with respect to its income tax position, and to replace what has now become out of date in the business world with a company subject to the Loan Companies Act. In short, the form of business organization known as a building society has, in Canada, fallen into disuse and is no longer considered or dealt with in legislation applicable to loan companies. As a consequence, the society has been left an orphan in the world of business and financial organizations. It seeks by this legislation to enrol itself in the family corporations engaged in the business of lending money on the security of first mortgages on improved real estate.

This bill has been approved by the Law Clerk of the Senate, the Superintendent of Insurance, and the Taxation Division of the Department of National Revenue.

In closing I might add that the names of the incorporators mentioned in section 1 are all well-known Nova Scotians. They have been connected with the society for a long period of time. Walter Mitchell of the village of Chester is a well-known name in shipping on the Halifax waterfront. Walter deW. Barss, barrister-at-law, of the City of Dartmouth has been the solicitor of that city for the past sixteen years. Donald McInnes, barrister-at-law, of the City of Halifax, is well known to the legal profession, and was at one time President of the Canadian Bar Association. Eric McN. Grant, executive, is of the well-known firm of Grant, Oxley and Company, and more recently of the Bell and Grant Insurance Company. George C. Piercey, barrister-at-law, is of the old firm of Piercey Supplies Limited and also Piercey Investors Limited.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Isnor, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 11, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CONSUMER CREDIT

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Irvine has been substituted for that of Mr. Coates on the list of members appointed to serve on the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report with respect to Operations under the Coal Production Assistance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 9 of the said act, chapter 173, R.S.C., 1952, as amended. (English and French texts).

Copy of a letter dated June 4 and June 5, 1964, addressed by the Prime Minister of Canada to all provincial Premiers concerning the proposed Pension Plan. (English and French texts).

Exchange of letters, dated June 11, 1964, between Canada and Hungary concerning diplomatic and consular matters, and proposed negotiations towards the settlement of claims. (English and French texts).

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 16, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE DOMINION OF CANADA GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the third reading of Bill S-30, respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA—THIRD READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the third reading of Bill S-31, respecting The Casualty Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CROWN CORPORATIONS (PROVINCIAL TAXES AND FEES) BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-95, respecting the payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE QUEBEC BOARD OF TRADE—THIRD READING

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the third reading of Bill S-28, respecting The Quebec Board of Trade.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

WORLD MORTGAGE CORPORATION—ORDER FOR THIRD READING STANDS

On the Order:

Third reading of Bill S-32, intituled: "An Act to incorporate World Mortgage Corporation".—(Honourable Senator Leonard).

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, I ask that third reading of this bill stand until Wednesday, June 17.

Order stands.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1954

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, may I first thank and congratulate the honourable Leader of the Senate on the concise and clear exposition of the purport of Bill C-102. It is an important bill which, when passed, will amend the National Housing Act.

May I say to the honourable Leader of the Government that we on this side of the house have a great affection and respect for our own Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks), but at the same time we are not disinterested in the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate. May I be pardoned a personal remark? Our former Prime Minister, when ministers were sworn into the cabinet, would take each one aside and say: "Now, with this high office you are entering into, I am going to watch to see whether you grow or just swell." I can safely add that we on this side of the house—and I am sure those on the Government side, too—are delighted to see that the honourable Leader of the Senate is growing with grace into the high office he occupies.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You do not think there is any swelling?

Hon. Mr. Walker: There is not much chance of it in this house. You would not, anyway.

Honourable senators, may I also join with the Leader of the Senate in expressing our grief and sorrow in the passing of a most distinguished public servant, Dr. Stewart Bates, President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

As the minister reporting to the House of Commons for C.M.H.C. for many years, I had a close and intimate relationship with Dr. Bates. Honourable senators, it is amazing where one finds these Scots. Everywhere in the world, in all sorts of countries, one finds dedicated Scotsmen. They adopt a country and they devote their lives to developing that country. So it was with Dr. Stewart Bates. He had not only a brilliant mind but a tremendous capacity for detail. At the same time, he had something which one must inherit, as it is hard to develop it otherwise, that is, a wonderful gift for administration.

To him is largely due the tremendous prestige which that corporation has at the present time, of which it can be truly said it is a jewel among the crown corporations. I therefore join with the honourable Leader of the Senate in his eloquent expression of sympathy.

May I also say that a suggestion was made in the other house recently that there should be a full-time minister for C.M.H.C. I think this would be a serious mistake. After all, the purpose of a minister in dealing with a crown corporation is to report to the House of Commons, and to direct that corporation in its policy so that its policy can be the same as that of the government of the day. To have a full-time minister, to have him interfere with and try to run the details of the department and to oversee its operations, would be to endanger a crown corporation with political interference, and eventually political patronage. To my mind, this would be a grave mistake. I think the government which planned the C.M.H.C. as a crown corporation had that in mind, when it was set up, that it should remain a semi-autonomous body, a quasi-commercial organization, with branches all over Canada. To have any political interference with such an important corporation could have disastrous results, because with billions of dollars loaned throughout the country, you can readily see that any relaxation of the rules could result at times in chaos.

May I make one more comment on housing? Looking at the record, there are too many loans under N.H.A. made by the Government, and not enough by approved lenders. It is a pity that the Government should be called upon to pay out as much money as it does each year by way of loans through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for N.H.A. mortgages. It is something that should be handled by approved lenders, by private enterprise. There are two ways to do that. First, to make the N.H.A. mortgages themselves attractive enough, and, secondly, to create a secondary market, which C.M.H.C. is trying to do by the auctioning of blocks of mortgages. More especially it is important to create new loan companies, new mortgage companies, which can take the burden off the Government. That is why I was pleased to see this honourable chamber pass second reading of Bill S-32, to incorporate World Mortgage Corporation, and to see it pass through the Banking and Commerce Committee yesterday. I understand that the bill will be up for third reading next Wednesday. That measure involves a capacity for $350 million in loans. Every loan made under the N.H.A., made through this corporation, is one loan less, for the Government of Canada to finance, and therefore it is highly important.

I agree with the Leader of the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), who stated that housing policy is a continuing thing. His admission that the present Government is carrying on in the tradition of the Diefenbaker government is something we are all proud of.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And other traditions.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Well, that is good; yes. We have many other good traditions as well, in which the present Government is following in our footsteps, but we will deal only with housing today. Perhaps we will mention others when the occasion arises.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Those were not the ones I was thinking of.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I have lost you there.

May I refer honourable senators to clause 13 on page 14 of Bill C-102. Perhaps you will recall the criticism I received, I think in 1960, when we moved an amendment to the National Housing Act to provide loans for sewage disposal plants. What did that have to do with housing? Yet, the pollution of our waters was a very serious problem across Canada; and who became more affected by it than the householder? In any event, we pushed that amendment through, and it has been remarkably successful, so successful that 582 municipalities have since that time applied for and received loans amounting to $127 million, to create in their own municipalities modern sewage disposal plants. So the pollution of water, which was a tremendous complaint four years ago, has certainly been, shall I say, checked very materially. I am glad to see the present Government is following in the footsteps of the Diefenbaker government, and is extending and refining what already had been done, by extending loans not only to municipalities but to the provinces as well. They have also extended the time for the completion of the projects so that the municipalities can take advantage of the "gift" or the "forgiveness" of 25 per cent of the loan if the undertaking is completed by a given date, which has now been extended to 1967. In my respectful submission, this is a step in the right direction.

Again, at page 13, clause 10 you have another endorsation of the work of the Diefenbaker government with respect to housing. I concur with my honourable friend that the Government of the day does not agree with everything we did, but in the field of housing the Diefenbaker government made a unique contribution which has raised Canada from a backward nation in the realm of housing to a nation second only to the United States as the nation with the best housed population in the world, and that is a great achievement.

In this connection we find another amendment which was criticized at the time, namely the grants to universities for the erection of accommodation for students. This principle has been accepted and has been extended.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Are you referring to dormitories?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes. Dormitories had been arranged for before, but the present Government has, I think quite properly, extended this to include not only dormitories but hostels as well, and also accommodation for wives of students as well as the students. This is a good thing. It also makes provision for charitable corporations. For instance, some of my wealthy friends on the Government side of the house who want to do something for their alma mater would do very well to form, with Senator Hugessen advising, a charitable corporation to provide housing accommodation for the students of their own alma mater.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Is it expected I should do that work for nothing?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Free—all this is charitable.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Are there no charitable members on the other side?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Charitable, but most of us are still working people.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Each of us is a "poor man Friday."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In any event, there are lots of wealthy ones.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Whoever is being mentioned can bow.

The extension of this is a good thing because more than one university president has expressed to me the belief that their universities could not have carried on with the expansion which has taken place had it not been for the N.H.A. stepping in and assisting in this very important field. I hope some people will take advantage of this provision, not only of the loans to universities but also to charitable corporations, and I hope that among us in the Senate we may be instrumental in setting up some corporations to assist the students in universities we have had the honour to attend.

Moving backwards to page 5 of the bill, clause 7, urban renewal—for years urban renewal appeared in the N.H.A. but no one paid any attention to it. A tremendous campaign was put on by the previous Government. I do not want to be considered political here; we are just tracing the history of urban renewal.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Did the National Housing Act originate with the recent Conservative government?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Where does history start?

Hon. Mr. Walker: It developed urban renewal. The great impetus took place under the Conservative government. You should not ask a question like that unless you know the answer—you are too good a lawyer for that, Senator Roebuck.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It was passed by a previous Liberal government.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Quite so, but it was little used. Well, I will modify that: it was used somewhat. We encouraged municipalities across Canada to undertake an urban renewal study. Now we have a great many plans under way by which the blighted areas in those municipalities can be blotted out. The present Government fully appreciates the value of this, and they have gone even further than the last government, by not only putting in the bulldozers and acquiring and clearing the land, to which end we made grants and loans, but now it is proposed, and this is an excellent proposal—I note no one complains when I praise the Government on the other side—that not only is redevelopment to be carried on, but rehabilitation is to take place as well. In other words, they are taking blighted areas and not necessarily putting the bulldozer right through them, because that is expensive, but taking the good houses in that blighted area and rehabilitating and refurbishing them. There are other areas that are not blighted areas, but could become so. The proposal in this bill is to conserve the areas as they are at the present time by taking some of the homes that are run down and giving assistance to them. I will not go into the details of how this is to be done, but it too is an excellent idea.

I apologize for going backwards in reference to the clauses of this bill, but it best suits my presentation.

Page 4, clause 5: limited dividends. There again, in the field of limited dividends, a tremendous campaign was put on originally by us, not only to give employment but also to increase housing. It has been very successful, and I am pleased to note that this Government is extending limited dividend housing not only to self-contained apartments, but also to include dormitories and hostels, together with the buying up of housing which is already there and refurbishing and rehabilitating it. This is going to ease the problem of rentals by making them cheaper. It is very important that we help the people in the low-income bracket. That is always a problem of national housing, to help the people in the low-income bracket. This proposal in clause 5 will do so, and the people in the low-income bracket will be able to pay rent, and the apartments will carry themselves. I will not go into the details of limited dividends, except to say in a word they are cost and write-off of capital in 40 years, plus 5 per cent. All private entrepreneurs as well as municipalities and provinces can participate.

Even these limited dividend apartments provided almost at cost are too expensive for a certain segment of our population, and so I am pleased to learn that in clause 8, on page 9 of the bill, there are amendments under the subject of public housing. This is very important, because no matter what you do, no matter how low you get rents, self-sustaining rents, the rent is going to be too high for a certain element in our population. Therefore, the Government of the day is extending the subsidized housing to include not just self-contained accommodation but dormitory and hostel accommodation for the aged, the blind and the semi-helpless. This is a step in the right direction, and as well provision is being made to buy up other housing accommodation rather than building new. This should reduce the cost per unit of supplying subsidized housing, and it is of importance because we must properly house the people in the low-income bracket.

I am vitally interested in it, because I happen to have been the member for Rosedale, where the first subsidized housing development was undertaken in Regent Park South, and for 25 years we have tried to bring this about. Finally, it took place by the creation of the Regent Park South subsidized housing. There were all sorts of forebodings, but it has worked out well, and I have not yet found any sign of that class distinction about which we have heard so much. We have been told that people put in there with low incomes would feel self-conscious about it. On the contrary, I have found—and I should know this because I have had picnics there year after year for many years with as many as 4,000 children—that in the Regent Park South development there was and is a great community spirit, and that the police officers have found that this district, which was one of the worst in Toronto so far as crime was concerned, is now one of the best.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): How long has this been running?

Hon. Mr. Walker: The Regent Park South development was planned about 12 years ago, and was completed in 1958.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And it is full all the time?

Hon. Mr. Walker: All the time. I think the waiting list, the last time I heard, stood at about 4,000.

The amendments to the bill which will make subsidized housing simpler will add to the facilities that we so badly need at the present time.

This bill is going to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, so I do not need to examine its clauses, but I should like to say that N.H.A. activities will lead to better homes, which will mean better citizens, better law enforcement, better production and, eventually, a better Canada.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

OTTAWA TERMINAL RAILWAY BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Lambert for the second reading of Bill S-33, to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I think I should first apologize to the house for not going on with this discussion yesterday, but the truth was I had to be out of the city the day before and had not seen the bill until I came to the house yesterday afternoon.

My task now is rather an easy one because Senator Lambert, with his sense of history, gave a good historic background to the purposes of this bill and a very lucid explanation of its main provisions. I do not intend to deal with the part of the railways in this bill, except to say this: In my humble judgment I think this relocation of the railway terminals in this city is in fact a mistake so far as the railways are concerned. Nowadays railways are competing for traffic with buses and with air lines, and if one is going from Ottawa to Montreal one takes a train because it will be going to take him to the centre of the city. But this bill would take the railway terminal two miles from the centre of the city. Therefore, I cannot see the logic of this from the standpoint of the railways. However, I am going to leave it to the railways to take care of themselves, and I must say from reading the provisions of the bill and the agreement that has been made between the railways and the National Capital Commission, somebody connected with the railways drove what seems to me to be a very good bargain. They seem to have protected themselves in nearly all respects.

I am not going to try to follow this bill clause by clause, because it is complex in some respects; in fact, I am not capable of adding anything in the way of enlightenment to many of the clauses.

There are, however, two aspects of the bill with which I would like to deal briefly. I have an idea that not too many people in this city realize that when this relocation takes place the National Capital Commission, in other words, the City of Ottawa and the taxpayers of Canada, will be left with two problems, two burdens. First of all they will be left with the Union Station. What is going to happen to Union Station? My understanding is that the plan or the hope now is that the Union Station, this great building, will be demolished, and that in its place or in the land which the National Capital Commission will acquire because of this relocation, amounting to about 1,300,000 square feet from the Mackenzie King Bridge up to and including the station, will be used partly for parking space, but not wholly for this purpose.

It is hoped that this land will be turned over, in fact, to private enterprise; but first of all, that the Government of Canada will build there some sort of dignified office building. Just when this will happen, I do not know, because, as I mentioned a few days ago, it seems to me the Government has ample office space on its hands already.

It is also hoped that there will be successful invitations to private industry to establish shops, or office buildings, which would not be the responsibility of the commission or of the Government itself.

In addition, it is hoped, I understand—and with this I agree heartily—to demolish that dreadful building which was erected there before the war, as part of the post office. It is a building which made the place ugly, inhibited the whole surroundings, and added the problem of traffic control. I understand it is hoped to take this building down and have the area lighted at night, and not be an area of darkness.

But this area is not the only thing we become heir to. When this relocation is concluded, the National Capital Commission will become the owners of the Interprovincial Bridge. Now what are we going to do, or what is the National Capital Commission proposing to do, with the Interprovincial Bridge?

I remember years ago in a private conversation with Mr. Mackenzie King—and perhaps my friends opposite will not be too surprised if I tell them that occasionally I did have private conversations with Mr. Mackenzie King—I remember his saying to me that if that bridge had existed in Europe its very ugliness would be so offensive to the artistic sense of the people there they would have found some way of blowing it up. I do not disagree entirely with that. When you look at the lovely artistic design of bridges in Europe, and then look at this dreadful bridge, it is certainly to be hoped that the National Capital Commission will find some way of disposing of it entirely.

I believe there are actually three alternative plans in mind. The first is to repair the bridge and use it for a few years until the pressure of traffic is eased by the building of the new bridge lower down. The second is to take down its superstructure and convert it into a three-lane bridge. This would involve considerable work on the Hull side in the way of approaches and would, indeed, involve the purchase of some property over there. It would also require a great deal of work to be done on the approaches on this side. Finally, there is a possibility that the bridge will be demolished altogether, and this, I must say, I would favour.

What I venture to think will happen is that a three-lane highway will be built on the bridge in order to ease traffic. I am told that the cost of taking down the superstructure and building a three-lane highway on the bridge, and to complete other repairs that are necessary, would cost $1,400,000, which does not seem to be out of the way.

I agree with Senator Lambert in doubting whether this bill can be usefully discussed without its going before the committee which can call the members of the National Capital Commission and officers of the railways to answer questions. There are scores and scores of questions one could ask about this agreement, and until the answers are obtained from authoritative sources there is not too much of a useful character that one can say.

One thing in this agreement between the railways and the National Capital Commission which surprises me is the fact that the National Capital Commission seems to make itself responsible for so much. The whole bill is shot through with phrases like "the National Railways will transfer to the Terminal Railway all its estate, title and interest", and so on, in return for which the Commission will pay all the charges assessed by the Pacific Railway against the National Railways. All the way through the Commission seems to be taking the responsibility.

Incidentally, the new station will not be built by the railways themselves. The design for it will be called by the National Capital Commission. It will be built and, of course, the railways will use the $30 million it will get for these debentures to pay the ultimate cost.

Just consider clause 22 on page 16:

> 22. The Commission will pay all costs and expenses incurred by the National Railways, Pacific Railway and Terminal Railway
>
> (a) in development and preparation of plans, specifications, deeds, surveys, descriptions, applications and agreements;
>
> ...
>
> (c) in carrying out any other work that the said Railway Companies may be required to do as a result of this Memorandum or that the Commission may lawfully require the said Railway Companies to perform in order to implement the Relocation Plan, where such work has been requested or approved by the Commission.
>
> 23. Where any new track or facility is constructed pursuant to this Memorandum, the Commission will, for the three-year period commencing on the date on which that track or facility is first opened to regular train operations or use, pay the National Railways, Pacific Railway or the Terminal Railway the maintenance costs incurred by those Companies by reason of any subsidence or settlement of that track or facility during that three-year period.

This goes on and on, and it seems to me that I can find little in the bill to show that the railway companies are taking too much risk or responsibility. I must say this, however, that the National Capital Commission must have had some difficulty in persuading the railways to enter into the agreement at all, and so the railways were in a position to bargain in a rather hard way.

A delightful phrase is used here which may be familiar to lawyers but which means nothing whatever to me. What does "save harmless" mean? I do not know what it means.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator give the page number?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): It is used in this report. I do not know what it means, but I am sure other honourable senators do. I am only an honorary life member of the New York State Bar, so I do not know. It appears in clause 28 on page 17:

> The Commission covenants and agrees that it will at all times hereafter indemnify and save harmless the National Railways—

I believe that means that if the National Railways make any profit out of this arrangement they keep it, but if they have a loss, then the National Capital Commission is responsible for that loss. There is a great deal of that kind of jargon which I do not understand. But, in the main, there is no doubt a consensus of opinion in this city favouring this agreement.

Senator Lambert mentioned yesterday the historic reports concerning Ottawa. I remember the Cauchon Report and the Holt Report, and scores of others, all aimed in this direction. We all remember too, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's hope that some day Ottawa would be the Washington of the north. I am not at all sure that if Sir Wilfrid saw Washington right now he would cling to his hope. But, this has been the ideal, the ideal of building a greater Ottawa. I do believe that while we are all agreed on the ends, there is room for a great deal of questioning with regard to the means.

For that reason I support Senator Lambert's intention to move that this bill be sent to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, before which officials of the railways and the National Capital Commission can attend and explain, as far as they can, what all this is about.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I remember that when I came to Ottawa in 1945 one of the older members who was with me on the train remarked, "Now, David, take a look at that station. It is not going to be there very long. We will have something else instead." Well, I have been praying, but it has not done much good. The station is still there.

Responsibility has to be laid at the feet of someone, namely, the National Capital Commission. We are not concerned with the railways which are, as Senator O'Leary (Carleton) has said, disposed to bargain with one another for the best possible deal they can make. There have been many mistakes made in Ottawa, but the same is true of other places. There are many compensations here. Nature has been good to Ottawa. It is a beautiful city. It has a lovely hinterland, and we who do not live here are proud of our capital city.

I know that from time to time in the House of Commons and in this chamber the City of Ottawa is told about its potholes, how it does not clean the sidewalks, and how snow is left a little longer than normal on the streets. But, then, those who say these things have not been home for a long time, and they do not see the winter appearance of their own home towns.

I do not think we would be satisfied with being the Washington of the north. We want something better. We want something that is Canadian—like the flag. I am not sure of just what we want, but I am sure that money should not stand in the way. The people of Canada are prepared to spend any amount of money in creating something here that is Canadian, and something that they can be proud of. They are not concerned about the money, as long as it is spent wisely.

There is no room here for small thinking. This is the capital city of a people as fine as any that ever came down the pike of time. We want to be proud of our capital city because more and more people from other countries are visiting it.

All I say to those who are more concerned with this plan than I am—some of them are members of this chamber, and we are fortunate in having such representatives from the City of Ottawa—is this: Make it your business; make it your task. You have the support of the people of Canada. Our only disappointment is that you are not going fast enough in doing what we think ought to be done. It is in your hands entirely. The time is past when we can accept excuses. We expect this Commission to make real progress. I do not know what can be ready by 1967, but something can be ready by then. You ought to press all your efforts in that direction.

I repeat that this is a beautiful city. I came the other day by air, and drove in by the usual route along the waterfront. Strangers remarked on the beauty of city and the beauty of the driveway. I cannot think of any other place that can compare with it. There is no use in having an inferiority complex about it. If the bridge bothers you—and it bothers me—let the F.L.Q. take an exercise on it—and I would welcome it. It is one of the things which has to go at some time—let us get rid of it.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): The estimated cost of this when completed, to the National Capital Commission, is $25 million. There will be some assets in it, but not all will be active assets. This is the expenditure, and the N.C.C. has no money of its own.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Let me say to Senator O'Leary that I do not speak for the Province of Ontario or for the Dominion of Canada, but I think I speak as someone who knows the feeling of the people, when I say that $25 million is a very small sum to pay for the kind of thing that you can accomplish here. We spend about that amount on one icebreaker on the St. Lawrence. I think $18 million was the cost of the last one. We spend money on many other things, useful though they may be. That is not the basis on which this has to be approached at all.

We can afford whatever we think is necessary. What I am saying is, let the people decide here in Ottawa—they know better than we do—let them get busy and do something about it.

Speaking about providing money for various things, those who come from other parts of Canada are told you cannot get the money for doing these things. We are charged with not being forward looking enough in our plans. That is your responsibility, not ours. The rest of the country says, "Go ahead; do not hold back."

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): It should not be thought that I am against the plan; I am not. I merely want to know what the plan is about.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, honourable Senator Lambert, who introduced this bill, has given a very clear description of it. For many years he has been interested in the Ottawa Federal District Commission, now the National Capital Commission. I was also very interested in the thoughtful address given by Senator O'Leary, because I know he has an intimate knowledge of the subject.

My address will be extremely brief and I hope I will be given a little latitude in it. For many years different governments have been interested in building up in this location a capital which would be worthy of this great nation.

Ottawa has not always been the capital of Canada. Montreal was the capital at one time. By the Union Act which was passed away back in 1840, and declared in 1841, Canada got a fair measure of responsible government. It was then for the first time that the government, the executive committee, and the legislative assembly were given some real authority as regards the finances of the country.

Then the crucial test came. Lord Elgin, was the Governor General and a bill was passed, known as the Rebellion Losses Bill, to compensate the people of Lower Canada for their losses during the war and the rebellion. This was objected to very much. Lord Elgin himself was not in favour of it but he took the ground that as that money had been voted by the legislative assembly, it was his duty to sign the bill. Feelings ran so high at that time that his carriage was pelted with stones and rotten eggs, and his family was insulted. The mob broke into the Parliament Buildings and destroyed the lights and furniture and burned valuable material. The picture of Queen Victoria, which hangs outside the doors of this chamber was rescued at considerable risk.

As a result the capital moved periodically between Quebec, Montreal, Kingston and Toronto until 1858 when Queen Victoria chose Ottawa to be the permanent capital.

The name Ottawa is taken from an Indian word meaning "men of the forest." From time immemorial men of the forest have been coming down the Ottawa River, sometimes with painted faces and clad in the skins of animals, sometimes their boats filled with furs, sometimes with long poles in their arms. Logs were floated down the river then, as now. They traded their furs with other tribes or with the Hudson's Bay Company. That went on for many years.

In 1826, a village sprang up on this site, with the building of the Rideau Canal to Kingston, as a possible escape route at time of invasion. This village was named Bytown after Colonel By of the Royal Engineers, the officer in charge of the construction of the canal.

After Ottawa was named the capital, the Parliament Buildings and other government buildings were erected here. At first no taxes were imposed against them, but the City of Ottawa had to have revenue, so gradually more and more money was granted to it by the federal Government.

Since that time, as Senator Lambert has indicated, various architects and commissions have worked on a capital plan. Finally, the master plan was outlined by Jacques Greber in 1946. This really was the beginning of the greater Ottawa. It was a step forward in making this a beautiful city. Mr. Greber planned for uniformity of buildings, which he considered important, and for the provision of many parks and parkways. Ottawa itself has 22 miles of scenic highway, and the national capital area embraces about 900 acres of parkland, including the Gatineau Park with its many miles of auto routes, lookout points and parking facilities. It is truly a beautiful place.

Then there is the Queensway, that 10-mile stretch of super-highway with bridges, subways and cloverleafs, which is being built right across the nation's capital to relieve traffic conditions.

There is also the Green Belt, which we have heard so much about, that fringe of two to four miles in width which surrounds the city and which is designed to limit the population to about a half million people. The city is thus restricted to so many acres of land, so that utilities will not have to be extended indefinitely. Ottawa will be an economic unit and the size of the metropolitan area will be controlled so that the taxpayers of Canada will not be faced with grave financial problems to support the National Capital Commission's expenditures, which, after all, are paid for by the people of Canada generally.

The Greber Commission also dealt with the pollution of the river, and a good deal could be said about that. There is real danger there.

The final consideration is that of the railways. Ottawa is divided into about 17 districts, by railways and waterways. There are about 19 level crossings. Finally, after ten years of consideration and study, we have come to the point where the railways will be moved to the Walkley Road area. As has been explained, there will be good roads into the heart of the city, and there will be plenty of open space. Those who have made a study of the whole problem believe that the relocation of the railways will be in the interests of this capital city.

We have been discussing this problem for a long time, and the National Capital Commission—and before that the Federal District Commission—took much trouble in regard to it. They have had to deal with two provinces, Ontario and Quebec, as well as with the City of Ottawa, and municipalities where opinions have been constantly changing. They have had to expropriate property and assess values; and, of course, they have had to spend considerable money.

Honourable senators, I would like to suggest that the National Capital Commission, rather than reporting to the cabinet, should report to the Parliament of Canada itself. Then its estimates would come up for discussion in Parliament in the same manner as other estimates, and Parliament and the public generally would know exactly what was being spent and what was not being spent.

As the previous speaker stated, the object of the master plan is not to create a Washington of the north, or to make a Rome of the new world, but rather to relate the design to the natural surroundings and to preserve unimpaired the charm and beauty of the Ottawa valley. We have a sacred obligation to defend our war memorials, to build monuments to the outstanding political leaders of the time, and to preserve the memory of great events and heroes of the past.

Our national capital of Ottawa is located on a beautiful site, with the rugged grandeur of the Laurentians, the confluence of three historic streams, and the memories of the great logging and lumbering days of yore.

Joseph Howe once said:

> A wise nation preserves its records, gathers up its muniments, repairs its great public structures, decorates the graves of its illustrious dead, and fosters patriotism and pride of country by perpetual references to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I agree with the compliment paid to Senator Lambert for the manner in which he introduced this bill. He gave a lucid explanation, and I think we have the picture clearly in our minds and will be in a position, when the bill goes to committee, to inquire further into its merits, and particularly into the cost of the project.

I agree with the criticism of Senator O'Leary (Carleton) in two respects. First, with regard to the cost. We know nothing about what this venture is ultimately going to cost. We do know that whatever it does cost will, in the end, come from the taxpayers' pocket, by way of the National Capital Commission. My second point is this: To what extent is it desirable at the present time to move the railway station two miles at least from the centre of Ottawa? Its present location is most convenient for visitors to Ottawa.

Let me give an illustration. Supposing an individual comes to Ottawa on business from a place far distant in Canada. He gets off at the new station two miles away, and comes to his hotel, probably the Lord Elgin or the Chateau Laurier. Perhaps during his stay in Ottawa he will do business at the Bureau of Statistics at Tunney's Pasture, several miles from the centre of the city. Should he then wish to go to the Department of Public Works, he will have to travel another several miles.

I am not at all certain that we have not made a grave mistake in locating our public buildings over a radius of probably three or four miles from the centre of Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It is all right for freight and express terminals to be moved out; but people coming to Ottawa will find it most inconvenient to have a railway station located two or three miles from the centre of the city. The location of the Supreme Court of Canada and of many other buildings is in the centre, and that is where the main business will be done so far as visitors to Ottawa are concerned. I think there is much weight, therefore, to the point raised by Senator O'Leary in that respect.

Of course, I dislike to differ with my old friend Senator Croll—I regret he is not in the chamber at the moment. However, I cannot share the exuberance and the airy fashion with which he dismissed the question of the cost of all these changes. I think we have become extravagant in the matter of public buildings. In looking at the summary of the main estimates for 1964-65 I find that under the heading of "Construction or Acquisition" of buildings and works, including land, the total amount for that purpose this year, outside of defence and defence production, is over $224 million.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is just the beginning.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Even in these degenerate days, $224 million is a substantial sum of money.

Senator O'Leary stated that the cost to the National Capital Commission to carry out this change in location of the Union Station will be $25 million. Senator Croll dismisses that with a wave of the hand, as though $25 million were not an important consideration. I do not think that way. When we are considering expenditures in terms of hundreds of millions of dollars for buildings, let us give a thought once in a while to the people who are paying taxes to provide this money. Or are we continuously to plunge more deeply into debt? Our debt is growing in an alarming fashion. It will cost over $1 billion this year to service it.

It is interesting to note that we are doing this by borrowing money; a great deal of this expenditure will be through borrowed money. No wonder the Bank of Canada over the past year increased the money supply nearly $1½ billion. No wonder the cost of living is on the increase. The increase has been 35 per cent since 1949, and we can safely count, I believe, on the cost of living advancing from 1½ per cent to 2 per cent a year. If you calculate what that does in ten years, you will see the effect it has on the pocketbooks of people, on the standard of living of people, and on the labour unrest it will create in this country.

Maybe I am old-fashioned, maybe I am out of date, but I cannot see anything but trouble ahead if we continue with the present rate of spending. Sooner or later it must come to an end; it cannot last forever. Therefore, I agree that when this bill goes to committee, officials of the National Capital Commission or someone in authority should be prepared to give us the complete information as to the cost.

One of the great difficulties today in public administration is that there is rarely an adequate estimate made of costs before projects are undertaken. What private business in this country, from Halifax to Vancouver, could live and prosper under a policy of that kind? We have recently had brought before us, and we will be considering them in a few days' time, supplementary estimates containing items that should have been in the main estimates, if the people who prepared the main estimates had known what they were doing.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If they had had any knowledge at all of what they were doing they would have put these supplementaries in the main estimates. I, for one, am getting a little bit tired of having our expenditures underestimated at the beginning in order to make an attractive showing, and then having to bolster them up with supplementaries. It is bad practice, and I have protested against it for years. As a matter of fact, I protested against it when I was a member of Mr. King's administration. I do not believe in it.

What does appal me is this airy attitude we have towards public spending, There is scarcely a city in Canada today, certainly not a province in Canada, that is not putting forward, through some board of trade or someone else, plans for a centennial celebration in the form of buildings or something else. There is not a jolly one of them that is not counting on getting a large share of the money from Ottawa to do it. I think it is about time to call a halt to that sort of thing. We do not honour the Fathers of Confederation, we do not honour our country, if we think we add to its glory by spending freely all over the place. That is not the thing that makes a nation; that is not the purpose for which the Fathers of Confederation put this country together—not for a moment. We ought to give some thought to the fact that the real virtue of a nation is found in the character of its laws and the spirit of its people, in the ambition they have to make good in their own lives and to see justice, honesty and faithful administration in public affairs carried from one end of Canada to the other. That is the kind of celebration I would like to see emphasized for our centenary in 1967.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Lambert speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, I have only a few words to say at this time in closing the debate. First of all, I would express warm appreciation of the suggestions that have been made by those who have taken part in the debate. I think that possibly the references from my friend and colleague Senator Crerar can be pretty adequately dealt with and explained in committee. I refrained from introducing the element of costs, or estimated costs, in connection with this particular work of establishing the railway terminals because of the indefiniteness of the equation that exists between the railways concerned and the National Capital Commission for the Government of Canada through the removal of crosstown tracks, and the appearance and revival of a great many areas that are adjacent to these tracks.

The list of what the Government will give and what the federal authorities will receive is a very extensive one. Just looking at the columns side by side, the equation between them is fairly evenly balanced. While it is not expressed in definite figures as yet, the areas that will be turned over to the federal authority as a result of the removal of so many of the crosstown tracks, bridges, and so on, will make a considerable difference from the national point of view, and the views of honourable senators regarding the cost of this enterprise.

So far as the existing station is concerned I believe it is popularly regarded as being at the centre of this city. I am informed by engineers connected with the National Capital Commission that the centre of the city is not where the present station is located, which is really now on the perimeter defined by the Ottawa River. The real centre approximates the site identified with the Hurdman's Bridge area, where the new terminal will be located.

My honourable friend Senator Crerar has referred to new public buildings that have been erected out in the Riverside Drive vicinity. The distance between the new terminal and the new Public Works headquarters and the other buildings located in that area will be very much less than that between the present station, the Chateau Laurier and those buildings. Changes have been made in the highways and the roadways that will connect the terminal with those parts of the city that will facilitate very readily any sort of business contacts that have to be made with those departments by people from out of town.

I mention this point just by way of illustration. All those details, I submit, will be quite satisfactorily dealt with in committee by the officials who have spent so much time in estimating costs and in planning the new outlines of the developments which are envisaged by this bill.

Taking the whole picture of the federal district into consideration, I think it involves many more things than just the establishment of these terminals. As has been said already, it represents, really, the strategical, central feature of the whole Federal District plan, and without it the rest of the work that is involved would be of very little purpose at all.

I would suggest that in connection with this particular bill, other features are bound to present themselves to us from time to time in connection with the plans that have been undertaken and have been approved. On the completion of the rearrangement of these transportation facilities, the practical working out of the plan of Jacques Greber and his associates will be revealed. We should see this whole picture in the light of a national endeavour and not purely a local one from the viewpoint of the city of Ottawa. Actually as the changes have taken place from year to year—and they would be surprising to anyone who took the trouble to drive about and see what actually has been accomplished in the last 15 years—they represent the fulfillment of a picture which was premeditated at these conferences and joint commissions for a long time. Just as in undertaking the building of a house, at the beginnings it may appear forbidding, but as it takes shape it becomes something of which to be proud.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Generally it becomes bigger too.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Generally, it does. And the costs also mount up.

Nevertheless, I would like to emphasize particularly the whole national picture involved in this effort to make a great capital centre out of Ottawa. The matters we are discussing today, as I have said, form the vital mainspring of the whole plan. Possibly the conceptions of those who thought about this long before these bills came to us in connection with this area will some day be the subject of complete federal control. There are many people now, many more than 15 or 20 years ago, who believe that the whole capital area should be as it is in Washington, under a federal district commission.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: In connection with that, I would like to repeat the words of the late Mackenzie King when he presented to Parliament in April 1944 the proposals that led to the revamping of a new Federal District Act. In part, he said:

> —some day the capital of Canada might become a federal district to be administered by a commission, in a manner similar to the capital at Washington. That district would extend far enough to include a very large area on the other side of the river as well as the Ottawa area. I would like to see the day when the Ottawa River, instead of flowing along the north border of the capital, will be flowing through the heart of the city, the greater Ottawa that is to be, and that we shall have a capital city which will extend as far into the province on the other side of the Ottawa River as it may extend in the province on this side.

Now that was the picture with which he presented the resolution I have referred to in April 1944, and which led to the re-engaging of Mr. Jacques Greber to complete the work that he had started before the war broke out. I do not think that great aspiration should be underestimated in connection with the future of this national centre.

Reference has been made to the amount of money that has been spent by the taxpayers of Canada on this great work. I do not think it is at all an exaggeration to say that since the beginning of this century considerably over $150 million has been spent in efforts to provide, improve and beautify this capital city of Canada. True, this is all a contribution from the taxpayers of Canada, and the question remains still—is it to be regarded as a worthwhile expenditure? Is it to be regarded as a necessary step towards achieving the national status which has so often been referred to in connection with the adoption of a new flag? It seems there is a great deal of substance to this great aspiration. By the promotion of the enterprise that this bill represents, a large measure of reality is given to the objective which the late Prime Minister had in mind when the federal commission itself was made to represent every province in Canada.

Before 1946 this was a local Ottawa commission. At that time it was provided in the new act that representatives from every province would be appointed as members to that commission, and all the headway that had been made under the Greber plan since that time has been as a result of the decisions and deliberations of that board which represents all the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I do not rise to comment on what Senator Lambert said, because to do so would be wholly improper, but I make the suggestion that it might be useful if the commission could have available for the committee the total expenditures by the commission in Ottawa and the surrounding area over the last 20 years, say, since 1945.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: From the beginning—that amount can be generally estimated now; it is on record, and I should say that the details to which Senator Crerar has referred will be available in committee.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: May I ask Senator Lambert what was the purpose in scattering these buildings from one end of Ottawa to the other? What was the definite purpose?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I would rather have that purpose defined by the officials of the commission who had charge of the work.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Was it not because of war danger?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: That was partly the reason—decentralization. It was suggested among other things that the National Defence headquarters in Cartier Square, which is still in those improvised temporary buildings, should be moved elsewhere. But nothing has been done about it. That is another development which will possibly take place in the near future. Anyway, the placing of these buildings on Riverside Drive, which is the main centre for them and for so many other departments, was part of a design for rearrangement of all these waterways and highways in connection with the suggestions made in 1946, and later in 1956. I think that full information in connection with these matters can be given when the committee meets.

Furthermore I should like to suggest that members of the committee should make a tour by bus or motorcar, which could easily be arranged, over these areas affected by this particular bill. It is not a long journey, but it would be a most illuminating one, and I think it would do very much to convince those who are sufficiently interested to go, that these are not impractical things, that they are really quite practical, and that their fruition will be a credit to the whole idea of a capital centre for Ottawa.

I remember in 1946, when the joint committee of both houses considered the resolution which the Prime Minister had presented at that time for the amendment of the Federal District Act, that Mr. Bronson, who was the chairman of the Federal District Commission, arranged to have the joint committee travel in two large motorbuses into the Gatineau area where that park now is presented to the public so effectively. I think that that object lesson, and the day spent on that excursion had more influence in accomplishing the later adoption of recommendations and policies than anything else. I suggest very strongly that we should take half a day, or a day, to be driven around to see the sites where improvements are taking place.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask a question? Is it true that not very long ago a suggestion was made by the Commission that the Parliament Buildings be moved so as to keep in line with the new developments?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I distinctly remember that Senator Reid was a member of the joint committee in 1944. I do not think there was very much discussion about moving the Parliament Buildings or the departmental buildings to other areas, but I think that suggestion arose as a result of the renewed participation of Mr. Jacques Greber, who came to Canada after that meeting to carry out his role as adviser to the Federal District Commission. Many adjustments in earlier plans have been made over the 20 years since that time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lambert, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved the second reading of Bill S-35, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I have the somewhat unenviable task this afternoon of endeavouring to direct your attention from the very engrossing subject that has been under debate to a somewhat technical and dull subject but, nonetheless, one of considerable importance.

Bill S-35 is to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, and I think I can classify it as a piece of relieving legislation. It does not have the effect of providing relief from taxation, but in this day and age I think any amelioration of the burden placed upon citizens in the area of seemingly needless filing of returns is indeed relief in a very real sense. This bill is primarily designed for that purpose, and it will be welcomed by those persons responsible for the day-to-day operations of businesses across the country.

Honourable senators will recall that this act came into operation on January 1, 1963; it is, therefore, a relatively new piece of legislation. Under its provisions, corporations and labour unions are required to report annually to the Dominion Statistician with regard to certain subject matters.

It will facilitate an understanding of the bill if I point out that under the act the information required to be provided is divided into two distinct areas. On the one hand, there is information concerning the capital structure of a corporation or the organization of a union, and particulars of its directors or, in the case of a union, the officers; and, on the other hand, there is information of a financial nature. Basically, the information of a financial nature provided is the equivalent of that now required to be provided by corporations under the Income Tax Act.

The area of financial information is again divided into two segments, one being the information equivalent to that provided under the Income Tax Act, and the other being information dealing with particulars of shareholders of a corporation, the extent of their holdings, and their nationality or place of residence.

Under the act, certain corporations that come under specific types of legislation—the Radio Act is an example—and many small corporations whose gross sales in any year do not exceed $500,000, are exempted entirely from compliance. To date, with one year of reporting passed, approximately 29,000 corporations and approximately 200 unions have reported to the Dominion Statistician.

The purpose of this legislation was to provide the Government with statistical information on the operation of the economy generally, and the extent of foreign control in, and its effect on, our economy. Indeed, when the legislation was introduced it was described as being experimental, and it was always the intention to review its actual operations with a view to ascertaining what duplication of returns it produced, to eliminate that duplication wherever possible and to reduce where at all possible the burden placed on various corporations in connection with their association with the Government.

Honourable senators, this amending bill affects only corporations, and not trades unions. As I have said, the information required falls into two distinct categories. The first category pertains to the capital structure of the company, details of its directors and share ownership, and the requirement as to that information remains unchanged with one exception, namely, that the information as to shareholders can be provided as of any one date within three months preceding the corporation's fiscal year end, rather than, as heretofore, as of the date of the close of that corporation's fiscal year. This amendment meets the convenience and practice of corporations in keeping their shareholding records, and it enables them to comply with the act without having to prepare, as has been the case up to now, lists of shareholders as at the end of the fiscal year for the purposes of this act, and lists of shareholders for the corporation's own internal purposes a few months prior to that date.

On the other hand, as I have said, the act requires the filing of financial information equivalent to that required by the Income Tax Act and, in addition, information with regard to payments made to nonresidents, which information would not be supplied under the Income Tax Act. This information is not available to the public under the act as it now stands. It is classified information.

As honourable senators can see, there is an area of duplication here with regard to that first segment of the second classification of information, that is, the information with regard to the financial condition of the company, its income and expenses. This duplication can be removed by legislation and indeed it is the main intent of this bill to do so.

It provides, first, that the same form of certification will be acceptable under this act for financial returns as is required under the Income Tax Act. Secondly, that any corporation having filed its financial statements in compliance with the Income Tax Act, will have complied with the requirements with regard to the filing of financial statements under the act in question. Thirdly, that the other financial information required under the act, as to directors and share ownership, would now be submitted annually, through the Department of National Revenue, and submitted by the taxpayer to that department in conjunction with his corporate income tax returns.

Honourable senators will understand that at this point the information required by our act is not in the hands of the Dominion Statistician, except the information that is transmitted to him by the Department of National Revenue and dealing with those areas not concerned under the Income Tax Act. Accordingly, the bill makes available to the Dominion Statistician the returns filed by the corporation under the Income Tax Act.

I underline, honourable senators, that this information is made available now, under the amending bill, to the Dominion Statistician only, and not to other governmental officials and "authorized persons" as had heretofore been the case under the original act. The bill, accordingly, removes access to corporate financial statements from the other government departments and authorized persons, as it has been found that this privilege accorded under the original bill has been virtually unused to date.

Honourable senators will also appreciate that because of this change the Dominion Statistician will have available to him, in addition to the financial information with regard to approximately 30,000 large and medium-size corporations, access to all the financial information required respecting all other corporations. This latter provision will allow the Dominion Statistician to take over from National Revenue the responsibility heretofore discharged by the Minister of National Revenue for the publication of the corporation portion of the annual statistical report.

It has been felt for some time that the facilities of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics could be utilized much more effectively than the facilities of the Department of National Revenue for the purpose of producing this report, and also that certain duplication in the tabulation of corporation returns can thus be avoided.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I would like to say that this amending legislation has been developed over a period of time by the Department of National Revenue and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in consultation with other governmental departments.

The present burden of duplicate reporting under the Corporation and Labour Unions Returns Act and under the Income Tax Act has given rise to many complaints from businesses generally, and suggestions from them that the returns required under those two acts should be in some way consolidated. That of course is the main purpose behind this bill.

This proposed legislation should eliminate one of the burdens placed by Government machinery on small businesses and facilitate the processing of corporation financial statistics under the aegis of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, my remarks on this bill will be very brief. I think that this side of the house will concur in most of what my honourable friend has said in regard to it, with perhaps one exception to which I will refer in a moment.

The original legislation which this bill amends was enacted, of course, by the previous Government; the bill was debated in this house in the month of April 1962, and in that same month it was passed and received royal assent.

As is well known, the original bill was intended to deal with a problem which has been with us for a long time relating to foreign investment in Canada, for the purpose of giving us more information in regard to its extent and the control that was exercised by foreign corporations and foreign capital on Canadian resources.

It also dealt at the same time with the question of labour unions and the relationships between Canadian unions and their American counterparts.

In so far as this bill presumes to reduce paper work and duplication of effort by companies in reporting the details of this operation, we are of course entirely in agreement with it.

I think most of us agree that corporations generally are required to spend far too much money and time, and waste of employees' time, in making returns to governments at all levels. Consequently, any simplification that can be made in that regard is all to the good.

The only question that some of us have in regard to this bill is as to clause 3, which repeals section 14(5). To my mind, section 14(5) was a very important part of the original act. Some of us indeed believe that it is the very heart of the act.

I observe that my honourable friend said in that regard that the privilege conferred, namely the privilege of communication, which was conferred by that section, had been virtually unused to date. Now, that may be so, and no doubt that problem will be considered fully in committee.

Apart from that, I have nothing to say in regard to this bill, because generally, in so far as it performs the purposes which we have been talking about, I am sure that most, if not all of us, are in favour of this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There is just one thing I had in mind. It has long been the custom, the principle, that income tax returns are secret. How far does this bill go in publicly revealing returns made to the Income Tax department?

Hon. Mr. Lang: In effect, honourable senators, there would be no greater or wider dissemination of information of this nature under this bill than under the original act. Under the original act information equivalent to that provided under the Income Tax Act was required to be filed by corporations. This in fact delimits the dissemination of this information, by precluding its transmission by the Dominion Statistician to any other government department, or official, or agent, as was heretofore his right under the original act. So in effect, secrecy is more closely guarded now than it was under the act as originally enacted.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I shall delay you for but a few minutes. Unfortunately, I saw this bill only a short time ago, but that is my own responsibility.

I listened with close interest to my friend Senator Lang, who, with his usual ability, made a good presentation of a poor case. He says we are going to eliminate duplication. Well, I do not know any business that cannot afford to make one extra copy of its financial statements and send them by mail to the Dominion Statistician, instead of forcing the statistician or his officer to go down to the Department of National Revenue and look for them. That is one of the changes that is proposed.

My friend said—and of course this is very popular—that we are going to take a burden off small business. The schedule to the act, which is chapter 26 of the Statute of 1962, has 17 relieving sections for corporations not called upon to comply with this act. Paragraph 16 of the schedule exempts any corporation for any reporting period in respect of which it can be established that the gross revenue of the corporation for that reporting period did not exceed $500,000, and that its assets did not exceed $250,000.

When we discuss a business enterprise, in this house or elsewhere, we do not think of a company, doing business to the extent of $500,000, as a small business. So I do not regard that as an argument in favour of the bill.

Honourable senators, I want to underline what my friend Senator Thorvaldson said. We have heard many speeches, both on the political and the nonpolitical platform, and some of us have read speeches delivered in another place, about the difficulty we are falling into in Canada through foreign control of business, through direct investment of capital in this country. Every honourable senator knows that I do not agree with such speeches. Subsection 5 of section 14 of the act was designed, among other things, to enable the Government to make a determination as to what was the real effect of such investment. In other words, it was to enable the Government to get the facts rather than to deal in these airy generalizations to which we have been subject for a long time.

Subsection 5 reads:

> Any official or authorized person may, for any purpose relating to the determination of policy in connection with the formulation of any law of Canada or the ascertainment of any matter necessarily incidental thereto, (a) communicate or allow to be communicated to any other such person any privileged information obtained under this Act, and (b) allow any other such person to inspect or have access to any statement or other writing containing any privileged information obtained under this Act.

That subsection is to be repealed. So that from here on, we are going to keep on dealing in averages—and there is nothing more misleading than averages. We are not going to get the facts. Then, of course, if they are going to repeal subsection 5, they should also repeal subsection 6. But that is a matter that we shall come to when the bill goes to committee.

Honourable senators, all I am saying is that the heart is being taken out of this act, that the very purposes for which it was devised are now being destroyed, and that if you really want to relieve business of the problem of making these returns, let us repeal the act.

The Acting Speaker (Hon. Mr. Gershaw): It has been moved by the honourable Senator Lang, seconded by the honourable Senator Reid, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lang, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 16, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 16, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

FARM CREDIT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt tabled:

Copy of Trade Agreement between Canada and the Hungarian People's Republic, signed at Ottawa, June 11, 1964, together with correspondence exchanged. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 7 of the Department of Trade and Commerce Act, chapter 78, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 68 of the said act, chapter 152, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

Report on the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 12 of the said act, chapter 26, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English text).

Statement of moneys received and disbursed in the Special Account (Replacement of Materiel), for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 11(4) of the National Defence Act, chapter 184, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, June 10, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

TOURIST TRAFFIC

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic, presented the following report of the committee:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted I would like to say a few words with respect to the tourist industry.

(Translation):

A few weeks ago several speeches were devoted to the organization of this Committee on Tourist Traffic, especially in anticipation of 1967. Each speaker praised in the most suitable manner the beauties of his own province. Some did so with living realism; others with exceptional eloquence and lyricism, as did, for instance, Senator Jodoin, from Montreal.

There is, however, an idea I should like to set forth as the basis of all that. It is that tourist travel, besides enabling one to see the beauties of each part of the country, allows people from the east to come in contact with those from the west, and people from central Canada to meet those from other parts of the country. There is nothing like it; the best way to understand one another is to engage in conversation.

I believe that in thus developing the tourist industry throughout Canada we will find one of the best ways to attain that unity, that understanding and that co-operation that all Canadians, in the Atlantic provinces, in the south, in the western provinces as well as in Quebec, are striving for; to understand one another, it is necessary to dialogue.

Moreover, when such talk is conducted in a place one loves and where it is good to live, where one tries to show to advantage the surrounding beauties, it seems to me it is easier to understand one another and to love one another more.

That is why the Committee on Tourist Traffic should be used to the utmost to spread everywhere in our country that spirit of unity and understanding.

(Text):

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I thank the honourable Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt) for his words. I am sure the members of the committee will be most grateful for the thought he has expressed.

Report adopted.

BANKING LEGISLATION

CORRECTION OF NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to refer to an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on Monday, June 15, entitled "The Senate and the Banks," written by Mr. Bernard Dufresne. It says that the bill to establish the Bank of British Columbia has received second reading in the Senate and has been referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce for further detailed study. Then it goes on to say this:

> The hearings held so far have dealt with detailed study of the bills to grant charters to the Bank of Western Canada, with headquarters in Winnipeg, and the Laurentide Bank of Canada, with headquarters in Vancouver.
>
> The Senate has approved granting the charters and the bills now are due to come before the Commons for its approval.

That is obviously an error on the part of the author of this article, because the bills referred to as having been passed by the Senate are still before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

I thought I should draw to the attention of the Senate and the public the fact that the statement made in his article is in error.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1954

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 11, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I rise to speak on this measure for several reasons: in order that honourable senators may follow with interest and appreciation the evolution of Canada's housing legislation; in order to emphasize the value of a healthy, progressive construction industry to the national economy; and in order to understand the urgent need of lower income families for decent living accommodation, and our desire to assist them. Moreover, I intend to indicate that this bill will give new life to cities in meeting the problems of today. Problems of urban renewal and subsidized public housing are the two on which we break new ground.

This is a major piece of social legislation, both in concept and in philosophy, which makes the very best use of social capital. This bill will open a new kind of life in many of our cities. In the past, we have associated urban renewal with tearing down and demolishing. This bill will mean building something new.

We have been building houses in Canada at the rate of 135,000 dwellings a year. The aim in our time is 200,000 a year, and that may take a decade. Under this bill there is a shift of emphasis. We have house building on the road. This measure contains a blueprint for tomorrow, with the emphasis on public housing and urban renewal.

Expressions such as "imaginative", "humanitarian", and "far reaching in scope and potential", rightly belong to the amendments to the National Housing Act now before us. Rarely does such important and vital legislation enjoy the wholehearted support of all political groups as do significant measures such as this, and it is fitting that it should be so.

These amendments are a testimonial to two men in particular, namely, the late Jack Garland, who has left an imprint of his humanity, intellect and understanding, on measures which will go far towards raising the living standards of thousands of Canadians; and Stewart Bates, whose devotion and dedication to public service, and more particularly to housing, has left an indelible impression. The present minister, the Honourable J. R. Nicholson, has carried on the forward-looking policies of his predecessor, and he himself has contributed a great deal. He was a very good student of housing in the C. D. Howe school of realism.

It is my hope that the vacancy in C.M.H.C. will not long remain open. The quality of leadership, which is so essential, and the drive that is so much required is, in my view, available in the department, which has always been strong administratively. The emphasis in that department has always been on teamwork. What the Government is looking for in the way of leadership is right under its nose.

In this bill the Government is breaking new ground in an all-out assault on a problem that has for far too long been a blight on this nation: the existence of slums, of deteriorating inner cores of urban centres, of a desperate lack of low-cost housing for the hundreds of thousands of our fellow Canadians whose living standard in this age of affluence is disgracefully inadequate. This legislation faces up to the grim fact that, nationally speaking, public housing in this country has failed, and failed dismally. We can take little comfort from the knowledge that Canada has the second-highest standard of housing in the world, second only to the United States, when we have to live with the knowledge that across the nation thousands upon thousands of Canadians live in over-crowded, decaying hovels, many of them lacking basic essentials of proper sanitation. We can take no comfort at all from the equally disturbing knowledge that our senior citizens must live out their remaining years bereft of the dignity and security which is their right in a well-ordered society.

The Government has presented us with a blueprint for action, and a magnificent document it is. I am proud to be a member of a party which faces up so responsibly and sensitively to the crying need for housing reform in all its major aspects. In these days, when other and often lesser issues seems to be taking up a disproportionate amount of time and newspaper space, and with a considerable amount of emotional overtones, it is encouraging to see the Government move boldly and decisively to meet the pressing challenge of modern-day living.

Unless we act with boldness and understanding, the problem of public housing is going to continue to plague us for many years to come. If we continue to tolerate substandard housing for many of our citizens, if we continue to sit on our hands and take tentative and timid nibbles at the staggering and complex problem that it is, then we stand convicted of the charge of sheer irresponsibility, of indifference to the plight of the unfortunates who lack the means to break out of their physical environment. They cannot afford present-day housing costs; they have no savings. The only saving some make is on the estate tax, for they inherit only poverty.

Public housing in this country has failed because the various levels of Government have not co-operated to make it a success. We talk with great enthusiasm of record home building, of vast new subdivisions springing up; and it is right that we take pride in this accomplishment, much of which has been made possible by this act and by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Moreover, we are inclined to dwell on the economic impact of this construction boom in new housing units.

Today I bragged about the fact that we are building houses at the rate of 135,000 units each year, and we will continue to increase that and hope that before the decade is over we will be building 200,000 annually. But what of low rental housing? What of urban renewal? What about the needs of our senior citizens at one end of the scale, and those of our young people embarking on higher education and with no decent place to live, at the other end of the scale? In Toronto, for example, the metro council some years ago announced with considerable fanfare that it proposed to build a thousand low-rental units per year. That was in 1957. It is now 1964, and by the last count the council has erected a grand total of fewer than 600 units. What we need to do is shock the public conscience into realization that here in this young and wealthy land of ours we have been neglecting our greatest asset, our human beings.

The legislation before us today is excellent on all counts; but it is not worth the paper it is printed on unless it is implemented into reality. A blueprint is just a blueprint until it is made to live. That is the situation we are faced with today. If governments at the provincial and municipal levels fail to take advantage of the new act and display as little energy and persistence as they have in the past, then nothing is going to be accomplished. Good wishes and good intentions will not eliminate bad housing and save our communities from decay. They will not alleviate the plight of people whose only sin is their inability to make enough money to enable them to escape from the hovels in which they exist. If lack of funds is the excuse of the provinces and municipalities, then the federal Government in three entirely new sections has wiped out this excuse.

Section 35c is the first of the pacemakers. Along with its companion 35d it now makes it most difficult for the provincial or municipal authority to cry "poverty".

Section 35c permits C.M.H.C. to make loans up to 90 per cent of the acquiring and servicing of land for public housing projects, and the companion section authorizes loans to provinces, municipalities and public housing agencies for the construction, acquiring and operation of public housing projects.

The third new section, 35e, authorizes the corporation to make contributions towards the operating losses of subsidized public housing projects up to a maximum of 50 per cent. At the same time it widens the scope of assistance presently given to the construction of university housing projects by including co-operative associations and specified charitable organizations. In the same field, the clause increases from $100 million to $150 million the total amount of loans that may be made to assist in the construction of university housing projects.

The changes in the sections dealing with university housing projects come at a most opportune time, for new colleges and universities are going up, or are in their planning stages; the availability of federal aid will certainly have a beneficial effect. Laurentian University in Sudbury, Assumption College in Windsor, York University in Toronto, Trent University in Peterborough, Waterloo University in Waterloo, and Dalhousie University in Halifax—and there must be many others all over the country—have a great need for housing facilities. Now they are available to them. The proposed new section to the act constitutes a tremendous stride forward in the field of housing reform.

The federal Government, in fact, is saying to all other levels of government, and to the people of Canada, "We are making it financially feasible for you to move full speed ahead with public housing and urban renewal projects; now it is up to you."

This bill carries a particular challenge to the Canadian people. It is a cruel illusion to pass laws which are a mere promise without taking the measures necessary to the fulfilment of that promise.

As long as I can remember, the labour movement of this country has been talking about the need to do away with our slums, the requirements and essentiality of subsidized public housing, the need for homes for the workers. Well, here it is. Here are the things they have been asking for. And I just point out that in addition to continuing their activities on housing and doing something about it, they might very well take a look at the antiquated building codes in this country, outmoded, hampering, hindering and hamstringing municipalities. I think it is time we modernized the building codes. Building methods and building materials have changed. Technological advances cannot be ignored. The time has come for labour unions to recognize them. That is one valuable contribution they can make to all aspects of housing.

There are other elements in the community which can give leadership—boards of trade and chambers of commerce which are interested in anchoring the business section, in preserving values, improving the business sections of cities and keeping business there. And why not?

Traffic problems are growing with great urgency. There is traffic chaos in most of our cities and there is decay and rot and blight which persists.

In the City of Toronto we are building a magnificent new City Hall, a thing of beauty and charm. But if you stood at the top and dropped a stone you would hit some terrible slums which exist extremely close to this magnificent building, in the heart of downtown Toronto.

Let me give an example of what our cities are facing. Eaton's and Simpsons have built a shopping centre at Highway 401 and Dufferin Street in Toronto—Yorkdale Shopping Centre. It is fully enclosed, air-conditioned and well appointed. They chose their tenants rather carefully. It is modern in every way. It stays open for most evenings, and it has acres and acres of parking space. I know a national chain that has stores all over this country, and they have been located in downtown Toronto for some 25 years. They are a very successful organization. They have rented a shop in the new shopping centre, which opened about six months ago, and last month they did more business in that outlet than they did in their main store in downtown Toronto. It was the same class of goods, and the same size of store, but there was parking space at the shopping centre, and it was open in the evening. Other stores were attracting people there. Going downtown to shop in one of the large cities is a chore at any time, and not lightly to be undertaken.

The business people who are concerned about this must realize that time is running out on them. Here is an opportunity to interest municipalities and provinces in urban renewal, because under this act they can do much. They can receive up to 50 per cent of the cost for off-street parking, underground parking, and traffic improvements, among other things. Unless they do something about it, they will find after a while that what has happened at this shopping centre, as I indicated to you, will happen at other centres, and the value of the downtown area will deteriorate.

This bill has something for a group of people who have always been in the forefront. I am thinking of the churches which have always talked against slums, and for the subsidization of public housing and homes for people. For a long time they carried the ball themselves, as they are the social conscience of the people. Here is an opportunity for them to reactivate themselves. I throw out the suggestion to them—and I am sure all members of the house share in it—that in the field of aging they can do something that they have wanted to do for a long time, namely, provide homes for the people who need them.

The amount of money involved here is not great. What the federal Government wants above everything else is the participation and interest of other groups. This is something that should attract the service clubs which need an outlet for their energies. The volunteer agencies are given an opportunity to carry on their work. All these organizations can concern themselves on behalf of both the aging people and the universities.

The builders in this country, who have been the financial beneficiaries of housing legislation and social capital, should now stop faulting the Government. The industry is healthy and efficient, and it is time it did some research to enable it to build better homes at lower prices. I was not particularly impressed when I read a press report yesterday which said that the largest building organization in Canada enjoyed a 23 per cent increase in its profits.

In so far as the provincial and municipal governments are concerned, I do not think they ought to wait for the federal Government to ladle out these housing goodies to them. They have an obligation to participate at very little cost to themselves, and there ought to be pressure on the municipalities by the citizens' groups, and on the provincial governments by the municipalities, so that they may under joint arrangements do these things that can now be done without limitation under this act.

While the municipalities are thinking about these things, they should give consideration to the fact that when a man repairs or improves his home he ought not to have his assessment raised and his taxes increased. Perhaps we would have less decay in our cities if something were done to encourage repairs and improvements.

I said earlier that it was not enough to pass a law. Something has to be done about it. We have to make the people of Canada understand the concept of this bill. It is not enough to issue booklets or to publish statistics. It is not enough to put advertisements in the newspapers. The Department of Trade and Commerce sends its missionaries across the country to explain what it is doing. That has been found to be very successful, and it should be adopted with respect to this bill. We should have people from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation going across the country explaining to the provinces, municipalities and all interested groups what is contained in this bill and what is available. This bill in itself will build no houses; only people can do that.

This is the crux of the bill. What is required now is a gigantic co-operative effort embracing all levels of government, and a slashing of red tape bureaucracy that in the past has hampered even the meagre accomplishments. And, of equal importance, as I have already said, is a program of public enlightenment leading to a sharp upturn in public awareness of the housing cancer that must be cut out of our lives. The Government is providing the tools. It is now up to those of authority closest to the people to make good use of them.

We must create a climate in this country that will be unhealthy for the apathy, indifference and gutlessness of civic leaders, who have found it easier to busy themselves with more politically profitable affairs than trying to provide decent housing for their citizens. We must come soon to the day when office holders must devote as much effort to the promotion of good housing as they do now to providing ever wider expressways, or risk the perils of an outraged public opinion.

It is my belief that the frontiers of social and economic expansion of Canada have yet to be discovered. We are not overbuilt in this country. We are capable of far greater achievements. This bill is a challenge and an opportunity not only to the people of Canada but to those who sit in authority to make sure that when we meet on other occasions much will have been accomplished under it.

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: Honourable senators, there appears to be little or no opposition to this bill. It is also noteworthy that the contributions to the debate so far have been from honourable senators who are learned in the law. Sometimes, as a layman, I wander along in the dark in endeavouring to follow some of my friends of the legal profession who are inclined to take for granted that we all understand as well as they do the legal history or background of some of these bills that come before us. To satisfy my own curiosity I took the trouble of checking into the legal background of this bill, and to my satisfaction I found out why there had been no opposition expressed so far.

This bill is to amend the National Housing Act of 1954, which itself stemmed from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act of 1945 which, in turn, was developed from the Dominion Housing Act of 1935 and the National Housing Act of 1938. My conclusion is that this bill, far from being new legislation, is in reality the latest of many steps that have kept our housing legislation streamlined and up to date over a period of three decades.

It is interesting to recall that during that time our Government has been entrusted to both of the major political parties for varying periods of time, and it is my hope that future parliaments will continue to keep our housing legislation in tune with changing conditions in a changing world. We have to look forward to the amendment of this sort of legislation from time to time. That has been done in the past, and a very good purpose has been served by it.

I am not going to prolong the debate beyond referring briefly to some of the amendments that have a particular interest to my province of British Columbia—an interest that is different from that of some of the other provinces.

Clause 7, on page 5 of the bill, repeals Part III of the present act, and replaces it with a new Part III which deals with the urban renewal program, which was so well covered by the last speaker. On investigation, we find that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act up to now contained some obstacles to the carrying out of the desirable program which faces us. In the first place, the C.M.H.C. could participate in urban renewal programs only if the area had contained a substantial amount of housing before redevelopment or would contain a substantial amount of housing after redevelopment.

Secondly, I found that C.M.H.C. up to date could assist financially only for the purpose of acquiring and clearing the land. Very often a redevelopment project would require the replacement of services such as streets, sidewalks, sewers, watermains, etc. These are all expensive to replace, yet C.M.H.C. was not permitted to assist municipalities in replacing those services.

The third difficulty was that the previous legislation required almost complete clearance of the area for redevelopment. Canadian cities are young, and this is particularly true of the cities in my province. Vancouver, now the third largest city of Canada, with a population amounting to about 50 per cent of the total population of our province, was but a cluster of cabins in the virgin forest just 80 years ago—which is a short period in the lifetime of a major city. This means that the areas for redevelopment in new cities like Vancouver and all of our other cities must of necessity be on a selective basis. Certain buildings must be demolished in order to prevent the development of slum conditions. Other buildings can be retained.

The amending bill before us largely removes those restrictions. Specifically, the amendments would permit the corporation to assist not only in acquiring and clearing an area, but also in the provision of services. C.M.H.C. may also make loans to individuals and guarantee loans to individuals for the purpose of improving existing houses in urban renewal areas, if they are fit to be treated in that way, so as to prevent them from deteriorating to a slum condition. Therefore, the amending bill is of particular interest to newer urban centres where areas have not yet completely deteriorated to demolition standards but lend themselves to a selective renewal program. Municipalities will be able now to prevent areas becoming slum areas; and it is well to remember that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

Honourable senators, I said that the cities of British Columbia are young cities. We have another record which is closely related to housing, in that in British Columbia we have the largest percentage of total population in the age bracket 65 years and over, in comparison with any province of Canada.

British Columbia, with its mild and salubrious climate the year round, attracts people from all provinces of Canada, particularly to spend the twilight years of their lives there. Most of these senior citizens live on a very definite budget, which in many cases imposes the practice of strict frugality. That is why our record of a larger percentage of senior citizens than any other province is closely related to housing. It makes me happy to find in clause 8, on page 9 of this bill, as well as in other amendments contained in the bill, further consideration being given to assistance to individuals, municipalities and provinces, to help themselves. I like the self-help character of this bill.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I recall that, in 1954, when the original act was passed, many senators were sceptic and wondered whether the act would serve its intended purpose.

At that time, I had explained the nature of the experiment made in Quebec. For fifty years now, our caisses populaires have emphasized housing, because we realized that the more people had, if not in very good, at least fairly good accommodation, the higher was the morale of families, and juvenile delinquency was decreasing in those centres where heretofore youngsters were growing up in slums. Furthermore, housing had a good effect on the economy of such areas. So remembering the old French axiom that "when the building industry goes well, everything goes well", we, in the caisses populaires, told ourselves that, by promoting new housing, we were at the same time helping all the industries of the nation. The more labour is diversified, the more it spreads to the whole country. The point is not to establish only one industry in a given centre, because then only that industry is privileged in that centre; whereas, if the building industry spreads across the whole country, there is more employment, unemployment is reduced and, at the same time, all the other industries thrive, not only the building industry, but all industries connected therewith, such as furniture, plumbing, and so on.

As a matter of fact, in the province of Quebec, in the last six years, our small caisses populaires loaned on mortgages for building purposes over $600 million. The proposed amendments to the act, which we are studying today, go further. We will thus reach a field that we could not reach before, since there are people to whom we cannot lend money because we are always asking ourselves: Will we lose money? Or we ask ourselves what will happen, since we cannot allow ourselves to lose other people's money by lending it to people who cannot pay it back. However, such an organization which covers the whole of Canada is a stimulus to other people.

You cannot imagine what someone feels when he has always lived in a slum and gets out of it, acquires a little piece of land which is truly his and where he can build for his loved ones, his wife and children, a small home that belongs to them. It is surprising to see how good those people's morale can be. I know at home of a great number of cases where that spirit of greatness, of self-respect has developed—I do not say pride, because pride is the sin that destroys the world—I say self-respect and happiness which blossom when the head of a family who has lived in poverty, who has never lived on a piece of land that belonged to him, finally becomes the owner of such a property.

Its great advantage—I do not know if that plan was taken from the Caisses populaires—but we grant loans repayable on a weekly and monthly basis without saying: We loan you $1,000 and you will pay us back $1,000 at the end of the year, but rather you will pay back $25 a month; in a short time the borrower will have paid his loan back and he could not have paid it back in a lump sum but he will manage in doing so gradually. Thus, those people are encouraged to save. This legislation does not only make it possible for many to become property owners but it is, I would say, a source of prosperity everywhere because it creates work everywhere. However, in every legislation, the moral side has to be considered also. It is not enough to ask oneself if a piece of legislation will bring in dollars but also if it will be advantageous from a moral standpoint.

For one who has never owned anything, the fact that today he may live in a home of his own gives this man a sense of respect for other people's property and his children react the same way, because they want the ground where their home is built to be respected.

This legislation goes much farther than the economic principles it brings forward. There is another principle involved which is much more important and realistic, that is the moral aspect of the question.

We fear communism; let each Canadian citizen become the owner of his home, and communism will have practically no foothold in this country, because a person who owns something is anxious to keep it. Those amendments to the national housing act are along the same lines as the improvements which were made to the legislation from year to year. The previous government changed the 1954 act and the present government is improving it even further. As the senator for Kamloops, Hon. S. J. Smith, stated, this bill will make it possible to renovate urban districts which have not yet become slums. Under this improved legislation, it will be possible to remodel, renovate and even restore certain areas which have a historical value.

I have been here twenty years and, in my opinion, it is the best bill ever passed. Year after year this act has been improved, and I wish to pay tribute to both governments which have contributed to that improvement.

I wish to commend the former as well as the present government, because this is one of the most fruitful of our laws, a source of virtue for our families.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I wish to add only a few words because nobody is against the principle of this legislation. Senator Walker said the other day that better housing makes better citizens. Senator Vaillancourt just dealt with this theme and gave more precisions. This annual bill improves the National Housing Act of 1954. Every session, amendments are moved to this act. Hence I say that this bill is welcome.

The only reason urging me to rise today is that I want to give notice that when the bill is considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee, I shall ask for explanations from the officers of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in respect to certain charges made in the newspaper Le Devoir of today. In an article entitled we can read this—and I quote only a few excerpts:

A test for new federalism

> During a debate in the House of Commons last week on the National Housing Act, the hon. member for St. James, Mr. Maurice Rinfret, mentioned the injustice of Ottawa towards Quebec, as far as the help granted through this federal legislation for the building of low-price housing is concerned, help which is much more to the advantage of the other provinces than to ours.

A little further, the editor says that this legislation is—> —a flagrant example of the fact that programs and legislation prepared by Ottawa are adapted to the needs of other provinces much more than to the needs of Quebec.

It is in fact a patent, an unquestionable case, which becomes a challenge or a test for co-operative federalism.

The only precise grievance contained in this article is that the legislation does not promote construction of low rent dwellings which include a sufficient number of rooms, of bedrooms, to meet the requirements of the Quebec family.

However, I recognize that, in some instances, federal acts are not always adapted to the particular requirements of Quebec. This may also happen in the case of some provinces where specific needs exist. But I feel that such charges are often made haphazardly, and I wish, in any event, as far as this act is concerned, to get to the bottom of it. I do hope the deputy leader of the government in this house, as well as the officers of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, will be in a position, when the bill is examined by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, to offer full particulars in this respect and to inform us as to whether it would be really advisable to amend the act in order to meet the needs of the province of Quebec, or whether such charges are simply unfounded.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: May I restate the question? It should not be forgotten that in Quebec there is a housing act.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I know that.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I may also add that before 1960, very few people resorted to the federal act, since, according to the provincial legislation, the Quebec government paid 3 per cent of the interest. The same thing occurs in regard to the farm credit act. The province of Quebec is the only one having both a housing act and a farm credit act.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: This was the purpose of my intervention.

(Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with respect to Bill S-7, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act".

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I ask that this item on the Order Paper be postponed until later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands until later this day.

CONVENTION ON DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT AND OCCUPATION

MOTION FOR APPROVAL AGREED TO

The Senate resumed from Monday, June 8, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Croll:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve of Convention No. 111 concerning discrimination in respect of employment and occupation, which was adopted by the International Labour Conference on the 25th of June, 1958, and that this house do approve the same.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I welcome, as I am sure all honourable senators do, the opportunity to participate in the approval by Canada of this important international convention, the ultimate object of which is the outlawing of discrimination in respect of employment and occupation by legislative action throughout all the countries affiliated with the International Labour Conference, which meets tomorrow at Geneva.

In the intervening period that followed the introduction of the motion by Senator Croll, I suggested that this motion should go to the reactivated Committee on External Relations. I understand that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) is agreeable to that, if it meets with the wishes of honourable senators. I am still of the opinion that the matter should go to that committee, but I am informed that there is some degree of urgency. For that reason, I am not going to move that it be referred to that committee. However, it is difficult not to note in passing that this urgency which has come upon us within the last week concerns the subject matter of an international convention into which Canada entered on the 25th day of June, 1958; and one of the reasons I hoped that this motion would go to committee was that we would be given an explanation as to why it is that six years later and, as the honourable sponsor has said, after 43 other nations have approved it, we are told, on the eve of another international conference in Geneva, that this matter suddenly becomes urgent. One wonders at what point somebody in our External Affairs Department or elsewhere suddenly woke up to the fact that after six years it was about time Canada approved this convention.

Another question I would like to have heard discussed in committee is the interesting point of the difference between the wording of this motion and the wording of the motion that was on the Order Paper with it for several days with reference to the Columbia River Treaty. The motion sponsored by Senator Croll asks for the approval of this convention. The motion presented by Senator Hugessen on the Columbia River Treaty asked for approval by the Houses of Parliament of the ratification of the Columbia River Treaty. In this subtle difference between the wording of those two motions are to be found some very interesting sidelights on the difference in the obligations imposed—to use Senator Hugessen's words—on the province of British Columbia under the Columbia River Treaty and the obligations which may or may not be assumed by provinces under Convention No. 111, which we are now discussing.

Senator Crerar raised this very point at page 659 of our Hansard, when he said:

> I would like to ask Senator Croll two questions. First, are the terms of the convention of general application, or are they limited to admonitions to governing authorities, wherever they may be and whoever they are? Second, are there any sanctions proposed for violation of the terms of the convention?

I will not attempt to answer those two questions, but I believe it would have been in the public interest to have had them answered in committee.

That, of course, raises the whole question of the real significance of the obligations we assume in these international involvements—whether they be treaties, conventions, procès-verbal, exchanges of letters or whatever they may be. One wonders what obligations we assume when we enter into one of these international agreements. What obligations does Canada really assume? What obligations fall on the provinces? What obligations, if any, fall on us as individuals? It would be useful to have an answer to such questions as why it is with respect to some international agreements we are asked, as we have been this session, to pass domestic legislation to implement a treaty and at other times we are not.

I am aware that there are answers to these questions, but it is a long time since I have heard them answered intelligently, in any formal way, in this country. I believe that, in the long run, these questions are very important to all of us who look towards that day when the rule of law will have international acceptance as a guide to the relations between nations, just as we believe it has in our domestic legislation.

One of the reasons this is so is that in Canada, as I understand our constitutional law and practice, an international treaty, no matter how solemnly entered into and no matter how voluntarily ratified, is not automatically enforceable in our courts against the Dominion of Canada or the provinces. In this we are in a very different position from the United States, where an international treaty becomes part of the law of the land under their constitution.

Senator Lambert raised another point which I think might well have been looked at in committee. This is the question of the obligations assumed by the provinces. Again at page 659 of our Hansard, he said:

> This point was raised previously in relation to other matters where approval of the provinces was given in the form of a letter from the attorney general or another member of the government of a province to the federal authority. I have always felt that this approval would be more representative if it was accompanied by formal legislation passed by the respective provinces.

With that, honourable senators, I find myself in complete agreement. It would be a splendid feather in our Canadian cap if we were able to say tomorrow at Geneva, "Here we present to you not only the formal approval of this convention by the Government of Canada; we also present the formal approval of each of our ten provinces." I think that would be of great significance, perhaps for three reasons.

In the first place, it would give international recognition to provincial rights under our constitution. Some will say this is of no importance. I think it is of some importance. Just as many years ago it was important for Canada to assert its international position vis-à-vis its membership in the Empire, as it then was, so I believe it is of some importance that these exclusive sovereign rights of the provinces be understood internationally. Secondly, if that were done it would greatly facilitate some of our international negotiations, because there is abroad a lack of understanding of some of these problems in respect to the division of jurisdiction under our federal constitution. Thirdly, if we were able to achieve this it would give notice to the world that we in Canada are going as far as is possible under our constitutional law and practice to implement fully these international obligations we undertake.

Perhaps the first step in that direction might well be a request to the provinces that they approve our own Bill of Rights, just as we are asked to approve this convention. The Bill of Rights is quoted in reports we have made to the International Labour Office as one of the indications we are carrying out our obligations under this convention.

If I may quote from a report of the committee of experts on the application of conventions and recommendations presented to the Forty-Seventh Session of the ILO in Geneva in 1963, it says in part:

> It would consequently appear that Convention No. 111—

That is the one we are dealing with.

> —establishing as it does a framework within which the States may take action by methods appropriate to national conditions and practice, does not give rise in the case of federal States to the legal difficulties as regards ratification which may arise in connection with other international labour Conventions.

So the suggestion is there and, I respectfully submit, the full power is there, for I know of nothing in international law or our own domestic law that would stand in the way of our provinces giving full, formal legislative and executive approval to a convention such as this. I believe that would break new ground in international law, because as far as I know this has not been done before. There is a noticeable reluctance on the part of some federal jurisdictions to go this far, but we in Canada have a record in this respect of which we can be proud.

I read in the New York Times last week an article which seemed to be something like a boast. It said that already the legislation to outlaw discrimination in respect of employment and occupation is in force in 25 states. I take it that the Washington bureau of the New York Times is rather proud of that.

In Canada we have positive legislation in at least six provinces, and all of the provinces have given an undertaking to the federal Government, as the sponsor of the motion told us, that they will put their house in order or have already done so in respect to the obligations of this convention.

I recognize, of course, that there are some qualifications that must be made. Some would say immediately that we are not required by this convention to go all the way, that the ancillary documents deliberately give us loopholes. I think the quotation I have given from the New York Times shows that while for other nations loopholes may be regarded as necessary, I do not think they are necessary for us. It is for that reason I say that we in Canada have an opportunity to break new ground in international law by asking the provinces to give formal approval to this convention.

Honourable senators, these are but a few of many points that might be discussed in committee. I have raised them at this time only to indicate that it involves a very wide area of inquiry and investigation which I would hope would become of concern to the reactivated External Relations Committee. I believe that the Senate of Canada can add considerably to its prestige, to its public service and to its usefulness if it will undertake careful study and continual surveillance of these more or less routine matters in our international affairs.

It is interesting that some years ago—1918, I believe it was—the question of reform of the House of Lords was current. A commission was appointed under Lord Bryce comprising 30 members, 15 from each house. After very thorough investigation of the problem, that commission recommended four areas in which the Upper House in the United Kingdom could justify its existence, and one of these areas which was greatly stressed was this field of international affairs. As was pointed out then, this is an area in which discussion and judgment should be carried on in a politically-impartial climate, and naturally an upper chamber lends itself better to the development of that climate than does the other chamber, for very obvious reasons.

I would hope, therefore, that when a motion such as this is before us again honourable senators will agree with me that there would be some value in referring it to our reactivated committee on External Relations.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, it was with delight I learned that after consultation by the federal Government with the provinces, and because of their concurrence in the principles of Convention No. 111 of the International Labour Organization, concerning discrimination in regard to employment and occupation, it will now be possible for Canada, after securing the approval of the Senate and the House of Commons, to ratify this convention.

This is a matter in which I have been greatly interested, and about which I would like to speak at some length, but today I shall limit my remarks to a very few words because I do not want to do anything that might prevent our Minister of Labour from announcing during the coming session of the ILO, to open in Geneva tomorrow, that Canada has ratified this convention which was adopted, as you have been told, by the International Labour Conference in 1958.

Senator Grosart has asked why, in view of the fact that this convention was passed in 1958, so many years have elapsed before it has come before us for approval. He must surely realize that the former Government must take the major share of the blame for this lapse of time in bringing the matter to our attention. I think the present Government has given it quite urgent attention, because it takes some little time to obtain the approval of the governments of the provinces.

Honourable senators, I cannot imagine anyone in Canada being opposed to ratification of this convention, the object of which is to do away with discrimination in employment and occupation. Despite the opinions expressed in the Senate here on May 26 by the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary), regarding Canada's false pride in her importance internationally, I believe that what Canada does, and the leadership she gives, is extremely important in world affairs.

When I was an observer attending the United Nations Assembly in 1962, and again when I attended as a delegate to the United Nations seminar in South America last December, I was told over and over again that Canada is liked, looked up to and respected, and that her actions and her decisions give leadership to very many of the middle-sized and smaller countries of the world. If this is so, and I believe it is, our ratification of this convention may very well lead to ratification which will be followed by conforming legislation in many other countries, not including the 43 that have already ratified the convention.

I do not want to speak too long because, as I said earlier, I do not want to do anything to delay the approval of this convention by the Canadian Senate. I would like to say, however, that I am proud that while my own Province of New Brunswick was not the first to pass this legislation against discrimination, as you were told by Senator Croll when he introduced the motion, it was not the last either. I am very proud we have this on our statutes.

Despite what Senator Grosart has said, I cannot see any need to have this convention go to a committee for further study. Certainly there is nothing difficult to understand in the convention; the wording is very clear, and it has been made even clearer by the explanation of Senator Croll on June 4. Its subject is important, and I am sure all Canadian senators must be familiar with it, as they must have been studying it for years. Whether or not they have done so, they must surely approve of Canada's ratifying a convention embodying such principles.

Before closing I would like to say it is my hope that our Government will find it possible to work out procedures regarding other ILO and UN conventions which will make it possible for Canada to ratify them also. In this connection I am thinking particularly of the ILO convention No. 100 concerning equal pay, and also the United Nations Convention on Marriage, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1962.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I have listened to this debate with a great deal of interest. I am sure the remarks of the honourable senator who has just taken her seat (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) are very laudable, but, knowing Canada as I do, I would be placed in a very embarrassing position if I were to try and assure everybody I met that there was no discrimination in this country. While we endorse and ratify this convention, we must realize that we have much work to do on human beings in this country before we can positively assure everybody that this pledge of no discrimination is lived up to.

I received a good lesson in this respect in a certain city in western Canada. It involved obtaining a room in a hotel. A person whom I happened to know was told that there was no room for him, but when I went up to the desk there was a room for me. I asked the clerk if there was a room for this man, and he shook his head. I had known the owner of the hotel quite well for many years, but he happened to be away at that time. Even on my assurance that I would be responsible for the man, he was denied accommodation. When the owner returned I asked him if it was his policy to refuse accommodation to a certain class of person, and he said, "Yes. I have 65 rooms here and if they were all unoccupied I would still say, I am very sorry, but we have no room."

I know that this practice is going on all over Canada, and in spite of all the laudable sentiments that have been expressed in this chamber we still have a great deal of work to do before it can be said that there is no discrimination in this country.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I agree with what Senator Horner has said. We do have discrimination in Canada, and I am very sorry that we have; but is there any better way of eradicating it than by the passing of laws against it, as have already been passed by some provinces and which the other provinces are proposing to pass?

Convention approved.

CRIMINAL CODE (HABEAS CORPUS)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

reading of Bill C-35 to amend the Criminal Code (Habeas Corpus).

Code (Habeas Corpus).

He said: Honourable senators, I am very honoured in having the opportunity of moving the second reading of this bill to amend the Criminal Code. It will be recalled that this bill was introduced in the other place as a private member's bill and, with an extraordinary display of unanimity, it received second reading, was approved in committee, and read a third time and passed in a period of somewhat less than one hour. The reason that this piece of legislation met with such unanimity is quite obvious when one considers the importance of the historic writ of habeas corpus in our legal system.

On the face of it the bill is very simple. It amends section 691(1) of the Criminal Code by adding thereto the words "or habeas corpus", thereby providing an appeal to the court of appeal from a decision granting or refusing the relief sought in proceedings by way of habeas corpus, and, in the same way as heretofore granted under that section, in proceedings by way of the other prerogative writs of mandamus, certiorari and prohibition.

I need not here remind honourable senators that we are dealing with a legal process generally referred to throughout common law countries as "the first security of civil liberty." The writ itself antedates Magna Carta, and in 1923 Lord Birkenhead referred to it as,

> . . . throwing its roots deep into the genius of our common law. It is perhaps the most important writ known to the constitutional law of England, affording as it does a swift and imperative remedy, in all cases of illegal restraint or confinement. It is of immemorial antiquity, instances of its use occurring in the third year of Edward I. It has throughout the ages been jealously maintained by courts of law as a check upon the illegal usurpation of power by the executive at the cost of the liege.

Honourable senators might well ask why, at this late date in the legal history of this writ, should it be necessary to enact remedial legislation to ensure that its purposes may be fulfilled. I am sure that honourable senators will find only a partial answer to that question in the explanatory note accompanying the bill, and I think it may be of some assistance if I outline very briefly the history of this writ as it relates particularly to our Criminal Code.

Historically, at common law there was no right of appeal from the refusal of a writ of habeas corpus, or the rejection of it on its return. But, in fact, the prisoner at once had the right to renew his application for that writ to another court. A person detained in custody thus might proceed from court to court until he obtained his liberty, provided he could find some judge whom he could convince as to the merits of his application. Thereafter, his right to liberty could not be called into question, and there is, indeed, no power in any court to review or control the proceedings of the tribunal that discharged him.

It is at once apparent that this common law right was far more beneficial to a prisoner than a single statutory right of appeal. Indeed, many decisions held that the prisoner could not only proceed from court to court seeking relief but might proceed from judge to judge of the same court. In practice, in Ontario, this meant that such a prisoner could in fact apply for his release 31 times, and no judge was bound by the circumstances of any previous application, nor by the decision of any of his brothers. The right to just an appeal, and limited as appeals are to the facts and procedures of the hearing below, seems restrictive indeed by comparison.

Against this common law background, honourable senators, we should remember that we have habeas corpus, either of a civil character or of a criminal character, and that of course within our federal jurisdiction habeas corpus in civil matters is basically of provincial concern, whereas its jurisdiction in criminal matters is exclusively of federal concern. It is only with the latter, that is the operation of this writ in the latter area, that we are concerned today.

In 1945, our colleague, the honourable Senator Farris, then acting for the Attorney General of British Columbia, in the case of Re Storgoff, failed to convince the Supreme Court of Canada that provisions of the Appeal Court of British Columbia were intra vires the jurisdiction of the province, although I should add that our honourable colleague did indeed convince the Chief Justice in that decision by his reasoning, and the Chief Justice did dissent in the judgment.

As a result of the decision in Re Storgoff, provincial legislation dealing with habeas corpus in criminal matters was conclusively determined to be outside the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures, leaving the matter squarely a federal responsibility.

Undoubtedly, honourable senators, the conditions I have mentioned, among others, were in the minds of the members of this chamber—and particularly when honourable Senator Hayden piloted the then Bill O through this chamber in 1952. Honourable senators will recall that the new Criminal Code was introduced in that year and was first brought forth for examination and scrutiny here.

Today, for the purposes of the record, I would like to remind honourable senators of the wording of section 690(1), as it first appeared in the draft Criminal Code in December of 1952, because I think that in the light of my preceding remarks the problems which were then before this chamber may become clear in retrospect. That section originally in the draft code contained the following provisions:

> Where proceedings have been taken in respect of any person by way of habeas corpus arising out of a criminal matter and the relief sought has been refused, no further proceedings by way of habeas corpus arising out of that matter shall be taken in respect of that person before that judge or any other judge.

The draft section thereafter went on to provide:

> An appeal lies to the court of appeal from a decision granting or refusing the relief sought in proceedings by way of habeas corpus, mandamus, certiorari or prohibition.

Honourable senators will see from this that the original section 690 in the draft code was a restrictive section, compared to the common law rights then assumed to be extant, and that the code in effect thereafter went on to provide for a right of appeal in the same manner as the bill before us does today.

Section 690, to which I have just referred, in the draft code, was deleted by this chamber, or rather provisions in that section were deleted where they contained references to habeas corpus procedure and appeals in habeas corpus matters in the criminal field.

Honourable senators, I would be remiss if this afternoon I did not bring to your attention the fact that certain recent newspaper comments on the bill before us have stated or implied that in 1954 the Senate removed the habeas corpus appeal provisions contained in the new draft Criminal Code and, by implication, did so for some reasons that were inimical to the cause of civil liberties. I only hope that from my remarks this afternoon a more accurate conclusion may be drawn.

I think it should be remembered that while the draft code provided for a single appeal, it withdrew entirely what was at that time the much broader common law guarantee of freedom, namely, the unlimited right to renew application after application until relief was granted or all judges or courts exhausted.

It appears to me that the honourable Senator Hayden and this chamber in 1954 concluded that the rights of a subject to protection from illegal detention were far better safeguarded at common law than under the proposed section 690 which, if enacted at that time, would have substituted for those common law rights a statutory right of straight appeal.

Be that as it may, this background now leads us to the present situation and the bill before us. You will see by the explanatory note that the reasoning of Chief Justice McRuer in Re Shane 1959 prompted the initiation of this legislation. In that decision, the Chief Justice examined at some length certain recent English decisions bearing on the procedural aspect of habeas corpus. He came to the conclusion that, based on these decisions, and his interpretation of the effect thereon of the Ontario Judicature Act, that the common law right of going from judge to judge until either a writ was obtained or every judge had refused, no longer existed.

Strictly speaking, the Chief Justice's remarks in Re Shane are obiter, but he has, notwithstanding, effectively placed in grave doubt what had heretofore been regarded as the prisoner's basic common law right to successive renewals of common law habeas corpus applications.

As I have pointed out, the Re Storgoff case held that the provincial statutory right of appeal did not govern habeas corpus in criminal matters. Because of the Re Shane case, the common law rights to successive renewals is in grave doubt. Our Criminal Code is silent and makes no provision for an alternate right to appeal. Under these circumstances we must provide for such a right, consonant with an interpretation of basic justice, which does not place a man's liberty in the hands solely of one judge. The amendment before us today is to accomplish that purpose.

Honourable senators, the cursory review that I have been able to undertake on the voluminous writings in connection with habeas corpus leaves me with a very distinct impression that the bill before us today is no panacea for all the problems associated with the procedural aspects of habeas corpus in federal matters. This bill is short term, remedial, but most essential at this time. Examination of the operation of habeas corpus under, for example, the provisions of the Immigration Act or the Extradition Act, or the Supreme Court Act, to mention but a few statutes, seems to me to be imperative, as is also an examination of the effect of this amendment as it relates to Part XVIII of the Criminal Code.

In conclusion, I would like to say that notwithstanding its historic antecedents, the tributes that have been paid to it over the years, or the reverence it justly commands, habeas corpus requires constant review as to its procedures and as to how these procedures operate under the maze of legislation today. It seems to me that this is one of the prices we must continually pay in the interests of our civil liberties.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all grateful to Senator Lang for his clear exposition of this bill, and also for the interesting background of history he has given us about habeas corpus.

As Senator Lang stated, habeas corpus is a writ which is very old, and it is a powerful instrument for the protection of the liberty of the individual. As such, of course, we must make sure that that protection given to the individual is not interfered with in any way, because it is an extraordinary remedy, and was intended to be used where ordinary legal remedies would not suffice, or in some respects were inadequate.

This problem, as Senator Lang mentioned, has arisen since the decision in 1959, when it was generally believed that the applicant could go from one judge to another in the hope of finding one which would give him the relief he sought. The intention of this bill is to remedy the situation which that decision brought to our minds. In other words, I think it is the purpose of this bill to give an additional protection to the person who believes himself to be illegally detained.

However, I would want the assurance that this bill does not go further than that. I ask this question. If this bill gives the right of appeal to the applicant, does it not also give the right of appeal to the Crown? I would take it that it does.

Historically, habeas corpus was for the protection of the individual against the forces of the Crown, and it was never meant, so far as I know, to aid the Crown in any way to keep a person in custody. If the individual was ordered to be discharged by a judge, under a habeas corpus writ, then that was the end of the matter and the individual was free. If, however, under this bill the Crown is to have the right of appeal, then a person who might be illegally detained and is then ordered released by a single judge, could be kept under illegal detention until the appeal was heard.

Now, it mentions that the appeal is from a decision granting or refusing the relief sought.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What if the person is out on bail?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): I would expect that if he could get the judge to grant him bail, he would have bail, and if not he would stay in jail.

Honourable senators, does this measure mean an appeal lies from an order granting or refusing the release of the prisoner, or is there also an appeal if the judge grants or refuses the application for the writ? These are two questions which I feel we should be absolutely sure about, so that we shall know just what is the effect of this bill. If the bill provides for an appeal by the Crown, then I think it should be so changed or amended that the Crown does not have the right of appeal, and that the right of appeal should only be given to the individual.

Perhaps it might be said that the Crown and the individual should have an equal right of appeal, but I do not think so, because in any action against an individual, to my mind that individual is at a disadvantage when opposed by all the majesty and force of the law. Therefore, I think we should try to favour the individual.

In fact, honourable senators, I understand that in the granting of an application for habeas corpus, if there is a reasonable doubt in the judge's mind, he resolves that doubt in favour of the prisoner. I think we should try to keep that principle in our law. As a matter of fact, we have a precedent in our legal system for that now. On questions of appeal, for example, one looks to section 583 of the Criminal Code. I will not quote that section, but it is to the effect that a person convicted by a trial court in proceedings on indictment may appeal his conviction, (1) on a question of law alone; (2) by leave of the court on a question of fact alone, or a question of mixed law and fact; and, (3) on any other ground which appears to the court of appeal to be a sufficient ground.

On the other hand, if the Crown is appealing they do not have all these rights. Under section 584, the attorney general can appeal against a conviction on a question of law alone, and by leave of the court he can appeal against sentence. So this would not be something new in our law.

I say this right of appeal should only be given to the individual to protect the liberty of the subject, and that it should not be given to the Crown. Indeed, in our Supreme Court Act, under section 57, subsection 2, if a person applies for a writ of habeas corpus, and the judge refuses the writ, then the appeal lies to the court in that refusal.

Honourable senators, I would like to see this made crystal clear, that under our legislation we are protecting the right of the individual, that we are granting the individual that right of appeal, but that we are holding to our traditional view that the right of habeas corpus is only for the protection of the subject and is not to assist the Crown. If honourable senators are satisfied that this bill does not give such right of appeal to the Crown, then I completely agree with it; but if it does give that right of appeal to the Crown, then I would hope to see the bill so amended here as to give protection only to the individual and not to give any more added powers to the Crown.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8.00 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, which was presented Tuesday, June 9.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications had Bill S-7, an act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, referred to it some time ago. It was quite an important bill, and your committee had four long sittings, during the course of which we heard representations from quite a number of people and organizations.

Most of the bill is completely noncontroversial and caused no discussion whatever, a number of its provisions consisting of amendments made to the Shipping Act as a result of several international conventions with respect to shipping that had been entered into since the last amendments to the act were made.

However, there were two or three sections which caused a good deal of controversy. The principal one is the subject of the first two amendments which are now submitted for your consideration in the committee's report. They deal with the matter of fishing vessels and the question as to whether fishing vessels should be required to carry a certificated master or a certificated mate.

As the act stands at present, there is an exemption from that requirement in favour of all ships solely employed in fishing and other ships principally engaged in fishing, not exceeding 150 tons. The Department of Transport has been trying for some years past to get agreement to provide that fishing vessels of a large size shall be required to carry a certificated master or a certificated mate.

I daresay some honourable senators will remember that about eight years ago a bill was introduced for that purpose and considered by this committee of the Senate, and at that time, on numerous representations from the interests involved, we rejected the proposal. Since that time there have been a lot of further consultations between the department and the shipping interests involved, and they seem now to have reached more or less general agreement that it would be advisable for the larger fishing vessels to be required to carry a certificated master or a certificated mate.

This bill, in the form in which it was introduced to us, provided an exemption from this requirement of a certificated master or a certificated mate for fishing vessels not exceeding 25 tons. There was a good deal of discussion upon that in committee, and a number of the honourable senators who came from the Maritimes gave us a great deal of help in that connection. I refer particularly to Senators Hollett, Kinley, McLean and Donald Smith. The general impression seemed to be that the limit of 25 tons was too low, and that there are a number of fishing vessels of moderate size exceeding 25 tons in weight which should be exempted from this requirement. We finally reached the conclusion—and this is your committee's report—that the limit of 25 tons should be increased to 100 tons. That is the purport of the first amendment now before you. It seemed to meet with more or less general approval, and I do not think that the Department of Transport was too much displeased with that result.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is clause 3?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is page 3, clause 3, line 8, of the bill.

The second amendment relates to the same matter. It is an amendment which we propose to clause 5 by inserting a new section 116B. It was represented to us that it would be unfair to require immediately men who have been engaged in fishing for many years without a certificate to obtain a certificate and undergo examinations, and that it might indeed prejudicially affect the fishing industry itself by preventing a lot of these men from carrying on their present occupations. The attitude of the department was that they only wanted to introduce by degrees this principle of certificated masters and mates on fishing vessels, and section 116B was inserted for this purpose. It provides that any man who can show that he has served for one fishing season as a fishing master or fishing mate prior to the first day of December 1965 can obtain his certificate without any requirements of any kind, simply upon application. That will mean that the men presently engaged as masters or mates of fishing vessels will be able to continue in their occupations without interruption simply by applying for a certificate which will be issued to them automatically.

What will happen in the future will be that as new masters or new mates come into the field, they will be required to undergo the necessary examinations before they obtain their certificates. The second amendment makes it quite clear, however, that there will be no prejudice caused by the new act to masters or mates who are now engaged on fishing vessels.

These two amendments met with unanimous approval and they represent the considered tugboat operations on the Pacific coast, and various representations made to us.

Section 4 of the bill gave rise to considerable controversy. That section deals with tugboat operations on the Pacific coast, and contains two proposed new subsections. One provides in general that small tugs of not more than 150 tons engaged on local voyages do not need to have a certificated engineer. It was explained to us by officers of the department that the mechanical perfection of the various engineering facilities existing on the modern tug are such that they can be operated quite easily and without any trouble by the master of the vessel himself without having a certificated engineer to help him. It was more or less the same sort of question that has arisen in years past with respect to the requirement of having a fireman on diesel locomotives in shunting yards.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Before the honourable senator leaves that point may I ask a question? In looking through the act, it occurred to me that perhaps we should change the word "steamship". That word goes back to the old days when ships had boilers and steam engines. There are no steamships today. They are all powered by diesel engines.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The answer to that is that the definition of the word "steamship" in the act embraces any kind of ship other than a sailing ship. It embraces ships powered by diesel or any other kind of engine.

The other proposed amendment goes the other way. It requires that there be a certificated engineer on certain tugs powered by internal combustion engines of a certain size. As might be expected, we had representations from associations of engineers and captains, and also from the tugboat owners. The tugboat owners were all in favour of the first amendment but against the second, and the engineers were all against the first amendment but in favour of the second. On balance the committee decided to make no change. It was felt that the proof had been made in both cases; and, with respect to the first amendment, the committee was quite satisfied that there would be no substantial loss of jobs by the engineers as a result of it. In fact, the committee was told that with the great activity there is at the present time on the Pacific coast no marine engineer has any trouble whatsoever finding a job.

Those were the principal subjects of controversy before the committee, and I have indicated to the house the manner in which we suggest it should deal with them.

There are certain other amendments of a more or less minor character. The third amendment is to clause 32 of the bill, at page 16, which, with the other surrounding clauses, follows the International Convention Relating to the Limitation of Liability of Owners of Seagoing Ships of 1957. Clause 32 of the bill deals with the limitation of damages, and refers to the manager, operator or agent of a ship. The Canadian Bar Association made representations to the committee that it was not sufficiently clear just who were included in the definition of the word "agent". The third amendment clarifies the definition by striking out the words "the manager, operator or agent of a ship" and substituting therefor:

> —the manager or operator of a ship and any agent of a ship made liable by law for damage caused by the ship.

That is purely a legal matter, and is a cleaning up of the wording of the clause.

The other clause to which an amendment is proposed is clause 35. This clause, honourable senators will recall, gave rise to a certain amount of debate on the motion for second reading of the bill in this house. It is the clause which proposes to limit to ships of Canadian registry the right to carry goods or passengers in any area between the head of the Great Lakes and the end of Anticosti Island. I might say in parenthesis here that all the witnesses who appeared before the committee—that is, witnesses for both the owners and the employees—were strongly in favour of that amendment. Some of them even suggested that the area of this restriction be carried further.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Was there any objection from any source?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: There was no objection from any witness whom we heard with respect to clause 35 of the bill. The amendment is for the purpose of clarification, in that it makes a little clearer just what is intended. In its original form it began:

> Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2), (a) no goods or passengers shall be transported by water ... in any ship other than a Canadian ship ...

It is proposed that the wording be amended to read as follows:

> Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2), (a) no goods shall be transported by water or by land and water, and (b) no passengers shall be transported by water ...

It was a rather interesting amendment. We asked in committee why this change in wording in connection with goods was required. As I say, the original subsection read, "No goods shall be transported by water", and as proposed by this amendment, it reads, "No goods shall be transported by water, or by land and water." The answer was that in certain instances some clever shipowners have tried to get round that prohibition by shipping their goods, say from the head of the lakes to Buffalo by water and then carrying them across a dock by land and reshipping them by water from the other side of the dock. We were told this clarification was required to catch an attempt to circumvent the meaning of this paragraph by an operation of that kind.

Honourable senators, those are the only observations which occur to me with reference to the amendments which your committee has suggested to this bill.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we have listened with interest to the remarks of honourable Senator Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, in reporting on this bill. His report coincided largely with the debate held here, when there was little opposition to the bill. I know that the matters brought up here were discussed later in committee. I understand there was unanimous approval in committee of the amendments which are suggested to the Senate now.

One important point in the debate here referred to the certification of masters and mates. We are pleased that this has been dealt with in committee, and that there is to be exemption for the moderate-sized vessels exceeding 25 tons, as that was the main objection in this chamber.

Furthermore, I recall that Senator Kinley and Senator Hollett, both of whom have vast experience in connection with the master and mate situation, were strong advocates that masters and mates who had had an apprenticeship should continue on account of their wide experience and were the best men one could find for that particular work.

Therefore, in general, I am sure that this bill received due attention here on second reading and careful examination in committee. I feel that it has the general approval of this side of the house and of the Senate as a whole.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if honourable Senator Hugessen would confirm that the only amendment made to clause 35 is the amendment to which he referred. I have been asked to put this question, and I have not had a chance to check the particulars of the amendments given in the Senate Hansard of June 9 at page 693. Perhaps the senator could deal with this without a check being made.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The only change was in the first two lines where, as I explained, that for the words, "no goods shall be transported by water", we substituted the words, "no goods shall be transported by water or by land and water." Otherwise, there is no change in the wording of section 35 of the bill.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I wish only to say that we are all deeply indebted to Senator Hugessen, not only for the explanation he has given this evening, but also for the competent way he presided over the deliberations of the committee.

This is the kind of work that we all realize is done exceptionally well in the Senate. We look at legislation carefully and study it; we examine its draftsmanship; we have the advantage of competent people to look at it critically. Members of the Senate who know the shipping industry have been very helpful in the work that has been done. I am sure this bill has been improved as a result of the Senate's study.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Furthermore an opportunity has been afforded to the industry—owners, workers, members of unions, people engaged in fishing—to come here and present their views. Those views have been incorporated in the legislation, and I think we can all be very pleased with the result.

On behalf of the Government, I should like to thank the Chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) and all its members who worked hard to deliver this result.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I am sorry I did not complete my check of what the leader asked me. There was one further amendment to the wording of section 35. The wording in regard to passengers was as follows:

> No passengers shall be transported by water in any ship other than a Canadian ship.

By the amendment, to the words "No passengers shall be transported by water" there were added the words "either directly or by way of a foreign port".

I am sorry I misled the Senate the first time; I had forgotten about the further amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before I move the adjournment of the Senate, I would draw to the attention of the members of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce that there is a meeting called for tomorrow morning at 10.30 to deal with Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, Bill S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings and Loan Company, and Bill S-35, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 17, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report on the activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for the year 1963-64, pursuant to section 3 of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations Act, chapter 122, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

HON. T. A. CRERAR, P.C.

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, while I do not think it is desirable to mention the birthdays of all members of this house, and perhaps in respect of some it is not desirable to mention their ages, it is highly appropriate to refer to the fact that today Her Majesty's senior Privy Councillor in Canada, a member of the House of Commons for many years and now a member of the Senate, the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), celebrates his 88th birthday.

We come to praise Caesar, not to bury him. Perhaps the best thing that I can say on behalf, I am sure, of every senator, is that we wish Senator Crerar many happy returns, as many as possible of them here in the Senate. He not only encourages us, he stimulates us, with the kind of work that he is doing constantly for all of us, for Parliament and for his country. He is indeed one of a very exclusive club of great Canadians.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I agree with the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate that this is certainly a very special occasion and a special case. I am happy indeed to join with him in congratulating the Queen's oldest Privy Councillor. I assume that that means the oldest Privy Councillor in the Commonwealth of Nations. The honourable Senator Crerar would be in the same class with Sir Winston Churchill, I think, in that respect.

There are few in Canada or in the Commonwealth who have given the public service that our good friend Senator Crerar has given. He is one of those senators who certainly give the lie to the theory that senators should be retired at the age of 75 years. What a lot the Senate, and indeed the country, would have missed in service had Senator Crerar been retired at 75 years. Mentally, physically, and in morale, he is as strong today as many men in their fifties. Of course, there is always one fly in the ointment—politically, he has been off for a good many years. However, I am very happy to join with the Leader of the Government in congratulating our very dear friend Senator Crerar, and in wishing him many more years to come.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, it would indeed be most ungracious on my part if I did not acknowledge warmly the kind remarks of the leader on this side (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), as well as the kind remarks of the leader on the other side (Hon. Mr. Brooks).

I am an old stager. At no time do I attempt to deceive myself in that respect. Today, I enter my 89th year. I know the sunset is beckoning. How long I shall remain around, of course, is entirely unknown to me or to anyone else. However, I shall promise this, that as long as I am around and have the capacity to do so, I shall speak my mind fairly freely for the things I believe in.

Looking back 47 years, which is quite a long journey, I recall very clearly October 12, 1917, when I was sworn of the Privy Council, along with several others, and entered the Union Government of Sir Robert Borden. My opinion of Sir Robert had been somewhat hastily formed, probably, and I am bound to say that I thought there were certain qualities which he lacked. Association with him corrected that, and I am glad now to bear testimony to the fact that Sir Robert Borden was one of the great prime ministers of this country.

The years that have passed have brought much of pleasure and much of disappointment. That, of course, is the experience of life, but I face the future somewhat like an old friend of mine in Saskatchewan with whom I used to correspond occasionally. His name was Joe Bird, and I am sure Senator Aseltine and Senator Horner will remember him from the fact that at one time he was a Liberal organizer in Saskatchewan.

Joe Bird was a man of a good deal of independence of mind, and privately, and on occasion publicly, he did not hesitate to criticize his own party. This is a number of years back, for he died quite some years ago. We were exchanging a sort of desultory correspondence. There had been a remarkably cold winter in the west, much snow and much cold weather. I received a letter from old Joe one day telling me how things were going pretty well downhill in Saskatchewan in some respects, but he still had faith and courage, and he signed his letter, "Yours facing the wind."

I thought that was a very appropriate ending. As I enter my 89th year I shall endeavour to face the wind also.

PRIVATE BILL

ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Donald Cameron presented Bill S-36, to incorporate the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Cameron moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1954

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave of the Senate, I move the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Acting Chariman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-35, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-35, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

NOVA SCOTIA SAVINGS & LOAN COMPANY—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings & Loan Company:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings & Loan Company, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Isnor moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

WORLD MORTGAGE CORPORATION—THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, for Hon. Mr. Leonard, moved the third reading of Bill S-32, to incorporate World Mortgage Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Bouffard moved the third reading of Bill S-7, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a measure which can be described in the way the bill to amend the National Housing Act was described. It indicates a building upon previous experience, and the expansion of a worthy type of activity. It is a bill that will commend itself to the house and, I would think, to the agricultural community generally. It amends the act respecting the Farm Credit Corporation which is known as the Farm Credit Act.

There are six items which are to be modified in some way by this legislation. In the first place the bill proposes to increase the capital of the corporation. Secondly, there is a proposed increase in the limits of loans to individual farmers. Thirdly, there will be a change in the interest rate in respect of some loans from the original 5 per cent that was set when the Farm Credit Corporation was established, and which rate has now proved to be uneconomic. However, this increase will apply in respect of only certain portions of those loans. Fourthly, the definition of "borrower" will be broadened. Fifthly, the position of the Farm Credit Corporation in the event of tax sales by municipalities is to be changed. And sixthly, beekeepers will qualify for loans under the act. In a general way, that is what these amendments will accomplish. Perhaps I might deal now with each of them separately.

The present capital of the corporation is $16 million. By clause 2 of this bill it is proposed that the capital be increased to $24 million. The net effect of this increase in capital will be to permit the corporation to lend more money, because by section 13 of the act the Minister of Finance may lend the corporation up to 25 times its authorized capital. With a capitalization of $16 million the Minister of Finance can make loans to the corporation for further lending by it of $400 million, but as a result of the increased capital proposed by this clause the minister will be able to advance up to $600 million for lending purposes.

I am told that at the end of this month, or shortly after, the money available to the corporation for loans to farmers will be, for all practical purposes, exhausted. It is thus desirable that the lending authority be increased.

The second point I make about the bill is that it proposes an increase in the limits of loans to individual farmers. At the present time, in respect of standard loans that are made upon the security of mortgages upon real estate, the limit is $20,000. This bill doubles that amount, and for supervised loans made under Part III of the act the limit will be raised from $27,500 to $55,000. Supervised loans are those that are made on the security not only of real estate but also of moveable property. They are supervised in the sense that when they are made the farmer proposes a plan of operation and management of his enterprise which visualizes the repayment of the loan over a certain period of time. It is also proposed in respect of both standard and supervised loans that any of them may be amortized over a period of up to 30 years.

A great deal depends upon the individual circumstances of each loan, upon the capacity of the farmer to pay, and upon the return he can expect to get from his enterprise. In any event, the spreading of the repayment over a period of up to thirty years seems, first of all, to be equitable and, secondly, seems to meet with the experience of the officials of the corporation in dealing with this general area of farm credit. Clauses 6 and 7 of the bill deal with the increase in loan limits which I have been discussing.

The third important area touched by the amendments is the interest rate. It is proposed that the rate in respect of some of these loans be increased from 5 per cent to a more economic rate. It is not proposed to change the 5 per cent prevailing on standard loans up to $20,000, which are in existence or which hereafter may come into existence, or on supervised loans, the limit of which now is $27,500. The 5 per cent will continue to apply on those loans, but for individual loans, whether they are standard or supervised, which are taken beyond these existing limits and up to the new limits, an economic rate of interest will apply.

I think it might be useful if I refer to the Annual Report and Financial Statements for the fiscal year 1962-63 of the Farm Credit Corporation. This document has been tabled, has been circulated to all senators and is readily available. I will refer in the first instance to page 9 of the report, to indicate in some measure the extent of the success which the corporation has had since it was founded in 1959. It had a capital loss in the year in question of only $6,291. Therefore, from the point of view of the type of risk that is taken and the quality of risk that is available, this is a low amount of loss.

However, the situation is somewhat different in respect of its operating expenses, because for the year in question, 1962-63, as appears on page 13 of the balance sheet of the corporation, the operating loss was $1,080,597.

I should draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, which has recently reported, recommended quite strongly that this aspect of the operations and results of the Farm Credit Corporation should be seriously considered and that revision should be given to the problem which ails it, namely, the charging of an interest rate inadequate to meet the expenses incurred by the corporation each year.

I also wish to draw to the attention of honourable senators two paragraphs of a letter written by the Auditor General of Canada to the Minister of Agriculture on May 30, 1963. This is found on page 15 of the annual report to which I have been referring. The first paragraph reads:

> The operations of the Corporation over the past three years have resulted in net losses aggregating $2,078,299 which have reduced the balance of the Reserve to $1,670,563 at March 31, 1963. These losses are due in part to the corporation being required to pay a higher rate of interest on $42,300,000 borrowed from the Government of Canada than the rate of 5% charged, under section 16 of the Act, on loans to farmers.

I skip a paragraph and read the following from the same letter from the Auditor General:

> Since further annual operating losses appear to be in prospect, consideration should be given to means whereby these losses may be covered without further depleting the Reserve, as well as to the manner in which the Reserve can be brought up to the equivalent of the capital of the corporation as contemplated by section 15 of the Act.

While the proposal in respect of interest and of the increase in the interest charge, which is proposed by clause 4 of the bill, is an attempt to meet some of this short fall in annual operating income, obviously it will not meet all of it. Perhaps the reason it is not proposed to change it for the lower limits of the individual loan is that many smaller farmers, who may need this kind of subsidy—that is what it is, in effect—would not be able to get along unless there was at least that measure of a subsidy to it.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Might I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if that means that those who are operating over the $20,000 mark and who are paying a higher rate of interest will pay for the deficiency caused by those who are paying only 5 per cent on the $20,000; or will the Government make up the difference?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In the supplementary estimates of last year, 1963-64, an item of $1,110,000 was made available to the corporation for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is in general?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. I hesitate to give a categorical answer to the question which the Leader of the Opposition asks, because I do not know that it would be possible to break down the rate charged. Perhaps the positive way is the way to put it, that the interest rate charged on the individual loan over the existing maximum will be the economic rate; the rate charged on the amount of the loan up to the existing ceiling will not be an economic rate and the subsidy will have to be continued.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It will be subsidized.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They will have to continue the subsidy for these smaller loans.

Hno. Mr. Brooks: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps my explanation is confusing. However, I would say at once to honourable senators that I would propose that this bill go to committee for detailed study.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government a supplementary question? Does this economic rate continue throughout the life of the loan, or does it fluctuate above the amount of the $27,500?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Again subject to confirmation from officials of the department, I would think that the rate would be fixed at the time the loan is made, the same as any other mortgage loan, and that it would continue for the life of the loan, unless there is a provision in the mortgage contract for a revision of rates if money became cheaper. I should think that the rate set at the time the loan is made would prevail until the loan matured and was paid off.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The borrower pays 5 per cent on the $27,500, and then an economic rate on the amount above that, for the life of the loan?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, I think that is so. If this bill becomes law, I believe that the situation the honourable senator has described would apply to the first loan made under the new arrangement.

The definition of "borrower" has been broadened, under clauses 1 and 3, so that borrower now can include the son, daughter, niece or nephew of a farmer. In other words, what is foreseen here is an opportunity for a farmer to get a loan on the strength of a mortgage on his own farm for the purpose of helping one of the members of his family to get started as an independent farmer.

Also, in clause 1, provision is made for loans to the personal representative of a deceased farmer. The purpose of this is to try to keep the family farm within the family. If credit is needed after a death, then the opportunity to do so is presented here.

By clause 5, in the event of a tax sale of any of the properties affected, the existence of a mortgage against the title to the property in favour of the Farm Credit Corporation will not prevent a tax sale from being consummated under the amendment. In other words, for the purpose of a municipal tax sale, the Farm Credit Corporation will not be deemed to be an agent of the Crown, and so be immune to the effect of a municipal tax sale.

Perhaps I should make some general observations, first of all, in respect of the general area of farm credit and legislation allied to that field. There are a number of instruments or means of federal activity in this field. The Veterans Land Act provides credit in respect of certain types of farming operations. The Farm Improvement Loans Act, which is operated through the chartered banks, is another such instrument. The Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, which mainly provides grants, also provides an opportunity for examining the requirements in respect of farm credit.

I think honourable senators would be glad to know—and perhaps in committee this could be further investigated—that there is an interdepartmental committee designed to coordinate and survey whole areas of farm credit services, including consultation with the provinces in this field, and including also an examination of the experience of other countries in this field.

The annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation, to which I have referred, has information of considerable interest in it. The corporation is the successor of the Canadian Farm Loan Board. That board operated for 30 years, between 1929 and 1959. In that period of time it made loans totalling $183,256,700 to different borrowers.

The Farm Credit Corporation, which came into existence in 1959, has been operating now for some five years. Up to March 31, 1963, its total lending had been $221 million through 20,000 loans. So that the total activity under the Canadian Farm Loan Board and the Farm Credit Corporation has had this result, that up to March 31, 1963, a total of $404 million has been lent through these agencies, and 77,000 loans have been made to channel that money out.

Hon. Mr. Reid: How much has been paid back?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I will come to that, senator.

Page 19 of the report states that at March 31, 1963, the balance outstanding was $270 million, all secured, and there were 37,000 loans outstanding as at that date. Of course, the money that is lent on mortgages and other securities on farms, whether they are standard or supervised loans, as the repayments come in they constitute a revolving fund.

I have already told honourable senators what the experience was in respect of capital losses in the year ending March 31, 1963, of less than $6,300. However, the result of the inadequate interest margin has produced an operating loss to the corporation in that particular year of $1,080,597, as compared with an operating loss of $776,117 in 1961-62, and of $202,798 in 1960-61.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask the honourable leader if the loss sustained was largely a loss through charging lower interest than was paid for the money, or through the nonpayment of mortgages?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not think there is any appreciable amount of this loss attributable to default in payment. I think it is simply the inadequacy of the original interest rate.

Believe me, honourable senators, this is not a matter of political concern. The fact is that at the time the corporation was established it was easy to get money, and lend it at an interest rate of 5 per cent and find that to be practically an economic charge. The trouble is that subsequently the cost of money became higher, with the result that the 5 per cent rate was inadequate.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And of course the legal fees vary. I understand they are much higher than originally.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, I think that is a minor part of the whole operation. I am sure that legal fees do not contribute in the slightest iota to the loss. I am confident that all honourable senators who are lawyers would agree with that statement.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Legal fees are paid by the borrower.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: When the interest charge was made, I believe the intention was to bring it in line with the interest rate under the Veterans Land Act, of 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The honourable leader opposite is probably in a better position than I am to say that. However, it seems to me to be another supporting reason. Basically, I think the reason was that money was a little cheaper then, and it could be done. Now, however, we are faced with a different situation. I think it is going to be perfectly obvious that even with the economic rate for the amounts in excess of the present ceilings, the return is not going to be enough to put the corporation into a position where it will not have losses. That will continue.

Honourable senators might be interested if I simply make this final statement about the purposes for which loans were approved. In 1962-63, a little over 55 per cent of the lending was done for the purpose of assisting in land purchase; 8.4 per cent was for the purpose of assisting in farm improvements; 23 per cent to pay off debt on the farms secured by mortgages on the land; 7 per cent for other debts; taxes less than 1 per cent; to acquire livestock, 3 per cent; for equipment purposes, slightly over 1 per cent; and for sundry purposes, less than 1 per cent.

It is interesting to observe that from the time the corporation came into existence in 1959, and during this five-year period, the percentage of money used for land purchase out of these loans rose from 30 per cent in 1958-59 to 55 per cent in 1962-63.

Honourable senators, I hope that this has not been an inadequate explanation. I think the bill is a helpful one, with the one exception of the fact that even yet the interest rate proposed is not going to be completely adequate to cover the operating expenses of the corporation. I think the bill is welcomed by the farming community, and I commend it to the sympathetic consideration of the house. If it is given second reading, I will propose that it be dealt with in the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Before the Leader of the Government resumes his seat, am I to assume that the repayments go back into the revolving fund, so that the request for an increase in the capital of the corporation is because of the increased number of loans being applied for?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Quite so.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And an increase in the amount of the loans?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, the amount may have something to do with it, but I understand the number of applications is increasing appreciably.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, undoubtedly the greatest change I see is that to include beekeepers. I could image the caretaker or supervisor will have to be a wonderful type of fellow if he can keep track of the bees, because the old hives are generally destroyed in the fall. You are all through in the fall when you have taken the honey. As I say, he will have to be a wonderful type of fellow, and if money is to be lent to him he will have to be a very honest man.

Perhaps the Leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) can enlighten me on one thing. There are two types of loans. There is the loan not exceeding $20,000 at 5 per cent interest, and there is another interest rate for loans exceeding $20,000. Take a $50,000 loan, when a person has repaid part of it and the amount owed is down to $20,000, does it then qualify as a 5 per cent loan or does it remain through its entire life at the higher rate?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think I can answer that question now. My understanding of it is that if you, as a farmer, borrowed $40,000, on the first $20,000 you would pay 5 per cent, and on the next $20,000 you would pay the economic rate. I think that answers the question.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Honourable senators, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that Newfoundland, with its 42,000 square miles of arable land, has only borrowed $20,000 and that amount has since been repaid.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Undoubtedly the farmers there are very wealthy.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, I will certainly vote for this bill to increase the total capital of the Farm Credit Corporation. As the Leader of the Government has indicated, it will have a $24 million capitalization now, which, as he explained, means the borrowing and lending powers of the corporation will be raised from $400 million to $600 million, which is 25 times the capital of the corporation.

In saying that I will support the bill, I do not mean I am entirely in favour of some of its provisions or amendments. I am beginning to question the advisability of raising individual loans to farmers to the amount of $40,000 under Plan 2 and $55,000 under Plan 3. My reason for questioning this is that these large loans will have a tendency artificially to enhance the price of land. Land prices in my province are now at an all-time high, running up from $100 to $150 an acre for the better land.

I have some figures here from the Canada Year Book for 1963-64. It is interesting to note that the average capital value of farms in 1951 was $15,200, whereas in 1961 it was $27,389. The average price per acre of land across Canada in 1951 was $54; in 1961 the average price—and this is including Newfoundland, where they have so many acres of good land—was $76 per acre. When the price gets up to $100 an acre it takes the land out of the hands of those who would like to farm, the younger men, and it is only those who are already in the farming industry who can afford to buy more land or increase their holdings.

Just to illustrate the reaction to these high prices of land, I sat in a train going from Regina to Calgary with a stranger and, as you all know, in the west strangers get acquainted very easily. This fellow apparently had been in Phoenix, Arizona, where he spent a couple of months on a holiday, and he was returning to do his seeding in the spring. He apparently owned 960 acres in the area northwest of Swift Current. I would judge he was a man of 65 or possibly 70 years of age. He said he had been offered $100 an acre for his land in that area, and that by auctioning off his equipment he figured he would net about $125,000 for his farm and equipment. He said, "That's a tremendous price and I am sure going to grab it while the grabbing is good, but,"—and this is the significant part of his statement—"I would sure hate to be the man who bought my land, because you and I know what that land could not produce in the thirties." He felt that the price of wheat land, at $100 an acre, was out of line altogether. This is what makes me fear that these increased loans will drive the price of land higher yet. For this reason, I question making available such loans if, in fact, easier credit helps to push up the price of land unduly.

There has been a rapid growth in loans made to farmers since the Farm Credit Act was put into effect in October, 1959. It was the last Government which had to show the way, to get our farmers away from the idea of small-time subsistance farming. When one looks at the record of the old Farm Loan Board, which was superseded by this present act in 1959, one finds that the number of loans made under that board never exceeded more than 3,500 in any one year, and the only years they reached that number of loans were 1935-36 and 1957-58.

Since this new act came into force the approved and disbursed loans have been rapidly increasing. In 1958-59 there were 4,659 loans made; in 1959-60, 5,169 loans; in 1960-61 there was a small drop, to 5,162; in 1961-62 there were 6,027 loans; and in 1962-63, the last year for which we have any record, 7,438 loans.

It is noteworthy that the pattern of the loans has been changing, and that loans have been used more and more to purchase land and livestock.

A sad thing to note, also from the Canada Year Book, is the value of lands and buildings and, under a separate heading, the value of equipment and livestock. In all the provinces east of Ontario, and including Ontario, the value of livestock has gone down. In the case of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the value of land also has gone down, and in Nova Scotia the value of equipment has gone down. On the other hand, in all four western provinces, the Yukon and Northwestern Territories the value of land has increased very greatly, and the value of livestock and equipment also has gone up. Apparently the loans are going over very well in that area.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the date of the year book from which the honourable senator is quoting?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: It is page 484 of the Canada Year Book for 1963-64.

Another indication of the effect of these loans on lands is that it is helping to increase the number of large farms, rather than keeping the average farm or the small farm. You will notice by page 477 of the same year book that the total number of farms has shrunk by 90,000 in the period from 1956 to 1961. The largest decrease in the number of farms has been in Quebec and Ontario.

As I said before, the loans have been used more and more for the purchase of lands and livestock. My conclusion in this regard would be that more of the younger men are getting into the farming operation, and by that I mean men up to 45 or 50 years of age. In farming, a man of 50 years is not an old man any more; he used to be quite an old man.

The farming areas in the country are becoming less debt-ridden, and farmers are able to purchase more land to enlarge their farms. Tied in with these significant changes, of course, has been the better marketing of produce. There is an apparent general prosperity in farming at the present time, but according to figures it is not very real. However, the markets have been developed by the long-term credit sale of grain to the Iron Curtain countries.

If this bill goes before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce there is one question I would like to have cleared up, and that is with regard to the real estate held by the Farm Credit Corporation. In the report referred to by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), it was indicated that they held some $20,000 worth of land on hand for sale. I would like to know where this land is located, and what province is concerned. Another question I would like to ask arises from the "Statement by provinces of outstanding agreements for sale accounts." Where did these agreements of sale come from? Would the leader answer that question, or shall we have it answered in the Committee on Banking and Commerce?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What page is that on in the report?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I think that is in the financial statement—the agreements of sale under the heading "Assets."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Page 12.

I think, honourable senators, assets held by the corporation include, first of all, loans to farmers. There are various loans against the security of first mortgages in 1963, in the amount of $277 million. There are second mortgages representing $4,807; and then agreements for sale, which are also forms of assets, and in that same year the value of those agreements was $55,972. These, no doubt, were lands the title of which had come to the Farm Credit Corporation in one manner or another, and which were disposed of by the corporation without giving a deed and taking a mortgage back, as is so often done. It was done by way of an agreement for sale, and under the agreement for sale the Farm Credit Corporation retains title subject to the right of the purchaser to pay off the balance of the purchase price and get clear title.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: The question in my mind is this: Do some of these sales mean that the land was quitclaimed by the original borrower and sold back to another purchaser at a loss?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not necessarily. There may be such cases. There may be cases where a title came as a result of foreclosure proceedings, and they proceeded to sell. Perhaps in Ontario and other provinces where the system is not the same generally as it is in Saskatchewan, it might be that the corporation's officers would find it more convenient to do it by one document under an agreement for sale rather than by a deed and a mortgage. It depends a great deal on local practice.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: That does not answer my question. I would point out that on the next page, under liabilities, you show a loss of $1,080,000. I wonder if some of these showed up under that loss, rather than under loss due to the low interest rate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If the honourable senator will look at the net loss in regard to real estate transactions for the year, he will see that it was about $6,300. The item to which he refers deals with operating losses due to the inadequacy of interest.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I think that answers the question.

There is one other point I disagree with in this bill, and that is the amending of the original Farm Credit Corporation Act with regard to the matter of interest rates. Under the former act the interest rate was set at 5 per cent. I think the Leader of the Government gave a good resumé of that. This was originally intended as a subsidy to farmers to obtain a loan from the credit corporation. The bill now intends to raise the interest on loans of over $20,000, in Part II of the amendment, and on loans above $27,500 in Part III of the amendment. No rate has been set; so that the corporation has a free hand, and it will vary according to the price of money at the time. As I say, the rate has not been set, but the figure given in the other place indicated it could be somewhere in the region of 6½ per cent. It might be higher than that, because the minister in his statement said that they would have to add sufficient so that there would be no loss to the Government.

It seems to me that this is rather short-sighted on the part of the present Government, because while this 5 per cent may indicate a subsidy to the farmers, it has helped to advance the economy of the rural areas of Canada, and the economy of the country as a whole, to such an extent that if it had not been for the large crop in 1962 and 1963 Canada would not have had the favourable trade balance of which we are so proud today.

While the Government helps the farmers by subsidizing farming, farmers in turn help the country very quickly to recover from an imbalance of trade. For this reason I question the wisdom of raising the interest rate from 5 per cent to 6½ per cent on these larger loans. However, I shall support the bill.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Will the honourable senator permit me a question? He said that over the last 10 years the number of farmers has decreased, but the size of the farms has increased. Does he know if this has had the effect of increasing the number of acres under cultivation?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I am afraid I do not know the answer to that question.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: When my honourable friend spoke of the value of land, I gather he obtained his information from the Canada Year Book.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Does he know how those values were obtained?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: No, I do not, but the figures were taken from the statistics of 1961.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, the principle upon which this legislation is founded is sound. Fifty years ago the idea of putting the Government into the business of lending money on farm mortgages would have been almost unthinkable. At that time the lending was done by private agencies, mainly life insurance companies and mortgage corporations, that were largely set up for the purpose and the loans were for very short terms—five years, or seven years at the outside—and the interest rate was high. I know that in the Prairie provinces the interest rate ran anywhere from 7 to 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The average was 8 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, having regard to the changes that have taken place in the world, it is important that money for development purposes be made available at lower rates of interest than those I have just quoted, and it is probably for that reason that governments have ventured into this field. Some of the provincial governments have had rather unhappy experiences because of the great difficulty in applying in government administration the sound principles that apply if the same thing is done privately. The Farm Credit Corporation seems to have largely avoided that.

If my recollection is correct, at the time the lending business began under a different name from what it has now, the interest rate charged was 5 per cent; but at that time the Government could get its money for 3½ per cent. There was, of course, a margin of 1½ per cent that built up substantial reserves, and the idea was that the reserves would be built up until they equalled the capital.

Of course, in our rather hectic world of today interest rates have tended to rise steadily and, as they have risen, lending at 5 per cent has left a narrower and narrower margin of protection against loss.

I hold rather strong views on this point. My view is that if money is to be made available, then it should be so made available on a basis that would prevent anything in the nature of a subsidy being necessary. In other words, this business should be conducted so that the corporation, with efficient management, and the proper accounting and auditing, can come out on the right side. Therefore, my first criticism—and this is not in support of what Senator Pearson has said—is that a rate of interest of 5 per cent on future loans may be too low, if this business is to pay its own way.

There is another circumstance that is worthy of note, and I trust we shall get some information on this point in committee. If you amortize a loan of $20,000 over 30 years—that is, where the annual payments are composed of both interest and return of capital—the difference in the payments a farmer has to make at the end of the year as between an interest rate of 5 per cent and one of 5½ per cent, or even 6 per cent, is a small matter compared to the accommodation he receives and which enables him to obtain implements and other requisites. I know that because I have had occasion to go into it rather closely. That is my first point.

In respect to my second point, I am not quite clear on this matter of two kinds of obligation by the borrower. Up to a certain limit he will pay 5 per cent interest, and beyond that he will pay something more. I think it would be better to make the one sum available to him at a fixed rate of interest, the whole amortized as it is over 30 years, at a point where the public treasury is reasonably protected. I am just as much opposed to subsidizing farmers in the matter of the interest they pay as I am to subsidizing manufacturers with tariffs. This, I think, is a sound principle. The next point I wish to mention is that the introduction of beekeepers into this sanctuary looks to me to be a bit doubtful. A beekeeper can start up on half an acre of land, if he is near some farmer who is growing alfalfa or other crops that produce flowers. Consequently, his investment is only in his hives, his bees and his equipment for preparing the honey. I do not like the idea of widening this. The fact that in recent years as the loans have gone up the losses have followed suit is rather significant. That should be changed. If we are going to save this country's economy I think we have to change this practice or method of achieving this objective. I am quite confident that this can be done.

There is just one other point I wish to make with respect to the supervision of these loans that Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), who introduced the measure, referred to. This is very important. If you take a city of, say, 250,000 people you will have in it perhaps 75 doctors. Some of those doctors will be efficient and some of them will be less efficient. If you have 100 lawyers some of them will be at the top—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Most of them.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Some of them will be efficient, and some of them will not be worth hiring. If you have merchants in the city doing business you will find that some of them succeed, and some fail. That seems to be a sort of universal law of life, and farmers are not exempt from it. There are some farmers who start from scratch and make an outstanding success, and there are others who fail.

If we are going to have this thing operate properly then I think it is very important that there be the necessary kind of general supervision; and if the occasion requires actual supervision of farmers in their operations, there should be also some knowledge of the standing and reputation of the farmer. It must be known whether his word is good. As in every other occupation, you will find farmers who will turn a corner as quickly as anybody else. We can always find doubtful people whether they are doctors, lawyers, farmers or people in any other profession, who take an easy attitude to their honest obligations. Such as these should get no encouragement. It is like the application of a universal law. This has splendid possibilities, but it is open to possible abuse, and it is our business here to try to block the loopholes which may allow abuses.

I have no doubt we will be much better informed on the matter after the bill has gone to a committee, as the honourable Leader of the Government proposes. When it comes back, we may have another discussion on it.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words in defence of the bees. I started with bees 50 years ago, but the situation is not at all the same now. The beekeepers are well organized now, and the bee industry is obliged to build factories, bee houses, provide machinery and so on. The beekeepers are obliged to live now, especially in the west, with 200 to 500 beehives. Many beekeepers who have 500 to 800 hives are obliged to build a cellar, a laboratory, and have machinery.

Particularly in the west, we know that for the beekeepers there to live off the production of honey it is necessary for them to build a good organization and to have the best laboratory and the best cellar. That is the reason why the Government has brought the beekeepers under this law. The bees are necessary in order to increase the crop in the field. They are the best producers, as they transfer the pollen from one flower to another and thus increase the fruit crops. It is a very good thing for the farmer to have bees.

Honourable senators, that is the reason I rose to explain my point of view. Fifty years ago I started with the bees, and I learned a lesson in the co-operation of bees in the beehives.

Hon. Mr. Reid: A previous speaker mentioned beekeeping. I do not know how many hives he had in his day, but I had 100 and I was regarded as a good-sized beekeeper in my day. I reckon there is not much I did not know about bees.

I am surprised about the proposed beekeeper loans. The beekeeper does not start in big; he grows. He can buy so many bees from the south, but generally speaking he builds his own. I am interested to hear that the beekeepers can now get a loan. In the early days when I was a beekeeper—and I think it will be agreed that to have 100 hives is quite a bit—we did not look for financial help. I would like to hear in the committee what prompted the bringing in of beekeepers under this law.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: The loan is not to be made on the bees, but on the laboratory, the buildings, the machinery and the cellar. When you collect the honey, it is necessary to pasteurize it at a certain degree and to have a plant to pack it. If you go to the Peace River area, you will see beekeepers there with hundreds of hives.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is the difference between the way it is done in Quebec and the way it is done in British Columbia?

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I should like to make a short observation in regard to the remarks of Senator Crerar, who asks that this corporation be put on a sound business basis and that the farmer should pay what it costs to lend this money.

Senator Crerar, when he makes these remarks, is thinking of millionaire farmers of the middle west, like those I see in front of me in the benches of the Senate. I have heard Senator Taylor (Westmorland), who knows farming in the east as well as any man, make a plea for reduced interest rates. He has spent his lifetime as an administrator in agriculture in New Brunswick; he was Minister of Agriculture there for many years, and is reckoned all over the east as an authority on eastern farming. The farmers of the Maritime provinces cannot pay the same rate of interest as can the wealthy farmers of the west.

My friend Senator Brooks will corroborate what I have to say. He knows the position of the farmers in New Brunswick. One has only to check the statistical returns and note the income of the average farmer in New Brunswick and contrast it with that of the western farmer. We are talking about two different things.

I cannot think of any better way that the federal government could help agriculturists in New Brunswick than by reducing the rate of interest. This bill actually increases the rate over what it was before. The rate should be reduced. That would be a sound approach, as far as the eastern farmer is concerned; he cannot pay 5 per cent or 6 per cent when he is struggling to make a living. The eastern farmer is completely different from the western farmer who no doubt can pay the current interest rates. The farmers in eastern Canada for whom I am speaking, particularly those in the Province of New Brunswick, are not in a position to pay those rates.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CRIMINAL CODE (HABEAS CORPUS)

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Lang for the second reading of Bill C-35, to amend the Criminal Code (Habeas Corpus).

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, in making a few remarks in support of this bill, I have some suggestions to offer for the consideration of senators and of the Government. This bill deals with a very important matter in terms of liberty of the subject, and would give the right of appeal to a person from an order of a judge refusing to discharge under habeas corpus.

Senator Lang has already told you, as has Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), that habeas corpus is an ancient and honourable remedy for preserving the rule of law and the liberty of the subject. The security of every individual person against arbitrary imprisonment is based upon the remedy of habeas corpus. This bill gives the right of appeal where a judge has refused that remedy. Judges, like other human beings, sometimes make mistakes and we should take every opportunity to correct them. The liberty of the subject is our very first concern.

Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) yesterday made a very thoughtful intervention in the debate. He raised this most important point: if the applicant has the right of appeal, does the Crown have the same right of appeal? I think the Crown does. As matter of fact, I think the Crown should have the right of appeal.

Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) indicated that section 583 of the Criminal Code gives to the person the right of appeal on three grounds: (1) on a question of law alone; (2) by leave of the court on a question of fact alone, or a question of mixed law and fact; and, (3) on any other ground which appears to the court of appeal to be a sufficient ground. On the other hand, the Crown in appealing, and it is laid down under section 584, can only appeal on a question of law alone.

Two things trouble me about the question that Senator Macdonald asked. One is that the commission on criminal legislation in its report brought in a recommendation that the code should be uniform throughout.

The second thing that troubles me even more is that there may arise a case involving national security, or there may arise a case involving something prejudicial to the public interest. In that case, I certainly believe that the Crown should have a right of appeal. Indeed, I think it has that right at the present time under the law. However, that is a matter, I suppose, that we can discuss further in committee.

Honourable senators, I support the principle wholeheartedly, but I cannot help observing that however good our intentions are—and they are good—loopholes in the law with respect to personal liberty are continually cropping up. One such loophole, of course, we are plugging in the present bill. But there are others.

Despite the theoretical availability of habeas corpus proceedings, a good many people have been concerned that individuals who are not accused persons within the meaning of the Criminal Code may be detained for protracted periods under the immigration law, or some other federal statute, to the extent that they are simply forgotten. We do not want, and indeed we cannot afford, to have forgotten men detained under any federal statute. From all the press reports, and from the facts before us, there has been an accumulation of evidence recently of men being taken into custody and being lost—deposited and forgotten.

Honourable senators, mark these words: For accused persons detained under the Criminal Code, there are some guarantees to make sure that they will not be forgotten. For instance, section 438(2) provides that a peace officer detaining a person who has been arrested shall cause him to be taken before a justice of the peace within 24 hours. Moreover, section 451(b) provides that there may be no adjournments of hearing for more than eight clear days. Such persons, at least, are not and cannot be forgotten.

Let me deal for a moment with section 438 of the Criminal Code. Subsection (2) of that section says:

> A peace officer who receives delivery of and detains a person who has been arrested without warrant or who arrests a person with or without warrant, shall, in accordance with the following provisions, take or cause that person to be taken before a justice to be dealt with according to law, namely,
>
> (a) where a justice is available within a period of twenty-four hours after the person has been delivered to or has been arrested by the peace officer, the person shall be taken before a justice before the expiration of that period; and
>
> (b) where a justice is not available within a period of twenty-four hours after the person has been delivered to or has been arrested by the peace officer, the person shall be taken before a justice as soon as possible.

That is uniform, and provides for the appearance of the accused before the court.

Section 451(a) provides that a justice acting under the part which I have just indicated can, when the accused appears before him, grant him bail, in which case we need not concern ourselves with him; or if the judge cannot grant bail, then the accused stays in custody.

Subsection (b) says that no such adjournment shall be for more than eight clear days unless the accused is out on bail or is remanded for observation. That has to do with illness, which can easily be understood.

My suggestion is that the same requirements should be made to apply not only to accused persons under the Criminal Code, which is a federal statute, but to any person detained for any reason under the Immigration Act or any other federal statute. It is as simple as that. All that is needed is a simple amendment to the Criminal Code, which I believe Parliament will quickly accept. In the present circumstances, I think Parliament should welcome it.

While we are discussing the liberty of the subject, and particularly those people involved under the Immigration Act, let me say that such persons, in the main, are friendless and fundless people. I think the immigration department should make available to them a legal friend in order to advise them of their rights to appear at a hearing and, if necessary, to appear in court. If that were done, it would give the country generally a feeling of confidence that what has happened cannot happen again. It would lessen the criticism of the immigration department in these circumstances.

These provisions which I suggest, and they seem very simple and straightforward, would ensure that there are no forgotten persons in detention in this country, that a person detained would be able to make any submission or request to the court concerning his confinement. Even in the absence of such submission or request, the court would be alerted to the length of detention and would require the reason therefor. After one or two such adjournments, if these matters came before the judge who is dealing with them, the question would naturally arise as to the reason for these adjournments, who is asking for them, and what are the conditions concerning them. The court would intercede and would require some explanation as to the request for adjournments.

The mere possibility that a person may have been held in detention for a protracted period under a federal statute without public knowledge is certainly abhorrent to me, as I am sure it is to all senators; it is abhorrent to men in public life as well as out of public life. Accordingly, honourable senators, I have, when discussing the freedom of the individual, suggested two ways to guard against any such possibility. I hope that the members of the Senate, and others who are concerned with this matter will, in supporting this bill, see the practicability of what I have suggested, so that it may be put into effect to make sure that what has happened will not happen again.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I sometimes think, however, that we should be more concerned about some people that are running around outside, and who should be locked up.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

THE GUARANTEE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA—FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll, for Hon. Louis P. Gelinas, presented Bill S-37, respecting The Guarantee Company of North America.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Croll, for Hon. Mr. Gelinas, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 18, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Civil Service Commission of Canada for the year ended December 31, 1963, pursuant to section 76(1) of the Civil Service Act, chapter 57, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English and French texts).

Copy of a statement, dated June 17, 1964, concerning the results of the UN Conference on Trade and Development at Geneva. (English text).

PRIVATE BILL

THE CONGREGATION OF THE MARIST SISTERS —FIRST READING

Hon. Edgar Fournier presented Bill S-38, to incorporate The Congregation of the Marist Sisters.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

FARM CREDIT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. Mr. Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, as yet His Honour the Speaker is not in receipt of the notice, but the plan is to have royal assent at about 9.45 this evening.

I think it desirable, and I am sure all honourable senators will agree, that Bill C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act, which has passed committee without amendment, be included in the list of bills to be given royal assent this evening. For this reason I would move, with leave, that the bill be read a third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

OTTAWA TERMINAL RAILWAY BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-33, to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1954

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Eric Cook, for Hon. Daniel A. Lang, moved the third reading of Bill S-35, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

NOVA SCOTIA SAVINGS & LOAN COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved the third reading of Bill S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings & Loan Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the Senate has come to the end of the Order Paper for today. As all honourable senators know, a resolution is being debated, or will be debated, in the other place today to amend the British North America Act. According to what I hear—and of course I must remain an optimist at all times—that debate is not likely to be lengthy. I would hope that it may be concluded in the other place by six o'clock.

Now, you will have to be optimistic to follow me from this point on. We have, in any event, a royal assent scheduled for 9.45 this evening. Consequently, I propose at this time that the Senate adjourn, to reassemble at the call of the bell at eight o'clock this evening, in the hope that we shall then have the constitutional amendment to debate. As it does not require royal assent, I would hope that we may be able to finish our debate on the subject and to concur with the other place by the time we adjourn tonight.

I think Mr. Speaker will have the letter with reference to the royal assent when we reassemble at eight o'clock. For the purpose of trying to keep honourable senators advised, and in the hope that it may be of some convenience to them, I should say that if the debate on the resolution to amend the Constitution is not completed in the other place today it will be necessary for the Senate to sit tomorrow to conclude our part in that matter, and then to adjourn.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Until when?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I will answer that question later, if I may. I do not want to appear overly optimistic.

I move, therefore, that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 8 o'clock this evening.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa
18th June, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 18th June, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the debate in the other place in respect of the Address to Her Majesty for the amendment to the British North America Act has not yet concluded. I understand there are some speakers yet to be heard there. We have royal assent scheduled for 9.45 this evening. If the consideration of the constitutional amendment should conclude in the other place, would it be more convenient to honourable senators to sit after royal assent and dispose of the debate tonight rather than meet tomorrow?

I am in the hands of the house and am willing to sit either tonight or tomorrow. The constitutional amendment would be the only subject on our Order Paper tomorrow. However, I remember the trouble about attendance resulting from the postponement of the Easter recess and I should not like that trouble to recur.

I put this proposal to the house for consideration. It may mean sitting until 11 o'clock tonight, or later, depending on the length of the discussion. Should the resolution come to us earlier than 9.30, perhaps we could commence the debate before royal assent and conclude it later.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: If the honourable Leader gives assurance that there will be no other legislation to be considered, I am willing to go on after royal assent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not foresee any other legislation. We can adjourn until 9.30, and if the bell should ring earlier, honourable senators will know that the debate in the other place has been concluded.

We will be debating a motion, not a bill, and royal assent is not necessary.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Will we have copies of the resolution?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Photostatic copies of the resolution as it appeared on the Order Paper of the other place will be distributed here when the motion is called. The photostat will show other items, but the text we are to debate will be the same.

I move that the Senate do now adjourn, to resume at the call of the bell at approximately 9.30 p.m.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

> Honourable members of the Senate:
> Members of the House of Commons:
>
> I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Farm Credit Act.

An Act to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

An Act respecting the Payment of Certain Provincial Taxes and Fees by Crown Corporations.

An Act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

An Act to authorize the Construction and Maintenance of a Bridge across the St. Lawrence River between the City of Ste-Foy, in the County of Quebec, and the Municipality of St-Nicolas, in the County of Levis, both in the Province of Quebec.

An Act to incorporate Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church.

An Act respecting The General Accident Assurance Company of Canada.

An Act respecting Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation.

An Act respecting Allstate Insurance Company of Canada.

An Act respecting The Dominion Life Assurance Company.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 19, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Royal Commission on Health Services (Chief Justice Emmett M. Hall, Chairman), Volume I, together with a statement of information and a summary of the said report, dated June 19, 1964. (English and French texts).

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will copies of the Hall report be distributed?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, copies will be distributed. As honourable senators will note, the volume is very large. I suppose it will take a day or so to make the distribution, because I am informed that it cannot be mailed in the ordinary way.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, perhaps you are all aware that the petition in respect of the amendment to the British North America Act is still under consideration in the other place. It is hoped that by the time private members' hour is reached in the other place, at 5 o'clock, the measure will have been passed and will then be available for our consideration.

If it suits the convenience of honourable senators, I would move that we adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 5 p.m. Should the bell ring before that time, senators will know that the measure is available to us.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I am sure we all realize the Leader of the Government is taking the only course open to him in the circumstances, and we on this side are fully in agreement.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: "Hope springs eternal..."

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 4.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

ADDRESS REQUESTING AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR SURVIVORS' AND DISABILITY BENEFITS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

Resolved, that a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the ..... Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to Amend the British North America Act, 1867

Whereas the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an Address to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to legislation respecting old age pensions, 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3; Eliz. II, c. 2.

1. Section ninety-four A of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Legislation respecting old age pensions and supplementary benefits.

"94A. The Parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits, including survivors' and disability benefits irrespective of age, but no such law shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to any such matter."

Short title and citation.

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1964, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1964.

Ordered, that the said Address be engrossed and that a Message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that the House of Commons has passed the foregoing Address and requesting Their > Honours to unite with this House in the said Address by inserting therein the words "Senate and".

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave, I move:

> That the Senate do agree with the House of Commons in the said Address by filling up the blank spaces therein with the words "Senate and".

I trust each honourable senator has a copy of the Address. If any honourable senator is without one, the pages will supply that deficiency.

Honourable senators have heard his Honour the Speaker read the Address which is to be presented to Her Majesty. It might be most convenient if I first of all refer to the section of the British North America Act which it is proposed to amend. Section 94A of that act reads as follows:

> 94A. It is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the Parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a Provincial Legislature in relation to old age pensions.

That section of the British North America Act was passed by the United Kingdom Parliament in the year 1951. The citation is 14 and 15 George VI, chapter 32, of the United Kingdom statutes.

It is now proposed that that section should be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

> 94A. The Parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits, including survivors' and disability benefits irrespective of age, but no such law shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a Provincial Legislature in relation to any such matter.

As honourable senators will observe from the text of the petition which is before us, the petition is to Her Majesty the Queen. Her Majesty is requested to present the petition to the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the purpose of having this change made in the British North America Act—the Constitution of Canada.

As all honourable senators are aware, the Constitution of Canada is a statute of the British Parliament. Except in certain cases, in which it is provided that the Canadian Parliament has authority to amend that statute, any amendments must be made by the United Kingdom Parliament, which has the legislative capacity to do so. Section 94A is one of those sections.

I am sure that most of us feel at this stage of the historic development of this country that the time has come when its Constitution should be—not "repatriated" but—"patriated" in this country. However, it is easier to say that than to accomplish it. We are a federal state. There are federal responsibilities, and federal attitudes prevalent. There are, of course, provincial attitudes and provincial rights that are embedded in the Constitution. While attempts have been made through meetings between the federal and provincial authorities to decide upon an effective manner of giving our own Parliament authority to effect constitutional amendments with respect to all such matters, no such agreement has been reached.

It is, I think, the desire of most members of both houses—and I venture to think it is the desire of most Canadians—that consultation to the end that we have within ourselves and our own Parliament power to amend the Constitution should be proceeded with at the earliest opportunity.

However, the fact is that we are now in a situation where it is desired to amend the Constitution, and the amendment proposed cannot be made by this Parliament. The procedure outlined in the proposal before us now is the only procedure available.

May I now say a few words about the precedent involved. Section 94A, as I have said already, was passed by the British Parliament in 1951 after it received a petition, the language of which was nearly identical to that before us. The purpose of that petition was to secure an amendment to the British North America Act which would confer federal jurisdiction in the field of old age pensions. It would confer authority on the Parliament of Canada to legislate in respect of old age pensions from and after 1951. The reason the application was made at that time, upon the best constitutional advice available, was that the field of old age pensions belonged to the provinces rather than to the dominion. The basis for that opinion and the consequent action is to be found in section 92, which sets out the powers of the provincial legislatures. The important subsections of section 92, which led to the conclusion to which I have just referred, is subsection 13, dealing with property and civil rights in the provinces. I think, too, that subsection (7) of section 92 impelled the constitutional authorities to the conclusion that an amendment was required. Subsection 7 reads:

> The Establishment, Maintenance, and Management of Hospitals, Asylums, > Charities, and Eleemosynary Institutions in and for the Province, other than Marine Hospitals.

Perhaps subsection 16 had a bearing on the matter as well. It reads:

> Generally all Matters of a merely local or private Nature in the Province.

As a result of the enactment of section 94A, the Old Age Security Act was passed by the federal Parliament. That act is now cited as Revised Statutes of Canada of 1952; chapter 200. That act provided for a flat rate old age pension at 70 years of age, without a means test. The rate has been varied from time to time and is now $75 a month. It is proposed now to integrate that old age pension into the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan.

Honourable senators, this amendment arises out of the introduction of the scheme known generally as The Canada Pension Plan. As honourable senators know, from discussions in the other place and in the press, it is being proposed as a contributory plan, to provide for pensions in relation to earnings. A bill to bring the Canada Pension Plan into being has reached the resolution stage in the House of Commons. It was the subject of discussion at two federal-provincial meetings, the second of which was held in Quebec in April of this year. As a result of those discussions there appeared to be a general desire to enlarge the scope of the scheme and to extend the benefits in four areas other than those proposed in the scheme embodied in the bill before the other house.

Those four areas are as follows. First, that there should be benefits in favour of widows of contributors; secondly, that there should be benefits in favour of dependent children of deceased contributors; thirdly, that there should be benefits for contributors who became disabled before their retirement; and fourthly, that there should be a small death benefit to the estate of the deceased contributor. None of those benefits, which it is proposed the Canada Pension Plan should supply, are old age pensions in themselves.

Honourable senators, the details of the Plan are not before the house today. When it comes to us for discussion, its ramifications will bear much study and examination. The measure now before us is a proposal to enable the federal authority to take jurisdiction, with provincial consent, in these four areas which are considered to be supplementary to the areas covered by the general description "old age pensions."

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Where do you get the consent? I do not see it in this.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If the honourable senator would not mind, I will come to that in due time. It is not reflected in the petition before us, and it was not reflected in the precedent used for the petition passed in 1951. The proposals of the Canada Pension Plan are being enlarged, first of all, because it appeared more equitable that such an enlargement should be made. In the second place, it is done because both the provincial and federal authorities thought well of making this enlarged coverage in the interests of getting a uniform plan across the country.

Section 94A as it now stands in the British North America Act is too restrictive for the purposes desired by the provinces and the federal authorities, because it covers only the field of old age pensions. Perhaps it is permissible to repeat that the enlargements will cover supplementary benefits, namely, disability benefits and survivor benefits, and these are thought to be appropriate for inclusion in the plan.

Now if I may come to the point raised by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), the provinces have agreed to the proposal that the federal authority should be vested with the jurisdiction to legislate in this field. This was discussed with the leaders of the governments of the provinces at the meeting in April 1964. It has since been confirmed in writing to the federal authorities by the provincial governments. In the case of the Province of Quebec, a resolution was submitted to the legislature of that province. It was passed with one dissenting vote only, and the government of the province has notified the federal Government in writing that it consents to the proposal.

May I say that the wording of section 94A, which is to be substituted for the present section 94A, the wording that appears in the petition, was submitted to the provinces, and to this wording they gave their consent.

I should point out also that under the provisions of the new section 94A, as was the case under the old section 94A, the provinces remained free to legislate in the field of old age pensions, or in the field dealing with these supplementary benefits, even though the federal authority shall be empowered as a result of the passage of this new section to legislate in that field.

Honourable senators, there is an element of urgency about this, arising out of two counts; one is the impending dissolution of the Parliament of the United Kingdom. It having been announced in Britain that there will be a general election in that country probably in October next, it is desired to get the petition before the Parliament of that country at the earliest possible moment.

The other element of urgency arises from the desire on the part of the federal and the provincial authorities in this country to proceed as soon as possible with a national contributory old age pension plan.

The petition as we have it before us has been debated in the other place and has now been passed. I am not able to say whether or not it passed without a dissenting vote—I understand it was passed unanimously. I would commend this motion to the house for its favourable consideration.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Was consent given by the legislatures of the provinces?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The governments of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: By the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: With the one exception.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In every case the consent was given on behalf of the province, by its leader of the government. In the case of Quebec, in addition to the consent of the government, there was a resolution of the legislature passed, and following the passing of that resolution, the premier of the province gave his consent in writing.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I ask the honourable leader if the provinces other than Quebec gave legislative approval?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There was none other that I know of.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Has a legal opinion been given as to the constitutionality of the executive of the province alienating constitutional rights, either in this case, or in 1951?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not think it is a matter of alienating constitutional rights. It is a matter, first of all, of sharing constitutional rights, in my understanding of it. In the second place, in 1951 the procedure followed was that which is now being followed, and there was no difficulty at that time.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words in connection with the point that has been brought up by the honourable Senator Grosart. It was more or less the determination of constitutional rights was it not, and the consent of the different provinces? I think it was determined by the legislatures what the constitutional rights were.

Honourable senators, I, along with others, thank the honourable Leader of the Government for his explanation. We have been waiting for this Address to Her Majesty, and I am sure we were all very pleased that it has arrived for our consideration.

I can assure the honourable Leader that there is general agreement with the purport of the motion which will make it possible for the federal Government to introduce the pensions legislation. In connection with the province of Quebec, I understand that when the resolution was before the legislature a few days ago there was almost unanimous agreement, there being only one vote against it.

As stated, the legislation is for the purpose of setting up a comprehensive pension scheme with survivor benefits for widows and orphans. The motion petitions the Parliament of the United Kingdom to repeal section 94A of the British North America Act—this has been very carefully explained to us—and substituting the provisions contained in the motion, which will make possible these survivor benefits under the pension scheme, by merely adding these few words:

> including survivor and disability benefits, irrespective of age.

The bill respecting the Canada Pension Plan will be before this chamber and also before the other place at a later date, and I am sure it will be thoroughly discussed at that time.

We are pleased to note the Government has been able to obtain the consent of the provinces, making this petition possible. As I understand it, the last province to agree was the Province of Quebec. As honourable senators know, the government of that province must obtain the consent of its legislature before agreeing to any amendments affecting the Constitution.

As the Leader has explained to us, there is some urgency attaching to this matter, in that the British Parliament is about to be dissolved for a general election. As has been said, if the Government is to proceed with the pension legislation this session, it is necessary to have this constitutional amendment proceeded with at this time.

I might point out to honourable senators that the last amendment to the British North America Act was in July of 1960, when section 99 was amended to make possible an amendment to the Judges Act to provide for the retirement of judges at 75 years of age. I am sure it is of interest to note that this will be the eighteenth occasion since 1867 on which an amendment has been made to the British North America Act. I think that only 18 constitutional amendments in almost 100 years is a most impressive record. Most honourable senators are acquainted with the different amendments that were made.

As the Leader of the Government has observed, and I am sure all Canadians agree, we are looking forward to the day when the British North America Act will become a Canadian statute and hence eliminate the necessity of having to follow the embarrassing procedure of petitioning the Mother of Parliaments—embarrassing, I might say, to the Mother of Parliaments as well as to ourselves.

As honourable senators know, attempts have been made from time to time to obtain the necessary consent of the provinces to achieve this end. I recall that the previous Government was most active in this regard and, indeed, came close to obtaining the necessary consent. At that time the only province that did not agree with the formula that was to be adopted was the Province of Saskatchewan.

Honourable senators will remember that the Speech from the Throne opening the 25th Parliament contained a measure calling for the convening of a dominion-provincial conference to deal with this matter and other matters relating to our nationhood, such as national symbols and a distinctive flag. But as honourable senators will also recall, the previous Government was defeated before it had an opportunity to carry out this worthwhile project. The then Prime Minister, in introducing the last amendment to the British North America Act, the one I have earlier referred to relating to judges, at page 4885 of Hansard of the House of Commons, June 14, 1960, said this:

> To me it is a political paradox and inconsistent with Canada's status that Canada should be required to secure its amendments to the Constitution, other than those amendments which come within the exclusive authority and jurisdiction of the federal Parliament, by an Address being taken to the Mother of Parliaments at Westminster. But we have no other course open to us.

Those are the words of Prime Minister Diefenbaker at that time. I am sure there is general agreement with that statement, particularly since Canada is the only Commonwealth country which has no provision for amending its own Constitution.

Indeed, it is ironic, when one considers that we are the senior member of the Commonwealth. This fact, as I mentioned a moment ago, is a source of embarrassment not only to ourselves but it has been also a great source of embarrassment to the British Parliament. We sincerely hope that the present Government will continue the good work started by the previous Government towards devising an acceptable formula to make it possible for us to amend our own Constitution.

One often hears the term "repatriation of the Constitution." This term is misleading. As was pointed out very clearly today by the Leader of the Government, it is not a question of repatriation of the Constitution, because repatriation is to restore or return, and you cannot restore or return something which we have never had. So the term "repatriation" does not apply in this case.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps it should be "patriation".

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The honourable Leader says "patriation"—I think that is appropriate.

As I said at the outset it is our intention to support this measure, and in so doing we express the hope that the pension legislation which it will make possible will reach us before the end of the present session.

In closing my remarks, might I make the suggestion, since the thought has occurred to me, that it might be well for the Senate to give consideration to the setting up of a special committee to make a study of ways and means to solve this question of amending our Constitution. The Senate is well suited for this purpose, and as we approach our 100th birthday it would, I think, be a very wise idea to make this one of our goals.

In doing so the Senate would serve a very useful purpose, and at the same time it would be performing a valuable service to the Canadian people. I mention this suggestion to honourable senators for what it is worth. I am very sincere in mentioning it, and I do so with the knowledge that all Canadians would want this problem settled. I am sure the Government of the United Kingdom would also like to see this matter settled.

Hon. Thomas Vien: Honourable senators, I have only a few words to say; I concur in the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks). I think I express the consensus of opinion in my province and in some other provinces as well that we should no longer have to go to London to amend our Constitution. Nobody would be more pleased than the gentlemen at Westminster if we ceased and desisted from calling upon them to settle such questions. They have said so in so many words on previous occasions. But, must we still apply to them?

Honourable senators, under the British North America Act there are certain rights and privileges reserved, and assurances given to provinces and minorities. Those are constitutional and contractural warranties.

The Statute of Westminster, passed in 1931, specifically stipulated that nothing therein contained should be construed as affecting or amending the British North America Act, or the powers of Parliament, except in certain limited respects, leaving aside altogether the powers conferred to provinces and minorities and other rights guaranteed by the British North America Act.

In 1949, the British Parliament gave us further powers to amend our Constitution, with the same restrictions; the Canadian Parliament had to determine the procedure to be followed. In the discussion which took place at a federal-provincial conference, it was agreed that the federal Parliament could amend the British North America Act in matters within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada; that the provinces could amend the Constitution in matters within their own jurisdiction; and certain other matters were left to be determined, and the procedure to be followed with respect to such matters was referred to a conference of the Minister of Justice and Attorneys General of the provinces.

That subcommittee composed of the Minister of Justice and the Attorneys General of the provinces was supposed to elaborate a code of procedure, particularly as regards proposed amendments affecting civil rights, property, persons and privileges of minorities, etc. That committee never sat or, if it did, it never produced anything. The bone of contention was whether, in such matters, we should require a majority, a two-third vote, or the unanimity of the provinces. Therefore, we have had in our hands since 1949 the power to amend here our Constitution, but we had to adopt a procedure, and that was never done.

Why did that committee not sit? Or why did it not act? I do not blame the Liberal Government alone; I do not blame the Progressive Conservative Government alone; I blame them both. From 1949 to 1964 that committee should have been convened and directed to act. That inaction is a mystery to me; I wish someone could help me solve it!

We have the power in our own hands. Let us blame nobody else. Let us blame ourselves for that inaction in getting down to brass tacks in this matter. I agree with those who have expressed their surprise that such a motion should be necessary; Parliamentarians in London have said so on many occasions. Let us, therefore, call a conference of the Minister of Justice and the Attorneys General of the provinces. Let them be directed to study that proposition and determine the procedure to be followed in that restricted area; let them report their conclusions as to whether there should be the agreement of a majority of the provinces, or a majority of the two-thirds of the provinces, or unanimous agreement. That matter was left to the Attorneys General, under the chairmanship of the Minister of Justice. Call upon them to act.

These are the thoughts that I have in mind; I deemed it useful to bring them to your attention.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, with the greatest of respect to all those who differ with me, it seems to me that there is much confusion in these matters of amending in our own Constitution and of appeals to the British Parliament for amendment.

I submit, with all respect, that it is not necessary for us to ask the consent of any province when we appeal to Her Majesty, and therefore to the Parliament of Westminster, to amend our Constitution. It is really a petition that we send, and when we ask the provinces for consent it is purely a matter of courtesy on our part and a desire to maintain amiable relations.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Will the honourable gentleman allow me a question? Is he of the opinion that what he has just said is consonant with the Westminster Act and the Imperial Act of 1949?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, I think it is. The 1949 act of the British Parliament gave us the right to amend our Constitution with respect to those things which affect the dominion only and do not affect the provinces. We have that right, and there is no difficulty whatsoever so far as execution under it is concerned, always remembering the necessity to be decent with other jurisdictions and to maintain good relations.

Hon. Mr. Vien: This is a matter that affects civil rights and the rights of persons.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Very true.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Therefore it is not within the purview of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We have a perfect right to ask the Imperial Parliament to amend the Constitution in any way we please, within our own jurisdiction or within the jurisdiction of the provinces. It is a matter of the right to petition the British Parliament.

Of course, the British Parliament has a right to exercise its discretion. So far, it has been a custom to ask for amendments only within our own jurisdiction and carefully to avoid infringing upon the constitutions of the provinces. But I do remember one instance when the Premier of British Columbia went to the Imperial Parliament objecting to an amendment for which Parliament had asked, and he got a very cold shoulder indeed from the British authorities. At Westminster I think they rely upon this Parliament to ask for such amendments only as will maintain peace in the family and are reasonable. The situation has now boiled down to this, that when we ask for an amendment it is passed by the Imperial Parliament as a matter of course and as a formality. Were we to attempt to upset the Constitution, the Imperial Parliament might exercise its discretion. It is an Imperial act that we are seeking to amend.

Honourable senators, let us not concede rights to the provinces which they do not possess, just because of politeness on our part and a desire to act with diplomacy. We have a right to amend this Constitution as we see fit, and if we interfere with the provinces, that is a matter for the judgment of the Imperial House. I rather fancy, although there is no authority on it that I know of, that the provinces also have a right to petition for an amendment to the act.

With regard to the patriation—not repatriation—of the Constitution, let me say that, not as a matter of law but as a matter of statesmanship and diplomacy, the problem presents great difficulties.

Some years ago I discussed with the late Mr. Dafoe of Winnipeg this question of having the power within our own hands to amend the Constitution. He was very strong on this point, and wrote many powerful editorials condemning the restrictions placed upon the Parliament of Canada in regard to the Constitution. I pointed out to him that the United Kingdom would hesitate to confer great powers upon us unless it knew what use we intended to make of them. I asked him what change in the Constitution he felt we should be allowed to make, and I added that he should be more specific than his editorials expressed. I said to him, "You ask for general powers, without giving people any idea how you would intend to use them."

Perhaps we have passed that point now. However, we have not passed the difficulties which present themselves to us in the matter of statesmanship, the maintaining of good relations with the provinces, and the general courtesy which we should extend to all jurisdictions associated with us.

Honourable senators, just how we are to work this change out is a mystery. How to amend our own Constitution and yet observe the rights of the provinces, poses a problem.

Let me pause here to say that actually the provinces have the right to amend their constitutions. You will find that provided in the British North America Act. According to that act, they can amend their constitutions in any way they please, with the exception only of the provisions with regard to lieutenant governors.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator if there has ever been any request by any province since Confederation to amend its constitution?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Not that I know of. And why should a province make a request? In the British North America Act, specific power is given to the provinces to amend their own constitutions, with the exception only of the provisions in regard to the lieutenant governors.

We have taken fairly similar rights under the amendments of 1949, applying to those sections which affect us only, and we excluded, even from them, certain specific matters such as separate schools, religion, sessions of Parliament every year and elections every five years, and others. I cannot enumerate these matters with certainty, since I am speaking from memory, but generally those were the restrictions.

I asked the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) who gave the consents on behalf of the provinces. Well, the Province of Quebec, it seems, objects to the Prime Minister acting on his own. That province has established either a custom or a by-law that such consents must be given by act of the legislature; but that is their business, not ours. Our business is to go ahead. There is no rule, no provision in the British North America Act, nor is there even a general custom that we have to ask the provinces for their consent when we petition the Queen that the Imperial Parliament amend our Constitution. When we do ask for provincial consents, we do so as a matter of statesmanship, diplomacy and common courtesy.

Hon. Mr. Vien: With the consent of the Senate, in order to keep the record straight, I would like to read one section of the Statute of 1949. It speaks for itself and is very clear:

> Section ninety-one of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby amended by renumbering Class 1 thereof as Class 1A and by inserting therein immediately before that Class the following as Class 1:—

These are the powers granted to the Federal Parliament.

> "1. The amendment from time to time of the Constitution of Canada, except as regards matters coming within the classes of subject by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the provinces, or as regards rights or privileges by this or any other Constitutional Act granted or secured to the Legislature or the Government of a province, or to any class of persons with respect to schools or as regards the use of the English or the > French language or as regards the requirements that there shall be a session of the Parliament of Canada...

And so on.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is what I said, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Vien: No, not quite. If I understood the honourable senator rightly, he said we did not have to consult the provinces to amend our Constitution.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Well, I may be wrong, and I stand corrected.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What I said was that we do not need to consult the provinces when we petition the Queen to have the Imperial Parliament give us an amendment to the Constitution.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Yes; but that is a very fine distinction. It has been the practice, in Canada, to consult the provinces as regards amendments with respect to subjects which, under the B.N.A. Act, are within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Then, the subject matter of this resolution is a question of civil rights. I agree with my honourable friend that we can, at any time, by resolution of this house and the House of Commons, apply to the British Parliament. We are guaranteed access at any time to her Majesty; but in matters of this importance, the British Parliament has restricted our jurisdiction as regards amendments to the B.N.A. Act. I am satisfied that if we came to the British Parliament, without having previously obtained the consent of the provinces, they would refer the matter back to us and say, "Consult the provinces." That is implied in the Statute of Westminster and in the 1949 British Act hereinabove referred to.

It was so well understood that the governments of the day, since 1949, have always expected a recommendation from the federal-provincial committee that they had created and did not dare act without the consent of the provinces, pending the final decision on procedure.

Let us determine a procedure; once that procedure is determined, there should be no further problem. But so long as that is not done, there would be a revolution in Canada if you attempted to brush aside the privileges and reservations that have been made in the B.N.A. Act, in the Statute of Westminster, and in the 1949 act of the British Parliament.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I will not detain you more than a minute.

I have been very interested in the discussion that has taken place, and it has not changed my opinion that there is at least something strange about a situation where the executive of some of our provinces has assumed the authority to share rights which were given originally, not to the executive but —and the honourable senator who has just spoken read the exact words—were assigned exclusively to "the legislatures of the provinces."

I used the word "alienate" in asking a question earlier. The honourable the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) objected to the use of that word, and I deferred to his learning in that regard. However, what are the executive doing? They are agreeing that a petition shall be forwarded to the Imperial Parliament through the grace of Her Majesty which will in effect abridge the exclusiveness of the rights of the legislatures.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I ask a question? Could not this Parliament make a petition whether the provinces agreed to it or not?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Yes, I agree with that completely. Of course the Imperial Parliament could also do so, as I understand it—and it is a long time since I studied constitutional law. The Imperial Parliament also has the legal right to change our Constitution without consulting us. This is speaking strictly from a legal point of view. I defer to the opinion of many learned senators here. I am not discussing the legal aspects, but a convention which, as the honourable senator who spoke last said, has grown up. But because sooner or later the federal Government and the provinces will get together—at least I presume so—and will attempt to bring about this very desirable state when we will have control of our own Constitution within Canada, I think it is important that this point be clarified.

Who is to exercise the authority of the federal Parliament and the provinces when they are discussing the methods by which there can be a change in the exclusive powers given to the Parliament of Canada and to the legislatures of the provinces? I repeat, that as I understand it these powers were not given to the executive.

I think it is most interesting to consider the three levels at which this matter is being worked out today. At the Imperial level or the United Kingdom level, it is the Parliament which is being asked to act. At the federal level in Canada it is the Parliament that is being asked to act, and I suggest even that is not necessary. The Prime Minister is the constitutional adviser to the Queen, and I presume that as Queen of Canada she would accept his advice to put this matter before the Imperial Parliament in her capacity as Queen of the United Kingdom, of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. But at the third level, the provincial level, the level which has been most jealous of its rights, at this particular time the executive in some of the provinces do not appear to be as jealous of the rights of the legislature in this matter as they are sure of their own.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable Senator Connolly speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I shall take only a few minutes. I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and all honourable senators who have been good enough to take part in the debate. I think it emphasizes the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that a study by the Senate might well be made into the methods and procedure required to amend our Constitution.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I interrupt the honourable Leader of the Government to say that one reason I suggest that is because some members of this house are outstanding constitutional lawyers who could do excellent work.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am not oblivious to that fact. We have so many honourable members of this chamber who can do work in this field that I think we are an outstanding forum to undertake it. In addition, of course, we can always count upon constitutional experts from outside to help us. It is my opinion that very shortly after the summer recess, if any, we in this chamber should give consideration to this problem.

I can understand Senator Grosart's concern about the situation in respect of provincial consent, but I point out to him that in the earlier days of the country the federal executive submitted applications to the Imperial Parilament for the amendment of the Constitution on the strength of orders in council and without consulting Parliament. That practice has been changed.

I do not think—and I do not say this with the idea of scoring on the honourable gentleman—that the premiers of the provinces were arrogating to themselves any special powers when they provided the consents given in this case, nor in 1951. The premiers are answerable to their legislatures, and I am sure that if they did not have the support of the legislatures the consents would not have been forthcoming.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by honourable Senator Lambert:

> That the Honourable the Speaker do sign the said Address to Her Majesty the Queen on behalf of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered, That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that the Senate have passed the Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen praying that she may graciously be pleased to give consent to submitting a Measure to the Parliament of the United Kingdom to amend the British North America Act, 1867, in the manner set forth in the said Address hereto attached, and have inserted in the blank spaces therein the words "Senate and".

ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by honourable Senator Lambert:

> That the following Address he engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Governor General, namely:
>
> To His Excellency General the Right Honourable Georges P. Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, upon who has been conferred the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.
>
> MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:
>
> The Senate . . . of Canada, in Parliament assembled, have agreed to an Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen, praying that Her Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom in the manner set forth in our Joint Address hereto attached, and respectfully request that Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit the said Address to Her Majesty the Queen.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by honourable Senator Roebuck:

> That the Honourable the Speaker do sign the said Address to His Excellency the Governor General on behalf of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered, That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that the Senate have passed an Address to His Excellency the Governor General respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit our Joint Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen relative to a measure to be submitted to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and more particularly set forth in the said Joint Address, and request the House of Commons to unite with this House in the Address to His Excellency the Governor General by inserting therein the words "and Commons".

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I shall presently move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, June 29, at 8 o'clock in the evening. The adjournment is to that date because an interim supply bill is before the other place for supply for the month of July and must be passed before midnight of June 30.

It would be unsatisfactory for honourable senators to sit here from day to day next week awaiting that bill. On the understanding that we can deal with it expeditiously on our return on June 29, I am happy indeed to propose that we adjourn until that date. I should point out that our Order Paper is clear, with the exception of a bill upon which honourable Senator Roebuck proposes to speak.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask if the honourable Leader knows what attitude is being taken to the interim supply bill in the other place, whether it is on the order of business there for Monday next, or what the situation is?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I understand it is on the Order Paper for Monday next. I could propose that the Senate sit one day next week; but if it is generally agreed that we can dispose of the interim supply bill expeditiously on June 29, in time to meet the deadline of midnight on June 30, I believe we will have done everything required of this chamber in respect of that measure.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The public ought to know that the work of the Senate since the beginning of this session has been rather remarkable. Including the Address we disposed of today, we have dealt with 42 measures—bills, the Columbia Treaty, the ILO Treaty, the motion with respect to the peace-keeping force in Cyprus, and many other items of business. Of those 42 measures only 14 were private bills; 28 were important measures of a general character.

In addition, the Senate disposed finally of some 319 divorce resolutions, as of today.

The committee work has been very heavy, and I should like to pay a special tribute to the chairmen and the members of the committees, who have been so assiduous in that work. I would draw the attention of the house and the public to the fact that although the Senate may be adjourned until June 29, committees of the Senate, and joint committees of the Senate and the other place, will be sitting next week and honourable members of this house will be required to be present in Ottawa to attend those meetings.

I thought I should put on the record this capsule summary of the work of the Senate in the past few months, since the opening of this session.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In regard to the mention of 319 divorce cases, that does not represent the full amount of the work done by the Senate Divorce Committee. Nearly 450 cases have been processed and are ready for Senate action.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday June 29, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday June 29 at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 29, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Thomas Vien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

COMMONS CONCURRENCE IN ADDRESS REQUESTING AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR SURVIVORS' AND DISABILITY BENEFITS

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons, as follows:

> Ordered, that a Message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House doth unite with the Senate in the Address to His Excellency the Governor General respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit the Address of both Houses of Parliament, concerning a proposed amendment to the British North America Act, to Her Majesty the Queen.
>
> Attest.
>
> T. R. Montgomery,
> for the Clerk of the House of Commons.

PRIVATE BILL

SEICHO-NO-IE—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-23, to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

> 1. Page 5, line 23. Insert the following new clause 18:
>
> "18. The provisions of subsection 3 of section 147 of the Companies Act shall apply to the Corporation."
>
> 2. Page 5, line 23. Renumber the present clause 18 as 19.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. David A. Croll: With leave, I move concurrence in the amendments proposed by the House of Commons.

Amendments concurred in.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 6, 1964

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-105, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1965.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill now before us has been distributed by way of your post office boxes, but the pages have extra copies for those who do not have one.

In addition to the bill, I think it might be of convenience to honourable senators to have before them a short typewritten statement showing the position in respect to the main estimates and the supplementary estimates for the present fiscal year. It may be of assistance if I refer to that memorandum now.

The main estimates, which have of course been tabled in the house, amount to $6,812,410,508, of which $2,860 million-odd comprise statutory amounts. These statutory amounts are in the main estimates, but they do not have to be voted by Parliament. They have already been voted by Parliament in the statutes from which they are garnered. The amount of the main estimates to be voted by Parliament in the fiscal year appears in the right-hand column at the top of this statement as $3,951,590,511. The first of the supplementary estimates, amounting to $404,691,736, supplementary estimates A, was tabled in this house on June 10 of this year. These are all items to be voted. Therefore, the total of the main and supplementary estimates before Parliament now, as appears from the left-hand column, is $7,217,102,244. In addition to that amount, there is an estimated $882,000,000 to be paid out of the Old Age Security Fund. So the total appropriation before Parliament at the moment, all of which has not been voted, is $8,099,102,244.

Honourable senators are aware that this is the third bill of interim supply which has come before the Senate. The first of these bills provided for two-twelfths of the main estimates, plus additional proportions of some other items, representing the money required up to May 31. The amount voted on that occasion was $684,120,260.18. That was Appropriation Act No. 1.

Appropriation Act No. 5, which was the second interim supply bill we had, provided for a month's supply, plus additional proportions of certain items set out in the schedules to that bill. This covered the public expenditures for the month of June, in the amount of $338,136,717.59.

Appropriation Acts Nos. 2, 3 and 4 dealt with the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64, which came to us shortly after Easter. I suppose it is a little irregular to call Nos. 2, 3 and 4 the final supplementary estimates. Perhaps they could be called the quarter-finals, the semi-finals and the finals. In any event, they were dealt with shortly after Easter.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The less said about them the better.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): At this stage, perhaps, on both sides.

The bill before us grants one-twelfth, generally, of the main estimates, additional proportions of two special items in those estimates, four-twelfths generally of the supplementary estimates, and certain additional proportions of two special items in the supplementary estimates which were tabled, as I said, on June 10 of this year. The amount to be voted by the bill now before us is $469,308,421.26. I am speaking now entirely from the memorandum which all honourable senators have before them.

I think it appropriate also at this time to say that the balance of the tabled estimates yet to be voted, which is the last figure on the statement, is $2,864,716,847.97. The bill before us provides for the money required up to July 31 of this year.

There is no complete release of any item, either of the main or of the supplementary estimates. I will also give the assurance to all honourable senators that the discussion of this matter, or the failure to discuss any aspect of any item in the bill before us this evening, will not in any way prejudice the right of any honourable senator to raise any question on any item, either of the main or supplementary estimates.

I should say further that this house has already referred the estimates which have been tabled, both main and supplementary, to the Standing Committee on Finance. That committee is now actively considering the work it will do in respect of the estimates, and has already had a number of meetings, under the chairmanship of the honourable Senator Leonard, from Toronto-Rosedale.

Honourable senators, having said this much by way of introduction, I come to the bill itself.

Section 2 provides that the amount to be granted by this measure is $469,308,421.26. Under section 2(a) provides one-twelfth of the total of the amount set forth in the main estimates for the present fiscal year, in the amount of $329,299,209.25. That is one-twelfth of the total of the main estimates to be voted. This total appears in the right-hand column at the top of the memorandum to which I have already referred. That total divided by 12 produces the amount granted by section 2(a) of the bill. I think it is of convenience to honourable senators to know exactly how that figure is arrived at, and that is one of the reasons the memorandum is now before us.

Section 2(b) of the bill provides one-twelfth of the items in the main estimates set forth in schedule A of the bill. If honourable senators will refer to schedule A, they will see that there are two items, namely, item 5, under Department of Agriculture, and item 25 under Privy Council. One-twelfth of the item in the Department of Agriculture in respect of grants in aid of agricultural research in universities and other scientific institutions is $2,050,783, being one-twelfth of the amount shown in the column.

In addition, one-twelfth of $2,500,000 in item 25 under Privy Council is $208,333. This amount is to be paid on account of expenses incurred in connection with the erection of the memorial building in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are these in the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes; these are both in the main estimates, and they are an additional one-twelfth.

Section 2(a) provides one-twelfth of all the main estimates. Section 2(b) provides one-twelfth of these two items selected from the main estimates, and are additional.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): An extra one-twelfth for item No. 5 in agriculture is asked for because at this time of the year the work to be done in agricultural research in the universities and other scientific organizations requires certain expenditures to be made. It is estimated that this amount, of a little over $2 million, will take care of that requirement.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I understand.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Likewise, there is a further additional item of some $208,000 to be made in respect of the memorial building at Charlottetown.

Section 2(c) provides for four-twelfths of the items in the supplementary estimates for this fiscal year in the amount of $134,897,245.34.

May I, honourable senators, come back to the memorandum to which I have already referred?

The total of the Supplementary Estimates (A) tabled here on June 10 is $404,691,736.

One-third, or four-twelfths, of that is the amount provided by section 2(c).

Section 2(d) provides for seven-twelfths of the items in the Supplementary Estimates (A) set forth in Schedule B, in the amount of $2,625,000. If honourable senators will look at Schedule B they will see that this is item "L37a, Loans, Investments and Advances." This particular item deals with the acquisition of uranium concentrates from Rio Algom Mines Ltd., Denison Mines Limited and Faraday Uranium Mines Ltd. The $4,500,000, the total for the year, is the amount required to provide for the cost of stockpiling uranium concentrates.

As a result of the proposal contained in section 2(d) of the bill, eleven-twelfths of item L37a will have been released if this bill is passed.

Section 2(e) provides for two-twelfths of the item in the Supplementary Estimates (A) set forth in Schedule C, in the amount of $227,850. If honourable senators will look at Schedule C they will see that this is, again, a loan item. It is item L12a, which provides for loans to the government of India to finance the purchase in Canada of aircraft and parts. This is a large program, started several years ago, and the amount required to complete it is $1,367,100. It is proposed in this bill to grant two-twelfths of that amount in addition to the four-twelfths generally granted out of the supplementary estimates. So the total amount of the balance of this program which will have been approved if this bill is given second reading will be six-twelfths, or one-half, of the total amount required to be spent this year.

Honourable senators, sections 3, 4 and 5 of this bill are identical in wording and in phraseology to the previous interim supply bills we passed in this house earlier this year. I think they require no special explanation. Section 3 says that the amount authorized may be paid only for the purposes specified in the item.

Section 4 provides that where an item purports to confer authority to enter into commitments, a commitment may be entered into in accordance with the terms of such item, if the Comptroller of the Treasury certifies that the amount does not exceed the total amount of the commitment authority stated in such item.

Section 5 simply provides for an account to be rendered with respect to the administration of the act.

Honourable senators, I hope I have given an adequate explanation of the bill. If there are any questions I hope I shall be able to answer them.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would the honourable senator tell us more about this loan to India? How much is the total amount, and what is the story?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I can tell the honourable senator that on March 9, 1963 the Cabinet approved a special inter-governmental loan to India in an amount not exceeding $12.5 million to cover the purchase of 16 Caribou aircraft and related spare parts as equipment for the Indian air force. It was stipulated that the loan would bear interest at the normal commercial rate of 5½ per cent but would be accompanied by a grant sufficient to defray half the interest charges up to a maximum of $2 million. In the fiscal year 1963-64 expenses incurred under this loan amounted to $11,132,982. The unspent balance, which is the amount in the column in the schedule, is $1,367,018. This amount lapsed. It is necessary now to re-vote this amount in order that funds will be available in the current fiscal year to enable the Government's total commitment to be met under the original program.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the Leader of the Government for his usual concise and eloquent explanation of the bill now before us, Bill C-105. I would like also to congratulate my honourable friend on the manner in which he has been able to arrange the business of the Senate, making it possible for the Senate to reassemble on the very day that this appropriation bill, which is the only business anticipated, was passed by the other place.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Now and again you get lucky.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Those of us who were here at the time will remember the frustrating experience last March when we were waiting for the bill authorizing the spending of the final supplementary estimates for the last fiscal year. None of us want that to happen again. However, supply must be granted in order to pay the day-to-day expenses of the business of Government.

The bill now before us, which is Appropriation Bill No. 6, is in the usual form, and grants supply to the Government for the month of July and authorizes a sum not to exceed $469,308,421. This is the third interim supply bill since the main estimates for the current fiscal year were tabled in March.

During the course of the debate on the last interim supply bill to come before us, which granted supply for the month of June now ending, the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) questioned the wisdom of the Government in asking for only one month's supply when Parliament is faced with a heavy legislative program. I might say that since the passage of that bill the other place has become involved in a debate on a national flag or flags. This leads me to the conclusion that the main estimates will not be passed until after the summer recess. Consequently, it will be necessary to have another interim supply bill before we adjourn, to cover Government expenditures for the month of August.

Honourable senators, it would seem to me to be logical for the Government to ask for two months' supply instead of the amount covered in the bill now before us. I, for one, cannot understand why we are asked periodically to pass one month's supply when we could pass two months' supply at a time, and especially in this case, anticipating that we could recess probably in mid-July, as we are led to believe. We know that if that is so we will have to meet again prior to the date mentioned by the honourable Leader of the Government. We would have to convene again and form a quorum to pass another interim supply bill. So I fail to understand why we do not pass two months' supply at a time.

This bill and the resolution precedent to it have been the subject of a fairly extensive debate in the other place. As is their unquestionable right, members in the other place have availed themselves of the opportunity provided by this measure to air grievances against the Government. I want to assure my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government, that it is not my intention unduly to delay the passage of this bill as there will be other appropriation bills to be considered before the end of the present session and hence other opportunities to speak.

Since the last interim supply bill was before us, our Standing Committee on Finance has been set up, under the chairmanship of the distinguished senator from Toronto-Rosedale, Senator Leonard, and to this committee has been referred the main estimates for the current fiscal year. That committee will be dealing with many aspects of the estimates in great detail.

I do not wish to go through the items contained in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, but one in particular has been brought to my attention. The amount authorized in the estimates for Justice is $51,552,100, and on page 10 of Supplementary Estimates(A) there is a supplementary estimate for Justice in the amount of $36,840.

Honourable senators, I wish to bring to your attention the fact that not long ago a Joint Committee on Consumer Credit was organized, and according to newspapers and other reports that have come to my attention, counsel has been engaged at $250 per day, and an accountant at $100 per day. When the committee is not sitting counsel will receive $25 per hour for preparing his reports and preparing his questions. Honourable senators, I think this is as useful as a fifth leg on a horse. I think it is a scandal.

In the six years that we were in power we organized committees on inflation and on manpower; and I, for one, was approached by people who said, "You know, you should have experienced counsel on this committee, at $225 or $250 a day." The chairman came to me and said that he was inexperienced in these matters, that he had had so-and-so suggested to him as experienced counsel and he asked my thoughts on it. My answer to this was that there were enough experienced and able lawyers on the committee, who could ask all the questions they needed to ask, and that we should not throw money out the window. That was my answer to every suggestion and to every request made to this side of the house to retain the services of counsel.

If this committee sits, as I presume it will, for three, four, five or maybe six months, or even longer, we will over a period of four months have thrown $42,000 out the window. What will counsel do when this committee sits? I can tell you, honourable senators. Bankers and economists will be invited to come to deliver a paper or a talk to the committee for 60 minutes, and the members of the committee will receive a copy of his paper and will follow him while the lecturer is reading. Counsel will just say: "What is your name? Who are you? What do you do? What are your qualifications?" Then he will sit down. He may ask a general question or two—and that, honourable senators, at $250 a day. I practised law for 32 years in this city, and I never had that advantage. I think if I had been asked to accept such a position I would have asked, "What are my duties, and what am I going to do there for $250 a day?"

I bring that to your attention. I say that we are lawmakers and not lawbreakers and should see to it that this kind of thing does not happen.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I wish to join with my honourable friend Senator Choquette in congratulating the honourable Leader of the house (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) upon the way in which he brought in this bill, and the very clear manner in which he explained it. I think he did an excellent job and I congratulate him. There is one matter I should like to have cleared in my mind.

You will notice under the heading "Appropriation Act No. 5" in this memorandum which has been given to us, it is stated that this is to provide for expenditures during June. Is it necessary that these supplies should be granted by June 30 in order to permit expenditures in July, or can it run over into July?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): To answer the honourable senator's question, I think there are times when the question as he puts it becomes a moot point. It depends largely on the immediate cash requirements of various departments. I understand that at the present time there are certain accounts outstanding that should be paid, and for which provision should be made before the end of the month. I have heard, as have all honourable senators, discussions arising from the fact that at times the money sought is not required until the middle of the following month. That may be true in respect of certain salary requirements for the public service. But there are other accounts which fall due from time to time, and very often these fall due on the day to which supply has been voted or shortly thereafter. Generally speaking it has been the history of governments to try to get interim supply through before the end of the month for which supply had previously been voted.

Now I might deal for a moment with the point raised by my friend the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette). I agree that the granting of one month's supply leads to further debate in this chamber, and indeed in the other chamber. But I think so far as the latter is concerned, these opportunities are welcome, because on a bill of this nature, as the honourable senator has mentioned, members have an opportunity to raise grievances against the Government. The oftener they have these supply bills, the oftener they have such opportunities. Sometimes Oppositions like this!

I would think there are other reasons which motivate the Government in asking for smaller amounts of supply, or supply for shorter periods. I hope that the next supply bill, however, will cover the requirements of the public service for several months. The first one sought two months' supply, April and May. The second one sought one month's supply, and this one seeks supply for one month.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, my main point in rising is to congratulate the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) on giving us this memorandum. It is the first time in my memory that a document of this nature has been laid before us when estimates or supplementary estimates have come before us to be considered. I think the Leader is to be commended, and he should be encouraged to continue this practice in future.

I should like to say a word in reply to the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette) concerning the apparently high fees being paid to counsel. It is really not a matter that we can deal with in this chamber, it is a matter for committee. I am pleased that we have during this session appointed a committee to investigate the details of the estimates. Its chairman is a most capable counsel, and I feel that this is a question which should be explored by that committee. The appropriate officials should be called before the committee and an explanation required of them. We are not in a position now to do that here. The Acting Leader of the Opposition is to be congratulated for bringing the matter forward. It is something we should investigate, but I do not think it calls for decision on our part at this time when we are debating interim supply.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, perhaps I might comment on what Senator Roebuck has said.

In my opinion, it is quite competent for us, sitting here and being asked to pass this small sum of $469 million to help Her Majesty out, to question any item. As I understand it, we are not going to proceed with third reading tonight; so perhaps I could ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) to answer my question tomorrow.

I am very curious to know, especially when we have such able counsel, learned in the law, as Senator Croll, who is the joint chairman of this Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit, why we need to employ counsel. I have never seen my friend Senator Hayden require counsel in meetings of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I have never seen my friend Senator Leonard require counsel or auditors at meetings of the Standing Committee on Finance.

Before this bill is read the third time tomorrow I would like the Leader of the Government in this house to tell us who are the gentlemen who have been appointed to these lucrative posts. I understand that their hours are fixed. From reading the newspapers

I am given to understand that after they have worked eight hours a day they go on an hourly rate.

I would like the leader of the house to tell me who these gentlemen are, and what are their special qualifications for these positions. What background and knowledge do they have in this field, and what have they done to date?

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, first let me say that I very largely agree with the criticisms offered by the Acting Leader of the Opposition, Senator Choquette. The tendency today is for governments and individuals to spend very freely. It shocks me a bit when I look at this excellent summary provided by the honourable Leader of the Government to assist us in a speedy understanding of the subject we are discussing. This is a very useful summary. But, if we include Supplementary Estimates (A) which amount to $404,000,000—and one is inclined to believe that there will be Supplementary Estimates (B) and probably Supplementary Estimates (C) before we are through with the matter—the total spending this year will be over $8 billion. It is almost $8,100 million.

This is a very serious thing for a country like Canada. At the moment we are enjoying what some economists call a boom in our economy. Certainly the economy is active. Sales of commodities are very high, but consumer debt is also very high and is increasing as rapidly as are sales of commodities. This indicates that people are borrowing. The effect of that borrowing, of course, is to stimulate the economy, but I am old-fashioned enough to believe that any economy that is built upon debt, either public or private, has a good deal of sand in the foundations. I mention that fact to support the view I expressed a little earlier, that we are in a pretty free-spending mood.

Any person who follows our financial situation knows, as I stated a few weeks ago in this house, that over the past year the money supply in this country has increased by nearly one and a half billion dollars. All that means, when you boil it down to its essence, is that we are printing money to pay for deficits, past and present. I do not think that is a very sure foundation upon which to build.

I raise this question: What will happen if within two or three years this condition of boom in our economy subsides? What will happen if we get into a period of two or three years of recession? What happens then? Are we going to be able to cut our spending as freely as we would like? Honourable senators, we will find it very difficult to do that.

Once you are committed to increasing social welfare benefits, and once you are committed to enterprises that may take two or three years to complete, you have to find the money. If a recession comes, then without any question it is going to affect the revenues, and we shall be in the position of either having to borrow more money at probably fairly high rates of interest, or imposing more taxes at a time when we should be lessening them.

If I may say so, I think we have, on the whole, become a good deal confused in regard to the essential principles that should guide an economy. Thirty years ago the idea was put forward that governments could play a very important part in regulating an economy. The means suggested was that in times of boom governments should tax heavily, and in times of recession they should lower taxes and thus stimulate the economy. That went under the rather fancy name of cyclical budgeting. While the theory was a beautiful one, it has never worked out in practice.

So, we have a state of affairs today where we are in a condition of boom, of buoyancy in the economy, and at the same time we are, if anything, increasing taxes very little. In the United States the other day, under those same conditions, taxes were reduced very substantially. That is something I hope will not be done in this country. The way to get at a reduction of taxes is to cut spending, and I want to tell you that in my humble judgment there is a tremendous area in the public expenditures of this country where economies could be effected. This very document before us gives some proof of that.

The fact that we are committing ourselves to spending over $8 billion this year federally, leaving out of account all provincial and municipal spending, which is also increasing at as rapid a pace as federal spending, is very significant. For the life of me I cannot understand it.

It is quite true, of course, that in the last 15 years we have worked into our economy an inflation of 35 per cent. That is a fact that cannot be disputed. It means that an article that cost $100 fifteen years ago now costs $135. We are continuing that process at the rate of roughly 1½ to 2 per cent a year—and perhaps at a slightly higher rate because inflation tends to accelerate as the years pass.

All I have to say, honourable senators, is that it seems to me that that course is fraught with grave dangers because when you get into the crunch, to use a new word, you commence to have labour troubles and political troubles of all kind. We have now reached the point in our development where the idea is widespread in the body politic—and make no mistake about it—that it is the business and responsibility of government to cure all these ills. Consequently, the development of that notion, and the flight of reason in considering these matters, means that the pressure on the Government—I do not care whether it is the present Government or any other government that is in power—will be such as to put this country in grave peril. That is the thing I wish to protest against. I think it is unsound; I think it is dangerous.

I have sometimes been accused of being a Gladstonian Liberal. In a measure, I plead that I am. My friend, Senator O'Leary (Carleton) I think holds the view that I am a Gladstonian Liberal living in the past. Well, what was the central core of the philosophy of Gladstonian Liberalism? It is true that, judged by present standards, it is away in the rear, but its central idea was the maintenance and the extension of the boundaries of political freedom not only in Britain but throughout the world. Today, by the road we are taking, we are endangering freedom.

If I did not believe that from the bottom of my heart, I would not be standing here tonight addressing you as I am. I wish to tell you that, as far as I am concerned, political freedom, the right to live my life as I like, the right to criticize, the right to have a say in how I shall be governed, is the most precious heritage I have, and I am not going to lightly throw it away. It is because I believe that this tremendous increase in spending is bringing a grave danger to that concept, that I rise here to present these views to you.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I join with others in the congratulations which have been directed towards the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate, in his remarkable prescience and excellent timing in bringing us together tonight within a few hours of the time that this supply resolution was available for discussion here. It is all the more remarkable, I think, when we recall that the resolution under discussion was introduced in the other place as far back as June 12, and at that time the minister in charge of the bill made it clear that he expected it could pass within an hour. In fact, he asked that the Private Members' hour of that day be set aside so that this resolution could be disposed of. That did not happen.

In the intervening two weeks we have heard much public discussion about some apparent grievances relating to the rights of individuals under our immigration laws, to the management or mismanagement of the business of Parliament, to a certain television film, and about the growing opinion throughout the country that it was a mistake for the Government to introduce the flag issue and remain obdurate about it when it meant holding up urgent legislation of public and private welfare importance, I refer to such legislation as the bill now introduced providing for loans to students, the extension of family allowances up to the age of 18 for those remaining at school, and for the explanation and discussion of the Canada Pension Plan, and other matters.

However, all clouds, we are told, have silver linings. In the debate and discussion which took place in those two weeks, I find one bit of silver lining, to which, with permission, I would like to refer. It was a very high compliment paid to the Senate by a member of the other place. Speaking of this very matter of the dispatch of public business in Parliament, he said this, if I may have permission of the chamber to quote a very short passage.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): So long as it is complimentary, certainly, everybody agrees.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank the honourable Leader of the Government. The compliment is not only to the Senate but, as I was about to remark, I am sure all senators will agree that it is also a compliment to him.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You had better not read it, then.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: These are the words:

> Quite recently many comments were made about the other place. It would probably surprise hon. members to know that the work done there by the members of the other house—

Which is us.

> —is probably more than has been accomplished here, and they have given more knowledge and initiative to the people of Canada than we have given.

Those were words spoken by the honourable Liberal member for York East on Thursday last June 25.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What is his name?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I believe it is against the rules to give it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is all right here. We had better know who our friends are.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With permission, his name is Mr. Steven Otto.

To that I would add one matter, because I have raised the question of the urgency of these student loans and the continuation of the family allowances. I know the honourable Leader of the Government is considering arrangements for the adjournment of the Senate, and I would hope that that adjournment would in no way hold up the immediate passing of the bills dealing with student loans and family allowances, if they are ready for action by the Senate.

I say this because I happen to know that many students are waiting to decide whether they will be able to carry on their education at higher levels, and their decision will depend on what happens in respect to these two bills. I think it would be a disservice to the Senate if we allowed ourselves in any way to be responsible for holding up action on these particular bills for more than two or three days.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I understood that the honourable Leader of the Government was answering questions when he spoke the second time. Had I not understood so, I would have drawn the attention of honourable senators, as I do now, to the point that if the honourable senator speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I would hold the house for but a few moments. I can assure honourable Senator McCutcheon that I will do my best to get the answers to the questions that he asked about the services of counsel and an accountant for one of the joint committees of Parliament. I will try to have that information available to him.

I thank honourable senators for participating in the discussion this evening.

As regards Senator Grosart's reference to the complimentary remark made in the other place, in view of the source from which it came, I can think only of the old Latin adage: Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

If there are no other questions, I think that concludes the debate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copies of authentic texts of a Convention and Recommendations adopted by the Forty-seventh Session of the International Labour Conference, held in Geneva in June, 1963 (English and French texts), together with a copy of a letter from the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, setting out the legislative jurisdiction of these international instruments, as follows:

Convention No. 119 concerning the Guarding of Machinery;

Recommendation No. 118 concerning the Guarding of Machinery; and Recommendation No. 119 concerning Termination of Employment at the initiative of the employer.

Report of Operations under the Civil Service Insurance Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 21(2) of the said act, chapter 49, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the Administration of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 18 of the said act, chapter 329, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian Maritime Commission, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 13 of the Canadian Maritime Commission Act, chapter 38, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Capital Budget of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-860, dated June 11, 1964, approving same. (English text).

Report of the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 34 of the Public Works Act, chapter 228, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of Proceedings under the Trans-Canada Highway Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 9 of the said act, chapter 269, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Board of Broadcast Governors for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 19 of the Broadcasting Act, chapter 22, Statutes of Canada, 1958. (English and French texts).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II of Wednesday, June 24, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C. 1962. (English and French texts).

Statement on the Standing and Transactions of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account as at March 31, 1964, together with a Statement of Annuities, Annual Allowances, Cash Termination Allowances, and Return of Contributions for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 26 of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, chapter 21 Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English texts).

PENAL REFORM

INQUIRIES ANSWERED

On Inquiries Nos. 1 and 2—Hon. Senator Croll:

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I have the answers to the inquiries by the honourable Senator Croll.

(For text of inquiries and answers, see appendix A, pp. 787-97.)

PRIVATE BILL

THE CONGREGATION OF THE MARIST SISTERS —SECOND READING

Hon. Edgar E. Fournier moved the second reading of Bill S-38, to incorporate Congregation of the Marist Sisters.

He said:

[Translation]

Honourable senators, having the honour of introducing Bill S-38, my pleasure is twofold and this, for two reasons: Firstly, it is the first bill introduced by me in this distinguished house. Secondly, it is a bill which stems from my little region of this country. I could also add that my pleasure is greater because it is a bill intended to come to the rescue of the neglected and unhappy members of mankind.

The purpose of Bill S-38 is to set up a corporation to enable those young and dedicated nuns to develop, extend and improve their humanitarian services for orphans, poor people, old people, forlorn people and, even for forgotten people.

This congregation, which was organized in France in 1824, is a congregation of Catholic faith, dedicated to charity, assistance and comfort for people who suffer. The congregation looks after hospitals and orphans, as is the case in my region. They look after retarded children. They take in illegitimate children and raise them; they maintain old people's homes and they are also involved in foreign missions.

Honourable senators, if we take a look at the purpose of this bill, we find all the necessary details, which are very interesting.

[Text]

Honourable senators will note from the preamble that this is a Roman Catholic organization.

Section 1 provides for the incorporation of a congregation of young sisters who now reside in the City of Edmonton.

Section 2 names the first directors of the corporation, and who shall constitute the first board of directors.

Section 3(1) provides that the head office of the corporation shall be in the City of Hull, in the Province of Quebec, or at such other place in Canada as may be designated by the corporation.

Section 3(2) provides that notice in writing shall be given to the Secretary of State for the corporation in the event that it should be decided to change the location of the head office, and that a copy of such notice shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

Section 4 is self-explanatory. It tells all the good things that the organization is doing.

Section 5 sets out the additional powers, such as entering into agreements with school commissions, associations of teachers, governmental institutions, and so forth.

Sections 6 to 16 deal with corporation matters, with which I shall not deal, preferring to leave them in the hands of experienced lawyers.

I have heard that in the other house they are likely to make an amendment—I believe to section 16, but I am not too sure. However, I hope honourable senators will give this bill the usual good attention and cooperation.

If the bill is given second reading this evening, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Fournier, (Madawaska-Restigouche) bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

DISSOLUTION AND ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGES ACT

BILL TO REPEAL—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-29, intituled: "An Act to repeal the Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act."—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I would ask that this order stand until July 23 next.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Second Reading of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I submit to you that this Item No. 3 should be placed as Item No. 4 on the Order Paper. The motion, which is now Item No. 4 should precede the bill, for the very good reason that the purpose of the motion is to refer the bill to the Supreme Court.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been requested by the honourable Senator Pouliot that Item No. 3 and Item No. 4 on the Order Paper be placed in reverse order. Do honourable senators agree?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

PRIVATE BILL

THE GUARANTEE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA—SECOND READING

Hon. Louis P. Gelinas moved the second reading of Bill S-37, respecting The Guarantee Company of North America.

He said: Honourable senators, my remarks will be brief. Bill S-37, like many other bills which have been introduced in this house, concerns an insurance company requesting that it may use, in the transacting of its business, either the name The Guarantee Company of North America, or La Garantie, Compagnie d'Assurance de l'Amerique du Nord, or both of such names, as and when it so elects.

The Guarantee Company of North America was incorporated in 1913. The company was incorporated for the purpose of making contracts guaranteeing the fidelity of persons in positions of trust, public or private, and guaranteeing or becoming surety for the due and faithful performance of any contract or agreement. It is also authorized to enter into contracts of insurance covering several classes including, inter alia, fire and casualty, automobile and inland transportation.

The home office of the company is situated in Montreal. The company is licensed to do business in all provinces of Canada, except Prince Edward Island, and eighteen of the states of the United States of America.

I hope the purists will find the translation of the name adequate.

If this bill is given second reading, I propose to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gelinas, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, speaking to the record, as honourable senators are aware, the third reading of the bill in respect to amendments to the National Defence Act is under consideration in the other place, and they sit tonight until 10.30 o'clock. There is a possibility this bill may be given third reading there tonight and be sent over here. I am completely in the hands of the Senate as to whether it is desired to adjourn now, during pleasure, say until 10.00 or 10.15, to reassemble at the call of the bell. If the bill has been given third reading by that time and has come to us, we could then give it first reading tonight. Perhaps we could give it further consideration on second reading tomorrow, if that is agreeable. I am in the hands of the Senate. I do not want to hold the Senate here tonight.

Perhaps honourable senators would prefer to adjourn now until 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Then we could proceed to second reading by consent, immediately after the bill has received first reading. I repeat, I am completely in the hands of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Might I suggest we meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, if necessary, rather than wait for the bell tonight?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do point this out to honourable senators though, that if this bill has not reached the Senate by 10.30 this evening, and if we meet at 11 o'clock in the morning we will have third reading of the supply bill and perhaps nothing else. If we meet at three o'clock we might then be able to consider the other bill.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Might I observe that there are several committees meeting tomorrow morning. I am a member of one which sits at 10 o'clock, and it usually goes on until mid-day. There may be other honourable senators in a similar position.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): We might accomplish as much if we adjourn now and meet at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(see p. 785)

PENAL REFORM

Inquiry No. 1 by the Honourable Senator Croll:

What specific action, if any, has been taken in implementation of each of the following principal recommendations contained in the Report of the Royal Commission on the Penal System (Archambault Report) presented on April 4th, 1938, namely:

(Recommendations and answers follow)

1. The Canadian penal system should be centralized under the control of the Government of Canada, with the federal authorities taking charge of all the prisons in Canada, the provinces retaining only a sufficient number to provide for offenders against provincial statutes, prisoners on remand, and those serving short sentences.

A. Not implemented.

2. An immediate conference between the federal and provincial authorities should be held with a view to obtaining the full co-operation of the provincial authorities in putting the recommendations of the Commission into effect.

A. Implemented in part by a Dominion-Provincial Conference on correctional reform between the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General of Canada and the Attorneys General of the provinces, in Ottawa, October 13-14, 1958.

3. There should be a complete reorganization of the headquarters administration of Canadian penitentiaries to include giving effect to the recommendations in this report as to the retirement of certain officers.

A. Fully implemented pursuant to amendments made to the Penitentiary Act, 1947, and the revised Penitentiary Act which came into force in 1962.

4. A Prison Commission, composed of three members removable only for cause, should be appointed with full authority over the management of penitentiaries, empowered to appoint staff, and to act as a central parole board. The Commission should be responsible directly to the Minister of Justice and to Parliament.

A. Implemented in part since 1947 under legislation authorizing the appointment of a Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner and Directors of Divisions, but not implemented in respect of the recommendation that the Penitentiary Commission should act as a central parole board.

5. Wardens should be reinvested with the authority of executive management of the penitentiaries in conformity with the provisions of the Penitentiary Act.

A. Fully implemented by means of appropriate regulations and directives issued under the Penitentiary Act.

6. A planned reconstruction of the personnel of the penitentiary staffs throughout Canada should be effected in order that officers who have special training will be enlisted in the service.

A. All administrative officers in the Penitentiary Service were specially qualified upon enlistment or, since enlistment, have received special training; in respect of the inmate training program, one out of four penitentiary officers have special qualifications in relation to their duties.

7. There should be co-operation with the universities of Canada in establishing suitable courses for the training of those who wish to become officers, probation officers, or parole officers.

A. Since 1948, in connection with the staff training program, faculty members of certain universities, schools of social work and social studies have participated on a regular basis as lecturers. Reciprocally, Penitentiary Service officials have contributed, wherever possible, to the instruction of students in university faculties that are related to the administration of justice. In recent years the Penitentiary Service has employed as summer interns a number of graduate students who seek higher degrees in psychology, social work and related disciplines. Through such co-operative activities there has been developed a mutual understanding of the role that universities might be expected to play in the training of professional staff for correctional work.

8. A training school for penitentiary officers should be established on the lines of the courses at Wakefield, England.

A. A penitentiary staff college was established at Kingston, Ontario, in 1952, and a similar staff college was established at St. Vincent de Paul, P.Q., in 1962.

9. An outstanding prison authority from England, preferably Mr. Alexander Paterson,

M.C., one of His Majesty's Prison Commissioners of England, should be invited to come to Canada to counsel and advise the Prison Commission on the reorganization of the prison system in order to give practical effect to the recommendations contained in this report.

A. Not implemented.

10. After careful study of the penitentiary staffs by the Prison Commission, all hopelessly incapable officers should be retired.

A. This recommendation had been fully implemented by 1952.

11. New officers to fill vacancies in the penitentiary service should be selected on a merit basis only and no consideration should be given to political influence.

A. Merit is the only basis upon which officers are appointed to the Penitentiary Service.

12. The pay of officers should be brought up to a reasonable standard, having regard to the type of service performed.

A. Most classes of penitentiary officers receive reasonable salaries and, in common with all branches of the public service, salaries of penitentiary officers are subject to cyclical review.

13. Rules respecting the dismissal of officers similar to those in force in England should be adopted in Canada to make provision that an officer should have an opportunity of being heard before dismissal, and that in all cases he should be advised of the reasons for his dismissal.

A. This recommendation has been implemented by regulations made by the Governor in Council pursuant to the Penitentiary Act.

14. There should be a thorough and complete revision of the penitentiary rules and regulations based on the principles contained in this report, with special regard to:

(a) the protection of society; (b) the safe custody of inmates; (c) strict but humane discipline; (d) reformation and rehabilitation of prisoners.

A. A revision of the penitentiary regulations, in accordance with this recommendation, came into force in 1962.

15. An official Board of Visitors should be appointed in connection with each penitentiary. This board should be composed of a county court judge (in Quebec, a judge of the Court of Sessions), a representative of an officially recognized social welfare association, and a medical doctor. It should be under the control of the Prison Commission, and its duties should be similar to those of the boards of visitors appointed in connection with the convict prisons in England.

A. Not implemented.

16. A complete revision of the methods of classification of prisoners should be made, with provision for a thorough medical and psychiatric examination of prisoners.

A. The rules for classification of prisoners were revised in 1954 and since then have been further revised, from time to time. Every inmate who arrives at a penitentiary receives a thorough medical examination and, where the need is indicated, a psychiatric examination.

17. The necessary legislation should be enacted to provide for sentencing habitual offenders to preventive detention in a separate institution to be provided for that purpose.

A. Legislation for the preventive detention of habitual offenders was enacted by Parliament in 1948. However, since that time, less than a hundred persons have been sentenced to preventive detention in Canada and it has not been expedient to establish separate institutions for them.

18. All incorrigible and intractable prisoners in the penitentiaries should be segregated in one institution.

A. Not implemented as recommended, but incorrigible and intractable prisoners are confined only in maximum security institutions where they are segregated from the main population.

19. Separate institutions, based on the principles of the English Borstal system, should be established to permit of special treatment being given to young offenders between sixteen and twenty-one years of age. There should also be a classification centre and three grades in each unit, each grade to be separately located and not contiguous to another. Two units should be established at once, one in the province of Ontario, and one in the province of Quebec, with a further development of the scheme in the Prairie Provinces, the Maritime Provinces, and, in a modified manner having regard to the population, in British Columbia.

A. The Federal Training Centre at St. Vincent de Paul, P.Q., was opened in 1952 for the specialized training of young offenders Construction will commence this year of a young offenders institution at Springhill, N.S., and another at Drumheller, Alberta.

20. All insane prisoners should be entirely removed from the prison population and treated in hospitals for the insane.

A. Section 19 of the Penitentiary Act provides that certified mentally ill or mentally defective prisoners may be removed from the penitentiary and confined in mental hospitals or other appropriate provincial institutions in accordance with agreements between the federal and provincial governments.

21. The mentally deficient should be segregated in the ordinary institutions under the direction of a trained psychiatrist.

A. Mentally deficient inmates have the benefit of psychiatric treatment in any institutions where they are confined.

22. Intractable and recidivist drug addicts should be removed on the order of the Prison Commission to the prison for habitual offenders.

A. Not implemented, but a special institution for custody and treatment of narcotic addicts is under construction at Matsqui, B.C.

23. A scheme of classification should be established in each prison, having regard to the previous record, social habits, physical condition, educational attainments, aptitudes, and suitable training for future employment, of individual prisoners.

A. This recommendation has been fully implemented.

24. A grades and merit system for reformable prisoners, modelled on the system in use in England, should be established.

A. Inmates can qualify for daily rates of pay ranging from twenty-five cents to fifty-five cents. Increases in rates of pay are based on grades and are determined on the basis of individual merit and industry. Moreover, the Penitentiary Act provides that every inmate may, in accordance with regulations, be credited with three days' remission of his sentence in respect of each calendar month during which he has applied himself industriously to his work, and any remission so earned is not subject to forfeiture for any reason.

25. Prison offences should be tried before a prison court composed of three officers and there should be a right of appeal to the Board of Visitors. The rules governing prison offences should be simplified.

A. Inmates charged with disciplinary offences are tried before a Disciplinary Board composed of three officers. The decision of the Board is in all cases submitted to the Warden for review and in certain cases to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries for confirmation. Otherwise there are no provisions providing a right of appeal on the part of the inmate. The rules governing prison offences and scales of punishment for such offences have been simplified by regulations that came into effect on April 1, 1962.

26. Corporal punishment should be abolished except for the offences of assaulting an officer, mutiny, and incitement to mutiny.

A. Corporal punishment may be imposed for the offences of assaulting an officer, assaulting another inmate without provocation, destruction of government property without reasonable excuse, carrying a concealed weapon, mutiny and incitement to mutiny.

27. The several recommendations contained in chapter V of this report, in regard to prison discipline, should be made effective.

A. The recommendations referred to are reflected in the new Penitentiary Act, the Penitentiary Service Regulations and the Commissioner's Directives enacted thereunder.

28. Concessions should not be granted to prisoners because of riotous and mutinous behaviour. Necessary amelioration of prison conditions should be anticipated by the prison authorities and conceded only on their merits.

A. It is no part of the policy of the Penitentiary Service to grant concessions to inmates because of riotous and mutinous behaviour.

29. The principle contained in the International Standard Minimum Rules in regard to the use of firearms should be strictly adhered to, namely,—"Officials should never use their firearms nor force against a prisoner except in self-defence, or in cases of attempted escape when this cannot be prevented in any other way. The use of force should always be restricted to what is necessary."

A. The principle referred to in this recommendation is the policy of the Penitentiary Service and is part of the basic training of every officer.

30. Officers should be thoroughly trained in the use of firearms in order to eliminate inefficiency and danger in their necessary use.

A. Training in the use of firearms is part of the basic training of every officer.

31. The reckless use, or wilful misuse, of firearms or any unnecessary force, should be dealt with in respect to prison officers in the same manner as the commission of any other crime.

A. Such a use or misuse of firearms or the use of unnecessary force constitute a breach of service discipline on the part of an officer, for which he is liable to be tried and punished by a disciplinary board.

32. Gun cages in the shops and chapels should be abolished from all institutions except those for incorrigible or habitual offenders.

A. Gun cages have been removed from all chapels in all istitutions and in all shops except those in maximum security institutions.

33. Provision should be made for more outdoor physical exercise, on the principles suggested in chapter VIII of this report, with recreational games permitted according to the age and classification of prisoners. Further provision should be made on the same principles for more indoor recreation.

A. The Penitentiary Service operates, in each of its institutions, a well-organized program of indoor and outdoor recreation.

34. Conversation periods in cells should be abolished and provision should be made for conversation during recreation and exercise periods.

A. There are no restrictions upon conversation between inmates at any time in any federal institution.

35. Visiting and writing privileges should be extended in accordance with the recommendations contained in this report.

A. An inmate may correspond with and receive visits from any person, whether relative or not, who is on his approved list of visitors. That list may not contain the names of persons who, in the opinion of the Warden, may have an adverse effect upon the rehabilitation of the inmate.

36. Provision should be made in proper cases for the distribution of a weekly newspaper in each penitentiary.

A. There is no prohibition against the production, by inmates, of an inmate publication in any institution and most institutions produce such a periodical. Newspapers and magazines from free society are distributed, without censorship, in each institution.

37. A complete reorganization of the educational system should be made in accordance with the recommendations contained in chapter VIII of this report, with special consideration for the young offenders, more frequent library privileges, and a simplified system of book distribution.

A. The educational program for each institution has been substantially reformed since the Archambault Report was produced. Formal classes in education are conducted in every institution and correspondence courses are available to any inmate who is interested. Each institution has a good library and the system of book distribution has been greatly improved.

38. The medical service should be reorganized to eliminate the sources of criticism indicated in this report.

A. Complete medical service, including the daily attendance of a medical officer and the full-time assistance of hospital officers, is available at each institution.

39. After a careful survey of their respective requirements by the Prison Commission, provision should be made for psychiatric services at all penitentiaries.

A. At each maximum security institution the services of a psychiatrist are available five half-days a week.

40. Chaplains should be selected with a special regard to individual adaptability for prison service.

A. This recommendation is always followed in the selection of chaplains.

41. Chaplains should be permitted greater freedom in meeting the prisoners and be permitted to communicate with their relatives and to render further assistance than strictly spiritual services.

A. There are no restrictions on chaplains in meeting prisoners, communicating with their relatives or in rendering further assistance than is involved in conducting spiritual services.

42. A complete reorganization of prison industries should be made in all Canadian penal institutions.

A. There has been a complete reorganization of prison industries and a further reorganization is now in process.

43. A thorough survey should be made to discover the requirements of the various government departments and institutions that can be supplied by properly equipped prison industries.

A. Several surveys of this nature have been conducted during the past ten years and a substantial portion of production of penitentiary industries serves to supply the needs not only of the Penitentiary Service but of other government departments.

44. The prison work shops should be equipped with the necessary machinery for efficient production and employment of a maximum number of prisoners at productive labour.

A. The Penitentiary Service operates eighty industrial shops throughout its various institutions and employs thereat approximately two thousand inmates. All industrial shops are equipped with modern machinery.

45. Trade instructors should be relieved of all custodial duties in order that they may devote their entire time to their instructional duties. Only such trade instructors should be engaged as are equipped by training and experience to teach trades.

A. All trade instructors are able to devote their entire time to instructional duties. Only qualified trade instructors are employed in the Service.

46. No goods produced in the prison shops should be sold in the open market in competition with private enterprise.

A. No products of penitentiary industry are sold in the open market in competition with private enterprise.

47. A complete reorganization of the prison farms should be made to bring them up to maximum efficiency and production.

A. This recommendation has been fully implemented over the past fifteen years.

48. A thorough survey of each farm should be made to ensure proper drainage and the reclamation of areas now regarded as waste land.

A. The Penitentiary Service operates farms at five of its main institutions. Each farm is properly drained and no appreciable portion of any farm can be regarded as waste land.

49. Farm instructors should be agricultural college graduates and have sufficient practical experience to qualify them for these positions.

A. While few farm instructors are agricultural college graduates, all have had sufficient practical experience to qualify for their positions.

50. Canning factories should be established at one or more penitentiaries to supply the requirements of the penitentiaries and other government institutions.

A. The Penitentiary Service operates canning factories at two institutions.

51. Dairy herds should be established to supply, where possible, the dairy requirements of the respective penitentiaries.

A. Dairy herds are maintained at each institution that operates a farm.

52. All vegetables required in the penitentiary service should be produced on the penitentiary farms.

A. A very large proportion of the vegetables required in the Penitentiary Service is produced on penitentiary farms.

53. It should be permissable to supply surplus production to government institutions and sell the balance in the open market.

A. There is no surplus production of farm products.

54. Pay for prisoners now provided in Canadian penitentiaries should form the basis of further experiments, and, having regard to the experience of other countries, it should be directed to give reward for industry, measured rather by application and diligence than by volume of production.

A. This recommendation has been fully implemented under the regulations made pursuant to the new Penitentiary Act.

55. Arrangements should be made with the provincial authorities for the confinement of women prisoners, such as are now incarcerated in the Women's Prison at Kingston, in provincial jails and reformatories for women, and, when such arrangements have been made, the use of the Women's Prison at Kingston Penitentiary should be devoted to other penitentiary purposes.

A. Not implemented.

56. Canadian prisons should, at a minimum, conform in all respects to the standards of the International Standard Minimum Rules.

A. This recommendation has been fully implemented.

57. A complete revision of the Criminal Code should be undertaken at once.

A. A completely revised Criminal Code came into force on April 1, 1955.

58. Necessary amendments to the Criminal Code should be made to give effect to the recommendations contained in this report.

A. The changes made in the new Criminal Code of 1955 and subsequent amendments have taken into consideration many of the recommendations contained in the Archambault Report.

59. Amendments should also be made to provide for:

(a) Revision of the definition of "vagrancy"; (b) The embodiment of the principles of the English statutes in regard to allowing time for the payment of fines and imprisonment for the non-payment of fines; (c) Further restriction of the sale of offensive weapons; (d) Application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal in forma pauperis in criminal cases; (e) Giving power to trial judges to order photographs and finger prints destroyed in cases where the accused is found not guilty and the trial judge believes that this course ought to be taken; (f) A uniform instrument to be used in carrying out sentence of the court to whipping; (g) A central place of execution in each province.

A. The definition of "vagrancy" has been revised; the Criminal Code now permits the court to grant time for the payment of fines; the provisions of the Code relating to offensive weapons have been revised in certain respects and the sale thereof restricted; many provincial courts of appeal permit prisoners to appeal in writing; paragraph (e) of recommendation 59 has not been implemented; a uniform instrument is used in all penitentiaries in carrying out the sentences of whipping; the question of providing a central place of execution in each province is within provincial jurisdiction.

60. The appointment and discharge of police officers, whether federal, provincial, or municipal, and the administration of police departments should be entirely removed from the suspicion of political influence.

A. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police is the only federal police force and it has not been and is not subject to political influence. No information is available as to the provinces.

61. A definite system of training police officers along the lines now followed in Great Britain should be adopted in all provinces of Canada.

A. The Canadian Police College of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police trains their own senior personnel performing provincial police duties in eight of the Provinces, as well as selected personnel from provincial and municipal police forces. In addition, personnel of Canadian, United States and Commonwealth provost services of the Armed Services are trained on these regular courses.

62. The interest of the public should be enlisted in an organized manner, having regard to the vital importance of the prevention of crime by reducing juvenile delinquency and the assistance of social service agencies and churches and schools in co-operation with the home should be organized to this end.

A. This recommendation has been increasingly implemented in recent years, by a public information program sponsored by the Department of Justice.

63. The responsibility of the state for the financial support of community clubs, boys' and girls' clubs, and leisure time programs should be recognized. They are a means of preventing or, at least reducing, juvenile and adolescent delinquency.

A. Not implemented.

64. The Prison Commission, in co-operation with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, should plan a complete revision of the method of preparing statistical information. This revision should be designed to provide statistics that will show the success or failure of prison management and the cost of arresting, prosecuting, maintaining, and supervising prisoners.

A. The Penitentiary Service co-operates fully with the Judicial Section of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in the preparation of statistical information designed to give effect to this recommendation.

65. Provision should be made for uniformity of statistical information in regard to all phases of the administration of the criminal law, including juvenile delinquency, probation, recidivism, etc.

A. The Judicial Section of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has, in recent years, done a great deal to give effect to this recommendation. There was, in 1949, a Dominion-Provincial Conference on criminal statistics.

66. Criminal statistics should be extended to show the number of indictable offences reported to the police, as well as the number of charges laid and the number of convictions.

A. In co-operation with the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has implemented a uniform crime reporting program for police statistics.

67. The Juvenile courts should be reorganized and the Juvenile Delinquents Act be amended in conformity with the policies expressed in chapter XVI of this report.

A. A committee of the Department of Justice has been appointed to study the whole field of juvenile delinquency including the organization of the juvenile courts and the provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

68. An auxiliary committee of citizens should be organized in connection with each training school for juvenile delinquents to assist in the rehabilitation of the boys and girls who leave such institutions.

A. This is essentially a provincial matter.

69. The principle of family courts, on the lines suggested by chapter XVI of this report, should be adopted.

A. This is essentially a provincial matter.

70. A probation system, modelled upon the system now in force in England, should be adopted through Canada, both for adults and young offenders.

A. This is essentially a provincial matter.

71. Probation officers recruited from the ranks of trained social service workers should be appointed by the courts.

A. This is essentially a provincial matter.

72. The services of such officers should be made available for the preparation of case histories of convicted prisoners and to furnish reports to the presiding judge or magistrate before the accused is sentenced.

A. This is essentially a provincial matter.

73. Probation officers should be given supervision of prisoners who are released on ticket-of-leave and should make the necessary investigations of persons with whom prisoners wish to communicate.

A. Arrangements have been made with most of the existing Probation Services, by which provincial probation officers do supervise men on parole, and also make community investigation reports for the Parole Board. This is done especially in outlying areas of the provinces where there are no after-care agency facilities available.

74. The pay and duties of probation officers should be the subject of an agreement between the provincial and federal authorities.

A. This recommendation has not been implemented because probation officers are provincial government employees and the terms and conditions of their employment are purely a provincial responsibility.

75. Judges and magistrates should cause reports to be made on prisoners, after conviction and before sentence, in order to determine the nature of the punishment that should be imposed or whether probation would be more effective.

A. This is a recommendation to judges and magistrates and while it is known that the use of pre-sentence reports has been growing, precise information as to its present extent would have to be sought from the provincial authorities responsible for the enforcement of the Criminal Code.

76. All judges and magistrates required to try criminal cases should make periodic visits to the prisons to which they sentence prisoners.

A. The Department of Justice has an appropriation for the travelling expenses of federally appointed judges for the purpose of visiting institutions to which they sentence prisoners.

77. The Ticket of Leave Act should be amended to give effect to the recommendations contained in this report.

A. The Ticket of Leave Act was repealed on February 15th, 1959, and was replaced by the Parole Act which provided for a Parole Board.

78. The Remission Branch should be abolished, and the services now performed by it should be transferred to the Prison Commission, which will act as a central parole board.

A. The Remission Branch was abolished at the time the Parole Act was passed and the staff of the Remission Service was transferred to the staff of the Parole Board.

79. A parole officer should be appointed by the Prison Commission in each province or group of provinces, according to population, to investigate applications for parole and make recommendations to the Prison Commission.

A. Field Parole Officers have been appointed in ten different areas across Canada. They cover all the provinces. They interview inmates applying for parole, making recommendations to the Parole Board, and they have jurisdiction over parolees in their respective areas.

80. The administration of the Ticket of Leave Act should be definitely and completely removed from any suggestion of political interference.

A. The Ticket of Leave Act has been repealed and replaced by the Parole Act which created the Parole Board, so this question is no longer applicable.

81. There should be a definite rule that a prisoner who has already violated the conditions of a previous ticket of leave should not be permitted further benefits from the Act.

A. Previous Ticket of Leave, or parole, does not bar a man from being considered for parole again. The Parole Board believes a person should be judged according to his present and future intentions, rather than according to some arbitrary rule as to his past actions. In 1961, less than 7%, and in 1962 approximately 8% of paroles were granted to inmates who had previously been paroled.

82. When provision is made for a more efficient system of adult probation in Ontario and the administration of the Ticket of Leave Act as herein recommended, the provisions of the Reformatories Act providing for indeterminate sentences and parole in Ontario should be repealed.

A. The provision of the Prisons and Reformatories Act providing for indeterminate sentences and parole in Ontario have not been repealed.

83. The rules governing remission of sentence for good conduct should be simplified in accordance with the recommendations contained in chapter XVIII of this report.

A. The rules in question have been simplified by the Penitentiary Act, 1961, whereby an inmate is credited with good conduct remission amounting to one-quarter of his sentence when he arrives at the institution and is entitled to earn additional remission of three days a month through application and industry.

84. The efforts of the prisoners' aid societies should be co-ordinated in accordance with the principles applied in England and Wales under the authority of the Prison Commission and with a measure of financial assistance from the state.

A. For some years past discussions have been carried on with private after-care agencies by way of implementing this recommendation and, since 1949, Parliament has annually voted moneys to be paid these agencies by way of grants in aid.

85. A definite effort should be made to enlist the co-operation of the public in assisting discharged prisoners to find employment and become re-established.

A. This recommendation has been implemented increasingly in recent years through the public information program of the Department of Justice.

86. Associations similar to the Borstal Association in England should be organized to assist in the rehabilitation of youthful offenders.

A. This recommendation has not been implemented.

87. Certain experiments should be undertaken in selected Canadian institutions, patterned after the English system of voluntary visitors and under strict supervision.

A. This recommendation has been implemented in the federal penitentiary system through invitations to knowledgeable members of the public to take part in the institutional program on a voluntary basis.

88. The Prison Commission should effect the necessary changes to make the discipline and routine in Canadian penitentiaries conform to the recommendations contained in this report, and should take steps to put into effect as soon as possible the detailed recommendations contained in Part III of this report to correct the conditions in the respective penitentiaries.

A. This recommendation has been implemented by the new Penitentiary Act, the regulations of the Governor in Council made thereunder and Commissioner's directives.

Inquiry No. 2 by the Honourable Senator Croll:

What specific action, if any, has been taken in implementation of the following recommendations contained in the Report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the principles and procedures in the Remission Service of the Department of Justice of Canada (Fauteux Report) presented on April 30, 1956, namely:

(Recommendations and answers follow)

1. A serious effort should be made by all governments concerned, whether federal, provincial or municipal, to acquaint the public with the purpose of a sound system of corrections and the benefits to be derived from it.

A. The Department of Justice, in recent years, has increasingly attempted to implement this recommendation by means of a public information program.

2. Some means should be found whereby the courts, at all levels, may be made more conscious that the true purpose of punishment is the correction of the offender and not mere retribution by society.

A. The Department of Justice has attempted to implement this recommendation by supporting conferences of magistrates and judges on the question of sentencing practices.

3. Each of the provinces should establish full-scale systems of adult probation.

A. This recommendation is directed toward the provincial governments.

4. The Parliament of Canada should give serious consideration to

(a) the abolition of a number of the restrictions on the power of courts to suspend the passing of sentence; and (b) the enactment of legislation to authorize probation without conviction.

A. With respect to paragraph (a), there have been no amendments to the provisions of the Criminal Code in relation to the power of courts to suspend the passing of sentence since the new Criminal Code came into force in 1955. The recommendation contained in paragraph (b) has not been raised in Parliament since the Fauteux Report was presented.

5. The provisions of the criminal law that authorize imprisonment in default of payment of fines by persons who are unable to pay them should be repealed.

A. This recommendation was implemented in part by amendments to the Criminal Code in 1959.

6. No distinction should be made in the law, as far as time for payment of fines is concerned, between indictable offences and summary conviction offences.

A. Since 1959 the court has been authorized to allow time for the payment of fines in relation to both indictable offences and summary conviction offences.

7. In passing sentences the courts should rely, to a much greater extent than they now do, upon pre-sentence reports.

A. This recommendation is directed to the courts. However, it is known that the practice of the courts in using pre-sentence reports is growing.

8. Appropriate arrangements should be made for visits by judges and magistrates to the penal institutions to which they sentence offenders who appear before them.

A. The Department of Justice has an appropriation for the travelling expenses of federally appointed judges for the purpose of visiting institutions to which they sentence offenders.

9. The respective Attorneys-General of the provinces should co-operate with each other to the full in implementing the provisions of section 421 (3) of the Criminal Code, whereby an inmate who is in custody under sentence in one province may plead guilty, in that province, to charges that are outstanding against him in another province.

A. This recommendation is directed to the Attorneys-General of the provinces.

10. The law should be amended to provide that a person who is convicted of an offence has, at that time, the right to have taken into consideration, for the purpose of sentence, all outstanding charges against him to which he is prepared to plead guilty. The practice of holding warrants until an inmate has been discharged from a penal institution should, as far as possible, be avoided.

A. The law now permits a convicted person to plead guilty to any outstanding charge against him except where the charge is one where trial by jury is mandatory. No legislation has been enacted in relation to the practice of holding warrants until an inmate has been discharged from a penal institution.

11. Appropriate arrangements should be made between the Attorneys-General of the respective provinces for the uniform enforcement, in all provinces, of the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to habitual criminals and criminal sexual psychopaths.

A. This recommendation is directed to the Attorneys General of the provinces.

12. The provisions of the Prisons and Reformatories Act that authorize the imposition of determinate plus indeterminate sentences should be repealed and the parole boards of Ontario and British Columbia should be abolished.

A. This recommendation is still under consideration. The question cannot easily be resolved until the various matters discussed at the Dominion-Provincial Conference on corrections in 1958 have been finally decided upon and implemented.

13. In any case where a convicted person is between the ages of 16 and 21 or where a maximum term of imprisonment of two years or more may be imposed, no offender should be sentenced to any term of imprisonment without consideration, by the court, of a pre-sentence report.

A. This recommendation has not been implemented by legislation except in regard to imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine.

14. No sentence involving corporal punishment should be imposed upon any offender without prior consideration of a pre-sentence report concerning the physical and mental condition of the offender.

A. This recommendation has not been implemented by legislation.

15. No sentence of corporal punishment should be executed until full inquiry has been made by the Remission Service and the responsible authority has ordered that there will be no interference with it.

A. A person under a sentence of corporal punishment may apply to the Parole Board for revocation or suspension of the sentence. Upon the receipt of such an application the sentence of corporal punishment is suspended until an investigation has been completed and the Parole Board decides whether the application should be granted or refused.

16. Appropriate legislative amendments should be made immediately to provide that no person under the age of sixteen years shall be committed to penal institutions where adult prisoners are confined.

A. Section 21 of the new Penitentiary Act provides that where facilities exist for the separate confinement of young offenders within a region of Canada no person who, having been sentenced or committed to penitentiary, is under the age of sixteen years shall, within that region, be confined in association with persons who are twenty-one years of age or more unless the Commissioner otherwise directs in writing. The section also authorizes the transfer, between federal and provincial institutions, respectively, of inmates who are under sixteen years of age so that association by them with inmates of twenty-one years of age or more will be avoided.

17. Consideration should be given to the establishment of a procedure for the granting of pardons, with or without condition, on a much more liberal scale than is now the case. In the granting of pardons, resort should be had to the Criminal Code provisions that authorize the Governor General in Council to grant them rather than to grant them under the royal prerogative of mercy.

A. This recommendation is still under consideration.

18. Some means should be devised by which unjustified inequalities in the length of sentences of imprisonment, especially in the cases of co-offenders, can be remedied.

A. This recommendation has not been the subject matter of legislative proposals but it has been the subject of study, in recent years, at a number of conferences of judges and magistrates on the question of sentencing practices.

19. In all cases where the innocence of a convicted person is established, a free pardon should be granted, whether or not a free pardon is sought.

A. This recommendation has been implemented in full. A free pardon is invariably granted where the innocence of a convicted person is established.

20. The federal and the provincial governments should give serious consideration, in expanding their systems of penal institutions, to the establishment, on a medium security basis, of such additional institutions as may be required.

A. In so far as the federal government is concerned, the Penitentiary Service has, since 1952, converted two institutions from maximum to medium security and has constructed two new medium security institutions and fourteen minimum security institutions. Two additional medium security institutions have been under construction since the fall of 1963 and construction of three more medium security institutions will commence in 1964.

21. In the Women's Prison at Kingston, Ontario, a more intensified system of varied forms of treatment should be instituted.

A. A greatly intensified system of varied forms of treatment has been in effect in the Women's Prison at Kingston, Ontario, since 1961.

22. The federal and provincial governments should proceed, as quickly as possible, with the establishment and maintenance of more specialized types of institutions for the treatment of various types of offenders.

A. The Penitentiary Service is proceeding to implement this recommendation, initially by the construction of a narcotic addict treatment institution at Matsqui, B.C., which is now under construction. Other specialized types of institutions will be developed when the current overcrowding problem in federal penitentiaries is relieved by the construction program that is now under way.

23. In relation to the operation of all penal institutions in Canada, more reception centres should be established to which inmates may be initially committed for classification and ultimate committal to the particular institution that provides the most useful form of treatment in their particular cases.

A. The present construction program of the Penitentiary Service calls for the implementation in full of this recommendation.

24. Classification staffs should be provided for all penal institutions in Canada and, where they already exist, they should be increased to an appropriate size.

A. Classification staffs in federal penitentiaries have been greatly increased in size since 1946 so that they now conform with the detailed recommendations of the Fauteux Report in this connection.

25. No penal institution in Canada, of whatever type, should contain more than 600 inmates.

A. The policy of the Penitentiary Service is to limit the accommodation of new institutions to 450 inmates.

26. Special types of institutions, with specialized treatment, should be provided for alcoholics, drug addicts, sex offenders and psychopaths.

A. In addition to the narcotic addict treatment institution, now under construction at Matsqui, B.C., the Penitentiary Service is proceeding with the construction of special detention units for difficult inmates in each region of Canada.

27. The present arrangements between the Government of Canada and the provincial governments should be reviewed in order to enable speedy transfer of insane prisoners from federal penitentiaries to provincial institutions that have suitable facilities for their care and treatment.

A. This recommendation has been fully implemented.

28. Every penal institution in Canada should institute an appropriate pre-release program for the benefit of inmates.

A. Pre-release programs for inmates have been instituted where facilities are available and overcrowding does not prevent such programs from being carried on. Present Penitentiary Service plans envisage suitable pre-release programs for all types of inmates.

29. The responsible authorities should examine the entire legislative framework of the Canadian correctional system for the purpose of providing a well co-ordinated statutory basis for the Canadian system of corrections.

A. Implemented in part by the Dominion-Provincial Conference on corrections in 1958 and the appointment in 1959 of the Correctional Planning Committee of the Department of Justice.

30. Until recommendation 31 can be implemented, any person who is sentenced to imprisonment for a total term of two years or more, by whatever combination of sentences this total is arrived at, should be confined in a penitentiary and not in a provincial institution.

A. Not implemented.

31. The provincial governments should be responsible for the care and treatment in penal institutions of persons sentenced to imprisonment for maximum terms of six months or less, and persons sentenced to imprisonment for periods longer than six months should be confined in penal institutions operated by the federal government.

A. Implemented in part by agreement in principle at the Dominion-Provincial Conference on corrections in 1958 to the effect that the Dominion should proceed to plan for a revised penal system of such character that it would be in a position to assume responsibility for persons sentenced under federal laws to terms of one year or more. Such plans to be formulated on the basis that the Dominion Government will have decided that sentences under federal laws of more than six months but less than one year should be eliminated.

32. If it is not possible to implement these recommendations, or most of them, within the next two or three years, amendments should be made immediately to the Ticket of Leave Act as suggested in Chapter VII of this Report.

A. The Ticket of Leave Act has been repealed. The system of granting statutory remission, as recommended in Chapter VII of this Report, has largely been implemented.

33. The Ticket of Leave Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and certain portions of the Penitentiary Act should be repealed and be replaced by one statute that deals in a comprehensive manner with all the matters now dealt with in those Acts and incorporates the recommendations in this Report.

A. The Ticket of Leave Act has been replaced by the Parole Act. Any changes in the Prisons and Reformatories Act are awaiting the outcome of the conference between the federal and provincial authorities of 1958.

34. The duty and responsibility of arranging for the transfers of inmates from penal institutions to hospitals for the purpose of medical attention should be removed from the Remission Service and left to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries in the case of federal penal institutions and to the responsible deputy head in the case of provincial institutions.

A. Section 26 of the new Penitentiary Act gives the necessary authority to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries in the case of federal penal institutions; the matter is still under advisement with respect to provincial institutions.

35. As soon as possible, a system of automatic parole review should be instituted for Canada, thereby dispensing with the present system which requires an application for parole.

A. The Parole Board is required to automatically review sentences of two years and over, whether or not an application has been received by or on behalf of the inmate. In practice, the Board expects the inmate to either apply for parole or at least indicate he is interested in the grant of parole, as some inmates are not interested in applying for parole.

36. The practice of seeking the views of the trial judge or magistrate, in the case of parole, should be abandoned, except in special cases.

A. The practice of seeking the views of the trial Judge or Magistrate when granting parole was abondoned in 1959. However, the trial Judge or Magistrate is invited to submit a report to the Board, if he cares to do so, as to his impressions of the accused, the existence of extraordinary circumstances and any special purpose he had in mind when giving the sentence. Special reports are requested in special cases.

37. Provision should be made for the official termination, at an appropriate time, of long-term paroles and those in special cases where the adjustment of the former inmate is obviously excellent and it is unlikely that he will resort again to crime.

A. Periodic revision of the terms and conditions of a parole is made in long-term paroles, for the purpose of modifying, reducing or removing them altogether in appropriate cases. There is no provision for officially terminating a parole, but this matter is being considered.

38. Some means should be found to provide specialized after-care for particular types of parolees, such as sex-offenders, drug addicts, alcoholics and psychopaths.

A. Specialized after-care for particular types of parolees such as sex offenders, drug addicts, alcoholics and psychopaths is provided whenever necessary and possible. Facilities for such treatment are limited, and such parolees are spread all over the country.

39. The federal and provincial governments should increase their financial grants to voluntary after-care agencies in order to enable them to work more effectively in the correctional field.

A. The federal government has increased substantially its annual financial grants to voluntary after-care agencies so that, as of 1964, the amount to be distributed will be approximately $200,000.

40. Voluntary after-care agencies should be subject to minimum standards and to evaluation and some workable system of agency certification should be established.

A. This recommendation cannot be implemented until agreement is reached between the Department of Justice, on the one hand, and the after-care agencies, on the other, concerning the precise nature of the future role of the agencies in the field of federal corrections.

41. The annual conference of after-care agencies and government services should be continued in the future.

A. Such a conference was held in 1963 and another will be held late in 1964 or early 1965.

42. A national parole board should be established as recommended in Chapter XI of the Report.

A. The national Parole Board was established in 1959.

43. The administration of federal correctional services should be organized as suggested in Chapter XII of the Report.

A. This recommendation has not been implemented.

44. The Department of Justice should organize and sponsor a national conference of representatives of Canadian universities to formulate university programs for the training of workers in the correctional field.

A. This recommendation has not been implemented.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 30, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Thomas Vien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa

30 June 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Ronald Martland, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th June, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier

Assistant Secretary

to the Governor General.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-101, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Bill read first time.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move second reading of this bill now.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Do we have copies of it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. It is a House of Commons bill.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not appear to have a copy.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think it is in the honourable senator's desk.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): The bill was distributed, I think, two or three weeks ago. I know I have had a copy since that time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I apologize. I thought a copy of this bill would be in each honourable senator's file of House of Commons bills, but apparently it is not. Perhaps it would be more convenient if we stood this matter until later this day. We can get copies of the bill and have them distributed. We could proceed now with the other items on the Order Paper.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Order for second reading stands until later this day.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, chapter 120, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

Copy of Agreement between the Parties to the North Atlantic Treaty for co-operation regarding Atomic information. (English and French texts).

Report of the Dominion Coal Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 15 of the Dominion Coal Board Act, chapter 86, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

Report of the Atlantic Development Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 19 of the Atlantic Development Board Act, chapter 10, Statutes of Canada, 1962-63. (English text).

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING

Hon. A. L. Beaubien, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, presented the committee's second report as follows:

Your committee recommend that the time limited for filing petitions for private bills which expired on Friday, May 15, 1964, be further extended to Friday, July 10, 1964.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

PETITION

REPORT OF COMMITTEE—PROPOSED INCORPORATION OF MEOTA PIPE LINES LIMITED

Hon. A. L. Beaubien, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, presented the committee's third report, as follows:

1. With respect to the petition of Stan Reesot Kaufman, Eric Sherwood, Isaac Sheldon Comfort and others of the City of Edmonton, in the province of Alberta; praying to be incorporated under the name of "Meota Pipe Lines Limited".

2. In the opinion of your committee the requirements of the 107th Rule are being satisfactorily complied with in all material respects.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports 371 to 411, inclusive, and moved, with leave, that the said reports be taken into consideration now.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, this makes no sense. Only the other day I had occasion to speak on similar matters. Do you realize what this means? We have a judge who is not a judge. We are the judges. The Goddess of Justice, Themis, is represented as blindfolded, because she holds scales in her hands, and she is not supposed to see the scales. We are not blindfolded, but we are the judges and we know nothing of the cases that come before us.

This is not the first time I have warned the Chairman of the Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), for whom I have a personal liking and a soft spot in my heart. However, he should not proceed in this way, because it is a discredit to the Senate. We have a man appointed as Commissioner—he was the man Friday of the Divorce Committee. What is he? I don't know. I give him the benefit of the doubt. I know from some members of the Divorce Committee that they were entirely dissatisfied with the manner in which he rendered judgment in some cases, especially when the parties admitted that they committed adultery and there was no evidence to that effect.

There are twenty-five members of the Divorce Committee, and how many take the trouble to read the evidence? If they do read it, it is the same as if they read the newspaper. They do not see the witnesses. They do not know what the evidence is. Then we have the reports, that mass of paper on the Clerk's table.

What do you know about it, Mr. Speaker? What do any one of my colleagues know about it? You know nothing about it, and if I asked the Chairman of the Divorce Committee a question about any particular case, he would be unable to answer. And here he is asking us to consider these reports now. I do not even know the names of the witnesses, and neither do you. We know nothing. It goes on like that. It is the most absurd situation I have seen.

Moreover, honourable colleagues, the Divorce Commissioner, who is now a judge—a judge nominally, not in fact—has not the power of the humblest of the justices of the peace, whom the Chairman of the Divorce Committee could dismiss or fire by a stroke of the pen when he was Attorney General of the great Province of Ontario.

This Commissioner has not the power of a justice of the peace, but he makes reports, and the reports come here to be judged. Not one of us knows anything about it, and the Chairman of the Divorce Committee dares to ask us to pass it in that manner. I find it revolting. I use a strong word, but it is time to use it and to stop that practice.

I shall have something more to say when the bill for the repeal of chapter 10 of the statutes of the last session comes up. But this is revolting. It is a shame for the Senate, to think that one of our colleagues is making fools of all of us. I protest energetically, and I have given the reasons why.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The question is on the motion of the honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by the honourable Senator Croll, that the reports of the Committee on Divorce be now concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If we have not the unanimous consent of the house, consideration will be at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am adamant.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, there are two things in my friend's harangue that I must answer. One is the imputation that one of the members of the committee expressed dissatisfaction with regard to the Commissioner of the Senate. If such were the case, I think it would have been a fairer thing to allow that person to make his own protest rather than having it made second hand. On the other hand, I think I can speak for every member of the Senate Divorce Committee in expressing satisfaction with the work being done by the Senate Commissioner.

Only this morning one of the members of the committee told me he had attended a divorce case hearing and was greatly impressed with the judicial manner, fairness and capability of the Commissioner. It is unfair to throw slurs on anyone who is not able to be here to defend himself, and particularly at the Commissioner who is doing his work industriously, carefully and capably, in the highest traditions of the legal profession.

The second thing I think I have to answer, and it is all I will answer, is the assertion that I cannot answer a question with regard to the divorce resolutions that I will present. That is entirely untrue.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Don't dare say that! Don't dare!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My friend has never asked me a question that I have not answered; and if there are any questions that he wishes to ask me now, I do not know that I can answer them off hand but I will answer them very shortly afterwards. That is all I have to say with regard to that.

On another occasion when I tried to give the best service possible, my friend objected. I said he had a perfect right to object if he cared to do so, and I was not angry at all with him for doing so, and I am not now. He is exercising a right which the rules give him, that of blocking the progress of the committee. That is his responsibility, not mine.

I know there happens to be in that list of cases one petitioner, a woman, who has been waiting a long, long time for her divorce—I was told four years, but that seems too long. Anyway, it is a matter of years. Her remarriage has been arranged for the middle of August. If her resolution were passed today that marriage could take place. She is marrying, I hope, a very much better man than she is losing. However, my friend has the perfect right to stop the marriage if he cares to do so, and in that case I can do nothing. I have done what I could to be kind and do service to these people. They are poor people, in trouble, as a rule; but, as I said, it is his right and I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, if I am permitted, the honourable gentleman said at page 491 of Senate Hansard of April 11, 1962 that the committee could handle 6,000 divorces a year. I suggest that he follow the example of that French poet, a member of the French Academy, who, with the aid of an I.B.M. machine, could compose a million poems in a very short time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will the honourable senator allow the adoption of the reports on division?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Consideration next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is quite all right if the honourable senator agrees to allow them to pass on division.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I don't agree, Senator Horner.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I was going to plead with you.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: There is no use pleading.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You are a kindly man. I admit, of course, I object so strongly to this new setup that I refuse to attend. But at the same time you are certainly not bringing any credit to the Senate. According to the rules, you are perfectly right in objecting, and I do not argue against that. But I would ask you to consider the position in which you are leaving so many people who are now living estranged, when the situation could be made regular. I plead with you to allow these reports to pass today. You have made your point very emphatically, but I think you should allow the reports to pass.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Does my honourable friend want an answer?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I have allowed this discussion to take place because it is illuminating and it has permitted honourable senators to express their views; but it is out of order now to discuss at this juncture the propriety of the procedure adopted with respect to divorce bills. This is a matter of law. A law has been passed at a previous session of Parliament; a critical debate on the merits or demerits of that law is out of order today.

The question before this house concerns only our concurrence in the report of the committee, which report had been adopted by the committee in accordance with the provisions of the law as it now stands. We are not called upon to discuss the merits or demerits of the law, but the question is whether or not the report of the committee should now be considered and concurred in. Under our rules this requires unanimous consent; such consent not being given, concurrence must stand until our next sitting.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It has been moved by honourable Senator Smith (Kamloops), seconded by honourable Senator Baird, that Bill C-101, an act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, be now read a second time. Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion? Honourable Senator Smith (Kamloops).

Hon. Sydney J. Smith: Honourable senators, Bill C-101 is similar to many other bills with which honourable senators are quite familiar in that it is not new legislation. The original Export Credits Insurance Act was passed in 1944 to provide facilities required at that time. The service provided under this act falls into two distinct classifications, namely, export credits insurance, and long-term export financing.

Referring particularly to the insurance service, the corporation issues policies of insurance for its own account, with total liabilities not to exceed $200 million, and no change is proposed in this regard in the new bill. The corporation also issues policies for the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This is done under section 21 of the act by authority of orders in council.

The corporation has insured more than $800 million of export sales and more than $500 million for account of the Government since starting to issue policies of insurance in 1945. It has facilitated export sales of more than $1.3 billion. This insurance coverage has been provided to hundreds of Canadian exporters from every province, and has covered sales to practically every country in the world. It is safe to say that much of this export business would not have been negotiated had the insurance service under the Export Credits Insurance Act not been available.

I should say that the corporation confines its insurance facilities only to the type of protection not provided by private commercial concerns, and it is important to note that it does not subsidize the exporter since he pays a proper premium for the insurance protection. This means that he has to compete in the markets of the world solely on a basis of price, quality and service. The act is operated on a nonprofit basis, but nevertheless the corporation has accumulated a modest surplus over the 18 years of its existence.

The corporation has paid off about $11 million in claims, but it has been successful in recovering about $9½ million. Losses written off amount to about $500,000. The figures I have given in relation to claims and loss apply entirely to insurance coverage related to export business. There has never been a single claim under section 21 transactions, which are those providing insurance for account of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Honourable senators will be interested to know that at a recent meeting of the board of directors of the corporation, taking into account the present position of the corporation's reserves, the proposed amendment under consideration in the present bill to exempt the corporation from income tax, and in conformity with the corporation's continuing policy of reducing premium rates wherever possible, it was decided to accord premium reductions on a selected basis applicable to about three-quarters of the countries of the world. This will have the effect of reducing the exporter's costs and thus helping him to meet the ever-increasing competition in foreign markets.

Both export credits insurance and long-term export financing are made available by the Government through this act to assist Canadian firms in their efforts to procure a fair share of the export business from countries throughout the world. About 550 Canadian companies have received orders to supply equipment and services as a result of contracts signed under section 21A of the act.

I hope all honourable senators now have a copy of the bill. I received one through the post office about two weeks ago, and I took it for granted that there had been a general distribution made at that time.

If honourable senators refer to the bill they will see that under clause 1 it is proposed that the Export Credits Insurance Corporation be no longer liable to income tax. Heretofore the corporation was specified in Schedule D of the Financial Administration Act, and section 84 of the Income Tax Act makes Part I of that act applicable to a corporation specified in Schedule D.

By clause 2 of the bill section 11A of the act is repealed as a consequence of the amendment in clause 1.

No similar export credits insurer in other countries pays income tax, and I should add that no commercial enterprise in Canada provides comparable services. If this amendment is approved the corporation will pay to the Receiver General the sum of $10 million in cash. This amount corresponds to the paid-up capital and surplus of the corporation, and will be credited to a special non-interest bearing account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund in the name of the corporation.

By clause 3, it will be noted, section 13 of the act is repealed and replaced by a new section 13. This proposed amendment would permit the corporation to insure an exporter against the risk of losing the ownership or control of equipment employed, or to be employed, by him in rendering technical services outside Canada. This insurance is not presently available from commercial sources.

This amendment also gives the corporation authority to re-insure risks with export credits insurers in other countries, and to accept re-insurance from them. This would provide the corporation with authority to take on additional insurable business of Canadian exporters. At the present time the Corporation can insure a Canadian exporter against nonpayment by a foreign buyer of exports from Canada. The proposed amendment will permit the corporation to enter into a contract of insurance with an export credits organization in another country.

This brings me to the major amendment contained in this bill, which proposes to increase the amount of liability under contracts of insurance entered into under section 21 of the act from $400 million to $600 million. Under this section the total current liability of the corporation as at April 30 of this year, under all policies, amounts to $235 million. Additional commitments have been made under authority of orders in council totaling $236 million. These commitments cover future shipments for which insurance has not yet been issued, and repayments under policies currently outstanding. It is considered by the corporation that they would not be called upon to exceed the present limitation of $400 million on any policies to be issued in the near future to cover current commitments. However, the increasing amount of export trade being insured makes it important that authority to insure additional business should be available.

Section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act allows the corporation to provide financing to Canadian exporters for heavy capital equipment requiring terms of payment extending beyond five years. This bill proposes to increase the amount of this long-term financing from $300 million to $400 million.

On April 30 last the corporation had entered into financial agreements under long-term export financing contracts totaling $184 million. Additional financing and guarantees have been authorized by orders in council totaling $33 million. Applications on hand total another $80 million. So, the financial agreements already signed, guarantees outstanding and agreements not completed total $297 million. It is, therefore, obvious that in order to continue this important facility it is necessary to increase the present ceiling.

I do not think I could emphasize the importance and urgency of passing these amendments as expeditiously as possible more than by reading two or three lines from a letter I received today from a firm presently negotiating a $2 million export deal. They are as follows:

> We could supply—
>
> And they mention their product.
>
> —a specific demand for approximately $2 million. This would produce 235,000 man hours of Canadian labour of various classes, semi-skilled, skilled and professional. The benefits would be spread from one side of Canada to the other since the content would be 100 per cent Canadian from the ore to the fabricated product.

Honourable senators, I suppose this is only one of probably hundreds of deals that are in the process of negotiation and which are dependent upon the facilities that will be provided by these amendments we have before us. I think I have outlined sufficiently the needs and the urgency, and thus have brought to the attention of all honourable senators the importance of the early passage of this bill.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I think I can speak for my colleagues on this side of the house and say that we are anxious to have this bill passed.

I introduced the last amendments to this act in this house. Those previous amendments were passed for the same reason that these amendments are being proposed today. At that time our export trade was increasing, and the limits that Parliament had imposed on the authority of the corporation, under either section 21 or section 21A, were becoming exhausted, and it was necessary that those limits be raised in order that the corporation could perform the function for which it was designed.

I welcome these amendments as being evidence of the increasing activity of Canadians in the export market, and of the fact that the corporation is performing the very function for which it was designed.

I am happy also to know that this particular Crown company is to be exempted from income tax. My honourable friend Senator Smith referred to the fact that from its inception up to December 31, 1963 the corporation had earned, on a very substantial volume of business, only some $3¼ million. The exact figure is $3,254,821. He went on to intimate that the purpose of the corporation was to provide these services effectively at cost, but, in fact, during that same period, of course, the corporation has paid some $2,861,000 in income tax, and has transferred $5 million to underwriting reserve. This means that the gross figure that exporters have paid is something over $11 million.

I do not think the exporters are seriously complaining of that, but as my honourable friend has said, the board of directors have now decided to reduce premiums in certain areas because, having paid back their paid-up capital and surplus to the Receiver General, they are going to be exempt from income tax and, therefore, there is no necessity for their making underwriting reserves other than those that would be made in the normal course of business. There would be no tax incentive to make them. In view of that fact I am glad to hear that the premiums are going to be reduced.

I would like to investigate one aspect of this matter. If it were not for the fact that I am very anxious to see this bill passed so that the forward transactions that Senator Smith (Kamloops) referred to will not be held up, I would ask that the bill go before the committee. I am not going to ask that, but I would urge upon the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) that in addition to reducing premiums in areas where the corporation feels it may properly reduce them, the corporation should give consideration to extending the terms of credit, or to granting credit in areas where it does not now grant it. It should grant credit for longer terms in certain areas than it now grants it.

I know that we are a party to the Berne Convention. We are a party to many international conventions, and by and large we try to live up to them, but I think the time has come—and I say this very seriously—when we should take a second look at the Berne Convention and decide whether our co-signatories are living up to it, or whether their exporters are obtaining advantages by way of credit that our exporters are deprived of.

As I say, if this bill were going to a committee that is a question I would like to pursue at some length. But, I hope the bill will not go to a committee. I hope it will be passed today. I merely raise that point with the honourable Leader of the Government because I know he will refer it to the appropriate people.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am most interested in what Senator McCutcheon said about the Berne Convention and the question as to whether Canada is one of the few countries adhering strictly to its terms.

Certainly, this should be investigated and I will bring it to the attention of the minister and of the people responsible for the operation of the Export Credits Insurance Act.

I am gratified also at the attitude taken by Senator McCutcheon in respect of this particular bill. We in the Senate realize the important work done under the Export Credits Insurance Act. If this country is to prosper, it must have more and more trade. Here is an instrument which could do so much to encourage the feeling of security that exporters need when dealing with buyers in foreign countries. We also feel gratified that the management under this act has been conducted in such a provident way over the years, so brilliantly and with such evident success, as the figures mentioned by Senator Smith (Kamloops) and Senator McCutcheon indicate. This is a self-sustaining program; it is a useful program; it is a program which can encourage exporters to go into the export business with a feeling of security, knowing that they have the resources of this organization behind them in the work they do.

We thank Senator Smith for the very fine explanation which has been given. I thank Senator McCutcheon for his remarks and assure him that I will bring these remarks to the attention of the minister.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that the bill be read a third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 6, 1964

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-105, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1965.

He said: Honourable senators, I think the only outstanding piece of business left in connection with this measure is the series of questions which Senator McCutcheon asked last evening. In reply, I should first refer to a report made on April 30, and adopted by the Senate on that day. It is a report from the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit and is to be found on page 351 of Senate Hansard, as follows:

> Your committee recommend
>
> 1. That their quorum be reduced to seven members, provided that both houses are represented.
>
> 2. That they be empowered to engage the services of counsel, an accountant and such technical and clerical personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry.

That report was adopted at that time. I understand it was adopted in the other place on the same day. Pursuant to that report, I am informed that the Steering Committee of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit met on Tuesday, May 26 at 2 p.m. and that there were present the joint chairmen and in addition Messrs. Chrétien, Grégoire and Mandziuk. I have here a report of that meeting, in which it was resolved as follows:

> That the services of Mr. J. J. Urie, Q.C. of Ottawa, Ontario, be retained as counsel to the committee.
>
> That Mr. Urie be paid $250 for each day in which he devotes seven hours or more to the work of the committee and $25 per hour for the preparation of work.
>
> That the services of Mr. Jacques L'Heureux, C.A., of Ottawa, Ontario, be retained as an accountant to the committee.
>
> That Mr. L'Heureux be paid $100 for each day in which he devotes seven hours or more to the work of the committee and $20 per hour for preparation of the work.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I have a word to say in respect to this matter. It would appear that my friend Senator Choquette, when speaking to Appropriation Bill No. 6, was disturbed when he found that the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit had engaged the services of a solicitor at the rate of $250 for a seven-hour day and $25 an hour for preparation; and also the services of an accountant at $100 per day and $20 an hour for preparation. He used rather strong language. That is what brings me to my feet. He said he thought it was a scandal.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I said that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: He said that—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: No. I did not say that. The reporter said that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: That is the report—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It should be attributed to my friend. I forgot it, or I would have added it.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am delighted to know it was Senator McCutcheon who said that, as I have something to say about him also. In any event, that statement troubles me. I should like to take a few minutes, as we have time today, to bring Senator Choquette back from 1930 to 1960 and particularly to 1964.

I do not know whether this house knows it, but in Toronto, when taxing costs between party and party—which is less than between solicitor and client—junior counsel will receive $250 a day and senior counsel a minimum of $500, and that the maximum goes up to $750 and perhaps beyond; that accountants receive at least twice what we are paying Mr. L'Heureux; that in the Supreme Court of Canada here in Ottawa—and this Senator Choquette should have known—the minimum that junior counsel will receive is $250 a day and senior counsel at least $500 a day and beyond—and none of them are overpaid.

Senator McCutcheon, surprisingly, was also disturbed and he is alleged to have referred to this as a scandal. I suppose the last time Senator McCutcheon paid a lawyer $250 a day was at the turn of the century, and at the same time he fired him for having so little appreciation of his own ability. He knows full well, if anyone knows, that you do not hire lawyers who are in the big league, or accountants who are in that league, for anything like such a sum.

Honourable senators, I am going to set the record straight. It is well to know that not only on this committee of consumer credit, but on all committees, members are heavily engaged in work. They do not have time to prepare for the involved and the intricate problems in most committees. This is particularly applicable to consumer credit, which is most involved, and the work we are doing there is of a pioneering nature.

Of course there are many excellent lawyers on the committee, but they sit there as parliamentarians to use their legal training and knowledge as lawyers. They are not there to practice law. I hope I have said that loudly enough.

Briefs are submitted before the Consumer Credit Committee by informed and skilled lawyers, accountants, economists and men of high managerial skill. In order to obtain information and to understand their testimony, preparations need to be made with men of the highest skill. This can be done only by obtaining able lawyers and accountants, and, in addition, interested members of the committee who will devote some extraordinary time to the problems before them.

I think it is well known—if Ottawa is too far from Toronto, and Senator Choquette does not know it, Senator McCutcheon does know it—that the Province of Ontario established a committee on consumer credit, hired eminent counsel and obtained the services of an accountant, and paid far more than we are paying for the same services.

I believe most members here know that the Province of Nova Scotia established a committee and employed legal counsel. I do not know what he is being paid.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: He is smiling!

Hon. Mr. Croll: I assume he would not work for anything like $250 a day, away from his office, where the overhead would be at least 50 per cent of that amount.

There are before the Committee on Consumer Credit, and those of us in the Senate who have knowledge of the committee know this, important constitutional and other questions to be dealt with. The constitutional field is an involved one, and we had to obtain the services of a counsel who understands the problem. A skilled accountant was also required in order to advise the committee on matters pertaining to interest charges, costs of loans and credit, and to assist counsel and the committee members to understand more easily what a witness has to say. The witnesses appearing before that committee are highly-skilled persons.

I think it is clearly understood, but if it is not, I will make it clear now, that counsel and the accountant are paid on a per diem basis. They are paid for only the days the committee sits, which is once each week.

I said earlier that if anyone wanted to take the trouble, he could find what had been paid on previous occasions. The services of experienced counsel cannot be obtained for fees lower than those paid by the Department of Justice. If you take the trouble to find out what it has been paying for similar counsel, you will discover that we have been underpaying.

What amuses me a little, and I hope it amuses the house too, is that last year when the Senate Committee on Manpower and Employment—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Last year?

Hon. Mr. Croll: 1960, rather. I was a member of the committee. For my purpose, the year makes little difference, except to make my point.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Except that there was no counsel.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, there was no counsel. I did not say there was. However, there were people there called economists, researchers, and whatnot, highly skilled, much underpaid. The people we hired to work for the commitee and make the report cost the Government $69,476.44. My friend never opened his mouth, when he sat on this side and had to deal with it at that time. It was quite all right as long as he was in the seat of the mighty and hired the people. We never said a word. We were delighted with the people we were able to hire at that time.

In 1955 the Special Committee on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs in Canada hired legal counsel and spent a total of $27,865.44. I heard very little said about that in this house. However, when you hire counsel from Ottawa, some other local counsel do not care too much for that.

Honourable senators, I am not going to get involved in this Ottawa situation, except to indicate that counsel and the accountant are working out very well. They were active in preparing questions for people who appeared before us. We had a long session this morning. Some of the members of the Senate were present, when we discussed the bills that were referred to the committee.

This business of consumer credit is a highly involved problem, and we are receiving excellent value from both our legal counsel and our accountant. As far as I can gather, the members of the committee are delighted with the co-operation we are receiving.

Honourable senators, I make that explanation so that those who raised the matter would be fully acquainted with the facts.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I am sure that the members of the bar of the Province of Ontario are highly indebted to Senator Croll for the defence that he has put up on behalf of their fees. As a member of the bar, I am personally indebted to him, although I have not been practising recently.

Senator Croll, however, has not answered the question. I agree that we should not enter into a debate, but I feel that I could not let some of his remarks go by without comment. He has not really answered the questions which I put last night, but he has shown his usual adroitness. In the house yesterday, I described him as a great counsel, which he is. He has that remarkable adroitness that enables him to avoid the issue and go down the other side.

I suggested last night that the problems that come before the Banking and Commerce Committee and before the Finance Committee of this house are quite as difficult and quite as involved legally, financially, and in any other way, as those that are coming before the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit.

All that Senator Croll has convinced me of this afternoon is that the committee is paying either too much or too little for the services of which he spoke.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I should like to make an observation or two in connection with this matter.

I came back from the west last night. While I was out there this particular news item was brought to my attention on a number of occasions in somewhat uncomplimentary terms as far as the Government is concerned.

Senator Croll has said that the $250 fee paid to counsel was a normal one for a junior counsel. That may be. I hire many people every year—economists and specialists of that kind. I met the dean of a certain faculty recently, and he told me that his fee was $500 a day. I told him, "You won't get it from me." At Harvard, they ask for $250 and $300 a day, without batting an eyelid. Some members of Canadian university faculties are aspiring to the same status. Not long ago a certain distinguished professor in a university not far from here, whom I wanted to do some work for me next fall, told me that he had worked in Montreal a few days before and got $600 for the day.

Honourable senators, I cite these extreme examples to show that we have reached the point where this sort of thing is getting out of hand. I think legal counsel and others whom we hire are inflating their fees far too much, and that this is all part of the malaise which seems to be besetting our economy today—that the sky is the limit.

I am not usually pessimistic, I am not usually too conservative, but on this particular isue, not only with respect to counsel in Ottawa, but with respect to professional fees all the way along the line, I think we are getting far out of line, and that it behoves the Government to set an example by trying to set a reasonable standard. I know that if large employers, such as some of our leading businessmen, are accustomed to paying counsel fees of this kind it is pretty hard for governments not to do so. But I know a lot of these people; I know the training they have; I know that in many cases they are not worth that kind of fee; and I know it does not sit very well with the voters of this country.

Let me cite another case in point—and this was one in which there was a good deal of justification. If I have had one letter I have had 20 letters about the doubling of the salary of the President of the C.B.C. from $20,000 to $40,000. I know that particular officer very well. I also know he was offered much more to go with another organization, and that fees like that are quite common in that particular depressed industry. However, I have had people come to me just livid, asking, "What in the world is the matter with the Government when they make a deal of that kind and raise a man's salary from $20,000 to $40,000 at one fell swoop?" I am sure there are special circumstances, and I am not criticizing this particular man in any sense, but this is one more evidence of the kind of free-wheeling and almost irresponsible attitude towards spending which is down-grading our economy today. I think it is high time that both private industry and governments called a halt to this kind of inflated expenditure.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, the last thing on earth that I wish to get involved in is this controversy, but I am bound to say that I was not particularly impressed with the arguments put up by Senator Croll. I should like to ask him a question, and then I may have further comment to make.

Has any estimate been made by the committee of the period of time the committee will require the services of these senior and junior counsel, if there are any, and accountants? In short, has any estimate been made of what the cost of this will be to the committee?

Hon. Mr. Croll: We cannot be too definite about it at the moment, but there are likely to be four, five, six, perhaps ten, twelve, fifteen sittings—or maybe more.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I think that is a rather important question. There is perhaps a tendency to seek outside assistance when a committee, and particularly a joint committee of the Commons and Senate, is set up to make certain inquiries. I feel sure that we can find in that committee, members with the ability to do all the necessary probing.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I recall that not so many years ago we had a committee on the revision of the Criminal Code. I do not think there was a single outside expert—

Hon. Mr. Croll: There was counsel on that committee. I did not mention it to you before, but I remind you now.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Who was the counsel?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I cannot remember who it was, but Senator Hayden pointed that out to me a little while ago.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I know that Senators Hayden, Roebuck and Farris comprised a subcommittee that went over the Criminal Code, with the assistance of our highly esteemed Clerk. Reference was made to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Of course, the chairman of that committee is an eminent lawyer, and we have the advantage of his services.

I would remind the house—if, indeed, there is any possibility of it forgetting—that members of Parliament now are much too highly paid in the opinion of some people; and I do think it should be a very rare occasion indeed when it is necessary for a committee of this house or a joint committee of both houses to go out and pay $250 a day for a legal adviser to straighten out some difficulties that the committee might get into. Their duty is to avoid these difficulties.

I intended to skirt only on the periphery of this controversy, but I just could not sit here without expressing an opinion on that particular point.

It may be that in this business of consumer credit, where there appears to be eternal annoyance, it is necessary to engage high-powered and high-priced counsel to protect the poor members of the committee against the wiles of witnesses who may be appearing before them. But still I am bound to say, honourable senators, that so far as that is concerned I am from Missouri.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Senator Croll, could you tell the Senate the name of the legal firm with which Mr. Urie is connected, and the name of the chartered accountant firm with which Mr. L'Heureux is connected? I know Mr. Urie; the Journal has employed him. He is a competent man and, apparently, an expert on labour law. But who is Mr. L'Heureux, and to what firm of chartered accountants does he belong in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Croll: What is the name of Mr. Urie's firm?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Ewart, Kelley, Burke-Robertson, Urie & Butler.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Mr. L'Heureux is a chartered accountant who has practised here for many years. He did a considerable amount of work with Caisses Populaires in Quebec and Ontario. He belongs to a two- or three-man firm, seems to be most competent, and came to us highly recommended. What else can I say to you? Just as Mr. Urie in his field appears to be most competent, so does Mr. L'Heureux in the accounting field.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stambaugh:

That in the opinion of this House the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Stand until July 20.

Order stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John. J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I propose that the Senate do now adjourn, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 5.35 p.m., just previous to the time set for royal assent.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Ronald Martland, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Acting Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:
Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Ronald Martland, a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to incorporate Evangeline Savings and Mortgage Company.

An Act respecting the Montreal Board of Trade.

An Act respecting the Commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello International Park.

An Act to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie.

An Act respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

An Act respecting The Casualty Company of Canada.

An Act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, July 20, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, July 20, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 15, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-90, to amend the National Defence Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill before the Senate this afternoon is Bill C-90, intituled an act to amend the National Defence Act, which is chapter 184 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. The most important clause in the bill is the first clause. It amends section 19 of the act, by providing for the appointment of a Chief of the Defence Staff, who shall have control and administration of the Canadian Forces.

I would point out to honourable senators, in the first place, that the Chief of the Defence Staff will not have control and administration of the Department of National Defence: he will have control and administration of the Canadian Forces.

It is expected that the appointment of a Chief of the Defence Staff in the sense proposed will provide for an integration of the three defence forces under a single chief of staff. It is also expected that it will allow for a considerable reduction in the number of personnel in the three services. As a matter of fact, it is estimated that some 10,000 members of the services will be dispensed with one way or another in a two-year period.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I ask if that is as a result of the unification of command proposed in this bill?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is as a result of the integration of the forces that will follow the proposed change. It is also expected that the overhead and other prevailing costs which obtain in the Department of National Defence will be reduced by as much as $100 million per annum. It is also expected that the change will allow for the acquisition of more useful, more effective and more modern equipment and weapons. As honourable senators know, at the present time about 14 per cent of Canadian expenditures on defence goes for the acquisition of equipment and weapons. It is thought that a more realistic percentage of the total defence spending for this purpose would be 25 per cent.

It is also hoped, as a result of the change proposed, there will be better control, not only of defence spending but of defence operations. In a negative way, what will happen as a result of the amendment proposed to clause 1 of the bill is that the positions of Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, Chief of the Naval Staff, Chief of the General Staff and Chief of the Air Staff will all be abolished.

Before I proceed further, I should say that the level of government spending on defence for the past two fiscal years has approximated 25 per cent of all government spending. In the fiscal year 1962-63, the total government spending was $6,571,000,000. The defence spending was $1,574,000,000, and the percentage of defence spending to total government spending was 24 per cent.

In the fiscal year 1963-64, the total government spending was $6,881,000,000—these figures are incomplete yet—the total defence spending $1,683,000,000, and the percentage of defence spending to total government spending was 24.4 per cent.

Honourable senators are aware that the department of the armed services is quite different in its organization and function from the usual department of government. Traditionally, there have been two sides to a service department, the service side as such and the civilian. This was borne in upon me personally very clearly during the war years when I had the privilege of serving as assistant to the late and, I may say great, Angus L. Macdonald who in those years was the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services. Each morning I attended either with him or for him a meeting which was also attended by the Chief of the Naval Staff and the Deputy Minister of the department. The Chief of the Naval Staff—first Admiral Nelles and later Admiral Jones—would each morning brief the minister on the work of the force since the last meeting. The briefing was particularly on the operations in those days, when the convoy system was working and when the Canadian navy, especially in the North Atlantic, was doing such an onerous job and, I may say, doing it with outstanding success.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable Leader if that is not the system that is being abolished at this time? For instance, the Chief of the Naval Staff will not consult with the minister under the new system.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There will not be a Chief of the Naval Staff.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There will be no Chief of the Naval Staff to make such a report?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right. Under the proposed amendment the report will be made by the Chief of the Defence Staff.

As I was saying, the Chief of the Naval Staff used to report on the operations on the service side on personnel, equipment and things that affected the force as such. The deputy minister, W. G. Mills, would attend those meetings too, and he would deal with problems affecting the administration of the department—financing, accommodation and all the things peculiar to the civilian side of defence.

What is proposed by this measure is that the Minister and Associate Minister of National Defence, who in a sense have had three such setups—one for the navy, one for the army and one for the air force—should now have one service organization under a single Chief of the Defence Staff. However, there has been one addition, and this has occurred since the end of the late war: I refer to the Chairman of the Defence Research Board. Of course, research was important during the war years, but operations were of primary importance. All honourable senators are aware of the great importance and the expansion of research in the field of defence, particularly since the end of the last war. The Defence Research Board was set up, and it continues to play an important role in the work of planning the defences of this country. Now, under the proposed legislation, the three top departmental officials sitting immediately under the minister and his associate will be the Chief of the Defence Staff on the service side, the Deputy Minister on the civilian side, and the Chairman of the Defence Research Board.

I have had circulated among honourable senators a number of documents. One is a chart taken from the material submitted to the Defence Committee in the other place when this bill was before that committee for consideration. It shows the chain of authority from Parliament, through the cabinet, to the cabinet Committee on External Affairs and Defence, to the Minister of National Defence and his associate. It shows immediately under the minister and associate minister there is the Chairman of the Defence Research Board, the Chief of the Defence Staff, and the deputy minister. I hope it will be of some convenience to honourable senators to have this chart before them.

Honourable senators will also note that to the left of that chart there is a block providing for a Defence Council. At the present time there is in existence a Defence Council consisting of the minister and his associate, the deputy minister and his assistant, the Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, the Chief of the Naval Service, the Chief of the General Staff, the Chief of the Air Staff, and the Chairman of the Defence Research Board—nine persons in all. At the present time this body has a purely administrative function.

It is now proposed that the Defence Council, as reorganized, shall be the policy board of the Department of National Defence. It will consist of the minister and his associate—and if there is a parliamentary secretary he also will sit in on its meetings—the deputy minister, the Chief of the Defence Staff, and his vice-chief, and the Chairman of the Defence Research Board. This means that instead of the nine members of the council, as at present, there will be six principal members. There will be provision for representation at the meetings of the Defence Council, on occasion, from the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Finance.

It is also proposed that the defence staff shall be organized hereafter not on the tri-service basis, as has been the case heretofore, but on a functional basis. The staff under the minister and under the Chief of the Defence Staff shall consist of four chiefs, and their duties and functions shall be allocated upon the basis of the work they do.

I have supplied another chart which I hope will be of assistance to honourable senators in understanding the type of organization proposed. By reference to this chart you will see that the four principal divisions concern, first, operations, secondly, personnel, thirdly, logistics and engineering, and fourthly, the office of the Comptroller General.

That is the general explanation of the scheme of organization proposed to be established in the Department of National Defence, if this bill is passed by Parliament.

Honourable senators, in March of this year a White Paper on Defence was published, tabled and circulated. It has six different sections. The first of these deals with the objectives of Canadian defence policy. These are to support the deterrents to aggression, support Canadian foreign policy in this respect, and to provide protection for the land, air space and the waters of Canada.

Section II contains a history of the defence policy of this country since 1945. Section III sets out some considerations with respect to the future defence policy of this country. Section IV deals with the organization of the forces. Section V deals with the requirements for the next decade as they can be foreseen.

Section VI deals with the very important subsidiary aspects of defence, namely, research and defence industry.

I would like to speak briefly about Section IV of the White Paper on Defence which is concerned with the organization of the forces. As honourable senators know, many of you having served in the forces, the defences of this country have been organized on the tri-service basis. This matter was looked into by the Royal Commission on Government Organization, known as the Glassco Commission. Its report made some very pointed recommendations in respect of the national defence organization of Canada. I quote from page 17 of the White Paper which, in turn, quotes from the Report of the Glassco Commission, to this effect:

> ..."Operationally, the anti-submarine forces of the R.C.A.F. bear a much more distant relationship to the Air Division in Europe or the Air Defence forces in NORAD than to the anti-submarine forces of the R.C.N.; both elements operate in the North Atlantic under the command of SACLANT."
>
> The Royal Commissioners also pointed to the rapid development of defence technology as further diminishing any value or significance of the individual services as independent entities.
>
> "Not only is the relative size of the 'administrative tail' growing steadily in all military forces—"

And examples are given.

> "...Consequently, there is a growing range of activities of common concern to the Services, for which the traditional basis of organization is unsuited. It is increasingly recognized that to maintain three separate organizations for such functions is uneconomic."

I continue reading from further down the page:

> "The traditional pattern also aggravates the rigidities in the defence establishment resulting from collective arrangements. It has meant, for example, that in finding signallers for the Congo at short notice, the Canadian Army could look only to its own resources in the Royal Canadian Corps of Signals having no access to the large reservoir of communications personnel in the other two Services."

The royal commission, by these remarks, indeed pointed to the need for a consideration of the integration of the services, of the amalgamation or the unification of the services, and it certainly pointed to the need for co-ordination of the work of the services—to the need of making one complementary and supplementary to the others.

This too has been reflected in real life in the operational theatres. Honourable senators will remember the importance attached to combined operations in the late war, and the impetus given to this kind of co-operative effort by Lord Mountbatten. Indeed, if honourable senators think of some of the principal engagements in that war, such as Dieppe, the landings in North Africa, in Sicily, the massive landings in Northwest Europe and also in Korea, they will know that it was the co-operative effort by all services which made these landings the successes they were.

The commanders who had responsibility for the major undertakings of the war have pointed in this direction in what they have said and written since those days. General Eisenhower, speaking of this matter, said that "separate ground, sea and air warfare is gone forever." Field Marshal Montgomery spoke of "gripping the forces tightly at the top." General MacArthur said that "success in war depends now upon the complete integration of the services." Sir Arthur Harris said that "there must be only one service."

These are men who have dealt with this problem in the real world because they have had the responsibility not only of conducting military operations on a great scale but also the responsibility of conserving the lives of their own people. This is the way they see the general aspect of defence.

Section III of the White Paper is entitled, "Considerations affecting future policy." Today, honourable senators, it is impossible to think of the future defence policy of this country without thinking of it in terms of what the Western world, and indeed the whole world, has to face. When we consider the size of Canada we realize that we cannot win a global war. There are in existence nuclear weapons of cosmic power. They are capable of being delivered with great accuracy and precision by intercontinental rockets. The powers that unleash these forces know too that they cannot expect to win such a war because the letting loose of such forces would set off countervailing forces of as widespread destructive power. The only ultimate answer to this kind of cataclysmic conflict is deterrents which some have described as a balance of terror—a stalemate in mutual destruction—which, of course, they are. Perhaps that is the first step the nations must take to preserve at least the civilizations they have.

In my opinion the peace-loving peoples everywhere feel that the possession and the manufacture of these weapons must be controlled. It would not be in the interests of greater peace for Egypt, for example, to have weapons of this kind. I mention Egypt only as one example; there are, of course, other nations. The ultimate purpose must be disarmament—disarmament which is controlled, agreed to and policed in such a way that the people of the world can be assured that such weapons could not be used even for blackmail purposes.

In the meantime, countries like Canada, which have no imperial ambitions, in prudence, must attach themselves to alliances like NATO and the United Nations in order to work with like-minded countries towards preserving and keeping the peace. The democratic nations of the Western world have a moral obligation to promote disarmament. Sometimes it is a frustrating experience. The Geneva Conference on Disarmament has been sitting for nearly two years, yet its most notable achievement has been the test-ban treaty. I think it must continue to sit in the hope that some workable disarmament can be brought about. The Romans had a phrase, si vis pacem, para bellum, a rude translation of which is "God is on the side of the big battalions." In other words, it appears that even the most peace-loving of peoples cannot take a chance on being unprepared, or on failing to do everything which can be done to safeguard the bastions of peace which exist in the world and which we want to see maintained.

Honourable senators, the objection has been raised that the establishment of a Chief of the Defence Staff in the sense suggested in this bill would put too much on the shoulders of one man, perhaps even making him a dictator. It has been suggested that this is flying in the face of years of experience in other countries. It has been suggested, for example, by the Esher Report, which was made in 1904 in England, that a committee type of organization at the top for the forces was better. However, the conditions in the England of 1904 were not the conditions in the England of 1939-45 and certainly they are not the conditions in Canada in 1964. There are great difficulties mitigating against the possibility of great powers like Britain, France, the United States and others, doing what is proposed by this bill. Their forces are much vaster and much larger than ours. They are widely dispersed. They also have long-established traditions and procedures built in, making it extremely difficult to effect the kind of change proposed by this measure. Indeed, some of those powers have thought about it, and some would like to see it; but from a practical point of view they find that it is a little beyond their reach. This is a new concept and perhaps it is possible because we are a smaller country, with relatively smaller forces, performing rather specialized functions.

The objection which might be made on the grounds that the Chief of Defence Staff would be a dictator is obviated pretty well by built-in proposals for the circumstances in which he will work. He will be surrounded by people from the staffs of the three services as they have existed heretofore. In policy matters, he will be one man and one member of the Defence Council, as I have described it. He will be under the minister. The minister in turn will report to the Defence Committee of the cabinet. The cabinet itself controls the Defence Committee. Parliamentary control is also superimposed upon them.

The functions of the deputy minister are not to be enlarged by any legislative proposal in this measure. There are no changes in the responsibilities which the deputy minister has had heretofore, but his position I think will be strengthened. The organization that he proposes to establish on the civilian side in the Department of National Defence will roughly parallel the function of the organization that is proposed for the service side.

For the record, perhaps I might say that on page 115 of the evidence taken before the Defence Committee in the other place, a chart is set out showing the organization under the Deputy Minister of National Defence. I thought it unnecessary to bring that chart here this afternoon in special form, because when I say that it parallels the staff organization on the service side it might be sufficient for all honourable senators' purposes.

I said at the beginning it might be expected that the size of the Canadian Forces within the next two years will be reduced by some 10,000 people.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would you give the breakdown of the $100 million you mentioned a while ago?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, I will come to that.

Many of these people will go voluntarily because they are close to retirement age and normal attrition looks after many of the retirements from the services. Many of them will be forced to go, through no fault of their own, and it is proposed that people who are compulsorily retired should be paid a rehabilitation grant. For example, those with 15½ years of service will be paid a lump sum in cash, equivalent to 10 months' pay. This is a taxable payment but it will be taxable at 85 per cent of the rate applicable to normal service income.

This is a rather complicated proposal and I thought it might be convenient for honourable senators to have before them now an outline of retirement service benefits payable to service personnel compulsorily retired. This is a three-page memorandum which may be of interest and which I will leave for the personal and private digestion of all honourable senators.

In the Defence Committee of the other place there were three important witnesses. I hope it might be of service to honourable senators if I say who they are and briefly what they said. I may add that not all of them agreed with the proposal contained in this legislation.

The first witness was Brigadier Richard F. Malone, who gave a good practical historical survey of the problem of how governments should establish or organize the service side of the Department of National Defence.

Hon. Mr. Haig: He is also editor of the Winnipeg Free Press.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am glad the honourable senator reminded us of that. Brigadier Malone has also written a great deal on defence. He is well known to many honourable senators.

Brigadier Malone favours a unified service. He opposes the commander-in-chief concept, because he objects to the idea, as he put it, of control by one man. He favours rather control by the Defence Council. Perhaps the wish may be realized, as it is fair to say that when the minister in the other place discussed this evidence, he said he was not proposing something that was hard and fast for all time. Indeed, in the establishment that is set out and which I have referred to when producing these charts earlier, it seems quite possible that many of the views expressed by Brigadier Malone may be brought to fruition through the operation of the Defence Council which has been described.

Another witness before the committee was Air Marshal W. A. Curtis, who has had a brilliant and a gallant career in the armed forces of this country, under the ministership of the honourable member from Gulf, when he was Minister of National Defence for Air Services. As was to be expected, Air Marshal Curtis, who was brought up in one service, was strongly in favour of retaining the tri-service aspect of defence organization in this country. He, too, emphasized the importance of a defence council. He felt that the three chiefs of the three services should be retained and that each chief should have access to the minister. He said that under the arrangements proposed he expected there would be great savings, but he did favour the single responsible chief as is proposed in this legislation.

The other witness who gave lengthy evidence, and good evidence, before the committee in the other place, was Major-General W. H. S. Macklin. He was very outspoken in many aspects of his evidence. He said that in his view the old system of three services never really worked. He was critical of the air force for claiming too much for itself. He was critical of the navy because it had no transport, and because it was not keeping up, as he thought, with new anti-submarine problems. He was critical of NORAD—indeed, of the army. He did say that the new principle was a sound one. He is critical of civilian control. He says that the step that is proposed to be taken is enough —nothing more, and no further reorganization should be undertaken beyond this.

I ask honourable senators to read the evidence given by these witnesses. I draw it to their attention only because I think it important. I also say that it is very readable.

I should like also to refer to another matter which I hope will be of help to honourable senators. There were six or seven very good position papers presented to that committee, which are well worth reading. One is by James Eayrs, I believe of the University of Toronto, on Canadian defence policy since 1867. This is an historical review of defence policy in this country since Confederation was established and is an exceptionally good paper.

These papers can be made available to all honourable senators, and if there is any difficulty in obtaining them, I hope anyone interested will communicate with my office, and I will see that they are made available.

Another paper is by G. Rosenbluth, entitled "Economic Consequences of Disarmament." He discusses defence expenditures in relation to the gross national product and in relation to government spending from 1947 to 1963. He makes comparisons in this field with other countries. He deals with the composition of defence expenditures, pay, weapons, supplies, construction and other matters. He even alludes, at the end of the paper, to disarmament and what it would mean to the economy.

Then, there was a paper submitted by some officials in the department dealing with defence expenditures and their influence on the Canadian economy. It covers such matters as the impact of defence expenditures on the level of business. There is an analysis given with relation to the principal industries affected, like the aircraft, shipbuilding and electronics industries. There is a discussion of the influence of defence expenditures on the balance of payments, as well as some discussion as to what direction Canada should take in planning its defence expenditures on the economic side.

As I have stated, I think these papers are well worth reading by anyone who has an interest in national defence matters, and I am sure many honourable senators are in that category.

To conclude, the priorities for future defence policy are set out on page 24 of the White Paper, and the choice of priorities is based, it is said, on the following assessments:

1. Forces for the direct protection of Canada which can be deployed as required.

2. Forces-in-being as part of the deterrent in the European theatre.

3. Maritime forces-in-being as a contribution to the deterrent.

4. Forces-in-being for UN peace-keeping operations which would be included also in (1) above.

5. Reserve forces and mobilization potential.

As honourable senators know, defence policy in Canada has been to support the alliances of which Canada is a member. The principal ones are NATO, NORAD and the United Nations—if the United Nations can be called an alliance.

There is a constant need for an adjustment and the contribution that is to be made by Canada under treaties to the requirements of the day. This has been particularly true in our activities in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. We have in Europe the brigade which is serving not only a military but, as well, a valid political purpose at Soest in Germany. Quite recently, the brigade and all its members were given the freedom of the City of Soest. We have in Europe also the air division. We have forces available to the Supreme Allied Commander of the Atlantic with headquarters at Norfolk, Virginia. Also we are continuing our participation in the NORAD organization for the defence of North America—hardly separable from the general work of NATO. Under the aegis of the United Nations we have peace-keeping operations which we believe are performing a valid purpose in many parts of the world—in Cyprus, in the Congo, on the Gaza Strip, in Lebanon, in Yemen and in Palestine. Nobody claims that these forces can perform miracles. But if they manage to prevent even a major outbreak of serious hostilities, I think the Canadian people will be gratified that it is possible for their forces to make this kind of contribution.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, having listened to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly) explain this bill, I am sure we all realize just what an important step is contemplated by this bill. He would be a bold layman indeed, and I certainly am not the one who would undertake to discuss a bill on the defence matters of this country, in a short time, even if one had the information to do so. It takes only a glance at the sketches which were handed to us just before the afternoon session commenced, to realize that even to understand what is contained in them would take more than just a few minutes to digest. Indeed, they require careful study.

The honourable leader has told us of the many calls that have been made on our defence forces in recent years. He spoke about NATO and NORAD, which of course are for the defence of Canada. We have also taken a great part in the work of the United Nations.

We are not now being asked, but it is suggested that there might be a Commonwealth force, and the Leader of the Government has suggested that the United Nations might set up a peace force. It must occur to other honourable senators, as it does to me, that the prime purpose of our defence force is definitely the defence of Canada, and our Canadian force is entitled to be the most efficient we can possibly produce. I believe the honourable Leader of the Government said that a few moments ago. It should be the best equipped force we can possibly obtain, because an army is no good unless it is well equipped, and it should enjoy high morale. As anyone who has had anything to do with armed forces knows, if morale is poor then the results are poor. As was also emphasized by the Leader of the Government, everything that can possibly be done should be done to see that we get as much for the money we spend on our defence as we possibly can; there should be nothing wasted.

After listening to the splendid explanation by the Leader of the Government, we realize there is far, far more to this bill than meets the eye. One provision in the bill which is of prime importance is the abolition of the Chiefs of Staff of the navy, army and air force, and substituting therefor one Chief of the Defence Staff. The honourable Leader of the Government did not tell us whether this system has been or is being adopted by any other country. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that it has or is. The older countries—such as Great Britain, France, and the United States—have systems under which they are reorganizing and achieving unification of their forces.

The Leader of the Government mentioned the last war and the co-ordination between the army, navy and air force. Well, that has been going on for years: it was in effect in the First World War; it was in effect in the Second World War. He also mentioned the fact that when he was the assistant to the to the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services during the Second World War the information the minister wished to receive was from the Chief of Staff of the Navy and not from some civilian source. I am sure my good friend, the honourable Senator Power, who did such wonderful and magnificent work for the air force, not only in Canada but for the Commonwealth as well, would agree that it is the head of the force—whether it be the air force, the navy or the army—from whom you wish to obtain your information.

Hon. Mr. Power: I did not always follow the advice given.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You followed it when it was good, and if it was not good, you did not follow it. I am sure of that.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention particularly to get involved, because this is just the opening wedge of this change in our defence policy. I think the honourable Leader of the Government intimated that we will have other bills and many other opportunities, I judge, in the future to discuss these problems which will arise out of the reorganization of the Canadian forces.

I did not follow the debates in the other place very closely, but I have read the report of them and the many questions that were asked of the minister and, I am sorry to say, the few satisfactory answers given. I have also read the information obtained in the Special Committee on Defence, which sat for a considerable length of time and heard the the distinguished men whom the honourable Leader of the Government mentioned this afternoon, but whose evidence he passed over lightly. Having read this lengthy record, I do not think we can say that the former head of the air force, Air Marshall Curtis, gave evidence against this proposed system because he was an airman and wanted to protect the air force. I do not think it is fair to Air Marshal Curtis to make such a statement.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not like to interrupt the honourable gentleman—

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope he did not take that understanding from the remarks I made. I made no such allegation with reference to Air Marshal Curtis. I said that Air Marshal Curtis could understandably be married to the idea of the tri-service organization. He came up through that organization.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understand that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): So far as he is concerned, I think his loyalty to the service in which he had such a distinguished career is most commendable, but I say when it is a matter of assessing evidence one must take these factors into consideration.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Well, Air Marshal Curtis was a witness, and he gave evidence against adopting this system. As I understand it, he thought that a defence council was better, where you would have the heads of staff available for consultation; and I am sure that he is not opposed to this system because he was an airman and because the chief of the air force will not be consulted as closely as he was in the past. That is the observation I wished to make in that connection.

I have just pointed out, honourable senators, that this is an important bill. I might say that the unification of forces is nothing new. The Leader of the Government mentioned General Eisenhower. General Eisenhower had a number of nations to deal with and he had to be the head of all these individual forces, not only because the army, navy and air force were involved but because there had to be unification of command of the French, Polish, British, United States and Canadian forces, and so on. It was a magnificent job which General Eisenhower and his staff did during the Second World War.

Fully to appreciate the import and to be able to more fully understand this bill we have to go back, as the honourable Leader mentioned, to March of this year when a White Paper on Defence was presented to Parliament. I refer to page 19 of the White Paper, under the heading "Integrated Forces." And I might say there is a difference between "unification" of forces and "integrated" forces, because Great Britain has unification of forces but you cannot say she has integrated forces such as are envisaged under this scheme. I quote in part from page 19:

> To the extent that operational control is exercised by Canada, it is the view of the government that it can be most effectively exercised by a single command.

The document goes on further to say:

> The present headquarters organization of the Department of National Defence is far too large.

And a little further on, still quoting from page 19 of the report:

> Thus, integration will result in a substantial reduction of manpower strengths in headquarters, training and related establishments, along with other operating and maintenance costs.

Then the White Paper makes reference to the importance of morale and esprit de corps. As I said a moment ago, any armed force without high morale and esprit de corps would be practically ineffective. Notwithstanding what I have already quoted from the paper, it states unequivocally that the Government has no thought or intention of eliminating worthwhile traditions.

I may say, honourable senators, if you will read the speeches in opposition to this bill in the other place and also much of the evidence given before the committee, it is apparent that those are the points which were objected to very strenuously: first, the loss of morale as far as the troops are concerned and, second, the loss of tradition. I am not of the view that we should stick to tradition if by doing so we lessen the efficiency of the service, but I do think that loss of tradition can help to lessen the morale.

Honourable senators, this extraordinary White Paper is supposed to be the keystone of a 10-year plan for national defence. I do not know if the honourable leader mentioned that or not. I understood him to say that the 10,000 men would be let out within two years. I had the impression this would happen over a longer period. It is described as a 10-year plan that has as its goal integration, which will supposedly result in maximum flexibility and mobility, and also in a great saving. There are very grave doubts about this. We have also been told that there will be a saving of $100 million a year. A question in this connection was asked of the minister, and I think if you read his speeches you will find that the answer given was not very satisfactory or, indeed, very convincing. As a matter of fact if he makes the reforms necessary, and if he purchases the new equipment necessary in the matter of nuclear weapons, it is considered by experts that not only will it fail to result in a saving of $100 million, but it will, in fact, cost considerably more than we are now spending.

The bill before us implements the first phase of the planned integration, that is the setting up of a Chief of the Defence Staff. It will eliminate the present Joint Chiefs of Staff and replace them with one supreme chief who will be known as Chief of the Defence Staff. This in itself is radical enough. However, we have reason to believe, and in fact we know that much more is envisioned by this bill. I have already mentioned this, as has the sponsor of the bill. It will mean a complete reorganization of National Defence Headquarters which, under present legislation, is organized as a tri-service establishment with each service having its own command.

Much has been said on this subject since the bill was first introduced some time ago. It has been the subject of an exhaustive, comprehensive study by a committee of the other house as well as a substantial debate on the second reading stage in the other place. As one who has had some little experience with the armed forces, I can say that I have very serious reservations on this legislation. In my opinion it could have a demoralizing effect on the members of the armed forces. It will, notwithstanding what the White Paper on Defence says to the contrary, eliminate worthwhile traditions. It will place in the hands of the proposed Chief of the Defence Staff far too much power and far too much responsibility.

The honourable leader mentioned the Esher report in Great Britain in 1904. At that time a very thorough study was made. While that was a long time ago, they followed a system whereby during the First World War and the Second World War the Chiefs of Staff were continually in touch with the minister. As a matter of fact, speaking of the British Defence Council, the Secretary of State, which is the equivalent of our Minister of National Defence, is at the head of that council, and under him there is a minister for the navy, a minister for the army, and a minister for the air force. These all form part of the Defence Council in Great Britain, with other specialists attached.

These are points, honourable senators, which I am sure could be debated at length, and will be debated at great length when other bills are introduced in the future.

Under the new plan there are to be four areas of responsibility, each with a separate chief responsible to the Chief of the Defence Staff. They will be the Chief of Operational Readiness, the Chief of Personnel, Chief of Logistics and Engineering, and the Comptroller General. They are all set out in the chart. These four areas of responsibility will have jurisdictional control over the three services which, it must be remembered, will still exist as separate and distinct services, the difference being that instead of each service having its own chief and chain of command, there will now be four chiefs whose chain of command will reach into each of the three services. But we must remember that these are not operational men, they are not like the head of the navy, or the head of the air force, or the head of the army. These men have to do with recruiting, with logistics, engineering and personnel, but they are not the men who really understand the main points regarding a fighting force. This, in my opinion, will make for confusion, and will, I feel, be most cumbersome.

This is obviously the Government's way of obtaining unification of command and the eventual unification and integration of the services. We are all in agreement with the need for maximum efficiency and economy, but I question whether this is the way to achieve it. I might add that all who have spoken on this subject, whether for or against this bill, were of the opinion that unification was necessary, but the point they wished to emphasize is that Canada is not going about it in the right way, nor are we going about it in the way in which other countries which have had far more experience in military matters than we have had have gone about it.

I might say that this concept of a single defence chief has been tried in other countries without success. It was in effect in Great Britain up to 1904, and, according to the report of the royal commission which studied the armed forces at that time, and to which I have already referred, it made for inefficiency which resulted in many military disasters in the previous century. We all know that this was the concept in effect in Germany in 1914 and again in 1939. In this case you virtually had a state within a state and the creation of a powerful military elite. We all know the tragedy of that experiment.

Coming again to Air Marshal Curtis, in his evidence before the committee of the other place he said that as a result of integration our services are going downhill both in respect of morale and spirit. Those are the words of one of Canada's senior military men. I should like to quote a little more extensively from what Air Marshal Curtis said when giving evidence before the Defence Committee of the other place on June 9. I read from page 164 of the evidence:

> I feel that to do away with the chiefs of staff is a terrible thing to do to the services. I do not care what you do, you are not going to have one service immediately. You may get it in 20 years but, in the meantime, our services are going to go down hill both in respect of morale and spirit.
>
> I feel the three different services are like ships without a rudder; they are tossing around on the sea without a chief or a leader to lead them. That is what the C.A.S. is, the same as the C.G.S. and the C.N.S. And, you cannot substitute a chairman who is removed two or three times and who is bound to be from one of the other services. He cannot possibly have the same intimate knowledge of every service that the chiefs have.

There is no question but that that is true. It was borne out by the evidence of Brigadier Malone, who gave far more evidence before the committee than we are given to understand by what the honourable Leader of the Government said this afternoon. I point out that Brigadier Malone is considered an authority on this particular matter.

I submit, honourable senators, that the Government is embarking on a course of action, the consequences of which it is not fully aware, and of which, I might say, the country is not fully aware. We are running the risk of losing some of our highly skilled and trained officer personnel. We have already lost some of them. These are well qualified men who have been trained at great expense to the taxpayer.

We are told that there is to be an eventual reduction of 10,000 personnel in the present strength of the armed forces. As the honourable Leader of the Government has said, many of these men will be approaching the age of retirement, but their total number will not be 10,000 in two years. Although some may be reaching the age of retirement during the next two years, it is my opinion that we may be getting rid of some very fine and highly trained men. This is the reason why we have been told, that throughout the country the morale of the different branches of the services is being lessened.

In terms of economizing, perhaps this reduction in personnel is a good thing, but that is something that will have to be considered very carefully. How many more of our senior officers will be resigning to take positions available to them in civilian life because of the uncertainty of their future? This is a question that cannot be answered at the present time, but we feel there will be very many.

Such questions as these greatly concern the members of the armed forces. We might ask many other questions. Senator Aseltine asked about the $100 million. We would like to know just how it is proposed to make that saving while at the same time we are increasing the amount spent on equipment. We would like to know definitely how the morale of the navy, army and air force is being affected at the present time. What great overall saving is there to be in this scheme?

I do not think there is more I need say at this time, although I do point out that this is a very important matter and one which should receive careful consideration. This bill's tour through the other place has not been altogether satisfactory. Great differences of opinion were expressed before the Defence Committee and in the House of Commons. The bill was not passed by the other place unanimously; it was passed on division. If we can judge accurately from reports in the newspapers and conversations with military men throughout the country it would seem that there is much concern over what is going to happen in the Department of National Defence.

Perhaps we do not look upon the Canadian militia as we used to, although it is a very important branch of the service. I understand that many of the old regiments are to be disbanded and others are to be amalgamated. I am not suggesting that units should be kept on if they are not necessary, but I point out that they have always had some function in the defence scheme of our country, and I would like to know if there is not still some function for them to perform. Civil defence is a branch of national defence which the militia can undertake very well. I hope that every effort will be made to keep these old regiments that have served the country for so long, and that they will be given something to do that is of value to the country. It is possible to do that, and I do not think there would be any great saving in disbanding some of them.

Honourable senators, these are questions of great concern to all Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if honourable Senator Connolly speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I apologize to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and to Senator Aseltine for sitting down without dealing with a matter which I said I would deal with before I finished.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I used to do that too.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps there is more excuse for me—I am older!

Senator Aseltine referred to the fact that early in my remarks I said it was estimated that the saving which would result from the reduction of personnel would be in the order of $100 million per annum. That is an estimate. It results not only from a reduction in pay and allowances but also in all the overhead that is involved in keeping 10,000 men in the forces.

However, I do say—and perhaps I did not make this clear when I was speaking on this point—that this is not a dollar saving in the estimates of the Department of National Defence. As I mentioned, only some 14 per cent of the expenditures of that department is in respect of equipment and weapons. That is thought to be an unduly low percentage. Because of that fact, and also because of the fact that obsolescence is a way of life for equipment in the services, in order to bring the equipment available to the services up to the standard required to do the defence work within the alliances, it will be necessary to spend a great deal more money, and to raise that percentage of the defence expenditures to 25 per cent. I point out that these are estimates.

I do not say that this is necessarily an absolute saving. What might be saved as a result of the reduction in personnel, and the more economical or more efficient use of personnel, may be offset by expenditures of great magnitude on the equipment and weapons side. I hope that that answer is satisfactory. There was a great deal of discussion of this in the material to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if there will be other opportunities of discussing these matters? There will be other bills, will there not, in connection with defence?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not in this session, if that is what the honourable leader means.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: No, not in this session. I point out that this sort of discussion has been going on over a period of ten years.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Of course there are always opportunities for such discussions as this when appropriation bills are before us. The honourable Leader of the Opposition is referring to bills amending the National Defence Act. I think that from time to time we can expect further proposals for the amendment of the act. A rather radical change such as the one proposed here may very well mean that other legislative proposals will have to be placed before Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I am sure you are correct.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that is so.

I want to refer to one other matter mentioned by the honourable Leader of the Opposition. I do hope he does not suggest—and I am sure he does not—that the very brief summary I made of the evidence given by Brigadier Malone, Major-General Macklin and Air Marshal Curtis, was by any means complete. I did not claim that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I was referring to the deductions.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): First of all, I wanted to acquaint this house with the fact that the evidence given before the committee of the other place was not unanimously in favour of this measure. Some critical evidence was given, and I think in fairness to all honourable senators I should point that out.

I repeat what I said in my opening remarks, that I hope honourable senators will read this evidence, because even if I try to give it in a much more extensive form than I did I still would not reflect it as it was given by the witnesses themselves.

I say the same thing about the papers to which I referred. I touched upon only the highlights of them. I did not attempt to set out in detail all that these position papers contain. I hope that my remarks will be at least notice to honourable senators that this material is available. On the subject matter, either of the evidence of the witnesses or of the material in the papers, I simply suggest to honourable senators that they read the material themselves and form their own conclusions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I wish to thank the honourable Leader for the answer he has just given me. When he sat down earlier without answering the question, I thought of one or two occasions when I, as Leader of the Government, probably had done the same. I remember when I was occupying the position the honourable Leader occupies now, one of my supporters made the remark: "When you are asked a question, you sometimes say 'I am just coming to that,' and you never come to it."

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask the honourable Leader a question? I suppose that this bill will be sent to committee, but there are one or two questions I would like to clear up. Is he in a position to say whether the Government has any plans to help rehabilitate these service people? For instance, in the event of an effort being made to absorb them in the Civil Service, would they have some preference, such as that given to the veterans of the last two wars?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There are enough people in the Civil Service.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the veterans' preference is available to people who come out of the armed forces, and certainly those who have been in the armed forces will have all the preference available to people who served in the wars.

On the question of rehabilitation, there was considerable discussion on the point as to whether or not some active steps should be taken to deal with this special class of people who are forcibly discharged from the services. At the moment, no one can say how many will go out on this basis. There will be the usual attrition by people retiring in the normal course. Those who are involuntarily discharged will be given these rehabilitation benefits. It was thought the recipients could use the money so paid for rehabilitation purposes in a way which they might deem more suitable than if some plan were imposed upon them.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understand 500 were released from the air force. Do they come under this scheme?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I may be wrong about this, but I understand that the group to which the honourable leader refers is not included. That exodus antedates this legislation. However, I may be wrong. I will look into the matter and inform the honourable senator privately.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I think you are right, but I am not sure.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In answer to Senator Choquette, may I say there are trade schools and other places where not too junior people may go for retraining. It was felt that the individual's choice of such an allocation of his rehabilitation fund should prevail over some imposed type of training.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): May I ask one question? I notice in the outline of retiring benefits that all the examples given are based on a length of the service of five years or more. Are there any benefits for those with less than five years' service?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In the memorandum which was distributed, about the middle of page 3, there is a reference to "Officers serving on short-service commission, based on time to serve to end of current fixed period." Those are all short-service commissions, so called, and I think they are less than five years.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): I was not concerned with the officers. I was wondering about the privates.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You are asking about the men? These are examples and it might well be that people who are discharged involuntarily with less than five years' service would get a commensurate allowance.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: At the bottom of the second page, what is meant by the table which says that the special benefit is cut down as the years go down?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I will try to get some information on that point and will send it to the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Molson: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if the answer he gave a minute ago, regarding these air force officers, would imply that these 500 who are being let out before their normal term would not benefit by similar provisions? It sounds extraordinary, if that be the case, that a group as large as that, and on permanent or short-service commission, should be released a short time before this legislation and should have to fend for themselves.

There are some others who certainly are of an age where such things as retraining in vocational schools would not be of any help. There are men of 45, with children starting in university and so on, who come under this heading. I had taken it for granted that they would be given the full benefits provided in this case.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I may be wrong, but I think that the group to which the honourable senator refers is not being retired as a result of the amalgamation of the services, as proposed in this legislation. I believe that their term of service, which is short term, is being drawn to a conclusion for other reasons. I will ascertain what precise provision is being made for them and will inform the honourable senator as soon as I can.

I wish I could put my finger on the evidence given in the committee of the other place in respect of this. I remember reading it, but at the moment I do not know where it is to be found. Undoubtedly, provision was made for their retirement; but I understand it is not the same type of provision as is proposed for those to be compulsorily retired under this legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, if the consensus is that it is desirable to send this bill to a committee, I would be happy so to move. It seems to me that, in the circumstances in which we meet this afternoon, the appropriate committee would be the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Is that desirable?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: This is a very important bill and I know that many of my colleagues would like to consider it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Very well; I will so move.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 7, 1964

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-109, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1965.

Bill read the first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, we have before us this afternoon Bill C-109, which is Appropriation Act No. 7, 1964. There is being distributed at this moment a statement of earlier appropriation bills which have come before Parliament during this session. I used a similar type of statement when the previous appropriation bill came before us, and found it was a general convenience to all honourable senators to have this information before them. I do not propose to review the statement in detail. I should say, however, that the total of the main and supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, as the statement shows, amounts to $7,217,102,244. Of this amount, $4,356,282,247 is to be voted.

We have already had before us three appropriation acts called interim supply bills. Appropriation Act No. 1 was for $684 million-odd. Appropriation Act No. 5, the second one, was for $338 million-odd. Appropriation Act No. 6 was for $469 million-odd. Appropriation Act No. 7, which is now before us, is for $183,433,000.67.

If this bill is passed, Parliament shall have voted supply in the amount of $1,674,998,399 so far this session, and there will be a balance of some $2,682,000,000 left to be voted by further appropriation bills.

Honourable senators, the bill before us is not a bill of interim supply, as were Appropriation Acts Nos. 1, 5 and 6, to which I have just referred. This bill provides final supply on the two items set out in the schedule to the bill. They are, items 56a under National Defence, and item L17a in respect of the Department of Finance.

Now that honourable senators have the bill in their hands, perhaps I might refer to its short provisions.

Section 1 simply gives the title to the bill.

Section 2 indicates that the amount to be granted is $183,433,000.67 and that this is the remaining balance of the two items in the schedule to which I have referred.

Sections 3, 4 and 5 are the usual sections that are contained in final appropriation bills.

They were used in Appropriation Acts Nos. 2, 3 and 4, which dealt with the final Supplementary Estimates E for the last fiscal year. Honourable senators are familiar with the provisions in these bills.

The two items in the schedule to this bill were not in the main estimates, but they do appear in the Supplementary Estimates A which were tabled in this house on June 10 last.

I should add further that in Appropriation Act No. 6, which was passed just before the end of June this year, the interim supply bill, four-twelfths of the Supplementary Estimates A were granted, and included of course were four-twelfths of these two items. This Appropriation Act No. 7 purports to grant the remaining eight-twelfths of these two items. Neither of these items was reached in the other place in its consideration of the estimates when this bill was introduced.

May I now come to the items themselves. Item 56a under National Defence generally deals with pension and other benefits. This item provides authority in respect of the payment of pensions to service personnel compulsorily retired during the period from May 7, 1964, to May 7, 1966, as a result of the operation of the bill to which the Senate has just given its consideration. The effect of the item is to waive the penalty which is now contained in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. The penalty in that act provides for a reduction of pension and other benefits on early retirement. The authority provided by the item will waive that penalty in respect of service personnel who are compulsorily retired from the services in the circumstances which we discussed earlier this afternoon.

May I say also that this item, which is a dollar item, is not a budgetary item. It is a charge to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account, and for that reason it appears in the supplementary estimates as a one dollar item.

May I say further that there are examples of what might happen under the operation of this item in the outline of retirement payments for service personnel who are compulsorily retired. Honourable senators already have that information in their hands as a result of the earlier debate.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask the honourable leader if the purpose is to amend provisions already existing in the Defence Act?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No. The purpose is to amend a provision contained in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. It allows the penalty provided because of early retirement in that act to be waived for the personnel compulsorily retired.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Is there an explanation for that? Why the change?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Because of the compulsory retirement. It only applies to the service personnel who are compulsorily retired as a result of the proposal for the amalgamation for the unification of services—the cut-down of personnel. It is felt that these people who are put out of the services through no fault of their own, but because of this reorganization and this attempt to reduce the number in the forces by 10,000 personnel, should not suffer unduly as the result of this step.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The requirement is on the basis of 20 years' service.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, 20 years' service. That language actually appears in the item.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Provided they have served 10 years?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Provided they have served 10 years.

May I come to item L17a—Finance. I should say, in the first place, that this item is not an expenditure. It is a "loan-investment" item, and "loan-investment" items are found at the end of the main and supplementary estimates and cover loan and investment requirements or proposals which emerge from various departments of government. This particular item deals with a situation which arises under the Columbia River Treaty and Protocol. On about October 1, 1964, it is expected that pursuant to the provisions of that treaty, the United States will pay Canada some $254.4 million in American funds for the Canadian share of the downstream benefits to be developed as a result of the work proposed under the Columbia River Treaty over the next 30 years. Upon that payment being made, the federal Government in Canada will pay British Columbia the equivalent in Canadian funds, or approximately $275,149,500.

Hon. Mr. Willis: Canadian.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, Canadian.

There is one reservation I must make to that statement. If British Columbia requires any portion of the money payable to Canada under the treaty in the form of U.S. funds to redeem its outstanding debt—the debt owed by British Columbia in the United States—the amount of U.S. funds required will be transferred to British Columbia for this use, and the amount of Canadian funds will be proportionately and appropriately reduced. British Columbia will apply the remaining amount of Canadian funds and, indeed, the equivalent amount of American funds it might receive under this arrangement, to the Columbia development in British Columbia.

Normally, this huge transfer of $254 million U.S. funds to Canada could have serious repercussions on the U.S. balance of payments position, especially if done in one year. So, to even out the flow of such U.S. funds into Canada, the Government has agreed, in effect, —and I put this very simply—to leave the money in the United States for a longer period, and meantime to earn what interest it can upon those funds. The method of doing that has been discussed with the officials of the U.S. Treasury, and I think it is a convenience to them and a wise step for Canada to take.

The method proposed is this. Canada will invest in medium-term nonmarketable securities of the United States Government. By "medium term" it is understood that the maturity of these obligations could be anywhere from three months to two years, in the examples that I have been given. These medium-term nonmarketable securities of the United States Government will be held in a special account by the Minister of Finance. They will not be held in the exchange account, although, as has been explained in the other place, they will be available in an emergency, if there should be a crisis related to foreign exchange in U.S. holdings in Canada. As these securities mature the proceeds will find their way normally into the exchange fund. Then, under the normal practice, they would be invested in short-term U.S. government securities.

The cost of this method of handling, it is expected, will be about $1.1 million per annum. It results from the fact the interest received on the U.S. securities will be slightly less than the interest which the federal Government must pay on the moneys to be paid to British Columbia and which will be secured by the Government from the market in Canada.

In effect, honourable senators, the item authorizes the investment in medium-term nonmarketable United States securities for the purpose I have indicated in connection with the Columbia River treaty.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I have no intention of taking any great amount of time on this bill. It is unique as an appropriation act in that under our system of keeping accounts it imposes no strain on the budget. When we go to committee on the bill which we were just discussing, some of us will have questions as to really what the effect of this $1 item is on the Canadian Forces Superannuation Fund because sooner or later—and I am not quarrelling with it, but I think we are entitled to get some indication of the amount—the special retirement allowances and the waiver of reduction in pensions due to early retirement are going to have to be paid for, and they are not going to be paid for by contributions of members of the armed forces. Sooner or later we are going to see a special item from the Government of Canada to that fund.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The superannuation fund?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes. I do not quarrel with that, but we will be interested to know what the estimate is and, from time to time, we will be interested to know what the actual amount is.

Vote L17a, as the Leader of the Government has said, is an item to authorize the Government to re-invest in medium-term non-negotiable U.S. securities the funds which are received from the United States, as a result of the Columbia River Treaty, less whatever funds the Province of British Columbia may require to meet its indebtedness in the United States. I am a little puzzled about that. I understood that the Province of British Columbia was a debt-free province, but apparently they have some requirements, I believe for maturities in New York coming up this fall.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It is domestic debt-free.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is probably the answer, senator. Thank you very much. This is not the first time such an arrangement has been made with the United States. I like to think we have a common capital market north of the Rio Grande. We should impose as few restrictions on the movements one way or another as is compatible with our own self-interest, and at the same time we should be prepared to accommodate our neighbours, just as our neighbours are prepared to accommodate us from time to time. When the Government of Canada borrowed $250 million from a half dozen American insurance companies in September 1962, following discussions with the U.S. Treasury, it agreed to draw down that money not immediately, in one sum, but over a period of time. That is exactly what we are doing here.

Hon. Mr. Power: Is that the same kind of transaction as is provided for here? It does not appear to me to be.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: As I see it, it is the same.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: We are doing it in reverse.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: We are doing it in reverse. The mechanics are a little different but the effect is the same. We do not put the drain on the U.S. balance of payments at one fell swoop.

I was a little puzzled when the Leader of the Government spoke about investing in medium-term securities. I may not have heard him correctly, but I thought that he referred to medium-term securities as being three months to two years. In my language those are short-term securities, and I yield the floor to the Leader if he can tell me whether I am correct or not.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would have thought that what the honourable senator used as an adjective in respect of these securities was, in fact, "short-term" securities.

I have a memorandum here which refers to the fact the U.S. Government has arranged for the sale of nonmarketable securities to a number of countries over the past few years. I thought they were giving me examples of the maturity of medium-term securities. They may not be the "medium-term." Perhaps medium-term securities, in the sense indicated here, would be for a longer maturity period than three years. Upon reflection, when I look at this, I must say it does not specify that these are medium-term, but are in fact nonmarketable securities.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is the point I wanted to clear up. A medium-term security is one which matures in not less than three years, perhaps three to seven years. I am not making any issue on that point but simply raised it because I did not understand the example given of three months to two years, which in the market place are definitely short-term securities.

We are going to accommodate our friends for some time, and as the Leader of the Government said, it will probably cost us $1,100,000 a year. However, I do not think we should be concerned about that because the fact is that if we had this windfall, if I may call it that, of United States dollars paid to us in the normal course, with no special arrangement at all, we would probably put it into the exchange fund, invest it in short-term United States securities, and the actual cost to the treasury would be more than we will now have to bear. In the meantime we have this backlog which, while it is said to be non-negotiable, in an exchange crisis—which I do not anticipate and I hope will not arise—would be very valuable to our exchange reserves.

I would hope that all our appropriation bills could be disposed of in as easy and as friendly a fashion as this one.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Perhaps all the measures should be appropriation bills with no budgetary items.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I wonder if the honourable leader could add a few words to what he said when he let fall the remark that the cost of this process to the Canadian Government would be of the order of $1.1 million a year. I assume that this arises from the fact that if we had not made any special arrangement with the Government of the United States, and if we had received this $275 million in Canadian funds and invested it in the best possible way and to the greatest possible advantage, it would have earned more in interest than the interest which we will receive from these short- and medium-term securities of the United States Government. Is that the explanation?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: They would have earned less.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The situation is this. When the Canadian Government receives the $254.4 million from the United States in United States funds, it will pay out the equivalent of that in Canadian funds to the Government of British Columbia in pursuance of the provisions of the treaty. For the moment let us not bother with whether or not British Columbia will take some portion of the money in United States funds. To obtain the required Canadian currency, the Government will go to the market and will pay the going interest rate at that particular time on, say, the $275 million Canadian.

At the same time it will invest the $254 million in United States securities. These will draw down a little less in the way of income than will be paid out for the money borrowed in Canada. It will put British Columbia in funds to the extent of, say, $275 million. Let us say the interest received on the United States securities is X dollars and the interest paid out on the advance to British Columbia is Y dollars. Subtracting X from Y, the difference is going to be $1,100,000. That is what it is going to cost the federal exchequer to do it in this way.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: On whose account will that be, on the federal account or the British Columbia account?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): On the federal account.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why? Why do we not hand over the United States securities to British Columbia and let them finance this?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The arrangement is being carried out pursuant to the agreement.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

YOUTH ALLOWANCES BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-108, to provide for the payment of Youth Allowances.

Bill read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: I think all honourable senators are agreed that we should take this bill at eight o'clock this evening. Perhaps it will suit the convenience of the Senate generally if we take it at that hour because it may be possible for senators to attend at that time who could not be in attendance this afternoon.

I would propose, if it is convenient to the house, that the Senate do now adjourn to resume at the call of the bell at approximately eight o'clock. We can then deal with this measure, and then with routine matters. Therefore, I suggest that we consider this bill on second reading later this day.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

SECOND READING

Hon. Fred A. McGrand, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of Bill C-108, to provide for the payment of Youth Allowances.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words in explanation of Bill C-108. It provides for the payment of $10 per month to the parents of children between the ages of 16 and 18 years and who are attending school. It provides also for an equal amount to be paid to the parents of children between the ages of 16 and 18 years who, because of mental or physical disability, are unable to attend school. The bill provides that in order to receive the allowance the children must attend school full time. Those whose training is limited to night courses are not included.

For children suffering from severe mental or physical disability this bill proposes to bridge the gap between the cessation of family allowance at 16 years of age until they are able to qualify for the permanent disability payment provided by the federal-provincial agreements. The parents of the children must make application for this allowance to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and in order to receive the allowance they must be residents of Canada. The allowance will not be paid to those who are not residents of Canada.

The allowance may be paid to children attending school outside of Canada as long as they are substantially maintained by their parents who are residing in Canada. The payment ceases if the child ceases to be a resident of Canada. The allowance will be paid to the mother of the child, as in the case of the family allowance.

It has been asked, and will be asked again, why this allowance could not be made by amending the Family Allowances Act because there is a similarity between the payments proposed by this bill and those made under the Family Allowances Act. The family allowance is paid to all children of a family for the purpose of equalizing the cost of rearing a family. The payment in respect of a child stops when the child reaches the age of 16 years, the age when the child is no longer compelled to attend school. Bill C-108 is designed to meet a somewhat different situation. It is hoped it will provide an incentive for parents to keep children in school until the age of 18 years. It is also expected to persuade those who have dropped out of school to return.

Everyone is conscious of the fact that among our unemployed is a large number of unskilled persons who could have improved their skills by returning to school.

This bill differs from the Family Allowances Act because it provides for payment for a large group to which compulsory school attendance does not apply.

These monthly payments will be made for a period of twelve months. During the summer months when the child is not in school the allowance is not paid, but when the vacation is over and the child returns to school in the fall the parents can obtain those payments for two months which would have come due during the holiday period. In providing the payments, which are contingent on the youth being dependent on his parents and on his attendance at school full time, it is necessary to make special provision for youths who are unable to attend school because of disability. In this age group, a somewhat different approach was needed.

In the case of the Province of Quebec, where allowances were already being paid, it would not have been reasonable that a $10 monthly allowance on behalf of dependent youth be paid by both Quebec and the federal Government. In 1961 the Province of Quebec began the payment of a schooling allowance for the ages 16 to 18, making a monthly payment of $10 for ten months. Quebec now proposes to extend this to a 12-month year and to cover disabled children, so that their legislation will parallel that of the federal Government.

If a child attends school during the year and takes summer employment, he is not disqualified, because the summer employment is but a small contribution towards his full support. If a child contributes towards his own maintenance by means of a part-time job, but his parents are still substantially supporting him, he is eligible for the allowance.

If the parents reside in Quebec, the child will not receive youth allowance from the federal Government. If the parents are of Ontario or any other province but Quebec, and send the youth to school or college in Quebec, the allowance will be paid.

As in the case of the family allowance, if the child is maintained by the parents in an institution the allowance is still paid. The youth allowance will be paid to parents who maintain their child in an institution.

Supposing there is a child-caring agency maintaining a child, and the agency places him in an institution, the agency will then be paid the youth allowance. If the parent is responsible for placing a child in an institution, the parent is entitled to $10 a month, but if the legal guardian is a children's aid society the allowance goes to the society.

If the child has no natural parents, no adopting parents or childrens' aid society maintaining him, but is in an institution as a ward of a province, the allowance is not paid to the institution. The province is responsible for maintaining the child and the allowance is not paid. This occurs in the case of foundlings.

This bill in no way takes over what has been the provincial responsibility. Reform institutions are not paid youth allowances for inmates. There is an attempt, however, to encourage foster homes. If the child has a foster mother she can claim allowance for the child as she is maintaining him substantially.

This allowance will not be taxable. This means that tax exemption as it now stands for these children will remain the same at $550 per annum. At the present moment if a child is registered for family allowance the parents are entitled to $300 exemption only. When they reach the age of 16 the exemption becomes $550. There will be no change in this situation. The exemption will still be $550.

Of the 502,000 in the 16-18 age bracket, it is estimated that there are 350,000 presently at school and that with the advent of this legislation there will be some incentive for a certain number to return to school. It has been assumed for estimate purposes that the total number of children in this bracket who will return or stay will be roughly 375,000. This excludes the Province of Quebec.

The estimated total cost for the year 1965-66, the complete cost, will be about $61 million.

Hon. Olive L. Irvine: Honourable senators, the Government is to be commended for getting around at last to the introduction of Bill C-108. During the election campaign of 1963 a promise was made that the first legislation to be introduced would be legislation to ensure that young men and women of 16 and 17 years of age, described in the legislation as youth, would merit the immediate payment of a family allowance.

I am sorry that it was not found possible simply to extend the provisions of the Family Allowances Act. This, however, seems impossible, and now the department is faced with the terrific cost of getting the contents of this new bill into operation before September 1, 1964.

We all heartily agree that Bill C-108 represents a magnificent step forward. It will encourage our young people to make the most of their opportunities. Our family allowances program has been in operation since 1945, but has only provided assistance to parents of children under 16 years of age. We are all aware of the fact that it takes more to keep 16- and 17-year-olds at school than it does to look after dependent children of younger ages. Youths of this age are uneasy and unsettled. They imagine how wonderful it would be to have their own money —their own car, regardless of vintage—and be independent. Rarely do they look ahead and figure out what the future holds for them.

Something like 502,000 children in Canada, apart from Quebec, will be in this age bracket, and in the neighbourhood of 350,000 are attending school at the present time.

In 1959 it was found that 70 per cent of the available jobs in Canada required skilled labour, and only 30 per cent unskilled. The Government of the day approached the provinces regarding this problem. They agreed completely, but pointed out that they did not have the facilities with which to train young Canadians to acquire the necessary trades and skills. The federal Government realized of course, that education was under provincial jurisdiction, and with the co-operation of the provinces and municipalities, within two years, it built a sufficient number of schools to accommodate 139,000 students yearly.

This bill, in my humble opinion, is designed to assist the student so that he will have a better opportunity to become qualified, so that in this advancing industrial age he will not be thrown on the labour market because of lack of academic or other qualifications. If he or she is not in the academic field, then there will be the technical school program. This plan will be advanced and expanded so that many students in the 16 and 17 age group will be able to take advantage of it.

The question uppermost in my mind is this. Is 17 years the proper age to stop this "youth allowance"? There are no provinces in Canada, that I know of, where the average student graduates with a Grade XII certificate at 17 years of age. In Ontario, of course, there is a Grade XIII course, thus making the graduating age one year later. A little simple arithmetic will show that most children start school in the kindergarten class at six years of age. At seven years of age they enter Grade 1. If you add 12 grades to age six, you will find that Grade XII students will average 18 years of age when they receive their diploma. Many of these pupils will celebrate their 18th birthday in the beginning or the middle of the school year, but we are informed that their allowances will not continue until the end of the school year. These students will be very much in the position of veterans attending university after World War II. When they reach the age of 18, that will be the last month in which they will receive a cheque. Many parents and pupils will consider this fact when plans are being made to continue their education.

I realize this new bill will take a great deal of mechanical administration and a large increase in staff to get it into operation before September 1. Notices are to be sent to parents whose children will qualify for payments, and whose birthdays fall in August or September. But what about the thousands of young people who are now 17, or are just coming up to their 17th birthday and have been off family allowance payments for 8, 10 or more months?

Application forms will be available, but I fear that many parents—especially in rural areas—will fail to realize that they can take advantage of this legislation designed to meet these special circumstances. Extensive advertising will have to be done.

Honourable senators, members of the Conservative party have urged for some considerable time that a measure such as this now before us should be presented to Parliament. During the last campaign this was part of our platform, and we are willing to support it in every possible way. We realize how important it is to encourage young people to remain in school as long as possible. We hope that it may have a speedy passage through the Senate.

Hon. Edgar E. Fournier: Honourable senators, may I be permitted a few minutes to express my humble opinion on Bill C-108, an act to provide for the payment of Youth Allowances. Like many others here tonight, I saw the bill for the first time this morning and have read its contents with great attention.

I wish to congratulate the honourable Senator McGrand, who introduced the bill and gave us such a clear explanation of its contents.

I have also read very carefully the debates which took place in the other house, and I am satisfied that the bill as presented to us has been fully studied by those duly elected by the people, representing their respective political parties; so, I have no intention of disagreeing with what has been said by the honourable gentlemen of the other house.

The bill in itself is not of a contradictory nature. It merely puts into effect a measure to extend youth allowances to students attending school and who are between the ages of 16 and 17. Every party of the opposition had for a long time advocated such an extension. The only reproach is to the slow-moving body, the Government of today, for its delay in introducing the legislation. However, it is here now.

It is interesting to note that approximately 502,000 of our population are between 16 and 17 years of age—this is excluding the Quebec figures; but it is most unfortunate to learn that only about 350,000 of that group are attending school, leaving approximately some 152,000 out of school. This, honourable senators, is a very serious situation, especially when one realizes that today in many instances a Grade XII education is required even for employment as a common labourer, and that it is essential for learning a trade and specializing as a tradesman—occupations which, I regret to say, are fast fading out through automation.

I am confident that the extra $10 per month will assist parents in financing their children's education, just as I am confident—except perhaps in a very few cases—that parents are anxious to provide their children with the best possible education. Thousands of parents know that a higher education is needed and that the required standard is rising every year. Parents realize that their children, when facing manhood, will not be able to find ways and means of establishing a home and raising a family under similar conditions to those under which they did. The cost of living, in all its shapes and forms, necessitates a substantial permanent income, and many in our society cannot find permanent employment.

Education, to me, is Canada's No. 1 problem today. The evolution of the past few years has brought about the most serious problems in education, financially and physically. The urge and the need for education are now fully recognized. Billions have been spent to build schools of all categories. Universities, the existing ones of which are already crowded, become filled to capacity as fast as they can be built. This extra $10 will by no means solve the problem, and I am sure it is not intended to, but surely it will greatly help the poorer class to keep their older children in school.

In my province the burden of education is felt mostly, I regret to say, by the French population. And why? Because it is there we find the largest families. Six, seven, eight, ten, twelve or fourteen children of school age in one family is not an uncommon situation, and a large number of children creates serious problems. The problem is even greater when the head of the family is poorly educated, with no specialized trade, and can only get part-time employment. Many children in those large families, boys or girls, have to leave school at an early age and try to help the parents. What else can they do? The most unfortunate result is that these young people in a very few years will find themselves lost in this modern world and are likely to become public charges.

During the last eight or ten years Canada has been struggling to provide living assistance to approximately a half million people, with a periodical variation. I hope I am wrong in saying this, but I predict if we are not careful with this automation and push-button race, in ten years we will find ourselves with an average of one million jobless in Canada. What is going to happen then? Honourable senators, your guess is as good as mine.

Perhaps I have got away from the contents of this bill, but I just wanted to point out the great need for education, and also to point out that this new legislation will be welcomed by everybody, especially by the poorer class of people with large families. I am also glad to learn that the extra $10 per month allowance will apply to mentally or physically handicapped children whether attending school or not. As we all know, for some unknown reason there is a gap of two years between family allowances and the disability pension. This act will make it possible now for the parents to receive this allowance which in most cases is badly needed.

Honourable senators, I am sure that no one will oppose this legislation. We may perhaps regret that it does not go far enough to relieve the misery which exists in some families, misery imposed by the burden of trying to give an adequate education to a large family. In the meantime while looking forward to better legislation, I consider this to be good legislation and it has my entire support.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, one aspect of this bill before us which I am sure all will welcome is the fact that it appears to indicate a new trend in the legislative procedures of the present Parliament. I refer to the trend for the expeditious passing of important legislation.

The present bill was introduced in the other place on July 2, by resolution and first reading, and was passed on July 7, receiving second and third reading on the same day. It was passed by general agreement among all parties with the possible exception of some spokesmen for one party who still felt that it involved an infringement of certain provincial rights. However, in general there was agreement not only in the principle of the bill but also in the fact that it should be passed as speedily as possible.

I share with other speakers the regret that this legislation has been so long delayed. It is a matter of record that similar legislation, or legislation to achieve the same effect through the extension of family allowances, had been prepared by the previous administration, and would have been introduced by them had they not been defeated in the house and in the last general election. It is also a matter of record that the official Opposition introduced a resolution, the main content of which was to speed up this legislation. The date of that resolution was February 26 of this year. The majority of the house in the other place voted against that resolution, and have now brought forward this excellent bill to achieve this very desirable result.

In my regret about the delay in bringing this bill into effect as an act of this Parliament, it is with some reluctance that I bring to the attention of the Senate that this chamber has been brought under criticism in the matter. In the discussions which have taken place in the other place, and in the press, it has been pointed out that we are only dealing with this matter tonight and that this has meant a delay of some nine days.

Hon. Mr. Croll: That was said in the debate on the National Defence bill, not on this bill.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With respect to the intervention of Senator Croll, I would point out to him that that criticism was directed to this chamber in respect of this bill. He will find the reference at page 5180 of the Hansard of the other place.

It is true that some four different speakers criticized the Senate with respect to the bill to amend the National Defence Act. That criticism was more stringent, perhaps, because those who made it—and I must say I had not intended to bring this up, but the honourable senator has suggested it to me—pointed out that the Minister of National Defence had said that every day of delay in the passage of that bill meant a lessening of the morale of the armed forces and the incurring of costs to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars a day.

I refer to that, not to be critical of the honourable Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) because I have the very greatest admiration for all that he has done and is doing to maintain and, indeed, increase the prestige of the Senate. I refer to it for two reasons only. First, I think it would be unfortunate if criticism of this kind is made and we give the impression that we are burying our heads. Second, we should be prepared to accept this kind of criticism, to consider it carefully, and perhaps to be more careful in future in respect of allowing a situation to develop in which we can be accused of interrupting the normal legislative process because we do not happen to be in session.

I make no criticism of any individual senator, because I am fully aware of the fact that there are many reasons why senators are not always in their places here. On many occasions they are performing important and often essential public duties elsewhere. However, as a chamber I think we should consider carefully our duty to the public interest in this respect.

Another aspect of the bill before us is, of course, that it is another extension of the welfare state. I myself do not object to it on that ground. We are told that these provisions will cost another $61 million a year, which has to be added to the average of $300 million a year which is spent on family allowances, and which over the years since 1945 has meant a total expenditure of $6.5 billion for that purpose.

I am not surprised to find that there are some who criticize any extension of the welfare state on the ground that the Government is spending too much money; that people are being deprived of their incentive by measures such as this. It has always been my practice to ask such people: "If that is correct, will you tell me which of these welfare state extensions you would now rescind?" I have never received an answer to that question. Not one of those who criticized these extensions has yet said he would turn back the clock with respect to veterans' allowances, allowances to the aged, the blind, the disabled and the unemployed. I merely point out to this house that this is another extension of the welfare state—a costly one, but one of which I entirely approve.

A factor that has not received much comment in the discussion so far is the special provision made in the bill respecting the Province of Quebec. As the Minister of Finance told us, there is to be a financial equivalent paid to Quebec so that that province can operate its own youth allowance legislation. I do not object to that. It is my own feeling that any method that can be devised by the mind of man to smooth out some of these difficulties encountered in federal-provincial cultural and fiscal relations is all to the good. However, there is one feature of this bill that perhaps the honourable Leader of the Government would explain to us, because I do not understand it.

From my reading of the bill and the explanations given of it I understand there will be a deadline for opting out; that the bill as drafted allows any province which is already in the youth allowance business, if I may use that phrase, prior to royal assent, in effect, to make its own arrangements subject to financial reimbursement by the federal Government. But the statement has been made by the minister that after royal assent no other province may elect to do the same thing. I find that surprising. To me it is a retrograde step in the working out of a formula to meet the problem of provincial rights in this whole field of culture and education.

This is an entirely new principle, and I do not understand it. In other legislation where the principle of special consideration for those provinces which take a special stand on their provincial rights is involved, any province at any time can avail itself of the exemption. In the discussion of this bill it was clearly stated that that would not apply here; so that under this bill—unless it is amended as of the time of royal assent—no other province will be able to take advantage, if it wishes to, of the special consideration given to Quebec because that province is already in this field.

Finally, reference has been made to the question of what someone has called the age gap; that under this legislation these very generous allowances are available to 16- and 17-year-olds only. I say they are generous allowances because of the ancillary income tax provisions which greatly add to their family value, and because of the fact that they are to be available twelve months a year. Those are generous terms, and the Government is to be commended for going as far as it has.

However, as has been pointed out, very few students graduate from high school at the age of 17 years. I am not going to suggest today that these youth allowances should be immediately extended to the age of 18 years, although it is obvious that that would be desirable. We are told that that would cost an additional $30 million a year. But we might as well prepare ourselves for that kind of extension, because it seems to me that before too long there will be a demand, and a supportable demand, for it to be made in order to keep young people in school until they complete grade XII and possibly grade XIII.

In spite of the expedition that was given to the passage of this bill in the other place it was thoroughly discussed, and I would hope that it is in the program of the honourable Leader of the Government to give it the same expedition here even if that means bypassing the usual custom of sending it to a committee.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I am not going to enter into a discussion of any criticism of this house. I do not think it is worth while. But I would like to set the record straight with respect to the suggestion that Quebec enjoys some advantage as a result of this bill. That is not true in fact. Quebec has been in this field for some time. It has been paying youth allowances on the basis of ten months a year.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be allowed to interrupt the honourable senator to say that if he is assuming I was criticizing any special consideration given to Quebec, then he has completely misunderstood my meaning. I did not intend any criticism in that respect. My point was that whatever consideration is given to any province should be available after royal assent to all provinces. I want to make it very clear that I am not one of those who takes the attitude that the legitimate claims and considerations of Quebec in respect of its view of provincial rights are to be derogated. I do not take that view, and I did not raise the point to suggest in any way that that was my viewpoint. My only reason for raising the matter was to say that whatever considerations are given to any one province should, in my view, be given to all provinces.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I know my honourable friend well enough to know that he would not make any such suggestion, and I did not intend to indicate that he did. I just wish to put the facts squarely.

Quebec had been paying youth allowance since, I think, 1961 on the basis of 10 months a year. The administrative machinery was there; they took some pride in the fact that they were first in that aspect, and when it came time to disassemble that machinery for the purpose of introducing federal machinery, they said "No, we will continue on." That seemed to make sense, because they now agree to pay for 12 months instead of 10; so, it will cost them something more than it did before. There is no problem there. Those are the facts. The other provinces did not have any machinery or any administrative staff, and they in effect said, as long as we can leave that to the federal Government, why not let them pay for the administrative staff. That is the normal thinking of the average province in Canada, as I understand it from my experience.

In that way this situation came about. To the other provinces this is like a red hot stove. They would not touch it; they would rather leave it where it is at the present time. But Quebec, having the machinery, continues on in that way.

It is not my intention to suggest that the honourable senator was attempting to indicate that Quebec was being favoured, but for the purposes of the record I thought it worthwhile to indicate that they are under some obligation and responsibility in expenditure as a result of the youth allowance.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Will the honourable senator not agree that it is not really a question of how long they have been in that field but merely the fact that they have expressed a view—

The Hon. the Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Am I not permitted to ask a question?

The Hon. the Speaker: It is a strange form of question. If the honourable senator wishes only to ask a question, I will allow it.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With due respect, Your Honour, I believe I did phrase my question in an interrogative way, because I began by saying: "Will the honourable senator not agree?" I was about to ask him if he would agree that the essence of the matter is merely the desire of any one province to assert its provincial rights in a certain manner.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not think I can answer the question.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I had not intended to intervene in this debate tonight, but I wish to say how delighted I am that this legislation is before us. Since I would like it to pass as expeditiously as possible, I certainly do not intend to make a lengthy speech. However, I wish to express my approval.

As many honourable senators may know, before I was appointed to the Senate, I administered for some years the family allowances in New Brunswick. I found that a delightful position, particularly for a woman. There are not many female regional directors, but there should be, as it is a position in which a woman can find satisfaction and also contribute a great deal. During that time many cases came to my attention where parents with low incomes said that if we would continue the family allowances for a couple more years they were sure they could manage to put their children through high school. They seemed to think I had authority to make such payments, but I had to point out that I could pay only the allowances authorized by legislation.

This is a matter on which women's organizations have presented many briefs, both to me and to the federal Government, and I know that the present legislation will receive the highest commendation from the women's organizations.

I cannot recall any request being made to me to continue payments after age 18. Most parents seem to feel they could look after the situation if payments could be made for two years longer than is at present allowed under the Family Allowances Act.

Honourable senators, this is legislation for which I have been working. I feel it has been delayed too long already, so I will say only that this bill has my full support.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McGrand, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of a letter, dated June 26, 1964, addressed by the Prime Minister of Canada to all Provincial Premiers concerning a proposed conference to consider the Report of the Royal Commission on Health Services. (English and French texts).

Report of the Board of Trustees of the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Fund to Aid in Research on the Diseases of Children, including the Auditor General's Report on the Financial Statements of the Board, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 15 of the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund Act, chapter 33, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English and French texts).

Report of the Farm Credit Corporation, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the Operations of the Municipal Development and Loan Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 20 of the Municipal Development and Loan Act, chapter 13, Statutes of Canada, 1963, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General. (English and French texts).

Report of the National Librarian for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 13 of the National Library Act, chapter 330, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Army Benevolent Fund Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 13 of the Army Benevolent Fund Act, chapter 10, R.S.C., 1952, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General. (English text).

Report of the Agricultural Products Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Agricultural Products Board Act, chapter 4, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 21(1) of the Atomic Energy Control Act, chapter 11, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of Defence Construction (1951) Limited, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to sections 85 (3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Eastern Canada Farm Survey 1963. (English text).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II of Wednesday, July 8, 1964, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 36 of the Broadcasting Act, chapter 22, Statutes of Canada, 1958, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the Operation of Agreements with the Provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 9 of the said Act, chapter 28, Statutes of Canada, 1957. (English text).

Report of the National Capital Commission, Part I, for the fiscal year ended March 1, 1964, pursuant to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILL

MEOTA PIPE LINES LTD.—FIRST READING

Hon. John A. Robertson presented Bill S-39, to incorporate Meota Pipe Lines Ltd.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

HARBOURS AND PILOTAGE ACTS

BILL TO REPEAL—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-40, intituled an act to repeal certain acts of the Province of Newfoundland respecting harbours and pilotage.

Bill read first time.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading Tuesday next.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports 412 to 444, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 371 to 411, inclusive, which were presented on Tuesday, June 30.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted, on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 352, for the relief of Marjorie Edith Taylor Leroux.

Resolution 353, for the relief of Anne-Marie Balazs Somlo.

Resolution 354, for the relief of Giovanni Pallotta.

Resolution 355, for the relief of Barbara Ann Bell Sobrian.

Resolution 356, for the relief of Gilbert Long.

Resolution 357, for the relief of Helen Mary Mackay Moffat.

Resolution 358, for the relief of Horst Axmann.

Resolution 359, for the relief of Betty Audrey Sims Brendish.

Resolution 360, for the relief of Gisele Morency Houle.

Resolution 361, for the relief of Jean Lavaud.

Resolution 362, for the relief of Joseph Gaston Montpetit.

Resolution 363, for the relief of Jean Pelletier.

Resolution 364, for the relief of Yvonne St. Aubin Lemieux.

Resolution 365, for the relief of Irma Patricia Sabloff Robin.

Resolution 366, for the relief of Andree Akerib Levy.

Resolution 367, for the relief of Una Elizabeth Pritchard Dobell.

Resolution 368, for the relief of Yves Marie Aime Jouanet.

Resolution 369, for the relief of Howard Alexander Brown.

Resolution 370, for the relief of Dorothy Helen Websdale Ryan.

Resolution 371, for the relief of Magdalene (Madeline) Stefan Ruck.

Resolution 372, for the relief of Konrad Seitz.

Resolution 373, for the relief of Helen Schlesser Browman.

Resolution 374, for the relief of Rene Carrier.

Resolution 375, for the relief of Paul Romain Bernard Babeu.

Resolution 376, for the relief of Augustine Gingras Simard.

Resolution 377, for the relief of Rejeanne Fortin Bertrand.

Resolution 378, for the relief of Nell Gwendolyn Fleury Jull.

Resolution 379, for the relief of Jean Matton.

Resolution 380, for the relief of Shirley Grace Reid Ramsay.

Resolution 381, for the relief of Lew Shedlack.

Resolution 382, for the relief of Gilbert Gagnon.

Resolution 383, for the relief of Madelene Stattner Bornstein.

Resolution 384, for the relief of Edgar Louis Chaddock.

Resolution 385, for the relief of William Leathem.

Resolution 386, for the relief of Aglaia Valentza Papageorgiou Antypas.

Resolution 387, for the relief of Mary Theresa Johnson Mitchell.

Resolution 388, for the relief of Heidi Gertrude Kuss Foster.

Resolution 389, for the relief of Sotirios Steve Chiotakakos.

Resolution 390, for the relief of Glorie Louise Hercus Gallacher.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 16, 1964

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of The Canada Council, including the report of the Auditor General on the Financial Statements of the Council, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 23 of the Canada Council Act, chapter 3, Statutes of Canada, 1957. (English and French texts.)

Report of Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to sections 22 and 23(1) of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act, chapter 42, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Report of Canadian Arsenals Limited, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Report of the Centennial Commission, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 16 of the Centennial of Canadian Confederation Act, chapter 36, Statutes of Canada, 1963. (English and French texts.)

Report of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to sections 85 (3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Copies of letters received by the Prime Minister of Canada from the Premiers of Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Quebec, dated July 3, 6 and 7, 1964, concerning a proposed conference to consider the Report of the Royal Commission on Health Services. (English and French texts.)

Report on Prairie Farm Rehabilitation and Related Activities for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, pursuant to section 12 of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, chapter 214, R.S.C., 1952. (English text.)

Report of the Economic Council of Canada, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 21(1) of the Economic Council of Canada Act, chapter 11, Statutes of Canada, 1963, and section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Report of the Agricultural Stabilization Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 14 of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, chapter 22, Statutes of Canada, 1957-58. (English and French texts.)

Report on the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 13 of the said act, chapter 6, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English text.)

Report of the Northern Canada Power Commission, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, pursuant to section 24 of the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, chapter 196, R.S.C., 1952, as amended by chapter 42, Statutes of Canada, 1956, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Capital Budget of the Northern Canada Power Commission for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1964-992, dated July 3, 1964, approving same. (English text.)

PRIVATE BILL

THE GUARANTEE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-37, respecting The Guarantee Company of North America, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-90, to amend the National Defence Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-90, to amend the National Defence Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, July 20, 1964, at 8 p.m.

An Hon. Senator: On division.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: I take it the honourable Leader is expecting legislation from the other place by that time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, that is quite right. I expect by that time we will have for consideration the bill with respect to student loans and perhaps one other measure.

Motion agreed to.

HARBOURS AND PILOTAGE ACTS

BILL TO REPEAL—CONSIDERATION JULY 20

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave, seconded by honourable Senator Hugessen, that Order No. 3 on the Orders of the Day for Tuesday, July 21, 1964, be discharged and that the Bill S-40, intituled: "An Act to repeal certain Acts of the Province of Newfoundland respecting Harbours and Pilotage", be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday next, July 20, 1964.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 7, 1964

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-109, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1965.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

YOUTH ALLOWANCES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Fred A. McGrand moved the third reading of Bill C-108, to provide for the payment of Youth Allowances.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 412 to 444, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted, on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 391, for the relief of Nessie Brown Keller.

Resolution 392, for the relief of Anne Catherine Johnstone Faithful.

Resolution 393, for the relief of Doreen Elizabeth Greene Favreau.

Resolution 394, for the relief of Antoinette Fortier Douglas.

Resolution 395, for the relief of Jocelyn Penfold Tetley Davoud.

Resolution 396, for the relief of Eleanor Saller Gottlieb.

Resolution 397, for the relief of Jacqueline Valois Simard.

Resolution 398, for the relief of Laura Berbrier Barmash.

Resolution 399, for the relief of Marie Ghislaine Helen Lecouve Weir-Cowan.

Resolution 400, for the relief of Thérèse Cossette Blanchard.

Resolution 401, for the relief of Roslyn Doris Greenbaum Amar, otherwise known as Lynne Doris Green Amar.

Resolution 402, for the relief of Bela Torma.

Resolution 403, for the relief of John William Simon.

Resolution 404, for the relief of Mary Noreen Smith Griffith.

Resolution 405, for the relief of George Alfred Cote.

Resolution 406, for the relief of Leah (Laura) Goldstein Singer.

Resolution 407, for the relief of Alice Marie Fernande Demblon Xanthos, otherwise known as Alice Marie Fernande Demblon Xanthospolides.

Resolution 408, for the relief of Elise Desaulniers Laliberte.

Resolution 409, for the relief of Shirley May Anderson Bartos.

Resolution 410, for the relief of Arthur Stoltze.

Resolution 411, for the relief of Aviam Barbara Judith Resin Capelovitch.

Resolution 412, for the relief of John Bligouras.

Resolution 413, for the relief of Dina Canzer Soiffer.

Resolution 414, for the relief of Freda Linden Greenblatt.

Resolution 415, for the relief of Helen (Helene) Kupay Galaska.

Resolution 416, for the relief of Joan Eileen McEvoy Collard.

Resolution 417, for the relief of Marcel Renaut.

Resolution 418, for the relief of Mary Dombrosky Aspinall.

Resolution 419, for the relief of Raymond St-Jacques.

Resolution 420, for the relief of Lillian Dauber Haller.

Resolution 421, for the relief of Jean Paul Plante.

Resolution 422, for the relief of Marie Celine Sabine Ranger Albulet.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be placed on the Order Paper for consideration on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of resolutions numbered 352 to 390, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 352, for the relief of Marjorie Edith Taylor Leroux.

Resolution 353, for the relief of Anne-Marie Balazs Somlo.

Resolution 354, for the relief of Giovanni Pallotta.

Resolution 355, for the relief of Barbara Ann Bell Sobrian.

Resolution 356, for the relief of Gilbert Long.

Resolution 357, for the relief of Helen Mary Mackay Moffat.

Resolution 358, for the relief of Horst Axmann.

Resolution 359, for the relief of Betty Audrey Sims Brendish.

Resolution 360, for the relief of Gisele Morency Houle.

Resolution 361, for the relief of Jean Lavaud.

Resolution 362, for the relief of Joseph Gaston Montpetit.

Resolution 363, for the relief of Jean Pelletier.

Resolution 364, for the relief of Yvonne St. Aubin Lemieux.

Resolution 365, for the relief of Irma Patricia Sabloff Robin.

Resolution 386, for the relief of Andree Akerib Levy.

Resolution 367, for the relief of Una Elizabeth Pritchard Dobell.

Resolution 368, for the relief of Yves Marie Aime Jouanet.

Resolution 369, for the relief of Howard Alexander Brown.

Resolution 370, for the relief of Dorothy Helen Websdale Ryan.

Resolution 371, for the relief of Magdalene (Madeline) Stefan Ruck.

Resolution 372, for the relief of Konrad Seitz.

Resolution 373, for the relief of Helen Schlesser Browman.

Resolution 374, for the relief of Rene Carrier.

Resolution 375, for the relief of Paul Romain Bernard Babeu.

Resolution 376, for the relief of Augustine Gingras Simard.

Resolution 377, for the relief of Rejeanne Fortin Bertrand.

Resolution 378, for the relief of Nell Gwendolyn Fleury Jull.

Resolution 379, for the relief of Jean Matton.

Resolution 380, for the relief of Shirley Grace Reid Ramsay.

Resolution 381, for the relief of Lew Shedlack.

Resolution 382, for the relief of Gilbert Gagnon.

Resolution 383, for the relief of Madelene Stattner Bornstein.

Resolution 384, for the relief of Edgar Louis Chaddock.

Resolution 385, for the relief of William Leathem.

Resolution 386, for the relief of Aglaia Valentza Papageorgiou Antypas.

Resolution 387, for the relief of Mary Theresa Johnson Mitchell.

Resolution 388, for the relief of Heidi Gertrude Kuss Foster.

Resolution 389, for the relief of Sotirios Steve Chiotakakos.

Resolution 390, for the relief of Glorie Louise Hercus Gallacher.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

MOTION TO REFER BILL TO SUPREME COURT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 2, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

> That in the opinion of this House, the Government should immediately refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the opinion of that Court, the question of the constitutional validity of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act."

(Translation):

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honorable senators and distinguished colleagues, I rise to take part in this debate only to express my personal opinion on the motion under consideration.

You can be sure that in no way do I intend to cast any doubt on the arguments invoked by the sponsor of this measure, my distinguished colleague, Senator Jean-François Pouliot. In my opinion, he is one of our best jurists and I have great respect for him. However, for reasons which seem sensible to me, I disagree with him and I am sure he will not deny me the right to do so.

What is this bill about?

It amends the legislation concerning the salary and income of married women.

Paragraph 3A, which is an amendment to the Act, reads as follows:

> All the wages and the personal earnings of a married woman, and any acquisitions therefrom, and all proceeds and profits from any occupation or trade which she carries on separately from her husband...

This bill contains four other clauses concerning married women's rights.

Now, the married women's rights are personal rights, civil rights applicable to the individual. Consequently, I submit, without fear of contradiction, that this bill comes under the jurisdiction of paragraph 13, section 92 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:

> In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects herein after enumerated...

And in paragraph 13, the subjects enumerated are:

> Property and civil rights in that province.

Consequently, the bill which my learned colleague, Senator Pouliot, asks us to accept and to approve, is a bill coming under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. I do not think I have to speak at length on jurisprudence to explain better than does the British North America Act in section 92(13).

However, in my humble opinion,—and this is the opinion I express under this restriction —this bill should be passed, if necessary, by the Quebec legislature.

Therefore, I say that I will vote against this bill.

[Text]

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, on June 2 of this year Senator Flynn delivered a very interesting address concerning the motion before us. I wish to congratulate him, and to say that I support the opinion he expressed concerning this matter.

I also follow Senator Flynn's example in paying my compliments to Senator Pouliot, who is the author of a remarkable law book entitled Droit Fabricien, which in English is "Parochial Law". It is a large volume which is really a mine or treasure house of information. I have consulted it again and again in my practice of law. It is a most useful treatise. The documentation it contains is very precious to all those who have studied the contemporary problems of the fabrique, the corporation in charge of the administration of our parishes.

I wish to add that the bill before us is a public one. It could be called a private member's public bill. Last year a law officer of the Department of Justice expressed the opinion that senators did not have the right to introduce public legislation. In the other place every year as all honourable senators know, dozens and dozens of public bills are introduced by members. I fail to find any provision that would put us on another footing and deprive us of that initiative.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: I am of the opinion that Senator Pouliot has the right to introduce the legislation that is before us. By this motion we are given an opportunity of refreshing our memories on constitutional matters. I admit that I have been obliged to read again a certain number of cases so as to discover how our courts have interpreted our constitution concerning the jurisdiction of this Parliament on the subject of marriage and divorce, under paragraph 26 of section 91 of the British North America Act.

I have examined also the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures, to which Senator Dupuis referred a few moments ago—that jurisdiction with respect to property and civil rights given them by paragraph 13 of section 92 of the British North America Act, and also the jurisdiction with respect to the solemnization of marriage given by paragraph 12 of section 92.

The question which Senator Pouliot wishes to submit to the Supreme Court concerns the capacity of married women. It must be kept in mind that he does not deal with the capacity of women to contract a marriage. This bill pretends to regulate the civil effects or consequences of marriage. If we adopt the opinion that is embodied in this bill it seems to me that married women would practically be deprived of the provisions of the Civil Code, and that anything they might or might not do would be beyond the jurisdiction of the local Parliament. In trying to ascertain the rights of married women we have to ask ourselves if such rights as contained in the present legislation are a matter of federal or provincial jurisdiction.

Provincial jurisdiction in the matter of civil rights is, in my opinion, the cornerstone of our Constitution. Quebec would never have entered the federal Union in 1867 if assurance had not been given that its legislature would be competent in the matter of civil rights. In other words, it was assured its legislature would be competent in the matter of private law. Quebec was anxious to retain the custom of Paris as it is embodied in the Code, which at that time had just been adopted. The Civil Code came into force in Quebec in 1865.

The civil effects of marriage form an important part of the Civil Code, and the jurisdiction given the Canadian Parliament by section 92 concerning marriage and divorce is an exception, an established exception to the general jurisdiction given the provincial legislature with respect to property and civil rights.

Then there is an exception to the exception, which is the solemnization of marriage. The Fathers of Confederation and the population of Quebec in 1867 were considering federal jurisdiction in respect of marriage and divorce in so far as it affected divorce. In other words, they were considering that, in all the matters which are consequences of marriage but which have not a direct bearing on the validity of marriage, the provincial legislature was competent.

For a long time that was the current opinion, the opinion of the people at large and even of the legal faculty when I studied, but we were still under the impression that this section concerning marriage and divorce meant the jurisdiction limited to marriage with respect to divorce. The section in question, section 91, paragraph 26, was originally described as being mentioned to make sure that a marriage valid in one province, celebrated according to the lex loci, the law of the place, could not be contested in another province. There is a statement of some of the Fathers of Confederation to that effect. In other words, they wanted to avoid a conflict of laws, a conflict between the statutes of the different provinces in the matter of marriage. I admit that the jurisdiction is interpreted by our courts as being favourable to the federal power.

This point in particular is clearly illustrated by the case cited by Senator Pouliot in the matter of the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada of certain questions concerning marriage. We find the judgment of the Privy Council in this case in 1912 Appeal Cases at page 880. It has been decided that the Canadian Parliament has exclusive jurisdiction concerning the validity of marriage, subject to the exceptions covering the conditions affecting the solemnization of marriage.

Therefore, I am inclined to believe that the Canadian Parliament would be competent to legislate concerning the impediments to marriage, such as consanguinity and impotency. But, except for precisely the questions of the impediments to marriage, the Canadian Parliament has not adopted any legislation which would affect our Civil Code in the matter of marriage except, as is well understood, the divorce bills which are exceptions to the general law of the province and which are valid according to the Constitution.

What I wish to make quite clear is that our Civil Code remains in force as long as it is not repealed to some extent by legislation within the jurisdiction either of the Canadian Parliament or of the provincial legislature. The only case which I know of was where an amendment was introduced here in Ottawa to allow a widower to marry the sister of his deceased wife and to allow a widow to marry a brother of her deceased husband. The same provisions were afterwards extended to the niece or nephew of the deceased husband or deceased wife.

The Parliament of the United Canada which adopted as a statute our Civil Code of Lower Canada, that Parliament was not a federation. Its constitution was in the nature of a legislative union and all the jurisdiction, all the powers which were divided in 1867 between the central power and the local powers, between the Parliament and the legislatures, those powers at that time were fully possessed by the single Parliament of the United Canada.

But what is the problem? It is the amendments which might be introduced in the chapters concerning marriage. It is the amendments which could be introduced by the revision of our Civil Code which is still being made in Quebec. As a matter of fact, Senator Pouliot was one of the jurists chosen at the origin to prepare that revision.

Now we come to Bill S-16 which pretends to confer some rights on all married women. I understand that it would apply from coast to coast, but you will realize that I will limit my remarks to the Province of Quebec. The intentions of Senator Pouliot were excellent, and I am sure that all the women of Quebec are very thankful to him. He thought that it was necessary to do something to remove the limitations, the restrictions which were affecting the married women in Quebec. As a matter of fact, they were put in the list of persons who are incapable of contract.

All this has been changed. Clause 3A in the bill before us is no more necessary, for the following reasons. First of all it was already covered to a great extent by Article 1425a of our Civil Code which was enacted in 1931. That article gives to married women who are working the full ownership of the proceeds of their personal work; it gives to them also the full ownership, the administration and disposition, of the assets which they buy, which they acquire with the proceeds or with the economies of the proceeds of their work.

Another bill numbered 16—and Senator Flynn remarked that it was a curious coincidence that the bill in the good old city of Quebec and the bill here in Ottawa bear the same number, 16—received royal assent on June 18, 1964. That Quebec statute is, so to speak, the emancipation of the married women of the Province of Quebec. They may dispose of their personal property moveable or immoveable. They may appear in court for actions which are of a moveable nature or of a possessory nature. In fact with respect to clause 3a in the bill before us, these provisions are already existing in the provincial legislation to which I have just referred.

The next clause is number 3B and concerns bank deposits of married women. Our Bank Act here in Ottawa, chapter 41 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1952, by section 75 gives to any person, including married women of course, the full capacity to make deposits for any amount in any chartered bank, and to withdraw them. In the Quebec Savings Banks Act, which is chapter 42 of our Revised Statutes of Canada, we find the same provision. We find it also in the credit unions, which are so dear to the heart of Senator Vaillancourt. Under the 1963 Quebec statute, chapter 57, section 16, married women may now deposit money at any credit union or caisse populaire and they may withdraw that money without any authorization being necessary.

Clause 3c of the bill deals with the case of fraud by the husband. Of course the general provisions of our Civil Code are sufficient to cover any case of fraud, and we have the axiom that fraud corrupts anything, fraus corrumpit omnia.

Next we come to clause 3D concerning the debts of the wife. The wife is responsible for her own debts. As a general rule, the husband is not responsible. He may be responsible if it is what we call the "necessities of life" which have been purchased for the household. I understand that is the same as the principle in English common law. As a matter of fact, the household has benefited by the food or clothes which have been purchased. Under the present system, with bill 16, the Quebec statute, the married woman has, as I have already explained, the administration and disposition of her personal property and she has the judicial capacity which I have described.

If we look at the jurisprudence, we find the decision of Conger vs. Kennedy (1896), volume 26 of the Reports of the Supreme Court of Canada, at page 397, concerning the Northwest Territories. The local authority had been given practically the same powers as the provincial legislature, in particular, powers concerning property and civil rights. The point in question was whether the expression "personal property" was a subject falling within the jurisdiction of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the Northwest Territories, or a subject concerning marriage and divorce, falling under the jurisdiction of the federal authority.

The argument of Senator Dupuis and Senator Flynn is also my argument, that the personal property of a married woman is a question concerning property and civil rights. In other words, it was within the jurisdiction of the local authority and did not affect marriage and divorce; it was not concerning the capacity of the wife to contract a marriage, and so on.

Under those circumstances, I am sorry, but I cannot find any reason to refer to our Supreme Court the bill which has been introduced by our honourable colleague. Moreover, I would add that it is not opportune under the present circumstances to contest, so to speak, indirectly the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature in a matter which is so important in its civil consequences as marriage.

I submit that when there is a revision of our Civil Code, then will be the proper time to introduce legislation here in Ottawa, if we consider it to be necessary. At the present time there is, so to speak, confrontation of the federal power with the provincial legislatures, and I do not feel that we have any reason to introduce legislation here which surely is of doubtful character in its nature, and which I believe the great majority of the population clearly feels is within the scope of the powers of the Quebec Legislature.

(Translation):

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I did not expect to speak to this bill.

[Text]

I was not expecting to speak on this matter. However, in spite of circumstances which have caused my absence from the Senate for some time, now that I am here, I feel this question is so important that I should enunciate what in my opinion are a few essential points.

I fully agree with the views expressed by the honourable Senator Dupuis, the honourable Senator Gouin and the honourable Senator Flynn.

I have studied the decisions of our courts, which have been referred to this afternoon, and I do not intend to discuss them. What I have in mind is to clarify two points in this debate. The first concerns the capacity of men and women to enter into contracts. My second point is that once a man or woman or both have the capacity to enter into such a contract, how far can they go with respect to the contract they have made? That has been made more clearly in relation to marriage.

Before Confederation, the provinces dealt with the question of marriage. At the time of Confederation, however, the Fathers of Confederation had before them the problem of separating the federal and the provincial powers. It was made clear in the Constitution that personal property and civil rights, before Confederation, were within the jurisdiction of the provinces, which was to remain unchanged except by amendment, which would make an exception to the well-understood rule. Civil rights did not return to the federal jurisdiction just because there was a Confederation.

What are property and civil rights, and in what way were they affected by Confederation? The Fathers of Confederation decided on the question of marriage, which in itself was most important and had not been considered by a federal organization or a government, so-called, before Confederation.

What would they do concerning the right to contract marriage? Would that continue to be under the jurisdiction of the provinces or would it be transferred to the federal authority? If it was to be transferred, as it was, to the federal authority, that would be an exception to the character of legislation dealing with property and civil rights; it was a right to legislate on human property—on the association of man and woman. Therefore, the Fathers of Confederation considered that the right of men and women to marry would be better governed by federal law.

Contracts between the parties after marriage were to be regarded as contracts in consequence of their right to marry. The right to marry, in a way, was a civil right, but it was also a social right, and the Fathers of Confederation decided, quite properly, that that social or civil right should be within the jurisdiction of the federal authority.

Therefore, honourable senators, let us make a distinction between the authority to involve oneself in the contract of marriage, and the authority after marriage to enter into contracts under civil law, dealing with civil property, and so on. The right to enter into marriage is in accordance with the Bible, and the principle already set down in the days of the ancient Hebrews, that after marriage the spouses would become as one flesh and one body.

The Fathers of Confederation decided that jurisdiction over marriage belonged to the federal authority. That is why we have section 91 of the British North America Act. Section 91 says:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces . . .

So the principle is there: the federal authority will have the right exclusively to pass laws on all matters not assigned especially to the provinces. That is clear enough.

> . . . but not so as to restrict the Generality of the foregoing Terms of this Section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada—

"Exclusive" means very strongly in favour of the federal authority.

> —extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated.

So, the "subjects next hereinafter enumerated" are conferred exclusively on the federal authority.

With that in mind we have subsection 26, "Marriage and Divorce." So it is clear that the Confederation Act gives the exclusive power over legislation to the federal authority in all matters herein mentioned provided they do not encroach on matters vested exclusively in the provinces. We see here that the federal right exclusively to legislate on matters refers to the following subsections, and I am dealing especially with subsection 26, "Marriage and Divorce." So let us be clear: it is not concerned with the civil consequences of marriage and divorce; it is more general than that. One could say it covers every point or distinction that arises out of the question of marriage and divorce. But it is said that the federal power is given:

> . . . in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces.

So that is the exception.

When we come to the subsections of section 91 enumerating the powers that are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal authority, we see that "marriage and divorce," is included. But let us not forget the exception:

> . . . in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces,

So now we know that "marriage and divorce", in general terms, is a subject matter of federal legislation exclusively. Does the same act make an exception in relation to what we are discussing now, property and civil rights? Yes; that is by section 92. It says:

> In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated . . .

That section deals with the exclusive powers of the provinces, and that is the exception to the enumerated subsections in section 91. So whatever you read in section 91, especially as to marriage and divorce, if there is an exception that touches the matter even in a restricted sense, if you find that restriction in section 92 as to exclusive provincial powers, then the restriction in the provincial powers carries over the federal powers.

Let us read again from section 92:

> In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated . . .

That is the power of the provinces, and under it we find subsection 13, "Property and Civil Rights in the Province." So, on the one hand the constitution has given the federal authority the exclusive power to legislate in matters related to marriage and divorce, with such exception as may exist regarding the provincial power; and in section 92, under the provincial powers, we find as an exception that the provinces alone have the exclusive right to legislate in regard to matters of property and civil rights.

We have to see if there can be any reconciliation between the exclusive jurisdiction granted to the federal authority concerning marriage and divorce and the exclusive jurisdiction given to the provinces concerning property and civil rights. That is where we have to consider the essence of what is meant by those two exceptions.

Is there any possibility of reconciling the two? They are very easily reconciled when you consider the federal power regarding marriage and divorce is one specially given as to the persons of the contracting parties as to, not the devolution of their property but the devolution of their human essence; and when you consider that under the provincial rights what is given as a power which the federal authority cannot touch is the power to pass exclusive laws on property and civil rights.

So, once the parties want to get married they have to go and, if I may say so, consecrate their person in that divine institution of marriage. That should be a federal power throughout the whole country. Once they are married they can enter into any kind of contract between themselves or with other parties, as to their individual property, and so on. They can do that by contracts that are in conformity with the provincial laws.

I am sorry that I could not give this matter more preparation and address you with greater clarity, but to me it seems clear. If it were only my authority, it would not mean much, but jurisprudence has been developed to that effect. Therefore, let us consider in the future that it has been well decided by our courts that when our boys and girls want to marry and enter into a contract, a saint contract, a social contract, they will have to follow the federal law respecting this matter. After marriage, if they have to deal with a crime it would still be under the federal law because the criminal law is governed by our Criminal Code. But if they have to deal between themselves or with other people, or pass property from one to the other, or sell a house that the wife has received from her father, it is according to the laws of the province, and any account she has as a consequence of that is governed by provincial law. She does not have to account to her husband in that matter because provincial law does not cover it. That is the whole story.

I could take a minute more, but I do not want to do so, to enumerate the many contracts the wife could make with other people regarding her rights, the right to work, the right to be paid a salary, and so on. These rights are governed by provincial law and they will cease to be so governed only when provincial authorities pass a law to that effect.

That is what I am told they are discussing in Quebec, but let us hope they will not change that because it is the essence of Confederation. Confederation brought together a number of provinces, some of which were not already provinces, with the idea of helping them to live in a common nation, a common state, and to preserve their civil rights, their civil life, and their civil property. All that they have. These rights the governments of the provinces already had, and the property of the provinces remained the property of the provinces after Confederation. To my mind that appears clear.

At this point I should like to render homage to the honourable senator who spoke for the bill, for it is obvious that he has given the matter great study. He has approached the question in such a way as to make it possible for everybody to think more of it, and he deserves many thanks for having opened the eyes and ears and intelligence of so many people on the matter. It has brought many senators from Quebec to a sense of distinguishing between the essence of the contract of marriage and the subsequent arrangement that the man and wife might make between themselves or with other persons.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I feel rather dazed as I rise from beneath the avalanche of beautiful flowers which have been showered upon me by my learned and generous colleagues. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate to Tuesday, July 21.

Debate adjourned.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill S-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Marriage and Divorce Act".—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I ask that this Order stand until Tuesday, July 21.

Order stands.

CRIMINAL CODE (HABEAS CORPUS)

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 17, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Lang for the second reading of Bill C-35, to amend the Criminal Code (Habeas Corpus)

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators will remember that this bill was explained in a very masterly and comprehensive fashion by Senator Lang not so very long ago. Since, however, it deals with a matter which is rather complicated I think some further remarks are in order. Let me preface my remarks by saying that I do not speak on the bill in any sense of controversy with what my honourable colleague Senator Lang has said, nor, indeed, do I disagree with what was said by Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), or by Senator Croll, my deskmate.

Honourable senators, this bill looks simple indeed. Its purpose is to add just three words, "or habeas corpus", to a clause already existing in the Criminal Code. This clause provides for an appeal to the Court of Appeal in certain matters, and is not altered except by the addition of appeal in habeas corpus proceedings. Moreover, habeas corpus should be well understood, as it is an ancient right much cherished in English law for upwards of ten centuries.

Habeas corpus is primarily for the protection of the individual and for the liberty of the subject. It is in principle a prerogative of the Crown. The Monarch is supposed to be concerned with the wellbeing of everyone within the realm, and therefore the Crown has both the right and the duty to inquire into the legality of imprisonment or detention of the individual subject. Literally, the phrase means "produce the body" and the writ is directed to the jailer, custodian or captor or any person detaining another person.

There is record of the use of the principle in the reign of Edward the Confessor, prior to the Norman conquest, and it is one of the concessions exacted from King John at Runnymede, and incorporated in Magna Carta. It first appears in statutory law in England in 1679, the preamble to the act reading "For the better securing of the liberty of the subject."

I quote Lord Mansfield, one of the great judges of the past:

> If any man be imprisoned by another habeas corpus can be granted to those who imprison him, for the King ought to have an account rendered to him concerning the liberty of his subjects and the restrain thereof.

The amendment to the Code proposed in this bill certainly has the virtue of brevity, but the subject is not as simple as the brief amendment and the economy of words would make it appear. While I approve the general purpose of the bill, I submit that it requires careful consideration in committee and amendment in important respects. It is for that reason I speak to you rather than leave the matter entirely to my friend Senator Lang. I trust, therefore, that honourable senators will bear with me when I try to make clear an important subject and a decidedly confusing and complicated procedure.

The bill mentions the two words habeas corpus, but there have been in the past no less than five distinctively different proceedings known in English law under that name, any one of which in its modern form might conceivably be mistaken for the one intended.

For example, there was habeas corpus ad justificandum, which required the person to whom the writ was directed to be present and give evidence before the court of issue. In modern times, we call this writ a subpoena. We certainly have no desire to grant appeal from a subpoena in all matters covered by the Criminal Code.

Then there was habeas corpus ad respondendum, which required the production of the named prisoner lawfully detained in order that he might answer further charges to be laid against him. This result is now accomplished by an order of the judge. We surely have no desire to give the prisoner the advantage of possible confusion and delay by granting him a right of appeal in circumstances such as those.

I pass over two more forms of the writ and come to the most important of the several writs of habeas corpus, namely that used by Edward I, mentioned in Magna Carta and adopted by Parliament in 1679, and which, no doubt, was intended to be affected by this bill. This is the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, and has to do with the liberty of the subject or of anyone within the realm.

Honourable senators may observe that the draftsmen of the dominion Supreme Court Act took no chances on any confusion in habeas corpus terminology. If they turn to section 27(1) of that act, they will note that the writ which is the subject of this proposed legislation is mentioned specifically by name as habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. If we are to grant the proposed appeal mentioned in this bill we should certainly amend the wording accordingly.

Furthermore, in order to adequately consider the substance of this bill, honourable senators should realize that there are several classes of circumstances in which this writ has application. It is applied in both civil and criminal proceedings. The writ may issue in civil matters such as the custody of children, mental cases and confinement for offences under provincial statutes. These are, of course, within provincial jurisdiction.

I am very much interested and somewhat concerned with the provincial phases of this situation. There is upon the statute books of the Province of Ontario an act entitled "The Habeas Corpus Act", being chapter 163 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1950. Section 1(1) of that act is as follows:

> Where a person, other than a person imprisoned for debt, or by process in any action, or by the judgment, conviction or order of the Supreme Court, court of general session of the peace or other court of record is confined or restrained of his liberty, a judge of the Supreme > Court, upon complaint made by or on behalf of the person so confined, or restrained, if it appears by affidavit that there is reasonable and probable ground for the complaint, shall award a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum directed to the person in whose custody or power the person so confined or restrained is, returnable immediately before the judge so awarding the same, or before any judge of the Supreme Court or before the Court of Appeal.

According to section 8 of this act—and presumably this is in the law of other provinces, although I did not check because it was not necessary—a person dissatisfied with the judgment rendered by the court on the return of the writ may appeal to the Court of Appeal, which is clothed with all the powers of the court below, to confirm the detention or discharge the prisoner. But I call special attention to the fact that while there is an appeal from the judgment rendered on the return of the writ, there is no appeal by either the applicant or the Crown or any one interested against the refusal or granting of the writ.

I mention this provincial law because it would seem that the Province of Ontario gives us a lead, in that it gives an appeal from judgments on the return of the writ in matters within provincial jurisdiction but gives no appeal with regard to the issue of the writ. Incidentally, I might also mention that it refers to habeas corpus by its full and proper name.

I turn now to habeas corpus arising out of matters within dominion jurisdiction, because this is what is interesting at the present time. This too is divided into two classes, one civil and the other criminal. If the applicant for a writ is liable to be charged under a dominion statute, other than the Criminal Code, the matter is considered a civil proceeding and is governed by the dominion Supreme Court Act. There is a special division of that act devoted to habeas corpus, and section 57, under the heading "Habeas Corpus", is as follows:

> (1) Every judge of the Court—

That is, of the Supreme Court of Canada.

> —except in matters arising out of any claim for extradition under any treaty, has concurrent jurisdiction with the courts or judges of the several provinces, to issue the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, for the purpose of an inquiry into the cause of commitment in any criminal case under any Act of the Parliament of Canada.

Not only do the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada have the right to issue these writs and to carry the cases through to the rendering of judgment in habeas corpus proceedings, but there is also a provision for appeal. Subsection (2) of section 57 reads:

> If the judge refuses the writ or remands the prisoner, an appeal lies to the Court.

That is, after you issue your writ out of the Supreme Court of Canada and you have your case tried before a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, there is then an appeal to the full court. But, as I understand the law, there is not an appeal if you issue your writ in the Supreme Court of Ontario or, presumably, in the Supreme Courts of the other provinces. I have described the right of appeal that there exists. It is from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Ontario only, and not from the refusal or granting of the writ.

It was partly because of this section—that is, the section giving a right to a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus and to hear the case on the return of the writ—that when the Senate revised the Criminal Code in 1951-52—we did not amend section 691, that is, the one which is before us in this Bill C-35, by including habeas corpus in the right of appeal in criminal matters. At that time it was recognized practice by common law for counsel to shop from judge to judge and from court to court until a habeas corpus writ was obtained and the desired relief secured. Under such circumstances there was no need of appeal. The appeal which was suggested at that time was restrictive rather than enlarging the right of the person affected by the writ. It was suggested in the act passed in the Commons that an appeal be granted, but it was so restrictive that we of the subcommittee felt that we should refuse to carry it into effect, and so we did not amend the Code at that time. Under such circumstances there was no need for an appeal, because the door of the Supreme Court of Canada was wide open to applications in the first instance. I may say that had we thought differently at that time, and had we suggested an amendment of the Code such as is before us now, I am quite sure that the wording of the amendment would have been very different from that which we will find in Bill C-35, to which I am now speaking.

Please note that the drafters of the Supreme Court Act carefully specified the particular writ of habeas corpus intended, by spelling it out, "habeas corpus ad subjiciendum." Note also that while this act clothes the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada with all the powers of the judges of the several provinces, it provides a dissatisfied applicant with a right of appeal to the full court under section 1(2), which I have just read.

The draftsmen of this act evidently realized, as seemingly the drafters of this Bill C-35 did not, that there are two separate and distinct stages in habeas corpus proceedings. There is first the application for the writ, which may be granted or may be refused; and next there is judgment which is given on the return of the writ, after the hearing of the evidence. Note that the appeal applies to both proceedings—number one, if a judge refuses the writ, and number two, on the writ's return if he remands the prisoner.

The federal Supreme Court Act continues to specify and amplify the powers of the court in habeas corpus proceedings. Section 58 is as follows:

> In any habeas corpus matter before a judge of the Supreme Court, or on any appeal to the Supreme Court in any habeas corpus matter, the Court or judge has the same power to bail, discharge or commit the prisoner or person, or to direct him to be detained in custody or otherwise to deal with him as any court, judge, or justice of the peace having jurisdiction in any such matters in any province of Canada.

The powers of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada pertaining to the liberty of the subject are not to be exceeded by the powers of any other court in Canada. Apparently, these powers apply to appeals.

Section 59, subsections (1) and (2) still further amplify the powers of the Supreme Court in habeas corpus matters on appeals, to direct the appellant to be present or left in charge, unless on bail.

It has been submitted that appeals in habeas corpus matters should not be allowed to the Crown because of the possible delays involved in the hearing of appeals. This is cared for, at least to some degree, in the Supreme Court Act, in section 60, which says:

> An appeal to the Supreme Court in any habeas corpus matter shall be heard at an early day, whether in or out of the prescribed sessions of the Court.

That is to say, in the matter of the liberty of the subject, vacations do not count in the Supreme Court of Canada.

Honourable senators, I have described rather fully these provisions of the Supreme Court Act, showing how carefully and comprehensively habeas corpus matters have been dealt with in dominion legislation.

Now there comes the weakness, at which this bill points. One might readily jump to the conclusion that these sections include both criminal and civil matters, that is, habeas corpus arising out of a criminal charge or prospective criminal charge, or out of a civil matter such as I have enumerated, the care of children, and so on. Unfortunately, this is not so. Section 40 of the Supreme Court Act prohibits appeals to the Supreme Court in proceedings for or upon writs of habeas corpus arising out of a criminal charge. It is this that justifies something of the nature of the bill that is before us. It was because of section 40 in the Supreme Court Act and also because of the confusion that exists in the matter of appeals from the Supreme Court of Ontario and other provinces, and in the provincial law, that Chief Justice McRuer of the Supreme Court of Ontario, in the case of Re Shane, urged the action which I trust Parliament will take now in connection with this matter.

In the Re Shane case the court of appeal held there was no right of appeal from a decision of a judge of the High Court of Ontario to the Court of Appeal in extradition proceedings and, by necessary implication, in habeas corpus proceedings.

Mr. Justice McRuer, in connection with that case—speaking obiter, it is true—said it was formerly assumed that the applicant for relief by way of habeas corpus in criminal matters could apply to every judge in turn. His Lordship found that the right at common law was not to go from judge to judge but rather from court to court. As the Judicature Act had combined all these former courts in one court, the Supreme Court of Judicature, a judgment of any judge of that court was final and conclusive. Mr. Justice McRuer conclude his judgment as follows:

> In disposing of this case, I respectfully suggest that prompt action shall be taken by the proper authorities to resolve the confusion that now exists and to provide for the right of appeal in habeas corpus matters that was thought to exist prior to the decision of the Court of Appeal in this case. In a case involving the liberty of the subject, the decision ought not to rest in the hands of one person, nor should there be any question of a right to prolong the final disposition of a case by making successive applications to thirty-one Judges each exercising coordinate jurisdiction as a Judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

In the Re Shane case, the court held there was no right of appeal. Mr. Justice McRuer continues, in an obiter way, but nevertheless in a most authoritative manner, to end what we lawyers have always thought of as "shopping from judge to judge," in order to find some judge among the 31 who would grant our request. In my judgment that is out. I do not think the statement made by the Chief Justice is binding upon his fellow judges, because it was not necessary to the decision—it was obiter. However, I am perfectly satisfied that from now on the judges of the Province of Ontario, if not of other provinces, will adopt his view, that the decision of the first judge will be final and conclusive.

I thoroughly agree with Chief Justice McRuer, and accordingly I submit that we of the Senate should examine most carefully Bill C-35, which is now before us.

Section 691(1) of the Criminal Code says:

> An appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from a decision granting or refusing the relief sought in proceedings by way of mandamus, certiorari or prohibition.

And it is suggested in this bill that at the end of that clause in the code now existing, there be added the words, "or habeas corpus".

I have already explained why we should specify habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, if one is to avoid possible further confusion; and while I approve very strongly the general object and purpose of this proposed legislation, I submit that it should be very carefully considered. I have some serious reservations with regard to the present bill.

This bill as it now reads would confer a right of appeal in applications for writs of habeas corpus upon the Crown, represented as he may be by the Attorney-General or one of his representatives, upon anyone detaining or having custody of another person, as well as upon the applicant for the writ. In my opinion, if any judge is convinced that someone in detention should be brought before the court in order that his jailor, custodian or captor be required to justify his actions, that, in my opinion, should be final.

The possible victim should be produced forthwith and immediately, or at such time as the court may direct or order. There should be no right of appeal to prevent or delay prompt inquiry into the legality of his detention. There is no virtue in appeals against the issue of the writ. Immediately and forthwith, let those in authority state their right, if right does exist, by which they abridge the liberty of the subject.

It is quite another matter when the writ is refused to an applicant who claims to be the victim of illegal detention, and who may be. I am repeating the thought which my friend Senator Macdonald stated so clearly. I again quote the Chief Justice:

> In a case involving the liberty of the subject, the decision ought not to rest in the hands of one person.

There should surely be appeal available to an applicant to whom the writ is refused, but to no one other than the applicant; certainly not to those called before the court to account for some arbitrary detention of another person. I think we should always have had that appeal, and we should certainly have it now, since shopping from court to court has been abolished, I think, by the obiter statement of Chief Justice McRuer.

The judgment on the return of the writ is, again, quite a different matter. Here, both applicant and custodian are present including, it may be, the Attorney-General, the Superintendent of Prisons, the Chief of Police, the head of some public institution or a committee or guardian. None of these should be subject to the decision of one person.

I can think of circumstances in which the freeing of someone in custody might be attended by serious consequences.

On the return of the writ there should be an appeal to all parties concerned.

I wish to raise a further question, and a new one, of considerable gravity. I question whether an appeal to the provincial court of appeal is sufficient in all cases. Why prohibit appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada in habeas corpus proceedings in criminal matters, as we do now? We give our judges of the Supreme Court of Canada co-ordinate jurisdiction with judges of the provincial courts in applications for writs of habeas corpus and in pronouncing judgment on the return of the writ. Why not give the right to conclude a case on appeal in the highest court, as well as to commence and conduct it there? I would allow the applicant for a writ of habeas corpus, and I would allow both parties on the return of the writ, a right to choose the appeal court in which they have the greatest confidence, either the court of appeal or the Supreme Court of Canada.

I therefore suggest, honourable senators, that when this bill is referred to a committee —and it should certainly be referred to a committee—that the last three words, "or habeas corpus" be struck out, and something along the line of the following be substituted therefor:

> (2) An appeal by the applicant for a write of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum in event of its refusal, and by all parties from a judgment on the return of such writ, lies to the Court of Appeal or to the Supreme Court of Canada, as the first in time to file notice of appeal shall determine.

I will not say that this is the last word in the proposed amendment, but it will at least express clearly what I have in mind. I suggest this amendment, and I hope that its wording will be thoroughly studied and perhaps improved.

If we give an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, we should certainly add the phrase which I have already quoted from the Supreme Court Act, as follows:

> (3) Appeals in habeas corpus matters shall be heard by the Court to which the appeal is directed at an early date whether in or out of the prescribed sessions of the Court.

These instructions are given to the judges in the Supreme Court Act, and I think if we give an appeal in the Criminal Code, such as is proposed, or in its modified form as I have proposed, we should certainly add a provision of that nature.

Honourable senators, I should point out that Bill C-35 is a private member's bill, not a Government bill, and it was not prepared by the Department of Justice, as are most amendments to the Criminal Code. Such amendments are usually given the most intensive consideration before they reach us.

Honourable senators who were here in 1951 and 1952 will remember that we received a comprehensive revision of the whole Criminal Code, and how we in the Senate devoted ourselves to the bill for two sessions. We made no less than 80 amendments to that bill before it was passed, all of which were adopted by the Commons, accepted by the Department of Justice, and approved by the Minister of Justice at that time.

One of those matters is somewhat analogous to what we are doing now. At that time, 1951-1952, there was no appeal from a conviction or a sentence for contempt of court, either contempt in the face of the court or otherwise. The judgment of the judge involved in it was final and conclusive. I had the pleasure, satisfaction and, I may say, the honour to suggest an appeal. We adopted the appeal, and I remember I returned home that weekend thinking I had made myself permanently unpopular with the bench of Ontario. I attended a New Year's party at which a very large number of the judges were present, and to my pleasant surprise I found they were all in favour of the appeal. Some of them told me they had never liked the absolute, arbitrary character of the proceedings with regard to contempt, and one of them suggested that the right to convict for contempt would be very much more used in the future, when there would be an appeal available to the person charged, than had been the case in the past when the proceeding was arbitrary.

I am sorry that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce is not here, but I suggest that when we consider this bill we should invite the senior officials of the Justice Department to join us in our consideration of it; and I further suggest that they be given time to make a thorough and comprehensive study of this most important, complicated and confused matter so that when we do pass it, it will not be the product of chance, such as this Bill C-35. I suppose no one was more surprised at the bill having passed the Commons, than was its sponsor. It was not given the consideration it should have been given before it was sent to us. I suggest that we give the officers of the Justice Department plenty of time to study it thoroughly and to advise us when we meet in committee. They will have before them a concrete suggestion in the amendment which I propose.

I hope and I expect that this bill will be referred to a committee, probably the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, debate adjourned.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. A. L. Beaubien) informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa

16th July 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 16th July, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at about 5.35 p.m.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada.

An Act to amend the National Defence Act.

An Act to provide for the payment of Youth Allowances.

The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, July 20, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, July 20, 1964

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

THE QUEBEC BOARD OF TRADE—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-28, an Act respecting The Quebec Board of Trade, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following three amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

1. Page 1, Lines 8-11. Substitute for subclause (1) of clause 1, the following: "The name of the Corporation, in English, is hereby changed to Board of Trade of the District of Quebec, and in French, to Chambre de Commerce du District de Quebec".

2. Page 2, Line 4. Delete the words "metropolitan area" and substitute therefor the word "district".

3. Page 2, Line 16. Delete the words "metropolitan area" and substitute therefor the word "district".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: I move, with leave, that the amendments be concurred in now.

Honourable senators will see that the first amendment proposed by the House of Commons makes a slight change in the name of the corporation.

There was some discussion in the Senate committee as to whether the words "metropolitan area" should be left in. The Commons agreed between the parties to substitute the word "district" for the words "metropolitan area". This is perfectly agreeable to the sponsors of the bill.

Amendments concurred in.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of text of the Final Communiqué on the Meeting of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers, dated July 15, 1964.

COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS MEETING

FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Vaillancourt, that the final communiqué of the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, dated July 15, 1964, and tabled this day, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

Motion agreed to.

For text of communiqué, see appendix page 862.

HARBOURS AND PILOTAGE ACTS

BILL TO REPEAL—SECOND READING

Hon. Eric Cook moved the second reading of Bill S-40, to repeal certain acts of the Province of Newfoundland respecting harbours and pilotage.

He said: Honourable senators, on that happy day in the year 1949 when Newfoundland became part of Canada, the two countries went together, as in the words of the popular song, "like love and marriage." However, there were numerous minor legal details which required to be tidied up, and that is the purpose of Bill S-40, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain acts of the Province of Newfoundland respecting harbours and pilotage."

The first question which will probably come to the minds of honourable senators is, why is the Parliament of Canada repealing an act of the Province of Newfoundland? The answer to this question will of course be found in the document entitled, "Terms of Union of Newfoundland and Canada," which forms a schedule to the British North America Act, 1949. Paragraph (1) of Term 18 under the heading of "Continuation of Laws" provides in part as follows:

> Subject to these Terms, all laws in force in Newfoundland at or immediately prior to the date of Union shall continue therein as if the Union had not been made, subject nevertheless to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada or by the Legislature of the Province of Newfoundland according to the authority of the Parliament or of the Legislature under the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1946—

As all honourable senators are aware, section 91 of the British North America Act specifies the classes of subjects to which the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends. By clause 10 of section 91 "Navigation and Shipping" is assigned to the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. Therefore, laws in force in Newfoundland at the date of Union relating to navigation and shipping continued in force after Union, subject nevertheless to be repealed, abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada.

It remains only for me to add that acts relating to pilots and pilotage, and to ports and harbours, are acts within the class of subject referred to as "Navigation and Shipping."

These, therefore, are the reasons why the Parliament of Canada is empowered to repeal, if it deems wise so to do, acts of the Province of Newfoundland respecting harbours and pilotage.

The purpose of Bill S-40 is merely to perform a cleaning-up operation. I am informed that no municipal rights are encroached upon in any way, and no private interests are affected. The reason why Parliament is being asked to pass this bill now is that, as honourable senators recall, this house passed this session Bill S-10, an act to provide for the Establishment of Harbour Commissions, which bill is now before the other place. Should it become law, the Government is anxious that no legal obstacle should exist in Newfoundland to prevent the Government from setting up harbour commissions in Newfoundland when and where required.

Before explaining the sections of Bill S-40, I should mention there is one point common to the first four sections which may appear to honourable senators to be a little unusual. It will be noted that in each section each act that is repealed has two different citations and names. For example, section 1 of the bill provides for the repeal of An Act Respecting Outport Pilots and Pilotage, being chapter 179 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, 1916, and also The Outport Pilots and Pilotage Act, chapter 215 of the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952.

By Term 18 of the Terms of Union, as already mentioned, these Newfoundland acts continued in force after Union as if Union had not been made, subject only to being repealed, abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada. However, shortly after Union, the Province of Newfoundland undertook the revision and consolidation of the acts of the province. This consolidation and revision was long overdue, because the previous one had taken place in 1916. As the provincial acts to be repealed by Bill S-40 are provincial statutes, they were revised and re-enacted as chapters of the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952. In view of the fact that by the Terms of Union these particular acts continued in force subject to being repealed, abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada, it would appear that the Legislature of Newfoundland should not have revised and re-enacted them.

If the inclusion of these acts in the 1952 revision was beyond the powers of the Legislature of Newfoundland, then it naturally follows that the acts as in force prior to 1952 are still in full force and effect. In order, therefore, to remove any possible doubts, the acts as in force as at the date of Union, and the acts as re-enacted by the Legislature of Newfoundland in 1952, are both being repealed by Bill S-40.

I think that is all that is required to be said generally about the bill, and I will now, therefore, devote a very few minutes to looking at each of the sections in turn.

Section 1 repeals An Act respecting Outport Pilots and Pilotage, a provincial statute of general application. I trust that honourable senators will not be confused by the use of the term "outport." In Newfoundland we refer to most of our villages and settlements on the coast as "outports." This is a very old English term, and is used in Newfoundland merely to distinguish between a few principal towns on the Avalon Peninsula and in the interior, on the one hand, and all other towns and villages situated on the Newfoundland coast, on the other.

In 1949 the Canada Shipping Act was proclaimed in force in Newfoundland, except Part VI which deals with pilotage. In 1953 that act was amended, and one of the amendments authorizes the application of Part VI to Newfoundland, if and when the Governor in Council decides to proclaim Part VI in effect in Newfoundland.

It has been decided to bring Newfoundland into conformity with the rest of Canada, and as a first step the old Newfoundland statute respecting outport pilots must now be repealed.

Section 2 refers to An Act respecting the Management and Control of Harbours, another Newfoundland statute of general application. A number of ports and harbours operated under the Management and Control of Harbours Act, No. 34 of 1934. Two of these ports, namely, Botwood and Grand Bank, were formally disbanded and, by order in council, were constituted regular public harbours under the Canada Shipping Act. In the cases of the remaining four ports which operated under the Management and Control of Harbours Act, namely, Bonavista, Corner Brook, Fortune and Harbour Grace, the boards of harbour commissioners appointed under the act have in all these cases become inactive. It has now been decided that the time has come to regularize the position of these ports by abolishing whatever remains of the original boards of harbours commissioners and by repealing the act itself.

In due course, if traffic warrants it, all or any of these harbours will, by order in council, be created public harbours under Part X of the Canada Shipping Act.

Section 3 repeals The Port and Harbour of St. John's Act. St. John's is one of the oldest ports in North America, and during the course of its long history has gone through many changes and developments. Just completed and soon to be opened is the greatest development of all, the rebuilding at a cost of some $20 million of the greater part of the old wharves, and equipping the port with the most up-to-date warehouses and loading and unloading facilities it is possible to obtain. As a result, the Port of St. John's, we all hope, will take on a new lease of life.

As a consequence of these new developments, the existing Port and Harbour of St. John's Act is no longer adequate for the operation of the new St. John's harbour and the control and management of these new works and facilities, and it has been decided therefore to repeal the old act. This will make it possible, first, to bring into force Part X of the Canada Shipping Act which, as you will remember, governs pilotage and, secondly, will make way for the operation of the port by a harbour commission appointed under the provisions of Bill S-10 which provides for the establishment of harbour commissions, if and when it becomes law.

Section 4 repeals the Port and Harbour of Port aux Basques Act. All that needs to be said here is that since 1957, Port aux Basques has been proclaimed a public harbour under the Canada Shipping Act. So, as often happens in Newfoundland, the de facto situation has once again outstripped the de jure position.

Finally, section 5 provides that this act or any of its provisions shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Honourable senators will recall that different sections of this bill will become operative only upon the happening of other events. Therefore, the present situation will continue until other events take place, as for example the coming into law of the Harbour Commissions Act. When that happens, a proclamation may issue bringing into force the appropriate provisions of this Bill S-40.

I would like to add a short general observation which may not perhaps bear directly on the bill before us but, because it does relate to the Province of Newfoundland, honourable senators will forgive me for mentioning it now.

In the reference to the harbour developments at St. John's, which will cost probably $20 million, I may not have made it clear that the entire amount will be paid by the Government of Canada. This is but one of the major public works financed directly or indirectly by Canada for Newfoundland.

To find another example, and indeed an example which involves an amount of similar magnitude, I would refer honourable senators to the Annual Report of the Atlantic Development Board for 1963-64. The Atlantic Development Board is charged with the responsibility of fostering the economic growth of the Atlantic region of Canada, and the Parliament of Canada has authorized the creation of a fund of $100 million to that end.

Out of the fund, $20 million has been granted to Newfoundland to assist the hydro-electric power project at Bay D'Espoir on the south coast of Newfoundland. I am informed that the present name, which means Bay of Hope, is only something over 100 years old. The old name which appears on the old British Admiralty charts, and which was the name given by Captain James Cook, R.N., when he surveyed the Newfoundland coast 200 years ago, in 1763 and 1767, was Bay Despair. The contrast between the future of the province before Union and after Union may perhaps be aptly illustrated by reference to this very place. Because of the actions of Canada, this will now indeed be a Bay of Hope to Newfoundlanders instead of a Bay of Despair.

In addition to this further grant of $20 million, only last week came the announcement of a further $10 million, of which Newfoundland will receive $3 million for the purpose of assisting in the construction or rehabilitation of trunk highways in the Atlantic provinces.

I can assure honourable senators that these very practical expressions of interest and help on the part of Canada to the province and people of Newfoundland are greatly appreciated, and I take this opportunity of gladly paying tribute to our spokesman in the cabinet here in Ottawa, the Honourable J. W. Pickersgill, who has done so much to promote and encourage these projects, and whose untiring efforts on behalf of his adopted province will be gratefully remembered by all Newfoundlanders.

Honourable senators, if Bill S-40 should receive second reading, and if the house should desire the bill to go to committee, I will, in that event, move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, it is not necessary for me to make any extensive remarks on this bill after the explanation we have heard from its sponsor, Senator Cook.

The honourable senator opened his remarks by recalling the happy day when Newfoundland became one of the provinces of Canada. I was in the House of Commons at that time, and I remember it as a happy day for Canada and, I am sure, for the Province of Newfoundland.

Newfoundland's prosperity has been pretty well assured. I look forward to the day when it will become one of the most prosperous provinces of Canada. I do not think any province has better prospects than has Newfoundland, with all her great natural resources.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And bigger fish.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Of course Saskatchewan questions that.

Honourable senators, the explanation given by Senator Cook has been complete. As he told us, this is a short, simple bill, and is designed to tie up some of the loose ends that have been left over from the Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

Senator Cook referred particularly to the Port of St. John's and Port aux Basques, and also the prodigious work that had been done in St. John's harbour. I recall this vividly because I had the honour to be a member of the government that was responsible for the expenditure of $20 million on the harbour at St. John's, and we were proud indeed of having the opportunity to do so.

The honourable sponsor mentioned Port aux Basques. We know that extensive work was done on that harbour before the Diefenbaker government held office. Both harbours have benefited materially, and would have benefited without the necessity of this act.

However, we are glad that this situation is being attended to. Perhaps the honourable senator could tell us whether there are more of these matters in connection with the federation of Newfoundland with Canada which require attention.

I believe Senator Cook mentioned that it was term three of the Terms of Union which provided for the tying up of any loose ends which had been left unfinished in the Act of Union. Before I came here this evening I looked up term three of the Terms of Union in the Revised Statutes of Canada. It reads as follows:

> 3. The British North America Acts, 1867 to 1946, shall apply to the Province of Newfoundland in the same way, and to the like extent as they apply to the provinces heretofore comprised in Canada, as if the Province of Newfoundland had been one of the provinces originally united, except in so far as varied by these Terms and except such provisions as are in terms made or by reasonable intendment may be held to be specially applicable to or only to affect one or more and not all of the provinces originally united.

In other words, that term provided that anything which might have been left out of the Act of Confederation would apply to Newfoundland just the same as it applied to all the other provinces of Canada.

Honourable senators, I have nothing further to say. We are all very pleased indeed that Confederation has been of benefit to Newfoundland, and I am sure we all wish her continued success.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: May I ask the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Cook) a question? Does the repeal of the rules, orders and regulations affect any contract, lease or agreement made by navigation companies or other industries using the harbour?

Hon. Mr. Cook: I assume, honourable senators, that repeal would not affect any existing contract.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Or a contract in the future?

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I join in the compliments that have been paid to the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Cook), and also ask that he elaborate somewhat on his statement arising out of section 1 of the bill.

Senator Cook has told us that the Outport Pilots and Pilotage Act of the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, was beyond the competence of the Legislature of Newfoundland. Is the honourable gentleman asking us to repeal an act which does not exist? Are we setting a precedent by recognizing an act that was beyond the competence of the authority that brought it into being? We should think about that as we proceed with this bill.

What has the honourable gentleman to say with regard to whether we are recognizing the act by repealing it? Are we to repeal something that does not exist? Are we to give authority to an act of the legislature which was beyond the competence of that legislature?

Hon. Mr. Cook: Honourable senators, I cannot answer that question. All I can do is give the facts, and say that there was such an act on the statute books of Newfoundland before it became a province; and then, by the Terms of Union, by section 18 which I have quoted, this act fell within the competence of the Parliament of Canada.

When the acts of the Province of Newfoundland were revised and consolidated in 1952 they purported to consolidate this act, and we find it once again in the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, Chapter 215. So, the choice facing us is that of ignoring the statute and letting it remain on the statute books of Newfoundland, or of repealing it, which undoubtedly we appear to have the power to do under term 18 of the Terms of Union.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, as the honourable Senator Roebuck has said, all of us are deeply indebted to Senator Cook for the explanation he has given of this bill; he has put flesh and blood into a bill that is very much like a collection of bones on a dried skeleton.

In view of the point that has been raised by Senator Roebuck it might be appropriate that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, if honourable senators so desire. Fortunately, that committee will be sitting tomorrow morning, and that and any other questions of this character which might arise could certainly be dealt with then.

I would have thought that originally the dominion of Newfoundland had authority to legislate in respect of navigation and shipping before Newfoundland became a province of Canada. Of course, when it became a province it then became subject to the provisions of the British North America Act in respect of the legislative competence of its legislature.

Whether or not this act should have been included in the 1952 consolidation of the Newfoundland statutes is another question. There might have been some question about it, but I am sure the authorities dealing with it at that time might very well have come to the conclusion, for good and sufficient reasons, that the act in fact belonged in the consolidation. I think the law officers of the Crown should be asked to appear before the committee tomorrow to deal with this matter.

Honourable senators, while I am on my feet I should like to say something else which does not arise particularly out of the consideration of this bill but out of something Senator Cook said at the end of his remarks. There is a great deal of talk about the advantages which have accrued to Newfoundland as a result of its becoming a province of Canada. I have no doubt all those claims are true. But I would like to say this, that while Canada will continue to be indebted to Newfoundland, just as Canada as a whole is indebted to the part played by all provinces and the people of all provinces, Canada became Newfoundland's debtor in a very real way during the late war.

I would particularly like to refer to the facilities, the accommodation and the help given to the Canadian naval service by the people of Newfoundland, especially the magnificent harbour facilities they made available in many parts of their province. I am thinking particularly of the Port of St. John's. In the very serious days of the battle of the North Atlantic, when submarines were becoming more and more effective against the convoy system, that port, and Londonderry on the other side of the North Atlantic, were the two ends of the lifeline. The Canadian corvettes, the British, American and other allied vessels that came into St. John's not only had available to them wonderful harbour facilities, supply depots and everything else that goes with the establishment of a great naval shipyard and port, but they also had one of the most magnificent natural harbours in the world.

Honourable senators who have visited St. John's will appreciate that, above all, it is an ideal location for a naval force to be established. The entrance to the harbour is so narrow that it could be closed to submarines by the use of nets. The rocks on either side of the gate are as high and as rugged as Cape Diamond in Quebec. It is a magnificent little harbour, and you can see it all from Signal Hill, I think it is, or, in any event, from where the naval establishment is situated. Running along the south shore there is a tremendous wall of rock which acts as a shield against the enemy lurking in the waters outside—and, believe me, there were many such enemies lurking there.

Halifax is a magnificent harbour, but it was a little more remote from the direct convoy lanes in those days. Considering the short range of the small short fo'c's'led corvettes, it was much more feasible for them to go to the other side from St. John's without refuelling, and it was essential that that point be established as the anchor on the North American side.

I know that the naval authorities and other authorities connected with the national war effort at that time will always have a very warm spot in their hearts for what was done for the navy in Newfoundland. I think, too, that no group carried away from the war warmer memories of the people of that island province than did the men who sailed in Canadian naval ships.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions, numbered 391 to 422 inclusive, which were presented on Thursday, July 16.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 391, for the relief of Nessie Brown Keller.

Resolution 392, for the relief of Anne Catherine Johnstone Faithful.

Resolution 393, for the relief of Doreen Elizabeth Greene Favreau.

Resolution 394, for the relief of Antoinette Fortier Douglas.

Resolution 395, for the relief of Jocelyn Penfold Tetley Davoud.

Resolution 396, for the relief of Eleanor Saller Gottlieb.

Resolution 397, for the relief of Jacqueline Valois Simard.

Resolution 398, for the relief of Laura Berbier Barmash.

Resolution 399, for the relief of Marie Ghislaine Helen Lecouve Weir-Cowan.

Resolution 400, for the relief of Thérèse Cossette Blanchard.

Resolution 401, for the relief of Rosyln Doris Greenbaum Amar, otherwise known as Lynne Doris Green Amar.

Resolution 402, for the relief of Bela Torma.

Resolution 403, for the relief of John William Simon.

Resolution 404, for the relief of Mary Noreen Smith Griffith.

Resolution 405, for the relief of George Alfred Cote.

Resolution 406, for the relief of Leah (Laura) Goldstein Singer.

Resolution 407, for the relief of Alice Marie Fernande Demblon Xanthos, otherwise known as Alice Marie Fernande Demblon Xanthospolides.

Resolution 408, for the relief of Elise Desaulniers Laliberte.

Resolution 409, for the relief of Shirley May Anderson Bartos.

Resolution 410, for the relief of Arthur Stoltze.

Resolution 411, for the relief of Aviam Barbara Judith Resin Capelovitch.

Resolution 412, for the relief of John Bligouras.

Resolution 413, for the relief of Dina Canzer Soiffer.

Resolution 414, for the relief of Freda Linden Greenblatt.

Resolution 415, for the relief of Helen (Helene) Kupay Galaska.

Resolution 416, for the relief of Joan Eileen McEvoy Collard.

Resolution 417, for the relief of Marcel Renaut.

Resolution 418, for the relief of Mary Dombrosky Aspinall.

Resolution 419, for the relief of Raymond St-Jacques.

Resolution 420, for the relief of Lillian Dauber Haller.

Resolution 421, for the relief of Jean Paul Plante.

Resolution 422, for the relief of Marie Celine Sabine Ranger Albulet.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

CRIMINAL CODE (HABEAS CORPUS)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 16, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Lang for the second reading of Bill C-35, to amend the Criminal Code (Habeas Corpus).

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, this bill came to this chamber for consideration as an apparently innocent and useful amendment to the Criminal Code. That is, it was intended that the amendment be remedial: namely, its purpose was to grant a right of appeal from a decision of a judge in habeas corpus proceedings in cases where a right of appeal does not now apparently exist. However, the subsequent debate on the bill has disclosed that its subject matter is by no means simple, but, on the contrary, that great care should be exercised in the manner in which the bill is dealt with by this house and by Parliament. In any event, this has become a most intriguing subject, and that fact has prompted my desire to have a look at the problem before the debate on second reading of the bill is concluded.

I am sure the Senate is greatly indebted, first, to the honourable senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) for having first posed the issue, that although a general right of appeal would be beneficial to the subject—that is, the person in custody—nevertheless the same right of appeal would be granted to the Crown, with the possible result that the basic element in the writ of habeas corpus—namely, speedy justice—could thereby be frustrated. If this view is well founded, the amending bill conceivably could cause grievous damage to the historical purposes of this famous writ.

As the case for a closer study of this subject was made so lucidly and fully by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity, Senator Roebuck, my remarks will be very brief, and are merely intended to supplement one or two of the points that have been dealt with.

Historically, it is, I believe, a fact that in all countries that follow the common law of England, the legal procedures in respect of the writ of habeas corpus have been carefully guarded with a view to making sure that nothing should be done that might cut down or whittle away the right of the individual conveniently to invoke this ancient remedy. Hence, we in this house must now exercise great care, to the end that this Parliament should take no action which might in the slightest reduce the effectiveness of the writ by creating undue delay, frustration and harassment of the subject.

As previous speakers have indicated, the origin of the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum goes back as far as the reign of Edward I, more commonly known as Edward the Confessor. At least that seems to be the first time it is recorded in history. Many writers on the subject have merely said that the origin of the writ is "buried in antiquity," and no doubt it must have been.

Later the doctrine was inscribed in Article 36 of the Magna Carta in these words:

> Nothing from henceforth shall be given or taken for a writ of inquisition of life or limb, but it shall be granted freely and not denied.

This article was in good company, for there followed Article 39 which granted the right of trial by one's peers, and Article 40, which was the injunction not to sell, delay or deny either right or justice to any man. These three articles have throughout history been referred to as the "crowning glories of the Great Charter."

Is it any wonder then that legislation in regard to any of these three subject matters must be handled with delicate care? For reasons that are clear to students of history, the remedy of habeas corpus was not very effective for the protection of the subject for the next few centuries after Magna Carta. But in 1679 the writ acquired the sanction of a statute by the enactment in that year of the Habeas Corpus Act.

When we think of the speed with which we try to make this remedy effective today, it may surprise us to read section 3 of the act, which says:

> That the writ shall be returned and the prisoner brought up within a limited time according to the distance, not exceeding in any case twenty days.

Then the act prescribes various penalties against officers and keepers for failure or neglect to make due returns of the writ. That is merely an indication that things did not move quite as quickly in those years, namely, at the time of the passage of that act in 1679, as they do today.

In any event the Habeas Corpus Act of 1679 has been referred to as and certainly is one of the great charters of liberty like the Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights. And the writ itself is, of course, the most celebrated writ in English law.

So much for this early background. There is, however, one quotation that I should like to give from the writings of the great English legal author, Holdsworth, who wrote the History of English Law, and which is of the essence in regard to this subject. Referring to the Habeas Corpus Act of 1679, he said:

> This act made the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum the most effective weapon yet devised for the protection of the liberty of the subject, by providing both for a speedy judicial inquiry into the justice of any imprisonment on a criminal charge, and for a speedy trial of prisoners remanded to await trial.

I refer especially to the word "speedy," which is used twice in this one sentence. In that regard all lawyers are conversant with the phrase, "Justice delayed is justice denied."

It is this element of speedy justice, of justice without undue delay, frustration and harassment that has prompted the common law countries to guard carefully the procedures involved in the use of this most important writ. Consequently, I merely wish to emphasize that Bill C-35 is one example where the sober second thought of the Senate may be found to have prevented hasty legislation which might, without amendment, seriously curtail the usefulness in Canada of the famous writ of habeas corpus.

Furthermore, I wish to pay tribute particularly to Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) for first pointing out this problem, and to Senator Roebuck for the extended research that he entered upon in regard to this subject.

I fully agree with Senator Roebuck when he suggests that an appeal on the part of the applicant only should lie from the refusal of a judge to compel a prisoner to be produced. Otherwise, if such an appeal should also be available to the Crown there would then be grave danger of an applicant for habeas corpus becoming subject to the delays, frustrations and harassment of the law to which I have just referred, and which it has been the objective of guardians of freedom to avoid.

On the other hand, after judgment upon the return of the writ, it might be a reasonable procedure to allow an appeal to the Crown as well as to the applicant. In any event, we shall no doubt have a most interesting discussion of this bill in committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Donald Cameron moved the second reading of Bill S-36, to incorporate the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I am sure that you are aware, as I have been, that the subject of education has been appearing on the Orders of the Day in this chamber with increasing frequency. I think this is as it should be, and I expect and hope that in days to come we will be dealing with it more extensively than has been the case up to the present time.

We are living in a time when education is vital to the survival of the nation; it is also vital and essential to the unity of the nation. For that reason I welcome the opportunity of supporting a bill which has as one of its purposes the strengthening of the forces of higher education in this country.

By way of preamble I should like to quote from the very erudite journalist J. Bascom St. John, who is probably one of the ablest writers on the subject of education in Canada. He writes regularly for the Toronto Globe and Mail, and in the issue of July 2, he wrote as follows:

> To make an awkward paraphrase of a famous quotation, the future of higher education in Canada is a race between enough dollars and catastrophe.
>
> It is a little difficult to tell on this July Second which is winning. As a matter of fact, the race is just beginning, but by 1970 it should be very clear whether or not the crisis was met with realism.

That is why I suggested a moment ago that it is encouraging that the Parliament of Canada is giving increasing attention to problems of education in spite of the fact that education is primarily a provincial responsibility. However, I think it cannot be denied that first and foremost the welfare of the nation is vitally concerned with the question of education throughout the country.

Bascom St. John continued as follows:

> The Canadian university structure has from the beginning been a mixture of public and private institutions, with the balance much more heavily on the public side in the Western Provinces, and some of both in the Central and Eastern Provinces. For this reason, the idea of public support for university education has not been unfamiliar to Canadians from the earliest days of their history. We have had virtually none of the evident fear of public support for university education that is expressed quite often in the United States.
>
> It is true that our universities have had less interference, at least in recent decades, from the grant-giving body, than many universities and colleges across the border. We have had a history of unconditional grants, usually based on some formula, or on an approved budget request.

Then he goes on to deal with a very interesting report which, I am happy to say, was prepared by an employee of the Senate as part of his graduate studies. I refer to the publication that I am sure all honourable senators have on their desks entitled, "Government Support of Universities and Colleges," by Mr. T. J. Wylie, the executive assistant to the Leader of the Government. It is a very interesting report, and is one of the activities made possible by the organizations applying for the passage of Bill S-36 at this time. I would like to quote a few summaries from that report because they are very important. Mr. J. Bascom St. John says:

> It is in some respects much more creditable than most people have believed.

That is, the Government record of support for higher education.

> In other ways, it makes apparent that new ways of helping the university function in some, if not all, of the provinces must be found.
>
> In the five years from 1958-59 to 1962-63, the federal, provincial and municipal governments of Canada contributed $820 million to universities and colleges. Of this, 59 per cent was applied to operating expenditures, 8 per cent in aid of research and 33 per cent went to capital expenditures for buildings and equipment.
>
> Of the whole amount, above, the provincial governments contributed the lion's share of $571 million in the same five years. Of this, 58 per cent was for current expenditures, 41 per cent for capital costs, and only 1 per cent for research. By contrast, of the national government's share 25 per cent went for research.

May I just interject here to say that we in Canada are lagging behind in the amount of money we are spending on research. The provincial governments, I think, will have to increase their contributions for research as time goes on. A good deal of credit goes to the federal Government for the amount it has contributed to research, particularly through the National Research Council and some 20 Government departments. This should be encouraged because research is basic to progress in the kind of world in which we are living.

Mr. St. John goes on to say:

> The report shows that there has been a very rapid rise in the rate of provincial support for universities. In 1958-59, the total for operating expenditures from all the provinces was only $40 million. In 1962-63, the last year for which there were complete statistics, the total was $94 million.

> Ontario's share of that amount in the same year was only $23 million. This year, 1964-65, it was $47,696,000.

And here I cannot resist quoting the fact that he gives my own province of Alberta a plug.

> Of all the provinces, Alberta was found to have given the most per student to university education, and also the most per capita of the university age population. The amount per student in 1962-63 from Alberta was about $1,200. Ontario was next, with about $775. Nova Scotia was least, with less than $200.
>
> In the last two years, however, information not in this report shows that Ontario has made immense strides. In the fiscal year, 1963-64, the per student operating grant amounted to about $946, and this year, the grant is approximately $1,600 per student.

This gives some idea of the rate at which the costs of education are growing.

> If the $53 million for capital expenditure is added in, the per student grant in Ontario rises to nearly $3,400.

I could go on at some length to indicate the cost of various faculties. I would not embarrass some of my medical colleagues by pointing out the very high subsidy that the people of Canada make to those who go into the medical profession. It is something far higher than that made to any other profession, and I think our medical friends should keep this in mind. However, it is not my purpose to deal with that tonight.

The purpose of this bill is to incorporate an association to be known as the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, and, in French, Association des Universités et des Collèges du Canada, for the purpose of fostering and promoting higher education in Canada. The association will replace two existing organizations, namely, the National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges, the N.C.C.U.C., and its executive agency the Canadian Universities Foundation, the C.U.F.

I might give just a brief history of these organizations. In 1911 a number of universities associated under the name of the National Conference of Canadian Universities, the N.C.C.U., for the purpose of establishing a forum for the discussion of broad academic and administrative problems in Canadian universities. The National Conference of Canadian Universities remained an unincorporated body until 1956, at which time it was incorporated for the purpose of handling an increased load of information and business functions which were found to be unwieldy for an unincorporated association. It soon became clear, however, that its incorporated form did not easily accommodate the exercise of this variety of functions as an academic forum and administrative agency, and accordingly, it was decided to incorporate a company under the name of Canadian Universities Foundation. This was accomplished in 1959. Shortly thereafter the business functions, property rights and obligations of the National Conference of Canadian Universities were transferred to the Canadian Universities Foundation.

In 1960 the conference was re-established as an unincorporated association of universities and colleges under the name National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges, and the former corporate organization, National Conference of Canadian Universities, surrendered its charter. The National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges and the Canadian Universities Foundation have continued in existence to the present day.

The National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges is an association of 46 institutions of higher education, having an aggregate enrolment of 130,000 students.

The main functions of the National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges and the Canadian Universities Foundation are to study national problems in the field of higher education, to clarify the problems of individual universities and to identify the national interests in higher education.

The Canadian Universities Foundation is a corporation, the 22 directing members of which are elected from and by the executive heads of those institutions belonging to the National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges. The Canadian Universities Foundations acts as the executive agency of the Conference, providing a secretariat for both Conference and Foundation affairs, with facilities for a wide range of services for member universities and colleges.

The purpose of the present application to Parliament is to incorporate a new national bilingual body to be known as the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, and, in French, Association des Universités et des Collèges du Canada, to undertake both the management of business functions of the Canadian Universities Foundation and the academic functions of the National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges. The members of the proposed association will be the universities and colleges of Canada which are presently members of the National Conference, and such others as may become members in the future.

In addition, provision will be made for associate members elected from among national organizations of university and college personnel, such as the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, the Canadian Association of Graduate Schools, and the Canadian Association of College and University Libraries.

The administration of the proposed association will be vested in a board of directors to be elected by the member universities and colleges. Upon the incorporation of the proposed association the assets and liabilities of the Canadian Universities Foundation will be transferred to the new association.

The secretariat of the Canadian Universities Foundation and the National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges, consists of an executive director, an associate director, and a research and information service.

I might elaborate a little bit here and say that this research and information service was first established in 1959 with the help of a three-year grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York, and it undertakes, sponsors and stimulates studies of the major problems of Canadian higher education. I might say these problems are becoming more numerous and frequent as time goes on. To this end it has developed a library of Canadian and comparative higher education.

In addition to providing a general reference service, the Research and Information Service publish "University Affairs," a quarterly bulletin summarizing developments across Canada, which have a bearing on the wellbeing of universities and colleges; "Canadian Universities and Colleges," a biennial handbook describing and outlining the facilities of Canadian institutions of higher learning, and a series of special studies and compilations relating to the financing of higher education. It also prepares projections of future student enrolment, reports on admission requirements, listing of awards available for graduate study, etc. and a list of academic vacancies.

