550.1. TALENT, Discovery of. Napolen" I. ITe had ordered some very dillicult and important: works to be exerolted on a bridge of the canal of Languedoe. The engineer had admirably necomplished the arduonsachievement. [Nupheon inspected the work, and asked many questions of the engineer.] The engineer seenued embarrassed. and replied with hesitation and confusion. Soon the prefect appared. Napoleon promptly said to him: "I am not correctly informed. The bridge was not made by that man. Such a work is beyond his capacity." The prefect then confessed that the ehief engineer was neither the originator of the plan nor the anthor of the works, but they both belonged to a modest, sulordinate man unknown to fane. . . . 5521. TAXATION by Representativen. Aimericren levolntion, The more imburdiate, camse of the Revoluthon was the pmangely l'urlinment of a number of arts elcatructive of colomial liberty. These aets were renlsted by the colonies, and thio ittempt was made by Grent liritaln to inforee them whti the bayones. The sulijeret of thls untjust legisiatlon, which extemied over a period of twelve yeurs just precedlug the war, was the question of taxition. It is a well grounded princlibe of Englisin common law that the people, by the representats ves in the IIouse of Commons, linve the right of voting whatever taxes and customs are necessary for the support of the kIngilom. The American colonists claimed the full rights of Engllshmen. With grood reason it was urged that the generna assemblies of eolonies held the same relation to the American people as difl the Honse of Commons to the people of England. The English minlsters replied that Parlament and not the colonial assemblles was the projer body to vote taxes in any and all parts of the Britush emplre. "But we are not represented in Parlhment," was the answer of the Amerlems ; " the IIouse of Commons may therefore justly nssess taxes in Enginnd, but not in Amerlen." "Many of the towns, boroughs, and whires in these British inles lanve no representa:ives in Parliament, and yet the Parliament laxes them "replied the ministers, now driven to sophistry. "If any of your towns, lwoughs, and shires are not represented in the IIonse of Commons, they ought to be," was the American rejoinder; and there the argiment ended. Such were the essentin points of the controversy.Ridpatits U. S., ch. 37, p. 288.

33:\$2. TAXES, Oppressive. Romun. The Roman tax, or capitation, on the peopriotors of land wored bave sulfered a rich and mumerous -hass of free citizens to escape. With the view of sharing that species of wealth whidela is derived from art or habor, and which exists in money or in merelandise, the eniperors infoned a distiact and persomai : ibnte on the trading purt of ulair subjects. Some exemptions, very atrielly confined both in time sad phaca, werentlowad to the proprictors whan disposed of the pronluce of their oiva estates. Some imbajgence was grantal to the profession of the libers! arts; but ev, ry other brameh of e mmercinl iadistry was affieted by the severity of the law. 5.33.1. TAXES, Rebellion against. Duty on Ooth. [ $\ln 1: 381$ a] bloorly riot took place at Rouen, in consequence of the proposill of a new duty upon eloth; the burghers inshed to arms, and laving proclaimed a wealily clothier King of Ronen, insisted oa his issuing an edict repealing the tax, and holding up the officers of the revenue to publicexperation. The unfortumate colleetors were plundered, insulted, aud violently driven from the cily ; an attack was next made upon the eastle, in which the governor was kill--d ; the clergy were also assaulted and maltreatal. . . The ehief authors of the revolt were executed, and the duty upon cloth was levied by lireats and force. . . Emboldened by this success, the court attempted to enforco at Paris an excise-duty upon produce exposed for sale in the markets. The step was energetically resisted; the popular wrath exploded at once, and the capital was in full insurrection. . . . No sooner had the ferment subsided than arrests were made in every part of Furis, and the wretched prisoners, without any public condemuation, were dispatched by a seeret and odious mode of execu-tion-they were inclosed in sacks, and thrown 553\%. TEE:HER, Relation of. Aristotle. [King Philip secured him to be the teacher of youngr Alexander. See No. 3589.] Alexander likewise discovered no less esteem for his master, whom he believed himself bound to love as mich as if he had heen his father, declaring that he was indebted te the one for living, and to the other for living well. The progress of the pupil was equal to the care and abilities of the preceptor. He grew passionately fond of philosophy, and learned the several branches of it, but with the discrimination suituble to his birth. Aristotle endeavored to improve his judgment by layilıg down sure and certain rules, by which he might distinguish just and solid reasoning from what is merely specious, and by accustom yg him to separate in discourse all sucla parts as only dazzle from those which are truly solid, and should constitute its whole value.-Rollin's Hist., Book 15, § 1.

5538. TEACHER, Responsiblity of. Philip of Macedon. Ilis queen Olympias ... was deliv. ered . . . of a son, Alexander, justly denomiaried the Great. On this event, Philip wrote to the philosopher Aristotle in these emphatic words, truly worthy of a king: "K now that a son is born to us. We thank the gods, first, for their excellent gift, and, secondly, that it is beshowed in the age of Aristotle, who, we trust, will render him a son worthy of his father, and a prince worthy of Mncedonia."-Trusen's Hist', Book 2, ch. 3, p. 1 \% 5539. D'EACHER, Value of. To Alexunter. I do not know whether any prince in the world had a nobler education than Alexander. He was very conversimt in eloquence, poetry, polite learning, the whole circle of arts, and the nost abstracted and most sublime seiences. How lappy was he in meeting with so great is precep. for! None but an Aristotle was fit for an Alexander. I am overjoyed to find the dise iple pay so illustrions a testimony of respect to his master, by deelaring he was more indebted to himin tone sense than to his father. A man who thinks :und speaks in this manner must be fully sensiwe of the great ad vantuges of a good education. -Rollin's liser., Book 15, § 19.
55.4.) TEACHERs, Pay of. Atheniun. The Athenian professors were paid by their disciples, according to their mutnal wants and abilities; the price appears to have varied from a mina to a talent ; and isocrates himself, who derides the avarice of the sophisis, required, in his school of rhetoric, about $£ 30$ from each of his hundred pupils. The wages of industry are just and honorable, yet the same Isocrates shed tears at the first receipt of a stipend; the Stovic might hiush when he was hired to preach the contempt of money; and I should lee sorry to discover that Aristotle or Plato so far degenerated from the example of Socrates as to exehange knowletge for gold. But some property of lands und houses was settled by the permission of the laws, and the legacies of deceased friends, on the jhilosophic chatirs of Athens. Epicurus be(queathed to his diseiples the gardens which he had purchased for eighty mine, or $\mathfrak{x}^{2} 50$, with a fund sufficient for their frugat subsistence and monthly festivals, and the patrimony of Plato afforded an ammal rent, which, in eight centhanes, was gradually increased from three to one thousand pieces of goll.-Gibros's Rome, cl. 40 , p. 106 .

It was said of him on one occasion that he would hang a man for blowing his nose in the street, but he would " Hash the indictment if it failed to specify which firnd he blew with."-Raymond's Lincoln, 1. 254.
5342. TELEGRAPH, Value of. Treaty of Ghent. On the 18 th of Febrnary the treaty was ratitied by the Senate of the United States, and peace was publicly proclaimed. It was in the interim between the conclusion of the treaty and the reception of the news in the United States that the buttle of New Orleans was fought. A telegram would have saved all the bloodshed. Ridpatu's U. S., ch. 51, p. 414.
5543. TEMPER, Command of. Themistocles. Eurybiales said: ' Do not you know, Themistocles, that in the publie games such as rise up before their turn are chastised for it ?" "Yes," answered Themistocles; "yet such as are left behind never gain the crown." Eurybiades, upon this, lifting up his stuff, as if he intended to strike him, Themistocles suid: "Strike if you plase, but hear me." The Lacedemonians, admiring his command of temper, bade limspeak what he had to say.-lhetaber's Tmemintochen.

5545. TEMPERANCE, Allies of. Tia and Cuffere. While tea and coflee wore taxed in their liquid state, and families sent to the colfechouse for a quart of the precions infusions, it was observed execss in drinking, especinlly about london, was somewhat lessened throught their use.-Knigilt's Eng., vol. 5, 'h. 3, p. 38.
5546. TEMPERANCE of Athletes. (irecian. Those who were designed for this profession froquented, from their most tender uge, the Gymnasia or Palastra, which were a kind of mademids maintained for that purpose at the public: expense. In these places, such yoming people were under the direction of different masters, who employed the most effectual methods to imure their bodies for the fatigues of the public: games, and to train them for the combats. The regimen they wore under was very hard nomd severe. At first they had no other nourishment than dried tigs, nuts, soft checese, and a coarso heavy sort of bread, called $\mu \dot{a} \zeta a$. Thay were ab)solutely forbidden the use of wint, and enjoined continence.-Rombin's IInt., Book 10, ch. 3, 1. 424.
5547. TEMPERANCE, Beginning in. Jitst Organization. The earliest orgmization to stem the torrent of intemperance in this republie would seem to lave been that of "The Temper-; ate Society of Moreau and Northumberland" (Snratoga Co., N. Y.), which was instigated ly Dr. B. J. Clark, of Moreau, in March, 1808, and constituted ly the signature of forty-three members, mainly substantial farmers of the two towns named. Their constitution stipulated that "No member shall drink rum, gin, whiskey, wine, or any distilled spirits, or compositions of the same, or any of them, except by the advice of a physician, or in case of actual discase (also excepting wine at public dinners), under penalty of twenty-five cents. Provided, that this article shall not infringe on any religious ordinance." And further, that " No member shall be intoxicated under penalty of fifty cenis." And again: "No member shall offer any of said liquors to any other member, or urge any other person to drink thereof, under penalty of twenty-five cents for each offence."-Appleton's Cyclopedia, "Abstinence."

55.49. TEMPERANCE and Justice, King Philip. Philip, rising from an entertainment at which he had sitten several hours, wasaldressed by a womm, who berged him to examine her canse, and to hear severnl remsons she had to alrege, which were not pleasing to him. Ite arcordingly heard it, and gave sentence ngainst har: uph which she replied very calmy: "I appeal." " llow !" suys Philip. "fromi your king " To whom, then?" "Tol'phitip when fasting," replied the weman. 'The manner in which her reeeived this answer would do homor to the most soler prince. He gave the cause a second hemring, acknowledged the injustice of his sentence, and condemned himself to make amend. for it.-Rolan's Mis'r., book 14, sit.
5350. TEMPERANCE by Legislation. simertathe. Partieular care was taken to educate the youth according to the laws and manners of the country, in order that, by being early engrafted into them, and contirmed by loug habitude, they might beeome, as it were, a second nature. The hard and sober manner in which they were brought up inspired them during the rest of their lives with is matura! taste for frugality and temperance that distinguished them from all other nations, and wotiderfully adapted them to support the fatigues of war. Plato observes that this salutary custom lad banished from sparta and all the territory dependent upon it drunkenness, debanchery, and all the disorders that ensue from them; insomuch that it was a crime punishable by law to drink wine to excess even in the bacehunalia, which everywhere else were days of license, and on which whole cities rave themselves up to the last excesses.- Rolins's litit., Book 10, ch. 1, st.
5551. TEMPERANCE, Legislation against. First tongress. The manufacture of ghass had been started in Maryland, and the members from that State secured a duty on the foreign article ufter considerable dise enssion, and with the signifiemint reservation, in deference to popular habits, that "black quart bottles" should be udmitted frec.-Blane's Twenty Yeams, chi. 9, p. 184.
5552. TEMPERANCE by Legislation. Eing. lend, 1736. A petition against the excessive use of spirituons licuors was presented to the llouse of Comnons from the justices of the peace for Middlesex. The drinking of Geneva [gin], it was alleged, had excessively increased among the people of inferior rank; the constant and excessive use of distilled spirituous liguors had already destroyed thonsimits, and rentered great numbers of others untit for labor, debauching their morals, and driving them into every vice. [A tax of Dos. a gallon was laid on gin, and every retailer was reguired to take out an annual license costing e:5. The measure was opposed by the government. because it would reduec the revenue by reducing the consumption. It was opposed becanse it was a sumptuary law.] Yet the magnitude of the evil certainly warranted some strong legislative measure. It was stated that within the bills of mortil ty there were twenty thousand houses for ret ing spirituous liquors. Sudden deaths fron excessive gindriuking were continually reported in the newspapers. The bill was passed, and to come into operation after the 29 th of Sept. On that day the signs of the liquor-shops were put in mourning. Hooting mols were assembled around the dens where they could no longer get "drunk for a penny and dead-drunk for twopenee." The last rag was pawned to earry off a chap quart or gallon of the beloved ligior. The aret was evaded. Hawkers sold a colored mixture in the streets, and pretended chemists opened shops for the sale of " Cholick-water.", Pond, phatin! manes, such as "Tom kow," "Make-shift." "The Ladies Dedighte." " The Baulk," atracted customers to the old lames. Informers were rolled in the mut, or pmoped upon, or thrown into the Thames. It beemene necessary in 1743, when the consumption of gin had positively incrased, to reduce the excessive duty.Kinuitrs Eni., vol. 6, eh. 5, p. is.

The king and his court set the example by their intemperance, but their only tine was the odium of public opinion directed against them.]-KNigut's Eng., vol. 3. ch. 22, it. 33:3.
5554. TEMPERANCE, Mechanical. " Iegs in Cup." The interferenee of [St. Dunstan] the arch. bishop with the social customs of the people is one of the stories told to his honor. They were in the habit of quarrelling about the quaitity that each man should drink out of the common cup; and he emeted that pegs should be put in the vessels, that no thirsty soul shond take more than his just proportion. [He was prime-minister to King Edgar, a.D. 958-975.] -Knigiut's Eng., vol. 1 , ch 10, p. 146.
55555. TEMPERANCE and Politics, John Lorke. "I am mighty well plensed, my dear child; nobody can serve me with a better grace; but you have forgotum one essential ceremony, which is that of tasting." And indeed the ('up-bearer was used to pour some of the liquor into his left hand, and to taste it, hefore he presented it to the king. "No," replied Cyrus, " it is not through forgetfulness that I omitted that cerenony " "Why, then,", said Asty:iges, " for what reason did you do it ?" "Because I apprelended there was poison in the liffors." "Poisom, child! How eould you think mo?" "Yes, poison, papa; for uot loug ago, at an entertainment you gave to the lords of your court, after the guests bad drunk a little of that liguor, I perreived all their hemels were turned-they sung, made a noise, and talked they did not know what; yon yourself seemed to have forgoten that you were king, and they that they were subjects; ind when you would have danced, you could not stund upon your legs." "Why," says Asty"ges," have you never seen the smme thing hapjen to your father ?" "No, never," says Cyius. "How is it with him when hedrinks?" "Why, when he has drunk, his thirst is puenched, and that's all."-Rolhin's Mist., Book 4, ch. 1, S. 2.

In some of the densely peopled counties of Iroland he administered the pledge to fifty thousind persons a day for some days together. Thare millions of the prople of Ireland, it is computed, vowed themselves to total abstinence in his presence: and in America his suceass was not less astonishing. - CyClolemid of Bioti, p. 11~.
5.j62. TEMPERANCE, Religious. Wirhomet. The interdiction of wine, peculiar to some orders of priests or hermits, is converted by Malnomet alone into a posit: ve and geneml law; and a considerable portion of the globe has abjured, at his command, the use of that salutary thongh dangerous liquor. These painful restraints are, cloubtless, iniringed by the libertine nnd eluded by the hypocrite.-Gibibon's Rome, ch. 00 , 1). 116.

5565. TEMPLE, Furniture of tho. .tarish. The boly instruments of the Jewish worship, the gold table nom the gold randlestiak with suven bimeles, originally framme acrording to the partioular inst ructions of God lIimsalf, mnd which were placed in the sanctuary oi llis temple, had been ostentationsly displayed to lhe Roman people in the trimmph of Tlitus. 5566. TEMPTATION dismissed. Martyr IIon. per. [After Hooper's condemnation, the rumor went forth that the fear of death lind prevailed over his constancy. IIe wrote a letter to rebut such rumors, and made this nfllmation therein:] "I have taught the truth with my tongue nind with my pen heretofore, and hereafter shall shortly confirm the same, by God's grace, with my blood."

When, nt the stake, he listened to the bitter laments of the common people, who greatly loved him ; a pardon was offered him if le would reeant; but lie exelaimed, " If you lovemy soul, take it away." When he was fastened by hoops of iron to the stnke, he said the trouble was needless, for God would give him strength to abide the extrenity of the tire without bands. IIs sufferings were of the most lingering mature; lut he remained calm and still to the last, and while flames were slowly consuming him, died us quietly.Kniotirt's Eng., voi. 3, ibh. 6.
5567. TEMPTATION, Intentional. Samurl Johnwon. There is a very good story told of Nir Godfrey Knoller, in his character of a justice of the peace. A gentleman brought his servant belore him. upon an aceusation of having stolen some money from him ; but it having come ont that he had laid it purposely in the servant's way, in order to try lis honesty, Sir Godfrey sent the master to prison. Jonsion : "To resist temptation once is not a sulheient proof of honesty. If a servant, indeed, were to resist the continued temptation of silver lying in a window, as some people let it lie, when he is sure his master cloes not know how much there is of it, he would give a strong proof of honesty. But this is a proof to which you have no right to put a man. Yon know, humanly speaking, there is a certain degree of temptation which will overcome any virtue. Now, in so far as you appromeh temptation to a man, you do him an injury : and if he is overeome, you share his guilt."-Dosw killin Joningon, p. 303.
5568. TEMPTATION, Morbld. John Bun! $/ n$. lle had gained Christ, ns he called it. lie was now tempted "to sell mad part with this most bessed Christ, to exchnnge llim for the things of this life-lor anything. If there had been any real prospect of worldly mivantage before Bunyan, whieh he eonld have gained by ahmodoning his religions profession, the words would huse had a meaning.

And yet he says, "It lay upon me for a year, and did follow me so continually that I whs not rid of it one day in a month, sometimes not an hour in many days together, maless when I was asleepp. I rould neither eat my food, stoop for a pin, chop a stiek nor cast my eye to look on this or that, but still the temptation would conne, 'Sell Christ for this, lllim for that 1 sell Him! sill Ilim!' "-Fimotide'h Bunvan, ch. 3.
5569. TENDERNESS with Courage. (ialilatdi. As a boy he was chiefly remarkable lor an extreme tenderness of feeling. When he was a very little boy, he happened, in phying with a grasshopper, to brak one of its legs, which afflicted him to such a degree that he conld not go on with his play. He went to his room, where he remained for several hours mourning over the irreparnble injury he had done the poor insect. But this excessive tenderness did not proceed from weakness of character. Not long after, while playing on the banks of one of those wide and deep ditches which they have in ltaly for irrigating the fields, he saw a poor wasinerwoman, who had fallen into the ditch, struggling for her life, mad in imminent danger of drowning. Ife sprang to her assistance, mad, young as he was, he actually succeeded in getting the woman out. He has to this day a lively recollection of the eestasy which he experienced upou secing her safe on the bank. In affairs of this nature, calling for the sudden risk of one life for the preservation of another, he has never hesitated, nor even so much as thought of his own dan ger till the dianger was over.-C'yelopedia ol blog., p. 493.
5370. TENDERNESS with Resoluteness. Olirer Cromoell. [Cromwell exhibited great tenderness in every domestic relation, as son, husbund and father. In 1648 his eldest son was killed in battle, and ten years later he calls up bitter remembrances out of the sacred depths of his heart. He was fourteen days by the bedside of his dying daughter, Lady Claypole, "unable to attend to any public business whatever." Ife daily visited his mother in her old age.]Knigits, vol. 4, ch. 13, p. 214.
5571. TENANTS, Regard for. John Horara. As often as he had a cottage completed, he looked about for a sober and diligent tenant for it ; so that his cottage-building furnished a most powerful inducement to reform. Besides this, he let his cothages on certain conditions favorable to virtue and good order. One was, that the tenant should go to church once every Sunday ; another, that he should never go to the alehouse ; ancther, that he should never gamble; another, that he should let his children go to the sehool which he had established for them. It was so exceedingly desirable to a poor man to have ond of his cottag's, witha garden atherbed, at a rent of about tol cholhas a year, that he had no dillealty in inducing the vilhugers to comply with his romditions.-Cycholedma of Bhen., p. $3 \pi$.
5572. TERROR vs, Happiness. Itemoclis. [1) moneles, a courtier of Dionysins the tyram, was] always repeating, that never man was han pier than I)ionysins. "Since you are of that opinion," said the tyrant, "will you taste nud make proof of my felicity in person ?' 'The oller was areepted with joy. bamocles was placed on a golden conch, rovered with carpets, richly embroidered. The sideboards were loaded with vessels of gold and silver. The most beantiful slaves in the most splendid habits stome around, ready to sirve him at the slightest signal. The most expuisite essences and perfumes had not beren spared. The table was sprend with proportionate magnificence. Damocles was all joy, and lowked upon himself as the happiest mam in the world ; when, unfortumately, custing up his ryos he beled over his hem the point of a sword, which hung from the roof only by it single horse-hair. IIe was immediately seizent with a eoldsweat ; prerything disappeared in an instunt; he could see nothing but the sword, nor think of anything but his danger. In the height of his fear he desired permission to retire. and dectared he wond be happy no longer.Rollin's Mist., Book 9, ch. 1, 4.
5578. TERROR, Reign of. Frituce. The Committee of Publie Safety . . . rommenced by proclaiming a new and hastity framed constitution, of an absurdly democratic and imprarticable character, which was inangurated at : mational lête with pagan and atheistical ceremonies on the 10th of August. Next followed :t decree for a levy en matese of all citizens capable of houring arms: another for a forced loan amounting to nearly one year's revenue : another extorting from all landowners and farmers in contribution of two-thirds of their produce in grain for the consumption of the army; another imposing in maximm-that is, a fixed arbitrary price above which no provisions could be soldupon bread, ment, wine, salt, wood, and other urticles. A farthr measure-the famous " loi des susprects"-placed the liberty and property of the whole population of France at the uncontrolled disposill of the government, and soon filled the prisons with upward of two homdred thousand miserable captives.-Stedents France, eli. 27, § 4.
5574. TEST for Office. Religiuns. [Of Pirliament enacted under Charles 11.] the 'lowt Aet provided that all persons holding any othicヶ, civil or military, should take the Oath of Supremacy, should subseribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and should publicly receive the sacrament according to the rites of the Church of England. The premmble expressed hostility only to the Papists, but the enacting clauses were scarcely more unfavorable to this Papists thmn to the most rigid elass of Puritais. -Macaulay's Evg., eli. 2, p. 208.
5575. TESTIMONY, Christian. For Johw Bunyan. "One day, in a street in Bedford, as he was at work in his calling, he fell in with three or four poor women sitting at a door in tho sun talking about the things of God." He was himself at that time "a brisk talker " about the matters of relighon, and he joined these woman. 'Their expressions were wholly unintelligible to him. "They were speaking of the wreteled. ness of their owa hearts-of their unbelief, of their miserable state." Bunyan left the women, and went about his work, but their talk went with him. "Ite was greatly affected." " He salw that he wanted the true tokens of a goolly man." Ite sought then out and spoke with them arain and again. He conld not stay away, nuad the more he went the more he guestioned his comition.-Froude's Bunyan, cli. z.
5576. TESTIMONY, Imaginative. Columbur. He mentions in his journal that he sanv three mermaids [in the West Indies] which elevated themselves above the surface of the sen, and he observes that he had hefore seen such on the const of $\Lambda$ frien. ILe adds that they were by no menus the beantiful beings they had been represented, although they possessed some traces of the human countenance. It is suppossol that these must have been manati or sen-cealves seen indistinetly and at a distance ; and that the imagimation of Columbm, disposed to give a wonderful charneter to everything in this new world, laul identified these misslanpen animals with the sirens of ancient story--Irving's Colcmass, Book 5, cli. 1.
5577. TESTIMONY, Trial of. Hiddle Ages. The ignorance of the judges, as well as the weakness of their nuthority in those rude ages, laid a naturul foundation for moother singularity in their legal forms, which was the judgment of God. $\AA$ party aceused of a erime was allowed to produce a certain number of witnesses, more or fewer according to the measure of the offence ; and if these declared upon oathi their belief in the innocence of the accused, it was accounted a sufficient justification. Seven-ty-two compurgators were required to alsolve an incendiary or murderer; and Gregory of Tours relates, that when the clastity of a queen of France was suspected, three hundred nobles swore, withouthesitation, that the infant prince had been actually begotten by her deceased hasband. It is not improbable that the notorious perjuries occasioned by this absurd practice gave rise to another equally preposterous, and nuch more dangerous to the unhappy criminal. It was in the option of the judge to condemn the party accused to undergo the trial of cold water, of boiling water, or of red-hot iron. They began with the performance of the mass, and the accused person solemuly took the sacrament. If the trial was by cold water, the priest gave his bencdiction to the water, and pertormed exorcism, to expel evil spirits. The calprit, tied hand and foot, was then thrown into a pool of water; where, if he sank to the bottom, and probubly was drowned, it was a proof of his innoeence; but if he swan above, he was accounted certainly guilty and condemned to death accordingly. The trial by hot water was performed by making the accused person plunge his naked arm into a vesscl of boiling water, and fetch from the bottom a consecrated ring. The arm was immediately put into a bag, and sealed up by the judge, to be opened after three days; when, if there were no marks of burning, the culprit was declared innocent. It is well known that there are compositions which powerfully resist the hmmediate effects of ifre, and which, in wh probnhility, were not unkown in those days when there was so much oceasion for them. The third proor was by loodding in the lumb, for a certain spare of time, a red-hot iron, or ly walking barefooted over severn burning ploughshares or bars of tron. P'erhaps it might be possible to chade even the dangers of this experiment. though certunly more dithenlt that the last. Another ordeal was of a gentler sort; it was performed by conseerating a piace of harleyhome und checese, and giving it to the anecused in cat, who, if he was not choked by it, wan drelared innocent.-Tytlea's Jistr., Book 6, cha. 3, p. 79.
5578. THANKS expressed. S. Johnson. Mr. Sheridan told me that when he commmicaterd to Dr. Johason that a pension was to be graated him, he replied in a fervor of gratitude. "The: English languge does not afford me terms mieguate to my fecliugs on this oreasion. I must. have recourse to the Fromeh. I am penétre with his Majesty's goodncss."-Bosw shis Jounson, p. 103.
5579. THANKSGIVING, Duty of. Neqleeted. [Henry Dorsey Gough, a wealthy Maryland planter, ] was riding to one of his platations under a state of religious awakening. He heard the voice of prayer ame praise in a cabin, and, listening, diseovered that it megro from a neighhoring estate was leading the devotions of his own slaves, mad offering fervent thanksgivings for the blessiugs of their depressed lot. Ilis heart was tonclael, mal, with cmotion, he exclamed, "Alas, o Lord, I have my thomsamb, and tens of thousmods, and yet, ungrateful wretch that I am, I never thanked Thee, as this poor slave does, who has scarcely clothes to put on, or food to satisly his hunger !", [He never forgot the lesson.]-Stevens' M. 5581. THANRSGIVING for Victory. Spanish Armadu. [In 1589 , atter the dispersion of the famous Spanish Armada by the British fleet of one half its tomage, a mational thanksgiving celchrated the vietory.] On sumday the exth of November, Elizabeth rode in a chariot to Saint Panl's, in the most magnificent of dresses ; and the strects were hung with blue cloth; and the compranies of the city stood on both' sides in goodly order, and the trophies were earried in procession ; and the great captains of England's Salamis were about their queen; and she gracionsly saluted them by name ; and a solemn thanksgiving was offered up, and the glory given to God only. On that day there were also given in every church in the land "public and general thanks unto God, with all devotion and inward affection of heart and humbleness for His gracious favor extended toward us in our de.

5.584. THEATRES, Licentionsness and. Eng. lirnel. Not the least of the opposing intluencers (against the promotion of Christian knowledige) was the licentiousness of the stage. In 16197, Sunderland as Lord ('hamberlain had issued an order to prevent the profaneness and innmorality of the acted dramal. The Master of the Revels probably made no attempt to remonstrate agrainst jerformances of which the whole structure of the action was to represent chastity as the thin disguise of scheming women, und the pursuit of adultery as the proper business of retined gentlemen ; to make the sobor citizen the butt of the profligates who invaded his domeatic hearth; to whibit the trinmphs of intellect in the schemes of venal lackeys to nid the intrigues of their masters, and of odious waiting. maids to surround their mist resses with opportibities of temiptation. Burnet was pretty righat in his antithesis-"The stage is the great eorrupter of the town, nud the bad people of the town have been the chiof corripters of the stage."-Knight's Eng., vol. 5, ch. 13, p. 206.
5585. THEATRES, Opposition to. Dr. Darson. [In one of the churches in London, about 1630, one Dr. Dawson read the " Book of Sports," and presently after read the Ten Commandments, then said]: "Iearly Beloved, you have heard now the commandinents of God and man, obey which you please." [The" J3ook of Sports" drtined certain amusements as lawful.]-Kinouros Pinc., vol. 3, ch. 2if, p. 415.

[In 1633, William Prynne was find énoon, had his ears cut otf, and his book "Itistrio-Mastix, the Player's ficomere," bumed by the bangman under his nose ; he was also sentenced to perpetun impisomment. This was the punishment inflicted by the Star Chamber for writing against "Stage ['lays."]-Knigitr's Eng., vol. 3, ch. 26, p. 411.
5587. THEATRES restored. The Restoration. A.b. $1666^{2}$. The dramiz came back in the shameless warb, and with the brazen look, and the drunken voice of the lowest strumpet. The people were to be taught that Slakespeare was a barbarian, and not to be tolerated in his own simplicity. Ile was, if heard at all, to farnish

The thentre was at the height of fashion when it was most shameless. The netresses were remosed from "The Kingers llense." to beromme the mistresses of the king, by their erablual promotion from being the mistreases of the kinar's servants. - KiNuar's Exa., vol. 4, (l. 1\%, 1. 206.

 II. The play-houses, slut by the moddling famatic in the day of his power, were agnin erowiid. [After the restorntion of Charles II.] The fascination of sex was called in to aid the fascimation of art ; nud the young spertator saw. with emotions unknown to the contemporaries of shakespeare num Jonson, lemder mal sprightly lieroines personitied lyy lovely women. Froin the day on which the thentres were reopened. they berame sominaries of vice, und the evil propagated itself. The profligncy of the representations soon drove nway sober people. The frivolons and dissolnte who remained required every year strongrer and stronger stimulnats. Thus, the artists cormpted the spectators, and the spectators the artists, till the turpitude of the drama berame such as must astonish all who are not aware that extreme relaxation is the natural effect of extreme restraint, and that an age of hypocrisy is, in the regular course of things, followed ly an nge of inmpudence. Nothing is more charactaristic of the times than the care with which the pocts contrived to put all their loosest verses into the mouths of wornen. The compositions in which the grentest license was tuken were the cpilognes. They were almost always recited by favorite netresses; and nothing charined the depraved audionce so much as to hear lines grossly indecent repeated by a beautiful girl, who wis supposed to have not yet lost her innocence."-Midcachay's Eng., ch. 3, 1). 37:3.

[The phays in the sixteenth century were mostly representative of Seriptire events and chameters, even the most sacred; they wero originally perforined in the charches, and the priests were often the performers. It was comsmon to the pleasure-seckers of that day to wit. ness the Creation and the Fall; the Flood; the Israclites in Egypt ; the Salutation and Adoration of the Shepherds; Christ before Pilate; the Resurrection; the Ascension and Doomsilay. The great festival days were usually seleeted for their performance.]-Kinaile's ENG., vol. D, cl. 29, p. 494.
5592. THEATRICALS condemned. By Solon. [Solon wasone of the seven wise men of Greece.] Solon went among the rest for the sake of bear ing Thespis, who acted himself, aceording to the rinstom of the maribin poets. When the play was raled, he called to 'Thespis, and asked him, "Whether her was not ashmmed to utter such lias hriore so many peoplo "" Thespis made answer, "That there was no larm in lies of that sort, and in poeticul thetions, which were made only lor di version." "No," replied solon, Giving agreat stroke with his stick upon the gronnd; "but if we sulfer and approve of lying For onr own diversion, it will quickly that its way into our serlous engragements, mid all our busimess amd affars."-Roman's Hist., Book 5, grt. 8.
5593. THEFT, Adrolt. Ciylipms. Lysmuler had sent dylippis, who hail rommaniled the army in siefly, before him, to carry the money and spoils, whirh were the fruit of his glorions comphigns, to Lacedemon. The money, without reckoning the inmmerable erowns of gold given him by the cities, momonted to 1500 talents, that is to say, $1,500,000$ (rowns. Gylippus, Who earried this considerable sum, could not resist the temptation of converting some purt of it to hils own ase. The bags wre sealed up carefully and did not xeem to leave any room for theft. He musewed them at the bottom; and, after having taken out of each of them what money he thourht fit, to the amount of 300 tnlents, he sewed them up, again very neatly, and thought himself perfectly sufe. But when he arrived at siparta, the aceonts which had been put up in earlh bug discovered him. Tonvoid punishment, he bunishat himself from hiseountry. 559.4. THEFT, Cautious. Sipartans. An Iren was one that had been two years ont of the class of boys; a Melliren one of the oldest hads. This Iren, then, a youth twenty years old, gives orders to those under his command, in their litthe battles, and ha:, them to serve him at his house. He sends the oldest of them to fetch wood, and the younger to gather potherbs: these they stenl where they can find them, either slyly geting into gardens, or clse craftily mind warily creeping to the common tables. But if any one be caught, he is severely flogged for nerligence or want of dexterity. They steal too, whatever victuals they possibly can, ingeniously contriving to do it when persons are asleep or keep but indifferent wateh. If they are discovered, they are punished not only with whipping, but with hunger. Indeed, their supper is but slender at all times, that, to fence against want, they may be forced to exereise their courage and address. . . . The boys steal with so much caution, that one of them having conveyed a young fox under his garment, suffered the crenture to tear out his bowels with his tecth and claws, choosing rather to die than to be detected.Plutaichis " Lycurcus."
5595. THEFT, Educated for. Spartans. Theft was a part of the system of education at Lacedamon. Children were sent out to steal from the public markets and gardens, from the butchers' stalls, and even from private houses. If unsuccessful, they were punished with the loss of a meal; if detected in the theft, they were ncourcerl with nevority. It is a lame apol. ory for an institution of this kind to say that it hathituated them eurly to strataretus of war. to danger, and to vigilance. 'Ther talents of a thice? are very different frem the virtues of a warrior.

5596. THEFT, Punlshment of. Princry Wherin a prinee of the royal bhod of Frame dispraced himsedf by committing roblery and murder in the strects of Puris, Lamis XV. Would not grant a pardon, thongh engerly solicited to do so by a depatation from the partiament of laris, who tried him and suspended their sentenere until the royal plemsure shonld be known. "My lords mid counsellors." said the king, "rethm to your chambers of justice, and promulgate your decree." "Comsider." said the tirst President, "that the unhappy jrince hats your Majesty's blood in his viins." "Y'es," salid the king, "but the blood bas berome inpure, and justiec demmads that it should be let ont; now wimhl I spare my own son, for "t erime for which I should be bound to combemn the memest of my subjucts." The prince was experited on the seatfold in the court of the Grand Clautelet, on the 12th of Angust, 1729.
5597. THEOCRACY, American, Jers--1'mritans. New England, like Cuman, had beron setthed by fugitives. like the Jews, they hand tled to a widerness; like the Jows, they lonked to Heaven for a light to lead them on : like the lews, they hite no supreme ruler but God; like the Jews, they had heathen for their foes; and they derived their legislation from the Jewish code.-Danchof's's U. S., vol. 3, ch. 19.
550®. THEOLOGY, Difficulties in, Iuftiuite Deity. Hiero. . . asked simonides his opji"ion with regard to the mature and atributes of the Deity: The latter desired one day's time to eonsider of it; the next day he asked two, and went on increasing in the same proportion. The prince pressing him to give his rensons for these delays, he confessed that the subject was above his comprelension and that the more he retlected, the more obscure it appeared to him.-RoLhas's IIs'r., Book 7, ch. 2,1 .
5599. THEOLOGY, Effects of, Cromurell. Was not merely his speech, but deep, far beneath his speech, lay his great thoughts of God. and unless you mulerstand his inner depth of vital conviction, you will have no comprehension of the man. $\qquad$ Manton, himself one of the greatest of these writers, says Cromwell had a large and well-selected library. Many of our most famous pieces were then unwritten; but there were some pieces of Sinith, Candray, Adams, Owen, Goolwin, and Mede, and the earlier fathers, mod Calvin, and Hooker, and Herbert's lyries. We think sach were the men with whon Cromwell walked and mused, and whose writings shed light into his soul. -IIOOD's Cromwelf, ch. 1, p. 21 .
5600. THEOLOGY, Pbilosopher's, Alwaragoras. Anaxagoras, . . . devinting most from the vulgar errors and superstition, . . . was accused of impiety. He taught that the first efficient principle of all things was an immaterial and intelligent Being, existing from all cternity ; that the substratum, or subject of His operations, was matter, which likewise existed from all eteralty in a chatic state, eomprehending the confused rudiments of all dilferent substraces, which the latelligent mind of the (remor thest sepmrated, and then comblaed for the formation of tho miniverse, mod of all bodies, mimate and lami. mate. It is trise that Tlailes propagated the doctrine of an etermal mind, the Creator and Inuler of the universe; but he, like most of the nuclent philosophers, seemod to consider this mind us united to matter, which was unimated by it, as the body is by the soul.-Tythen's Hist., Book 2, ch. 9, p. 202.
5601 . - - Phato. The most celehrated of the disciples of Socrates was I Plato, a philosopher whose doetrines have had a more extensive and a more lasting empire over the minds of mankind than those perhups of any other of the ancionts. Phato, a mative of Arima, and thas by his comatry ma Athenhan, was born uhout 430 n.c. . . . It wins Plato's fundumental doctrine thut from nothing, nothing can proceed. belleving, therefore, in the etermil existence of the Deity, he helieved likewlse in the eternity of mether, as the substratimi. . . of the Deity'sopcrations. This matter, howover, was in a chaotle stute, and endowed with no (qualities whatever, thil the etermal mind conferred these qualitles upon it, reduced it into order, und thas formed the banatiful fabric of the universe, of which the itha or arehetype had existed from all cternity in Himself. But in chatic matter Plato conceived that as there was an original deformity, so there was a naturnl resistance to that perfeet order and exeellence which the Deity sought to produce, but which IIe could not entirely overeome; and hence the origin of that evil which murtianly contumimutes IIis works. yet here the philosopher seems himself to perceive the objection from the bouadless power of the Divinity, as he expresses himself with great obseurity on the subject. IIis notions of God, however, are not only most sublime, but extremely reflned. He conceived that the divine mature eonsisted of thre distinet essences, stutes, or hypostases: the first a pure and self-existent Essence, whose sole attribute wis goomess, . the second he conceived to be Mind, the wistom or reason of the first, and the proper Crentor of the universe, . . . the third he conceived to be the Soul of the world ; as he conceived the activity of created matter to infer an inhabiting mind, simply . . . (the soul) or . . .soul of the world. The second hypostasis he supposed to be an emanation from the first, and the third from both. Such is the Platonic Trinity, bearing, in its general description, a strong resemblance to the Christian ; but differing in this materinl point, that in the former the second and third persons are subordinate and inferior to the first.-Tytleer's Hisr., Book 2, ch. 9, p. 271.
5602. -. Stoics. The Stoical doctrines have had a very extensive prevalence and duration; and though in some particulars palpably erroncous, may be accounted, on the whole, more consonant to right reason and more favorable to the practice of virtue than those of any other sect of the philosophy of the ancients. According to the Stoics, the whole universe, and God Himself, the Creator and sonl of that universe, are regulated by certain laws, which are immutable, and resulting from necessity.

The actions of (iod llimself are regulated liy those gencral laws ; yet in one sense they may be considered an free and voluntury, viz., that as there is mothing external of the universe whith God pervades, and which llix soal regulates there is nothing extermal of IImaself which ean impel or necessitate him. Man, according to the notions of the Stoles, is a part of the I) vinity. The humun soul is a portion of that great soul which pervades the universe. The will of man is subject, like the divine will, to unnlter able haws: yet it is virtually free, hecmuse man helieves himself a free agent, and his conduct is fufluenced by that helief. He oheys voluntarily and from inilimation that destiny while he must lave obeyed ab ante, though he had not inelined it. Man being a part of the universe which is regulated by God, cannot complain thot he is bound by the same laws which regulate and hind universal mature, and even God Himself. The wise man, therefore, never considers what is good or evil' with respect to himself. Whatever hapened to him must necessarily have happened aneording to the order of mature ; bermine had it not heen neccessury, it wonld not have happened. The prins and pleasures of an Individual ure, therefore, unworthy of the regard of IIIm who attends to the universal good; his pains und pleasures are determined by the same law which determined his existence. He cannot repine that he exists, for at whom shall he repine? Ile existed by the necessity of nature. Virtue, in the opinton of a stoic. was nothing more than a manly resolution to aceommodate the unalterable laws of nuture. Viee was a wenk und dastardly endeavor to oppose those laws. Viee, therefore, was folly, and virtue the only true wisdom.-Tytlen's Hist., Book 2, eh. $9, \mathrm{p} 2 \pi 8$.
5608. THEOLOGY ridiculous. Egyptian. In theology, too, while the superstitious worshijr of the common people was so grossly absurd as to draw on them the ridienle of all other nations, the secret doctrines of the priests we generally allowed to have been pure, refined, and rational. One Great Intelligence was supposed to preside over all muture. Subordinute spirits, portions of that Intelligence, presided over the actions of mankind, as the guardians of the litiman sonl, which was derived from the sume divine original, hat was destined to undergo a certuin number of transmigrations through different bodies, before it was reunited to the great parent-spirit. They believed in the immortality of the soni. Diodorus tells as that they esteemed the present state of existence to be of no value in comparison with that which was to come, and which was to be the reward of a life spent in this world in the practice of virtue.Tytler's Hist., Book 1, ch. 4, p. 43.
5604. THEORETICAL vs. Practical. Webster - Clay. While Mr. Webster is so honorably perpetuated by his elaborate and masterly discussion of great principles in the Senate, he did not connect himself with a single historic measure. While Mr. Clay's speeches remain unread, his memory is lastingly identified with issues that are still vital and powerful. He advaneed the doctrine of protection to the stately dignity of the American system. - Blaine's 'Twenty Years of Congress, p. 107.

Swedenlorg, with amazhig observitlom and sugnelty, has mude a regular study of this ratlo tretween the respiration and the thoughts and emothons ; he shows in detail that the two eorrespond exactly, und, moreover, that thelr correspondence is onc of the longesought links between the soul and tho body, wharelsy every thought is represented and carriod out momentaneously in the exphanse of tho haman frome. It is dilllentt to give a more platn or excellant renson of the the betwean the hody mal the soul, than that the latter thals the boily mh lately to its mind; while, on the other haind, the living body elings to the soml, becanise it wants it friendly superior life in infuse and direet its life. - Wifite's Aweinenioho, ch. 6, p. 53.

5608. THOUGHT, Food for, Obserration. As the fall of apples lrom atree led Newton to the theory of gravitation, so the slow and uniform swinging of a lamp, suspended from the roof of the Pisat cathedral, suggested to Galileo the idea of the pendulam ns aneasurer of time and as a motive-power of clocks. It was thity years later, howevor, before he aetmally constructed a pendulum clock.-Cycsopedia of Biog., p. 262.
$\mathbf{5 6 0 9}$. THOUGHT suggested. Sir Robert Pecl. Farmers in those deys generally used pewter plates at table. It happened one day that Robert Peel drew a pattern for calico on the back of one of his dinner-plates, and while he was looking at it, the thought occurred to lim that perlaps if he should spread color upon it, and apply the requisite degree of pressure, he could get an impression on calico. In a cottuge close to his farm-lanse lived a woman who liad one of those machines for smoothing fabries which worked by rollers. Having applied color to his pattern, and placed enlico over it, he passed his plate between the rollers of this calendering machine. He was delighted to find that an excellent impression was made upon the calico, and thus was hegun the invention of the process by which to this day calico is printed.-Cyclopedia of Biog., p. 714.

5019. TIME, Systematized, Petronius Maximus. The private life of the semator Petronias Maximus was of ten aileged as a rare example of human felicity. Ifis birth was noble and illustrious, since he descended from the Anician frmily: his dignity was supported by un ndegunte patrimony in land and money; and these ndvantages of fortune were necomphanied with liberal arts and decent manners, which adorn or innitate the inestimuble gifts of genius mad virtue. The luxury of his pmbee nud table was hospitabie and elegant. Whenever Maximus nppenred in public he was surrounded by a train of grateful and obsequions clients; and it is possible that among these clients ho might deserve and possess some real friends. His merit was rewarded by the favor of the prince and semate; he thrice exercised the othec of Pretorian prefect of 1taly; he was twice invested with the consulship, and he obtained the rank of patrician. These civil honors were not incompatible with the enjoyment of leisure and tranquillity; his hours, according to the demunds of plensure or reason, were accurately distributed by $n$ witer-clock; and this avarice of time may be allowed to prove the sense which Maximusentertained of his own hıppiness.-Gibson's Rome, ch. 36, p. 460.
5620. TIMES, Unfavorable. Eighteenth Century. One of the grand difficulties in a history

5621. TIMIDITY in Government. Constantime. The same timsid policy, of dividing whatever is united, of reducing whintever is eminent, of dreading every metive power, and of expecting that the most freble will prove the most ohedient, seems to pervade the institutions of several prinees, and purticularly those of Constan-tine.-(bumos's liome, ch. 17, p. 12.

These were expelled by the scots. whon setzed their lands. Amid such freguent changes, many heded their possessions ly titles extremely defective, and liobert formed on this gromel a seheme for chareking the growing powor and weath of his nobles. He summoned them to uppear, nad show hy what rights they held their lauds. " By this right," said each of them. laying lats hand upon hissword; " by the sword we gained them, and by that' we will defend them." Robert, apprehensive of the consequences of exasperating this resolute spirit of his nobles, wisely dropped the seheme.-TyTuen's IIast., lBook (i, ch. 14, p. 230.

S(B:BA. TOLERATION commended. C'romirell. Cronwall's whole ldens of religions llberty rose mid ringed fur beyond those of most of the men of his nge. Jow impresslvely this comes ont in his eorrespondence with the deoteh commissionars and Presbyterian clergymen ufter the Inttle of Dumbur! "You sny," he writes. "that you Juve just cunse to regret that men of civil employments should usirp the calling and employment of the ministry to the seamelal of the Reformed kirks. Are yout troubled that Christ is promehed? Is proaching so exclusively your funetion ? 54.10. TOLERATION condemned. By Pwritans. 'The treatise of 'Thomms Eiwnrds, in his "Cangrena" rublished in time of Cromwell, and disapproved by him, says:] " $\mathbf{A}$ toleration is the grand design of the devil-his masterpieec, and chief engine he has at this time, to uphold bis tottering kingdom. It is the most compendious, ready, sure way to destroy all religion, lay aid waste, and bring in nll evil. It is a most tran-force him to take measures for preventing the refusal of the sacraments. After being cruelly tortured, the wretehed criminal was executed with all the frightful barbarities whieh the haw denonnced on purricides: his limbs were torn with red-hot pincers, and boiling melted lead was poured into the woundis; nfter which his body was dragged in pieces oy four horses, and the remans burnt and seattered to the winds.-Studente' France, ch. 24, § 2.
5849. TORTURE, Punishment by. Iron Boot. [It was a boot of iron put on the leg, and wedges were driven an, commonly agninst the calf, but sometimes on the shin-hone. Ofthears of the English, Goverament used it to punish disloyal or suspected Scotchmen in Edinburgh.]-Knigur's Ena., vol. 4, ch. 17, p. 204.
5650. TORTORE, Terrihle. Garibaldi. He beeame involved in one of those wars between Repulbicans and Absolutists which desolated the countries of South America for so many years. IIe fought on sen and ou land. He was wounded and shipwrecked. He commaided fleets and regiments. He was vietorious and defeated. Once, being taken a prisoner, he was cruelly beaten with a club), then huag by his hands to a beam for two hours, and when ent down fell hehpless to the earth.-Cyclopedia of Biog., p. 495.

565 1. TORTURE, Testimony by. John IHoward. In all the prisons of the Continent he found one horror which was unknown in Englanci-a torture chamber. It was a custom then, in all the conntries of Europe, except Prussia, to subjeet oniminals to the torture, in order to comipel them to confess their crimes and reveal their accomplices. Thi, chamber was usually under ground, that the eries of the sufferer might not be heard. Clad only in a long flannel gown, the trembling vietim was led to this apartment, where were assembled the magistrates, the executioners, 4 surgeon, and a secretary ; and there he was tortured till his agony had wrung from him a confession, real or fictitious. Sometimes it was the thumb-serew, sometimes the boot, sometimes a chair with blunt spikes in the seat; sometimes it was a machine for dislocating the arms; cometimes it was the lash or the showerbath, that tried the endurance of the acensed. These chambers of torture Howard visited, but he purposely for bore to lend a faise attraction to his book by deseribing them.-Cyclopedia of Bioct., p. 50.

565\%. TRACTS effective. Religious. [Dr. Coke, in 178.), gave a tract, being an extract of Mr. Law's "Treatise on the Nature and Design of Christianity," to a family named Cowles, in Williamsburgh, Va.] By means of it they were so stirred up to seek the Lord, that the father, the mother, and six ehildren, who were married, with their husbands and wives-fourteen in all-were converted. The man who received the tract became a picacher.-Stevens' M. E. Churdi, vol. 2, 1. 287.
5653. TRADE, Contempt for. Samuel Johnson. Being solicited to compose a funeral sermon for the daughter of a tradesman, he naturally inquired into the character of the deceased ; and being told she was remarkable for her humility and condesceusion to inferiors, he observed that those were very laudable qualities, but it might not be so casy to discover who the lady's inferiors were-Boswilli's Joinson, p. 175.
5654. TRADE, Illicit. American Colonies. A.D. 1763 . It was thought that of a million und a lulf pounds of tea consumed annuadly in the colonies, not more than one-tenth part was sent from England. Grenville [prime-minister] held that the contruband was all stolen from the commerce and part of it from the manufactures of Great Britain, against . . . the law.-Bancroft's U. S., vol. 5, ch. 9.
5655. TRADE, Inhuman. Slave Trude. By the treaty of Ctrechat England gained the monopoly of the slave trade in Spanish and British America. Controlling the trade in slaves, who cost uothing but trinkets and toys und refuse arms, England gained, by the sale of the children of Africa into bondage in America, the eapital which built $u_{2}$, and confirmed a British empire in Hindostan.-Bancroft's U. S., vol. 3, ch. 21.
5656. TRADE, Laws for. England. [In 1509] the complaint of the Commons, that hantmakers and cap-mnkers "sell their hats and caps at an outrageous price," averring that what they buy for sixteen-penee the $y$ sell for three shillings, is simply evidence of lack of competition. [It was enacted that no hatter should sell the lest hat above the price of twenty-pence. But the purchaser really obtained no chenper commodity; he lost in quality what he gained in price. J-Knifit's Eng., vol. 2, eh. 15, p. 251.
5657. TRADE, Overreaching in. Egyptians. The general character of the Egyptians, with respeet to morals, contributed likewise to draw upon them the disesteem of other nations. They have been generally aecused by the ancicnts of grent cumning and insincerity in their dealings.
 proverbinlly used by the Greeks to signify cozening and orerreaching.-Tytler's Hıst., Book 1, ch. $4, \mathrm{p} .47$.
5658. TRADE regulated. Fixed Prices. An edict was issued in the name of the four CæsarsDiocletian, Maximiun, Constantius, and Galerius. It fixed a maximum of prices throughout the empire for all the necessaries and commodities of life. The preamble insists, with great vehemence, on the extortion and inhumanity of the venders and merchants. . . . The edict, as Colonel Leake clearly shows, was issued A.c. 303. Among the articles of which the maximum value is assessed are oil, salt, honey, butehers' ment, poultry, game, fish, vegetables, fruit, the wages of laborers and artisans, sehoolmasters and orators, and clothes.-Milman's Note in Gibibon's. Rome, ch. 13, 1. 410.
5659. - Roman Empero; Julian. When the luxurious citizens of Antioch complained of the high price of poultry and fish, Julian publicly declared that a frugal city ought to be satisfied with a regular supply of wine, oil, and bread. . . . The emperor ventured on a very dingerous and doubtful step, of fixing, by legal authority, the value of corn. He enacted that, in a time of seareity, it should be sold at a price which had seldom been known in the most plentiful years. . . . The consequences might have been foreseen, and were soon felt. The Imperial wheat was purchased by the rich merchants ; the proprictors of land, or of corn, withheld from the city the necustomed supply, mad the small fuantities that appeared in the market were secretly sold at an momaced and illegal price. Julima still continued to uppland his own poling, and treated the complaints of the people as a vain and ungrateful murmur.-Grmbon's Rome, ch. 2t, p. 466.

5(i60. -- England. [In lio48 the] sellers of victuals were to be puaiched for conspiring und covenanting to sell their commodities at mareasomble prices. It recpaired three (quarters of a century to show that such legislation was a mistake.-Kviour's Eva., vol. 6, ch. 12, p. 18ī.
5661. TRADE, Tricks in. Englfoud in 1547. [The deaker puts] a strike of good malt in the bottom of the suek, two strikes of bad malt in the middle, and a grood strike in the sack's month ; the cloth-maker stretches his eightern yards of cloth to twenty-seven, and then thickens it with "tloek powler," the " devil's dust" of modern times.-Knigut's Eng., vol. 2, ch. 29, p. 486.
5662. TRADES UNION, Objection to. Caste. In the towns the orgmazation of trades, with their strict laws of appreaticeship and their guilds, exchuded from competition with the recognized artisan all those who had not the claim of enste-for caste it was, when a workman must have been brought up to a calling, and could follow that calling and no other.-Knignt's Eng., vol. 3, ch. 17, p. 267.
5663. TRADES UNION, Opposition of. Jc, acs Watt. Althrugh there were no mathematical-instrument-makers in Glasgow [where he first established himself in business], he was opposed by the corporation of the hammermen, on the ground that he was neither the son of a burgess nor had served an apprenticeship within the bor-ough.-Smles' Buef Biograpiles, p 13
566.1. TRADESUNION, Oppressive. Jumes Watt. [When James Watt went to Glasgow to establish a shop for the manufacture of mathematical instruments,] the worshipful company of hammermen, in that spirit of exclusiveness which the lapse of a century has searcely cradicated where guilds and corporations have any remnant of antiquated privileges, resolved to prevent James Watt excreising his art.-Kniait's Ena., vol. 7, ch. 3, p. 59.
©665. TRADESUNION prohibited, England. [lt was enacted in 1423,] Whereas by the yearly congregations and confederacies made by the masons in their general chapiters assembled, the rood course and effect of the statutes of laborers be openly violated and broken, in subversion of the low, and to the great damage of all the commons, our said lord, the king, willing in this case to provide remedy, hath ordained and established that such chapiters and congregations shall not be hereafter holden : and if any such be made, they that canse such chapiters to be assembled and holden, if they therefore be convict, shall be judged for felons. And all the other masons that come to such chapiters and congregations be punished by imprisonment of their bodies, and make fine and reason at the king's will.-Knight's Eng., vol. 2, ch. 8, p. 116.
5666. $\square$ England. [In 1548] combinations of workmen were prohibited under severe pemaltics. - Kivicimt's Eva., vol. 6, ch. 12, p. 18 i.

5667: TRADITION, Worthless. Cromuctl. [Charlese I. thed at the battle of bambar.] Thaey still remember that day in Worester, and still point out many of the phaces romnected with the story of the battle ; and in Perry Wood, where Cromwell first took uphis position, there is a tree, which the pensant shows to those who desire to see it, where the devil, Cromwell's intimate friend, mpeared to him, med gave him the promise of victors.-Hoob's Chomwela, ch. 13, p. 170 .
5668. TRAINING fo: Greatness, Alexatuder. So ripe a judgment in this young priace was owing as much to the good education which had been given him as to the excellence of his matural ulititics. Several preceptors acre appointed to tench him whatsocver was worthy the heir to a great kingdem ; and the chief of these was Leonidas, a relation of the queen, and a person of the most severe morals. Alexander himself related nfterwarl, that this Leonidas, in their jonmeys together, used freguently to look into the tranks where his bed und clothes were hid, in order to see if Olympias, his mother, had not put something superfluous into them, which might ulminister to delicacy and luxury.-Rollin's Ilist., Book 15, § 1.
5669. TRAINING, Lack of. Military. It is the misfortune of men of superior military ability that their sabordinates are gencrally faihures when trusted with independent commands. Accustomed to obey inplicitly the instructions of their chicf, they have done what they have been told to do, and their virtue has been in never thinking for themselves. They succeed, and they forget why they succeed, and in part attribute their fortune to their own skill. With Alexamder's gencrals, with Crsar's, with Cromwell's, 'ven with some of Napoleon's, the story has betn the same. They have been self-confident, yet when thrown upon their own resources they have driven back upon a judgneat which has been inadequately trained. The mind which guided them is rbeent. The instrument is ealled on to lecome self-acting, and necessarily acts unwise-ly.-Froude's Casar, ch. 25.
5676. Training, Lasting. Scott's Mother. Sir Walter's mother, who was a Miss Rutherford, the danghter of a physician, had been better edncated than most Scotchwomen of her day, in spite of having been sent "to be finished oll" 'by "the honorable Mrs. Ogilvie," whose training was so effective, in one direction at least, that even in her eighticth year Mrs. Scott conld not enjoy a comfortable rest in her chair, but "took as much care to avoid touching her chair with her back as if she had still been under the stern eyes of Mrs. Ogilvie."-Hutton's Life of Sir Walter Scott, ch. 1.

§671. TRAINING by Obedience. Spartans.

 They accustomed the children from their earliest infancy to an entire submission to the laws, mag. istrates, and all in authority ; and their education, properly speaking, was no more than an apprenticeship of obedience. It was for this reason that Agesilaus advised Xenophon to send his children to Sparta, as to an excellent sehool, where they might learn the greatest and mostmoble of all sciences, to obey and to command, for the one maturally leads on to the other.IRollin's Histr., Buok 10, ch. 1, § 1 .
5672. TRAINING, Physical. Romans. In trenting of the system of Roman education, we have taken notice of those exercises of the body to which all the youth of the republie were acenstomed from their earliest lnfmey. By the constant practice of wrestling, boxing, hunching the javelin, rumning, und swimming they were inured from their cralle to that species of life which a soldier leads in the most netive enmpaign in the tleld. They were accustomed to the military place-that is, to walk twenty miles, nud sometimes twenty-four, in four hours. During these marrhes they carried burdens of sixty pounds' weight; and the weupons with which they were armed were double the weight of those which were used in the actunl field of battle.Tytlen's Mist., Book 4, ch. 5, p. 452.

5673 , TRAINING, Success without. William Prince of Orange. The fuculties which are neeessury for the conduct of great affairs ripened in bim nt a time of life when they have seareely begun to blossom in ordinary men. Since Oetavius the world had seen no such instance of precocions statesmanship. Skilful diplomatists were surprised to hear the weighty ohservations which at seventeen the prince male on public uffairs, and still more surprisell to see the lad, in sitnations in which he might have been expected to hetray strong passion, preserve a composure as imperturbable as their own. At cighteen he sat among the fathers of the Commonwenlth, grave, disereet, und julicious as the oldest among them. At twenty-one, in a day of gloom and terror, he was pheed at the heal of the administration. At twenty three he was renowned thronghout Europe as a soldier and a politicim. He had put donestic factions unler his feet ; he was the soul of a mighty coalition ; and he had contended with honor in the fied against some of the grentest generals of the age.-Macadlay's Eng., ch. 7, p. 153.
5674. TRAITOR, Political. Mr. Huske in Parliament. A.d. 1763. A native of New Hampshire, educated at Boston, now member [of Purliament] from Mhlden, . . . boasted that taxes might be laid on the colonies to yield $£ 5,000,000$ [only $£ 200,100$ were proposed by the ministry], which would secure the promised relief to the country gentlemen. This sum, he insisted, the Americans were well able to pay; and he was heard by the House with great joy and attention, letraying his native hand for the mementary pleasure of being cheered by the aristocracy, which was so soon to laugh at him.-Bancnor't's U. S., vol. 5, ch. 9.
5675. TRAITOR punished. By Mother. The great Pansanias, who had beaten the Persians in the battle of Platea, and who on many oceasions had helaved with great generosity as well as moderation, at last degenerated and fell into a scandalous treaty with the Persinns, in bopes, through their interest, to make himself sovereign of Greece. As soon as he had conceived these strange notions, he fetl into the manners of the Persians, affected all their luxury, and derided the plain customs of his country, of which he had formerly been so fond. The Ephori waited some time for clear proof of his treacherous de-sigus, and when they had obtained it, determined to imprison him. But he tled into the temple of Minerva Chakcioicos, and they besieged him there. They walled up nll the gates, and his own mother haid the tirst stome. When they hud almost starved him to dreth, they haid humds on him, and by the time they had got him ont of the temple he expired. - Note: in Protrancu's Lives.
5676. TRAIT0R, Shameless. Rign of James II. [Lord Sunderland, the prime-minister, was apprehensive of retribution when the revolution sloould take phace.] There was yre one way in which he might escmpe-a way more terrible to a noble spirit than a prison or a sratfold. He might still, by a well-timed and us enl trenson, earn his pardon from the foes of the government. It was in his power to render to them at this conjuncture services heyond all price ; for he had the royal car ; he had great inthence over the Jesuitical cabal ; and he was hlindly trusted by the French ambussudor. . . Whenever he wished to transmit a secret messuge to Holland, he spoke to his wife; she wrote to Siduey, and Sidney communicated her letter to William. One of her communications was intercepted amb carricd to James. she vehemently protested that it was a forgery. Her hushund, with characteristic ingenuity, defended himself by representing that it was quite impossible for any man to be so base as to do what he was in the halit of doing. "Even if this is Lady Sunderland's hand," hi said, " that is no affinir of mine. Your Majesty knows my domestic misfortunes. The footing on which my wife and Mr. Sidney are is but ton publie. Who ean believe that I would make a confidunt of the man who has injured my honor in the tenderest point-of the man whom, of all others, I ought most to hate?" This defence was thought satisfactory ; and secret intelligence was still transmitted from the wittol to the adulteress, from the adulteress to the gallant, and from the gallint to the enemies of James.-MAcaulay's Eng., ch. 9, p. 411.

567\%. TRAMPS, Philosophic. (ynics. The morality of sorrates. . . was pushed the length of extravagance by the Cynies. The founder of this sect wns Antisthenes, a pupil of Socrates. . . To evince his contempt of hixury, he chose to wear an old and tattered cloak. "Why so ostentntious?" said Socrates. "Through your ragged coat I see your vanity." Virtue, in the opinion of the Cynies, consisted in renouncing all the conveniences und comforts of life. They clothed themselves in rags, disdained to live in a house, slept in the strects, ate nothing but what was coarse and insipid, and wandered about the country with a stick and a knapsack. They decried nll the arts as either useless or dangerons. Science was altogether iruitless and unnecessary ; for a virtuous nam had attained to the perfection of his nature, and had no need to learn anything. From voluntury ignorance they advanced to impudence ; and luving nothing to lose, while they scorned all gain, they indulged themselves in satire and invective without restraint. . . . The vices with which Diogenes has been reproached are hardly to be believed, when we know that some of the most virtuous of the Greeks were his admirers and disciples. - Tytler's Hist., Book 2, ch. 9, p. 269.

5679. TRANCES, Punished for. Elizabeth Burton. [Elizabeth Barton, the nun of Kent, clamed to have been miraculonsly restored to health. She had been long sick, and could not eat or trink by a long space, and in the violence of her inflrmity she secmed to be in trances,] and spoke and uttered many foolish and idle words. [She commenced, abont 1525, to have] trances and revelations. She had revelations mad special knowledge roncerning Cardinal Wolsey, and ulso the king's highness, concerning his harriage, so that she said if he did marry amother woman his grace should not reign king past one month afterward. $\qquad$ She saw the king, Anne Boleyn. und the Earl of Wiltshire walking in a garden; and a little de vil whispering in the lady's ear to send her father with a great bribe to the emperor. She saw evil spirits struggling for Wolsey's sonl ufter his decease. She saw persons whom the angel of God had appointed to be at her teath when she should receive the crown of martrydom. [She was executed for conspiracy of treason, and involved Bishop Fisher and Sir Thomas More in a similar fate.]-Kniant's Eno., vol. 2, ch. 22, p. 352.
5680. TRAVEL, Benefits of. Crusuters. The contenpt with which, in the last century, it was fashionable to speak of the pilgrinagres, the sanctuaties, the erusades, and the momastic institutions of the Middle Ages. In times when men were scarcely ever induced to travel by liberal curiosity, or the pursuit of gain, it was better that the rude inhmbitant of the north should visit ltaly and the cast as a pilgrim, than that he shonld never see anything but those stuatid cabins and uneleared woods among which he was born.-Macaulay's Eng., ch. 1, p. 7.
5681. Travel, Dangers of. Sicetenbory. In the year 1710 I set out for Gottenburg, that I might be conveyed, by ship, thence to London. On the voyage my life was in danger four times: first on some shomls, toward which we were driven by a storm, until we were within a quarter of a mile from the raging breakers, and we thought we should all perish. Afterward we narrowly escaped some Danish pirates under French colors; and the next evening we were fired into from a British ship, which mistook us for the same pirites, but without much damage. Lastly, in London itself, I was exposed to a more serions danger. While we were entering the harbor, some of our commtrymen came to us in a boat, and persuaded me to go with them into the eity. Now, it was known in London that an epidemie was raging in Sweden, and therefore all who arrived from Sweden were forbidden to leave their ships for six weeks, or forty days; so I, having transgressed this law, was very near being hanged, and was only freed under the condition that, if any one attempted the same thing again, he should not escape the gallows.Wiites's Swedenborg, ch. 11, p. 26.
5632. TRAVEL, Diffioulties of. Reign of Charles II. The rich commonly travelled in their own carringes, with at least four horses. coach and six is in our time never seen, except as part of some pageant. The frequent mention. therefore, of such equipnges in old books is likely to mishame us. We uttribute to mignitherene what was really the effect of a very disagrecable: necessity. People in the time of Charless 11 . travelled with six horse's, becanse with 11 shaller number therr was great danger of sticking finst in the mire. Noi were even six horses nlways 5688. TRAVEL, Effects of. Ein!ulation. 'Thu' Rassian traders land seen the mamaitiernee and tasted the luxury of the city of the ('asars. A marvellous tale and aseanty supply exaded the desires of their suvage eomintrymen; they euvied the gifts of nature which their climate denied ; they coveted the works of art which they were too lazy to imitate and too intigent to purdhase : the Varangian princes unfurled the haners of piratical adventure, and their bravest soledieris were triwn from the nations that dwelt in the borthern isles of tae ocean.-Gimason's laome: ch. 55, 1). 428.

5684. TRAVEL expedited. Rematus. ('itic's were commeeted with ench other and with tho eapital by the public highways, which, issuing from the formu of Rome, Iraversed Italy, pervaded the provinces, and were terminated only by the frontiers of the empire. If we carefully trace the distance from the wall of Antoninus to leme, and from thence to Jerusulen, it will be found that the great chain of commaniention from the north-west to the south-east point of the empire was drawn out to the length of four thousand and eighty lommmiles. The public. roads were acenratoly divided by mile-stones. and ran in a direct line from one dity to another. with very little respect for the obstacles either of nature or private projerty. Mominins werr. perforated, and bold arches thrown over the brondest and most rapitl streans. The michell. part of the rond was raised into a terrace which commanded the mljacent country, consisted of several strata of sand, gravel, and cement, and was paved with large stones, or, in some places near the cupital, with granite. Such was the solid construction of the Roman lighways. whose firmness has not entirely yielded to the effort of fifteen centuries.-Ginison's Rome. (h. 2, p. 63.

$\qquad$ Stage-Corch. To the very beginning of the Sevolution the people lived uphrt, isolated and dependent on their own resources for life and enjoyment. When, in 176 an express wagon made the trip from New York to Philadelphia in two days, it was considered a marvel of rapidity. Six years later the first stage-coach began to run regularly between Boston and Providence. - Rimiatir's U. S., ch. 36. p. 283.
5686. TRAVEL, Indifference to. Roman Emperor Antoniuus Pius. The tranquil life of Antoninus Pins was spent in the bosom of Italy ; and during the twenty-three years that he direeted the public administration. the longest journeys of that amiable prince extended no farther than from his pulace in Rome to the retirement of his Lanuvian villa.-Gibbon's Roms, ch. 1, p. 9.
5637. TRAVEL, Objects in. To See Men. It will be observed that when giving me advice as to my travels, Dr. [Sammel] Johnson did not dwel] upon citics, und palaces, and pletures, and shows, and Arcadian scenes. Ite was of Lord lissex's opinion, who melvises his kinsman, Roger bial of Ruthad, "rather to go n humdred milles to spak with one wise mun than flve miles to sce a dair town."-[Bonwelics Jounson, 1. 119.

Diss. TRAVEL, Slow. Statere-Cocech. On the 10th of duly [1754] Benjumin Frnnklin hid before the commiswoners the druft of a federal constitution. His vast and comprehensive mind licd realized the true condition and wants of the country : the eritical sithation of the colonies demanded a central government. Low else cond revennes be raised, nn army be organized, and the common welfare be provided for ? $\boldsymbol{\Lambda c}$ cording to the proposed plan of union, Philndelphia, i centrul city, was to be the capital. It was urged in behalf of this clanse that the delegates of New ILumpshire und Georgia-the colonies most remote-could reach the seat of government in fifteen or thoenty days. - Rndratu's U. S., ch. 31 , p. 257.
5888. TRAVEL, Suppression of. Reigm of Chwhes II. [S'uge-conches were introduced between Exeter and [ondon.] Many persons were, from mere stupidity und obstinacy, disposed to clamor against the innovation, simply becanse it was an innovation. It was vehemently argued that this mote of conveyance would be fatal to the breed of horses and to the noble art of horsemanship) : that the Thames, which had long been an important nursery of seamen, would cease to be the chief thoroughfare from London up to Windsor and down to Gravesend ; that saddlers and spurriers would be ruined by hundreds; that numerous inns, at which mounted travellers had been in the habit of stopping, would be de serted, and would no longer pay any rent; that the new carriages were too hot in summer and too cold in winter; that the passengers were grievously annoyed by invaliels and crying children; that the conch sometimes renched the inn so late that it was impossible to get supper, and sometimes started so early that it was impossible to gret breakfast. On these gronnds it was gravely recommended that no public carriage should be permitted to have more than four horses, to start oftener than once a week, or to go more than thirty miles a day.-MaciauLAY's ENG., eh. 11, p. 353.
5699. TBEACHERY, Base. Philip VI. Fifteen of the most powerfal baron of Brittany, whom the king had invited to a grand tournament, were suddenly arrested and thrown into the Chatelet, upon a vague charge of intriguing with the English; and after a brief detention they were brought ont and behended, without any form of trial, on the 29th of November, 1343. Early in the next year three barons of Normindy were in like manner seized and put to death, in utter violation of all rules of justice. -students' France, ch. 10, $\vdots 7$.

5691 . TREACHERY, Consummate. Charles II. Charles II. was, perliaps, in a deeper degree than any of his ancestors or descendants, false, treacherous, and licentious. He signed the Solemn League and Covenant of Scotland, supporting the Protestant religion, at the very moment lie was in attempted negotiation with Rome for befriending the Papacy. He was, however, proelaimed king of the Seots, und the Seots limd a perfect right to elect him to be their monareh; but he aimed at the recovery of scotland in order to recover the crowns of the three kingrdoms. To win Seotland to help him in this, he would not only sign the Covennmt ; he nroffered to sign a declaration by which le renounced nll Dapacy and Episeopary. But pledged word or outh were of very little account with him.-Iloon's Chomwela, eh. 12, p. 149.

5(392. TREACHERY, Gold for. Bewedict $A r$ nold. About midnight of the 21st [of Sepiember André] went ashore from the Vulture, n sloop) of wnr, und met Arnold in a thicket, on the west bank of the river, two miles below Inaverstraw. Day-elnwn appronched, and the conspirators were obliged to hide themselves. In doing so, they entered the American lines. Arnold gave the password, and André, disgnising himself, assumed the character of a spy. During the next thy the traitor and hils vietim remaned concealed at the house of a Tory named Smith. Here the awful business was completed. Arnold was to surrender West Point, its garrisons and stores, und to receive for his treachery $£[0,000$ und a commission as brigadier in the British army: All prelimimaries being settled, papers containing a full deseription of West Point, its delenees, and the best method of attack, were made out and given to Andre, who seereted the dangrorous iloenment in his stockings.-1RidisuTu's U. S., ch. 43, p. 344.
5698. TREACHERY, Message of. Linperor Alexander $I$. [IIe professed ardent and lasting friendship for Napoleon, yet when neurly nil Europe was arrayed agninst him he proved to be an enemy.] Xin Austrian courier was taken prisoner. There was found in his possession a letter from the commander of the IRussian forces, addressed to the Arehduke Ferdinand, congratulating him wion his victory, and expressing the hope that very soon the Russian army rould be permitted to co-overate with the Austrians aguinst the French. Napoleon immediately sent the letter to Alexander, without note or comment. Abrotis's Napoleon B., vol. 2, ch. 7.

5694 . TREASON, Cry of. Patrick Ifenry. [He was a young man and new member of the legislature of Virginia when the Stamp Aet was proclaimed.] Lifted beyond himself, "Tarejuin," he eried, "and Ciesar had each' his Brutas; Charles the First his Cromwell, and George the Third-" " Treason !" shouted the speaker. "Treason, treason!" was eehoed round the house, while IIenry, fixing his eye on the first interrupter, continued, without faltering, " may profit by their example."-Banchoft's U. S., vol. 5, ch. 13.
5695. TREASON defined. Reign of James II. The Tories of the Lower House proceeded to introduce what they called a bill for the preservation of the king's person and government. They proposed that it should be high treason to say that Monmouth was legitimnte, to utter any words tending to bring the person or govermment of the sovereign into hatred or contempt, or to make any motion in Parliament for changing the orter of shecession. Some of these provisions excited general disgust and alarm. The Whigs, few and weak as they were, attempted to rally, and found themselves re-enforced by a comsidermble mumber of moderate and sensible Cavaliers. Words, it was sadi, may easily be mismaderstood by un honest mun. 'They miny casity be misconstrined by a kimve. What wasspoken medaphorically may tee upprehended literally. What was spoken hodicrously may be apprehombed seriously. A particle, a tense, a mood, III (mphasis, may make the whole difference betwere ghilt mind innocence.-Macaulay's Exg., eh. 5, p, 5t0.
5696. TREASON, Inciplent. Wior of 1812. Cuder a rigorous blockade the foreign commeree of the Eistern States vas totally destr youl. The beacons in the lighthouses were allowed to bum ont, and a genemb gloom settled over the cometry. From the begiming many of the people of Now bingland had opposed the war. Their interests centred in ships and factories; the former were cmptured int sea, and the later came to a stundstill. Industry was paralyzed. The members of the Fe. emi party cried out against the continuance of the contest. The legislature of Massachasetts mivised the calling of a convention. The other Eastern Sintes responded to the call, und on the 14th of December [1814] the delegates assembled at Martford. The objeets of the comention were not very clemrly expressen, but opposition to the war nud the policy of the Administration was the leading principle. The landers of the Demorratic party, who supported the wur poliey of the government, did not hesitate to say that the purposes of the assembly were disloyal and treasomable. Be that as it may, the convention ruined the Federal party. Afier remaning in session with closed doors for nemrly three weeks, the delegates published an address more moderate and just than had been expected, and then adjourned. But little hope of political preferment remained for those who had participated in the Hartford eonvention.Ridiati's U. S., ch. 51, p. 412.
5697. TREASON, Punishment of. Romans. This measure of an agrarim law we shall observe, from this time forwarl, to be a source of domestic dissensions, down to the very end of the commonwealth. Cassius was the first proposer of it, and it eost him his life. His ofllee of consul was no sooner at an end than he was solemnly accused of aspiring at royalty ; and, by sentence of the popular assembly, he was thrown from the Tarpeian Rock, the usual punishment of treason.-Ty'tler's Hist., Book 3, ch. 4, p. 3:4.
5698. TREASON, Retribation of. Romans. [When Rome was besieged] Tarpeia, the governor's daughter, charmed with the golden bracelets of the sabines, betrayed the fort into their lands, and asked, in return for her treason, what they wore on their left arms. Tatius agreeing to the condition, she opened one of the gates by night, and let in the Salines.

Such were the sentiments of Tatius with regard to Tarpeia when he ordered the Sabines to remember their promise, and to grudge her nothing which they had on their left arms. He was the first to take off his bracelet and throw it to her, and with that his shield. As every one did the same, she was overpowered by the gold and shields thrown upon her, and sinking under the weight, ex-pired.-Plutarch's "Romulus."
5699. TREASURE, Hope a. Alexander. Before lee set ont on his expedition [against the Perrans] he settled the uffairs of Macedon, over which he mpointed Antiputer us viceroy, with 12,000 foot, mad mearly the sume manber of horse. Healso inguired into the domestientrairs of his friends, giving to one un estate in hand, to noother a village, to a third the revenues of a town, to a fourth the toll of a hartor. And as all the revemaes of his demesmes were niremedy employed mud exhmasted by his domations, Perdiccas main to him, "My hord, what is it you rescrve for yourself?" Alexander replying, "Hope," "The same hope," says Perdicens, "ought therefore to satisfy ins." mad very generonsly refused to necept of what the king had assigned to him.-Rohin's llat., Book 15, $3.

5700. TREATX, An observed. William Pen's. The treaty with the red men-the only treaty that was never sworn to aml never brokem, snys Voltaire-was one of fricudship and brotherhood and of mutmul defence. - Kntantr's Evo., vol. 4, ch. 23, p. 379 .
5701. TREE, Delivering. Secomel C'rusade. The vangumed, which bore the royal bamer and the oriflamme of St. Denys, had donbled their mareh with rash and inconsiderate speed ; and the rear, which the king commmaded in person, no longer found their compunious in the svening camp. In darkness and disorder they were encompassed, assanlted, and overwhemied by the innumernble host of Turks, who, in the art of war, were superior to the Ctiristians of the twelfth century. Louis [VII.], who climbed it tree in the general discomntiture, was savel by his own valor and the ignorance of his adversaries ; and with the dawn of day he escaped elive, but almost alone, to the camp of the vangiarl. -Ginnon's Rome, ch. 59, p. 10.
5702. TRIAL abandoned. Scipio Ifricture. He incited two of the tribunes, the Petilii, to bring a formal acensation aguinst Scipio Africanus, as guilty of peculation in converting large sums gained in his foreign conquests to his own insteal of the public use. The behavior of Scipio on this occasion was consomant to the magnanimity of his elaracter. On the first day of his citation before the assembly of the people, when his aceusation was read, appearing not to have listened to it, he entered into an ample detail of all the illustrious services he had rendered his comntry. His accusers mule no reply, not daring to controvert a single word which he had uttered, but contented themselves with adjourning the nssembly to the next day. On the morrow, while an immense multinide crowded the forum, Scipio pressed forward to the tribunal, and making a signal for silence, " My country: men," said he, "it was on this very day that I fought bravely for you against Hamibal and the Carthaginians in the field of Zama, and gained a glorious victory. Is it thus you celebrate that anniversary? Come, let us repair instantly to the capitol, and give our solemn thanke to all the gods for the republic preserved through my means." With one miversal acclamation, the whole multitude followed him while he led the way to the temple of Jupiter-and the tribunes were left alone in the formm.-Tyther's Hist., Book 3, ch. 9, p. 279.
5703. TRIAL by Combat. Assize of Jerusalem. The trial by battle was established in all criminal cases which affected the life or limb or honor of any parsom, and in all civil tranations, of or above the value of one mark of silver, lan)pears that in criminal cases the combat was the privilege of theacenser, who, exeept $i$ a elarge of treason, arenged his persomal linjury, of the death of thase persoms whom he hat a right to represent ; but wherever, from the mature of the change, testimony conlil be ohtained. it was necessary for hin to produce withesses of the fact. In civil cases the combat was not allow ded as the means of estublishing the elam of the demandant, hat he was obliged to produce witnesses who had, or assimmid to luve, knowledge of the finet. The combat was then the privilege of the defendant, bermase he charged the witness with an attempt by perjury to take away his right. He came therefore to be in the sume situation as the appellant in criminal cases. It was not thom as a mode of proof that the combat was received, nor as making negative evidence (necording to the supposition of Montesguicu), but in every case the right to offer mittle was founded on the right to pursue by arms the redress of an injury; and the judicial combat was fought on the same principle, and with the sume spirit, as a privateducl.-Gumos's Rome, ch. is, 1. 602 .
570.4. TRIAL by Ordeal. Fire. Under the reigu of .Instice and Vataces a dispute arose belween two othcers, one of whom accused the other of mantaining the hereditary right of the Palarologi.

He was pursued by the whispers of imbevolence : and in subtle courtier, the Arehbishop of Philadelphia, urged him to accept the judxment of Goed in the fiery proof of the ordenl. Three days before the trial the patient's arm was enelosed in a bag, and secured by the royal signet: and it was incumbent on him to bear a red-hot ball of iron three times from the altar to the rails of the simetmary, withont artitiee and without injury. Paleologus eluded the dangerous experiment with sense and pleasantry. "I im a soldiar," said he, " and will boldly enter the lists with my aceusers; but a layman, a simner like myself, is not endowed with the gift of miracles. Four piety, most holy prelate, may deserve the interposition of Heaven, and from your hamls I will reccive the fiery globe, the pledge of my innocence." The archbishop started ; the emperor smiled: and the absolation or pardon of Nichael was approved by new rewards and hew services. -Gimbon's Rome, el. 62, p. 14i.
570.5. TRIAL, Right of. Disregardet. IIn 1603 James I. showed botli ignorance and despotism in his contempt of the ordinary conrse of justice.] "I hear our new king," writes Harrington, "hath hanged one man before he was tried; tis strangely done; now, if the wind bloweth thus, why may not a man be tried before he hath offended ?'-Kniait's Eng., vol. 3 ch. 20, p. 308.
5706. TRIAL, A bevere, John Bunyan. [He was arrested for preaching to Dissenters, and urged to promise to desist.] Remonstrances and entreaties were equally useless, and, with extreme unwillingness, they committed him to Bedford jail to wait for the sessions. . . . To himself, at any rate, his trial was at the moment most severe. He had been left a widower a year or two lefore, with four young children, one of them blind. He had lately marriod a secomel tinne. Ilis wife was pregmat. The ngitation at hor hushand's arrest bronght on premmare hanor, and she was lying in his honse in gront dangere. Ife wis an uffertionate man, nat the sepmation It sum a time was perablarly distressing. Fuodori's bunyan, rh. $\overline{\text { bit. }}$

5709. TRIBUTE of Friendship. Melanchthem. Luther is too great, too wonderfnl for me to depiet in words. If there be a man on cmith I love with my wl we heart, that man is Lather. 5710. TRIBUTE scorned. To France. [In $179 \%$ the French Directory grew insolent, nad brgan to demond nn allin'oce ngainst Grent Britain, and soon afterward issued instructions to Frenc] men-of-war to nssatil the commerce of the Uniten States, and ordered [Mr. Charles C. Pinekney, the Smerican minister, to lave the teritory of France]. These proccedings were equivalent to a declaration of war. The President convened Congress in extraordinary session, and mensures were devised for repelling the aggressions of the French. Elhridge Gerry and John Marshall were directed to join Mr. Pinckney in a ilmal effort fer a peaceable adjustment of the ditlculties. But the cifort was fruitless. The Directory of France refused to receive the ambnssadors except upon conlition that they would pledge the payment into the French treasury of a quarter of a million of dolars. Pinckney nuswered with the declaration that the United States had millions for defence, but not a cent for tribute. The envoys were then ordered to leave the country.-Ridpatir's U. S., ch. 47, p. 373.

an mamal tribute. In considierntion of the trib). ute. the dey ugreed that his pirnte ships should contine themsilves to the Neditermanom, and shoulif not attack the vessels of suble motions as made the payment. 5714. TRIBUTE in Women. Tartars. A select bund of the farest matidens of Chlna was anmunlly devoted to the ride embrnces of the Iluns; and the alliance of tha hanghty 'Tanjous [the 'Tartar princes] was secured by their marringe with the gennine, or mopted, dinghters of the Imperial fanily, whiel vilnly attempted to escenpe the sacrilegions pollution. The situntion of these monappy vietims is described in the verses of a Chinese princess, who laments that she had been comlemmed by her parents to a distant exile, under a Barbirian huslmad ; who complains that sour malk was her only driak, raw flesh her only food, a tent her only paince ; and who expresses, in $n$ strain of puthetic simplicity, the natural wish, that she were transformed into a biri, to fly binck to her blear conntry, the object of her temler and perpetial regret.-Gibimon's Rome, ch. 26, p. 19.

571:3. TRICK miscarried, A. Persian. [The Persinn satrapl Surbar still maintained the finportant station of Chmealon; but the jenlousy of Chosroes or the artitice of IIernelius [both Persitu monarchs] soon alienated the mind of that powerfal satrap from the service of his king and conntry. A messonger was intercepted with a real or fictitions mandate to the cadarigan, or second in commmol, direeting him to send, withont delay, to the throne the head of a guilty or unfortumate genera'. The despatehes were transmitteal to Sarbar hiaself ; and as soon as he rend the sentence of his own death, he dexterously inserted the names of four hundred offlcers, assembled amititary eouncil, and asked the cadnrigran whether he was prepared to execute the commands of their tyrant. The Persians unanimonsly declared that Chosrces had forfeited the seeptre; $n$ separate treaty was concluded with the government of Constantinople.-GibHon's Jome, rh. 46, p. 478.
5714. TRIFLERS, Diplomatic. French. The American Government held an old claim against France for damages done to the commerce of the United States in the wars of Nnpoleon. In 1831 the French king had agreed to pay $$ 5,000,000$ for the alleged injuries; but the dilatory government of France postponed and neglected the payment, until the President, becoming wrathful, recommended to Congress to make reprisals on French commerce, and at the same time directed the American minister at Paris to demand his passports and come home. These measures had the desired effect, and the indemnity was promptly paid. The government of Portugal was brought to terms in a similar manner. Ridpath's U. S., ch. 54 , p. 435.

This noise, to which the wife of Licinius was not necustomed, threw her into a jmbic. Her sister htughed at her alarm, and threw ont amalicions jest on the inequality of their conditions. A very small matter, says İivy, is sufflecient to disturb the quict of $a$ womme's mind. The younger Fnbin took this affront most serionsly to henrt. She complained to her father, who, to comfort her, promised that he wonldi slo his ntmost endeavor that her hasband shonlal have his lictor as well as her elder sister's. 5719. TRIUMPH, Honors of, Pompey. When Pompey lunded nt Brindisi his dremaled legions were disbanded, and he proceederl to the Capitol with a trnin of captive princes, as the symbols of his victories, and wagons louded with treasure as an offering to his country. He was received as he alvaneed with the shouts of applauding multitudes. He entered Rome jn a gal. axy of glory. A splendial colimn commemorated the cities which he had taken, the twelve million human beings whom he hnd slain or subjected. His triumph was the most magnificent which the Ronan eitizens han ever witnessed, and by special vote he was permitted to wear his triumphal robe in the Scinate as often and as long as might please him. The fireworks over, and with the aureole of glory about his brow, the great Pompey, like another Samson shorn of his locks, dropped into impotency and insignificance. -Frovide's Casar, ch. 12.
5720. TRUCE, The holy. Mahometrin. An annual festival of two, perhaps of four, months, was observed by the Arabs before the time of Mahomet, during which their swords were relig. iously sheathed both in foreign and domestic hostility ; and this partial truce is more strongly expressive of the habits of anarelay amel warfare. - GIHION'N ROME: cli. 4!), p. 89.

The compatny appenred nwestruck at his bohnness, und ulmired it ; but no one ventured to nake any observation whatever, and adead silence cosued. They were not, perhaps, aware that he hud said the same thing to the emperor himself.--CyClopedia of l3og., p. 55.

572&. TRUTH 78. Falsehooa. Samuel John. son. An animated debate took place whether Martinelli shonld continue his Ilistory of Englame to the present day. Gombsumpu: "To be sure he should." Jounson : "No, sir ; he would give great offence. He wond have to tell of almost all the living great what they do not wish told". . . Gombswitu: "There are people who tell a handred political lies every day, mad ure not hurt by it. Surely, then, one man tell truth with safety." Joirnson : "Why, sir, in the first place, he who tells a bundred lies has disurmed the force of his lies. But besides, a man had rather have a handred lies told of him than one truth which he does not wish to be told." Gold. smitu: "For my part, I'd tell the truth, and shame the devil." Jomnson: "Yes, sir ; but the. devil will be angry. I wish to shame the rlevil as much as you do, but I should choose to be out of the reach of his claws." Goldosmitia: " II is chaws cun do yon no harm when you have the shield of truth."-Boswell's Joinson, 1. 207 .
5723. ${ }^{5}$ RUTH vs, riction. James II. A dramatist would searcely venture to bring on the stage a grave prince, in the decline of life, ready to sacrifice his crown in order to serve the interests of his religion, indefatigable in making proselytes, and yet desertiag and insulting a wife who had youth and beanty, for the sake of a profligate paramour who had neither. Still less, if possible, would a dramatist venture to introduce a statesman stooping to the wicked and shameful part of a procurer, and calling in his wife to nid him in that dishonorable office, yet, in his moments of leisure, retiring to his closet, and there secretly pouring out his soul to his God in penitent tears and devoit ejaculations. - Macaulay's Evg., ch. 6, p. 68.

At his bidding truth leaped over the elodstir walls, amb challenged every man to make her lais. guest; aroused every intelligence to nets of private juilgment ; changed a dependent. reripient poople into a reilecting, Inquirlng people; lifted each humnn belng out of the castles of the Mhedle Age, to culow him with individuality, mul to summon man to stand forth as man. The world henvel with the fervent conlliet of opinion.—Banchort's U. S., vol. 4, ch. 6.
5798. TRUTH, Moral. From within. Thns did the mind of George Fox nrrlve at the conchasion that truth is to be songhit by listening to the voice of God in the sonl. Not the lenrning of the university, not the Roman see, not the English Chureh, not Dissenters, not the whole outward world, ean lead to a fixed rule of morulity. The law in the heart must be recoived without prejullice, cherished without mixturer. and obeyed without fear.-Bancroft's U. S., vol. 2, ch. 16.
5728. TRUTH, Perilous. A.D. 408. The senators loudly declared, in regular speeches or in tumultuary neelamations, that it was unworthy of the majesty of Rome to parchase a precarious and disgraceful truce from a Barbmrian king; and that, in the judgment of 11 magmanimous people, the chance of ruin was always preferable to the certainty of dishonor. . . . The tumnlt of virtue and freedom subsided; and the sum of four thousand pounds of gold was granted, under the name of a subsidy, to secure the pence of Italy and to conciliate the friendship of the king of the Goths. Lampadius alone, one of the most

Illustrious members of the nsmembly, still prorsisted in has dissent ; exclatimed, with a lond volere, "Thas ls not a treaty of pence, but of servitude ;" und eseaped the danger of such bold oppost. tion by fumethately retiring to the sumetnaty of 57830. TRUTH, Power of speculative. Qurtiers. [Willhm] Penn exnites that the message [from the inner voice] cane withont suspicion of haman whstom. It was wanderful to withess the energy mind the mity of mind and charucter which the strong perception of speculative truth imparted to the most illiterate mechmies; they delivered the orachey of conscience with fearless freedom nud naturnl elopuluence ; and with luppy unconscious sangucily spontancously developed the system of moral trith which, as they believed, existed as an incorruptible seed in every soul.-Bancmert's U. s., vol, 2, ch. 16.

5731. TRUTH, Vitality of the Political. Truth once elicited neverdies. Is it descends through time it may be transmitted from Stute to State, from monnrch to commonwealth, but its light is never extinguished, nnd never permitted to fall to the ground. A great truth, if no existing nation would assume its guardiunship, has power-such is Gol's providence - to call a mation into being mad life by the life it impurts. - Banclaori's U. S., vol. 3, ch. 21.
5732. TRUTHS, Preparatory. Inventions. A century before the Chiristinn ern the mighty power of steam had been observed, and some attempts had been mate to turn it to account. But a great invention, as we have before remarked, is the growth of ages. Many ingenious men had labored to perfect this one, the greatest of nll, and they had brought it on so far, that a single improvement alone was wanting to make it available. It was just so with Sir Isaac Newton's sublime discovery of the attraction of gravitation. Previous philosophers had made discoveries that only needed combining to produce the final truth, which, in a lappy hour, flashed upon the mind of Newton.-Cyslopedia of Biog., p. 142.

5738 . TRUTHS, Uncertain. Sophists. Grecce was, in the dinys of Socrates, overrun with Sophists-pretended philosophers, whose whole science consisted in a certain futile logic ; an artificial apparatus of general arguments, which they could apply to every topic, and by which they could maintain, with an appearance of phasibility, either siale of any propositlon, It Wam lisimit for these philosopheres to get inp ill the piblio assembiles of la the thentres and alfor to arguce or makr an orntion on any subject that. shonid be matued. 5735. TYRANNY, Ecolesiastical. C'tholir. The childhood of the Europenn nations was passed under the tutelage of the clergy. The ascendency of the sucerdotal order was loug the ascondeney which maturnlly and projerly belongs to intellectual superiority. The priests, with all their faults, were by far the wisest portion of society. It was, therefore, on the whole, good that they should be respected and obeyed. The encroachments of the ecclesinstical power on the province of the civil power produced much more happiness than misery, while the ecclesinstical powar was in the hands of the only class that had stulied history, philosophy, and public law, and while the civil power was in the hands of savage chiefs, who conlal not read their own grants and edicts. But a change took place. Knowledge grmbually spread among laymen, At the commencement of the sixteenth century many of them were in every intellectual attainment fully equal to the most enlightened of their spiritual pastors. Thenceforward that dominion which, during the Dark Ages, hat been, in spite of many abuses, a legitimate and a salutary guardianship, became an unjust and noxious tymmy.-Macaubay's Eng., ch. 1, p. 44.
5786. TYRANNY, Emblem of. The Bastile. The destruction of the Bastile was the type of the fall of tyranny to Englishmen and Englishwomen. Hunnali More writes to Horace Walpole: " Poor Frunce! though I am sorry that the lawless rabble are so triumphant, I cannot

5\%3*. TYRANNY, Legislative, Long Purliament. Like Lome untler its dereemvirl, England was enslaved by its legishators : English lib. erty had become the patrimony of the Commons; the forms of govarnment, the courts of justiere, pence and war-all executive, all legislative, pover rested with them. They were Irresponsible, absolute, and apparently never to be dissolved but at their own pleasime.-Bancrofe's U. S., vol. : eh. 11.
5783. TYRANNY of Liberty, Freneh Revolution. On Junc 10 [1794] resolutions were presented to the eonvention by Couthon for conferring incraseal and monstrous powers on the revolutionary tribumal. It was to be divided into four courts, for the more expeditious despateh of business: the "enemias of the repulilic," agninst whom it was to net, were defined in the most vague, arbitrary, und comprehensive terms; the juries were empowered to convict without examining witnesses or hearing connsel, and upon myy proof, material or moral, verlal or written, which they mirlit deem sufticient; and the sole penalty to be inflicted for all offences was death. This frightful proposition, whiel - placed the lives . . of the whole French nation at the ulsolute disposal of Robespierre, was ultimately adopted. Its effects were appalling. Between the 10th of June ind the 27th of July, 1794, upward of fourteen hundred vietims perished by the lands of the exeentioner. The daily batches (fournées) frequently ineluded fifty, nud even sixty, seventy, and eighty individuals. Fouquier-Tinville, the public aceuser, at length proposed to ereet the guillotine in a hall adjoining the tribunal, and to despatch tive hunited prisoners in one day. -Students' Firance, ch. 27, § 6, p. 572.

5742. TYRANNY, Recompensed for, Hrance. It is to Lonis XI., who was a vieious, unprineipled tyrant, that France owed the extension of her commerce, the establishment of posts through the kingdom, and the regular ndministration of justice.-Tytıer's IIst., Book 6, ch. 13, p. 214.

5743 . TYRANNY, Self-destruotive Reign of Conmodus. [The Roman emperor] Commodus Commodus. [The Roman emperor] Commodus had now attained the summit of vice and infamy. Amid the acelamations of a flnttering court, he was unable to disguise from himself that he had deserved the contempt and hatred of every man of sense and virtue in his empire. His ferocious spirit was irritated by the consciousness of that hatred, by the envy of every kind of merit, by the just apprehension of danger, and by tho habit of slaughter, which he contracted in his duity aunsements. History has preserved a long list of consular senators sucrifled to his wanton Itis ambition soon usurpet the alministration of justice and of the finances, without account and without control. ... During those twelve years [of his reign] ihe provinces of Africa gronned under the doninion of $a$ tyrant. . . The forms of aw were often superseded by the use of poison: and if the tremiling guests who were invited to the table of Gildo presumed to express their fears, the insolent suspicion servel only to exeite his fury, and he loudly summoned the ministers of death. Gildo alternately indulged the passions of avarice and lust ; and if his days were terrible to the rich, his nights were not less dreadful to lusbunds and parents. The fairest of their wives and damghters were prostituted to the embraces of the tyrant, and afterwarl abandoned to a ferocions troop of Barbarinns and assassins, the black, or swarthy, matives of the desert, whom Giddo considerel as the only gomrdians of his throne.-Gimbon's Rome, ch. 29, p. 181.

They chose Edwaril I, of Einghad to be ampire of the contest: athd this ambitions mind artfal prine odetermine to avall himself' of the powers thas bestower on him, anif to arrogate to himself the soverng gnty of scollami. Ile summoned all the Ncottsh throns to attend him at the castle of Norham, in Northumberland ; tand having galmed some and Intimhlated others, he prevailed on the whole assembly to arknowherige Seothand a thef of the English crown, and to swear allogiance to him as their soverelgn or liage lori. Lle next demanded possersslon of the klugrom, that he might be nble to deliver it to him whose right should be fomm preferable: and such was the dastardly pusillanimity of all present, whom Eilward had intimilated by hringing with him a very formblable army, that thls exorhitant demand was likewise eompliad whth, hoth by the harons and the romperitors for the crown. One man alone, worthy of in etermal memorial, Qubert de U'mphraville, Earl of Angus, sustained the honor of his country, and peremptorlly refusel to theliver ap, thase castles which he hedd from the Scottish kings. Edward, who believed Baliol the lemst formidable of the competitors, anljudged the puestion in his favor, and put him in possesston of the kingrdom, after making him solemuly take the outh of thelelity to himself as lord paramount, and subsuribe to every condition which he thought proper to repuire. But the seots were not long patient under their state of subjection.-TyThen's Histr, Book 6, ch. 12, p. 190.

5767. VALOR, Spur to. Reputution. And it seems to me that the ancients did not think that valor comsists in the exemption from fear, but, on the contrary, in the feme of repronch and the dread of infany ; for those who stand most in fene of the haw act with the grentest intrepidity against the enemy; und they who are most tender of their reputation look with the least concern upon other dangers.-Plutaheios Cleomenes.
5768. VALOR, Wonderful, Constantine. [We might] relate a wonderful exploit of Constantiue, which, though it can scarcely be paralleled either in poetry or romance, is celebrated, not by a vemal orntor devoted to his fortune, but by an historian, the partial enemy of his fame. We are assured that the valiant emperor threw himself into the river Ifebrus, accompanied only loy toelve horsemen, and that by the effort or terror of his invincible arm he lroke, slanghtered, and put to tlight a host of 150,000 men.-G1B hon's Rome, cli. 14, p. 499.
5769. Value, Change in. Manhattan Island. In Jumary of 1626 Peter Minuit, of Wesel, was regularly appointed by the Duteh West India Company as governor of New Netherland. Until this time the natives had retained theownership of Manhattan Island ; but on Minuit's arrival, in May, an offer of purchase was made and accepted. The whole island, containing more than twenty thousind acres, was sold to the Duteh for twenty-four ilollars.-Ridpatis's U. S., ch. 18, p. 162 .
$5770 .-$ Thrian Purple. The Tyrian purple is celebrated by all the ancient anthors. The color was the pure juice of a particular kind of shell-fish, and being produced in very small quantities, eame thence to be of great valie. The moderns are not unacquainted with the fish, but make no use of it, as a richer eolor is produced at much less expense from the cochineal inseet.-Tytlen's Hist., Book 1, ch. 6, 1. 51.
5771. Valuss, Conventional. West Indians. [Columbus' first voyage.] The avarice of the discoverers was quiekly excited by the sight of small ormaments of gold, worn by some of the natives in their noses. These the latter gladly exchanged for glass beads and hawks' bells; and both parties exulted in the bargain, no doubt ndmiring each other's simplicity.-Irving's Columbus, Book, 4, els. 1.

57\%2. VANITY, Exoessive. Roman Emperor Diocletian. The Asiatic pomp which had been adopted by the pride of Diocletian assumed an air of softness and effeminacy in the person of Constantine. He is represented with false hair of various colors, laboriously arranged by the skilful artists of the times; a diadem of a new and more expensive fashion; a profusion of gems and pearls, of collars and bracelets, and a varicgated flowing robe of silk, mout curiously embroidered with flowers of gold. In such apparel, scarcely to be excused by the youth and folly of Elagabalus, we are at a loss to discover the wisdon of an aged monarch and the simplicity of a Roman veteran.-Gibbon's Rome, ch. 18, p. 156.
5773. VANITY, Folly of. Madman. One day, as Artaxerxes was hunting, Tiribazus showed him a rent in his robe, upon which the king said, " What slanll I do with it ?" "Put on another, and give that to me," said Tiribazus. "It slatl be so," snid the king; "I give it thee, but I charge thee not to wear it." Tiribazus, who, though not a bad man, was giddy and vain, disregarding the restriction, soon put on the robe, and at the same time tricked himself ont with some golden ornaments, fit only for queens. The court expressed great indignation, because it was a thing contrary to their laws and customs; but the king only laughed, and said to him, "I allow thee to wear the trinkets as a woman, and the robe as a madman."- Plutarch's Artaxeries.
5774. VANITY, Foolish, Ferguron. [Rebellion of the Duke of Monmonth against James II. 1 Oue of the insurgent chiefs was named Ferguson.] . . . With this man's knavery was strangely mingled an eccentrie vanity which resembled madness. The thouglat that he had raised a rebellion num bestowed a erown had turned his head. IIe swaggered abont, brandishing his maked sword, ana crying to the crowd of spectators who had assembled to see the army march out of Tambon, "Look at me! You have heard of me. I am Ferguson the famous Ferguson, the Ferguson for whose hand so many humdred pounds have been offered." And this man, at once umprincipled and brain-sick, had in his kerping the understandiug and the conscience of the imhaply Monmouth.-Macauhay's Eng., ch. 5, p. 548 .
5775. VANITY with Greatness. Qucen Elizabeth. A happy retort or a finished compliment never failed to win her favor. She hoarded jewels. Her dresses were innumerable. Her vanity remained, even to old age, the vanity of a eoquette in her teens. No ululation was too fulsome for her, no flattery of hel beauty too gross. She would play with hei rists that her courticrs might note the delieacy of her hands, or dame a cormento that an ambassador, hidden dexterously behind a curtain, might report her sprightiness to his master.-Ilist. of Eng. Peorle, § 710.
5776. VANITY rebuked. " Fine Coat." A foppish physician once reminded [Samuel] Johnson of his having been in company with him on a former occasion. "I do not remember it, sir." The physician still insisted, adding that he that clay wore so fine a coat that it must have attracted Inis notice. "Sir," said Johnson, " had you been dipped in Pactolus, I should not have noticed you."-boswell's Jounson, p. 530.
5777. $\qquad$ Oliver Goldsmith's. Goldsmiih, to divert the tedious minutes, strutted about, bragging of his dress, and I believe was seriously vain of it, for his mind was wonderfully prone to such impressions. "Come, come," said Garrick, " talk no more of that. You are, perhaps, the worst-eh, el !" Goldsmith was eagerly atteml ing to interrupt him, when Garrick went on, laughing ironically, "Nuy, you will always look like a gentleman ; but I am talking of being well or ill dressed." ""Well, let me tell you," suid Goldsmith, "when my tailor brought home my bloom-colored coat, he said, 'Sir, I have a favor to leg of you. When anybody asks you who made your clotbes, be pleased to mention John Filby, at the Hurrow, in Water Lanc."" Joinson : "Why, sir, that was because he knew the strange color would attract crowds to gaze at it, and thus they might hear of him, and see how well he could make a coat, even of so absurd a color."-Boswell's Johnson, p. 168.
5778. $\qquad$ Plato. Archytas, who had engaged for Plato's safety, when he understood his danger [from Dionysius the tyrant], sent a galley to demand him; and the tyrant, to palliate his enmity, previous to his departure made pume's entertainments. At one of them, hown.er, he could not belp saying, "I suppose, Pla. when you return to your companions in the ar lemy, my faults will often be the subject of your conversation." "1 hope," answered Plato, "we shall never be so much at a loss for subjects in the academy as to talk of you."Plutalicie's Dionysius.
5779. - - Menecrates. [He assumed the title Menecrates Jupiter. Ite was a playsician.] King Philip hit upon a remedy for his visionary correspondent. Philip invited him to a grand entertainment. Menecrutes had a separate table, where nothing was served up to him but incense and perfume, white all the other guests fed upon the most exquisite dainties. The first trunsports of joy with which he was seized, when lie found his divintty neknowledged, made him forget that he was a man; but hunger afterward forcing him to recollect his being so, . . . he took leave of the compuny abruptly.-Rollin's Mist., Book 14, § 8.
5780. VANITY, Ridiculous. Monumental. The triumphal ureh of Constantine still remains a meincholy proof of the decline of the arts, and in siugular testimony of the meanest vanity. As it was not possible to find in the capital of the empire a sculptor who was capable of adorning that public monument, the areh of Trajan, without uny respect either for his nemory or for the rules of propriety, was stripped of its most elegant figures. The difference of times and persons, of actions and characters, was totally disregarded. The Parthian captives uppear prostrate at the feet of a prince who never carried his arms beyond the Euphrates; and curious antiquarians can still discover the head of Trajan on the trophies of Constantinc. The new ormments which it was necessary to introduce between the vacmeies of ancient sculpture are executed in the rudest and most unskilful manner.-Gibion's Rone, ch. 14, p. 483.
5781. VANITY, Victim of. Alexander. His only fault [in conversation] was his retaining so much of the soldier as to indulge a troublesome vanity. He would not only boast of his own actions, but sulfered himself to be cajoled by flatterers to un amazing degree. These wretches were an intolerable burden to the rest of the cumpany, who did not choose to contend with them in adulation, nor yet to appear behind them in their opinion of their king's achicve-ments.-Plutarici's Alexander.

5\%82. Vassalage, Humiliating. Charles II. to Louis XIV. Since the king was bent on emancipaing himself from the control of Parliament, and since, in such an enterprise, he could not hope for effectual aid at home, it followed that he must look for it abroad. The power and wealth of the King of France might be equal to the arduous task of establishing absolute monarchy in England. Such en ally would undoubtedly expect substantial proofs of gratitude for such a service. Charles must descend to the rank of a great vassal, and must make peace and war according to the directions of the government which protected him. His relation to Louis would closely resemble that in which the Rajah of Nagpore and the King of Oude now stnnd to the British Government. Those princes are bound to aid the East India Company in all hostilities, defensive and offensive, and to have no diplomatic relations lut such as the East India Company shall sanction. The Company, in return, guarantees them ngainst insurrection.-Macaulay's Eng., elf. 2, p. 191.
5783. VEGETARIAN, Trials of the. Joseph Ritson. Jolan Leyden's great antipathy was Ritson, an ill-conditioned antiquarian, of vegetnrian principles, whom Scott alone of nh the antiquarians of that duy could manage to tame and tolerate. In Scott's absence one day, during his carly married life at Lasswade, Mrs. Scott inadvertently offered Ritson a slice of beef, when that strange man burst out in such outrageous tones at what he choose to suppose an insult, that Leyden threatened to "thraw his neek" if he were not silent-a threat which frightened Ritson out of the cottage. On another occusion, simply $\ln$ order to tease Ritson, Leyden complained that the meat was overdone, ind sent to the kitchen for a plate of literall; raw beef, and ate it up solely for the purpose of shocking his crazy rival in antiquarian research.-Ilutron's Life of Sir Walter Scott, ch. 6.
5784. VENGEANCE, Cry for. Mary Queen of Scots. The lords conducted the queen as a prisoner to Edinburgh Castle. In passing through the arny she was assailed with the imprecations of the unilitury and the populace. The soldiers waved before her horse a banner, on which was represented the dead body of Darnley [her murdered husland, whose death she had caused] lying beside liis page in the orchard of Kirk $0^{\prime}$ Field, and the little King James on his knees invoking the vengeance of Henven against his mother and the murderer of his unhuppy father, in these words of the royal poet of Israel, "Judge and avenge my cause, O Lord!" " By this royal hand," she said to Lord Lindsay, who had aided in the unpardonable murder of her first favorite, Rizzio, "I'll have your hends for this!"-Lamaitine's Mary Queen of Scots, p. 32.
5785. - Against Murderers. It was a law of the State, that any man invested with a military command might frustrate any charge brought against him by going on service. Sylla therefore defeated the purpose of his enemies by repairing immediately to his army, and commencing the campaign against Mithridates. His partisans at Rome, in the mean time, took advantage of a scries of violent and illegal proceedings of Cinna, to procure his deposition from office, and his expulsion from the city. Marius, returning to Italy at this juncture, found means to levy a considerable army, and joining his forces to those of Cinna, they laid siege to Romo, at that time reduced to great distress by famine. In this situation, the Senate capitulated with these traitors in arms, repealed the attainder of Marius, and restored Cinna to his consular function. They entered the city triumphantly at the head of the army, and immediately gave orders for a general massacre of all those eitizens whom they regarded as their enemies. The scene was horrible beyond all description. The heads of the senators, streaming with blood, were stuck up before the rostra; "a dumb senate," says an ancient writer, " but which yet cried aloud to Heaven for vengeance." -Tytler's Hist., Book 4, ch. 1, p. 394.
5786. VENGEANCE demanded. Virtue dishonored. [Tarquinius'] son Sextus, lawless and flagitious, had committed a rape on Lucietia, the wife of Collatinus, and the injured matron, unable to survive her dishonor, stabbed herself in the presence of her husbund and kindred. Brutus, a witness to this shocking scene, drew the dagger from her brenst, and swore by the etermal gods to be the avenger of her death-an oath immedintely tuken by mil who were present. The dead body of the violated Lueretia was bronght into the formm, and Brutus, throwing off his assumed disguise of Insanity, appeared the passionate advocate of a just revenge, and the animated orator in the cause of liberty against tyromical oppression. The people were roused in a moment, and were prompt and unanimous in their procedure. Tarquinius was at this time absent from the eity, engaged in a war with the Rutulians. The Senate was assembled, and pronounced $n$ decree which banished forever the tyrant, and at the same time utterly abolished the nume and oflice of king.-TyTLER's Mist., Book 3, ch. 2, p. 302.
5787. VENGEANCE, Diabolical. John Wilkes Booth. He had been from the ontbreak of the rebellion one of the most funatical devotees; and ats its strength and prospeets of success began to grow less and less, his mind was absorbed in desperate schemes for reviving its fortunes and securing its trimmph.

What was [at first] . . . a desire to aid the rebellion became, after this was hopeless, a desperate determination to avenge its downfall. He plotted the murder of Mr. Lincoln and of the leading members of the govern-ment.-Raymond's Lincoln, ch. 21, p. 713.
5788 . VENGEANCE, Foolish. James II. [1le was flecing from his English subjects, whom he had exasperated by his oppressions.] At three in the morning of Tuesday, the 11th of December, Jumes rose, took the great seal in his hand, laid his commands on Northumberland not to open the door of the bed-chamber till the usual hour, and disuppeared through a secret passage.

Sir Edward Hnles was in attendance with a hackney coach. James was conveyed to Milbank, where he crossed the Thames in a small wherry. As he passed Lambeth he flung the great seal into the midst of the stream, whence, after many months, it was accidentally caught by a fishing-net and dragged up.-Macaulay's Evi., ch. 9, p. 509.
5789. VENGEANCE of God. Appeal to. [A Protestant] nobleman named Villemongis, when brought to the seaffold [at Amboise], dipped his hands in the blood of his slaughtered comrades, and, raising them to Heaven, exclaimed, " Lord, behold the blood of thy children; Thou wilt take vengeance for them "' - Students' France, ch. 16, & 2.
5790. VENGEANCE, Maternal, Hannah Dustin. The town of Haverhill, on the Merrimac, was captured under circumstances of special atrocity. Nearly forty persons were butchered in cold blood; only a few were spared for captivity. Among the latter was Mrs. Hannah Dustin. Her child, only a week old, was snatched out of her arms and dashed against a tree. The heartbroken mother, with her nurse and a lad named Leonardson from Worcester, was taken by the savages to an islaud in the Merrimac, a short distance above Concord. Here, while their captors, twelve in number, were asleep at night, the three prisoners arose, silently armed themselves with tomahawks and with one deadly blow after another crushed in the temples of the slecping savages until ten of them liny still in death; then embarking in a canoe the captives dropped down the river, and reached the English settlement in safety. Mrs. Dustin carried home with her the gun and tomahawk of the savage who had destroyed her fmomily, and a hag containing the scalps of her neighbors. It is not often that the mother of a murdered bube has found such ample vengeance.-Ridpatu's U. S., ch. 16, p. 150.
5791. DENGEANCE, Yerolless. Jemes $I I$. [After subduing the rebellion in Scotland, led by the Duke of Argyle.] The vengeance of the conquerors was mercilessly wreaked on the people of Argyleshire. Many of the Camphells were hanged without a trial by Athol. . . . More than three hundred rebels and malcontents were transported to the colonies. Many of them were also sentenced to mutilai.on. On a single day the hangiman of Edinburgh cut off the ears of thir-ty-five prisoners. Several women were sent across the Atlantic after being first branded in the cheek with a hot iron.-Macaulay's Eng., ch. 5, p. 527.
5792. VENGEANCE, Monament for, Athenians. [After the battle at Marathon.] With presumptuous confidence, the Persinos had brought marble from Asia to erect a triumphal monument on the subjugation of their en mies. The Athenians caused a statue of Now, c Goddess of Vengeance, to be forme cat ut this marble, by the celebrated Phidias; and tablets to be erected, on which were recorded the names of the heroes who had fallen in the fight. -Tytler's Hist., Book 2, ch. 1, p. 130.

5793. VENGEANCE, Passionate. Governor

 William Berkeley. [In the early history of Virginia the tyranny of Governor Berkeley was resisted, and he hung twenty-two patriots; nor is it certain when the vengeful tyrant would have stayed his hand, had not the assembly met and passed an edict that no more blood should be spilt for past offences. One of the burgesses from the county of Northampton said in the debate that if the governor were let alone he would lang half the country. When Cliarles II. heard of Berkeley's ferocity, he exclaimed, "The old fool has taken away more lives in that naked country than I for the murder of my father ;" and the saying was truc.-Ridpatii's U. S., ch. 12, p. 121.5794. ,VENGEANCE for Vengeance, "War of the Roses." The head of Duke Richard, crowned in mockery with a diadem of paper, is said to have been impaled on the walls of York. His second son, Lord Rutland, fell crying for mercy on his knees before Clifford. But Clifford's father [Lord Clifford] had been the first to fall in the leattle of St. Alban's, which opened the struggle. "As your father killed mine," cried the savage baron, while he plunged his dagger in the young noble's breast, "I will kill you!" The brutal deed was soon to be avenged.-Hist. of Eng. People, Ş 449.
5795. VENTURE, An instructive. Captiva Party of Franks. [A colony of ceptive Franks] had been established by Probus [the emperor] on the sea-coast of Pontus, with a view of strengthening the frontier against the inroads of the Aluni. A fleetstationed in one of the harbors of the Euxine fell into the hands of the Frunks; and they resolved, through unknown seas, to explore their way from the mouh of the lhasis to that of [their mative country] the Rhine. Tlaty ensily escaped through the Bosphorus and the Hellespont, and cruising along the Mediterranean, indulged their appetite for revenge and plunder by frequent descents o tie unsuspecting shores of Asin, Grecee, and Africa. Tho opulent city of Syracuse, in whose port the navies of Athens and Carthage had formerly been stimk, was sacked by a handiful of barbarians, who massacred the greutest part of the trembling inhmbitants. From the Island of Sicily the Frunks proceeded to the columns of Ilercules, trusted themselves to the ocean, coasted round Spain and Gaul, and stcering their triumphant course through the British Channel, at length finished their surprising voyage by landing in safety on the Batavian or Frisian shores. The example of their success, instructing their countrymen to conceive the advantages and to despise the dangers of the sea, pointed out to their enterprising spirits a new road to wealth und glory.-Gibron's Rome, ch. 12, p. 384.
5796. VERDICT, A welcome. Reign of James II. [Jeffreys tried Lord Delamere for treason.] All the triers, from Churchill, who, as junior buron, spoke first, up to the treasurer, pronounced, on their honor, that Delamere wns not guilty. . . . The publie joy at the acquittal of Delamere was great. The reign of terror was over. The innocent began to breathe freely, and false accusers to tremble. One letter written on this occasion is scurcely to be read without tears. The widow of Russell, in her retirement, learned the good news with mingled feelings. "I do bless God," she wrote, "that He has caused some stop to be put to the shedding of blood in this poor land. Yet when I should rejoice with them that do rejoice, I seek a corner to weep in."-- Macaulay's Eng., ch. 6, p. 37.
5797. VETO, Power of. Romans. The first tribunes of the people were created two hundred and sixty years after the foundation of Rome, and seventeen years after the abolition of the regal government. These magistrates were habited like simple citizens; they had no exterior ensigns of power; they had neither tribunal nor jurisdiction as judges; they had no guards nor attendants, unless a single domestic termed Viator or Apparitor. They stood without the senate-house, nor durst they enter it unless they were called in by the consuls; but possessing . . the power of suspending or annulling, by a single veto, the most solemn decrees of that body, their influence and authority were very grent.-'Tytler's Hist., Book 3, ch. 4, p. 319.
5798. VICE concealed. Bacchanalians. [This society of young people of both sexes met for purposes professedly pious, and at their frequent meetings indulged in every species of promiscuous debauchery,] and even in the commission of the most atrocions crimes; for the youth of either sex whom they trepanned to their abominable purposes, if unwilling victims, usually paid the forfeit of life. A freed woman, anxious for the safety of her lover, disclosed the mysteries to the consul, Postumius, and to him and to his colleague the Senate committed full power to take every necessary measure for the detection and punishment of all concerned in this horrid association, both in Rome and in the other cities of Italy. The number was found to exceed seven thousand. Of these the most guilty were enpitally punished; others betook themselves to voluntary banishment; and not a few, from consclous gullt and the terror of punishment, luid violent hands on themselves. The Semate pussed a solemn decree that henceforward no individinal should presume to offer a sacriflee to Bacclus, it which more than five persons assisted, without a previous permission granted by their body in full assembly.-Tytlen's Hist., Book 3, ch. 0, p. 381.
5799. VICE, Disqualified for Englishman. The Englishman is held to be "the most unsuccessful rake in the world. He is at variance with himself. IIe is neither brute enough to enjoy his appetites nor man enough to govern them."-Knioht's Ena., vol. 5, ch. 4, p. 54.
5800. VICE, Patron of. Henry III. Henry abandoned himself without restruint to those disgracefal vices and outrageous buffooneries which were the bane of his character and his reign, and which inflicted a deep und lasting injury on the social condition of France. The coart became alternately the secne of unbridled sensuality and of fierce brawls, hloody duels, and licensed assassination. On one occasion three of the king's minions, who were not deficient in personal valor, fought publicly with three ereatures of the Duke of Guise. Four of the combatants were killed on the spot, among whom were two of Henry's favorites. Over their dend bodies the monarch made a most preposterous aud degrading exhibition of effeminate sorrow und fondness, and erected for them a sumptuons mausoleum in the church of St. Pnul at Paris.Students' France, ch. 18, § 4.
5801. VICE, Pleasure i. Epicureans. It might have been the chief plensure of Epicurus to be honest and just in his dealings, but others find pleasure in fraud and chicane. In short, there is no vice or crime that might not find min apology, or rather a recommendation. Had it not afforded pleasure it would not have been practised or committed. "If it is allowable for me," we shall suppose the disciple of Epicurus to say to his master--" if it is allowable for me to pursue pleasure as my chief object, it is, of consequence, allowable for me to be vicious, if I find pleasure in it." "But you are punished," says Epicurns, "in the consequence; and you will find vice prod "tive of pain instead of pleasure." "Of t: " says the disciple, "I take my risk; I look to the consequence, and I find it overbalanced by my present gratification; I find pleasure in this action, not withstanding the hazard of its consequence; it is therefore allowable for me to commit it." Epicurus must grant that the conclusion is fair and legitimate.Tytler's Mist., Book 2, ch. 9, p. 280.
5802. VICE by Reaction. From Puritanism. Because he had covered his failings with the mask of devotion, men were encouraged to obtrude with cynic impudence all their most scandalons vices on the public eye. Because he had pumished illicit love with barbarous severity, virgin purity and conjugal fidelity were to be made a jest. To that sanctimonious jargon, which was his Shibboleth, was opposed another jargon not less absurd and much more odions. As he never opened his mouth except in scriptural phrase, the new breeds of wits und fine gentlemen never opened their mouths withont uttering ribaldry of which a porter would now be ashnmed, and without calling on their Maker to curse them, sink them, confound them, blast them, and dumn them.-Macaulay's Eng., ch. 3, p. 372.

5808 . VICE, Sohools of, Drinking Places. [After the assassination of Lincoln and the attempted assassination of Mr. Sewnrd nt the same hour,] orders were instantly given to close all drinking-shops and all places of public resort in the eity.-Raymond's Lincoln, ch. 21, p. 701.
5804. $\qquad$ Prisons. In this apariment all the inmates of the prison, men nad women, debtors and felons, possed the day. As the jailer had the privilege of selling beer and liquors to the prisoners, they were supplied with just as much drink us they could pay for ; and, consequently, this day-room often presentel is scene of riotous lebanchery. Every new-comer had to treat the whole company; and all fines, bets, and penalties were discharged by pots of ale and bowls of punch. As no employment was provided for the prisoners, nor any books, most of them spent the day, and every day, in playing cards and in drinking the beer and brandy which were the invariable stakes. The presence of women was frequently the occasion of excesses still more abominable. In this school of depravity, mantained at the expense of the virtuous portion of the community, youthful offenders, whom judicious treatment could easily have rescued, were rendered in a few weeks adepts in all the arts by which erime preys upon virtue. There murderers recounted tales of butchery, highway robbers vaunted their exploits on the road, housebreakers unfolded their secrets and magnified their gains. There young women, imprisoned on suspicion of a tritling theft, were thrown among the most abandoned of their own sex and the most brutal of ours.-Cyclopedia of Biog., p. 43.
5805. VICES, Dishonored for. Roman Emperor Elagabalus. [See No. 1829.] Elagabalus was massacred by the indignant Pretorians, his mutilated corpse dragged through the streets of the city, and thrown into the Tiber. His memory was branded with eternal infany by the Senate, the justice of whose decree has been ratitied by posterity.-Ginbon's Rome, ch. 6, 1. 174.
5806. VICES, Victim of. Charles James For. [He opposed the subjugation of the colonies by masterly speeches in Parliament.] With talents, good-nature, and truthfulness he had no restraining principles, and looked down with contempt on those who had. Priding himself on ignorance of every self-denying virtue, an adept in debauch, and vain in his excesses, he feared nothing. Unlucky at the gaming-table, . draining the cup of pleasure to the dregs, fond of loose women and beloved by them, the delight of profligates, the sport of usurers, impoverished by his vices, he braved scandal, and gloried in a lordly recklessness of his inability to pay his debts. . .. He had a strong will, but never used it to bridle his passions, aven though their indulgence wronged his own father or corrmpted his young admirers. -Banchorp's U. S., vol. 9, ch. 8.
5807. VICTORIES endangered, Sherman's Army. Wheth, on the 19 th of March [1805], General Sherman was facautiously approaching lentonsville, he was suddenly attacked by the evervigilant Johnston, and for a white the Union urmy, after all its marches and victorics, was in danger of destruction. But the tremendous fighting of General Jefferson C. Davis' division saved the day, and on the 21st Sherman entered Goldshorough unoppossed.-RidPatio's U. S., ch. 66, l'. 530.
5808. VICTORIES oi Genius. Frederick the Great. The king's fame flled all the world. He had, during the last year, maintained a contest, on terms of ndvantage, agninst three powers, the wenkest of which had more than three times his resources. He had fonght four grent pitehed battles against superior forces. Three of these battles he had gained; and the defeat of Kolin, repuired as it had been, rather raised than lowered his military renown. The victory of Lenthen is to this day the prondest on the roll of Prussian fame. [Battles of Kolin, Rosbach, and Leuthen ; the first and last against the Austrians, the second against the French.]-Macaulay's Frederick the Great, p. 98.
5809. VICT0RIES, Sucoession of. Napoleon $I$. The Austrians were now driven out of Italy. [A.D. 1797.] Napoleon commenced the campaign with $30,000 \mathrm{men}$. He received during the progress of these destructive battles 25,000 recruits. Thus in ten months Napoleon, with $55,000 \mathrm{men}$, had conquered five armies under veteran generals and composed of more than 200,000 highly disciplined Austrian troops. He had taken 100,000 prisoners, and killed and wounded 35,000 men. These were grent victories, and "a great, victory," said the Duke of Wellington, nobly, "is the most awful thing in the world except a great defeat."-Abbott's Napoleon B., vol. 1, ch. 7.
5810. VICTORY, Bloodless. Pizarro in Peru. The Peruvian inca said: "I desire to be a vassal of the godsalone. I know nothing about the pope, nor his pretended right to dispose of my king. dom ; and as to renouncing the religion of my ancestors, it will be time to do that when you have proved to me the truth of yours." As soon as the [Spanish] priest returned with this reply [from the inca], Pizarro ordered his artillery to open. A short but desperate and bloody anttle ensued. Rushing himself upon the litter of the inca, Pizarro overturned it and took the monareh prisoner. Then the Peruvians fled, leaving behind them their king, 2000 killed, 3000 prisoners, and an immense booty. Pizarro was wounded in the hand, but he lost not a man of his little army. This single buttle made Pizarro master of Perı, which lie ruled for the next eight years with sovereign sway.-Cyclopedia of Brog., p. 327.
5811. VICTORY, Costless. Roman. Belisarius, the Roman general, met the Vandals, who had conquered Carthage, above twenty miles from that city, in a decisive battle. Yet no more than fifty Romans and 800 Vandals were found on the field of battle; so inconsiderable was the carnage of a day which extinguished a nation and transferred the empite of Africa.-Gmmos's Rome, ch. 41, p. 133 .
5812. VICTORY, Costly. Tis C'onstantius. [He fought the nsurper Magentius at Mursain Hungary.] The number of the slain was gompated at $54,000 \mathrm{men}$, und the slanghter of the conquerors was more considerable than that of the vanquished; a cirenmstance which proves the obstinacy of the contest, and justifies the observation of an uncient writer, that the forees of the empire were consumed in the fatal battle of Mursa, by the loss of a veteranarmy, sullecient to defend the frontiers, or to add new trinmphs to the glory of Rome.-Gibaon's Rome:, ch. 18, p. 196.

5$13. VICTORY, Decisive. Sarmetogi. On the 9th of Octoler [1777] Burgoyne reached Saratoga, and uttempted to escape to Fort Edward. But Gates und Lincoln now communded the river, and the proud Briton was hopelessly hemmed in. He hedd out to the last extremity, und finully, when there were only three days between his sohdiers and starvation, was driven to surrender. On the 17th of October terms of capituhation were ugreed on, and the whole army, numbering 5791 , became prisoners of war. Among the captives were six members of the British Parliument. A splendid train of brass artillery, consisting of 42 pieces, together with nearly 5000 muskets and an immense cuantity of nmmunition and stores, was the further fruit of the vietory. The valor of the patriots lad fairly eclipsed the warlike renown of Great Britain.-Ridpatits U. S., rh. 40, p. 304.
5814. VICTORY by Enthusiasm. Surrender of Burgoyne, October 1777 . [At the buttle of Saratoga.] The cumse of the great result was the courage and the determined love of freedom. .-. So many of the rank and file were freeholders, or freeholders' sons, that they gave a character to the whole army. . . . When the genernls who should have directed them [Generals Gates and Lincoln] remained in camp, their common zeal created a harmonious correspondence of movement, and buffled the ligh otficers and veterans opposed to them.-Bancrofr's U. S., vol. 9, ch. 24.
5815. VICTORY, Expensive. Pyrrhus. [Pyrrhus withstood the Romans at Asenhum, where he was] wounded in the urm with n javelin, and the Samnites plundered lis baggage; and the number of the slain, counting the loss on both sides, amounted to above 15,000 men. When they had all quitted the fieh, and Pyrrhus was congratulated on the victory, he said: "Such another victory and we are undone." For he had lost great part of the forees which he brought with him and all his friends and officers, except a very small number. Ie had no others to send for to supply their place, and he found his confederates here very cold and spiritless; whereas the Romans tilled up their legions with ease and despatch from an inexhnustible fountain which they had at home; and their defents were so far from discouraging them, that indignation gave them fresh strength and ardor for the war.Plutarcit's Pyririus.
5816. VICT0RY by Fortane, Pompey. The great Pompey might inseribe on his trophies that he had defeated in buttle two millions of enemies nurd redued tifteen hundred citles from Lake Mreotis to the Red Sea; but the fortune of Rome tlew before his engles; the mations were oppressed by their own femrs, and the invincible legions which he commanded lud been formed by the habits of conguest und the discipline of nges.-Gumon's Rome, ch. 42, p. 190.
5817. VICTORY by Generalship. Bettle of Princeton. Wushington's position was crittend In the extreme. To nttempt to recrosss the Delaware was hazardons. Toretreat in any direction was to lose all that he had gained by his recent vletory. To be benten in battle was atter ruin. In the great emergency he called a council of war, and annomeed his determimation to leave the camp by night, make a circuit to the east, pass the British left thank, and strike the detuchment at Princeton hefore his antagonist conld discover or imperde his movement. Orders ware immediately issued for the removal of the laggage to Burlington. In order to dereive the enemy, the camp-fires along the Assanpink were brightly kindled and a guard ledt to keep them lorning through the night. Then the army was put in motion by the circuitous route to Princeton. Everything was done in silence, and the British sentries walked their beats until the morning light showed them a deserted camp. Just then the rour of the American camon, thirteen miles away, gave Cornwallis notiee of how he had been outgeneralled. At sumrise Wushington was entering Princeton. At the same moment the British regiments stationed there were marching out by the Trenton rond to reenforee Cornwallis. The Americans met them in the edge of the village, and the battle at once began.

The valor of Washington never shone with brighter lustre. He spurred among his flying men, who rallied at his call. He rode betwecn the hostile lines, and reined his horse within thirty yards of the enemy's column. . . i [The British were defeatel.]-Ridpatit's i. S., ch. 40, p. 317.
5818. VICT0RY, Genias for. Cromacell. 'Two thirds of the field were gained for Rupert und for Charles. Lord Fairfax was defented. IIe fled through the field, through the hosts of the Cavaliers, who supposed him to be some Royalist general ; he posted on to Cawood Castle, arrived there, and in the almost or entipely desertad house he unbooted and unsaddled himself, and went like a wise old soldier to bed. But amid all that rout, carnage, and flying confusion, one man held back his troops. Cromwell, there to thre left, when he saw how the whole Royalist force attaeked the centre, restrained the fiery impatience of his Ironsides; he drew them off still farther to the left ; his eye blazed all on fire, till the moment he uttered his short, sharp, passionate word to the troops, "Charge, in the name of the Most High I" Beneath the clouds, beneath the storm, beneath the night heavens tlying along, he scattered the whole mass. We know it was wondrous to see him in those moods of highly-wrought enthusiasm ; and his watehword always struck along the ranks. "Truth und Peace!" he thundered along the lines; "Truth and Peace P " in answer to the Royalist cries of "God and the King I". "Upon themupon them!" That hitherto almost unknown man und his immortal hosts of Puritans poured upon the Cavaliers. The air was alive with artillery. Cromwell seized the very guns of the Royalists, and turned them upou themselves. Thus, when the lRoyalists returned from the seattering the one wing of their foes, they found the ground oeeapled by vietors. The fight was fought agrain, but fought in vain; in vain was lupert's rallying ery, "For God and for the King !"-Hood's Crom well, eli. 8, p. 115.
5819. $\qquad$ Cepsar. [At the siege of Alesia immense armies gathered against him.] Out of the 60,000 that had sallied forth in the moruing, all but a draggled remuant lay deal on the hill-sides. Seventy-four standards were brought to Cassar. The besieged retired into Alesia again in despair. The vast hosts that were to have set then free melted away. In the morning they were streaming over the country, making back for their homes, with Cosar's cavalry behind them, eutting them down and capturing them in thousands. The work was done. The most daring feat in the military annals of maukind had been successfully necomplished. A Roman army which could not at the utmost have amonnted to 50,000 men had held blockaded an army of $80,000-$ not weak Asiatics, but European soldiers, as strong and as brave individually us tae Italims were; and they had defeated, beaten, aud annililated another army which had come expecting to overwhelm then, five times as large as their own.-Froude's Cebar, ch. 19.
5820. VICTORY, Honorable. Alexander. In the month of September there happened an eclipse of the moon, about the beginuing of the festival of the great mysteries at Athens. The eleventh night after that eclipse the two armies being in view of each other, Darius kept his men under arms, and took a general review of his troops by torchlight. Meantime $\Lambda$ lexander suffered his Macedonians to repose themselves, and with his soothsayer Aristander performed some private ceremonies before his tent, and offered sacrifices to Fear. The oldest of his friends, and Parmenio in particular, when they beheld the plain between Niphates and the Gordman Mountains all illumined with the torches of the Barbarians, and heard the tumultuary and appalling noise from their camp, like the bellowings of an immense sea, were astonished at their numbers, and observed among themselves how arduous an enterprise it would be to meet such a torrent of war in open day. They waited upon the king, therefore, when he had finished the sacrifice, and advised him to attack the cnemy in the night, when darkness would hide what was most dreadful in the combat. Upon which he gave them that, celebrated answer, "I will not steal a victory."-Plutarcir's Alexander.
5821. VICTORY, Inexpensive. Battle of Dunbar. Terrible was the awakening of the Scottish soldiers; and their matches all out ; the battleery rushed along the lines-" The Covenant 1 The Covenaint!" but it soon became more and more feeble, while yet high and strong, amid the war of the trumpets and the musketry, arose the watchword of Cromwell : "The Lord of Hosts ! The Lord of Hosts !" The battle-ery of Luther was in that hour the charging word of the English Puritans. Terrible ! but short as terrible! Cromwell had selzed the moment and the place.

The hour and the man met there; in overthrow. ing the one flank of the enemy's line, he madethem the authors of their own defent. $A$ thick fog, too, hal embarrassed their movements; their very numbers becume a source of confu sion. But now over St. Abb's Ilend the sun suddenly appeared, crimsoning the sea, seattering the fogs away. The Scottish army were seen llying in all directions-flying, and so brief a fight ! "They run !" said Cromwell; "I protest they run !', and catching inspiration, doultless, from the lright shining of the daybeam, "Inspired," says Mr. Forster, " by the thought of a triumph so mighty and resistless, his voice was again hearl, 'Now let God arise, and let Ilis enemies be scattered!'" It was a wonlerful victory-wonderful even among wonderful triumphis! To hear the shout sent ip ly the united English army; to see the generial make a lailt, and sing the one hundred and seventeenth psalm upon the field. Wonderful that that iminense army should thus be scattered10,000 prisoners taken, about 3000 slain, 200 colors, 15,000 stand of arms, and all the artillery !-and that Cromwell shonld not have lost of liis army twenty men!-Hood's Cromweld, ch. 12, p. 154.
arkable fenture in Casar's. The most rethat which indicates Cæsar's campaigns, and that which indicates most clearly his greatness us a commander, was the smallness of the number of men that he ever lost, either by the sword or by wear and tear. No general was ever so careful of his soldiers' lives.-Froude's Cassall, ch. 14.
5823. VICTORY, Inglorious. Commodus. We read that Commodus descended, sword in hand, into the arena against a wretched gladiator, armed only with a foil of lead, and, after shedding the blood of the helpless victim, struck meduls to commemorate the inglorious victory. -Macaulay's Frederick the Great, p. 56.
5824. VICTORY, Miracnlous. Apparently. [Clovis, the] victorious king of the Franks, proceeded without delay to the siege of Angonlême. At the sound of his trunpets the walls of the city imitated the example of Jericho, and instantly fell to the ground; a splendid miracle, which may be reduced to the supposition that some clerical engineers had secretly undermined the foundations of the rampart. - Gibbon's Rome, ch. 38, p. 585.
5825. VICTORY, Moderation in. General Grant. Grant, with true delicacy of feeling, refused to be present at the terrible humiliation of his foe [surrender of General Lec]. . . . Governed by the same feelings, he made no victorious entrance into the Confederate capital. Headley's Grant, p. 233.
5826. VICTORY, Opportunity for. Alfred the Great. The Saxons were reduced to such despair that many left their country, fled into the mountains of Wales, or escaped beyond sea. Alfred himself was obliged to relinquish his crown. He concealed himself in the habit of a peasant, and lived for some time in the house of a neatherd. $\qquad$ A chief of Devonshire, a man of great spirit and valor, had, with a handful of his followers, routed a large party of Danes, and taken a consecrated or cnchanted standard, is which they reposed the utmost conflence. Alfred, observing thls symptom of reviving splrit In his suthjeets, left his retreat ; but before hanving recourse to arms, he resolved to inspect himself the situation of the enemy. Assuming the disguise of a hurper, he passed without suspicion Into the Danish cmmp, where his musie and drollery obtained him so favoruble a reeception that lo was kept there for severnl days, and even lodged in the tent of their prlace. Here, having remarked their careless security, their contempt of the English, and their own real weakness, Le immediately, by private emissuries, summoned a rendezvons of the bravest of the Saxon nobles. Tytlen's Hist., Book 6, ch. 5, p. 108.

5*27. VICTORY a Preparation. Napoleon $I$. "Such a rapid succeession of brilliant vfetories," suid Las Casas to Napoleon at St. Helena, "filling the world with your fame, nust lave been a source of grent rlelight to you." "By no means," Napoleon replied; "they who think so know nothing of the peril of our situation. The vietory of to-day was instantly forgotten in preparation for the battle which was to be fought on the morrow. The nspect of danger was before me. I enjoyed not one moment of peace."-Ashott's Nabol, EON 13., vol. 1, ch. $\overline{6}$.
5828. VICTORY presumed. Pompey. After one doubtful engagement, in which the advantage was rather on the side of Pompey, [Julius] Ciesar led him on to Macedonin, where he had twondditional legions under his lieutenant Calvinus. Pompey, who was easily elated with every appearance of success, fiattered himself that this was a retreat upon the part of his enemy. Ile was, therefore, anxious to come up with him, and eager to terminate the war by a general engarement. This was exactly what Casar wished. This important battle was fought in the field of Pharsalia. The army of Pompey amounted to 45,000 foot and 7000 horse, which was more than double that of his rival; and so confident of vletory were the former, that they had adorned their tents with festoons of laurel and myrtle, and prepared a splendid banquet against their return from the battle. Vain and presumptuous preparations! Of this immense army, 15,000 were left. rlead on the field and 24,000 surrendered themselves prisoners of war, and cheerfully incorpornted themselves into the army of the yictor, whose loss, in all, did not exceed 200 men. Cresar found in the camp of Pompey all his papers, containing the correspondence he carried on with the chief of his partisans at Rome. The sagacious and magnanimous chief committed them unopened to the flames, declaring that he wished rather to be ignorant who were his enemies than be obliged to panish them. Tytlen's Hist., Book 6, ch. 2, p. 409.

582D. VICTORY, An nnfortnnate. Battle of Muncessers. The justice of history compels us to state that two causes-the overweening contidence of the South in the superior valor of its people, induced by the unfortunate victory at Manassas, and the vain delusion... that European interference was certain, and that peace was near at hand-conspired about this time [close of 1861 ] to reduce the Southern cause to a critical condition of apathy. - Poliand's Finst Year of the War, ch. 8, p. 210.
5830. VICTORY, Viotims of. Iudians. [John Donclson, the futher of Genernl Jackson's wife, and other ploneer emigrmits were lloating down the 'lennessee liver, seeking homes hn the whlderness.] On board one boat, containing twentyelght persons, the small-pox rigged. As this boat nlways sailed nt a certain distance behind tho rest, it was attacked by Indinns, who roptured it, killed all the men, and earried off the women and children. The Indinns eanght the small-pox, of which some handrads died in the course of the 5831. VILLAINY, Reward of. Titus Oftes. On the day in which he was brought to the bur, Westminster IInll was er woded with spectators, among whom were many leman Cintholics, eager to see the misery and lumiliation of their persecutor. A few years enrlier his short neek, his legs uneven as those of a badger, his forchead low us that of a baboon, his purple checeks, and his monstrous length of ehin, lad been familiar to all who frequented the courts of haw. He had then been the itlol of the nation. Wherever he liad appeared men had uncovered their liends to him. The lives and estates of the magnates of the realm had been at his merey. Times had now changed ; and many who had formerly regarded him as the deliverer of ais country shuddered at the sight of those hideous funtares on which villainy seemed to be written by the land of God.-Macaulay's Eng., ch. 4, 1). 448.

5832. VINDICATION, Audacious. Bothirell. [IIe directed tae ussassins of Durnley, Queen Mary's despised husband. They nssassinated him that Bothwell might take his place.] Bothwell was aceused of regicide before the judges of Edinburgh, at the instance of the Earl of Lennox, the king's father. 'The favorite, with undaunted audacity, supported by the rucen und by the troops devoted, as usunl, to the reigning power, appeared in arms before the judges, and insolently exacted from them an nequittal. The same day he rode forth, monnted on one of Darnley's favorite horses, which the peoplo recognized with horror bearing his murderer. The queen salited him from her buleony with a gesture of encouragement and tenderness. Lamartine's Mairy Queen of Scots, p. 30.
5833. VINDICTIVENESS, Prelatical. Archbishop Sharpe. [Archbishop Sharpe was shot at in Scotland, and nfterward recognized his wouldbe assassin. His name was Mitchel. After being tortured by the "iron boot,"] he was brought. before the council, and after a solemn promise that his life should be spared, confessed his guilt. The council doomed him to perpetun] imprisonment on the Bass Rock. [Three or four years later] it was determined to bring him to trial. He was brought to Edinburgh, and his own confession was urged against him. The promise on which that confession was extorted was suppressed. The archbishop denied it. The council books were not allowed to be produced. The man was convicted. A distinet record of the promise was found in the council books immediately after conviction, yet he was executed Burnet says: "It was such a combination of treachery, perjury, and cruelty as the like had perhaps not been known." - KNight's ENG., vol. 4, ch. 21, p. 348.

5m3. VIOLENCE, Error of. Chriatians. The sucressfful exmmple of Lather gave rise to reformors of different kinds, and mangen the rest two funatics of Saxony, whoze names were Stork and Muncer, pretended to reform both the Catholies mad the Jatherans. It was their notion that the gospel gave them a warrunt for propagating their tencts by foree of urms, whied they grounded on these words of heripture: "I un come not to send pence, but a sworl." They condemned the buptism of infants, and rebreptized their disclpless when they were come to the age of manhood, whence they got the mane of Amabaptists. They pramehed up an miversal equality mang mankind, and strenuonsly contended both for rellg. ionsand civil liberty ; but it was their error to be too violent. They had bot strength to support their sampuinary notion of converting men by the sword; and ufter commititing some horrible ontrages, they were defented by the regular troops of the empire, and Muncer and several of his associntes had their fieads cut off upona senffold at Mulhuisen.-T'ytien's Mist., Book 6, ch. 20, p. 297.
5835. Virainity dedicatod. Pulcheria. Pulcherin, the sister of Theodosius, . . . recelved, it the age of sixteen, the title Augusta. . . She continned to govern the Eastern empire near forty yenrs: during the long minority of her broth. er, und after his dienth in her own name, and in the name of Mareinu, her nominal husband. From a motive either of prudnce or religion, she embraced a life of celibacy ; and not with. stunding some aspersions on the chastity of Pulcherin, this resolution, which she communicated to her sisters Areadia and Marina, was celebrated ley the Christian world as the sublime effort of heroic piety. In the presence of the clergy and people the three dimghters of Arcadins dedieated their virginity to God ; and the obligation of their solemn vow was inscriber on a tublet of frold and gems, which they publicly offered in the great church of Constantinople. Their pal. ace was converted into a monastery ; and all males, except the guides of their conscience, the saints who had forgotten the distinction of sexes, were serupulously excluded from the holy threshold. Pulcheria, her two sisters, and a chosen train of favorite damsels formed areligious community; they renounced the vanity of dress ; interrupted, by frepuent fasts, their simple und frugal diet ; allotted a portion of their time to works of embroidery, and devoted several hours of the ray and night to the exercises of prayer and psalmody. The piety of a Christian virgin was adorned by the zeal and liberality of an empress. Eeclesiastical history describes the splendid churches which were huilt at the expense of Pulcheria in ull the provinces of the East; her charitable foundations for the benefit of strangers and the poor ; the anple donations which she assigned for the perpetual maintenance of momastic societies, and the active severity with which she labored to suppress the opposite heresies of Nestorius and Eutyches.-Gibhon's Rome, ch. 32, p. 367.
5836. VIRGINITY, Faith in. Joan of Arc. [After her capture by the British she was tried by the University of Paris as a sorceress. They were under restraint because of her professed virginity.] They pronounced as their opinion that it was haw ful to have recourse to tho young muiden. The Arehbishop of Embran, whollud been consulted, pronomeded slmilarly, supporting his opinion hy showing how God land frequently revenled to virghis-for instance, to the silyys-what he concouled from men ; how the demon conld not muke a covernant with a virgin; and recommending it to be aseertmined whether Jehmane were at virgin. Thus, $x$ ing pushed toextremity, and either not helng nhber or being unwilling to ('xphala the delicate disthetion betwlat good nud evil revelations, knowledge lumbly referred a ghostly mater to a cor porend test, and made this grave question of the $\mathrm{sp}_{\mathrm{p}}$ int depemil on woman'smystery. As the doetors conlid not decide, the ladles did; and the honor of the Pucelle was vindicated by a jury, with the grood Qucen of Sldily, the king's moth-er-in-hw, at their head.-Michelet's Joan of Аис, p. 10.

Smis\%. VIRGINITY, Baored. Joth of Aic. She was said to be a virgin, und it was a notorious and well-iseertaned fact that the devil could not make a compact with a virgin. The coolest liead among the English, Bedford, the regent, resolved to have the point clonred up; and his wife, the duchess, intrusted the matter to some matrons, who dechared Jelanne to be a mida favorable declaration, which turned ugninst hex, by giving rise to mother superstitions notion- 10 wit, thit her virginity constituted her strength, her power, und thant to deprive her of it was to disarm her, was to break the charm, mad lower her to the level of other women.-Micheletts Joan of Are, p. 5i.
5838. VIrtue, False. Wife of Constantiut. They useribe the mistortunes of Crispus to the arts of hisstepmother, Fuusta, whose implacable: hatred, or whose disappointed love, renewed in the palace of Constantine the ancient tragedy of Itippolitus nud of Phedra. Like the danghter of Minos, the daughter of Maximinn accused her son-in-law of mincestuous attempt on the chastity of his father's wife, and ensily obtained, from the jealonsy of the emperor, a sentence of death ugainst a young prince whom she considered with renson as the most formidable rival of her own children. But Helem, the aged mother of Constantine, lumented and revenged the untimely fate of her grandson Crispus; nor was it long before a real or pretended discovery was made, that Fansta herself entertained a criminal connection with a slave helonging to the imperial sta-bles.-Gmum's Rome, ch. 18, p. 162.

58:58. VIRTUE, Political. Reign of James $I I$. Rochester was lord lieutenant of Hertfordshire. All his little stock of virtue had beenexpended in his struggle against the strong temptation to sell his religion for lucre. He was still bound to the court by a pension of $£ 4000$ a year, and in return for this pension he was willing to perform any service, however illegal or degrading, provided only that he were not required to go throngh the forms of a reconciliation with Rome. He had readily undertaken to manage his country; and he exerted himself, as usual, with indiscrect hent and violence. But his anger was thrown away on the sturdy squires to whom he addressed himself. They told him with one votce that they would send up no man to Parlament who would vote for taking away the saffeguards of the Protestant religion.Macaulay'a Enct, chi. 8, p. 30).

58AO. VIRTUE, Proteotion of. Copture of Rome. A Roman lady, of singular beanty and orthodox fulth, had rxched the impatient desiress of a young Goth, who, according to the sugrelous remark of sozomen, was attuched to the Arhan heresy. Exisperated by her olssthmte resistance, he drew his sword, nud, with the nuger of a lover, sllghtly wounded her neek. The bieding heroine still continued to brave his resentment mul to repel his love, thil the ruvisher desisted from his umavillug eflorts, respectfully conducted her to the sunctuary of the Vaticun, and gave six pieces of gold to the guards of the church, on condition that they shonld restore her inviohate to the arms of her hustrind.-Ghaon's Rome, ch. $3, \mathrm{p} .285$.
5841. VIRTUE, Publio. Pertincr. [When Pertime was rulsed to the throne of the Romme Empire] he found $n$ nobler why of condemning his predecessor's memory, by the contrust of his own virtues whth the vicess of Commodus. On the duy of his necession he resigned over to his wife und son his whole prlvato fortune, that they might have no pretence to solicit favors at the expense of the State. ILe refused to thater the vanty of the former with the title of Augusta, or to corrupt the inexperienced youth of the latter by the rank of Cessur. Accurately distinguishing between the duties of 14 parent and those of a soverelgn, he elucuted his son with a severe simplicity, which, while it gave him no assured prospect of the throne, might in time lave rendered him worthy of it. In public the hehavior of Pertinax was grave and affable. He lived with the virtuous part of the Senate (and, in a private station, he had been acquainted with the true character of ench individual), without either pride or jealousy; considered them as friends and companions, with whom he had slared the dangers of the tryanny, and with whom ho wislied to enjoy the security of the present time. He very frequently invited them to familiar entertainments, the frugality of which was ridiculed by those who remembered und regretted the luxurious prodigality of Commodus.-Ginbon's Rome, ch. 4, p. 119.
5842. VIRTUE, Severity in. Stoics. The virtue of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus was of a severe and laborious kind. It was the well-carned harvest of many a learned conference, of many it patient lecture, and many a midnight lueubration. At the age of twelve years he embraced the rigid system of the Stoies, which taught him to sulmit his hody to his mincl, his passions to his reason ; to consider virtue us the only good, vice as the only evil, all things external as things indifferent. Ilis meditutions, composed in the tumult of a camp, are still extant ; and he even condescended to give lessons of philosophy, in a more public manner than was perhaps consistent with the modesty of a sage or the dignity of an emperor. But his life was the noblest commentary on the precepts of Zeno. He was severe to himself, indulgent to the imperfection of others, jirst and beneficent to all mankind.-Gibbon's Rome, ch. 3, p. 95.
5843. VIRTUE, Superior. Phocion. He was one of the greatest men that Greece ever producei, in whose person every kind of merit was united. He hand theon educated in the selhool of Plato and Xenosrates, umil formed his mmmers upon the most perfect plan of pugan virtue, to which his condurt was always conformables. It would be diflecult for any person to carry disinteresteduess higher than this extraordimary man, which appenred from the extreme povirty in which he $a i$ "ul, ufter the many grant oflleres he hum tilled. Itiow many opportunites ol' nequirlug riches lus a genernl nlways at the had of urmies, whonets ngilnst rich and opulent enemies; somethes in countrics abomoling with all things, mid which seem to lavite the phumberer ! But Phocion would lave thonght it infamots luad he returned from his compaifus laden with uny acquisition lut the glory of hise exalted netions and the grateful benedictions of the people lie lad simared.-IRohin's IIsw., Book 16, 85.
5844. VIRTUE, Uncertain. Simuch Johnson. I asked whether a man naturally virtuons. or one who luss overcome wirked inclimations, is the best. Jounson : "Sir, to you, the man who has overcome wicked inclinations is mot the best. He has more merit to himself;'; I would ruther trust my moncy to $a$ man who has mo hands, and so a plysical impossibility to stom, than to amm of the most honest principies. There is u witty satirical story of Foote. He had a smuli bust of Garrick placed upon his burenu. ' You may be surprised,' said he, ' that 1 nllow him to le so nenr my, gold ; but you will ohserve he has no lunds." "-DBoswliais.Jominson, p. 499.
5845. VISION, Fanciful. Pherntom" Citi\%. [Solyman, an Ottomnn emir, wis mule ruler of the uncient Mysin, where also were the ruins of the once opulent city of Cyzicus.] Oue night that Solyman, seated on the briak of the sea, was contemplating in a solemm mood, these ruins of temples and of jalaces, illuminuted like fantostic monuments by the glimmering light of a nwon in its first quarter, a transpurent mist, rolled nlong by the north wind, came to diffuse itself upon these ruins, and to impress upon them, by its undulations, the appearmece of life and moveneent. He fancied that the phanton city was shaking off its shroud nul lifting itself out of its sepulehre. The murmuring of the waves at his feet, augmenting the illusion, seemarl like the hum of a grent city when awaking in the morning. He colled to mind that prophetic noon which, issuing formerly in a droam from the side of Edehali, and representing the beautiful and prolific Malkutoun, had appeured to hiss grundsire Othmm in the gorges of Plirygia. This second apparition of the moon, illuminating at the same time Asia and Europe in a seene of such solemnity, appeared to him a confimation of the promise made his forefnther, and a reproaeh of the temporization of his father Orkhan. Thus the credulons simplicity of the shepherd is always blended in the Turk with the heroisun of a warrior. The Enst has dreams in all its historics. It is a moon that conducts the Ottomans first to Phrygia, then to Europe.-Ladahtine's TurkEy, p. 229.
5846. VISION, Horrible. Marcus Brutus. A little before he left Asia he was sitting alone in his tent, by a dim light, and at a late hour. The whole army lay in sleep and silence, white the general, wrapered ta meditaton, thenghat he per-the dour, he saw a harrible amid monstrons spere tre stamiling sillontly by hils side. "What utt thoo ?" smid hee, boidiy ; "art thon gral or num? Amd what is thy busfurss with me?" The sper:tre maswered, "I am thy evil genins, Bromes: Thom wift see me at Plithppi." 'To which he calmaly rephied, "I'tl meet thee theres." Whe"n the appurition was grome, he catled his servints, who told hitu they had neither homd may mise nor had seen my vision.- Prodranen's Mabeus Buytus.
5s.47. VIsion, Spiritual. Siectenborg. There Is a natural loxhy, umi there is a spiritume hody; and ats a consequence, there is a maturnl sight, and there is a spiritual sight. . . . Now, it in passllble for the spirituml body to be rulsed purthally aluve the matural body, without chuslag deathi, or the eatire withulrawal of its life from the maturat boaty. This purtial withatrawal of the spiritual bely, and the enjoyment of sight in the spiritual worth, is what is memb by the opening of the spirituil sight.-White's Swedenbomi, cli, 8, p. 71.
56.18. vision of War. Ihannibet. Mis strong sense of being the devoted linstrument of his comm'y's gods to destroy the fr enembes haunted him ly uiflat nes hey pensessed him by day. In his steep, so he toft silemus, he funeted hiat the supreme gool of his fithers had called him into the presence of ull the gods of Carthage, who were sitting on their thrones in conneil. There he received a solemu charge to invade $\mathbf{l t}$ nly ; and one of the heavenly comeil weat with him und with his army, to guide him on his way. He went on, and his divine guile commamalid hime, "See that thou look not behlad thee !" Bat atter a while, impntient of the restruint, lue turnat to look hack; and there he behelhn huge and monstrous form, thick set nll over with seppents: wherever it moved orehurds and woods and honses fell crashing before it. He asked his griile in wonder what that monster form wis. The god answered, "Thous seest the desolation of Italy; go on thy way, struight forward, and enst mo look behind."-Amnold's hinnmal, p. 7.
5849. visions, Effective. Jouth of Arc. One summer's day, a fast-day, Jeanne being nt noontite in her father's guriten, close to the church, saw a dazaling light on that side, and hearit a voice say, "Jeunne, be a good and obedient child ; go often to chureh." The poor girt wats exceedingly alurmed. Another time she ngain heard the voice and saw the radiunce ; and in the midst of the effulgence noble figures, one of which had wings, and seemed a wise prud'homme. "Jeanne," said this figure to her, " go to the succor of the King of France, and thou shalt restore his kingdom to him." She replied, all trembling, "Messire, I am only a poor girl ; I know not how to ride or lead men-int-urms." The voice replied, "Go to M. de Bundricourt, captain of Vaucouleurs, and he will conduet thee to the king. St. Catharine and St. Marguerite will be thy aids." She remained stupetied and in tears, as if her whole destiny had been revealed to her. The prud'homme was no less than St. Michael, the severe archangel of judgments and of buttles. He renppeared to her, inspired her with courage, and told her "the pity for the kingitom of Framere." Then anparared mainted women, all in whitte; with comntess lights mrommil, ride crownes on tharir heads, mad thetid volees solt nend moving nuto terars; but Anmane shent them much morer copponsly when sulats and angels left her. "I louged," slee said, " for the ungels to take me awhy, tow."-Michelet's Joan, 15. 5.

5NSO. VISIONS, FiotItious, Neye of Conatal. tinople. [By Amurath 11.] The strength of the wulls resistual an urmy of 200,000 ' J'urks.
The enthuslasin of the dervle, who was smatehed to hemven in visionary converse with Mahomet, was answered by the credulity of the Christinns, who beheld the Virgia Mary, In a violet gumen, walking on the rmanart und mimating their cournge.-Gmmon'н llome, (li. 65, 1). 285.

5w5 1. VIsITOR, Weloome. Lafayette. Grent was the joy of the Amerienn people in the summer of 180.4 . The venernted Lafinyette, now nged nud gray, returned onee more to visit the land for whose freedom he land shed his bloot. The honored patriots who land fought by his side cmme forth to greet him. The younger heroes cume furth to greet him. In every efty mid on every battle-tieli which he visited he was surromaled by a throng of shouting freemen. His journey through the eonntry was a trimmph. It was 11 solemn and sacred monent when he stood ulone by the grave of Washington. Over the dust of the great dead the patriot of France puid the homage of his tears. In september of 1825 he bade a himal adice to the people who had made hin their guest, mad then suiled for his native land. At his departure the frignte Brandy-whe- 1 mane significmat for fim-was prepured to bear him awhy.-Ridpata's U. S., eli. 52, 1. 422.
5852. VOICE, A powerful. Colonel Henry Knor. He hud one excellent quality of an artillery oflleer-n volee of stentorinn power. When General Washington crossed the Dehtware, Colonel Knox, it is said, was of the grentest inssistance, from the fuct that his orders could be heard from one side of the rlver to the other. -Cyelopedia of Biog., p. 460.
5853. VOICE, Training of. Demosthenes. The hesitation and stammerding of his tongue he correeted by practising to speak with pebbles in his month; and he strengthened his voice by rinning or walking up-hill, and pronouncing some passage in an oration or poem during the difthculty of breath which that caused. He had, moreover, in looking-glass in his house, before which he ased to aleclaim and adjust all his mo-tions.-Plutahci's Demosthenes.
5854. VOICE, Well-preserved. Old Age. [When Rev. John Wesley was seventy years oid he preached in a magnificent natural amphitheatre at Gwennap to more than 30,000 people, by whom he was easily heard in the still even-ing.]-Stevens' Methodism, vol. 2, p. 119.
5855. VOTE, Only one. Olirer Cromwell. [He was returned to Parliament from the borough of Huntingdon.] He took his seat in the fourth Parliament of Charles I. for Cumbridge. His election was most obstinately contested, and he was returned at last by the majority of a single vote; his antagonist was Cleaveland, the poet. "That vote," explamed chaveland, " hath ruined tooth Chureh and kingiom!"-IIoor's Cıomwerı, ch. $4, \mathrm{p} .82$.
5MS6. VOTE, Power of one. Spartif. Sparta enjoyed a longer pertiod of prosperous duration than any other State of antiquity. No long as her orfginal constitution remalned inviolate, which was for the period of severn centuries, the Lacedamomians were a virtmous, a happy, mad a respectable people. Frugality, we know, was the somb of Dycurgus' establishanent. The laxurions disposition of a single cltizen lutroduced the poison of corruption. Lysander, whose milli'ary talents ralsed his country to a superiority over nill the Grecian sintes, sent home, alter the congurst of Athens, the wealth of that luxurions republle to laredaemon. It was debated in the Senate whether it should be recelved; the best and wisest of that order considered it as a most dimgeroms brench of the lantitutions of their leg. ishator: but others were dazaled with the hastre of that gold, with whieh they were, till now, amoguniated, and the intheme of Lasander prevailed for its reepption. It was decreed to rereive the moncy for the use of the State, while it was at the same time declared a capital crlme for any of it to be found in the possession of a private cithen-a weak resolation, which in effeet was consecrating and making respectable fin the gyes of the eitizons that very thing of whileh it was necessary to forbld them to aspire at the possession.

A single voice in the Senate, perlups, deedided the fate of that llastrions commonwealth. Hind there been one other virtuons man, whose negative wonld have cansed the rejection of that pernicions mensure, Sparta might have conthned to exist for ages frugal, warlike, virtuous, and uncorrupted.-Tytlem's IIIst., Book 4, ch. 6, p. 471.

5$57. - - Battle of Marathon. One otlleer in the council of war had not yet voted. This was Callimachus, the war-ruler. The votes of the generuls were five and five, so that the voice of Callimnehus would be decisive. On that vote, in all humnn probability, the destiny of all the mations of the world depended. Miltiades turned to him, and in simple soldierly eloquence... the great Athenian thos adjured his countrymen to vote for giving battle: "It now rests with you, Callimachus, either to enslave Athens, or, by assuring her freedom, to win yourself un immortality of fame, such as not even Harmodius and Aristogeiton have acquired ; for never, since the Athenians were a people, were they in such danger as they are in at this moment. If they bow the knce to these Medes, they are to be given up to Hippias, and yon know what they then will have to suffer. But if Athens comes victorious out of this contest, she has it in her to become the first eity of Greece. Your vote is to decide whether we are to join battle or not. If we do not bring on a battle presently, some factious intrigue will disunite the Athenians, and the eity will be betrayed to the Medes. But if we fight before there is anything rotten in the State of Athens, I believe that, provided the gods will give fair play and no favor, we are able to get the best of it in an engagement." The vote of the brave warruler was gained ; the council determined to give battle.-Declsive Battles, $10.

5M5M. VOTES, solictting. William W. Grenville. [Camdlate for llonse of Commons.] We were sititing. . . the two hefles and myself. . . . in our smus parlor, ome lady knittlug, the othar met. theg, mud the gentlemen whiling worsted, when to our unspeakuble surprise a mob "ןpented lufore the wialow: a smart rap wish heard at the door, the boys bellowed, and the mald amonaned Mr. Grenville. Puss was unfortmately let ont of her bex, so that the cmodidate, withall his groel friemds at has heres, wis relinsed admittance at the grand entry, and referred to the back deor, as the only possible w y of nppronch. . . I I told him I had no vote, for which he readliy gave me credit. I assured him I had no Inthenere. whidh he was not repmily fuclined to bedieve, and the less, no donat, becmase Mr. A diminer, the draper, iddressing himself to me nt this moment, informed me that $\mathbf{i}$ had a great dend.
Thans ended the conference. Mr. Grenville squered me by the hand ngain, kissed the :adies, ind whthdrew. He kissed, likewise, the mald in the kitchen, and sermed, unon the whole, a most loving, kissing, kind-henrted gentheman. [Whlinm Cowpre's letter to Rev. Dohm Newton.]-smitu's Cownen, ch. 7.
6n5t. votina for Chriat. Roman s'mult. In a full meeting of the [Rommi] Somute, the emperor proposed, aceording to the forms of the republic, the impertant question, Whether the worship of Jupiter or that of Christ should be the rellgion of the Romans. The liberty of suffrages, which he atherted to allow, was destroyed by the hopes and fears that his presence inspired; and the arbitury exile of Symmachas was a recent admonition that it might be dangerons to oppose the wishos of the mobarch. On an regular division of the Semate, Jupiter was rondemned and degraded by the seluse of a very large majurity. [A.1. 388.]-Ghmon's lRome, ch. 28, p. 187 I.

5861. VOW, A sudden. Martin Luther. Another circumstance happened which hastened his decision to seek his soul's salvation in the momastic holiness recommended by the ehureh. He had been on a visit to his parents. On his return to the university he had reached the village of Stotternheim, near Erfurt, when a furious thunderstorm burst over him, and he fell frightened to the eurth, erying out, "Deliver me, St. Ann, and I will become a monk." Though he regretted having made this vow, he felt himself bound to keep it. And this impelled lim to monkhood, for, as he said himself, he never could find comfort in his Christian baptism, and was always much concerned to obtain the favor of God through his own piety.-Rein's Luther, ch. 3, p. 29 .

In those slmple old days no man was nadacions enough to venture out upon the broad ocean without first going to charch und commending his soul und his enterprise to God; and the mun who, on his return home, neglected to repair instuntly to chureh to offer thanks, was regarded as a graceless wreteh. This custom prevailed as late as a humdred years ugo in almost all countries, and still prevails in some Catholic nations. ## 5878. WAR, Ancestors' Love of. Karly Winglishmen. They were at heart lighters, and their world was a world of war. Tribe warred with tribe, and village with village; even within the township itself feuds parted household from houschold, and passions of hatred and vengeance were hunded on from futher to son. Their mood was, ubove all, a mood of fighting men, venturesome, self-relinnt, proud, with a dash of hardness and cruelty in it, but ennobled by the virtues which spring from war, by personml courage and loyulty to plighted word, by a highnud stern sense of manhood und the worth of man. A grim joy in havil fighting was already a characteristic of the race. War was the Englishman's "shield-play" and "sword-game ;" the gleeman's verse took fresh fire as he sang of the rush of the host and the crash of the shifeldline. Their arms and weapons, helmet and maishint, tall spear und javelin, sword and seax, the short, broad dagger that hung at each wherior's girdle, githered to them much of the legen! and the art which gave color and poetry to the itic of Englishmen.- IIst. of Eng. 5880. WAR, Aversion toward. General Grant. [When he visited Germany, Bismarck regretted the emperor's illness did not permit his majesty to review his soldiers in person.] General Grant aceepted the crown prince's invitation to a review for next morning, but with a smile continued: "The truth is, I am more a farmer than a soldier. I take little or no intereat in military affairs; and although I entered the army thirty-five years ago, and have been in two wars-in Mexico as a young lieutenant, and lat-er-I never went into the army without regret, and never retired without pleasure."-General, Grant's Travels, p. 225.

5881. WAR, Beginning of. American Revountion. About midnight the [Britisla,] under command of Colonel Smith and Major Pitcnirn, set out for Concord. The people of Boston, Charlestown, and Cambridge were roused by the ringiag of bells and the firing of cannons. Two hours before the vigilant Joseph Warren had despatched William Dawes and Paul Revere to ride with all speed to Lexington and to spread the alarm through the country. Against two o'clock in the morning the minutermen were under arms, and a company of a hundred and thirty had assembled on the common at Lexington. The patriots loaded their guns, and stood ready; but no enemy appeared, and it was agreed to separate until the drum-beat should announce the hour of danger. At five o'clock the British van, under command of Pitcairn, came in siglat. The provincials, to the number of seventy, reassembled; Captain Parker was their leader. Pitcairn rode up, and exclaimed: "Disperse, ye villiaus! Throw down your arms, ve rebels, and disperse !" The minutemen stood still ; Pitcairn discharged his pistol at them, and with a loud i.ice cried, "Fire!" The first volley of the Revolution whistled through the aii, and sixteen of the patriots-nearly a fourth of the whole number-fell dead or wounded. The rest fired a few randoin shots, and dispersed. -Ridpatio's U. S., ch. 38, p. 297.
5882. WAR, Beneficial. To National Character. [William Pitt, in Parliament, ou continaing the Seven Years' War.] "This war, though it las cut deep into our pecuniary means, has nugmenied our military fucultles. Set that against the debt-that spirit which has made us what we are." ['The debt had been increased sixty millions. Knight says a compensatlon for the burden of a grent debt is made] whea a mation is awakened by war out of a derraded eondition ; when the principle of an exalted patriotism and a generous loyalty takes the place of a venal self-seeking and a miserable abnegation of public duty.-Kniait's Eng., vol. 6, ch. 16, p. 255.
5688. WAR, Blessings of. National Progress. For three years after the fall of Montreal the war between France and England lingered on the ocean. The Eaglish fleets were everywhere victorious. On the 10th of February, 1763, a treaty of peace was made at Parls. Al! the French possessions in North America castward of the Mississippi, from its source to the river Iberville, and thence through Lakes Maurepas and Pontelartrain to the Gulf of Mexico, were surrendered to Great Britain. At the same time Spain, with whom England had been at war, ceded East and West Florida to the English Crown. As reciprocal with this provision, France was obliged 10 make a cession to Spain of all that vast territory west of the Mississippi known as the province of Louisiana. By the sweping provisions of the treaty, the French king lust his entire possessions in the new vorld. Thus closed the French and Indian war, one of the most important in tho histor $J$ of mankind. By this conflict it was de cided that the decaying institutions of the Middle Ages should not prevail in the West, and that the powerful language, laws, and liberties of the English race should be planted forever in the vast domains of the New World.-Ridpatit's U. S., ch. 35, p. 279.
5884. WAR, Brutality in. Pillage of Magdeburg. [By the army of Wallenstein.] Here commeneed a seene of horrors for which history has no language, poetry no pencil. Neither innocent childhood nor lielpless old age-neither youth, sex, rank, nor beauty could disarm the fury of the conquerors. Wives were abused in the arms of their husbands, daughters at the feet of their parents; and the defenceless sex exposed to the double sacrifice of virtue and life. No situation, however obscure or however sacred, escaped the rapacity of the enemy. In a single church fiftythree women were found beheaded. The Croats amused themselves with throwing children into the flames: Pappenheim's Walloons with stabbing infants at the mother's breast. Some offcers of the League, horror-struck at this dreadful seene, ventured to remind [General] Tilly that he had it in his power to stop the carnage. "Return in an hour," was his answer ; "I will see what I can do ; the soldier must have some reward for his danger and toils." .... In less than twelve hours this strong, populous, and flourishing city, one of the finest in Germany, was reduced to asles, with the exception of two churches and a few houses, . the living crawling from under the dead, children wandering about with heartrending cries, calling for their parents, and infants still sucking the breasts of their lifeless mothers. More than six thousand bodies were thrown into the Elbe to clear the streets; a much greater number had been consumed by the flames. The whole number of the slain was reckoned at noi less than thirty thousand.-Tumty Years' War, & 282.
5485. -- - Indiseriminate. A dreadful massucre followed in the streets of Parrs on the night of the $12 t h$ of June [1418] ; the Constuble d'Armagnac, several pielates, ind numbers of the nobility were eruelly murdered ; and the mob. breeking open the prisons, butehered indiscriminately ull that they contuined. The cut-thront Cabochiens reappeared, and for three dhays Paris was given up to atrocities too revoltmig to bear recitul. The ruffans cut strips of thesh from the bleeding bodies of the Armagnaes, in brutal derision of the searf or band which symbolized their party. The numbers of the slain were estimated at near three thousand.Students' Fiance, ch. 10, § 12.
5886. WAR, Burden of. Coutinuous. [A hundred years after the Seven Years' War two shillings a head was paid amnually by every one of the twenty-five millions of the British population] toward the perpetual burden of taxation created by that war. [The same burden continues to this day.] - Knigut's Ena., vol. 6, ch. 16, p. 258.
5887. WAR, Small Cause of. An Ear. [In 1731 Captain Robert Jenkins testified that he was bourded by a Spanish guarda costa not far from Havana.] No contraband goods were found. He was threntened with death if he did not confess where his gold and unlawful merchandise was hidden. The Spaniards slashed him with their cutlasses; they hung him up to the yarl-am. Before he was quite exhuusted they let him down, and again bade him confess. He spoke of his Britannic Majesty's thag, of the high seas, in a mild assertion of the injustice he was receiving. His ear had been half cut off when the ship was boarded ; and now the miscreants tore the ear out of his head, exclaiming, " Carry that to your king." The ear of Jenkins drove England to war.-Knigit's Eng., vol. 6, ch. 6, p. 93.
5888. WAR, Canses of the. Rebellion. First, the different construction put upon the national constitution by the people of the North and the South. . . . Second, the different system of labor in the North and in the South. . . . The annexation of Texas, with the cousequent enlurgement of the domain of slavery. . . . The Kan-sas-Nebraska bill was passerl. Thereby the Missouri Compromise was repealed. Third, the want of intercourse between the people of the North and the South. The great railroads and thoroughfares ran east and west. . . . Fourth, the publication of sectional books. Fifth, the evil influence of demagogues, . . . the leadership of had men.-Ridpa'ti's U. S., ch. 62.
5889. WAR, Civil. John Cantacuzeni. [The Greek regent.] Near six years the flare of discord burnt with various success and unabated rage : the citles were distructed ly the faction of the nobles and the plebelans-the Cantacuzeni and Palacologl ; and the Bulgurians, the Servinns, and the Turks were invoked on both sides as the instruments of private umbition and the common ruin. The re, ent dephored the calamitles of which he was tl.e author and vietim; and his own experience might dictate a just and lively remark on the different mature of foreirn and civil war. "The former," said he, "is the external warmth of summer, always tolerable, ind often beneficinl ; the latter is the deadly heat of a fever, which consumes withont a remedy the vitals of the constitution."-Ghasos's Rome, ch. 63, p. 188.
5890. WAR, Civilization by, Britain. That the first rend eivilizer of Britain was the militury arm, is evident from every incideltal relation of the Romin conquest.-Knigit's Eng., vol. 1, ch. 3, p. 30.

SED1. WAR, Compensations of. Thirty Years'. Fearful indeed and destructive was the first movement in which this general political sympathy announced itself ; a desolating war of thirty years, wheh, from the interior of Bohemia to the mouth of the Schelit, and from the banks of the Po to the coasts of the Batie, 1 rastuted whole countries, destroyed hurvests, ma reduced towns and villages to ashes; which opened a grave for many thousand combatants, and for half a century smothered the glimmering sparks of civilization in Germany, and threw lack the improving manners of the country into their pristine barbarity and wildness. Fet out of this fearfal war Europe came forth free and independent. In it she first learned to recognize herself as a community of mations ; and this intercommunion of States, which orisimated in the Thirty Years' War, would alone be sufficient to reconcile the philosopher to its Lorrors. All this was effected by religion. Religion alone could have rendered possible all that was accomplished, but it was far from being the sole motive of the war. Had not private advantages and State interests been closely conneeted with it, vain and powerless would lave been the arguments of theologians; and the ery of the people would never have met with princes so willing to espouse their cunse, nor the new doctrines have found such mumerous, brave, and persevering chumpions.-Tumty Years' War, Ş3.
5892. WAR, Contem.pt of, IIangman-in-Chief. [Charles Mordaunt, Earl of Peterborough, the successful commander of the allied expedition against Spain, afterward looked with contempt upon his military rocution.] He said: "A general is only a hangman-in-chief."-KNigutr's Eno., vol. 5, ch. 19, p. 298.
5893. WAR, Cruelties of. Scotland. The . . exploits of Surrey in Scotland are thas recorded in a letter of Wolsey : "The Earl of Surrey so derastated and destroyed all Tweedale and March, that there is left neither house, fortress, village, tree, cattle, corn, nor other suecor for man ; insomuch that some of the people that fled from the same, afterward returning and finding no sustenance, were compelled to come into England begging bread, which oftentimes when they do eat they die incontinently for the lunger passed. And with no imprisonment, entting off their ears, burning them in the faces, or otherwise, can be kepl, away."-Kniont's Ena., vol. 2, ch. 18, p. 299.
5894. WAR, Cruelty in. Timour the Tartar. [Timour did not] forget that dream of all conquerors, India. He overran it this time from the Indus to Delhi, from the ocean to Thibet. II is army marched with a people of slaves in its train, the prize of his first victories and who might compromise him in other bat s. An atrocious order delivered one hundred thousund of them to tenth in a single night. Each Tartar soldler was constmined to immolate his portion with his own hand. Remorse, pity, Indignation, seized the army. The imans presaged the wrath of ILeaven. Timour responded to this revolt of conscience of his warriors only by the conquest and massacre of Delhi.-Lamartine's T'uleky, p. 315.
5895. $\qquad$ Antioch. Mameluko Emir Bibars rapidly reduced the principal Latin fortresses, and on the 29 th of May, 1268, planted his standards on the wnlls of Antloch. The fall of this capital was fatal to the Christian power ; 17,000 of the inhahitants were massacred, and upward of 100,000 sold into slavery. -Students' France, ch. 9, § 6, p. 172.
5896. WAR, Declaration of. Ambassador. [The Roman ambassudor went to Carthage.] Their orders were simply to denand that Hannibal and his principal offleers should be given up for their attack upon the allies of Rome, in breach of the trenty, and, if this were refused, to declare war. The Carthaginians tried to discuss the previous question, whether the attack on Saguntum was n breach of the treaty; lut to this the Romans would not listen. Xt length M. Fabius gathered up his toga, as if he were wrapping up something in it, and holding it out thus together, he said: "Behold, here are peace and war ; take which you choose l" The Carthaginian suffete, or judge, answered: "Give whichever thou wilt." Ilereupon Fabius shook out the folds of his toga, suying: "Then here we give you war;" to which several members of the council shouted in answer, "With all our hearts we welcome it." Thus the Roman numbassador left Carthage, and returned straight to Rome.-Arnold's IIannibal, p. 6.
5897. WAR degraded. A Trade. In the purer ages of the commonwealth the use of arms was reserved for those ranks of citizens arms was reserved for those ranks of citizens who had a country to love, a property to defend, and some share in enacting those laws whieh it was their interest as well is duty to maintain. But in proportion as the public frectom was lost in extent of conquest, war was gradually improved into an art, and degraded into a trade. -Ginion's Rome, ch. 1, p. 10.
5E98. WAR, Destructive. Casar's. Plutarch tells us that in the course of this extraordinary contest, which lasted eight years, Cæsar took by force more than 800 towns, subdued 300 distinet tribes or states, and conquered $3,000,000$ of fighting men, of whom $1,000,000$ perished on the field of battle, and another million were sold into slavery.-Students' Fhance, ch. 1, §8, p. 10.
5899. - -. Of Life. [At the battle of Châlons, by Attila against Theodoric, the] number of the slain amounted to 162,000 , or, according to another account, 300,000 persons; and these incredible exaggerations suppose a real and effective loss suthicient to justify the historian's remark, that whole generations may be swept away, by the madness of kings. in the space of a single hour.-Ghuon's Rome, ch. 35, p. 446.
5900. $\qquad$ Bonaparte's. From September, 1805, to the 15 th of November (1814), the Senate had given Bonaparte anthority to devote to what was called the glory of France no less n number than $2,103,000$ of her sons.Knicutr's Ena., vol. 7, ch. 31, p. 568.

5901 WAR, Emblem of. Indian. Other chiefs followed the example of the great sachem, and entered into friendly relations with the [llymouth] colony. Nine of the leading tribes acknowledged the sovereignty of the English king. One chieftain threatened hostilities, but Standish's army obliged him to heg for mercy. Canonicus, king of the Narragansetts, sent to William Bradford, who had been chosen governor after the denth of Carver, a bundle of arrows wrapped in the skin of a rattlesnake; but the undmunted governor stuffed the skin with powder and balls, and sent it back to the chief, who did not dare to aecept the dangerous challenge. The hostile emblem was borne about from tribe to tribe, until finally it was returned to Plym-outh.-Ridpatif's U. S., ch. 13, p. 124.
5902. WAR absurdly ended. Treaty of Ghent. There never was a more absurd treaty than that of Ghent. Its only significance was that Great Britain and the United States, having been at war, ngreed to be at peace. Not one of the distinctive issues to decide which the war had been undertaken was settled, or eyen mentioned. Of the impressment of American scamen not a word was said. The wrongs done to the commerce of the United States were not referred to. The rights of neutral nations were left as undetermined as before. Of " frec-trade and sailors' rights," which had been the battle-cry of the American navy, no mention was made. The principal articles of the compact were devoted to the settlement of unimportant boundaries and the possession of some petty islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy. There is little doubt, however, that at the time of the trenty Great Britain gave the United States a private assurance that impressment and the other wrongs complained of by the Americans should be practised no more. For the space of sixty years vessels bearing the flag of the United States have been secure from such insults as caused the war of 1812. Another advantage gained by Ameriea was the recognition of her naval power. It was no longer doubtful that American sailors were the peers in valor and patriotism of any seamen in the world.-Ridpatio's U. S., ch. 5i, p. 415.
5003. WAR, Enemios in, Ifunger. Barbarossa's army of Crusaders did not come home again, any more than Barbarossa. They were stronger than Turk and Saracen, but not than hunger and disense. Lcaders did not know then, as our little friend at Berlin came to know, that "an army, like a serpent, goes upon its belly." After fine fighting and considerable vic"ories, the end of this Crusade was, it took to " besieging Acre," and, in reality, lay perishing, as of murrain, on the beach at Acre, without shelter, without medicine, without food. Not even Richard Cœur de Lion and his best prow-

5904. WAR, Famine by. The Innocent. In 1418, during the slege of Rouen, the population were shut up for twenty weeks. Fanine came. An English chronicler writes:] And ever they of the town hoped to have been resened, but it would not le ; und many lundreds died for hunger, for they had cuten all the cats, horses, hounds, rats, mice, and ull that might be eaten; und of times the men-at-arms driving out the poor people at the gates of the city, for spending of victual, anon our men drove them in again; and young children hay dead in the streets, langing on the dead mothers' paps, that pity was to see. -Kniant's Esia., vol. 2, cli. 5, p. 70.
5905. WAR, Famous in. William of Normandy. " No knight under hemven," his enemies owned, "was William's peer." Boy as he was at Val-essdunes, horse and man went down before his lunee. All the fierce gayety of his mature broke sut in the warfure of his youth, in his ront of tilteen Angevins with but five men at his back, in his defiant ride over the ground which Geoffry Martel clamed from him-a ride with hawk on fist, as if war and the ehase were one. No man rould bend Willian's bow. His mace crashed its way through a ring of English warriors to the foot of the standard. He rose to his greatest height at moments when other men despaired. His voice rang out as a trumpet when his soldiers fled before the English charge at Senlac, and his ratly turned the flight into a means of victory.Histr. of Eng. Peorle, S 107.
5906. WAR futile. England and Spain. The bells were ringing in October, 1739, upon the declaration of hostilities against Spain. They were ringing in April, 1748, up^n the conclusion of the treaty of Aix la Chapelle, by which not a single point was gained for which England had been fighting with Spain and Frmee for eight years. [England declared the war.]-Knigit's Eng., vol. 6, ch. 12, p. 181.
5907. - - "Secen lears'." [On the 15th of February, 1763, pence was concluded between the Empress Maria Theresa, the Elector of Saxony, and the King of Prussia. The Seven Years' War ended by reptacing the parties to this great quarrel in the exact position in regard to territory in which they stood before its com-mencement.-Knigit's Eng., vol. 6, ch. 16, p. 257.
5908. WAR, Glory in. American Indians. Wur alone was the avenue to glory. All other employment seemed unworthy of human dignity; in warfare against the brute creation, but still more against man, they sought liberty, happiness, and renown ; thus was gained an honorable appelhation, while the mean and obscure among them had not even a name.-Bancrory's U. S., vol. 3, ch. 22.
5909. WAR vs. Gospel. Massachusetts. [In the summer of 1622 a company of immigrants began a new settlement culled Weymouth.] Instead of working with their might to provide against starvation, they wasted the fall in idleness, and attempted to keep up their stock of provisions by defrauding the Indians. Thus prowoked to hostility, the natives formed a plan to destroy the colony ; but Massasoit, faithful to his pledges, went to Plymouth and revealed the plot. Sundish marched to Weymouth at the head of his regiment, now herensed to elght men, attacked the hostile tribe, killed several warriors, and carried home the chicf's head on a pole. The tender-hearted John. Izobinson wrote from Leyden: "I would that you had converted some of them before you killed any."-lRididatits L. S., ch. 13, p. 125.
5910. WAR for Honor, Trojan War. The immediate cause of the war is generally allowed to have been the rape of IIclen, the wife of Menelams, by Paris, the son of Priam, King of Troy althongh prior to that motive an animosity had sulnsisted between the Greeks and Trujans for many generations. It is not otherwise prolmble that in quarrel which interested only Menehus and his brother Agamemnon should have been rendiiy espoused by all the princes of Grrece. The preparntions for this war are suid to have ocenpied no less than ten yrars, a length of time which ought not to surprise us, when we consider that this was the first war in which the whole nation had engaged.-Tytleer's Ilist., Book 1, ch. 8, p. 76.
5911. WAR, Incapacity for. Lord Loudoun. Ever since the trenty of Utrecht the French had retained Cupe Breton ; and the fortress at Louisburg had been made one of the strongest on the continent. On the 20 th of June Lord Loudoun sailed from New York, with an army of 6000 regulars. By the 1st of July he was at Halifax, where he was joined by Aimirna Iolburn, with a powerful fleet of sixteen men-of-war. There were on board 5000 additional troops fresh from the armies of England. Never was sueli a use made of a splendid armament. Loudoum landed before Inalifax, cleared off a mustering plain, and set his oflicers to drilling regiments alre :dy skilled in every mancuivre of war. To heighten the absurdity, the fields about the eity were planted with onions, for it was said that the men might take a seurvy. By and liy the news came that the Freneh vessels in the harbor of Louisburg outnumbered by one the ships of the English squadron. To attack a force that seemed superior to his own was not a part of Loudoun's tactics. Ordering the fleet to go ernising uround Cape Breton, he immediately embarkel with his army, and suiled for New York. Arriving at this place, he proposed to his officers to fortify Long Island, in order to defend the continent ugainst an enemy whom he outnumbered four to one.Ridpatit's U. S., ch. 34 , p. 269.
5912. WAR, Inhmanity in. -Romans. [The Goths had been driven by the Romans to the defences of Ravenna.] These fortifications were, indeed, impregnable to the assault of art or violence; and when Belisarius invested the capital he was soon convinced that famine only could tame the stubborn spirit of the Barbarians. The sea, the land, and the channels of the Po were guarded by the vigilance of the Roman general ; and his morality extended the rights of war to the practice of poisoning the waters and secretly firing the granaries of a besieged city.-Gibnon's Rome, ch. 63, p. 179.
5913. WAR, Injury by. Civil. The effect of the constunt progress of wealth has been to make insurrection far more terrible to thinking men than maladministration : . . wealth would be exposed to imminent risk of spoliatlon aud destruction. Still greater would be the risk to public credit, on which thousunds of families directly depend for subsistence, nud with which the credit of the whole commereial world is inseparably connected. It is no exaggeration to say that a civil war of a week on English ground would now produce disasters which would be felt from the Hoang-Ho to the Missouri, and of which the traces would be discernible at the distance of a century.-Macaulay's Ilist., ell. 1, p. 33.
5914. WAR, Instinot for. Napoleon $I$. There is still preserved upon the island of Corsica, as an interesting relic, a small brass camnon, weighing ahout thirty pounds, which was the early and favorite plaything of Napoleon. Its loud report was music to his childishe ears. In Imag. inary battle he saw whole squadrons mowed down by the discharges of his formidable piece of artillery.-Abbott's Napoleon B., vol. 1, ch. 1.

5915 WAR, Love of. Lord Nelson. [During the hattle of Copenhagan, Nelson's most terribic contict, he] was waiking the quarter-deek, which was slippery with blood and covered with the dead, who could not be removed as fast as they fell. . . . He looked upon the devastation around him, nud sternly smiling, said, " This is warm work, and this day may be the last to any of ns in a moment. But mark me, I would not be elsewhere for thousands." This was heroic, but it was not noble.-Abbott's Napoleon B., vol. 1, ch. 22.
5916. -- - Franks. Althoagh they were strongly actuated by the allurements of rapine, they professell a disinterested love of war, whieh they considered as the supreme honor and felicity of human nature; and their minds and bodies were so completely hardened by perpetual uetion, that, according to the lively expression of an orator, the snows of winter were as pleasant to them as the fiowers of spring.-Gibbon's Rome, ch. 20, p. 239.
5917. -—. The Alani. [A people who inhabited the deserts of Scythia.] The mixture of Samatic and German blood had contributed to improve the features of the Alani. . . . They considered war and rapine as the pleasure and the glory of mankind. A naked cimeter fixed in the ground was the only objeet of their religious worship; the sealps of their enemies formed the costly trappings of their horses; and they viewed with pity and contempt the pusilhanimous warriors who patiently expected the infirmities of age.-Gibbon's Rome, ch. 26, p. $2 \overline{5}$.
5918. WAR, Miseries of. Battle of Fredericksburg. Little children with blue feet trod painfully over the frozen ground, and those whom they followed knew as little as themselves where to seek food and shelter. Hundreds of ladies wandered homeless over the frozen lighway with bare feet and thin clothing, knowing not where to find a place of refuge. Delicately nurtured girls, with slender forms, upon which no rain had beat, which no wind had ever visited too roughly, walked hurriedly, with unsteady feet, upon the road, seeking only some place where they could shelter themselves. Whole families sought sheds by the wayside, or made roofs of fence-rails and straw, not knowing whither to tly.-Polland's Second Year of the War, ch. 6, p. 100.
5919. - -. Desolation. There is a letter wid dated from Bologna, December 12, 1580 , which presents as striking a pieture ns was ever drawn of the widespread misery produced by the contests of ambition. In travelling fifty miles they saw no creature stirring in rural industry, except three women gathering grapes rotting upon the vines. In Pavia the ehildren were crying about the streets for bread. There was neither horse meat nor man's meat to be found. "There is no hope [for] many years that Italia shall be restored, for want of people." -Kniait's Eno., vol. 2, ch. 20, p. 330.
5920. WAR, Monnment of. "Heads." Timour the Tartar erected on the ruins of Bagdad a pyranid of ninety thousand heads; again visited Georgin, and encamped on the banks of the Araxes.-Ghion's Rome, ch. 65, p. 263.
5921. WAR, Murderous. Battle of Tonton. [In 1461,] on the eve of Palm Sunday, began the cruei batile of Towton, at four o'clock, when the armies [of the Yorkists and Lancastrians] joined. Through all the night, amid a fall of snow, these fierce men madly fought till the afternoon of the next day. Then 33,000 men lay dead on the field of liattle. It is affirmed that there was no quarter given in the battle.

The triumph of the Yorkists was com-plete.-Knigir's Eng., vol. 2, ch. 9, p. 148.
5922. WAR, Partisan. Casar and Pompry. [See No. 4230.] They were now declared enemies, and each prepared to assert, by arms, his title to an unrestrained dominion over his country. It is not a little surprising that the citizens of Rome should deliberately prepare to sacrifice their lives and fortunes in the decision of such a contest, with all the zeal of men who fight for their most valuable rights and posses-sions.-Tytlee's Hist., Book 4, ch. 2, p. 406.
5923. WAR, Patriotism in. Defensive. [The threatened invasion of England by the Spanish Armada, and the conflicts which followed the dispersion of that immense and powerful flect, proved to be beneficial to the nation.] There was a higher result of such a warfare than the taking of slips and the burning of towns. $\Lambda$ grand spirit of devotion to their country was engendered in the people. The energies called forth in that stirring time produced a corresponding elevation of the national character. Knight's Eng., vol. 3, ch. 15, p. 239.
5924. - - Anerican Revolution. Where eminent statesmen hesitated, the instinctive action of the multitude revealed the counsels of magnanimity. . . . A nation without union, without magazines and arsenals, without a treasury, without credit, without government, fought successfully against the whole strength and wealth of Great Brituin. An army of veteran soldiers capitulated to insurgent husband-men.-Bancroft's U. S., vol. 4, ch. 1.
5925. WAR, Plety in. Joan of Arc. At the sight of the Holy Maid and her banner they rallied and renewed the assault. Joan rode forward at their head, waving her banner and cheering them on. The English quailed at what they believed to be the charge of he!l ; Salnt Loup whs stormed, and its defenders put to the sword, except some few whom Jom succeedel in saving. All her woman's gentleness returned when the combat was over. It was the first time that she had ever seen a buttle-fled. She wept ut the sight of so many bleeding corpses; and her tenis flowed doubly when slie reflected thut they were the bodies of Christian men who had died without confession.-Decrsive Battles, &̀ 383 .
5926. WAR, Politioians in. Romans. To druw him into more open ground, Cesar had shifted his comp contimually. lompey had followed cuntiously, still rematning on his guard. IIis political urlvisers were impatient of these dilatory movements. They taunted him with cowardice. They insisted that he should set his foot on this insigniticant adversary promptly and at once ; and Pompey, gathering courage from their conffdence, ind trusting to hissplendid cavalry, agreed at last to use the first occasion that presented itself. [Pompey's] benten army, which a few hours before were slaring in imagimation the lands and olfices of their conquerors, fled out through the opposite gates, throwing away their arms, flinging down their standurds, aud racing, otticers and men, for the rocky hills which at a mile's distance promised them shelter.Froude's Cessah, ch. 22.
5927. WAR prayed for. Its Miscrics. In 1514 Lord Daere, deseribing the "robbing, spoiling, and vengennce in Scothand." [udds,], "whieh I pray our Lord God to continue." [Thus men appealed to the Author of ull good in support of their perpetration of all evil.]Kniout's Eng., vol. 2, ch. 17, p. 274.
5928. WAR, Propensity for. American Indians. Next among the propensities of the red men was the passion for wour. Their wars, however, were always undertaken for the redress of grievances, real and imaginary, and not for conquest. But with the Indinu a redress of grievances meant a personal, vindictive, and bloody vengeance on the defender. The Indian's principles of war were ensily understood, but irreconcilable with justice and humunity. The forgiveness of an injury was reckoned a weakness and a shame. Revence was considered among the nobler virtues. The open honorable battle of the field was an event unknown in Indian warfare. Fighting was limited to the surprise, the ambuscade, the massaere ; and military strategy consisted of cunning and treachery. Quarter was rarely asked und never granted; those who were spared from the fight were only reserved for a burbarous captivity, ransom or the stake. In the torture of his vietims all the diabolical ferocity of the savage warriors nature burst forth without restraint.-Ridpatit's U. S., ch. 1, p. 44.
5929. WAR, Romance in. Thirty Iears' War. Duke Christian, passionately enamored of the Electress Palatine, with whom he had become acquainted in Holland, and more disposed for war than ever, led back his army into Lower Saxony, bearing that princess' glove in his hat, and on his standards the motto, "All for God and Her."-Thirty Years' War, § 174.
5930. WAR of the Rosen. E'ngland. [The Duke of York chalmed the succession to the English throne, which the lIouse of Lords promised at the death of King IIenry.] Jut theopen display of York's pretensions at once united the partisans of the roybl house in ulgorous resistunce; and the dearlly strugrle which received the name of the Wurs of the loses from the white rose which formed the badge of the house of York, und the red rose which was the eognizance of the house of Lameaster, begun la a gathering of the north round Lord Clifford and of the west round lienry, Duke of somerset. Hest, of Eng. Pworlet, sis 449.
5931. WAR for Spoils. Atheuians. One day Agesilaus ordered his commissurios to sell the prisoners, but to strip thrm tirst. Their clothes found muny purehusers: but as to the prisoners themselves, their skins being soft and white by reason of their laving lived so mneh within doors, the spectators only laugherl at then, thinking they wouk be of no serviee as slaves. Whereupon Agesilaus, who stood by at the anction, suid to his treops: "These are the persons whom you fight with;" and then pointing to the rich spoils, "Those are the things ye fight for."-Plutaben's Aubsilaus.
5932. WAR, study of. Ifonmable. Antigonus being asked who was the graitest general, answered, " Pyrrhus would be, if he liverd to be old." Antigonus, indeed, spoke only of the gencrals of his time ; but Inamilal said that, of all the world had ever beheld, the first in Eenius and skill was Pyrrhus, Sripio the seconci. nud himself the third. . . This was the only seience he applied himself to ; this was the subject of his thoughts and conversation; for he considerel it as a roynd study, and lookedupon other arts as mere trifling amisements. And it is reported that when he was usked whether he thought Python or Caphisias the best musician, "Polysperchon," said he, "is the general;" intimnting that this was the only point which it hecume a king to inquire into or know.-Pletahen's Prikiles.
5933. WAR, Sufferers by. The Innocent. [In 1070 William the Conqueror destroyed the rountry for a hundred miles about York.] Mamesbury, writing half a century afterward, says: "Thus the resourens of a province, once tlourishing, were eut off, by fire, slaughter, and devastation. The ground for more than sisty miles, totally uncultivated and unproductive, remains bare to the present day." Ordericus winds up the hmentable story with these worls: "There followed consequently so great a seareity in England in the ensuing years, that severe famine involved the innocent and unarmed popu lation in so much misery, that . . . more than a hundred thousand sonls of both sexes perished of wint."-Knight's Eng., vol. 1, ch. 14, p. 193.
5934. WAR, Supplies in. Second Crusade. The army was reviewed near to Nican, where it was found to consist of 600,000 foot, including women, and 100,000 horse. We have no accounts transmitted to us how sueh multitudes procure subsistence when once they had come into a hostile country. It is difficult to conceive that they could have procured it by plunder without such a total dispersion as must have rendered all their enterprises ineffectual against such a formidable enemy us the Mohamr. celans. probuble that the ercutest part of . It is highly the culamitics unst line must have arisen from a searcity of provisions. -Tytlele's Histr, Book 6, eli, 9, p. 176.
5935. WAR, Solitary Survivor of. Afghan. [In 1841 a Britlsh army was sent into Afglan, where, after a complete success, it was placed in grent peril by the trenchery of the nutives. A retreat whes finally begme, and of 4500 soldiers only one was brought in to Jelalabad, and he wounded and exhansted. It was Dr. Brydon.]-Knion'r's Ena., vol. 8, ch. 25, p. 458.
5936. WAR, Terrors of Civil. To Wellington. [The Dake of Wellington said in Parliament on the 4th of April, 18:20:] My Loris, I am one of those who have passed a longer period of my life engaged in war than most nen, uad principally, I may say, in eivil war ; and I must say this, that if I could avoid by any sacriflee whatever even one month of civil war in the country to which I am attached, I would sacrifice my life in order to do it. I suy that there is nothing that destroys property and prosperity and demoralizes charocter to the degree that civil war does; by it the hand of man is raised against his neighbor, against his brother, and against his father; the servant betrays his master, nod the whole seene ends in confusion and devastation. -Kniam's Eng., vol. 8, el. 13, j. 239.
5937. WAR, Toleration in. Mahometan. [When Alpo-Bekr, the successor of Mahomet, was abont o mareh his Arabian warriors into Syria, he gathered then round him in a circle.]
"Warriors of Islam," said he, "attend a moment, and listen well to the precepts which I am about to promulge to yon for observation in times of war. Fight with bravery und loynlty. Never use artifice or perfidy townrd your enemies ; do not mutilate the fallen ; do not slay the arged, nor the children, nor the women; tho not destroy the palm trees; do not burn the erops; do not cat the fruit trees; do not slanghter the animals, except what will he necessary for your nourishment. You will find upon your route men living in solitude, in meditation, in the adoration of God ; lo them no injury, give them no offence."-Lamaibine's Tubkey, p. 158.
5938. WAR, Trained for, Hranks. The lofty stature of the Franks, and their blue cyes, denoted a Germanic origin ; their close apparel accurately expressed the figure of their limbs; a weighty sword was suspended from a brond belt; their bodies were protected by a lage shield; and these warlike Barbarians were trained, from their earliest youth, to run, to leap, to swim ; to dart the javelin, or battle-exe, with unerring aim; to alvance, without hesitation, against a superior enemy; and to maintain, either in life or death, the invincible reputation of their ancestors.-Ginnon's Rome, ch. 35, p. 429.
5939. WAR, Trophies of. Ghastly. From the permanent conquest of lussia the Tartars made a deadly though transient inroad into the heart of Poland, and as far as the borders of Germany. The cities of Lublin and Cracow were obliterated ; they approached the shores of the Baltic ; and in the battle of Lignitz they defented the dukes of Silesia, the Polish palatines, and the great master of the Tentonic order, and tilled nine sacks with the right ears of the shatin. Gimon's IRome, ch. 64, p. 218.
59.10. WAR, Uncertainties of. Rebellion. Jef. ferson lavis luad himself dechared, . . . whenever the war sloould open, the North and not the Soutlo should be the field of hattle. . . . I. I'. Walker, the rebel secretary of war, had said . . . be would prophesy that the flag which now llaunts the breeze here would thoat over the dome of the old Capitol at Washington before the first of May, and that it might flont eventbally over Funenil Mall itself. - Raymond's Lancome ch. 6, p. 178.
50.1. -- American Revolution. Three dhys after his victory [at Trenton] Washington ugain crossed the Delaware, and took post at Trenton. . . . The British fell hack fron their outposts on the Delaware, and eoneentrated in great force at Princeton. Cornwallis took command in person, and resolved to attuek and overwhelm Washington at Trenton. So closed the year. Ten days previously llowe only waitera for the freczing up of the Delaware before taking up his quarters in Plailadelphia. Now it was a question whether he wonld be able to hold a single town in New Jersey.-Ridpatio's U. S. . el. 39, p. 316.
5942. WAR unhindered. Kïg Philip's Wirr. The Indians were not idle. "We will fight," said they, "these twenty years; you have honses, barns, and corn ; we have now nothing to lose."-Bancroft's U. S., vol. 2, ch. 12.
5048. WAR, Waste of. Devastation. The Emperor Charles [V.], whose recent triumplis had inspired him with unbounded self-coutilence, expressed the utmost disclain for the military resources and tactics of his adversary, and, vowing that he would bring the [Francis I.] King of France as low as the poorest gentleman in lis dominions, he erossed the Var und invaded Provence, at the head of 50,000 men, on the 25 th of July. The French army, led by the Constable Montmorency, took post at Avir. non, which commands both the Rhone and the Inrance. The population was ordered to retire into the fortified towns; property and provisions of all kinds were hastily withdrawn, and the entire district in the ronte of the advancing enemy was then nuercilessly laid waste by the French themselves, so that Provence presented in the course of a few days the most deplorable spectacle of desolation. Flourishing townsGrasse, Digne, Draguignan, Antihes, Toulonwere set on fire and reduced to ashes; the inhabitants fled to the mountaius, where thousumds perished from exposure, privation, and hunger. The march of the invaders was unopposed ; but it became every day more and more difficult to subsist the troops, and on reaching Aix, the capital, where he had intended to take tidumphant possession of the kinglom of Provence, Charles found it, to hisgreat dismay, totally depopulated and abandoned; everything had been removed or destroyed that could be of the slightest use or value to a conqueror. Famine, and its neverfailing consequence, contagions disease, soon made fearful havoc in the imperial ranks. It was attempted to besiege Arles and Marseilles; but in each case the assailants were beaten off with severe loss: and the emperor, hearing at this moment of tha arrival of Francis on hits intrenched camp before Avignon, and apprehending an attuck with overwhelming numbers, reluctantly give orders to commence a retrat.Studenté Fiance.
5914. WAR, Wealth by. Ieter Cooper. The war, however, was the legimning of his fortune. The supply of forelgn merehandise being cut off, a great impulse was given to manufactures. Cloth, for example, rose to such an extravagant price that cloth finctories sprang upeverywhere, and there was a sudden demand for every description of cloth-making machinery. Peter Cooper, who possessed a fine genius for invention, inv nted a machine for shearing the map from the surface of cloth. It answered its purpose well, and he sold it withont delay to good advantuge. Then he made another; and as often as he had one done, he would go to some cloth mill, explain its merits, and sell it. He soon had a thriving shop, where he employed several meti, and he sold his machines faster than he conld make them.-Cychopedia of Broo., p. 5 \%.
59.15. WAR, Wounds in. Philip of Macedon. No warrior was ever bolder or more intrepid in fight. Demosthenes, who cannot be suspected of flattering him, gives a glorious textimony of him on this head ; for which reason I will cite his own words. "I saw," says this orator, " this very Plilip, with whom we disputed for sovereignty and empire-I saw him, though covered with wounds, his eyes struck out. his collarbone broken, maimed both in his hands and feet, still resolutely rushl into the midst of dangers, and ready to deliver up to fortune any other part of his body she might desire, provided he might live honorably and glorionsly with the rest of it." --Rollin's Mrst., Book 14, § 8.
5946. WARFARE, Unequal. Americon Revolution. Duriag the stmmer [1776] Washington's forces were nugmented to about 27,000 men ; but the terms of enlistment were constantly expiring ; sickness prevailed in the camp ; and the effective force was but little more than half as great as the aggregate. On the other hand, Great Britain was making the vastest preparations. By a treaty with some of the petty German States, 17,000 Hessian mercenaries were hired to fight against America. George III. was going to quell his revolted provinces by turning loose upon them a brutal foreign soldiery ; 25,000 additional English troops were levied; an immense squadron was fitted out to aid in the reduction of the colonies, and $$ 1,000,000$ were voted for the extraordinary expenses of the war department. By these measures the Americans were greatly exasperated.-Ridpatio's U. S., ch. 39, p. 308.
5947. WARNING of Danger. Richard $I$. [Richard the Lion.] The firmmess of Hubert Walter had secured order in England, but over sca Richard found himself face to face with dangers which he was too elear-sighted to undervalue. Destitute of his father's administrative genius, less ingenious in his political conceptions than John, Richard was far from being a mere soldier. A love of adventure, a pride in sheer physieal strength, here and there a romantic generosity jostled roughly with the craft, the unserupulousness, the violence of bis race ; but he was at heart a statesman, cool and patient in the execution of his plans as he was bold in their conception. "The devil is loose ; take care of yourvelf," Philip had written to Joha at the news of Richard's relense.- Llant. of Ena. Pboblat, $\therefore 151$.

59IW. WARNINGS, Effective. Cimar's. lt was now eleven in the forenoon. Cussar shook off his unensiness, aud rose to go. As lee erossed the hall, his statue fell, and shivered on the stones. Some servants, perhaps, had heard whispers, and wished to warn him. As he still passeet on, a strunger thrust a seroll into his land, and begged him to rend it on the spot. It contained a list of the conspinators, with a clear account of the plot. He supposed it to be a petition, and phaced it carclessly among his other pupers. The fate of the empire hung uponathread, bith the thrend was not broken. As Cusar had lived to reconstruct the Roman world, so lis death was necessary to tinish the work. [He was assassi-mated.]-Fioovee's Ceman, ch. 27.
5950. WATCHFULNESS, safety by. Tennessec Wilderness. Never has a settlencut been so infested with hostile Indians as this. When Rachel Donelson [afterward the beloved wife of General Jackson], with her sisters and young friends, went blackberrying, a gatarl of young men, with their rithes loaded and rocked, stood guard over the surrounding thickets while the girls pieked the fruit. It was not sufe for a man to stoop over a spring to drink unless some one else was on the watel with his ritle in his ams; and when half a dozen men stood together, in conversation, they turned their backs to each other, all facing different ways, to watch for a lurking savage. So the Douelsons lived for eight years, and gathered about them more negroes, more cattle, and more horses than any other household in the settlement.-Cycloredia of Biog., p. 534.
5951. WATCHMEN, Mistaken. American Rewolution. Marching by way of Charlestown Neek, the provincials came, about eleven o'clock, to the eminence which they were instructed to fortify. Prescott and his engineer, Gridley, not liking the position of Bunker Hill, procected down the peninsular seven hundrel yards to another height, afterward called Breed's Hill. The latter was within easy camnon range of Boston. On this summit a redoubt eight rods square was planned by the engincer, and there, from midnight to day-dawn, the men worked in silence. The British ships in the harbor were so near that the Americans could hear the sentinels on deck repeating the night call, "All is well." The works were not yet completed when morning revealed the new-mmbe redoubt to the astonished British of Boston.-RIDPATirs U. S., ch. 38,1 . 300.
5052. WATER, Need of. Kingrlom. The most distinguislued of his [lycurgus'] mincestors was Sous, inder whom tine lacediemoninns mude the Melotes their slaves, mad gained men extensive tract of hand from the Areatinns. Of this Sous it is related that, heing bosieged by the (litorimes fa u difleult post where there whs no whter, he ugreed to give up nul his eonguests, provided thut himself mud nill his mrmy should drink of the neighboring spring. When these conditions were sworn to, he nssembled his foreas, and offered his kingedom to the mmin the wonld forhar drinking ; not one of them, however, would deny himseli.-Plevtancin's Lycuraus.
50518. WATER, Overflow of, Alban Lake. Of the muny springs, brooks, mud hakes whieh Itnly abommeds with, sonse were dried up, and others but feebly resisteri the drought ; the riversnlways low in the summer, then run with $n$ very slonder streim. But the Alban Iake, which has its source within itself, nnd diselnarges no part of its wnter, being quite surrounded with monntains, withont my eanse, maless it Was a supermatural one, began to rise and swell in a most remarknble manno $r$, incrensing until it remehed the sides, und at hast the very tops of the hills, all which happened without any ugitation of its wnters. For it while it was the wonder of the shepherds and herdsmen ; but when the eurth, which, like a mole, kept it from overllowing the eountry below, was broken down with the quantity und weight of water then descending like $n$ torrent through the plonghed fieds and other cultivated grommels to the sen, it not only nstonished the Romans, but was thought by ull Italy to portend some extraordinary event. [The oracles dechared] that the eity could mever be taken until the waters of the Alban Iake, which had now forsaken their bed, and foumd new passuges, were turned back, or so diverted as to prevent their mixing with the sem. Plutancits CAMishevs.
595. WATERING-PLACES, Rustic. Reign of Charles II. When the court, soon ufter the Restoration, visited Tunbridge Wells, there was no town there; but withinamile of the spring rustic cottages, somewhat cleaner and neater than the ordinary cothiges of that time, were scattered over the heath. Some of these cabins were movable, and were carried on sledges from one part of the common to mother. To these huts men of fishion, wearied with the din and smoke of London, sometimes came in the summer to brenthe fresh nir, and to cuteh a glimpse of rural life. During the season a kiad of fair was anily held near the fountain. The wives and dunghters of the Kentish farmers came from the neighboring vilhares with eream, cherries, wheat ears, and quatils. To chaffer with them, to flirt with them, to pruise their straw hats and tight heels, was a refreshing pastime to voluptuaries sick of the airs of aetresses and maids of honor. Milliners, toymen, $\quad$ ad jewellers came down from London, and opened a bazaar under the trees. In one booth the politician might find his coffee and the London Gazette; in another were gamblers playing deep at basset; and on fine evenings the fiddlers were in attendance, and there were morris-dances on the elastic turf of the bowling green.-Macatiay's lina., ch. 3, 1. 322.
5955. WATERING-PLACES, Uninviting. Reign of C'harles 1. 【At IBnth Surings the rooms were small und were nucarpeted, ned wero colored hrown with in wash made of soot and sminll beer, in order to hide the ilit. Not a whinscot was painted. Not a hemrtl or chimney-pleee was of marble. A slab of common freastone, and tle irons which had cost from three to four shilinge, were thonght sulltient for my threplace. Tho best upartments were hing with conrse woollen stuff, mul were furmshed with rush-bottomed chairs. - Macaviay's Eni., eh. 3, p. 323.
5056. WEAK destroyed. Ancient Cermans. [The Ilerull, who nnciently jnlinbited the dinrk forests of Germiny und Polnnd,] wore a flerce people who disdnined the use of nrmor, and who eondemned their widows and nged parents not to survive the loss of their hustmands or the decay of their strength.-Ginhon's IRome, ch. 39 , 1. 16 .
5957. WEAKNESS, Criminality of, Ihichard Cromirell. [When Richurd Cromwell suceceded his father in the Protectorate of England, he did not bring his fnther's endowments with him. When the army began to evince a hostility toward lurlinment the oflcers who were devoted to him urged him to atopt some strong mensure, and stand thrm. IBut be shrank from the responsilility, stying, " " I have never done anybody any harm, nnd I never will; I will not have a drop of blood spilt for the preservation of my greatuess, which is a burden to me."Kinion's Ena., vol. 4, ch. 14, p. 220.
595 ${ }^{6}$. WEAKNESS by Enlargement. Empire of the Mohtommedaths. The third and most ohvious cause of the deeline and fall of the cnliplis wiss the weight and ranguitude of the empire itself. The enliph Almamon might proudly assert that it was ensier for him to rule the Enst and the West than to mannge a chess-board of t wo feet square ; yet I suspeet that in both those games he was guilty of many fatal mistakes. Ginbon's Rome, (h. 5i2, p. 325.
5959. WEAKNESS of great Men. Demosthenes. [At the battle of Cheromen] Demosthenes, who was a greater statesman ihan n warrior, and more capable of giving wholesome connsel in his haringues than of supporting them by an intrepid conrage, threw down his arms, and fled with the rest. It is even said that in his flight his robe being anight by a brumble, he imagined that some of the enemy had laded hold of him, und cried ont, "Spare my life ?" More than 1000 Atheninns were left upon the field of luttle, und above 2000 taken prisoners, among whom was Demades, the orator. The loss was us great on the Theban side. - IRollin's Hist., Book $14, \pm 6$.

S&6O. WEAKNESS, Moral, Milo the Athlete. [He was the champion wrestler of Grecee.] An nuthor has judiciously olucrved that this surprisingly robust clampion, who prided himself so much on his bodily strength, was the weakest of men with regard to a passion which often subdues and captivates the strongest ; a courtesan laving gained so great an ascendancy over Milo that she tyramized over him in the most imperious manner, und made him obey whatever commands she lild upon him.- Rohlin's Ilis'r., Book 7, ch. 3, si 2 24.
5961. WEALTH, Conservation of. Reign of Jimes II. [1le desired to secure the relligions revolution of Enghand by securlug a Romm Catholle successlon to the throne.] To all mer not utterly blinded by passion, these diflloultes uppenred insuperable. The most unserupulous alaves of power showed signs of unemsiness. Dryden muttered that the king would only make mitters worse by trylug to mend them, and slghed for the golden days of the carchess and good-matured Charles. Even Itelfreys wivered. As long as he wis poor, he was perfeetly ready to face oblogpy and publie hatred for luere. But lie lud now, by corruption and extortion, neemmatated great riches; and he was more mxious to secure them than to merense them. His sluckness drew on him in sharp reprimand from the royal lipis, In drend of helng deprived of the great seal, he promised whatever whs required of him; lat Barillon, in reporting this circumstance to Jouis, remarked that the King of England could place little reliance on any man who had myything to lose.-Macauhiy'h Eng., cli. 8, p. 201.
5082. WEALTH, Corrupting, Religion. The story of Panl of Simosatu, who filled the metropolitan see of Antioch, white the East was in the hands of de Omathes and Zenobin, may serve to illastrate the comdition and chameter of the times. The wealth of that prelate was a suilicient evidence of his guilt, since it was neither derived from the inheritance of his fathers nor acequired by the arts of honest industry. But Pant considered the serviee of the Chureh ns a very lacrative prolession. II is ecelesinstical jurisdiction was yemal and mpacions; he extorted frequent contributions from the most opulent of the faithful, and converted to his own use a considerable part of the public revemue. liy his pride and laxury the Christime religion was rendered odious in the eyes of the Gentiles. His eonncil chamber and lis throne, the splendor with which he nppeared in publie, the suppliant crowd who solicited his nttention, the multitude of letters and petitions to which he dictated his answers, and the perpetual hurry of business in which he was involved, were circumstances much better suited to the state of a civil mngistrate than to the humility of a primitive bishop. -Gimbon's Rome, ch. 16, p. 53.
5963. WEALTH by Corruption. Lord Clarenton. LLord Clarendon, chancellor for the corrupt Charles II.,] returned from exile in the deepest poverty. In seven years he had nequired a sufficient fortune to build a mansion superior to ducal palaces, and to furnish it with the most costly objects of taste and hixury. It wis called "Dunkirk House" by the people, because they suw what they believed to be evidence of foreign bribery.-Kniont's Eng., vol. 4, ch. 17, p. 301.
5964. WEALTH, Cost of. Samuel Johnson. Mrs. Thrale mentioned a gentleman who had acquired a fortune of $£ 4000$ a year in trade, but was absolutely miserable, because, he conld not talk in company; so miserable, that he was impelled to lament his situation in the street to - whom he hates, and who he knows despises him. "I am a most unhappy man," satid he. "I am invited to conversations. I go to conversations;
but, nhas ! I have no romversation." Jomanon :
 ent whys. This gembeman lus spent, lin getting E 4000 a year, the thme in which he might have lenrned to tuik; nud now he cammot talk." Mr. Perklus made in shewd nud droll remark: " If might linve learned to talk at the sume lime that he was getting his fortune."-Borwela's Johiajo hon, p. 455.
5065, - Simenel Jehuson. The eonversation having turned on the prevailing proctice of golng to the Enst Inclices in quest of weath, Jonsson: " 1 man hail hether have $\mathfrak{x} 10,000$ nt the end of ten yenurs passed in Engrland than $\mathrm{x}^{2} 0,000$ at the end of ten yenrs passed in Judin, becnuse you must comprite what you give for money; nud a man who has lived ten yours in ladia lus given up ten vears of social comfort, and all those alvantuges which urise from living in England."-Boswean's Jonis. son, p. 415.
5966. WEALTH, Dangerous. Tir Pity, Iohin Wesley remarked in carly lif" that he lonil kuown but four men who had inot derined in religion by becoming wealthy; at a later period in life he corrected the remark, and malre mo (x.ep)-tion.-Stevens' Methomish, vol. 1, p. 2tio.
5067. WEALTH, Despoiled of. $B!/ j$ r'romirill. The ohd Irish gentry were sentlered war the whote world. Descendants of Mitusian chieftalins swarmed in all the courls fand camplis of the Continent. The despoiled proprietors who still remaned in their mative land hrooded gloonily over their losses, pined for the opmlene nud dignity of which they had beren deprived, and cherished wild hopes of another revolation. A person of this class was alescribed by his commtryman ins a gentleman who would be rich if justice were done, as a gentleman who had in the estate if lie could only get it.-Macaulay's Eng., ch. 6, 1. 121).
5968. WEALTH destroyed. fier riafrty. After the retreat [from $\Lambda$ friea] of the Saracens, the victorious prophetess [Cahim] assembled the Moorish chiefs, and recommended a measume of strange and savage policy. "Our (ities," said she, "and the gold and silver which they contain, perpetmally netract the arms of hes Xrabs. These vile metals are not the objects of our ambition ; we content oursclves with the simple productions of the curth. Let us destroy these cities ; let us bury in their ruins those pernicious treasures; and when the avarice of our foesslant be destinate of temptation, perhups they will cease to disturb the tranquillity of a warlike people." The proposal was aecepted with umanimons applause. From Thngicr to Tripoli the buildings, or at least the fortifications, were demolished, the fruit-trees were cut down, the means of subsistence were extirpated, a fertile and populous garden was changed into a desert, and the historians of a more recent period could discern the frequent traces of the prosperity and devastation of their ancestors.-Gmmon's Rome, ch. 51, p. 246.
5969. WEALTH, Enormons. Centachzene. [This grand chamberlain and adroit intriguer of the Turkish empire liecme the possessor of enormous wealth.] The register of his private wenlth rembids us of the opulence of lacullus und of Crmasias ut lRome, The eontlacinton of his treasires in nllver, ufter his tirst exilo, sullead to equip a theet of sixty vessels. Jlis gramaries contained the provisions of it inplail, in burley and whent. T'wo thomsand yoke of oxta tilled hifs lands in Thruce ; two thousimel tlve handred mares supplied with horsise his stableas threo limadred camels, ilve humdred mules, the lumdred asses, tltty thomstid hoges, seventy thomand sherep, thlled his farmyards or covered his gas. hures. - Iamahtinli's Tullegy, p. 2d4.
sdyo. WEALTH, Fallure of. Stimuel Johtn. won. Johnsen and I set out In Dr. 'luyfor's chaise to go to Derby. Thee day was thee, nud we resolvel to go hy Kerdellestone, the satat of Lord scorsdale, that I might mere his Lordshipis the hense. I was struck with the nugnificernce of the building; and the oxtensive park, with the lhnest verdure, coveral with deer nud contle and sheep, delighted me: The momber of old oaks, of an immense size, illed me with a sort of respectful abindraton ; for one of them extio was offered. The excellent smooth gravel romels ; the harge plece of water, formed by his Lordship; from some small brooks, with a lundsome large upon it; the veneruble Gothice church, now the family chupel, just by the house-in short, the grand gromp of objects aghtated mad disteraded my mind in a most agreenble manner. "One should think," sald I, "' that the proprietor of atl this must be happy." "Nay, sir," sald Johnson ; "ull this excludes but one cvil-poverty."deswela's Jounson, p. 8339.
5971. WEALTH by Flattery. Rome. A rich childish old mon was a domestic: tyrmat, und his power increased with his yemrs and intirmities. A servile crowi, in which he frequently reckoned pretors and consuls, courted hifs smiles, pampered his avarice, upphuded his follies, served hits passions, and waited with impatience for his death. The arts of attendance and thatery were formed into a most haerative: science ; those who professed it nequired a peculiar appellation; and the whole city, according to the lively descriptions of sative, was divided between two parties-the hunters and their game. [The thaterers hoped for legacies.] Gibmon's Rome, ch. 6, p. 192.

597&. WEALTH, Genius for. Marcus Crassus. He made himself useful to the Dietator by his genius for fimance, and in return he was emabled to amass an enormous fortune for himself out of the proscriptions. ILis eye for business retehed over the whole Roman Empire. He was manker, speculator, contractor, merchant. He lent money to the spendthrift young lords, but with sound security und at usurions interest. He laul an army of slaves, but these slaves were not ignornnt field-hands: they were skilled workmen in atl arts and trales, whose labors he lurned to profit in building streets nuil pulaces. Thus all that he touched turned to gold. Ine was the wealthiest single individual in the whole empire, the acknowiedged head of the lusiness world of Rome.-Froude's Cesar, ch. 9, p. 10.
5973. WEALTH, Hopes or. Abrahum Lincoln. A.D. 1860. [Mr. Lincoln visited New York, where he met a former resident of Illinois.] "Well, B., how have you fared since you left Illinois ?" To which B. replied : "I have made *I(\%),000, and loat it all; how in it with you, Mr. Whaoln $9^{\prime \prime}$ " Oh, very well," mala Mr. Limeoln: "I lave the cottuge at Springtheld, mul alwut $\boldsymbol{W}_{3000}$ in money. If they make wo Vice-P'restident with Seward, as some saly they will, I hope I slaill be able to facrease: It to $\boldsymbol{q}^{2} 0,000$, and that is an much na any man ought to wamt."-Raymonios Lincolen, eli, 3, p. 100.
697.4. WEALTH, Immoderate, Romeths. The historlan Olymphomorns, who rephements the state of IRone when it was beskeged by tho Gothes, . . . observes that nevorul of the richent semators recelved from their estates an annmal lacome of fonr thousimd pounds of gold above one lundrell and sixty thomsand pounds aterling, withont computing the stated provision of corn und wine, which, hat they leen sold, might have equalend la value one third of the money. Compured to this immoderite wealth, an ordinury ravenue of a thonsmad or tifteen hundred pounds of gold might be considered as no more than mlequate to the dignity of the senatorim rank, which required many expenses of a publice and ostentutious klitl. [ $A$ bout A.b. 400].-Gmuon's Ronas, ch. 31, p. 24.
5975. WEALTH by Labor, Peter Cooper. Now followed thity years of steady hard work. He learned how to make the lest glue that ever was made in the world, mad it brought the highest price. For twenty years he hal no bookkeeper, no elerk, no salesman, no agent. Ho was up at che dawn of day. He lighted the factory tires, so as to loe rendy for the men at seven o'elock. Ite boiled his own ghe. At midduy he drove into town in his wagon, called upon his customers, und sold them glue nnd isinglass. At home in the eveniag, posting his books and reuding to his family. Such was his life for thirty years, his business producing lim thirty thonsand dollars a year, a large portion of which he saved, always thinking and often talking of the finstitution which he hoped to found. Ghe is made from bullocks' feet, and for many years he consmmed in his glue faetory all the feet which the eity yielded, und saw the price gradually rise from one cent to twelve eents per foot.-Cyclopedia of Biog., p. 574.
5976. WEALTH, Perils of, Roman Einperor Diocletian. One very remarkable edict which he published, instead of being condemnod as the effect of jealous tyrany, deserves to be npplauded as mu not of prudence and humanity. Ife caused a diligent inquiry to be made " for all the macient books which treated of the admirable art of making gold and silver, and without pity committed them to the flames, upprehensive, as we are assured, lest the opulence of the Egyptinns should inspire them with confidence to rebel against the empire.". . . It may be remarked that these ancients look, so liberally ascribed to Pythagoras, to Solomon, or to Hermes, were the pious fruads of more recent adepts. . . . The persecution of Diocletian is the first mithentic event in the history of alchemy. The conupuest of Egypt by the Arabs diffused that vain science over the globe. Ungenial to the avarice of the human heart, it was studied in Chinn, as in Europe, with equal eagerness and with equal success. The darkness of the Middle Ages insured a favorable reception to every tale of wonder, and the replval of laring gave new vigor to hope, nud suggested more spections arts of deception. Philaswphy, with the nid of axperienee, lans at lengeth hanished the study of atehemy.-Gbmon'н lame, cli. lia, p. 418.

507\%. WEALTH, Helative. Nion Jorkiow. A.1). 167s. The phor were rethered, and heggars nuknown. A homsand pornds was opulemer: the ponsensor of half that nim wan rich.- Lhanенин"'н U. S., ch. 17.
 his "Appeal to Men of Renson," ha nald: "ilear yo thin, all who have diseovered the treanneres which I nm to lenve behlad me: if I loave behind me elo (abowe my delets mid my lowks, or what may lajpen to bedue on aceomit of them). you and all mankind bear witness against mo that I bived mul died a thele and a robber." The state of his atiairs at his donth, nearly haif a century ufter, fully verithed this pledge.-s'tiovens' ilemodsm, vol. 1, p. 2tis.

597D. WEALTH, Reputation for. Romen Limperor , Justinian. The rlehes of Justhinin were speedily exhanasted by alms and bulldings. hy mmbitions wars and lgaominhous trentises. Ilis revemues were found imadepunte to his expenses. Every art wist ried to extort from the people the gold mal silver which he senttered will a lavish hand from Persia to Frane ; his reign was marked by the vieissitudes, or rather by the combat, of mpmeiousness and avarice, of splember and poverty; he lived with the reputation of lidden treasures, and hequenthed to his succeresor the payment of his debis. ( A hion's Rome, ch. 60, p. \%5.
5980. WEALTH, Rural. John l'intteuzene. [The Greek politician.] Under the rejgn of AnGronieus the Younger the great domestic ruled the emperor and the empire. He does not measure the size and minmer of his estates; hut lis gramaries were heaped with an thercidihle store of whent and larley ; mal the labor of a thousand yokes of oxen might cultivate, necording to the pratice of antiguity, abont sixty-two thousand tive humdred acres of arable hand. Itis pastures were stoeked will 2500 brood mares, 200 camels, 300 mules, 500 asses, 5000 horned cattle, 50,000 heogs, and 70,000 sheep- -10 pre. - ions record of rural opulence.-Gimben'н Romes, eh. 63, p. 183.

59w1. WEALTH, Schome of. Iope Bonifice VIII. [In 1300] prochamed a plenary absolution to all Catholis's who, in the course of that year, and at every similar period, shombld respecitully visit the upostotic churches of St. Peter and St. Paul. The welconse sound was propagated through Christendom ; and at flrst from the nearest provinces of Italy, and at length from the remote kingdoms of Hungary and Britain, the highways were thronged with a swarm of pilgrims who sought to expiate their sins in a journey, however costly or laborious, which was exempt from the perils of military service. All exceptions of rank or sex, of age or intirmity, were forgotten in the common transport ; and in the streets and churches many persons were trampled to death by the cagerness of devotion. The calculation of their numbers could not be easy or accurate; and they have probnbly been magnified by a dexterous clergy, well apprised of the contagion of examplo: yot we are assured by a judicions himtorian who ansisted at the ceremony that Romie wis mevor rephenished with less than two handreil thonsand strngere ; innd anoblher spertator lins tixed it two millious the total concourse of the yeur. A tritling oblation

SOAL2. WEALTH well secured. Stilpon. The city of Megara bedag taken, the soldiets demanded leave to phander the hahabitants; hat the Athenimes intercerled for themsociflectinally that the elty was saved. Demedrias drove out the giorlsom of Cimsumber, mad rehastaterl Magara in fis libertles. Stilpon, a edebratel philusemplere, lived ha that city, ind was sent for by Demetrius, who asked him If he land not losi sonerthing. " Nothing at all," replicel Ntil",", " for I carry all my efferefabout me:" menting lay that expression his justice, probily, tomperincr, and whelom; with the advantage of not ranking anything in the class of bossings that could ho taken from him. What could atl the kings of the eath do in conjunctlon ngainst such a man ans this, who neither desires mor dremds my-Thlug.-Roban'm Ilint., Beok 1t, 莒 7.
508:3. WEALTH, Slavery to Syuniards. Spain, ly a very singular fablaty, was the Peru and Mexieo of the old world. 6989. WIFE honored. M/rs. Juckson. A few weeks after the batte of New Orleans, when her husband was in the first flush of lis triumph, this phain phanter's wife thonted down the Mississippi to New Orleans to visit her hasband amd to accompany him home. She had never seden a city before, for Nashville at that day was litthe more than a vilhage. Thr elegrant ladies of New Orlenns wore exreedingly plensed to cbserve that General Jackson, thongh he was limiself one of the most gruceful and polite of gentlemen, seemed totaily moneons ions of the homely lumeng, the comatry mamors, and awkward dress of his wife. In all companios and on all oceasions he showed her every possible mark of respect. The ladies gathered ubout her ama presented her with nil sorts of showy knickknacks and jowelry, and one of them undertook the task of selecting suitabir clothe 3 for her. She framkly confessed that she knew nothing about surh things, and was willing to wear nuything that the ladies thought proper. [Milton permitted her to visit lier mother one month after marringe.] Mriry Milton went to Forest IIill in July, but on the understanding that sho was to come lanck at Michaelmas. When the appointed time came she did not appear. Milton wrote for her to conce. No answer. Several other letters met the sume fate. At last he despatched a foot-messenger to Forest IIill, desiring her return. The messenger came back only to report that he had been " rlismissed with some sort of contempt." It was evident that Mary Milton's family had espoused her cause as against her lasband.-Milton, is M. Pattison, ch. 5.

6002. $\qquad$ Mre. Simuel Johnson. [He was a man of impetnous temper.] After her death [he was] tenderly disposed to charge himself with slight omissions and offences, the sense of which wonid give him much uneasiness. Accordingly we find, ubout a year after her decease, that he thus uddressed the Supreme Being: "O Lord, who givest the grace of repentance, and hearest the prayer of the penitent, grant that by true contrition I muy obtnin forgiveness of all the sias committed, nud of all dities nepected, in my inion with the wife whom thou hast taken from me ; for the nerglert of joint devotion, patient exhortution, und mild instruction."-BosWELL'S JOINsoN, p. 62.
6008. WIFE, A true. Mary. [The two houses of Parlimment were assembled in ronvention to determine thr best methorl of filling the vicant throne of Jumes II. Mary, wife of tho Prince of Orange, was his danghter. Ler private chaplain, Bishopl Burnet, thought that the importance of the crisis justifled him in publishing the great secret which the princess land confided to him. Ile knew, he said, from lee own lips that it had lone been her full determination, even if she came to the throne in the reqular course of clescent, to surrender her power, with the sanction of P'arliament, into the hunds of her husband. Danby received from her an earnest und almost ungry reprimand. She was, she wrote, the prince's wife ; she had no other wish than to be subject to him; the most cruel injury that could be done to her wonld be to set her up as his competitor ; and she never conld regard any person who took such a rourse as her true friond.-Macaulay's Eng., ch. 10, p. 595.
6004. WIFE, An unbappy. Jane Seymour. The Parliament, with the mennest submission to the will of the tyrant [llenry VIII.], passed sentence of deatl, and Anne Bullen was removed from the throne to the saffold. She left by ILenry a danghter, Elizabeth, afterward queen of England. Itenry was nert day publicly married to Jane Seymour, who, happily for herself, died abont a year nfterward.-'TrTher's Hist., Book 6, ch. 20, p. 302.
6005. WIFE and Vixen. Mis. John Fitch. The incurred the greatest calamity known to human hature. Ite married a vixen. The woman, who was much older than himse? $i$, made his life one horrid broil. IIe was ove of the mildest, kindest, most patient of men; lut nfter enduring some months of this degrading anguish, afier freguently warning his wife that if she did not restrain lier temper he would lave her, he at last ahandoned his home, his projerty, his wife, his infant son, and his unborn chughter. It was a terrible hour to him. Ilis wife, who had aways langhed at his threats, followed him a mile, crying and humbly begging him to try her once more. "But," he says. " my judgment inforned we that it was my duty to go, notwithstanding the struggles of nature I land to contend with."-CyClol'EDIA of IBıos., p. 149.
6006. WIFE, A Warrior's. Gaita. Gaita, the wife of Robert [Guiscurd], is painted by the Greeks as a warlike Amazon, a second Pallas; less skilfnl in arts, but not less terrible in arms than the Athenian goddess ; though wounded by an arrow, she stood her ground, and strove, by her exliortation and example. to rally the flying troon'. Her female voice was seconded by the more powerful voice and urm of [her husband] the Norman duke, us calm in action as he was magnanimous in counsel. "Wbither," he cried aloud-"whither do ye fly? Your enemy is implacable ; and death is less grievous than servitude." The moment was decisive; as the Varangiansadvanced before the line they discovered. the makedness of their thaks ; the main battle of the duke, of 800 kuights, stood flrm and entire ; they couelsed their lances, and the Greeks deplore the firious and irresis ihle shock of the Freneh cavalry. ['They won the battle of Dur-ruzzo.]-Ghamos's Ronie, elh. 56, p. 473.
6007. WIFE, A winning. Of William, Prince of Orange. For a time Willian was a negligent hasband. Ite was, indeed, dawa away from his wife by oiher women, particularly lyy one of her ladies, Elizabeth Villiers, who, thongh destitute of persomal attractions, and distigured by at hideons sfuint, possessed talents which well fitied ber to partake his rares. He was, indeed, ashamed of his errors, and spared no pains to concenl them ; but in spite of all hisprecantions, Mary well knew that he was not strietly faithfin to her. Spies and hate-bearers, encomraged by her father, did their best to inthame her resentmeat. . . . She, however, hore her iujuries with a meekness and patience which deserved, and gradually obtaincel, William's esteem and gratihude. [See No. 5998.]-Macaulay's Eng., ch. $\tilde{i}$, p. 160 .
6003. WIFE, Worthy. ('ilphurnia. [Pliny writes to his wifes annt:] "As I remember the great affection which was between you and your excellent brother, and know you bove his daugh. ter as your own, so as not only to express the tenderness of the best of amots, but even to supply that of the best of fathers, $I$ ant sure it will give you pleasure to hear that she proves worthy of her fither, worthy of you, and of your and her ancestors. Her jugenaty is admarable ; her frugality is extraorlinary. She loves me, the surest pledge of her virtue; and adds to this a wonderful disposition to learning, which she has acpuired from her nffeetion to me. She remds my writings, studies them, and even gets them by heart. Fou would smile to see the concern she is in when I have a cause to plead, and the joy she shows when it is over. She finds mems to have the first news loronght her of the suceess 1 met with in court, how I am heard, and what decree is made. If' I recite anything in public, she camot refraia from placing herself privately in some corner to hear, where, with the utmost delight, she feasts upon my applauses; sometimes she sings my versps, and aceompanies them with the lute, withont any master, except the best of instructors.
6009. WIFE, A wronged. Catherine $I I$. Seventeen years after her marriage with Peter [III.] the Empress Elizabeth died, leaving her husband the heir to the throne. It now appeared that the unfortumate Peter, who was then wholly governed by one of his mistresses, had resolved to repudiate his wife as an adulteress, and to place upon the throne the companion of his debaucheries. Many authors assert that Caherine had been indeed false to her husband; but upon considering all the facts in the cuse, I find the probabilities tend strongly toward her exculpation, and the best authorities agree in belicving that Peter was the veritable father of Catherine's children. Aware of the intention of her husband, Catherine and her adherents resolved to prevent its exceution by setting aside Peter himsc.t. [Next to Frederick the Great, Catherine II. became the most renowned monarel of her time.]-Cyclopedia of Biog., p. 404.
6010. WINE, Charm of Gauls. Thic Gauls happening to taste of wine, which was then for the first time brought out of Italy, they 80 much admired the liguor, and were so enchanted with this new plensure, that they sathehed up their arms, und taking their parents aboug with them, marched to the Alps, to seek that country which produced such excellent fruit, and in comparison of which they considered all others as barrea and magenal.-P'itancits Cama1.t's.
6011. WINE, Danger in. Aucients. The aneients, who so well knew the excelleney of wine, were not ignorant of the dangers attemiding too free an use of it. I ned not mention the law of Zaleucus, by which the Epizephymun lorrians were universally forbid the use of wine upon pain of death, except in case of sickuess. The inhabitants of Marseilles and Drolitus showed more moderation and indulgerns 'ontruted themself with prohibiting it w, en. At Rome, in the carly ages, youn of of liberal condition were not permitu' to drink wine fill the age of thirty ; but as for ('ar womem, the use of it was absolitely forbid to them ; and the reason of that prohibition was, becanse intcomperance of that kiad might ind re them to commit the most excessive crimes. so , weca complains bittcrly that this custom was almost miversally violated in his limes. The wonk and delicate complexion of the women, says he, is not changed; but their manners are rhanged, and no longer the same. They value themselves upon earrying excess of wine to as great an height as the most robust men. Like them, they pass whole nights at taible, and with a full glass of unmixed wise in their hands, they glory in vying with them, and, if they (an, in overoming them. The Emperor Domitian passed an ediet in relation to wine, which semed to have a just foundation. One year having produced abundance of wine and very little corn, he believed they had more occasion for the one than the other, and hierefore decteed that no more vines should be planted in Italy ; and that in the provinces at least one half of the vines should be rooted up. Philostratus expresses himself as if the decree ordaned that they slould all he pulled u], at deast in Asi،.-Rothin's Mist., Book 24, art. 3, 冬 1.
6012. WINE, Deception in. Samucl Johnson. We talked of drinking wine. Jonsson : "I require wine only when I am alone. I have then often wished for it, and often taken it." Spottiswoone: " What, hy way of a companion, sir ?" Jounson : "To get rill of myself, to send myself away. Wine gives great pleasure; and every plasure is of itself a good. It is a good, muless counterbalaneed by evil. A man may have a strong reason not todrink wine ; and that may be greater than the plrasure. Wine makes a man better pleased with himself. I do not say that it makes him more plensing to others. Sometimes it does. But the dunger is, that whide a man grows better pleased with himself, he may be growing less pleasing to others. Wine gives a man nothing. It neither gives him knowled, 2 nor wit ; it only animates a man, and enables him to bring out what a dread of the company has repressed."-Boswell's Jomnson, p. 391 .
6013. WINE defended. Samuel Johnson. resolutely ventured to undertake the defence of convivial indulgence in wine, though he was not to-night in the most genial humor. After urging the common plausible topies, I ut last lud recourse to the maxim, in vino veritas, a man who is well whrmed with wine will speak truth. Jounson: "Why, sir, that may be an argument for drinking, if you suppose men in general to be liars. But, sir, I would not keep company with a fellow who lies as long as he is sober, and whom you must makedrunk before you can get a word of truth out of him."-Boswemis Jounson, p. 196.
6014. WINE forbidden, Women. Romulus made the drinking of wine, as well as adultery, a capital crime in women. For he said adultery opens the door to all sorts of crimes, and wine opens the door to adultery. The severity of this law was softened in succeeding ages; the women who were overtaken in liguor were but condemned to die, but to lose their dowers.Langholene's Note in Plutabch's Numa and Lycukges.
6015. WISDOM, False in. Aristotle. [He :anght that the hemt of the body cooked the food eaten.] The hiquefied food steams up into the heart, where it is converted into blood. Nature, loe says, being a good economist, gives the best part of the food to the noblest parts of the body ; as masters cat the best portions of an amimal, the shaves the inferior parts, and the dogs the refuse. Since the interior of the body is so loot that food is cooked merely by the natural heat, he felt it necessary to explain why the body did not get too hot, and consume itself. This would certanly be the ease, he says, if we did not continually inhale cool air! Breathing is the cooling process; and air alone, he adds, would answer the purpose, because its lightness enables it to penetrate into many parts of the body which water could not enter.-Cyclopedia of Brote, p, 562.
6016. WISDOM with Ignorance. Aristotle. He took things too much for granted. He believer too easily. Although a writer on amatomy, for example, it is ahmost certain that he never examined the inside of the human body, much less dissected one. Imagine a doctor of the present day giving such an aceount of the liver as the following: "The liver is compact and smooth, shining and sweet, though somewhat hitter; and the reason is, that the thoughts falling on it from the intellect, as on a mirror, might terrify it hy employing a bitterness akin to its uature ; and threateningly mingle this bitterness with the whole liver, so as to give it the hark eolor of bile; or, when images of a different kind are refleeted sweetening its bitterness and giving phace to that part of the soul which lies near the liver, making it rest at night, with the power of divination, in dreams. Although the liver was constructed for divination, it is only during life that its predictions are clear ; after death its oracles becone obseure, for it becomes blind."- C i copedia of Brog., p. 560.
6017. WISDOM, Occasioni!. Srmuel Johnson. Of Dr. Goldsmith he said: "No man was more foolish when he had not a pen in his hand, or more wise when he had."-Boswell's Jonnsos. p. 438.
6018. WISDOM, Practical, Socrates. After having found, by his own experience, how dillcult, abstruse, and intricate, and, at the same time, of how little use that kind of learning was to the generality of makind, he was the first, as Cicero remarks, who conceived the thought of liringing down philosophy from benven, to place it in (ities, and infroduce it into private louses; humanizing it, if I may use that expression, and rendering it more familiar, more useful in common life, more within the rench of man's capacity, und applying it solely to what might make them more ritional, just, and virtuous. He thonght it was a sort of folly to devote the whole vivacity of his mind und employ all his time in inguivics merely curious mad involved in impenctrable darkness, fad absolutely incapable of contributing to the happiness of mankind, while he neglected to inform himself in the ordinary duties of life, and to learn what is conformable or opposite to pidy, justice, und prolity ; in what fortitude, tamperance, und wisdom' consist ; what is the end of all government, what the rules of it, and what fualities are nceessary for commanding and raling well. - Rolan's'list., Book 9, ch. 4, $$ 1$.
6019. WISDOM ridiculed. Eigytion Erpedition of Napoloon. The scientifie men, or sartus, as they were called, bad been supplied with asses to transport their persons and philosophical npparatus. As soon as the body of Mamelukes was seen in the distanee the order was givan, with military precision, "F'orm square, suctens curl rasses in tiee contre." . . . The soldiers amused themselves in calling the asses demi-satems. [On the mared, to Cairo.]-Anbott's Napobeon 13., vol. 1, ch. 11.
6020. WISDOM, Source of. Folly. [lt was a saying of Cato] that wise men learn more from fools than fools from the wise; for the wise aroid the error of fools, while fools do not profit by the exmmples of the wise.-Phetaneris Cato tie Censon.
6021. WISHES, Kina. "Better Luck." [When the fallen Emperor Napoleon arrived at Elha, the place of his exile.] . . . the boatswain, in behalf of his shijmates, (ap in hand, returned thanks, wishing "his honor long hife and letter luek wext time."-Ambort's Fapoleon B., vol. 2, ch. 23 .
6022. WISHES, Ruinous. Coretousncss. In some Oriental tale I have read the fable of a shepherd who was ruined by the accomplishment of his own wishes : he lad prayed for water; the Ganges was turned into his grounds, and his llock and cottage were swept away by the inumdation.-Ginbon's Rome, ch. 58, p. 567.

602B. WITCH, A suspected. At Labrator. In May, 1577, Captain Frobisher and lis men, having first gone in solemn procession to churel and partaken of the communion, set sail, and soon reached the scene of their first explorations. Icebergs rovered the sea, and continually threatened the vessel with destruction, and they were saved only by the light of the endless northern day. Inhabitants were discovered on the shore. One of these, " a man of large corporature and good proportion," they seized and carried off. Another, an ill-favored old woman, they took for a devil or a witeh, and actually pulled off the skins that covered her feet, to see if they were not cloven. - CYesoredia of Bion., p. 308.

602A. WITCHCRAFT, Alleged. Salem. The durkest page in the history of New Fangland is that which bears the record of the Salem witcheraft. The same town which, fifty-seven years previously, cast out Roger Williams, was now to become the seene of the most fatal delusion of modern times. In February of 1692, in the same part of Salem, afterward called Danvers, a danghter auda niece of Sumuel Parris, the minister, were nttacked with a nervons disorder, which rendered them partially insane. Parris believed, or affected to believe, that the two girls were bewitched, and that Titubn, an Indian maid-servant of the household, was the author of the uffection. Ife had seen her performing some of the rude ceremonies of her own religion, and this gave color to his suspicions. He tied 'litulan, und whipped the ignornnt ereature, until, at his own dictation, she confessed herself it witch. Here, no donbt, the matter would have ended had not other causes existed for the continume and spread of the miserable delusion.-Riopratio's U. S., eh. 16, p. 150.
6025. WITCHCRAFT, Tpldemic, Sielem. In the hope of saving their lives, some of the terrified prisoners now began to confess themselves witches or bewitched. It was soon found that a confession was almost certain to procure liberation. It became evident that the arensed were to be put to death, not for being witches or wizards, but for denying the reality of witedcraft. The special coint was alrealy in session ; convictions followed fast; the gallows stood waiting for its vietims. The truth of Mather's preaching was to be established by hanging whoever denied it : and Parris was to save his pastorate by mutdering his rival. When the noble Borroughs monnted the scaffold he stood composedly, and repented correctly the test-praycr, which it was said no wizard could utter. The people broke into sobs and moans, and would have resened their friend from death, but the tyrant Mather dashed among them on horseback, muttering imprecations, and drove the hangman to his horrid work. Old Giles Cory, seeing that conviction us isertain, refused to plead, and wors prexsed to dewih. Five women were hanged in one day. Between the 10th of June and $20 d$ of September twenty vietims were hurried to their doom. Fifty-five others :ad ben tortured into the confussion of abominable falsehoods. A hundred and fifty lay in prison awaiting their the. Two hundred were aceused or suspected, and ruin seemed to impend over New England. But a reaction at hast set in among the people. -Rideratu's U. S., ch. 16, p. 152.
6026. WITCHCRAFT, Malice in. Salem. Parris had had a guarrel in his church. A part of the congregation desired that George Burroughs, a former minister, should be reinstated, to the exelusion of Parris. Burroughs still lived at Salem, aud there was great animosity between the partisams of the former and the present pastor. Burroughs disbelieved in witcheraft, and openly expressed his contempt for the system. Ifere, then, Parris found an opportunity to turn the eonfession of the foolish ludian servant against his enemies, to overwhelm his rival with the superstitions of the community, and perhaps to have him put to denth. There is no doubt whatever that the whole murderous scheme originated in the persomal maliee of Parris. There were others rendy to aid him, especially the celebrated Cotton Mather, minister of Boston.

To these men. mist be charged the full infamy of what followed.-Ridpatios U. S., ch. 16, p. 151.
6027. WITCHCRAFT punlshed. E'ngland, 1716. Mrs. IIicks and hor datughter, agred nine years, were hunged at Iluntingilon "for selling their souls to the devil ; tormenting and restroying their neighbors, by making them vomit pins; raising a storm, so that a ship was momost lost, ly palling of her stockings, nud making a lather soap."-KNigitl's EN(i., vol. 5, ch. 27, p. 430 .
3028. - Stem. By the haws of England witcheraft was punishable with death. The code of Massachusetts was the same as that of the mother-country. . . On the 2lst of March [1692] the horrible procedings beram. Mary Cory was arrested, not indeed for being a witeh, lont for denying the reality of witcherall. When brought before the chureh and rourt, she denied all gailt, but was convicted and harried to prison. Sarah Cloyce and Reherca Narse two sisters, of the most exemplary lives, were next apprehended as witches. The only witncesses against them were Tituba, hor half-witted Indian hushand, and the simple girl Abigail Williams, the niece of Parris. The victims were sent to prison protest.ig their iunorence. Giles Cory, a patriarch of dighty yours, was next seized; he thso was one of those who hat opposed Parris. The Indian necuser fell down before Edward Bishop, pretending to be in a fit under Sitanic influence; the sturdy farmer cured him instantly with a sound flogrging, and said that he could restore the rest of the aftlicted in the same manner. Ite and his wife were immediately arrested and condemucd. George Burroughs, the rival of Parris, was aecused ind hurried to prison. And so the work went on until seventy-five innocent people ware locked up in dungeons. Not a solitary partisam of Parris or Mather had been arrested.-Rampath's U. S., ch. 16, p. 151.
6029. WIT, Dangerous. Clumdian the Poct. Claudian was exposed to the cumity of a powerful and unforgiving courtier, whom he had provoked by the insolence of wit. He had comparel. in a lively epigram, the opposite characters of two Pretorian praferts of Italy; he cointrasts the innorent repose of a philosopher, who sometimes resigned the hours of business to slumber, perhaps to study, with the interesting diligence of a rapacious minister, indefatigable in the pursuit of unjust or satrilegious gain. "How happy," continues Chudian-"how happy might it be for the people if Italy, if Mallius could be constantly awake, and if Hadrian would always sleep!". . . Consulting the dictates of prudence rather than of honor, he addressed, in the form of an epistle, a suppliant and humble recantation to the offended prefeet. -Glibison's Rome, ch. 31, p. 237 .
6030. WIT, Quick. Woman's. The king [Chas I.] was hard pressed by soldiers in pursuit of him, and they sought for him sill over the house, and in the kltehen, ton; but here the girl in the kitehen knew him, for indeed he was there; and as they entered he looked with treplation round him, perhaps giving upall for lost now ; but the cook hit hin asmart rap with the busting ladle, exclaiming, "Now, then, go on with thy work; what art thou looking ahont for ?" And the manomvre was effectund, and the soldiers started on another track.-IIood's Cuomweli, ch. 13, p. 172 .
6031. WITNESSES, Abuse of. Chiif'Justice Jeffreys. One witness mamed Innme, partly from concern for Lady Alice, and partly from fright at the threats and maledictions of the chief-justice, entirely lost his head, and at last stood silent. "Oh, how hard the truth is," said Jelfreys, " to come out of a lying Presbyterian knave !" The witness, after a panse of some minntes, stammered a few unmeaning words. "Was there ever," (xclaimed the judge, with an oath-"was there ever such a villain on the face of the earth ? Dost thou believe that there is a God? Dost thou believe in hell fire? Of all the withesses that I ever met with, I never saw thy fellow." Still the poor man, scared ont of his senses, romained mute, and again Jeffreys burst forth: "I hope, gentlemen of the jury, that you take notice of the horrible carriage of this fellow. How can one help abhorring both these men and their religion? A Turk is a saint to such a fellow as this. $A$ paran would be ashamed of such villainy. Oh, blessed Jesus! What a generation of vipers do we live among!" "I cannot thll what to say, my lord," faltered Dimne. The judge ngain broke forth into a volley of oaths. "Was there ever," he cried, "suchan impudent raseal? Holal the cancie to bim, that we may sue his brazen face. Yon, geathemen, that are of counsel for the Crown, see that an information for perjury be preferred against this fellow."Macaulay's Eng., ch. 5, !. 594.
6032. WITNESS, A false. "Diek" Tialbot. A plea was wanted which might justify the [James II.] Duke of York in breaking that promise of marriage by which he had obtained from Anne Iyde the last proof of female affeetion. Such a plea Talbot, in concert with some of his dissolute companions, umbertook to finnish. Ite atlirmed that he had trinmphed over the young lady's virtue, made up a long romance about the interviews with which she hat indulyed him, and related how, in one of his secret visits to her, he had mulnekily overturned the chancellor's inkstand upon a pile of papers, and how cleverly she had averted a diseovery by laying the bhame of the aecident on her monkey. These stories, which, if they had been true, would never have passed the lips of any but the basest of mankind, were pure inventions. Tabbot was soon forced to own that they were so, and he owned it withont a blush. - MiCaUlay's ENG., ch. 6, p. $4 \overline{5}$.
6033. WITNESSES, False. Reign of Chavles II. [After Titus Oates, the honored impostor, came many imitators.] A wreteh nmmed Carstairs, who had earned a living in Scotland by going disgrised to conventicles and then informing against the preachers, led the way. Bedloe, a noted swindler, followed ; and soon, from all the brothels, gambling-houses, and sponginghouses of London, false witnesses poured forth to swear awny the lives of laoman Catholies. One eame with astory about an army of 30 , (000 men who were to muster in the disgrinse of pitgrims at Cormana, and tosail thenee to Wales. Another hat been promised canonization and 5500 to murder the king. A third lind stepped into an cating-house in C'ovent Garden, and had thero hearil a great Roman Catholic banker vow, in the hearing of all the guests and drawers, to kill the heretical tyrant. Oates, that he might not be eclipsed by his imitators, soon added a large supplement to his original narrative. He had the portentous impondence to allim, among other things, that he had once stood behind a door which was ajar, and had there overhenrd tho queen declare that she had resolved to give her consent to the assussination of her hasbund. 'The vilgar believed, and the bighest magistrutes pretended to believe, even such fictions as these.-

60B4. WITNESS of the Spirit. Susannah Wesley. John Wester's mother had rarely heard of the present conscions forgiveness of sins, or the witness of the ipirit, muel less that it was the common privilare of the lelievers. "Therefore," she said, "I never durs ask it for myself. But two or thre werls aso, while my son latl, in delivering the elog io me, was prononncing these words. "The plood of our Lord Tesus Christ, which was giveln for there, they struck through my heart, :und I knew that God, for Cbrist's stike, had forqiven me all my sins." Wesley asked her whether her father (D)r. Annesley) had not the same faith, and if she had not heard him prench it to others. She answered he had it himself, and dechared, a little lefore his death, that for more than forty years he had no darkness, no fear, no doubt ut all of his being "accepted in the Beloved."-STRVENs' METITonism, vol. 1, p. 135.

60B5. WITNESSING for Christ. Primitive Christians. [Among the carty Christians it] beeame the most sacred duty of a new convert to diffuse among his friends and relations the inestimable blessing which he had received, and to warn then against a refusal that would be severely punished as a criminal disobedience to the will of a benevolent but all-powerful $)^{\circ}{ }^{\circ}$, -Gibison's lome, ch. 65, p. 514.
6036. WIVES, Market for. Jomestonon Colony. Sixty were actaally despatched, maids of virtuous education, young, handsome, and well reccommended. The price rose from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty pounds of tobacco, and even more; . . . the debt for a wife took precedence of any other. - Bancinoft's IIst. of U. S., vol. 1 , ch. 4.
6037. WIVES, Survival of. Widener. Jerom. siow at Rome a trimmphant husband hury his twenty-first wile, who had interred twenty-two of lis less sturdy prederessors. - Note: is GibHon's Rome, ch. 44, 1). 349.
6038. WOMAN, Adventurous. Enquafement. When Philip Itenry was settled at Worthen. bury he songht the hand of the only daughter and heiress of Mr. Mathews, of Broad Oak. The father demurred, saying that though Mr. Henry was an excellent preacher and a gentle man, yethe did not know from whenee ha came. "True," said the danghter; "but I know where he is going, and I should like to go with him."
6089. WOMAN, Adventurous. Impe Jotn. Between the pontitiente of Leo IV., who died in the year 855, and that of Benedict III., who was elected in 858, in certain woman, who had the address to disgnise hersex for a considerable time, is said, by learning, genias, and great address, to have made her way to the papal chair, and to have governed the chareh for two years, till her holiness was unfortumately detected by bearing a child in the midst of a religions procession. This real or fabulons personage is known by the title of Pope Joun. During five centuries this event was generally believed, and a vast number of writers bore testimony to its truth; nor until the period of the reformation of lather was it considered by my ns either incredible in itself or Ignominious to the Church. But in the seventeenth century the existence of this female pontiff became the subject of a keen and learned controversy between the Protestants and the Catholies, the former supporting the truth of the fact, and the latter endeavoring to invalidate the evidence on which it rests. Mosheim, a very learned and acute writer, steers a middle course; and though he is disposed to donbt the muny absurd and ridiculous circumstances with which the story has been embellished, for the purpose of throwing ridicule on the head of the Romish chureh, yet is inclined to think that it is not wholly without fom dation. Gibhon treats the story as a mere fable.-Tytuen's Insst., Book 6, eh. 4, p. 94.
6040. WOMAN, Ambitions, Princess Sophia, The czar Alexis Michaclowita, who first introduced a regular system of laws among the Rassians, paved the way for that eivilization which his son Peter afterward accomplished. Alexis left three sons, Phador, Ivan, and leter [the Great], and a daughter Sophia. Phedor succeeded his father, lut died young in the year 1682, leaving the crown to his youngest brother, Peter, then only two years of age, in exclusion of the elder Ivan, a man of no capacity; bat the Princess Sophia had that capacity which her brother wanted. She committed some dreadful excesses to obtain the government of the empire, and carried the point so as to cause herself to be associated with her brothers in the regency; but this did not satisfy her. She aimed at an exclusive possession of the sovercignty. and for that purpose formed a conspiricy against the life of Peter, which terminated in her own ruin. The young Peter assembled some troops, severely punished the conspirators, confined Sophia in a monastery, and leaving only an empty title 10 his brother Ivan, made himself master of the empire in the year 1689. - Tytier's Hist., Book 6, ch. 35, p. 474.
6011. W0MAN, Avaricious. Wife of James II. [The rebellion of the Duke of Mommouth filled Jeffreys' courts with victims.] It could [not] be shown that, in the season of her [Mary's] greatness, she saved, or even tried to save, one single victim from the most frightful proscription that England has ever seen. Unhappily, the only request that she is known to have preferred touching the rebels was that a hundred of those who were sentenced to transportation might be given to her. The profit which she cleared on the cargo, nfter making large allowance for those who, died of hunger and fever during the passage, cannot be estimated at less than a housand guinems. We cannot wonder that her attendants should have imitated her imprincely greediness and her unwomanly eruelty.-Macaulay's Eno., ch. $\overline{0}$. p. 606.
6042. WOMAN, Bravery of. Jane de Montfort. The defence of the custle of Ilemebon ly Jumde Montfort, during the captivity of her hushand, is one of the most interesting episodes of thi wars in which England was engaged. The historlan und the artist huve delighted to exhibit the heroic duchess, . . . with "the courage of a man and the heart of a lion," showing to the people of Rennes her infant boy, and saying, "Sce here my little son, who shall be the restorer of his father;". . . nt the last extremity looking down along the sen, ont of a window in the custle, and erying aloud, smiling for great joy, "I see the" succors of England coming !"一Kiniltre Ext., vol. 1, ch, 29, p. 4nt.
6048. $\square$ Wife of Witliam Purefoy. [In 1642, at the beriming of the evivil war, the wife of William lurefoy, a member of the Itonse of Commons, defended her honse arainst Prince Rupert and four humbed Cavaliers.] The little garrison consisted of the brave lady and her two daughters, her son-in-law, eight mule servants, and a fow females. 'They had twelve muskets, wheh the women loaded as the men diseharged them from the windows. The outbuildings were set on fire, and the house would have been burnt, had no the lady gone forth and chamed the protection of the Cavaliers. [Prince] Rupert respected her ronrage and would not suffer her property to be phandered. [Her home was in the north of Warwickshire. Her hashand was absent.]-Knigat's Eng. vol. 4 , ch. 1, p. 1.
60.4. WOMAN, Charity of. Lette. [During the invasion of the Barbarians Rome] gradually experienced the distress of sarcity, indat length the horrid calamities of famine. The daily atlowance of three pounds of bread was reduced to one half, to one third, to nothing ; and the price of com still contimued to rise in a rapid and extravagant proportion. The poorer citizens, who were unable to purchase the necessaries of life, solicited the precarious charity of the rich; and for a while the public misery was al leviated by the humanity of Lata, the widow of the Emperor Gratiam, who had fixed her residence. at Rome, and consecrated to the use of the indigent the princely revenue which she annually rereived from the erateful suceessors of her hus-band.-Gibnow's lome, ch. 31, p. 269.
6045. W0man, Compassion of. Nero's Nurses. As Robespierre was lamented by his landlady. so even Nero was tenderly buried by two nursin who had known him in the exquisite beants: of his engaging childhood, and by Acte, whis had inspired his youtls with a genuine love.Farrar's Eably Days, ch. 4, p. 44.
6046. WOMAN, Converts by. Clotilda. Clovis. the Merovingian prince, had contracted a fortunate alliance with the fair Clotilda, the niece of the King of Burgundy, who . . . was educated in the profession of the Catholic faith. It was her interest, as well as her duty, to achieve the conversion of a pagan husthand ; and Clovis insensibly listened to the voice of love and religion. He ronsented. . . to the haptisin of his eldest son ; and thonght the sudden death of the lifant exeited some superstitions femes, he was persumded, in second the to repent the dangerons experiment. In the distress of the battle of Tolblue Clovis londly invoked the Gor of Clotilda and the Christians; and victory disposed him to hemr, with resperetfil gratitude, the eloquent Remigins, Bishop of Rheims, who forcibly disphayed the temporal and spiritual advantages of his conversion. The king deelured himself satisfied of the truth of the Catholic fuith ; and the politiend reasons which might have suspended his public profession were removed by the devont or loyal nechanations of the Frunks, who showed themselves alike prepared to lollow their heroie leader to the field of batle or to the buptismal font. Gmmon's Rome, ch. 38, p. 5it.
60.17. WOMAN at Court. Ladty ILamilton. [When Nelsom songht water and provisions for his tleet in Sieily, ] the Neapolitum ministry, dreading to offend the French Directory, rolused the supplies which he required before he again started in pursuit of the fleet [of Bonaparte]. Sir William Hamilton was [English] minister at Naples; his wife was the favorite with the Queen of Naples, and one of the most ateractive of the ladies of that luxurious court. Nelson hud slight aequaintamee with Lady llamilton, and upon his representations of the urgent necessity for victualling his theet, secret instructions were given that he should be supplied with all that he reguired. [Nelsonafterward urged her chams upon the mational gratitude, beeanse the sucerss of his brilliant action of the Nile was owing to her, as he must otherwise have gone to Gibraltar to refit, and the enemy wonld have escapeed.]Kxigist's Exq., vol. 6, ch. 20, p. 3;5.
6018. WOMAN, Cruelty of, Perysatis. [She was the mother of the murdered Cyrus. A Carimu soldier bonsted that he had killed Cyrus.] Animated by a harbarouss spirit of vengeance, she commanded the executioners to take that unforthante wretch, and to make him suffer the most exquisite tortures during ten days; then after they had torn out his eyes, to pour melted hras: into his ears, till he expired in that eruel agony ; which was accordingly executed. [Messibates, the eunnch, had, by the king's order, cut off the hand and head of Cyrus.] Assoon as she got him into her hands, before the king could have the least suspicion of the revenge she meditated, she delivered him to the executioners, and commanded them to flay him alive, to lay him afterward upon three cross-hars, and to stretch his skin. hefore his eyes upon stakes prepared for that purpose; which was performed accordingly.-Rouhin's IIIst., Book 9, ch. 2, $\mathrm{S}_{5} 7$.
6049. WOMAN a Custodian. Of Man. [When Fabins Maximus commanded the Roman army agrainst lIamnibal.] One day his ofticers informed him that one of his courtiers. . . often quitted his post, and rambled out of the camp. Upon this report, he asked what kind of a man he was in other respects; and they all dechared it was not easy to find so good a soldier, cloing him the justice to mentionseveral extraordinary instances of his valor. On inguiring into the cause of this irregularity, he found that the man was passionutely in tove, and that, for the sake of sering a yoing woman, he ventured out of the camp, mid took a long nud hangerons journey every uight. Hereupon Fiblius gave orders to some of his men to find ont the woman, and convey her into his own tent, but took care that the Lucanha should not know it. Then he sent for him, and taking him aside, spoke to him as follows: "I very well know that you lave hin many nigits ont of the camp, in breach of the Roman disciphine and laws; at the same time, I am not ignormat of your past services. In consideration of them, If forgive your present erime; but for the future 1 will give you in charge to a person who slall be inswernble for you." While the soldier stood mneh momzed, Fubins prodnced the womm, and putting her in his hands, thus expressed himself: "This is the person who engages for you thint you will remain in camp; and now we shall see whether there was not some traitorons desten which drew you out, and which you made the love of this wommn a cloak for." -- Plutanch's Famus Maximus.
6050. WOMAN, Dangerous. Cleopatra. He etted Cleopatra hefore him, to answer for the conduct of her governors, and sent one of his lieutenants to oblige her to eome to him in Cilicia, whither he walsoing to assemble the States of that province. That step wis, from its consequences, very fatal to Antony, mul completed his ruin. His love for Cleopatra having awakened passions in him till then concented or asleep, infhamed them even to madness, mad fimally deadcued und extinguished the few sparks of honor and virtue which he might perhaps still retain. Cheopatra, insured of her charms by the proof she had already so surecessfully made of them upon Julius Cesar, was in hopes that she could also very ensily (aptivate Antony. . . . Never was agiipage more splendid and magnificent than hers. The stern of her ship flamed with gold, the sails were purple, and the oars inlaid with silver. A pavilion of cloth of gold was raised upon the deck, under which appented the queen, roled like Venus, and surrounded with the most beantiful virgins of her court, of whom some represented the Nereides, and others the Grices. Instead of trumpets were heard thutes, hauthoys, harps, and other such instruments of music, warbling the softest nirs, to which the oars kept time, and rendered the hurmony more agreenble. Perfumes were burning on the deek, which spread their odors to a great distance upon the river. - Rohlin's Hist., Buok 24, $\stackrel{1}{3} 3$.

60S1. WOMAN, Device of: Ariadne. Androgeus being treacherously shain in Attica, a very fatal war was carried on against that country by Minos, and divine vengeance laid it waste ; for it was visited by famine and pestilence, and what of water increased their misery. The remedy that Apollo proposed was, that they should appease Minos, and be reconciled to him, wherenpon the wrath of Ieaven would cease, and their calamities come to a period. In consegrence of this, they sent ambussadors with their submission, and. engaged themselves by treaty to send every ninth year a tribute of seven young men and as many virgins. When these were brought into Crete, the fabulous account s the informs us that they were destroyed by the Minotaner in the Labyrinth, or that. lost in its mazes, fud mable to tind the way out, they perished there. The Minotaur was, as Euripides tells us,

A mingled form, prodiglons to behold, lialf ball, half mun!

When the time of the third tribute came, . . Theseus, who, to express his regard for justice, and take hiss share in the common fortune, voluntarily offered himseif as one of the seven, without lot. [The conditions on which the tribute would be remitted were these :] That the Athenians should furuish a vessel, and the young men embark and sail along with him, bat carry no arms; and that if they could kill the Mincthur, there slond be an end of the tribute. There appearing no hopes of safety for the youths in the two former tributes, they sent out a ship with a bhek sail, as carrying them to certain ruin. But when Thesens encouraged his futher by his contidence of suceress anginst the Minotaur he gave another sail, a white one, to the pllot, ordering him, if he brought Thesens safe baek, to hoist the white; but if not to sail with the black one in token of his minfortune.

When he arrived in Crete, aceording to most historians and poets, Ariadne, falling in love with him, gave him a clew of thread, and instructed him how to pass with it through the intricacies of the labyrinth. Thus assisted, he killed the Minotaur, and then set sail, earrying off Ariadne, together with the young men.Phutaren's Cabus Mamedes.

605r2. WOMAN, Dominion of. Jemes IT. [His favorite mistress was sarah Jennings.] Among the gallants who sued for her favor, Churehill [afterward Duke of Martborough], young, handsome, graceful, insimating, elofuent, and brave, obtained the preference. Ite must have been enamored indeed; for he hat little property, except the annuity which he had hought with the infanous wares bestowed on him by the Duchess of Cleveland; he was insatiable of riches; Sarah was poor ; and a plain girl with a large fortune was proposed to him. IIis love, after a struggle, prevailed over his avarice ; marriage only strengthened his passion ; and to the last hour of his life Sama enjoyed the pleasure and distinetion of being the one laman being who was able to mislead that far-sighted and surefooted judgment, who was fervently loved by that cold heart, and who was servilely feared by that intrepid spirit. 605:5. WOMAN, Energetic. Washington's Mother. He was brought up in a very hardy, sensible manner, on an enormons farm, not a fourth part of which was cultivated. II is father dying when he was eleven yours old, he came direetly under the influenec of his mother, who was one of the women of whom, people say, "There is no nonsense about her." She was a plain, illiterate, energetic, strong-willed lady, perfectly capable of conducting the affairs of a farm, and scorning the help of others.-Cyclopelia of Brog., p. 11.
6054. Woman, Execntive. Mother of Washington. To the pressing entreaties of her son that she would make Monnt Vernon the home of her old age, the matron replied: "I thank you for your affectiomite, dutiful offers, but my wants are few in this world, and I feel perfectly competent to take care of myself." Upon lier son-in-law, Colonel Fielding lewis, proposing that he should relleve her in the direction of her [farm] affurs, she observed: "10 you, Fielding, keep my books in order, for your eyesight is better than mine, hut leave the execolive management to me."-Ca'stis' Wasilington, vol. li, ch. 6055. WOMAN, Extraordinary. Zemoliat. [Zonohia was the colebruted (Quero of lamyra ana the Last.] Modern Enrope Das produced several illastrious women who have sustaned with glory the weight of empire : nor is our own uge destitute of such distinguished characters. But if we except the doubffil nchiovements of Semirumis, Zenobia is perlaps the only female whose superior genius hroke throngh the servile indolenee imposed on her sex by the climate and manners of dsia. She chamed her descent from the Macedonim kings of Egypt, equalled in benty her ancestor (leopatia, and far surpasied that princess in chastity and valor. Zenobia was estermed the most lowely as well as the most heroie of her sex. She was of a dark complexion. Her teeth were of a pearly whiteness. and her harge bhack eyes sparkled with uncommon fire, tempered by the most allative sweetness. Ller voice was strong and harmonions. ller manly understambing was strenghened and adorned ly stady. She was not ignormat of the Latin tongue, bit possessid in equal prefertion the Greek, the Syriac, mad the Eiryptim langnages. She had drawn up for herown ase an cpitome of Oricutal history, and familiarly compared the beanties of llomer and Plato ander the thition of the sublime Longimes.-Gimson, ch. 11, 1. 350.

Then, taking from her own neek and arms the batedets and neckhees that adoracd them, she gives them to the blatk slave, and substitutes then with a neeklace and bracelets made of the cars of the dead enemy.Lamamtine's Tubkey, p. 116.
6057. WOMAN, Firmness of. Theodora. [A rebellion broke out in Constantinople, and the Emperor] Justinian was lost if [his wife] the prostitute whom he mised from the theatre had not renounced the timidity as well as the virtues of her sex. In the midst of a council, where Belisarias was present, Theodora alone displayed the spirit of a hero $; \therefore$ and she alone, withont apprehending his future hatred, could save the emperor from the iaminent danger and his unworthy fears. "If tlight," said the consort of Justinian, "were the only means of safety, yet I should disdain to fly. Death is the condition of our birth; but they who have reigned should never survive the loss of dignity and dominion. I implore Heaven that I may never be seen, not a day, without my diadem and purples; that I may no longer behold the light when I cease to be waluted with the name of guren. If your rewilve, O Casar! to lly, you have trasures; behold the sen, you have ships; lint tremble hest the desire of life should expese you to wretched avile and ignominious denth. For my own part. 6060. Woman, Helpful. Isabella. The iden of' reaching the Indies ly crossing the Athantie: had already possessed him [Colnmbus]. For more than ten years the poor enthusiast was a beggar, going from eourt to court, explaining to dull monarehs and bigoted monks the figure of the earth and the ense with which the rieh island of the East might be renched by sailing westward. He found one appreciative lisiener, afterward his constant and fuithful friond, the noble and sympathetic Isabelln, Queen of Castile. Be it never forgotten that to the fuith and insight and decision of a woman the final success of Columbus must be nttributed.-Riopatu's U. S., ch. 3, p. 55.
6061. WOMAN honored. Tomb. The Tuj
[in India], suid to be the most bemutiful iniading in the world, . . . was built as a tomb by the emperor Shath Jehar . . for his wife, whom he loved with an idolatrous affection. Ife had promised her on her death-bed to erect to her memory such $a$ mansolenm as the world had never before seen. Ile kept his word. It cost, it is stated, exclusive of labor, $$ 15$, , 000,000 . To-day, with paid labor, it would cost $$ 50,000,000$. In this conntry [America] it could not have been built for probably twice this sum. -General Grant's Travelas, p. 300.
6062. WOMAN, An Indiscreet. Frances Jennings. Frances had been distinguished by beanty and levity even among the crowd of benutiful faces and light charncters which adorned and disgraced Whitehall during the wild carnival of the Restoration. On one occasion Frances dressed herself like an orange girl, and cried fruit abont the streets. Sober people predicted that a girl of so little diseretion and delicacy would not easily find a husband. [She was, however, twice married, and was now the wife of Tyrconnel. She was the sister of Sarah, the favorite mistress of James II.]-Macau1.Ar's Eng., ch. 3, p. 23f.

606:3. WOMAN, Infamous. Laty C'axtlemaine. Lord Custlemahne was, indeed, well acguninted with Rome, mat was, for a layman, deceply read in theological controversy. I lut ho haul none of the uldress which hils post required [as Enghali mhister], and even had he heen a diphomatist of the greatest ability, there was a circumstame which would have disifualtited him for the partienhar misslon on which he had been sent. Dle was kuown all over Europe as the husinnd of the most shmurless of women, and he was known in no other way.-Macaulay's Ena., (h. 7, 1. 2.25.
603.1. - Messalina. Messalina, ulso, the vicious and ahmadoned wife of Clatifus, urged him on to varions nets of lajustloo underaclty. Thily womm was Infamous for all munner of vices. Her dehnucherdes, which were fuite notorlons in liome, exceed all helief; lat, what is the most surprising jurt of her character, she hat the uddress to puss with Clandius as a paragon of virtue. She it length, however, proceeded to that helght of affrontery, that during a short ulseme of chadius she publicly married Calus Silius, und upen the emperor's return made him, loy way of jest, to sign the marriage contract. Nurcissus, his freelman, soon male him sensihle that the matter was tooserions, by informing him that the people no longer look: ed upon him us emperor. Ctherly umalile do act for himself, he now entreated that Nar ${ }^{-}$isus would take any steps he judged best for hi. Interest, and his. favorite, thas invested with authority, immediately secured the l'rutorian guards, and coused Messalima mad Silius, her gallant, to be put to death.--TYTieEn's IIsT., Book 5 , cin. 6065. $\qquad$ Cleoputra. What a monster was this princess! 'The most odions of vices were mited in her person: an nyowed disregard of modesty, brench of faith, injustice, cruclty, and, whit crowns all the rest, the fiase exterior of a deeeitful friondship, w!ich covers a tixed design of delivering up to his enemy the person she loads with the most tender caresses and with marks of the warmest and most sincere attaehment. Sucla wre the efferts of ambition, which was her predomiame viec.-IRollan's Mist., Book 24, s3.
6066. - Cuthurine de' Medici. Gatharine, finding herself indirect collision with the admiral [coligny], whose paramount eredit with the king threntened her withat total loss of power, finally resolved on his destruction. No doubt the idea of this crime had often been suggested to her mind before : it had now become a necessity ; and she exeruted it with a cool determination, combined with Machavelian subtlety, whieh will transmit her name to posterity bronded with peculiar and indelible infamy. In er chief confidants were lier son, the Duke of Anjou (ufterward Lenry III.), the Duke of Guise, the Marshal de Tavannes, the Count de letz, and the Inke of Nevers. It was nrranged that the admiral should be assassinated by some known retainer of the Guises; this would almost certainly produce an insurrection of the IIuguenots to avenge the death of their loader; the populnce of Paris was then to be inst ed to rise in defence of the Guises; and the wazer purty was to be crushed und exterminated by a whelesale massacre.

Such wis the selbeme of these diabolieni conspirmors. - S'ruinen're' Fitance, rh. 16, $ 10.
60G7. WOMAN, Infatuated by. Roman Mfurk Antomy. Antony, . . . Latoxicuted with Einstcra finxury and debuachery, was daily slakiug In the esteem of his nrmy. In the madness of his passion for Cleoputra, he had prochatmed her queen of Eigypt, Cypros, A frim, mad CedoSyrin, and favislied klugdoms mad provinces on the chidren that were the froit of her varions amoners.

The impradent measure he now took in divoreling his wife Oetavin, the sister of his collengue, was a justilluble canso for their coming to an open rupture, and nppenling to the sword to deedde their chatm to undivided soverelgaty of the empire. Oetavius had ioreseen this issue, and made formidable preparations, which Antony had supinely neglected. We trusted chietly to his theet, und was persuaded by Cleopatra io rest the fortune of the war on a maval engagement, which was fought near Aetinm in Epirus. In the hent of the battle, which was maintained for some time with equal spirit, Cleoparra, with her Eyyptian armament of sixty grileys, took to tight, uad, what is seareely eonceivable, such was the infatuation of Antony, that he followed her, leavfing his fleet to thght for themselves.-TyTheith Mistr., Book 4, eh. 3, 1. 420).
6088. WOMAN, An injured, Wife of James II. [Mary was jealons of the infamous Cutharine Sedley, the king's mistress.] She did not even attempt to conecal from the cyes of the world the violence of her emotions. Day after day the conrtiers who cane to see her dine observed that the dishes were removed untasted from the tuble. She suffered the tears to strenm down her cheeks unconeculed in the presence of the whole circle of courtiers nud envoys. To the king she spoke with wild vehemence. " Let me go," she eried. "You have made your womnn a conntess; make ber a queen 1 Put my crown on her head I Only let me hide myself in some convent, where I may never see her more."-Macaulay's Ena., eh. 6, p, 66.
6069. WOMAN, Injustice to. Henry VIIT. [Of the pope's legates he sought a divoree.] King and queen were cited to appear before them when the court again met on the 18 th of June. IIenry briefly announced his resolve to live nolonger in mortad sin. The queen offered an appeal to Clement, and on the refusal of the legates to udmit it, thung horself at Henry's feet. "Sire," said Catharine [of Aragon], "I besecel you to pity me, a womnn and a stranger, withont an assured friend, and withont an indifferent counsellor. I take God to witness that I have always been to you a true and loyal wife; that I lave mude it my constant duty to seek your pleasure ; that I have loved all whom you loved, whether 1 have renson or not, whether they are friends to me or foes. 1 have been your wife for years ; I have brought you many children. God knows that when I came to your bed I was a virgin, and 1 put it to your own conseience to say whether it was not so. If there be any offence which cm be alleged against me, I consent to depart with infamy ; if not, then I pray you to do me justice." The pitiful appeal was wasted on a king who was already enter-

6071. WOMAN, A miserable. Sarah ifennings. [Ace No. B0.ite.] Sarah was lively and voluble, domineered over those whom she regarded with most kindiness, and when she was offended vented hor rage intears and tempestions repronches. To sametily she made no pretence, and, inderd, marrowly esenped the imputation of irreligion. She was not yet what she beremme when one elass of vices had heen fully developed in her by prosperity, and unother ly adversity ; when her brain had been turned hy suceress and hattery ; when her heart had heen ule rented loy disas: ters and mortifications. She lived to be that most odions and miscrathe of homan beings, an ancient crone at war with her whole kind, at war with her own chididreo and grandehideren, great inderd, and rich, bat valning greatness and riches chictly heranse they conabled her to brave publie ophinion, athed to indulge withont restruint her hanred to ble living and the dead. -Macavlay'a Eno., ch. 6072. WOMAN in Misfortune. Cornelia. There is no female chancter on whom the ancient writers lave lavished more praise than on Cornelia, the mother of the Gruechi, of whose grentness of mind under the severest misfortunes they speak in terms of the lighest enlogy. She had seen the fumrals of twelve of her children, the last of whom were 'Timerius and Caius Gracchas. White her frioms were lamenting her misfortunes, " (all mot me mofortmate," said she;" I shatl never cense to think myself a happy woman, who linve been the mother of the Erncehi." Impradent and dangerous for themselves as she must have thought the eonduet of her sons, she most nuturally deemed it the result of ral virtue and patriotism. Plu. tarch informs us that she spert the remaining years of her life in a vilh, near Misenum, visitcal, respeeted, and beloved ly the most eminent men, both Greeks und lommens, and honored by interchanging presents even with foreign princes. Her conversation was delightful when she recounted unecdotes of her father $\Lambda$ fricanus; but all were astonished when she spoke freely of her sons, of their great deeds and their untimely fate, and this without ever shedding it tear. "It was thought by some," continues Plutareh, "that the pressure of age and misfortune had deadened her maternal feelings; but they" (he adds) " who were of that weak opinion were ignormat that in superior mind, enlightened by a liberal education, ean rise above all the calamities of life ; and that though fortune may sometimes oppress virtue, she camnot deprive her of

6109. WOMAN, Wickeảness of. Fredegonda. Chilperic of Nenstria, who had already a concubine named Fredegonda, a womson of remarkable beanty mad talent, became a suitor for the hand of Gateswintha, sister to Brunchant. The marriage took place; but such was the influcuce of the abandoned Frederouda, that she persuaded Chilperic to acknowiedge her publicly as his mistress, and assign her a residence in the palatere. Galeswintha refused to submit to this indignity. and demanded as separation. Chilperic contrived to soothe her by protestations of amendment ; but within a few weeks the momply gueen was found strangled in her berl, and the crime was universally attributed to the instigation ot Fredegonda. In detiance of all decency, the king, immediately after his wife's death, murried his guilty favorite. $\qquad$ ln Neustria Fredegonda pursued her eareer of eruelty, tremehery, and bloodshed. She cmused Clovis, a son of Chitperic by his tirst marringe, to be condemmed and executed on a charge of sorcery ; his young wife was consigned to torture and the stake. Soon afterward Chipprice himself slosed his ugitated reign by a violent denth. He was assassinated at Chelles, nemr Paris, in 584. . . . The greneral weight of testimony liys the guilt apon Fredegonda. The kinge, it is said, Mad lately discovered her criminal intercourse with one of the ollicers of the pahace ; faring the consequences of his anger, she resolved to secure her own life by sacrificing her thashand.

This extraordinary woman died in 597 , having lad reason to congratulate herself on the complete suceess of her political mmbition, if not on the full gratitiration of her private vengente. History records few similar examples of atrocious and, at the same time, trimphant wickedness. Writers of all ages concur in holding up the memory of Fredegonda to the execrition of posterity.S'tedents' Fiance, ch. 4, 冬 4.
6110. WOMAN, A wise. Artemisia. A woman of a singulariy heroic character, Artemisin, quecn of Malicarnassus, fromapure spirit. of enterprise had joined the fleet of Xerxes with a small sefuadron, which she commanded in person. The prodence of this woman's counsels, had they been followed, might have saved the Persian momarch the disaster and disgrace that awaited him. She recommended Xerxes to confine his operations to the attack of the enemy by land, to employ his fleet only in the supply of the mrmy, and to avoid all engagement with the Grecian galleys, which now contained the chief force of the enemy. But Xerxes and his ollcers disdaned to follow an advice which they judged the result of femate timidity; and the compresed position of the Grecian theet seemed to offer a fiavorable opportunity for a decisive blow to their armament. The fleet of the Greeks consisted of 380 ship, that of the Persians amounted to 1200 sail. The latter, with disorderly impetnosity, hastened to the attack; the former wated their assault in perfect order, and witl calm and deliberate resolation. A wind sprang up which blew contrary to the fleet of the Persians; and as it thas became necessury to ply their oars with the greater part of their men, their active force was diminished, their motions impeded, and a confusion ensned which gave their enemy a manifest advantage. It was then that the Greeks berame the assalants; they raised the prean, or song of victory, and. aided by the wind, dashed forward upon the Persian sfuadron, the brazen beaks of the triremes overwhelming and sinking every ship which they touched. The Persimes suffered a complete and dreadful defeat. Artemisia, with her galleys, kept the sen, and fonght to the last with manly courage ; while Xerxes, who had belaeld the engagement from an eminence on the shore, no sooner salw its issue, than he precipi-

611:3. WOMEN, Zeal of. Rebellion of Monmonth, That at attack was to be made under cover of the night was no secret in Briderewater. The town was full of women, who had repaired thither by hundreds from the shitounding region, to see their hashames, sons, lowers, and hrothers once nore. There were many sad partings that day, and many parted never to meet again. The report ol the intended attack came to the ears of a young girl who was zenlous for the king. Thongh of modest character, she had the eonrare to resolve that she would herself bear the intelligenere to Feversham [the commander for James II.]. She stole ont of Bridgewater, and made her way to the royal camp; but tiat camp was not a phace wher female innocenee could be safe. Even the olliders, despising alike the irregular foree to which they were opposed and the negrigent general who commanded them, han ininlged largely in wine, and were rady for any excess of licentionsuess and crucity. One of them seized the unhapy maden, refused to listen to her errar $i$, and brutally ontraged her. 6119. WORK, Dignity in. Rayally. We read in Homer of princesses themselves drawing water from springs, and washing, with their own hands, the linen of their respective families. Here the sisters of Alexamder--that is, the danghters of a powerful prince, are employed in making elothes for their brother. The celcbrated Lucretia used to spin in the midst of her female attendants. Angustus, who was sovereign of the world, wore, for several years together, no other clothes but what his wife and sister made him. It was a enstom in the northern parts of the world, not many years since, for the princes who then sat upon the throne to prepare several of the dishes at every meal. In a word, needlework, the care of domestic allairs, a serious and retired life, is the proper function of women, and for this they were designed by Providence. -

6150. W0RK, End of. Bedat the Euglish Monk. The noblest proof of his love of England lies in the work whieh immortalizes his name. In his "Ecelesiastical History of the English Nation," Baeda was at onee the founder of mediteval history and the first English historian. . . Baeda longed to bring to an end his version of St. Joln's Gospel into the Engrlisl tongue and his extricts from bishop Isidore. "I don't want my boy" to read a lie," he answered those who would have had him rest. "or to work to no purpose aliter I am gone." A few days before Ascension-tide his siekness grew upon him, but he spent the whole day in tanching, only saying cheerfally to his seholars, "Learn with what speed you may ; I know not how long I may last." The daw'in broke on another sleepless night, and agrain the old man ealled his seholars round him and bate then write. "There is still a chapter vanting," suid the seribe, as the morming drew on, "and it is liard for thee to question thyself any longer." " It is casily done," said Beeda; "take thy pen amel write quickly." Amid tears and farewells the day wore on to eventide. "There is yet one sentence unwritten, dear master," said the boy. "Write it quickly," bade the dying man. "It is floishad now, "sidid the little scribe at last. ". You speak trumb," satid the master, "all is timisherd now." Placed upon the mavement, his head sup)ported in his scholar's arms, his face tarned to the spot where he was wont to pray, Berdit chanted the solemn "Glory to God." 6175. WRONGS redressed, Imaginary, Wir. Alexamiler arrived at a little city fahabited by the Branchidir. These were the deseemhants of a fanily who had dwelt In Miletus, whom Xerxes, at his retmen from Greece, had formerly sent into Cpper Asin, where he land setthed facm in a very llowrishing condition, in rasurn for their having delivered up to him the treasure of the temple of Apollo Didymens, hae keepers of which they were. Thay received the king with the highest demonstration of joy, and surreadered both themsetves and their ity to him. Alexamber sent for such Milesians as were in his army who preserved an hereditory hatred against the Brambide, beeanse of the trane hery of their ancestors. He then left them the choice rither ol revenging the injury they hand formerly done them, or of pardoning them in consideration of their common extraction. 'The Miarsinas being so much divided in opinion that they conlit aot agree mong themselves, Alexataler makerteok the decision himself. Д(cordingly, the next day, he commanded his phatins to surromblthe city; and a sigmal being given, they were ordered to phander that nbode of trators, and put every one of them to the sword, which inhman order was exerented with the same brbarity as it had been given. All the ritizens, at the very time that they wore going to pity homage to Alexander, were mordered in thestrents and in their lomses, no manner of requred being paid to their cries and tears, nor the least distinction made of age or sex. But of what erimes wore those ill-fated citians guilty? Were thry reaponsible for those their fathers had commbled upward of one hundred and difty years before? I do not know whether history hirnishes mothor example of as brutal

The lomar twolve was allowed to remain to in the number of the months. The mamber of days in each month were adjusted to absort three lumped and sixty-five days. The superflams homes were allowed lo acommate, and every fourth yar an additional day was to be intercalated. An arbitrary step was repuived to repair the negligence of the past. Sixty-five hays had still to be made good. The now system, de. prading wholly on the sun, would maturally have comanenced with the winter solstice. But (iessar so far deferred to usage as to choose to hegin, not with the solstice itself, but with the first new mon whied followed. It so happened? in that yar that the new mom was cighty days after the solstice; and thus the next year started, as it contimes to start, from the 1 st of January. The eight days were added to the sixty-five, and the current year was lengthened by nearly three monthe-Frolde's C.esthe, ch. 25, p. 62.

Louis X/F. |The famena French miaisure $\mid$ Mazrin had dieal in the year 16i6l, with the honor of having monght abnut the pace of Westplatia and the treaty of the Pyrences; and Lonis, whom he had hithertol led about as a child, assumed himsell the reins of goverameat. He had borne the yoke of Mazarin with great impatience, and in some instances had shown that impetnosity of bemper which strongly characterized his dismosition. Gpon occasion of a meeting of the parliament of laris, where some of the royal ediets were called in question. Lonis, then a boy of sixfeen years of age, entered the hall of puilimment in hoots, with it whip in his hamd; and, contident of the powers of an ahsolute prince, told them, with at air of high anthority, that he was acquatued with the audacity of their procedure, aud would take care to resitain them within the boumds of their just prerogatives. Upon the death of Mazarin the first acts of the administration of Lobis were rather violent than politic.

6210. YOUTH, Regard for. "Rising Sun." When Pompey arrived at kome [from his victories in Afrian] he demanded a trimmph, in which he was opposed hysylla. The latter alleged that the laws dial not allow that honor to any person who was not either consul or pretor. Hence it was that the first soipio, when he retumed vietorious from greater wars mod contlicts with the C'urtharinians in Spain, did not demam a trimph; for he was neither eonsul nor prator. lle adiled that if Pompey, who was yet little better than a beardless youth. and who was not of age to be admitted into the Srmate, should enter the city in trimmph, it would bring an olinm both upon the dictator's power and those honors of his frienul. These arguments Sylla insisted on, to show him he would not allow of his triumple, and that, in case lie persisted, le would chastise his ohstinacy. Pompey, not in the least intimidated, bade him consider that more worshipped the rising than the setting sun; intimating that his power was inereasing, and Sylla's upon the decline. Sylla did not well hear what lie said, but perceiving by the looks and gestures of the eompany that they were struck with the expression, he asked what it was. When he was told it he almired the spirit of Pompey, and evied, " Let hin trimmph! Let him triumph !" - Pleutabcif's Pomidey.
6211. YOUTH, Studious. John Milton. If Milton's genius did not announce itself in his paraphrases of Psalms, it did in his impetuosity in learning, " which I seized with such cagerness that from the twelfth year of my age I searee ever went to bed before midnight." Such is his own account. . . . Aubrey's words are: "When he was very young he studicd very hard, and sate up very late, commonly till twelve or one o'rlock at night; and his father ordered the maid to sit up for him."-Pattison's Minton, ch. 1.
6212. YOUTH, Training of. Persiens. The elucation of children was looked upon as the most important duty and the most essential part of goverument ; it was not left to the care of fathers and mothers, whose blind affection and fondness often rendered them incapable of that ofllere: but the state took it upon themselves. Bo's were all brought up in common, after one aniform manaer. Where everything was regu. lated, the plare and length of their oxereises, the times of eating the quality of their meat and drink, and their different kinds of punislament. The only food allowed either the children or the young buce was bread, cresses, and water; for Cheir design was to areusiom them early to temperance and sobriety; besi.kes. they considered that a phain, frugal diet, without any mixture of simuers or manow, would strengthen the body, anul lay such a fomdation of heath ns would enatice them to madergo the hardships and fatigues of war to a geobl old age. Here boys went to sehool to learn justice and virtue, as they do in other phaces to learn arts and seiences : and the crime mast severely panished among them was ingratitude. The design of the Persimen in all these wise regulations was to prevent evil, heing eonvineed that it is much better to prevent fands than to punish them ; and whereas in other States the logishators are satistied with enacting pumishments for criminals, the Persians endeavored so to order it as to have no criminals among then.-Ronds's list., Book 4, art. 1, 念 1.

6417. ZEAL encouraged. Abraham Lincoln. SIC was not jenlous of 1 member of his cabinet who was also a candidate for the presidency, and showed vigor and energy in his department.] "My brother and I ... were once ploughing corr. on a Kentacky furm, 1 driving the horse and he holding the plough. The horse was lazy, but on one oceasion rushed across the field, so that I, with my hong legs, could searcely kecp pace with him. . . I found an enormotes chin-fly fastened on him, and knocked it off.
My brother asked me what I did that for. I told him I didn't want the ohd horse bitten in that way. 'Why,' said my brother', 'that's all that made him go.' Now," said Mr. Lincoln, "if Mr. - has a presidential chin-fly biting lim, I'm not going to knoek it off ; it will only make lis dopartment go."-Raymond's LiN. COLN, 1. 720 .
©218. ZEAL, Imprudent, Excution of Charles r. In no long time it becane manifest that those political and religious zenlots, to whom this deed is to be aseribed, hod committed, not only a crime, but an error. They had given to a prince, hitherto knowit to his peonle hhietly by his fanlts, an opportunity of displaying, on a great theatre, before the eyes of all nations and all ages, some qualitios which irresistil)ly call forth the admiration and love of mankind, the high spirit of a gallant gentleman, the patience and meekness of a penitent Christian; nay, they had so contrived their revenge, that the very man whose whole life had been a series of attacks on the liberties of England now seemed to die a martyr in the cathe of those very bibere

FUNK & WAGNALLS' \\ Standard Dictionary \\ is everyuhere acknowledged
}
by Edueators, Scholars, the Press, and the Public to be

\section*{THE BEST FOR ALL PURPOSES.}

It Is the Latest and Most Complete.
Contains 301,865 werds, about 75,000 more than any other dictionary ever published. More than \($ 960,000\) were expended in its production. 247 Specialists and Editors were engaged in its preparatiou.
Its Definitlons are Clear and Exact.
President Milne, of New York State Normal College, says its definitions aro the best to be found anywhere. Scores of critles say the same.
Its Etymologies are Sound.
They are especially commended by the Atlantic Monthly, Boston, the Westminster Gazette, Londen, Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia, and scores of others.
It Answers Every Question
concerning any word in the English language, that can be asked by scholar or student. The valuable werd-finding and greuping system makes it easy to find a word that is wanted, even though you cannot think thout the word is.

\section*{It is a Government Authority.}

It is in use in all the departments of the United States Government at Washington, and all the departments of the Dominion of Canada. Government experts give it the preference on all disputed points.
It is Adopted in the Public Schools of New York City and elsewhere. Its new educational features are extremely valuable in training pupils to a correct use of words, capitals, hyphens, etc. Its illustrations are superb. Its tables of coins, welghts and measures, plants, animals, etc., are exhaustivo, and cannot be found elsewhere.

\section*{It is the Most Highly Commended.}

Never has a dictionary been welcomed with such unanimous and unqualifled praise by the press, the great universities, and by educators and critics threughout the Euglish-speaking world. Americans are prend of it. Englishmen admire it."

THE LONDON TIMES: "The merits of the Standard Dictionary are Indisputable and nre abumdantly attested by a large number of milmpeachable nuthorities."

THE SATURDAY REVIEW, London; "The acieme and execution of the book are alike admlrable, and our impression of the value of the dictlonary grows with every test of reference. . . . In substantial merit we think the Standard Dictionary decidediy preferable to the mach-advertised Century."

THE INDEPENDENT, New York: "It is a noble example in which the modern tendency to popnlarize knowledge has risen to the higheat level yet reached."
B. O. FLOWER, Editor of "The Arena," Boston, said, August, 1995: "Without desiring to dlsparage the excellent Century, the Internatlonal, or Worcester's, I feef it simple justice to the Standard to say that in thla case the latest is nnquestlonably the best Dfctlonary of the Engish language."

NEW YORh OBSERVER: "It Is, indeed, a prodiglous work. . . The knowiedge and experience of the most able minds of the age in all the departiments of art and scence, of literature and learnlng have practlcaily been focused, and the result is a dictlonary so thorough in details, so comprehensive in ite reach, so accessible and inteligible to the student of even average attainments, and yet so satisfac; tory to the profoundest acholar that itinust be conceded u place before nudreamed of and till now unillied."
