

The Pacific Railway Scandal. Shameful Attempt to Choke off Inquiry.

Our special despatch from Ottawa on Monday contained the astounding intelligence that the Premier had succeeded in delaying the investigation of the charges made by Mr. Huntington in reference to the Pacific Railway. Our readers are aware that Mr. Huntington's motion preferring these charges was, without a word of explanation or denial on the part of the Government, voted down by its subservient majority. But the charges were of too grave a character to be thus thrust aside. Some of Sir John's followers felt pricked in their conscience at this barefaced attempt to choke off inquiry, and forced their leader to move for a committee of inquiry. That committee was appointed, the majority of its members of course being supporters of the Government. When the committee met, the first thing the minority, or Opposition members of it asked, was the passage of a bill authorizing them to examine witnesses on oath. The bill was introduced in the House, but was delayed in its passage by frivolous objections urged by the Premier, whose evident object was to keep it back as long as possible. It was at last passed, but was again delayed in its passage through the Senate, and even after it had passed that House, a third delay took place before it was assented to. The assent, however, was given to it on Saturday, and then on Monday the committee met with full power to examine witnesses under oath.

But here again Sir John's tricks and machinations were put in operation. When the committee met on Monday, he argued in favor of delaying the examination of witnesses till June or July, when Sir Geo. Cartier, Sir Hugh Allan and Hon. Mr. Abbott would be present. The whole thing was evidently planned, for no sooner did Sir John propose this delay than his obedient follower, Mr. Macdonald, of Picton, pulled a motion out of his pocket, all cut and dried, and moved an adjournment accordingly. Mr. Dighton and Mr. Blake opposed it with all their power, but the subservient majority carried it. And not only this, but they also carried another resolution to have the examination of witnesses conducted in secret, and forbade the evidence to be published.

No wonder such high handed proceedings have excited much feeling in Ottawa, and we are well satisfied that they will arouse the indignation of all right thinking men throughout the country. The Government have for the present triumphed, and succeeded in choking off all inquiry into their doings. But as a correspondent says: "It is quite possible, however, that the conspirators may find they have over-acted their part. Many members as well as other persons have hitherto been reluctant to believe the Ministry so guilty as was represented by Mr. Huntington's motion; but the obvious dread of inquiry exhibited by the Government and the desperate partisanship of their supporters on the Committee, have opened the eyes of the least easy to be convinced. There is no mistaking the real state of things now, and there are many very uncomfortable reflections on the probability that in the course of a few hours honorable gentlemen will have to choose between voting away the last shred of their political reputations, or making a manly protest against a line of conduct no one with a spark of self-respect can defend. The leader of the Opposition called a caucus of his party, which, although notice was so short, was very largely attended, and those present showed the most enthusiastic determination to do their part in resisting this dishonest attempt to defeat the ends of justice."

Redistribution of the Public Debt.

A vague rumor, which has been gaining ground since first mooted, to the effect, that the Dominion Government were about to assume that portion of the debt of old Canada which fell to Ontario and Quebec, and thus solve the difficulty of adjusting it, has, we are sorry to say, matured into fact. The debt is, in round numbers, about $10,500,000. The award of the arbitrators, appointed to settle the proportions in which this amount should be borne by the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, was questioned by the latter province on the ground of illegality, because the award was made by two of the three arbitrators, after Judge Day, the third arbitrator had resigned. The question was of a purely legal character and it was agreed to refer it to the Privy Council for adjudication. To escape giving a decision which might result in the loss of some support, and in order to accede—after a fashion—to the impertinence of New Brunswick for "better terms," the Dominion Government has intervened with a proposal to assume the amount in dispute, and give the other provinces compensation by increasing their subsidies in the same proportion that Ontario and Quebec benefit by being released from the obligation to pay this debt. No more mistaken policy could, in our opinion, have been adopted. The attempt to please all parties by a new departure from the terms of union, will end by pleasing none. Better terms, all round, if they proceed on a principle of compensation as is pretended, will prove a delusion and a snare, since they leave all parties in substantially the same position as they occupied before. If any of the provinces have really any cause of complaint because their terms are not as favorable as those of Quebec or Ontario, to relieve the latter from the payment of interest on a debt of ten millions and a-half (which is equivalent to increasing their annual subsidies to that extent) and to compensate the other provinces in the same proportion—give them an equal amount of additional subsidy in proportion to their population—would not remove the grievance, but only tend to aggravate it. This will be the inevitable result, if the compensation be equitably adjusted. But if any inequality be allowed to find its way into the arrangement, a worse result will follow: injustice will be done somewhere.

What then is to be gained by the proposed arrangement? The settlement of a legal question; and at what a price is this end to be obtained? At the cost of a new violation of the British North American Act, and the cost of teaching grasping local governments, that they have only to institute a claim for better terms, backed by a threat of non-support, in order to obtain what they want. And this comes at a time when Ontario and Quebec have each a handsome surplus, and are in no need of any increase of their subsidies. Yet to retain power, the Dominion Government will shake the very foundation of our constitution! If the basis is to be thus trifled with, we may well become alarmed, for, until that basis is firmly settled, we may expect to see proposals to change it renewed year after year. Great and unmitigated evils will follow, if the feeling that the Government is provisional in its character is fostered, and what other result will follow these ever recurring changes in the original compact of Confederation, made in obedience to the demands of the provinces, lacked by no just cause of complaint. If every demand is to be granted, we have little hope for the ultimate success of that scheme of Confederation which has hitherto worked so satisfactorily.

It is useless, we fear, to call upon the Government to ponder well the path it is about to tread. Power first, country afterwards, is their motto. We can only raise our voice in warning against a course, the end of which will be bitter; which will be regretted when the fruit thereof is falling thick and fast, but the mischief will have been done and regret will come too late.

A resolution was passed in the House of Commons on Saturday for continuing the Insolvency Act in force for another year. Many of the members were in favor of allowing the Act to expire, but the general feeling seemed to be that the present Act was better than none at all.

Col. Casault, D.A.G. and Col. Paret, of Quebec, have arrived at Ottawa to give evidence before the Public Accounts Committee relating to the Volunteer frauds at Point Levi last summer. Their testimony will completely establish the culpability and complicity of Adjutant-General Robertson. All the Volunteer officers express the hope that one who has disgraced his position by his conduct in this matter, and who has shown himself a petty and vindictive military tyrant will be speedily removed.

ANNABEL

THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XVII.

JOSEPH LANGTON IS UNEXPECTEDLY DELIVERED FROM HIS DIFFICULTIES.

His worst fear was fully realised, for this in paralyzing horror he read— "Dear Joseph,—How can I tell you the dreadful truth? Our poor, dear Annabel is dead. I could not believe she was dying even to the last, nor did the doctor seem to apprehend it till within an hour or two of her decease. Since we came here her health has always been worse than I cared to tell you, because I knew it would annoy you when you had enough of annoyance besides. But, oh, Joseph, had I dreamed of a fatal issue I should have acquainted you at whatever hazard. But never once did the thought enter my mind; and now she is gone. She died this afternoon, very calm and happy, leaving loving messages to you and her dear Philip. Oh, how will the poor boy be able to bear the blow? My own heart is bursting with grief, and I can write no more, especially as I mean to pen a brief note to Barnard for the same post. I have made arrangements to leave this place to-morrow for England, bringing the body with me. Be at Dover to meet me when the vessel lands, and have matters arranged to carry the coffin direct to Rookstone, which I think will be best.—Your loving and afflicted wife, AGUSTA." The letter dropped from Mr. Langton's hand, and he sat like one turned to ice or stone. It was if some dreadful shock had come and benumbed him, depriving him even of the power of feeling. "Annabel dead!" he murmured again and again, but without being able to realize the import of the words. He was in this bewildered and stricken state when the door opened, and Barnard Hayes entered.

"Good heaven, Langton! have you received the news?" he cried, presenting every appearance of a man shocked and concerned. "Oh, I see you have," he added, pointing to the letter. "Dreadful, isn't it, and quite unlooked for."

The merchant turned a glazed eye and stared at him in silence. The sight of the lawyer and the sound of his voice seemed to cause his faculties to struggle back to their post, and with a gasp and a spasmodic motion of his whole frame he shook off the spell which bound him.

"Oh, Hayes," he cried, "can it indeed be true? I am stunned—overwhelmed. I cannot—cannot grasp the dreadful fact. Annabel—dead!"

"It does certainly take away one's breath," responded the lawyer, "the intelligence comes so sudden—so unexpected. But it is just one of those things which we have to make up our minds to, after the first surprise is over. So let us think at once what is to be done, for there is no time to delay."

"Oh that I had seen her," groaned the merchant. "Why did Augusta hide from me that she was so ill?"

"She does not seem to have believed there was any danger, and to have represented the girl as better than she was was to save you from worry. It was good and kind of Augusta to do so, though as it had turned out you will naturally regret that not having seen her."

"My regret is unexpressed," rejoined Mr. Langton, with vehemence. "I will never get over it—never. And Philip—oh, God, how am I to tell him? Poor, poor boy, it will utterly crush him."

"Why, yes, Weston will be sore cut up, for I think he loved her pretty strongly."

"Loved her pretty strongly?" echoed the merchant. "He loved her with his whole soul, Hayes; his entire being was bound up in her. He would have died to save her. Oh, it will blight his young life for ever."

"Not a bit of it," said the lawyer. "Youth is not permanently blighted at an event like this. He will be bad enough at first, I daresay; but time will make him forget, and he will contract a new affection which—"

"Hush, Hayes, speak not thus. You do not know Philip Weston. His soul is as tender as a child's. Having loved Annabel he can never love again."

"Nonsense; I don't believe in a man being so silly. But whether or not, the girl is dead, and so there is no help for it."

"Dead," repeated the other, still unable to realise the fact. "But of what has she died? What has been her disease? Augusta says nothing of that, and I know not any ailment under which she labored. I for my part could see nothing greatly the matter with her when they left. Augusta said she was mooping and melancholy on account of Philip's absence, but I thought her too sensible and strong-minded to be unduly affected by that. What can have been her trouble? Does Augusta not say in her letter to you?"

The Game of Kriegspiel. Kriegspiel is the rage in the English army. The infection was caught from Germany. The fashion was set by the Prince of Wales, and now on every hand the officers may be seen with little boards before them, something like those used in chess, but containing maps of the different countries. On these maps are placed, concealed from each other, two armies, with cavalry, infantry, and artillery properly represented. The English maps are six inches to the mile, and follow accurately the surveys of England. Hills are marked by shaded lines; and the hedge-rows, woods, and roads are all sharply defined. The length of the moves vary according to the nature of the troops. The pieces having been arranged, the game commences. Say it is the invasion of England. The generals on each side draw up their plans, and the moves begin according to a defined system. The invading army is to attack London on certain roads, and included in the general plan there are some positions of acknowledged importance. A special idea of the invaders must be that a force of a given strength, is detached to try and secure an important railway junction, while that for the defenders may be that a force is sent to hold the junction if possible, and, if overtaken, destroy it and fall back. According to the skillfulness of the moves this object is attained or defeated. An umpire decides the fact of a victory for either side.

The labor market in New York is extremely dull. Comparatively few new buildings are in course of erection. There has not been such a scarcity of work at this time of the year for many years past, yet it is difficult to assign any satisfactory reason for it. The present high price of money may possibly have had a serious effect upon the building interests, for capitalists will not invest their money in real estate when they can obtain double and treble for it what they can for building.—N. Y. Times.

The corner stone of a new Roman Catholic Church at Ottawa, was laid with imposing ceremonies on Sunday last.

John A. and the Reporter. (Communicated to the Stratford Beacon.) Reporters have some queer experiences, and were they inclined to narrate in print half the funny stories they have stored away in the recesses of their memory, they could furnish some of the most amusing contributions to fugitive literature. The following anecdote has never been in print before, but it is too good to be lost. Some years ago, Sir John, then plain John A., was making a tour through Canada, speaking as he went. A shorthand writer accompanied him, who regularly telegraphed his important speeches to the journal by which he was employed. On one occasion, the subject of the speech was an interesting one, and the audience large, but from the inexperience of not infrequent positions, the orator's voice was so indistinct and his utterances so thick, that the unfortunate stenographer, despite all his efforts could not catch more than half the speech. To telegraph any such stuff as that, would have been absurd. So he sent word to the speaker that he could not forward the speech that night; but would mail it in the morning. Next morning he wrote the speech out from his notes, repaired to the rooms of Sir John, and requested him to kindly revise it, as he was afraid he had not been able to follow him correctly. Sir John read it over and turning to the shorthand man, asked him, "Is this my speech? Did you report this?" "Yes, sir," said the stenographer; "that is your speech as I took it."

"Young man," said Sir John, "you must have been very drunk. You have very nearly inflicted an awful injury on me. If you had sent that speech to your paper, all the world would have said I was intoxicated. I will correct it for you; but, young man, let this be a lesson to you; never get drunk again."

By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which will save us many heavy doctors' bills. —Civil Service Gazette. Nightmare in children denotes a want of nervous energy commensurate with the strain upon the general system, and should be attended to by the parent or guardian early to prevent greater complications. Follows Hypnotism will restore healthy activity to the nervous system in a short time.

Five Minutes for Refreshments.—Everybody who has travelled by railroad has heard the above announcement, and has probably suffered from eating too hastily, thereby sowing the seed of Dyspepsia. It is a comfort to know that the Peruvian Syrup will cure the worst cases of Dyspepsia, as thousands are ready to testify.
