know the date of the provincial elections. Following a protracted meeting of the cabinet on Saturday, at which every minister with the exception of the attorney-general was present, it was stated that the deliberations had reached the stage where an early announcement could be expected. The consensus of opinion on the

of those immediately conversant with affairs, apart from an authoritative statement, is that either June 29 or July 6 will be the date. The first of these will be selected if campaign incidentals can be arranged in time.

The unusual fact of a council being called on Saturday afternoon, immediately following the session, gives ground for the belief that the government is striving to open the polls in the summer season. To such policy, whether called home rule or by whatever name it may be known, we remain unaiterably opposed, and in view of the provision of the Parliament Act and the constitutional change thereby created, we believe the only course the government can take which will command the general approval of the empire will be a mandate from the British people following a general election. Until this question is dealt with in such fair, proper and constituelection. Until this question is dealt with in such fair, proper and constitutional method as to deserve the general assent of the citizens of the emplre, we assure our loyal fellow subjects in Ireland of our united and determined support, both moral and financial, in their struggle to maintain their rights of full citizenship under the flag of the great and glorious than that the seed for the year is in and a bountiful crop is within six to ten weeks of harvesting. Sowing conditions in the west were more than favorable. So in Ontario. No damage has been done by frost. Everybody has turned careful and all transactions are scrutinized as never before. The customs receipts show retrenchment, and this retrenchment is because the public are cutting out unnecessary luxuries and indulgences. If things are bad in stocks, it is because the day of stock watering is over, and water stocks are now being squeezed dry to suit the new temper of the buyer. One effect of the decline in stocks is to increase the money available for business. For instance, if it took $270 to carry a share of C. P. R. a year ago $190 will do it today. And so with man others. Therefore the money centres that supply funds for call loans will have to use some of their hoards for ordinary business. But legitimate business grows better daily. Toronto is in fine CHARLES W. POST OF BATTLE CREEK KILLS HIMSELF.

> Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, in many respects our greatest man of business, is back to Montreal from a trip to the coast, and back, we trust, a chastened man. Things have gone somewhat awry with the great Canadian Pacific; the stock of the company has declined 100 points, the last fifty points being in the shape of an avalanche rather than a procession. And the people of the west he must have found more or less dissatisfied with their position.

Sir Thomas may say because of the demagogs, the press, the parliament of the country. But not quite so, Sir Thomas. But partly because of our railways, partly because of some of our people themselves becoming careless in contracting debt, and others of them being carried beyond their depths in speculation.

Let us, therefore, tell Sir Thomas that his melon-cutting methods must cease. The eighty millions of dollars that the shareholders thought they were getting have been swamped in a slump in the value of the stock of one hundred millions. The game was not worth the candle. The credit of our greatest financial organization, of our one financial barometer, has been clouded, for a time only we trust. But it is for Sir Thomas, if he be chastened, to let the world know that the financial methods of his company are to be changed henceforward. Straight bonds will get him any money his company wants. Let it be bonds, Sir Thomas, plain four per cent. bonds.

And the people of the west, Sir Thomas, and the east, ask for better railway rates, passenger and freight; lower express and telegraph charges; eastern rates must prevail in the west. This is the boon sought by the people of the west. And they want the American market for their wheat. The Canadian Pacific and our millers must not stand in the way. If Canadian freights are made as low as American, the Canadian Pacific can still hold the transportation business; and our grain buyers and millers must at least give American prices if they wish to handle Canadian wheat. The western farmer must not pay the shot of keeping them in business.

This is the miracle that Sir Thomas must work if he wishes to wear a halo-in the minds of his fellow countrymen. And he that has been chastened begins to think of better things.

American rates for passengers, freights, express, telegraph in the Canadian west is what our people want.

Not for a moment can parliament nor any railway commission restrain Sir Thomas from attaining this great end. It will re-hearten the people of the west, it will stimulate business, attract new

Put the sunshine of your hair into an improved railway service policy, oh, Sir Thomas, and besides him of Aquinas and him of Canterbury you will be our Saint Thomas of the Sunshine in His Locks. Many of the best of the saints were converted in their latter years. There is, therefore, a chance for you, Sir Thomas, to cease trifling in the melon patch and labor in the wheat fields of your Canadian neighbors, not as a mere harvester, but to help them to get more for their wheat, and to pay less for their needs, and you will recover more from the C. P. than it ever lost. And remember that such a laborer is worthy of his hire, and of his hair.

She was leaking like a sieve when she came out of the water, as her fight with the barriers was more than usually severe. At Portneuf the ice jam was sixty feet in thickness. Every time that the "Lady Grey" hurled herself at the mass the rivets flew from her hull. The failure of the "Montcalm" at the thick of the battle made the work of the "Lady Grey" more severe than it would have been with the userstance of the action. the assistance of the other craft. The speaker's gallery has been well filled with spectators—boys from all the provinces who are interested in parliament, and who perhaps aspire for parliamentary honors at the next election, and wish to see "how it works," and adults who are interested in boys and in boys' work, as conducted on the self-governing principle. In fact, a prominent business man expressed the opinion that these boy-politicians knew more about the Canadian system of government than the average man the last time during the spring sess on Monday night. During the sess of government than the average man on the street.

The form of government of the Toronto Boys' Dominion is patterned after that of the Dominion of Canada. The Boys' Dominion is a federation of boys' clubs, each of which is known as a province. Each province elects a legislature for the government of local affairs, and all send representatives to the Dominion parliament, which passes legislation pertaining to the Dominion as a whole. The provincial legislature can not deal with matters outside its own province, and the Dominion parliament must also respect the rights of the provincial house.

The worm grows much longer than the lon bowels, where it is located, and sometimes a whole colony of them are found, enough to make a quart of solid worm, and when put in a bucket of water would apparently fill it. It is the hardest task in the world to destroy this parasite without doing injury to the individual who may be so unfortunate as to have it, as the parasite clings to the bowels, freeing itself from the body of the worm, and remains there to breed another. It is an internal demon, and causes its victims to suffer all the symptoms of disease imaginable. The cleverest physicians are led to believe the patient is suffering from some other disease, as nearly every person has different symptoms. Some have been treated for cancer of the bowels, consumption of the bowels, consumption of the lungs, chronic dyspepsia, nervous prostration, melancholia, hypochondria, hysteria, inflammation of the bowels, appendicitis, and other complaints, when one or more of these internal demons

RIFT IN CLOUDS OVER HOME RULE IS NOW APPARENT

Situation Clears in One Respect — Bill Will Come Within Parliament Act Unchanged

GOVERNMENT WILL HAVE THE WHIP HAND

Special to The Sunday World.

LONDON, May 9 .- In one direction at least the parliamentary situation here is clearing. Whatever may become of the negotiations between the prime minister and the opposition leaders, it is now evident that the home rule bill will be put thru the house of commons unchanged and will thus automatically come within the scope of the Parliament Act. If hat happens the government will have the whip hand, and it will be for it, not the opposition, to lay down the limit of concession. This consequence of the third reading of the bill is, of course, fully in the view of the Unionist leaders, and the extremists may go beyond any demonstation of hostility that has yet been made on the floor of the house. To the more moderate of the party, however, acceptance of the inevitable will be made with bad grace.

Liberals think the ultimatum presented by a large majority of the Naticnalist party to their leader, Mr. John Redmond, is a serious mistake at this juncture. He has been asked to acquaint the prime minister with its terms, but it is doubtful if he will llo this in a formal manner. Altho the ultimatum may restate the views of the Nationalist members, already perfectly well known, the ultimatum has too much the appearance of a stand-and-deliver demand and will be eagerly seized on by the opposition as irrefragable proof that the Nationalists hold the government in the hollow of their hand and that it yields to force against its own desire to arrive at an amicable settlement. In a measure also it reflects on Mr. Redmond, who, it is widely believed, is not averse to meet the present Protestant sentiment in Ulster, believing that in a short time the union of Ireland will be voluntarily achieved.

UNITED STATES IS RESPONSIBLE FOR ENORMOUS LOSS

Opportunity! -By one who grasped it.

HO of us hasn't said, "If I only had an Opportunity"-and how many of us recognize it when it comes? To all of us at least once comes Opportunity. To some of us it comes more than once-many times. Often it comes disguised, hidden, and we let is slip away simply because we don't see it, or if we do see it, are too indifferent to investigate whether it is Opportunity, or merely its shadow.

Who of us that has lived in Toronto for the past seven years doesn't realize now that Opportunity persistently tapped at our door? Who that opened wide the door to Opportunity in Toronto's mother earth hasn't reaped a rich reward of remarkable profits? Where is the man to-day who didn't, seven years ago who wouldn't, now—if he could? Again, what really tangible, concrete indications did we have, say seven or eight years ago, to show us the wonderful Opportunity of Toronto's land at that time? There was merely the shadow—the substance that followed is History now.

We cannot double your money in Toronto land to-day, or anywhere near Toronto, but we can draw a parallel elsewhere; we can show you where there will be a land growth as remarkable as Toronto's; we can prove, with the aid of STATISTICS-concrete indications—that Toronto history is repeating itself in and around Buffalo to-day-NOW. Never mind about the prejudices; make money where and when you can. Buffalo land you can secure now for $3.75 a foot will double, treble, and quadruple in value, just the same as Toronto's did.

You cannot secure the facts from this advertisement, but—at absolutely no cost or obligation you can get adequate proof of all we claim. Don't be like the ostrich that buried his head in the sand. Coming events cast their shadows before them. ACT TO-DAY. Simply tear off, fill in, and mail the coupon; by return mail you will receive free, more proof about Buffalo than you could buy six years ago about Toronto. Do not wait-ACT. Buffalo is grow-

ner, on the steamer Caronia, en route from England to New York, his widow, formerly Miss Sadie Carn, becomes heiress to an estate valued at $10,000,000. Mr. Skinner was a nephew of Mrs. "Jack" Gardner.

The marriage was romantic. Miss Carn, then a saleswoman in a Boston store, was at Marblehead one day with several girl friends, and with them was admiring the yacht Constellation as she lay at anchor in the harbor. Mr. Skinner invited her aboard to make a closer inspection, and the acquaintance which began that day resulted in the marriage.

Out in Calgary the business men are complaining about the high rents they have to pay for the stores and offices, especially as conditions became offices, especially as conditions became more stringent and people were limit-ing their purchases in order to meet the situation. In Toronto rents have kept up, but as one paper points out, some of the stores on Yonge street seem to change tenants too often, and it believes that high rents are the

LONDON IS LOWER FOR OUR STOCKS

Centre

A continuance of the downward movement was the only feature of the Toronto stock market at the close of the week. London sent lower prices for C.P.R. and Brazilian and quotations followed on this side. The market is awaiting inspiration from some good news, which, however, is delaying its appearance.

Steel Corporation made a further slide of a point and is still unable to register a recovery. The annual statement will be out in a couple of weeks, when a clearer vision of the present standing of the company will be available.

Brazilians were heavy and inactive Brazilians were heavy and inactive and came dangerously close to the low point of two weeks ago.

Toronto rails were again liquidated in small amounts and both the stock and rights were reduced in price.

The market for other issues was weak, occasioned by the necessities of sellers and the scarcity of buyers, and the outlook does not promise any early change.

SELLING DAY OF AMERICAN STOCKS

Bearish Mexican News and London Offerings Continued Liquidation

NEW YORK, May 9.—Disquieting Mexican news caused free selling of stocks at the opening of the market today, and the decline which began yesterday was extended.

Beat traders renewed their attack or the market at the opening day, expecting little difficulty in extending yesterday's decline. Disquieting news from Mexico overnight supplied an ostensible motive for selling, and, as an additional depressing influence, the sables reported a sharp break in American stocks in London. The popular shares were sold freely, Reading, in particular, being unloaded in large lots. First prices were lower, but the shorts encountered stiff opposition. Recessions in most cases were limited to tractions. After a few minutes of trading the list hardened, intial declines in many cases hains accountered. ng the list hardened, initial den many cases being recovered. Mis-souri Pacific securities were weak on the decision of the Kuhn-Loeb interests not to undertake the read's financing. The stock broke nearly two points to 16%. The convertible bands lost two points and the fours fell 3½.

POSTOFFICE IN NORTH TORONTO FORMALLY OPENED

Imposing Structure Was Formerly a Hotel-Site Prominent in 1835

Rebellion

A new city postoffice was duly open-ed on Saturday afternoon at North Toronto. The office known as station K occupies what was formerly the Oul-cott Hotel at Eglinton, and which has now been remodeled and made presentable for public business. The official opening was taken part in by W. F. Maclean, M.P. George Ross, superintendent of postoffices. Postmaster Rogers and Messrs. Lemon and Durston of the head office staff.

W. F. Maclean, M.P., in whose riding the postoffice is located, made a short address to the staff and others assembled. He said he was more than pleased that the government had acquired the site which had played such a prominent part in the rebellion of 1837. It would serve as a memorial of an occasion in which indiscreet action perhaps on the part of some men had resulted in bringing about reforms for the benefit of the people. The property was an excellent purchase and was today worth edsily twice the amount paid for it two years ago. Yonge street in his opinion, was to be the greatest street in Canada, and he hoped to see the present building later replaced by a more imposing structure. The postmaster-general was doing splendid work for the country, and trying to extend the services of his department for the benefit of the people. In conclusion, Mr. Maclean thanked Superintendent Ross and the members of the city staff for the assistance they had given him in improving postal facilities in South York.

Giddings' Crack Did Impressive Work in Company With Hearts of Oak

Two weeks from yesterday will be a busy day at the Woodbine, and the excitement will be at fever heat. Saturday was practically the first spring day, and the trainers took advantage of it. The sun was warm, the track better than it has been so far this senson, and there was a great deal of work, the most of it very impressive. The majority of the platers were worked Saturday morning.

From the Giddings barn, Beehive and Hearts of Oak worked the full plate distance. The fractional times were: One quarter in 23 3-5, three-eighths in 36 2-5, half in .49 1-5, five-eighths in .102 1-5, three quarters in 1.16 2-5, mile in 1.44 1-5, Beehive was in front all the way, and they finished heads apart after a bad bump at the three-eighths pole; in fact, they were only galloping at the finish, Beehive was not at all distressed; did not even puff. He looks particularly good. The other works from the same stable: All Bass breezed on the same stable: All Bass breezed a half; quarter in .23 4-5, three-eighths in .36, all pulled up in .49 2-5. # Ritchie's Ring Earnings Threaten to Break Record

Lightweight Champions Always Get the Money, But Ritchie Is Going Faster Than the Past Titleholders.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—It pays to be a champion fighter in these enlightened days of no-decision bouts. In particular it pays to be the king-pin lightweight. For some inexplic-able reason the lightweight title-holder always has an earning capacity far in excess of the heads of other divisions, with the exception of the heavyweight champion heavyweight champion.

As the latter is champion of all champions, the reason is plain, why he tops the lesser lights. But why the leading 135-pounder should be, a greater attraction than those below and above him in weight is one of the mysteries of pugilism. Yet this has always been so from the time of Mc-Auliffe to Ritchie, the present chief of that division.

Auliffe to Ritchie, the present chief of that division.

Now that the advent of the unpopular Jack Johnson has cast a blight upon heavyweight affairs, the lightweight class is really the most profitable of all for the time being. Since Johnson seized the heavyweight crown four years ago, the earning capacity of the leading boxers has increased to a marked extent. Owing to his peculiar position Johnson has had little opportunity to profit by this, but judging by the sums that the hightweights have been earning of late Johnson might have reached the million dollar mark by this time if he had been a popular and active champion.

Fight Gossip

(By Iconoclast.)

NEW YORK, May 9.—Now that "Gunboat" Smith has reached the end of his string as a theatrical attraction "white hope" affairs will begin to boom again. Smith is now here from San Francisco, where he wound up his engagements on the stage.

Before salling for France, where he is matched to meet Georges Carpentier in June. "Gunboat" will take on a few bouts here just to get his hand in after his somewhat prolonged absence from the ring.

Whatever may be said in disparagefrom the ring.

Whatever may be said in disparagement of the Gunner's prowess it is a fact that his presence will liven up things so far as the big fellows are concerned. Since he forsook the ring there has not been a single heavy-weight bout of any interest whatever.

It will be interesting to note how "Gunboat's" judgment of distance and all-round ability has been affected by his stage experience. Apparently what he needed most was plenty of fighting in order to polish up his style. But Smith asserts that giving boxing exhibitions in which the said the said in disparage. to display his skill to the best advantage has been of even more benefit than actual fighting.

Until such time as Jack Johnson is removed from his position as champion fighter of the world, "white hoping" will continue to be a pastime for many of America's overgrown young men. In our midst today we have another "white hope." This one comes all the way from California, and is recommended by such high authority as John L. Herget, of San Francisco, and Sam Fitzpatrick, the maker of champions, in whose charge the "hope" reposes. The "hope's" name is Jack Davies, and he measures just six feet, four inches and weighs but 196 pounds. As might be expected he looks just as lean as an ordinary Kansas farmer. But he's as hard as nails, and comes from fighting stock, as his father was quite handy with his mitts a score of years ago. The elder Davies gave old Joe Choynski a hard tussle back in 1890.

Young Davies is but twenty-six years old, and he has been fighting since 1895, but is only now making a bid for the honor of leading the palefaces in the championship race. Like all newcomers, there is one man he would prefer to meet above all others, and that fellow is Jim Coffey, the white hope" who is getting more press notices today than any other. Of course, if James is not available any other will do.

It's Flizpatrick who says Davies is a right clever fellow, and is also there with a healthy wallop.

Davies admits three defeats in his career. He was knocked out by Bob Ward in four rounds, when he was in the championship. Ritchie has dodged Welch for more than a year, and the latter has chased him all over the scale for a public ballroom.

The business but a year. Young Al Kaufman beat him in nine rounds three years old, and he has been fighting since 1895, but is only now making a bid for the honor of leading the palefaces in the championship race. Like land, but it may be mentioned that he fought Nick Burley and Terry of the land, but it may be mentioned that he fought Nick Burley and Terry Mustain, who are more or less known hereabouts.

"Fredde" Welch means to push efforts to get at "Willie" Ritchie. His match with Tommy Murphy, arranged to take place in San Francisco in June, shows his intentions plainly, and should he defeat Murphy there will be no excuse for Ritchie not giving him an opportunity to battle for the world's championship. Ritchie has dodged Welch for more than a year, and the latter has chased him all over the stance of its adoption on so large a scale for a public ballroom.

Economy tests, with intent of propelling motor cars to the least cost of fuel, have been carried out in various parts of the country, but, by word of Jos. A. McKenny of the Dayton Bulck Company, never before have such conditions of road and highway obtained as confronted the six-cylinder Bulck sent from Cincinnati to Dayton. "Heretofore: Mr. McKenny said, "all tests of this kind have been conducted within the limits of some individual city, for which reason we determined to widen the scope by taking of roadways that ile between two cities so large and important as Cincinnati and Dayton."

The Bulck selected was a strictly "six" stock model, such as is daily sold at any Bulck senery and four observers aboard, it weighed exactly 4700 pounds.

GRIFFITH TALKS ON FED. LEAGUE

Wake Up Soon and-"Good Night."

WASHINGTON, May 9 .- "Baseball belongs to the men who have devoted their lives to it," said Clark Griffith. "The American league was expanded after Comiskey received the right to establish the White Sox in Chicago, because the National league refused to let us go into Washington, Baltimers and Clearley of the Sox in Chicago, because the National league refused to let us go into Washington, Baltimers and Clearley of the Sox of the Sox of the Sox of Clearley of the Sox to let us go into Washington, Baltimore and Cleveland, all of which had been dropped from the old circuit.
283 Comiskey, McAleer, Mack Manning and others who had been players helped Ban Johnson to promote the American league, for which there was plenty of room.

"These Federal league fellows, the other hand, have never done a thing for baseball. They wouldn't put up a dollar to save the game from going to the dogs. They are trying to cut in to get some of the exaggerated profits. But baseball history shows that no rich man who helped one of these movements stuck to the ship when he began to figure up his ship when he began to figure up his losses. You can count the consistent major league money-makers on your right hand, the Giants, White Sox, Cubs, Athletics and Pittsburg. The Washington club lost money annually for thirty-five years, until 1912. How much has Ebbets made in Brooklyn? The Cardinals and Browns never have made money worth talking about.

"I tell you that this Federal league business is all wrong, and in due time it will go up in smoke. The wise players have kept out of it, while the lit blindly. Gilmore's men of mill undesirable element has gone over to as he calls them, will wake up so Willard has improved a great deal since that twenty-round go with Smith in San Francisco a year ago, and if there is a man among the white heavies who figures to beat the "Gunboat" right now big Jess is the one. He has been hop-strotching about the country the past few months picking up a purse here and there, but complains that it is hard to persuade any of the so-called "hopes" to meet him. No one appreciates more than he that the class of the men he has been boxing is not of the highest, but Jess says that the fault is not his. He would prefer such men as Smith and Moran if they could be induced to box him.

Now that the prospects are dubious for the Gunner's foreign trip I think

There are several others in the running besides Jack Dougherty's "champion," among them such clever birds Jimpo Clabby, Eddle McGoorty and Mike Gibbons. Clabby and Gibbons can easily fight well under the so-called 156 pound limit. Whether McGoorty can make so low a weight, however, is a question.

After watching Eddie Campi scamper thru ten rounds with the clever young Fox of England, one can easily understand why Californians pinned their faith on the youngster seen around here in a long time. Young Fox is no slouch himself, and is one of the clevery little fellows England has sent us in recent years. Local experts figured him to wound the solucion of the speediest youngster seen around here in a long time. Young Fox is no slouch himself, and is one of the clevery lateration.

Moran if they could be induced to box him.

Now that the prospects are dubious for the Gunner's foreign trip I think it is safe to announce that a public announcement of a Smith-Willard match will shortly be forthcoming. Whatever else may be said about the "Gunboat" no one can question his courage, and confidence in his own prowess. He has boxed Willard and realizes that the big fellow is not the casiest game, but when it comes down to cases I reckon be will not be found waiting. He will greatly add to his pobularity by agreeing to give Willard a battle.

These two big fellows have passed the joke stage, and a match between them would settle, to the satisfaction of the American public at least, the winner of such a match would be the individual. ### Fivepin League Bowling Averages

PORNING

The Millionaires were returned champions of the Toronto Bowling Club Five-Pin League last Tuesday night, when they defeated Senators, the first series, winners in all three games. Every game was closely contested with the first two, which decided the contest, being of the high-class order, both teams putting in counts over the 700 mark, and which has been the best rolling for the championship since the league was organized; therethe best rolling for the championship since the league was organized; therefore, with the most successful season in the history of the league concluded the averages of all members taking part in nine or more games will be found interesting, and a mark to guide them for better or for worse in the season to come. Vast improvement was made by many in the second series over the first, but none probably so notable as that of Ald. Sam McBride, manager of the All Stars, who showed his heels to some 70 others, and gets in the money amongst the first ten. Charley Boyd, manager of the Stanleys, is champion, with a mark of nearly 147 in 65 games. "Bill" Steele All Stars, second. with over 141 in 58 battles, while Pres. McKinley, of the Champion Millionaires, nosed into third place with an average of nearly 140 in 64 games, the balance of the league follow in order down to Andrew Dods, Solid Five, in last place, who got the fun if not the pins, and promise to be back looking for more

Superior Values in Men's Summer Suits

There has been a slackening of business in almost all lines this spring, which has affected the woolen industry among others, and as a result we were able this week to land a stack of very fine suitings at a great reduction from the regular price. It has always been the policy of this store to take advantage of just such conditions, and on this occasion we have been unusually fortunate in securing such a fine lot of

Suits Made to Measure, from Imported Materials, perfect fit

There is absolutely no competition on these goods.

They are the quality used by the average tailor, who charges from $18 to $25 for them. Samples of the goods will be found in our windows, and you should see them. If you like you can take away a clipping to compare with what others are offering, just to satisfy yourself of the extraordinary value.

And always remember that we make an individual pattern for each order: the suit is, in other words, specially designed for the man who is to wear it, and possesses that built-in quality characteristic of the best garments. There are both Tweeds and Worsteds, and in every conceivable color and design so that there is ample scope for choice. Let's have your order as soon as you can for the 24th of May.

Billy Gibson wants the match, and wants it bad, but not to the steen of a $15,000 guarantee.

If the Madison Square Garden people were doing business, there would be a chance, but there is not a club in existence now that could accommodate enough people to make the bout attractive from a promoter's viewpoint.

Nor has it. The tango suit is the most startling of the season's model. It is designed to give freedom to the wearer. Just as the thereased width of skirts has met the demands of the modern dance, so has the same influence liberated the wearer of the bathing suit

The trouserettes are straight and cover the snee. The apron drapery is a panel-like attachment that covers the trouserette in the front and back with the freedom on the sides. Soft bathing satin is the preferred material, though there is a new fabric more like crepe which is intended for bathing suits, and is soft and clinging. Moire is used for bathing suits. Having a watered surface, it is particularly adapted for the purpose.

Between the sea suit and the beach suit there is a nice distinction. The beach suit needs no insurance against water-spotting. It has only to withstand the rays of the sun.-

Tunics, panniers and even modified bustles are possible for the beach suit.

HOW IS YOUR BLOOD PRESSURE?

Just Why the Doctor Now Has Mechanical Help in Finding the Exact Conditions Backed by Your Heart -Pump, and Why Insurance Companies Now Find It Important to Know

About These Vital Conditions.

YOW is your blood pressure? That question has a very vital earing on your health, for determining just how the wonderful pumping apparatus, the human heart, is performing its functions is the newest, up-to-date method of diagnosis. By blood pressure is meant the pressure of the blood upon the arteries. The art of measuring it is by no means new, but the improvement of method has the element of wonder in it for the layman. It is astonishing, moreover, that so many years have been permitted to pass before the medical profession in general recognized the value of the process.

The skilled physician knows just what causes high or low pressure, with the exactitude of an expert mechanician: and he knows just in what degree certain ailments affect the pressures. This newly developed perfectly demonstrated that insurance companies, which are always seeking the unfailing and efficient, have come to use it in the examination of

One of these companies has found that of 1247 cases at all ages in which the blood pressure was 150 or over there was a mortality 21/2 times greater than normal. In 891 of these cases there was no other indication of physical defect, and they would have been accepted had it not been for the pressure test. Among the leaders in the investigation of the value of the blood pressure tests for diagnosis and treatment is Dr. Percival Nicholson. who is about to publish an exhaustive the minds of those who look at things from a logical and rational point of view that the one primary and important result of the higher education and freedom of the modern woman will be to establish motherhood on an entirely different basis to that on which it has stood hitherto. Instead of being regarded as merely a natural function requiring neither brains nor any particular ducation to achieve and carry out, it is developing into the vital sum of a woman's existence, and one that needs preparation and education to do justice to The world is coming to realise by slow and painful stages that a girl or a woman is not less pure because she understands her own anatomy and the anatomy of her child; we know now that ignorance does not spell innocence, and that the essential laws regulating the welfare of the human race can be taught to children in such a way that they

The "little mothers'" classes, besides training the children in hygiene and right living, have also another benefit to the community. The mothers of the pupils are invited to attend the classes, and while ostensibly watching the children they obtain on their own behalf ideas and knowledge which might otherwise never reach them, and they are thereby the more ready to allow the children to practice their teaching in their own homes. Moreover, the babies who come to the classes are infants belonging to some of the very poorest of the city's residents. babies from the slums and the tenements, offspring of illiterate and untaught people from Central Europe, and, incidentally, while the nurse is

During the forthcoming su Miss Paul and her assistants hope to do much towards reducing the terrible wastage of infant life which so prevalent in Toronto in the hot weather. Each pupil on joining the Little Mothers' class is given the name of the dispensary, the milk depot and relief station in her district in order that she may be able to report immediately any cases needing attention. A large number of bables will be practically cared for and watched by the nurse and the classes, and in every possible way the work will be extended and turned to practical good.

The class instruction is entirely oral and by demonstration, but each child is obliged to take notes of the lectures and a prize is offered at the show the best and most complete set of notes. An entire set of baby clothes must also be made by hand by each pupil, and wonderfully neat and painstaking is some of the work put into the dainty flannel and linen garments which are cut from the most scientific patterns and combine the maximum of warmth and protection with the minimum of weight

Pigs were the only scavengers we had, and if it hadn't been for them I think we would have had more cholera than we did have. There was no medical health officer to look after the water and the milk, and I mind when my father went to the well one day to draw some water he found some hairs in the pail. MORAL—DON'T STEAL.

I put in two very embarrassing hours one evening last summer while taking two young ladies and a boy chum for a ride in my launch. As we were passing a peach farm, we decided to see if we could steal a few way.

Spying a step ladder, I lugged it to our door and then proceeded to mount it. Just as I was nearing safety, who should put in an appearance but my employer. You can imagine my embarrassing moment was when I had to manner of entering the office?"

When I was about 10 I was sent home from school one day for being saucy. My teacher called to tell of my misdemeanor, and my most embarrassing moment was when I had to entertain her until my mother could see her. We talked about the weather.

One day the teacher handed me a crayon pencil and showed me what to write on the blackboard. Leaving me she attended to the other children. When she returned I was still standing where she had left me, and had not written a thing. When asked why I did not write I answered: "My grandma told me never to write on the wall." Of course the teacher and children laughed heartily, and that was a very embarrassing moment for me. L. M.

Adele Blood, Thru Sunday World, Offers $1,000 Prize for Play

Leading Woman of Shea's Theatre Summer Stock Company Makes Offer to Canadian Writers—Winning Play Will Be Produced in Toronto at End of June.

WILL OBSERVE ALL AUTH OR'S RIGHTS WANTS NEW STARRING VEHICLE

ISS ADELE BLOOD, the famous dramatic star, who has been particularly successful for the past three years as the feature of "Everywoman," will head a stock company, which opens at Shea's Theatre on May 25. Miss Blood is planning several important projects for her season in Toronto; the chief one is the offer, thru The Sunday World, of one thousand dollars to any Canadian who will submit a play in which she can star, and which possesses sufficient merit to prove victorious over the other contestants. There are few conditions concerning the contest, beyond that it is limited to Canadians, and that it must be free from any unpleasant theme. Vice plays, or those dealing with the whiteslave problem, will not be considered, neither will any play be eligible which attacks any religious sect. The winning play, of necessity, will be clean, and will glorify the higher forms of thought and action, as will all the recognized plays to be produced by Miss Blood during her forthcoming season at Shea's.

"My ideas concerning the contest are three-fold," said Miss Blood to The Sunday World. "First, and most important of all, is that at the present time there are few authors of note writing for the theatre who claim Canada as their homes. I hope to acquire the honor of 'discovering' such an author."

In her endeavor, Miss Blood offers her money as an incentive; she promises to invest the play with all the ability at her command.

As she is bringing to Toronto an exceptionally efficient company, she guarantees a thoro production, whether the writer possesses any literary fame or not, and if the author writes a play as Miss Blood will present it, it will prove the making of a reputation for him. Miss Blood will find satisfaction in the fact that she has been the means of bringing new distinction to Canadian drama. Secondly, Miss Blood wants a new starring vehicle, and if the winning play is what she anticipates, she will utilize it during the coming season, and will gladly pay generous royalties for its use. Her third idea is to convince the residents of Toronto that she intends to give them the best plays that are possible to secure.

The contest will close June 15, and the winning play will be produced the week of June 29. Every right of an author will be scrupulously observed, and Miss Blood offers her personal service in making it a success in every way. Miss Blood is justly reckoned as one of the most beautiful women and accomplished actresses in America. Her physical charms are exceptional, and her mental powers are unusually brilliant. In all ways, she is a remarkable specimen of modern femininity—and, with this wealth of natural advantages, Miss Blood should succeed in her quest to unearth from its hiding place a play, written by a Canadian first presented in Canada, to an audience of Canadians, and then offer it broadcast in such a manner as to bring financial returns and fame to

The current version is by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes. It reveals life as it is encountered at the present in social and financial circles of the twentieth century in New York City.

This is the first time that an all-star cast has been assembled in one great organization to present a modern play upon the stage, and it is typical of our times that the undertaking has proven an overwhelming success. First of all, the play is good because it is a wonderfully human story told in the style of two of the best of modern dramatists, and is therefore provided with dialog suitable to its action. Mr. W. J. The demonstrations have proved of great educational value to students and art lovers, alike, and it is with regret that the many Torontonians, who have flocked to the art gallery at the Grange, realize that this very successful exhibition is closed.

At the recent dinner of the Royal Academy in London, England Prince Arthur of Connaught, in responding to a toast, expressed his pleasure at the high standing of British art, and his strong disapproval of the futurist in art. He thought it would be better, he said, for some of the new schools to follow more closely in the footsteps of the great masters of old than to indulge in fantastic vagaries such as are ocasionally seen in modern exhibitions. He hoped further that the sound sense of the academy would keep the rank and file of the artists from indulging in artistic license to an extreme.

That there is a great deal of romance in art dealing is a well known fact, but there is hardly an art dealer in the world who has been possessed of such an establishment so closely connected with artistic romance as Mr. John Lewis Rutley, whose collection of pictures has just been sold at Christie's in London, and who is leaving his historic house at No. 5 Great Newport street, W. C., where the trade in old masters was started by his grandfather, who followed Sir Joshua Reynolds in his occupation of the house. Rutley's was one of the best known establishments of picture dealers in London. The house which has such interesting occupants, was built in the reign of Charles I. It was then in a country district and surrounded by trees and garden, but the first Mr. Rutley extended his galleries over the garden where Sir Joshua used to gather his friends together. The latter lived in the house from 1753 to 1780. As far back as 1815 the name of Rutley is found as a purchaser of Rembrant's picture of Damocrates. The present owner of the name has witnessed the advent of German, American and other competition, which has greatly increased the value of the old masters.

The Most Exciting Moment of My Life Was When---

Have you ever had an exciting experience that you could relate? One that lives in your memory and could be put on paper in a few words?

It may have been the happiest or saddest moment of your life, but if it was really the most exciting, the most thrilling, hairraising moment, write about it and send your letter to the Excitement column of The Sunday World. If your letter is printed you will receive one dollar. Write on one side of the paper. Enclose your full name and address, the not necessarily for publication.

W. R. B.

And 'Twas Only a Stump.

The most exciting moment in my life occurred one summer in a lonely spot on Lake Simcoe. My parents had to go to the next town on an important errand, expecting to be back before dark.

My sister, aged ten, and myself, fourteen, were left alone at the cottage. Nine o'clock (p. m.) came and no sign of our parents. At ten-thirty we came to the conclusion that they had missed the train, and we rather nervously prepared for bed, but, try as we would, we could not sleep. The long hours dragged on until, unable to bear the mysterious noises and creakings which come with the dark, my sister went to the window.

It was bright moonlight. In a moment I heard a terrified whisper. "M—come here!" My heart beating a tattoo against my breast, I sprang from bed. She clutched my hand and pointed to a bent object a few yards from the cottage. My horrified gaze followed the direction and there, in a creeping position, was the shape of a man, club in hand. Every muscle constricted, we stood there, unable to speak. Why did he not move? What crime was he planning? At last, to our aroused imaginations, he appeared to move a step nearer. My sister gave a terrified scream and threw herself into my arms. Almost fainting with fright at the startling scream in the quiet, my throat dry and parched, I, in An Adventure in Rhodesia.

Four years ago this month I was one of a party treking northwards thru the wilds of Rhodesia. To carry our baggage we used pack-donkeys and one evening we were dismayed to find that our only kettle had fallen from its fastenings and as without it we could not make coffee or cook a wild fowl our plight was real indeed. Next morning it fell to my let to retrace our ing it fell to my lot to retrace our previous day's march until I found the previous day's march until I found the kettle. I found it well on in the day near our starting point and before I again reached camp the shades of night were falling. Knowing that lions were in the neighborhood I resolved to spend the dark hours perched as far as possible up a tree but thought it advisable to rest as long as I dare at the foot of a tree. Whilst thus engaged I heard a rustle in the bushes about 50 yards distant and noiselessly looking up I was horrified to see a huge lion walking stealthily in my direction. Taken thus unawares, I had neither time nor courawares, I had neither time nor courage to shoulder my rife, so decided to remain perfectly still, squatted on my haunches in the vague hope that Mr. Lion would pass me by. Each step drew a fresh flow of cold perspiration to my head until shout 10 yards disdrew a fresh flow of cold perspiration to my head until—about 10 yards distant, he stopped and sniffed the air. Had he scented me and was he gloating over an easy prey? What passed thru my brain during those awful moments can better be imagined than described.

Annie Russell in "The Lady in Case" Princess, May 18th

American Comedy, With Delightful Vein of Romance, Will Be Seen in Toronto.

Annie Russell has laid aside the annier, the courtly ceremonial, the day of the stage coach and pewter tankard, the brilliant wit of the eight-eenth century dramatists, and for a brief spring period, will devote herself to romance and comedy in a modern setting. Monday, May 18, Miss Russell will bring to the Princess Theatre for a week's engagement a new, modern, romantic comedy, by Paul Kester, entitled "The Lady in the Case." The production of a modern comedy by an American author is in fulfillment of Miss Russell's announced policy to acquire a comedy repertoire of wide range. In her next season's work she plans incursions to that dramatic field which these outposts of modern and classical comedy have marked. In "The Lady in the Case" Annie Russell returns to that kind of parts, known as "Annie Russell roles," in which she gained her early popularity. Her art having broadened since that period, and her position as actress and producer being more firmly established on artistic standards, she returns to modern comedy in sort of a gay, holiday spirit.

"The Lady in the Case" is a comedy in which a fantastic angle is introduced into the divorce question. A remnant of an old Southern family of

A remnant of an old Southern family of Southern tradition—a young woman, an aunt, and a male cousin—come to New York, to mend their very depleted family fortune. The young woman has found employment as a chorus girl, but her Southern code of morals and spoken candor result in her prompt discharge, while the noble revolutionary ancestry fails to stimulate the legal practice of the young lawyercousin. A wealthy New Yorker, who seeks matrimonial freedom, but with no legal grounds for action, and having firm moral conscience and standards, comes to his impecunious legal friend, and innocently asks him to engage a "professional correspondent," who, for a monetary consideration, will supply the necessary legal evidence for divorce without involving who, for a monetary consideration, will supply the necessary legal evidence for divorce, without involving either party in moral turpitude. He is roundly denounced by the lawyer for the suggestion, but Cousin Emily and Aunt Maria, who have overheard the proposal, throw aside convention, and, desperately in need of money, Emily enters into the arrangement with a firm understanding that there will not only be no moral lapse, but not the Tender, sympathetic, modest, retiring—she is an actress because of necessity, not because she enjoys the excitement and shallow rewards of the life. A score of small, unobtrusive charities—kindnesses, she would call them—have endeared her to the rank and file of Lubin workers. They cannot be enumerated, but to those familiar with life in the average studio there comes to mind cases where a pair of warm gloves, a lift in one's motor to an old lady, or a doctor sent hurriedly to someone in dis-tress would have been a Godsend. GARAGE FIRES.

We have had three or four cases called to our attention recently, where parties were pouring gasoline from their measures thru chamois-lined funnels into their automobiles, or filling automobiles from their storage tank thru a rubber hose with a metal, anti-drip nozzle, and without any warning, and apparently without any cause, the naphtha burst into flames.

A recent case which happened at the garage of the Metropolitan Park Commission was called to the attention of the state police, who investigated the occurrence. The writer was present at the investigation, and it was proven by the use of an electroscope, that there was no electricity in the measure, funnel, or in the receptacle before the gasoline was poured, but, during the pouring of the gasoline thru a chamois-lined funnel to the container, the evidence of electricity was detected, and a spark was made at the edge of the funnel when the measure came in contact with same. This spark was visible to evthe measure came in contact with same. This spark was visible to everyone present, and a slight snapping noise accompanying the spark was also heard.

A metal funnel, with a gauze pyramid strainer, was then substituted, and only a very slight trace of electricity was detected, and no spark was made. Another experiment was tried, in which the receptacle was grounded by connecting with a wire to a steam pipe, and no evidence of electricity was discovered, in that case the electricity having been apparently dissipated thru the ground as fast as it was generated.

The theory advanced by the state officials who made the test was that the passage of gasoline, a non-conducting body, thru the chamois, another non-conducting body, generated static electricity with the generated

The Value of Narrow Tread in Cyclecars

A Motor Mystery

Silent Studebaker's Startling Stunt

In the crisp cold of a spring morning, a car inspector was passing down the long line of a solid trainload of automobiles about to leave the Detroit yards for the Pacific coast. It was just before dawn. All the night sounds of the city had been sushed; the day sounds had not yet

The inspector stood for a moment, bending close to a car to decipher its number. He straightened up with a puzzled look on his face, and called to a companion, several cars distant. "Come here, Bill, and listen," he oried: "I'm a goat if one of these here automobiles ain't running!"

Together the two put their ears close to the car. Both heard the muffled beat of a gasoline motor,

Children and Roller Skates

The increasing use of roller skates by the children of this city has given rise to a new traffic problem, which must be handled immediately. It was bad enough when children playing on the streets were in the habit of dashing out into the middle of the road without looking to right or left, and it was only the quickness of the motor drivers and the ease of control of the modern motorcar that prevented numerous accidents. With the revival of roller skating, the situation has become ten times more acute. A child running into the street is at least able to govern his own movements to some extent, but a child on roller skates, nine times out of ten, can neither stop himself nor turn; any attempt to do so usually means a fatal fall in the path of the approaching vehicle which he has tried to avoid. No motor driver, no matter how skilled or alert, can avoid a child on roller skates, who suddenly dashes out from a side street at lightning speed in front of his car.

Any motorist would rather smash his machine than injure a child; apart from the deep mental anguish which such an accident would cause the driver, there is the indisputable fact that, in the case of an accident to a child by a motorcar, the tendency is always to blame the motorist, and the onus of proving that he was not negligent is on him. An incident occurred recently in Chicago, where a truck driver in charge of a five-ton truck ran over a child, who suddenly darted in front of his vehicle. Altho the accident was absolutely unavoidable, the unfortunate man was jailed for six months, and his wife and family put to great suffering and privation in consequence. Taking these facts into consideration, it seems to be time that the motorist, who has been discriminated against by legislation. should be, in his turn, given some protection. The strain of driving a car in Toronto streets, where children are constantly roller skating. is very severe. The motorist is a law-abiding citizen in charge of a legitimate and easily-controlled vehicle. He should not be put in the position of a child-killer by the fact that irresponsible babies are allowed to shoot about the streets on skates, which they have neither the wisdom nor the ability to guide.

The police have done well in improving the street conditions in this city, but the above is a problem vitally connected with traffic to which they must at once turn their attention.

It is perfectly true that children must have some place to play, but, on the other hand, the streets are primarily for traffic, and those whe use them for their legitimate purposes must be given consideration.

More than 60.000 automobiles were shipped by the makers of America in March according to Affred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, who has returned to New York late last week from a trip to the great automobile centres of the country, during March according to Affred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, who has returned to New York late last week from a trip to the great automobile centres of the country, during which he visited 41 automobile making plants. To ship this number of cars required 13,510 freight cars, according to the figures carefully compiled from accurate checking methods by the Detroit office of the chamber of commerce. For April it is figured that 14,000 freight cars will be required. Mr. Reeves reported the business as a row tread is very short, and little momentum of the car is lost to be restored by motor power, and nearly all the power is exerted in forward direction.

The above facts, together with the narrow front, which means practically no wind resistance, enable the cyclecar to run great distances on a gallon of gasolene, all of which makes the upkeep of a cyclecar a small fraction of what an automobile costs.

Eighteen plants in some way or anther connected with the automobile are named in an article covering the notor building activities of Windsor, Walkerville, Ford, Sandwich, and Ojibway, published in the last issue of Automobile, and written by L. V. Spencer. These plants employ a total of 3535 men, and the largest is of course, the Ford plant, employing 1800 men. Six of the plants manufacture automobiles, and of these two make trucks and one electric cars. The others are parts and accessory manufacturing plants.

A schedule of 20 miles per hour during the day, and eighteen hours an alght, has been set by the Chicago Automobile Club for the C self off them. Will any patriotic Canadian admit that Canada is not scenically twenty Switzerlands rolled into one? But not even the handful of enthusiasts who kow-tow to that lone, white sign post and a dotted black line across the map, have visualised the possible influx of tourists, the swollen treasury, the eager crowds of settlers and industrials who would flock along an imperial highway. In their wildest dreams they hardly catch a glimpse of the road of pleasure, the longest and most consistently scenic in the world, of the trans-continental motorists and big game hunters; and of the inns and resorts that would spring up like mushrooms evwould spring up like mushrooms ev

"They call that a five-passenger car! Just measure the width of that seat. Thirty-six inches! Fancy three people seated 'comfortably' on twelve inches apiece. Ridiculous! I wouldn't have a chair in my house less than 16 inches wide. The railroad wouldn't dare build car seats less than 30 inches. Yet here's a car cost me several thousand dollars that allows me exactly 12 inches room.

"The next car I buy is going to be bought for comfort. I'll take its maker's name as a guarantee mechanically. But I'm going to measure the seat. And the car I buy will have a tonneau seat four feet wide. And then, believe me, it will be a five-passenger car—with comfort for all."

Are Enormous:

Bluntly—because no car on the market reveals equal value. Because, for instance, no other car in the world at this price has a full floating rear axle equipped even to the hubs with Timken bearings.

Because this axle could not be made better, no matter how much we were willing to spend, or you were willing to pay.

The same thing is true of Studebaker-Wagner starting and lighting—the cars of highest cost may show its equal-but they cannot show its superior.

The same thing is true of the proportion of parts actually manufactured in the parent plant—the costliest may make as good a showing, but none of them can show more. The same thing is true of the accuracy of the processes which enter into the manufacturing—they may be equalled in the costliest cars, but they are not surpassed. We repeat, with added emphasis—the sales of this $1375 FOUR are enormous becaue

It is a well-known fact that business in all lines has not been good this spring, and the wall paper business is no exception.

Taking as a basis the business we did last spring, we bought heavily from the manufacturers for this year's business, and owing to conditions being as they are we find ourselves heavily overstocked.

We know that nothing will reduce a stock but radically reduced prices, so we have simply marked our wall papers down to a price that no one who really wants to decorate can afford to overlook.

Space will not permit us to mention all the lines, so we are giving here a few examples.

Toronto Jail Conditions

Toronto's city fathers got a bad jolt from Dr. Bruce Smith, when he condemned its jail as nothing better than a nuisance and a firetrap. This is no new condemnation, as the jail has frequently figured in the reports of grand juries and never creditably.

Even the outspoken denunciation of Dr. Bruce Smith, would in all likelihood, have passed unheeded but for the dire recommendation that the government grant should be withdrawn at once and nothing paid until proper accommodation is provided. Coming as this did, right on the heels of the outbreak among the women prisoners against the disgraceful lack of privacy attending the or-deal of search, to which they are compelled to submit, the council was at last moved to action if only to thrust responsibility back on the shoulders of the controllers. What must have struck the ordinary citizen, thruout the numerous and varied exposures of city departments, is the lack of real official sense of responsibility and of even rudimentary discipline. There has been neither delimitation of duty nor insistence on its fulfilment, and the results have been humiliating to the city and fraught with menace in the continuous residence within the Empire, the last of which must be passed in the state where he is finally naturalized, the certificate issued by the Secretary of State of the mother country or of the particular Dominion, will be accepted wherever the flag flies. That is as it should be, and altho too long delayed is none the less welcome. The solution that has been found will not interfere with local regulations regarding the period of residence required before the power of voting is conferred, but will enable any alien, so recognized, to attain the full status of a British citizen on the completion of his full five years' residence. Migration from one part of the Empire to another will not interfere with the potential right of an alien to take out his naturalization papers, and leaves each British state free to impose its own procedure. In Canada, the power will remain as heretofore, with the courts, and possession of the necessary requirements, as certified by the judges, will warrant the issue of the certificate by th Dominion Secretary of State.

Panama Pacific Exposition

Notwithstanding the repeated refusal of the British government to withdraw from her decision not to be represented at the San Francisco Panama Exposition, there is now a good prospect that it will be officially recognized. Mr. Asquith received a special Imperial pavilion which will serve as a rallying point for British citizens from all parts of the Empire. The deputation that waited upon him with the request, was exceptionally representative, all four political parties having spokesmen present, who urged that the wishes of the United States should be met and any ground of suspicion removed. In this the deputation will have the support of the British Dominions, to whom the Panama Canal is possibly of more importance than it appears to be in the eyes of the motherland.

tion as a career of dignity. More than a hundred years ago, the great Napoleon sneered at England, as "a nation of shopkeepers." Even if the jibe had been truer than it happened to be, it is undoubted that the tradesman, the shopkeeper and the artizan, have not only been without honor, but were, and are, to some extent, still regarded as inferior in status to the office worker. His employment is reckoned to be "genteel," the word so offensive to Carlyle, the preacher of the dignity of labor. Over in Scotland, an Optimist Club has been established, and includes a number of the foremost business men in the country. At a recent dinner, the guest of honor, Mr. H. E. Morgan, controller of W. H. Smith & Sons, London, one of the largest newspaper and book agencies in Britain, strongly approved the proposal to have in the University of Edinburgh, a degree or diploma for business. It should be given, he considered, for something more than purely scholastic attainments. Dr. Scougal, late inspector of schools, expressed the view that Scottish educational aims and ideals, had been badly spoiled by clinging to old traditions. Education has largely meant simply something that was going to make a cleric or a clerk. But many other lines of occupation were just as much to be admired and respected for their use to the community and their benefit to the nation.

Mexico's Triangular Duel

Something of Gilbertian humor attends the situation in Mexico, particularly in its latest phases. Huerta has consented to accept the good offices of Argentina, Brazil and Chile, upon whose representatives will devolve the task of eliminating him from the dictatorship. Carranza has made a point that the United States should have recognized him as de facto President, and called upon him for satisfaction, and redress of grievances. Villa has thrown over his nominal chief, and is pursuing his own course, and the only view possible is that each of the three Mexican gladiators is, like "Hal o' the Wynd," fighting for his own hand. If this be so it does not hold out an over bright prospect of a peaceful settlement, unless, indeed, the Dictator is convinced that in any case his term will be brief, and that he had better retire on terms, than be kicked out without compensation.

AN OFF DAY IN CAMP

Law Reform and Public Lawyers

In the current number of Pearson's Magazine, Joseph G. Donnelly, Chief Judge of the Civil Court of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, puts up a strong plea for the establishment of public lawyers. His text is, the evil of the laws delays, and he introduces his article by quoting from an address of a United States Supreme Court Judge, who remarked: "Our laws are inadequate. They do not satisfy the popular conception of equal justice. The people clamor against the law, its delays, its discriminations, its inconsistencies -and with much reason. Something will happen. Unless judges will act, the people will act. If they do not resort to the recall, they will revise the constitution. They will create new courts -courts to do rough justice-courts to do summary justice-courts close to the common people, courts without technicalities, sophistries and delays, where substantial right prevails."

Judge Donnelly scathingly condemns the system of law and justice in the United States. Rather than run the gauntlet of litigation, many submit to loss and extortion. "Continuations without cause, appeals without merit, reversals without reason," he writes' "are the ready resource of the rich; they are beyond the reach of the poor." The poor litigant, however good his case, is subjected to interminable delays, and "even if he finally prevails, victory is necessarily incomplete. For delay of justice is denial of justice." The causes of this evil in the United States are various. One is the complex procedure, and another, the complex system of courts ranging from high to low, from superior to inferior. Judge Donnelly maintains that this is wrong in principle, that justice should have no distinctions-no grades-no varieties. He remarks with the emphasis of capital letters that: "It takes as much brains, and heart, and conscience, as much learning, and intellect, and virtue, to decide rightly on the case involving the day's wage of a common laborer, as to decide a case involving the year's graft of a cap-

His first remedy is doing away with the complex system of courts, and its replacement by one court of general jurisdiction over all cases legal and equitable, civil and criminal, with judges enough to do the work, and an appellate branch or branches to pass promptly on appeals. This, he holds, "would end the cry ever raised, and always growing louder, that there is one court for the rich and another for the poor. All alike would enter the same high type of court. All would have the same high-class of judges, all would have the same immediate and inexpensive right of appeal. None could complain of discrimination." But provision would have to be made for thoro supervision of the judges by a chief or presiding judge, vested with full power, not only to supervise, but to direct, and, if necessary,

If this were done, however, it would still be inadequate in the opinion of Judge Donnelly.

Miscarriages of justices cannot, he holds, be materially abated, while there exists a system of commercialized lawyers. Even the lawyer of character, once in court and pitted against an adversary who is his match on the other, plays the game for all it's worth. He does his duty to his client even if he fails in his duty to the public. Judge Donnelly, after his thirty-one years' experience, is convinced that the commercialized lawyer is the greatest evil in the body politic of the United States.

The Entente Cordiale

From the contemporary accounts of the official visit of the King and Queen to the French capital it is evident that the entente cordiale between the United Kingdom and the French Republic represents much more than a diplomatic agreement. Far more truly could it be described as the visible consequence of a sentiment which had long been maturing among the masses of each nation. With the hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo on the eighteenth of June of the current year, will also come a centenary of peace between these ancient and traditional enemies a far more honorable record than that of the hundred years of warreally even more—to which the pages of history bear record. During its course occasions have arisen and been darkened by the fear of war. They passed and, like the battles of land and sea of preceding generations, have ceased to have other than historic interest.

The existing good fellowship between France and Britain can be attributed in large measure to the personality of the late King Edward VII. Frenchmen are always ready to respond to what they feel to be appreciation rendered with sincerity and without an arriere pensee. That tribute King Edward gave and it appealed to the French imagination with peculiar force. He loved Paris, its beauty and its gaiety and Paris responded. And what Paris thinks today France will think tomorrow. In no other way could the thousands on thousands have poured into the capital from every department of France to welcome and acclaim our King and Queen.

The entente cordiale has proved itself to be essentially a compact of peace in a wider sense than that which restricts it to the two nations. It rests on no formal treaty of alliance, but on that essential unity of policy and interest which renders written instruments not only unnecessary, but inexpedient. Mutual support yielded not from obligation, but from the consciousness of genuine accord, is not only more reliable in itself, but more impressive to the world. Artificial alliances have often been the heralds of aggression, but the entente cordiale is not aggressive. The co-operation of France and Britain and the confidence displayed by Germany in British good faith enabled the Balkan war to be confined to its immediate area. There may be other dangers ahead, but much has been done to further the cause of peace during that strenuous and dangerous crisis in European

FIVE YEARS TO FIND OUT. erriage on a Business Basis Takes the Principals Five Years to Learn That There is a Better

ECILIA HAMILTON and Heathcote, St John were both quite frank about it. She wouldn't have thought of marrying him had it not been that she were the much-cramped-up daughter of a poor country parson; while he, altho he recognized her desirability as an attractive-looking woman to preside over his household, admitted that, had it not been for Uncle Jeremy's insistence he would have preferred independent hachelorhood. But Uncle Jerry, whom Heathcote had never seen, had provided him with a very comfortable income up till now, and when Uncle Jerry made up his mind that double harness was a necessary condition of a continuance of the income—well, of course, what could the poor chap do?

The only wonder is that they didn't oould the poor chap do?

The only wonder is that they didn't "find it out" much quicker than in five years. But, no, Heathcote had his clubs and Cecifia had her teas and speciety functions, and the business arrangement that each was to be free in these respective circles of devotion seemed to work very well. It was, however, a serious matter for young master Archibald St. John. Somehow or other when he arrived there seemed to be no proper place to fit him into the family on the "business marriage" plan. And, altho he managed to exist in the business household for a few years without seriously disarranging matters, there gradually crept in an uneasiness that culminated in unpleasantness when it was discovered that ters, there gradually crept in an uneasiness that culminated in unpleasantness when it was discovered that Uncle Jerry's money had been lost in an unfortunate investment, and that there was nothing left to sustain the marriage corporation which had been started and maintained by Uncle Jerry's money. The tangle that arises and the complications made by the author's introduction of some near-love-affairs concerning the principals of the corporation make a fairly amusing buriesque.
Uncle Jerry hovers about in the background disguised now as a beneficent goblin, and now as a secondhand dealer's agent, and you don't feel that anybody is going to be hurt very badly, and you really can't help laughing when Heathcote takes to cab-driving. One might get the idea that the author was trying to bring home some old-fashioned moral lesson about love as an essential to happiness in marriage, but he really sugarcoats his pili so thickly that I question if the realpill part will have much effect on any reader. But if you are looking for something to reverse the any reader. But if you are look-ing for something to reverse the care-line with, you may easily go farther and fare worse. ("Five Years to Find Out." by I. A. R. Wylle: McLeed & Allen.)

THE STORY OF PHAEDRUS. Legendary Tale of the Days of Early Christianity Among the Romans.

Newell Dwight Hillis is a sig-nificant event in diterary cir-cles not only because of the author's position as paster of Ply-mouth Congregational Church of Brooklyn, which is at once a guarantee of permanent value, but also because charming and felicitous writer the he is, new volumes with writer the he is, new volumes with his name on the title page are issued only very rarely. This fact the many admirers of "The Quest of Happiness," "The Quest of John Chapman," "The Influence of Christin Modern Life," have deeply regretted in the past and this regret will be even more poignant after a reading of "The Story of Phaedrus." This little work with its many attractive decorations in color is, pertractive decorations in color is, perhaps, the most important of all of Dr. Hillis' writings. Coming after a number of years of silence, it resents the very best of his thought

"The Story of Phaedrus" is a blending of fiction, legend and his-tory. It may be read by the habitual novel reader, the student of old times and the religious scholar with equal pleasure. Phaedrus is a literary slave who, in the days when Christianity was young, comes under the influence of its teachings and undergoes a wonderful conversion. What this conversion brings with it and the labor which it imposes—which ultimately becomes a labor of love—is told by Dr. Hillis with a wealth of incident of incident and imagination. The tale serves to make clear as never before the scenes and people of that age when a religion destined to sweep the world was shaping itself-"The Story of Phaedrus" is not an argument for any theological doctrine; it is not a dry unenlightened historical survey of the past; it is not an homily nor a devotional exercise. It is, rather, a dramatic, thoroly alive, absorbingly interesting and most unaugal and most unusual narrative with characters that are intensely human figuring in the action. VICTORY LAW.

In the Struggle Between Love of Art and Love of Husband, Which Will Win?

WHEN an actress weds—more particularly when she weds, particularly when she weds, not an actor, but a man of prominence in public life, or position in social life—why is it, we ask, that she almost invariably remains on, or returns to the stage? An actress life is a hard one, we are told A life of confusion—of tearing from place to place—of broken hours—of hastily snatched meals. And yet when all this chaos can give place to luxuries, ease and domestic quies, why is it that the actress wife decrease. why is it that the actress wife does not seem to desire, or even to consider the exchange?

If you would have an illuminating and convincing answer to this question then read Anne Warwick's latest book, "Victory Law." The authoress has handled her subject well, and has given us a book that is interesting from source that resting from cover to cover—not eathlessly interesting, perhaps, it interesting nevertheless, because we keep wondering which of the two great loves in Victory's life—the love of husband, or the love of her art, —will ultimately come out the victor. True, each of them is so vitally a part of her that we cannot see how either can be strangled without wretchedly maiming the life that seems no possible compromise. To strangles it. And yet to us there Victory and her husband too, no compromise seemed possible, until blunderings and misunderstandings and heartaches eventually cleared their vision.

Of the characters in the book, Victory herself, we feel, has been well drawn. Even in those painful "domestic scenes" she is ever the woman of poise and dignity we expect her to be, and above all else she is sweet and womanly. Her husband, too, we consider generous and reasonable under decidedly difficult circumstances. But Gilbert Karr, Victory's former leading man, with his Fulstaff power of paralyzing or inspiring her genius, is rather a puzzle to us. Once or twice we thought we had proof, of his utter villainy, but he has such a clever and convincing way of explaining that we had shamefully to confess that we must be wrong after all. Still, this may be the truest-to-nature touch in the whole book, for now that we come to think of it, we have an uneasy suspicion that all of old Adam's sons have rather an amazing talent for "explaining." THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD.
Origin of Man, His Customs, His

Today.

F we cannot get back to the beginnings of things, we at least try to go as far as we can. The origin of mankind will alway be a subject of keenest interest to the child and in putting before him in simple language the story of man's early days as if it were "The Childhood of the World," (Macmillan Co.) the author, Edward Clodd, makes a strong bid for the attention of young readers. Older persons who have readers. Older persons who have not done much reading on this subject will find the book a very good one to begin with. Under the larger division of "Man, the Worker," the author deals with the origin and descent of man, his great age on the earth, the wanderings of the early races, man's first attempts at toolmaking, establishing shelter, and the like. Then he goes on to show the origin of language, writing, counting, music, games. The next division treats of "Man, the Thinker," and relates his early beliefs and superstitions, nature-worship and myths, beliefs in many gods, belief in one God and some account of great religious teachers and sacred books. The conclusion deals with "Man, the Discoverer and Inventor," and traces briefly the progress of science from the earliest times up to the present day. The book has the merit of simplicity, brevity and

SHERLOCK HOLMES COMING TO CANADA.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle to Write a Book on the Dominion.

From a Staff Correspondent. LONDON, May 9.—Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and Lady Doyle leave for Canada next month, and will spend the summer in a tour over the greater part of the Dominion. It is some years since this famous writer visited North America, and his travels then were for the most part in the far north. He has very decided views on Canada as a country for the Briton, which are not altogether shared by that other writer of adventurous fiction, Sir Rider Haggard, and he intends, I understand, to convey his views in a volume, and to give us a rousing-Canadian book dealing with things as they are. It is all to the good that such a keen observer and trenchant writer should devote his pen to Canada; the books on the Dominion by English writers, are mostly written from a limited point of view, and are weefully anaemic.

Much was expected from the visit of Rudyard Kipling, to Canada, but the chief result was the chief resu the chief result was the christening of Medicine Hat as "the town with all hell for a basement"; a well-in-formed and well-balanced book on Canada by an English writer has yet to be written. Such a book is much needed. Not all the printed works of the Canadian government can be so effective as a book by a master. Even in England the charm of the life, and the customs of Devonshire and the western countries were largely unknown until Blackmore with "Lorna Doone," and Quiller-Couch with his books revealed them.

The chariot stopped where I stood. Thy glance fell on me, and thou camest down with a smile. I felt that the luck of my life had come at last. Then of a sudden thou didst hold out thy right, hand and say, "What hast thou to give to me?"

Ah, what a kingly jest was it to open thy palm to a beggar to beg! I was confused and stood undecided, and then from my wallet I slowly took out the least little grain of corn and gave it to thee.

But how great my surprise when at the day's end I emptied my bag on the floor to find a least little grain of gold among the poor heap. I bitterly wept, and wished that I had had the heart to give thee my all.

THE GARDEN COMPETITION.

Prize-Winning Answer-N THIS poem Tagore expresses THIS poem Tagore expresses the fact that thru our own experiences we may understand and appreciate the experiences of all others. Even the a century has passed the beauty of nature remains the same and belongs to the eyes that see it.—"Not in nature but in man is all the beauty and worth he sees." So we have only to feel the glories of the spring flowers in our own souls to be instantly in harmony with the poet's joy, and to realize the depth of ecstasy that thrilled his being as he gazed out upon the treasures of spring one hundred years before.

Tagore's poems, means that they give the impression of being the highest development of talent thru all possible methods of education and refinement, and yet, at the same time, the spontaneous cutcome of a perfectly natural gift. Emerson accounts for this: "Only in our spontaneous action are we strong." He also could have meant Tagore, when he said: "A soul whose acts are all regal graceful and pleasant as roses," and "When a man lives with God, his voice shall be as sweet as the murmur of the brook and the rustle of the corn."

This combination of the highest culture and the natural was Wordsworth's message to the world. Browning, too, voices it:
"If you get simple beauty and nought else, . B. YEATS, in speaking of

You get about the best thing God invents"

The first prize this time goes to Miss Allegra Cronk, Pickering, Ont.; second prize, Miss Lereine K. Hoffman, Toronto. A number of excellent replies were received. Contestants should keep in mind the special prize for best series of answers thruout the whole competition. Two more contests will be given after the one announced this week.

The experience with iron ties goes to show that, the the initial cost is considerably greater than that of wooden ties, the longer duration of the former make them most economical in the end. Wooden ties are used where drainage conditions are poor, and where the track is graded up to the level of the ties.

Sir ARTHUR Conen Doylé is likely to pay a visit to America soon. Hayden Church, our London correspondent, recalls an interesting incident in connection with Sir Arthur's previous visit. He writes:

"One thing is fairly certain, this being that before Sir Arthur starts out for America again, he will see to it that he has at least two dresscoats, lest an awkward contretemps. which occurred during his last visit, and about which he told the members of the Institute of Lecturers at their annual dinner, a few nights ago, should befall him again. It led to his being halled by an exclusive.

American audience as a leader of fashion, which he emphatically is fashion, which he emphatically is not, but he dida't relish it for all that. It was at Morristown, N.J., that fashionable town where many New Yorkers live, and Sir Arthur was horrified to discover that he had left his dress-coat behind him.

In despair, he tore the buttons from his blue reefer jackett, tucked the front back, and was pleased to find he passed muster with that.

Two years later he met a lady member of the audience in Egypt, and asked her whether she had noticed his clothes on that occasion.

"Oh, yes," she said, "we all did. We all thought how fashionable you were. We thought you had brought the latest thing from London, a sort of blue tuxedo jacket."

SIR RIDER Haggard's new "Allan Quatermain" story is being published in the "Windsor Magazine." Meanwhile, its author, who is in Pretoria with the Dominions Royal Commission, has just re-visited "Jess's" cottage there, made famous in his well known South African novel. Sir Rider retained, he said, many sad and many happy memories of his previous visit to Pretoria in 1877, and these had come back upon him vividly. Jess's cottage, he found, was now a boarding house, and was up for sale. He hoped it would not be pulled down. So will every one who has read "Jess."

ANDOVER and the Brute," by Frank Norris, just published by Doubleday, Page & Co., has had a remarkable history. Begun when Norris was a tory. Begun when Norris was a student at Harvard, it is probably his first book. The story was too frankly realistic for the eighteen-nineties, and the author put it away. He refused to alter it. "I told them the truth" he wrote in one of his essays, speaking of sincerity as the most necessary virtue of the novel-ist's calling. "Like it or not, I told them the truth." He died without publishing "Vandover." The MS was stored in a warehouse in San Francisco. Then came the earthquake and fire in 1906, and in the confusion the box containing it was lost. It came back to the warehouse finally, but unidentifiable, as some vandal had cut the autograph from the title

In keeping with the dramatic story is the way the MS was recognized. Last summer on of the junior partners of the San Francisco warehouse company picked up the story which had been lying unnoticed ever since 1906. He read a few pages. The vivid terse style struck him. "This must be by Norris!" he exclaimed.

He communicated with Norris' brother, who had supposed the MS lost in the fire. And the book, just published, is the result. The theme is said to be that of Jekyll and Hyde, but worked out in a different way. It is the story of a man's struggle with the brutish impulses of his lower nature—and his gradual decay. It shows, even in Norris' earliest work, the treme ous power of which he was master.

GREAT deal is published these days on the uncertain returns of literature and the difficulties of the struggling author or poet to make both ends meet. It is not often that there comes to light a transaction in which said author argues that he has been overpaid. According to an interview published in The New York Times recently, William Butler Yeats made, such an unusual charge. "The latest distinction attained by Mr. Yeats." to quote from The Times, "is of a kind novel among literary men. He practically said one of his poems was not worth as much as he was awarded for it. A Chicago magazine gave his "The Gray Rock" a prize of two hundred and fifty dollars as being the best poem it had published during the year, whereupon Mr. Yeats promptly sent back two hundred dollars, saying that it ought to go toward encouraging some struggling American poet and that the fifty dollars he retained was sufficient compensation."

"Recessional" was sung recently as a hymn at a fashionable Mayfair wedding. It is not generally known that Kipling gave this poem as a free gift to the empire and the world. When it was published in The Times at the Diamond Jubilee a cheque for $500 in payment was sent to Kipling. He returned it, saying that he would not accept payment for his patriotic poem, "Lest We Forget" is non-copyright, and is open for all the world to print or use.

And in this volume we have a revelation of how such a personality came to be regarded by the people of his time with passionate and—in the case of the peasantry in the west—deathless devotion.

THE BOOK OF THE WEEK GILLESPIE

By J. Macdougal Hay

N THIS AGE of arrant materialism, "Gillespie," by J. Macdougall Hay, comes to point a much-needed lesson. The author has taken his text from Proverbs: "He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house," and thru all the six hundred pages he never swerves from it. He pictures from birth to death the life of a man whose god is money, who does not figure on the stage of the world's financial theatre, nor yet become a multi-millionaire, but who is, none the less, as completely consumed by the grasping greed of the money-grabber. The scene is placed in Brieston, a Scotch fishing village, where the

The scene is placed in Brieston, a Scotch fishing village, where the tang of the salt air seems to permeate everything.

Here we are first introduced to the "Ghost," an old inn, abandoned because of a mysterious murder committed in it. Gillespie's father, a newcomer and one impervious to superstition, bought the inneand took his bride there. Above the door, creaking and rasping in every gust of wind, still hung the old sign—a man's head and a dagger grasped in one hand. Gillespie's mother was a native Highlander, reared on the supernatural and obsessed with the certainty of doom upon her family. To avoid this, Gillespie, the only child doom upon her family. To avoid this, Gillespie, the only child, was trained to the sea. "His tradition was record catches of fish. The only doom the boy feared was loss of gear in a gale. From train. ing, as well as by nature, he became close-fisted. . . At twenty he was a worshipper of things, had his own bankbook, and began to dominate the house."

LONG PURSUING REVENGE IS STORED UP At twenty-five, by threatening to foreclose a mortgage, he caused the death of a farmer named Galbraith. This was the beginning of a long list of victims. His next step was to possess himself of the widow's farm, leaving her almost penniless. Mrs. Galbraith was an educated, contemplative woman, one not to be trampled upon submissively. She plotted revenge; in time she saw both of her great schemes reach their culmination of catastrophe, having the de-great schemes reach their culmination of catastrophe, having the desired effect of piercing Gillespie to the heart, but, alas! also bringing disaster upon innocent heads, including her own.

Gillespie had married, not because he wanted a wife, but for the legacy he would obtain with her. They were an ill-mated pair, he being wholly objective in temperament and she subjective. His whole life was the acquirement of riches, and, when he found his wife unwilling to slave for him, he ignored her, doled out food even, and checkutally persent the glader given to absolutely neglected her. Two sons were born, the elder given to the grandmother to save cost of rearing, later used to save the hire of a man, and finally drowned because of an unsafe boat and scarcity of fuel to run it. The second boy, Eoghan, was like the mother, very subjective in temperament, even to the point of having visions and foretelling events. He was sensitive to the verge of insanity, his home life with a drunken mother and a flinty father was a perpetual irritation and misery. He was clever at school, and given a sympathetic environment, might have become one of the given a sympathetic environment, might have become one of the refining forces for good in the world.

HOUSEHOLD DRUDGE, BUT GUARDIAN ANGEL.

Topsail Janet was also a member of Gillespie's household, Left early a widow, she took to whelk gathering, then tried a little shop, finally reduced to starvation point, she appealed to Gillespie for a job. He was just in need of a drudge, took possession of her small stock of goods and herself, and rendered neither account nor wages. The outwardly uncouth and ignorant, Topsail was of the stuff that celestial spirits are made, and became the guardian angel of the miserable wife and neglected child. From early dawn till late at night she toiled, a veritable slave, but "she was never heard to grumble. Willingness, which was her characteristic, robbed slavery of

By getting them into his debt, he practically owned them, and remained calloused alike to the miseries, heartbreaks and deaths that he caused. But his reckoning came at last. Nemesis, in the shape of his wife's broken whiskey bottle, stabbed him in the foot and caused an agonising death. Not, however, before he had been made to suffer cruelly thru Eoghan's untimely fate, and to realize keenly that in gathering to himself gain he had shut out everything in life that was really worth POWERFUL, INCISIVE, FAITHFULLY REALISTIC NOVEL. This book is one of the strongest novels written today. The author evidently possesses to the full that Celtic temperament for vivid appreciation. With powerful realism—even to the point of disgust—he pictures the sordid life of these people, and, with one or two exceptions, silhouettes all their repulsive mannerisms. His is the very skill needed to impress upon his readers the depth and extent of misery that can be caused by one man selfishly grinding others for his own gain. Truly it would be better "to go, sell all that you have and give to the poor," than to become a second Gilespie, But when an author possesses this wonderful talent be ought to be But when an author possesses this wonderful talent he ought to be fined for using it to describe such a gruesome thing as having ones throat cut. He could only imagine it all, and why not have the mercy to let his readers do their own imagining? And then, in the midst of all the sordidness, comes a chapter of scenic descriptions painted as only an author with a passion for the artistic could paint them. The whole book is incisive, rich in unusual epithet and metaphor-a high order of literary value.-(McClelland, Goodchild & Stewart, publishers.

EW MEN, even the most distinguished as Argon, Helium, Neon, Xenon, tingushed as chemists and phylicists, have discovered even one element among the seventy or more of which the world is made, To discover even one of the elements is enough to make a name and reputation. What then shall one say of the man who has discovered whole five mentioned-Sir William Ramsay?

In 1887 he and Lord Rayleigh discovered argon. That, however, was not his first discovery. He was then at University College, London, where he went after a distinguished career first at Glasgow and later at Bristol. When he was assistant in physical chemistry at the University of Glasgow he had already made discoveries and afterwards when professor at that the great men are all dead. Where is the chemist that has, in any age, made such a record of discoveries as Sir William Ramsay's? When there were about sixty-five elements found and grouped according to well known chemical laws, it seemed as if there might be more to discover, and when Sir William Ramsay found argon, and helium, it seemed as if there might be others. At least, this was the opinion of Sir William Ramsay, and with the assistance of Professor Norman J. Collie and Dr. Travers, he spent five years in separating, and establishing the identity of the three new gases -Xenon, Crypton and Neon. Five years of such fruitful work do not come in many a man's life time.

But SIR William Ramsay is more than a discoverer. He is a great master of experimental chemistry. He is more still. He is a man. Professor Collie, who may be thought to know him best, was the chairman of the portrait committee recently appointed at committee recently appointed at University College to obtain a por-trait of Sir William Ramsay for presentation to the university, and as such, made an address on the oc-casion of the presentation of the portrait. In the course of his re-marks he said that if there were any more discoveries to be made they could always rely upon it that Sir William Ramsay would make them, but that they could rely upon him for more than that. He had always been ready to give help in every direction. He was a man of infinite kindness and infinite capainfinite kindness and infinite capacity and wonderful eleverness.

On the same occasion, the vice-chancellor of University College, Dr.

W. P. Herringham, in accepting the portrait on behalf of the University, said that Sir William Ramsay was the helper and inspirer of other men's work and that was the rarest and most precious and valuable of all rifts to anybody connected with the gifts to anybody connected with the REPLICA of the portrait was then presented to Lady Ramsay and Sir William Ramsay, in replying, thanked his assistants and students and all with whom he had been associated and remarked that the only omission in Professor Collie's speech was the absence of any reference to the part he had himself played in the discoveries and researches which he had described.

Just out which may well occupy the attention of Canadians for a moment, since it is about Canada, and conditions in the west. The book was written by a Miss Fox-Smith, who has, says a reviewer, been in Canada "for three years or thereabouts." That the author has presented this country truly and faithfully no one who knows Canada will for a moment believe. But possiblly Miss Fox-Smith pictured it as she saw it. In his review of it, the English critic says in part: "If her (the author's) picture of it is a faithful portrait, the Canadian West exhibits all the worst features of the oldest of old civilizations, and most of the abominations of the newest of the new.

... Graft is written as largely over the Canadian West as it is over the New York Bowery (?), and it is difficult to believe that decent English parents cannot do better for their boys than send them out to the distillusionment of this land of lies and whiskey." HE City of Hope" is a book

Our Bad Last West. HERE follows a summary of Miss Fox-Smith's story, which seems to be a sensational tale made up of drunken brawls, attempted rape, and sensational incidents of the very yellowest type. It is certainly not a book that throws a pleasant light on this country. Cast your eye over this bit of conversation between two Britishers who meet in the hopeful western city:

two Britishers who meet in the hopeful western city:

"I wonder," Crawlord said suddenly—"I wonder what sort of an idea most fellows' home folks have about this country—what sort of a place they think it is to send their green lads, and their bad lads, and their wild lads to, and expect them to make their fortunes; or what sort of people they think there are here?"

"My govenor'd stare if he could see Hope City," Mark observed, with feeling. "He said it seemed a flourishing little place—oh, Lor'!"

"Story book notions," Crawford went om, "that's what their ideas amount to more often than not. You'll hear people talk—haven't I heard it?—a lot of claptrap about the free, open life, and the lack of temptations to lead a young fellow astray, and the wonderful opportunities there are for anyone that isn't afraid of work. My God! I'd like to see some of 'em work as English lads fresh from the public schools are doing year after year in this country; work at the kind of jobs peeple are expected to go into hysterics about when Siberian convicts are doing them and not their own.

"You remember that how who worked."

brightly he writes home and how he is enjoying roughing it? He always loved camping and being out of doors—and, of coursee, in Canada nobody thinks any the worse of you, don't you know, for working with your hands!"....

"And it's the boys with grit that suffer; the rotters don't stop long enough for that ... the good plucked 'uns keep it to themselves; break their health and their hearts before they whimper; and write fairy tales home to comfort their mothers. . Oh, don't I know it? ...
"I never could see the funny side of it myself. I don't suppose that boy's mother saw it either when she got the cablegram from the hospital."

Mark suggests that "lots of fellows

Mark suggests that "lots of fellows o well, however," and that after all arrdships may not hurt anyone. Craw-or almost anticipates the protest, and or rejoins.

"Oh, yes, lots make good, and. what's more, if anyone ever deserved success they deserve it. Tell me any profession, any occupation under the sun, that you could pitch a young gaffer into in England, without capital, without experience, without training, and expect him to advance himself. Yet that's what people are doing here all the time. Why, man, the nice English boys that come out here aren't as well equipped in anything but pluck as the Barnado suttersnipes that have had a few months in the carpenter's shop.

"And it's the ones that don't succeed—those are what I can't forget. Not so much the ones that die. Life's not everything. Plenty of worse things can come to a man than to be decently dead. The lads that get down and out. Have bad luck. get sick, perhaps. and can't pull themselves out of the mire again.

"Believe me, there are depths a man can touch in this country as low as any you can find in the old world. Vice!—why, man, there's all the vice of old Babylon, and some fancy brands of their own invention thrown in, in these little western dumps."

Not a Fair Deal for Canada.

E have to blame our own emigration agents for a good deal of this sort of thing. Canada is not given a fair deal either way. The country is cracked up to be an El Dorado, where money may be had for the picking up, or the picking up and u the milionth tender young Britishers body and soul. Time and again immigrant girls have told the writer of the splendid stories they heard of the new land—how they could get any wage they asked. Only the any wage they asked. Only other day an untrained woman us she expected not less than $45 a month for herself and her little girl at cooking and housework in a city. every case, men and women comover have been disapted. Girls expected they would either make their fortunes in a year and scientific or be snapped up, and married by wealthy "raunchers." Young fellows —the "wild lads," and "bad lads," o is well known when they couldn't make good in peaceful little Britain! I lived out west for years, and speaking from actual knowledge, can sincerely say that those same "bad lads" and "wild lads" were about the poorest lot of goods that ever came into the country. They used to hang round the Winnipeg hotels drinking all their money away, and waiting for the remittance from home to drink more. They woeldn't even try to work. They were no credit to the country they came from, nor to that to which they had come. A drunkard and a wastrel will not make good in any place. Whisky or its equivalent is to be found wherever men congregate on the globe. We seem to be obliged to have certain things in order to get on at all. This world will always contain a drink, a drug, a devil, and a religion, and one might throw in politics as a heavyweight.

But why should Canada be branded as a land of "lies and whisky," as the Brothel-House of the world—a place where all the vice of old Babyplace where all the vice of old Babylon, and some fancy brands, besides, are to be found. It is not Canada but the people who come to Canada that make the vices. The nativeborn Canadian is as upright a man as you will meet the world over, and as clean-souled, too. What between the emigration agent who makes an angel of him, and the British tourist ladies who make the Devil himself of him, our brother is to be pitied. Anyway, as a "Britisher" who has lived here the greater part of her life, and as one who knew the great west in its earlier, and more rugged days, I have to say that Canada has been my land of Hope—and of hope been my land of Hope—and of hope fulfilled, and that I want no better land to live in, or no other land to give me, when I pass, the little shelter of the grave.

The first man who bought the diamond failed for half a million pounds the week after. A Belgium syndicate then purchased it, and sold it to a Russian noble, who gave it to his daughter for a wedding present. A few months after the marriage the daughter's husband was arrested, and sent to Siberia for taking part in some plot against the Czar. The wife gave birth to a bey in due time, and both mother and child died. Then the diamond went to a London jeweler Barney Barnato bought it, and it was among his belongings when he suicided in mid ocean some years ago. Another London jeweler got hold of the fatal jewel, but he could not sell it, and it ate up interest at the rate of a thousand pounds a While we have none that we can well offer, the inquiry suggests the many things we see every day, and—don't notice. "When found, make a note of," is the excellent maxim of Captain Cuttle, but even that jolly old seaman must have known that when you don't have to find a thing you don't make Its original weight was two How many things-little commonplace things—are you so certain of that you could swear to them in a court of law? For instance, could you, sir, swear to the number of buttons on your waistcoat, or to the number of chairs in your dining-room? Could you tell how many seats there are in the park, or how many steps in the saircase of your house? I remember an old editor who used to set me the task—when I was office boy in my journalistic career—of walking past the shop windows along one side of a block, and writing down on my return all that I saw. The result would not dress one corner of the smallest window. There are memory-training schools, and correspondence-taught methods, but I fancy observation becomes second habit only thru prac-tice. Years of newspaper work, for instance, have taught me to take pictures unconsciously — negatives which remain in some dark chamber (there are many) of the brain until they are required when they become instantly clear photographs. Journalism alone will teach my corres-pondent to observe, and to mem-

WO EMINENT toxicologists, the wise ones we have always with us has discovered the reason it brings bad luck to all who have anything Drs. Violle and Penfold, have for some time been conducting a series of experiments to ascertain the best antidotes for certain poisons. One of the results of their experiments, as demonstrated by Dr. Roux in a paper read at the Academy of Science, reveals curious paradoxes in regard to certain toxic substances hen diluted with water. These two savants have noted that many bacteriological poisons become much more active and powerful in intravenous injection, when diluted with large volumes of distilled water. This conclusion was arrived at after exhaustive experiments on rabbits, and one of the strangest features is that the effect is almost the same whether the poison is diluted with water when injected or injected in an otherwise non-mertal dose within wo hours of a large injection of distilled water.

It would take too long to give all the details, which have greatly interested the medical world. Briefly stated however a great number of stated, however, a great number of widely different bacilli seem to have their poisonous action approximately doubled, paradoxical as it may seem, when diluted with a hundred times their volumes of distilled water.

For instance, cholera-toxin—which is only moral when pure in a ceris only mortal when pure in a certain proportion to each pound in the weight of the animal to which the dose is administered—becomes a fatal dose at half the proportion when diluted with a volume of water equal to a thirtieth of the whole weight of the animal.

"toxohematolyse." DEBATE on Dr. Roux's paper brought out the following additional interesting facts. The old saying that one man's food is another man's poison has been extended in a wonderful way of late by scientific observation. It is now known that what is food to one part of the body may be a deadly poison of the body may be a deadly poison to another. The simplest instance of this is the effect of the bite of the most dreaded of all Indian snakes -the cobra.

If the poison glands are cut out of a newly killed snake of this type their contents may be swallowed with impunity by a healthy human being and will be digested like any other nitroeous food. If, however the man who swallows it has any sore place in his mouth, such as split lip, whereby the virus can get into his blood, his life will be very short, Strychnine is one of the most powerful vegetable poisons known, but it has very odd effects. Up to about one thirty-second of a grain it is often used in medicine as a stimulant. Very little more is required to bring on that peoples state. bring on that peculiar state known as "tetanus," in which the muscles lock themselves up into such hard masses that they are as rigid as bone. ### Survival Values By Elbert Hubbard

NEW phrase has been added to -A our vocabulary. It is the expression, "Survival Value." That which lives after the action itself is complete, is survival value. Actions have survival value according to the degree of good that grows out of them. For instance, the act of planting a tree has a survival value. The man who planted a tree adds to the value of his real estate; but the tree will exist long after the man has turned to dust.

Advertisements which merely offer commodities at bargain-day prices have probably no survival value. They are transient in their effect, short-lived-they die the death.

Advertisements that increase the sum of good-will possess survival value. Literature that contains wit, valuable information, uplift, possesses survival value.

T IS generally conceded now that there are two good reasons for advertising—one is to sell goods and the other is to increase good-will. Both are neces-

Good-will is a very tangible asset, and the absence of it may be a liability.

For instance, if you have a big manufacturing plant, fully equipped for turning out goods, and you possess no good-will, if your plant burns up, the venture is extinguished, destroyed, dead.

If the institution has back of it good-will, then earthquake, flood, fire, may destroy your plant, but the good-will remains and can be utilized. This is survival value.

All worthy deeds, all honest work. all sincere expressions of truthwhether by pen or by voice-have a survival value.

. . . VIVILIZATION is a great, moving mass of survival values, augmented, increased, bettered, refined, by every worthy life. Man dies, but his influence lives and adds to the wealth, the happiness vival value.

and the welfare of the world. Art distinctly has survival value. The artist appeals to the age to come. What he produces is dedicated to time. He does not look for a quick return.

2 . . M EN hotly intent on making money are not apt to make much money, because the dollar is a rolling disc, and when you chase it, it attains a terrific velocity. It exceeds the speed-limit, and many a man has chased it clear into the penitentiary walls and neard the gates click behind him before he realized what he was doing. The actions, schemes, plans and enterprises of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford had no survival value.

Hate, revenge, jealousy, doubt, negation, have no survival value. Courtesy, kindness, good will, right intent, all add to the sum of human happiness. Not only do they benefit the individual, who gives them out, but they survive in varicus forms and add to the well-being of the world.

. . . LL ACTS, whether work or A play, should be judged with the idea of survival value in

The difference in men is largely in the way that they use the hours that are their own. Tell me what a man does between seven and ten o'clock in the evening, and I will tell you what he is. Also, I will tell you where he will be ten years from Others there be who industriously play cards. For the most part, card-playing has no survival value. I know commuters who have played cards for ten years. These men are no wiser, no better, and their lives are no fuller than they were ten years ago.

Out of every hundred commuters you will find, perhaps, one man who carries in his side pocket a copy of Emerson's Essays, Carlyle's French Revolution, Buckle's History of Civilization, or some other good book. He may not read very much of it, but the book is his companion. If he merely peeps into it and reads a half page a day, in five years he will be a transformed individual—he will be differentiated from the "bunch." The reading of good books has a survival value. AMES played in the open air have a survival value. Anything that gets you out in the sunshine, takes you across the fields, out under the blue sky, has a survival value. There is something about getting on good terms with the out-ofdoors, with the soil, the trees, the plants, the birds, the flowers, that is great gain.

I EALTH and happiness are the results of a multiplicity of thoughts and actions possessing survival value. These are what Samuel J. Tilden called "the usufruct."

Others have called it "unearned increment," but the expression, "survival value," is better than either of these. It is illuminating, expressive, carries an idea, makes us feel, makes us think.

Anything that brings men together so they talk, read. think. laugh, play, makes them better men. These things stand for fellowship. Hell might be defined as the sumtotal of acts which possess no sur-

HEN a certain man and woman in New York, some years ago, spent a hundred thousand dollars in giving a ball, the action was lauded in some quarters as beautiful and right, in that a large sum of money was put into circulation. But in judging of that wonderful ball, which took the labor of a thousand people a full month to provide, we must consider the question of survival value. The question then is: What did the hundred thousand dollars expended on the ball produce? And the answer is: It produced the ball.

A grand ball has very small survival value, if any.

Late suppers, joy-rides, drinkfests, have no survival value, because that which survives is not of worth. Wasted energies mean regrets, headeches, least the deal of the state o woman in New York,

Wasted energies mean regrets, headaches, lassitude, and that dark brown taste, a commodity that has no value as collateral.

MERSON added to the wealth

MERSON added to the wealth of the world when he gave us the expression, the "Law of Compensation."

Herbert Spencer did the same for us when he "referred to the "Law of Diminishing Returns."

Ernest Haeckel did as much when he spoke of the "Law of Pivotal Points," and the unknown man who flung out the phrase, "Survival Value," made us his debtor.

Words are tools for the transmission of thoughts. Thoughts are the result of feelings. The recipe for good writing is, write as you feel, but be sure you feel right.

But before you write you must have an equipment—a literary kit—of mouth-filling, expressive, fareaching words and phrases. . . .

S YDNEY SMITH said that the man who invented a new dish added to the happiness of the world. Whether this is true or not, the man who invents a new word gives wings to imagination. He links the world into a brotherhood by allowing us to break them by allowing us to break thru the icy silences that surrounds us.

Thru language we touch finger-tips with the noble, the great, the good, the competent living or dead, and thus are we made brothers to all those who make up the sumtotal of civilization.

portant step in planning for the efficient administration of the house. One of the most economical, sanitary, and the same time artistic stoves on the market to-day is a gas range that is so planned that the housewife has neither to stoop down to watch the bread in the oven or the meat in the broiler or to reach up stretching and straining the muscles of the arms and back to attend to the cooking of food in a too high oven or broiler.

The broiler is on a level with the top of the stove and the oven is ju it. As they have but one burner in common it is possible to broil meat and bake at the same time, thus saving gas. Above the oven is a convenient plate warmer. This stove has not the baker or broiler directly above the burners on the top of the stove so the cook does not have to inhale the orders of the gas and cooking food when attending to food in the oven. Another attractive feature of this type of stove is the glass door of the wen. One can keep an eye on the process that is going on within the oven without unnecessarily exposing the cake to a draught of cold air. Time is also saved by this convenience as it is easier to merely glance into the oven than it to open the door to investigate.

The stove that has the oven or broilplaced beneath the top burners orhas the oven below and the broiler above or the broiler and oven both directly over the top gas jets all have their disadvantages, which are plainly apparent to the housewife who cares to give the matter a thought.

Caring for the Gas Range.

THE first word on this subject is a don't. NEVER put any kind of blacking on the top of your gas range. In fact, it is unnecessary to use it on any part of the stove. The heat generated by gas is not strong enough to burn the polish off as it is burned off when used on a coal stove. Greasy or dirty dishwater is a good cleanser for the gas stove or range. A cloth dipped in kerosense oil and applied to the stove will lend it a splendid polish. Some housekeepers use linseed oil. This is not the best oil owing to its stickiness. Olive oil that has become a little tainted or is too old to use in other ways makes the best known polish for the gas range. Even this should be used sparingly.

When one moves into a house where former tenants have been careless and the gas range seems to have collected the dirt of ages, it is well to take the burners of the stove out and boil them in soda water. If they are so greasy that even this treatment is not sufficient, place them in a stationary tub, if one is convenient, or in the wash boiler and dust thoroughly with a can of lye. Pour boiling hot water over them and let stand over night. When the water runs over the lye stand well away from the tub, as the fume of the lye are strong. It is generally sufficient to both the burners in soda water and scrub them with a good brush when they become clogged by grease, particles of food or the boiling over of a pot. If they are merely a little greasy it is sufficient to scrub them with a brush thoroughly covered with washing soda.

If it is necessary to soak the burners lye, while the process is going on oughly scrape and scrub every other part of the stove with soda water. If the stove is in very bad condition do not re-enamel it as the heat softens the enamel, but use a can of radiator paint. This should be applied twice a year. It does away with a great deal of unnecessary work.

If the stove is rusty it should be washed thoroughly in a salt and vinegar solution. A handful of salt should be sured to a pint of vinegar. Afterwards this solution should be rubbed with a flannel cloth and polished a cloth dipped in turp ntine before the final rubbing with olive or derosene oil. This is a very simple arrangement The ideal screen for windows runs up and down a groove, or opens on hinges like a door. These screens mean only one thickness of wire to keep out stray breezes and are more satisfactory than the collapsible screen, both for durability and for keeping out insects.

Copper Bronze Wiring the Best. The rustless wiring more than pays or the extra cost, as it does not require the painting which clogs up the mesh, and being of copper strengthened with alloy, it is durable. There is also a good screen cloth of steel wire galvanized and coated and then painted. which is less expensive but also very satisfactory, but of course the copper bronze gives the best service. Different meshes may be obtained from the ordinary fourteen mesh (fourteen openings to the inch) to twentyfour and forty-inch mesh, such as is necessary in laundries or other places, from which it is advisable to keep out dust as well as flies. Wiring can, of course, always be renewed as long as the frame remains strong enough to hold it, but if the mesh is well rubbed with a cloth dipped kerosene after heavy rains and before being stored away for the Winter, a reliable wiring should last indefinitely. This is a hint which it will be well for the housewife to jot down in her

WINDOW screens which open on months, but to modern ideas this method of living for months in the hinges should be inside the dark is scarcely a welcome suggestion sash and therefore must open inward, except, perhaps, for a few hours in but screen doors must always open outthe heat of the day; besides, without ward and measurements taken to that screens the mosquitoes get in at night effect and necessitate bed curtains of netting,

Before buying a screen of any kind measure the width of the window inside the "rabbet strips," as they are called, that is the space occupied by the sash. Also measure the heighth of the sash from the outside sill to the upper sash, and do not be deluded into buying a screen lower than the size reco ed for a sash of that height. Nothing is more maddening on a hot night than to feel you cannot raise your window as high as it will go, because the space between the sash and screen will let in tormenting mosquitoes.

If the window is to open top and bottom both, it is better to have a regular door screen on hinges reaching over both sashes, or else tack netting or

The screen door must cover the transom as well as the door if the transom is meant to open; measure the full height of the door from the sill to the wood frame above. Measure the full width of the door and if the latter is not rabbetted the number of striking strips needed must be taken into consideration. If a special frame is required, the measurements must be exact. Any shop will send out a man to take measurements and give the estimate, which is the surest way of obtaining the right screen for an ill-fitting screen is as

In selecting a wire door it is necessary to get a deep, wooden piece across the foot and to see that the frame is well mortised, glued and wedged. If the door has much usage as in the kitchen or where there are young children, it is advisable to have an extra crosspiece of wood to the frame on a level with the latch as a re-enforcement and the wire below this should be double, or re-enforced with a heavier mesh.

Ornamental Re-Enforced Doors. QUITE ornamental scroll top grills of twisted wire come to strengthen the lower part of screen doors, but flat mesh wires will suffice. This re-enforcement should be placed over the cellar windows and at the pantry or wherever there is a likelihood of rough usage unwelcome entrance. Galvanized wire frames come especially for cellar

Every day we are realizing more and more how the fly pest is spreading disease germs on its sticky little feet, and where there are young children or sick people the fly must be absolutely exterminated. Some of the most loathsome eye diseases are caused by flies resting on the eyes of babies who are asleep or too young to brush them off -there is no more sickening sight than to see files hovering over a baby coach, and if a child is allowed to sleep out of doors its coach should invariably be covered with mosquito netting. In the sick room fly paper must always be kept at hand, also a fly brush as a fly that escapes from a room which contains say a scarlet fever patient may be carrying illness and perhaps death to method of lighting it. There are women who light the gas on the top of the stove, then find the pan, pare the potatoes and put them on in cold water or turn on the gas and then rush into the next room and hunt for a match. Before lighting the gas have the pan filled with water or ingredients to be burner. Turn off the gas as soon as the saucepan is removed.

In lighting the top burners do not y to be placed on the be in too great haste. Light the match -turn the gas on slowly and apply the match to the back of the burner, moving it forward slowly. If the gas is turned on too readily it lights with a buzz and registers more than it other-wise would owing to the jar the meter receives from this treatment. If the rner holes do not all light when the saucepan is placed over them they will likely ignite if the breath is blown across the burner. If an odor of gas is detected about the house, after all the stopcocks have been examined, the pipes near them should be tested. If a leak is discovered it can be temporarily stopped with soap or permanently with white lead

Water boils when the heat of 212 degrees F. is attained. It then turns to steam, as every woman knows, and evaporates. If the gas is turned on full force after the boiling point is reached the water does not get hotter, as some women apparently seem to think, but merely evaporates more rapidly. Instead of hastening the cooking process such a method hastens the steam making process. Sometimes we pay for the steam making, when in reality we think we are paying for the cooking of food, Not only is gas wasted by this method. but more of the housewife's time and attention are required in watching the food, replacing the water lost by evaporation, and the possibility of burning the food is increased. The cooking process itself is also hindered.

THE small simmering burner, which I is one part of the gas stove that many housewives ignore altogether, helps save many pennies. In cases where a slow fire is needed, as in making soups and stews or in keeping coffee warm, a great deal of gas may be saved by placing the pot containing food that has reached the boiling point over the simmering burner, where it can be kept at the boiling point as long as dehaps the greatest economy of all. Many a penny can be saved by taking a ought in time when the oven is to be used. There are two burners in the oven which is designed for carrying on several cooking processes at once. Let us suppose we have a menu of veal loaf, tomatoes, potatoes, salad, biscuit, baked apples or pudding to prepare. The potatoes can either be roast-

The oven, strange to say, affords pered with the meat or baked in their jackets. The apples and meat can be placed in the oven at once. The apples will be ready to be removed about the time the

and the meat is resting in the warmer.

The whole dinner, with the exception of the salad, is cooked in the oven without much trouble to the housewife. This is an easy meal to prepare while the maid is out or while the woman who has no maid is expecting company.

THE woman who desires to attend church on Sunday can blithely place her dinner vegetables and meat in the oven, turn off one of the burners while the oven is hot, and turn the other low and give no thought to the dinner until she returns home to find it cooked. If this plan is tried it is necessary to partially cook some of the food that requires long cooking on

Mush, old-fashioned butters, marmalades, or, in fact, any food that re-quires stirring in the old-fashioned way can be baked in the oven without necessitating a thought on the part of the housewife but to place it there and in this way are more delicious than if

Many a loaf of bread is ruined or a cake and gas wasted by mismanagement of the oven. When baking bread it should be remembered that once the loaves have started to brown the stop-cock should be turned back half way and left so until the bread is baked. If this is not done the country and left so until the bread is baked. If this is not done the crust of the bread will be thick and hard or the bread uncooked and soggy in the middle. If the bread has not browned well when it has been in twenty-five minutes turn back the gas stop anyway until it is half force, and turn it on again just before removing from the oven, that the bread may be as brown as desired. It is possible to save a great deal of gas when the broiler and baker are heated by the same burner. If one is having roasted meat some of the vegetables can be broiled, or vice versa.

WHEN broiling always place a little water in the pan under the rack, see that all surplus fat is removed from the meat and that the pan is thoroughly clean. Leave the broller door open to prevent the meat catching on fire. Meats are more easily broiled if a folding broiler is used. The oven should be heated ten minutes before it is time to put in the meat. Steaks and chops should be placed close to the flame, while fish should be placed about half way down.

When toast is made in the broiling oven it is only necessary to heat the oven five minutes. The bread should be placed about four inches from the flame. It should receive constant at-

Cakes require a moderate oven, while biscuits, muffins, pies and small cakes require a very hot oven.

Every housewife should know where the key that turns the gas off for the whole house is located and just how to do it. On the back of the gas bills the directions for reading the meter are found. Every consumer should know

The matter of management and economy of gas is one that is well worth considering. The housewife who underconsidering. The housewife who undertakes to economize in this way will be surprised at the returns. Just because cooking with gas is so easy and so economical we sometimes forget that it could be made even cheaper than it already is. In the new desire to serve the people the gas companies are not far behind other concerns. Any person who desires to economize in this way will be surprised at the co-operation will be surprised at the co-operation that is offered by the companies them selves and the knowledge that can be obtained on this subject by simply visit-ing the showrooms in the various offices and obtaining their literature.

the eye and a menace to the feet, above all when there are old folks or toddlers in the family. This is especially a habit of the hall runner, and as many halls are dark it is too dangerous a fault not to be corrected at once.

An equal offender in this respect is the small Oriental rug. Of course, rugs can be returned to your dealer, who will "soak" them and stretch them without any injury to the rug. But this involves more delay, trouble and red tape than doing it one's self. Is it necessary to soak the whole rug? Not as a rule. If the entire rug is rippled and crooked that may be the only way, but while the rug is nailed dripp boards? And have you a floor this will not spoil? If you have con't be afraid to do it. ### WHAT SHALL WE HAVE FOR DINNER?

T IS the eternal question of the tired housekeeper, and what housekeeper is not tired these Spring days? Take Sunday dinner, for instance, are you tired of the everlasting roast beef and baked chicken, if that is the case, why not have a baked steak? A baked steak? I never heard of baking a steak, I hear you say, but never mind. Try it and see if it is not at least a change from the usual things.
Buy a steak at least three inches thick. The size of your family will determine whether the steak should be a large or a small one. Put it in the double roasting pan, then seed and cut in small pieces two green peppers and a Bermuda onion, cover the steak with these; add salt and pepper and cover all with a can of tomatoes. Put the lid on the roasting pan and allow it to bake fifteen minutes to the pound, unless you prefer the steak quite rare. The tomato juice should cook down to the consistency of gravy. When the steak is nearly baked add half a pound of mushrooms which have been previ-ously skinned. Do I hear you say that this is an expensive dish? Well, really, it is not, for do you realize that you do not have to serve any other vege-table than potatees with this fulsome course? Follow with a simple salad. For those that like veal cutlet let them prepare it in the same manner, and I am quite sure this will be a dinner requested very often by the mes of the family.

A very attractive and palatable desert to be served with this dinner is one made of gelatine and pincappia. Make a gelatine of oranges spooned from the skins and lemon juice well sweetened and let it form in saucers (small vegetable saucers), for the mold will exactly fit on a slice of pineapple. The pineapple may be either fresh or the canned variety, the juice of which should be poured over the gelatine. A maraschino cherry is a decorative touch.

hot day. The only difficulty about cooking asparagus is to cook it well enough to soften the stalks without cooking away the heads, and to prevent this many cooks stand the bundle heads up in the water, with the boiling water reaching up to, but not over, the heads. Others again use the wire basket inside the pan which makes it easy to remove the stalks and drop them on the plate without breaking the heads. Young asparagus requires scarcely more than a quarter of an hour's cooking, but as the season advances it will nequire per-haps half an hour or even more. The stems should be scraped lightly, but made clean, and then must be thrown into cold water. When ready to cook, tie in bunches of equal size and chop off the tough ends to an even length. Althe tough ends to an even length. Allow a teaspoonful of salt to a quart of boiling water, and allow plenty of water for the cooking. Mr. Holcombe had not come back.

He wrote me twice asking me to hold his room, once from New York and once from Chicago. To the second letter he added a postscript:

"Have not found what I wanted, but am getting warm. If any news, address me at Des Moines, Iowa, General Delivery.

It was nearly the end of April when I saw Lida again. I had seen by the newspapers that she and her mother were coming home. I wondered if she had heard from Mr. Howell, for I had not, and I wondered, too, if she would send for me again.

But she came herself, on foot, late one afternoon, and the school-teacher being out, I took her into the parlor bedroom. She looked thinner than before, and rather white. My heart ached for her.

I put out my light and watched. Some one stood there, in the shadow, until after two this morning. Part of the time he was looking up."

She shook her head. "He is in trouble." she said. He has not heard from me. and—thinks I don't care any more. Just look at me. Mrs Pitman! Do I look as if I don't care?" She looked half killed, poor lamb. "He may be out of town, searching for a better position," I tried to comfort her. "He wants to have something to offer more than himself."

"Not at all. The water was very high. I lay down, dressed, at one o'clock, and dropped into a doze."
"How long did you sleep?"
"An hour or so. Mr. Reynolds, a boarder, roused me to say he had heard some one rowing a boat in the lower hall." "Do you keep a boat around dur-ing flood times?"

"Yes, sir."
"What did you do when Mr. Reynolds roused you?"
"I went to the top of the stairs.
My boat was gone."
"Was the boat secured?"

"Yes, sir. Anyhow, there was no current in the hall."

"What did you do then?"
"I waited a time and went back to my room."
"What examination of the house

"What examination of the house did you make—if any"
"Mr. Reynnolds looked around."
"What did he find?"
"He found Peter, the Ladley's dog, shut in a room on the third floor."
"Was there anything unusual about that?"

"I had never known it to happen "State what happened later."

"I did not go to sleep again. At a quarter after four, I heard the boat come back. I took a candle and went to the stairs. It was Mr. Ladley. He said he had been out getting medicine for his wife." 'Did you see him tie up the boat?"

"Did you observe any stains on "I did not notice any."

"I did not notice any."

"What was the prisoner's manner at that time?"

"I thought he was surly."

"Now, Mrs. Pitman, tell us about the following morning."

"I saw Mr. Ladley at a quarter before seven. He said to bring breakfast for one. His wife had gone away. I asked if she was not ill, and he said no; that she had gone away early; that he had rowed her to Federal Street, and that she would be back Saturday. It was shortly be back Saturday. It was shortly after that the dog Peter brought in one of Mrs. Ladley's slippers, water-

"You recognize the slipper?"
"Positively. I had seen it often."
"What did you do with it?"
"I took it to Mr. Ladley."
"What did he say?"

"He said at first that it was not hers. Then he said if it was, she would never wear it again—and then added—because it was ruined."
"Did he offer any statement as to where his wife was?"
"No, sir. Not at that time. Before, he had said she had gone

"Tell the jury about the knife."

"The dog found it floating in the parlor, with the blade broken."

"You had not left it downstairs?"

"No. sir. I had used it upstairs, the night before, and left it on a mantel of the room I was using as a temporary kitchen."

"Was the door of this room locked?"

"No. It was standing open."
"Were you not asleep in this

"No one—until Mr. Reynolds roused me."
"Where did you find the blade?"

"Did you see any preparation for a journey?"

"The black and white dress was laid out on the bed, and a small bag. She said she was taking the dress to the theatre to lend to Miss Hope."

"Is that all she said?"

"No. She said she'd been wishing her husband would drown; that he was a fiend?"

I could see that my testimony had made an impression.

CHAPTER XII.

The slipper, the rope, the towel, and the knife and blade were produced in court, and I identified them all. They made a noticeable impression on the jury. Then Mr. Liewellyn, the lawyer for the dedense, cross-examined me.

"Is it not true, Mrs. Pitman," he said, "that many articles, particularly shoes and slippers, are found floating around during a flood?"

"Yes," I admitted.

"Now, you say the dog found this slipper floating in the hall and brought it to you. Are you sure this slipper belonged to Jennie Brice?"

Brice?"

"She wore it. I presume it belonged to her."

"Ahem. Now. Mrs. Pitman, after the Ladleys had been moved to the upper floor, did you search their bedroom and the connecting room. down-stairs?"

"Ah. Then, how do you know that rhis slipper was not left on the floor or in a closet?"

"It is possible, but not likely. Anyhow, it was not the slipper alone. It was the other things and the slipper.

"Exactly. Now, Mrs. Pitrian, this knife. Can you identify it positive-

"But isn't it true that this is a very common sort of knife? One that nearly every housewife has in her possession?"
"Yes, sir. But that knife handle has three notches in it. I put the notches there myself."

"Before this presumed crime?"
"Yes, sir."

"For what purpose?"
"My neighbors were constantly borrowing things. It was a means of identification." "Then this knife is yours?"
"Yes."

"Tell again where you left it the night before it was found down-

"Could the dog have reached is "No, no. The boat's painter—the ope." 'Oh! Well he might have. He never said."

"Now then, this towel, Mrs. Pit.

"Now then, this towel, Mrs. Pit-man. Did not the prisoner, on the following day, tell you that he had cut his wrist in freeing the boat, and ask you for some court-plaster?"
"He did not," I said firmly.
"You have not seen a scar on his wrist?"

"No." I glanced at Mr. Ladley: was smiling, as if amused it made me angry. "And what's more," flashed, "if he has a cut on his wris he put it there himself, to accide for the towel."

I was sorry the next moment that I had said it, but it was too late. The counsel for the defense moved to exclude the answer and I received a caution that I deserved. Then:

"You saw Mr. Ladley when he brought your boat back?"

"Yes."

"What time was that?"

"What time was that?"
"A quarter after four Monday morning."

"Did he come in quietly, like a matrying to avoid attention?"

"Not particularly. It would have been of no use. The dog was bark-

I was excused, and Mr. Reynolds was called.

He had heard no quarreling that Sunday night; had even heard Mr. Ladley laughing. This was about nine o'clock. Yes, they had fount in the afternoon. He had not overheard any words, but their votos were quarrelsome, and once he heard a chair or some article of furniture overthrown. Was awakened about two by footsteps on the stairs, fellowed by the sounds of oars in the lower hall. He told his story plainly and simply. Under cross-examination admitted that he was fond of detective stories, and had tried to write one himself; that he had said at the store that he would like to see that "conceited ass" swing, referring to the prisoner; that he had san flowers to Jennie Brice at the theate, and had made a few advances to her, without success.

My head was going round. I don't know yet how the police learned it all, but by the time poor Mr. Reynolds left the stand, half the people there believed that he had been in love with Jennie Brice, that she had spurned his advances, and that there was more to the story than any of them had suspected.

Miss Hope's story held without any alteration under the cross-amination. She was perfectly at ease, looked handsome and well-dressed, and could not be shaken. She told how Jennie Brice had been in fear of her life, and had asked her, only the week before she disappeared, to allow her to go home with her—Miss Hope. She told of the attack of hysteria in her dressing-room, and that the missing woman had said that her husband would kill her some day. There was much wrangling over her testimony, and I believe at least a part of twas not allowed to go to the jurgent what I recall.

THE LIFE OF A WOMAN DETECTIVE

MURDERS OF MILLEVILLE BY ADELINE LEITZBACH

A HORRIBLE MURDER MYSTERY AND HOW IT WAS SOLVED

It was the most atracious murder ever committed in the history of the wm. The local police were baffled, the public was baffled, everybody was baffled and excited. The excitement had reached a state of delirium. Groups of citizens stood on the street corners and discussed this latest horror that coming so on the street corners and uning so this latest horror, that coming so closely upon the murder of old Silas Hawkins disturbed the equanamity of the entire community. The people were frightened. They felt that they were harboring a human mouster in their midst, and they were unable to cast him out. They didn't know when their own homes might be broken into, and they themselves fall a victim to the bloodthirsty criminal whose hand was evident in criminal whose hand was evident in each of the mystericus crimes that were committed less than three weeks apart. The horror of the one had not died away before the blood-curdling details of the other were flashed upon the populace, and the fact the murderer was still unapprehended, did not add to their secur-

The murder of the old squire had been bad enough, but the atrocious killing of the beautiful seventeen-year-old daughter of Judge Farnum, one of Milleville's leading citizens was something that would never be forgotten in the history of the

There was probably no one more puzzled or excited by this series of murders than Mary Carlton, the pretty reporter for the "Milleville Daily Clarion." Miss Carlton had originally been

Miss Carlton had originally been engaged on the paper to secure society items, obtain new subscribers, brush up delinquent ones; to secure additional advertisers, arrange ads in their proper order; write a story or two to fill in, and when there was a rush on the paper to help the editor generally, for sometimes there is a rush on a dally paper when a town has nearly twenty thousand inhabitants; but rush or no rush, Mary usually did the editor's work, and she did it so much better than he and she did it so much better than he could do it himself, that by degrees he left it all to her, while he loafed around the lobby of the one hotel of any pretensions in the town and swapped stories with the commercial travelers who sometimes stopped over, or picked up other bits of news, which he would detail to Mary, who would at once put it into copy

Miss Carlton was a very busy little lady, but she always found time to write up some little article on "The Latest From Paris," in the way of women's modes, or on "What they are wearing in New York," and she was always ready to answer inquiries thru The Daily Clarion. For some of these processors along these some of these reasons alone the female population of Milleville held her in love and reverence. Mary always did her best, and the women folks of her town swore by her, and besides, her taste was good, and many of those Paris gowns that found their original model in Mary's imagination would have done credit to some of the fashionable shops of the Rue de la Paix. No one knew just what salary

Mary received, for her work on the Clarion, but the Clarion was Mary and Mary was the Clarion. She paid Mrs. Townsend eight dollars a week for her board, and she wore good clothes, and always had a dollar or two to spare for some one who came to her with a hard luck story, and Mrs. Townsend knew that Mary had money in the bank, for she had seen her bankbook. They put her salary down at twenty dollars a week as a good guess, and to the inhabitants of Milleville, it was not become a second succession. of Milleville, it was no mean amount for any one to slip out of a pay envelope. And Mary's salary was like her age and her origin. No one was certain about it. She had come to Milleville about six years before the murders were committed, that threw the town into a state of wild excitement, and she had not looked a day younger than, than she did now, Mary never had much time to talk When the first of those murders shocked Milleville, it shocked Mary too, but she had read all Conan Doyle's stories, and the "Murders of the Rue Morgue," and she tried to give the local police and detectives all the hints and theories possible that would lead to the detection and detention of the criminal from her knowledge of those experts in the story writing of crime. atory writing of crime. facts they had were the two gruesome murders.

The library of Squire Hawkin's home had been entered, evidently thru an open window, by some unknown, who after a terrible struggle brutally murdered the old man, and made his exit thru the window without detection. The squire had been a powerful man, and it must have been a giant in strength who had been able to crush and mangle his hody into the state in which it was found the next morning by his deaf found the next morning by his deaf

Old Silas Hawkins lived alone in an ancient mansion, near the centre of the town, with only the deaf old woman mentioned above. Altho she could talk enough, and too much at times, she couldn't hear a sound, and her deafness accounted for her not having heard the struggle that must have taken place on the night of the squire's murder. Chairs and tables were overturned, papers and books were scattered about. The glass in the bookcases was broken, all going to show that the old man must have put up a vigorous fight all going to show that the old man must have put up a vigorous fight for his life, but there were neither footprints, finger marks nor evidence of any kind to point to any individual as his murderer. That it was murder there could be no doubt. The old man's skull was crushed in as if from some powerful blow. His face was horribly scratched and lacerated, his arms were wrenched from their sockets, and his whole from their sockets, and his whole body was bruised and mangled. But there was no evidence of any weapon having been used.

The squire had no known enemies. He was a little close as are most men of his kind, but he could not be termed stingy, and he was honest in his dealings, lenient with his debtors, and on the whole a pretty good old character.

It was impossible that the murder had been the outcome of attempted robbery, for the squire's heavy gold watch and chain, as well as a large sum of money was found on the body, and nothing was missing from the house. Still the police insisted that robbery was the motive. They declared that the robber had become frightened and run away leaving the declared that the robber had become frightened and run away, leaving his booty behind, and here it was that Mary and the police had their first clash. Miss Carlton insisted thru her paper, that had robbery been the motive, the criminal would not have left. booty behind after he had committed such a horrible crime to ab-tain it. The idea of his having been frightened away did not appeal to her at all.

The police laughed at Mary, and it angered her, and she hinted some things thru the columns of The Clarion that certain political factions did not like to see in print. Thru a rival paper, these factions got back at mary, and before long a merry war was being waged be-tween The Clarion and the other a merry war was being waged between The Clarion and the other paper. All this might have been very funny, some of Mary's editorials were funny, but considering the murder that had given rise to the controversy, there was nothing to laugh about it.

Mary began to put forth theories, and began to quote Conan Doyle and Edgar Allen Poe, and the police, still thru the rival paper, wanted to know if she were turning Sherlock Holmes, or if she thought an ape committed the murder. But she got back at them with a statement that the murderer of the old squire was surely not a type of old squire was surely not a type of the highest evolutionary process of mankind, and sne went on to say that he must be abnormal and degenerate, and she backed up her statements with quotations from the great scientists in such a manner that her opponents were left little room for dispute. But, while Mary was writing brilliant editorial stuff, and making scathing little references to the ability of the police department of the town, the murderer made a second appearance, and committed a murder that was even more ruthless than that of the squire.

It was that of Miss Grace, the youngest child of Judge Farnum, the most prominent citizen in Mill-ville. The young girl had been found dead in her sleeping room, much in the same condition in which the squire had been found. There could be no doubt that the wretch who slew little Grace Farnum was the same one who had killed the squire. The girl's sleeping room was on the second floor of a large house in a part of the town far removed from the residence of the squire. And it was not an easy thing to gain access to her room from the outside of the house without the aid of a ladder or a rope, and no such thing had been used, yet it was pretty positive that the murderer had climbed them the open window and climbed thru the open window and had made his escape in the same manner. But how he had done it was beyond explanation, for there wasn't even a frail vine on which wasn't even a frail vine on which he might have supported himself. The struggle between the girl and her assailant must have been short and swift; there could have been no noise, for the girl's brother, who occupied the room across the hall from her, declared that he had heard none during the night of the murder.

As in the case of the squire, there was not a bit of evidence whereby to trace the murderer. Nothing was to trace the murderer. Nothing was missing save a brightly-figured Persian sash that Miss Farnum had worn on the day of the murder. It was the opinion of the detectives that this sash had been used by the murderer to lower himself from the window, and that he had taken it away with him when he made his escape. The condition of the room was horrible. The entire bedding, mattress, and all, had been thrown over the murdered girl.

What could be the motive of this crime? As in the case of Silas Hawkins, they could ascribe none to it, Mary Carlton was sure the crimes had been committed by a moral degnerate, and she was writing articles about degenerate minds, coupled with a shrewd cunning, that enabled them to hide their nefarious deeds—minds that gloried in murder and crime for its own sake, and she went on to say quite plainly that the police were unable to cone der and crime for its own sake, and she went on to say quite plainly that the police were unable to cope with the situation, and she suggested that detectives from a larger city nearby be called in, but all this did not bring them any nearer a solution of the crimes, nor the apprehension of the murderer than they had been on the day the squire's mangled body was found in his library.

They felt that they had to arrest somebody, and they took the young girl's brother into custedy; but this was the last straw. It aroused the indignation of the citizens to such an extent that a meeting of the leading ones was called, the young man's arrest denounced as an outrage, and a resolution passed to call in assistance from the outside.

Young Farnum was set free, but his arrest brought about one thing. Several people came forth and declared that on the afternoon of the girl's murder they had seen her standing at the gate of her home, talking to some stranger, whom they standing at the gate of her home, talking to some stranger. whom they described as a tall, powerfully-built man, with dark hair, and wearing a suit of a peculiar shade of greenish-brown. Later in the day, this same man was seen not far from the Farnum residence, cranking a high-power automobile. The car was said to be a dark red, but no one had taken notice of the number. A hundred different theories sprang into existence now. The outside detectives who were called into the case laid a great deal of importance upon laid a great deal of importance upon this dark stranger with the automo-bile, but they did about as much in locating the murderer as the local police had done. Mary was desper-

A week after the burial of poor little Grace Farnum, she was walk-ing along the most fashionable resi-dence street of the town, bent upon calling on a lady whose daughter was to be married shortly, as she wanted to get a description of the bride's gown, what the maids would wear, who the guests would be, and all such information as the lady cared to have appear in an article in The Clarion scales. cared to have appear in an article in The Clarion society column.

On a corner a group of men were discussing the murders. They tipped their hats as Mary passed them, and one of them wanted to know what she thought of the developments in the murder cases, but Mary was past thinking about them. Just then, she never knew exactly what then, she never knew exactly what happened. She looked up, and di-rectly across the street a tall, powerfully-built man, in a dark, greenish-brown suit, was tinkering a high-power, red automobile. Mary couldn't see his face, but she point-ed a trembling hand in his direction and half whispered: "The murderer

In an instant half a dozen men were upon the stranger, and, despite his protests, they dragged him to the police station, where he was formal-ly accused of the murder of Equire lawkins and Grace Farnum rushed to The Clarion, and got off her news that the dark suspect had been captured, so as to get ahead of the rival paper, and, after that, things happened fast and furiously.

Miss Carlton dashed over to the station house to see the prisoner. He had already been identified as the stranger who had been seen talking to Grace Farnum on the afternoon of her death; and he was also identified as the man who had been seen cranking his automobile in one of the side streets late on the night of the murder.

The stranger himself acted as if he thought everybody had gone crazy. The things he said would never do in print. He denied the charges against him as ridiculous, charges against him as ridiculous, and insisted upon sending to New York for a lawyer.

Mary asked for an interview with the prisoner, but the officer in charge was doubtful. Personally he liked Mary very well, but she had given the police such rakings over lately that he didn't know whether he ought to extend her any curiesies or not. to extend her any curtesies or not. Still, he figured it would be better for them to be friendly and have the Clarion on their side, than to give cause for fresh hostilities from her pen, so he granted her the requested permission.

Miss Carlton entered the room where the prisoner was being detained, fully expecting to meet tained, fully expecting to meet one of those human monsters she had been describing in her paper. Instead, she came face to face with—

The guards who saw the meeting said afterwards that the prisoner turned to Mary with a broad smile on his face, but that she uttered a little cry and sank into the nearest chair. But that was the only sign either of them gave.

"I understand you represent a daily paper in this place," he said in a strained voice "But really I have no interviews to give out untell of such a lot of fool reporters and idiotic village police, who wouldn't know enough to arrest a fox if they saw him with a goose in his mouth."

With that, the man turned on his heel, and Mary staggered to her feet and rushed from the room. She returned to the office of the Clarion in a state of frenzy. The editor came in and congratulated her.

"That was a great streak of luck in and congratulated her.

"That was a great streak of luck you had, Miss Carlton," he said.
"Better write up an article about it quick. Find out all you can about the fellow, trim up the thing fine, you can do it. It's the biggest thing the Clarion's ever had. Just get busy and write a big line of stuff about the prisoner."

"I can't," half groaned Mary.

"What?" The editor was surprised.
"Of course you can? You must!"

Mary rose to her feet.

"I wasn't engaged on this paper to write up life histories of supposed murdcrers," she said, "and I won't do it either!"

She left the office, and the editor

She left the office, and the editor stood looking after her.
"By jove!" he exclaimed, then he stood looking after her.

"By jove!" he exclaimed, then he whistled softly and sat down to write the article himself.

"Mary's a little unstrung with this murder business," he mused. In fact, he didn't want to lose Mary. She was his paper and he knew it. Mary had built up the Clarion to what it was, and he was afraid that if she left him the building would collapse. He often thought over the time when she would sever her connection with the paper, and today he thought it over more than ever. He was a single man, and he hit upon a plan to keep Mary with him always. He would ask her to be his wife, and when she came back to the office an hour or so after her outburst, he put the question to her devoid of all frills. Mary looked at him, sat down and wrote her item about the wedding and when she finished it he renewed his question.

"I'm not going to marry anyone," said Mary shortly, and she turned in her copy and left the office of the Clarion for the day. The editor continued to whistle softly and went on writing his article.

Miss Carlton went to the nearest on writing his article.

Miss Carlton went to the nearest telegraph office and sent me the most urgent telegram to come to Milleville at once, that I ever received in my life. I knew of Miss Carlton, but had never met her, but after that telegram, I thought the whole town of Milleville was tumble.

whole town of Milleville was tumbling about her ears at once. I took the first train to the town and arrived there about an hour after I had received the despatch.

I found Miss Carlton beside herself. She was half hysterical. It took me over ten minutes to get her so she could speak coherently. At whole town of Milleville was tumblso she could speak coherently. At last, she told me all about the horrible murders that had been com-mitted, and of which I had read one or two little items that had appeared in the New York papers, and lastly, she told me that they had the suspected man in custody. That's all right, isn't it?" I asked, Miss Carlton stared at me

"I'm going to tell you something about myself," she began, "and then you'll understand. I had an idea that I was going to be the greatest writer America ever turned out. I began writing novels and stories and all sorts of things, but I couldn't get rid of them. I got discouraged, but still I kept on writing. but still I kept on writing. "I became engaged to be married. But he didn't understand. He laughed at my efforts and told me to give them up, he even suggested papering the garret with my rejected manu-scripts. That was too much for me. I broke the engagement, and shortly after that my mother died. My father had been dead for some years. There was nothing to keep me in the old home, so I came here and got a place on the Clarion, and I've been place on the Clarion, and I've been here ever since. And need I tell you—good heavens, don't you under-stand, he is the man they suspect of those two awful murders, and I caused his arrest! He said I couldn't write and it hurt me-but I've always loved him, and now he owes all this to me! You've got to get him out of it!"

After hearing the whole story I didn't have the slightest doubt that it would be the easiest thing in the world to get "him" out, and I sug-gested that Mary leave it to me and write a story for her paper. Slie took my advice and wrote a The next day it appeared in The Clarion. The editor read it and masped. The public read it and masped, too. The prisoner read it and laughed! I really could not help it. Milleville was just then in the Milleville was just then in the public's eye owing to the horrible crimes and the capture of the supposed criminal, so that many people outside Milleville were buying the Ciarion, and many city editors read Mary's story, and made her offers to write for their papers, very much to the discomfiture of the editor of The Clarion. But it all did not seem to affect Mary very much.

I had very little trouble in bringing about the prisoner's release. It easy to prove that he was a resident of New York City, rather prominent in it's business circles, a wealthy man, and one of the last in the world to commit a crime similar to those of which he was accused. There was really no evidence against the man. He admitted that he had spoken He admitted that he had stoken to Miss Farnum, or at least to a young girl he now supposed to be her but he had only asked her to direct him to the office of The Clarion, as he had intended to look up Miss Carlton, whom he had learned was employed on the paper. Investigation proved that he really had called at the office of the paper and asked for Mary, but she had been out, and he had not waited for her to return.

He said that he had gone from The Clarion office to a neighboring town, and had passed thru Milleville on his way back to New York at a late Of course, he was released. His first visit was to The Clarion and he asked to see Miss Carlton, but that lady refused to see him. He merely smiled, tore a page from his notebook, scribbled a few words on it and sent it in to her.

I happened to be with her when he called, and I read the few pencilled words. They were:

"I apologize, you certainly can write."

Mary read the note and looked at me.

"As long as I'm in this city," I said, "I'm going over the ground of these murders and I presume you'll see the gentleman here."

I left the room as he entered it, but no one ever knew just what transpired behind that door when it closed after the dark stranger, but Mary resigned from The Clarion and declared that she was going to get married. The editor was in a rage. He wouldn't accept her resignation, but the dark stranger promised to send him a brilliant young journalist who would make The Clarion the greatest paper outside New York City.

ist who would make The Clarion the greatest paper outside New York City.

Good news travels fast sometimes, they say, and bad news always does, so it wasn't surprising that all Milleville should be aware of my presence in the town, and the local police head paid me quite a compliment by desiring to engage my services in running to earth the murderer of the squire and the judge's daughter. But I knew what it would be. The chances were I wouldn't be able to find the slightest clue, I'd spend days there working on false scents, and would get just about as far as the others had gotten, and as a consequence I'd be considered about as bad as the other failures were. I declined the offer with thanks, declaring that I could not afford to remain away from New York any length of time, and I would have taken the first train out of it, but Judge Farnum sent me an urgent appeal to call at his residence.

I did not feel as if I could neglect it. I called upon the old gentleman and, as I had suspected, he asked me to try and find the murderer of his daughter. I demurred, and explained to him my reasons, but he declared that if I would consent to take up the case no one but himself would knew anything about it, and if I failed why, it would do no harm to my professional reputation. He said he understood the difficulties I would be under, but pleaded with me to do my best. He said he would spare nothing to bring his daughter's murderer to justice. I could understand the old gentleman's feelings, and I promised him that at least I would look into the case.

and I promised him that at least I would look into the case.

He informed me that the room in which Grace had been murdered had remained untouched since the time they had taken the body from it. He said the police and detectives had spent some time in it, but he was not aware that they had carried anything away with them. He pre-

I had been prepared for a horrid spectacle, but not for the sight that met my eyes. The walls, the carpet, the furniture, all were bespattered with blood spots. I had seen more than one sickening sight and had borne up under it, but the condition of that room turned my faint. of that room turned me faint.

I crossed over to the window and corner of the casement three or four short, bristly, reddish brown hair. I gathered them up, there were four of them. Here, where I had expected nothing at all, I almost, at the first them. Here, where I had expected nothing at all, I almost, at the first turn, so to say, gathered up a bit of evidence that might prove a strong link in the chain I wanted to gather. I put the hair in my purse and looked around the room. A bloodstained cloth lay on the floor that looked as if the murderer had wiped blood from his hands on it. It sickened me, but I picked it up and examined it, and I found adhering to it several hairs similar to those I had found on the window. I wondered what ailed the police. I began to believe that Miss Carlton's estimate of them was about correct. One little gilt chair was overturned in one corner. I set it upright and on its pink brocade seat was the imprint of a bloody hand. In less time than it takes to tell I cut that brocade out of the chair, but it was still damp with the blood upon it. I wrapped it in the only clean towel I could find and left the room. I had quite enough of my search for evidence for one day.

I returned to New York and let Judge Farnum know that he would hear from me in a few days. I spent hours over that hair and the bloodstained piece of damask, but they were hours that were not wasted.

I got busy making inquiries in the were hours that were not wasted.

I got busy making inquiries in the neighborhood of Milleville, with the neighborhood of Milleville, with the result that about one month after the case came into my hands. I wired the judge to come to New York and as Mary Carlton, that was, and her husband were naturally a little interested in the capture of the murderer of the squire and the judge's daughter, I asked them if it would be possible for them to take one day out of their honeymoon and aid in the solution of the murders of Milleville. They were both very willing, in fact, anxious to do so. Judge Farnum came to New York and called at once at my apartment. I did what I could to prepare him for the shock that I was afraid he would sustain, and when I was thru with him. I guess he would have been ready for anything. As soon as the former Miss Carlton and her husband arrived, I suggested that we all go to the circus for the afternoon. It was playing in Madison Square Garden at the time. But the judge as well as my other visitors looked at me in surprise. Surely the circus had nothing to do with the murder of the judge's daughter or of the old squire? But I gained my point, and they soon saw what the circus had to do with the Milleville murders. would sustain, and when I was thr ville murders.

A grotesque figure that was neither man nor beast occupied a cage near the centre of the garden. He was billed as "The Wild Man From Borneo," and at the sight of him Mary screamed, and the judge stood staring, white faced, at the awful creature, for both of them had recognized in the dirty rest he recognized in the dirty rag he were around his waist, the missing Persian sash the murderer away with him after he had killed

The thing haunted me already. But Judge Farnum took a different view of it. We called upon the owner of the circus, and laid our facts before him. The man was sincerely sorry.

The man was sincerely sorry.

"One of my men picked the creature up in South America," he said.

Mary almost fainted and the judge turned to me helplessly.

"That, whatever it is, is the perpetrator of the Milleville murders," I told him, but he could scarcely believe me. It was only when he had returned to my apartments and I explained how I had discovered it, that he gave credence to my story. In the first place, I told him, it had seemed impossible to me that any human being save a mad man would commit such atrocious crimes as the two murders laid to its charge. From what I had been able to learn there were no insane people in or

From what I had been able to learn there were no insane people in or around Milleville. Then I had found that briskly red brown hair—it didn't seem to me to belong to a human being—and as for the imprint on the chair, it was not the hand of a human being either. A little study convinced me that it was the paw of an ape, a great gorilla-like creature, strong enough to crush a man with a single blow.

With this idea I went back to Milleville, and when I learned that a circus company had their winter quarters not far from there, I was strengthened in my theories. I visited the circus people on some pretext, and a single glance at the Persian sash around the man ape's waist convinced me that I was right. I learned that the ape had escaped from its confinement. from its confinement on several oc-casions, and on one of them had re-turned with the Persian sash, which no one dared to take from him. He was a vicious brute his keeper said, and he was afraid of him. When I finished my story, Mary leaned back in her chair and sighed. "After all," she said, "I am glad that those murders were not the work of human hands."

lawn was at the front, and a lovely lawn was at the back. Besides all kinds of flowers, was a nice little playhouse just big enough for Jack to play in.

One day Mrs. Hunter told him that the following day would be his birthday and he would be four years old. This, of course, pleased the little fellow very much. When he woke in the morning he found his little room full of new toys and clothes for his birthday, among which was an aeroplane. (a toy, of course.)

One or two nights, or evenings, afterwards he sat down in a big chair with his machine under his arm when, suddenly, he heard a voice outside call to him to come out. He went out and found it was a man about three inches tall. He a man about three inches tall. He was dragging behind him a hundred dollars, which he gave to little

At any rate, it was something. His aeroplane was growing smaller every minute, until, at last, "bump," on the ground—no, not on the ground, either, but into a little white bed. "Too much pie for tea," answered papa, and Jackie quite agreed. ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS AND GOOD, KIND, DEAR DOG MUTT. JOHN JUMPS AGAIN INTO A CARRIAGE BEHIND A STRANGE HORSE AND WHAT HAPPENED.

Last Sunday I told you about John getting into a carriage, behind a strange horse, and what happened.

Now if his Pa had just given him a good licking, he might not have tried it again, but his Pa did NOT give him a good licking, and John DID try it again, and this is what happened:

So when the carriage Johnie spied,
Right in he jumped you see,
Then off he went ker flip! ker flop!
As nicely as could be.
His brother cried, "Now John, please don't, You know you're doing wrong."

John said; "Say, kid, you make me sick,
You aways sing that song."

At first John thinks, "Ho! Ho! what fun!"
But my! what happens now?
Why! faster, faster, goes the horse,
He really can't tell how.
Oh! Oh! to see the horse and John,
Just like a flash of light;
"Twould make you almost wind your teeth I would make you almost grind your teeth, so awful was the sight.

Poor Pa runs up and down the road— He cries and tears his hair; "Oh! kindly save or catch my child,

The horse stops short, you see, And out John flies.

Does no one heed or care?"
Now Mutt, good dog, was there, of course,
And great was his distress;
He showed more brains than Pa, or all,
I really must confess.

Now when he saw John's awful plight,
Right down the road he flew;
And there he stood, right in the road;
Just why nobody knew.
But MUTT knew why—What nappens now?
The horse stops short you see,
And out John flies, Mutt catches him,
As nicely as can be.

I suppose you wonder, and are when the cat chased him? ? What a foolish question!

Of course, he ran into his hole; in the front door then out by the back door.

The cat would sit by the hour waiting and watching for him to come out the front door again, but not a bit of it; little mouse knew what door to use, when old cat was waiting at the other; trust him, but after a while the winter came.

After he was there a while cousin asked him to come out d play, "All right," he said, "I'll come if you want me to." So they both went out. "Let us climb this tree," said his cousin, "I'll go first." up he went. As he got near the top the tree got slippery, as there had been a snow-storm the day before. "Oh! I'm going to slip," he said, and slip he did right down on the hard ice below. But instead of crying he SMILED, because his cousin had given him a Sunday World and a SMILING FACE CLUB

GLEDHILL DIAMONDS

If there were in the world any finer quality of diamonds than those we buy, we would not rest until we had secured them. We buy direct from the European cutters and sell direct to you, thus evading the wholesalers' profits. Added to this is the fact that we carry on business under small expense. We claim, therefore, that we are in position to give you the very best values in Diamonds.
